Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: —and a rigid rule, that questions of privilege are to be raised immediately the incident occurs or they are not to be raised at all. It seems to me that if we are to do any of the public's business in this house we will have to abide by some of the rules.

An hon. Member: You never did in your time.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, something has happened this afternoon. The Minister of Agriculture rose and made a statement full of insemination and various types of personal propaganda. He made a statement which challenges the hon. member's veracity, the hon.

member the other day having made the statement that the minister was not here. I submit it is proper that the hon. member who has asked to raise the question of privilege be allowed to do so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Vincent: On a point of order—

Mr. Chevrier: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Vincent: On a point of order—

Mr. Chevrier: On a point of order then, Mr. Speaker, the rules of the house are quite clear, and I am sure no one knows them better than the Leader of the Opposition; namely, that when a question of privilege arises one should speak to it immediately and not wait for at least 45 minutes as the hon. member has done. Furthermore, this question was discussed yesterday or the day before—

An hon. Member: Are you afraid of the truth?

Mr. Chevrier: —when it was clearly understood, I believe, by those who sat in the house that this was a question for debate, and my hon. friend can certainly rise and discuss it on another occasion.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, on the same question of privilege, ever since the Minister of Agriculture made his statement I have been getting up and trying to get the Chair to recognize me and give me the floor.

Mr. Pickersgill: A point of order has been raised, and it seems to me that under the rules there must be a decision on the point of order before the matter can be proceeded with.

Mr. Starr: Let the Speaker decide. He is the Speaker of the house.

Mr. Martineau: On the point of order, it seems to me that two objections have been raised, one by the Secretary of State and the other by the Minister of Justice, with regard to the question of personal privilege. The Secretary of State stated that the hon. member's question of privilege arises from something that took place in the house several days ago. That is not so; it arises from the statement made this afternoon by the Minister of Agriculture. The Minister of Justice went on to say that even if it did arise from that statement this afternoon it is now too late because 45 minutes have elapsed. As the hon. member has just pointed out, Mr. Speaker, he has tried to catch your eye and get the floor ever since the minister made his statement, and this is the first opportunity he has had to bring the point before Your Honour.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, may I direct your attention to standing order 17, which is in these words:

> Whenever any matter of privilege arises, it shall be taken into consideration immediately.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, I have just explained that is what I have tried to do.

Mr. Speaker: Just one minute. After taking advice I have come to the same conclusion with regard to the question of immediate opportunity. The hon. member stood up several times, but because of the number of members who wished to ask questions I could only get around to him when I did, so I think he is quite correct. He stood up at the first opportunity, but I am still waiting to hear what his question of privilege is, so I think the hon. member should continue.

Mr. Vincent: My question of privilege is this. The minister said he came into the house at 4.30, whereas he came into the house at the end of my remarks. Second, he said that no member of his party was recognized by the Chair after I had finished. The hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska was recognized by the Chair right after my remarks.

So the facts are these. The minister did not come into the house at 4.30. Second, a member of his party was recognized by the Chair right after my remarks. Third, although the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm is well known, I should like the minister to recognize me when I am speaking, because he will profit from listening to me and reading my remarks.

STATEMENT BY MINISTER RESPECTING COST OF FARM MACHINERY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. McBain (Elgin): I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Was the minister forecasting government policy when on Monday last, October 14, he referred in his speech to the high cost of farm machinery and said this was one of the problems we must resolve? If so, is it his intention to introduce legislation relative to the high cost of farm machinery, or have the standing committee on agriculture conduct a further study of this problem as was done in 1961?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): I agree with the hon. member that this is one of the greatest problems facing the farming community in Canada. Certainly this government is taking a long look at it. I hope we will have the help of all in solving this very important problem.

Mr. McBain: May I ask a supplementary question. Will the minister refer this matter to the agriculture committee for further study?

Mr. Hays: Yes; we want everyone's co-operation. We are looking for all kinds of help.

PROVISION OF FEED GRAIN FOR EASTERN FARMERS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture with regard to the brief submitted by the Catholic Farmers' Union of the province of Quebec last week, asking the government to set up in eastern Canada a distribution agency for western feed grain. Could the minister tell the house whether the government intends to extend the powers of the Canadian wheat board so that it could carry out the same duties as the agency whose establishment is requested?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: That is a question for the order paper. The hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, my question dealt with the delegation from the gold producing community, and has been answered by the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, you just told me that my question should be put on the order paper, but the hon. member for Chicoutimi put a similar question yesterday, and the minister gave him an answer.

Now, could the minister reply fully to the question I asked, that is, whether the Canadian wheat board could not carry out the same duties as the agency requested by the Catholic Farmers' Union?

[Text]

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILES—PLANS TO INCREASE CANADIAN SHARE IN GROWTH

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): I should like to ask the Minister of Industry when he will be revealing to the House of Commons his plan in respect of the development of the automobile industry in Canada, in view of the fact that Secretary Hodges stated in Washington that the minister revealed it to him in confidence and he could not comment upon it to the members of the press until such time as the plan was brought before the house.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): I hope to make a statement before the end of the week.

Mr. Nowlan: May I ask a supplementary question. When the minister makes his statement I wonder if he will reconcile the statement that is credited to him in the press this morning—we know the press is not always entirely accurate—that there was no suggestion whatever by the United States of any hint of retaliation in his talks with Mr. Hodges; because Mr. Hodges is quoted as having said this afternoon that the United States government will retaliate against the Canadian automotive expansion program unless Canada is "clever enough" not to break any treaties? Is the minister prepared to assure the house there will be that degree of cleverness?

Mr. Drury: I think I can give assurance to the house now that, as I mentioned earlier in connection with this important question, in any plan that will be disclosed later this week Canada will not be engaging or about to engage in any violation of any of our international commitments.

HEAVY WATER PLANT—INQUIRY AS TO LOCATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): May I direct a question to the Minister of Industry. In view of the fact that tenders closed in June, is the minister now in a position to advise the house when a decision will be reached on the possible location of the heavy water plant envisaged by such tender call?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): This is a complicated and difficult question, Mr. Speaker, in a novel area. I can assure the hon. member and all other members of the house that we are devoting considerable time and energy to getting the right answers. I hope that in the not too distant future we will be able to announce a decision.

QUEBEC—REPORTED CRITICISM OVER RECRUITING OF DEPARTMENTAL OFFICERS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry.

Does the minister intend to take into account the various complaints and criticisms voiced by the Minister of Industry of the province of Quebec? The latter has spoken against the intensive recruiting of officials for the federal Department of Industry; according to the minister such recruiting jeopardizes the sovereignty of the provinces.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm that I have every intention of co-operating very closely with all provincial colleagues.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice in his capacity as Acting Prime Minister.

Has the government received official protests from the Quebec authorities to the effect that, through its Department of Industry, the federal government infringes upon a jurisdiction which rests solely with the province of Quebec?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): Certainly not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker.

[Text]

CANADA-U.K. AGREEMENT RESPECTING NUCLEAR POWER PLANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Joseph Slogan (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry. Would the minister comment on the agreement reached between the United Kingdom atomic energy authority and Atomic Energy of Canada Limited regarding collaboration in the development of nuclear power plants?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, a couple of days ago Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and the atomic energy authority of the United Kingdom concluded an important agreement covering the exchange of technical information, and this agreement will bring about a close working relationship between these two bodies.

Provision is made for the use by the United Kingdom of the process of heavy water moderation developed by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, and there is some hope that the technique which has been so successfully evolved by Canadian scientists may become much more widespread in its application around the world as a consequence of this agreement.

ECONOMIC COUNCIL

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF ADDITIONAL MEMBERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I intended to ask my question of the Prime Minister, but in his absence perhaps I might address it to the President of the Privy Council. Has the government yet appointed any of the 25 members of the Economic Council of Canada, other than the chairman and two directors whose appointments were announced some time ago?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (President of the Privy Council): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles: Can the President of the Privy Council say when it is expected that this important body will become active?

Mr. Lamontagne: As soon as possible.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—REQUEST FOR SETTING UP OF COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): My question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In the light of the many urgent and rapidly changing international questions in which Canada is involved; in the light of the fact that the committee on external affairs has not met either during this parliament or in the last session, will the minister let the house know how soon it may expect the necessary steps will be taken to provide for the setting up of this important committee?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter that I will draw to the attention of the leader of the house, who will consider it in the light of other obligations; and I may assure my hon. friend that subject to these we will do everything we can to meet his wishes.

AIRPORTS

CHURCHILL—TRANSFER OF OPERATION FROM R.C.A.F.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Transport if he is now in a position to reply to the question I asked him last Friday pertaining to whether the Department of Transport is planning, or has made arrangements, to take over the operation of the airfield at Fort Churchill from the R.C.A.F.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the matter of the various activities at Fort Churchill is under active consideration at the moment.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED INCREASE IN SUBSIDY TO GOLD MINES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. However, first of all, I would like to point out that as from today we have something in common: we are seated at either ends of the house.

Mr. Speaker, here is my question. Could the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys tell the house whether his department intends to continue its subsidies to the gold mine operators, and to increase the subsidies paid to the new gold mines which might be discovered in any part of Canada?

[Text]

Hon. W. M. Benidickson (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance, myself and several other ministers today received delegations from communities in northwestern Ontario and northwestern Quebec, and last week we received recommendations respecting this act from the Canadian metal mining association and I have been receiving too, recommendations from others. At the moment the extension of the act is being examined by officials of the departments concerned, and will soon be considered by my colleagues in the privy council. When we have decided upon policy, which I expect will be in the very near future, I will announce it.

REQUEST FOR STUDY OF REPORTED INCREASE IN BANKRUPTCIES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance but, in his absence, I put it to the Acting Prime Minister.

In view of the startling statistics published recently on the number of bankruptcies in Canada, and in the province of Quebec in particular, could the minister tell the house whether the government intends to carry out a detailed study of the situation or to take immediate steps in order to meet that situation?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This is a question for the order paper.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO PURCHASE OF ARMOURED PERSONNEL CARRIERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of National Defence is it the intention of the government to purchase United States armoured personnel carriers rather than the Canadian produced type?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, no decision has been taken in this matter yet. When it is, it will be announced in the usual way.

Mr. Churchill: May I ask a related question of the same minister. Is it the policy of the government to provide armoured personnel carriers for the Canadian army?

Mr. Hellyer: As my hon. friend well knows from his experience in the department, this has been a deficiency for many years, and it is something to which we are giving every consideration at the moment.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): As a supplementary question, what is the situation now with respect to the development of the Bobcat armoured vehicle? Has development work on the first 20 vehicles been completed and, if not, when will it be?

Mr. Hellyer: This is just a little bit further along than when my hon. friend left the department, but there is still a considerable amount of proving to be done, and the question of the technical competence of the vehicle is presently under consideration.

SASKATOON—CONSIDERATION AS JET TRAINING BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Could he indicate what progress has been made toward a decision in regard to the selection of Saskatoon as the jet training base in western Canada?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Satisfactory, Mr. Speaker.

FORT CHURCHILL—REPORTED FREEZING OF MILITARY POSTINGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence if he is in a position to confirm or deny the report that all military postings to and from Fort Churchill have very recently been frozen. I hasten to say I am not referring to climatic conditions.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to confirm or deny it, but it would not surprise me in view of the discussions that are taking place in respect of the future of Fort Churchill from a military standpoint.

Mr. Simpson: A supplementary question. Would the minister consider making a reply with regard to the question of whether postings have been frozen?

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CUBA—INQUIRY AS TO OFFER OF ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Yesterday the government of Cuba announced that recent tornadoes have wrought great damage on their country and imposed great hardship on their people. I wonder whether the government contemplates giving any assistance to Cuba, and particularly to relieving any hunger or distress from which the Cuban people may be suffering.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in answer to my hon. friend's question I would remind him, notwithstanding his comment last week on the assistance which the Acting Prime Minister announced, it is the intention to provide, pursuant to traditional policy, assistance to countries that were the victims of unfortunate accidents and consequent destruction. I had a telephone call this morning from the head of CARE as to possible further assistance by way of supply from Canada of amounts of available dried milk. My colleague the Minister of Agriculture has indicated that this matter is under consideration. Indeed some action has already been taken. But my hon. friend may be assured that the matter is being looked into further.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture. Have any of the Caribbean countries been in contact with the government of Canada with respect to the purchase of butter?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Not that I know of, Mr. Speaker; not the purchase of butter.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, from my new seat, where I hope to get along fine with the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), I would like to put a question to the Minister of National Defence.

Does the minister concur in the statement of that great Liberal minister, Mr. Rene Levesque, to the effect that we should invest in education rather than in national defence and that it is unthinkable that national defence be given precedence in the preparation of the federal appropriations?

[Text]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I am of the firm opinion that we should do both, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Megantic.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, the question I had in mind has been asked by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Chapdelaine).

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

VANCOUVER—REPORTED COMPLAINTS OF ARTISTS RESPECTING FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Webster (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. Has the minister received a brief from the Vancouver branch of the association of Canadian television and radio artists in which they complain of inadequate and shameful facilities with regard to the operations of the C.B.C. on the Pacific coast? If so, what action is contemplated?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman sent me notice of this question. I did receive a brief. I was not able to receive the delegation, but it was received by my special assistant. I have sent the brief on to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for consideration. I might say that my colleague the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources has also been making urgent representations about this matter which is very similar, of course, to the situation in Toronto and in Montreal with respect to the scatteration of the C.B.C. all over the city. There is no doubt the situation would be better if the facilities were all in one place, and if we had unlimited funds I am sure that is what would happen.

SUPPLY

The house resumed, from Monday, October 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. Gordon for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Diefenbaker.

LABOUR RELATIONS—ALLEGED FAILURE TO DEAL ADEQUATELY WITH DISRUPTION OF GREAT LAKES SHIPPING

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, in rising to resume the debate which started yesterday perhaps it is in order to summarize briefly what took place. We in the official opposition were lectured by the government for even suggesting that a want of confidence motion should be moved on this very vital issue concerning the economy of Canada today. We were told that the amendment was frivolous. The Prime Minister laughed at the issue.

Certainly we in the opposition did not necessarily ask for a supply motion yesterday and today. We were told we were going to have supply motions every week until, as is customary under the rules of the house, six supply motions had been brought forward. I was somewhat shocked by the attitude taken by the government house leader, the Prime Minister and the members who spoke for that party. We were lectured with regard to wasting the time of the house for two days. They wanted to get on with government business, but at the same time they ruled that we should have a supply motion.

I have listened to a great deal of debate since the recess. We were told that one of the prime purposes in calling us back on September 30 last was to settle the great lakes dispute. The government wanted to bring in legislation, and we in the opposition aided them on numerous occasions by unanimously agreeing with the house leader that the rules be set aside and debate proceeded with. I think more rules have been set aside by unanimous consent in the past three weeks in order to proceed with government items than in any similar period of parliamentary history.

To me the biggest waste of time in the house has been this continual haranguing over the seating of members, and I am glad to see that at last this matter has been settled, though perhaps not to the liking of all hon. members. But it should have been settled before we reconvened, and we have wasted two weeks. Now it is settled I hope we can get on with government legislation expeditiously so that all the measures the government wish to bring forward can be proclaimed and their results felt across the nation.

It amazes me, Mr. Speaker, to think that yesterday 2,000 members of a Canadian union—whether we like the S.I.U. does not really matter—came to parliament but went away unseen by the Prime Minister and unrecognized, as far as I know, by the government. We see in today's Ottawa Journal that the Minister of Labour said "Return to Montreal, Mr. Banks, and then I will see you".

I can remember a few years ago, when western Canada was greatly concerned over possible government action, that 1,100 farmers came to Ottawa. The government of that day welcomed them, and the prime minister spoke to them and told them that he was aware of their problems. But what did we see yesterday? Perhaps I am a poor one to speak on behalf of a trade union, but yesterday we saw a complete disregard for our fellow men. We saw these S.I.U. members being badgered by individual backbenchers, but no official recognition was given them by the Prime Minister and they received no official acceptance or hearing by the government of the day. To me it was a shocking display of arrogance and indifference, of treating it as a laughing matter, as evidenced in the house last evening in particular. I do not want to go into details; I am sure all hon. members were aware of what happened on the hill yesterday.

Much has been said, Mr. Speaker, about United States interference. I for one am pleased to see that at last action is being taken with regard to the situation on the great lakes, action which I regret was not taken long before. I also regret that a voluntary agreement was not achieved. As I understand it, this public trusteeship will have jurisdiction over Canadian ships. Whenever an attempt was made to get a voluntary agreement, control was also wanted over United States interests on the great lakes. The public trusteeship will not have such control, and it is interesting to note that we have been given no assurance by the Prime Minister that the United States unions, through the President, have assured Canada that they will co-operate.

I think this matter is well detailed in today's Gazette. An article on the editorial page says this:

> But proclaiming the trusteeship is only the first step.

The minister himself admitted that the worst is yet to come. As a western farmer I realize the position with which western Canada is faced. We have had one of the greatest crops and one of the greatest sales of wheat ever made, but we have had no co-operation from the government and a particular segment of the country in the settlement of a dispute which has raged since July. The Gazette continues:

> The next step will be to deal with whatever defiance of the law may now be raised by the S.I.U. In this struggle, however, the government will have many resources of law and power: the resources, in fact, of the Canadian nation.

But then looms the still larger question. What happens if the government of Canada finds itself confronted, not simply with one strategically powerful union in Canada, but with the force of the massive labour federation of the United States: the A.F.L.-C.I.O.?

I hope when the minister speaks this afternoon he will give us an assurance that Mr. Meany and the labour unions of the United States have agreed to co-operate with the public trusteeship, because we do want shipping on the great lakes to return to normal operation for the remaining part of the season.

The Montreal Gazette continues in this way:

Hope now must be placed in the law—the law whether in Canada or in the United States. Mr. Justice Norris, in his report on the Canadian maritime unions, pointed out that the supreme court of the United States—last February declared the principle that even when a ship of foreign registry is in the waters of the United States its domestic jurisdiction must be respected in domestic affairs, which includes labour relations.

This was the point I tried to make earlier today. In his many telephone conversations with the President, has the Prime Minister been given the assurance that the law will be enforced? Apparently not. Some hon. members yesterday asked the Prime Minister about telephone conversations he had had with the President. What did the President say?

An hon. Member: "Sorry, wrong number".

Mr. Horner (Acadia): We had to interject two or three times to ask this, and the Prime Minister referred to it as an asinine interjection, as a stupid interruption; and he said, in a sense "You western members quit making these statements and don't bother me. I was talking to the President about something other than shipping on the great lakes", or that is what we were led to believe.

This is certainly not the stand western Canada would like to see taken by the government on this question. We are worried. We do not want the worst which is yet to come, as the Minister of Labour said. We want this matter settled by agreement among the parties—the shipping companies, the unions, the members and the men who do the work—so that exports of grain can move forward freely along the seaway.

I have heard many hon. members condemn Hal Banks, the leader of the S.I.U., and certainly I hold no love for him. Few hon. members have ever stood up and proclaimed him a great union leader. Even the New Democratic party members say he should be thrown out of Canada. I read from time to time of certain alien citizens who are deported from the United States. Why cannot we, on the evidence of the Norris report, now deport Hal Banks? This evidence has been available to the present government since last July and the Minister of Justice has been prodded several times to take action in this regard. On page 296 of the Norris report this statement appears:

Banks obtained his absolute control in his union through the misuse of union funds, the hiring halls, the D.N.S. and R.O.C. cards, and the welfare plan. This has been fully established.

This evidence is fully set out in the Norris report which was tabled in this house last July. Why has the Minister of Justice not taken some action with regard to this man who is doing so much to corrupt relations and disrupt shipping on the great lakes? The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is perhaps the only hon. member who has a particular affection for him. Maybe he should have, and maybe he should not have, but surely he could read the evidence and if the evidence is clear, as Mr. Justice Norris has suggested it is, he should be prepared to bring in the necessary legislation to deport him. Similar action is taken in countries other than Canada. I think it is time we were the power of the land, as is suggested in today's Gazette. This government is the power of the land and should take action against any undesirable alien as is the case in this instance.

With regard to the shipping situation on the great lakes, we have been given no assurance that the lawlessness which is now going on will cease. From time to time I have tried to get an assurance from the government that they expect the co-operation of the Canadian unions, of the United States government and of the labour unions of the United States in enforcing the law. But the government cannot even give us an assurance that they will have the co-operation of the unions in Canada in carrying out this public trusteeship measure. The Minister of Labour refuses to see one of the trade union heads. This is no way to go about getting the co-operation of the unions in order that the trusteeship can operate with the good will of all concerned.

From time to time we have heard the Minister of Trade and Commerce defend his department and his own actions with regard to wheat sales. This whole discussion centres on wheat sales to a great extent, because more than half the freight shipped on the great lakes or through the St. Lawrence seaway is western grain. This is why we who come from western Canada are so concerned with shipping on the lakes. From time to time the minister has said that shipments will continue to move out, that there is no real problem.

I wish to remind the house that we have seen disclosures in United States newspapers of Canadian wheat board transactions. We have asked for information and been unable to get it, but all we have to do is to read the United States newspapers. The Minister of Trade and Commerce was asked whether he would tell the United States government that these disclosures about Canadian wheat board contracts were not appreciated by the Canadian government, and that they could possibly harm wheat board sales on behalf of the farmers of western Canada. The minister told us he did not think this was necessary; the message would be got across, but he did not want to take any formal note of it because he was afraid to hurt their feelings down there. He did not want to give the impression that the Canadian and United States governments were at odds about anything, though the evidence is abundant that they are.

We are concerned about the possible effect of this shipping situation on wheat shipments to Russia. I read in a United States newspaper that there is a clause in the contract with Russia which permits the Russians to stop taking Canadian wheat and shift their order to the United States if the commitments are not met, if there is a strike or a stoppage of movement on the great lakes. This explains the concern I feel about this problem. We are committed to selling this wheat. Now the fight is to maintain deliveries. We are in danger of losing this order because of delayed action, slow action and perhaps even meaningless action, if the co-operation of the various unions cannot be maintained.

We hear requests from time to time that the quotas on western farms should be raised. It is evident they are far below last year's levels. As a result of the abundant wheat crop many farmers have grain in open bins in the fields. They want to get it into the elevators, into shelter, before winter sets in. They want the quotas opened up, but with the continual stumbling and fumbling which has gone on with regard to the shipping situation how can they look forward with optimism toward a solution of their storage problems? The shipping difficulties on the lakes are not yet settled and they may not be settled, despite this trusteeship arrangement. We read in the Financial Post that President Kennedy is greatly concerned about an election next year. He does not want to offend the unions in the United States.

There is another thought which enters my mind in this connection. President Kennedy is not too popular in the midwestern states. He is not too popular in the grain belt there. Perhaps if, by hook or by crook, in co-operation with Mr. Meany and the unions in the United States he could increase United States wheat sales to Russia it would strengthen his hand in the election next year in those states where he is not too popular. These are the fears which arise in my mind as a representative from western Canada.

We were told that President Kennedy and the Prime Minister were as close as peas in a pod. We were told they could get along and solve such problems as this. But we cannot even be given an assurance by the acting prime minister today that the President has said the law of the land will be enforced. During the summer a Canadian ship tied up in the port of Chicago. It could not be loaded. A court injunction was obtained, and the fine for refusing to load was supposed to be $3,000 a day. Still the ship was not loaded, and eventually it had to leave the port and move into Canadian waters. This is what we fear for the future. We want some guarantee from this government that our shipping will not find itself once again faced with such circumstances.

Some time ago the Minister of Finance warned that if we were not extremely careful we would lose control of our own country. Well, there has not been much evidence in the last two months that we really have control over our own affairs or that we are masters of our own house. If this trend continues we will certainly be in danger of losing our sovereignty. We all hope that after the trusteeship bill has been proclaimed some sort of co-operation can be developed between this country and the United States. Only a few months ago the former government was ostracized as being anti-American. We were told that a Liberal government would get the co-operation of the United States.

We want to see some evidence that hon. gentlemen opposite are now getting this co-operation. Up to the present, in its dealings with important questions involving shipping, labour, and the wheat trade, there has been no evidence of this co-operation, and western Canada stands to suffer most from the lawlessness which has been permitted to continue on the great lakes.

We in western Canada have been laughed at in Ottawa whenever we have mentioned wheat. There have been times when we have mentioned it too often. We have been called dirty dogs by members of the present government. However, we still believe it is our duty to rise at every opportunity and point out the problems as they appear to us, in the hope that the government will take the advice of the opposition and introduce certain measures to alleviate those problems.

In so far as this problem is concerned, we have been given a great deal of hope because we note, in looking over the record of the present government, that they introduced a series of ideas on the budget, but the opposition and others outside the house convinced the government that many of these measures should not be implemented. We convinced the government they would not work. Many of these provisions have been dropped, and some of the taxes have been reduced. This gives the opposition some hope that we can successfully urge the government to take action to proclaim this trusteeship and get assurance from the United States government that they will co-operate. We should like the United States government to get the assurance of the A.F.L.-C.I.O. that they, too, will co-operate. I would strongly suggest that when the trusteeship is set up, the trustees take steps to ensure that great lakes personnel will be given the freedom to join whatever union they desire. The trustees should make sure that the unions operate free and democratic hiring halls.

I think it was evident during the longshoremen strike that there should be some assurance given that free, secret elections will be held in these unions. The leaders of the longshoremen's union said, no, we won't accept the settlement; but when a secret vote was taken the result was something like four to one in favour of accepting the terms of the shipping companies, and the longshoremen went back to work. I urge the public trustees to make sure they maintain secret elections in all cases in which union officials and union matters are concerned. I feel that there is plenty of evidence in the Norris report indicating the need for a private audit of union pension funds and other union funds. Certainly, I should like to see the public trustees establish principles in the years ahead to ensure that these matters will be looked after properly and accurately for the benefit of union members.

I think perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I have given you and the government some of my views concerning the operation of shipping on the St. Lawrence seaway. I hope, along with all Canadians, that the act will be proclaimed and that shipping will return to normal as soon as possible. I hope, too, that we will have the co-operation of the United States government and the United States unions in solving this grave problem affecting all of Canada, and particularly western Canada.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the subject that has been raised in this supply amendment relates to a problem which has accumulated over a long period of time. Thus, it is the accumulated product developed over quite a number of years that is now being dealt with by the Department of Labour. It is my view that because of its history it ought to be regarded as a shared burden, a shared responsibility, because if one examines the background of this problem, he will find that there are quite a number of groups who ought to accept their share of responsibility for the kind of difficulty that reached its most colourful manifestation on parliament hill yesterday.

I am thankful, Mr. Speaker, for the support that has been accorded the policy of the government by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas), the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) and the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette). I appreciate that they have realized the difficulties of this problem. It is not as easy as has been implied by members of the official opposition to deal with it in an effective manner.

In introducing the legislation preparatory to setting up the trusteeship, I mentioned in the house that the situation would likely get worse before it got better. This statement has been borne out by the events of yesterday and by the events of last Friday. On Friday last, the rights committee of the seafarers international union issued a directive asking all members of the seafarers union to leave their ships to stage a march in demonstration on parliament hill. These instructions suggested that this demonstration was to be a peaceful and responsible representation to members of parliament. Surely no members of parliament have any objection to citizens of this country coming to parliament hill and giving some expression of their views to members of parliament. Surely also, Mr. Speaker, such demonstrations if they are held must be lawful, and the demonstration yesterday was in clear violation of the law of Canada.

The hon. gentleman who just took his seat berated me for not having rushed out to greet the leaders of the seafarers international union. I would remind him that the leader of that union, and his officers, and the seamen's rights committee had, in a concerted and determined effort, violated the law of Canada and conducted an illegal strike which made it possible for these men to come to Ottawa yesterday.

Mr. Woolliams: Would the minister explain what he means by "illegal"? I do not want to interrupt.

Mr. MacEachen: It was a work stoppage clearly in violation of the Canadian labour laws. I think all hon. members ought to bear that in mind in assessing this particular matter.

The president of the seafarers international union did not ask the Minister of Labour, nor to my knowledge any member of the government, for an interview or to be heard in any particular way. No such request was made yesterday, even though many officers of the union were here. I did, as did other members of parliament, have an opportunity to meet with a large number of the seamen who were here as part of the demonstration and who were electors of the constituency of Inverness-Richmond. I was glad to see them and to spend almost two hours with them in a discussion of this problem. I want to assure my hon. friends in the house that in discharging my responsibilities its impact was made all the more realistic by meeting my own electors and explaining to them the reasons for the trusteeship that had been established by the parliament of Canada.

I found among these men, and among others, misunderstanding about the purpose of the trusteeship and about the possible effect it might have on the union. I assured these men, as I am sure other hon. members did with the seamen they met, that the trusteeship legislation is not intended to destroy the jobs of the seamen. It is intended to protect their jobs.

The legislation is not intended to destroy the seafarers international union as a properly conducted organization. The purpose of the legislation is to strengthen the union by making it more democratic and more effective. The purpose of the legislation is not to carve up the S.I.U. and divide it up among any other unions. The purpose is to make it a proper instrument, serving the union members.

I think many members of the delegation came off their ships through an understandable loyalty to their union rather than through a deep devotion to the leadership of the seafarers international union, because they wanted assurances that their union would not be wrecked. The purpose of the legislation is certainly not in that direction.

In analysing the demonstration yesterday it is apparent that the planning for it was elaborate and conducted in secret. Surely it was obvious, from the directives that had been issued by the committee, that the planning went far beyond the capacity of rank and file members of a trade union. The organization of the demonstration involved the expenditure of funds that required the active and direct participation of the officers, and obviously involved the financial resources of the organization.

It was apparent to all on parliament hill that Mr. Banks had sole and complete authority over what was claimed not to be a strike but a demonstration. It is also significant the men were ordered by him to the hiring halls after the demonstration, but not to the vessels they had left.

Further, it was apparent many of the men were not aware of the facts in the Norris report. They were unaware of the origin of the report. One seaman suggested to me that the report had been written by the shipping companies, and he sincerely felt it was a document prepared and distributed by the companies in an effort to destroy his union.

There were no incidents. It was a careful, well conducted demonstration, and any of us who know anything about democratic unions must have been surprised at the unanimity and the docility of those union members who appeared on parliament hill yesterday. They were obviously under the direction and leadership of the president and his committee, and were behaving under the specific instructions of this group.

I am also sure that the demonstration revealed there are many men in that union who are not fully behind the present leadership. There were members of that union who came here, not with the enthusiasm that possibly Mr. Banks would like to believe, and this is borne out by the fact that there were many seamen who did not join the demonstration at all. We have been told that the majority of S.I.U. members on the west coast refused to leave their ships, and that there were seamen on ships in various other ports, in central and eastern Canada, who voted against the proposal to go to Ottawa and who later remained on their ships.

I was told this morning that some of the seamen who were in Ottawa yesterday have today drifted back to their jobs. Not all of them have done so, but I feel sure that the great majority of these seamen would prefer to be back at their jobs today. It will indeed be a very sad outcome if these men are ordered to remain away from their work and if further trouble arises, as it is bound to arise, from efforts on the part of shipping companies to man the vessels with other crews. Trouble would come from the kind of conflict arising from such a situation.

It seems to me all of us profoundly wish that these seamen will go back to their work, will obey the law of Canada, and will resume the operations which they were ordered to suspend on Friday last.

On Sunday I sent a telegram to the president of the seafarers international union reminding him that the activity was illegal, and on behalf of the government asking him and his executive officers to obey the law of Canada and to direct all seamen to resume work. On Friday I had made a statement indicating the illegality of this action. On Saturday efforts were made by the Department of Labour to indicate in the strongest and clearest possible terms that this action was illegal, and that the men ought to go back to work. On Sunday this was followed up by the telegram to which I have referred, and of course on Monday we had the demonstration.

Today I had an urgent phone call from Mr. Banks. I came out of the cabinet meeting to take this call and Mr. Banks explained why, from his point of view, it was unsuitable for him either to reply to my telegram or for him to meet me yesterday. He then asked to have a meeting with me and said he was prepared to leave his home at once and drive to Ottawa. He wanted such a meeting because he assured me that if I, at a meeting of that kind, asked him or ordered him to send the men back to work, then he at a subsequent meeting with his seamen would be in a much stronger position to influence them in getting them back to work.

I told Mr. Banks I would consider his proposal and call him back. I did so and told him I would see him, provided in the meantime he went before his men and asked them to return to work and to obey the law. I asked him for his assurance that he would make that recommendation to the men, and he gave me that assurance and said he would support it fully. If that happens, if the men are returned to work and if the law is obeyed, I will be glad to see Mr. Banks. If I receive an assurance from Mr. Banks that the men will be asked to obey the law, I will see him. But I am not prepared to meet with Mr. Banks or the officers of the seafarers international union of Canada while the law of Canada is being disobeyed, and while I have received no assurances that every effort has been made by them to see that the law of Canada is complied with.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the minister a question. I am sure he can say what section of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act or the Canada Shipping Act he thinks is in conflict with the seamen coming to Ottawa yesterday under what they claim is a contract condition. Second, what is the difference between this situation and the one where the other seamen asked the shipping companies to allow them to have a day off in order to come to Ottawa yesterday, although not with exactly the same purpose? Why is one illegal, and under what section of the act is it considered to be illegal?

Mr. MacEachen: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I have not the actual texts before me to enable me to give my hon. friend the precise sections. But there is a provision in the collective agreements between the union and the companies that every consideration will be given to a seaman who makes a request to go ashore for medical attention, legal counsel or the necessities of life. Consideration is given to such a request. We do not believe this provision of the collective agreements was complied with in the case of seamen who left their ships in violation of this clause and without the permission of the officers or masters of the vessels. In the case of one particular union, I understand that authority was given. In the case of another union it was not given, and this conduct is therefore in violation of the agreement.

Mr. Peters: Would not this be a matter for grievance procedure between the two parties concerned in the contract, rather than the government declaring it to be an illegal act, which action would, in my opinion, necessitate a definition as to the contravention of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act from the point of view of the federal government. In those circumstances, it would not be a contract dispute between a seaman or a group of seamen and their shipping company.

Mr. MacEachen: This is the point, that any such work stoppage as I have described is a violation of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act and is consequently a strike that is unlawful. There is no doubt in the minds of the experienced officers of the Department of Labour that this clearly constitutes an illegal strike. This is the situation.

It seems to me that two weeks ago I was being pressed in this house to end a strike that was fully legal and I withstood pressure in order that the rights of the longshoremen would be fully exercised under the law of Canada. If these men in this situation were out lawfully and in exercise of free collective bargaining, I would take exactly the same attitude as I took with the longshoremen. But in this case I am bound to exercise my responsibility and say that this work stoppage is illegal under the law of Canada, and therefore I am obliged to ask the officers and the seamen to obey the law of Canada. That is the point.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the minister a further question?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier: Let him make his speech. You will have an opportunity.

Mr. Peters: In view of what the minister has stated, is he now prepared to lay charges against all those who are guilty of what appears to be an offence? I think this course of action has to be pursued, or we are foolish to raise this type of problem. This is what has happened time after time: you say those things but do not do anything.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the help I am receiving from my hon. friend, but I intended to deal with this aspect of the matter. I am not taking any high handed attitude toward the S.I.U. If the officers of the S.I.U., and Mr. Banks, under the conditions I have described wish to come before the Minister of Labour and discuss the trusteeship legislation, I will attempt to explain to them, as I have explained to seamen, that it will be the desire of the government, as it has been up to this time, to get fair minded men who will be free under the law, without direction from me, to discharge their powers under the act.

I would expect the S.I.U. to be treated fairly and justly under this public trusteeship. It is surely not the intention of parliament that a trusteeship should be set up to inflict injustice upon any individual in Canada, let alone 15,000 members of the S.I.U. That is not the intention. But the law is there and it will be administered by the trustees who will be carrying this heavy responsibility given to them by the parliament of Canada.

Mr. Fisher: Where is Banks going to be?

Mr. MacEachen: As I have stated, the law is there; it has been passed by the parliament of Canada. The trustees will be empowered to exercise that law within the provisions of the act, and it is not my responsibility to prejudge the action of the trustees and to say that any particular man in any particular situation will be dealt with in any way contrary to the provisions declared in the act by the parliament of Canada. I think that is a perfectly proper attitude to take, as minister. No other attitude is consistent with the action taken by the parliament of Canada. This is as I see the situation. I hope I have not been misunderstood with regard to any of the points I have made.

Much has been said about the delays and confusion with respect to the way in which this matter has been dealt with. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) in one of his rare flashes of humour described it as a policy of chuckles and postponements. All I can tell him is that in his day we had lots of postponements but very few chuckles. I have no apology to make as to the way we have searched to provide a private trusteeship. I have no apology for that at all, because we did think on two occasions that we were close to agreement. If agreement had been possible, some of the difficulties that we may face in the future might not have arisen. But this was not possible. I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the most strenuous and patient efforts were made to reach that desirable goal of a private trusteeship, but they failed. There was no other course, then, but to proceed with the legislation, and now to proceed with the selection of the trustees.

Until Sunday there was some last possible hope for the establishment of a private trusteeship and people were negotiating in good faith. Surely while they were negotiating in good faith for a private trusteeship it was not my responsibility to be out looking for public trustees. Surely that would be the wrong thing to do. Now that the private trusteeship has collapsed and there is no possibility of its being agreed upon, the government is searching for public trustees.

I want to assure you, Mr. Speaker, that we are taking into account the views that have been expressed by members of the House of Commons as to the kind of man required. I am trying to live up to the intimations I gave in the house as to the kind of man that would be asked to serve. I am attempting to carry out those commitments. Just as soon as we have secured the willingness of these men to serve, and they are finally appointed, their names will be announced in the House of Commons. I hope these trustees will command the respect and the confidence of the Canadian people and the respect and confidence of the seamen of Canada whose unions are to be administered by them. Then the act will be proclaimed and the trustees will go about their work. Let me say in conclusion that I hope the trusteeship will secure the support and confidence of the members of the House of Commons and the people of Canada, because it may be that the things that will face the trustees will be very difficult indeed.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister of Labour would entertain two questions from me in order to clarify my thinking on these two matters. The first one has to do with the breakdown in the search for the private trusteeship, which was instigated again after the bill was passed, and went on over the week end. The reason given for the breakdown in the search for a private trusteeship was the illegal walkout of the S.I.U. men from their ships. It hardly seems possible that this could be so. My own opinion is that it would have probably precipitated the search for the public trusteeship in order to put it into effect. I do not know what the real reasons are, but if the minister would care to answer I should like to hear from him whether this was the real reason or whether there were other reasons about which we may be hearing later.

Mr. MacEachen: I stated on Sunday, I believe, that it was my opinion that in the absence of this illegal act by the S.I.U. there might have been a satisfactory private settlement. I held the view that in the absence of this development on Thursday and Friday there was a good chance, and I thought that the gap was closing. But the matter was completely disturbed by this illegal action.

Mr. Starr: This is my second question. The minister mentioned the chuckles and delays and said that progress was being made at as quick a pace as possible. In view of the fact that he has said that the walkout is an illegal one under the act, and I agree with him on that score, does he not think there is delay on his part or on the part of the government in not setting a deadline for the walkout to end? How long is the government willing to allow this illegal walkout to go on?

Mr. MacEachen: All I can say in reply to that question is that this is a matter of judgment. It is my expectation and my firm hope that these men will go back to work voluntarily. If they fail to do so the government of Canada will seek every possible legal method to have the law of Canada complied with. That is all we can do.

Mr. Starr: I have one further question on this point. How long a period does the government think is reasonable for this illegal walkout to continue before it undermines the economy of the country?

Mr. MacEachen: I would remind my hon. friend that two weeks ago he and other members of the opposition were up on their feet demanding immediate action with regard to a strike that at that time was only four hours old. We took a different course and our course was proven to be correct in those circumstances.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Minister of Labour meant what he implied when he said that I demanded precipitate action, and I am sure he would not want to leave that impression without correction.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I have listened attentively to the Minister of Labour while he spoke about the present situation with regard to the trusteeship. In today's Ottawa Journal there is a statement that the Prime Minister has the three trustees he wants and, provided the Minister of Labour signs them up, their names will be announced in the house this afternoon or tomorrow. Would the minister not agree that the delay in announcing the members of the trusteeship board will precipitate a situation whereby the illegal strike will continue and these men will not go back to work until they see that the government means business? Would the minister not agree that this could be a factor in the present situation?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, this is really asking for an opinion. At this moment I think that the two matters can be separated and I would hope it would be possible to separate them. But the government will not delay at all in carrying out its responsibilities with respect to the announcement of the trustees.

Mr. Woolliams: May I ask the minister a question? Has the trusteeship act been legally proclaimed? Is it now the law of Canada?

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker, it is not proclaimed.

Mr. Bell: Has there been any reluctance on the part of individuals to accept appointment?

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I do not want anything I say to lead the government or the minister to think that we have changed our views in support of the whole idea of the trusteeship. However, his speech has certainly disturbed me, and some of my colleagues I think, with regard to the analysis he made of the situation. Apparently he has given us a view of what he thinks the mood of the men may be, and their relationships with Hal Banks.

We would like to put the dispute into some kind of time text. It seems to me the reason the situation is crucial at the present time is that the shipping season on the lakes has at the most eight weeks to go. If we have a cold, late November that period may be reduced by as much as two weeks, and we will then have effectively only six weeks more shipping.

We have a very large problem in getting grain to the eastern ocean ports in particular, in order to fill the shipments to Russia which, as everyone agrees, are vital to our economy. With this kind of time sequence of six to eight weeks the time factor is most crucial from the point of view of getting these ships back to work.

All of us in the house, even those who voted against the trusteeship, like the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), have joined in insisting that Hal Banks is a gangster, a crook and a thug. But here we are with the situation where the man led a group of his followers to parliament hill yesterday. It was a well organized demonstration and, with one exception, the members of the S.I.U. to whom I talked expressed deep loyalty to Banks. The man is able to bring this many men here to parliament hill, keep them under good discipline and send them back to where they came from.

This suggests to me and to my colleagues that it is going to take some really sharp and drastic action in order to break the hold that Banks has over these men. I refuse to believe that it is going to be easy for the trusteeship, once it is proclaimed, to step right in and somehow take over. This is why we are concerned. We will all join in the cries about Banks being a thug, a gangster and a criminal, but we have had no legal proceedings or prosecutions against him, either under his immigrant status or as a result of any of the incidents in which he has been involved over such a period of time. It seems almost incomprehensible that the Minister of Labour will now put the onus on the trustees to straighten out what is a crucial time-consuming situation. That is the only interpretation we can take of his speech, that the onus is now going to lie on the trusteeship working under the authority of the act. I insist that this is not good enough. I think the minister should recognize from his own experience of labour unions that if Banks is not separated from his capacity to control the membership of the S.I.U. we will not get very far.

I should like to report to the house on a conversation I had with one member of the S.I.U. who came from Port Arthur which I think is as significant as anything the minister reported. This man said: "So Banks is a gangster. So nobody has ever done anything about it. I am worried about my job. There is not much of the season left. Do you think that I or any of my fellows are going to put ourselves out in left field with people like Banks in this kind of situation?" It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that this underlines the criticism one might make both of the minister and the government at this time. In this sense we have shifted toward accepting to a degree the kind of criticism which has been expressed in the amendment put forward by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), that we have today not been given a really clear picture of how the government intend to move. I insist that the crucial question is: How is the government going to separate Banks and McLaughlin and all these other senior people in the S.I.U. from the capacity or the ability to interfere, and to keep their grip on these men? The press has given one indication of how it can be done; and unless the government has a plan prepared, I think that this situation is likely to lead to some kind of warfare along the docks. This is a suggestion that the C.M.U. is rounding up crews in Montreal and other cities to take over the ships and get the ships moving. If that is done without some attempt to sequester Banks and his immediate lieutenants from connection with the men, we will have real warfare on the docks, quite apart from any action taken on the United States side.

I do not want to go on and dot the "i's" of something which has been dotted enough already, but to me the minister's response was most unsatisfactory, particularly to the question put by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). Is there no possibility, under any of these statutes of which the minister is in charge, of taking some action against Banks and his lieutenants? Perhaps I am wrong in my impression that the minister will leave it up to the trusteeship, but I suggest that that is going a little too far. I was approached yesterday by a couple of people who asked me what suggestions I would make, and I suggested that one of the things which it seems to me the government must be prepared to do is to have troops, in preference to police, ready to take over the dock facilities during this crucial period of time. That may be necessary. These are the kinds of emergency steps which should be taken, not the dragooning of S.I.U. members, to bring about what we all want, namely, the removal of Banks and his leadership from a situation of control, so that we can get the flow of trade moving again and the trusteeship on its way to doing something with the organization.

If I have misinterpreted the minister and he has an opportunity to clarify the situation, then fine; but I think other hon. members in the house also share my concern at the speech he has made and the interpretation we have been led to put upon it.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, if I may interpret those remarks, as a question I will be glad to tell my hon. friend that the point I was making about the trusteeship was that parliament has given authority to a trusteeship to do certain things. Parliament gave the trusteeship this particular responsibility, and it will be their obligation to carry out the responsibilities which have been assigned to them by parliament. That is, I think, the impression I wanted to give. If it led to the belief that with respect to other developments the government will not take any action at all, then that is an unfortunate misinterpretation which I may inadvertently have given. With regard to the present circumstances, the government has under active consideration steps which might be taken. It has in mind severals steps which might be taken to deal with this situation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It seems to have had that for six weeks.

[Translation]

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) gave us to understand yesterday that the house would be informed today of the government's intentions with respect to this problem of national interest.

This afternoon, the minister concerned stated that he would make a review of the situation and indicate the intentions of the government.

The only thing we learned is that later on a trusteeship will be set up and that trustees will be appointed. He gave us no indication as to whether those trustees have been chosen, whether the negotiations will soon be concluded successfully or whether the trustees will be appointed next week, in ten days or in a month.

He told us also that the strike now going on in Montreal and which threatens to paralyse shipping on the St. Lawrence and the great lakes was absolutely illegal and that union officials had exerted absolutely illegal pressures on union members.

He told us also about the spectacle given for our benefit by union members who, illegally led by their officers, came to Ottawa to demonstrate on the steps of the national parliament itself.

So there we have a cabinet minister who comes and tells us that everything that was done there was absolutely illegal. Yet, when we ask him what he intends to do, all he can say is: tomorrow we might consider the matter.

To make a long story short, this whole speech made by the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) was only meant to tell us that the situation was just as confused as it was yesterday, the day before, a week ago, two months ago, in short, as it was in August. In short, the situation is only getting worse.

The Minister of Labour told us that he had an announcement to make but he only told us that he was ready to meet Mr. Banks. He even boasted of having talked to him over the telephone. It is surprising how members of the cabinet find it difficult to make telephone calls.

The minister declared that Mr. Banks was guilty of illegal actions. In a word, the only news he could give us today was about the pleasant talk he had with that individual.

In short, this shows how much the situation is confused, and how the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) had every reason to assert yesterday that the government did not wish to assume its responsibilities, that it was afraid and according to the Globe and Mail, that it had been waiting during the past three months to find an easy way out so that it would not lose face. But unfortunately the easy solution is not in view and the situation, instead of improving, is getting worse.

Mr. Speaker, the minister has told us that he is worried. That, in itself, shows a certain progress, even though he was all smiles while making his speech, probably because he wanted once more to have the house and the public believe that there is no need to worry about that problem.

Besides, the minister has told us that it is a trouble which has been existing for a long time and that that type of difficulty is not new, since the previous administrations had to face similar troubles on the great lakes and the St. Lawrence.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I wish to tell the minister that under the previous government, if we had troubles on the great lakes and the St. Lawrence, we took our responsibilities, and the proof is that it is the predecessor of the present minister who appointed Judge Norris to make a complete investigation into the whole matter of shipping in the great lakes and the St. Lawrence.

If this government postponed the application of the recommendations of the Norris report, I do not think that the minister can throw the blame on the former government for that. Mr. Justice Norris, who is an experienced jurist, did not hesitate to recommend positive action. I do not say that they were easy measures to apply but they were positive, and the government should have assumed its responsibilities at that time.

Today, we hear members from western Canada express their deep concern about our wheat trade with Russia, and about the danger of losing a great part of this famous wheat contract with Russia and other countries behind the iron curtain.

Mr. Speaker, I have just met people living along the St. Lawrence; I come from Three Rivers. And let me tell you that people are greatly worried in that region and have been for a long time. As a matter of fact, the most deplorable acts of violence happened in Three Rivers. They are what prompted the previous government to take action.

Today, the population of Three Rivers, as well as of all the other communities along the St. Lawrence river and the great lakes, have a right to call on the government to assume its responsibilities, act immediately and stop saying that something else will be done tomorrow and the day after.

Let us not forget, Mr. Speaker, that the St. Lawrence river is the main artery of the economic life of our country. The most beautiful pages of our history were written on the shores of the St. Lawrence river. That artery is absolutely necessary for the export trade of a country like Canada.

It is really a tragedy that shipping itself on this beautiful waterway should be endangered not only by Mr. Banks and his gang, but also by the delays and indecision of the government.

Let us not forget that Canadian taxpayers have invested millions of dollars in the St. Lawrence river, that the seaway cost about $400 million and that the modernization of the waterway cost approximately $100 million.

It is time the government assumed its responsibilities. The government must not do what it did in the past when it was in power after the war. We then had sea-going merchant ships on which 10,000 Canadian seamen earned a living. Our merchant marine has completely disappeared because the government of the day refused to assume its responsibilities. Even at that time, labour unions were blamed, but nothing was done to put a stop to their wrongdoings. The same thing is happening today. As for us, we proceeded to modernize shipping on the great lakes, and that asset should be preserved for the people of Canada and not wasted simply because the government is afraid of taking its responsibilities with regard to labour unions, which it is first to condemn, but tolerates indirectly.

Today we see irresolution and delay. Mr. Banks was allowed to enter Canada, and now they claim they want to deport him. Sometimes they want to get rid of him, sometimes they wish to keep him there. At any rate, they confirmed his right to stay here as a landed immigrant. And now, they want to take proceedings against him. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) did tell us that he had enlisted the services of two great criminalists in this country in order to launch criminal proceedings against Banks; that happened three months ago and every week since then we have been asking the Minister of Justice to report upon the matter and we always get the same kind of answer from the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen): "We shall see tomorrow; tomorrow we shall be in a position to make a statement". The government must come to a decision, and above all they have to decide by themselves what they intend to do.

Indeed, since August, they have been seeking an easy solution. They have turned to the Americans, they have asked the Americans to find an easy solution for them.

One will recall that during the last electoral campaign and since then, these gentlemen have claimed that they were the only ones able to engage in friendly talks with the U.S. government; they have described how great were the relations of Canada with the United States under the Pearson leadership.

I am not surprised that they rely on the American government for an easy answer. Once more, they are making fools of themselves in the eyes of the Americans, as it happened at least four or five times since this government came to power.

Today, the situation is worse than ever. Canadians complain that their unions are controlled by American unions. That should not be. And what is worse, we have a situation where the union boss, Mr. Meany, together with Mr. Wirtz, a great friend of theirs, treats the sovereign government of this country as if it were a child.

Not only does Mr. Wirtz not co-operate, but he indulges in uncalled for remarks which, I am quite sure, the former government would never have allowed.

The situation is ticklish, it is true; but, after all, it has lasted all of three months. We know that the present government was dead-set against the trusteeship; it has said so on numerous occasions. It has repeatedly postponed the bringing in of this measure in the house, and sought every conceivable means to find a solution which might dispense with such a piece of legislation. What has it achieved in three months?

Do you think that this delay has in any way impressed Mr. Banks? The answer was flaunted in our faces, yesterday, as Mr. Banks paraded with a regal gait on the front steps of parliament. It could be that the trusteeship legislation seemed too drastic to this parliament, and that might be one explanation for the delay.

It would have been possible to find an alternative solution, since they were taking so much time to introduce this trusteeship legislation. If they were afraid of trusteeship, why not come up with something else?

Several of my fellow members of the opposition suggested a secret vote. That suggestion could have proved very useful in this instance. Moreover, a secret vote should be mandatory in all fields under federal jurisdiction. We have seen Judge Lippe insist upon it in the case of the longshoremen's strike. One could not go as far as to say that, if the strike was settled, it was because the vote was secret, but it should be pointed out that the longshoremen did not complain. I honestly believe that if secret ballots were used each time union members are called upon to vote, those union members would be the first to approve such an action.

The government could have required the regular auditing of the seamen's union books by a chartered accountant. It could have been done and things could have been straightened out.

If those two solutions had been applied immediately, without even waiting for that trusteeship legislation which the government apprehended, it would have been possible to know if the seamen really wanted Mr. Banks as their leader or if they wanted to prevent the acts of intimidation and mismanagement of which he is accused. It would have been possible to keep him in check if a real auditing of the union's books had been made by a chartered accountant.

The government will be obliged to make a hard decision, it will have to assume its own responsibilities if it wants to impose the trusteeship. But it must be convinced that there is no alternative.

The government must stop relying exclusively on the goodwill of Washington. As stated by the Leader of the Opposition, after all the humiliations and rebuffs the government has suffered in Washington, it should begin to understand that if it wants the St. Lawrence river and the great lakes to be an asset for Canada, and not a liability, it must change its philosophy, especially with regard to the merchant navy.

In my opinion, the government should call a meeting of the labour unions, ship owners, exporters and government representatives to set up a master plan for the long term reorganization of the merchant marine as it was done in France, Switzerland and England. Let us not forget that Canada has today a trade deficit of over $150 million because it does not have a merchant marine.

The setting up of a merchant navy would give employment to about 50,000 Canadians.

The present situation shows how important it is for the government to stop all this beating around the bush and to restore law and order once and for all, within the St. Lawrence maritime unions and in our seaports.

The time has come for the government to prove that it is really willing to act and that it is anxious to restore confidence among Canadians who want law and justice to prevail always.

I do not think that the speech made this afternoon by the Minister of Labour impressed many Canadians in that respect.

Mr. Speaker, the seamen are on the doorstep of parliament and the longshoremen threaten to go back on strike but the Prime Minister is waiting by his telephone, for an easy solution to come once again from Washington.

[Text]

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): This afternoon we have heard widely divergent views as to how the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) should have reacted to the demonstrators who were here yesterday. The hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner) condemns the minister and the government for not welcoming the demonstrators and the officers of the union with open arms. The hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) suggests that we should have no dealings with the officers of this union at all—

Mr. Balcer: If it is illegal, it is illegal.

Mr. Byrne: —because they are acting illegally at the moment. We have another view expressed by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher), namely that we should call out the troops.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I did not say it as simply as that. The hon. member should at least be fair.

Mr. Byrne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am certainly—

Mr. Fisher: I should like to make it clear. I said that I believed the situation was so crucial along the docks that it would be necessary to call out the troops to sequester Banks and his leaders from access to the docks.

Mr. Byrne: Well, whether you want to call out the troops to sequester Mr. Banks or any of the union officials, or any of the rank and file who are not prepared to co-operate with this trusteeship before it has been set up, is neither here nor there. In my opinion, it is a rather extraordinary precedent to set in this situation and in a democratic country.

Mr. Balcer: I wonder if the hon. member would permit me to ask him a question? Does he say—

Mr. Byrne: I would be quite happy to take any questions after I have completed my remarks.

After all, let us not get too excited over this situation. What we are concerned about, and what everyone seems to be most concerned about, is keeping the ships moving. There is a great deal of sympathy nowadays for communist Russia. People are concerned about keeping the ships moving and keeping wheat flowing to the seaports so that it may be exported. This is well and good, and as an objective is certainly to be commended. After all who is to guarantee, without the calling out of the troops, that if we act without a great deal of consideration these ships are going to continue to move? It must be remembered that up until Sunday the ships were continuing to move from the head of the lakes to Montreal. After all, this is our objective.

Certainly, we cannot countenance the breaking of the law. However, it must be pointed out that the former minister of labour, the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr), was informed by his department officials that the Canadian seamen's union was breaking the law of Canada as far back as 1959. Why did he not act? The minister refused to act because this labour union belonged to a larger body in the trade union movement, and because they belonged to this larger body this somehow excused their acts of violence and their illegal actions. It appears to be a question of degree. On the one hand, we are prepared to accept these illegal actions because they happen to be committed by a large organization, but now, on the other hand, we are not prepared to accept them because they are committed by a smaller organization. We must take precipitate action. We must accept the Norris report as a court decision and take action immediately. We must deport Mr. Banks or put him in jail.

No legal action has been taken. I think we should face this problem more calmly. I want to say at this time, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Labour needs no one to speak on his behalf. I am expressing my own opinions as a member of parliament. But none the less I believe I have the right to answer some of the criticism that I have heard here today.

As the opposition have said, there was some delay in introducing the trusteeship legislation, but I think the minister was completely justified in allowing his departmental officers to take considerable time in drafting the legislation, legislation without precedent, so that it would be able to stand up if tested in the courts.

The Leader of the Opposition said we should have taken action immediately, but it must be remembered he was the author of the Canadian Bill of Rights which we heard about for 15 years before it became law. It seems passing strange that just because some of his constituents, wheat farmers, may be hurt by a labour union, he would march in immediately and take away the rights of union members.

Mr. Nasserden: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, in answer to a question yesterday the Minister of Justice indicated that the trusteeship legislation was in accord with the Canadian Bill of Rights.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order; there is no question of privilege there.

Mr. Byrne: I did not hear the hon. member's interjection but I always welcome interjections from him because he makes them in such a smiling manner. However I believe he did say that the trusteeship legislation was in conformity with the bill of rights. I would point out to him that if the legislation had been drafted immediately after the Norris report was tabled he would have had no assurance that it would be in conformity with the bill of rights. We wanted to make sure that it was in complete conformity with the bill of rights, and that was one reason for the delay.

Since the longshoremen's strike has been brought into this debate I think I should refer to it for a few moments. Here again there was fear and dread expressed by hon. members from the prairie provinces that we were going to lose the sale of a few million bushels of wheat because the long-suffering longshoremen, after negotiating for over a year, had come to the end of the trail and decided to take legal strike action to obtain their just demands. In that incident also the opposition said the government should take immediate action to end the strike. How else does a government take such action except to call in the troops or introduce legislation providing for compulsory arbitration?

Let us be reasonable when we are discussing these matters. We have not lost any sales yet, and I feel quite confident that with the present Minister of Labour we are less likely to lose orders as a result of his improper management of the Department of Labour than at any time over the past six years. The hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) has suggested a free election in respect to the management of union affairs. I cannot conceive of any type of election, unless it is secret, being a true democratic election; and the trusteeship legislation provides that in anything which the trustees attempt to foist upon the unions all questions will be decided by a secret ballot, particularly the election of officers.

Nobody need fear anything from this legislation, and now that the opposition has been relatively assured that the government will take the action they have been demanding for the last three months, I notice there is a bit of weakness on their part to support it wholeheartedly. The legislation will be enforced to the letter of the law, but the important factor today is to keep the seamen on the ships. Let us keep the boats moving, at least until freeze-up and they become icebound rather than strike bound.

I met some of the people who took part in yesterday's demonstration. On the one hand we saw that a section of them had fear of the union leadership, and on the other hand a section appeared to have absolute confidence in that leadership. However the over-riding thing which the demonstration indicated was that we could have much more vast and greater difficulties. The ships could be tied up for a longer period if we do not work out some way in which these people will be prepared to accept the trusteeship, in the same manner as it has been accepted by the other four unions involved.

We do not want the ships tied up, and I am sure this is the desire of all hon. members, in addition to cleaning up the S.I.U. I would hope, however, that some of my friends in the far corner of the house do not anticipate that a cleaning up of a union means a changing of its certification. The cleaning up can be done from within, with the help of the trusteeship, but that should not be interpreted as a change of certification.

I appeal to all hon. members to try to keep cool heads. Certainly the minister kept a cool head during the longshoremen's strike, and thus prevented much more serious labour trouble. He is deserving of our confidence. I do not expect members of the opposition to show the same confidence, but at least in the interests of the country's economy let us all pull together and give the minister every support in implementing this legislation, thus assuring that the union will be democratically cleaned up and that the ships can be kept moving until freeze-up.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I had prepared some notes to use when speaking today on this amendment, but after listening to the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) would like to scrap those notes and answer the statement made by the minister this afternoon. I think I can safely say that all Canadians would have been rather shocked to hear that statement. I say this with the greatest respect for the minister because I, and I think hon. members generally on this side of the chamber, have great respect for him. We respect him as a gentleman; we respect his method of debating; we respect his oratory. However, I think it was most preposterous that we should hear the Minister of Labour of this country say in his speech that the S.I.U. people, led by Banks, who came here after walking off their ships and leaving their jobs committed an illegal act. When the question was asked as to whether the trusteeship act had been proclaimed, the minister had to admit that it was not the law of Canada; but he also said that according to the statutes of this country which control and govern labour relations, in this situation the march to Ottawa led by Mr. Banks—a recognized friend of the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) of the Liberal government—was illegal. Surely in the face of that statement the whole point is this, that the government of Canada is ready to allow people in this country to break the law. If you take the minister's statement at its worst, it is this: John Jones committed murder, but he only shot one Canadian. We will let him roam around this country and maybe he will not shoot any more Canadians. The minister admitted that we had in this country people who are breaking the law in this regard, but the government is not doing anything to enforce the law of the country.

I listened with a great deal of interest the other evening to the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson), who said it is always the responsibility of the government to enforce the law and this was the reason he was backing his friends on the other side of the chamber, the Liberal government. I think it is preposterous—and I want to emphasize this again—that this government, believing that the march on Ottawa, the seamen leaving their ships at Canadian docks or ports, or whatever you wish to call them, was illegal is doing nothing to see that the law of this country is enforced.

The Norris report has been handed down since July. In that report was set out the evidence in reference to the lawlessness of Banks and his associates. What stand did the Conservative government take with regard to this matter? I should like to refer to a statement made by the hon. member for Medicine Hat, whose constituency joins mine in the province of Alberta and whose industry is on all fours with the industry of Bow River. The hon. member stated that the Conservative government had not taken any action in regard to the lawlessness of Banks, his activities, the activities of his union on the great lakes. But the fact is that the Conservative government of that day set up a royal commission to ascertain the facts. You do not try a man without having the evidence; you do not try a man without having the facts, and you do not judge any organization or association in Canada without obtaining the facts.

Mr. Justice Norris held hearings all across this country. He weighed the evidence carefully. There were counsel representing the interested bodies, including the crown, the commission, the unions and various other associations. After weighing that evidence Mr. Justice Norris made certain recommendations. His report was filed in this House of Commons after we had been removed from that side of the house to this side, and the Liberal party formed the government of the day. I say this in answer to the support given by the Social Credit party—that is, the first Social Credit party, the one led by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson), and not the second one. The hon. member for Medicine Hat asked, what did we do? We took a definite position, and I want to repeat it. We got the facts. Those facts were placed before the government of the day, and the government brought in a bill to form a trusteeship, which was one of Mr. Justice Norris' recommendations.

I asked a question today, and I want to repeat it. They talk about the trusteeship act and how they are going to implement this and that. I asked this question: Is this act now the law of Canada? The Minister of Labour would have shocked Canadians if they had been here in our place and heard him say it was not even proclaimed the law of Canada. In addition to that Canadians—I want to repeat this—would be shocked to realize that they elected a government that will not enforce law and order in this country when they know there is an organization, or a group of individuals, whose leaders are breaking the law.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Woolliams: No. I listened to you for a few minutes this afternoon. I have a few things to say before supper and I should like to finish them. I will answer any questions you want to put to me when I have finished. It is preposterous—and this is the point upon which I think the Canadian people will judge this government—that this government is not doing anything to correct this situation. I now want to come to the main part of the practical approach to this matter. Not only is this association, this group, breaking the law, but what is the effect upon the Canadian economy today? I believe there are 74 seats in this house from west of the great lakes. They are federal constituencies. Those people are all interested in one major industry, agriculture. In spite of the fact that the hon. member who endeavoured to ask a question a few minutes ago tried to dress up the situation and make it sound pretty good for the present government, I point out to him that there is a contract with the U.S.S.R. covering the sale of 228 million bushels of wheat. I asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) this afternoon how much wheat had been delivered under that contract. The answer, I believe, was that approximately 5,100,000 bushels had been delivered. I say this—

Mr. Robichaud: Up to what date? Be frank.

Mr. Woolliams: Up to the early part of October, or the end of September.

Mr. Robichaud: That is different.

Mr. Woolliams: But I can answer my hon. friend in this regard. We had the longshoremen's strike. There was not much wheat moving then. Now we have the problem of the S.I.U. and the men walking off their ships. There will not be much wheat moving now. If my hon. friend will just bear with me I will present the evidence as to whether the United States will eat into one of the greatest contracts secured by this country. I congratulate the government for having obtained this contract, but I would remind them of the fact when the sales were consummated with communist China, when credit was extended to the communist nations in order that they could buy this wheat, the foundation was laid by the former government, the Conservative government. We laid the foundation, enabling this wheat to be sold to these countries, and their peoples to be fed.

I think one of the most respected magazines or journals in regard to matters of trade is the U.S. News and World Report. I have here the issue of October 21 this year and I wish to read from it. However, before I quote from this magazine I would point out that the United States of America said it was wrong for Canada to sell wheat to people who were starving, if they belonged to a communist nation. But the moment we got into difficulty, the moment we had a government that would not enforce the law of this country so that ships could sail, the United States stepped into our wheat deal. My hon. friend says he thinks this contract will be fulfilled. I say, Mr. Speaker, that the U.S.S.R. will repudiate this contract if deliveries are delayed, because starving people need wheat and there has been a crop failure in that country and other countries. I now wish to refer to an article in this journal entitled "ABC's of American wheat sales to the reds". This the reason given for the new contract between the United States and the U.S.S.R:

> Russia has contracted for about 300 million bushels from Canada and Australia. Dock tie-ups, however, threaten to prevent shipment of all the Canadian grain before the great lakes freeze this winter. Russians, evidently, are desperate for grain after a crop failure that may cut production this year by as much as 25 per cent.
>
> The satellites have had poor crops too and cannot look to Russia for help.

In this article in the U.S. News and World Report, it says that the reason the United States has come into the picture to try to sell their surplus—and they have a surplus of one billion bushels—is that the ships are tied up on the great lakes. If this government stands by and allows these people to continue to break the law day after day, strikes in the transportation system of this country will break out like red measles, because they will know they can get away with it. They say: Who is going to enforce the law? The government of the day is not going to enforce the law because the minister speaking for the government says that the law has been broken but they are doing nothing about it; they are going to hope that something turns up. Something will turn up, and it will do so in this way: The U.S.S.R. may repudiate one of the greatest wheat contracts ever made through the Canadian wheat board for this country.

What about the situation? How much wheat have we been selling? How important is it to Canada? In this regard I speak on behalf of western Canada and in doing so I wish to remind all members of the house, particularly those from Ontario and the eastern part of Canada generally, that the $400 million to $500 million wheat contract with Russia means new combines, new trucks, new cars and new machines that will be manufactured in the east, thus providing men with jobs and bringing about a better standard of living. The farmers will have the financial resources to be able to go into the market and purchase these machines so they can equip their farms properly and grow the grain.

How much wheat have we been selling? Let us take a look at the record. I wish the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) was in his seat this afternoon because not long ago he said I had misquoted the figures. I did not have them with me then but I do have them with me this afternoon, and I am going to give round figures. In 1952-53 we exported 255 million bushels. In 1953-54 we exported 251 million bushels. In 1954-55 we exported 312 million bushels. In 1955-56 we exported 264 million bushels. In 1956-57 we exported 264 million bushels. In 1957-58 we exported 320 million bushels. In 1958-59 we exported 294 million bushels. In 1959-1960 we exported 277 million bushels and in 1960-61 we exported 353 million bushels. I might digress for a moment. You will see there was a jump of 100 million bushels in that year, which was almost solely due to the sale of wheat to communist China, because they were able to buy on credit under the former government. In 1961-62 we exported 357 million bushels.

There is the story. I was in western Canada last week. I was absent from the house for a few days. At Flaxcombe, Saskatchewan, I saw 50,000 bushels of wheat piled up on one farm. People are trying to get lumber to build bins. All across western Canada there is the largest crop of wheat since the days when my father went out to Saskatchewan in 1905 to homestead. There is the largest crop of wheat since 1905, a crop of 700 million bushels, one of the largest that western Canada has ever produced. The contract with Russia will play a large part in helping the western farmers to get rid of the biggest crop they have ever produced and, as I said, the whole economy is affected.

Why can we not get rid of it? I charge those who sit on the treasury benches, which are fairly empty this afternoon, with irresponsibility because they are not enforcing the law of Canada. I see that the Postmaster General (Mr. Denis) shrugs. He can shrug his shoulders but he can look to his colleagues—I wish more of them were here this afternoon—to assume their responsibility as far as this matter is concerned.

Mr. Robichaud: Open your eyes.

Mr. Denis: We are four. Are you not satisfied?

Mr. Robichaud: Five.

Mr. Woolliams: I am glad to see four or five here, but I am not going to digress. I want to say I was very happy to hear the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) speak in the manner he did because he somewhat contradicted his own leader. The other night his own leader said that they endorsed the government. The Social Credit party, the first Social Credit party, not the second, has endorsed the government. They have got some arrangement.

We have been criticized by certain sections of the press, particularly the Toronto Star. I think they called me a huckster or something like that because we have dared to stand up and tell the government that they are evading the fact that people in this country are breaking the law. I would remind the new government of a statement that was quoted by the Prime Minister when he was leader of the official opposition. I do not think he would say these words are asinine like he said last night when he lost his temper. He quoted at one time words put on the record by another great prime minister, Arthur Meighen. This is what he said:

> If parliament is to be preserved as a living institution, His Majesty's loyal opposition must fearlessly perform its functions.

That is why we are talking today. That is why we are criticizing. That is why we brought to the attention of the public the flaws of the worst budget ever brought down in this country. That is why we have criticized the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh) who says she is the mother of all pensions but who rocked the contributory pension plan to sleep. I believe it is asleep; we hope so, and I do not think we will hear about it again. Here is what Mr. Meighen went on to say:

> When it properly discharges them the preservation of our freedom is assured. The reading of history proves that freedom always dies when criticism ends. It upholds and maintains the rights of minorities against majorities. It must be vigilant against expression and unjust invasions by the cabinet of the rights of the people. It should supervise all expenditures and prevent overexpenditure by exposing to the light of public opinion wasteful expenditures or worse. It finds fault; it suggests amendments—

We have suggested an amendment. Let us have a look at it. Let us analyse what our amendment says. In a day's time we have changed the attitude of the New Democratic party, because the hon. member for Port Arthur has said that he now looks at the matter differently. He does so because the minister has said that these people are breaking the law but the government is going to wait; they are going to hope; they are going to delay; they are going to see what happens; they are going to follow political expediency so they may possibly be able to get another seat or two in the next election. That is really their position. That is the charge I level at this government of expediency.

An hon. Member: We learned it from you.

Mr. Woolliams: The hon. member says they learned it from someone else. Let me say they learned their lesson well. Here is what our amendment says:

> This government, because of its confusion, inconsistency and pusillanimous dawdling and delays in taking effective action has encouraged chaos approaching anarchy to develop on the great lakes, the seaway, and in several Canadian ports, thereby causing disruption in shipping and the placing in jeopardy of essential trade in general, and in particular contracts for delivery of wheat to foreign countries.

Surely we have the right to criticize, because by standing in our places and criticizing today and bringing this matter to the attention of the government they may retreat or they may do better than retreat. They may go ahead and do something which they should do, enforce law and order in this country.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): They may resign, too.

Mr. Woolliams: It would be a very good idea if they did resign. Mr. Meighen went on to say:

> —it asks questions and elicits information; it arouses, educates and moulds public opinion by voice and vote. It must scrutinize every action by the government and in doing so prevents the shortcuts through democratic procedure that governments like to make. The absence of a strong opposition means a one party state. A one party state means an all powerful cabinet.

I remind the Liberals that these words were quoted by the Prime Minister when he sat in the opposition. Let us take a look at the situation. As I say, I am not going to use my notes because I want to answer the Minister of Labour. The minister described how Mr. Banks came here with his men, how they had banners with the names of members of parliament and their constituencies on them, and how they walked on to parliament hill and broke the law. That is what he said. He blamed it all on Banks. I would ask him to have supper tonight with the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill), because the Secretary of State does not look on Mr. Banks in that light.

Why are we in trouble this afternoon on the great lakes? Why is there unrest among the members of the S.I.U. today? Because the former Liberal government brought a man into Canada—I say illegally, although they made his entry legal through an order in council—and that same man has excited the men, in the words of the minister, who wish to go back to work. When the Leader of the Opposition put the record of this man on Hansard the other day, what did the Secretary of State say? He uttered the most shocking words for a minister of the crown, particularly in circumstances where their chickens have come home to roost. We were talking about Banks, and he said: "I don't repudiate my friends". This is the charge I make of the government. If the Secretary of State, who is not in the house at the moment, does not want to repudiate Mr. Banks because he is a friend, is that any reason for the government to allow these people to break the law from day to day?

Mr. Byrne: What page of Hansard is that?

Mr. Woolliams: Page 3218, and I am glad my hon. friend has a copy because I want him properly informed.

Mr. Robichaud: You need to be checked.

Mr. Woolliams: This is what the Leader of the Opposition said, and one remark he made does not appear in Hansard; I was sitting here and I heard it. He said:

> I now want to appropriate the words of the hon. gentleman during an interruption a moment ago.

And he is a great interrupter. The Prime Minister said I was a professional interrupter, but I certainly cannot compete with the Secretary of State; he has me beat. The Leader of the Opposition went on, in reference to what the Secretary of State said:—

> He said, "I am not in the habit of repudiating my friends".

My charge against the Liberal government is to measure up to their responsibilities and tell the Secretary of State that even though Banks is a friend we have to enforce law and order in the country.

I should like to return to the main part of my address and say that without this law and order the wheat will never reach Russia, or Japan, or the hungry. Without law and order Canada will lose the finest deal we have had for many years, a deal which was negotiated basically by the former government through steps they took in negotiations with communist China.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Mr. Woolliams: I am not aware of any question of privilege arising, unless—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order.

Mr. Woolliams: It must be because my hon. friend is very fond of the word "communist". That is the only question of privilege I can think of.

Mr. Byrne: On a question of privilege affecting the members of this house, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member indicated that he was quoting the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin).

Mr. Woolliams: No, I did not.

Mr. Byrne: As I heard the remarks he was quoting the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), who apparently put words into the mouth of the Secretary of State.

Mr. Woolliams: I always like to quote the Prime Minister as one of the Secretary of State's witnesses, because they are all colluding together.

I have here an article I did not intend to read, but we have heard a lot about this great relationship with the United States, which is now stepping in to take the contract. Let us just put things in their proper perspective. Who were the "friends" who got the Liberals elected to form this kind of irresponsible government? I say that some of these friends were on the other side of the border. It is interesting to read what Mr. Milburn P. Akers said recently in an article in the Chicago Sun-Times, written before the minister changed his opinion. They thought it was very simple, with these people behind the iron curtain; but when a few dollars were involved they changed their tune. Let us see what is said about Canadians by some of the friends of the Liberals. This is one of the writers who promoted a new Liberal government with the great arm of friendship of the United States. This is what a responsible writer in a responsible newspaper in another country, a person who is a friend of these people, said:

> The United States can take care of its enemies.

No one has ever questioned that, and I say thank God it can.

> In doing so, it has saved many of its friends, as well, from being overrun by communist nations. But heaven save the United States from its "friends"—friends such as Canada—whose primary concern appears to be that of making a dollar, no matter the damage done to this nation's over-all objectives.
>
> What is behind Canada's so obvious desire to maintain Castro and his communist regime in power? That desire has been long evident. The only reasonable explanation is that Canada, afflicted with an international inferiority complex, obtains some sort of satisfaction in attempting to frustrate U.S. policy. Such acts feed its ego. And, simultaneously, acts such as selling wheat to Russia for Cuba provides it with dollars—the principal Canadian concern nowadays, so it seems.

This next sentence is amazing, and it will shock you people from the province of Quebec.

> It might not be amiss for Americans, for whose policies Canadians evidence little concern, to be a bit more sympathetic to the aspirations of the French speaking Canadians of Quebec. Those people have become "fed up" with Ottawa, too.

And so are we today. Mr. Akers did not say yesterday, he said today. Where is this great love affair? What has happened to it? There seems to have been a breach of promise, to say the least. Mr. Akers continues:

> Maybe they should be permitted to go their own way, even as Canada, in effect, insists that Cuba be allowed to do. An independent Quebec might provide a market for some surplus wheat now stored in the United States.

There is the threat. If I can be personal for a moment, I might say I am married to a United States citizen, and I would be the last person to criticize the United States. But this type of American writing in this kind of style shows a kind of irresponsibility which was endorsed by this government now sitting across the way. That is my charge.

The government ask what we would do, Mr. Speaker. I would answer them in one simple sentence: If our party were in office we would enforce the law of the country. That is my answer, with the greatest respect, to a man who I have always admired as a man from a province I was born in, namely the leader of the New Democratic party.

What does this wheat deal mean? Do not tie it up in dollars for western Canada alone; it means big business for the railroads and the shipping companies. It means millions of dollars in the hands of the farmers. It means higher production in eastern factories and an increase in the gross national product.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: You can clap, but you will be in tears tomorrow if you do not get the grain moving. Above all, it means this—millions of jobs across the country for millions of Canadians who can live with dignity with their families and enjoy a higher standard of living. But I make the prediction, although I hope I am wrong, that unless the government gets rid of its inertia, then we will lose this deal. I say—

An hon. Member: How do you know?

Mr. Woolliams: Some one says how do I know. I know he may not know these facts, but if he goes to the ports tonight he will see how much wheat is being loaded. We lost 60 million bushels which would have been exported from the country had the government not allowed a strike to go on for several days while it negotiated and negotiated. But this is different. I see the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) in his place, having returned from Calgary smiling; but he has a responsibility to the people of Alberta. We may lose this deal. The contract may be repudiated because of the inaction, the ineffectiveness and the delay of this Liberal government who fought a phony campaign on that very issue, branding the former government as one which delayed when they themselves can be indicted of the offence; and I have tried to place the facts about that before the house this afternoon.

While I am on my feet I want to say a word about a remark which was made last night. Hon. gentlemen opposite talk about their good relationships with other countries —and they have got into trouble. This is what appears in the U.S. News and World Report of October 28, 1963. This is the latest edition, and this is what it says:

> One thing has become clear: Canada's changing government has not removed the basic causes of friction with the United States. What happens next is anybody's guess.

I can tell the people in Washington it is anybody's guess up in Ottawa, too.

An hon. Member: Are you going to run for leadership?

Mr. Woolliams: Somebody talks about leadership. Well, his party needs some leadership. I know exactly what hon. members opposite like to do. They like to erode our leaders. They may have noticed we seldom refer to their leader, but I intend to do so now. Last night the Prime Minister talked about a conversation on the telephone between himself and the President of the United States. The right hon. gentleman told us what he said to the President. When I asked him what the President had said to him in reply, he replied to me that I had made an asinine interruption. Why was it asinine? Was it because the President might have said, "no" so often to the Prime Minister of Canada that the right hon. gentleman did not want to tell the people of Canada about it? If that interruption was asinine, I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to tell us how asinine was that statement made last night by the leader of the party opposite. How asinine can government policy be, when it will not enforce the laws of this country so as to get the economy moving—to use one of its own phrases borrowed from across the line?

Mr. Steven Otto (York East): Mr. Speaker, I am not known for making either long speeches or partisan speeches but I should like to beg the indulgence of the house for a few moments because I do not want to let this occasion pass without making a few observations on this important question of trusteeship legislation.

I see little reason for throwing recriminations back and forth from one side of the house to the other. I do not think anybody will come out of this mess with entirely clean hands—neither the former government, nor the government before that, nor the shipping companies with their "sweetheart" deals. I honestly think that despite the speeches we have heard from the other side, most members would agree that the Minister of Labour has done a very good job. I should like to draw attention to one point made this afternoon by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher). It was a point which, I thought, brought this whole situation into focus and it concerned the problem raised by Hal Banks. If we say that Hal Banks is the cause of this problem, then, surely, we are saying that either the rank and file of the S.I.U. are his imitators or that there is no communication between the rank and file of the S.I.U.—or of any union, for that matter—and its executive.

The hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Byrne) made his point very accurately when he said that we should be concerned, not with this trusteeship legislation, which has already been passed and which must now be carried out, but with the lack of democratic links between the rank and file of the union movement and its executive. The hon. member for Port Arthur pointed out that no one could be expected to have the foolish courage to get up and face Mr. Banks in the open in contradiction to his plans or policies. That stands to reason. I submit we should be concerned in future with legislation to compel the holding of a secret ballot in the election of officers in the union movement. If that were done I think we would have no

Hal Banks, and we would have had no march on Ottawa; because I believe the members of the labour unions are, as you and I, good, honest citizens trying to make a living. I think we should accord to them the opportunity of democratically electing their responsible leadership.

If I have made it clear—and I think I have, with all due respect to the opposition—that we are in agreement with the action taken by the Minister of Labour, then, surely, there should be no cause for further debate and the amendment should fall.

Mr. Starr: May I call it six o'clock?

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon we had a statement from the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) in respect of the amendment, and the charges that had been made by the official opposition in that amendment. This statement certainly bore out the facts set out in the amendment, and the charges that are made concerning the actions of this government. This afternoon on orders of the day I asked the minister to answer two questions. The minister said he would be making a statement later and he would then deal with the questions asked of him.

I asked him in respect of a meeting with Mr. Banks and the purpose of that meeting. Well, the minister dealt with that by stating he explained to Mr. Banks in a mild way that he would have a meeting with Mr. Banks provided the S.I.U. members returned to their ships. However, he did not deal in detail with the purpose of the meeting and left that question unanswered. I requested him also to explain the walkout and what the government intended to do with this illegal walkout as the government terms it. The minister did not deal with that at all. He said he hoped that the S.I.U. members would go back to work of their own accord. Well, Mr. Speaker, we have been informed that in Fort William the union voted not to go back to work. Certainly this should precipitate some action on the part of the government to deal with what they term an illegal walkout.

Let us look at the situation that has developed over the period of a few weeks. Negotiations were initiated in respect of a private trusteeship. I would not be surprised if those negotiations were initiated by this government in order to see if they could find a way out. These negotiations broke down, and we could not find the reason for the breakdown until Mr. Wirtz issued an explanation. The reason for the breakdown was that the C.L.C. insisted on two Canadians being members of the trusteeship, and one person from the United States. It goes without saying, therefore, that the United States must have insisted on two representatives, and one Canadian. This was the reason for the breakdown in negotiations. We had to find this out from the United States rather than from our own government.

Then, the trusteeship bill was introduced because the government could not find any other alternative. All attempts to find an alternative had broken down. The bill was passed unanimously by all parties in this house. Then, after it was passed in the Senate, lo and behold, negotiations for a private trusteeship were resumed. Now I ask, who initiated those negotiations after this House of Commons and the Senate had passed that bill? We have received no answer. There has been delay and evasive answers. Then, over the week end word was received that the negotiations which had been resumed had broken down again.

What was the reason for the breakdown this time? The explanation has been given that they broke down because the S.I.U. membership walked off the boats. Well, Mr. Speaker, that is no explanation at all in my opinion. It is only an excuse. This action by the S.I.U. should have precipitated a private trusteeship. It should have made those who were negotiating more resolved to bring about a trusteeship immediately. The admission was made that Banks had broken the negotiations for a private trusteeship. That is an example of the power this man wields over this government. They cater to his every wish. We would like to be told the real reason for the breakdown of these negotiations, and not the lame excuse that was given by the minister and by others.

This afternoon we had a statement from the minister that the S.I.U. walkout was an illegal walkout. If it was an illegal walkout, why did the government not take some action to get these men back on the ships? Why has there been this delay, this procrastination, these evasive statements that we have been getting in respect of these matters? It is quite clear what action should be taken by the government in this serious situation. The government says, we are going to see what is going to happen; we are going to let somebody else do the job for us. You talk about evasion, procrastination and delay.

Let us take the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) as an example. Special counsel were appointed back in July to look into the Norris commission report and ascertain what charges might arise from the revelations in that report. They have submitted a report, but no one knows how long ago it was submitted. Questions have been asked in this house for the past three weeks, but the government has treated it as a preliminary report. There has been no action, but somebody in the department is studying it. Then, they have to have another meeting with the two counsellors who were appointed. Is this report so complicated the legal men in the Department of Justice cannot understand it? Why has there been this delay? What is the real reason behind what is happening at this time? What does this report contain? This is what the members of this house want to know and what the people of Canada want to know. Why has the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) laboured so long on this question? Why is the Minister of Justice delaying action on this question? Why is the whole government stalling? What are they waiting for? Are they waiting for things to get so difficult they will have no control over them? Are they waiting for someone else to find a solution? Are they going to telephone to Mr. Wirtz to see if he can settle the problem, just as they asked for his support and his help on previous occasions?

The Minister of Labour says that they are now proceeding to look for trustees. They are looking for trustees after the bill has been passed. Why has there been this delay? Why could they not have had people ready to appoint? They have had all this time since July to find people. In his statement today the Minister of Labour gave credence to the facts outlined in the amendment we introduced, because his statement was one of stalling, of hope, of no action and no trusteeship. There has been nothing but dawdling, delay, inconsistency, confusion, all of which has encouraged chaos and this is the result of the government's fear of making a decision. These are the words in our amendment, and these are the facts as illustrated by what we have seen in the statements we have heard from the Prime Minister and his colleagues in the cabinet. The words of the amendment certainly fit the government's actions, and it is no wonder that the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) said today they were going to change their minds. Every party in opposition, and indeed hon. members on the other side of the house, ought to support this amendment because deep down in their hearts they know it tells the truth.

We have given the government every opportunity. We have endeavoured to be helpful. We have supported the trusteeship bill; but when the government introduced that bill and said every available means had been exhausted in attempting to bring about an effective alternative solution to the problem, was it telling the house the truth? Was it just going through the motions? Was it just stalling for time?

The bill was passed, but why has it not been proclaimed? What is the government waiting for—legal advice, or advice from Mr. Banks with respect to this matter? Is that the purpose of the meeting? What is there to discuss with Mr. Banks at this point? Parliament has spoken. The representatives of the people have spoken. The bill has been passed by the other place. All that is needed now is action by the government, this government which told the people of Canada it would give action and direction to the country.

Members of the government gave themselves 60 days, but no action was taken at that time, and many more days have gone by without action. Every day on orders of the day the same answer is given: The government has not yet decided. The people are wondering when the government is going to decide to take action, but indeed the day for action has long past.

Mr. Robichaud: You had six years of inaction.

Mr. Smith: Name the trustees.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being 8.15 o'clock p.m. it is my duty, pursuant to section 4(d) of standing order 56 to interrupt these proceedings forthwith and put the question on the amendment before the house.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Diefenbaker) which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Alkenbrack
Balcer
Baldwin
Bell
Bigg
Cadieu (Meadow Lake)
Cantelon
Casselman, Mrs.
Churchill
Clancy
Coates
Cooper
Crouse
Danforth
Diefenbaker
Dinsdale
Doucett
Fane
Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke)
Forbes
Grafftey
Gundlock
Hales
Harkness
Horner (Acadia)
Howe (Wellington-Huron)
Irvine
Jorgenson
Kennedy
Kindt
Lamb
Lambert
Loney
MacEwan
MacInnis
MacLean (Queens)
Macquarrie
MacRae
McBain
McCutcheon
McIntosh
Madill
Mandziuk
Martineau
Millar
Monteith
Moore
More
Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria)

Division

Muir (Lisgar)
Nasserden
Nesbitt
Nielsen
Noble
Nugent
Ormiston
Pascoe
Paul
Pigeon
Pugh
Rapp
Rheaume
Ricard
Rynard
Simpson
Skoreyko
Slogan
Smith
Southam
Starr
Stefanson
Stenson
Thomas
Vincent
Watson (Assiniboia)
Webb
Weichel
Willoughby
Winkler—79.

NAYS

Messrs:

Addison Armstrong
Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace)
Asselin (Richmond-Wolfe)
Badanai
Basford
Batten
Beaule
Bechard
Beer
Belanger
Benidickson
Benson
Berger
Blouin
Boulanger
Brewin
Brown
Byrne
Cameron (High Park)
Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)
Cantin
Caouette
Cardin
Caron Carter
Cashin
Chapdelaine
Chevrier
Choquette
Côté (Chicoutimi)
Côté (Longueuil)
Cowan
Crossman
Cyr
Davis
Deachman
Denis
Deschatelets
Dionne
Douglas
Drouin
Dube
Dupuis
Emard
Ethier
Eudes
Favreau
Fisher
Forest
Forgie
Foy
Frenette
Garland
Gauthier
Gelber Gendron
Girouard
Granger
Gray
Greene
Groos
Guay
Habel
Haidasz
Hahn
Harley
Hays
Hellyer
Herridge
Honey
Howard
Howe (Hamilton South)
Jewett, Miss
Kelly
Klein
Knowles
LaMarsh, Miss
Lamontagne
Lamoureux
Langlois
Laniel
Laprise
Latulippe
Laverdiere
Leduc
Lessard (Lake St. John)
Loiselle
Macdonald
MacEachen
McIlraith
McMillan
McNulty
McWilliam
Marcoux
Martin (Essex East)
Matheson
Matte
Mitchell
Moreau
Mullally
Nicholson
O'Keefe
Olson
Orlikow
Otto
Ouellet
Pennell
Pickersgill
Pilon
Prittie
Richard Rideout
Rinfret
Robichaud
Rochon
Rock
Rondeau
Rouleau
Roxburgh
Ryan
Sauve
Scott
Sharp
Tardif
Teillet
Temple
Thompson
Tremblay
Tucker
Turner
Wahn
Walker
Watson (Chateauguay-Hungtindon-Laprairie)
Webster
Whelan
Winch—137.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Lachance (Lafontaine): Mr. Speaker, I was paired. Had I voted, I would have voted against the amendment.

[Text]

Mr. Chatterton: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. (Mr. Laing). Otherwise I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. Cardiff: Mr. Speaker, I was paired. Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

COMPLAINT ALLEGING INCOMPLETE ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON ORDER PAPER

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a grievance to raise tonight which has to do with a subject which I drew to the attention of the treasury benches on October 21. It concerns the manner in which members on the treasury benches are answering the questions which are asked by the opposition. I thought I would raise the matter tonight because there is more time now for members on the opposition side to voice their views.

I feel, and I believe I am justified in saying so, that while some of the ministers co-operate, the great majority take refuge in equivocation, evasion and vagueness when they are answering questions put to them by members of the opposition. When the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) took part in the discussion on October 21 with relation to the question of privilege I raised he told the house that during the first 70 days of this session some 2,941 questions had been answered as opposed to 1,705 questions in the first 70 days of the last session.

There are two answers to that, Mr. Speaker. The first is that the number of questions which appear on the order paper would not be so large if the ministers of the crown would not equivocate in their answers, but give the direct information to which we feel we are entitled. The second answer to the proposition put by the Secretary of State might well be that the members on this side of the house take their responsibilities a little more conscientiously than the members on the government benches did when they were in opposition. I have heard hon. members from the Conservative party, the New Democratic party and the two groups in the Social Credit party put question after question to various ministers, yet not once has there been a direct answer.

Today, Mr. Speaker, a question I put concerning the construction of an airport at Mayo was answered by two ministers, the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIlraith) and the Minister of Northern Affairs, who is not presently in his seat, I am sorry to see. The question was a written one and I asked about the representation being made to the government concerning the construction of an airport at Mayo. The Minister of Northern Affairs said that the only representations he had received were oral, being made to him at the time of his visit this summer to the Yukon. The Minister of Transport was honest enough to say he had received representations as far back as 1962 from myself and others in the Yukon. Why this hiding of information by the Minister of Northern Affairs? Why this hiding of information by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) and the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets) in answer to the question I asked concerning the construction of a minimum security institution in the Yukon? Why cannot we be told when tenders will be called on various projects? Why cannot we have direct and unequivocal answers to the questions we ask? I remember asking the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) a question, which he answered yesterday, concerning consultations which were had with officials of the government of the United States regarding matters of transportation in the Pacific northwest. These matters concerned corridors through to tidewater, the paving of the Alaska highway, the Haines cut-off road, the acquisition of a free port, and so on. The Secretary of State for External Affairs said, as reported on page 3806 of Hansard:

> There have been no recent negotiations between the governments of Canada and the United States on any of the five subjects mentioned in the question, although there have been some informal and inconclusive discussions with regard to the Haines cut-off highway.

What did the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) say? Is this one of these snap decisions? He said that the Haines cut-off road would be maintained all year round this winter on a trial basis. Surely this decision was not made between the time the Secretary of State for External Affairs answered the question yesterday and roughly three o'clock this afternoon, when the Minister of National Defence made his announcement, because international negotiations could not have been carried on in the space of a few hours. This all indicates a serious lack of, for want of a better term, frankness with hon. members of the opposition and the constituencies they represent.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, did my hon. friend say that the decision with respect to the Haines cut-off could not have been made between yesterday and today? Because if he did, may I correct him and say that the whole matter was dealt with this morning.

Mr. Nielsen: I did not suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the decision could not have been made between those hours, although decisions usually made by this government are made tomorrow, tomorrow, tomorrow. What I said was that these negotiations could not have been conducted within the space of a few hours, between the time the Secretary of State for External Affairs answered yesterday and the time the Minister of National Defence made his answer today. The Secretary of State for External Affairs said yesterday:

> There have been no recent negotiations between the governments of Canada and the United States on any of the five subjects mentioned in the question—

One of those five subjects was the Haines cut-off road.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Would my hon. friend permit a question? Perhaps he is underestimating the negotiating capacity of the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Nielsen: I do not for a moment underestimate the capacity of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but I am sure he would sooner be minister of agriculture because there is a certain lack of capacity there which I am sure the hon. gentleman would fill admirably, with all his vast knowledge of agricultural problems in this country. I recall the hon. gentleman in a previous debate telling the speaker in the house that he did not understand the point he was making because of their mutual misunderstanding of the agricultural problems of the country. But the Secretary of State for External Affairs did not leave it at that yesterday when answering the question. He went on to say:

> I would refer my hon. friend to what the minister of northern affairs said on October 3, 1963, page 3165 of Hansard.

If hon. members would turn to page 3165 of Hansard, perhaps they could tell me where the minister of northern affairs uttered a single syllable, either on that or adjacent pages. That is typical of the "M.B.S."—the

"Martin bureau of statistics", an organization we heard about when hon. gentlemen opposite were on this side of the house.

But seriously, Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill), when speaking to the question of privilege I raised yesterday said, as reported on page 3821 of Hansard:

> The hon. member said he could waste the time of the house by asking questions. Surely if his questions are a waste of the time of the house they should not be asked on orders of the day, and they should not be put on the order paper either.

I read these questions which appear on the order paper both when they first appear in Votes and Proceedings and when they appear on the order paper. I read the questions of all hon. members and take an interest in them, and none appear to me to be a waste of time. They are put on the order paper because we do not want to waste the time of the house on orders of the day. We give the government ample opportunity to answer them and plenty of time to come up with some sort of accuracy, truth and unequivocation. But we do not get this. This seems to me to be a dereliction of a duty which ministers who sit on the treasury benches owe to all hon. members. When we take the time and trouble to phrase our questions, the least the government can do is to answer them as fully as they can.

As far as the number of questions is concerned, a point raised by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, that is no criterion at all. While a question placed on the order paper may not have the urgency required for orders of the day, it at least requires the courtesy of a reply. The particular question which raised my point of privilege yesterday was No. 1,272, namely the date on which tenders would be called for the construction of a minimum security penal institution in the Yukon. I asked where the government proposed to construct this institution, and the answer given was: "In the Whitehorse area". The Whitehorse area covers a great deal of ground. The Department of Justice and the Department of Public Works must know precisely where that institution will be constructed, and the least they owe to members on this side is some forthright, frank and truthful information. It was they who assassinated the character of the leader of this party by accusing him of not telling the truth. I ask those who sit now on the treasury benches to practise a little of what they preached over six years.

I need not confine my remarks to questions which are put on the order paper. The questions asked on orders of the day are just as evasively and equivocally answered. We heard a most shameful display the other day when questions were directed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) inquiring as to the whereabouts of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) at a given moment. The right hon. gentleman said, and it is recorded in Hansard that the Minister of Agriculture was in the west attending to the grass roots, or talking to the grass roots, or feeling the grass roots. It was something to do with grass roots—fertilizing them, maybe. Anyway, that was not the truth. It was not the case at all. The minister was not in the west. It seems to me that when such questions are put they deserve an honest and forthright answer.

We heard the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler) try to fix the responsibility for a certain document concerning patronage in every constituency in this country. The Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) denied the existence of such a document, as did the Postmaster General (Mr. Denis). It seems to me it is a denial of the truth and that it makes a farce of the proceedings in this chamber for a minister to say a document does not exist when we see it produced before our very eyes over there in the hands of my hon. friend. Incidentally, it seems passing strange that this million dollar cabinet has to send a $35,000 a year minister out to earn a few bucks at a cattle auction in Ontario.

Mr. Hays: On a question of privilege, I should like to say I have not taken a nickel for any of the work I have done for the cattle breeders, and I do not intend to.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Nielsen: I am sure the Minister of Agriculture would be overjoyed to take part in this debate and accept a challenge to do so although he could not, would not, or was unable to do so during the debate on the agricultural amendment.

We have heard much about co-ordination within the cabinet, but it seems to me that the right hand does not know what the left hand is doing, and we get more left hand from over there than right hand. I do not know whether this lack of co-ordination when it comes to answering questions is a result of too much imagination on the treasury benches or whether it is the result of too little; whether it is due to lack of co-ordination between their officials and themselves or to lack of cohesion among themselves. At any rate, there is a distressing lack of something. Otherwise, we would get the answers we deserve.

An hon. Member: You do.

Mr. Nielsen: I do not know whether it is insemination within the cabinet or dissemination, but in connection with this dissemination I think there should be more cross-breeding between cabinet members.

Mr. Berger: May I put a question to the hon. member? Does he not think that the system of answering questions under the present regime is much better than it was under the former administration, with all the shifting and changing of ministers that took place? I do not think he would have bothered to put his questions, because the minister would have been moved to another post.

Mr. Nielsen: I have sat in this chamber both on that side and on this side and I could tell the hon. member that under the former government, even though a question might have been embarrassing, it was answered truthfully and factually at all times.

The Secretary of State wonders why so many questions are asked on this side of the house. They are asked because we do not get the answers, so a question has to be put over and over again. And still we do not get the answer. Surely, unless a particular piece of information is privileged, or confidential, hon. members are entitled to be given it without distortion. I have watched ministers, particularly the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin), go red in the face when they are asked embarrassing questions, and either decline to answer them or equivocate. We have seen this happen over and over again. We do not get the answers from the treasury benches to which we are entitled; we have to read United States newspapers and other publications.

I am not condemning all ministers and all departments. Some ministers are co-operative and go a long way in answering questions. I should like to single out the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) in this respect for his co-operation concerning my questions about the Haines cut-off. He made this information available when he need not have done so. He did this on certain undertakings being given on my part and it seems to me the rest of the cabinet could be just as forthright. It seems to me that what the treasury benches might be doing is consulting with their consultants before they give an answer to these questions. Perhaps this accounts for the delay in answering questions. Perhaps these so-called consultants say to the ministers: I think we should release this much information but not that, because it would be politically undesirable. I am thinking of this patronage list, because that is precisely what it is.

Mr. Denis: On a point of order, I think the hon. member is looking at me. I am glad to hear he is looking after my interest. At the same time I may say I am a bit fed up with these innuendoes. May I remind him that the answer I gave to the house was an accurate answer. I was asked to produce a list for the guidance of the ministers of the crown. Such a list does not exist. In order to prove it was a document of mine, the hon. member for Grey-Bruce said instructions were given as to the use of "tu" and "vous". How could I know that any minister would be so closely related to any member of parliament and say "tu" or "vous"? How can one prove that such a minister could even write in French. This document is a personal document to speed up the work. It is in order to prepare letters for my signature.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I understand the minister is raising a point of order, and it does not seem to have been explained until now. I do not think we should engage in a debate at this time, and perhaps the hon. member for Yukon should be allowed to continue.

Mr. Denis: I rise on a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. Do you think a member of parliament should not rise in his place when he is accused of doing such a thing? He would be surprised to know that this part of my personal document was copied from a privileged list of the Tory party. I do not blame anyone for that; I do not blame him.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I gather that it was a question of privilege rather than a point of order that the minister was raising. I suggest that the point has been made and the hon. member for Yukon who has the floor should be allowed to continue.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It seems to me—

Mr. Caouette: On the same question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, may I ask how it is that on that list which belongs to the Postmaster General the constituents who are mentioned are defeated Liberal candidates at the last election?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that perhaps the minister had a question of personal privilege when he rose, but I do not see how the hon. member for Villeneuve has a question of privilege. It seems to me that if we continue this way we will engage in a debate at a time when we should really be considering a particular grievance which has been raised by an hon. member. I suggest that if other hon. members want to take part in the debate after the hon. member has finished his speech, they will be given the opportunity to speak.

Mr. Denis: May I be allowed to insist on answering the hon. member for Villeneuve?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I suggest that there was no question of privilege and it should not be answered. I recognize again the hon. member for Yukon.

[Translation]

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, even though the interruption of the hon. member for Villeneuve was out of order, it raised a point the Postmaster General (Mr. Denis) must comment on in view of its implications.

That is why I feel the Postmaster General should reply.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Much as I appreciate the opinion given by the minister, the fact remains that the Chair has already stated that no question of privilege was involved and that decision stands.

However, I say again that if the Postmaster General wishes to reply to the allegation or comment on the facts referred to, he will have an opportunity to do so during the debate.

Mr. Caouette: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker. You called me to order saying that I did not have a question of privilege when I put a question to the Postmaster General who was speaking on the question of privilege he had raised.

I was speaking to that question of privilege and not on a question of privilege raised by myself.

[Text]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It seems to me that my very innocent observations on this patronage list have drawn some blood. The Postmaster General (Mr. Denis) must have something of a guilty conscience, otherwise he would not have risen at all. There it is again for all to see. There is the patronage list that was addressed by the Postmaster General to his cabinet colleagues.

Mr. Denis: I did not deny that.

An hon. Member: He does not deny it.

Mr. Denis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker; I never denied that he might have stolen a list or a document from my own office.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

Mr. Denis: I might say that this document is for my personal use and has nothing to do with anything else mentioned by the hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Knowles: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, and I do so on behalf of all the members of this house. I do so under the provisions of standing order No. 17 which reads:

> Whenever any matter of privilege arises, it shall be taken into consideration immediately.

It is under standing order No. 17 that I am rising immediately, at this moment. The Postmaster General, whether or not he was in order in taking the floor, has admitted the existence of this list.

Some hon. Members: Resign, resign.

Mr. Knowles: My point of privilege will be readily apparent to all members who were in the house when we assembled at 2.30 this afternoon. At that time His Honour the Speaker gave a judgment on a point of privilege raised a few days ago by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler). The hon. member for Grey-Bruce asserted, amongst other things, that such a document existed. The Postmaster General, following the Secretary of State, had denied the existence of such a document.

Mr. Denis: For the guidance of the ministers of the crown, not for myself.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I think I have the floor.

His Honour the Speaker divided his judgment, as I remember it, into two parts. One of those parts, the second part, related to a question of fact. He said that if there was a dispute as to fact between the minister on the one hand and the hon. member for Grey-Bruce on the other, this was something concerning which the hon. member for Grey-Bruce had to take the word of the minister. The matter, so far as this house was concerned, seemed to be ended at that point. The hon. member for Grey-Bruce insisted that there was such a document and that he had it, but because the Speaker said that on a question of fact we had to take the word of a minister, that seemed to end the point.

I now submit, Mr. Speaker, that the point is not ended, the issue is not closed. The Postmaster General has now admitted the existence of the document which the hon. member for Grey-Bruce referred to.

Mr. Denis: I never did.

Mr. Knowles: I realize that you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, are in the chair at the moment, but my point of privilege is that, in all fairness to all the members of this house his honour the Speaker must now reconsider this matter and report again to the house upon it. We have been told by him we have to take the minister's word and that the hon. member for Grey-Bruce has no point of privilege so far as the existence of this document is concerned. Tonight, the Postmaster General has admitted the existence of the document. He declares it has some different purpose than we might have thought, but he admits the existence of the document. He states, in his own words, what the purpose of it has been. I say that Mr. Speaker should reconsider this matter. If this document is now admitted by all concerned to exist, reconsideration should be given to the matter of whether or not it should be tabled, either by the member for Grey-Bruce, who has a copy of it, or preferably by the Postmaster General himself who has now admitted its existence.

The Postmaster General now comes under the citation in the book which says that a minister of the crown, having made a reference to a document, must produce it. The Postmaster General made a reference to the document. He has admitted its existence. He has made certain statements as to the use of that document, and therefore the rules of the house now require him to produce that document. I ask that Mr. Speaker reconsider this very serious matter that has arisen in the midst of this debate tonight.

Mr. Winkler: I do not wish to add to what has been said by the previous speaker, but I do wish to request that the motive that was imputed by the Postmaster General to myself be withdrawn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has referred to the fact that a ruling was made earlier today by His Honour the Speaker, I am sure he will want to take into consideration the suggestions which have now been made by the hon. member.

Mr. Knowles: That will be satisfactory. I think the members of the cabinet must also consider the position of the Postmaster General in the light of this development.

Mr. Grafftey: And the Secretary of State.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, there is one point that perhaps escaped your notice in the recent exchange, and that was the request of the hon. member for Grey-Bruce, (Mr. Winkler), that the Postmaster General withdraw certain words imputed against the hon. member for Grey-Bruce, in that he may have stolen the document. I personally heard those words and I would ask Your Honour to demand the Postmaster General to withdraw those words.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is no doubt that if the minister has suggested that another hon. member has been guilty of the theft of the document, he would want to withdraw these words, and I would suggest that perhaps the minister should be given an opportunity to withdraw his words.

[Translation]

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to withdrawing any offensive remark that I may have made regarding the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler) who claims to have a document belonging to me. I do not know where he took it. I said that it might have been stolen. I regret having gone that far because even if this document belongs to me, I do not know where it comes from.

In any event, the hon. member thinks he is in possession of a document belonging to me.

[Text]

Mr. Nielsen: Well, Mr. Speaker, we can get back to the original point of departure here. I raised the matter of this document because it is a fact that on several occasions questions were asked of the Secretary of State and the Postmaster General with regard to it. I think that the whole business surrounding this matter is very strange indeed. I do not know why those on the other side would be so embarrassed to have one of their own documents tabled. It is a production of theirs. It has instructions directed to every executive assistant of every minister on the treasury benches, and I do not see what is embarrassing about it.

There are those who believe in patronage and those who do not. I for one do not. I will fight it wherever I see it, and the Postmaster General will see that if he looks through his files. I am afraid I cannot come to the same conclusion with regard to the treasury benches, particularly in the face of the existence of this document. I do not know why everybody is covering their eyes. I say, let the people of Canada get a look at the way the country is run and at the instructions the Postmaster General has given to his colleagues, whether it is for a reference, or a Christmas card list—

Mr. Denis: Yes.

Mr. Nielsen: —or whatever it is; but it does seem very strange indeed to see the name of every defeated Liberal candidate, including the name of my Liberal opponent in the Yukon, listed as a consultant.

Answers to Questions Incomplete

What are the people in the Yukon going to think when they know that the minister is going to consult the man who was defeated in the last election and who is named in this list? What is he going to consult him about? Obviously it is about appointments and contracts, and all the rest of the operations of the department. Why can the minister not say that? Why does he have to beat about the bush? Why does he have to call it a Christmas card list? We all know what it is.

I think I will pass from there, Mr. Speaker, to the answers I have heard from the Minister of National Health and Welfare when she was squirming, and I mean squirming, under the questions of the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) and the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon), as to the knowledge of Premier Lesage concerning the existence of a certain state of affairs with regard to the pension plan.

She knew that the premier of Quebec had already communicated with her, or she knew of his intentions with regard to the introduction of his own legislation. That is quite obvious from the answers she gave; yet she equivocated and back-tracked and did not come up with a direct answer. Yet all the press did—

Miss LaMarsh: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the member, whom I shall not even call an hon. member—

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Woolliams: Withdraw.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Miss LaMarsh: The member has in the last few words told an absolute and utter untruth as though it were a fact. I ask him, in view of the fact that I have repeatedly said in this house the absolute opposite of what he has just averred, to withdraw it on his honour—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Miss LaMarsh: And under the rules of the house I ask him to accept my word.

Mr. Nielsen: On the question of privilege raised by the hon. lady—I certainly do not want to be so ungracious as not to refer to her as the hon. lady—I leave Hansard to speak for itself, and if the hon. lady has taken offence by what she construes to be statements of fact by me, then I am very sorry; but I must say the hon. lady knows what the facts are, and it seems passing strange that she did not tell us the whole story when questioned so closely on it.

An hon. Member: The truth squad.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, with the vast experience gained by the hon. lady in her activities on the truth squad in the last election she certainly should know the difference.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member should recognize he is now departing from the previous point of his remarks.

Mr. Nielsen: All I am trying to do is convince the members on the treasury benches that they should tell the truth directly, unequivocally and in a forthright fashion when answering our questions on orders of the day or on the order paper. It seems to me this is what we are not getting, and I am sure it will not go unnoticed, Mr. Speaker, that the ministers I have singled out have all just risen in their places. I hope, in the 40 minutes left, they will each take the opportunity of rising and answering some of the questions that have been asked over the past three or four weeks, in a fashion which is in keeping with truth, frankness and forthrightness, and which has been the habit of this house in the six years before that under the former government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the Minister of National Health and Welfare rising on the same grievance?

Miss LaMarsh: On a point of personal privilege, Mr. Speaker. I have, Mr. Speaker, said that the words spoken by the last speaker were not true. It is my understanding under the rules of this chamber that my word must be accepted, and I therefore must insist that the hon. member withdraw.

Mr. Nielsen: If the hon. lady on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, feels within her heart that I have said anything untrue about the way she has answered questions, then I would gladly withdraw.

An hon. Member: Let Hansard speak for itself.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The rules are quite clear and I am sure the hon. member realizes he has to accept the statement made by another hon. member.

Mr. Grafftey: He has.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Well, it was not too clear to me whether he had withdrawn or not. It was my feeling, to be perfectly candid, that the words he uttered were not really a withdrawal.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I do not know how much farther I can go.

Miss LaMarsh: On the same point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that the hon. member now disgraces not only his party but his constituency—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Miss LaMarsh: —since he is a member of this chamber, is bound by the rules, and has not indicated whether he is prepared to be bound by the rules and withdraw without equivocation something to which he appears to object. After speaking for half an hour by the clock on this subject he will not stand and say he withdraws any offensive material.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, what is it that the hon. lady wishes me to withdraw?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is my understanding that the hon. member, according to what he told the Chair, had actually withdrawn any suggestion that he did not accept the word of the minister.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member for Kootenay West rising on the same grievance, the same subject?

Mr. Herridge: It is on the same subject, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) has raised a very important question this evening during this opportunity to deal with grievances. I have been a member of this house for 18 years—in fact, I have the longest service in this house of any member of the New Democratic party group—so I think I am at least recognized as having had some experience in the house. I say in all seriousness that never before in my experience in this house have the opposition been given so many contradictory, incomplete or evasive answers from the cabinet benches as they have during this session.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Herridge: I do not intend to refer to the incident that has just blown over as between that very kindly gentleman, the Postmaster General, and other members, and who is a little annoyed at being caught.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Herridge: It was obvious from his reply that the Secretary of State did not tell the facts to the house when he was questioned earlier this week on this subject. I wish also to mention, to illustrate my point—we have heard it repeated on a number of occasions—that the opposition were very concerned about the absence of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) and the expectant minister of agriculture, the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Tremblay), during the debate on agricultural policy a week ago today.

Strangely enough, the Minister of Agriculture has again vanished. Surely they do not hold auction sales at night time in Ottawa, under artificial light? I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) a question about the absence of the minister because of the concern that was felt on the opposition side of the house. This concern was felt by all opposition parties. I asked the Prime Minister as to the whereabouts of the Minister of Agriculture last Tuesday and the Prime Minister replied:

> The Minister of Agriculture and his associate, having taken part in this debate on agriculture, left the house to attend engagements previously undertaken for the Minister of Agriculture with farmers of Canada in the west. They got in touch with the grass roots while the hon. member remained in the house.

Here this afternoon the minister admitted that he was attending an auction sale in Kingston on that day.

An hon. Member: A bull sale.

Mr. Herridge: The house was told by the minister that he did not receive a cent for taking part in this auction, but we must remember he was auctioning cattle for his brother's firm. There is rather a close relationship there. Anyway, we find out that the minister did not go to meet farmers in the west or to meet with the grass roots; he went to some board of trade or chamber of commerce meeting in Edmonton to replace the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp). I have since heard that even that gathering did not think he was "Sharp" enough.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Herridge: This is a serious development in our parliamentary history, Mr. Speaker. Regardless of our differences, it has always been the practice of this house and in the country to respect the word of a member of the cabinet. When we can no longer respect the word of a member of the cabinet, democracy in this country is on the downhill grade.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, before concluding I want to say—and I shall be very brief—that I consider it strictly improper for the Minister of Agriculture—who I wish were here—to use his influence as Minister of Agriculture to draw a large and curious crowd to his brother's auction sale.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I respectfully submit to the hon. member that he is now getting away from the grievance under discussion.

Some hon. Members: Oh, no.

Answers to Questions Incomplete

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I think the Chair should be given an opportunity to express its point of view. The essence of the grievance put forward by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) is that hon. members posing questions to the government do not receive appropriate or proper replies. My understanding of the grievance which the hon. member for Kootenay West is now submitting is that he is objecting to the conduct of the Minister of Agriculture. In the mind of the Chair this is essentially different from the grievance submitted by the hon. member for Yukon. If the hon. member who now has the floor can relate his comments to the grievance put forward by the hon. member for Yukon, he will be in order; otherwise he is obviously out of order.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I respect your opinion, but I was relating what I was saying to improper answers given by ministers in the house, and I was using this as an illustration of the answers of ministers. It is just as improper for the minister to attend an auction sale under these circumstances as it would be for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) to go out and sell bonds for a brother of his who controlled a finance house, or the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) to appear in court on behalf of a brother lawyer.

In view of these unfortunate incidents, which seem to have accelerated and increased in recent weeks, I do hope it will not again be necessary for the members on the opposition side of the house to raise this grievance. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me say that I do hope the Minister of Agriculture will in future have a sense of dignity with respect to his office and a sense of his responsibilities to this house and to the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. These remarks are obviously out of order.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) has raised, this evening, a most serious grievance which affects each and every member of every opposition party in this House of Commons because it concerns our individual rights as opposition members. As the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) so ably said a few moments ago, not since he has been in this House of Commons has such dictatorial arrogance set into the treasury benches in such a short time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

Mr. Grafftey: I say, Mr. Speaker, that in a few short weeks, by intended actions, members of the government have sought to lessen the effective role of opposition members. While Mr. Lesage and the Liberals in the province of Quebec say there is never going to be any more patronage, what do we see in this House of Commons? We see a bland admission by the Postmaster General (Mr. Denis) that defeated Liberal candidates are to be consulted in every district in Canada in which they were defeated. But getting back to the original grievance and the pith and substance of the grievance raised by the hon. member for Yukon, what have we seen in this house? During the last election campaign what did the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) say? He went from coast to coast saying that one thing the government must be is forthright with the Canadian people. He said: We must give them the facts, we must let them know what the facts are, we must communciate the facts to the people so they can be partners in government.

What has happened? The members on the treasury benches, by assuming a role of dictatorial arrogance, have time and time again in the question period withheld the facts from opposition members. All we are asking tonight is that they be forthright with us and with the Canadian people in the way they said they were going to be during the election campaign. Why? Why waste the time of the house? Why did not the Postmaster General (Mr. Denis)—

Some hon. Members: Why? Why?

Mr. Grafftey: —admit the existence of this document in the first place, instead of wasting the time of all hon. members and the house as he has done? Let us be more specific, Mr. Speaker. As a member from the province of Quebec I took a very real interest in federal-provincial relations at the beginning of the session, in a non-partisan way. I felt that at this stage in our national development it was important for all hon. members to know the real facts in relation to many fields affected by federal-provincial relations, such as the pension plan, the municipal loans fund plan and the financial agreements. I put question after question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh), and I side with the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). I do not know what tomfoolery she was up to tonight, but she was less than forthright with me, and no amount of brazen argument and talking on her part will cool us down this evening. The hon. lady got up on a question of thin-skinned privilege and could not even make her statement of privilege concise. Time after time during the debate on the pension scheme I put precise questions to the hon. lady that demanded a yes or no answer or a one-sentence answer. Were the answers forthcoming? No.

I put questions on the municipal loans fund legislation to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) requiring a yes or no or one-sentence answer, in order to help those of us on this side of the house to study this matter conscientiously, so we could be an effective opposition. And, by the way, I note that the hon. lady is making tomfool, head-shaking movements. I suggest that dictatorial arrogance deserves a better reaction than that.

As I was saying, I put questions time and time again to the Minister of Finance in order that I might prepare myself to study and debate the municipal loans fund legislation. There were no answers. He would not get out of his seat. I put question after question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) in relation to the forthcoming federal-provincial meeting. There were no answers forthcoming. Then the Speaker had to remind me that these questions had already been dealt with and I was out of order, and he asked me to put my questions on the order paper.

So I placed on the order paper motions Nos. 19, 22 and 33 for the production of papers all relating to the pith and substance of these subjects, finance, the municipal loan fund legislation and so on, all of which come within the orbit of federal-provincial relations. I put these motions on the order paper on June 26, I believe, and the government accepted them and agreed to make the returns. In a few short weeks there is going to be a dominion-provincial conference but I have not been able to get answers from the ministry. I did what the Speaker said. I put them on the order paper, and I have not even got the basic facts to begin my study.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Grafftey: No amount of intervention will deter me. In 1957 every Canadian knew what it was like when the Liberals imposed closure in this house. This is a new type of closure. We are told to put things on the order paper. This is the government which slandered our prime minister. This is the government whose members went from coast to coast saying that the government should be forthright with the people.

I ask the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill), who is sitting smugly in his seat, why is there this delay? Why is it that an opposition member who cannot get verbal answers to his questions has to wait three months for returns to simple questions? There is nothing tricky about the questions. They are simple matters of fact which I require, so that I can prepare myself to debate as a responsible opposition member before the federal-provincial conference takes place. In the name of all Canadians I ask, why is this new form of closure being imposed? I say to the Secretary of State that there is something more than Machiavellian practice behind this.

Miss LaMarsh: Will the hon. gentleman permit a question? I would be most grateful if he would tell me what questions he has put on the order paper directed to the ministry of health and welfare which remain unanswered.

Mr. Grafftey: On the orders of the day. As far as the order paper is concerned I do not believe my questions touched upon her department.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Grafftey: I say that if you go back to the remarks I have already made in this debate you will find nothing contradictory.

Mr. Deschatelets: You should withdraw what you said.

Mr. Grafftey: The other day I got up in the house not knowing the facts at all—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Chevrier: You went out in a huff.

Mr. Grafftey: Hon. members jeer, but it so happens that an inmate in one of the federal penitentiaries was beaten up and thrown in the hole. We are told, and I admit it is rumour, that he was thrown in the hole for a number of days and did not receive medical treatment for several days. I got up and asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) a question in as polite terms as possible. I firmly believe that the minister was ready to answer the question and I bear no malice toward him in this regard, because I know he wanted to answer it. The same holds true so far as the Speaker is concerned. He was ready to listen to my point of order; but a jeering, screaming house howled me down and I did not want to participate in that type of debate.

When the people of Canada say today that they are worried about parliament, they are worried about parliament as an institution, and parliament as an institution is written large in the principles of Conservative thought. We are here to preserve those principles. All I ask is, why the delay? Ministers of the crown, including the Prime Minister, went from coast to coast saying they were going to be forthright. All we are asking now is that in the name of goodness they be forthright with opposition members and with the people of Canada. Answer our questions, and I am sure by doing so you will make this institution a more worthy one in the eyes of the Canadian people.

[Translation]

Mr. Lucien Plourde (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to express a few opinions from this corner of the house, with regard to the statement made by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) concerning the Postmaster General (Mr. Denis).

If there is in fact a list, I think that we should look further to find out what was the purpose of it.

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Plourde: I have seen it and I have noticed that in my county—

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. A moment ago, when the matter of an incident connected with that list came up, the Postmaster General wished to answer the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), and if I understood the situation correctly, you mentioned to the minister that you would consider the matter at a later date. Therefore, I am of the opinion that if the Postmaster General was not allowed to refute some allegations from the hon. member for Villeneuve, the hon. member for Quebec West should not deal with the same matter at the present time.

[Text]

Mr. Douglas: Surely, Mr. Speaker—

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I believe that the minister is misinterpreting the remarks of the Chair. I said that, in my opinion, there was no question of privilege.

But I feel at this point that if the hon. member for Quebec West does not limit his remarks to the matter under discussion he will depart from the grievance stated by the hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. Plourde: Mr. Speaker, I was just coming to the point. What I wanted to point out to the house before coming to the crux of the matter, is merely that if Mr. Jean Paul Nolin is the dispenser of patronage in my riding, we shall not accept that, and my constituents would be very annoyed about such a situation.

In the last few days, I noted that when we put questions to members of the cabinet, some of them seemed to take a malicious pleasure in telling us: Put your question on the order paper.

We are ready to follow that suggestion, but most of the time, answers seem to be given only to get rid of us. If such is the attitude which the government intends to take, I can assure the house that we will often take the floor and that the government will have to tell us the truth. If not, we will lose no opportunity to state a grievance such as that expressed in the house this evening by the hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. Speaker, if we cannot learn what that famous list was used for or if what we heard about it is true, the house should not dismiss this grievance without calling the attention of the Canadian people, in order to reveal the meddling of some legislators.

In fact, it is our duty to work for the general welfare of the country and the ministers should consult the elected members and not other individuals who have no authority in the eyes of the people.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to stress the views of my constituents in this respect, and if that list is eventually found to be of importance or useful, I will rise again to register my vigorous protests against those dispensers of patronage who have always existed in the past.

Mr. Speaker, we do not want such a situation to arise again in the future, and I hope that the incident will serve as a warning to the hon. minister, until such time as some other irregularity possibly pops up in other departments.

[Text]

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak on the same grievance. I occasionally put a question on the order paper, so I have had some personal experience of this question. A couple of weeks ago I thought that perhaps all the ministry had had inspiration, since they might have read a speech made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin), I believe down in a border city, in which he indicated that what was necessary in this very crucial matter of United States-Canadian relations was an end of platitude—away with platitude, let us have straight talk. At first I thought he had committed himself to an act of self-destruction. I realize, Mr. Speaker, there was perhaps a great awakening here, a great example for the minister.

I should like to think that we could have some straight talk. I can give an example of how lightly the government is answering these questions. My secretary made a mistake in compiling question No. 1,203. I assumed she knew the sex of the person involved, but she did not. So we got this question:

What office does Dallas Taylor hold in the government?

What is his age, place of birth—

And so on. As soon as I saw that, knowing that Dallas Taylor was a female, not a male, I immediately informed the clerk in charge of this.

Mr. Pickersgill: You asked her age.

Mr. Fisher: Yes, I asked the age. I understood from him that it was changed, but the government puts on the record for all Canada to see that poor Miss Taylor—I think it is "Miss"—is imperishably in print as a male. This is the kind of shoddiness hardly expected of a government.

If shoddiness is not bad enough, I should like to turn to another matter. This is what I would call a flippant reply made to me by the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill), our house leader, a most august gentleman with a tremendous amount of responsibilities under his wing—and we all appreciate how hard he works at them. This type of answer is the kind of flippancy which really correlates with the arrogance earlier referred to. I asked question No. 1,202, which asked:

What office does Gordon Sheppard hold in the government?

Then it went on to ask what particular qualities of Mr. Sheppard led to his engagement. Part of the answer, as reported on page 3620 of Hansard, was:

In 1961, Mr. Sheppard co-founded Inter-Video Productions Limited to produce television programs and films. From 1961-1963 he was vice president and director of Inter-Video Productions Limited. Included among Mr. Sheppard's television productions was a unique C.T.V. program featuring Mr. Douglas Fisher, M.P.

This is effrontery, Mr. Speaker, when a minister allows an answer which I am sure will be taken by anyone reading it as, in effect, a ridicule of the hon. member involved.

I should like to turn to some other questions I have asked. I asked a question which the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) refused to answer on orders of the day. It related clearly to the F.L.Q. I was instructed by you, Mr. Speaker, to put it on the order paper. I put it on as a starred question, and despite the fact that it was elementary in its simplicity it stayed on the order paper for two weeks and into a third week. It asked the Minister of Justice whether the F.L.Q. was considered subversive. I complained about this to a friend of mine, and he replied: "You know the Minister of Justice; he probably thinks you are referring to the federation Liberale in Quebec". But my point is that there is an element of stall.

I would suggest to ministers, if they feel they are giving fair answers, that they examine some of the answers given to me to questions I have put on the order paper relating to the queen's publisher. I have great suspicions about the operation of that particular department, and have had for several years. It has nothing to do with the incumbent government or the previous government, but with the personnel and set-up there. This concern of mine is evidently shared by some Liberal members, including the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Francis), who has also placed questions on the order paper. In almost every case where I asked a long series of questions I have been shrugged off or put off with the most evasive and minute of answers. I can remember the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill), when he was the conscience of the house in his role as a member of the opposition, making much of the evasiveness of previous ministers. I once remember raising the question of the evasiveness of the Department of Transport when it was headed by Mr. Hees, and as a result of raising that issue I had the satisfaction of an assurance from the minister, and subsequently some good honest and direct answers.

I should like to ask hon. members supporting the government as well as the minister himself, to read some of the answers we have had from the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIlraith) this year. I ask them, have they really felt we are getting clear and direct answers to the sort of issues we raise? I insist that there is a real element of truth in the charge raised by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), and we will get no better example of it than the kind of answers we have had throughout the session from the Minister of Transport. Lord knows, they are long enough, Mr. Speaker, but they are not clear and almost never relate to the question asked. If the minister wants some specifics I would ask him to look at some of the answers he has given.

One is on the question of run-throughs and the other is on the question of branch line abandonment. Answers of this kind are symptomatic of a government which assumes it will be in power for a long, long time and I think it is a little too early for such an assumption to be made. I should like to compliment some of the ministries whose answers in the main, have been direct. In this regard I can certainly say that in my opinion the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen), the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Favreau), and the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) have been examples to some of their colleagues. I might say to the President of the Privy Council that, as one of the newer ministers, he might well consider some of the answers he gives which are so short as to be completely noninformative.

Answers to Questions Incomplete

I think a serious point has been raised, and if in some parts of my remarks I have allowed levity to creep in I apologize. I am serious as, I think, was the hon. member for Yukon. Already we see an attitude on the part of this government which goes back to days we thought had long gone by. It is almost as if, as one newspaperman put it to me, the events of 1956 and 1957 had not happened.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): In the few minutes which are left of today's sitting I thought that in view of what has taken place this evening it might be appropriate if I were to address myself to the house with reference to what we might expect in the course of the near future. I rise, as I did on another occasion, to say to the government that we on this side of the house, as the official opposition, are prepared to deport ourselves in a way which would do credit, as we have in the past, to the operation of parliament and the entire country.

An hon. Member: When are you going to start?

Mr. Winkler: I believe the time to proceed in the proper manner is now. This responsibility is not, in my view, that of the official opposition. I wish the Prime Minister were present this evening. I do not say this in any derogatory way, because I know the function he is attending. I wish he were present because in the light of events I believe the honest and proper course which should be followed now, so that we could present ourselves as a proper parliament to our country without the type of thing which has gone on since the opening of this parliament, should now take place. We should examine the facts; and I do so with trepidation in my heart, because it is not the duty of the whip of any party to rise in the house and make suggestions such as I have in mind this evening. But I am sure they are in the mind of the Prime Minister and of every member of this house. We all find ourselves here as a result of what the electorate has chosen to do. I may think that the electorate in one area might have chosen differently, just as my own views in this regard may be reciprocated. But that is beside the point. We are here in our own right.

I refer to the matter which was raised by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and which was introduced by myself at an earlier date. In fact, it was brought up before that by a member of the New Democratic party. I do not wish to go into specific detail, but I will merely refer to the seriousness of the situation which has developed as a result of the production of this document. On the day I rose to speak on the subject I quoted Hansard and said at that time that the Postmaster General (Mr. Denis) had misled the house. Because of the fact that I have a great deal of respect for the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill)—I think he is aware of this—I said the Postmaster General had also misled the Secretary of State.

Then we had a situation where the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh) was participating in provincial matters. This was a gross error as far as the rights of the provinces are concerned.

Miss LaMarsh: I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question?

Mr. Winkler: I have two minutes. After I have finished I will certainly allow the hon. lady to ask her question.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think that since the hon. gentleman has changed the subject I have the right to rise on a question of privilege. I should only be a second. The Postmaster General did not mislead me in any way, nor did I mislead the house. If the hon. gentleman will read the motion which was made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) he will find that the motion is extremely clear and specific. It refers to a document prepared by the Postmaster General—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member raised a question affecting my personal reputation. He did it very nicely but, surely, since he suggested I was led into misleading the house I should be permitted to put the facts briefly on record.

Mr. MacInnis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the house will not be surprised when I rise to remind you that the Secretary of State has once again risen to take part in a discussion without being formally recognized. There may have been a nod from you, but I did not see it. May I recall that one of my hon. friends rose six or seven times earlier today in an attempt to catch your eye on a question of privilege, but failed to do so.

Mr. Winkler: May I continue in the one minute left to me? I will terminate at the end of that time. I will continue by referring to the Minister of Agriculture along the same lines as were pursued by my hon. friend from Yukon. I do not say for one moment that the Prime Minister misled the house, because I do not think that would be a fair thing to say; but certainly, then, the Minister of Agriculture misled the Prime Minister in the statement he made today. There is an old phrase, possibly shopworn, which runs: "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune." The fortune is ours, as Canadians. The responsibility that lies upon us is to discharge the business of this country and I believe the most important task which faces the Prime Minister tonight is to ask for the resignation of the three ministers to whom I have referred.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt this motion?

An hon. Member: On division.

Motion (Mr. Gordon) agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

The estimates of the following departments were first taken up and entered for consideration:

DEPARTMENT OF FORESTRY

1. Departmental administration including $24,000 for grants in aid of forestry research $1,060,700.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

1. Departmental administration including grants and contributions as detailed in the estimates $1,378,100.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

1. Departmental administration including authority notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, and subject to allotment by the treasury board, for total commitments of $2,529,570,600 for the purposes of votes 1, 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, 30, 35, 40, 45, 50, 55, 60 and 65 of this department regardless of the year in which such commitments will come in course of payment (of which it is estimated that $978,136,600 will come due for payment in future years) and authority to make recoverable advances under any of the said votes in respect of assistance rendered to the United Nations, any party of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization or any provincial or municipal government $3,432,000.

Proceedings reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: I should like to ask the house leader, Mr. Speaker, if the order of business as outlined yesterday holds for tomorrow, Thursday and Friday?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, with one slight exception, sir. The Prime Minister has reminded me that he had begun to speak on a motion to set up a committee on procedure, and suggested to me that before we embark on the income tax bill again we should complete that debate, which I think there was some disposition to feel could be done fairly quickly. It seems to me, after this evening, it would be a very appropriate thing as the first item of business tomorrow.

It being three minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, October 23, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. NIELSEN—ALLEGED UNTRUE RETURN TO MOTION FOR PAPERS

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which affects all hon. members of this house. It concerns a motion which was placed on the order paper by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) relating to the production of a certain list of instructions, or what have you, to the members of the cabinet by the Postmaster General (Mr. Denis). The Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) and the Postmaster General have both denied the existence of this list, and in reply to the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North for the production of this list a nil return was tabled.

The matter has also to do with the statement of Your Honour in this house yesterday. Subsequent to the transpiration of these events, namely the denial of the Secretary of State and the Postmaster General of the existence of this document, and subsequent to the statement by Your Honour in the house yesterday, certain events took place last night which I think justify the reopening of the whole matter. Your Honour's statement dealt with the propriety of a private member tabling a document which was in his possession, and also dealt with the denials of the Postmaster General and the Secretary of State.

Last night, while Your Honour was absent from the chair, the matter of this list again arose. Your Honour will find recorded on pages 3882 and 3883 of last night's proceedings the undoubted admission by the Postmaster General that this list actually is in existence. Only one of these statements can be true. Either the document exists or it does not exist. We on this side of the house are convinced it does exist. I feel that since the remarks of the Postmaster General last night give a clear indication that the document does exist, there has been a deliberate misleading of the members of this house both by the Postmaster General and the Secretary of State.

Because of the very fundamental questions involved here, including the integrity of two cabinet ministers and the privileges of every hon. member in this house, in my view and in the view of several other members on this side of the house the matter deserves a more careful inquiry than it has received. We feel that these denials have been false. There should be an opportunity given to the members of this house to determine whether or not the document exists.

I move, therefore, seconded by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler):

> That the matters raised in the statement made to the house this day—
>
> That is October 22.
>
> —be referred to the standing committee on privileges and elections, and that such committee be instructed to report its findings thereon to the house.

Mr. Speaker: If there is any other hon. member who would like to speak to this subject, I would be glad to listen.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say something about this question. I begin by saying that I am not enthused about sending this matter to the committee in the light of what happened to the last deliberations of that committee and the way the house changed the spirit of the recommendations made by that committee. I should like, however, to say something about this matter because it arises out of a motion for the production of papers which I moved last week. This motion was to the effect that an order of the house be issued for a list of consultants prepared in the office of the Postmaster General for the guidance of cabinet ministers, and copies of all correspondence between ministers of the crown and the consultants in each riding.

Sessional paper 243, dated October 17, 1963, the return of the Postmaster General to this motion No. 99, was to the effect there was no such list and, therefore, no such correspondence. Now, it seems obvious to me that what I was asking for was a list prepared by the Postmaster General, or at least in his department, and used by the minister or other cabinet ministers. I think that was pretty obvious. The minister said in his reply that there was no such list and, therefore, no such correspondence. Last night in this house the minister said a number of things, one of which, as reported on page 3883 of Hansard, was as follows:

> This document is a personal document to speed up the work. It is in order to prepare letters for my signature.

When the minister says "this document" he is in fact admitting that there is such a document, a fact which he denied in his return. Later on, as reported at page 3884 of Hansard, he said:

I might say that this document is for my personal use—

Yet, Mr. Speaker, in his return he said in fact there was no document and there had been no correspondence with any of the people concerned, the consultants mentioned. In the Winnipeg Tribune of October 8, 1963 there is a story concerning Rev. Fred Douglas, who was the Liberal candidate in the constituency of Winnipeg South Centre, and listing Mr. Douglas as the consultant in the constituency. Mr. Douglas is quoted as saying:

For the best information possible it seems logical that the government in power should continue to consult its constituency organizations—whichever government that happened to be.

Mr. Douglas has been listed as a consultant for his riding. Asked if he was in fact a consultant, Mr. Douglas said:

I am interested in the constituency and its welfare, and from time to time write letters. If people in the constituency want something I may bring it to the attention of the government.

Mr. Douglas said that he received notice that a new postal station was being considered and was asked if he knew anyone in the area suitable for the job. Here is a statement, Mr. Speaker, by a Liberal candidate in the last election to the effect that he was in fact written to by the department in connection with a postal station in the constituency. Yet in his return the minister said that there was no such list and no correspondence.

I do not know what good it will do to send this matter to the committee, Mr. Speaker. It seems to me that if members of parliament cannot get ministers to give an honest and forthright answer to questions asked of them it is going to be virtually impossible for this house to do the business which the members have been sent here to do. Surely the basis for a parliamentary system such as we have is that if a member of parliament asks a minister a question he should get an honest answer. You yourself, Mr. Speaker, and I think rightly so, last week insisted that a minister's statement must be accepted as being factual. Hon. members on this side would like to be able to follow this position and to know that when they ask a question and receive an answer the answer does contain all the facts. If as we go along we find out this is not so we will have no alternative but to continue to cross-examine and badger ministers, and I think this will certainly affect the work of the house. I would like to see this matter cleared up as quickly as possible.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that we spent a number of minutes last night, in fact more than an hour, on this subject and other matters affecting questions and orders in the house. While the hon. member who has just taken his seat has not dealt with the subject matter of the motion but has taken advantage of the motion, which was raised as a question of privilege, to discuss matters which are extraneous to it—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Orlikow: How extraneous?

Mr. Chevrier: Extraneous to this extent, that it seems to me that we in this house have other matters to deal with at this time which are of far more urgency and importance than the matter which has been raised just now.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the minister whether he considers a matter relating to the veracity of a cabinet minister extraneous?

Mr. Chevrier: Having regard to the attitude to this question taken on more than one occasion by the hon. member, let me say to him that the Secretary of State made it quite clear, when the motion for production of papers came up on a former occasion, what the position was. I have nothing to retract from what I said a moment ago.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, let me say to you at once that as far as the motion is concerned we on this side have no objection whatsoever to the matter going to the committee on privileges and elections. On the contrary, we welcome it.

Mr. Speaker: The matter is not without a certain amount of difficulty and heat. It would appear in the first instance that this is a continuation of the debate last night. However, a question of privilege has been raised. I have given some thought to the questions raised last night and to the question of privilege raised today. It is, of course, my duty to say whether there is a prima facie case before I consider the motion moved by the hon. member for Yukon. If I may clear up some points of confusion I think it might be useful at this time to make a reasonably short statement to the house on how the Chair sees the matter.

At the opening of yesterday's sitting, I presented to the house my views concerning a question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce in relation to the existence of a document in the office of the Postmaster General.

I may briefly summarize my views in regard to that question of privilege by saying that in my opinion the matter was, in effect, a dispute between two members as to allegations of facts and, therefore, a prima facie breach of privilege did not arise in regard thereto.

Last evening, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre rose on a question of privilege in relation to the same matter and, as reported at pages 3884-5 of Hansard, stated in part as follows:

I realize that you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, are in the chair at the moment, but my point of privilege is that in all fairness to all the members of this house his honour the Speaker must now reconsider this matter and report again to the house upon it. We have been told by him we have to take the minister's word and that the hon. member for Grey-Bruce has no point of privilege so far as the existence of this document is concerned. Tonight, the Postmaster General has admitted the existence of the document. He declares it has some different purpose than we might have thought, but he admits the existence of the document. He states, in his own words, what the purpose of it has been. I say that Mr. Speaker should reconsider this matter. If this document is now admitted by all concerned to exist, reconsideration should be given to the matter of whether or not it should be tabled, either by the member for Grey-Bruce, who has a copy of it, or preferably by the Postmaster General himself who has now admitted its existence.

The Postmaster General now comes under the citation in the book which says that a minister of the crown, having made a reference to a document, must produce it. The Postmaster General made a reference to the document. He has admitted its existence. He has made certain statements as to the use of that document, and therefore the rules of the house now require him to produce that document. I ask that Mr. Speaker reconsider this very serious matter that has arisen in the midst of this debate tonight.

At this juncture, I must say that I am not aware of having used certain words which were attributed to me by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, namely, and I quote:

We have been told by him we have to take the minister's word and that the hon. member for Grey-Bruce has no point of privilege so far as the existence of this document is concerned.

What I endeavoured to say was that the question was, in effect, a dispute between two members as to allegations of facts.

While I do not wish to enter into a debate on this question, it might be helpful if I were to review a few of the proceedings leading up to the incident of last evening.

On Wednesday, October 16, 1963, the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) proposed a motion in the following terms, namely:

That an order of the house do issue for a list of "consultants" prepared in the office of the Postmaster General for the guidance of cabinet ministers and copies of all correspondence between ministers of the crown and the "consultants" in each riding.

Whereupon, the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill), as reported at page 3626 of Hansard, stated:

Mr. Speaker, I wonder could I raise a question of privilege with respect to this motion. I think Your Honour on reading it will see that the language of the motion is so obscure that it would not be possible for anyone reading the motion by itself—which is all that is before the house—to discern what the hon. gentleman was driving at. I have consulted the Postmaster General, who tells me that in his office no document of any description was prepared for the guidance of his colleagues, and therefore there could be no such document even if the motion were put.

Later on in the discussion the Postmaster General is recorded at page 3626 as having stated:

Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State should know whether he has received such a list for his guidance, but I never sent out any list for the guidance of the Secretary of State or any other minister. It does not exist. Therefore I do not think we should answer in regard to something that does not exist.

The following day, Thursday, October 17, 1963 the hon. member for Grey-Bruce, rising on a question of privilege, held in his hand a document which he alleged to be the document that the hon. member for Winnipeg North sought to obtain by virtue of his motion.

It is a fact, of course, that the Postmaster General acknowledges the existence of a document that is kept in his office, but he contends that the document is for his own personal use. I would refer hon. members to page 3884 of yesterday's Hansard.

I need not refer again at this time to the discussion which arose last evening, but it seems to me that the debate which occurred last night brings us back to our original point of departure. The problem, as I see it, is a matter of debate. On the one hand it is claimed that there is no such document as described in the terms of the motion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North while, on the other, it is contended that such document does exist, and the hon. member for Grey-Bruce exhibited a document in the house which he contends fits the terms of the motion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North.

It is not the duty of the Chair, nor is he in a position to decide whether or not there is such a document. If the matter is debated the Chair cannot and must not participate therein. I need only remind hon. members that in this regard standing order 10 reads in part as follows:

Mr. Speaker shall not take part in any debate before the house.

Before terminating my remarks I might refer to part of the remarks made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre wherein he states:

Question of Privilege

The Postmaster General now comes under the citation in the book which says that a minister of the crown, having made a reference to a document, must produce it.

At page 460, May's sixteenth edition, it is stated:

Another rule, or principle of debate, may be here added. A minister of the crown is not at liberty to read or quote from a dispatch or other state paper not before the house, unless he be prepared to lay it on the table.

In Bourinot's fourth edition at page 337 it is stated:

It is a parliamentary rule that when a minister of the crown quotes a public document in the house, and founds upon it an argument or assertion, that document, if called for, ought to be produced.

At page 338 of the same publication it is stated in part as follows:

A minister who summarizes a correspondence but does not actually quote from it is not bound to lay it on the table.

The effect of the same rule is to be found in section 2 of citation 159, Beauchesne's fourth edition, wherein in part it is stated as follows:

2. A minister of the crown is not at liberty to read or quote from a dispatch or other state paper not before the house, unless he be prepared to lay it upon the table.

There is, I suggest, a difference between referring to a document and the citing or reading from the same. Using these citations as my authority, it seems to me that the rule referred to by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre does not apply in this instance.

In conclusion I should like to say that it is not within the competence of the Chair to order any minister to produce a document that may or may not be in his office. In this regard I refer hon. members to a ruling of the Chair and a decision of the house thereon, which is to be found at page 237 of the Journals, April 28, 1952.

In my opinion, there not being a prima facie case of privilege, I do not feel that the motion as moved by the hon. member for Yukon is in order.

Mr. Nielsen: On this question Your Honour has made a ruling, but I remain quite convinced there is a very serious question here to be decided upon and to be inquired into further, concerning the veracity of the two ministers concerned. It therefore gives me very great regret that I must appeal your ruling.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the appeal, perhaps I might be permitted to say that if the house would agree unanimously, without prejudice to the rules, to permit this matter to be referred to the committee on privileges and elections there would be no objection on the part of the government to having this done so that the truth can be established.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Secretary of State is so bold as to suggest that he has no objection to having this go to the standing committee on privileges and elections I certainly do not wish to force the matter, but I feel that the house should vote on the matter as ruled upon by Your Honour.

Mr. Speaker: The house has heard the decision of the Chair, from which the hon. member for Yukon has appealed to the house. All those in favour of sustaining the decision of the Chair will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker put the question as follows:

"The question before the house is an appeal from a ruling of the Chair which is as follows:

"The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), rising on a question of privilege, referred to certain proceedings of the house and proposed that such matters be referred to the standing committee on privileges and elections. The Chair, having decided that the substance of the matters raised was in essence a dispute between two hon. members as to allegations of facts, ruled that the proposed motion did not raise a prima facie question of privilege. Whereupon the hon. member for Yukon appealed to the house from the decision of the Chair."

The house divided on the question: Shall the Speaker's decision be sustained? And the decision of the Chair was sustained on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Addison	Chevrier
Armstrong	Choquette
Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace)	Chretien
Asselin (Richmond-Wolfe)	Côté (Chicoutimi)
Badanai	Côté (Longueuil)
Basford	Cowan
Batten	Crossman
Bechard	Cyr
Beer	Davis
Benidickson	Deachman
Benson	Deschatelets
Berger	Drury
Blouin	Dube
Boulanger	Dupuis
Brown	Emard
Byrne	Ethier
Cameron (High Park)	Eudes
Cantin	Favreau
Cardin	Forest
Caron	Forgie
Carter	Frenette
Cashin	Garland
Cnapdelaine	Gelber
	Gendron
	Girouard

Gordon
Granger
Gray
Greene
Groos
Guay
Habel
Haidasz
Hahn
Harley
Hays
Hellyer
Honey
Jewett, Miss
Kelly
Lachance
LaMarsh, Miss
Lamontagne
Laniel
Laverdiere
Leduc
Lessard (Lake St. John)
Macaluso
Macdonald
MacEachen
MacNaught
McIlraith
McMillan
McNulty
McWilliam
Martin (Essex East)
Matheson
Matte
Mitchell
Moreau
Morison
Mullally
Munro
Nicholson
O'Keefe
Olson
Ouellet
Patterson
Pearson
Pennell
Pickersgill
Pilon
Regan
Richard Rideout
Rinfret
Robichaud
Rochon
Rouleau
Roxburgh
Ryan
Sauve
Sharp
Tardif
Teillet
Temple
Thompson
Tremblay
Tucker
Turner
Walker
Watson (Chateauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie)
Whelan—116.

NAYS

Messrs:

Alkenbrack
Balcer
Baldwin
Beaule
Belanger
Bell
Bigg
Brewin
Cadieu (Meadow Lake)
Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)
Cantelon
Caouette
Casselman, Mrs.
Churchill
Clancy
Cooper
Crouse
Danforth
Diefenbaker
Dinsdale
Dionne
Doucett
Douglas
Fane
Fisher
Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke)
Forbes
Gauthier
Grafftey
Gundlock
Hales
Harkness
Herridge
Horner (Acadia)
Howard
Howe (Hamilton South)
Howe (Wellington-Huron)
Irvine
Jorgenson
Kennedy
Kindt
Knowles
Lamb
Langlois
Laprise
Latulippe
MacEwan
MacInnis
MacLean (Queens)
Macquarrie
MacRae
McBain
McIntosh
Madill
Mandziuk
Martineau
Millar
Monteith
Moore
More
Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria)
Muir (Lisgar)
Nasserden
Nesbitt
Nielsen
Noble
Nowlan
Nugent
Orlikow
Pascoe
Paul
Peters
Pigeon
Plourde
Prittie
Pugh
Rapp
Rheaume
Ricard
Rondeau
Rynard
Scott
Simpson
Skoreyko
Slogan
Smith
Southam
Starr
Stefanson
Stenson
Thomas
Valade
Vincent
Watson (Assiniboia)
Webb
Webster
Weichel
Willoughby
Winch
Winkler—100.

Division

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, since the Secretary of State, on behalf of the government, has agreed to the matter going to a committee I should like, with unanimous consent of the house—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Nielsen: Now, if hon. members will hear me out instead of trying to howl me down—

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I suggest to the hon. member for Yukon that he ask a question later, at the proper time.

Mr. Nielsen: I should like, with unanimous consent of the house to re-present my motion, seconded by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler) which seems to be concurred in by members on the government benches.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is not the time to do that. There will be an opportunity later.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I had intended to move the motion which apparently the hon. member for Yukon was attempting to move. Do I understand that there is unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I have just indicated to the hon. member for Yukon that this is not the time to move this motion. There will be an opportunity later.

[Later:]

Mr. Nielsen: In view of the statement made by the Secretary of State that he would like the house to get at the truth of the matters raised during our previous discussion, and in the light of the fact that he stated on behalf of the government that unanimous consent would be given to such a motion, I move, with unanimous consent, seconded by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce:

That the matters raised and the statement made in the house on October 22, 1963 by Mr. Speaker be referred to the committee on privileges and elections and that the said committee be instructed to report its findings thereon to the house.

The wording is the same as the wording of the previous motion.

Mr. Speaker: Before I put the motion to the house, unanimous consent must be obtained. Does this house give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Maritime Trusteeship Proclaimed

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): With the unanimous consent of the house I move, seconded by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Girouard):

That the subject matter of motion No. 99 moved on October 16 by the hon. member for Winnipeg North which read:

"That an order of the house do issue for a list of consultants prepared in the office of the Postmaster General for the guidance of cabinet ministers and copies of all correspondence between ministers of the crown and the consultants in each riding."

—be referred to the standing committee on privileges and elections and that the standing committee be instructed to report its findings thereon to the house.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Nielsen: On a point of order, I did not hear Your Honour make any ruling on the motion which was put by me. It seems to me that unanimous consent of the house was given to my motion.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nielsen: I see the Secretary of State shaking his head to indicate that it was not, but I did not hear Your Honour rule on my motion.

Mr. Speaker: I will do so right now. Unanimous consent was not given; therefore the hon. member's motion was unacceptable.

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, it is just a farce the way things are shaping up around this matter. One member moves a motion without obtaining unanimous consent of the house to its acceptance, then another member moves exactly the same motion and will obtain consent.

Mr. Chevrier: No, he has not.

Mr. Thompson: With due respect to the hon. member for Villeneuve, it is not the same motion at all.

LABOUR RELATIONS

GREAT LAKES—ANNOUNCEMENT OF PROCLAMATION OF ACT AND NAMING OF TRUSTEES

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise hon. members that the act to provide for the placing of the maritime transportation unions of Canada under the management and control of trustees has been proclaimed today.

The governor in council, Mr. Speaker, has established the membership of the board of trustees. The chairman of the board of trustees is to be Mr. Justice Victor Leonard Dryer of Vancouver, a member of the supreme court of the province of British Columbia.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Justice Dryer was created a Queen's Counsel in 1957. He was a member of the legal firm of Ellis, Dryer and McTaggart in the city of Vancouver. He was active for many years in labour relations, particularly representing unions in collective bargaining and conciliation work.

The second member of the board of trustees is Judge Rene Lippe, of the magistrate's court, Montreal. Judge Lippe has a wide reputation as an arbitrator, mediator and conciliator. He is a permanent arbitrator under certain collective agreements in the province of Quebec. Recently he was the mediator in the settlement of the longshoremen's strike in Montreal, and he has been appointed to investigate all trust funds being held for the benefit of longshoremen in Montreal, Quebec city, Three Rivers, Halifax and Saint John, New Brunswick.

The third member of the board is Mr. Charles H. Millard of Toronto. Mr. Millard has been for many years associated with the united steel workers of America and served as Canadian congress of labour vice president for many years. As a representative of the Canadian congress of labour he played an important part in the development of international trade unionism following world war II, as an alternate member of the executive board of the international confederation of free trade unionism. He retired last year as director of organization for the international confederation of free trade unionism.

I am pleased to advise, Mr. Speaker, that all these gentlemen have agreed to accept these heavy responsibilities and will meet in Ottawa today to consider their future activities.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I know the house will welcome the announcement that has been made and the quality of the membership that composes the board of trustees. I would add that we in this parliament, without regard to party, will uphold the rule of law in this country and will join together to ensure that the laws passed by parliament, the representatives of the people, shall not be flouted or mocked by the cavalier actions of anyone, however powerful.

I want the house to know that this is our attitude. We have pressed the government for action for several weeks. They have found that when an immovable inertia meets an irresistible force the result is lawlessness and anarchy. The government has acted now, we say belatedly; but belatedly or not, this parliament is united.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the government's action in proclaiming the trusteeship legislation and appointing the trustees has not come a bit too soon. Last Monday evening I said that I for one was not prepared to criticize the government for the considerable time which it took in canvassing the possibility of a private trusteeship. But since that had apparently failed I felt then, as I feel now, that the government's record for decisiveness depended on what it did at this time. I am glad that the government has at last acted in this regard, because we have known since last Friday that the men have been ordered to walk off the ships. When I asked the Prime Minister the day before yesterday whether the government would consider setting up a government control over the shipping industry, he said, as reported at page 3815 of Hansard:

—I hope that the situation tomorrow will not require that kind of solution.

Well, "tomorrow" has come and gone and the situation is not better; it is worse. I think the government has not moved any too soon, because if it had delayed any longer the situation would have got entirely out of hand.

I think the trustees who have been appointed will commend themselves to most people in Canada. I am not familiar with the chairman, although I understand he has a good reputation. Judge Lippe is well known in the mediation of labour disputes; he has a good reputation and a good record of achievement. Mr. C. H. Millard, who has been absent from Canada for a number of years acting as world secretary of the international confederation of free trade unions, has gained a wide experience in the trade union movement throughout the free world, and I think he will bring to this task understanding and decisiveness.

But I want to say to the government that the personnel of this board, and their effectiveness, will now be dependant upon the support which they get from the government. They face a very difficult situation. Many of the S.I.U. locals have already taken votes not to return to their ships. This board of trustees will have to make some very difficult decisions. They will first of all have to separate the leadership of the S.I.U. from the membership. They will then have the task of trying to persuade the men to go back on the ships. If the men defy them I want to say to the government that we in this party will be asking the government to take the necessary steps to appoint a government controller over shipping so that this board of trustees is not left in an impossible situation.

I want to assure the government that any steps they take to re-establish shipping on the great lakes will have our support. We only hope they will neither drag their feet nor pussyfoot, but will deal with this situation aggressively, as the present situation in Canada urgently demands.

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, we welcome the announcement made by the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) that the union trusteeship has come into force and will become an accomplished fact.

It was also mentioned that Mr. Millard would be one of the trustees. I had the privilege of meeting that smart union leader in northwestern Quebec and in northern Ontario. That man who first earned the confidence of the labour movement is now deserving of the confidence of the Canadian government.

The trustees will face impediments because when you take into consideration the dealings of Mr. Banks' organization in Canada, it is not too reassuring.

I think it is time for the government to appoint men of ability to tame those agitators in the seamen's unions as well as in various sectors of our economy.

Mr. Speaker, our group is perfectly satisfied with those appointments, and we think that under the circumstances, the government acted in the interests of the Canadian nation.

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to hear the statement made by the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) to the effect that the trusteeship has been proclaimed today and that the three trustees have taken up their duties.

We from the province of Quebec especially welcome the appointment of Mr. Justice Rene Lippe. We know him well since we had the privilege to see him at work during various labour disputes.

Mr. Speaker, I am of the opinion that all hon. members recognize now the importance of the task entrusted to these three trustees. In fact, this is an extremely delicate and difficult job, pregnant with responsibilities and consequences, considering the actions that these men will be called upon to take in order to settle the dispute within the labour unions, since this trusteeship that is being applied today constitutes a precedent which may likely recur in the future.

It is therefore essential that those three trustees be very careful in the way they carry out their duties. They will have to enforce the law in all fairness and try not to become a third dictatorship, because, according to an item published in a daily paper this morning, one of the seafarers who are at the basis of this conflict stated that when the men chose the dictatorship imposed by the union leader, they had the choice between two dictatorships that of the Canada Steamship Lines or that of Hal Banks, and they chose the one who paid them most.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I think that all hon. members in this house will have to keep a close watch so that this trusteeship does not become a third dictatorship, but rather a solution to this one problem.

I believe that we should also draw the attention of the trustees and of the house to the fact that those seamen are not the only guilty party, that they are not solely responsible for the present situation and that, if there has been a dictatorship of the shipping companies on the great lakes, this trusteeship will have to ensure that such company dictatorship does not repeat itself. Indeed, it will even have to take positive sanctions against the Canada Steamship Lines, which contributed to the dislocation of the existing order and tried to evade the law of this country.

[Text]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CARIBBEAN—PROVISION OF ADDITIONAL RELIEF SUPPLIES

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): On October 10, 1963 the Acting Prime Minister informed the house that the Canadian government was making available to the Canadian Red Cross Society an amount of $20,000 for relief to the Caribbean areas suffering from the effects of hurricane Flora.

I am pleased to inform the house that as an additional measure of assistance a total of 1,150,000 pounds of skim milk powder is to be provided by Canada to certain international relief agencies for use in the affected areas. Of the total quantity one million pounds is being made available to the United Nations international children's emergency fund, known as UNICEF, and 150,000 pounds is being provided to the Canadian Red Cross Society. Of this latter amount, 15,000 pounds has already been airlifted to the area.

It is understood that in addition to the Canadian government's donations to this area various Canadian individuals and firms have made both direct and indirect contributions to those suffering from the effects of this disaster.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether any further decisions have been reached with reference to assistance to the people of the Caribbean areas whose lands have been devastated by tornadoes? The minister said this was being investigated and some decision would be reached fairly soon.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman apparently must have been busy at the time, because on motions the Minister of Agriculture made a statement that covered this question.

Mr. Douglas: I am aware of the statement about the butter—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Skim milk.

Mr. Douglas: —or milk powder, but I was wondering whether the much wider field of assistance has been investigated, and whether the Red Cross have been contacted to see if there is any clothing and other supplies needed by the people in the devastated areas.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, in these matters my hon. friend may be assured that the government is in touch with the Red Cross, but there is nothing I can add to what the Minister of Agriculture has said and to what has been said by me on other occasions.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture a question. The minister has just announced the shipment of milk products to the areas stricken by hurricane Flora. Could the minister tell the house how much that shipment will cost?

[Text]

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): No, Mr. Speaker, I could not give the exact cost. I would be glad to take the question as notice and give this information to the hon. member tomorrow.

QUESTIONS

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Dupuis (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I should like to inform the house that we shall, today, answer the questions bearing the following numbers: 1,040, 1,214, 1,230, 1,231, 1,246, 1,249, 1,269, 1,283, 1,293, 1,296, 1,298, 1,300, 1,305, 1,319, 1,327, 1,336, 1,337, 1,340, 1,355, 1,357, 1,363, 1,380, 1,384, 1,388, 1,389, 1,395, 1,402, 1,403, 1,404 and 1,408.

[Text]

If Your Honour would be good enough to call starred questions Nos. 1,206, 1,373, and 1,418, I would ask that all the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

USE OF TELEPHONE WIRE TAPPING EQUIPMENT

Question No. 1,040—Mr. Orlikow:

Has any department of the government (including the R.C.M.P.) equipment which is used for the tapping of telephone wires and, if so (a) what departments (b) for what purpose, and under what authority is this equipment used?

Mr. Pickersgill: The policy of this government, and of previous governments, has been to decline to answer questions of this order as being contrary to the public interest, and there is no intention of changing this policy.

This policy is illustrated by the answer made to a similar question on February 26, 1962. See debates of the House of Commons, 1962 session, volume II at page 1245.

*C.N.R.—USE OF BILINGUAL BILLS AND POSTERS

Question No. 1,206—Mr. Ricard:

At what approximate date will all the unilingual bills and posters now used in the stations, railway cars and other vehicles of the Canadian National Railways be replaced by bilingual bills and posters in order to implement the suggestions made to the Minister of Transport in letters addressed to him on June 5 and 18 and on July 23, 1963?

[Translation]

Mr. Cantin: The management of the Canadian National Railways advise us that the company is now dealing with all aspects of this situation, and that the memorandum regarding bilingualism in the company, tabled in the house on Friday, October 4, indicates the policy and progress made in this regard.

[Text]

MAINTENANCE OF RAILWAY TRACK, CAMP BORDEN

Question No. 1,214—Mr. Madill:

1. Has the government awarded a contract for the maintenance of the five and one half miles of government owned railway track in camp Borden and, if so, which company has received the contract, and at what annual price?

2. What assurance has the government that the cost of the maintenance will not increase from year to year, and that the standard of maintenance will be kept at a level comparable to that when the work was undertaken by four men employed by the Department of National Defence.

3. Is the government planning to contract out any other work at camp Borden that is now being done by civilian employees of the defence department and, if so, what security of employment will be offered to the present employees?

4. Was the foreman who served for many years retained and, if so, at what rate of pay?

Answer: 1. No.

2. The department has no assurance that costs of maintenance will not increase from year to year as such costs are related to the price of materials and costs of labour.

3. No.

4. The employee in question is still employed as track foreman at the rate of $2.03 per hour.

CHURCHILL, MAN.—SUGGESTED DIVERSION OF RIVER

Question No. 1,230—Mr. Simpson:

1. Does the government plan to investigate the feasibility of creating a salt water seaport at Churchill, Manitoba, by a diversion of the flow of the Churchill river?

2. Has anyone proposed such a project to the present government or to any government department and, if not, will the government investigate the feasibility of such a project in order to bring about an extension of the shipping season at the port of Churchill?

Mr. McIlraith: 1. No formal proposal of a project to create a salt water seaport at Churchill, Manitoba, by a diversion of the flow of the Churchill river has been made to the present government or to any government department. Brief reference to this matter appears in a report of the committee on Manitoba's economic future entitled "Manitoba 1962-1975" (section X, ch. 5, page 19) which reads as follows:

A more direct attack on the problem is represented by a proposal to divert the river at an estimated cost of $8 million, to flow into the bay south of the present townsite. This project would eliminate slush ice from the harbour and, at the same time, increase the salinity of harbour water and slow down freezing. This alternative also should be seriously studied.

On the assumption that such a proposal would involve works which would be situated within the limits of Churchill harbour, the national harbours board has been asked to acquaint itself with any such proposal and to get further details from the committee on Manitoba's economic future.

2. See answer to part 1 above.

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURAL DEVELOPMENT, YUKON TERRITORY

Question No. 1,231—Mr. Nielsen:

What progress has been made by the committee on agricultural possibilities and development in the Yukon Territory since its establishment in 1961, and what recommendations have been made by the committee with respect to agricultural development in the Yukon?

Answer: This committee was established in 1961 following a request from the council of the Yukon Territory for a study of the agricultural possibilities of the territory. Its report is at present being considered by the departments of agriculture and northern affairs and national resources and in due course the conclusions reached will be transmitted to the council.

Questions

NORTHERN TRANSPORTATION COMPANY EMPLOYEES

Question No. 1,246—Mr. Rheaume:

1. What is the total number of persons employed by the Northern Transportation Company in the Northwest Territories during the navigation season?
2. What is the total yearly payroll for all staff working in the N.W.T. during the navigation season?
3. How many employees work at or out of each of the following locations in the N.W.T. (a) Bell Rock (b) Yellowknife (c) Hay River (d) Inuvik (e) Tuktoyaktuk?
4. What are the various job classifications and salary levels for each classification broken down for each of the communities listed in part 3 above?
5. How many of the persons employed by N.T.C. during the transportation season in the N.W.T. are residents of the N.W.T.?
6. How many local people of Indian or Eskimo origin are employed during the current shipping season in the N.W.T.; what are their job classifications giving where they are located or work out of?

Answer: 1. 353.

2. $920,533.

3. Bell Rock, 88; Yellowknife,–; Hay River, 67; Inuvik, 14; Tuktoyaktuk, 158; Bear River, 26.

4. The various job classifications for each of the communities listed above are enumerated in the three page attachment. Salary rates are considered private information which it is not customary to publish.

5. 82.

6. Labourers

Bell Rock	16
Hay River	28
Bear River	2
Tuktoyaktuk	9	55
Watchman
Bell Rock	1	1
Forklift operators
Bell Rock	2	2
Apprentice deckhand
Bell Rock	1	1
Deckhands
Bell Rock	2
Hay River	1
Inuvik	1	4
Pilots
Bell Rock	1
Hay River	1
Inuvik	1	3
Apprentice pilot
Bell Rock	1	1
		67

Job classification—item 4

Bell Rock

Classification	Total
Masters	3
First mate	2
Second mate	2
Ch. eng.	3
Second eng.	3
Purser	2
Cook	2
Pilot	1
App. pilot	1
Oiler	1
Deckhand	9
App. deckhand	2
Mechanic	2
Ass. mechanic	1
Electrician	1
Carpenter	1
Forklift oper.	5
Truck driver	5
Checker	2
Labourers	12
Casual labourers	13
Cook	1
Second cook	1
Bullcook	1
Cookee	1
Dishwasher	1
Kitchen help	2
Radio oper.	2
Office clerk	2
Storekeeper	2
Watchman	2
	88

Inuvik

Master	1
Ch. eng.	1
Second eng.	1
Cook	1
Pilot	1
Deckhand	2
Checker	1
Forklift oper.	1
Casual labourers	5
	14

Hay River

Master	2
First mate	2
Second mate	1
Ch. eng.	2
Second eng.	2
Purser	2
Cook	2
Pilot	2
Oiler	2
Deckhand	6
App. deckhand	2

Job classification—item 4

Hay River

Classification	Total
Steward	1
Mechanic	1
Ass. mech.	1
Electrician	1
Equip. oper.	1
Pumpman	1
Checker	1
Labourer	1
Office clerk	2
Casual labourers	31
Casual watchman	1
	67

Bear River Rapids

Master	1
Ch. eng.	1
Cook	1
Deckhand	1
Foreman	2
Mechanic	1
Truckdriver	4
Forklift oper.	2
Checker	1
Handyman	1
Labourer	8
Cook	2
Office clerk	1
	26

Tuktoyaktuk

Master	3
Chief eng.	3
Second eng.	3
Third eng.	3
Fourth eng.	3
Ass't. eng.	13
Standby eng.	1
Ch. officer	3
Second officer	4
Third officer	4
Medical officer	1
Chef	1
Cook	4
Chief steward	2
Steward	10
Baker	2
Second cook	2
Bullcook	1
Cookee	2
Kitchen help	1
Storekeeper	4
Ass't. storekeeper	1
Electrician	5
Electronics	3
Bosun	4
Bosun mate	2
Sailor	18

Job Classification—Item 4

Tuktoyaktuk

Classification	Total
Fireman	8
Seaman	9
Utility man	2
Wiper	1
Mechanic	1
Cat. oper.	1
Forklift oper.	1
Pumpman	2
Handyman	3
Radio oper.	2
Office clerk	1
Foreman	1
Watchman	1
LCM oper.	1
Labourers	9
Casual labourers	12
	158

PROMOTIONAL COMPETITION, LANCASTER PARK

Question No. 1,249—Mr. Thompson:

1. Was a promotional competition carried out for the position of Technician 1 at No. 7 R.C.A.F. Depot, Lancaster Park, in or about the month of September, 1962 and, if so, who was declared the successful candidate in this competition?

2. Has the successful candidate been appointed to the position in question and, if not, for what reason?

Answer: 1. Yes. Mr. Thomas Ray Whiteman, 8624-80 street, Edmonton, Alta.

2. No. The Department of National Defence decided not to request that an appointment be made from this eligible list at the present time.

CRITERIA FOR DESIGNATED AREAS

Question No. 1,269—Mr. MacLean (Queens):

1. What are the criteria under which a national employment service area qualifies as a designated area?

2. What tax incentive and winter works measures apply to such areas?

3. In which provinces have no such areas been designated?

Mr. MacEachen: 1. Under the established criteria, a national employment service area qualifies as a designated development area provided:

(a) it has been classified by the Department of Labour as a labour surplus area for one half or more of the summer months (May to October) during the past eight years; and it has experienced an employment increase of less than one half the national average over the same period; or

(b) it has been classified by the Department of Labour as a labour surplus area for one third or more of the summer months (May to October) during the past eight years; and it has experienced an employment decrease over the same period; or

(c) it has been classified by the Department of Labour as a labour surplus area for one half or more of the summer months (May to October) during the past three years; and it has experienced an employment decrease in each one of the past three years.

(d) However, an area shall not be designated if the average monthly national employment service registrations for the three months of May, June and July, expressed as a percentage of the total number of paid workers in the area,

(i) is less in the current year than in the preceding year and less in the preceding year than in the year preceding that year, and

(ii) is less in the current year than in the year preceding the preceding year by at least 45 per cent and the area would not, if the three months of May, June and July in the current year were considered to be a single month, have been classified by the Department of Labour as a substantial labour surplus area for that month.

2. Three tax incentives are proposed for designated development areas. These measures will become effective as soon as the necessary amendments to the Income Tax Act have been passed by parliament.

(a) A taxpayer in computing income for income tax purposes will be allowed to exclude the income earned by a certified new manufacturing and processing enterprise during the period of 36 months after it commences operations. In order to qualify, a new business must begin commercial operations during the 24 month period following the date of enactment of the amendments to the Income Tax Act. The date of commencement of commercial operations will be certified by the Minister of Industry when he certifies a new business.

(b) New machinery and equipment that would otherwise fall in class 8 of the income tax regulations, which is acquired for use in certified new manufacturing and processing enterprises, shall be eligible for accelerated capital cost allowances. A rate of 50 per cent on a straight line basis will be permitted on new machinery and equipment acquired in the 24 month period following the date of enactment of the amendments to the Income Tax Act. This compares with a normal rate of 20 per cent on the diminishing balance basis.

It will not be necessary for a taxpayer to take these accelerated allowances during his three year income tax exemption. They may be deferred and deducted after that period.

(c) New buildings acquired in designated areas will qualify for accelerated capital cost allowances at the rate of 20 per cent per year on a straight line basis. This compares with a normal rate of 5 per cent on a diminishing balance basis for most buildings, or 10 per cent for buildings of frame or similar construction.

In order to qualify for this accelerated write-off, the new buildings must be acquired in the 24 month period which will apply for the other income tax incentives in the designated areas.

Under the municipal winter works program as applicable to designated areas, the government of Canada will reimburse each municipality in these areas 60 per cent of the direct payroll costs of approved projects which are incurred during the period November 1, 1963 to April 30, 1964.

The federal government has accelerated for the forthcoming winter those government construction projects which are located in these areas.

3. Under the established criteria, no areas have qualified for designation in the provinces of Prince Edward Island, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and British Columbia.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

R.C.A.F. STATION, PENHOLD, ALTA.

Question No. 1,283—Mr. Lambert:

1. What was the date of the submission to treasury board of the proposal by the Department of National Defence to convert R.C.A.F. station Penhold, Alberta, for jet training?

2. What was the date of the approval by treasury board of this submission in its original or amended form?

3. What was the date of the approval of the tender call for works for such conversion?

4. What was the date on which tenders were called, and what was the closing date of the tender period?

5. How many tenders were received, and which firm was the lowest satisfactory bidder?

6. Was any advice given to the said contractor either verbally or in writing that his was the lowest satisfactory bid?

7. Was a contract ever signed with the said contractor and, if not, is any consideration being given to a compensatory payment for essential expenses by the said contractor as a result of the last minute decision to cancel the projected works?

Answer: 1. 22 May 1962.

2. 15 February 1963.

3. 20 March 1963.

4. 21 June 1963 with closing date 18 July 1963, later extended to 1 August 1963.

5. Nine. McNamara Construction.

6. A Canadian construction association representative was present at the opening of the bids and he would have advised the various bidders that McNamara's bid was the lowest satisfactory bid.

7. No.

Questions

PURCHASES BY QUEEN'S PUBLISHER

Question No. 1,293—Mr. Fisher:

Has the proposed branch of queen's publisher issued any orders to purchase and, if so, (a) on what date did treasury board authorize the purchasing procedure, and (b) who has treasury board authorized as acting head of the proposed office of queen's publisher of which the purchasing procedure will be a responsibility?

Mr. Drury: Yes, see answer to question 1,295, Hansard October 21, 1963, page 3807.

(a) Order in council 1963-1450 dated October 3, 1963, transferred from the Department of Defence Production to the Department of Public Printing and Stationery the responsibility for the procurement of print for books and publications.

(b) The queen's printer remains as deputy head of the Department of Public Printing and Stationery, after the transfer by order in council P.C. 1963-1254, dated August 21, to the Department of Defence Production the control or supervision of the procurement, purchasing and stores branch, the production branch, the outside printing production branch and the supporting services contained in the departmental secretary's branch, the administrative services branch and the financial services branch of the Department of Public Printing and Stationery.

PROCUREMENT AND PURCHASING BRANCH, PUBLIC PRINTING AND STATIONERY

Question No. 1,296—Mr. Fisher:

Have the functions of procurement, purchasing and stores branch of the Department of Public Printing and Stationery been made a responsibility of the Department of Defence Production and, if so, (a) on what date did this responsibility become effective (b) will the superintendent of the branch remain in his post, and to whom will he be immediately responsible (c) will the chief purchasing agent remain in his post (d) will the chief print buyer remain in his post and, if not, to whom will he be immediately responsible (e) who, in the Department of Defence Production, is immediately responsible for the operation of the procurement, purchasing and stores branch?

Mr. Drury: Yes.

(a) By order in council PC 1963-1254, dated August 21, 1963.

(b) Yes, and will be responsible to the deputy minister of defence production.

(c) Since August 21 the operations and establishments of those sections of the Department of Public Printing and Stationery transferred to the Department of Defence Production have been under review.

(d) Since October 3, 1963, the queen's printer has had a purchasing agent for commercial printing. There is also a purchasing agent for commercial printing in the procurement, purchasing and stores branch.

(e) Deputy minister, Department of Defence Production.

28902-5—249

GLASSCO COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS, PUBLIC PRINTING AND STATIONERY

Question No. 1,298—Mr. Fisher:

Has the Minister of Industry progressed in implementing the Glassco commission recommendations pertaining to the Department of Public Printing and Stationery?

Mr. Drury: Yes.

1. An organizational separation has been made between the following main functions and related support services: Publishing; Printing; Procurement, with the exception of the procurement of print for publications which the royal commission on government organization specifically recommended should be part of the publishing function c.f. Glassco report No. 9, vol. 2, pages 304-6.

2. Steps have been taken to delineate responsibilities between the queen's printer and the director of printing in regard to the printing requirements of parliament and the departments of government.

3. The offices of the queen's printer have been grouped in one wing of the printing bureau.

4. New procedures are being developed by the Department of Defence Production and the queen's printer in accordance with the changes in organization and administration which have been made.

5. Referring to specific recommendations in report No. 9 of the royal commission on government organization the following is an outline of progress:

Vol. 2, pages 289-90, recommendation 1. The categories of printing covered by this recommendation are being defined.

Vol. 2, page 290, recommendation 2. The formula for costing cannot be applied until more is known of the workload implication of the previous recommendations.

Vol. 2, page 290, recommendation 3. When the appropriate formula for costing has been determined this recommendation will be implemented whenever possible.

Vol. 2, page 292, recommendation not numbered. The printing bureau has placed 67 per cent of its operations in the main plant on measured standards; the program will be completed in approximately a year's time.

Vol. 2, page 294, recommendations 1, 2 and 3. Financial planning is proceeding in order to implement these recommendations at the start of the fiscal year 1965-66.

Vol. 2, page 295, recommendation not numbered. It has been, and will continue to be, a practice to review the work done by all printing units of departments and agencies not now under the authority of the Department of Public Printing and Stationery, with a view to centralizing direction and control whenever feasible.

Vol. 2, page 297. Implemented.

Vol. 2, page 300. By order in council PC 1963-1254 dated August 21, 1963, operating branches of the printing bureau were transferred from the Department of Public Printing and Stationery to the Department of Defence Production. Order in council PC 1963-1450 dated October 3, 1963, authorized the responsibility for the procurement of print for books and publications to the Department of Public Printing and Stationery. The creation of the proposed post of queen's publisher and the related changes in legislation are under consideration.

Vol. 2, page 302, recommendations 1, 2 and 3. Consideration is being given to the implementation of these recommendations.

Vol. 2, page 304, recommendations 1, 2 and 3. These recommendations anticipate changes in the financing and costing of government departments recommended in volume 1 of the royal commission on government organization; the proposed changes are still under review.

Vol. 2, page 306, recommendation not numbered. Implemented in so far as the present queen's printer has been made responsible.

Vol. 2, page 307, recommendation 1. Implemented, in so far as the function has been transferred to the Department of Defence Production.

Vol. 2, page 307, recommendation 2. Implemented, in so far as the present queen's printer now reports to the Minister of Industry and the superintendent of printing reports to the deputy minister of defence production.

GRAIN ELEVATORS—DEPRECIATION AND STORAGE RATES

Question No. 1,300—Mr. Watson (Assiniboia):

1. What is the rate of depreciation allowed elevator companies in Canada on (a) terminal elevators at the lakehead (b) country elevators in western Canada (c) permanent annexes in western Canada (d) temporary annexes in western Canada?

2. What is the storage rate per month that elevator companies receive for grain stored in each of the above?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1. Under part XI of the income tax regulations all of these buildings are depreciable on the diminishing balance basis. The maximum rates allowable are 10 per cent for buildings constructed of wood or galvanized iron and 5 per cent for other buildings.

2. (a) Terminal elevators, lakehead—storage for each succeeding day or part thereof after the first five days: 1/30 of 1 cent per bushel.

(b), (c) & (d) country elevators in western Canada—storage for each succeeding day or part thereof after the first 15 days: 1/30 of 1 cent per bushel. This rate applies as well to country elevator annexes in western Canada.

BUTTER AND BUTTER OIL

Question No. 1,305—Mr. Scott:

1. Is the government presently negotiating with Britain for the sale of butter and butter oil and, if so, has any firm contract been signed, and what quantity of butter does it cover?

2. What is the total amount of butter and butter oil on hand?

3. What steps are being taken by the government to dispose of such surplus?

Mr. Hays: 1. The government is not negotiating directly with Great Britain for the sale of butter and butter oil. However, a short time ago, Great Britain, through the British board of trade, asked importers to submit firm applications for import from any source, including non-quota countries, of five thousand tons of butter. Delivery of the butter prior to November 15, 1963 had to be guaranteed.

The agricultural stabilization board quoted competitive prices to Canadian exporters who had received inquiries from British importers. To date the agricultural stabilization board has sold to Canadian exporting firms a total of 2,500 long tons of butter for delivery to Great Britain under this program.

2. The total amount of butter and butter oil on hand as at October 1, 1963 is as follows: 148,377,000 pounds of butter; 81,163,000 pounds of butter oil.

3. Since May 1, 1962 a consumption incentive program for butter of 12 cents per pound has been in effect and during the 1961-62 dairy year approximately 50 million pounds more butter moved into domestic channels than in the previous dairy year. This program is, in effect, again this year and consumption remains relatively high. In addition, the agricultural stabilization board is at present seeking offers from the trade and importing countries for the export of its stocks of butter oil.

NAVAL SUPPLY DEPOT WATCHMEN, LYNN CREEK, B.C.

Question No. 1,319—Mr. Douglas:

1. Are watchmen employed at the naval supply sub-depot, Lynn Creek, B.C. and, if so, are they members of the civil service of Canada or otherwise in the employ of the government?

2. Is it proposed to replace these watchmen by members of the corps of commissionaires and, if so, (a) for what reason (b) what provision, if any, will be made for the future employment of the present watchmen?

Mr. Hellyer: 1. Yes, one security supervisor and six watchmen.

2. Yes. (a) in accordance with the policy of the department.

(b) (i) The security supervisor who had planned to retire on account of age agreed to stay on until the N.C.O. commissionaire could take over.

(ii) Two watchmen were reassigned to another naval establishment as cleaning service men on August 20 and September 13, respectively.

(iii) One watchman was transferred on October 16 as a cleaning service man with the Department of Veterans Affairs.

(iv) Of the remaining three who had claimed physical incapacity for other types of employment, two are being retained as watchmen at Lynn Creek after confirmation of their claim by the Department of National Health and Welfare, and one is now employed as a cleaning service man by the Department of Veterans Affairs on a six month trial period, as recommended by the Department of National Health and Welfare. This man's position at Lynn Creek is being left open should it become apparent that his services as a cleaning service man are not satisfactory solely for medical reasons.

FELTZ SOUTH, N.S., BREAKWATER REPAIRS

Question No. 1,327—Mr. Crouse:

1. Does the Department of Public Works plan to carry out any repairs to the breakwater at Feltz South, Lunenburg county, Nova Scotia and, if so, what is the amount allotted for these repairs?

2. What is the name of the company or individual awarded the contract, and the amount of the contract?

3. What is the name of the inspector appointed to examine the work, and his qualifications?

Mr. Badanai: 1. Yes; $1,700.

2. The contract has not yet been awarded but is expected to be issued within the next few weeks.

3. No inspector has yet been appointed.

CAPSTAN FOR WHARF, BRIDGEWATER, N.S.

Question No. 1,336—Mr. Crouse:

Will the government give consideration to the installation of a powered capstan on the government wharf at Bridgewater, Nova Scotia?

Mr. Badanai: Yes.

RIVER DREDGING, NEW BRIDGEWATER, N.S.

Question No. 1,337—Mr. Crouse:

Has the survey covering the necessary dredging required on the La Have river, New Bridgewater, Nova Scotia been completed and, if so, when will the work of enlarging the turning basin be started?

Mr. Badanai: Yes, the survey has been completed and the work will be carried out during the next fiscal year, subject to the approval of funds by parliament.

SCHOOL AND HOSTEL PROGRAMS, N.W.T.

Question No. 1,340—Mr. Rheaume:

1. On what basis does the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources plan for the establishment of schools in various settlements of the Northwest Territories?

2. Does the department have plans for schools at any of the following settlements in the N.W.T. (a) Rocher river (b) Sachs harbour (c) Yellowknife Indian village (d) Holman island (e) Bathurst inlet (f) Colville lake?

3. How many pupils from each of the settlements mentioned in part (2) above were sent this year to school hostels, giving location of the hostel in each instance, for each community?

4. How many cottage type hostels are now in operation in the N.W.T., and where are these located?

5. Does the department plan to extend this program and, if so, when will this extension occur, and what communities will receive these cottage-hostels?

Answer: 1. On the basis of school age population.

2. (a), (b), (c), (e), (f) No. (d) Yes, in 1964.

3.

Settlement	No. of pupils attending hostel	Location of hostel
Rocher river	2	Yellowknife
Sachs harbour	27	Inuvik
Yellowknife Indian village	15	13 Fort Smith 2 Yellowknife
Holman island	11	Inuvik
Bathurst inlet	20	Inuvik
Colville lake	2	Inuvik

4. There are eight family type hostels now in operation, as follows:

Settlement	No. of small hostels in operation
Baker lake	2
Belcher islands	1
Cape Dorset	1
Eskimo point	2
Igloolik	2

5. The small hostel program is relatively new and the effectiveness of its operation is under continuous study. The degree of success of these initial units will determine how greatly the small hostel plan will be extended. Construction of two small hostels began this summer at Pond inlet.

FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND OLD AGE ASSISTANCE PAYMENTS

Question No. 1,355—Mr. Danforth:

1. What amounts have been expended by the federal government on family allowances, by year, by province, since the inception of the program?

2. What amounts have been expended by the federal government on old age security and old age assistance, by year, by province, since the inception of these programs?

Miss LaMarsh:

Family Allowances Payments

Fiscal Year	Nfld.	P.E.I.	N.S.	N.B.	Que.	Ont.	Man.	Sask.	Alta.	B.C.	Yukon and NWT.	Total
	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$
45-46	—	1,618,784	9,519,466	8,112,008	57,962,067	49,208,124	9,896,231	13,194,768	12,262,073	10,693,139	165,507	172,632,147
46-47	—	2,192,044	13,358,417	11,394,426	82,389,967	70,325,915	14,007,061	18,119,792	17,159,488	15,722,046	471,376	245,140,532
47-48	—	2,256,477	14,207,958	12,086,892	87,157,243	77,328,534	14,798,437	18,561,330	18,181,662	18,012,189	574,470	263,165,192
48-49	—	2,295,286	14,515,131	12,462,093	89,304,108	80,151,250	15,016,278	18,527,408	18,695,325	19,347,837	595,063	270,909,779
49-50	9,747,030	2,411,291	15,291,614	13,375,434	95,901,763	84,940,809	15,668,696	18,953,600	19,822,387	20,813,661	587,749	297,514,034
50-51	10,224,103	2,467,257	15,660,003	13,708,198	99,558,247	89,034,871	16,235,520	19,237,071	20,762,273	21,952,569	625,349	309,465,461
51-52	10,613,908	2,495,987	15,949,541	13,892,907	102,883,811	93,207,144	16,703,467	19,424,562	21,573,430	23,063,643	649,273	320,457,673
52-53	11,038,875	2,522,830	16,297,170	14,287,535	107,084,124	98,303,868	17,283,660	19,723,352	22,575,584	24,399,859	680,828	334,197,685
53-54	11,497,719	2,558,097	16,716,374	14,700,819	111,441,302	104,409,819	17,979,854	20,244,540	23,958,081	25,904,496	702,801	350,113,902
54-55	11,967,775	2,590,704	17,147,920	15,073,324	116,057,182	110,492,480	18,705,349	20,894,790	25,390,585	27,405,872	739,983	366,465,964
55-56	12,414,789	2,621,722	17,596,685	15,451,544	120,389,838	116,604,314	19,418,713	21,401,114	26,752,793	29,097,077	786,437	382,535,026
56-57	12,881,415	2,640,585	17,973,392	15,779,360	124,368,344	122,539,123	19,888,717	21,644,971	27,953,311	31,029,472	819,150	397,517,840
57-58	14,131,153	2,824,311	19,400,494	17,074,970	136,080,634	136,706,313	21,520,779	23,241,829	31,029,720	34,969,036	907,321	437,886,560
58-59	15,162,900	2,994,334	20,560,462	18,201,518	146,278,435	150,186,253	23,091,594	24,789,278	34,122,637	38,409,308	990,349	474,787,068
59-60	15,566,372	3,062,692	20,932,794	18,588,795	150,462,531	156,681,500	23,730,765	25,363,936	35,765,854	39,984,176	1,074,944	491,214,359
60-61	15,960,416	3,124,017	21,241,829	18,877,745	154,185,288	162,610,724	24,384,595	25,848,509	37,365,329	41,433,470	1,159,725	506,191,647
61-62	16,336,849	3,204,881	21,623,655	19,222,615	157,712,911	168,442,100	25,065,334	26,313,109	38,928,125	42,687,279	1,244,335	520,781,193
62-63	16,562,083	3,259,952	21,838,772	19,340,514	160,299,079	172,711,354	25,523,719	26,539,801	40,315,733	43,834,184	1,341,158	531,566,349

Old Age Security Payments

Fiscal Year	Nfld.	P.E.I.	N.S.	N.B.	Que.	Ont.	Man.	Sask.	Alta.	B.C.	Yukon and NWT.	Total
	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$
51–52	1,697,080	754,720	4,124,080	2,935,240	16,579,995	28,194,920	4,457,480	4,399,120	4,333,120	8,543,040	48,040	76,066,835
52–53	6,995,760	3,155,700	17,259,287	12,254,680	69,570,127	120,083,015	19,019,960	19,037,306	18,745,260	36,802,800	217,720	323,141,615
53–54	7,242,820	3,203,780	17,702,477	12,606,600	72,032,527	125,775,222	20,052,895	20,111,120	20,137,730	39,880,100	225,520	338,970,791
54–55	7,459,680	3,261,800	18,149,526	12,945,905	74,724,977	130,296,095	21,051,155	21,202,779	21,418,246	42,449,810	245,360	353,205,333
55–56	7,599,405	3,313,980	18,411,345	13,246,139	77,110,979	134,644,236	21,953,425	22,331,244	22,681,995	44,657,286	268,440	366,218,474
56–57	7,758,205	3,371,370	18,706,153	13,528,005	79,650,588	138,792,796	22,842,472	23,334,799	23,942,472	46,923,834	230,680	379,111,374
57–58	9,490,737	4,139,668	23,008,418	16,747,674	99,490,164	172,804,153	28,562,399	29,420,360	30,443,217	59,408,009	344,305	473,859,104
58–59	11,012,906	4,809,942	26,780,353	19,583,702	116,993,184	203,257,138	34,029,850	35,099,989	36,534,769	70,769,169	408,856	559,279,858
59–60	11,131,339	4,823,008	27,012,650	19,906,303	120,318,812	208,616,082	35,046,515	36,311,467	38,153,437	73,155,743	411,690	574,887,046
60–61	11,354,705	4,944,372	27,610,488	20,350,402	124,321,715	214,625,682	36,088,676	37,572,791	39,688,023	75,451,417	405,012	592,413,283
61–62	11,947,626	5,151,999	28,895,584	21,291,111	131,711,372	226,065,413	38,085,361	39,621,029	42,276,129	79,622,315	439,865	625,107,804
62–63	14,013,832	5,962,922	33,817,492	24,858,331	155,359,915	265,742,644	44,617,405	46,334,646	49,787,140	93,362,860	524,445	734,381,632

Old Age Assistance Payments

Fiscal Year	Nfld.	P.E.I.	N.S.	N.B.	Que.	Ont.	Man.	Sask.	Alta.	B.C.	Yukon and NWT.	Total
	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$
51–52	—	6,532	95,673	165,638	690,081	672,512	106,690	133,393	144,051	262,668	—	2,277,238
52–53	833,899	66,313	893,060	1,113,921	6,919,081	4,586,573	1,036,022	990,377	967,948	1,701,854	4,258	19,113,306
53–54	896,429	85,986	1,028,756	1,248,339	7,187,259	4,726,153	1,112,322	1,017,535	1,017,190	1,863,052	15,131	20,288,152
54–55	898,973	98,531	1,063,165	1,288,095	7,392,923	4,858,705	1,119,639	1,089,704	1,165,332	1,872,909	21,162	20,869,138
55–56	877,213	99,660	1,046,927	1,303,189	7,357,373	4,918,966	1,111,604	1,150,402	1,240,452	1,788,308	24,080	20,918,174
56–57	1,015,306	98,143	1,020,529	1,271,433	7,107,138	4,659,319	1,058,780	1,154,375	1,211,188	1,665,347	29,237	20,290,795
57–58	1,300,185	142,330	1,323,845	1,564,537	8,754,706	5,668,930	1,304,183	1,440,626	1,547,613	1,983,502	39,132	25,069,589
58–59	1,715,386	191,624	1,611,400	1,829,346	10,592,641	6,707,398	1,572,880	1,763,551	1,876,625	2,291,628	52,810	30,205,289
59–60	1,736,291	204,935	1,619,495	1,788,696	10,688,586	6,608,363	1,580,928	1,757,281	1,955,780	2,353,789	55,249	30,349,393
60–61	1,707,883	218,870	1,608,129	1,746,572	10,977,319	6,629,557	1,600,650	1,769,635	2,008,821	2,332,521	59,439	30,657,396
61–62	1,672,510	248,608	1,569,349	1,760,484	10,896,302	6,903,031	1,652,229	1,761,718	2,000,899	2,283,927	61,528	30,810,585
62–63	1,987,213	375,350	2,007,871	2,065,950	13,793,745	8,458,293	2,001,606	2,220,539	2,523,720	2,675,208	69,562	38,179,057

Questions

BREAKWATER REPAIRS, CAPE JOHN, N.S.

Question No. 1,357—Mr. MacEwan:

1. Have tenders been called for repairs to the breakwater at Cape John, Nova Scotia?
2. What were the names of the tenderers, and the amount of their tenders?
3. To whom has the contract been awarded?
4. What is the nature of the repairs, and when is the work scheduled for completion?

Mr. Badanai: 1. Yes.

2. R. A. Douglas Ltd., New Glasgow, $13,991; Joseph Almon, New Glasgow, $17,900.

3. Not awarded yet.

4. The renewal of damaged cribwork and timbers and to level and renew the deck of the outer 100 foot section of the breakwater. The work is scheduled to be completed within three months of the award of contract.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE AGREEMENTS WITH STATES

Question No. 1,363—Mr. Dionne:

Has the government of Canada signed agreements with any of the state governments in the United States with respect to unemployment insurance and, if so (a) with what state governments are such agreements in effect (b) are steps being taken to effect agreements with any other states and, if so, with which states?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes.

(a) The unemployment insurance commission has made agreements with all the states of the United States excepting Alabama, Iowa, Maine and New Hampshire.

(b) Yes, with Maine particularly although representations have also been made to New Hampshire.

*INCENTIVE HIRING PROGRAM FOR WORKERS OVER 45

Question No. 1,373—Mr. Rheaume:

1. How many persons over 45 years of age is it estimated will be employed during the coming year under the provision of the new program of the Department of Labour whereby incentives are available to employers to hire workers in this age group?
2. How many additional staff members will be required to supervise and administer this program throughout Canada?
3. Of the additional staff required, how many will be hired from the age group 45 years or more?

Mr. Byrne: 1. It is not possible to estimate the numbers to be employed under the older worker employment and training incentive program as this depends on the response of the employers of Canada to the program.

2. No additional staff members will be hired by the national employment service or the Department of Labour to work exclusively on this program. The national employment service has been authorized to increase its establishment by 362 in order to strengthen the work of the national employment service generally and to enable it to play its appropriate role in the implementation of the new employment and manpower development programs which was announced on June 10, 1963. The Department of Labour has been authorized to add three additional positions to the establishment of its division on older workers to strengthen its work in the field of encouraging the employment of older workers generally and to assist in the administration of this program.

3. It is not possible to estimate the number of persons which will be hired who are over the age of 45 years as recruitment for the positions mentioned in answer to question 2 will be by open and promotional competitions under the Civil Service Act.

COST OF NUCLEAR WARHEADS

Question No. 1,380—Mr. Mather:

What is the approximate cost incurred by the addition of nuclear warheads to Canadian defence expenditures?

Answer: Estimated costs of storage buildings, handling equipment, custodial personnel etc. are as follows: Non-recurring, approximately $7,600,000; Annual recurring, approximately $8,800,000.

HOWARD WRAY—TELEVISION INTERVIEW

Question No. 1,384—Mr. Clancy:

1. Was Howard Wray recently interviewed on the program "Night Final" carried over station CBOT-Ottawa and, if so, (a) who did he purport to represent (b) what was the subject of his interview (c) did the C.B.C. verify the accuracy of his statements (d) was his appearance on the program in the nature of (i) a public service (ii) a promotional stunt (iii) free advertising (e) on what other C.B.C. stations was the interview carried?
2. Was film of the interview flown from Toronto to Ottawa for the program and, if so, (a) at whose expense (b) on whose authority?
3. Does the C.B.C. intend to allot free time to independent druggists to present their case on the question of prepaid prescription services?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. Yes. (a) He purported to represent himself only and was so presented in interview with C.B.C. T.V. news reporter. (b) Setting up of a drug store in a Toronto supermarket to sell to the public on a prepaid subscription plan. (c) The question of verifying the accuracy of his statements did not arise since they were presented only on the basis of their worth as personal statements. (d) The interview was carried by C.B.C. news on the same basis as any other item: for the information of the public and on the basis of its news value. (e) On CBLT Toronto night local news and distributed to Ottawa and other C.B.C. newsrooms.

2. No, the item was given routine distribution on the corporation's daily closed circuit feed to C.B.C. newsrooms and the newsrooms of eight affiliated private stations which make up the C.B.C. national syndication service.

3. C.B.C. News does not allot free time but in this, as in any other case, it is prepared to consider statements from other interested parties on the basis of their news value.

POWER INCREASE, RADIO STATION CFPR, PRINCE RUPERT

Question No. 1,388—Mr. Howard:

What plans are in existence, and what steps are being taken to increase the wattage of radio station CFPR at Prince Rupert, B.C.?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that an application filed with Department of Transport on August 6, 1963 is to be considered at a public hearing of the board of broadcast governors commencing October 22, 1963. The corporation is asking for authority to increase the power of station CFPR to 10,000 watts, transmitting on a frequency of 860 kc/s from a new site at Dodge Cove on Digby island.

GOVERNMENT FARM LOANS, QUEBEC

Question No. 1,389—Mr. Caouette:

1. What is the total amount of government farm loans each year since 1958 (a) in the province of Quebec (b) in the county of Villeneuve?
2. What was the average amount of these loans?

Mr. Hays: 1. (a)

Province of Quebec	Amount
1958-59	$ 891,650
1959-60	1,286,450
1960-61	1,646,550
1961-62	1,786,100
1962-63	11,434,700
1963-64	7,286,100

(to September 30, 1963)

(b) The Farm Credit Corporation does not maintain statistical records on a constituency basis. However, the constituency of Villeneuve is made up of part of the municipal county of Temiscamingue and part of the municipal county of Abitibi east, for which municipal counties the answer is as follows:

1958-59	$ 19,800
1959-60	41,950
1960-61	18,500
1961-62	4,500
1962-63	47,300
1963-64	179,800

(to September 30, 1963)

Questions

2. Years	Province of Quebec	Municipal Counties of Temiscamingue and Abitibi East
	(to the nearest dollar)
1958-59	$ 5,790	$ 4,950
1959-60	7,187	5,244
1960-61	15,533	9,250
1961-62	16,386	4,500
1962-63	14,222	11,825
1963-64	12,476	11,238

(to September 30, 1963)

J. H. RICK, NORTHERN AFFAIRS DEPARTMENT

Question No. 1,395—Mr. Fisher:

With regard to J. H. Rick, an employee of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, what are the details, of his birthplace, institution and place by years of his education, his diplomas and degrees, his experience in his field by place and institution his publications (titles and bibliographical notation), his citizenship and the dates and data on his civil service grading?

Answer: Birthplace: Regina, Sask.

Education: B.A. in anthropology, University of Toronto, 1958. M.A. in anthropology, University of Toronto, 1959. University of Indiana archaeological field school, summer, 1958.

Experience: (1) Various excavations in southern Ontario with University of Toronto, Ontario archaeological society, 1954-59. (2) Field supervisor, Saskatchewan museum of natural history; archaeological site survey in Saskatchewan, 1959. (3) Field supervisor, North Dakota state historical society; excavations in North Dakota, 1959. (4) Archaeologist, University of Pennsylvania museum's Tikal project; excavations at Tikal, Guatemala, 1960-61. (5) Laboratory assistant zoology dept., University of Florida, 1961.

Publications: None.

Citizenship: Canadian.

Civil service grade: September 28, 1961: anthropologist 2; May 1, 1963: anthropologist 3.

FOREIGN OWNERSHIP AND CONTROL OF INDUSTRIES

Question No. 1,402—Mr. Howard:

What is the percentage of (a) foreign ownership (b) foreign control (c) United States ownership, and (d) United States control over the following industries:

1. Machinery
2. Mechanical transport
3. Chemicals
4. Clothing and textiles
5. Food products
6. Shipbuilding
7. Wood products
8. Industrial chemicals
9. Consumer chemicals
10. Plastics
11. Rubber
12. Fuels
13. Explosives
14. Leather
15. Clothing
16. Textiles
17. Electronic components
18. Electrical equipment
19. Fruit and vegetable products
20. Animal and fish products
21. Confectionery and beverages

Questions

22. Cereals and prepared foods
23. Metal fabrication
24. Machine and small tools
25. Light industrial equipment
26. Heavy industrial equipment
27. Scientific instruments
28. Iron and steel
29. Non-ferrous metals
30. Non-metallic minerals
31. Motor vehicles
32. Construction and agricultural machinery
33. Rail and other vehicles
34. Shipbuilding
35. Marine components
36. Pulp and paper
37. Printing and publishing
38. Construction products
39. Furniture
40. Propulsion systems

Answer: Statistics showing percentage of (a) foreign ownership, (b) foreign control, (c) United States ownership, and (d) United States control, are not available for most of the subdivisions of industry requested. Calculations from financial data of this kind have only been made on an enterprise basis. The activities of enterprises are not usually confined to the small subdivisions of industry. The most recent statistics on percentages of foreign ownership and control of selected Canadian industries have been published in table XV, Canadian balance of international payments 1960 and international investment position, dominion bureau of statistics, catalogue number 67-201.

FOREIGN OWNERSHIP AND CONTROL OF INDUSTRIES

Question No. 1,403—Mr. Howard:

What is the percentage of (a) foreign ownership (b) foreign control (c) United States ownership, and (d) United States control over the following industries:

1. Aircraft
2. Aerospace systems
3. Aircraft components and accessories
4. Aircraft sub-systems
5. Organic chemicals
6. Inorganic chemicals
7. Protective coatings
8. Pharmaceuticals
9. Toilet and cleaning preparations
10. Chemical specialties
11. Plastics manufacturers
12. Plastic fabricators
13. Rubber products
14. Petroleum products
15. Propellants and explosives
16. Footwear
17. Leather products
18. Men's clothing
19. Women's clothing
20. Cotton and woollen mills
21. Synthetic textiles mills
22. General textile products
23. Knitting mills
24. Electrical components
25. Electronic components
26. Wire and cable
27. Electrical apparatus
28. Control equipment
29. Generation and transmission
30. Appliances
31. Communications
32. Data processing
33. Data acquisition
34. Preserving and canning
35. Freezing and dehydrating
36. Meat processing
37. Fish processing
38. Dairy products
39. Sugar and confectionery
40. Bakery products

Answer: Statistics showing percentage of (a) foreign ownership, (b) foreign control, (c) United States ownership, and (d) United States control, are not available for most of the subdivisions of industry requested. Calculations from financial data of this kind have only been made on an enterprise basis. The activities of enterprises are not usually confined to the small subdivisions of industry. The most recent statistics on percentages of foreign ownership and control of selected Canadian industries have been published in table XV, Canadian balance of international payments 1960 and international investment position, dominion bureau of statistics, catalogue number 67-201.

[Mr. Howard.]

FOREIGN OWNERSHIP AND CONTROL OF INDUSTRIES

Question No. 1,404—Mr. Howard:

What is the percentage of (a) foreign ownership (b) foreign control (c) United States ownership, and (d) United States control over the following industries:

1. Beverages and tobacco
2. Grain milling
3. Vegetable oils and prepared foods
4. Metal stampings
5. Fabricated products
6. Metal specialty products
7. Machine tools
8. Hardware and small tools
9. Heating and cooling equipment
10. Office and store equipment
11. Industrial equipment
12. Industrial machinery
13. Scientific and professional equipment
14. Jewellery and flatware
15. Iron and steel mills
16. Pipe mills and foundries
17. Structural steel
18. Smelting and refining non-ferrous metals
19. Rolling, casting and extruding non-ferrous metals
20. Cement and clay products
21. Glass and industrial materials
22. Passenger and commercial vehicles
23. Motor vehicle parts and accessories
24. Agricultural implements
25. Construction machinery
26. Railroad equipment
27. Specialty vehicles
28. Shipyards
29. Marine components
30. Pulp and newsprint mills
31. Paper converters
32. Paper mills and specialty products
33. Commercial printing
34. Publishing
35. Sash and doors
36. Sawmills and planer mills
37. Plywoods and veneers
38. Structural wood products
39. Furniture
40. Secondary wood products

Answer: Statistics showing percentage of (a) foreign ownership, (b) foreign control, (c) United States ownership, and (d) United States control, are not available for most of the subdivisions of industry requested. Calculations from financial data of this kind have only been made on an enterprise basis. The activities of enterprises are not usually confined to the small subdivisions of industry. The most recent statistics on percentages of foreign ownership and control of selected Canadian industries have been published in table XV, Canadian balance of international payments 1960 and international investment position, dominion bureau of statistics, catalogue number 67-201.

CANADIAN ASSETS AND LIABILITIES ABROAD

Question No. 1,408—Mr. Mather:

1. Has the Auditor General issued or caused the of Canadian assets abroad, and what was the distribution of these assets by countries?

2. As of December 31, 1962, what was the total Canadian liabilities to non-residents, and what was the distribution of these liabilities by countries?

Answer: Statistics showing Canadian assets abroad and Canadian liabilities to other countries are not yet available as of December 31, 1962. Some details for the end of 1961 are shown in table V, page 13 of the publication, quarterly estimates of the Canadian balance of international payments second quarter 1963, dominion bureau of statistics, catalogue number 67-001.

*ESTATE OF MRS. FLORENCE EATON-KAYE

Question No. 1,418—Mr. Fisher:

1. Has the Auditor General issued or caused the Department of National Revenue to issue a writ of execution or any other action of a legal nature in connection with the estate of the late Mrs. Florence Eaton-Kaye and, if so, when, and for what reasons?
2. Is the Department of National Revenue aware of any actions before the U.S. courts which relate to this estate or the holdings of this estate?

Mr. Garland: 1 and 2. The custom in this house has been to consider the affairs of taxpayers and the information submitted to the department by taxpayers to be confidential in nature. The Income Tax Act (section 133), the Dominion Succession Duty Act (section 54) and the Estates Tax Act (section 53) contain provisions to this effect.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

COLUMBIA RIVER TREATY

Motion No. 93—Mr. Herridge:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence and telegrams exchanged between the Prime Minister or any member of the government and any private citizen in Canada with respect to the Columbia river treaty since January 1, 1963.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I understand after discussion with the hon. member that he has agreed to withdraw this motion and rephrase it in a form which will make it possible for him to have all the information he requires, but in the shortest possible time. If I am correct in that assumption, perhaps the hon. gentleman will withdraw the motion for that purpose.

Mr. Herridge: I agree with the Prime Minister's suggestion. I am a most accommodating person when it is not a matter of principle.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

ARMED FORCES—TESTS FOR APPLICANTS FOR COMMISSIONS

Motion No. 94—Mr. Olson:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all tests given to persons applying for a commission in the armed forces and more specifically those tests of a general nature that are used to evaluate personality characteristics, and intelligence levels.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I wish to withdraw this motion because I have had a discussion with the Minister of National Defence and some of the information is going to be supplied to me.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

CANADIAN WHEAT SALES ABROAD

Motion No. 97—Mr. Martineau:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, communications and other documents received from the government of the United States of America or any of its departments or exchanged between the government of the United States of America and the government of Canada, or any of their respective departments, concerning the sale of wheat by Canada to the U.S.S.R., other communist countries and Japan, or pertaining to any representations made about the price of wheat sold to these countries.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, to table confidential information of the kind requested by the hon. gentleman would be both a departure from normal usage in the intergovernmental exchange of confidential information, and not in the public interest. For these reasons I respectfully request the hon. gentleman to withdraw the motion. I have told the house on a number of occasions that the United States government was kept informed of the negotiations between the Soviet union and Canada, and generally speaking I think I have tried to keep the house fully informed about all developments concerning the recent sales of wheat by Canada and have tabled the relevant documents. It will be my intention to continue to keep the house fully informed, but for the reasons I have given I do hope the hon. gentleman will agree to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, the other day in explaining some of the guide lines concerning the production of papers you indicated that the fact that documents might be confidential was not a reason for not publishing them. With regard to the question of a departure from ordinary usage, I think the fact that the United States government has accused the Canadian government of price fixing is a departure from such usage, and that it is in the public interest that all the details and particulars pertaining to that charge be fully aired in the house. Because of these reasons I cannot see my way clear to withdraw my motion, although I would have no objection to having it transferred for debate on a later occasion.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, perhaps it might help the hon. gentleman if I made two statements about these matters. I have looked at the files—

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I do not want to stop the minister from giving information, but I do not think the motion is debatable at this stage. However, if the minister wants to debate it, it is quite all right with me.

Mr. Speaker: Under the rules of the house I must put the motion as it stands or it must be transferred for debate.

Mr. Pearson: Transferred.

Mr. Pickersgill: Transferred for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

PRINCE RUPERT, B.C., GRAIN ELEVATOR

Motion No. 101—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all reports received by the government or any agency or branch thereof dealing with the grain elevator at Prince Rupert, B.C., since January 1, 1959.

Mr. Beer: Mr. Speaker, the minister respectfully requests that motion No. 101 for the production of papers stand.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member agree?

Mr. Howard: Agreed.

Motion stands.

EXPANSION OF GRAIN ELEVATOR FACILITIES, PRINCE RUPERT, B.C.

Motion No. 102—Mr. Howard:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, letters and other documents received by the government or any agency or branch thereof or exchanged between the government or any agency or branch thereof and any other person, organization or government since January 1, 1962, dealing with the possibility of expanding the facilities of the grain elevator in Prince Rupert, B.C., or dealing with the handling of grain through the said elevator.

Mr. Beer: Mr. Speaker, this motion is acceptable, subject to the reservation that the consent of any provincial government concerned is obtained to produce the correspondence with that government.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is agreed subject to the reservation of the parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a point of order with reference to motion No. 97. I did not wish to interrupt you or I would have raised it earlier. I would point out to Your Honour that the effect of the order of the house of last Thursday is that there no longer is a period on Thursdays—

Mr. Pickersgill: That was Wednesday.

Mr. Lambert: I am sorry; I thought it was Thursday.

Motion agreed to.

RIVER DREDGING, QUEBEC

Motion No. 104—Mr. Rochon:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of any correspondence exchanged between the Minister of Public Works or officials of his department and the members of La Corporation Inter-urbaine de l'Ile Jesus regarding the dredging of the Riviere des Mille Iles and the Riviere des Prairies.

Mr. Badanai: This motion is agreed to except as to the tabling of personal and confidential papers.

Motion agreed to.

REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING PENSION PLAN

Motion No. 105—Mr. Knowles:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all communications received by the Prime Minister, or by any other member of the cabinet dated since April 22, 1963, from life insurance companies, private pension firms or consultants, private actuarial consultants, investment houses and chambers of commerce, concerning the proposed Canada pension plan, and a copy of all replies thereto.

Motion agreed to.

SPEECH OF MINISTER TO PENSION CONFERENCE

Motion No. 106—Mr. Knowles:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of the text of the speech made in the name of the Minister of National Health and Welfare on the Canada pension plan at a meeting of the Canadian pension conference held in Toronto on Monday, September 30, 1963.

Motion agreed to.

GRAIN TERMINAL, TISDALE, SASK.

Motion No. 108—Mr. Rapp:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence reports or surveys received by the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Canadian wheat board, the board of grain commissioners for Canada or officers of any government department or agency with respect to the construction of a grain terminal at Tisdale, Saskatchewan.

Motion agreed to.

LETTER TO FINANCE MINISTER FROM C. H. SPROULE

Motion No. 110—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of a letter dated September 17, 1963, addressed by Mr. C. H. Sproule, chairman of the maritime lumber bureau to the Minister of Finance on the subject of federal sales tax and a copy of any reply thereto.

Motion agreed to.

IMMIGRATION ORDERS IN COUNCIL

Motion No. 111—Mr. Peters:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all orders in council covering immigration for the years 1955, 1956, 1957, 1958, and 1959, and to include any corrections that have been brought to the attention of the government as a consequence of the Immigration amnesty order, together with recommendations instituted by members of parliament concerning individuals covered by such orders in council.

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, I thought the hon. member had agreed that this motion would stand.

Motion stands.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN P.O. DEPARTMENT AND LUC LESSARD

Motion No. 113—Mr. Langlois:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence exchanged since April 8, 1963, by the Postmaster General or any employee of the Post Office Department on the one hand, and Mr. Luc Gilbert Lessard of Black Lake, Megantic county, on the other hand.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, with regard to notices of motion Nos. 113 to 134 inclusive, there is no objection to the production of all the official documents.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Under our rules I will have to put the individual motions.

Mr. Fisher: What other correspondence is there?

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN P.O. DEPARTMENT AND CECIL DOUGHERTY

Motion No. 114—Mr. Latulippe:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence exchanged since April 8, 1963, between the Postmaster General or any employee of the Post Office Department and Mr. Cecil Dougherty of Lennoxville, in the county of Frontenac.

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN P.O. DEPARTMENT AND RENE CÔTÉ

Motion No. 115—Mr. Caouette (for Mr. Gregoire):

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence exchanged since April 8, 1963, by the Postmaster General or any employee of the Post Office Department on the one hand, and Mr. Rene Côté of 94 Fontaine st., Jonquiere, on the other.

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN P.O. DEPARTMENT AND STEPHAN CUDDIHY

Motion No. 116—Mr. Caouette:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence exchanged since April 8, 1963, by the Postmaster General or any employee of the Post Office Department on the one hand, and Mr. Stephan Cuddihy of Rouyn, Villeneuve county, on the other hand.

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN P.O. DEPARTMENT AND THEO BEAUDRY

Motion No. 117—Mr. Laprise:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence exchanged since April 8, 1963, by the Postmaster General or any employee of the Post Office Department on the one hand, and Mr. Theo Beaudry of Chapleau county on the other hand.

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN P.O. DEPARTMENT AND MEREDE BOUCHARD

Motion No. 118—Mr. Belanger:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence exchanged since April 8, 1963, by the Postmaster General or any employee of the Post Office Department on the one hand, and Mr. Merede Bouchard of St. Gregoire, Montmorency, on the other hand.

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN P.O. DEPARTMENT AND FRANCIS O'FARRELL

Motion No. 119—Mr. Beaule (for Mr. Boutin):

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence exchanged since April 8, 1963, between the Postmaster General or any officials of the Post Office Department and Mr. Francis O'Farrell, 984 Salaberry street, Quebec city.

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN P.O. DEPARTMENT AND JEAN-PAUL NOLIN

Motion No. 120—Mr. Plourde:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence exchanged since April 8, 1963, between the Postmaster General or any of the officials of the Post Office Department and Mr. Jean-Paul Nolin, 152 Belanger street, Quebec west.

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN P.O. DEPARTMENT AND ALBERT PARENT

Motion No. 121—Mr. Beaule:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence exchanged since April 8, 1963, between the Postmaster General or any official of the Post office Department and Mr. Albert Parent, 2110 boulevard Sainte-Anne, Quebec city, Quebec.

Motion agreed to.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN P.O. DEPARTMENT AND ALBERT GARANT

Motion No. 122—Mr. Gauthier:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence exchanged since April 8, 1963, between the Postmaster General or any official of the Post Office Department on one hand, and Mr. Albert Garant, P.O. Box 456, Roberval, P.Q., on the other hand.

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN P.O. DEPARTMENT AND JEAN-PAUL RACINE

Motion No. 123—Mr. Rondeau (for Mr. Perron):

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence exchanged since April 8, 1963, by the Postmaster General or any official of the Post Office Department on the one hand, and Mr. Jean-Paul Racine, of St. Honore de Shenley, county of Beauce, on the other hand.

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN P.O. DEPARTMENT AND GERARD LACAILLE

Motion No. 124—Mr. Rondeau:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence exchanged since April 8, 1963, between the Postmaster General or any official of the Post Office Department on the one hand, and Mr. Gerard Lacaille, St. Paul d'Abbotsford, on the other hand.

Motion agreed to.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, before orders of the day are called may I ask the Secretary of State, in view of the fact that on June 26 last, approximately four months ago, the government agreed to make returns to my motions Nos. 19, 22, and 33 relating to federal-provincial questions, and in view of the fact that the federal-provincial meeting is coming up in a very short time, would he agree to have these returns made as soon as possible, so that I could begin my study of them?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I would hope that within the four weeks and some days which still remain before that meeting it would be possible to get these returns, and I will do my best to persuade the departments to get them.

LABOUR RELATIONS

NORRIS COMMISSION—REPORT OF SPECIAL COUNSEL

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I direct a question to the Minister of Justice and ask him, in view of the action announced belatedly today by the Minister of Labour, if he is now in a position to advise the nature of the prosecutions, if any, that will be taken by the government in pursuance of the recommendations of the Norris commission.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I presume that what my right hon. friend had in mind in the latter part of his question was the procedure in pursuance of the report made by the two counsel. In answer to his question I must say that I did spend an hour with the two counsel this morning. I am seeing them again this afternoon, but unfortunately at this time I am unable to make any statement.

[Later:]

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour and ask him how long or how many days he will wait before he imposes sanctions on the men who are out on an illegal strike and who are actually acting in defiance of his order to return to work. I refer to the seamen of the S.I.U.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, no time limit has been set, in the sense in which the hon. gentleman has put the question. The government has today proclaimed the trusteeship act, the trustees have been appointed, and at the same time the government has under consideration what further steps might be taken to bring this matter to a settlement.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice. Inasmuch as several weeks of delay have taken place already with regard to action to enforce the law and to undertake prosecutions as recommended in the Norris report, I would like to ask the minister whether this is as a result of a conflict of jurisdiction between the provinces and the federal government; and if so, is he prepared to introduce legislation whereby we can settle this problem?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I do not know that there has been an inordinate delay. I have told the house that there was an interim report on this matter which my officers were discussing with the two counsel. I added, in answer to the question put by the Leader of the Opposition, that I had met with the two counsel this morning, and I am leaving now to have another meeting with them. I think the house, and particularly my hon. friend, would not want me to go any further at this time in view of the seriousness of this situation.

SUGAR

RECOMMENDATIONS BY COMBINES BRANCH RESPECTING PRICE INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Has he received since yesterday suggestions or recommendations from the director of combines investigations, in regard to the sudden and recent increase in the price of sugar?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker.

[Text]

SELLING PRICE OF BEET SUGAR PRODUCED IN WEST

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Justice, in view of the monstrous increase in the price of sugar, whether he is in a position to answer the question that I asked him yesterday relative to the sale of beet sugar produced at the refineries in Winnipeg and Lethbridge, which is selling at a price which takes into consideration the freight from Montreal to the places of production, rather than the freight rates from the places of production.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have the answer to the question which the Leader of the Opposition asked yesterday. Perhaps I had better read into the record the question as he posed it then:

> Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary question I would ask the minister whether in so far as western Canadian beet sugar is concerned which is refined at Winnipeg and Lethbridge, the people in western Canada are being penalized by having to pay the world sugar price, plus freight charges, as if the sugar was shipped from Montreal, when in fact it is coming from one or other of those two refineries.

The answer that has been given to me by the director of the combines investigation branch is as follows: Generally speaking, the refinery price of cane sugar in western Canada is equivalent to the Montreal or Vancouver price, whichever is the closer point, plus freight, the price of beet sugar being slightly lower. The director advises that such a situation can exist without there being any offence against the Combines Investigation Act.

As stated on a previous occasion, the increase in Canadian sugar prices is attributable to the increase in world raw sugar prices. Because of increasing world consumption and production difficulties there is unlikely to be any immediate improvement. Since the increase in refined sugar prices is a direct reflection of world market conditions over which Canada has no control, action under the Combines Investigation Act cannot be expected to correct the situation. The director is, however, continuing to keep the matter under close scrutiny, and should any aspect give him reason to believe that an offence against the act is being committed, he will take the action that the statute requires.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILES—PLANS TO INCREASE CANADIAN SHARE IN GROWTH

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. I would have directed it to the Minister of Industry but since the Minister of Finance spoke on the same subject last night, according to newspaper reports, I am sure he is in a position to deal with this matter. I wonder when the house will be advised of the details of the proposal made by the Minister of Industry in Washington, which has been a subject of controversy and debate in the press in the United States for the last 48 hours?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Minister of Industry made any statement of policy in Washington. My recollection is that he said early this week that as soon as he had a statement to make he would make it in the house, and he hoped to make it before the end of the week.

Mr. Nowlan: As a supplementary question, can the minister explain how the secretary of commerce of the United States cabinet is able to discuss these matters with so much intelligence that he can threaten retaliatory action against Canada?

Mr. Gordon: I am unable to speak for the secretary of commerce of the United States, or to comment on whether his remarks were intelligent or otherwise.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, was the Minister of Finance announcing new government policies when he said new steps would be taken following those that are now to be taken in regard to the automobile industry, to increase production in other industries and, if so, can he tell us what industries will be affected?

Mr. Gordon: No, Mr. Speaker, I was not announcing new government policies.

Mr. Martineau: Will the minister answer the second part of my question? He is reported as having said that moves will be taken to increase production in certain other industries, moves along the lines taken for the automobile industry. The question is, will he name what industries he has in mind?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to send the hon. member a copy of the speech I made last night, and when the Minister of Industry has anything further to announce I am sure he will do it in the house.

MANITOBA—REPORTED DUPLICATION OF DEVELOPMENT PLAN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry. In his absence perhaps it could be taken as notice. Is the minister aware of the comments of the premier of Manitoba and his minister of industry to the effect that costly duplication of the excellent Manitoba industrial development plan is occurring in setting up the new federal department, and that this arises from a failure of the government to consult with the provinces in areas of joint responsibility?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have serious doubts about whether the question is in order. In any event I think if the hon. member would put his question on the order paper he would receive a more detailed reply.

PUBLIC SERVICE

SUPERANNUATED FEDERAL EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR INCREASED PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the letter he received recently from Mr. Edwards, the president of the civil service federation of Canada, which he wrote on behalf of retired civil servants, will the minister say whether the government will reconsider the decision which apparently it has taken not to do anything in this session about amending the Public Service Pension Adjustment Act?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the government has no plans to reconsider the decision that was taken some weeks ago.

Mr. Knowles: Then may I ask a supplementary question. In view of the minister's statement in his letter to the civil service federation of Canada that these people must wait until the Canada pension plan becomes law, can he tell us when that might be?

[Mr. Martineau.]

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I do not think that I can usefully add anything to what the Prime Minister has already said on this subject.

AGRICULTURE

QUEBEC—NON-PAYMENT OF TAXES UNTIL FEED GRAIN ASSURED

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Could the minister inform the house as to which steps he intends to take against the members of the catholic farmers' union who refuse to pay their income tax if the government does not give cause for satisfaction to the eastern farmers as regards the purchase of their feed grain?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This is surely a question for the order paper.

APPEARANCE BEFORE COMMITTEE OF STABILIZATION BOARD OFFICIALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture. It dates back to a question I asked him on June 26 in regard to whether the officials of the stabilization board would be brought before the committee on agriculture. At that time the minister said he would take my question as notice, but we have not heard anything about it since.

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): I am sorry the hon. member has not received an answer. I will take his question as notice today and see if we can reply to it tomorrow.

PROVISION OF FEED GRAIN FOR EASTERN FARMERS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture and it is of vital importance at this time both to our eastern and western farmers.

In view of the fact that ice will soon put a stop to navigation on the St. Lawrence seaway and that the catholic farmers' union of the province of Quebec has reported that grain production in that province is now 45 per cent below average, does the minister intend to allow the Canadian wheat board to carry western feed grain to Quebec, in order to bring some relief to the farmers of that province?

[Text]

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): There are two questions here, and if the hon. member would put them on the order paper I think we could answer them in detail.

[Translation]

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, I feel that if the question is put on the order paper, there will again be a delay before a reply is given.

This is the third consecutive day that we have been asking this question in the house and we have been told to put it on the order paper. In my opinion, the Minister of Agriculture who stated a few minutes ago that Canada has sent several thousand dollars worth of food and merchandise to the victims of hurricane Flora, should at least give us a quick reply so that Quebec farmers may get as much assistance as the victims of hurricane Flora, in the Caribbean area.

[Text]

Mr. Hays: Perhaps I could answer the question in a way that would satisfy the hon. member until tomorrow. I should like the house to know that we have more feed grain on spot than at any time in the history of the feed grain policy, and we have more in store ready to ship than at any time since 1941.

Mr. Langlois: We all know that; but what Quebec wants to know is, is the Canadian wheat board ready to extend its powers so that it has charge of the wheat from the lakehead to Quebec without going through the grain exchange?

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest respectfully that this question should be put on the order paper and an answer expected shortly.

[Later:]

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): A supplementary question was asked a few minutes ago, Mr. Speaker, and I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if any special action is contemplated to put barley at the disposal of the feeders in eastern Canada?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): In a general way, let me assure the hon. member and the house that the Canadian wheat board is giving very high priority to the requirements of eastern feeders in moving grain to eastern positions before the freeze-up and thereafter.

[Later:]

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Agriculture. Will the minister assure the house that he will look into the administration of the Toronto-Montreal grain exchange with regard to grain coming in from the western provinces for sale in the eastern provinces?

Mr. Speaker: Surely this is a question for the order paper. The hon. member can hardly expect an answer to a question like that asked on orders of the day.

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

INSTRUCTIONS TO ROYAL COMMISSION RESPECTING PUBLIC MEETINGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Nicholas Mandziuk (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the President of the Privy Council. Can the minister advise the house whether he instructed the royal commission on biculturalism and bilingualism to obtain public clarification of the scope of their assignment by means of public meetings across the country, the first such meeting having been advertised for November 7, 1963, in Ottawa.

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (President of the Privy Council): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mandziuk: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister aware of any other meetings to be held across Canada?

Mr. Lamontagne: I am not aware of any such meetings, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Quebec East.

[Translation]

Mr. Robert Beaule (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, my question was along the same line as the one just put by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

[Text]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

DISCONTINUANCE OF COMMUTER ALLOWANCE AT MILITARY ESTABLISHMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Will the minister have another look at this question of the discontinuance of bus commuter allowance at the various military establishments, particularly the naval ordnance depot at Renous, New Brunswick, having regard to cases of hardship and inconsistencies in other departments of government?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the department has been looking into this question of commuting allowances and it has been decided that at the base at Renous and others in the maritime provinces we will not continue the commuting allowance after November 1.

Mr. Bell: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister realize that this means a reduction in their salary of about $35 a month, and that this policy is also inconsistent with that of the Department of Transport and other departments of government, because in so far as they are concerned this extra consideration is given to employees?

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, that question has been looked into very carefully and we are doing everything we can to achieve uniformity.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I did not quite catch what the minister said in his reply, but he did mention something about the maritime provinces. I am wondering whether this applies to all establishments, particularly the Point Edward naval base in Cape Breton.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to take that question as notice.

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN U.S. AIRLIFT TO GERMANY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence.

I am sorry but I was able to send him notice only at the opening of this afternoon's sitting.

Could the minister inform the house as to whether Canada will participate in the operation "Big Lift", namely the air lift which will be set up between a NATO airport in Europe and western Germany?

[Text]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we are not participating in this operation "Big Lift". We are of course, as the hon. member would understand, supplying air space for the transport of these aircraft on their route. This is our only participation. We will, of course, be interested in the results of the whole operation.

Mr. Langlois: I did not quite catch the beginning of the minister's answer. Are there any Canadian soldiers taking part in this operation?

Mr. Hellyer: No, there are not.

[Mr. Cardin.]

FORT CHURCHILL—REPORTED FREEZING OF MILITARY POSTINGS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I should like to answer a question asked of me by the hon. member for Churchill concerning service postings to Fort Churchill. I am now in a position to reply.

In view of the consideration being given to service establishments at Fort Churchill to which I referred on October 14, while postings to Churchill have not been frozen, the number of such postings being implemented are being reduced pending a final decision.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ROBERVAL COUNTY, QUE.—REQUEST FOR EXEMPTION FROM TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance.

Now that the whole riding of Roberval has finally been recognized as a depressed area, can the minister give us some hope of an exemption from the sales tax on building materials that will be used for winter works carried out under this act?

Mr. Speaker: This is a question for the order paper.

[Text]

FINANCE

MUNICIPAL LOAN LEGISLATION—AGREEMENTS WITH PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): I should like to address a question in French to the Prime Minister.

[Translation]

Can the Prime Minister tell the house whether all provinces have signed the agreement with the municipal development and loan board?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The hon. member was good enough to give me notice of this question when I came into the house. A draft agreement was drawn up some time ago by the federal authorities and was submitted to the provinces. There has been an exchange of views with all the provinces on that draft agreement, and as a result of that exchange we hope there will be agreements signed with all the provinces very shortly.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. P. Antoine Belanger (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

Can the minister tell the house whether it is true that the province of Quebec, which has not yet signed the agreement with the Municipal Development and Loan Board, now declines to do so?

[Text]

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for sending me notice of this question. As the Prime Minister has indicated there have been negotiations with the provinces about the terms of the agreement. A final draft of the agreement was forwarded to the province of Quebec on Friday, October 18, and I have every expectation the province of Quebec will find this agreement satisfactory and will sign it.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ORDER OF PRIORITY OF GOVERNMENT BUSINESS ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. My question relates to the business of the house and is based on the fact that there are 27 government orders on the order paper, but that only four or five of them have been indicated to us in recent weeks as having the kind of priority that would ensure their being called for discussion. I wonder if the Prime Minister at an early date could make a statement to the house telling us the government's plans for this session, which of the items on the order paper have priority, and whether or not there are any other pieces of legislation to be placed on the order paper by the government?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I think that is a very useful suggestion. I hope to make a statement along these lines shortly.

PENSIONS

BLIND AND DISABLED PAYMENTS—REQUEST THAT INCREASE BE RETROACTIVE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare if the government, in deciding to extend the increase of $10 to disabled and blind persons, will make it retroactive to October 1, in the same way as the old age pension?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I thank the hon. member for his question, and refer him to an answer I gave earlier in the house with respect to other co-operative schemes with the provinces, and the necessity for discussing them with the provinces in November.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

WEST GERMANY—VISIT TO CANADA BY NEW CHANCELLOR

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

Does the right hon. gentleman intend to invite the new chancellor of West Germany to come to Canada following his trip to Washington, towards the end of November?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The question of an invitation has not yet been considered by the government. I understand he is going to visit Washington in November, and I am sure the new German chancellor would be welcome in Canada. I think we should consider now extending an invitation to him.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REPORTED DISMISSAL OF VETERAN'S WIFE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I should like to answer a question asked by the hon. member for Hastings-Frontenac. Before I do so, may I ask him if he was talking about the postmastership at Enterprise, Ontario?

I want to reply to the question, Mr. Speaker, because I want to correct some of the statements made. In his question the hon. member said that the lady in question was a veteran. I looked in the file, and she is not a veteran. The hon. member stated also that, with her ability and personality she had increased the revenue of this post office by $2,100. The fact is that the total revenue for one year in this office was $1,410. Later on he said that he wrote to the Postmaster General but to no avail. May I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Hastings-Frontenac never wrote to me about it. If I remember, the only letter was dated October 10 and it arrived on October 11. It was sent to the proper service on the 15th, the 14th being a holiday, the 13th being a Sunday. I want to correct the impression that he wrote to me personally. I do not want the house to think that I had not bothered to answer. Moreover, in a newspaper he is reported as having said that Mrs. Stewart had been replaced by a young Liberal. I have information which indicates that she will be replaced by one Mrs. Dillon, who is the mother of 10 children.

Mr. Monteith: All Liberals?

Mr. Webb: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, the facts are as I gave them in the house. The lady in question was the young widow of a veteran and had five children. The report I got was that since taking over the postmastership she increased the revenue in the amount of some $2,100.

Mr. Denis: The total revenue was $1,410.

Mr. Webb: I will produce a copy of the letter I sent to the Post Office Department.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER GREATER DISPATCH OF BUSINESS

The house resumed, from Friday, October 18, consideration of the motion of Mr. Pearson (for the Secretary of State):

That a select committee be appointed to consider with Mr. Speaker the procedures and organization of this house, for the purpose of suggesting any changes that would assure the more expeditious dispatch of public business and would strengthen parliament and make it more effective; that the committee have power to send for persons and papers; that it report from time to time its findings and recommendations to the house; and that it consist, in addition to Mr. Speaker, of 14 members to be designated at a later date.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall only require a very few minutes to complete my contribution to this debate, as I am sure the house is anxious to deal with this matter and get the committee set up so that it can go to work; and when the committee reports later on its activities we can debate its recommendations.

When I finished the other day I was talking of one change which might be useful, and that was to extend and make more effective the committee work of the house. Last January the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond (Mr. MacEachen) who was then in the opposition, when discussing this matter asked some questions which I think bear repetition because they do deal with this question in a very succinct and useful way. As reported on page 3284 of Hansard he said:

I ask myself whether there are important changes which can be made in the rules of the house which would effect real economies in time. We have reduced the time on the address. Shall we reduce it two more days and thereby deny more members the opportunity to take part? Shall we reduce the budget debate and thereby deny more members an opportunity to take part? Shall we reduce the number of supply motions and deny private members an opportunity to raise votes of non-confidence against the government? Shall we reduce the number of readings of a bill? Shall we have only one reading and pass the bill at one stage? This is the kind of important change which will have to be made in the rules in order to effect real economies.

I think, Mr. Speaker, he could also have asked another very pertinent question: Shall we do away with the resolution stage of a bill?

Mr. Winch: Yes.

Mr. Pearson: The resolution stage had very great meaning in earlier years, particularly in the 18th and 17th centuries, but it does not seem to me to have the same kind of meaning today. It takes up a lot of time and results in a good deal of repetition of debate on a particular subject. Perhaps this is something which could be changed, though I agree that the committee would have to look into matters of that kind very carefully. While the committee can, and I am sure will, do a thorough job under your leadership, with the learned assistance which you, Mr. Speaker, will receive, perhaps there are things which we can do at once by agreement of the house after discussion among the leaders of the various parties. Perhaps there are things we can do now while the committee is at work—and it may take many weeks, indeed months, to complete its work—which will increase the effectiveness of this house during this particular session.

This subject was discussed a year ago, in November and December of 1962 and January 1963, during the previous parliament. I remember speaking in that debate in respect to the proposals which were made at that time to speed up the work of the session, proposals which incidentally did not come to anything. Perhaps these might be revived now, and after discussion with the leaders of the parties we could put them into effect immediately. I said, as reported at page 2835 of Hansard for December 19, 1962:

We have agreed—and by "we" I meant our own party which was then in opposition, and other opposition parties—

Mr. Churchill: No, that is not right.

Mr. Pearson: All right, I will refer to our own party. We discussed this matter with other opposition parties at the time, and with my hon. friend too; but I will restrict my observations to my own party. I said:

We have agreed to the allocation of time to specific legislation. That would be done by agreement, and it is a very important concession for an opposition to make.

This would mean, Mr. Speaker, that by agreement—and this is done regularly in Westminster—we would allocate a certain number of days considered appropriate for each piece of legislation to that legislation, and at the end of the agreed allocation of time the vote would then be taken on the various stages of the legislation. We on our side, when we were in opposition last year, agreed to that. Then I went on:

> We have agreed to a reduction, if it is a reduction, to 30 minutes of the time spent on oral questions on orders of the day—

Speaking on this same matter a few weeks before, a very distinguished member of the government of that time had this to say, as reported on page 2011 of Hansard for November 26, 1962:

> I think that the number of these questions could be greatly reduced; and if we were also to have a self-denying ordinance that, under ordinary circumstances, we would not go over half an hour on questions before orders of the day we would save 15 full days in an ordinary session without, as I see it, losing any ground that might be gained through questions or in any way interfering with the rights of the opposition.

That was the position taken at that time, Mr. Speaker, by the right hon. gentleman who was then prime minister and who is now Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker). There is something else which by agreement we could surely consider at once, because I believe a year ago we had come to virtual agreement on it.

Then a third proposal which we put forward, with which we in the official opposition were in agreement at that time, was this. I said in my remarks on December 19, 1962, as reported at page 2835 of Hansard:

> We have agreed to the prolongation of each day's sitting beyond ten o'clock if that should be necessary to complete the current business before the house or the committee of the whole.

These were three specific suggestions put forward at that time and given a great deal of consideration by the other parties. They were proposals which would have resulted in increasing the effectiveness of the work of the house; and I would hope that while this committee is going into this matter in depth perhaps we could agree to those three proposals which were discussed last year. We could agree to them at once and, perhaps, discussions could be held without delay for that purpose.

Mr. Churchill: Would the Prime Minister state to the house why those proposals were not accepted by the house as a whole? They were acceptable to the government.

Mr. Pickersgill: And to the official opposition.

Mr. Pearson: I am speaking for this party, which was the official opposition at the time. We accepted those proposals. I am well aware of the circumstances surrounding the situation, but I think it would be better to let the leaders of other parties speak as to their own attitude. I believe it is more important to see whether we can reach agreement on this matter now than to worry about why we were not able to reach agreement on it a year ago.

I commend this resolution in the hope that the committee will be set up and that its findings will be acted upon as soon as possible. May I also express the hope that we can, pending the report of this committee, agree on certain measures which will speed up our work and make the House of Commons more effective.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I agree with the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) that everything possible should be done to bring about efficiency of operation and the expedition of business, provided the inherent rights of parliament are not interfered with. The right hon. gentleman spoke the other night of the cynicism toward parliament which finds expression through various persons outside the House of Commons. They speak of parliament as a place where work is not done and where wrangling takes place. They often claim that business, if it operated in the same way, would not be very successful.

Well, we have had a number of businessmen come into parliament in recent days and weeks and they have found that the methods of business are not entirely in keeping with the deliberative nature of parliament. I have not anybody in mind at the moment, but I feel sure there is one or another among those sitting opposite who would entirely agree that the expressions uttered by him or them before coming into parliament have been greatly diminished, in the light of experience, and with a greater knowledge of the operations of parliament and its traditions than could be gained outside this chamber.

I believe, with the Prime Minister, that the parliamentary machinery needs to be examined from time to time and that we must make parliament effective, for a parliament which is not effective can lead to the establishment of dictatorship as an alternative. Parliament is judged by the way in which it transacts business. Again, I say that expedition and efficiency are important. At the same time, there must be no sacrifice of the essential rights of parliament. What I intend to do is to refer in general to some suggestions and ideas which have come to me during the years. I think that on three occasions when I was prime minister we brought before the house a motion to set up a committee such as this. There was a fourth occasion when one of the members of the Social Credit group did the same. Parliament today includes a number of members who sat on those committees. There was a surprising degree of unanimity that something should be done. Changes were made as recommended. Other suggested changes were not put into effect.

When I read all the criticisms of parliament, my view, after many years of membership here, is that while parliament has shortcomings, without it there cannot be freedom. To overcome these shortcomings while remaining a bulwark of freedom, parliament must constantly change in order to meet changing conditions, at the same time remaining changeless in its basic concepts and traditions. The Prime Minister dealt with the old days of parliament, with the beginnings of parliament. There has been bitterness in debate in parliament in every generation. The traditions of parliament carry us back four or five hundred years. The space between the Prime Minister and myself, as everyone knows, is that distance which will allow our sword points to touch; beyond that we can go no further. We do not carry swords any more. We use, on occasion, rapiers of debate which do not require this distance between us. But the tradition remains.

I, for years, have felt that to raise the debating strength of parliament one of the first things we might do is to remove these desks. In the mother of parliaments, debate is much more effective, because of the difficulty of finding a place on which to lay one's notes, than it can ever be in a place where all of us have before us our notes or supporting material. I read of Salisbury, Disraeli, Gladstone and Asquith who were able to speak almost interminably without notes. It was said of Balfour that most of his great speeches found their entire outline on the back of an envelope. Again, we must realize that they spoke in days when there was not that complexity, that variety in affairs, which denies anyone today the possibility of fully absorbing all the information necessary to discuss these various matters and to deliver speeches thereon with few notes.

I had that in mind—the removal of the desks. I will be frank and tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the idea was not very popular among some of those within my own party. A member once said to me, "If you do that, who is going to speak?" The same applies to members in all parts of the house. However, if we were to bring about this change, which I found myself unable to do, I think we would establish the number one prerequisite to a great House of Commons. The result would be shorter but more effective speeches.

In the old days the members of this house used to make long speeches. One has just to look at the debates of the House of Commons in 1885 on the Riel rebellion to realize how long speeches were in those days. I think the first four or five speeches were four or five hours each. Sir John felt he could summarize the whole matter in four hours. Those were the days of long speeches and short parliaments.

What are some of the suggestions that I should like to place before the house? The Prime Minister has mentioned the question of committees. I believe in committees, but experience has proven to me that if we endeavour to place controversial matters before committees they are not effective. Committees operate well in the field of external affairs. The public accounts committee has worked out very well. My suggestion brought about a change whereby you, Mr. Speaker, became chairman of that committee and whereby today the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) is chairman of that committee. But I have seen many other committees operate in which questions of a controversial nature were being discussed and which emasculated those committees and made them ineffective.

What are some of the suggestions that might be followed? One that has been made before concerns research facilities. There is not available to any member of parliament, except those on the treasury benches, the research facilities that should be available to all members. How to bring this about is a difficult question. We cannot communicate with the civil service. To do so would be unfair to them. It would place them in an impossible position. But I think one matter that should be studied carefully is how to bring about in connection with the House of Commons a group of research officials that would be available to all members.

Mention was made by the Prime Minister of the limitation of question time. When I first entered the House of Commons Mr. King was prime minister, and if there were more than one or two questions we thought that bedlam had broken loose. From about 1949 on the number of questions has gradually increased. When we were in government the number increased to an extent beyond anything that had been seen before. Today a similar situation prevails. Provided the answers given by the government are not evasive, provided they place the facts before us, provided they do not hide and cover up, as was alleged today and last night, I would be inclined to believe that if, in addition to the regular questions on the order paper, we all agreed to the self-denying ordinance to which the Prime Minister made reference, oral questions could very well be limited considerably. To what extent would be a matter for determination and recommendation by the committee. In the United Kingdom the period is an hour and that covers written as well as oral questions.

Mr. Pickersgill: And it is not every day.

Mr. Diefenbaker: As the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) says, it is not every day. Speaking from recollection, I believe it is four days in the week. But when ministers start to hide and conceal and fail to reveal the true facts a private member in the United Kingdom then has the right to give 12 hours notice that there shall not be adjournment at ten o'clock but that he shall be able to bring before the house his cause of complaint. This is a very effective method. If it were introduced here I think it would be very helpful because it would assure that if the opposition was restricted in its questions it would be able to place before the house and the country the failure of the government, should it fail, to give proper answers.

I picked up at random Hansard of the British House of Commons for July 10, 1963. The house was ready to adjourn at 9.55 p.m. Mr. Patrick Wall, the member for Haltemprice, placed his views before the house and, having done so, the house finally adjourned at 29 minutes past ten o'clock. While the time during which questions can be asked in the British House of Commons is restricted, when the answers are not in keeping with the facts or for any other reason a member may move, and the motion is always accepted, that the house do not adjourn this evening at ten o'clock.

I come now to another matter raised by the Prime Minister, the question of whether or not there should be a debate at the resolution stage. I believe there should be and that it should be continued. There are some pieces of legislation where it is not necessary. There are others where suggestions, recommendations or criticisms made in the house cause the government to change its viewpoint. We have had a number of examples of that during the present session to which I am not going to allude at the moment. But it was as a result of the opposition's stand in the debate on the resolution stage, which some people called obstruction, that the great plans of the government were changed.

As far as the speech from the throne and budget debates are concerned I sometimes think that we take more time than is necessary on them. There used to be unlimited time, and when there was unlimited time for discussion on this matter parliament took little more time than it takes today with the present limitation because, sir, as soon as you impose a limitation as a maximum that limitation tends to become the minimum.

In the days when the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cardiff) first came into the house, we had the right to speak at great length. We had 40 minutes; but as the minutes were reduced the time for debate continued to be as long as previously. People spoke at shorter length, but if today an hon. member having the opportunity to speak for 40 minutes speaks for only 20 minutes everybody wonders why he did not use up his time. This is one of the effects of placing limitations on speeches.

Something else which has brought about the interminable length of discussion is the multiplication of parties. They all want their say, and it is much easier to arrive at rules to bring about expedition in parliament when there are two parties than when there are four and a half, or five.

What about supply motions? We fixed the time for two days on supply motions and used those two days on practically every occasion. I have often felt that if we were going to have six supply motions in a session it might be well to reduce the time to one day for five of them, with two days devoted to the first. I also feel that we could make a change whereby the government would move supply immediately after the speech from the throne, and have a two day debate at that time so that the estimates of various departments could come before the house, and so that we could put our teeth into something immediately without unnecessary delay.

What about the votes? Well, if there ever was anything more wasteful than the way in which we register a vote I do not know what it is. The other evening we waited and waited for an hon. member who apparently was having dinner or something. I am not going to identify him but we waited a long time for him. He represents a small party that has shown a pathological adherence to supporting the present government. The house was kept waiting for him, and this has happened on other occasions.

I do not suggest the introduction of mechanical devices. I have seen them in operation. We are in the age of automation, but I dislike seeing some of these pushbutton appliances whereby red or blue colours are shown when a vote is registered. I do not know what the disposition of colours would be for the parties to my left, what they would be in this present spectrum, but that is the way these appliances operate.

However, we waste 15 or 20 minutes waiting until hon. members are brought into the chamber. Why should we not be able to vote at 8.15 o'clock instead of waiting until almost 8.45 as we did last evening? Mr. Speaker, do you realize how long it takes for a vote in the United Kingdom parliament? The time taken is about two minutes. Members either go into one lobby or another and the speaker designates two tellers. It takes three minutes at the outside, and I ask why not make that change?

One year we had some 60 votes. Multiply 60 by 12 minutes and you have several days that are used up in voting. This is something that will not detract in any way from the dignity of the house. The British parliament introduced it in 1906 and there has never been any question about it since. I might read from May's Parliamentary Practice on this subject:

> The present method of taking divisions in the House of Commons was introduced experimentally in session 1906... On a division being called the speaker or the chairman, as the case may be, gives the order "clear the lobby", and the tellers' doors in both lobbies are locked. After the lapse of two minutes from this direction the speaker or chairman again puts the question, and the ayes and noes respectively declare themselves.

There, sir, is something simple but effective in saving time without interfering in any way with the dignity of this chamber. I have seen nothing undignified in a member standing, being identified by the teller and then by the clerk, and finally the totalization being placed before you.

There is also the question of the working hours of the house. We extended the hours recently, but I see no reason that we should not be sitting longer hours right from the beginning of the session. I know the difficulties of the government and I know the load that rests on the Prime Minister's shoulders is very great. But in the British House of Commons the prime minister does not come into the house every day. When questions are asked he is there for the questions asked of him. He answers those questions and he leaves. There is no reason today that a man occupying the position of prime minister—except when there is a controversial matter before the house—should be here and be required to stay throughout the period of orders of the day.

There is a change that could be made by altering the present system for questions. In the British house the government is never taken by surprise. The questions appear in numbered form on the order paper, and when it comes to No. 40 the questions to the Prime Minister appear. The only oral questions are the supplementary ones. I think our whole question period and the manner or carrying it on should be considered in detail and some recommendation made.

Then there is the organization of business. How often I remember hearing the Secretary of State speaking about organization, with the knowledge he gained from being in the gallery as secretary to a prime minister, not as the grey eminence but as an eminence behind the prime minister. He used to ask, "Why don't you organize? What is wrong here?" He said to us, "Why don't you get along with the business?" He is not saying that any more, because he is the organizer and has found that the difficulties with the rules make it impossible for him to proceed with that sense of direction and certainty, qualities that were his when in opposition. I have often thought that the orderly dispatch of business would be more effective if a matter was brought before the house and proceeded with until concluded. If that rule were in effect, it would have played havoc with the pensions scheme; it would have played havoc with the Canada development plan. Both these measures seem to have become covered with weeds, weeds of uncertainty.

I mentioned the question of the estimates, in passing. I think that one of our responsibilities is to carefully examine and scrutinize the estimates. That is not done today; the important estimates are not brought in until near the end of the session. There is the Department of Agriculture. That is a very important department. All of us are looking forward with anticipation to hearing the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) let us in on the secrets of his department. He has been denied that opportunity. And so I could go on. This and other important departments have not been touched. In connection with the question of estimates, I think we have possibly gone too far in the matter of debating the individual items. If the estimates of the Department of Agriculture were called and hon. members could say they wanted to deal with this, that or the other phase of those estimates, I think we would save a great deal of time. In the United Kingdom their debates on the estimates are effective, but they are not concerned with the individual item, excepting in so far as it is a matter of particular attention.

Many of the estimates, those which concern non-contentious departments, could be sent to a committee for study. We have found how this system operates in fields that are non-controversial. I read criticism in the press with regard to obstruction. That has always been charged. When we sat on the other side of the chamber we contended—and at the moment I am being far from partisan—that we were being obstructed. Today those occupying the government benches say the same thing. But, sir, is it obstruction to stand firmly against something that you believe to be wrong? If it had not been for the stand of this opposition would the 30 per cent securities tax not have been continued? We saw it was wrong, and we said so. If it had not been for the opposition, would there not be today an 11 per cent sales tax on building materials and production machinery? If there had not been an opposition would the old age pensioners be getting the $10 extra at this time that was promised them? The government always contend that any argument against their policies represents obstruction.

I look at the order paper. Mention was made of this matter today by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I ask hon. members to look at this order paper. What are we obstructing? What is the government's program? Where is it? Well, there are 27 items here. There are only one or two measures on this order paper that require early attention. The first item on the order paper is the surcharge measure. Then there is the bill to amend the Northwest Territories Act, and the bill respecting the Nunassiaq territory. There is the measure to repeal the Newfoundland Savings Bank Act; that is No. 4. The fifth item concerns public harbours in Ontario; the sixth concerns the Bankruptcy Act; the seventh has to do with the Income Tax Act. We are all paying this income tax, but the bill has not yet been passed.

Then there is the bill to amend the National Harbours Board Act, and that concerning the Carriage by Air Act. There are eight items in a row that, with the exception of the income tax measure, are not by any stretch of the imagination matters that are part and parcel of the government's plan. Next is the Department of Agriculture, the division into east and west. When we watch the Minister of Agriculture in action we wonder why they want to divide him up. Then there is the measure with respect to the Canadian National Railway Company; then the measure to further Canadian participation in the development of industries and undertakings in Canada and development of our resources and industries. This measure is also concerned with the setting up of the Canada Development Corporation. That seems to be one of those things that was thought of, written of and now, when it is to be brought to the House of Commons, this troubled government finds it will have to be changed.

The measure to amend the National Housing Act is of some importance. Then there is the resolution concerning the setting up of a joint committee to inquire into the question of consumer credit. There is the matter concerning the setting up of the committee on railways, air lines and shipping. Mr. Speaker, that is No. 15. No. 16 is the measure to establish the Canada pension plan, which was born in hope and died in despair. They failed to obtain the agreement of the provinces and it now seems to belong to the ages.

One could go through the remainder of the items on the order paper. There is the measure to amend the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act in order that the authority may borrow additional money. Nobody is going to discuss that item at length. There is also the resolution in regard to grants to be made from the railway grade crossing fund. There is the measure to pay a salary not exceeding $400 a year to a surrogate judge in admiralty. These are not important matters. There is one exception: The measure in respect of the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act is important. There are only four pieces of legislation in that whole list which are of importance, and if they were brought before the house I am sure there would be general agreement in support of those principles.

The organization of the house is what is necessary, as the hon. gentleman has said on so many occasions. I read in the press about the obstructive tactics of parliament. I mentioned the other day something that I hope hon. members will take the trouble to look into. I refer to the debates in the Canadian House of Commons in 1912 and 1913. I would ask hon. members to first read what Sir Robert Borden said in his memoirs at pages 411 to 420. The debate began on January 14. They apparently went on day and night and the debate dragged on until February 27, when a motion was made that the bill be not proceeded with until after redistribution. Read what Sir Robert Borden writes. These were the great days, remember; the days of Borden and Laurier, when parliament was so effective. What happened?

Sir Robert goes on to say:

> —at midnight Sir Wilfrid asked for adjournment and I asked for progress. At one a.m. I again asked progress and he asked adjournment. At two a.m. he moved a dilatory amendment. At 3.45 a.m., I went home leaving the opposing forces in line of battle; and I returned at 9.45 a.m.

Those were the great days of parliament. Today, we are criticized for not being in the house. Well, in those days the debate went on night and day until Saturday, March 8, at two o'clock in the morning.

Then, Sir Robert says this:

> Members on each side were divided into three relays or shifts and were on duty for eight hours at a time. We had to adopt unusual precautions because we did not know at what hour the opposition might spring division and have a majority concealed and available.

Sometimes when I look over at my hon. friends opposite, I watch the Secretary of State as he goes through the counting process. Sometimes when he comes over to this side of the house I suspect that he is looking around to see whether or not the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) and those associated with him are still here.

I return to what Sir Robert has to say:

On Monday March 10 I held caucus—

On Friday, March 14, and again on the following day the debate became so violent as to occasion apprehension of personal conflict.

I am just reading the account of one debate. Those were the days when the debate was so bitter that there was danger of violent personal conflict. Then, he said:

After two hours' sleep, I had returned to the house on Friday afternoon. As midnight approached the Speaker twice had to take the chair amid scenes of great disorder.

The point I am making is this: People talk about obstruction now, but there was no criticism in those days when strong men took strong action. Finally, he says that things quietened down after he spoke briefly in French. I am sure if the right hon. Prime Minister or I ever tried that we would not have the same soporific effect. I continue to quote:

Considering in retrospect these weeks, the most strenuous and remarkable that have ever occurred in Canadian parliamentary history, I am satisfied that it was a mistake to carry out our tactics during the second week—

During that week the nerves of members on both sides were so frayed by excitement, strain and exhaustion that they lost in great measure their usual self-control.

This was parliament in the great days of Canadian parliamentary history. Then, he says that he went over to Sir Wilfrid, who was very angry, and Sir Wilfrid stated that he would give consideration to his request. Later on, Sir Wilfrid told him he was not prepared to make any arrangements. Sir Robert says:

I became greatly exhausted by the intense strain of the long debate, the night hours and the tumultuous scenes—

As was anticipated, Sir Wilfrid became violently enraged and his rage was shared by all his followers who made loud demonstrations.

Sir, when there are issues that divide us there must be nothing to restrict the freedom of debate. Furthermore, and this is as true today as it was when it was stated by Bagehot, the lack of great issues means the multiplicity of parties. In other words, when we have a great issue on which to fight we tend to coalesce. In those days to which I have been referring, this parliament stood out in its greatness and in some of the tumultuous scenes that are sometimes seen today.

I hope, sir, that we will be able to bring about changes in the rules. The failure of parliament to discharge its duty leads to contempt of parliament and parliamentarians. Without prestige you cannot discharge your responsibility. In those days, if any person were to flout parliament he was brought before the bar. In 1906, 1911 and 1912 the supreme court of parliament punished those who treated it with contempt and refused to follow the supreme laws that it had passed. The great danger in making too many changes in the rules is that this brings about a condition of affairs whereby the cabinet becomes even more powerful than it has been. The trend has been in the last 35 or 40 years for the cabinet to become all-powerful.

In the United Kingdom Lord Home assumed the prime ministership the other day and was the 45th prime minister since Walpole. However, the changes that have taken place since the last five prime ministers have held office have completely altered parliament. More and more the private member of parliament is of less and less importance. More and more the prime minister and the cabinet become all powerful. It is for this reason, as private members of parliament, we have to guard against too great changes in the rules. If there are too great changes, we may very well deprive the private member of rights of which he ought not to divest himself.

What we want to assure in parliament, as I see it, is that in debate we will provide the people with the information and facts. Only when the people know the facts can parliament properly operate. No matter what is said in parliament, unless it is given publicity either in the press, T.V. or radio, it is ineffective. The strength of the British parliament has been that the views of both sides, government and opposition, have received attention in the press. In other words, in order to stimulate interest and to maintain parliament, there must be the widest dissemination of news. I picked up a copy of the London Times when I was in my office and noticed something which I think is important. This is a July issue when parliament was sitting. This is the way parliament and its activities are described in the British press. There is a reference to the house of lords; then, the questions in the house of commons. Over here is the back bench and miscellany; "Macmillan brings M.P.s news from Moscow." There is almost three quarters of a page dealing with each and every member who participated in debate, thus enabling the people to have the facts. These are the elements that make for a strong parliament and give members a desire to bring up the things that they have in mind.

The important things are the ability to co-operate amongst ourselves; the ability to co-operate with the government on the things in which we all agree and to disagree strongly when we do disagree. Above all, the people as a whole should be provided with information as to what is happening in the house. The people should be given the story of parliament as it is. There is nothing more distressing to a new member of parliament, or even a backbench member who has spent time preparing a speech, than to find that, having worked on it for days and having made a study of the subject, he does not get any reference in the press. On the other hand, if the same member were to use language which was unparliamentary he would then be assured of publicity.

What I have said this afternoon has simply been a desire to indicate that we of the opposition, and I as Leader of the Opposition, want to co-operate to the fullest extent possible with the government and leaders of the other parties in bringing about in this house rules that will make parliament more effective than it has ever been before.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the members of the New Democratic party have already indicated their willingness to pass this motion setting up the parliamentary committee, either without any debate at all or with a restricted debate. We believe that the main discussion should take place in the committee and that we should get the matter to the committee just as quickly as possible. Therefore, unless the debate is an extended one we certainly will not be doing anything which will protract discussion on this motion.

However, I want to make a few observations. The New Democratic party believes that far reaching changes are necessary in parliament's methods of conducting the business affairs of this country. The reputation and functioning of parliament are in doubt. We ought to be frank and face the fact that there is growing criticism of parliament, some of it unjustified but most of it deserved. Parliamentary democracy is on trial today, and hardly a month goes by but that we read of some country in which democratic parliamentary institutions have been swept aside and replaced by a dictatorship of one form or another. If parliament is to survive as an institution it must be able to adapt itself to the pace and complexities of this modern age.

There is no doubt about the need for streamlining parliamentary procedures. There are more decisions to be made today and there is less time in which to make them. Communications have so improved in our modern society that the public is better able to assess what parliament is doing and whether or not it is doing an effective job. The public are demanding more efficiency in the conduct of business and they are asking for speedier processes in the reaching of decisions. It is true that parliament is a forum for the discussion of public affairs, but we should not lose sight of the fact that it is also a workshop where the country's housekeeping business is done.

The point we want to stress, a point which we hope the committee will keep in mind, is that this question which we are referring to them is not something for experts alone. In the past we have tended to look upon parliamentary procedure as the sole prerogative of insiders who are steeped in legal precedents and historical practices. We believe we have to bring this whole subject out into the arena of public debate and take a fresh look at the role of parliament. The mere reshuffling of the rules is not enough; the role and function of parliament itself needs to be examined. I hope that when the committee is set up it will call witnesses, bring in some of the professors of political science across Canada and people who have made a study of parliamentary government, so that it can take a broad look at this question and not merely spend its time tinkering with a few of the rules.

I am sorely tempted, Mr. Speaker, as must be every other hon. member who speaks in this debate, to suggest changes which the house ought to make in its procedures, such as sending more departmental estimates to committees, appointing a permanent speaker, a daily roll call of members, a reorganization of the question period, the elimination of the resolution stage in introducing bills, and empowering committees to sit between sessions of parliament. All of these are things one might like to discuss and elaborate. But that is not the purpose of this debate; it is the function of the committee to look at matters such as that, and to discuss them.

There is one thing the committee might consider, and it is that one or two of these more self-evident changes could be submitted back to the house in an interim report, on which the house could act fairly soon, the broader question being left to the committee to report on in its final report. The purpose of this debate, as I see it, should be to state guide lines for the committee, not to start doing their work for them. I think we should be suggesting to the committee the need for a reorganization and a re-examination of parliament's basic functions in an age of speed, in such a way that parliament can best serve the needs of a complex and industrial interdependent society.

It seems to me that if we are going to have this re-examination of parliament's basic role in our democracy, there are two factors we should keep in mind. The first factor is that there is today a greater complexity in the conduct of public affairs. Government now touches people's lives at more points, and government decisions are of greater concern to the average citizen than they were 50 or 75 years ago. Because parliament is not geared to deal with this complex interdependent society, the tendency has been to vest more and more power in the hands of the cabinet, and especially in the hands of the prime minister. Consequently, there is a real danger that parliament will become a mere rubber stamp the function of which will be to debate cabinet decisions, with no role whatsoever in the decision making process itself. I think this is the reason why so many members become frustrated and impatient. I think the average private member wants a role which is more meaningful than merely pounding his desk for the Prime Minister or the Leader of the Opposition when they engage in verbal fireworks.

Not only must we look at the role of parliament in this complex society, but I hope the committee will give some thought to evolving an effective role for the private member both on the government side and on the opposition side. As I see it the opposition is not elected just to oppose; that to me is an invalid proposition. I think opposition members have a responsibility to scrutinize all public expenditure, to offer alternative proposals and to put forward new ideas for consideration by the government. To do this, they must have information and they must have access to vital material through appropriate parliamentary committees. If they do not get this information, the opposition has no function other than one of tawdry deviousness or petulant needling combined with shrill partisanship, which tends to emphasize points of difference rather than areas of agreement. Secrecy always leads to mistrust. The best way to remove suspicion is to give the private member the right to be informed.

I think government members need to have a more effective role to play. They should not be looked upon just as a voting bloc to approve cabinet decisions and force them through the house. We need to devise methods by which members on the government side have a part to play in the decision-making process itself. In this as in every parliament, a great deal of talent is going to waste, particularly on the government side, because opposition members can, of course, use their time asking questions and doing a great many other things. I think we need to devise a parliamentary system which would loosen the reins of cabinet control and give private members a more effective part to play. This will not be done by merely changing a few rules in the rule book. We need a new concept of the role of the private member in a democratic institution.

Having said this, I agree readily that in the final analysis the successful operation of parliament must depend on the sense of responsibility which is exercised by individual members. No amount of alteration of the rules will improve the situation unless we have a government and an opposition which are determined to make parliament an effective instrument. If we have a government which is indecisive or autocratic, on the one hand, or an opposition that is obstructive and irresponsible on the other, then certainly parliament will lose the respect of the public. The final appeal to all of us must be to put parliament before party and to put democracy before partisanship.

The house is giving to this committee a heavy responsibility at a time when democracy is undergoing careful scrutiny and examination. As far as we in the New Democratic party are concerned we assure its members of our co-operation as they seek to make parliament a more effective instrument of the people's will.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): May I say on behalf of the Social Credit party that we readily lend our support to the motion to set up this committee. We think it should come into being with a minimum of debate or, if possible, without any further debate, because I believe it is the responsibility of the committee to make the recommendations which all agree are so urgently needed.

The events in parliament this session, even those of today and last night, as well as of the last few days, show clearly enough how greatly a complete overhaul of procedure is needed. In the wisdom of hindsight, I sometimes wish the Glassco commission had been asked to take a look, even if in confidence, at the workings of this body of which we are all members. There is much criticism today throughout Canada regarding the functioning of parliament. Some of us may say it is not justified. Some of us might say the press has overemphasized certain aspects. But I believe there is no way whatsoever in which we can justify some of the things which take place in this house. I was shocked when I picked up a copy of the Ottawa Citizen of October 8 and read that 13-year-olds who had visited this house were ashamed of the antics in the Commons and had stated the reasons for their opinion. At about the same time Toronto newspapers carried a condensation of editorials which had appeared across Canada on this subject. Invariably these editorials called attention to examples of the gross inadequacy and inefficiency of our operations here. This is the image of parliament that is being put before the people. Certainly, people living in a democratic society such as we have in Canada ought to have much more reason to take pride in the institution of parliament.

The Prime Minister mentioned this afternoon that there might be some things with regard to which we could take immediate action, if agreement could be reached among the various groups in the house pending the report of the committee. I think that is a positive suggestion and we would be happy to co-operate in any possible way in which this could be done. The Leader of the Opposition spoke about the preservation of freedom as it relates to the basic rules of parliamentary procedure. I suggest that a few changes which would help parliament to function more effectively will not destroy the freedom which, we all agree, centres on a democratic House of Commons such as this is. On the contrary, they will strengthen it. We must not deceive ourselves by allowing ourselves to become encrusted with the attitude which develops through spending long hours in this building, forgetting what the people outside are thinking.

It seems to me that much of what goes on here is done with a desire to play to the galleries, in the hope that someone will get a headline, instead of working toward the objective, which should be our responsibility, of getting the work done which we have been sent here to do. It is therefore imperative that we arrive at some basic reforms in our procedure. I agree with the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) that it is not just a few alterations to the rules which are needed, but a complete overhaul in order to adjust the functioning of this house to the times in which we live. The improvement in communications alone makes the situation today entirely different from the situation which existed in the days when many of these rules and regulations under which we now operate were formulated.

One of the dangers we face is that the bigger and bigger schemes which the government is continually introducing cannot be adequately supervised, because the supervisory machinery of parliament is becoming so overloaded that it is breaking down. That is one good argument in favour of a private enterprise society. We should all keep this consideration in mind as new plans are introduced for still more far reaching activities on the part of the federal government.

We, as a house, now cost the country more money than we did twelve months ago. The cost of our wasting time is correspondingly higher. Therefore we have the added responsibility to make sure that we do provide at least some measure of efficiency. The rules of procedure in this house have often been compared with the rules of driving. Let us remember it is not simply good rules that are necessary but good drivers. In our case it is good parliamentarians. Everyone notices the bad driver, just as they do the politician who makes the most noise. The good driver and the good parliamentarian, I believe, is usually the man who gets on with the job without attracting too much attention or causing annoyance to his fellows. In this regard it is important that we remember the human element. We must also remember that it is the welfare of our own citizens and not the political parties to which we belong that we are paid to represent in the House of Commons.

I am not as experienced with the functionings of parliament as many members of the house are, but it has been my privilege to visit, observe and study the functioning of democratic parliaments in many different countries. It has even been my privilege to sit on committees that have been responsible for the setting up of parliaments initially in some countries where parliaments in the democratic sense of the word had not been known before.

Just recently I have been to New Zealand and Australia and I should like to share with the house some of the things I observed there, in order to show that other legislative houses pledged to the same freedom and the same type of democratic, parliamentary government that we are, have met some of these problems ahead of us, and as a result are much more effective and efficient in what they are doing.

In New Zealand, for example, there are no Monday sittings at all. There are 23 hours of sittings a week extending between Tuesday afternoon and Friday afternoon. In New Zealand the question period is limited to 30 minutes and unanswered questions have precedence the following day. An urgent question for oral answer must be submitted in writing to the minister concerned and to the Speaker, and it is in the Speaker's discretion whether he allows it to be asked. The last 30 minutes of each sitting day are taken up with a debate on the adjournment with speeches limited to five minutes in order that half a dozen speakers may have an opportunity to participate in winding up the debate. The normal length of speeches allowed to any individual member is 20 minutes. Division bells are rung for only three minutes. Only three speeches are allowed to a member in committee, the lengths of time of those speeches being 10 minutes, 5 minutes and 5 minutes. Except immediately following the budget, the government has the right to go into committee of supply without a debate. These are a few points that were very interesting to me as I watched the New Zealand house functioning.

In Australia the situation is a little different, but they also have solved many of their problems long before we have. Because of distances in Australia being comparable to ours, their situation may be somewhat more applicable. In Australia the problem about which we have been concerned here for the last several weeks, regarding the seating arrangements in the house and what constitutes a party, would never have arisen because they have a few simple regulations that spell out, a, b, and c, what constitutes a party and what constitutes the order of precedence in the house. There would have been no argument at all.

In Australia I was impressed that the house there sits only from Tuesday morning until Friday noon. The objective is to put the member of parliament back in direct contact with his constituents as much as possible. Their house only sits three weeks out of every four. You may say that this does not give them much time to get their work on legislation done, but their hours of sitting and their rules are such that I believe they get as much done in three and a half days a week and three weeks per month, as we do.

This arrangement permits cabinet ministers to catch up on the administration of their departments. It permits the government to plan its policies. These are the reasons as they were explained to me. It permits cabinet ministers to visit the country and to keep in touch with their own administration. It permits the members of parliament to do their work at the constituency level. Most of all, it permits the members of parliament and senators to find out what public opinion is and what their own constituents are expecting them to do. Members are allowed travel and telephone connection back and forth with their constituencies. Furthermore, their rules place the member's main responsibility to his constituency, and the government supplies a constituency office for every member. That is where the member's permanent secretary is.

I was interested to hear the remarks of the leader of the official opposition with regard to benches. Neither the New Zealand nor the Australian parliaments have desks like we have. They are debating forums and because of that I think they are much more realistically effective. I had originally disagreed with this idea until I actually watched these two parliaments functioning with no desks, in the same way as does the mother of parliaments. Having had some experience in this house I became convinced that this was a good idea.

Those are some of the ways in which these countries have met these problems. Australia has a controlled question hour and their regulations are quite similar to those in New Zealand. In addition, they have a permanent voters' list and as a result every person, whether he happens to be in hospital or in the foreign service in some other part of the world or in some other part of the country at election time, is able to vote because the annual voters' list is prepared and every voter's name is on the roll. This is a little outside the function of this committee, but it is an interesting point.

In an attempt to finish my remarks quickly, may I simply say that I think this committee has a great and urgent responsibility and that the members of the committee have an opportunity to perform a real service not only to this house but to their country. I might close with a few suggestions that I think are important, not that I think we should be telling the committee what to do but only by way of reviewing some of the things that are being talked about and which have been brought to our attention in the discussions we have had in the last several years. It is just about six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, but I will only take two or three minutes to complete my remarks if I may have that privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Thompson: Thank you very much. I think that our question periods should be limited and the rules permitting oral questions and oral answers should be more clearly defined. This period is one of the most fruitful of the day, but at present there is a great deal of unnecessary time consumed.

We believe that a time limit should be imposed on certain types of debates. The most glaring example is the unlimited time allowed for debate on the motion for interim supply. During the first session of the twenty fifth parliament the Liberals, then in opposition, abused the privilege just as much as the Conservatives in opposition are abusing it today. In fact—

An hon. Member: Withdraw that remark.

Mr. Thompson: —I recall that on one motion for interim supply the Liberals took seven days when the Conservatives were in office.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is going to insult one of the parties, in a debate which has been kept on a high level, we will have to call it six o'clock.

Mr. Thompson: I am not insulting anybody.

Mr. Churchill: I was prepared to go on for another half hour or hour to finish, but we are not going to sit here and listen to insults from a fairly junior member of the House of Commons.

Mr. Thompson: I am not insulting anybody—

Mr. Nowlan: Six o'clock.

Mr. Thompson: —and if the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre thinks I am, his conscience must be very tender.

Mr. Nowlan: By the time you have been here for a year or two more you will know more about it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I understood that a few minutes ago there was unanimous consent to giving the hon. gentleman three or four minutes more, and I hope we are not going to spoil this debate by withdrawing the consent already given. I believe I have an indication that there will probably be only one other speaker who will only be two or three minutes. I think the whole house would feel better if we could get this thing through tonight.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, what I was attempting to say was not to insult anybody but rather to show that the fault exists in all parts of the house and it is time we put away some of the party differences and party lines that prevent us from functioning more effectively as a parliament. After all, each one of the 265 members of the house has his or her responsibility, and is involved.

I think what we should do is have a vote on interim supply the same day as it is introduced. Likewise, there are repetitious debates on government business that should be avoided. A full scale debate in the resolution stage, and a further wide open debate when a bill is introduced, takes up unnecessary time and is very repetitious.

The period allowed an individual member to speak in debate could likewise be reduced, but very careful attention should be paid to private members' bills. The rights of private members must not only be safeguarded but extended. This applies to a greater use of committees and also to private members' bills. In a modern parliament the backbencher can no longer be relegated to the role of a non-essential appendage.

Another aspect which should be carefully considered is the challenging of the Speaker's decision by an individual member. What we find here is that the right of challenging the Speaker's decision has become a tool for political manoeuvering instead of being the privilege it should be. It would be well for the committee to consider this aspect, particularly in view of the instances which have occurred in the last few weeks, when we have seen misrepresentation to the public, with the obscuring of the real issues originally involved in challenging the Speaker's decision.

During the last two parliaments there has come a greater responsibility upon the opposition in assisting the party with the largest majority, that is the government, to govern. I agree with the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) that it is our responsibility in the opposition not just to oppose but to assist the government to govern. Co-operation in the house is not in any way a one-way street.

Some solutions will be very difficult to agree upon, but I trust this committee will at least be able to report on some of the glaring faults in our procedure where unanimity can be achieved. The nation looks expectantly to us to make an honest attempt to correct many of our weaknesses and move forward with the business that we were elected to do. It is our conviction and determination in this party to lend the greatest degree of co-operation we can towards that end.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to make several remarks concerning the appointment of a committee on parliamentary procedure but, as it is already after six o'clock and in view of the fact that we shall have the opportunity to express our opinions and to advance arguments in committee, I think that it would be inappropriate to prolong the debate at this time.

We welcome the appointment of this committee on procedure because the procedure in this house has been inadequate for a long time since it does not cover all the events which may occur here. For instance, our group—maybe more than any other—has felt during the last fortnight the effects of that procedure, when events which had not been foreseen, did occur.

Therefore, we hope that, when the committee on procedure meets, it will move the adoption of an order to prevent, from now on, debates as long and as useless as those we have witnessed, when a decision could have been reached much more quickly.

We will support, on this side of the house, the setting up of this committee on procedure in order to give new strength to parliament and do a better job.

[Text]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to begin a lengthy speech but I hope to make some observations because, of all hon. members in the house, I think I am unique in having occupied positions on both sides of the house and, in addition the chair that Your Honour now occupies.

I do not think this is the time to enter into a litany of those matters where the rules might be amended. I would simply ask, without elaborating at any length, that if rules are to guard against irresponsibility, and we are assured we need more rules, have we therefore become more irresponsible? I do not think so.

I think the rules as they exist could lead to more effective business in the house if they were observed, and the question of observance of the rules is first of all a matter of knowledge of the rules. Here we can all say mea culpa, and some of us can say mea maxima culpa, but then comes the further point, and that is the sense of responsibility in the observance of those rules.

As I have said many times previously, the role of the Chair requires the active co-operation of the house, and if hon. members observed the rules of relevancy I think the problem the Prime Minister indicated about elimination of the resolution stage prior to a bill could be solved. If we were truly relevant we would not have this repetition of debate, because the resolution stage offers the opportunity to put forward alternatives. If we were truly relevant then on second stage we would stay within the confines of the bill under discussion.

I think the work of the committee will be very interesting, and I hope to be a member of that committee as there are many things on which I have very decided opinions to express.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: I have one question with regard to the business for tomorrow. Would the house leader let us know what estimates will be taken up tomorrow night, and also on Friday?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, sir. Tomorrow night we would like to take up the Department of Fisheries and, if it should be concluded before the end of the evening, either the Department of Public Works or the Department of Transport would be available as a stopgap. I will let hon. members know later which one it will be because I have not consulted my colleagues. On Friday evening we will take up the Department of Justice, and the same provision for a second possible department would apply.

I take it, sir, that we could consider there is an order of the house that with the income tax measure, whatever stage we have reached at five o'clock tomorrow would be adjourned until Friday, so that we would quite definitely know we were going into supply at seven o'clock.

It being ten minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, October 24, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF CANCELLATION OF FRIGATE PROGRAM

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in my presentation to the special committee on defence on June 27 last I stated that current procurement programs were being reassessed to determine if they would interfere with the exercise of future policy options. Included in the projects under review was the general purposes frigate program.

This project was approved early last year at an estimated cost of $264 million. This was only the cost of the ships themselves. A more detailed analysis of the cost of these eight ships, including support equipment for them, has resulted in a current estimate of $452 million. Even this figure would not likely be final, however, as some of the weapons systems proposed are still in the developmental stage. Certainly this means that some modifications would be inevitable.

While the cost of these ships has been a very important consideration, our review has taken into account other aspects. These ships were designed to provide in one type of ship an anti-submarine capability, an air defence capability for the fleet and the capacity to carry and land a limited number of troops and light equipment. Necessarily, in order to design all of these capabilities into one ship only modestly larger than the latest anti-submarine escort, it has been necessary to limit the capabilities in each field from those that could be achieved by more specialized ships.

As an anti-submarine ship the general purpose frigate would not be as effective as the latest R.C.N. anti-submarine escorts capable of operating and carrying the HSS-2 heavy helicopter. This helicopter can carry both a dunking sonar and a weapons delivery system. The general purpose frigate would carry a light helicopter which would have a weapons delivery capability only.

One of the central and most costly features of the general purpose frigate system is the provision of air protection for the fleet. This capability involves an estimated expenditure of $100 million for the missiles and associated equipment. The rate of technological change in these missile systems is considerable, and the next few years may see improved systems available at less cost measured in relation to effectiveness.

The general purpose frigate would have only a small troop carrying capacity. If it should be decided that troop carrying capacity is a requirement of the Royal Canadian Navy, it could be provided by more economical and effective means.

The immediate effect of this program in respect of employment in the shipbuilding industry is not great, because the first keel was not scheduled to be laid down until December of next year.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, the government has decided not to proceed with the general purpose frigate program. I would hasten to add, Mr. Speaker, that this does not mean the end of our ship requirements for the Royal Canadian Navy. On the contrary, we are carrying out studies to determine both the roles and tasks which will be assigned to our navy in the future and the most economical way of implementing them. In the anti-submarine warfare field, for example, we are studying the relative effectiveness of all known systems, including aircraft, surface ships and submarines. Our review is concurrent with the NATO review authorized at the ministerial meeting held in Ottawa in May.

In the meantime, we are aware of the necessity of keeping alive the skills which have been developed in our shipbuilding industry. We are considering accelerating the major reconversion program of the Restigouche class ships, after sea trials of operating heavy helicopters from the Assiniboine, one of the St. Laurent class, have been satisfactorily completed this winter. In addition my colleague the Minister of Transport has an announcement of importance to the shipbuilding industry.

On our part, we will complete our long range plans as quickly as possible in order that the placing of orders for future requirements will not be subject to undue delay, and in order that the Royal Canadian Navy will have the best equipment we can provide to carry out its tasks effectively.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, we have listened with interest to the statement of the Minister of National Defence, and we are very pleased that he has made the statement in the house instead of letting it out through other channels, as has happened during the last several weeks.

We are rather disappointed that this very important matter could not have been discussed by the minister with the committee on defence which was set up for the purpose of considering policy, although the minister did say that we could discuss and talk about policy after he had decided it. With that committee sitting twice on Tuesday and twice on Thursday, it is astonishing that the minister could not have appeared before that committee today and given us this information. Perhaps he will appear this afternoon and give an explanation to the committee.

What the minister has decided and announced constitutes a crippling setback to the navy program. I do not know what effect this is likely to have on the Canadian navy and on its morale. Certainly the impact on the shipbuilding industry of this country will be very severe indeed, because plans had been made for the construction of frigates and the whole question of maintaining the shipbuilding industry is just as vital as providing the ships; it is part of the war effort which a nation has to put forward if it is to be effective.

I wonder what the minister will have to say now in this connection, on the cancellation of this tremendous program, when he recalls to his mind some of the things he said in this house when the aircraft program was altered a few years ago in connection with the Arrow. The hon. gentleman was at great pains to express himself then at considerable length. The committee on defence has now got the truth before it from the former chairman of the chiefs of staff committee.

We shall have to examine in detail the lengthy statement which the minister has made, but I think we can only express regret than an immediate alternative for the Royal Canadian Navy has not been presented today.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I do not intend to make any comment on the wisdom or lack of wisdom attaching to the particular decision which has been announced, but I should like to join with the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre in protesting against the way in which this announcement has been made.

The defence committee has been sitting. Ministers have appeared before it. This very matter was under discussion. Yet the Minister of Defence completely ignores the existence of the committee in his announcement today. It seems to me that if the minister had said something about this decision to the committee he would at least have been extending some courtesy to its members.

It seems to me that the hon. gentleman's approach is part of the wrong way of doing these things. What has happened, apparently is that a piecemeal decision has been made with respect to one aspect of Canada's defence policy. It seems to me announcements of this sort ought not to be made until the over-all scene had been reviewed—and I understood the defence committee was set up to carry out such a review—so that we might determine whether or not a particular program would fit in with over-all strategy. The advantage of this approach would be that alternative programs could be discussed.

We believe greater consideration should have been given to the over-all effects of an announcement such as this. We should have been told what the government had in mind to take the place of the former program and what arrangements, if any, were being made to reabsorb the workers who are likely to be turned out of work as a result of the dropping of this program.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): We also are perturbed by a number of factors relating to the announcement which has just been made by the Minister of National Defence. One very important point to which reference has been made is the relationship of the defence committee to the whole program of national defence and defence policy. During the past weeks there have been a number of occasions when announcements have been made or reports have been circulated as to changes in defence policy and plans having regard to matters that have been discussed in the committee and about which we received no answer there. Yet we find that in a few days or a short time later public announcements are made regarding these issues.

Along with other members I protest against the way in which this whole matter has been handled by the Minister of National Defence. It seems to me that the committee is being pushed aside and pushed around. It is given some very minor issues to consider, and decisions are made on major issues before the committee can bring in its recommendations.

We have had the assurance this afternoon that the employment factor is being given very serious consideration. I would urge that no interruption in employment be permitted if this change is effected. We recognize that there will be reviews of all these programs from time to time, but we must see to it that the labours and skills of those who are engaged in these programs are used to the maximum advantage not only of themselves but of Canada as a whole.

I believe reference was made to an announcement to be made by the Minister of Transport perhaps tying in with this matter, and we will be interested to hear what he has to say in this respect.

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, from the statement made by the Minister of National Defence, it appears that decisions are made by the department, by the minister himself, without the knowledge of the national defence committee. That committee is made up of members representing the various parties sitting in the house. If the minister ignores the national defence committee, what could justify the setting up of that committee?

The purpose of that committee is to inform the minister and help him make decisions. The minister should not come here with statements and decisions arrived at without the knowledge of that parliamentary committee which should have its say in those decisions. And particularly, a department as important as the national defence department, which has to make decisions once in a while for the whole of the country, should not act that way.

[Text]

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence to give him the opportunity to reply which he did not have when we were on motions. Would the minister inform the house why he did not refer to the committee on defence for consideration and advice the plan he announced today for torpedoing the Royal Canadian Navy?

If the minister is unable to answer that question I might direct another one to him. Does the minister intend to refer any of these problems to the committee on defence before he makes a decision?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, first of all I will be glad to answer appropriate questions. Second, may I say I deny categorically the allegation which was inserted into the question of the hon. gentleman. May I remind the hon. gentleman and other hon. members that at various times I have volunteered to go before the committee and give evidence at any time the committee so desired. I have learned that the committee does not wish me to interfere in any way with their deliberations or their plans, and being a true parliamentarian I have tried to abide by this wish. I have tried not to interfere in any way. But my offer still stands. If the committee would like to have me appear there again in due course it would, of course, be very easy to arrange.

Mr. Churchill: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. All I am asking is, will the minister answer the question I put to him? Will he refer his plans to the committee for its consideration and advice before he makes a decision?

Mr. Diefenbaker: This was to be a policy committee.

Mr. Hellyer: This question is very similar to one asked some days ago, and the situation has not changed in any respect since that time. If the committee wishes to give advice on any of these matters their advice will be most welcome and will be given very careful consideration.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): A supplementary question for the Minister of National Defence. Will the minister make available at some appropriate time the full story as to the impact that this decision is going to have on the workers in the various shipyards throughout the country who have been counting on this work?

Mr. Hellyer: I would hope, Mr. Speaker, in view of the announcement made today by my colleague, the Minister of Transport, and other plans which the government will implement in due course, that the impact would not be too severe.

Mr. Bell: A supplementary question. Does the minister not realize that an entirely different type of work, which is of an electronic nature, is required in naval shipbuilding from what is required for transport activity?

Mr. Hellyer: I do not wish to carry on a debate at this time, Mr. Speaker, because there will be other opportunities for debate, but we are very much aware of this and as I announced today the major reconversion plans may be accelerated, subject to satisfactory trials this winter with just this point in mind that has been raised by the hon. member.

TRANSPORT

STATEMENT RESPECTING SHIPBUILDING PROGRAM OF DEPARTMENT

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a statement regarding the shipbuilding program of the Department of Transport over the next few years. The department has completed its review of vessel requirements during this period and is proceeding with the implementation of a program for new ship construction which will cost close to $110 million and which will involve the letting of a series of new ship contracts during the years 1963, 1964 and 1965.

Planned new contracts during 1963 are as follows: New weather ship for the Canadian coastguard Pacific ocean station, contract already awarded to Burrards of Vancouver, estimated cost $9 million to $10 million; second new weather ship for the Pacific ocean station, tender call autumn of 1963, estimated cost between $9 million and $10 million; new automobile-truck ferry to operate between Nova Scotia and the east coast of Newfoundland, expected tender call autumn of 1963, estimated cost approximately $14 million; new triple screw icebreaker for the Canadian coastguard for use in Arctic, Atlantic and gulf waters, estimated tender call late 1963, estimated cost $18 million.

Proposed new ship construction contracts for 1964 will be as follows:

New ferry for the Borden-Tormentine service to Prince Edward Island; the estimated tender call is early summer of 1964 and the estimated cost $14 million; new ferry vessel for service between Sydney and Port aux Basques, presently in the planning stage, for which cost estimates are not final but possibly will be between $5 million and $10 million; the estimated tender call is late 1964; four additional vessels for the Canadian coastguard service to replace the old vessels Saurel and Chesterfield, and provide in addition certain smaller tender vessels for use at marine agencies. The new vessels would include two new supply and buoy vessels having icebreaking capacity for eastern Canadian waters, at a total cost of $13 million to $14 million, and two smaller tender vessels, one for the lakehead and one for Saint John, New Brunswick, at a total cost of between one and a half and two million dollars.

It is also expected that a further series of seven marine agency vessels, required by the Canadian coastguard, would be put out to contract in 1965. These vessels, which would be somewhat smaller in size, would involve an expenditure of between $10 million and $15 million.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Naturally, Mr. Speaker, the areas that are going to receive the consideration referred to by the minister will be happy. However, it should be pointed out that this policy is again just a continuation of the policy of the previous government in this regard. We have so many opportunities to congratulate this government for following in the footsteps of the government that they criticized when we were in office.

[Mr. McIlraith.]

Beyond that, I might say this is a mere palliative when compared with the announcement just made by the defence minister. That announcement was contemptuous of parliament and showed the arrogance of this government; because they set up a defence committee and then bypassed that committee so it had no opportunity to discuss the matter which it was set up to discuss.

In so far as the present announcement is concerned, I was interested in the ferry announced for Prince Edward Island. I should like to know what has happened to the causeway.

Mr. McIlraith: The former government did nothing about it for six years.

Mr. Diefenbaker: So far as the ferry is concerned, that is something we had undertaken, but they will have to proceed with the causeway which they undertook, with us, to complete.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): If the announcement made by the Minister of Transport was given in relation to the announcement that had been made a few minutes before by the Minister of National Defence; if it was intended as some consolation for the cancellation of the $450 million frigate program, it will fall far short of an appropriate remedy. In the first place, it will provide less than one third of the amount of employment. Even more to be kept in mind is that many projects which the minister announced are projects which would have been undertaken anyway in the normal course of events. Therefore if the Minister of Transport was supposed to be supplying salve for the wounds inflicted by the Minister of National Defence, it is rather inadequate medication.

I suggest to the Minister of Transport that if the federal government is going to save very large sums of money by discarding the frigate program, it ought to spend this money in the construction of merchant ships. I have never been able to understand why a country which boasts of being the fifth largest trading nation in the world should have an almost non-existent merchant marine. When we consider some very small countries in the world, such as Norway and Sweden, whose ships sail the seven seas, we realize that Canada should be devoting some of this money which has been saved to developing a Canadian merchant navy.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, we are reminded of the saying that we ought to be thankful for small mercies, because it seems that the announcement made by the Minister of Transport falls into that category when we consider it in relationship to the program that has been cancelled. I believe that considerable attention should be given and must be given to the continued expansion of our shipping fleet, our merchant fleet and so on because, as has been pointed out today, we brag about our position as far as world trade is concerned but as far as shipping is concerned we have very little with which to carry on that trade.

I believe that a program of this kind could be related to our defence program, because we were reminded in committee that there will still be need for shipping, for transports and so on, in some eventualities. Therefore, while we appreciate what is being done, we urge an expansion of the program to assist in this way and also to assist in our continued employment program.

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, it sounds strange to hear the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIlraith) announce a decision which will hold back the development of ship building in Canada and entail a decrease of some $300 million in expenditures and that, at a time when the number of unemployed is about to rise substantially.

Mr. Speaker, while the country is facing a very serious economic situation, the government is still making decisions which are directly contrary to pledges made by its supporters not so long ago, that is hardly six months ago.

As the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) just said, the Canadian merchant navy needs help and should be developed, but the government does not seem to realize that.

I therefore draw the attention of the Minister of Transport and of the government to that situation which can be adjusted and which could, in some degree, help restore the balance of the Canadian economy in holding unemployment in check, in creating new jobs and in developing what we can develop ourselves, in our own country.

[Text]

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport arising out of his statement today on the new ship building program. Would the minister inform the house whether favourable consideration will be given to the construction of a second ferry between Nova Scotia and new England, especially in view of the fact that the premier of Nova Scotia said recently that he would make $1½ million available as a contribution to this project?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): A study of this whole project, Mr. Speaker, is being made at the moment, as I think I announced in the house some time ago. The matter is receiving attention.

[Later:]

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I have a question for the Minister of Transport prompted by the statement he made today. In his statement the hon. gentleman mentioned the construction of ships to operate between Newfoundland and Nova Scotia. This is, of course, a continuation of the aggressive policy undertaken by the previous administration. My question to the genial Minister of Transport is this. Whereas the minister specifically spelled out the Newfoundland port from which these vessels would operate he only vaguely mentioned the province of Nova Scotia. Am I to understand that North Sydney, Nova Scotia, is not now to be the mainland terminus, as was decided upon and announced by the previous government?

Mr. McIlraith: I must thank the hon. member for the kindly adjective he used with reference to me; it is quite different from some of the others which have been applied in the last few weeks. The announcement to which he referred spoke of Nova Scotia and the east coast of Newfoundland. I do not know how specific that is, but I can assure him it means Cape Breton.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): The minister mentioned Port aux Basques but he only referred generally to Nova Scotia, not North Sydney which it was previously announced would be the terminus.

Mr. McIlraith: Perhaps the hon. member would look at the statement again. In any case, I may tell him I hope to announce a contract very shortly.

AGRICULTURE

POSITION OF EASTERN FARMERS—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, under standing order 26, I move the adjournment of the house for the purpose of discussing a problem which has been making the headlines these past few days and which is a definite matter of public urgency.

However, before making my motion, I should like to state my reasons for doing so and say a few words about the present financial situation of farmers in eastern Canada.

Mr. Speaker, several reasons prompted me to make that motion today.

Position of Eastern Farmers

First of all last week the Catholic farmers' union submitted to both the federal and provincial governments a report on the present needs and problems of farmers in the province of Quebec and in the other eastern provinces.

At their convention which was held in Sorel during the week end, the delegates of the Catholic farmers' union delivered an ultimatum to the Quebec premier and threatened to stop paying taxes if agricultural problems were not solved.

Much publicity has been given to the situation in the press these past few days. For instance, on October 23, La Presse stated:

For the first time in its history, the province of Quebec is faced with a collective move to act in defiance of fiscal legislation, as the 45,000 members of the catholic farmers' union informed Premier Lesage by telegram today, from their convention, that they refuse to pay land taxes.

And in this morning's Le Devoir we find an item entitled:

"The farmers tell Lesage: Change the land tax or else in six months we shall refuse to pay municipal and school taxes."

La Presse of October 22, also published an item under the following title:

—and with regard to feed grain, they want satisfaction and fair play.

In a brief submitted last Friday to the Minister of Agriculture, the Catholic farmers' union and the federated co-operative of Quebec asked for the establishment of a feed grain agency for eastern Canada.

The Catholic farmers' union adds that the agency's general task would be to get satisfaction and justice for this most interesting, permanent and ever increasing market, which our eastern farming industry represents for western Canada.

In the same edition there was another item entitled:

Alleged refusal of farmers to pay tax.

And, in this morning's Globe and Mail:

Lesage faces tax strike by farmers.

And, again on October 23 La Presse published a report in which farmers were said to have decided to stop paying taxes.

Mr. Speaker, there is another difficult situation in existence which differs from the one mentioned in those news items and commentaries, and it is this. In the province of Quebec crops are decreasing in a proportion of 45 per cent, which results in a very precarious financial and economic situation for the Quebec farmers.

Mr. Speaker, the prices of western feed grain are too high when the farmers of the province of Quebec have to buy some.

The western farmers sell their grain at the moment at a price—

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Langlois) has the right, of course, to ask for the adjournment of the house. According to standing order 26 he is allowed to mention briefly the reasons why he wants that adjournment. But it is my opinion that the hon. member for Megantic is now giving the speech that he would make if the adjournment of the house had been granted. In my opinion, he is not allowed to do so and I suggest that you call him to order.

[Mr. Langlois.]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron), I suggest that the hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Langlois) has the unquestionable right to state his reasons for making his motion.

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, I was coming to my motion. I am aware that this situation has been prevailing for a long time, but at this stage it is deteriorating, and I believe it the duty of the house to discuss the matter and find a solution in order to prevent the hardship and hunger now facing both the province of Quebec and all the farmers of eastern Canada.

Mr. Speaker, here is my motion:

Seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier), I move the adjournment of the house, in accordance with standing order 26, to discuss a definite matter of urgent public importance, that is the necessity for the house to take immediately the necessary steps to help the farmers in eastern Canada before the St. Lawrence seaway is closed to navigation by the ice, which will make it impossible for western feed grain to reach the eastern provinces at a price that would give the farmers advantages they are entitled to.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that the house—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Are there any other members who wish to offer suggestions to the Chair before I rule on whether this motion is in order?

The motion asks for leave to move the adjournment of the house for the purposes of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, and according to the various authorities often cited in this house since the 30th of September 1963, urgency means urgency of debate, and opportunity of course means the opportunity to debate the subject under discussion.

I rely in particular on a decision of Mr. Speaker Michener given on June 27, 1961, which will be found at page 7105 of Hansard for that date, when he said in part:

I accept the proposition that this is an urgent and public important matter to which the Leader of the Opposition draws attention. It is a definite matter of public importance. However, that is not the criterion in determining whether standing order 26 should be applied. The criterion is whether there is an opportunity to debate this matter in an effective way.

Now it seems to me that both on Monday and Tuesday of this week we had a supply motion, and I am informed that again on Monday and Tuesday of next week we will have a supply motion. This matter, although very important and having elements of urgency, nevertheless has—if I may use the expression—been under way for some considerable time, and the member could perhaps have raised it last Monday or Tuesday. I presume the hon. member will also have the opportunity of raising this matter next Monday or Tuesday.

It might perhaps be of interest to the house where I refer to citation 100 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, which gives the essential element or reason for standing order 26 as we know it here. In citation 100 (8), although it refers to the United Kingdom, the principle is the same. It states:

> Standing order 10 of the United Kingdom house, in force since 1882, also provides that a member may propose the adjournment of the house "for the purpose of discussing a matter of urgent public importance". On the 13th of April, 1894 a member asked leave to make that motion to discuss "the neglect of the government to take measures for the relief of agricultural depression during the present session". As forty members rose in support of the motion, debate was allowed, but on its conclusion, the Speaker said: "I do not think that, under the standing order of 1882, a motion on a subject of this kind, having such a very wide scope, was ever contemplated. What I think was contemplated, was an occurrence of some sudden emergency either in home or in foreign affairs. But I do not think it was contemplated—if the house would allow me to state my views—that a question of very wide scope, which would demand legislation to deal with it in any effective manner, should be the subject of discussion on a motion for the adjournment of the house, because, if that was so, we might have repeated motions made by the opposition of the day, not so much in the direction of censuring the government for action which had been taken or not taken, for bringing to notice some grievance demanding instant remedy, as in the direction of wishing to introduce legislation on some particular subject. That is not the purpose of the standing order of 1882, and would, I think, cut at the root of the order".

In view of these authorities and what I have just said, I regret that in my opinion I cannot accept the motion.

Mr. Langlois: Because of the fact that Your Honour mentioned that the matter could be raised on Monday or Tuesday, in view of that reservation I will not appeal the ruling of the Chair but will wait until Monday or Tuesday to discuss it further.

LABOUR RELATIONS

GREAT LAKES—ACTIVITIES OF TRUSTEES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Labour give a report on discussions that have taken place since the trusteeship was set up, and will he be able to give the glad news to the house that Hal Banks has been brought to heel and will now obey the law?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Well, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Banks has been brought to Ottawa, at any rate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Did he come on his own?

Mr. Nowlan: Did he come or was he brought?

Mr. MacEachen: I am glad to report to the house that the trustees held their first meeting last night, and as a result of that meeting they issued an appeal to the members of the S.I.U. to return to work. They have also asked all the presidents of the affected unions to come to Ottawa, where the trustees will have an opportunity to enlist their co-operation in their activities.

I have not had any indication from the trustees as to the results of the conversations they have had with the union presidents, but I am told all the presidents have attended or intend to attend on the trustees.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Since the appointment of the trustee board does the minister consider it proper that the Department of Transport should be giving orders and directions?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Department of Transport did make a request to the ship operators, that is the employers' side of the situation, and did not in any sense trespass upon the responsibilities assigned to the trustees by parliament.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Did not that direction by the Department of Transport ask the shipowners to tell the crews they were to go back to work? Is not that the duty of the trusteeship board?

Mr. MacEachen: I think that on the one hand the trustees, in their position as quasi-union officers, have requested their membership to return to work. In this instance the Department of Transport, as I understand it, is now encouraging the employers to request their employees to return to work.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is pretty little encouragement.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question either to the Minister of Labour or the Minister of Transport in relation to the telegram sent out by the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that getting the men back to work ought to be the function of the union through its trustees, may I ask the Minister of Transport whether he consulted with the trustees before he sent the telegram to the shipping companies?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker. I consulted with the Minister of Labour, but there seems to be a misconstruction put on the telegram by the hon. member, and I am sure this was done inadvertently. The telegram was sent by the Minister of Transport to 28 shipping firms operating ships on the great lakes. Among other things it asked them to "proceed yourself with arrangements to move your ships with your regular crews."

Mr. Knowles: In view of the fact that the minister is reading part of the telegram, perhaps he would read all of it to the house.

Mr. McIlraith: I would be very glad to read all of it. The telegram reads:

> You are aware that government has established trusteeship over maritime unions. Action is now essential to restore movement of Canadian shipping.
>
> It is government's request that you proceed at once to draw this situation to attention of your crews, directing their immediate return to duty, and also proceed yourself with arrangements to move your ships with your regular crews. Assure you that if needed, full protection will be accorded to personnel involved. Please inform me of action you are taking.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): As a supplementary question, would the minister not consider that a directive of that kind to the shipping companies would call for some prior consultation with the trustees before being sent?

Mr. McIlraith: No, Mr. Speaker. The union contracts involved are made between two parties, the unions and the owners.

Mr. Douglas: That is the point.

Mr. McIlraith: I sent the telegram to one of the parties. An announcement had been made by the trustees to the other party that they were calling the men back to work, and the telegram sent by me went out to the ship owners, and the ship owners followed this up in some instances by announcements of their own.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that under the direction of the Minister of Labour trustees have been set up to get the men back to work, does he not feel that the Minister of Transport is interfering with the functions of the board of trustees by directing them through the management of the companies?

[Mr. Knowles.]

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker. I think both activities are consistent with a co-ordinated effort to encourage the crew members to return, who in one instance are in the relationship of union members to the trustees and who in the other are in the relationship of employees to the employers, to whom the Minister of Transport directed his communication.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has the Minister of Labour sought an assurance from the leader of the S.I.U., or has he received an assurance from that individual, that no more members of the S.I.U. will be directed to leave their ships as these ships dock at their destinations as time goes on?

Mr. MacEachen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I sought an assurance from the president of the S.I.U., when he was in full authority of the union, that he would use his influence to have the members return to their ships; I thought that was the first step. In view of the fact that I did not receive any assurance that the men would return to their ships I did not think it worth while to ask him for an assurance to keep men on the ships, because I did not think my request would be any more effective.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): A supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence. A headline in the Ottawa Citizen says "May summon forces to get ships back". Is it the policy of the government to summon forces to get the ships moving on the great lakes at this time?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we have taken the normal precautionary measures one would expect with respect to an emergency which we hope will never arise.

Mr. Woolliams: Another supplementary question to the minister of defence. What are the steps which were taken? Will he disclose them to the house?

Mr. Douglas: May I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the importance of moving grain at this particular time, has the minister taken any steps to get ships to take grain out of Churchill? I am told the last ship left Churchill on Sunday evening and that the port is ice free and that there is grain in the terminal elevators there. If the government, by guaranteeing the insurance, could move this grain it would seem to be a very effective method of dealing with the present situation. I ask the minister, is the government making any effort to move grain out of Churchill?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, the government made all possible efforts to get additional grain out of Churchill. As the hon. member knows and understands well, insurance for ships in that area is no longer available, and it does not seem possible to get any shipping in there at this time because it is too late in the season.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question. Did the government give any consideration to offering to underwrite the insurance if ships would go in at this time?

Mr. McIlraith: No, Mr. Speaker, because there was no indication that we could get any ships to go in at that time. We did make every effort to get more ships through before the deadline for the insurance was reached.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Labour or the Minister of Justice, whichever is the appropriate minister. In view of the reports of violence against a number of Canadian seamen and further threats of violence, what steps are being taken to provide protection for S.I.U. seamen who are continuing to man their ships, and other seamen who may be engaged to serve on ships now without crews due to the walkout of S.I.U. seamen?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think the answer to that question is to be found in the telegram which the Minister of Transport has just read to the house, the latter part of which indicates that full protection will be accorded to personnel involved under those circumstances.

Mr. Thompson: A supplementary question. The minister says full protection will be given, but this situation is very serious and it seems to me there should be some further explanation to the house of what this means. Certainly the lives of men are involved. Not only that, there is the threat which hangs over their probable willingness to co-operate.

Mr. Chevrier: I believe everyone on this side of the house realizes how serious the situation is—

An hon. Member: What about this side?

Mr. Chevrier: And on the other side as well—and understands what is meant by the words included in the telegram sent by the Minister of Transport.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): A supplementary question. May I ask the Minister of Justice whether he is investigating the circumstances concerning the beating of an S.I.U. member aboard a train last Monday night, the man in question having to be taken off the train and put into a hospital at Smiths Falls?

Mr. Chevrier: That matter has been brought to our attention; I have directed the attention of the R.C.M.P. to it, and the matter is now under investigation.

NORRIS COMMISSION—REPORT OF SPECIAL COUNSEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Has the department reached a decision on prosecutions arising out of the Norris report as a result of the study made for the department by Mr. Robinette and Mr. Martineau?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, in answer to that question I might say that as to prosecutions, I can assure the house that this aspect of the matter is being attended to and in no way being lost from view. The steps which are being taken will become apparent in due course, so I think it would be undesirable for me to say any more about the matter at this time.

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST FOR ADMISSION OF EAST GERMAN SAILOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Richard Cashin (St. John's West): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. It has just been drawn to my attention that an East German seaman, one of the crew of an East German freighter in the port of St. John's, who was thwarted in his previous attempt to gain entry to this country, is again on Canadian soil. I wonder whether the minister will consider granting this man temporary entry to the country so this whole matter can be investigated?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, all I can say in answer to this question is that this morning my attention was drawn to a report in the Gazette concerning this incident, and instructions have already been given for an investigation to be made. I might be in a position to report tomorrow.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILES—PLANS TO INCREASE CANADIAN SHARE IN GROWTH

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Industry? Does the minister still intend to bring forward his program to encourage the manufacturing of automobile parts in Canada in spite of the threat of reprisals made the day before yesterday by the secretary of commerce, Mr. Luther Hodges?

[Text]

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Industry might I be permitted to answer the hon. member's question on the minister's behalf. He has every intention of making an announcement in the house tomorrow.

REPORTED INTENTION TO ESTABLISH PEUGEOT PLANT IN ONTARIO

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Perron (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, my question is related to the automotive industry, and I would like to direct it to the Minister of Industry.

Last week the Minister of Industry took as notice a question of mine which had to do with the Peugeot industries.

Could the minister tell the house if his plan pertaining to the automobile industry takes into account the establishment of a Peugeot subsidiary in Ontario, following the preferential treatment which the federal government is said to have offered to that firm if it decided to settle in Ontario rather than in Quebec?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, we have not been contacted by the Peugeot firm with a view to establishing a subsidiary company in Canada for the manufacturing of cars.

[Text]

SUGAR

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO PRICE INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. On October 22 I asked a question to which the minister replied that the price of sugar was determined to a great extent by international conditions over which Canada had no control whatever. Does he have another answer to give in view of the fact that, yesterday, the Montreal confectioners' association stated that the Canadian government should intervene without delay in that matter? They claim that the inquiry on sugar held a few months ago immediately brought about a sharp decrease in the price of sugar.

Could the minister tell us whether there is collusion or not between Canadian dealers and whether he intends to take action?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is aware of the situation, I am sure, but as I said earlier, the price of sugar in Canada depends to a large extent on the international price.

As for the director of combines investigation, he is keeping a sharp eye on the situation. If he thinks that an offence has been committed, he will immediately initiate proceedings against the guilty parties. As far as the representations that the hon. member has just mentioned, I am not aware of any at all.

Mr. Chapdelaine: Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce?

With regard to the increase in the retail price of sugar, could the minister tell us whether he intends to follow the suggestions made in Great Britain, namely that refineries should be subsidized in order to prevent a gradual increase in the retail price?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Quebec East.

[Translation]

Mr. Robert Beaule (Quebec East): The Minister of Justice has just answered my question.

[Later:]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce In view of the lamentable situation which now prevails in the sugar market, would the government support the building of sugar-beet refineries in eastern Canada, especially in the province of Quebec?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This is surely a question for the order paper.

[Later:]

Mr. Chapdelaine: A moment ago I directed a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and it seemed that he did not answer my question because he did not understand the translation. Can he tell me if he intends to grant a subvention to sugar refineries in order to offset the rise in the price of sugar at the retail level so that the consumer will not suffer from this unusual condition in the sugar business?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): As the hon. gentleman probably knows, the government has no authority to pay any such subvention.

POWER

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON NATIONAL GRID

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce?

Can the minister tell us if the government is still considering the possibility of setting up a national power grid and will he have further statements to make soon in this connection?

[Text]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I have nothing to add to what I said when I made my announcement.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—PAYMENT TO SCHOOL CHILDREN OVER 16

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister and ask him if it is the policy of the government to extend family allowances beyond the age of 16 for boys and girls who remain in school.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, that remains the policy of the government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will it be brought up this session?

Mr. Pearson: It will be brought up as soon as it can be arranged.

MONTREAL—REPORTED DEATH FROM FOOD POISONING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The morning paper carries a report of a death in Montreal which has been linked with a certain food product which her department has ordered withdrawn from the stores. The director of the food and drugs administration says that some cans of food may contain a poisonous substance. I am simply asking the minister if she has launched an investigation to see how it was possible for this food to evade the inspection service of the food and drugs administration. If she has launched such an investigation, will she be reporting to parliament on the matter?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): This most unhappy circumstance resulted in my department issuing a warning in Montreal, by radio and by press, in respect of a particular name brand of liver paste. The department does not, contrary to what the hon. gentleman appears to think, inspect every tin; obviously this is impossible. There is a spot check only in respect of a very limited group of products.

I did ask, when this was reported to me, whether a very careful laboratory check had been made, and it had of course been done before the department moved at all. I asked in addition whether it was possible to trace the store from which it was purchased, but the tin had been thrown away and it was not possible to even obtain a sample. However, the public was being warned about this particular brand in case any one might have a potentially lethal substance, and asked to destroy whatever stocks they had. The hon. member and the country may be assured that the Quebec department of health and the federal department are working very closely together to make sure that this cannot happen again and there may be no possibility of repetition.

BREAD

INQUIRY AS TO PROBABLE PRICE INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. It arises out of press reports that the price of bread is likely to increase 1 cent a loaf partly because of the rise in flour prices following the Russian grain sales. Is the minister in a position to assure the house that the grain sales to Russia will not result in increased flour prices which, in turn, would lead to higher bread prices?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I cannot give any such assurance. The price of wheat has gone up a few cents a bushel and I have no doubt the price of flour has gone up somewhat also, but I hope it will not lead to an increase in the price of bread. However, this is not a matter over which the Canadian government has any direct control.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Is the minister suggesting that because the price of wheat has gone up the price of bread should go up, too?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): That is the interpretation many western farmers will put on his statement.

Mr. Sharp: If they take that interpretation it is because they listen to the hon. member and not to me.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

HAINES ROAD—NEGOTIATIONS WITH U.S. GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence arising out of the decision to keep the Haines road open. Have negotiations yet been completed with the United States government with respect to its offer to bear the cost of keeping this road open and backbill our government?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I do not know whether or not that is the case. My colleague the minister of northern affairs is co-ordinating this effort on behalf of the several departments of government involved.

Mr. Nielsen: I wonder if I could direct that question to the parliamentary secretary—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Nielsen: —or to the acting minister of northern affairs. May I direct the question to the acting minister?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member knows that if his question is not answered at this time there must be a reason. I did not think it necessary to go into the reasons for not waiting for an answer.

An hon. Member: Absenteeism.

Mr. Speaker: I beg your pardon; I did not hear. It seems clear to me that the question asked could not be answered at this time; and that is why I did not insist.

Mr. Nielsen: Neither the minister of northern affairs nor his parliamentary secretary are in their places. I saw the acting minister rise to answer when he discovered that his two colleagues were not in the house.

Hon. W. M. Benidickson (Acting Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): No notice having been given, I can only say I will be pleased to try to give the hon. member an answer tomorrow.

[Mr. Sharp.]

CIVIL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): In view of the uncertainty with respect to civil defence policy, and the changing situation, is the government reviewing civil defence policy and, if so, when can we expect an announcement?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The policy is being reviewed. I am not sure when an announcement will be made. I will be glad to look into it and take the matter up with the minister responsible.

FINANCE

MEANS OF MEETING MATURING OBLIGATIONS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for the good exercise you let us have on this side of the house.

My question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Would the minister tell us which means he intends to take to find the required amounts to meet the government of Canada bonds—which reach the tidy sum of one billion dollars—falling due on or about November 15, 1963?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This surely is a question for the order paper.

AGRICULTURE

PROVISION OF FEED GRAIN FOR EASTERN FARMERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): My question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Is the minister ready to tell the house why western farmers receive $1.30 for 100 pounds of oats while Quebec farmers have to pay up to $6.00 for 100 pounds of oats?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): I shall first answer the question the hon. member asked yesterday. The government has instituted a program under which it will reimburse buyers for the cost of winter storage of western feed grains in licensed eastern elevators during the period from October 15 to April 15. This policy is designed to assist in providing an adequate and orderly supply of feed grains for winter needs and it is serving that purpose.

Second, I am assured that adequate space will be available in eastern elevators for winter feed requirements. I may add, in this connection, that if it is necessary to do so vessels with grain cargoes can tie up for the winter alongside elevators to add to the total capacity, and this grain also will be eligible for the storage assistance.

Third, my best information is that there are adequate stocks of western feed grains, in total, to meet eastern winter requirements. On October 16 there were 12½ million bushels of western feed grains in eastern elevators, which is approximately 50 per cent more than a year ago. Montreal stocks are well above last year, and while stocks in Quebec city at the moment are somewhat below last year there were approximately two million bushels of feed grains at that location yesterday.

While the current day to day movement from the lakehead to eastern positions is being affected by the shipping difficulties, I should like to assure the house that a very close watch is being kept on the matter. I cannot answer the other question with relation to the grain because I would first have to check the authenticity of the prices.

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture has answered the first part of the question I asked yesterday, but I should like him to answer the second part as to the price to be paid. Who gets the profit as between western and eastern farmers on these wheat sales and oat sales?

APPEARANCE BEFORE COMMITTEE OF STABILIZATION BOARD OFFICIALS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question directed to me yesterday by the hon. member for Rosthern regarding the appearance of officials of the agricultural stabilization board before the standing committee on agriculture and colonization, I can assure the hon. member that I am agreeable to having the officials of the board appear before the committee if the committee wishes.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege arising out of the answer given by the minister a few minutes ago to the question I asked yesterday. We have had similar answers on a number of occasions to inquiries regarding the standing committee on agriculture. I want to protest the deliberately cavalier manner in which the standing committee on agriculture has been prevented by the present government from fulfilling completely its proper role in parliament.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Speaker, the standing committee on agriculture and colonization last met on July 4, 1961 and made its report to the house on September 26, 1961.

[Later:]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the house leader a question. When is it the intention of the government to reconvene the standing committee on agriculture, particularly in view of the remark just made by the Minister of Agriculture that the committee has not met since 1961? I ask this question in light of the fact that many of us realize there are a number of important agricultural problems that should be looked into. Today several questions of major importance have been asked, and there was also a motion to adjourn the house to discuss an agricultural problem. I think the house would like to know whether the committee is going to be reconstituted almost immediately because it is not enough to say that the Conservatives did not do so either.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do hope it will be possible to make our questions a little more crisp and save the time of the house.

Mr. Peters: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. These remarks have been made in this relationship, and I am not one—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but will he please resume his seat while I am on my feet? There is no question of privilege. The hon. member must know that questions of privilege are extraordinary incidents in procedure and should be carefully used for real questions of privilege. There is such a thing as a grievance, of course, and opportunities are provided for raising grievances.

I am suggesting to the house, in view of the volume of questions and the desire expressed by all the leaders to shorten the question period, is it not possible for hon. members to state their questions directly, crisply and very much to the point? I did not stop the hon. member because of the motion to adjourn under standing order 26 and because of the rather long statement by the Minister of Agriculture, but I am sure the house could easily apprehend the desire of the hon. member for Timiskaming that the committee be set up as soon as possible, and there is no need to debate the question at this time.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the committee was set up weeks ago by this house. The matter is no longer one for the house, and the time of the house should not be wasted with it. Any member of the committee can have the committee called together any time he will take the trouble to do so.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

COST OF PROVIDING SKIM MILK POWDER TO CARIBBEAN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, yesterday on orders of the day the hon. member for Chapleau asked me the cost of the shipment of skim milk powder made available by the government for use in areas affected by hurricane Flora. The agricultural products board's export price for skim milk powder is 7 cents per pound. Therefore the total cost of the donation, presuming all the skim milk powder offer is taken up by the organizations in question, would be $80,500.

UNITED NATIONS

NUCLEAR WEAPONS—EXTENSION OF BAN TO UNDERGROUND TESTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister concerning the efforts made at the United Nations by the non-aligned powers of the Geneva disarmament committee toward extending the nuclear test ban to its completion by covering underground tests. Would the Prime Minister care to say what action the Canadian delegation is taking in respect of this important initiative?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, not offhand, but I will try to answer my hon. friend's question tomorrow.

LOTTERIES

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENT OF CRIMINAL CODE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Does he intend to put on the coming federal-provincial conference's agenda a proposition to amend the Criminal Code, so as to authorize provinces to hold lotteries if they so wish?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, first, I wonder if this is an urgent matter.

Moreover, as the hon. member knows, many questions of that type have already been answered.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

There is in the Department of Justice a committee which studies the amendments to be made to the Criminal Code and, in due course, if these amendments are approved by the government, they are submitted to the house. I do not think, though I shall check the opinion I am now giving, that it is the usual practice to submit to a federal-provincial conference amendments to be made to the Criminal Code.

[Text]

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): I shall try to comply with your wishes, Mr. Speaker, by putting my question crisply, and I hope it will not be considered impertinent. I saw the beautiful display of flags on parliament hill today, and does the Prime Minister not feel a little bit ashamed of the fact that we have not got one for Canada?

An hon. Member: We have one.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO ESTIMATES TO BE CONSIDERED

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Last night the house leader said that on estimates tonight we would have as a stopgap after fisheries either public works or transport. Can he now tell us which one?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): It would be public works tonight if it were needed, and transport tomorrow night.

INCOME TAX ACT

The house resumed from Wednesday, October 16, consideration of the motion of Mr. Gordon for second reading of Bill No. C-95, to amend the Income Tax Act.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, the other day we had a statement by the Minister of Finance on the introduction of the income tax bill for second reading. I might say, sir, that it had been my expectation the bill would rather closely follow the resolution which had been introduced. There were certain things indicated in the resolution to which I will refer later, particularly certain allowances for depreciation in distressed areas, and I refer to the figure of 95 per cent ownership in the plant as well as certain other things, which were not included in the bill. One must say that what appears in the bill is certainly a lot more restrictive than what appeared in the resolution or what was said during discussion of the resolution. However, I shall discuss that in greater detail later.

I do not intend to refer to any particular clause, Mr. Speaker, but I noticed clause 7, which I would have thought by now the minister might have included in any resolution because it has acquired a certain quality of semi-permanence. This has to do with certain allowances in lieu of family allowances, that are made to immigrants entering the country, and these allowances are then in the same category as family allowances for the purpose of income tax. This practice has been in vogue, I think, for about eight years. I am wondering whether it would not have been deemed that this is a regular feature of the Income Tax Act. Should we have been told quite frankly that this is going to be limited, or are we going to be faced with the re-enactment of this provision from year to year? I recognize that this is a carrying forward of something that existed in previous years, and it comes under yearly review.

I gather that the main burden of the minister's speech was that Canada faces a very serious problem of deficits on international payments. It was the view of the government —and this was nothing new, because he indicated it had been the view of previous administrations—that the best means of tackling this problem was in Canada selling more abroad. He said that the scope for increased sales seemed to be primarily in the United States; in actual fact I believe he used the term "the North American continent". If that was the objective, I wonder why greater emphasis was not placed on the providing of incentives for increased sales. In fact the one incentive that appeared in the Income Tax Act which was introduced a year or two ago is now being removed. I would like to hear from the minister why, after only a short experience, section 40(a) of the act is being repealed. Even if there has not been the expected advance as a result of this incentive, I think it has been in effect too short a time to show its full impact. In any event, Mr. Speaker, I think the minister should give us an answer in this regard when he makes his closing statement.

I rather think, though, that if the purpose of the changes in the act is to provide incentives, and in certain cases some disabilities, in order to change the nature of our balance of payments position, the bill now before us will do much less than was indicated at either the budget or resolution stages. First of all, we know that as a result of certain steps indicated at an earlier stage, investment in Canada received a rather serious shock, not only because of promised action on this side of the border but because of action on the other side in the United States.

The minister was quite frank in telling us that at the present time it is virtually impossible to obtain money from the United States in any, shall we say, substantial quantities. There may be exceptions to this, but I know that businessmen who had plans for expansion or promotional opportunities in western Canada have said that at the present time these programs are absolutely dead because of the fear of action which may be taken in the United States. These programs of expansion and promotion are being put aside because of the uncertainty that exists with regard to the precise action that may be taken in the United States.

If it is the case that there is a drying up of money coming into this country, the minister's hopes of changing the nature of investment from equity into bonds will probably not come to realization. It will certainly not come to realization in the foreseeable future, because it will take some considerable time to restore a climate of confidence. Until this climate of confidence is restored there will not be the investment from the United States or other sources into the fields hoped for by the minister.

The other objective the minister hoped to achieve was the changing of the nature of investment from equities into bonds. There are certain incentives to try to change, shall we say, the nationality of investments. I am very disappointed in this bill, Mr. Speaker, because in spite of the difficulties that were pointed out at the resolution stage with regard to investment by Canadian residents, this problem has not been dealt with. Frankly, "Canadian resident" means nothing. What do we mean, when we say "resident in Canada"? Do we mean the 180 days usually envisaged in regard to the Income Tax Act, or do we mean the normal definition given to "resident" in everyday language, that a person makes his usual residence in a country? This is one point of uncertainty.

Again I come back to the point I made during the debate at the resolution stage, that "Canadian resident" means nothing in the context of capital inflow into this country. If the minister had the courage of his convictions in this regard, I think that as he was aiming for a 25 per cent Canadian ownership he should have said "Canadian citizen". I think he would then have been working toward the goal he desired; he would have been taking a step in the right direction. But he has not given any indication of even a first step in this regard in using the expression "Canadian resident" because there are scores of situations in which this does not mean a thing. You have resident managers of subsidiary companies who are subject to recall, and who will hold shares in trust for the parent company abroad. This has been done in many cases. There are many ways in which shareholdings may be in the hands of Canadian residents but this may not mean anything, because behind the shareholding there is a trust agreement which provides that the shares are held on behalf of a foreign principal.

Therefore, in effect, if shareholdings are in the names of Canadian residents who are actually citizens of a foreign country and are here on posting by their foreign principals, I can assure the minister that the majority of them will be on the basis of trust agreements; the beneficial ownership will not lie with the Canadian resident. If the minister thinks that the Minister of National Revenue is going to go looking into all these things, the Minister of National Revenue will have to double his staff. The minister will really be creating an awesome task for his colleague.

I think it would have been better, and the minister would have received much more credit from financial critics and others in this field, if he had in this bill provided for that which he wished to achieve; that is, ownership in the hands of Canadian citizens. After all, 25 per cent means nothing in the majority of companies. In large public corporations it is a major minority holding which may give one effective control if the shareholdings are widely dispersed. But how many companies in this category would be affected by this type of legislation? I suggest to the minister that the majority of companies in this category would be private companies in the nature of subsidiaries—closely held private companies—in which a 25 per cent holding means nothing. There is no influence in a 25 per cent shareholding in companies of this kind.

I raise the point at this time, Mr. Speaker, because regretfully I do not believe the minister's objectives will be achieved with this this type of legislation.

We come now to the question of the withholding tax. I would like to know from the minister whether he has received advice from the law officers of the treasury board, or whether he has received assurances from the United States authorities that with the coming into force of this act with the provision—although it is to be effective only late in 1964 or in 1965—this will not be deemed to be an abrogation of the tax conventions between Canada and the United States. Further, if the effect of this is deemed to be an abrogation of the tax agreement, then does this mean that the full United States tax comes in at up to 30 per cent?

This is a problem on which the minister should give us some information. He should tell us whether he has got these assurances; because if what I have said is to be, then with the stroke of an amendment, with some sort of a stick which is the counterpart of the carrot that he has provided with respect to this changing nationality of invested capital in Canada, he is wiping away a great benefit enjoyed by those people whom we have attracted with investment to Canada in the past. As I say, this is a very serious problem, and I hope the minister can give us the appropriate assurances. Otherwise he should withdraw his bill.

On the previous occasion I also spoke about associated companies, and I again regret that the minister has seen fit to bring forward this complete blanketing of related companies. While there has been abuse—and I agree there has been abuse in the sort of departmentalization of integrated businesses whereby it is sought to get the benefits of the so-called smaller companies at the lower tax rate—yet this is an essential feature of encouraging local capital and local management, particularly in western Canada. A man who has capital, and who is interested in investing it on an equity basis in developing businesses, will now be entirely discouraged because he cannot go to a small businessman who has got a good thing going but requires some capital, and invest 51 per cent in that business leaving the local man to manage and develop it.

I have seen this done in many instances, and I know of fine Canadian businesses developed in this way. Now, however, everything is going to be lumped together in the hands of the man who is providing the investment capital. The net result is that he is going to keep his capital at home uninvested. He is not going to use it in this way. Certainly he is not going to help the local individual to try to develop his business if the profits are going to be taxed at the 51 per cent rate, because it is not possible to differentiate between the share of profits of the local individual, the minority holder, and those of the majority holder. All profits go in at the same rate.

I suggest to the minister that this whole problem should be reviewed. I am not going into the question of the different tax rates. I am trying to remain within the principle of the bill, but I put it to the minister that I think a mistake is being made, and that in trying to plug certain loopholes he is shutting the door on much more.

This brings me to the further point, and I thank the minister for acceding to my suggestion, that an appeal from the discretion of the minister with respect to associated companies and the dividend stripping provisions of the bill may now be made to the tax appeal board, though I say this with many great reservations because I do not think this appeal means anything. I would draw to the minister's attention the fact that the Canadian Bar Association also unanimously agreed it does not mean a thing. I am sure the minister has received a copy of the resolution adopted at this year's meeting of the Canadian Bar Association held in Banff, which incidentally I attended. I can tell him there was complete unanimity at that meeting in condemning the reintegration or reinsertion of the discretionary powers of the Minister of National Revenue within the Income Tax Act. The meeting felt that this was a retrograde step, and I can tell the minister there was no political partisanship in this because political supporters of the party to which he belongs were among the loudest in their complaints about it. There was no question of politics at all. It was a matter of principle by the lawyers of Canada that this was a bad feature and should be withdrawn.

After all, all the tax appeal board and the exchequer court can do in this regard is to examine that the minister has exercised his discretion in the manner prescribed by the act, that he has done nothing administratively wrong, but neither the appeal board nor the exchequer court will substitute their discretion for his. We know this as a matter of legal principle, so that the appeal provision is a complete nullity and I am sorry to see the reintroduction of ministerial discretion into the legislation. I know dividend stripping is a really difficult problem, but I wonder whether we are not here paying too high a price for the revenues which the minister deems he is losing through dividend stripping.

There are some comments I would like to make with respect to the increased depreciation incentives which the minister is providing for new industries in the areas designated under the Department of Industry Act. Here, Mr. Speaker, I must crave your momentary indulgence to refer to the fact that these words are used in the bill:

> —the capital cost of all machinery, equipment— and buildings situated in the designated area that were owned by the person—

I come to the question of what is meant by "owned". Is this owned outright? Has it been purchased on time? Is the beneficial ownership with the taxpayer? What is meant by this term "owned"? If I have bought machinery and equipment on a two year basis, simply paying 10 per cent down, do I own the machinery within the meaning of this term? I may have bought it under a conditional sales agreement where ownership remains vested in the vendor until the purchase price has been paid. To all outward appearances I am the owner of that equipment, but in law I am not. The same may apply to buildings and property bought under an agreement for sale. I think we need an explanation in general—we can discuss it in greater detail when we go into committee—with regard to the proposed new section 71A.

There are a number of other items, Mr. Speaker, which I should like to discuss, but this would be more appropriate at the next stage of the bill. Therefore I will conclude these observations on the principle of this bill by saying that I regret very much that the bill as put forward does not hold the promise indicated at the time of the budget. It is much more restrictive. I would say that the carrots and the incentives, in the tradition of ministers of finance, hold much less promise than do the sticks which may be waved.

I realize that the minister faces a very serious problem, but I think there are means still open to him to accomplish his objectives somewhat more effectively. As I indicated before, if he wishes to repatriate capital he should get it into the hands of Canadian citizens. If you have the courage of your convictions, then why not say so? If you are going to be hung for a sheep, as the minister certainly is at the present time, why come in as a lamb?

Mr. Jack Davis (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in speaking to this legislation with regard to the Income Tax Act I should like to concentrate primarily on this very difficult problem of foreign ownership and control in this country. We need capital from outside, and we need it badly. We need foreign capital to assist us in our economic development and the attainment of a high rate of economic growth. On the other hand we certainly need a substantial measure of Canadian ownership and control in order to ensure our political survival.

So we have a very difficult problem to deal with, one which, on the one hand, advises us in economic terms that we should encourage the influx of capital from all possible sources outside the country, and on the other hand requires us to discriminate in some way in favour of Canadians, in favour of greater Canadian ownership, and in favour of individual participation by Canadians in the industrial future of the country.

Canada, Mr. Speaker, is a vast country, a country which has tremendous resources in respect to materials. But what it lacks is capital, the mechanical means and the know-how with which to put those great resources to work. One of the most substantial reasons for our high rate of economic growth and high level of income is the fact that we have had a great deal of assistance from outside in terms of low cost capital. A Canadian putting up money for industrial development today will ask for a return of something like 6 per cent interest on his investment. Foreign capital in recent years, including both foreign held bonds and equity participation, is asking something less than 3 per cent. This is cheap capital, and we need low cost capital in order to develop our country more rapidly.

But more important still, we have year by year been paying out interest on bonds; hence when the over-all return is 3 per cent to these foreigners, obviously the return on equity is down in the order of 1 per cent. The foreign investor in Canada's future has been taking out of this country less than 1 per cent return on his investment here. This is cheap capital. It is the cheapest possible capital Canada can get for the development of its resources, its industries, and for providing more jobs for Canadians. So there is in economic terms an overwhelming case for the encouragement of foreign captial in this country.

The result of this massive investment in Canada by way of low cost capital is impressive in statistical terms. Whereas roughly 40 per cent of Canadian industry was in foreign hands as far as ownership and control was concerned in the late 1940's, the proportion now is more like 60 per cent and it is steadily rising. Two thirds of the primary and manufacturing industries in this country are owned and controlled by non-residents. Roughly two thirds of all the workers in these industries are working for foreign owned and controlled concerns. No other country, at least in modern times, has had such a large proportion of its ownership held outside its domain.

Reference is sometimes made to the position of the United States prior to world war I. Then roughly 15 per cent of its annual income equivalent was owned by foreigners. In this country the proportion is more like 100 per cent. The parallel also breaks down in another respect; much of that foreign investment in the United States was in the form of bonds which would progressively and inevitably be repatriated. In Canada a large proportion of this investment is in equity and ownership and so resides, as long as Canadian law prevails and Canada continues to exist as a responsible nation in foreign hands.

Furthermore, the principal growth industries—oil, chemicals, electronics, and so on—are in the hands of non-residents. These industries are growing at rates of 3 per cent, 4 per cent or 5 per cent a year. Only the industries in relative decline to the rest of the economy by and large are still in Canadian hands. This suggests that this proportion of foreign ownership will continue to rise. The big firms, the really large corporations which engage in industrial research, intensive market studies, and so on, are largely foreign. They are growing in size and the great majority are exclusively owned by non-residents. Only one out of four of the large corporations operating in this country sells any equity stock or ownership stock to Canadians.

I listened with considerable interest to the hon. member for Edmonton West, who criticized the 25 per cent ownership provision in the present bill. He said there was no guarantee that Canadians would end up owning much of this stock. Well, at least as a result of this provision there is an opportunity to participate in the equity ownership of large corporations which will take advantage of the tax incentive provided in the present budget.

What should we do in order to effectively repatriate at least part of the ownership of our industries? Repatriate them over the long run, slowly, measurably and in a straightforward, honest and predictable way. We might look to other countries. We might see the examples there. By and large the controls of other countries have taken direct forms. Legislation, for example, with regard to incorporation of firms requires that a sizeable percentage of the equity stock always resides in the hands of the residents of those countries, and legislation requiring that a large percentage of the directors be residents of those countries. The legislation frequently focuses on the resource industries, the basic processing industries and the utilities. These are the areas which are apparently of greatest concern to these other countries which have enacted legislation with respect to foreign ownership and control.

In most of the cantons of Switzerland no foreigner may own land. No foreigner may own registered equity stock. Obviously there is far more stringent legislation in Switzerland with respect to foreign ownership than there is here. France has always been concerned about the participation of non-French nationals in French industry, and in recent years France has endeavoured to convince her fellow members of the European common market, the OECD and so on, that legislation along these lines should be made uniform in all the western European countries with which France is affiliated. In Sweden, legislation provides that not more than one out of every three directors of a company can be non-resident, and those who are non-residents must receive the approval of the Swedish board of trade, which corresponds to our own Department of Trade and Commerce. In the United Kingdom, the bank of England scrutinizes each individual transaction with respect to take-over arrangements or alterations to the financial structure of corporations. Changes in ownership involving ownership passing from the United Kingdom to non-residents have not been frequent and before they are approved they have to pass severe tests in the light of the over-all interest of the United Kingdom, politically, economically, and otherwise. In Japan, no non-resident may own more than 50 per cent of the equity interest in industrial enterprise.

In the United States there are numerous examples of control. I will mention just one which is very much in the minds of some of those who operate tugboats, freighters and other vessels on both our coasts. No one who is not a national of the United States may own ships engaging in the coastal trade of the United States. Because of Canada's liberal legislation in this sphere, it follows that United States ship owners can operate up and down the coast of the United States, into Canada and up and down the coast of Canada. They can qualify for the 40 per cent subsidy with respect to shipbuilding and equip themselves with modern vessels with the assistance of the Canadian government; but no Canadian concern can carry on its operations both north and south across the 49th parallel. Thus this type of legislation favours United States ownership and control, and militates against the expansion of Canadian shipping on both our coasts and on the great lakes.

Also, Canadians have come off second best when they attempt to set up natural gas systems, electric power grids and works of a similar kind in the United States, due to the exclusive arrangements which exist below the border. They never receive a hearing; they have no chance of obtaining franchises. In this country, on the other hand, among the remaining utilities there is a sizeable participation by United States interests.

In respect to defence contracts in the United States, which engage much of the industrial capacity of that nation, foreigners are always on the outside track. This is another way in which foreign ownership of United States industry is kept within low limits.

I might mention some statistics which indicate the order of magnitude of Canadian investment in the United States. It is merely a fraction of 1 per cent of all the industry there. It is true that the distilleries, the farm machinery concerns and some other enterprising companies do have substantial investments in the United States, but they are small in relation to the 60 or 70 per cent interest which United States corporations have in our industry here. Canadians have invested several billions of dollars in the United States, but United States firms have ten or 15 times as much invested in Canada.

We must obviously approach this awkward problem with moderation because we need access to this low cost capital. We must not bring in irresponsible measures, but we should at least be prepared to do something to provide an opportunity for Canadians to have greater participation in the ownership of industry in this country. I can think back to the time when my father was a young man in this country. The chance then was less than one in ten that he would work either for big government, that is, for a government department or a crown corporation, or for some big foreign owned corporation. In terms of expressing his own opinions the chances were better than nine out of ten that he would not be inhibited in saying anything he wanted to say. In my own generation the chance is one in three, or less, that a young man will be employed by big government or by a big foreign owned concern. When one works for government one must be circumspect with regard to the expression of political opinions. Large foreign owned corporations do not wish to interfere in the internal affairs of Canada and they definitely frown on their executives expressing opinions, matters of a controversial nature. If things continue to develop in the way they are developing, by the time my children are of age the chances will be 50-50 that they will not be able to speak as freely with respect to political and other matters in this country as I am, and as my father certainly was.

Let us consider the concepts of free enterprise on the one hand and of government initiative on the other. Canadians, in the face of the mounting degree of foreign ownership and control, will, I suggest, instinctively favour government enterprise because it will seem to them to be a Canadian communal effort, an effort having identity with themselves. I suggest they will tend instinctively to discriminate against free enterprise because they will inevitably come to think of it as being foreign dominated, something in which they have no vested interest, something from which they derive no obvious benefit. This hurts our Canadian image, in the sense that Canadians like to think of themselves, I believe, as prepared to take chances, to go out on their own and for opportunities' sake, to forgo the security which usually follows from working in large government corporations, as civil servants, or for some large foreign enterprise.

There is need for some discrimination in our approach to this problem but there is also a need for legislation along the lines I have suggested. We need the capital, and so we must proceed in a thoroughly predictable way, a step at a time, with regard to this aggravating matter of foreign ownership and control. I should like to think that on this continent we continue to have a relatively free market with respect to capital—that goods and services can move freely, with the passage of time, between Canada and the United States; that people can continue to move freely and that money can move freely back and forth. We need this flexibility for our economic advantage but I think we would do well to remember what President Jefferson said many years ago.

His words had reference to King George III. He said:

> You can never give to others the power to do something for you without also giving them the power to do something to you.

This is very important, and Canadians must remember this. We obviously have to weigh two great and desirable objectives. One is faster economic growth through capital assistance from outside, and the other is our independence as a meaningful political identity. I am sure we will manage it in a predictable, thoroughly responsible way and I would certainly urge the adoption of this legislation as one significant step down the road toward attaining these twin objectives.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the whole purpose of this bill is to give corporations more scope and more tax concessions. I should like to deal today with only one aspect with regard to which I think Canadian corporations have already been given too great concessions and where in my opinion the departments responsible are not using enough care in examining what corporations are doing. I refer to the right of corporations to make contributions on a deductible basis to organizations which are of a non-profit or charitable nature.

It is not my intention or desire to interfere with contributions made by corporations or individuals to legitimate charitable and non-profit organizations, but in my opinion this type of exemption is being abused widely. Two examples of what I consider to be real abuse came across my desk, and I presume across the desks of other members of parliament, in the last week or two. I should like to discuss these today.

[Mr. Davis.]

One organization is known as the Equitable income tax foundation. As far as I can gather, the organization is made up mainly of people who are in the retail business. The president is Mr. David A. Gilbert of Toronto. The vice president is J. C. Munro of Winnipeg and the directors come from Prince Edward Island, Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. I want to read a few sentences into the record from the letter dated October 11 which I am sure all hon. members received as I did. It reads in part as follows:

> The Equitable income tax foundation proposed today that co-operatives and credit unions should be placed on the same tax footing as ordinary investor owned companies. In a submission to the royal commission on taxation the foundation stated that co-operatives and credit unions, primarily because of their preferred tax treatment, are rapidly expanding their share of total business in Canada.

I want to bring this to the attention of the minister.

> The foundation, a non-profit organization formed in 1962 to promote the principle of equity in taxation, stated that in the entire field of taxation in Canada it had found nothing to equal the discrimination existing under the present income tax law in favour of credit unions and co-operatives.

They also included a press release dated October 11 and I want to read a few paragraphs from it.

> The Equitable income tax foundation proposed today that co-operatives and credit unions should be placed on the same tax footing as ordinary investor owned companies. In a submission to the royal commission on taxation the foundation said that co-operatives and credit unions, primarily because of a preferred tax position, are rapidly expanding their share of total business in Canada and have now reached a size and a level of efficiency that offers formidable competition to ordinary companies.

They also set out their recommendations to the royal commission as follows:

> Taxation of co-operatives on net income before deduction of patronage dividends.
>
> Abolition of the tax exemption of new co-operatives in their first three years.
>
> Abolition of the tax exemption of credit unions and caisses populaires, and a requirement that they pay taxes on net profits before patronage dividends.
>
> And tax treatment of patronage dividends in the hands of co-operative members on the same basis as dividends paid by corporations.

I could go on and on, Mr. Speaker. I do not question the right of the members of this organization to their views. I do not question their right to make submissions expressing their views to the royal commission on taxation, the government, the Minister of Finance or anybody else, but I disagree completely with their view on the desirability of taxing co-operatives as I believe the majority of the people of Canada do, and certainly as the majority of members of parliament do who represent rural constituencies in which co-operatives have become so important as a way of helping rural people to make a living.

I believe this organization has a right to its opinions, but I certainly believe it is completely wrong that this organization, which has such partisan political views, should be able to receive contributions on a deductible basis. I think it is the height of arrogance for such an organization in such a fortunate position to be criticizing legitimate organizations like co-operatives.

Mr. Benson: I wonder whether the hon. member would permit a question. Is the hon. member for Winnipeg North aware that contributions to the Equitable income tax foundation are not deductible as charitable donations under the Income Tax Act?

Mr. Orlikow: I can only go by the information I have. I have in front of me a pamphlet issued by the Canadian economic foundation and I can supply the hon. member with a copy of it if he wishes. On it I find these words: "Canadian economic foundation, a non-profit foundation, contributions are deductible".

Mr. Garland: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure of my ground here in dealing with something which is the subject matter of a question by the hon. member on the order paper and which is in the process of being answered. However, in answer to his question, whether the Equitable income tax foundation was given the right to receive contributions which are deductible for income tax purposes and, if so, on what basis was this granted, may I say that the answer, without reservation, is no.

Mr. Orlikow: If the minister would supply the answers to questions when he has them a member would not make a mistake. If I am wrong, then the information I have is incorrect. I put my question in good faith and I do not think I am in a different position from other members. I have questions which have stood on the order paper for close to three months without being answered, although not that one.

Mr. Garland: This question was put on the order paper on October 22.

Mr. Orlikow: I said, not that particular question. I put it on the order paper as soon as I had the information. We have had answers to questions on the order paper twice this week and that question was not answered. If I am wrong, I am sorry; but that is the information I was given.

The second organization, which I have already mentioned, is the Canadian economic foundation. Its head office is at 42 Charles street east, Toronto 5. As I have already said, right on the pamphlet I have in front of me are the words: "A non-profit foundation; contributions are deductible". If that is incorrect, then the foundation is misrepresenting itself to the people from whom it is seeking contributions. The Canadian economic foundation seeks to undermine the labour movement and to thwart social progress with a Madison avenue type of propaganda imported from its United States affiliates, the American economic foundation and the American free enterprise productions, Morton Grove, Illinois.

The Canadian economic foundation is an operation which exists mainly to extract funds from reactionary and gullible employers who desire to fill the minds of workers in Canada with anti-social free enterprise propaganda. This organization has been used by two companies which have contracts with the United Steelworkers of America, namely Joy Manufacturing of Galt and the Toronto Iron Works. It has been used by the Dominion Rubber Company of Kitchener with very disastrous effects on the rubber workers union.

One of their pamphlets boasts that its techniques were used to settle a month old strike in three days. This included explaining the true economic facts of the situation in their plant. In another industry where employees were similarly informed, seven unions agreed to continue working under their old contracts for a period of 36 months without revisions or wage increases.

Now, none of the staff of the Canadian economic foundation are economists with professional training. They claim to be experts in communication, with simplified explanations of economic problems and simple solutions. For example, the Canadian economic foundation blames unemployement exclusively on high wages. It opposes social insurance such as pensions and health insurance that would take business away from private companies into government operated schemes.

This organization moved into Canada only within the last two years, and it is expanding very rapidly. It is now preparing to carry its economic study materials into all Canadian schools. It has already established a strong group in Saskatchewan to fight socialism. It would not be surprising if it were found to be preparing to play a big role there in the next general election. I do not object to that, Mr. Speaker. The government of Saskatchewan has fought the doctors, the insurance companies and many others. I do not object to any other organization, no matter what its name, going into Saskatchewan. However, I certainly object to this organization being classified by the government as a non-profit organization so that contributions to it are tax deductible because this means that taxpayers, including people like myself, are being forced to subsidize this organization.

Mr. Garland: Would the hon. member repeat the precise name of the organization?

Mr. Orlikow: It is the Canadian economic foundation. I shall be glad to send to the minister this pamphlet and other pamphlets which are to be put out very shortly.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have only mentioned two examples. I wonder how many more examples there are in this country? I do not want to burden the department, but I am tempted to put a motion on the order paper requesting a list of all organizations in Canada that have been given this kind of exemption. Then, we could ascertain what is taking place. I know there are many worth-while, legitimate organizations which cannot get this exemption. There are citizens of Canada, trade unionists, making contributions to the organizational fund of the international confederation of free trade unions. This fund is used to develop democratic trade unions in the underdeveloped countries. Contributions to that kind of organization are not permitted as deductions from income tax. I think it is time the government had a very close look at this question of the organizations that are permitted this kind of special privilege, and ascertained how much money this is costing Canadian taxpayers.

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, when he introduced Bill C-95, to amend the Income Tax Act, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) explained that the future of Canada was at stake in view of the state of economic inferiority in which we find ourselves at this time on account of our economic situation. He concluded his remarks with a warning which expressed both his fear concerning the foreign control of the Canadian economy and his hope that such a control would soon be removed so that Canadians would be masters in their own house.

On the other hand, as reported in La Presse for October 23, 1963, the Minister of Finance stated in Hamilton:

> Canada must be more independent of foreign capital.

The minister added that we must learn not to depend on foreign capital.

Mr. Speaker, the Social Credit members are happy to see that the Minister of Finance is so well disposed and especially that he intends to take a step in the right direction. However, he is wrong to think that he will achieve his end merely by establishing a new fiscal policy.

The economic growth of our country is delayed by the heavy burden of taxes which must be lightened. Distinguished Canadians who are not in politics entirely agree with Social Credit on that point. For instance, according to Le Devoir, the president of the Canadian chamber of commerce Mr. Victor Oland, stated last October 8:

> Proportionally to national income, per capita taxes have nearly doubled in a little less than 30 years. The strenuous efforts which are being made to remedy this economic malnutrition and which consist in giving transfusions of the patient's own blood, will end up in failure.

There, Mr. Speaker, you have a statement that our own Social Credit group is glad to support, and I do hope that the intentions of the Minister of Finance are along the lines of those of Mr. Oland.

Until now, the present Liberal government and its predecessors have acted as if they were expecting financial miracles to happen so that Canadians could become masters of their own economy.

I am amazed by the fact that politicians who are called upon to take over the destinies of our two nations can be so simple as to believe it is impossible for Canada to create the capital it needs to develop its natural resources.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. In keeping with the understanding reached last night by the different party leaders, may I suggest to the hon. member that he move that the debate be adjourned?

Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi): I so move, Mr. Speaker.

[Text]

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

CANADIAN WHEAT SALES ABROAD

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue) moved:

> That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, communications and other documents received from the government of the United States of America, or any of its departments, or exchanged between the government of the United States of America and the government of Canada, or any of their respective departments, concerning the sale of wheat by Canada to the U.S.S.R., other communist countries and Japan, or pertaining to any representations made about the price of wheat sold to these countries.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this motion is for the production of certain documents, correspondence and papers that have been exchanged or may have been exchanged between the government of the United States and the government of Canada or any of their departments concerning, specifically, the sale of wheat by Canada to the U.S.S.R., other communist countries and Japan, or pertaining to any representations made about the price of wheat sold to these countries. I might point out to Your Honour that I consider the most important part of this motion to be the last section pertaining to any representations made about the price of wheat sold to these countries.

The basis of my motion is published reports appearing in the press to the effect that the United States has strongly protested fixed price sales. In this connection, Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote from the Globe and Mail of October 10, 1963, carrying a dispatch from Washington. This article reads in part as follows:

> The United States has lodged a strong official protest with Canada over the sale of wheat at fixed prices.
>
> Department of agriculture spokesmen, who disclosed the protest yesterday, asserted that recent Canadian actions in the sale of wheat had jeopardized traditional Canadian-U.S. consultations and had undermined the world commercial market practices based on supply and demand.

Parliament is of course vested with the power of ordering to be laid before this house all documents that may be necessary in the view of its members for their information. Mr. Speaker a few days ago laid down a few guide posts concerning the production of documents. He quoted from May's sixteenth edition, from Bourinot and also from rulings made by Mr. Speaker Michener. One of those rulings was that the confidential nature of a document does not constitute a valid objection to its production. The other day when this motion was raised—I believe it was yesterday—the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) invoked the confidential nature of the documents and also stated that the filing of such documents would be a departure from normal practice and contrary to the public interest. With regard to the first point raised by the minister —that is to say, the departure from normal procedure in regard to documents exchanged between two countries—I submit very respectfully, Mr. Speaker, that in this case there has been a very marked departure from normal practice in the fact that spokesmen for the United States department of agriculture have revealed, first of all, the fact of the protest and, second, have charged that Canada has fixed the price of wheat and has not complied with agreements made on that subject. By that action on the part of Washington, by their departure from normal practice by revealing to the press details that are normally confidential, I submit that it becomes, not contrary to the public interest but in the public interest that all these documents be tabled so that parliament and the people of Canada may have before them the full story.

The minister himself admitted that there has been a leakage, and certainly he does not take that very lightly. He has also denied that there has been any price fixing. That may very well be so. But at the same time we do have statements from the authorities in Washington to the effect that a protest has been lodged. We also have the statement to the effect that the Canadian government has given assurances to Washington that there will be no further departure from the agreements. We want to know, first of all, whether such a protest has been received, and if so, in what language was it couched? Third, has the Canadian government replied to that protest; and finally what assurances, if any, have been given by the minister and the government in regard to future sales of wheat by the Canadian wheat board

These, Mr. Speaker, are the motives which provoked my calling for the production of these papers. I think their production is completely within the power of parliament. There are precedents for the production of documents exchanged between Canada and other powers. I think possibly the latest precedent was created when the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) made a request last year for the production of correspondence concerning the drug thalidomide. At that time the government agreed to the motion, with the reservation that the permission or consent of the other power be first obtained. As a matter of fact, I think a good deal of correspondence was tabled as a result of the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to which the government agreed. Then again, because of the particular circumstances referred to above, it is certainly in the interests of this house to know about the details of the international wheat agreements and the agreements pertaining to the price of wheat. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I respectfully submit that this house should concur in the motion as made.

Before resuming my seat I wish to assure the minister that if he would agree to the motion, subject to reservations in regard to obtaining the permission of the United States government, its department of agriculture or any other department, as far as I am concerned that would be perfectly agreeable. There may be the question that no such documents exist. If these documents do not exist, I would like the minister to give a complete assurance in this regard. I would also like to be given specific assurances in respect to the protest which authorized spokesmen for the United States department of agriculture say was lodged and which they described as a strong protest.

Canadian Wheat Sales Abroad

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, when this motion was made on October 23 I replied, as the hon. member who has just spoken said, that to table confidential information of the kind requested by him would be both a departure from normal usage in the intergovernmental exchange of confidential information and would not be in the public interest. For these reasons I respectfully requested him to withdraw his motion. Now, for the reasons he has stated today, he decided not to do so and the motion is down for debate.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that an important question of principle is involved here, and it is not a question that I would speak about in quite the same terms as my hon. friend. He cited instances in which these documents had been revealed by the government on request. I can imagine there are circumstances, and have been circumstances, in which it has been in the public interest for documents exchanged between governments to be presented here in the House of Commons, or otherwise revealed. My argument is that these exchanges on a subject such as the sale of wheat and the pricing policies of the respective governments are not the kind of documents that it would be in the public interest to reveal, because it would have an adverse effect upon the Canadian interest and upon the operations, in particular, of the Canadian wheat board.

Mr. Martineau: May I ask a question at this point. Does the minister consider that there has been, or has not been, a departure from normal practice by the fact that spokesmen for the department of agriculture in the United States have made the statements they have made, to which I referred a few minutes ago?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that certain information which we regarded as confidential has been revealed, and I must take it from what appeared in the newspapers that this information was revealed by the United States department of agriculture. But I do not really think, and I am sure my hon. friend would not suggest, that for this reason we should on our part reveal information that it would not be in the interests of either country to reveal.

It may be that the United States officials thought it was in their interest. I do not think it was in their interest, and it certainly was not in ours; and I therefore do not intend to participate in the contest by revealing information that can only be embarrassing to both sides.

Mr. Clancy: May I ask the minister a question. Will he now disclose to us the price that the Russians are paying for the wheat?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I really think I ought to get on seriously with the question that has been raised by the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue when he put forward his motion. Of course I do not intend to reveal these prices. I have made this a matter of principle.

Mr. Clancy: As a matter of privilege may I interrupt again. Can we assume the reports from Washington are correct?

Mr. Sharp: The hon. gentleman has not identified the reports from Washington.

Mr. Clancy: $1.74 a bushel.

Mr. Sharp: No. I shall not confirm that price.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the reason that I do take very serious objection to this motion is that I really believe it would interfere in the future with the kind of consultations that I consider ought to be going on between our two governments and which have gone on in the past to our mutual benefit.

I can recall when these consultations were begun. It is many years ago now since I was an official and had the privilege of leading the Canadian team that went to Washington to initiate the discussions and consultations on wheat policy. During those years we had very useful consultations, and there were useful consultations more recently when the government of which my hon. friend was a member was in office. I know, from having looked at the files, that these consultations were very useful, and I do not really think it would be helpful to the continuation of these very useful consultations if I were to agree to this motion and were to table documents of the kind that he has requested.

For example, to illustrate the kind of consultations that have gone on, I said in answer to some questions in the House of Commons—and I think also in statements I made on motions—that during the negotiation of the very large contract with the Soviet union the Canadian government, on its own motion, let the United States government know about the negotiations because we believed that it was part of our responsibility to let the United States know that a massive transaction of international importance was under negotiation. Later, when the negotiations were concluded, and when it appeared that the Russians might go to the United States to buy wheat to meet their requirements, the United States government asked us if they could see the agreement and the other documents relating thereto.

That was a very useful consultation. I have looked at the files, after this motion was put on the order paper, to see what documents there were relating to that particular transaction, and indeed there are no documents. All the documents on the files are the documents I tabled in the House of Commons when I produced the copy of the Russian agreement and the copies of the various letters that were signed at the same time. There was nothing else.

These documents were handed by our ambassador, or one of his assistants, to members of the United States administration in Washington. I could have stated, if I had wished, to the hon. gentleman that I had been unable to discover documents of the kind referred to in this motion, but I did not want to do that because I believe in principle that documents of this kind which might exist, which I have been unable to discover, which may for example exist in the files of the Canadian embassy in Washington, should not be revealed. To produce such documents would inhibit the consultations that otherwise would have gone on.

Mr. Martineau: Do I understand the minister can give no assurance that such documents do not exist?

Mr. Sharp: That is right, and I do not intend to give any such assurance. I am talking about the nature of the consultations that must go on. Most of them are oral; sometimes they may be written; but whether oral or written, it is only going to inhibit that friendly exchange of information if this kind of motion should be approved by the House of Commons and these documents have to be produced.

I do not think even to ask the United States government whether they would be agreeable to having these documents published would be helpful. As I said when I made my original statement to table confidential information of the kind requested by the hon. member would be both a departure from normal usage in the intergovernmental exchange of confidential information and not in the public interest. For these reasons I submit that the house should not approve this motion and I respectfully urge the hon. gentleman, when I have finished my remarks, to withdraw his motion because I do not believe it is in the interests of Canada.

However, I should like to speak more particularly about one or two questions which the hon. member put to me during the course of his remarks. He asked me whether any assurances had been given to the United States government about the pricing policies of the Canadian wheat board. I should like to assure him that no such assurances were given at any time. There were consultations, as there have been many times in the past, about the respective wheat policies of the two governments; but at no time has the wheat board or any official or minister of the Canadian government given an assurance about Canadian wheat prices.

Mr. Pugh: With this in mind, was any price given to the United States authorities as the bargaining price?

Mr. Sharp: No. As far as I am aware we told the United States government exactly what I have told this house—in other words, that the Canadian wheat board sold wheat at the price posted on that day to whichever customers bought wheat on that day. That is the exact information given by the Canadian government and the Canadian wheat board to all who inquire. We do not reveal to anyone the prices at which the wheat board enters into transactions with its customers. It is very easy to look at the posted prices of the wheat board on any day a sale is made to find out the price at which a sale was made. Of course you would have to know what grade had been purchased, in what position, and so on; but if you wanted to know the wheat board prices on that day you need only look at the list.

Mr. Langlois: May I ask a question of the minister. Does he mean he cannot give the price of wheat per bushel sold to U.S. buyers?

Mr. Sharp: I know the price because the wheat board has told me; but I do not, because the wheat board does not, reveal that price to anybody. That is a matter of policy on the part of the Canadian wheat board. As I say, it does post prices every day at which it is prepared to sell the respective grades of wheat then on offer; but it does not reveal what has been purchased by any particular customer at any particular price.

Mr. Langlois: Is there any reason for not revealing such a price?

Mr. Sharp: Yes; because the Canadian wheat board believes it would not be in the interests of its customers, and because it wishes to retain the good will of its customers.

Mr. Langlois: If you will permit another question, if a person wanted to compare prices of wheat for export with those on the internal market, how would he get the two prices?

Mr. Sharp: The wheat board publishes its daily prices every day and he has only to look at the posting. If he wishes to know what price the wheat board sells at today he will find it listed in the Winnipeg Free Press.

Mr. Martineau: Would the minister care to comment on the charge made by the U.S. spokesman that the Canadian wheat board sold wheat to the Japanese at five cents a bushel below the prevailing price?

Mr. Sharp: I should like to say a word about this. There seems to be some misunderstanding because of the use of the words "prevailing price". The only prevailing price for Canadian wheat is the price at which the Canadian wheat board offers it. When a remark is made that the sale to Japan was at five cents below the prevailing market price, that statement has no meaning. The fact of the matter is that the price at which the Japanese sale was made was approximately five cents higher—if you use No. 1 northern as the basis—than the price at which wheat was sold to the Soviet union. Since that time the price of No. 1 northern has risen another three cents according to the posted prices of the Canadian wheat board.

Mr. Pugh: What about the long term contracts?

Mr. Sharp: These transactions by the wheat board, as I have said on many occasions, are made at their offered, posted prices on the day on which the sale is made. Any statement that the sales to the Japanese were made below the market price is meaningless. There is only one market price as far as Canadian wheat is concerned, and that is the price at which the Canadian wheat board sells wheat.

Mr. Martineau: Do the United States and Canada have, shall we say, a gentleman's agreement in that regard?

Mr. Sharp: No, there is no agreement of that kind between Canada and the United States. There is only an agreement to consult. As I said when I was explaining the policy of the Canadian wheat board, which incidentally had the full approval of all spokesmen on the other side of this house who followed me on that occasion, the Canadian wheat board decided to protect its regular customers and in pursuance of that policy did enter into a sale to Japan for delivery over the next eight months at the price which prevailed on the day of the sale.

Mr. Martineau: May I ask if in this particular case there was consultation with the United States?

Mr. Sharp: I do not know what the hon. gentleman means by consultation. If he means was there agreement—

Mr. Martineau: The minister himself said there was no agreement but that we do consult, so I want to know whether there was consultation, or did he consult?

[Mr. Martineau.]

Mr. Sharp: At about the time the transaction was entered into there were consultations proceeding between the two governments.

Mr. Rapp: I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I fully approve of the methods used by the Canadian wheat board for selling grain, but with these long term agreements is there not a clause whereby, at a certain time, say every six months or every three months, the price would be reviewed by the Canadian wheat board and the party to whom they sold the wheat? So far the method applied by the Canadian wheat board over the years meets with the approval of the farmers, except in cases of long term agreements, which perhaps should be reviewed from time to time on account of fluctuating prices on the world market. Would the minister answer that question?

Mr. Sharp: The Canadian wheat board is prepared to enter into contracts for early delivery and for delivery over a period of time. It is not prepared to enter into contracts for delivery, for example, beyond the end of the current crop year. It has, however, entered into some contracts extending up to the end of the current crop year, the most notable being the sale to the Soviet union and that made to Japan. The Canadian wheat board has not been prepared to enter into any sales for delivery beyond that date. That is the policy of the Canadian wheat board at the present time, and they believe it appropriate to present circumstances. There are some sales which are for much earlier delivery to other countries; but in order to protect the position of its regular customers during this current crop year it entered into some transactions in which the price is fixed for delivery during the balance of this crop year.

Mr. Clancy: Do I have to go to North Dakota to find out the price at which the wheat board sells wheat to Russia, or are you going to give it to us?

Mr. Sharp: I think I have answered this question on a number of occasions. I would not do damage to the Canadian wheat board and I hope my hon. friend would not. I hope he agrees that it would not be in the interests of the marketing of Canadian wheat to reveal the prices at which the contracts are entered into.

Mr. Langlois: If I may ask another question, I might say I am sorry that I cannot get the price of the wheat sold to Russia. They know what they paid for it but we do not. In this transaction, was only the Canadian wheat board involved or did any of the grain exchanges contribute to this contract, either directly or indirectly?

Mr. Sharp: The answer to that is that the Soviet government employed the private grain trade to act as its agent in its purchases from the Canadian wheat board.

Mr. Langlois: Does that mean that some of the Canadian grain exchanges contributed to the making of this contract?

Mr. Sharp: No, they perform services in handling the wheat as between the Canadian wheat board and the Soviet union.

Mr. Langlois: Do we know how much it costs the country for their services?

Mr. Sharp: The costs were paid by the Soviet union. I have no idea what they paid.

Mr. Pigeon: Does the minister think the devaluation of the dollar helped the wheat board to sell our grain?

Mr. Sharp: The devaluation of the Canadian dollar took place before we took office. My understanding of the policy of the Canadian wheat board is that it raised its price in Canadian dollars to the equivalent of what it had been before the dollar was devalued and stabilized, so it did have the result of increasing the return for the western farmers and, I believe, it did have the effect of contributing to the increase in sales.

I could go on to speak of this subject at some length but I think the time I have at my disposal is limited. I would respectfully ask the hon. member who placed this motion on the order paper whether, in view of the assurances I have given him and of the public interest involved, he would be prepared to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Martineau: In reply to the request made by the minister, the fact that he has given an assurance that he cannot find any such documents, although they may exist—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. If the hon. gentleman speaks now I must warn the house that he will close the debate.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): I should like to say a short word on this. It seems we are not likely to be given these documents, because the minister says they are not readily available, and in any case it is not the custom to disclose them. I am inclined to agree with what has been said. However, some good may yet come out of this discussion. It is important, of course, that consultations between Canada and the United States on these matters should be of a confidential nature. Apparently in this case somebody shot off his mouth. I wonder whether any steps have been taken at this end, perhaps only in the form of a polite request, to ensure that a similar breach of confidence will not occur again. This is not the first case in which there have been such disclosures. It is not the first case where bulletins have appeared in newspapers after private consultations of an important nature, discussions which the minister himself has said must be kept secret. Why has there been this chatter from the other side of the line? It occurs to me that if the officials here were to take up this matter and lodge a protest with their counterparts in the United States, then the official concerned who made the breach in security would get kicked twice as hard. If we could get that kick across to someone in the United States the discussion today might not have been without value.

Mr. Langlois: I agree with the hon. member who has just spoken, that on a number of occasions we read in newspapers published on the other side of the line information which concerns us, first of all, and it is depressing to find that our neighbours get this information before we do.

The minister told me that the Russians had paid the grain exchanges involved in this transaction. Could the minister tell me whether the sums paid to the grain exchanges were included in the total price of the wheat or whether it was something additional that we knew nothing about.

Mr. Sharp: The prices at which the Canadian wheat board made wheat available to the agents who purchased wheat on behalf of the Soviet union were prices at fixed points in Canada. Those were the wheat board prices. The agents who act on behalf of the Soviet union compete with each other in offering to move the wheat from those points to the Soviet union at the lowest possible rates. The estimates I have given from time to time as to the value of this transaction were based on prices fixed by the Canadian wheat board and did not include any of the other charges paid by the Soviet union for moving the wheat.

Mr. Langlois: Was any Canadian grain exchange involved in these transactions?

Mr. Sharp: As I understand it, the Soviet union engaged a great many agents and these possibly included some companies which have their head offices in Canada.

Mr. Macdonald: On a point of order, there are some members on this side who might wish to say something on this motion if the hon. member wishes to proceed with it. I wonder if it would be possible to get unanimous consent to allowing the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) to make an additional statement without closing the debate on this particular motion?

Mr. Clancy: I would like to ask the minister if the Russians belong to the international wheat agreement. I should like to ask him to table in this house the price paid at the lakehead for this grain. This is important to us.

Mr. Sharp: I will be very happy to table the price list of the Canadian wheat board on the day the Soviet union purchased wheat, but I am not going to reveal here, for reasons which I have given on many occasions, the details of the transaction with the Soviet union because I believe that to do so would be contrary to the interests of the western farmers.

Mr. Langlois: We know the price set by the wheat board. It fixes the price. Is it possible to obtain information as to what the grain exchanges, whether Russian or Canadian, received in connection with this deal? If the commission were too high, that might influence some of our sales abroad. Can the minister say what the commission was? I should like to know if it is possible to get information about their profit on this sale.

Mr. Sharp: I think the western farmers did very well out of this transaction and I am happy to be associated with it. The question the hon. member is asking is what commissions were paid to various agents of the Canadian wheat board and of the Soviet union. I am not in a position to give this information.

Mr. Langlois: Even with regard to internal transport from western to eastern Canada, we want to find out how much profit the grain exchanges made on this transaction. If it were excessive it might be one reason why some of the contracts have fallen through in the past ten years.

Mr. Sharp: This cross-examination must be very irregular. I suggest that these are the kind of questions which ought to be directed to the Canadian wheat board when representatives of the board appear before the committee on agriculture. I do not think it is fair to ask a minister for information in this detail on the kind of motion we have before us.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am afraid I shall have to call the attention of the house to the procedure we are adopting here. I feel this is extremely irregular. Maybe we can get back to the point at issue.

[Mr. Macdonald.]

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask another question on this subject. I have not had an opportunity to do so and I think it is only fair and proper. Statements have been made by the minister concerning the wheat price on the day on which the sale was made to Russia. I have not got the exact Winnipeg wheat price in Canadian funds but I do have the March futures price at Chicago, which was $2.08. In Canadian funds that means about $2.20 a bushel. I should like to have the attention of the minister. Taking the price which was leaked from Washington of $1.74 at the lakehead, the difference between $1.74 and $2.20 is 46 cents a bushel.

When I came back to the house on the 30th of September I asked the minister what sacrifice had to be made in order to close the wheat deal with Russia. We all know that when a buyer walks in to buy a million bushels he will pay a certain price. He might pay the price of the board on that particular day, to which the minister keeps referring. But if he is buying 227 million bushels he will ask for a better price. I think I was perfectly within my rights on that occasion to ask the minister what sacrifice had been made in order to close the deal with the Russians.

I have given the minister the figure for the U.S. March future which, after taking the exchange rate into consideration, means a spread of about 46 cents a bushel. I would hope there was not such a spread but we are not getting any information from the minister. I think we are going to have to keep at this thing until we get some indication because the farmers of the west are asking for the information. My mail is full of questions as to what the price was and how it is related to the price of $1.74 which was leaked from the United States. I can tell the minister now that if he sold the wheat at $1.74 there will not be a Liberal elected west of the great lakes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I must remind the house again that the Chair has been very lenient in the argument that has been going on. I want first to remind the house that we are not in committee at this stage. Second, I want to remind the house that this is not a question of the operation of the government or the operation of the wheat board but rather a question of whether the papers referred to in the motion should be tabled. I think we should confine our debate to the question before us.

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Does he remember that last year—

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. If the hon. gentleman is rising to make a speech on the motion I will be pleased to hear him, but I feel I cannot permit a series of questions as if the house were in committee.

[Translation]

Mr. Chapdelaine: Very well, Mr. Speaker, I will make a few brief remarks in the form of questions.

I wish to draw the attention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to the fact that last year, the then minister of agriculture, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton), when asked the price of the wheat sold to China, always replied that he did not want to reveal it because such disclosure might affect the transactions of the Canadian wheat board with foreign countries. At that time, all the Conservative members strongly supported the stand taken by the minister of agriculture.

That is why, I wonder through what mental process or acrobatics those same Conservative members can insist so strongly today to know the price of the wheat, when they always refused to give such information themselves.

[Text]

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether any other member wishes to speak on this motion—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order.

Mr. Macdonald: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to suggest that if the hon. member is not going to withdraw his motion other members on this side of the house would like to speak. Perhaps the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue could speak on the point of order to indicate whether or not he wishes to proceed or whether it will be necessary for us to continue the debate.

Mr. Martineau: On the point of order raised by the hon. member for Rosedale, I should like to make the following remarks. First of all, I think that the statement made by the minister has been very helpful and has certainly thrown a lot of light on this situation. I wish to thank him for his statement and also for the assurances he has given in regard to the existence or non-existence of the documents. Because of those assurances I am quite agreeable to withdrawing my motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Is the house agreed that the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue should withdraw his motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

PRIVATE BILLS

CANADIAN UNION CONFERENCE CORPORATION OF SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTISTS

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Durham) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-36, respecting The Canadian Union Conference Corporation of Seventh-day Adventists.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to move the second reading of Bill No. S-36, an act respecting the Canadian Union Conference Corporation of Seventh-day Adventists. In the township of Darlington at the westerly extremity of my riding we are pleased to have many members of this church, and in the city of Oshawa, only a block or two west of the westerly limit of my riding, is located the administrative offices of the Seventh-day Adventist church in Canada as well as a large modern new church and a college.

The Seventh-day Adventists are known throughout the world for their missionary work not only in the spreading of the gospel but in the practice of medicine, the administration and construction of hospitals and general assistance to mankind, both spiritual and material, in all parts of the globe. The Seventh-day Adventist church is a Protestant Christian denomination. The movement had its beginning early in the 19th century and the church was officially organized in 1860. Today members of this church are found everywhere across our nation and there are over a million and a quarter members around the globe.

Hon. members will have studied the bill now before the house and I will not go into details with respect to its provisions. The bill amends the legislation enacted in 1955 which created the Canadian Union Conference Corporation of Seventh-day Adventists, which is the corporate entity representing the Seventh-day Adventist church in Canada. Clause 1 of the bill changes the somewhat cumbersome name of the Canadian Union Conference Corporation of Seventh-day Adventists to the shorter name of the Seventh-day Adventist Church in Canada or Eglise Adventiste du Septieme Jour au Canada.

Clause 2 removes the limitation on the powers of the corporation to hold land. Clause 3 enlarges and clarifies the powers of the corporation in connection with the printing and distribution of works for religious education, art and science. Clause 4 of the bill makes it clear that the regular general meetings of the corporation need be held only once in every four years. Thus, the general meeting may then be held at the same time as the quadriennial general conference of the church.

Generally then, Mr. Speaker, this bill is designed to update the legislation, to bring it more into conformity with general corporate practice as well as with the current requirements of the corporation, if it is to function as efficiently as possible for the church which it represents in Canada.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I am in favour of the change in name and the acquisition of the French name, which is a simpler one than this organization had before. Could the hon. member who has just resumed his seat possibly give more information as to when this organization was started and the provisions for the acquisition of land by the corporation? Does the corporation intend to extend its land holdings, and how much does it hold now? I should like some more information about the financial aspect because the religious aspect does not concern me.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): I should advise the house that if the hon. member speaks now, he will close the debate.

Mr. Honey: I thank the hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Langlois) for his question. As I mentioned previously, this corporation, the Canadian Union Conference Corporation of Seventh-day Adventists, was incorporated in 1955. As I understand it, and I stand to be corrected, provision was made in the act of incorporation for the holding of land by the corporation. If this bill is referred to the standing committee, perhaps I can get my hon. friend more precise information. Now, like many corporations of a religious nature, with charitable and religious objectives, there was a limitation on the power to hold land in the incorporating statute. From time to time permission has been granted by the other place for the enlargement of the land holdings by this corporation.

As I understand it now, clause 2 of this bill will make it possible for this corporation to acquire other lands and generally to extend its holdings throughout Canada without the necessity for coming back to obtain legislative authority. This will give the corporation authority to acquire and hold land.

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. May I remind the hon. gentleman that the house was warned that if the hon. member for Durham spoke he would close the debate. Therefore, I cannot allow any further debate on this question.

Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

Mr. MacNaught: I suggest that by unanimous consent we call it six o'clock because it would be unfair to ask any hon. gentleman to start on his bill in the few minutes left at our disposal.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Is it agreed that we call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 7 p.m.

The Chairman: Order, house again in committee of supply, vote No. 1, Department of Fisheries.

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES

1. Departmental administration, $461,000.

The Chairman: Shall item 1 carry?

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, in introducing the estimates of the Department of Fisheries this evening it is my intention to make a few remarks in connection with the work done by my department. First I would like to say a few words as to the present standing of the fishing industry. In 1953 Canadian commercial fishermen landed about 1.8 billion pounds of fish and shellfish, valued at $91 million. In the succeeding ten years landings showed an upward trend which, however, was not consistent from year to year. The annual variations within the trend were largely accounted for by the output of the British Columbia herring fishery and the Newfoundland cod fishery. Despite the rather uneven course of annual landings over this period there was a discernible growth in the value of such landings—that is, in the gross returns to fishermen—and by 1962 this had reached almost $130 million, an increase of $41 million in a period of approximately ten years, or an increase of 43 per cent, most of which was recorded in the last three years.

This satisfying expansion in gross returns to fishermen in the last few years is based, however, upon a general increase in the prices of the important species, which in turn has resulted from the growing demand for fishery products, principally in Canada and the United States. As we all know, about 80 per cent of the production of Canadian fish processing plants is consumed on this continent, so there is no doubt of the importance of North American consumers to the Canadian fishing industry. The value of exports to the United States in 1962 was $114 million, which is about half of the plant or commercial value of the fishery products of this country. The size of the North American market for fishery products is often described by reference to estimates of per capita consumption of 13½ pounds per person in Canada and about 11 pounds in the United States at the present time. As I have mentioned in this house in previous years, I do not think we should be satisfied with such a limited consumption of fish per capita in a country where the fishing industry is of major importance. We all know that these averages have been quite stable for several years, and this stability is sometimes cited in support of the pessimistic views about consumer acceptance of fishery products on this continent.

With the north American population growing at an annual rate of about 3.5 million, however, the per capita figures obscure an absolute growth in fish consumption of 40 million to 45 million pounds of products each year. This increase in the demand for fishery products requires, on the basis of rough estimation, an additional 80 million to 90 million pounds of raw material. These estimates indicate the magnitude of the additional supply of fish and shellfish required by north American consumers each year and the need for an increased production. The strength or weakness of the continental market has an obvious implication for the Canadian fishing industry. Thus far 1963 has followed the pattern of recent years. Landings for the first eight months are estimated to be 77 million pounds larger than in the same period of 1962. The landed value, however, is about $4.5 million less. On the surface this would seem to contradict what I said earlier about the course of prices. However, the drop in value is attributable principally to the restriction of the salmon catch in British Columbia during the industrial dispute which took place a few months ago. The value of British Columbia salmon landings alone, up to August this year, was $6.6 million less than it was in the first eight months of 1962. This is also reflected in the size of the total pack, which is 1.2 million cases this year as compared with 1.8 million cases last year. This gives only a partial picture of the effect this strike had, not only on the value of fish production in British Columbia but also on the total economy of that province, which it is estimated has lost well over $10 million. In the Atlantic provinces landings for the first eight months of this year were 48 million pounds larger than in the same period of 1962, and the landed value increased by $3.6 million. These figures represent a continuation of the trend referred to earlier, and which is at least part of the reason for the investment activity which has been pronounced in the region over the last 18 months. Several new plants have been built in Quebec, New Brunswick and Newfoundland, and others are under construction in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. Nineteen large trawlers, over 100 feet in length, have been added to the ground fish fleet, and 11 large draggers to the scallop fleet in the same period.

The demand for fishery products has not only led to higher prices for the additional traditional Atlantic species, but also to efforts to capture and market new species such as the porbeagle and tuna. I am sure all hon. members of the house know what a porbeagle is. It is what is commonly called the mackerel shark. This trend may well continue as more and more effort is exerted upon traditional stocks of ground fish not only by the expanded Canadian fleet, but also by those from other countries.

As hon. members all know, the principal commercial fisheries in Canada are found along our extensive sea coasts. Some of the resources, such as lobster on the Atlantic coast, are localized in areas close to our shores. Others, such as cod, roam over wide areas of the Atlantic ocean in the territorial waters of Canada, as well as hundreds of miles out to the edge of the continental shelf. These fisheries on our east coast have been exploited for several centuries by the fishermen of Europe and the United States, as well as by those of Canada.

Mr. Clancy: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Robichaud: Similarly, on our Pacific coast the fishery resources—

The Chairman: Order. Is the hon. member rising to ask a question?

Mr. Clancy: What I suggest is that the minister have unanimous consent of the house to have his speech printed in Hansard, and get on with the business of the house.

Mr. Robichaud: Well, Mr. Chairman, I know the hon. member is keenly interested in the fishing problems of our country—

Mr. Clancy: I certainly am.

Mr. Robichaud: —and I am sure he would be willing to change his mind and listen to the few remarks I have to make. As I said, similarly on our Pacific coast the fishery resources on which the Canadian fishing industry depends are accessible to foreign fishermen far beyond Canadian territorial waters. Means must be found to provide adequate protection for these resources so as to assure a sustained yield to present and future generations of Canadian fishermen. For this purpose the government has taken steps to establish a 12-mile exclusive fishery zone along the whole of Canada's coast line, and to implement the straight base-line system as the basis from which Canada's territorial sea and the exclusive fisheries zone will be measured.

Because of treaty rights of certain countries and claims to historic fishing rights of others, discussions with the interested countries have been initiated, with the view to determining the nature and extent of the rights and interests which may be affected by the action which Canada is taking.

As the Prime Minister indicated in his statement last June, it is our hope and belief that we will be able to reach agreement with such countries on mutually satisfactory arrangements.

However, as I mentioned above, resources harvested by Canadian fishermen are also exploited by fishermen of other countries or are accessible to them in the high seas many miles beyond the 12-mile fishing zone. It is therefore necessary to reach agreements with the countries concerned for the protection of these resources. In addition to several treaties which we have with the United States on management of fishery resources of common concern, Canada is a party to two multilateral conventions of great importance to the fishing industries on both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of Canada.

On the Pacific coast, the north Pacific fisheries convention between Canada, Japan and the United States, which was brought into force in 1953, has come up for revision at the request of the Japanese government. As I have already informed the house, two conferences have been held, one in Washington last June and the other in Tokyo last month. So far it has not been possible to reach full agreement on a revision which could be accepted by the three countries, but as I reported in my statement to the house on October 9, the Tokyo meeting recessed with a feeling of optimism regarding agreement on a mutually satisfactory convention. The government is hopeful that the recessed conference may be held in Ottawa next spring, and is taking appropriate steps for that purpose. In the meantime, and I want to emphasize this, the present convention remains in force.

On the Atlantic seaboard the problems of conservation of the resources harvested in the high seas adjacent to our waters are being taken care of by the northwest Atlantic fisheries commission, composed of representatives of 13 nations who are parties to this convention. At the last meeting in June of this year of the commission, on the initiative of Canada an amendment of the convention was proposed, which would make possible the establishment of control measures in the enforcement of conservation regulations.

In the great lakes the lamprey control program of the great lakes fishery commission continues to show encouraging results. In lake Superior over 80 per cent control has been obtained and there are signs of recovery in the important lake trout population. Extension of the control program in lake Michigan and lake Huron is to be continued. Progress made by the commission since its establishment in 1955 is to be reviewed by the contracting parties this year, to determine the desirability of continuing, modifying or terminating the convention, and we are hopeful that the results so far will mean we will carry on with the work which to date has proven so successful.

I wish to speak for a few moments on the modernization, mechanization and expansion of the fishing industry. Many fishing nations are making tremendous progress not only to increase the fishing efficiency of their respective fleets and to expand their fishing operations, but to improve the working conditions of their fishermen, ensure their safety at sea and also improve their earnings.

Just as other industries are moving into the age of electronics and automation, so is the fishing industry. Today even small boats are installing electronic equipment, while the larger deep sea fishing vessels are becoming complex units with electronic navigation, fish-finding and communication equipment, as well as remote control systems and automatic pilots. This in turn means that the need for vocational training within the industry is assuming a position of critical importance.

Recently we have seen where the department's activities in co-operation with the provinces have resulted in the introduction of synthetic fishing gear on the Atlantic coast. Thousands of fishermen who have been engaged in traditional fishing methods are changing to a new type of fishing operation which is resulting in an increase in their per capita landings.

Studies are now being conducted aimed at providing fishermen with an improved design of inshore boat featuring maximum safety, and which will enable a more effective prosecution of the inshore fishery. The department is encouraging the development of a commercial tuna fishery on the east and west coasts, which it is hoped will ultimately lead to the establishment of a permanent tuna fishery in Canada.

The technical services of the department are being made available to the provincial fisheries administrations and to the fishing industry in an increasing extent. Any provincial or industrial enterprise encountering problems in any phase of the fishing industry is invited to seek technical advice from the department.

In addressing the annual meeting of the Fisheries Council of Canada on April 24 last, a few days after resuming the office of Minister of Fisheries, I announced that I proposed to call a federal provincial conference on fisheries development. I then wrote to the ministers responsible for fisheries matters in all ten provinces inviting them to participate in such a conference. I asked the ministers to submit any suggestions they might have for agenda items to be considered at such a conference. I received a most enthusiastic response from all provinces and a long list of very useful suggestions. Earlier this week we had the visit of the minister of fisheries for New Brunswick and his deputy minister. This morning we had with us the minister of industry for the province of Prince Edward Island and his director of fisheries, and both have presented their views and suggestions for this conference.

On this basis, arrangements have been made for the conference, which is now scheduled to take place in Ottawa during the week of January 20, 1964. At this conference all aspects of federal and provincial fisheries administration having a bearing on development of the industry will be discussed. It will be our objective to work out with the provinces the best possible approach to provide those services which are necessary to encourage expansion and development of the industry. It will be our endeavour to overcome impediments to development wherever or whatever they may be. The Canadian fishing industry has made real progress over the last decade, but I am convinced that with a co-ordinated program and encouragement a great deal more can be done toward fully utilizing the sea and fresh water resources available to us. The business of catching, processing and marketing fish is a responsibility of private enterprise, but governments through research, the discovery, testing and demonstration of new techniques, the provision of vocational training as required and in other ways, can play a part in achieving maximum results. In the meantime I have been fortunate in having had the opportunity to discuss those questions personally with most of the provincial ministers concerned. I have no doubt whatever that this first national conference on fisheries will prove extremely useful to all concerned and that the national development program which will follow will result in an unprecedented expansion for Canadian fisheries.

The estimates for the department's conservation and development service are, of course, mainly designed to cover normal supply, replacement and maintenance of the protection organization and the established programs in fish culture. These programs are essential for the maintenance of our fisheries and must be continued vigorously. I am sure that most hon. members know of the important work that is being carried out in Canada by the fisheries research board. These research activities fall into three main categories, and broadly may be summarized as research in aquatic biology dealing mainly with fish, research in oceanography and limnology, and research in fisheries technology.

Without going into the full operations of the board at this time I should like to point up some of the work that is being carried out. This year a spring survey was conducted of distribution and abundance of Pacific salmon in the open waters. This shows promise of having real value in forecasting supplies of salmon by species and area on the British Columbia coast which would be of great value to fishing operations.

Expansion of fisheries research has been possible during the past few months through the activities of the board's research vessel, the G. B. Reed, in the Pacific ocean. In its first year of operation the vessel explored potential fishing areas for ground fish and crustaceans in the north gulf of Alaska. A continuing study is being carried out of the oceans as a home for fish covering such subjects as seasonal and year to year variability in temperature and salinity, etc., and the board's work in this field is co-ordinated with other government departments and universities through the Canadian committee on oceanography.

Fisheries research presently going on in Atlantic coast waters includes bottom surveys, which are providing useful forecasts of stock concentrations as a guide to fishing places and times. Studies on the processing of inshore cod in the Newfoundland area has been concentrated and given new direction. The physiological condition of fresh caught fish is found to have an important effect on the shelf life and taste of the final products. Methods of impounding the cod to avoid seasonal gluts, pasteurization by gamma irradiation, freeze drying, and a freeze-thaw-refreeze sequence are all under study.

New products, such as fish sausage and fish pancakes, have been developed from freshwater species in the technological laboratories of the board, and these processing methods are now available to processors for commercial use. A new method has also been developed for producing protein concentrate, commonly called fish flour, which has resulted in a product acceptable as human food. The raw material employed in the production of this product can be fish that are of little use at present, or materials that are now being discarded.

Only through maintaining the highest quality in fish and shellfish products can sales be increased at both the domestic and export levels. The department, in co-operation with industry itself, provides inspection services for this purpose. I am happy to report that there has been a continued increase in the acceptance by industry of the voluntary inspection of fresh and frozen fishery products under the Canadian government specification board standards. Consumers also appear to be more aware of the assurance of highest quality given by the maple leaf design on these inspected products.

The Canadian scallop industry has grown at a very rapid rate during recent years. In order that this industry may maintain its reputation for high quality, standards for scallop meat were established following consultation with industry. Compulsory inspection of scallops, including the plants in which they are processed, is now in effect. Further inspection measures have been introduced in other fields.

So that a better service can be given to the inspection of fishery products in northern British Columbia, a permanent fish inspection laboratory service has been made available at Prince Rupert. Because of the very high price attained by lobster, there has been over the years a problem of illegal fishing and processing of this species. The intensified efforts of the department's protection officers coupled with the added check by fish inspection officers appears to have greatly curtailed this illegal operation. An education program has been introduced which has had some result, but I am not satisfied that we have gone far enough. It is our intention to introduce a more practical and effective education program which we hope will reach the fishermen concerned and make them aware that we are introducing such protective measures for their own benefit and that of future generations. The department is continuing its program of consumer education to bring about a greater use of fish and fishery products in Canadian homes and institutions, and other establishments which cater to group feeding.

Thousands of individual copies of fishery consumer publications are distributed annually by the department's home economists who are strategically located across Canada, and the large number that are requested indicate a growing interest in the use of fish in regular menus. That there is much more interest in using fishery products is also reflected in the number of Canadians who have purchased from the queen's printer the department's large consumer publication entitled "The Canadian Fish Cook Book". This book now going into its fourth printing in English and third in French is one of the queen's printers best sellers.

Audio visual aids, such as film strips and slides, are being widely used by the department to interest and educate the consumer about fishery products, and a stepped up program in this field is being contemplated. At the moment the department has over 550 consumer film strips of five different titles in circulation. The excellence of these film strips which have been produced by the national film board for the department is evidenced by the fact that three of them have won awards at the American film festival in competition with others from many other countries.

Another way in which the department continues to interest those responsible for planning menus to use more fishery products is by the attendance of its home economists at hotel, restaurant, home economic and dietetic conventions. Consumer displays are manned by home economists at these events.

The evolution of fishing and processing methods in various fisheries fields has been spurred in a significant manner by the activities of the department in collaboration with other fisheries agencies, and it is planned to speed the reporting of these new findings to the attention of primary producers through publications and by visual means when possible. Coupled with this will be a greater use of instructional and educational material among fishermen both in printed form and through displays at exhibitions and other events frequented by those in the fishing industry.

In order to keep pace with rising construction costs, the upper limit of value for vessels eligible to come under the low cost insurance of the fishermen's indemnity plan has been increased from $10,000 to $12,500. This plan has been widely accepted by fishermen. Currently 6,634 vessels valued at $22.5 million are covered. Over the ten years of operation, indemnity payments under the vessel plan have exceeded premium revenue by $126,000 or only $12,600 per year despite the low premium rate of only 1 per cent of appraised value.

This has been but a brief look at some aspects of Canada's fisheries and the efforts that are being made to place this great industry on a sound financial footing so that it may make an even greater contribution to the welfare of the thousands of our people who look to it for their livelihood, and to the nutritional well-being of Canadians.

However, in concluding, there is one further aspect to which I should like to refer for a moment and that is the human element—the fishermen who reap the harvests of the oceans and of our lakes. It is with deep sadness each year that we see men going down to the sea never to return as both our coastal waters and the deeper depths take their toll of lives. It is a tribute to the courage and hardihood of our fishing force that their ranks continue to be strong and enduring. This is a sobering thought, but it is one that urges us to continue our efforts in those fields which will lead to development of fishing craft and gear and other vital equipment which will bring greater measures of safety, comfort and remuneration to our fishermen.

I may have spoken at some length but I felt this was an occasion to put before members of the committee some of the work which has been done by my department. We have in the Department of Fisheries a number of devoted civil servants who have the interests of the fishing industry at heart. As the estimates proceed, I will be in a position to answer the questions which will be put to me by hon. members.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Chairman, first, I wish to congratulate the minister upon his opening statement. I must say it is an experience one always remembers to have the first opportunity of presenting estimates as a minister of the crown, before the committee of the whole.

In his closing remarks, the minister referred to the devoted services which the officials of the Department of Fisheries have given to Canada over the years. If I may digress for a moment, I should like to point out in passing that these estimates were prepared under the direction of the former deputy minister, Mr. George Clark. It was his expectation that he would be the adviser to the minister concerned when they were being piloted through the house. We are all aware of his untimely and sudden death in Tokyo while in the service of the department and I think all members of the committee would wish to join with me in expressing sympathy to his widow and children. I should like to mention, also, that in common, I think, with all members of this committee I wish his successor every success in the duties which fall to him in this important field, the fishing industry in Canada. He has with him one of the finest groups of civil servants of which any country could boast in the fishing field and it is a credit to us that the chairman of the fisheries research board, who recently retired from that position, has gone on to another very important position in the United States. I wish his successor, too, every good fortune in his new responsibilities.

The estimates which have been presented and which are being examined by the committee tonight are, of course, the estimates which we prepared when I was the minister responsible for the department. They were approved by the treasury board of the government of that day as well as by the government itself. We approved them then, and I speak on behalf of the official opposition when I say we approve them now. We have no intention of prolonging the examination of these estimates on this occasion. I might say, though, that the minister is fortunate tonight, because I suspect this is the best set of estimates he will ever have the honour to present.

All this is not to ignore the responsibility and the opportunity of directing the attention of the committee and, perhaps, of the country, to the important problems which face our fishing industry at the present time. As the proceedings go on, one or two other members of this party will be making brief contributions to the discussion. We reserve the right to take full part in any debate which may develop, should the proceedings be drawn out by members of the committee in other parties.

There is another reason why my remarks will be brief. Because this is an election year we are now far advanced in this fiscal year to which these estimates apply, and eight twelfths of them have, in fact, been granted already by means of interim supply votes. Though this does not limit the right to debate them fully, it means we are far advanced in the fiscal year and the estimates for 1964-65 which are, no doubt, now in the course of preparation are really more current than are the ones we are examining at the present time. In addition, these new estimates should be before the committee, I would think, in the early winter months. At that time we will have an opportunity to examine in more detail the indications of any changes in policy which may have resulted from the views of the new government and they will be judged fairly, we think, but on their merits, be they good or bad.

In passing I want to mention a general subject which the minister has dealt with having to do with the importance of the fishing industry in Canada. The fishing industry in Canada has been remaining fairly constant over the last few years, in common with those of some of the other important fishing countries of the world, but in terms of percentage of the world's fish catch Canada is dropping down. This is partly due to the natural development of some of the highly populated countries of the world. Great strides have been made in those countries in developing means of reaping the resources of the seas as a source of protein food.

But this brings into focus perhaps the most important problem of the industry. The living resources of the sea, unlike almost any other natural resource, are common resources. They are owned in common not only by the people of one country but by those of all countries of the world—in other words, by humanity as a whole. One of the great problems that has to be solved in the future is the finding of a rational and reasonable means of fair exploitation of these resources and the carrying on jointly of reasonable conservation methods by the countries of the world to preserve these common resources to be exploited by all.

In this connection, as the minister pointed out, we are a party to seven different fisheries treaties, I believe. These treaties have to be renegotiated. Conferences are constantly being held in connection with them and this puts a very great load on the departmental officials. The department is in a unique situation in this regard. It is relatively small but it has these great responsibilities. I would recommend most strongly that the government give consideration to setting up in the Department of Fisheries a special branch to deal continuously with our international obligations. It is a matter that has been given brief consideration in the past but the situation is becoming more complicated. I hope this suggestion will not be lost sight of because I believe these great responsibilities place an unreasonable load on the administrative officers of the department who have their regular duties to perform as well as safeguarding Canada's interests in this connection.

This is a very important and complex problem. Some people may believe that we can preserve our interests in this regard simply by extending our territorial waters. This is of some advantage but it does not meet the problem by any means because fish are no respecters of boundaries. Many species migrate over wide areas of the ocean.

[Mr. MacLean (Queens).]

Those types of fish which spend their entire life cycle in the high seas are, of course, a truly common resource and there is the problem of sharing them reasonably between ourselves and other countries.

But the situation is much more complicated than that. Some of our most valuable species of fish are, of course, fish that spend part of their lives in our territorial waters and part in our national fresh waters. Certain rivers are reserved to a great extent in a state that will permit the generation of new stocks of the species which then spend most of their lives in the ocean. We have the problem of establishing our proprietary interest in those stocks of fish that exist because of special measures, some of which are quite expensive, which we as a nation have taken. With respect to the north Pacific fisheries treaty, I hope it will be possible for Canada to maintain the abstention principle in this connection.

As I have pointed out, although Canada's fishing industry has remained quite healthy other nations have expanded their fishing industries at a tremendous rate. Over the last 10 years the fishing industry of Japan has grown by about 77 per cent and that of the U.S.S.R. has more than doubled. Therefore we are in a very competitive field and I am pleased that the minister has noted the importance of developing new and more efficient methods of catching, processing and marketing fish.

In this connection he also noted the expansion in the building of new types of fishing vessels on both coasts. This stimulation of the shipbuilding industry is due in part to the subsidization of the industry and I am glad it is bearing fruit as it appears to be. As is generally known, this policy was instituted by the previous government.

This leads me to the point of stating that there are many facilities and services for the fishing industry which are supplied by other departments, but I will not discuss them at the present time except to mention that the Deparment of Public Works, the Department of Transport and the Department of Labour all have an interest in the fishing industry. Taxpayers' money is being spent through these other departments to some extent for the benefit of the fishing industry, so it is not fair to assume that the items appearing under the Department of Fisheries represent the only money that Canada is spending in the interests of the industry.

I mentioned in passing the fact that the extension of our territorial waters is of considerable interest to the fishing industry. I believe this will solve certain problems but it will not solve others. In this connection the government has announced its intention to extend Canada's territorial waters to 12 miles within the year. I hope the minister will take under advisement the importance of strengthening our protective service so that we can properly police the additional areas of water. I know he will have an ardent ally in his colleague, the Secretary of State, when he tries to get additional sums approved by treasury board for this purpose. In this connection I think it is even more important that action be taken to make certain without any doubt that such bodies of water as the gulf of St. Lawrence, the bay of Fundy, Dixon entrance and Hecate strait are established to be Canadian national waters and our property.

There are many other important factors and situations which I should like to discuss for a little while tonight. However, as I said, it is not our intention to prolong the examination of these estimates unnecessarily. So, Mr. Chairman, I will leave any further remarks I might have until a later time when the individual items are called or, if the committee is in a co-operative mood and wishes to pass the estimates rapidly tonight, I would be quite content to leave any further remarks I might have on this important subject until the estimates for the next fiscal year are before the committee.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I think the first thing I should do in a public way is extend congratulations to the minister upon his appointment to this cabinet position. I did that by way of correspondence on April 27 in a letter which contained a reference to other things. So far, I have not had a reply from the minister, so perhaps he should check back on his correspondence to see what happened to that letter and deal with the other matters in it.

I was interested in listening to the introductory remarks of the minister. They seemed to be composed mostly of a recitation of statistics and screenings from various departmental publications that had been issued over the years, especially this past year. When it came to an announcement of any definite policy that the fisheries department expected to promote, or what the government hoped to accomplish by its fisheries policy, we found the minister's speech just as barren as many of the fish-hooks of the fishermen when they pull them from the water. The only exception was a reference by the minister to a federal-provincial conference on fisheries matters which, if I understood him correctly, is to be held on January 20 next year. This is welcome news. I wish the Minister of Public Works would act with the same alacrity in promoting a federal-provincial conference on highways, and that the Prime Minister would take cognizance of the actions of the Minister of Fisheries and do what he said he was going to do about a federal-provincial conference on Indian affairs. In any event, I hope that out of this conference there does come something concrete, something worth while, something that could point the way for this government in the years ahead in so far as policy matters are concerned.

We in the New Democratic party have had an interest in fisheries for quite some length of time, both at the federal and provincial levels. Over the years we have made many proposals, some of which were ridiculed at the time they were made. Some of them now are in the process of being accepted. The minister referred to one such proposal, namely the breadth of our territorial seas. I am sure many members of this house, if they will look back a few years, will recall when I, on behalf of this party, introduced a bill to extend the territorial sea to 12 miles on a unilateral basis the proposal was ridiculed by members in all parts of the house. Now, the principle seems to be accepted, and this is precisely what we are attempting to do.

I would remind the minister that, in respect of the announcement to extend the territorial sea to 12 miles, there was a specific campaign promise by his party that the territorial sea would include Hecate strait on the west coast. I hope the minister and his colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs remember this promise when it comes time to actually make the pronouncement. I do not think we should look upon the 12 mile limit, as it is referred to, as the solution for all problems confronting the fishing industry in Canada. Certainly, it is not. It is a solution for some species of fish, bottom fish and the like, but not for all of them. We should never lose sight of this fact.

So far as we are concerned, I think we could enunciate some of the objectives, some of the goals which the department and the minister should have in mind. These should be clearly established as the guideposts for what we do in fisheries matters in the years ahead. The first one is to look upon fisheries resources as we do upon all renewable resources, from the point of view of conservation to ensure that future generations will have the opportunity to exploit this natural resource just as we do today. Second, we should promote the extensive exploitation of these resources within the bounds established by the conservation principle. In doing this, we should take cognizance of the fact that there is this tremendous population explosion, as it has been called. This increase in population automatically creates increased pressure to find additional sources of food. This increased demand for food is automatically pressuring nations into searching the sea for the additional food that is required.

Recently the United Nations released some figures in respect of this, and perhaps I could refer to them very briefly. In the period from 1948 to 1960 the increase in the supply of meat was 19 per cent. During that same period, the increase in the world supply of fish, as distinct from meat, was close to 50 per cent. This indicates the tremendous increase in the world supply of fish within a 12-year period. It also indicates the tremendous increase in the catch and in the interest of other nations.

As the minister has just indicated, other countries are developing bigger fishing fleets, bigger boats, floating canneries, and so on. All of these things create increased pressure upon the fisheries resources that are available throughout the world. Different species of fish are influenced in different ways by this. Some of our species, for instance salmon and herring, migrate out to sea, while others stay close to the shore where we are able to protect them. Our salmon and herring, being migratory, are vulnerable to the increased activity and pressure on our fisheries by other nations. Perhaps one nation concerned is a nation involved in the north Pacific fisheries commission to which the minister referred.

I think what we must do, having in mind this increased pressure on the fisheries of the world, is to bend our efforts towards a concentration of activity on international agreements to ensure that the conservation measures we engage in at home are not destroyed by wanton fishing on the high seas by other nations, to ensure that throughout the world there is some sense of reasonableness in the exploitation of our fisheries. I should like to make some comments on the north Pacific fisheries treaty itself, and, specifically on the recommendation which the commission made about a year ago to the effect that Japan should be permitted to fish for herring off the west coast of the Queen Charlotte islands and the eastern Bering sea.

I think it is very regrettable that after all the discussion and the interest that brewed up over this particular question the Liberal party, by a sleight of hand process, agreed to those recommendations in the manner in which they did. The impression was at least left, if it was not specifically stated, that this subject matter and this question would be referred to the marine and fisheries committee so that a thorough investigation could be made into it before the recommendations were dealt with one way or the other. But on the eve of parliament meeting—about a week before—by a secret method, and not by an open, declared order in council, this government put into effect the recommendations of the commission of last fall and announced them by telephone, not by way of any formal communication. It is unfortunate that at the very moment the minister was in Vancouver meeting and discussing with delegations from the various sections of the fishing industry this vitally important question, in the back of his mind he was preparing the way to proceed in order to recommend the acceptance of these recommendations. We would like to have in these matters some above-the-table dealings, some confidence in the government in this regard, so that the people of this nation and especially this parliament know just what is taking place. Specifically we would like to know about the north Pacific fisheries negotiations and what steps are being taken to deal with other nations of the world in agreements relating to the fisheries of the world.

One of the specific campaign promises of the Liberal party—another one—was that the Soviet union would definitely be brought into the north Pacific treaty. We know that the Soviet union contributes to the fishery stocks of the north Pacific; we know that she has a high seas fishing fleet; we know that she ranges a long way over to this side of the Pacific ocean in her fisheries and research work. There is nothing whatever to stop the Soviet union cruising in to within three miles of our shore, as it is now, or 12 miles when the 12 mile limit is established—it does not really matter which it is—and lying in wait for salmon which are waiting in our waters to come home to spawn, scooping them up and leaving nothing for future generations. The only thing that deters Japan, for instance, engaging in this sort of activity is, as the minister stated, the north Pacific fisheries treaty. The Liberal party realized this during an election campaign period, made a specific promise about it, and so far we have not heard a single, solitary word about what steps this government is taking to put into effect what was a reasonable, legitimate and sensible campaign promise.

We inquired of the minister about it earlier this session. His answer at that time was generally to the effect that maybe this matter was being discussed in Washington, and perhaps he should not say any more about it until those meetings were concluded. We would like to know, the people of Canada would like to know, and I am sure the people of the world would like to know what is taking place with respect to getting the Soviet union into the north Pacific fisheries treaty; because if we do not, you can bet your bottom dollar that the Soviet union, because of the pressure from people demanding food in that country, will be looking for further sources of food supply from the sea and will automatically look for salmon which is not of their own origination, in order that their salmon can come back home again and spawn for the years to come.

I do not understand why the Soviet union will perhaps not enter into an agreement such as the north Pacific fisheries treaty, if they were approached on this subject and asked about it as long ago as 1957 or 1958. I am given to understand that Japan and the Soviet union have had a convention relating to the salmon fisheries of the Asian area, and there is no reason why the Soviet union would not be interested in engaging in a similar sort of treaty in which we and the United States were involved. We would like to have a very clear indication from the minister as to whether the campaign promises which his party made in the election campaign really mean anything now. We ask him what he is doing, has been doing or intends to do about seeing them put into effect.

A vitally important field, I think, is leading or getting this government to point itself in the direction of international agreements and high seas conservation measures, to ensure that future generations have fish for their children as we desire to have this food for ours. When it comes to matters that concern us more directly in a national or domestic way, I think we all realize that the east and west coast fisheries differ; that there are different species of fish on these coasts; that there are different methods of catching them, and there are different economics, and so on, involved as between the east and west coasts. Since 1957 we have had, at least from the practicalities of administration point of view, an orientation toward the east coast. The hon. member from Queens, when he was a member of the Conservative cabinet, was the minister of fisheries. He is, of course, from the east coast, as is the present Minister of Fisheries. Without casting any reflection upon the ideas or attitudes of ministers, it is an automatic fact of politics that one's hometown induces the greatest pressure to do things, as distinct from communities which are further away.

If we look at this year's estimates, for instance, just as one example, without going into the details in a way contrary to the rules, we see that vote 155, which involves a very important field, namely educational work in fisheries techniques and co-operative producing and selling among fishermen, concerns a total amount of $120,000, with the east coast fisheries receiving ten times that of the west coast. I am not saying they should not, because this is a vitally important contribution; but it does show that there is heavier emphasis, even in that one vote, given to the east coast than there is to the west. I am not saying this is wrong in so far as the east coast is concerned.

We find that the Fisheries Prices Support Act has its greatest, if not exclusive, application to east coast fishermen and is practically unused on the west coast. The Newfoundland bait service is, again, directly connected to the east coast fisheries, and salt fish assistance and the like. Perhaps the only act under which the west coast fisheries might have some advantage is the Cold Storage Act, which allows for subsidies to be given for the building of cold storages. Unfortunately this is not under the Department of Fisheries; it is in the hands of the Minister of Agriculture, which is an extremely sad state of affairs not only for fishermen but for agriculturists as well. In addition to that, subsidies under this act have been suspended, so what advantage fishermen on the west coast might have had in receiving cold storage subsidies has gone, because there is no more to be obtained under that act.

On the order paper there is a resolution to appoint two ministers of agriculture, one for the east and one for the west. I understand that one of the ministers has already appointed himself to this particular position and is merely waiting for the formality of the measure going through parliament, if it gets that far. But if it is sensible or reasonable, and this government thinks it is a correct thing, to have a minister of agriculture for the east and one for the west, it is even more important to have two ministers of fisheries, one for the east and one for the west, so that west coast fisheries can receive the fullest possible consideration from the federal government.

We would like to make some specific suggestions to the minister and his department. These suggestions are at this stage along rather broad lines, because they involve what we consider to be questions of policy connected with the principles we enunciated earlier, namely those of conservation, exploitation and a recognition of the growing population of the world and the importance of fishery products as a source of protein.

We think that the research attitudes in the Department of Fisheries should find their way into the levels of discussion on policy. In this regard, without any reflection upon the individuals concerned, we find that the present deputy minister, Dr. Needler, a scientist in the field of fisheries, is likely to bring into the policy level of the department the attitude, concept and ideas of a research scientist.

This contrasts somewhat with the attitude which existed previously when the late Mr. Clark was the deputy minister.

This is no reflection whatsoever upon Mr. Clark. He was a very able, competent, personable gentleman in this field and he administered the department very effectively; but Mr. Clark was a practical man from the industrial side of fisheries. He was an administrator, not a scientist; and now we hope that the attitudes, opinions and research ideas of the people in the department will have some bearing on what is decided upon from a policy point of view, because research is essential to develop not only the fisheries of Canada but those of other countries.

We may have to pump extensive amounts of money into the research side of the department's activities. We should no longer look upon the fisheries research board—a wonderful organization—as being just an organization that exists and carries on from day to day. We think it should be more adequately financed, and that more direction and freedom should be given it in order to find ways and methods of increasing the catch, processing, and consumption of fishery products. If I may in passing, I would like to make reference to Dr. Kask, who left the chairmanship of the fisheries research board early this year. I am sure the minister and his predecessors in the department found Dr. Kask and his associates invaluable in the work which they did.

There is an interesting sidelight to the activities of the fisheries research board, and that is that throughout the year it produces a number of publications and documents based upon the research studies which it conducts. It is interesting to realize just who reads these publications and documents the most aptly, and who accepts them as guideposts in fishing. It is a well known fact that fishing skippers and captains of the Soviet union fishing fleet look upon the research department's publications as their bible in exploiting our fisheries on the high seas. It is unfortunate that our own fisheries people do not do the same thing, and that our fishing industry does not follow the activities of the board with such fervour.

The minister mentioned the development of fish flour for human consumption. I think much greater activity must be devoted to this field, to process fishery products which are not presently edible because they are not exotic enough, and to process what is now more or less considered to be waste from fish plants. These should be processed into protein concentrates for human consumption. The board should also be concerning itself with the possibility of the plant life of the oceans being processed for human consumption, because it is also a source of food.

We should look ahead to the time when the world's production and consumption of fish will be perhaps two or three times what it is now, ranging upwards of 100 million tons a year, something which we could not conceive of some ten or 12 years ago. The policy of the department and the government must be directed towards preparing for this, through early planning of our investment in fisheries, in catching fish, processing them and distributing them to the point where we will remain a prominent power in world fisheries in years to come. We are that at present, but we will not be in the future if we keep fumbling along on a day to day or year to year basis.

We should also be promoting extensive use of artificial or man made hatcheries for fish because, even though we may not like it, I think in time to come we will see a greater multiple use of lakes, rivers and waters, and we will find that pesticides, insecticides, sewage and pollution coming from industries, cities and towns will increase as time goes on and will take their toll of the natural spawning grounds in lakes and other waters.

In this regard I was very pleased to note that the minister, the deputy minister and a couple of other officials—Dr. Pritchard for one comes to mind—appeared before the committee on food and drugs just the other day, and dealt with the question of the effect of insecticides and pesticides on marine life and fisheries. Unfortunately I do not think that committee, because of the complexity of the subject before it, will be able to come up with any scientific, technical and worth-while recommendations in this particular field.

If I may digress for a moment, this is one committee, perhaps more than any other standing or special committee of the house, that should have an extensive research staff provided for it, so that it can deal with the various bits of scientific and technical information presented to it, analyse that information and then, when it makes recommendations, it will know what it is doing. Without that, a great deal of the activity of the committee will be a waste of time.

As I said earlier, we must get into the field of expansion in our relations with other countries concerning international fishery conventions. We must also think in terms of the promotion of fishery colleges and enticement of more people into scientific research in those fields which relate to the ocean and to the plant and animal life therein. If we do these things, if the minister keeps them in mind from a long range and short range policy point of view, and if he takes steps to implement them, we will continue to be one of the leading fishery nations of the world.

In closing I would like to make one comment in the nature of a commendation. As I know them, and as they are known by people in the fishing industry, the officials, scientists and officers on the staff of the Department of Fisheries are respected and admired. They are doing a tremendous job. We would like to see them get on with it, and be provided with the money and policy directions that will enable them to continue to do a remarkable job.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, following the example of those who have preceded me in this debate, I intend to be relatively brief in my remarks. This is not because the Department of Fisheries or the fishery industry is of small concern or of little value to our nation. The contrary is true; but unfortunately I am afraid many people across the country are not aware of the true value of the industry, not only to the hundreds who are directly involved in it but also to the provinces in which fish resources are found, and to the national economy.

The suggestion has been made by the hon. member for Skeena that it might be advisable to have two ministers of fisheries, one for the east and one for the west, and to bolster his argument he referred to the proposal to have two ministers of agriculture. Personally I am not convinced that it is wise policy in either department, because once we set the precedent we may find that we end up with two cabinets, with ministers of this and that, and another group for east and west, until instead of having about 20 ministers, as we have now, we have 40. I do not think this would be too good for the country. Possibly we are in too great a danger of fragmentation as it is. I have always taken the position that as far as national policy is concerned it should be a national policy, and if any adaptations are necessary with regard to specific areas they can be worked out. I believe policy should be evolved which will apply as far as possible right across the nation. I do not think it is necessary to have two ministers if the minister would just become aware that Canada is Canada from coast to coast and that his sights do not just rest on the one side but also are set on the other. I am inclined to think the minister could improve his position substantially if a little closer attention were given to problems on the west coast and to the representation of the fishermen on the west coast.

We appreciate the announcement tonight that the minister is proceeding to set up a dominion-provincial conference on fisheries. This was forecast in the speech from the throne; we indicated at that time our pleasure at the announcement and that we were looking forward to the setting up of that conference. We are now pleased to hear it is scheduled for the month of January. Here again, I believe it is a matter of co-operation between the federal and provincial administrations. Perhaps we should remind ourselves of the importance of a department which would take care of many of these things having to do with dominion-provincial relations. We trust that from the conference which is held policies will be evolved and programs will be developed to the advantage of the fishing industry in every part of Canada.

There is one strenuous objection I feel I must make in connection with the lack of meetings of the committee on marine and fisheries. There was a discussion on orders of the day in connection with the committee on agriculture; it was pointed out that the committee has not yet started its work for this session. In defence of government laxity in this matter it was indicated that there had not been a meeting since a year ago last summer, some 12 months or more. I do not think that is any standard for drawing comparisons, but as far as the committee on marine and fisheries is concerned it has not sat at all this session; and it has not been made use of to its fullest possible extent for some time.

On a number of occasions the united fishermen and allied workers union of British Columbia has made recommendations and suggested that meetings of the marine and fisheries committee be held at which full discussion could be had of various problems. I do not know why the minister did not see to it that this committee was set up and put into operation. I do not know why these requests were turned aside. But the fact remains that the fishermen of the west coast have been unable to meet with the marine and fisheries committee to present their views and put before this parliament their recommendations as far as the fishing industry is concerned. I suggest, as I suggested before, that if the Minister of Fisheries wants to prove to the fishermen on the west coast that he is interested in and concerned about them, he will have to give more attention to the recommendations and requests which come from the fisheries unions on the west coast.

Many discussions have been held with respect to the north Pacific fisheries treaty. It was pointed out by the previous speaker that this has caused considerable concern, especially to fishermen in British Columbia. They are very interested in the program of conservation, but I do not think they are interested in any program which is going to deplete the resources and bring them to a position of diminishing return. They are just as interested or perhaps more interested in the continuity of this industry than many others across the country, and they are not going to go out on a limb and advocate policies which are going to work against the continuation of this industry. They would be very foolish to do so, and I do not think they can be branded with that charge.

However, they are very concerned about the programs of conservation which have been carried on, and some of the actions which have been based upon this principle. In this connection we think of the renegotiations of the treaty which are going on or have been going on in Tokyo and which will be continued later on. The fishermen's unions have made representations on this behalf and they are very concerned, first of all with the fact that the recommendations of the commission were accepted and put into operation, apparently without their having an opportunity to voice their strong opposition to the situation, and second, because it opened the door for further demands on the part of Japan for additional concessions. Their fear is that bit by bit, piece by piece, the rights of the Canadian fishermen and the interests of the Canadian industry will be sacrificed and they will end up with nothing at all. That is why they are so opposed to some of the actions of the minister and his department in this connection.

I was going to refer to the leaflet put out by the united fishermen and allied workers union under date January 25, 1963, but this goes into detail on a number of very important aspects of the fishing industry and also deals with the north Pacific treaty and the insistence of the Japanese that the abstention principle be deleted from the treaty. They have, of course, voiced their strong objection to anything along this line. Recently, in answer to questions, the minister made a statement, on motions I believe, dealing with the negotiations which were carried on in Tokyo. He assured us that the Canadian delegation was standing firm as far as the principle of abstention was concerned. He thought there might be a different way of expressing it. I pointed out at that time that we are not too concerned perhaps with the way it is expressed, but we are certainly concerned that the abstention principle should be incorporated in the treaty in the course of these renegotiations.

Also with regard to conservation I should like to refer to the closure regulations as they affect the Fraser river and other areas of British Columbia. The minister is aware that just at the time he was leaving for Tokyo a meeting was held by the fishermen in Steveston. There were several hundred fishermen gathered there to make representations in connection with the north Pacific treaty, and they also met in a special way to deal with the closures imposed on the Fraser river, which was one of the main concerns at that time. There was a feeling that the method by which the closures were implemented was most unfair. Let me say again that they were not opposing the principle of conservation. They recognize that it is essential to the welfare of the whole industry. But the fishermen of the Fraser river, especially, felt they were being discriminated against because, for them, they faced what amounted to a total closure of the river. It is true it was opened up one day a week but I think there were some weeks when no fishing at all was allowed. Meanwhile, those who fished off the coast enjoyed almost unlimited freedom; they were allowed to fish several days a week.

The fishermen of the Fraser valley had a legitimate complaint. They were almost completely barred from engaging in fishing in their own areas. They were not equipped to fish off the coast; their boats and gear would not permit them to go so far. So here were men who depended on fishing for a living, yet could not take advantage of the fishing in the Fraser river basin for themselves and their families. A serious endeavour should be made to see that fishermen in every area have an opportunity to share in the resources to the conservation of which they have contributed. It may be that the conference which is to be held will lead to the solution of some of these problems. Perhaps it will lead to better relations between the fishermen, the industry in general and the government at various levels. As I say, I believe this is one of the important resources of the nation and one which makes a substantial contribution to the economic welfare, not only of those directly concerned but of Canada from coast to coast.

[Translation]

Mr. Cyr: Mr. Chairman, I feel bound to express in this house the views of the inshore fishermen of the Gaspe peninsula and to deal with two matters pertaining to fisheries. First of all, the establishment of fishing limits for trawlers, as well as international limits, and then, the report of the committee of inquiry on the Unemployment Insurance Act, and the recommendations of the same committee with regard to fisheries.

Mr. Chairman, in the last few years, the inshore fishermen of the gulf of St. Lawrence and of part of the Baie des Chaleurs have been at war with trawlers which, apart from plundering the inshore fishing territories usually reserved to fishermen who go in for fishing on a small scale, damage fishing tackle and are guilty of offences that are termed as acts of piracy in some places.

Mr. Chairman, most commercial fishermen of the Gaspe peninsula, namely about 85 per cent, are inshore fishermen who operate in a strip, a few miles wide, along the coast of the Gaspe peninsula. Their fishing trips last only a day; they start very early in the morning and come back around noon. In addition, their fishing season lasts only six months a year, and it is also necessary to take into account the days lost as a result of bad weather.

The main species of fish taken is the ground fish, among which cod is the most common. And there seems to exist in my constituency a long term trend towards decrease in the fishing volume and in the number of fishermen.

But this year, at least at the beginning of the season, the number of small fishermen increased in the Gaspe peninsula, because of a certain stagnation in the field of employment.

Unfortunately, so far, the quantities of landed cod have been 20 per cent smaller than last year, a factor which certainly will not encourage newcomers to become full time fishermen.

Even if we take into account the natural fluctuations which cause the catches to vary, we still have to admit that in that area the fish stock diminishes, and that the size of the fish seems to be shrinking.

We are confronted with unmistakable signs of over-exploitation of stocks, and the culprits are not exclusively the 60 to 65 feet long trawlers which operate along the Quebec coast, or in the maritime provinces, and more particularly in New Brunswick.

It seems that foreign boats operating inside the gulf of St. Lawrence have a direct influence. Figures have been mentioned in respect to the catch of those foreign boats, and they were about 100 million pounds per year. It is impossible to get more details on that matter, indeed it is rather difficult to compile accurate data, since those boats from various countries do not submit reports on their activities.

As I said, Mr. Chairman, in the gulf of St. Lawrence only, foreign boats took over 100 million pounds of cod, according to a report published by the d.b.s. Now, in 1962, the cod catch in eastern Canada, including Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Quebec, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, amounted to 585,643,000 pounds. And in the Gaspe area only, in the gulf of St. Lawrence, foreign boats have caught a hundred million pounds of cod a year.

In view of this situation, I am of the opinion that it is urgent that the 12-mile limit be put into effect; this should close completely the gulf of St. Lawrence to foreign boats.

Moreover, we must consider that the fish population of the gulf of St. Lawrence is the same as in the northwest Atlantic, on the banks of Newfoundland, on the banks of Nova Scotia and on the north coast as far as Greenland.

Let us come back to the gulf of St. Lawrence and the Chaleur bay, where stocks of fish have been replenished. Coastal fishing should be extended to other areas, and I wish to mention now as an example the island of Anticosti for the fishermen of the north coast of the Gaspe peninsula. If coastal fishing was thus extended, more intensive research should be done in order to vary fishing techniques and design suitable boats, such as trawlers.

We should aim for diversified ways of catching fish and try to add new techniques to the existing ones. It would be necessary also to step up research to find out the extent of our resources; there are ways to catch other kinds of fish besides ground fish like cod. In the area of Anticosti island—I will use it again as an example; it is a high point because of the possibilities it offers—there are banks of shrimp, lobster, scallops, crab and other fish like halibut, which have another commercial value and are far from being used in full.

To round up the research work that needs to be done, it would also be advisable to have the research board draw up fishing maps giving indications on the nature of the fish banks, on the movement of water caused by tides or currents, which would determine the fishing conditions in the area.

Mr. Chairman, I am coming to the reason for those explanations. Those maps will have to show also the areas reserved for inshore fishing.

I understand the situation with regard to the federal jurisdiction on fisheries, and that of Quebec as well as of New Brunswick as regards those interprovincial limits is somewhat confused, but the Minister of Fisheries said last summer, in the Magdalen islands, that an investigation is being carried out with the help of experts from Ottawa, Quebec and Fredericton, and personally, I hope that a settlement will be reached in the spring of 1964 so that a strip of a few miles may be reserved for inshore fishermen or private fishing on a small scale.

I even suggest—I admit that would be something new—that a license or permit costing $1 or $2 be required from fishermen so that they might enjoy some privileges and be obliged to follow some regulations.

The road map that the fisherman will receive with his licence would serve as a guide to him. In my opinion, that coastguard squad should be increased and should see that the regulations are enforced in those fishing areas reserved for small fishermen. The fisherman who would violate the regulations might lose his permit for a period set by the law.

Finally, it seems important to recommend assistance plans for the construction of fishing boats now in effect. That assistance should be extended in order to include fishing boats 35 feet long instead of 45 feet.

That sector of coastal fishing will grow more important and will certainly be self-supporting, because on the basis I have already mentioned, with a somewhat larger territory, with a wider variety of fishing techniques, fishermen will be able to depend on various kinds of fish instead of limiting themselves to cod.

In that way, the fishermen could secure a much higher income and depend for their livelihood on fishing alone, without resorting to social welfare benefits.

Before resuming my seat, Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries, a question which is inspired by the numerous requests of the fishermen of my constituency.

Those people feel that unemployment insurance benefits coming to them next winter will be nothing but peanuts, because the landings of fish have been 20 per cent smaller than the previous year. One can only too easily understand their worries. Actually, I know families with eight, nine or ten children, who will collect no more than $20 a week, because their contributions have been smaller than last year.

We have to admit that the fishing industry is riddled with serious problems. Quite a number of fishermen suffer from chronic unemployment, and are incapable of maintaining, without outside help, a decent standard of living.

In the report of the inquiry commission on the Unemployment Insurance Act, the commissioners recommended the following:

> That a separate plan be established for the benefit of independent fishermen and that such a plan be more consistent with their situation and their requirements than the general unemployment insurance plan could be, and that the Department of Fisheries be vested with the responsibility of administering that plan.

In conclusion, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Did the officials of the Department of Labour ever meet with those of the Department of Fisheries in connection with that recommendation of the commissioners?

[Mr. Cyr.]

[Text]

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Chairman, I listened with interest to the statement made by the Minister of Fisheries and as the representative of Queens-Lunenburg, a riding in which is located the largest deep sea fishing fleet in North America, I wish to comment briefly on some of the problems relating to the fishing industry. I should first like to congratulate the minister on his appointment to his portfolio. I know that his experience in the house and his prior experience in the fishing industry will serve him well in carrying out his present responsibilities. I also know that as a maritimer he will give careful consideration to all problems pertaining to the fishing industry and especially those pertaining to the Atlantic provinces.

Canada is today the seventh largest fishing nation in the world and the fifth largest trading nation, possessing the world's longest coast line. A few years ago we knew very little about our continental shelf, but as the world's population continues to grow we shall have to look to the sea for increasingly larger amounts of edible protein.

At the present time the fishing industry is in some ways at the stage at which primitive man was many centuries ago. We hunt the fish that nature provides, just as our ancestors hunted animals for food. We have not yet begun to herd fish or improve their quality, but I believe that one day in the not too distant future we shall be forced to farm the sea as we do the land. In order to do this we shall have to give increased emphasis to our oceanographic research. We shall have to study the organic matter dissolved in sea water which activates the whole growth process. After all, on land the strain of cattle has been improved by careful breeding and at the same time the productivity of the soil has been increased by weeding and by fertilizing. It is almost certain that a similar approach to the sea will enable us to harvest a much larger crop of fish, instead of worrying as we do now about protecting our fishing rights from the depredations of fleets from other nations.

We should be able to produce plenty of edible seafood for everybody, if we discover and apply good methods of sea husbandry. A start has already been made along these lines. It was made by the previous administration under the leadership of the former prime minister. An oceanographic institute, the first of its kind in Canada, was opened last year at Bedford basin near Halifax. While this institute was opened under the auspices of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, still it has a branch for the fisheries department. As a result our marine laboratories are expanding. Graduate students are being trained in all aspects of oceanography. New research ships are carrying out scientific investigations along our coasts. We can, therefore, expect rapid development in the next few years. We are not alone in this work, for all major maritime nations are now taking part. Throughout the world roughly 50 research ships are constantly at sea carrying approximately 600 technicians and trained people.

Through this increase in scientific effort we hope to plug a big gap in our knowledge concerning the earth on which we live, and we hope to learn more about the habits of the fish, which are part of the food resources which automatically renew themselves. In its natural state, acre for acre, the sea is producing as much as the land; yet man is only taking about 1 per cent of his present food requirements from the ocean. When we come to farm the ocean we can expect it to produce a much greater quantity of desirable food, just as scientific farming on the land has improved the production of grain and vegetables. Through the proper management of the ocean, we can greatly increase our well-being on the land, but this will have to be done by international agreement. Some countries have already made a start along these lines. Japan is trying out salt pond farms in the inland sea, where yellowtail are raised and dumped into the adjacent sea when grown. England is farming plaice somewhat in the same manner as trout rivers are restocked, and we are raising oysters in Prince Edward Island to help re-establish that industry. I must give due credit for this to the officials of the department, some of whom are present with us tonight.

In my opinion, research along these lines should be expanded. We are not doing enough to restock our rivers and our lakes with trout and with salmon, especially in the Atlantic region and in my own province of Nova Scotia. If further developments were carried out along these lines, these fish would not only provide a valuable source of food but they would also encourage tourists to visit Canada in greater numbers, thereby bringing greater economic benefits to everyone. I would, therefore, urge upon the minister to give consideration to the scientific development of our fisheries when he sits down to review plans for next year's estimates.

I know this government and the present minister are greatly concerned over conservation. I listened with interest on June 4 when the Prime Minister made a statement to the house on the law of the sea and his plans to unilaterally establish a 12-mile exclusive fisheries zone along the whole of the Canadian coastline somewhere about mid-May, 1964. This action, of course, will be beneficial to our inshore fishermen, but it will not materially affect the landings of our deep sea fleet. It will create problems with France and the United States, both of whom have treaty rights in some of the areas affected. It will also create problems with Portugal, a country which has a traditional fishing right on our coast. It is regrettable that this action had to be taken unilaterally. Although it will provide exclusive fishing zones for our inshore fishermen, it does nothing about our major problem which is the conservation of our fisheries resources on our offshore banks. As a result of our Conservative shipbuilding program, there has been a boom in the construction of large deep sea fishing trawlers in Nova Scotia. In fact, in 1962 a total of 98 ships of various sizes were constructed in that province alone. The fishermen manning these ships are now in a position to make larger catches of fish and to have greater earnings without endangering their lives.

As an example of this, I should like to put on the record figures provided by the dominion bureau of statistics. The cumulative fish landings in the maritimes during the first nine months of 1963 amounted to 556.6 million pounds valued at $38.4 million. Figures for the similar period during 1962 were 542.1 million pounds valued at $34.6 million, and during 1961, 515.6 million pounds valued at $30 million. In other words, in the first nine months of 1963 the income of all our east coast fishermen increased by $8.4 million when compared with their income in the first nine months of 1961. I submit some credit for this increased earning must go to the former administration, which so wisely assisted in a program for the building of larger fishing trawlers.

This increased fishing activity on our offshore banks is creating other problems. We do not have a cold war on our east coast today, we are having a fish war. The greatest problem facing Canada's fishing industry at present on our east coast is the over-concentration of ships from all nations on our offshore banks. One of the peculiarities of the fishing industry is that it functions in an area that is international in character. This was commented upon by the former minister of fisheries. The means of production, the sea, is not private property. Apart from territorial waters, it is not subject to the law of any state. For this reason, many fisheries problems have to be dealt with internationally because unilateral measures generally have far reaching consequences for the industry in other nations. It was for this reason I stated that it is regrettable unilateral action is to be taken on the 12-mile fishing zone.

The minister, in his statement, said that the 12-mile limit was imposed as a conservation measure for sustained yield in the fisheries of our country. However, our fish do not spawn within 12 miles of our shores. Our main breeding grounds are Georges and Browns banks, Sable island bank, Banquerau, St. Pierre bank, Bradelle bank and Grand bank, to name a few. None of these areas come within the 12-mile limit; yet it is here that conservation measures should be carried out. This, I submit, can only be done by international agreement. At the present time, the fishing fleets of 13 nations, including Canada, all members of the international commission for the northwest Atlantic fisheries, are operating on our east coast banks. The greatest increase in the number of fishing trawlers in recent years has been in the Russian fleet and it is estimated that over 150 large Russian trawlers operate on a year round basis on Georges bank and the Grand bank off Newfoundland. These large trawlers often snag nets of Canadian ships or ram smaller boats in the fog. However, the chief cause for concern is the fact that the Russians, as members of the international commission for the northwest Atlantic fisheries, signed and approved an agreement on a minimum mesh size but apparently have disregarded this agreement.

For example, I read from an article in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald which is headed, "Reds Using Illegal Fish Nets". It reads in part as follows:

> The president of the Atlantic fishermen's union reported Wednesday what he described as the first solid evidence that Russian fishermen off New England are using nets ruled illegal under the international convention for the northwest Atlantic fisheries.
>
> The president, Capt. James Ackert, said he is filing protests with the convention in Halifax and with the U.S. state department.
>
> He displayed what he said was fishing gear made in the Soviet union, brought to the Boston fish pier by the American trawler Massachusetts which found it in the Georges bank fishing grounds, off Newfoundland. He said it consists of netting of less than half an inch mesh used as an interliner in an approximate four inch mesh net.
>
> "Even a sardine couldn't get through this mesh," Capt. Ackert said.
>
> International conventions limiting the mesh size of nets under certain conditions are designed to conserve the supply of fish.

Later, on Friday, August 23, the Halifax Chronicle-Herald carried this article:

> A spokesman for the international commission for the northwest Atlantic fisheries said yesterday a Russian made net with one half inch mesh found by United States trawler on Georges bank, southwest of Nova Scotia, may have been legally used for catching herring.
>
> The ICNAF spokesman here said Georges bank is in a division of the northwest Atlantic designated sub area 5 where the minimum net mesh size for cod and haddock is 4½ inches. He said there was no minimum size limit on nets used to catch herring.
>
> "The Russians fish for herring on Georges bank", he said, and added that it was possible the net taken to Boston had been used for this purpose.

[Mr. Crouse.]

Mr. Chairman, in a situation of this kind it is difficult to say whether the Russians were fishing for herring or ground fish. We do know the Russians have a different motive for fishing than Canadians. They fish for food, while Canadians fish for profit. The Russian ships are equipped with modern machinery and their fleets roam far from their homeland in search of a good catch. They lead the world in oceanographic studies and research. In view of the progress they have made they should be well aware of the need to practice conservation methods, even on the high seas. If the Russians on Georges bank were fishing for herring rather than ground fish such as haddock and cod, they must also realize that the small mesh net being used destroys the little herring. Herring are the natural food of many ground fish, and when they disappear all other species become scarce.

Conferences on these problems have been called, but for one reason or another they have broken down in a stalemate without many of our conservation problems being solved. There have been three international conferences on the law of the sea and international fishing limits since 1930, but each time there was disagreement on the territorial limits to be established. As a result, Mexico claims nine miles, Chili, Peru and Ecuador 200 miles, and Ireland and Canada 12 miles. This causes international feuding, because more and more the ocean is recognized as an important source of food for a world faced with the prospect of overpopulation. In my opinion multilateral agreement among the fishing nations of the world for deep sea fisheries conservation will help guarantee this continuing source of protein. I would urge the minister and the government to give some consideration to convening another international conference so that conservation may be further discussed by all interested nations.

I was pleased to hear the minister's announcement that a federal-provincial conference on fisheries will be called on January 20, 1964, and at this conference all aspects of problems pertaining to the fishing industry will be discussed. I believe that at this conference priority should be given to calling an international conference, and I suggest to the minister that this is something he should discuss with the provincial ministers with whom he will be meeting at that time. I say this especially in view of the fact that the European common market is contemplating setting up a base in the French possession of St. Pierre and Miquelon, and the Japanese are considering establishing a base in Newfoundland. If and when these countries follow through with their plans, the present overfishing will be further intensified, and I cannot stress too strongly the necessity for further international consultation on our deep sea fisheries conservation problem.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, as 75 per cent, or more, of my constituents are fishermen I should like to make a few remarks on the estimates of this department. But before I continue I should like to extend my compliments to the Minister of Fisheries on the first presentation of his estimates in this house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: Do you want them to pass tonight?

Mr. Monteith: No, they don't.

Mr. Carter: I should also like to pay my tribute to the former deputy minister, Mr. George Clark, who was a great personal friend of all of us, certainly of all of us from my province. With his death Canada suffered a great loss, as did also the fishing industry of Canada. At the same time, Mr. Chairman, I should like to extend my good wishes to his successor.

Fishing is the oldest primary industry in Canada and is one of the most important of our primary industries. Yet I think it can be said without contradiction that it is the most neglected of all our primary industries. Canada is fortunate in having a great, natural, self-perpetuating resource right on our doorstep. But we are 20 years behind the times in exploiting it. Other speakers have already pointed out that others come from countries thousands of miles across the ocean and make a better job of exploiting our fisheries than we do ourselves.

The minister spoke of a federal-provincial conference which is to be held on January 20, 1964. Personally I think it is unfortunate that this conference has been delayed so long. From my own point of view, Mr. Chairman, I am not too optimistic that this federal-provincial conference can produce anything that is going to be of any worth-while benefit to our fishermen next year. I think it would have been better and we would have obtained quicker results if the national conference could have been preceded by a series of regional conferences, because as I see it the east coast fisheries and the west coast fisheries are just as different as are eastern agriculture and western agriculture. They have very little in common; and the inland fisheries are different still. We have a national program of fish inspection and we could probably have a national marketing program for fish, as we have for wheat. But our main problems on the east coast have to do with production and processing. That is why I think it would have been more beneficial if regional conferences could have been held before coming together at a national conference, to work out a national policy.

The minister spoke of improvements in technology, more mechanization, more automation and a greater use of electronic equipment. But in spite of this our fishing industry on the east coast is a sick industry. While I find it easy to agree with most of the things said by my hon. friend from Queens, I must disagree with one statement he made this evening when, if I heard him correctly, he complimented the minister and said this would be the finest set of estimates that he would be presenting. I disagree with this, because when I look at the estimates and see that they are $1 million less this year than they were last year, in the face of the depressed condition of our industry and the need for rehabilitation, I find this decrease most disconcerting.

A national policy should not be too difficult to work out because we have already developed a national policy of assistance to the farmers. What we want is an adaptation of that policy to the fishery. There is a great similarity between the needs of the fisherman and the needs of the farmer.

The fisherman's needs are quite simple. In the first place, the fisherman wants a better price for his fish. In this connection we must recognize that in the maritime provinces a great deal of money has been spent by the provincial governments on the fishing industry, but in spite of this expenditure the fisherman is little better off today. The money that is spent does not seem to benefit him. The prices which our fishermen in Newfoundland get are sometimes 50 per cent lower—certainly 25 per cent or 30 per cent lower—than fishermen on the mainland get for the same size and type of fish, and that difference cannot be explained fully in terms of geography.

The fishermen in Newfoundland who were lucky enough to get a decent catch this year are getting a fair price, but that is not attributable to any policy of the federal or provincial governments. I say those fishermen "who were lucky enough to get a decent catch", because in many places there was a catch failure. This fair price is due to catch failures in European countries, especially Scandinavia, and in Iceland. These countries produce a lot of salt fish, and in consequence of this failure the demand for salt fish this year is greater than the supply, and the price for it has gone up almost to the highest levels in our history. Further, the fact that salt fish is getting a high price has kept up the price of fresh fish.

From time to time there is strong advocacy of the idea that we should forget about the salt fish industry in Newfoundland, and indeed throughout North America. But it will be a sorry day for our fishermen if that industry disappears because there is no real competition, at least in my riding and I think in the whole province, between the various fish plants for fresh fish. The real competition is between salt fish and fresh fish, and so long as the Newfoundland fisherman has a choice of either selling his fish fresh or salt he will have a measure of protection. However, if we let the salt fish industry disappear, that protection disappears with it, and then God help the fishermen.

The salt fish industry is mainly a phase of the inshore fishery, and in this connection my hon. friend from Queens-Lunenburg had a lot to say about conservation. I agree with a great deal of what he said, because if we do not conserve the offshore fishery on the Grand banks the time will come when there will be no inshore fishery. The hon. member pointed out the difficulty of getting different countries to agree to obey the rules, and he cited the case of a Russian trawler which had a large net with a small mesh lining inside it.

The whole process of catching fish with draggers is wasteful. It is not only the Russians who do it; we do it ourselves. I have heard of cases, and have personally seen some, where fishing ships have steamed for miles and miles through young fish floating on the surface of the water. These fish were brought up in the dragnets, and the pressure of water killed them. When they were hauled up they were thrown overboard because they were not big enough to be of any commercial value. If we are going to tackle this problem of conservation we must tackle the problem of the draggers.

The fisherman's second need is credit, or money, some form of financial assistance through loans, grants and bounties, to enable him to catch more fish, to do that more easily, and with less hardship and danger. There is not much use in setting up a loan board and saying to a fisherman, "We will give you 80 per cent or 90 per cent of the money you require," because the fisherman who is down, who needs this kind of assistance, has not even 1 per cent of the money he needs. The fisherman must have easier credit and access to cheap money. He wants to get better boats, better gear and better engines so that he can operate at less cost, and to do that he must have some form of financial assistance.

The hon. member for Queens set us a very good example tonight. He promised, and carried out his promise, to keep his remarks brief. I intend to do the same. For that purpose I have spoken in general terms. I could talk for hours on the individual problems of the various phases of the fishery in my province, but following the example of the hon. member for Queens I shall leave that until we come to deal with next year's estimates.

Mr. Noble: Mr. Chairman, I would like to join with the other hon. members of the committee who have spoken in congratulating the minister on his appointment to the fisheries portfolio. I trust that he may give this department energetic and diligent leadership.

I was pleased to hear him mention the great lakes fisheries and the international fisheries commission through which he is able to provide some influence on these fisheries. At the outset I want to say I am going to be very brief. However, I do want to make representations on behalf of the great lakes fishermen, who look upon me as their friend and supporter with respect to federal responsibilities in the great lakes fisheries.

It is my hope that the minister will show the same awareness and consideration as did his immediate predecessor in respect to the problems of the great lakes fisheries. The almost complete disappearance of lake trout from the great lakes is now common knowledge, but the definite cause of this phenomenon is not certain.

Over the years sea lamprey have been blamed, but many fishermen maintain that the smelt is also involved, not to say anything about exploitation by the fishermen themselves. Nevertheless, it is necessary that constant research be carried on so that lake trout or other suitable fish may be restored to the great lakes.

I should like to read a short editorial which I feel is appropriate at this time. It is taken from the Ship-Shore News, and it states:

> Only a few years have passed since "lake Superior trout" was a featured food item on railway car diners travelling on the main lines through northern Ontario. Out of the window of his car the passenger could see the sparkling cold waters of the world's largest fresh water lake with an area of 31,820 square miles. Only a few hours previously the fish that graced his plate had been netted in this lake. A dish fit for a king.
>
> A. B. Wood, head of the fish division of the Michigan department of conservation, has broken the news that 1961 may be the last year that nets are set out for trout in lake Superior. For all practical commercial purposes the trout have declined to the point of no return for the nets. In 1952 commercial fishermen in Canada and the United States took out more than 4,000,000 pounds of trout from lake Superior. Last year the catch was 576,000 pounds and the estimate for this year is less than 300,000 pounds.

The doom of commercial fishing in the great lakes was forecast by conservationalists and commercial fishermen more than 20 years ago, perhaps nearer to 30 years. Those were days of exploitation of natural resources and the governments of the day were tone-deaf to the voices in the wilderness protesting that natural resources were not forever unless controls were imposed.

The great lakes fisheries commission on which the federal government is represented has continued over the years since its formation in 1954 to do much research. It appears that their belief is that the lamprey is the culprit causing all the trouble, and all their efforts have been directed toward its destruction. Their program in this regard has met with considerable success since the streams used by the lamprey for spawning were treated with lampricide. Now that these measures have been taken as the necessary preliminaries to coping with the problem, the fishermen feel that the commission, in co-operation with the provincial government, should press forward with a progressive program of restocking. In fact, the sports fishermen's clubs, commercial fishermen and members of several chambers of commerce in the area of Georgian bay have formed the Georgian bay fisheries association. It is their intention to press for more action in the restoration of our fisheries.

The urgency of this is illustrated in an excerpt which I am going to read from the Toronto daily Star, which illustrates what is happening in all the fishing centres of the great lakes in my area. This article concerns the fisheries in Tobermory, at Georgian bay. It says:

The fisheries at Tobermory on the Georgian bay have never been so low. In 1953 there were 11 boats operating with a catch in excess of $800,000 maintaining 60 families. In 1957, only one boat was operating. In 1959 there were only two boats with a catch valued at less than $40,000 to provide for eight families.

I might say that the only fish they are catching at the present time in this port is herring, and they are not catching $40,000 worth.

I have attended most of the meetings of the Georgian bay fisheries association. They have many dedicated people in their membership who should be given some tangible encouragement in their quest for the restoration of an industry that means much to our economy. The tourist industry in the lake Huron-Georgian bay areas is of major importance, and lake trout was once our greatest attraction. Mr. Chairman, our good Minister of Fisheries may be wondering how we feel he should fit into the picture. I believe he could become the toast of the great lakes fishermen. In my opinion, the time is ripe for the injection of some new blood and some new ideas into the great lakes fisheries commission through our federal representatives. Give this program of fisheries restoration some new ambition, some new energy and more money if necessary. I trust, Mr. Chairman, that the minister will see fit to make good use of the extra $130,000 voted over last year's estimates for the use of the great lakes fisheries commission.

If we cannot restore the lake trout, let us introduce the sockeye salmon. I have come up with this idea for about six years now, I guess, and have seen no action yet, but I hope that our new minister will follow the trend of things and give us some sockeye salmon. Salmon has been successfully transplanted to other waters. I have two clippings here which bear out that fact. One is taken from a Port Arthur paper and the other from my local paper at Owen Sound. It appears that a few years ago, I believe in 1959 or 1960, the department planted about 300,000 fingerlings from the fish hatchery at Port Arthur in Goose creek, which is up in the Hudson bay area. To my knowledge nothing has been heard of these fish since, but in cleaning up the troughs and containers in which the fish were kept previous to their transplantation about 60 escaped into lake Superior. According to these two articles, three of these fish were subsequently caught at widely spaced points in lake Superior and they had grown to maturity, weighing two and a half to three pounds, which illustrates that fish can be introduced into the great lakes and live there. Therefore I hope the minister will do something along this line of experimentation.

I should also refer to the excellent success with the rainbow trout since its introduction into the great lakes. These, of course, are a sporting fish. Nevertheless their spawning habits are the same as the salmon, which takes place in the headwaters of the streams and rivers. It is my contention that one of the reasons we have difficulties with lake trout is because they spawn in shoals in the great lakes and the predators there destroy great numbers of fish eggs. This is one reason that I think fish which go to the headwaters of rivers to spawn would have a better chance to survive. I feel that if our Minister of Fisheries would show some initiative through the great lakes fisheries commission, our young, progressive Ontario government, his partners in the administration of the great lakes fisheries, would not hesitate to jump on the bandwagon, and before too many years we would see satisfactory results in our great lakes fisheries program.

Mr. Cashin: Mr. Chairman, first of all, I should like to join with others in congratulating the Minister of Fisheries on his first presentation of the estimates of his department. At an earlier time during the course of debate in this house I had occasion to make some reference to the disparity between the government's approach to western agriculture and its approach to the fishing industry.

Mr. Clancy: May I ask a question. How does western agriculture come into fishing?

Mr. Cashin: If the hon. member bears with me perhaps a little enlightenment will come his way.

Mr. Clancy: Let us get on with the debate.

Mr. Cashin: At that time, Mr. Chairman, I made reference to a number of matters which I felt should be part of any national policy for the development of our fisheries. My colleague from Burin-Burgeo has already pointed up one of the great problems, that of maintaining price. When we look at agriculture we see a great disparity between the measures taken by government to maintain price certainty and the measures designed to help our fishermen. Even taking into consideration the fact that there are eight and a half times as many farmers in Canada, it is interesting to note that the fishermen receive only about one seventh of the price subsidies received by farmers. This is a great disparity and any development program which did not take this into account would be doing a disservice to the industry. As the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Carter) has said, the price paid to fishermen in Newfoundland is very low. There are those who say the fish plants could afford to pay more. I do not have the evidence to support that statement, but it remains a fact that present prices paid for fresh fish in Newfoundland are too low, and unless there is some increase I fear for the future of the industry.

In the field of agriculture, various measures have been devised to reduce the uncertainties attaching to production and sale. There are those who say that fishing is so dissimilar to agriculture that the application of programs such as crop insurance, or their equivalent, to the fishing industry would not be possible. But to my knowledge no real attempt has been made to see whether or not it is feasible to develop crop insurance for the fisheries, though I think this is an important ingredient in any plan for the development of the industry. I feel it would be a great inducement to the fishermen when they are planning their work for the year if they could feel there was an insurance scheme of this type in effect. Of course, improved technical knowledge and improved equipment would also reduce the risk.

A further consideration which should be borne in mind in any program for the industry is marketing. Marketing development is most important, particularly with respect to the salt fish trade. It has been suggested that a body somewhat similar to the Canadian wheat board could be used to market our salt fish. The wheat board has an excellent record of developing world markets for western grain, but no action has been taken to set up a similar organization to help look after the interests of the fishing industry.

A fourth important measure which I believe would be an ingredient of a good fisheries program would be means of expanding credit facilities. When we compare the credit made available to our fishermen with the credit facilities at the disposal of agriculture, we again find a great disparity. Perhaps I might be allowed to put some figures on record. In 1962, approximately $1.2 billions was paid out under the Canadian Farm Loan Act. This is approximately one thousand times greater than the $1.3 millions paid out under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. Under this act, since 1955, there have been only 12 loans in Newfoundland, I understand, to a total of something in the area of $16,000. The reason for this situation is that the act is not suited to the needs of inshore fishermen in Newfoundland. Proper financing has never been part of the life of the fisherman there. The outdated credit system under which individual fishermen operate is much the same as it was centuries ago. I believe a great challenge faces the minister here if he wishes to do something of lasting benefit for the fishing industry, particularly in Newfoundland.

The hon. member for Skeena correctly called attention to the differences between the fisheries on the east coast and on the west coast. There are also important differences between the fisheries in Newfoundland and in some of the maritime provinces. In Newfoundland we have a much larger inshore fishery—fishermen with limited equipment engage in the fishery and trawler operations and dragger operations are not as great. Far more individuals are involved. Basically, what is needed is a substantial addition to the thinking of the federal government in its approach to fisheries policy. The present approach concentrates on inspection, regulation, research and the provision of physical facilities to a limited extent. It also provides facilities for vessel construction and, to a certain extent, for fisheries improvement loans. There is still an absence of a comprehensive development policy. There is still a serious disparity between the provision made for the fishing industry as opposed to the provision made for agriculture. This problem will not be met by mere additions or improvements to the present system. I think there must be a fundamental admission that the federal government has never involved itself in this segment of the economy to the degree it is capable of doing. If ever a government was justified in intervening in the economy it is justified in the case of the fisheries of this country.

The fisheries of Newfoundland have not changed very much over several hundreds of years. I feel there is an unrest, today, among the fishermen. Geography and a great many other factors have brought about the slowness to change, which we have seen up to the present; but today the time is ripe for this government to take positive action and to depart from the traditional approach. This may involve a great deal of change in our thinking, but I believe it is necessary. Until now, I do not believe we have had a Department of Fisheries which has been prepared to tackle this problem. This is the task which now faces the present minister and I have confidence that during his term of office a great deal will be accomplished.

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few remarks about the estimates of the Department of Fisheries, not only because I am very fond of sea food, but mostly on account of a pleasant experience I had last summer. I then had the opportunity to visit the home town of the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud), and I must say to his credit that the people of Caraquet are very proud of their minister.

I found out at the same time that the people of Caraquet and from that area of New Brunswick are extremely courteous. I was even able to note a certain spiritual relationship between the people of that area and the Saguenay population of which I am a humble representative in this house.

For instance, I found out that Reverend Father Labrosse, who had been a missionary in Caraquet, had also been a missionary in the Saguenay area during the same period. This finding has enabled me to establish closer relations with the people of that highly considered area of our country who are almost 100 per cent French.

During my stay in that region, I realized the importance of our sea and deep sea fisheries for the economy of Canada.

I questioned at length the inshore and the deep sea fishermen. I went aboard their trawlers and even had the opportunity of visiting their fish processing plants.

Mr. Chairman, the reason I am making these few remarks tonight is that those people, who are constantly risking their lives, those conquerors of the sea, are not making the profits they are entitled to.

For instance, I have found that even when their trawlers came in with some 75,000 or 80,000 pounds of fish, the owners could only rely on their small unemployment insurance benefits to meet their needs during the winter season.

As a matter of fact, when you realize that a trawler costs between $75,000 and $90,000 and that unemployment benefits are the only source of income its owner has during winter, you really wonder how he can manage.

Fortunately, I understand that their profits are somewhat bigger now than they used to be.

I noticed, especially in the neighbourhood of the small town of Caraquet, that people are leaving farming for fishing.

Once again, I should like to point out to the house that the income of fishermen is not adequate, in my opinion.

Mr. Chairman, I have also noticed that fishermen in the Gaspe peninsula complain because fishermen from the maritime provinces do some fishing along the north shore of the St. Lawrence. In fact, the Gaspe fishermen feel that they have to put up with unfair competition from the maritime fishermen because the latter have better equipment to fish along the north shore. I feel that such a conflict should be fairly easy to settle, and I am drawing it to the attention of the minister who, I believe, is himself a descendant of those conquerors of the sea.

Those are the few remarks I wanted to make, Mr. Chairman.

[Text]

Mr. Clancy: Mr. Chairman, I should like to congratulate the minister upon introducing his estimates for the first time, and in looking at the benches I also wish to congratulate him on the support he is getting from the Pacific coast. I think that the question I was going to ask might perhaps be better left to someone from the Pacific coast. What concessions are we giving the Japanese under the north Pacific treaty, which has just been completed?

As one who comes from Saskatchewan I deplore the fact that that delicacy, the goldeye, is disappearing as the result of the damming of rivers, and I say to the people from the Pacific coast: Let us find out if the treaty is going to hurt the salmon run. I am very glad to see the Minister of Fisheries dealing with these estimates and I am very pleased to see so many Pacific coast members here.

Mr. Granger: Mr. Chairman, first I should like to join with those who have congratulated the minister on the occasion of his first presentation of the estimates of the department. I also wish to join those who have expressed their regret at the passing of the former deputy minister, the late George Clark. I wish his successor, Dr. Needler, every success and a long period of useful service in the Department of Fisheries.

The estimates of the Department of Fisheries are of particular interest to all of us, of course, from either the Atlantic or the Pacific seaboard as well as to people in other parts of Canada. My own particular interest arises because so much of my riding is on the sea and so many of my constituents are fishermen. If I were to sum up in a few words what the great need of the fishing industry is, I would simply say that it was increased productivity and wider markets; but that is too wide a generalization.

I should like to mention one thing in passing. The fishing industry, like all other old industries, has accumulated problems over the years to the point that many people refer to these problems as if they were insoluble problems, impossible to be dealt with effectively in a reasonable period of time. I am convinced that kind of thinking is wrong and nothing is farther from the truth. What is commonly referred to as the fisheries problem is nothing more nor less than a group of small problems, all of which are soluble.

Among some of the specific things that are needed is the enlargement of the bait service. From year to year in recent years a number of bait units have been placed in various parts of Newfoundland, including my own riding, and although this program is headed in the right direction I should like to see it intensified. There is a great need for bait. Every year thousands of catchable fish are left in the sea because the fishermen have no bait. The Department of Fisheries has recognized the problem and is taking steps to rectify it but, as I said, I should like to see the program intensified and the bait service as a whole enlarged.

I should also like to see a continuation of the building of community stages, as well as capital assistance for those fishermen who are unable to improve their fishing gear, or for those men who are not now fishermen but want to engage in the fishing industry.

[Mr. Clancy.]

Another aspect of the fishing industry which needs serious attention is the developing of new markets. The world seems to be becoming more fish conscious, and there must be many places that Canadian fish can be sold where now it is not. I also think that the matter of shipping fish by air from Gander, let us say, to the European market is one which the Department of Fisheries could explore profitably, because today Europe provides a profitable market for fish. Incomes in Europe are high. Traditionally, the people of Europe have been fish eaters. We, on the east coast of Canada, ought to be able to supply a greater proportion of the needs for fish in the European market. In addition to thinking of shipping fish in the traditional way, by boat, we ought to think about shipping fish by air—fresh fish, not frozen fish. Europe is only hours away from Gander. A modern DC-8 freighter, I believe, can carry 8,000 pounds. Fresh fish supplied by air, when it could be eaten within a matter of hours after being taken from the water, would command a much higher price than the frozen article. I would suggest that the Department of Fisheries look into the possibilities of developing a market in Europe to be supplied by Canadian fish shipped by air.

In passing, I would suggest that if an airport like Gander did not exist we ought to be thinking about building one. However, we do have in Gander a large modern airport and its great facilities ought to be used for sending Canadian products overseas. The hon. member for Skeena mentioned that in the coming years there would be a far greater consumption of fish and that we ought to be preparing now to take advantage of this possibility. I agree with him wholeheartedly and hope that the federal-provincial conference on fisheries will result in a great national fisheries program which will start Canada on her way to becoming the greatest fish producing country in the world.

Mr. Chatterton: Mr. Chairman, we on this side are anxious to co-operate with the government in expediting the business of the house. My remarks, therefore, will be very brief. Being a member of the official opposition from the Pacific coast, I think I am entitled to make a few remarks. We have heard from the members of the various provinces along the Atlantic coast and some of the members around the great lakes. I think, for the benefit of members, and to place in perspective the importance of the fishing industry to my province, I should quote just one or two figures. The landed value of fish and fish products in British Columbia in 1961 was $38 million. The next highest province was Nova Scotia with $27 million, and so on down the list. The cash value of fishing craft and gear in British Columbia in 1961 was $56 million, whereas in the province of Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island combined, it was about $43 million.

Now, Mr. Chairman, since I come from the Pacific coast I must necessarily mention the international north Pacific fisheries treaty. Although there may have been disagreement amongst the various segments of the industry in British Columbia as to the recommendations of the north Pacific fisheries commission, I want to try to convince the minister that in one respect every phase of the industry in British Columbia is unanimous, and that is in opposition to the relaxation of the application of the abstention principle as contained in the present convention. Even the fisheries association of British Columbia, which had previously approved the recommendations of the commission, is opposed to the relaxation of this principle.

In the limited time I propose to take, Mr. Chairman, I want to deal briefly with one specific phase of the fishing industry of British Columbia on the Pacific coast. I refer to the salt water sports fishing industry. Although I enjoyed the minister's talk tonight, I was disappointed that he did not mention this particular phase of the fishing industry, because it is already an important part of our industry on the Pacific coast and is becoming more important. As an example of the extent to which sports fishing on the Pacific coast is developing, I may tell you that in one day, August 6, 1961, according to an aerial survey made by the officers of the fisheries department—I might pause to commend the excellent staff of that department—close to 2,000 sports fishing vessels were counted in the straits of Juan de Fuca and Georgia. There are, on the average, about two and a half people per boat, so that means on one morning there were about 5,000 people engaged in sports fishing on the inner waters between the mainland and Vancouver island.

Although this was in August, Mr. Chairman, and the best fishing time of the year in our province is late summer, the fact is that sports fishing takes place all year round. In so far as the tourist business is concerned, sports fishing is also important and growing in importance. It has been estimated that in 1962 there were 300,000 tourists who came to British Columbia for the specific purpose of taking part in salt water angling. It is estimated that these tourists spend, on an average, $50 per person per day. In so far as the tourist business is concerned, the sports fishing industry brings in some $15 million per year to the province of British Columbia. In addition to that, it has been estimated that the total value of the sports fishing industry in British Columbia is over $50 million a year.

Many organizations on the Pacific coast have combined to promote the business of sports fishing. The organization set up by them is called the amalgamated services society. I would suggest to the minister that he seriously consider the suggestion put forward by this society for the establishment of a sports fishing commission on the Pacific coast. For one thing, this society feels that there should be a great deal more done in connection with the rehabilitation of and research in the sports fishing species, namely, springs and cohoe. A great deal has been done in connection with some species, but these are mostly in the net fishing species.

In closing, then, I commend to the minister serious consideration of the brief submitted by the amalgamated services society to the previous minister, dated February, 1963, and which was too late for him to act upon although I know he was very interested in it.

Mr. McLean (Charlotte): I should like to congratulate the minister upon his appointment and also the deputy minister. I have known both of them for a great many years. The industry that I represent is the sardine industry, and it is known all over the world. The word "sardine" is the same in three languages, Spanish, French and English. If you will pay attention when reading a book in the future, you will probably see the word "sardine" mentioned.

One hon. member said tonight that the fishing industry was a sick industry. I do not agree with him as far as the sardine industry is concerned. Our sardine industry will take a back seat to no other sardine industry in the world. We can compete all over the world. The only thing we have to do is keep the government out of our hair and let's go to it. I have a few more notes here, but it is difficult for me to read my own writing.

Since coming to Ottawa I have heard that the government has some kind of a butter problem. I always say we have a sardine problem but we are not asking the government to do anything about it. We have 100 million tins of sardines on our shelves at the present time, but we are going to dispose of them through private industry. We have in our industry the seiners, the weirmen and the packers. We need the three trades in our industry. The seiners are mobile; they go after the fish wherever they are. The weirmen are stationary and the fish must come to them. Therefore we need regulation in our industry, and I would say that for five or six years up to this time we did not have regulation in the industry; it was more or less chaos.

The reason we need the weirmen in our industry is that at certain times in the summer the fish need to be cleaned and kept in the weirs. If the seiners seine fish at this particular time, they must hold the fish in the seine, and if the fish die they have to sell them for fishmeal or something else—what we call the grinders. So we need the weirmen. Scientists will probably tell you that there are enough fish in the sea to keep us going; it does not make any difference how we take them out, or anything like that, because the fish are there. I agree with the scientists that the fish are there; but on the other hand it is what people think that counts. The weirmen think the seiners are disturbing the schools coming in and they will not build their weirs. If they do not build their weirs, it does not make any difference what the scientists think, because we will not be able to keep the industry and it will put the industry, the seiners and the weirmen out of business. Therefore we must have regulation.

I want to congratulate the minister upon putting regulations into effect which are going to be of great benefit to the sardine industry. Another thing about that industry is that we do not know anything about it. I have been in the sardine industry for about 40 years, and I know no more about it than I did when I went into it, as far as the fish are concerned. I can tell you all about the manufacturing end of it, I can tell you all about selling; but I cannot tell you anything about when the fish are going to arrive, how big or how small they are going to be, or anything about it. I have talked to scientists and they have told me it would take about 20 years of intense research to know about it.

In our industry we make our own cans and pile up, say, 7 million or 8 million cases of cans, with nothing to put in them. We build a warehouse; we put $250,000 into a warehouse, and have nothing to put into it. Then the fish come all at once and we find we do not have enough cans. The Department of Fisheries could give us that information through research, and I hope that money will be put into the estimates to take care of that problem.

There is another problem, about which hon. members have probably heard. I refer to the Passamaquoddy development. I do not know anything about power development, but I do know something about the fisheries. With regard to the Passamaquoddy development, at the present time the United States government is asking for 109 square miles of our water. If that water is turned over to them we will lose control of 109 square miles of this resource. The sardine industry is located around Passamaquoddy. It has never been proven why that industry is there. It has never been proven what put the industry there. It is the only place in North America where you can have a sardine industry. This industry means a great deal to our economy; in fact, it pays out between $5 million and $6 million a year for fish, and in wages. If you cannot prove why that industry is there, then you cannot say that any dams or power developments are going to hurt it. The first thing you have to prove is why the industry is there, and that has never been proven. It is the only place in North America in which this industry can be economically located, because you have to operate six or seven months in the year to make it economical. In the sardine industry we operate sometimes 12 months a year. I think there should be quite a bit of research carried out and we should know why the industry is there. If we know why, we will know whether any dams or power developments will hurt it. But, as I say, we do not know that at the present time, and we should know it before any power development takes place on the Passamaquoddy.

Another item we have down there is clams. For many years we had clam factories around the bay of Fundy. Ten or fifteen years ago it was recommended—I do not know what government was in power at that time—that some conservation should be carried out on clams, but nothing was done about it. This went on until the clams were dug out. When the fisherman goes to work and digs clams, if they are smaller than two inches in size he has to throw them away, and the gulls and crows pick them up. So eventually our clam factories were shut down. I recommend most strongly to the Department of Fisheries that they close the beds and keep them closed for at least three or four years, until the clam industry can come back again and be given the chance once more to go into operation. I hope this will be done.

The sardine industry does business with people all around the world. Sixty five per cent of our industry is concerned with export. Therefore the industry means a great deal not only to the province of New Brunswick but to the Dominion of Canada, because it keeps the export dollars rolling in. Our export market to England was for a long time shut off because the use of the word sardine was forbidden in that country. But lately we have got around that by using the word sild and we are developing quite a market in England. It is strange when one realizes that the development of this market was helped because of Jamaicans going over to England.

For the last 60 years we have always had a very large market in Jamaica. The Jamaicans went to England and located around London and Manchester, and the first thing we knew was that we had developed a market for sardines in these areas. We found that Jamaicans were asking for these sardines. Therefore, because we put the word sild on the cans we were able to send sardines to England.

I probably could talk about the sardines for quite a while, but the hour is getting late and I think I have possibly said enough.

Mr. Churchill: I just want to ask the minister a question. Is it his wish that the estimates be passed tonight, or does he wish to conduct what looks almost like a filibuster on the part of his own party? They have consumed at least one hour and 20 minutes of the time. I thought the idea was that we would push on with the business of the house. We have indicated our desire to get these estimates through, and get on to the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Robichaud: I appreciate the co-operation which I have received this evening on the introduction of my estimates. I do not deny the fact that probably more hon. members have spoken from this side of the house than from the other side, but everyone has been very brief. It certainly is my intention, if we have the co-operation of the house, to have these estimates passed this evening. Personally I had some replies for hon. members who have spoken, but if the house agrees, I would prefer giving those replies to them individually by letter, and then carrying on with the estimates.

Mr. Howard: I think that proposal of the minister's is most unsatisfactory. By providing information by letter an hon. member does not have the opportunity to query it further in public. We should like to see these things done in public, and not secretly by letter.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall item 1 carry?

Mr. Howard: No. Before it does, perhaps the minister could say what he was going to say in response to the various items.

Mr. Robichaud: As the hon. member is keenly interested in having some response to the matters he has raised, I am prepared to give it very briefly. The hon. member has referred to a letter to which he could not get a reply. I was the most surprised member of the committee to learn about this because it is not the practice in my office. So far as the north Pacific fishery treaty is concerned, I have previously said that while the negotiations are under way it would not be proper for us to debate the details of the negotiations now taking place regarding the treaty between the United States, Japan and Canada.

I have stated, and I repeat it, that as soon as an agreement is reached between the three parties to the treaty, the standing committee on marine and fisheries will be called and the whole matter will be discussed in all its details, because then we would know on what terms an agreement had been reached. I can assure hon. members that we know the views of the different parties, of the fishermen's union or the association, and of fishermen who do not belong to that particular union.

The Canadian delegation has done everything possible to respect those views and to make sure the interests of the fishermen were protected. The hon. member also mentioned that it was not proper to have a home-town minister. Although I do come from a fishing community, it is not my intention to act as a home-town minister. The policies which will be introduced by this government will be national policies, and if the hon. member would take a quick look at the estimates he would see that the amounts are fairly evenly divided between the province of British Columbia and the five or six provinces on the east coast. For instance, in the item on conservation and development, out of $6,700,000 over $2,700,000 is for the west coast. For construction and equipment, out of $1,700,000 over $766,000 is for the west coast, and if he looks at votes 45 and 85 he will find that the west coast is well taken care of.

Item agreed to.

Special—

45. Canadian share of expenses of the international commissions detailed in the estimates, $1,162,000.

Mr. Howard: On this item which deals with Canada's share of the expenses of a number of international commissions, we must disagree with the minister's contention that it is not proper to debate the question of the north Pacific fisheries treaty while the negotiations are being conducted. This is a most ridiculous contention because its implication is that we must remain silent, with no opportunity to get information from the department or the minister about what is taking place or what is proposed with respect to a vitally important phase of our fishery problems. The same principle would apply with respect to any discussions relevant to other treaties and conventions.

The negotiations, so-called, with respect to the north Pacific fisheries treaty have encompassed quite some time, and I gather they are not complete. A further meeting is to take place in Ottawa some time next spring, which leaves us in the position of facing a blank wall, with no response to any of the queries made with respect to this vitally important question.

We hope the minister and the government agree without equivocation that there should be no relaxation of the abstention principle contained in the treaty, because that is the basis on which it rests. As the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich indicated, there is not one iota of difference with respect to it among any of the organizations or people on the west coast who are concerned with it. Yet the attitude of the government as expressed publicly has been generally one of possibly wanting to negotiate on the question of the abstention principle in order to preserve the treaty itself.

We all want to ensure that there is a treaty and that it is maintained. In fact we would like to see it expanded to include other nations, as the Liberals promised they would do. The approach of Canada, however, as enunciated in the public press, has been one which would lead the public to believe that the government's attitude is that of wanting to bargain away the abstention principle in order to maintain the treaty in existence. This is the interpretation which could easily be made, unless the minister clearly states the contrary.

I saw an indication of this in the Vancouver Province some time ago. I have forgotten the date, but it was around the time that the minister left the west coast to go to Tokyo to participate in the discussions there. There was an indication in that newspaper, and an interpretation by some people, that the government would be willing to let the Japanese people fish more of our herring on the west coast if they would only leave our salmon alone on the high seas.

I do not believe the minister would make such a statement, and I do not think it was attributed to him. He knows the industry better than that, but this is the interpretation being placed on the attitude of the government, because it has not clearly stated its concern for the maintenance of the abstention principle as it is presently contained in the treaty, and the expansion of that principle so that the line of demarcation that now exists is placed in such a position in mid-Pacific as to guarantee that our salmon, which spawn and grow in our streams in British Columbia, are not caught on the other side of the 175th west meridian. It is the particular function of the minister and his government to explain to this parliament those misconceptions which exist with respect to the treaty, without any equivocation, followed of course by firm definite statements and approaches in various discussions taking place between the three nations negotiating the treaty. If the minister desires to deal with that particular phase of the matter I for one would like him to tell us what is happening to the promise of his party to guarantee that Russia would become a party to the treaty.

[Mr. Howard.]

Mr. Robichaud: So far as the statement to the effect that I said it was our intention to allow the Japanese to catch more herring on the west coast in return for certain protection to salmon fisheries, there is no such statement on my part. Negotiations in Japan have taken place amicably. We exposed our position and told the Japanese and the Americans what our position was. We were certainly interested in retaining the north Pacific treaty, but we knew such a treaty would be useless to us unless we had within the treaty the measures needed for the protection and conservation of our Pacific fisheries. I can assure the hon. member it is not a give-away affair on our part. As I said earlier we are fully aware of the intentions, desires and views of both fishermen and the industry on the Pacific coast, and it is our intention to act accordingly.

So far as the promise made by the party to which I belong to include the U.S.S.R. in the treaty, I assure the hon. member that this evening is the first I have heard of that promise. The matter has been under discussion, but I want to repeat what I said earlier. We do not feel that now is the proper time to have the U.S.S.R. as a fourth party to the north Pacific treaty. We have taken the matter up before with the U.S.S.R. and it has been obvious to us that they have no intention whatsoever of joining at this time. What the future holds for us I cannot say, but I hope some day we will be in a position to have all countries interested in fishing in the north Pacific taking part in a north Pacific treaty.

Mr. Howard: It is too bad the minister does not read the political propaganda put out by his own party. I have a publication in front of me called the "Liberal Challenge" published by the B.C. Liberal association, in which they offer a solution to everything. On page 7, under the heading "Wealth from the sea", there are a variety of things which are going to be done. Let me quote from it:

> Other measures in the Liberal fisheries program—and that is a capital "L" Liberal—

> —look toward bringing Russia under the provisions of the north Pacific fisheries treaty, which now governs only Japan, Canada and the U.S.A.

Mr. Robichaud: That is exactly what I said. We are looking towards that, but we feel now is not the proper time. We believe they are not prepared to join in such a treaty.

Mr. Howard: That is not what the minister said.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes it is.

Mr. Howard: He said a moment ago that with respect to bringing the U.S.S.R. into the north Pacific fisheries treaty, this was the first he had heard about it.

Mr. Robichaud: No, I meant the election promise.

Mr. Howard: That it was an election promise?

Mr. Robichaud: Yes, by the Liberal party.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is not a promise; it is just anticipation.

Mr. Howard: If the minister did not have so much coaching from the Secretary of State who is sitting beside him, we might get some straight answers to this question. In any event, whether the minister heard about it or not, and no matter how much he wants to misinterpret his own party's propaganda, he said they had had discussions with the U.S.S.R. about this matter. Can the minister tell us why he says that now is not the time to bring or attempt to bring the U.S.S.R. into the north Pacific fisheries treaty, especially in view of the fact that the whole treaty is open to negotiation, having reached its ten-year expiry date in June, negotiations having gone on in Washington and Tokyo and planned for Ottawa in the spring? Second, with whom were the discussions held; through what channels; how long did they take; what was discussed, and what was the attitude of the U.S.S.R.? I should also appreciate it if the minister, who a moment ago said that the Canadian delegation had explained their position quite clearly both to Japan and the United States, would extend that a little and be courteous enough to parliament to explain the position to parliament as well, so the people in Canada know what this is all about.

Mr. Robichaud: I should like to make it clear that the Russian fishermen at this time are not fishing stocks of fish which the United States, the Japanese and ourselves are interested in. There would be no real advantage in the U.S.S.R. participating in a treaty covering stocks in which they are not now interested. I should also mention that in a certain area of the north Pacific they have a treaty with Japan; and if we studied in detail the application of that treaty to our problems I think we would find that in some cases it would not be too practical.

Mr. Howard: Would the minister mind telling us why it is not considered practical to have the Soviet union in the treaty? He said they are not interested in the fisheries areas covered by the treaty. I presume this means salmon fishing, which is of vital concern to us and which extends into the mid-Pacific. Is it the Soviet union which says it is not interested in fishing the fish in this area, or is it the minister's guess that the Soviet union is not interested in the particular species of fish in that area? I am sure the committee would like to know when these discussions took place, and through what channels.

Mr. Robichaud: At no time has there been any official negotiation with the U.S.S.R. concerning the participation of their country in the north Pacific treaty. The U.S.S.R. have had representatives at other conventions where we had Canadian delegates. There has also been an exchange of notes between the Department of External Affairs and the U.S.S.R. regarding the halibut fishery. I am not in a position to give all those details this evening; I do not have them in front of me. As I mentioned earlier, we feel this is not the time for the U.S.S.R. to join because they are not interested in participating. Second, they are not interested in the varieties or stocks of fish presently covered by the north Pacific treaty.

Mr. Monteith: Ten thirty.

Mr. Howard: Inasmuch as the minister has said he does not have these details before him now, it might be as well to call it ten thirty so that on another occasion he might have the opportunity to provide that information, so that we may know what is going on.

Item stands.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: We have been told the business for tomorrow, but would the leader of the house put it on the record for convenience. Second, would he let us know what the business is for Monday and Tuesday? My hope is that he will space out the three remaining supply motions over the next seven weeks rather than take them consecutively.

Mr. Pickersgill: The business for tomorrow, as has already been indicated, is the continuation of the income tax bill. If that should be completed I think we would be prepared to go on with the vocational training resolution, but I imagine that is only a remote contingency, much as I should like to think otherwise.

Tomorrow evening we shall take the estimates of the Department of Justice. If they should be completed, the Minister of Transport would be available to take up those items of his which were stood over. It is our intention to have the Minister of Finance move to go into supply on Monday. I should like to have a chance to talk to hon. gentlemen opposite about the legislative plans for the rest of the week. I hope to give what indication I can tomorrow night.

It being 25 minutes before eleven o'clock, the house adjourned, without question put.

The following items were passed in committee of supply this day:

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES

1. Departmental administration, $461,000.

5. Information and consumer service including grant of $3,000 to Nova Scotia fisheries exhibition, $291,000.

10. Economics service including $10,000 for grants to Canadian universities for research in social sciences, $337,000.

15. Industrial development service, $693,000.

20. Field services administration, $885,000.

Conservation and development service—

25. Operation and maintenance, $6,738,000.

30. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $1,070,000.

30a. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $231,000.

35. Inspection service, $2,038,000.

40. Fishermen's indemnity plan administration, $259,000.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, October 25, 1963

The house met at 11 a.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ENGLISH DEBATES BRANCH—TABLING OF REPORT OF SURVEY

Mr. Speaker: Following a recommendation made by the commissioners of internal economy at a meeting held yesterday, I beg leave to table copy of a report of a survey of the English debates reporting branch, House of Commons, by the management analysis division, advisory service branch of the civil service commission, dated January 1963.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LAMBERT—EDITORIAL IN TORONTO "GLOBE AND MAIL"

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to raise a question of privilege affecting all hon. members of this house because I feel there is a rather unfair commentary on the proceedings of this house appearing in an editorial in this morning's Globe and Mail. Reference is there made to the debate which took place in this house very briefly last Friday consisting of a speech lasting some 15 minutes by the Prime Minister, and a debate lasting about an hour and a half to an hour and 40 minutes the day before yesterday, concerning the setting up of the committee to deal with the procedures of this house.

It has been suggested, Mr. Speaker, that this was a waste of time. May I say, sir, that I feel it would be quite improper to so suggest since the house limited itself to statements by leaders of the parties, and I myself spoke for a period of less than three minutes. Certain things were said during the course of that debate which could not be said in committee. They were matters for the house to consider during the course of that debate. Under the circumstances I feel that the inferences drawn and some suggestions contained in the editorial were quite unfair to this house as a whole.

MR. OLSON—ATTEMPT TO CALL MEETING OF AGRICULTURE COMMITTEE

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I rise on a question of privilege that concerns all members of this house and which, I suggest, has become urgent in the last few days. Yesterday evening I addressed a letter to the chief of the committees and private legislation branch, and I wish to quote that letter:

Dear Sir:

I wish to request that a meeting of the standing committee on agriculture and colonization be called with all convenient speed for the purpose of selecting a chairman and other officers.

I further request that the committee be asked to consider and investigate the wide difference between the price received for feed grain by the producers in western Canada and the price paid by livestock feeders in eastern Canada.

Yours truly,

H. A. Olson.

I received a letter in reply, which I also wish to quote:

Dear Mr. Olson:

Your letter of October 24 requesting a meeting of the standing committee on agriculture and colonization has just been handed to me.

As I indicated to you over the telephone, I have no authority to call a meeting of any parliamentary committee. However, I am passing your request on to the chief government whip who, according to practice, advises me with respect to organization meetings.

Yours very truly,

Antonio Plouffe.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that there is precedent for raising a question of privilege such as I have in mind. I do not intend to quote all the evidence which is contained in the official records of this house, but it is reported in Hansard for April 16, 1935, volume III at page 2768 that a member of the staff of this house wrongfully interfered with the rights of a member. The point I wish to make now is that a member of a standing committee which has been set up does in fact have the right to request a meeting of that standing committee, and the officers of this house are under obligation to call such a meeting.

Standing order 65(1)(f) provides for the composition of a standing committee of the house on agriculture and colonization, to consist of 60 members, 20 of whom shall constitute a quorum.

On Thursday, June 27, 1963 this house concurred in the composition of such a standing committee and resolved that the committee be empowered to examine and inquire into all such matters and things as might be referred to it by the house; and to report from time to time its observations and opinions thereon, with power to send for persons, papers and records. That will be found in Votes and Proceedings, June 27, 1963.

At this point the committee was fully constituted and in existence. It was, as the law has it, no longer in posse but in esse. It will continue so until the session ends or it is de-composed by action of the house. Its first function is procedural; that is, to appoint a chairman. Its second function is substantive; that is, to consider matters referred to it by the house and to report back thereon to the house. The committee, in the absence of regulation, is its own master of the first function, the appointment of a chairman. And every member being equal, each member of the committee has the right to call the committee to assemble at a particular time and place to elect a chairman. If a member exercises this right, the other members of the standing committee indicate their approval by assembly of a quorum at his call; if a quorum does not assemble, then the committee has indicated their disapproval of his call.

This is the general law governing public assemblies. It can be varied in any particular case by a governing authority. The Canadian House of Commons has not altered this general law by its standing orders. Standing order No. 1 states that where we do not provide for a case, the usage and custom of the United Kingdom House of Commons shall apply. But the United Kingdom House of Commons does not have a usage or custom; it has a particular standing order which provides for the manner in which a standing committee chairman is appointed, United Kingdom standing order 62(1). This standing order, and standing order 96(4), set up a particular machinery which we do not have and therefore cannot utilize. Mr. Speaker of the United Kingdom house appoints a standing committee chairman from a panel of members chosen by him at the beginning of the session called the chairmen's panel.

The United Kingdom does have a usage, but it applies only to select committees. Upon the select committee being appointed, its senior member fixes the time and place of the first meeting. For this purpose the senior member is the member who has the longest term of service, adding together his various periods of service in the house. This can be found in the book "The House of Commons At Work", by Eric Taylor, page 183.

The United Kingdom authority, Sir Reginald Palgrave, states that the member or members who call the meeting to elect a chairman have a further right; that is, to propose a president to conduct the meeting if more than one name is put forward for chairman. In his authoritative work, "The Chairman's Handbook", he says:

> A chairman may be called upon to take the chair with the general approval of the assembly. If the call, however, be challenged, a member of the meeting of influential or official position, who is not prepared to undertake the office of chairman, should be requested to act as president during the election to the chair. And, subject to specific rule to the contrary, the right to propose such a president lies with those who have called the meeting. Their proposal, therefore, should be accepted without dispute; they, on their part, acting with the sole object of securing the right conduct of the election to the chair.

A standing committee, or a select special committee for that matter, is a portion of the house and is not subject to the control of the government or the executive branch. That can be found in Beauchesne, fourth edition, citations 288 and 296. In citation 296 he says:

> A private member's notice of motion that the government should give consideration to the advisability of setting up a special committee of the house is out of order for it takes for granted that the government is vested with the right to appoint committees of the house. The executive power cannot encroach upon the legislative; they are both distinctly described in the British North America Act where it is also stated that the constitution of Canada shall be similar in principle to that of the United Kingdom.

It follows then, Mr. Speaker, that to suggest that a standing committee assembles to elect a chairman at the call of the government whip is to pile absurdity upon absurdity and to introduce a rule of tyranny into our democratic procedures. And it is even more absurd to introduce the fictional, as far as this house is concerned, government whip as the controller of the standing committees of the house.

So, Mr. Speaker, I suggest there has been a wrong interference by an officer of the house with respect to a member's right to call a meeting of a standing committee. Further, yesterday the Secretary of State said that any member of a standing committee can call a meeting of the committee on request that a meeting be called. If you will look at Votes and Proceedings of June 27, Mr. Speaker, you will see I am a member of this standing committee that is in existence.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, if I may I should like to say a word or two to indicate how completely I agree with what the hon. member for Medicine Hat has said. I think we are all indebted to him for the research he has done on this subject. I must say I spoke without having made any study of the question, but I am very glad to be told that I am right because when he first rose I wondered whether I might perhaps have been wrong.

I think it would be quite insufferable if the chief government whip or any other member of the house had any greater rights than any member of any committee set up by the house to ask that the committee be constituted and set up properly. Of course, once it is, the chairman has certain functions that are traditional. I have no doubt it has been the custom, as a convenience for these committees to be set up at the suggestion of the chief government whip. I daresay that has happened. I have not had too much to do with this sort of thing but I daresay that may have happened over the years. I am sure no official of the house meant to do any wrong or to show any contempt for the house, and I do not think the hon. member suggested that for a minute.

I do feel that perhaps now the matter has been aired there would be a consensus along the line the hon. member has suggested, that any member of a committee set up by this house could have the committee called together if there had been any delay in that respect. I hope that will be the universal view in the house.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): May I say that there is a notice being prepared in my office this morning calling for a meeting of this committee at nine o'clock on Monday morning. I have canvassed a number of the members and believe a quorum will be in attendance in the railway committee room. I think we all owe the hon. member for Medicine Hat a great deal for the work he has done in connection with this matter, and I believe it will change the operations of committees in the future.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): I had intended to raise this matter today, Mr. Speaker, because I believe a wrong impression was left yesterday by the remarks made by the Secretary of State. It may be that any member can call a committee together, but until this house has given the committee some order of reference the committee has not anything to do except elect a chairman. I think that is the point this house should take into consideration. Yesterday I asked the Minister of Agriculture if he would submit to the committee on agriculture and colonization the stabilization act for study, and you will recall the answer I received on that occasion. Until this house gives the committee on agriculture and colonization something to deal with, it would be futile to hold a meeting.

Mr. Speaker: There is no doubt about the importance of the question to all hon. members in the house, but we have had an extended discussion and I am inclined to think that while the matter is very important, nevertheless it hardly rates the designation of a question of privilege. I suggest to the hon. member for Medicine Hat that perhaps on orders of the day he might direct a question along this line to the government.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Is Your Honour telling us now that a member of a committee cannot insist upon that committee being called together, and that instead we have to ask the government questions when the government itself, through the house leader, has specifically stated this is not the function of the government but the function of the house? We are asking that this house function properly so that the committees can be called together.

Mr. Speaker: The distinction I was trying to make is that in my humble opinion the matter is more in the nature of a grievance or a question of procedure rather than a question of privilege. This is the only point I was trying to make. The house, I know, is always master of its own decision in respect of procedure. I do think, in view of the extended discussion we have had, that the air has been cleared, and I am just suggesting the matter might be left there in view of the explanation of the Secretary of State this morning.

Mr. Douglas: May I just say to Your Honour that in our opinion this is most definitely a matter of privilege as it affects the rights of members to have committees called. So far as we are concerned, the question has not been cleared up until this committee is called and properly constituted. If it is not called and constituted fairly soon, we will take further measures to bring the matter before the house.

Mr. Olson: In my view, sir, the question of privilege involves more than just whether or not a member of a committee is permitted to call a meeting. The fact is that I formally requested an officer of the house to send notices or do all the things that are necessary to call the meeting together, and to notify the members of the committee that a meeting should be called, and he says he has not authority to call this meeting and is waiting for the government whip to do it. The point is whether this officer of the house acted properly in refusing to send out the notices after I asked him to do so.

Mr. Speaker: In view of the importance which all hon. members attach to this matter, and which I do too, I am sure they will not object if I take the matter under consideration and take time to study the long memorandum submitted by the hon. member for Medicine Hat, reach a decision on it, and report to the house in due course.

[Later:]

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon):

That with the unanimous consent of the house it be an instruction to the standing committee on agriculture and colonization that they have the power to inquire into the operations and policy and financial structure of the Agricultural Stabilization Act and board and to report to the house their observations thereon.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member unanimous consent of the house?

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder, sir, if we could see the motion first.

Mr. Speaker: It has been moved by the hon. member for Rosthern, seconded by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm:

That with the unanimous consent of the house it be an instruction to the standing committee on agriculture and colonization that they have the power to inquire into the operations and policy and financial structure of the Agricultural Stabilization Act and board and to report to the house their observations thereon.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, there is no desire on the part of the government to restrict any inquiry in any way, but this is a rather unusual procedure. I suggest that Your Honour take the motion under advisement, and perhaps that question could be considered on Monday. In other words, if I had to rely on the rules I would say that today there is not unanimous consent; but in an attempt to be as conciliatory as possible I suggest that the question whether such a motion would be in order be considered.

Mr. Speaker: If the house does not give unanimous consent, then I have no option under the rules of the house.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether, during the time you are giving consideration to this matter, you would look at Hansard for the last session, wherein I asked unanimous consent to move a motion with respect to the north Pacific fisheries commission, to refer that matter to the standing committee on marine and fisheries. At that time the Secretary of State, then a private member, was the first to jump to his feet to offer unanimous consent.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, before you move on from motions I should also like to ask unanimous consent of the house to move a motion. Perhaps I should read it, and if you want to take it under advisement along with the other that would be acceptable. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Patterson):

That the standing committee on agriculture and colonization be ordered to examine forthwith, and inquire into all matters arising out of and relating to, the difference between the price received for feed grain by the producers in western Canada and the price paid by livestock feeders in eastern Canada; and the said committee report with all convenient speed the observations and opinions thereon.

Mr. Speaker: Once more I must ask whether the house gives unanimous consent.

Mr. Pickersgill: I hope, Mr. Speaker, you will treat this matter in the same way as the other, and take it under reserve.

Mr. Pigeon: We would like the opinion of the Minister of Agriculture today.

Mr. Speaker: I am advised, I am glad to say, that not having received unanimous consent on these two motions, or proposed motions, I should not take them under consideration. I do have to take under consideration the matters raised by the hon. member for Medicine Hat and discussed earlier this day; but I do not take into consideration the two motions which have now been moved unless I have unanimous consent. Not having that unanimous consent I propose not to consider them.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The government having refused.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Pickersgill: I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the government will give consideration to this matter, and I will make a report to the house on Monday.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, so that the record will be clear, the lack of unanimity arises by reason of the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) speaking for the government.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) is perfectly accurate, sir, in what he says.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, these two motions resemble one which I presented yesterday to adjourn debate in this house, and I think the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron) got up and sort of blocked off my own motion. Again today the government is again blocking this agriculture matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order. We must proceed with the order of business.

MR. FANE—PROVISION OF SIMULTANEOUS INTERPRETATION IN GALLERIES

Mr. F. J. W. Fane (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege. As everybody who sits in this house is aware, the galleries of the chamber are visited daily by a great number of people who come here to listen to the deliberations of the house. I am informed that many of these people are not adequately bilingual in the two official languages of Canada and therefore cannot follow a debate in its entirety as well as they might wish, with the result that many leave here and express their unhappiness at this condition. They know very well that the members of the house and the press gallery have the advantage of simultaneous translation. Might I suggest that the proper authorities take under advisement the possibility of providing simultaneous translation in the galleries of this chamber.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Prosper Boulanger (Mercier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Public Works. Could the minister tell the house whether the government intends to take before long the necessary steps so that the simultaneous translation may be heard in the galleries of the House of Commons?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Department of Public Works is considering providing simultaneous translation in the galleries as part of an overall improvement plan for the main block of parliament buildings.

The matter has been under consideration for about two months, and when the departmental engineers have submitted their report, the government will then be in a position to make a decision in this regard.

[Text]

BANKING AND COMMERCE

Tenth report of standing committee on banking and commerce—Mr. Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace.)

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILES—PLANS TO INCREASE CANADIAN SHARE IN GROWTH

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce to the house certain new measures which are being introduced by the government to foster greater production and trade in motor vehicles and parts for vehicles. An order in council has been passed which gives effect to the following measures as of November 1, 1963. They will supersede the provisions of P.C. 1962-1/1536 pertaining to the remission of duties paid on importations of automatic transmissions and stripped engines.

Plans to Increase Automotive Industry

The new measures provide for the remission of duties paid on importations of vehicles and parts for vehicles for use in the manufacture of motor vehicles in Canada.

The remission of duties on imports may be earned through exports of vehicles or parts in excess of exports made during the 12 months ending October 31, 1962. Exports to any country are eligible to earn a credit for remission of duties. Credits may be earned by vehicle manufacturers through exports by themselves or by the parts makers.

One dollar of exported Canadian content will earn the remission of duties on one dollar of dutiable imports. If full advantage of the plan is taken by industry, it could lead to increased production and exports of between $150 million and $200 million annually, and to the remission of duties on an equivalent value of imports into Canada.

The new measures will be in force initially for a period of three years. It is envisaged that a plan of this magnitude will result in substantial investment in new production facilities, and the planning and construction of new machinery and buildings requires a certain minimum time, even when pressed vigorously. The government will wish, however, to review the progress achieved under the plan at the end of three years and to be guided in implementing future measures by the results achieved in the interval.

The objectives of this plan are threefold; first, to increase production and create additional employment in Canada; second, to take an important step to improve Canada's balance of payments position; and third, to give producers of parts for vehicles and producers of vehicles a valuable incentive to achieve longer production runs and a greater degree of specialization, thus assisting them to reduce their costs. The plan involves no restriction to trade. The new measures do not require the enactment of new duties or other restrictive measures. They will be implemented entirely within the context of Canada's trade agreement commitments.

The government believes that the new plan will make substantial new production opportunities available to Canadian automotive industry producers. It should also help them to reduce costs, with benefits to them and to Canadian consumers. Furthermore, it is consistent with Canada's policy of solving our trade and balance of payments problems by constructive measures and not through restrictive actions. Under these new measures trade in both directions will be encouraged.

We feel that this measure will contribute to a greater flow of trade between Canada and its trading partners, and will place Canadian producers in a much better position to compete efficiently and effectively in Canadian and international markets.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the house listened with a great deal of attention to the rather belated statement we have just heard. This, as we know, has for some days been the subject matter of discussion and controversy in Washington; it has been debated on the C.B.C., and I suppose it is fitting that on the last day of the parliamentary week we should be told in the house what the government proposes to do with regard to this matter.

This is, of course, a very important statement, and the house would not expect or would not want, even if the rules permitted, any discussion of the details of this proposal. This is in some ways in keeping with the program which was laid down by the government of my right hon. friend, now the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) in extending—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nowlan: Some people should read their history books, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nowlan: This is in some ways in keeping with the program laid down by the former government in expanding the automobile industry. The first recommendation of the Bladen commission was that the excise taxes on automobiles should be remitted. That was done. The second measure that was implemented just about a year ago—and of course we anticipated something like this had to happen, because the year had almost expired —was when we allowed the duties to be imposed upon automatic transmissions and engines and gave a remission of duty on the equivalent export of parts, such as the minister has suggested is now to be extended still further. I am very glad to see that the minister is apparently following the path and the program which we established.

It has been suggested in other places and other capitals not off the North American continent that this is a terrible violation of GATT and that recrimination and protests are bound to follow. I hope this is not true. I would hope that this is within the framework of GATT, because I am sure the government realizes that it is inadvisable to offend any more people with whom we have to deal in our trading relations.

As I say, Mr. Speaker, this is a very technical matter and I do not propose to discuss it now. I suppose the minister, as Minister of Industry, has no estimates coming before the committee in the next few weeks as have other departments; but as Minister of Defence Production we will have the estimates of his department before the committee, or possibly we can discuss this matter when our friend the Minister of Finance brings his estimates before us. In the meantime we will study the proposal and be able to discuss it in the house at some length at a suitable opportunity.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the New Democratic party I wish to say that we are glad to have this measure placed before us after a great deal of discussion has taken place with regard to it in the public press, over the radio and on television. We recognize that it is an attempt, and I think a sincere one, to try to jolt the automotive production industry in Canada out of its traditional lethargy and bias against the production of automobile parts and equipment in this country for export purposes.

As was said by the previous speaker, the whole matter is one of great complexity, and it is very difficult at this point to even try to assess the response this measure will invoke, mainly because the automotive industry is owned largely in the United States. Therefore you have in effect the same companies producing on both sides of the border, and it is difficult to assess at this stage what type of reaction will follow, because you are not operating in the traditional market place or the traditional situation which might prevail among competing companies.

We have not too much detail this morning, so it is difficult to say what this measure really amounts to, but it does look suspiciously like an export subsidy; because in effect we are making a remission to the companies in return for exports. We are going to remit certain tariffs they are paying on goods they are importing, so to me it looks suspiciously like an export subsidy.

We hope this will not invoke any kind of retaliation from other quarters. We have been told that the United States government is urging the automotive industry in that country to band together to thwart this program. If this takes place it will create a difficulty for this government, and all of us certainly hope it will not happen.

The Minister of Finance, speaking the other evening in Hamilton, indicated that this program is going to be applied to other sectors of the economy. We hope that before this is done a great deal of research will be made available so that all people in Canada will have an opportunity to study it, and we will not get into programs that we may find it difficult at a later date to get out of.

On the whole, Mr. Speaker, it is a very complicated matter. We hope, as the previous speaker said, there will be some opportunity to examine this proposal in depth in the house, that we will have a chance to debate it, because it is a very important innovation in the Canadian community. We therefore hope that at some stage we will have an opportunity to examine this proposal in more detail.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, the announcement that has just been made by the Minister of Industry is, I think, a new departure in tariff arrangements. It is designed to balance both our trade and our balance of payments position with the United States. We have long pointed to the fact that our balance of trade in commodities and our balance of payments in non-commodity trade has been a problem for Canada and is growing worse year by year. It is impossible at this time to foresee or to even comment on the ramifications which may arise from this new departure. However, we hope it will be successful in balancing our commodity trade and also in assisting our balance of payments position.

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette: Mr. Speaker, we have listened with attention and interest to the statement made by the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury). It is time for Canada to break new ground in the field of industry, especially the manufacturing industry.

It is good to hear the government say the time has come to encourage the manufacturing of automobile parts in Canada and to see it take a step in that direction at last.

Something we do not like, however, is intervention on the part of the American secretary of commerce, Mr. Luther Hodges, to the effect that he probably would have to make reprisals to offset Canada's decisions. I am not anti-American, far from it. I am pro-Canadian, and I feel the United States should be glad to see other countries, including ours, show some initiative of their own. What we want from those people is not so much financial help as technical assistance to enable us to do through our own efforts what can be done in our own country.

Therefore, I sincerely congratulate the government for taking this initiative.

Although the hon. member of the Conservative party who spoke before me stated that this program had been developed by his own party, it remains that the Conservatives, when they were in office, neglected to put it into effect, whereas today the government is taking that responsibility.

And I, for one—and this goes for all the members of the group I represent here—am satisfied and happy to note that the minister has taken such action.

[Text]

LABOUR RELATIONS

CONTINUATION OF CONTROL BY OFFICERS OF SEAMENS UNION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Norris commission report at page 306 recommended that:

> —the president and other senior officers of the S.I.U. of Canada, including the present administrator of the S.I.U. welfare plan, should not be continued in office or employment in the union.

In view of that recommendation, would the minister say whether Mr. Banks has any basis for the statement he is reported to have made last evening to the effect that the trustees have informed him that he will remain in office or in control of the S.I.U.; and furthermore, would he comment on the interpretation thereof on the radio that there would be no interference in the internal operations of the S.I.U.? Would the minister take the house into his confidence and tell the house what passed between the trustees and Mr. Banks? In addition, so that we will have a clear picture, would he table the order in council appointing the trustees, if that has not already been done, and would he table the letter allegedly written by him whereby certain undertakings were given to the S.I.U.?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to make it perfectly clear that I have written no letter to the S.I.U. at any time containing any undertakings. I did send a telegram to the president of the S.I.U. drawing to his attention one particular clause in the bill passed by parliament, and I think that telegram was printed in the press a couple of days ago. I want to make that perfectly clear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Has that been tabled?

Mr. MacEachen: I would be glad to make it available. As I recollect it, it has been made available to the press and it is open to anyone to see its exact terms, which simply rely on one particular clause of the bill.

I think I should make clear the status of the board of trustees established by parliament. Mr. Justice Dryer made it clear yesterday to the press, as I understand it, that the board of trustees is responsible to parliament and not responsible to the Minister of Labour. I share that view. The board of trustees in its operation is independent; it is not under the direction of the minister or responsible to the minister except as provided in the act passed by parliament.

I wish to make it clear also that I have not talked to the trustees since the preliminary meeting, held the night before last, at which they made two decisions. I think I should explain that I attended this meeting along with officials of the department in order to assist the trustees to familiarize themselves with the legislation and to provide other material to them. At the time when they felt they ought to take decisions, they withdrew to a separate room to make their own decisions outside my presence, or the presence of any officials of my department, in order to emphasize their independence.

Since that meeting I have had no conversations with any members of the board of trustees, nor have I talked to them or received any report from them. I will say this, however; I have full confidence that the trustees will discharge their duties in accordance with the authority granted them by parliament.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A supplementary question. Were any such undertakings given as alleged by Mr. Banks, namely that he and his officers are to remain? That was the question. I also asked about the tabling of the order in council setting up the board of trustees and the particular message which was sent by the minister.

Mr. MacEachen: I have already answered the first question. I have no knowledge, nor shall I ask the trustees in their particular capacity to report to me, since they are now in a sense officers of five unions, as to their day to day conversations with any person with regard to the internal operations of their unions. I have no knowledge, as I have stated, of any conversations; and if the leader of the opposition wishes to rely upon the statements of Mr. Banks as reported in the press, that is his business.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Banks said so.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): In view of the explanation and information which the minister has given to the house, would he also advise us as to how parliament is to be informed, or how the trustees are to report to parliament if not through some minister of the crown?

Mr. MacEachen: That particular matter is covered in the legislation.

[Later:]

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. In answer to the question put to him by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition the minister indicated that the trustees are now the officers of the five unions. In my opinion, in the trusteeship legislation just recently passed it was the desire of the house to rid the S.I.U. of Mr. Hal Banks; and considering the fact that the minister now says the trustees are the officers of the five unions—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Mandziuk: Just wait; take your time.

Mr. MacInnis: Is it all right to go on, Mr. Speaker? In that the trustees are now the officers of the five unions, does the Minister of Labour think it is right he should now be further consulting with Hal Banks, when it was the desire of the house and the country to get rid of him?

Mr. MacEachen: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I want to make it absolutely clear I have not had any communication with Mr. Banks, and made a deliberate effort to avoid any communication with Mr. Banks from the moment that management and control of the unions were vested in the trustees. I followed that course quite carefully. I want to make it clear that I have stated that because the management and control of the five unions are vested in the trustees, these trustees are now acting in a capacity as if they were union officers.

Mr. MacInnis: As a supplementary question, when the right hon. Leader of the Opposition referred to correspondence, did not the minister inform the house that he had not written but that he had wired Mr. Banks?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, but this wire was exchanged the day before, as I recall it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The day before what?

Mr. MacEachen: The day before proclamation of the trusteeship. The following day there was a reply to my wire, and I refused to acknowledge the wire from Mr. Banks because as of that day the management and control of the unions had vested in the trustees—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacEachen: —and since then I have not been in touch with Mr. Banks.

Mr. MacInnis: As a further supplementary question, in that the minister has indicated to the house that he personally is not responsible but the trustees are responsible to this house, does he not think it is his place to advise the trustees that this house does not want to deal any longer with Hal Banks and should govern themselves accordingly? This was parliament's wish as indicated by the legislation.

Mr. Nicholas Mandziuk (Marquette): As a further supplementary question to the Minister of Labour, according to press reports Mr. Banks has made the statement that he is still the president of the union and is to continue as such. Is he going to be an agent of the trustees or their servant, or in what capacity is he going to retain the presidency?

Mr. MacEachen: As I have stated, the management and control of the maritime transportation unions are vested in the trustees, and this is a matter for determination by the trustees within the authority granted to them by parliament.

Mr. Mandziuk: But does not Mr. Banks' statement indicate that he is still going to run the union?

Mr. MacEachen: As I have said, if my hon. friends want to rely on reported statements made by Mr. Banks, that is their business.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The present government relied on Banks' statements.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Under the trusteeship legislation section 18 provides that the governor in council may make such orders or regulations as he deems necessary for carrying out the purposes and provisions of the act. Have any orders or regulations yet been passed by the governor in council and, if so, will they be tabled?

Mr. MacEachen: No, sir, no orders or regulations have been passed.

[Later:]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. When the minister answered an earlier question put to him by the hon. member for Ontario about the minister reporting to parliament on behalf of the trustees, we were told that this is provided for in the legislation. The minister will recall that this answer was applauded from his side of the house.

Based on another look at that legislation, may I ask the minister if that means we will get a report only within the first three months of 1964, and then only once a year; or will the minister remember his promise to the house as recorded on page 3504 of Hansard for October 11, that if it seemed necessary he would get an interim report and make it to the house? In view of that promise, will the minister consider getting an interim report from the trustees and making a statement to the house early next week?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the trustees are obligated under the act, as my hon. friend is aware, to make certain reports. It seemed to me that a legal obligation is imposed—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Once a year.

Mr. MacEachen: —in that way.

Mr. Knowles: Once a year.

Mr. MacEachen: I would be glad to discuss with the chairman of the board of trustees, at the earliest possible time, a method by which interim reports might possibly be made to the house. But I question whether it would be desirable, within 48 hours of these gentlemen having taken over their responsibilities, to ask them for an interim report. I would hope that hon. gentlemen would not expect, in any such report, to be informed of conversations which the board of trustees, in exercise of their responsibilities, have had with any individual or heads of any of the five unions.

This is what I had in mind when replying to the question earlier, not an interim report on the general activities of the trustees.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister note that my request was that he consider making an interim report early next week after the trustees had had a few days to get things going. Will he at that time try to report to us whether they are acting as trustees as required by the statute, or whether they are just acting as monitors?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, before the minister answers I should like to raise a point of order. I raise it because the hon. gentleman is an old and distinguished member of the house and is familiar with the rules.

Mr. MacInnis: I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry; there is a point of order before the house at the moment.

Mr. Pickersgill: My point of order, sir, is that it would appear to me that what the hon. gentleman is doing is seeking to engage in a debate on the meaning of an act recently passed by this parliament, not seeking information about the conduct of the government in accordance with the rules under which questions are asked in this house. I ask Your Honour to take this matter under advisement, as I did once before, and see whether perhaps all hon. members should not be reminded of the purpose of the question period, as was done by the hon. member for Edmonton West on several occasions in the last parliament.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, if it is a point of order, I suggest that I have a point of privilege. This house was told by the government to read the act, and that the only reports we could expect were those provided for by the act. On a point of privilege, I would remind the minister—

Mr. MacEachen: No such statement was made by me today.

Mr. Knowles: As a matter of fact, if the Secretary of State had not come to the assistance of the Minister of Labour he would have been better off. I rose to remind the Minister of Labour of the promise he made to the house on October 11, that if an interim report seemed necessary he would get it and make a statement to the house. All I did was to remind the minister of his promise, and he agreed to keep it. The Secretary of State would have been well to remain in his seat.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, a further supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. In the answer he has just given to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre he referred to the fact that he did not think it was necessary that the trustees should report back any conversations they may have had with the heads of the five unions. Can this be interpreted as government recognition of Hal Banks continuing in office?

[Later:]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, as apparently we cannot get any information on whether Banks had an undertaking from the board of trustees, possibly the Minister of Justice could tell us whether final consideration has been given by the government to the laying of charges against Mr. Banks. We have been trying to get this information for days. The indication today is that Banks is still the pampered pet of the government.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have stated in the house that this matter has been, and is, under active consideration. I know and believe that because of the circumstances the house will take my word. I must add that under my responsibilities as Minister of Justice, further comment on my part at the moment would not be in the public interest.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): A supplementary question. I should like to ask the Minister of Justice whether he would give an undertaking to the house that tonight when his estimates are called he will come prepared to give an answer to this question, and also give a report respecting the investigation into the circumstances surrounding the beatings suffered by several seamen aboard a train earlier this week, so that we do not have any more of these answers where the minister says "I can say no more at this time" after in fact he has said nothing.

Mr. Chevrier: In answer to that question I must say that so far as the beatings on the train are concerned I have inquired from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, who tell me that this is a matter of assault, that it has nothing to do with the strike, and that the matter is under investigation by the Ontario provincial police. I am also informed by the R.C.M.P. that the individual who was assaulted refuses to make any statement in connection with the matter. So far as the other aspect of the matter is concerned—

Mr. Douglas: They are all scared to make a statement.

Mr. Chevrier: —I am afraid my position tonight will be the same as it is now with regard to the matter asked by my hon. friend. I will be glad to deal with it as far as I can, but I will go no further.

SUGAR

ACTION TAKEN WITH RESPECT TO RISING PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the price of sugar has doubled in the past year and has now reached a 43 year record, I wonder if the Prime Minister has seen a statement by Mr. A. E. Beeby of the Salada Foods Company that there is no world shortage of sugar, and that these skyrocketing prices are due entirely to speculators who are making a killing at the expense of the consuming public. I should like to inquire what action the government proposes to take in order to make sure the public is not being exploited by the sugar monopolies in this country.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): I anticipated a question of this nature, and I asked the director of research to supply me with an answer. I have this reply with respect to the present situation. Refiners' prices at Montreal yesterday, October 24, reached $18.30 per 100 pounds, having increased steadily from $10.60 on August 27, the lowest price reached following the price rise in May.

Available information on the raw sugar situation indicates that because of increasing world consumption and because of production difficulties there is unlikely to be any immediate improvement in the supply position, and with this persisting condition the world price of raw sugar will probably continue at high levels. The increase in Canadian sugar prices is attributable to the increase in world raw sugar prices. In view of commonwealth arrangements, however, no physical shortage of sugar in Canada is anticipated.

With respect to the last part of the question, I can only direct the hon. member's attention to what the Prime Minister said in this house on May 31 and to what I have said in reply to questions from time to time, namely, that there is a constitutional aspect to the matter; it is the provinces, not this parliament, which have jurisdiction over prices in peacetime and if any law or regulation were to be made limiting prices it would have to be made by the provinces. If hon. members feel that action of this kind is necessary in the present circumstances to protect consumers, their pleas, observations and requests in connection with the matter should be addressed to the provincial governments, which alone have the power to set limits on prices.

Mr. Douglas: Could I ask the minister whether it is not the case that price fixing by monopolies and cartels does come under the control of his department? Further, is the situation being carefully watched, in view of the fact that not only is the price of imported sugar being increased but the price of domestically produced sugar is being increased, and it is being sold at a price to which is being added both the freight rates and the world price increase. Is the minister's staff in the restrictive trades practices branch fully aware of this situation, and are they carrying on a thorough investigation into it?

Mr. Chevrier: The answer to the first part of the question is yes. It is the responsibility of the director to see that no monopoly exists and having regard to this, the director, through the officers of the department, has already prosecuted three if not four companies. A report of those prosecutions which were successful, was made to the house on an earlier occasion. As far as western Canada is concerned there has been a prosecution which was not successful.

The answer to the hon. gentleman's second question is that the director is keeping the matter under close surveillance and if he becomes aware of any circumstances which warrant prosecution he will act accordingly.

Mr. Douglas: Would the hon. gentleman consider bringing in amendments to the Combines Investigation Act to increase the fines which must be imposed? My impression is that the fines imposed on the sugar companies after the last convictions obtained by the department were so small that they amounted to only a fraction of a cent a pound on the exploitation which was perpetrated on the public.

Mr. Chevrier: I understand that under the act as it now stands the amount of the fine is unlimited. However, I can tell the hon. member that there is a departmental committee presently studying the question of possible amendments to the Combines Investigation Act. I have not seen the final report, but when it is forthcoming I will give it consideration in order to see whether legislation should be brought before this house.

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Provencher): Would the government give consideration to passing legislation enabling them to set up a trusteeship over the sugar refiners so as to avoid this speculation? I wonder also whether the government has given consideration to enabling the sugar beet growers of Canada to obtain a larger share of the market, thereby preventing these violent fluctuations in price.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the first part of the hon. member's question requires any reply. As to the second part, I cannot add anything more to what I have already said.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question—

Mr. Prosper Boulanger (Mercier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I understand the hon. member for Lapointe wishes to ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Gregoire: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Under the existing circumstances, does the Minister of Justice intend to suggest that Canada pull away from the satellite course it has been following around London and the London sugar exchange, so that our country would have a free hand to look for alternative sugar markets and thus avoid increases in the price of sugar similar to the ones we are experiencing at present?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of the act, as adopted by parliament, any action in that field is the responsibility of the director of research. Besides, as I have often stated, if the director feels that there is a combine between various companies, he is the one who can institute proceedings against them.

[Text]

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Meganlic): Mr. Speaker, may I put the question to the Minister of Justice in a different way. Does the government intend to stop the racketeers in the sugar business, or does it not?

Mr. Speaker: Are there any more supplementary questions on the question of sugar?

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the Minister of Justice, in his endeavours to deal with this very difficult problem, would mind directing the attention of this committee to the situation in England, where the institution of a sugar board and the use of long term contracts have enabled the government to protect the people of Britain from this type of price manipulation rather than worrying about trying to catch up with the offenders, which is often very difficult to do.

Mr. Chevrier: I can assure my hon. friend that the director of research has already given consideration to that matter, and I believe he has even gone to the United Kingdom to ascertain what the situation is there in order to see if advantage could not be taken of the experience in that country.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, with further reference to the sugar question may I say that I brought the situation to the attention of the minister on May 27 this year, as found at page 286 of Hansard. I should like to ask him this question. What has been found to be the situation regarding the some 400 million pounds of sugar that were in storage which, as a result of the tremendous increase in price, brought to certain wholesalers or those operating refineries a windfall of a minimum of $6 million? Does the minister not feel that the raising of the price by these people who had sugar in storage, and doing so uniformly, constitutes an offence?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I remember the question which the right hon. gentleman put to me at that time, to which I made a reply. Unfortunately I cannot remember the details of the reply, but I do remember that the information I received from the director of research was that the matter was being given consideration and that if any charge was indicated in the light of what the hon. gentleman had stated, action would be taken. My recollection was that no action was taken.

I am not in a position to substantiate the preamble to the hon. member's question. He has made that statement. It was studied by those who are in authority, but I am not in a position to accept it from the point of view of its reliability.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I ask the hon. gentleman then to get figures showing the amount of sugar in storage, which I have said was some 400 million pounds. The rise in the price of sugar of 5, 6, 7, 8 or 9 cents a pound brought a tremendous windfall to a few people. Is it not a fact that it is an offence when any person agrees with others to raise the price uniformly while they have in their possession at the time a surplus of a product? Is that not an offence?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, there is a question of law involved in what my hon. friend has stated. As I indicated, I cannot add anything to what I have already said; but I would point this out to the house. Notwithstanding the many questions that are being posed now, the house knows that tonight at seven o'clock I am going on with the estimates of the Department of Justice, and I will welcome any of these questions. While they should be allowed on orders of the day, surely there is some limit to the extent to which they should be posed, and I will be ready to deal with them tonight.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): A supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Is it on the question of sugar again? We have had a great many questions. The hon. member has heard the explanation of the Minister of Justice, and I wonder whether further questions on this matter could not be postponed until seven o'clock tonight.

Mr. Howard: What I wish to ask the minister is a little different. Is it not a fact that all the words that have poured out of him are merely to cover up the fact that the government intends to do absolutely nothing?

Some hon. Members: Rubbish.

Mr. Chevrier: I cannot allow the statement to go unchallenged that absolutely nothing has been done when three, if not four, corporations have been prosecuted successfully by the director of research.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Not for these offences.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I feel we are entering upon a debate. We have had a very full discussion of the matter, and an opportunity will be provided at seven o'clock to pursue it further.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—POSSIBLE REDUCTION OF CANADA'S NAVAL CONTRIBUTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Has the government made a decision to reduce Canada's naval contribution to NATO?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Harkness: A supplementary question. Has the government plans which will enable the ships now wearing out and which during the course of the next five or six years will have to be retired to be replaced in time so that we can continue to meet our commitment to NATO?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, we have the ships to meet the commitment we now have. We are urgently working on plans in respect of any future commitments for a later time.

Mr. Harkness: A further supplementary question. Is the minister not aware that it takes several years to initiate and carry to completion a naval program, and that if such a program is not started immediately there will be no possibility of our continuing to provide the number of ships we have been providing?

Mr. Hellyer: I am very much aware of that, and I am also very much aware of the fact that if you initiate the wrong program it takes quite a few years to undo it.

Some hon. Members: How about the Arrow?

COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION OF PROGRAM OF AIR BASE ABANDONMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence if he can assure the house that no final decision will be taken on the proposed drastic program of abandoning defence bases as part of the minister's current austerity program until the special committee on defence has had an opportunity of examining the whole matter?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, there are a great many proposals involved in our current review. I am sure that most of them will not be finalized in any respect before the committee has had a chance to make its final report later in the session.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): May I ask a supplementary question. Can the minister assure the house that the government is not contemplating the closing down of the R.C.A.F. station at Summerside?

Mr. Hellyer: I cannot give a categorical assurance. I do fully appreciate the views of my hon. friend and many other hon. gentlemen, including particularly the Solicitor General, in respect of this proposition, which is not one that the government has put forward but which has come from another source.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): May I ask a supplementary question of the minister. What other groups have made a proposal that air bases be discontinued in this country? Does this come from foreign sources? Would the minister please advise the house?

Mr. Hellyer: I think it comes from the opposition, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is a complete falsehood, and the minister knows it.

PENITENTIARIES

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL—REPORTED DELAY IN RECONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Jean L. Rochon (Laval): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Public Works.

Would he have any comments on the press reports, especially in the Montreal newspapers, to the effect that the prisoners at the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary complain about the delays in the work now under way?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I read various press reports to that effect. The architects of the Department of Public Works have kept a close watch on this work since its inception, and I never heard any report to the effect that delays were occurring.

I understand that this reported complaint about the slowness of the work stems from comments obtained from some inmates. I realize that works on such a large scale in a penitentiary such as St. Vincent de Paul, would be carried out at a slower pace than those of an ordinary building.

In any event, this morning I asked the inspectors of the public works department to send me a report in that respect. Furthermore, we have contacted the warden of the penitentiary and a visit has been scheduled for next Wednesday when, with various architects of the department, we shall go and find out for ourselves.

[Text]

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REPORTED PROVISION OF TRAILERS TO TRUCKING COMPANIES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Could the minister tell us whether it is the C.N.R. policy to supply some private trucking businesses with its own trailers for highway transportation, as was the case recently, which is quite unfair?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This is a question for the order paper.

TRANSPORT

SUGGESTED SHIPPING OF GRAIN TO RUSSIA DIRECTLY FROM LAKEHEAD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport a question with reference to an understanding I have that he is meeting today with a delegation from the U.S.S.R. regarding the transportation of grain to Russia. I should like to ask him whether he or his officials have under consideration any proposals that would lead to ocean-going vessels, Russian or chartered, going directly to the lakehead for the rest of the shipping season in order to carry grain and relieve the congestion on the rails and amongst lake traffic.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker, no such program is under consideration at the moment. I do not agree with the latter part of the hon. member's assertion that it would in any way increase the total amount of shipments.

WESTERN ONTARIO—PROTEST AGAINST FURTHER REDUCTION IN RAIL SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Because of the implications and the importance to the economy of western Ontario, will the minister assure the house that there will be no further curtailment of rail service in that area?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I could hardly give the assurance in that form, but I will immediately look into the whole matter and find out from the railways and the board of transport commissioners what the situation is. I am aware of the concern this matter raises throughout many of the municipalities in western Ontario, and I will give the matter very close attention.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbiniere): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a light question to the Minister of Justice.

[Mr. Laprise.]

Could he tell us if the fact, for a Liberal member, of attending a Social Credit dinner without an official invitation is considered an offence which should be referred to the R.C.M.P.?

Mr. Lambert: This is ridiculous.

[Text]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): I have a question to direct to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Does the Minister of Trade and Commerce have before him consideration of the possibility of exchanging Canadian wheat directly for Cuban sugar instead of letting the Russians do it?

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

REDISTRIBUTION

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION THIS SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. In the light of the statement in the speech from the throne that redistribution of electoral districts is overdue and this house will be asked to authorize the establishment of a commission to undertake this important task, will the Secretary of State tell the house what steps are being taken to implement this undertaking so the proposed redistribution might be implemented before the next general election?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I welcome this particular question because I had hoped, and I still hope, before the end of this week to initiate discussions with hon. gentlemen on the other side of the house with a view to ascertaining the best way of proceeding with this legislation. I feel we all have a duty to co-operate in this matter because it is the constitutional obligation of parliament to get through with it at this session.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF PROBLEMS OF THE AGED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the facts about conditions under which a great many old people in Canada live which are being brought out by a committee of the other place, can the minister say whether the government will speed up its attack on the problems of the aged such as security, housing and health, and let this house deal with these matters at an early date?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I do not fully appreciate the import of the hon. gentleman's question. We have, as all hon. members are well aware, taken the first step toward alleviating some of the difficulties of the aged by increasing the old age security pension to $75, which increase goes out for the first time this month. I am not certain to what other legislation my hon. friend refers, unless it is the Canada pension plan.

Mr. Knowles: May I then ask a supplementary question. Will the minister take a look at the report of a speech made to the committee of the other place by Professor John Morgan of Toronto? Since she has referred to the Canada pension plan, can she say whether, in view of the changes to be made in connection with the plan, she will ask the house to go ahead with the resolution now on the order paper, or is she going to place another one on the order paper, and if so when?

Miss LaMarsh: It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that the resolution now on the order paper cannot be proceeded with in its exact form since it does include a reference to the $10 increase. However, I should like to assure my hon. friend and all members of the house that the government still has the interest it always had in the Canada pension plan and intends to proceed, in co-operation with the provinces, with discussions in November at the provincial conference.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): May I ask the minister if she has received representations from individuals or organizations, primarily organizations representing the blind and the disabled, requesting a similar $10 increase in pension to that received by the aged?

Miss LaMarsh: I have had representations from the blind and disabled from time to time since I assumed the ministry, but not since the increase in old age pensions.

[Translation]

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister inquire as to whether it is true that the social allowances commission of Quebec would reduce the supplementary assistance granted to some pensioners, because of the $10 increase in old age pensions, as is reported in a letter signed by the said commission and published in the newspaper Montreal Matin on October 24, 1963?

[Text]

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker, if I understood it correctly, what my hon. friend is asking about is a reduction in family allowances. As hon. members are aware, there has been no reduction in family allowances.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I think the minister has misunderstood the question. The question of the hon. member was a request for an investigation into the alleged practice by the social allowances commission of Quebec to reduce by $10 the supplementary pension paid to certain pensioners by reason of the rise of $10 in the universal old age pension.

Miss LaMarsh: I have not heard of this allegation before, but from what my hon. friend says it would appear to me to be a matter of provincial rights. However, I will ascertain whether or not there is any federal responsibility.

SKIM MILK—INCIDENCE OF STRONTIUM 90

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare based on a report in the newspapers that part of the aid Canada is providing to some of the devastated areas in the world is in the form of dried milk. In view of the recent report of the minister's department of the increase by a factor, in some instances of four and five, in the incidence of strontium 90 in milk, has her department been called in to examine these shipments before they are sent to these parts of the world?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I am not sure of that, Mr. Speaker. I know that my department was brought into the picture, by the United Nations authorities, in conjunction with departments of agriculture and external affairs with respect to this matter. I am not certain whether any particular check was taken on it. I do not know how long this powdered milk has been in existence, but I would be glad to find out for my hon. friend.

UNITED NATIONS

NUCLEAR WEAPONS—EXTENSION OF BAN TO UNDERGROUND TESTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, yesterday a question was addressed by the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie) to the Prime Minister with regard to a reported resolution of the non-aligned members of the Geneva disarmament committee to extend the nuclear test ban to its completion by covering underground tests. He asked what was the attitude of the Canadian government toward this resolution.

The resolution, which has not yet been circulated, is designed to encourage the nuclear powers to renew their efforts to reach a mutually acceptable agreement on a comprehensive test ban treaty. The Canadian delegation is now in consultation with all of the sponsors of the proposed resolution in the hope that it can be a resolution that will be sponsored by all the 18 members of the disarmament committee, who have been parties to the discussions in Geneva.

PRIVILEGE ACCORDED PRIME MINISTER IN MAKING SPEECH

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Having followed some of the debates in the United Nations, I had occasion to observe that when the delegates are addressed by a head of state, the latter is allowed to have his seat placed onto the platform. Marshal Tito availed himself this week of that privilege.

However, when the Prime Minister of Canada spoke recently at the United Nations he was not granted the same courtesy. Could he explain why, on that occasion, the Prime Minister of Canada did not receive the same treatment as the other heads of state?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, this is a privilege that is traditionally reserved at the United Nations for heads of state. I am not yet, Mr. Speaker, a head of state; but I was approached by the secretary general who asked me whether, in view of the fact that I had been president of the general assembly and even though I was only a head of government, I would accept this particular courtesy. However, I preferred to speak in the ordinary way, as head of a delegation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Could the Prime Minister tell us who, at the present time, is the Canadian head of state, and how often did he enjoy the special privilege which is granted to heads of state when he had occasion to speak at the United Nations? Besides, could he inform us what Canadian representative is entitled to that privilege?

[Text]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Kennedy.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the head of state in Canada is the Governor General.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: If it is really important and urgent, but—

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: I feel it is important, as Canada is a member of the United Nations and the Canadian delegates to the United Nations would like to see Canada on an equal footing with the other countries of the world.

Moreover, we think that when the Prime Minister of Canada delivers a speech at the United Nations he should get the same treatment and be entitled to the same privileges as those that are given to the other heads of state.

[Text]

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Chevrier: He is doing exactly the same thing you have been doing all morning. Don't complain about it; that is what you have been doing all morning.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is not a matter that should be discussed on orders of the day.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Girouard (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Can the minister tell the house if the privilege referred to by the hon. member for Lapointe is granted to the British Prime Minister or to the Queen only, when Great Britain speaks at the United Nations?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister has answered this question.

An hon. Member: No, not that one.

Mr. Girouard: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister answered from the standpoint of Canada, but my question refers to Great Britain itself.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I was about to rule that question out of order. Consequently there is no supplementary.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, may I this time direct the question to the Prime Minister?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but the hon. member must know that when a decision is given by the Chair it should, I hope, be accepted by the house.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Prime Minister?

Does the Prime Minister intend to have the necessary amendments made to the Statutes of Canada so that the head of state recognized by the United Nations will be the man who will speak on behalf of the Canadian government and not a person—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have already ruled that this question is out of order, and it is doubly out of order now.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

NORTHWEST HIGHWAY SYSTEM—TRANSFER TO PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a very urgent question for the Minister of National Defence, the answer to which will have very serious and far reaching economic implications in the city of Whitehorse and the Yukon generally. In view of widespread and persistent rumours in Whitehorse and elsewhere in the Yukon to the effect that the Department of National Defence is transferring its complete responsibility for the maintenance of the Alaska highway system to the government of the Yukon Territory, can the minister inform the house whether the Department of National Defence will be relinquishing these maintenance responsibilities, and make a statement as to the details thereof?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question, and in reply may I say that the government has decided that responsibility for the northwest highway system should be transferred from the Department of National Defence to the Department of Public Works next spring.

As hon. members know, this highway was constructed by the United States government during world war II as a military requirement, with the Canadian army taking control of that section of the highway in Canadian territory on April 1, 1946. Today there is more commercial than military significance for the maintenance of the highway, and for this reason the decision has been made.

Arrangements between the two departments for the hand-over are now being made, and a joint party will be proceeding to Whitehorse shortly to work out the details.

Mr. Nielsen: As a supplementary question, does the minister's reply mean that a phased withdrawal of the several hundred army personnel in Whitehorse and the Yukon will take place, and could he indicate the extent of such withdrawal?

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, eventually all army personnel will be withdrawn, but the timing of such withdrawal will have to be worked out with the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Nielsen: I have one further supplementary question. Will the civilian labour force maintaining the highway, some 2,400 workers, be affected, and if so to what extent?

Mr. Hellyer: I would not expect so, but the actual details will depend on the Department of Public Works as it takes over.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—INQUIRY AS TO RENEGOTIATION OF TREATY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, after 10 days of most unusual and trying restraint, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. My question is based on the fact that I have 2,000 constituents who have been kept in a state of suspense for over three years as to their future way of life. Can the minister inform the house what is the cause for the continued delay in the resumption of negotiations on the Columbia river, and give us some details as to their resumption?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is no delay whatsoever in the negotiations. These negotiations are under way at this very moment on the northwest Pacific coast, where two working groups set up by the negotiating teams from Canada and the United States are meeting to analyse the very vital factors involved in the question of the desirable price for the sale of the downstream benefits. These working groups are meeting continuously to prepare for the negotiating teams who will meet formally again in Ottawa or Washington. My hon. friend may be sure that there has been no delay, and that just as quickly as possible we will not only relieve the suspense of the hon. gentleman's constituents but the suspense of the hon. gentleman himself.

Mr. Herridge: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister know that the minister of lands and forests in British Columbia has given, as one reason for the delay, the failure of possible purchasers of the power, be they private, co-operative or otherwise, to reach any agreement as to how they will proceed and as to price.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the question of price is very important. As my hon. friend knows, we have stated repeatedly that an essential condition in the negotiations is to make sure that we get from the United States an assurance as to a price that will make this project self liquidating; and until we get that assurance we do not propose to agree to the sale of the downstream benefits. My hon. friend, I am sure, would be among the first to congratulate the government for the stand it is now taking.

Mr. Herridge: If that occurs.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question for the minister. Has the province of British Columbia a negotiating team as well? The minister mentioned the two governments, the federal government and the government of the United States. Is Mr. Bennett being consulted, and has he a consultation team working with the other two governments?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the government of British Columbia is the owner of the resource, and discussions particularly having to do with price involve the closest consultation with the government of British Columbia. For my hon. friend's benefit and the information of the house, I hope to be meeting at noon with a representative of British Columbia—

An hon. Member: At noon?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): At one o'clock I hope to be meeting with a representative of British Columbia. I may say that the government of British Columbia seems to be satisfied with the way the present government of Canada is handling this matter.

GRAIN

HALIFAX—SUGGESTED USE OF LAKE SHIPS FOR STORAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerald A. Regan (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Will the minister investigate the possibility of stationing several lake grain carriers in Halifax at the end of the lake shipping season, to be used for the storage of grain and thus supplementing the capacity of our grain elevator and enabling the port of Halifax to ship more grain this winter?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL BILINGUAL PROTECTIVE STAFF

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Chretien (St. Maurice-Lafleche): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State.

In view of the lack of bilingual personnel in the parliament's constabulary force, which is to the detriment of the French speaking people visiting the parliament buildings, is it the intention of the internal economy commission to cope immediately with such a situation?

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Well, sir, Your Honour has heard that question, and I am sure it will be considered.

INDUSTRY

MANITOBA—REPORTED DUPLICATION OF DEVELOPMENT PLAN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry. Has the minister consulted with the province of Manitoba in order to avoid costly duplication in setting up the Department of Industry?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I have had an exchange of correspondence with Premier Roblin.

Mr. Dinsdale: A supplementary question. Is the minister aware that the premier of Manitoba has made the comment that no such consultation has taken place?

Mr. Drury: No, Mr. Speaker.

BRIDGES

THREE RIVERS, QUE.—REPORTED OBJECTION BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Clement Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. This question deals directly with the construction project of a bridge worth $30 million across the St. Lawrence, between Three Rivers and my constituency, the specifications of which had been approved at the beginning of March, this year.

Could the minister tell us whether there is any truth in the reports now appearing in our local press and heard among the people to the effect that federal government now objects to the plans and the construction site of the bridge on the river, when those plans were approved at the beginning of March and accepted by the Quebec premier, the Hon. Jean Lesage?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Vincent: This is very important.

Mr. Speaker: There is no doubt about the importance, but where is the urgency? Would the hon. member put this question on the order paper.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Transport?

Has the minister received a communication from the bridge corporation asking him to make representations to the government since the work is to be started very soon?

[Text]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): No, but I think I should add that one of the officials of the corporation was here yesterday, and I expect to see him again next week.

TRADE

WHEAT—COMMODITIES TO BE TAKEN IN EXCHANGE FOR WHEAT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was getting a little tired of bouncing up and down trying to catch your eye for the last hour. I have a question to direct to the Minister of Agriculture, but in his absence I will direct it to his parliamentary secretary. Did Canada receive any commodities, apart from cash, in their wheat transaction with Russia, and, if so, what were these products?

Mr. B. S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): I will be glad to take this question as notice and bring it to the attention of the minister. I am sure an answer will be forthcoming immediately.

Inquiries of the Ministry

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

INQUIRY AS TO AGREEMENT WITH CUBA

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I direct to the Postmaster General a question of which I have given him notice?

Is there a bilateral postal agreement between Canada and the Cuban government? I intend also to ask a supplementary question.

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, Cuba is a member of the Universal Postal Union.

Mr. Pigeon: What does the minister intend to do in view of the fact that the Cuban government has decided to seize all parcels addressed to hurricane victims in Cuba?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the Post Office Department cannot intervene and give instructions to the Cuban government with regard to parcel post.

Mr. Pigeon: Does not the minister feel that the Cuban government is violating the international postal agreement?

[Text]

IMMIGRATION

EDMONTON—REPORTED DELAY IN CLEARING PLANE PASSENGERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Has the hon. gentleman received a communication protesting the manner and slowness with which members of the charter flight of the Fraser valley milk producers association, flight No. 371, Canadian Pacific Airlines, were cleared at Edmonton upon their return from Europe and, if so, is the matter being investigated?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is a question for the order paper.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): On a point of order, I would refer Your Honour to a question asked yesterday by the hon. member for St. John's West, which I think set a precedent which would permit any member to ask any question he wishes in this house. It was a question of no national importance, but it was asked by the hon. member for St. John's West and answered by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

Mr. Speaker: I am well aware of that question but, as I have said on previous occasions, it is difficult for the Chair to decide whether a question is in order until it has been asked and the Chair has heard it. That was the case with regard to the question asked by the hon. member for St. John's West. By the time the minister was on his feet answering, it seemed to me there would be a saving in time if the question were allowed. I certainly thought it should have been a question for the order paper.

Mr. MacInnis: With all due respect to you, sir, the question asked by the hon. member for St. John's West was not one which should have needed a great deal of consideration before being ruled out of order. Questions asked on this side of the house are ruled out of order continually.

An hon. Member: Don't show your ignorance.

Mr. MacInnis: While I am on my feet, I wonder if the Secretary of State would take it upon himself to rise and repeat the remark which came just now from the other side of the house, from his direction. I do not say it was his remark.

Mr. Pickersgill: On a question of privilege, the hon. member seems to have defective hearing as well as a defective knowledge of the rules, because I said nothing whatever.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do think this chit chat, if I can call it that, should be brought to an end. Members themselves have a certain responsibility for their conduct in this house. The Speaker does not want to be on his feet continually delivering lectures on procedure. A certain responsibility attaches to all members to conduct themselves in accordance with the standing orders. I suggest we leave it at that.

Mr. MacInnis: On a question of privilege, the Secretary of State made reference to my hearing. I want to tell him that I in no way accused the Secretary of State of making the remark. The question of privilege he raises was certainly not a question of privilege because, in the first place, I did not indicate he had made the remark I overheard.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

DELAY IN RECEIPT OF FRENCH "HANSARD" AND COMMITTEE REPORTS

On the orders of the day:

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, it happens sometimes that we, in this corner of the house, have questions to ask; however, we are always the last to be given the floor. You will note, Mr. Speaker, that from the beginning a number of members of the other parties have asked questions. My question is directed to the Secretary of State.

On Monday, October 21, following a question I asked the Secretary of State pertaining to the delay in printing works for the French edition of Hansard and committee reports, the hon. gentleman answered that he would make inquiries and give the relevant information to the house. Can the Secretary of State give us that information now?

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Not today, but I hope soon.

INCOME TAX ACT

The house resumed, from Thursday, October 24, consideration of the motion of Mr. Gordon for second reading of Bill C-95, to amend the Income Tax Act.

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, may I call it one o'clock and continue my speech at 2.30 this afternoon?

[Text]

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, when the discussion on Bill C-95 to amend the Income Tax Act was adjourned, I was expressing my amazement at some members of parliament who still believe that the off-the-beam monetary mechanism of our financial system could automatically adjust itself—

[Text]

Mr. Scott: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, we are anxious to hear the hon. member's speech and the translation facilities are not working. Would you have the matter looked into?

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Maybe the hon. member could wait a moment—

The hon. member can now resume his remarks.

Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, yesterday afternoon, at the time of the adjournment of the discussion on Bill C-95 to amend the Income Tax Act, I was stating my amazement at some members of parliament who still think that the off-the-beam monetary mechanism of our financial system could automatically adjust itself. That reminds me of this quotation from the Bible:

"Eyes they have, but they see not, they have ears, but they hear not."

That is why I would suggest to all hon. members of this house who do not want to be placed in that category to study the background of monetary facts over the centuries. They will find out that there was nothing miraculous in the history of money, except that man always let monetary systems enslave him because he made a god of money.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) asked the house to support the principle of Bill C-95, and our party, Social Credit, is in agreement of course with the principle of this bill. But the minister and the government should also see the other alternatives which could enable Canadians to control their economy.

When one considers the nature of money, one should ask oneself the following questions.

What is it that makes banknotes printed in the United States or elsewhere better than banknotes printed or issued by the Bank of Canada? Is it that the paper is of a better quality? Or is it that the ink was purer at the time of the printing?

On the other hand, in what way would credit created by a private bank in the United States or elsewhere be better than credit created by a chartered bank in Canada?

We might also wonder what credit is, if not accounting money, banking currency, bookkeeping money, token money, scriptural or numeral money. Why should, therefore, American or other foreign credit be superior to Canadian credit, when our natural resources are practically unlimited and the will to work of French Canadians, as well as of English Canadians, only waits for a new issue of credit to develop this country's economy further?

Mr. Speaker, monetary nationalism is fully justified, and when, in this parliament, we have a government independent of high finance or the suppliers of slush funds, it will be easy to enact, in addition to the fiscal legislation provided in Bill C-95, laws enabling us to establish a financial policy in this country which would match the economic evolution of our century.

The Minister of National Defence probably had that in mind when, according to the Le Devoir of October 8 last, he stated:

If we go on mortgaging our resources at the present rate, it will be impossible to preserve our political independence for another generation.

Those, Mr. Speaker, are words quite in keeping with the Social Credit philosophy and for which we should warmly commend the Minister of National Defence.

In order to promote our economic and political independence to the greatest extent, I would have a definite suggestion for the Minister of Finance. For instance, he might reduce corporation taxes when the capital is owned by Canadians to the extent of 51 per cent. This would further help economic independence.

Apart from amending the Income Tax Act, we would like the Minister of Finance to consider applying other financial measures. To satisfy himself, he should read the report published by the National Industrial Conference which, according to Le Soleil of September 7, 1963, contained the following statement:

The government's monetary policy is one of the primary factors of unemployment in Canada.

As you can see, the Social Credit party is not the only one to advocate an improvement of our financial system.

Those are the authorities which prove that changing the Income Tax Act alone will not be enough, because what we need is new Canadian capital to create new industries in this country. Canadian capital is essential to solve the unemployment problem in our country.

Canadian capital, Mr. Speaker, is created by men, by chartered banks. Why, then, could not this responsibility rest with the Bank of Canada especially when the necessary capital has to be created for all our social capital expenditures?

The Bank of Canada has all the necessary means to issue sound and debt free money, such an issue being based on mathematics and statistics, in order that it may be under the control of every Canadian.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau)—

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Since—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) has the floor on a point of order.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, since—

Mr. Chapdelaine: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have recognized the hon. member for Lapointe, who has the floor on a point of order.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, since you first gave the floor to a member of the New Democratic party and then to a Social Credit member belonging to the group of the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson), do you not think that it would at least be in order for you to go on to the last of the parties, as you call it, and to allow a Social Credit member belonging to the group of the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) to speak also? I think that would be quite normal and in order.

Before giving the floor to a member of the New Democratic party, Mr. Speaker, you recognized a member of the Conservative party, then a member of the Liberal party and after that a member of the Social Credit party belonging to the Red Deer group, and now again to a Conservative, without letting a member of our group have the floor. That is the reason why I rise on a point of order, and I respectfully ask you to consider it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand and appreciate the view expressed by the hon. member for Lapointe. On the other hand, the Chair tries, as a rule, to alternate the speakers, taking into consideration the number of members in each party. A member of the party which the hon. member for Lapointe represents will have the opportunity to speak when the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue has finished.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I admit that you have a problem in alternating the speakers of the various parties. However, I feel that before recognizing the member of another party at this time, you should recognize the member of another but lesser party, before giving once more the floor to a member of the two more important ones numerically speaking and that a member of our group should be recognized, then a member of one of the larger parties.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Once again, I take note of the representations made by the hon. member for Lapointe, but he knows that, normally, the Speaker tries to be as fair as possible in alternating the speakers of the various parties when he recognizes a member. I do not think that the hon. member has reason to express a grievance because a member of his party is not recognized immediately.

As the hon. member for Lapointe knows, there is a procedure which must be followed in this house when an hon. member objects to the recognition of a member, as soon as he has been recognized by the Speaker.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Lapointe should not worry, because I do not intend to take the whole afternoon.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I raised the question only to safeguard the principle.

[Mr. Gregoire.]

Mr. Martineau: The hon. member for Lapointe will have time to be heard and air his views, and everybody will be happy.

[Text]

I wish to speak briefly on the legislation before the house. The minister has intimated that it has three main purposes. The first is to close certain loopholes in the existing act. The second is to provide an incentive to industry, particularly in those areas of slower growth. The third is changes in the non-resident withholding tax designed to reduce the cost of borrowing abroad and provide an incentive to the foreign owners of subsidiaries.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in so far as the first purpose of this act is concerned, that is to plug certain loopholes, the minister has admitted that at the most these are stopgap measures. The minister went on to say that when the royal commission on taxation reports it may be desirable to make extensive changes in the taxing statutes. I think it is almost inevitable that major changes in the whole taxation structure will follow the report of that commission. However, I am slightly perturbed, like a good many Canadians, and as the minister himself was last year, to find that the much needed reforms in our taxation structure are to be delayed, and that when some proposal is made to improve the taxing statutes the minister makes the classic reply that a commission is sitting and therefore these reforms cannot be considered.

I seriously ask myself if the economy can wait much longer for the structural changes that are required in our taxing system. Everyone admits that taxation in this country is reaching the proportions where it may be considered confiscatory, and that the level of taxation discourages initiative and, in particular, prevents the accumulation of investment capital.

It also prevents the proper expansion of purchasing power. As the minister knows, all these eventualities are most desirable, and he also knows that their achievement or implementation has become most urgent.

In regard to the reform of the tax structure itself and the basis of taxation, I read with some interest the views expressed by Mr. Frank S. Capon, vice president of Dupont of Canada Limited and a chartered accountant who is a confrere of the minister. He submitted an excellent brief to the commission, and the commission were so impressed with the views he expressed that they recalled him before them.

In essence, his views call for measures that will give Canadians a greater share in capital investment, and he says that unless this is done we will rapidly become a socialist state to all intents and purposes. I am not at all sure that we have not reached the point of no return in that regard, but one of his points which most impressed the commission was that taxation should be diverted away from corporations because corporations, not being persons, cannot really be taxed, and when a corporation is taxed in effect it is the shareholder, the taxpayer in his own right, who is being taxed.

Mr. Capon called for the complete elimination of the corporation tax. That is a radical proposal and I am not putting it forward, but I do call it to the attention of the minister. He also called for a lowering of the graduated rate of personal income tax, suggested that a stiffer tax be put on the undistributed earnings of companies, on tax dividends paid to foreign shareholders, and also proposed the elimination of the 20 per cent tax dividend credit.

This may seem quite strange to a lot of people because it has been argued here and elsewhere that in order to favour the accumulation of investment capital, the rebate on dividends for tax purposes should not be diminished or abolished but that it should be increased, and possibly doubled. That line of reasoning, of course, must be judged in the light that all corporate taxes would be abolished.

I am sure the minister and his department will take a very close look at these views. I am also sure that the minister himself, having in the past, by written word and verbally, championed the growth of Canadian industry and investment capital, can ill afford to let a situation continue and perpetuate itself, a situation that is definitely stifling the economic life of the country and which is defeating the very ends which the minister asserts are primary to his thinking, namely the development of more capital by Canadians so that Canadians can take back the control of their own industry and economy.

I submit that this cannot be done, and that even a start cannot be made on it, until the basic structural reforms of our tax system have been dealt with in an intelligent way, and until those other measures which have been proposed by the minister, and which are self defeating, have been carefully re-examined, reappraised and eliminated. The minister should not fear to backtrack again. He has done it previously; but if he refuses to act, or takes other measures that are foreign to what he says is his main objective, then he can only lose still further the confidence of the Canadian people. That is all I have to say about the general remarks made by the minister when introducing this bill.

The minister also spoke at some length about the incentives which are being provided to encourage industry to begin the manufacturing of new products in areas of slower growth. I think the ministry has now changed the description of those areas. At first they were supposed to be depressed areas, but because areas did not like to consider themselves depressed, and according to usual standards were far from distressed even though they had been singled out to share in this incentive tax kick, the government has now started to call them by some other name, such as slower growth areas or whatever it may be.

The minister said these incentives were considerable. I do not dispute that, but the fact remains that the method employed to provide these incentives is very wrong. The method of selection of the areas is discriminatory. The thinking behind the selection is ill conceived. It is contradictory because in some ways it defeats the purposes of the minister, and also because it does not take due account of other levels of government, provincial and municipal.

I do not want to repeat what was said by the hon. member for Wellington South in his very well thought out speech concerning the selection of areas of slower growth, but it seems to me the minister's proposals are lacking in one essential in that they do not provide enough safeguards to determine whether an industry that may avail itself of these incentives will really be manufacturing a new product or establishing a new business.

Before any company takes advantage of these incentives steps must be taken to determine whether it had already decided to begin the manufacture of the new product involved, and whether it had already chosen another place where its new operations would be carried out. Unless that is done then the government is not providing any new industry or new employment. All the government is doing is depriving some other area which no doubt had plans to receive the new industry that now will go elsewhere. The real loser is the Canadian taxpayer, and another loser is the principle of free enterprise in this country.

It is very difficult, Mr. Speaker, to justify, under our system of free enterprise, certain companies receiving decided tax advantages over certain others. Why should some companies in some areas, just because they happen to come under the formula devised by the officials of the government, obtain this tax holiday? That is something to which I think the minister should give serious consideration, because if he does not, his measures, instead of promoting economic growth may simply add to the confusion and will cause real hardship to industries which are already established and are fighting hard to maintain their competitive position. There is no justification, unless all these precautions to which I have just referred, and those to which the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Hales), referred the other day, are taken. I hope that before this bill becomes the law of the land, before these incentives are administratively applied, all these safeguards will have been provided.

The minister has also proposed changes in the rates of withholding tax. He said that one must give priority in all our economic policies to measures that will bring our international transactions on current account into better balance, and he said the government is determined to do this. But I ask, are we going about it in the right way by doing these things? I ask this question because not very long ago the minister admitted that this was not something that could be done very easily, and it was not something that could be done by legislation. I think when he introduced his budget he said this objective of trying to win back our economy, and the desire to stop the inflow of foreign capital into this country, must be achieved without causing any harm to that inflow, which is beneficial to Canada. The minister admitted that it was beneficial.

We know, as well as the minister and the government, that the problem of our balance of payments is a very serious one indeed. The minister spoke about this in Washington. I was rather amazed to read some of the reports of his remarks. Perhaps they were off-the-cuff remarks that he made in Washington to newspapermen, but at one stage he is reported as having said:

> It is easy to find general agreement on general approaches, but more difficult when specific proposals are offered.

That seems to be an admission on the part of the minister that he does not know what to do about this problem.

Mr. Gordon: Oh, no.

Mr. Martineau: The minister might scoff at this, but he did say it is difficult when specific proposals are offered. If that is what he said, I think it was because he had no specific proposals to offer at that particular time. I find this difficult to understand, coming from a minister who was so desirous of obtaining and preferring specific proposals for the betterment of our economy. I read—

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. gentleman would permit a question. Would he not think that the proposal in regard to the automobile industry is a specific proposal?

Mr. Martineau: That is certainly a specific proposal all right, but I must remind the minister, as the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan) said so well today, that the proposal submitted this morning to the house was simply something taken off the shelf of the Conservative policy on these matters. It was a part of our policy.

Mr. Gordon: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martineau: That is a fact, because the proposal was there. Everyone knows that; I am sure that even the minister knows it. In any event, I do not think the majority of the proposals he has made have won too much favour in Washington, where the minister went several times during the summer—and, I think, even since the house reconvened—trying to sell those policies. He is having a fair amount of difficulty in this regard.

Mr. Speaker, getting back to the question of withholding taxes, I think the method proposed by the minister is definitely a retrograde, regressive step. There is no doubt about that at all. I think the whole thinking with regard to this withholding tax, as the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) said yesterday, is simply putting the government in the position of holding a big stick over the heads of investors, the very people that the minister and the government want to lure into investing capital in Canadian industry. It is holding a big stick, and it is not providing an incentive.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. gentleman—

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the hon. member is rising to ask a question. If he is, I would ask him to wait until the end of my speech, and if there is any time left I will be very glad to answer questions. The arguments against the withholding tax are very numerous. Most of them have been mentioned, but it might be worth while to recapitulate the main objections to this tax. First of all, there is the question of administrative difficulty. It is impossible, because of the market practice, that prevails, to be sure of the identity of the buyers of shares. I know there have been changes in the act in this regard since the time the measure was first announced, but nevertheless the administrative difficulties remain enormous. If that measure is ever applied, it will seriously interfere with the free play of market forces, the buying and selling of shares on the open market. If the minister wants to encourage the growth of investment capital in this country, I do not think he should contemplate taking such a step, the consequences of which may be very serious for our economy and for the development of those industries that we consider vital to our future development.

Another reason for my finding this tax obnoxious is that it imposes penalties on the foreign investor and does not provide any real incentive to the Canadian investor; in other words, it penalizes a foreign investor who wants to buy Canadian shares, for no reason at all except that he happens to be a non-resident. That does not seem to me to be a reason that stands up. Canadians are free to purchase elsewhere in other markets; that is their business. Other ministers have stated that such investment is desirable, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) stated not very long ago in Miami, Florida, that there was a great need in Canada for foreign capital, and foreign capital was welcomed here. If the government is to be consistent, surely it should not penalize those people whose money we want to lure into this country. I just cannot understand that approach to this problem. Even if one agrees with the objectives pursued by the minister, the methods employed are wrong. I would like the enumerate some of my reasons for saying this. Instead of holding a—I think this was the expression used by the hon. member for Edmonton West—big stick over the heads of foreign-owned companies, he should use these tax carrots to make more Canadian capital available for investment. For example, the minister could encourage direct investment in Canada by Canadian investors. It seems to me there is a very obvious way in which that could be done; that is, by simply increasing the exemption granted on dividends of Canadian corporations.

Many people, among whom are the most informed financial critics in this country, have asked that this 20 per cent rebate on the dividends of Canadian corporations be at least doubled. If that were done I think you would have a great flurry of new investment in Canadian equity, and by the same token you would be providing for Canadian industry that solid basis of cumulative capital which it needs. If the government and the minister do not give to the investors of Canada those means to acquire that capital, how are we ever going to have the capital which we need when at the same time the minister discourages foreign investors from placing their funds in Canadian equity?

It seems to me there is some contradiction in the thinking of the minister, and perhaps his thinking has been compartmented into different sections. For instance, certain consultants might have drafted some measures—perhaps the withholding tax is one—and then another group drafted other measures which were entirely contradictory, and for some reason which I still cannot figure out the minister accepted both. It is like a judge sitting on a case who judges both for the prosecution and for the defence: it just does not seem to make sense. That is why the business community has been so disillusioned by the present administration and the financial proposals for growth and progress placed before parliament by the minister, who belongs to that community. If anyone belongs to it he does. The only thing I can see is that he delegated his authority to others who followed different philosophies, and were proposing and probably seeking objectives which were contradictory one to another.

Regardless of that, Mr. Speaker, I think there is still time for the minister to take a sober look at all these proposals and withdraw bravely and courageously—if he can do it; he has done it before—those things which are harmful to our economy. If the minister is really serious about the objectives which he has placed before the house, and on which he spoke so feelingly in Hamilton this week, he should get all those things together and eliminate those which do not enter into his principal objectives, leave them aside and start anew. As I said before, that is the only way in which the minister might regain—I know it will be a difficult process—some confidence among the financial and business community of this country.

The withholding tax is also objectionable because the methods employed certainly smack, in some way anyway, of economic nationalism. When I say that, I do not say it very lightly. If they do not smack of economic nationalism, it cannot be denied that they have been interpreted as such by people across the border and by people who are in the know as far as financial matters are concerned. For instance, we have a declaration of statement by Robert Roosa, with whom I know the minister has conferred. He is the under secretary af the treasury in the United States and he commented, with apparent approval, on a report appearing in some United States papers to the effect that the United States is perturbed by Canada's curbs and signs of continuing trends to economic nationalism. These are some of the objections which I see in the present bill and to the withholding tax.

As I said before, the minister stated when he brought down his budget, in regard to winning back autonomy, and so on, that the solution is not one for legislation but for voluntary action. He said that the growing partnership between Canadians and investors abroad is the best way of strengthening harmonious relations with foreign capital which it is our object to preserve. So here we have the minister now introducing legislation, when in his budget speech he said that legislation to settle or to solve this particular difficulty was not the proper approach. So again, Mr. Speaker, you see a quite glaring contradiction in the thinking and the methods employed by the minister. All these measures have contributed to blurring our image abroad; there is no doubt about that at all. It is too bad to have to say it, but it seems to me that it has had that effect and it is going to take an awful lot of tactful handling, smooth diplomacy and a lot of patient negotiation by specialists and officials to bring back a situation even anywhere approaching that which existed before June 13 last.

In summary, then, Mr. Speaker, these measures, especially the proposal with regard to the withholding tax on dividends, discourages the formation of equity capital and has an effect which could easily spell a return to tight money, higher interest rates, less investment, less capital, and therefore less expansion, capital expenditure, and so on, leading to a general tightening up of our system. I do not think the minister wants that. In fact, I am sure he does not, and I do not think the government wants it either. But we must not allow the wrong measures, perhaps taken in good faith, to bring about that result.

In conclusion, I urge upon the minister to take a very close look again at these measures, fearlessly to use the scissors wherever they should be used, and to come out with a good constructive policy for the betterment of Canadians, for the encouragement of the formation of investment capital which we need, as well as assurances to foreign capital that it will be treated as a friend—which it is, because it contributes in a vital way to the development of our own resources and higher standards of living. I am convinced that the minister in his inner thinking agrees with what I say. If he does agree he may still feel that he has done enough withdrawals and cannot afford to make any more. But I think that is the wrong approach, and I am sure he will agree. Let him take his courage in his hands, cut out these unfavourable proposals he is making, and go ahead and help Canadians to achieve that better life of which he was such an ardent protagonist when he sat on this side of the house.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member rising to ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Benson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member stated that the proposal of the government which involves both increases and decreases in the withholding tax designed to encourage the sale of shares of foreign-owned companies in Canada is a regressive step. Does that mean that he thinks the increase in withholding tax by the previous government from 5 per cent to 15 per cent in 1960 was a regressive step?

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, we are dealing with the situation now, in 1963. The measures proposed by the minister and the government with regard to these withholding taxes, under the particular circumstances in which we find ourselves today, are definitely against the interests of Canadians generally and the growth of our economy, for the very reason I mentioned in the course of my speech.

Mr. Gray: Would the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue permit a question? He indicated that the policy announced today had been Conservative policy. If it was in fact Conservative policy, why did the government which he supported apply it last year only to transmissions and certain engine parts instead of to the entire industry, as we urged and as Dr. Bladen recommended?

Mr. Martineau: The hon. member answered his own question when he said the Conservative party had applied the policy. Surely it was a beginning of the policy, if the government had already begun to apply it.

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Perron (Beauce): Mr. Speaker—

[Text]

Mr. H. E. Gray (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have already recognized the hon. member for Beauce.

[Translation]

Mr. Perron: Mr. Speaker, at this stage of the study of Bill C-95 to amend the Income Tax Act, we are presented once again with the spectacle of the two old line parties chameleon-like, changing hue according to circumstances.

Since this legislation was introduced, we have been listening to a dialogue between advocates of taxation. As a matter of fact, since the Conservative party has been sitting on this side of the house, its members have blamed the government for adopting certain policies or for changing the Canadian taxation system in order to solve existing problems.

On the other hand, those who now sit on government benches used to criticize the Conservative party for exactly the same thing hardly six months ago.

This leads us to note obvious discrepancies between certain statements.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal with those contradictions at the outset of my remarks and, in order to do so, I refer to Hansard for October 16, 1963. When he introduced this bill, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon), said, as reported on page 3639 of Hansard:

> If we do not do this, Canadians may well wake up some day and perhaps sooner than they think, and find that they have lost control not only of their economic destiny but of their political destiny as well.

On the other hand, the minister delivered a speech before the international monetary fund, on October 1, 1963. Here is the report of that speech as published by La Presse:

> No economic nationalism—Gordon
> The minister told reporters that he was concerned when responsible American officials or reporters considered as a policy of economic nationalism the steps taken by Canada to reduce its heavy international payments deficit.

The mere fact that foreigners thought that we were considering a monetary policy of economic nationalism worried the minister.

At the resolution stage, he stated that the purpose of this legislation is to save Canada from its present position or, at least, to recuperate part of the ownership in our own enterprises. What a contradiction. It is not surprising though since the minister is not concerned with contradictions. In fact he abolished the 30 per cent tax on investments or on the sale of shares of Canadian companies to foreigners. In addition, he was forced to amend the sales tax on building materials in such a way that it is now set at 4 per cent, to be raised later on to 7 per cent and still further increased, in the end, to 11 per cent.

These are wrong remedies, ill-conceived measures to use against the problems facing Canada at the present time.

Let's face facts. The province of Quebec has been placed in a tragic position, as a result of the measures announced by the government. Actually, last month, when the government listed the designated depressed areas, we found that, out of the 35 areas so designated, 13 were in the province of Quebec.

Moreover, when, on October 14, 1963, the second list was tabled in the house, we found that, out of the 31 new designated areas, 15 were in the province of Quebec, so that now Quebec has 28 depressed areas out of a grand total of 66.

We appreciate the fact that some people believe that the statements of the Minister of Finance on the amendment to the Income Tax Act may encourage new investments to promote, in these depressed areas, the establishment of plants for the processing and manufacturing of our raw materials. I wonder, however, if here again, we are not given ill-conceived measures and wrong remedies.

If we want any more contradictions, we have a monopoly in the province of Quebec, as I just stated, with regard to the depressed areas.

We also heard many a time during a certain election, two or three years ago, in 1960, that the unemployment problem in this country, and more particularly in the province of Quebec, was primarily a matter for the provinces and, second, that it was dependent on a real, honest and sincere co-operation with the federal authorities. At that time there were nearly 200,000 unemployed in the province of Quebec alone. Today, we still hold that record, as shown by the following item which appeared in La Presse of Thursday, September 19, 1963:

> The greatest number of unemployed was again found in Quebec. There were 108,000 of them, representing 5.5 per cent (against 5.7 per cent in July). In absolute numbers as well as in percentage, the decrease has been much stronger in the provinces to the west of Quebec: Ontario had 72,000 unemployed, or 2.8 per cent of the wage earners (against 3.2 in July); the prairie provinces had 23,000, or 1.9 (against 2.4), and British Columbia 32,000, or 5.0 per cent (against 5.5).

Now, when we rise here, in this corner of the house, to demand a real solution for this problem, when considering this legislation to modify the Income Tax Act in order to promote capital investments, we want to suggest other remedies than a dialogue between taxers, and to make suggestions which should be taken into consideration if there is a real wish to find a solution for the economic problem of Canada which has become a menace, considering the critical condition in which the province of Quebec finds itself as, not having been given its due share in Canadian economy, it is unable to settle its unemployment problem.

When speaking of wrong remedies, I may say that they have been tried in our province. We had the winter works program. There again, we were supposed to have found a solution. But look at the results today.

We tried, for a certain time, I think, to allow deductions only to corporations, which was again a wrong cure.

Considering that, with a budget of $6 billion which we have in this Canadian parliament, corporations are taxed at 20 per cent, whereas the salaried people, the small wage earners and those who have a medium income—if we wish to include them—have to pay 30 per cent of the total intake of the federal government, I may say that there is hardly any reason to rejoice.

The minister is considering tax exemptions for present and future industries in order to boost the economy not only of the depressed areas but of the whole country. He must tap other sources to solve that problem in Canada.

There has been some talk about income tax deductions. A while ago, in support of his argument, the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) even quoted certain economists and advocated income tax exemptions to get our economy going, to facilitate foreign investments in Canada and to encourage the establishment of secondary industries for the processing of our raw materials. He also referred to the statement made this morning by the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) concerning the automobile industry. The Conservatives tried tax exemptions in favour of large companies, and see where that led.

I have here a report of the petroleum industry which appeared in Facts and Trends, a newspaper published by the oil chemical and atomic workers unions. It reads partly as follows:

British American Oil	$32,600,000
Imperial Oil	67,800,000
Texaco-Canada	11,100,000
Royalite	2,100,000

A few years ago, legislation was enacted by parliament, under the Conservative government, to provide exemptions for those companies. What result did that give?

Let us see what are the profits per man-hour of those companies and, later on, we will compare them with the income tax paid by the small wage earners of whom I spoke a while ago:

	Profits per man-hour
British American Oil	$2.17
Imperial Oil	2.59
Texaco-Canada	1.97
Royalite	1.60

The table shows that the companies' man-hour net earnings were often higher than the wages of the workers. Those are the companies to which the government wants to grant tax concessions, when 30 per cent of all federal revenues come from taxes paid by small wage earners. Is this not a shameful and sad joke to play on the people who are trying to build up our country? It is for such companies that tax concessions are being considered under the pretext that such a measure will attract new industries when, in fact, it will only increase the foreign control over our economy. Think of it. Those companies pay only 20 per cent of tax revenues whereas their employees pay 30 per cent.

Surely, there must be other solutions than to encourage new companies to come and establish themselves in our country. It is not that I am against the processing of raw material at home through secondary industries. On the contrary, that is what we have been clamouring for.

During a debate, I was recalling here, last fall—of course I come from the eastern townships and I was speaking as a member in this house for that district—that the asbestos production amounted in 1957 to $107,058,000 whereas the exports of the raw material amounted to $104,489,431, and that, in 1958, the corresponding figures were $92,276,748 and $90,345,000, in 1959, $107,433,344 and $110,431,000, in 1960, $121,400,015 and $120,-113,000.

I believe that we are entitled to consider essential that industries establish themselves in our country to process those raw materials, and that, for several reasons. First of all, to improve our unfavourable balance with our friendly neighbour country, which is of the order of $1 billion per annum; a fact which was made clear when the last budget was tabled. Our unfavourable trade balance with the United States has reached $1 billion a year.

We export the larger part of our asbestos to the United States, as raw material, while we import a fairly good quantity of finished products.

We have imported finished asbestos products, according to the 1962 Canada Year Book, for an amount of $4,078,000 in 1959 and of $4,498,000 in 1960. Which means that despite our trade deficit, we find means to import from them those finished products, while we allow them to come and get in this country that raw material, that resource which certainly belongs, to a large extent, to the Canadian people.

Moreover, there are other imports of finished products, such as asbestos products, that we buy from other countries which take our raw material—the United States, for instance—to turn it into finished products. We imported for over $25,800,000 during that same period, whereas, at home, in the province of Quebec, in particular in the eastern townships, we have hundreds of unemployed who are waiting for the opportunity to process their own resources, to the advantage of their fellow citizens.

I admit that it is important and urgent to amend the Income Tax Act. But how can we amend it? Simply by giving incentives to alleged capital investments through corporation tax exemptions, and especially dividends? I do not think that solution is possible, and I am sure it is a wrong solution.

That is why we are bringing forth suggestions, not simply on the basis of whims, but rather on the basis of statements made by a body as important as the information branch of the Department of Labour. I have here a report from that branch, dated May 8, 1950. At that time, the Liberals were in office and here is what they advocated to get the economy moving again and to settle the monetary problem:

As regards the fight against unemployment resulting from inadequate total demand, the report points out that the methods to be used will necessarily be different in each country in accordance with the structure and the degree of development of the economy.

Among the measures that can be used, the experts mention the expansion of credit facilities, the lowering of interest rates, the adoption of an appropriate tax policy, the carrying out, under the government, of industrial research and the development of new industries and new products.

It was the Liberals who issued that release in order to solve the unemployment problem.

It said further down:

Under certain circumstances, the government may also deem it necessary to affect investments to the purchase of surplus stocks of goods which tend to have a harmful effect on the stability of the market. When the level of total demand goes down, the government can try, through various means, to increase personal consumption expenditures.

And here, between brackets, the ways to do it are indicated.

It was the Liberals who at that time advocated those solutions. They seemed to know some solutions other than taxation. They said:

—decrease of personal taxes, increase of social benefits, consumption subsidies, reduction of commodity taxes, etc.

At that time, the Liberals knew other formulas. Why are these not tested in 1963? At the present time, we are facing unemployment problems in depressed areas. All across the nation and especially in Quebec, there are depressed areas. The situation is becoming tragic. As far as unemployment is concerned, 40 per cent of all depressed areas in Canada can be found in the province of Quebec alone. I think the situation is becoming tragic. That is why it is most urgent to find other solutions than those applied up to now.

Since the Liberals are now trying to solve the problem, why are those suggestions not being followed instead of allowing our country to remain under the control of foreign interests when other means could be used. Besides, I shall have the opportunity to quote other statements made by the Liberals which will give cause for reflection to my friends opposite with regard to the monetary system.

It will be remembered that according to the Liberal program of which we heard so much during the last election campaign, the financial system was to be improved.

Do you want some solutions? The Social Crediters have suggested a few, such as first of all, incentives to consumption.

Factories are built when those already in existence cannot be properly operated so as to provide regular work by reducing the work week, because we have a surplus of commodities which remain unsold. This does not prove surely that the needs of Canadian consumers are met.

It has been established that people in depressed areas who draw social security or unemployment insurance benefits are certainly unable to meet the essential requirements of their families.

Therefore, there is actually over production in certain fields but it is due in great part to underconsumption.

That is why I am convinced that the suggestions made by the Social Credit members in this house should be considered much more closely than they are at present.

I believe that income tax exemptions should be granted to the consumers instead.

Did the President of the United States not declare, only three months ago, that he was considering the need to promote consumption, in order to give a new impetus to certain consumption industries in the United States and reduce the taxes that are a burden for small wage earners? There must have been some experts in the United States to give such advice to the President.

It is the most suitable formula to promote consumption. It would especially be necessary to encourage the establishment of new industries, and this particularly in our country, so as to solve our unemployment problem to some extent.

The Liberals are well aware of this. I have in hand their program on full employment which was widely distributed throughout the province. Here is what they say about the unemployment problem and finance in our country:

Taxes will be reviewed to encourage enterprise and to remove impediments to the development of business.

The financial machinery of the country will be improved in order to provide additional capital for industrial development.

To improve the operation of our financial system to provide additional capital for industrial development. Why not use an institution which belongs to the Canadian people, namely the Bank of Canada, to find the necessary capital investments for the development of our national resources?

The Liberal program also states:

A Liberal government will resolutely assume the political control of money and credit and will use them to foster economic development while maintaining stable prices.

That was in the Liberal party platform, Mr. Speaker, before the election held last April 8.

That is what we advocate also. The government should exercise its sovereignty in other ways besides levying taxes or, for instance, instituting proceedings against people who have included charitable receipts in their income tax returns. The government should exercise its sovereignty and allow its own institutions, the Bank of Canada for instance, to create the money needed to solve all the problems facing the country, which would enable the Liberals to fulfil the promises they made throughout the country during the last election campaign, last winter.

Not much importance is given to those promises after the election. I notice that the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron) is asleep. And yet he claims to be the great champion of the French Canadians in the province of Quebec. These problems do not seem to worry him too much, Mr. Speaker.

And yet, those are facts, things they not only said, Mr. Speaker, but had the nerve to print and distribute throughout the province of Quebec. If they did not believe in them at the time, why did they mislead the people in that way, especially the French Canadians, leading them to believe that the Liberals had a policy that would get the country's economy moving again? But no. After the election, it is a complete reversal of position. We are used to such reversals, but they are more obvious since the election of last April 8. They showed in various statements made by the ministers.

Therefore, I ask the government, through its representatives in the house, who are truly responsible to the electors, that the small wage earners be the first to enjoy an income tax exemption. This will increase their purchasing power and will allow industries to acquire what they need for a greater development.

We shall have then a real planned economy, going in the right direction, because the consumer will look after his needs, since he will be in a position to buy consumer goods, the financial means being available to him.

Furthermore, our industries will be able to meet the needs of the Canadian nation because, otherwise, and I am convinced of this, we are increasingly going towards state planning.

What will happen then? The formula has already been put to a test. We know that there cannot be three or four methods of economic nationalism. There is only one which is truly Canadian, it is the economic nationalism advocated by the Social Crediters, which considers the consumer as a king because the primary purpose of all production is consumption, and production must be geared to the rate of human consumption in order to satisfy the needs of human beings.

The revision of our whole fiscal policy and monetary system must tend to achieve not only this goal but also to improve our balance of payments with foreign countries.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the people will see the end of unrealistic solutions as long as the old line parties are in power. Take the dialogue between "taxers" which goes on under our very eyes, the speeches about those so-called alternatives: I wonder what the Minister of Finance will do about them on the day the Quebec ultimatum expires, when the provinces will claim 25 per cent of the personal income taxes and 25 per cent of the corporation taxes.

Why are the rights of the province of Quebec flouted when it comes to granting tax exemptions in this or that area, in full or in part, to corporations?

Is it not a direct denial of the rights of the province of Quebec? The minister should hasten to find other formulas than taxation and fiscality in order to meet the deadline set by the premier of Quebec on taxation rights, estate duties and corporate and individual income taxes.

I wonder if we are not going round and round with those formulas aimed at amending the Income Tax Act. Where do we stand now?

Let us find out who has the responsibility to get the economy moving again so that Canada may become a country where future generations will bless or curse us according to the action we take today to free the people from the economic control of the neighbouring country to which I referred a while ago when I quoted an excerpt from the statement of the Minister of Finance in which he said:

> If we do not act along those lines, Canadians may very well awaken some day which might be sooner than they think, and realize they have lost all control not only over their economic destiny but over their political destiny as well.

It is with that in mind that I should like to see the government initiate not only a serious study of taxation in Canada but also an extensive revision of our monetary policies, which would meet the present and future needs of the Canadian nation, if we are to continue to live in this country where both nations have at the present time the dreadful choice to part or establish a monetary policy which will respect the human person—who has been looking forward to that respect for a long time—in the economic field. In short, parliament should bring about a monetary policy which, while respecting the dignity of the human being, would facilitate access to our country's abundant resources.

In my opinion, these few suggestions that I wanted to submit to the house should be taken in serious consideration and proper solutions for the needs of our time should be brought forward for this problem. The pick and shovel era is over; that is why winter works were a failure. We are at the height of the twentieth century when everything goes fast.

Then let us hurry lest in 1967, the centenary year, the province of Quebec, which has felt frustrated and baffled for so long in the rights vested upon her by the British North America Act, take steps which may be deplorable for the whole Canadian nation.

Let us hurry to find a solution. Let us use the supreme authority of parliament and exert it on the Bank of Canada, whose objects vested upon it in 1934 gave it power to mint credits which Canada needed. Let us stop considering formulas which are ineffective.

Miss Pauline Jewett (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, following the previous two speakers both of whom have, it seems to me, argued that two of the very major problems facing Canada today are unemployment and domination of our resources by outside interests, I can only agree with them that these are the problems, and that these were the problems that were discussed in the recent election campaign; indeed the speech we have just heard sounds like one that had been prepared for the hustings and warmed up for today.

I cannot, however, agree with the previous speaker that this party committed itself to a course of action which would involve the kind of monetary control and use of the Bank of Canada which he suggests. I do feel, however, that through the present Minister of Finance we have tried to—

[Translation]

Mr. Perron: May I direct a question to the hon. member?

Miss Jewett: When I have finished.

[Text]

I do feel though that through the propositions we have today in the income tax amendments of the Minister of Finance we are making some fairly strong, indeed very strong attempts to meet these two major problems, and other problems as well. This is true particularly of the two I have mentioned—unemployment, primarily in the chronically slow growth areas, and outside domination of our resources.

All of us on this side of the house, certainly I can say this of myself, and I am sure of others as well, are pretty well convinced, and have been for some time now, that under the present Minister of Finance we are at least going to have taken the kind of action that will do something about these two problems.

We have all spent a great deal of time talking about these problems, both in and out of parliament. As we all know, it is much easier to talk about them than to take action, because these are very difficult steps to take. Obviously they are going to hurt some people. Obviously some members of the business and financial communities, and of other communities, as well as other countries, will not like them. It is inevitable that when a nation tries to control its own destiny, or tries to take strong steps to curb unemployment and create a higher standard of living, somebody is going to get hurt.

We wish this were not necessary. We would like to see everybody go along happily with everything that is done, but unfortunately this is not always the case; and when you take action, particularly in the economic sphere, you are bound to step on a few toes. But because a few people get hurt this is no reason to get up, like the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) did and say we should not take any steps at all. With that line of reasoning we would never do anything to curb and cure our basic, chronic unemployment.

The step I want to talk about primarily today is the part of the income tax amendment which has to do with tax incentives to new industries in designated areas. If the play of economic forces were working perfectly naturally and freely, if this free play of economic forces we always hear about, and which the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue referred to, were really operating, there would not of course have to be any tax incentives for certain designated areas of chronic unemployment and slow growth.

If the system were working as it is supposed to, labour would move out of the areas where there was surplus labour, or industries would move into those areas; but in fact of course neither in Canada nor in any other known industrialized country does the free play of economic forces operate in this ideal fashion. In practice, even in the most mature and sophisticated industrial nations, there are, have been, and continue to be, areas of chronic unemployment and slow growth. This has been true in Great Britain, France, Denmark, Belgium, Norway, Sweden, Italy, Ireland and the United States, and certainly it has been true in Canada as well.

However this is not to say that there has not been a high degree of mobility of labour. In fact, in all of these countries the problems of slow growth areas would have been very much more serious had there not been a fairly substantial degree of mobility of the labour force. For example, I was amazed to read the other day that in the United States it is estimated that one citizen out of five changes his state of residency every year. This is really fantastic mobility when you think of it—that one out of five should change his state of residence every year.

Even in Canada, where I think we sometimes tend to feel we are a fairly stick-at-home kind of society, where we do not move around very much, the figures, particularly in the last census, show a very, very high degree of mobility. The very fact that only 11 per cent of our labour force is now working full time in agriculture suggests this, and also the fact that in the 1961 census it was shown that 45 per cent of our whole population now lives in the 17 metropolitan areas picked out by that census. It was 40 per cent in 1951, and is 45 per cent today. No doubt it will get higher, and this of course suggests and implies that there has been a very substantial mobility of labour.

Some work has been done with family allowance statistics, estimating that between 400,000 and 500,000 Canadians change their province of residence every year. This is a pretty high level of interprovincial migration for all provinces, for Quebec and Ontario just as much almost as for the maritime and western provinces. It seems to me that these figures shed in their way a new light on Canadian society, and since I am talking about them I might as well mention that in the 17 metropolitan areas of Canada which had 45 per cent of our population in 1961, over 1,700,000 of their residents came from countries outside Canada, and further, almost one million of the residents of those 17 cities came from a province other than the province in which their respective city was located.

All of these figures, and many others I could cite, present a picture of Canada that is quite different from the mythology that has been built up. There may be an occasion later on to say more about this, but in the meantime if any hon. members are interested, there is going to appear in the fall issue of Queen's Quarterly an extremely interesting article by Miss Yoshiko Kasahara of the dominion bureau of statistics called "A Profile of Canada's Metropolitan Centres".

Despite this very high degree of mobility from rural to urban centres and from one province to another, to say nothing about the very great intraprovincial migration, the statistics of which are not yet available, we still have in Canada, as has been the case in other western industrial countries, areas of what we call chronic unemployment, areas of slow economic growth, areas where labour does not always move out and where, if it does, it is frequently, of course, the younger workers. These are areas, therefore, of real social need where there are large numbers of unemployed and where there is not a great deal of opportunity for them.

Countries in western Europe, and indeed Canada too, have tried to find means of encouraging people to move out of these areas. The results of these efforts have been, in many instances, very discouraging. I noticed one particular story in the United Kingdom where there was an attempt to relocate workers. It is told that a party of loom-tuners and their wives were taken by coach to visit another works in the same organization in a different part of the country. They were provided with hotel accommodation and taken to see the works and the surrounding district, in the hope that at least some of them would decide to take up employment there. These were people who were going to be out of jobs in the mill in which they were then working. But not one man accepted the offer, after this great party they had been given to go and see the new mill. Similarly, the French government and the E.C.S.C. made provision for the transfer of 5,000 miners about to be displaced from the Centre-Midi coalfield to Lorraine. When only about one tenth of them moved, the plan was shelved. One tenth were willing to move, but nine tenths were not. The same situation has been found in New England textile communities.

Even though there is very great hardship involved in staying put, geographical mobility has not been sufficient to remove these workers from what seem to be generally called depressed areas. People do not want to move. Sometimes, because of habit, inertia, old ties or whatever may be the cause they would rather stay where they are with only half the wages than move to a new area. Unless we are going to insist that people move out of areas to areas of better potential, we must try to make some provision for a better life in those areas.

We should of course continue to encourage as much mobility of labour as we can. In most European countries it is a two-pronged policy; on the one hand you continue to encourage the mobility of labour, you continue to encourage people to move to areas where the potential for growth is better; but on the other hand, knowing that you cannot always get them to move, you initiate policies which will at least provide a reasonably adequate life for them where they are.

One of these policies is to induce industry to settle in these areas. Inducing industry to settle in these areas has, of course, another purpose. Most countries are reluctant to see only certain centres built up too much; they do not want to see too great a congestion. The United Kingdom, for example, is really concerned that the area around London become too congested. Similarly, in Canada I think we should become concerned if the area around Toronto, the golden horseshoe or whatever it is called, should become too congested. Certainly I would wish it would come a little further east along the lake into Northumberland county.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Miss Jewett: But for social reasons, and not only for economic reasons, we are concerned that we do not simply focus on certain areas in our country. This, I think, is particularly true for us in Canada. We do have a nation from sea to sea; we presumably want to keep the nation from sea to sea. I was discussing this question the other day with a former colleague of mine, Professor Porter, who is probably the most perceptive sociologist in Canada. He was saying it is nauseating to realize that the myths by which we live are geographical—from sea to sea. The myths the United States live by are social—all men are born equal. The myths that France lives by are social—liberty, equality, fraternity. But poor old Canada, we do not have these kinds of charter social myths; we have geographical myths—from sea to sea. But, of course, we do have a lot of geography. It has been our big problem, and is our big problem today—to make our nation a viable entity from sea to sea. This is what we are struggling with most of the time.

Policies such as are being introduced in these amendments help, I think, establish us as a nation with a national identity; to encourage an at least comparable growth of certain areas which have been depressed and are slow growth areas of Canada; to bring them along in the hope that they will be able to share more amply and, if possible, equally, with other areas in the country in the future, wherever they may be. Therefore I think this measure is a particularly important one for this country when we are stretched out on such a fine ribbon and where we do have particularly strong pressures coming upon us from outside.

The measures that are being taken to encourage new industries to settle in certain areas of chronic unemployment and slow growth are fiscal measures. Of course, this is because the federal government of this country still controls, and I hope, despite what the previous speaker suggested, will continue to control the fiscal power. Indeed, if the federal government of this country loses control over the fiscal power we might as well shut up shop as a nation—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Miss Jewett: —because the federal government has this means in its hands, the tax power. It can use this tool in such a way as to achieve the end we all have and about which I have just spoken.

Countries in Europe that have pursued policies of helping certain slow growth areas have used other tools, and I thought I would just say a word or two about these because they may well in the future be useful in Canada even at the federal level, and certainly at the provincial level. The United Kingdom pioneered the development of national policies to attract firms to industrially depressed areas, and has perhaps carried such measures further than any other country. I was reading the other day that in the 1963-64 budget, for example, the government of the United Kingdom is giving direct grants to firms that will move into designated areas, amounting to 25 per cent of the cost of the buildings and 10 per cent of the costs of plant and machinery. These are direct grants to firms moving into these areas—something we have not yet even touched, of course, in this country. The British government also provides very substantial loans—indeed, practically all European countries do—to private enterprises that are going to certain designated areas.

In Britain, too, there is, as we all know, the location of industry policy whereby people are not told they have to go to certain areas; what happens is that before they can go to an already built-up, congested and rapid growth area they have to have a licence, and the government can decline a licence, thereby suggesting to them indirectly that they go somewhere else, and particularly to an area that has been designated. That is, again, a power we have not yet got at the federal level, although I see no reason in the world why much more could not be done along this line by the provinces than is done at the moment.

Similarly, in the United Kingdom they use the fiscal power. For example, all firms in their development districts are allowed to write off their capital costs as fast as they like. There is much expenditure of social capital too, grants to municipalities, and so on, for improving public services in the designated areas. I may say here I think the economists agree that the provision of social capital alone is not sufficient to raise these designated areas to the level of industrial development which one would like to see. The provision of roads, power, communications and the like will not suffice to stimulate industrial development to the extent which appears desirable; one has to provide more direct grants or concessions of one kind or another for specific aid to industry to get this kind of development. Certainly this has been the experience in southern Italy, and other nations as well.

In France too there has been a great emphasis on regional development and on trying to induce industry in areas where industry is most needed. Indeed, the whole of the last French plan was devoted to the regional aspect of economic development. The French government also makes grants up to about 20 per cent of the total investment costs borne by an enterprise if it goes into certain designated areas. It makes generous loans and a number of tax concessions for area development, reductions of income tax, accelerated depreciation, and so on, much as we are doing. Similarly, as in England there is a withholding of licences so as to guide industry into certain areas.

In northern Ireland perhaps the biggest steps have been taken. Grants may amount to as much as 33⅓ per cent of the cost of factory construction if an enterprise will go into certain areas of the country. Other grants are made toward machinery and equipment costs. In Belgium the emphasis is on low-interest loans. The government there subsidizes a private lending institution so that loans can be secured at only 1 per cent for firms going into certain designated areas. Belgium emphasizes tax exemptions too. It may be interesting to note—and this relates to what we are doing here—that in Belgium they are granting 30 per cent of the profits earned by a firm during the first three years. Only 30 per cent and they think that is terrific. In Belgium they allow tax exemptions on 30 per cent of the profits earned in the first three years in a development area.

The proposal we are putting forth is that you get a complete tax holiday during the first three years. The Belgium government also does other things. It purchases or builds factories and rents or sells them at reasonable prices. In Sweden, the Netherlands and other countries similar things happen. Even in the United States, with its area development act which finally became law in 1961, efforts are made to encourage industry to go into designated areas. So that a very great variety of tools have been used. Direct grants to industry are perhaps the most effective of all the different tools which can be used to encourage industry to go into certain places, and practically all the western European countries use the direct grants technique. But although this may be the most effective it is not one perhaps which we are ready for in this country. Personally I think it will come, and may well have to come, at the federal level if we are going to try to achieve national objectives. However, as I have suggested, the tax concession technique has been used by most of these countries—Britain, France, Belgium, Ireland, and so on—and I think the general consensus on reading the literature on this question is that this is an effective device for encouraging industry to go where you want it to go. It is more indirect and it is perhaps a little more cumbersome than the grants system, but it has been fairly effective.

Taking the measures as a whole I might say a word about their success in some of these countries. Great Britain has, of course, been learning the most about these measures, because it has had them for the longest time. Indeed, they started with them back in the thirties, although they did not become really effective until the post world war II period. Between 1946 and 1957 the relative severity of unemployment in the development areas compared with the rest of Great Britain fell from nearly two and a half times to somewhat more than one and a half times, so this has been moderately successful. This amounted to an expenditure of about £90 million. However, I think most economists would argue that the cost, as an annual equivalent, of direct assistance to industry for a new job has usually been much less than the cost of unemployment pay. In northern Ireland, which has had a particularly vigorous program in this area, it is estimated that about 38,000 jobs have been provided by relocation of industry measures. In terms of northern Ireland's economy that is generally considered a relatively successful program.

The most interesting study I came across when I got interested in this whole field was the report of the joint working party on the economy of northern Ireland which came out a year ago. I think that any member who is interested in this whole problem should read this report. It is not entirely sanguine that the incentives we are discussing can ever be entirely successful, and it concludes that many other measures are also necessary. It is suggested that they will have to focus on the movement of labour out of certain areas. There are certain areas where it is just not economically feasible, nor even indeed socially feasible, to encourage industry and new plants to locate. So in the conclusions of this report they do not go entirely all-out for techniques such as we are discussing; they also suggest that the government should continue to pay attention to the relocation of labour, and they place great emphasis on the need for a much more skilled labour force and more technical education: the kind of thing which we at last in this country are becoming aware is so essential to industrial growth and prosperity.

The kind of tax incentives we are providing are really more generous than any I discovered in any other country. But, of course, I think this is essential in view of the fact that we do not have the other techniques, or we feel we cannot employ other techniques of assistance. We are not giving direct grants to industry. We are not giving direct loans to industry to settle in these areas. We do not have location of industry policies at the federal level, and therefore perhaps need to provide a bit more by way of tax incentives. There has been some suggestion that these tax incentives themselves will not really be sufficient to attract industry to the designated areas since during the first three years a new firm is not likely to make very many profits. However, as the minister and others pointed out, in fact a new firm is going to be pretty well tax free for somewhere around six years, because claims for accelerated depreciation can be deferred until after the so-called three year tax holiday, and therefore the firm will be able to pile up sufficient write-offs to avoid paying income tax for another three or four years. Therefore it seems to me that these are really very substantial incentives to industry.

There has been a great deal of talk—the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) mentioned this—to the effect that these incentives are discriminatory. The Miniser of Industry (Mr. Drury) said the other day: "Of course they are discriminatory." The whole purpose of these tax incentives to new industries going into designated areas is that they will go into certain areas. If they did not go into those areas but went into the Torontos of this world, our measures would not have any point. So they have to be in a sense discriminatory. You have to encourage industry to go to one place rather than another. I was amazed when the hon. member said that somehow it was interfering with free enterprise, as if the market was really working correctly and in a true free enterprise spirit. If it were, we would not need these measures at all, because there would not be any areas of chronic unemployment or slow growth. It is drawing a red herring across the trail to suggest that somehow by designating certain areas for industry we are interfering with a "free" market. What we are trying to do is to make for a more equitable society through a measure such as this.

As to the way in which the areas were chosen, this has also been criticized a good deal by hon. members opposite. I would not think there is anything absolutely rigid about the designation of areas. If experience shows that some other method of designating areas will be better I am sure it will be done. There is nothing immovable or unchangeable about the way it has been done. I might add that in Europe, in all the countries I have studied, the usual method of designating areas is to take account of the level of unemployment and the rate of economic growth over a period of time. The real issue in these other countries does not concern the criteria used but the question of how large these areas should be—should they be very large, a trading area for example, or should they be small. There are arguments on both sides. If an area is very small there could be an immediate and profound impact but, generally, it is thought an area should not be too small or there would be poor prospects of self-sustained growth in the future. On the other hand, an area should not be too large. If, for example, the whole of the maritime provinces were to be designated, the effect of differentials would be entirely lost.

The method adopted here seems to me to be a reasonably good way of designating areas, using statistics on unemployment and growth over a period of time.

Mr. Fisher: I wonder if the hon. lady will tell me where the growth figures are contained.

Miss Jewett: I would be glad to put one table on record in Hansard. As the hon. member rose I was about to say that one of the criteria used is employment changes during the years 1959-1962. The table I should like to put on record relates particularly to Brantford and to the five adjacent communities. When we take these figures for all the different national employment service areas of Canada we get a picture of what the economic growth of an area has been. For example, the economic growth of the Brantford area has been about one sixth of the national average over this number of years.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member have permission to place this table on Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The table above referred to is as follows:]

EMPLOYMENT SUMMARY

	In labour surplus Category % of 48 summer months. Years 1955–1962	Employment Change. Years 1955–62	In labour surplus Category % of 18 summer months. Years 1959–1962	Employment Change. Years 1959–62	Employment changes by year during years 1959–1962
					1959–60	1960–61	1961–62
BRANTFORD....	87	+ 2.2%	89	− 7.4%	− 7.0%	− 1.6%	+1.2%
Guelph.....	21	+19.7%	39	+ 2.4%	− 4.3%	+ 2.2%	+4.7%
Galt.....	21	+22%	28	+ 6.2%	+ 6.1%	− 6.0%	+6.5%
Kitchener.....	4	+30.4%	11	+ 9.8%	+18.6%	−14.0%	+7.7%
Woodstock.....	15	+35%	17	+ 1.1%	− 0.8%	− 3.8%	+5.8%
Stratford.....	2	+31%	0	+12.6%	+ 4.8%	+ 0.6%	+6.8%
		National Average 15%		National Average 4%

Mr. Fisher: What is this statistic of economic growth? Is the hon. member suggesting it is the rate of employment? Is it the rate of unemployment? Is it the number of people in the labour force or the number of jobs created? I cannot follow her.

Miss Jewett: It is based primarily on the rate of employment growth.

Mr. Fisher: I disagree.

Miss Jewett: There are other and more discretionary ways of determining whether an area is capable of future self-sustained growth. I am not sure the bare figures of employment growth are enough to enable one to say that an area is capable of future development and, particularly, of self-sustained development. I would agree with the hon. member as to this. However, I think this method gives a good general picture of the growth of one area as compared with another over a period of time.

The point I wish to make is that with regard to these areas we are using figures and statistics from the past which are, after all, the only ones relevant if it is intended to use objective criteria. But in order to be able to choose areas which have a real potential for expansion on a self-sustaining basis, other factors must be taken into consideration, as is done in most European countries. This involves the use of a great deal more discretion, and the possibilities in this direction will increase when we are mature enough to allow this discretion to be exercised, and not to complain, for example, that a certain area has been designated or excluded for purely political reasons. In Sweden, this selection is done entirely on an ad hoc basis.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

I think there is a lot to be said for this method, especially when one is thinking in terms of future potential. But, for the time being it seems to me that the criteria which have been used in this case, namely, employment and unemployment figures over the past eight years, are perhaps the best which could be used in the circumstances, and that the size of the areas designated is also the best which could have been arrived at.

I do not think that the rules governing designation are immutable, as were the laws of the Medes and the Persians. Changes can be made as we see how they work out in the course of time.

It has been suggested by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam that not nearly enough people in our labour force are affected by these tax incentives. Actually, 10 per cent of our labour force will be aided by this measure. This is somewhat below the percentage in Europe where between 12 and 15 per cent of the labour force is affected by relocation measures. Perhaps we should bring the percentage affected in Canada to a higher level in future, as we see how the legislation works out.

Having said this, let me add that it is important, in trying to provide for a more equitable rate of growth and a higher level of employment in certain areas in Canada, that we should work as closely as possible with the provincial governments. My impression is that many of the provinces have not yet got their teeth into this problem. I know the province of Quebec has for a long time wished to encourage industry to move away from the Montreal area, but as far as I know they have not used any of the tools at their disposal to bring about this result. I think the federal government should work very closely with the provinces in this connection. The Minister of Industry has suggested that consultations have already been held on this subject. This is a national problem, just as the total question of unemployment is a national problem, and both levels of government must be concerned about its solution.

Finally, we must not forget that although these areas of chronic unemployment are always areas of difficulty, the basic need in this country is the raising of the aggregate level of demand. The total level of employment must therefore be raised. Chronic areas of unemployment will also be better off, once there is a high level of employment and income generally in Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Perron: Mr. Speaker, while the hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett) was making her comments, I asked if I could put a question to her. Since she told me to wait until she had finished her speech, I wonder whether I could put my question to her now?

Miss Jewett: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Perron: Mr. Speaker, if I am not mistaken, the hon. member suggested that I had made a pre-election speech. I would ask her then if, in her opinion, we should not take the same stand before and after an election.

I would also like to ask her this other question: Is it not because of the sharp contrast between the monetary policy advocated by our hon. friends opposite prior to the April 8 general election and the complete turnabout they have made since that she feels our speeches rather sound like campaign speeches?

[Text]

Miss Jewett: Not at all, Mr. Speaker. I just thought it sounded like a hustings speech rather than one based on reason.

Mr. D. R. Gundlock (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, the house has listened this afternoon and previously to a great deal of discussion about areas. We have listened to discussion about areas, local areas, provincial areas, national areas, international areas and even economic and political areas. I simply want to bring one matter to the attention of the house and I am almost at a loss as to the area of approach to this question. It is the area—I cannot get away from the word "area" because I have listened to it so long this afternoon—between the actual legislation and the application of the legislation as we know it back home in our constituencies, or as Mr. and Mrs. Jones know it on the street.

I should like to bring an example to the minister's attention. Although the situation may not apply only to the Income Tax Act I realize we are confined to that act and the amendments. I could take a great deal of time this afternoon in going through the amendments clause by clause, but I have no intention whatsoever of doing so. I hope the minister will pay some attention to the point I wish to put before him. I know that probably his first answer will be that the problem is an inherited one from the previous Conservative government, but if we are faced with that answer I will have to remind him that we have been confronted with it under many previous administrations. I am honestly and conscientiously bringing this to the attention of the minister in the hope of some kind of improvement. Members of the house have heard about the same problem not only concerning the bill before us but also with regard to other legislation throughout the years. Admittedly I have not been here very long, but from reading Hansard I know that the same problem has been raised.

It is all right to talk about international areas and other geographical areas. We talk about France and many other nations, but to my mind we have not approached the problem which I wish to bring to the attention of hon. members this afternoon as I have on previous occasions. The problem simply concerns the difference between the actual legislation and the application of the legislation, and to attempt to make myself clear may I give an example, though not a specific one. We discuss the legislation here time after time but when we go back to our constituencies we hear complaints and pleas. What do we find when we go back to our constituencies? There is nothing in the legislation concerning the problem I am bringing forward.

I realize this is not a grievance period. I am only attempting to present something to the minister for his consideration. I think we are quite fortunate in having an author as Minister of Finance. I think this is a good time to have such a minister for the consideration of a matter of this kind, because the gap between the legislation and the application thereof is so wide.

I should like to bring a short example to the minister's attention. I have had complaint after complaint. Indeed, I would think all Alberta members and other members from rural constituencies who have anything to do with the farming population have also had complaints. We heard something earlier about the purchasing of sale agreements. There are a lot of concessions in this regard in certain areas. I cannot get away from the word "area". If I may put the example briefly, it has to do with farms where there are rocks or stumps, or anything else that prevents the easy application of farming methods. This is often the case in Alberta and I am sure in Ontario and other provinces.

A certain area of land is purchased under an agreement for sale with the intention of tilling, cultivating and putting in a crop in order to earn income. I could go through all these sections, Mr. Speaker, but under the capital allowance provisions we are allowed or disallowed a certain amount for improvements. Whether it is the initial removal of rocks or roots or clearing, or even the application of fertilizer, does not make much difference. In grey soil areas particularly there is a need to fertilize in addition to clearing before anything can be grown.

I am speaking particularly about clearing, which involves a cost the same as anything else. There is a certain allowance and it can be very great. It varies. Some people probably clear and break virgin soil for practically nothing. Other people spend as much as $20, $25, $30, $35 or $40 an acre to bring the soil into production.

I hope I am not wandering too much but I am simply trying to set forth this example. I realize the minister is going to say almost immediately that this is an inherited problem which the Conservatives had and did not do anything about and I have to say, of course, that the Liberals also had it and did not do anything about it. But I do not really mean that. The point is that year after year a certain percentage of the people are usually faced with the same problem involving the removal of rocks and have to make expenditures which are not allowed under the Income Tax Act and which I think should be allowed. I should like to draw this matter to the attention of the minister.

Mr. Weichel: I rise on a question of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Is the hon. member rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Weichel: Yes, Mr. Speaker. On Thursday, October 24, 1963, as reported at page 3957 of Hansard, the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) made a statement which concerned one of the top industries in Kitchener. He said, in part, as follows:

> The Canadian economic foundation is an operation which exists mainly to extract funds from reactionary and gullible employers who desire to fill the minds of workers in Canada with anti-social free enterprise propaganda. This organization has been used by two companies which have contracts with the United Steelworkers of America, namely Joy Manufacturing of Galt and the Toronto Iron Works. It has been used by the Dominion Rubber Company of Kitchener with very disastrous effects on the rubber workers union.

[Mr. Gundlock.]

Since this company is located in Waterloo North, Mr. Speaker, I was quite concerned over the remarks made by this hon. member. I have communicated with this firm to find out if such an accusation were justified. I was told by Dominion Rubber Company that such a statement is absolutely false. I might mention that this company in Kitchener pays a higher wage rate for similar jobs than most other companies.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron) dealt very fully with our criticisms of the budget and gave our alternatives. I presume it is safe to say that a good portion of this bill is already in operation. Then, when we come to consider the time factor, we have a lot of business to do in this parliament before it ends. When we consider also that we have a royal commission on taxation giving study to these questions, I think these are sufficient reasons for me to be as brief as reasonably possible.

I rise this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, to bring to the minister's attention the complete irresponsibility of a United States subsidiary company in southern British Columbia. I bring these facts to the attention of the minister because I trust consideration will be given to them when dealing with the fiscal and taxation policies needed to meet this type of situation. Several times this afternoon the question of United States control of our economy has been mentioned. It seems to be on everybody's mind.

Before going further, I wish to say that the minister took what, from our point of view, seemed somewhat timid steps to correct this situation. I personally feel that many people have been unfair to him, and in some cases the very persons who were urging action in this direction. For the first time in Canadian history a minister of finance has recognized by the steps he took, although from our point of view they were timid and somewhat ineffective, the threat to our Canadian industries and Canadian resources from United States control. While we wish he had taken more adequate action, we have other alternatives to deal with the situation, as was indicated by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. However I think we should do all we can to help him along on this very difficult, and shall I say, darkly lighted road at the present time?

Before proceeding, I do wish to quote from a statement made by Mr. James Muir, who was president of the Royal Bank of Canada in 1954 because it indicates this has been a continuing problem which is becoming worse every year. In 1954, Mr. Muir said:

> It appears that American capital is going to own Canada. We are getting into the position where, very definitely in the economic sense we are becoming an American satellite. I object to Canada's being regarded as either an economic or political annex of the United States... my fear at the moment is that the government by its inaction is selling Canada into economic bondage.

Before proceeding with my illustrations of the actions of this company in southeastern British Columbia, I want to say it is because of governments inaction we face the present situation in this country today.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is a rather interesting case. One would hardly credit that such a situation would occur in this country, that a United States corporation would show so little regard for the Canadians who work for it. On October 6, the strike of the mine workers employed by Reeves MacDonald, entered its sixth month. The last agreement with that company expired almost one year ago. In December last a conciliation board, chaired by W. J. Asseltine, recommended a 7½ cent an hour increase, plus 2½ cents an hour company contribution to a severance plan and some improvement in annual vacations. This recommendation was rejected by the company and by its United States representatives who came across into Canada to negotiate with the men concerned.

There have been two meetings called by the provincial department of labour officers in an endeavour to settle this dispute, but the company steadfastly refuses to accept this conciliation board report. The latest meeting held in Vancouver on October 7, under the chairmanship of William Sands, deputy minister of labour, did not resolve the issue. The president of the company, Jens Jensen from Spokane, expressed his opinion—mind you, this is a company exploiting large mineral resources in British Columbia—that the workers in Canada should base their wage demands upon wage rates in effect in South America, and not on the wage rates paid by the same company for the same work in the United States. In my opinion, this statement made the issue not one of economics but a matter of national subservience.

Here are the facts, Mr. Speaker. I bring them to the minister's attention because I think this is the type of situation to which serious consideration will have to be given. The Reeves MacDonald mine is a subsidiary almost wholly owned by the Pend Oreille Company which is closely tied up with the Bunker Hill smelter, a very large corporation in the United States. The mine is located on the border of British Columbia and the state of Washington. Workers on the Canadian side of the river, working under the same management, and in the same ore body, receive 48 cents an hour less for the same work. This United States subsidiary refuses even to pay the area rate which has prevailed for some time in the southeastern part of British Columbia. In Salmo the Hudson bay mine has a miner's rate of $2.26½ an hour while Reeves MacDonald pays the miners $2.04. Even if the whole conciliation board report were accepted by the company, the wages would be much less than those paid in the adjacent mine.

Since negotiations started with this company over a year ago, the prices of lead, zinc, silver and cadmium have risen sharply on the market and there is a shortage of lead. The mine stays shut because the company refuses to pay the prevailing rate of wages, and the president has suggested that Canadian workers should accept the level of wages existing in South America.

Since the operation commenced this company, taking full advantage of the tax free period, has made over $4 million in profits. Reeves MacDonald is not a very large operation but it does employ somewhere around 100 miners, and in this respect I want to bring to the minister's attention some news items which appeared in the Northern Miner of May 8, 1962 and May 9, 1963, to prove that this company, which refuses to pay its workers the prevailing rate of wages and which has closed the mine down, has been milking this corporation and paying its profits into Pend Oreille mines in the United States.

I shall only quote one paragraph, and this is from an article entitled, "Pend Oreille profit shows modest gain":

> In addition to production revenue, Pend Oreille received $74,862 other income and $279,811 dividends from its Canadian subsidiary, Reeves MacDonald Mines.

This mine was operating at a good rate of profit, and the profit was being paid into the Pend Oreille Company in the United States. The company has refused, for over a period of six months, to pay even the prevailing rate of wages existing in the area. Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company is a large operator in that area and has a prevailing rate throughout the district in all its mining operations, which rate was established as a result of collective bargaining between the union and the company; but here is a company making a good profit and paying it into the coffers of Pend Oreille Company in the United States, yet it refuses to pay the prevailing rate of wages. As a result of this these miners have been on strike, and rightly so, for over six months, during which time they have been receiving the moral support of local communities.

There is also the question of the depreciation allowance.

Mr. Moreau: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Herridge: Certainly.

Mr. Moreau: I was just wondering whether, in this story of the Reeves MacDonald operation, the hon. member would be able to supply the figures of what the cost would be to the mine if it paid these additional wages? It does not seem to me that $279,000 in dividends is a very large profit for a mine. Could the hon. member supply the costs?

Mr. Herridge: I have not got any figures as to the costs, but the point of my argument and that of the union representing the miners, and of the miners themselves and the communities supporting them, is that the price of metals has gone up considerably in the last six months. I have talked to mining engineers employed by other companies in the area, and everybody who understands the situation knows that this company is treating these miners unjustly, and is not accepting its responsibilities to the Canadian workers and the Canadian economy by allowing the mine to be closed up because of its refusal to pay reasonable wages under these present circumstances.

I might say, in reply to the hon. gentleman who asked the question, that owing to the increase in the price of metals, and even before that, the company was well able to pay the modest increases recommended as the result of the unanimous report of a conciliation board, the chairman of which was a former minister of mines in a Liberal government of British Columbia, and who is himself a mining engineer. This man knows the mining industry. I myself know him very well. He is very competent in that field and I give him full credit for that, even though I have often differed with him on political questions. He is not one to go overboard in these matters. He saw and assessed the situation independently, and no one can say with any truth whatever that all the factors were not taken into consideration.

I have brought this unusual situation to the attention of the minister so that he and his officials will have some opportunity to study the question. I suggest that consideration should be given to the lack of responsibility on the part of this corporation, and others who act in the same manner, who fail to accept their responsibilities to the Canadian people and the workers concerned, and to the industry in general, so that something may be done to amend our income tax legislation to prevent these people from taking such irresponsible action while at the same time taking advantage of the provisions of the Income Tax Act.

Mr. H. E. Gray (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes left to me before five o'clock I would like to express my strong support for this bill, particularly because of the incentive measures referred to by the hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett). Most of us have recognized in one way or another the problem of the existence of areas of slow growth and chronic unemployment. Now that we have recognized the problem—and it was recognized in very limited part by the previous administration—it is time to do something about it, and I think the measures proposed in this legislation will go a long way towards dealing with it.

However, the advantage that we propose in this legislation, and in affiliated legislation governing the Department of Industry, is that what we do will not be a chance, secret order in council decision by cabinet, but will be carried out through a permanent agency set up to identify these areas after applying the criteria now embodied in legislation. Mr. Speaker, may I call it five o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member move that the debate be adjourned?

On motion of Mr. Gray the debate was adjourned.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock p.m. the house will now proceed to consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills and private bills.

SMALL LOANS ACT

AMENDMENT TO REDUCE MAXIMUM INTEREST RATE

On the order:

Second reading of Bill No. C-14, an act to amend the Small Loans Act—Mr. Orlikow.

Some hon. Members: Stand.

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I notice that Bill C-14 and Bill C-23 have exactly the same words and are the same bills in essence, even though they have been introduced by different hon. members. I think this is contrary to the rules, and I ask you—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. My understanding is that this bill is not before the house. It has been allowed to stand; therefore it should not be debated.

Mr. Valade: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, my point is that the other bill is of a similar nature and is quite identical in wording. Would Your Honour give a decision, because we are doubling these bills?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure the hon. member would agree this should be done when the bill is before the house. It is not before the house, and therefore this is not an occasion for the Chair to point to any irregularity that is attached to the bill.

Order stands.

RAILWAY ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING ABANDONMENT OF BRANCH LINES

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-27, to amend the Railway Act (Abandonment).

Mr. Macdonald: Mr. Speaker, if I might be allowed to do so I should like to raise a point of order in connection with this particular matter. The point of order, in brief, is that the subject matter of this bill falls, not within the jurisdiction of this parliament but within the jurisdiction of the particular provinces in which the land may be situate, and for that reason it is not competent for this parliament to debate the matter at this time.

I may say, Mr. Speaker, I have the greatest respect for the hon. member for Middlesex West (Mr. Thomas) and out of respect for him I would like to give in a little more detail the reasons for arriving at that conclusion, and I should like to make reference to the appropriate legal authorities that relate to this question.

If I could summarize briefly, Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill—and I hope the hon. member will correct me if I am mistaken in this—is to confer upon the board of transport commissioners the power, after it has approved the abandonment of a railway line under substantially the terms that now may be found in section 168 of the Railway Act, to impose subsequent conditions upon a railway company as indicated in the second part of the proposed subsection, which reads as follows:

> —the board shall order the company to carry out such remedial measures in the way of fencing, gates, cattle-guards, weed control, drainage works, demolition, restoration or any other remedy as the board deems necessary.

My submission is that once the board of transport commissioners has made its order decreeing that the railway line is to be abandoned, the board has lost jurisdiction and this parliament has lost jurisdiction over that particular piece of land. The hon. member has made reference to a decision of the board of transport commissioners, which may be found in volume 46 of Canadian Railway Cases. This is the decision in Cairns Brothers v. Canadian National Railways. It is a decision of the chief commissioner of the board at that time, the late Hon. Hugh Guthrie, who was at one time house leader for the party of hon. members opposite. I would refer in particular to some remarks of the chief commissioner which are to be found at page 54 of the report. It was an application for substantially the same kind of relief which the hon. member is seeking in his bill. The chief commissioner observed:

> It is to be noted that the requirement for fencing is that the company shall erect and maintain fences upon the railway. Where abandonment of operation has been authorized and has taken place, the right of way through which the railway is operated ceases to be used for railway purposes and is held by the company, not as part of its railway qua railway company, but in the same way as land is held by private individuals, subject to any provincial or municipal laws in respect of fencing which may be in force in the particular district.
>
> It is to be further noted that the principal, if not the sole, reason for the fencing requirement in the Railway Act is to prevent cattle from getting upon railway lands and being killed or injured by railway operation. Where complete abandonment of a line of railway takes place, the necessity for fencing the line largely disappears, and the section does not apply. For these reasons the board, in my opinion, has no authority under the terms of the Railway Act to order the railway company to maintain fences upon the sides of its right of way under the circumstances which pertain in the present application.

At the root of the chief commissioner's observations at that time was the principle that there is inherently a conflict between the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada and the various legislatures in so far as lands which may or may not be used for railway purposes are concerned. As hon. members know, the subject matter of property and civil rights in a general sense has been conferred by section 92 of the British North America Act upon the provincial legislatures, but by reason of the exceptions in section 92 (10) (a) and (c), it has been stipulated that railway lines can in certain circumstances be under the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada and, more particularly, railways lines connecting one province with any other province. Section 92 (10) (a) or under section 92:

> Such works as, although wholly situate within the province, are before or after their execution declared by the parliament of Canada to be for the general advantage of Canada—

The jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada, therefore, in the case of railways must rest upon those exceptions enumerated in section 92 (10) (a) or (c). I would submit, first, that if a railway line has been abandoned, it has ceased to exist as a railway and the provisions of section 92 (10) (a) cannot apply because in effect there is not a railway in existence. Therefore the underlying real estate, which is all you have left in the circumstances, must be regarded in the light of the provision that it is a work declared by the parliament of Canada to be for the general advantage of Canada. A declaration may be made expressly or implicitly in legislation, and I would suggest that generally speaking with regard to railway companies it is made by the Railway Act and the relevant incorporation acts of the companies in question.

It is also clear that the parliament of Canada may by subsequent action, express or implied, withdraw such declaration and thereby return the lands to provincial jurisdiction. I would refer you, Mr. Speaker, to the case before the judicial committee of the privy council which may be found in the Law Reports, 1916, Appeal Cases, Volume II, at page 583. This is the case of Hamilton, Grimsby, and Beamsville Railway Company v. Attorney General for Ontario and others. Lord Buckmaster, who was then Lord Chancellor, speaking on behalf of the committee observed as follows at page 587:

> Their lordships are clearly of opinion that section 92, subsection 10, never intended that a declaration once made by the parliament of Canada—

That is, a declaration for the general advantage of Canada:

> —should be incapable of modification or repeal. To come to such a conclusion would result in the impossibility of the dominion ever being able to repair the oversights by which, even with the greatest care, mistakes frequently creep into the clauses of acts of parliament. The declaration under section 92, subsection 10 (c), is a declaration which can be varied by the same authority as that by which it was made.

My submission is that the parliament of Canada has by the Railway Act conferred authority on the board of transport commissioners to decree from time to time what works and property have ceased to be governed by the declaration for the general advantage of Canada. My submission, in particular, is that once approval has been given by the board to a railway line being abandoned as part of a railway, and once that has been acted on by the company, the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada ceases. Under those circumstances the land, while remaining properly the property of the railway company, becomes subject to the laws of the particular province concerned with regard to questions which affect that property, such as fencing, weed control and such matters. In such circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I submit that the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada has ceased. Therefore the proposed legislation of the hon. member would essentially attempt to confer upon the board a power ex post facto to act with regard to land that formerly formed part of a railway and which, by the board's own decision, has ceased to be part of the railway undertaking. That land, by an extension of the same reasoning, has therefore ceased to be under the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada.

For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I would submit that, notwithstanding the merits of this legislation, it is not appropriate for parliament at this time to discuss this particular measure; that remedial measures with regard to fencing and the other matters referred to in subclause (2) of the proposed amendment are properly under the jurisdiction of the provincial governments and that application should be made in the provincial legislatures for remedial legislation.

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Thomas: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With deference to the hon. gentleman, I am prepared to make a ruling now on the point of order which has been raised by the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Macdonald). I might say at once that I do not agree with the hon. member and I really do not think it is necessary to continue the discussion on the point of order. I do not wish to interrupt the hon. member for Middlesex West or deprive him of the opportunity of presenting his views on this point of order raised by the hon. member for Rosedale. If he wants to submit an argument on the point of order I will give him an opportunity to do so, although I really do not think it necessary that he do so.

Mr. Thomas: I think the point has been covered in discussing the bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have listened with much interest to the argument made by the honourable and learned member for Rosedale (Mr. Macdonald). I gather the essence of the argument he submits now is that the bill should not be considered, that it is out of order because it is ultra vires the parliament of Canada. My submission at this time is that it should not be the responsibility of the Chair to the rule whether a particular bill or particular piece of legislation submitted to parliament is or is not within the competence of this house. First, I should like to refer hon. members to standing order 12, which limits and defines the duties and responsibilities of the Speaker.

> Mr. Speaker shall preserve order and decorum, and shall decide questions of order, subject to an appeal to the house without debate.

In other words, this limits the powers and responsibilities of the Speaker to deciding on questions of order, not questions of law. This is further confirmed in citation 69(3) of Beauchesne's fourth edition, at page 59:

Standing order 12 being restrictive should be given the strictest literal interpretation.

I should also like to quote Beauchesne's third edition at page 825, which refers to a ruling of the Hon. Lewis Wallbridge, Speaker, made on June 25, 1864:

The hon. Mr. Howland having moved, that an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General, praying him to recommend to parliament the payment of the balance due by the government for certain expenses incurred in carrying out the treaty of reciprocal free trade between this province and the United States of America, in accordance with an order in council passed on the 14th day of March, 1863, it was objected that it was contrary to the provisions of the 14th chapter of the consolidated statutes of Canada.

The Speaker said: That according to the usages of the British parliament, he was not bound to decide on a question of law.

To bring this ruling a little more up to date, I should like to refer at this time to citation 71(5) of Beauchesne's fourth edition, at page 61:

The Speaker will not give a decision upon a constitutional question nor decide a question of law, though the same may be raised on a point of order or privilege.

Which is what the hon. member did at the moment he raised it as a question of order. But it shall not be the responsibility of the Chair or the Speaker to make a decision.

Lastly, I should like to refer to a more recent ruling made by Mr. Speaker Lemieux, reported in Hansard for June 4, 1925, page 3875:

The parliament of Canada is supreme, and if it should pass any act which is ultra vires, the courts would decide the validity of such act. It is not for the Speaker to declare—although he presides over the highest court in the land—as to whether any proposed legislation is ultra vires—

For these reasons, and in view of the citations to which I have just referred my hon. friend and which I have brought to the attention of the house, I cannot agree with the validity of the point of order raised by my hon. friend. I now recognize the hon. member for Middlesex West (Mr. Thomas).

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This matter is somewhat technical. I have tried to condense what I have to say into as few words as possible, so I ask the indulgence of the house to stick closely to my notes.

This bill, No. C-27, was first introduced in the session of 1962. It was debated on February 9, 1962, and is reported on pages 742-749 of Hansard for that date. As often happens with private members' bills, time ran out before a decision was reached. The purpose of this bill is to provide the board of transport commissioners with both the authority and the responsibility for setting forth the conditions under which any railway line may be abandoned. I believe my remarks cover in a general way the argument raised by the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Macdonald). I am quite familiar with the argument, and without referring specifically to what he has said I think what I propose as I go along will cover his argument.

The MacPherson commission has forecast the abandonment of 8,000 miles of uneconomic railway branch lines in Canada. Lack of patronage indicates that these lines are no longer required. These branch lines served a pressing need in the days of horse-drawn vehicles 50 years ago, but they cannot possibly compete with the modern motor transport, for either short haul passenger service or freight service. On the grounds of economy they should be abandoned, but the government through the board of transport commissioners should accept responsibility for the manner in which abandonment takes place.

Many interests are involved. There is displacement of labour; new jobs must be found; business is disrupted; rail-tied investments are sometimes jeopardized, agricultural delivery points are eliminated, and there are problems connected with the rehabilitation of the abandoned right of way. It was to this that the hon. member for Rosedale made special reference. Abandonment can be carried out as an orderly transition for the community if it is done in an orderly manner. If left unplanned and uncontrolled, abandonment can become for many of the people involved a very disagreeable experience.

As a good instance of unplanned and uncontrolled abandonment, I would draw attention to the developments following the abandonment of the Courtright branch of the New York Central railway, in 1960, which extends from St. Thomas westwards through the counties of Lambton, Middlesex and Elgin. Train service had almost disappeared from the line. Business disruption was slight, but the abandoned right of way created serious and very irritating problems. The rails and ties and any useful culverts remaining were torn out, leaving an unsightly mess. The fences which had been neglected for some years, pending abandonment, were left in deplorable condition and resulted in a livestock nuisance. The right of way subsequently grew up to brush, burdocks, thistles and an inglorious assortment of all noxious weeds known to the district.

Railways are always a nuisance in farm areas because almost invariably they divide farm lots into awkward areas. While the railway continues to operate, this inconvenience is ameliorated by properly maintained fences, gates and grade crossings. When abandonment takes place the crossings are torn out, the gates and fences are left in useless shape and the right of way becomes an unrestricted multiplying ground for noxious weed seeds. The New York Central right of way has now been sold en bloc to private speculators who have proved very difficult to contact. The county seed inspector has this year been unable to get action on the weeds. This right of way has become an eyesore, a nuisance and a menace to the community.

For further details of the tribulations and frustrations encountered by the people along this abandoned railway, may I refer hon. members to the debate of February 9, 1962. These difficulties are continuing. No one seems to know or care about cleaning up this mess. Surely the members of this house do not wish this most unsatisfactory experience to be repeated in other parts of the country. Although the difficulties in this New York Central case were not connected with rail-tied investments, grain storage, or alternate transport facilities to the same extent as they might be in other cases of abandonment, these problems of field separation, fencing, drainage and weed control are both irritating and unnecessary.

This parliament has set up a number of planning boards to help avoid confusion and mistakes in our future development. Surely we are justified in giving the most careful consideration to some form of planning and regulation which might help to smooth out the process of railway abandonment.

The Railway Act occupies 203 pages of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952. It was passed in its original form when railway construction began, and was intended to protect the interests of all concerned, both under conditions of construction and of operation. It has been amended from time to time to meet changing requirements. Railway abandonment now makes further amendment a prime necessity.

The Railway Act provides for a board of transport commissioners to administer the act. This transport board has authority over all aspects of railway construction and operation. It can grant permission for a company to abandon a railway line but holds itself bound by a judgment re Cairns Brothers, written by chief commissioner Guthrie, November 17, 1936, which rules that the board has no jurisdiction over abandoned rights of way. This judgment was read into Hansard for Feb. 9, 1962. Once the rail lines are torn out, the board's jurisdiction over a right of way ends. The board has no right to enforce conditions for abandonment. This bill, as previously stated, aims to provide the board of transport commissioners with both the authority and the responsibility for setting forth the conditions under which any railway abandonment may take place.

I suggest that one of the conditions for abandonment should be the appointment of a planning board representative of the various interests which will be affected. Such a board should have on it representatives of the railway company, labour unions, agriculture and the municipalities concerned. The board should have the responsibility of recommending to the transport board the conditions under which abandonment could be permitted. Its recommendations should concern the best disposition of the right of way in the public interest, the disposition of the workers involved, consideration of compensation for rail-tied investment, and any other matters of vital public concern.

Where the right of way separates farm lands, the right of way should be restored wherever practicable to the farm lot from which the land was originally taken. This would eliminate the nuisance of having parts of farms separated from each other. It would permit the farmer in each case to reincorporate the right of way to the best possible advantage in his farm, and to control drainage and the weed menace. Larger areas of property, such as those in town sites, should be disposed of in the best public interest after consultation with the municipalities concerned.

It is proposed that whenever an application for abandonment is granted by the transport board, a waiting period should be allowed in which such a representative planning board as suggested could prepare a plan for abandonment. Provision might be made in such a plan for settlement of disputes by arbitration. The services of municipal and provincial planning boards should be used where available. Conservation authorities at various levels of government should also be consulted. These unnecessary railway lines have served their day and generation well. There is no sound reason why we should now abandon them in such a way as to leave ghost towns, broken fortunes and unsightly scars across the face of our country.

I recommend this bill for hon. members' consideration and for the consideration of the government.

Mr. J. J. Greene (Renfrew South): Mr. Speaker, may I, first of all, commend the sponsor of the bill before us. I think this measure is certainly a step in the right direction. The railways themselves, as well as the parliament which aids and abets them in making these abandonments possible, sometimes forget the history of railroading in this country. I think it should be remembered, when we are considering the issue of rail abandonment, that these same companies which are today seeking so industriously to abandon these lines for purely economic reasons, completely ignoring any social implications in the areas concerned, were at one time equally solicitous about procuring from the government of this country monopolies to run these lines.

I would remind the house that these railways were granted something which belonged exclusively to the people of Canada, namely monopolies to run lines, exclusive of other competition, in many cases, in the areas affected. I do not wish to introduce any political aspect into this discussion because there has been enough politicking in this house since the beginning of the twenty sixth parliament; but we know that some companies were granted considerable property, mining and mineral rights, and so on, belonging to the people of Canada, in consideration of building the railways. I think it should be remembered that the companies sought these exclusive monopolies from the people of Canada and used them for profit and considerable gain for many, many years. It is singular that when the cream was flowing the railways did not come and tell us how much cream they were getting from these lines. But when the cream got a little thin, and, in some cases, turned to skimmed milk, they came crying back to the people of Canada through the board of transport commissioners and, just as quickly as they could, they tried to get rid of those responsibilities which they had sought in the first place.

I have attended some of the hearings before the board of transport commissioners and, of course, the last thing the railways are concerned about at these hearings is the effect of rail abandonment on the social and economic life of the areas concerned. In fact, they will say promptly that this is not a pertinent issue. In my particular constituency, the west end of the great riding of Renfrew South was at one time a booming and thriving lumbering area. Of late years the prosperity of that area has suffered very considerably by reason of the depletion of the timber limits. As a result the railways did not make quite as much money there as they would like to make. They have been successful in the past few years in abandoning several of these lines and are now in the process of attempting to abandon the last line, the last avenue stretching by rail from the capital of Canada to one of Canada's great national resources, Algonquin park.

They now want to tear up the line between Barrys Bay and Whitney which will cut off the last access by rail between Canada's capital and this great national heritage. Their only reason for doing so is that they are not making enough money. I believe that the railways, being vast corporations concerned only with profits and not with the public benefit will, as private corporations often will, do almost anything that is required to gain their ends. On one occasion the unhappy situation developed of the railway consenting to attempt to run a line profitably for a period of a year and if they were not able to do so they were to be permitted then to abandon it.

The municipalities which had opposed abandonment of the line took the word of the railway in good faith and thought they would in fact attempt to refurbish it, provide a better and more efficient service, advertise, and honestly attempt to make the line pay. Such was not our experience. The railway deliberately and as a matter of planned policy set out not to make money in that year, and to do everything as poorly as they possibly could in order that they might come back to the board a year later and say: "There you are; we told you so; we cannot make it pay; we want to abandon the line."

The railways will make no attempt, as businesses in competitive spheres must do, to make these lines pay and to make them effective and efficient. If they decide the line does not make money easily their attitude is: "Let us get rid of it; let us fold it; never mind the effects on the localities and on the people." I suggest that any corporation that has had a monopoly from the people of Canada and has milked it for all it was worth when the cream was good has no right to abandon a line to the detriment of the people in the locality, without making very adequate compensation to the people there for the abandonment of the line.

The hon. member who proposed the bill has taken a step in this direction and, as I said earlier, I think he is to be complimented and highly commended for this step. I wonder whether he has gone far enough. In hearing his well presented and documented speech I wondered whether it would not be advantageous to the people in these areas and more proper, in view of the fact that the railways have used these lines which were very largely granted from the public domain, if the railway when it wished to abandon a line would have to return the right of way to the public domain. I wonder how many applications for railway line abandonment we would have if the railways were told: "That is fine; you can abandon the line if it is in the public interest of the locality, but if you do so any land—"

Mr. Clancy: May I ask the hon. member a question? He should know the law. If he will look up the statutes he will find that if a line is abandoned it is already set out in the law who owns the land and also who gets the mineral rights.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, I am not quite aware whether the hon. member—

Mr. Clancy: You have the same statutes I have.

Mr. Greene: If the hon. member was giving me information I thank him for it. I was not aware of that situation in respect of the mineral rights. I am aware of the fact that the freehold on these lines remains vested in the railway in perpetuity if they wish to keep it that way, whether or not they abandon the line. My hon. friend has instructed me that the mineral rights revert in some fashion. If this is so I was not aware of it. What I say is subject to what may be the case in the western provinces where the law in respect of minerals is different from that in Ontario. To the best of my knowledge the mineral rights remain vested in the railway whether or not they abandon the line. I stand to be corrected in this regard, but this is my impression. I suggest that this is neither right nor proper. The railways should have to make a decision. If they wish to abandon lines because they are not making enough money they should have to decide to give the land back either to the abutting owners or to the municipalities or the province concerned. Surely they should not be able to render no service, do as they like with the line and then leave people without any rights either municipally or provincially with regard to the line.

My hon. friend has taken one step in the right direction but I suggest with the greatest respect that we should go a great deal farther. I suggest that the railways should not be permitted to play fast and loose with the rights of the people as they have been doing to date with regard to the abandonment of lines. In the west end of my riding, which I spoke of earlier, this is a matter of very great concern to my people. It was one of the first areas of this great province to be opened up. I have a great deal of sympathy with hon. gentlemen opposite who from time to time have propounded policies for the opening up and development of Canada's north, but I must admit that I have also had some misgivings. I have seen so many areas such as the west end of the riding I represent which have been opened up for many years, in this instance an area close to the capital of Canada itself, and which have been neglected and forgotten over the years. This area was used as long as the timber resources existed, and then it was abandoned to the point that today even the railways are getting out. In some measure it seems to me a contradiction to talk about the building of roads to resources and developing our great north when in some of the oldest settled parts of the country, such as the riding I represent, there has been so little development and apparently so little concern by any government of any stamp about the fact that the area has been left forgotten, neglected and undeveloped.

Believe me, in the area to which I have referred lack of opportunity has made itself felt not only in one generation but in two and three. There are no schools there, even at the elementary level to compare with the schools that exist in more urban municipalities, because there is no assessment, industrial or residential, on which to found a proper school system.

The lack of opportunity, therefore, is widespread in an area such as this. These people have been living now for some generations in the hope that at some time the pendulum would swing the other way, and that the days they knew when pine was in its prime would return by way of industry. In this way, new opportunities would be created. The railways went into this area very early in order to make profits when the pine was moving, and when they see even the railway pulling out it is a symbol to them that perhaps even the government of this country has given up hope.

I suggest that at these hearings before the board of transport commissioners, the only issue is public convenience and necessity. Of course, the financial statements of the railway are important. How many dollars are they losing; that is of great concern to the board of transport commissioners. As I said earlier, the railways are very adept at making up financial statements which indicate they are losing money. They are very slow and remiss in doing those difficult things that are needed to make the railways in these poor areas a little more prosperous. The railways just want the lush pastures. They want to leave the tough parts to the buses. This is the attitude of the railways. Well, the financial statements are pertinent.

Is there some other means of transportation? This is pertinent to the inquiry by the board of transport commissioners, and is called public convenience and necessity. However, there is very little else that is pertinent. It is not relevant to know how many dollars this railway made on this line before they decided to pull out. The board does not want to hear about that. They just want the picture now. The board does not want to hear whether this railway will provide a means of access for future industrial or tourist development. Again we in South

Renfrew know that one of our faint hopes lies in the growth of the tourist industry. We do not have the ready access to the area we should have to make that possible. When the railways are removed, there is just one other means of access that no longer exists which would help us to develop the tourist industry.

Surely, at the very least, it should be a relevant issue before the board of transport commissioners, whether or not the removal of the railway will impair the future economic growth of the area. To the best of my knowledge, this is not a pertinent question and this parliament must be held responsible for that. If these issues are not relevant in these hearings for abandonment, then the ultimate responsibility rests in this parliament which makes the laws governing the operation of the board of transport commissioners.

I suggested, Mr. Speaker, that this entire problem of railway abandonment should be given another look to ensure that these powerful concerns which in the past have made great profits on these lines should not be allowed to abandon them at the first signs of the end of the easy money. The railways should be made to sincerely attempt to make these lines pay. I recall very distinctly that at one of these hearings where we were striving on behalf of the local municipalities to have the line kept open, a witness on behalf of the railway was asked, "what have you done to make your service attractive so the people will use it, so that you would not be coming here with a crying towel trying to abandon this line?" We also asked whether they had advertised their service which, peculiarly enough, is something that is very necessary in modern business. We were given this answer. "We do not have to advertise; everybody knows where the station is." This answer illustrates how efficient, how up to date the railways are. This indicates how concerned they are about seeing to it that these marginal lines make a profit so that they can be maintained to serve the areas they are supposed to serve.

No, Mr. Speaker, it is my firm belief that the railways do not wish to make any attempt to maintain lines, except in those areas where the profits are lush and easy. If the maintenance of the line is going to be difficult, if it is going to take imaginative management, if it is going to take the kind of business acumen that every little businessman has to have to survive today, then the railways say, "it is too tough; we want to pull out". Let somebody else do it. While this bill goes some distance towards making the railways fulfil their responsibilities to the people they are abandoning, it should go a great deal farther. At the very least, if the railways pull out, the entire line and the resources, mineral and otherwise below it, should be returned to the public domain. Then, let us see how many lines the railways will want to abandon.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I only want to say a few words in connection with this bill, Mr. Speaker, and to move an amendment at the conclusion of my remarks. The hon. member for Middlesex West (Mr. Thomas) has raised a very important matter which I believe is going to become more and more of a problem as time goes on. The railways have apparently come to the conclusion that they must abandon certain lines that are not paying. We have to face the probability and possibility that in the future this problem will become even more acute than it is now. The hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Macdonald) raised a matter that merits very serious consideration. If we can assume that he has indicated the viewpoint of the government, then there is some question about the validity of this type of legislation. We ought to have this question of validity investigated.

This bill has been before the house on other occasions, and will probably be before the house on future occasions. I hope that each time it comes up the question of its validity will not cloud the issue of the appropriateness of the legislation. One point I should like to raise in connection with validity. There is a very well known maxim in common law relative to highways which is to the effect, once a highway always a highway. I would think this maxim could apply equally to railroads. It might very well be that if the Supreme Court of Canada had to consider whether or not this particular maxim would apply to railway land, under these circumstances it would come to the conclusion that the railway is and remains a federal railway, and within the legislative competence of the parliament of Canada.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I would like to move seconded by the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden):

> That Bill C-27 be not now read a second time but that the Minister of Justice be directed to refer the subject matter thereof to the Supreme Court of Canada for an opinion on the validity thereof.

I may say that just a few minutes ago I gave a copy of this motion to the Minister of Transport, who is interested in this particular bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Shall the motion carry?

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, if I could just refer to a few remarks made by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) I would like to make it clear to the house that the remarks I made at the start of this hour were remarks made by me in my personal capacity as a member of the bar, and with doubts as to the constitutional validity of consideration of this question by parliament. They did not represent the policy of the government.

I would say that while I at that time raised some question as to the constitutional validity, I would like, if I might, just to refer to some of the merits underlying the question of constitutional validity, and to refer to the merits which presumably motivated the drafters of our constitution to consider this question and deal with it in this way. It was the intention of the drafters of the British North America Act to place matters of purely local and private nature within the jurisdiction of the provincial governments.

I do not disagree at all with the concern expressed by the hon. member for Middlesex West (Mr. Thomas) with regard to the fact that a piece of industrial wasteland may have been created, nor do I disagree with the remarks made by the hon. member for Renfrew South (Mr. Greene) that the particular railway should not be able, without any financial cost, merely to abandon the line and let it lie. But the point I was making is that this should be governed by the local planning authority. The jurisdiction over this should be exercised by local people who make plans for the use of real property within a particular community. What I am saying in connection with land which is purely the land of a particular locality, is that the locality should decide. The people should not have to come to Ottawa. They should not be forced to the expense of coming to the board of transport commissioners to say how the land is going to be used.

From a legal standpoint this question is amply clear for the reasons I have cited. We have already got pronouncements of the judicial committee of the privy council with respect to jurisdiction over land declared to be for the general advantage of Canada. We have the clear statement of the board of transport commissioners, a statement of law on which appeal was available, but upon which no appeal has been taken, that in fact the land has ceased to be part of the railway operation.

With regard to the maxim, once a highway always a highway, applying here, as argued by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka, I would point out that the chief purpose of that particular maxim is to assert the fact that it does remain in the public domain. There is no question here as to the ultimate ownership of the land. It remains clearly the property in fee simple of the company, but the real question here is the manner in which it is being used.

The parliament of Canada, under the Railway Act, has conferred on the board of transport commissioners the power to decree the manner in which land shall be used when devoted for the purposes of a railway. When land has been abandoned with the consent of the board of transport commissioners and in accordance with due process of law, then that land has ceased to be within the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada; and that proposition, as I pointed out to Your Honour at the beginning of this hour, has been amply confirmed by the judicial committee of the privy council, and has been amply confirmed by the body which, under the law of Canada, has chief jurisdiction over questions of law arising in connection with railway matters.

It is not so much a question of whether something should be done about this problem created for a community, when industrial wasteland exists after railroad tracks are torn up. I agree it is not that question, but the question is by whom should it be done? I would submit to the house that this question has already been decided fully by the British North America Act, and interpreted as such by the appropriate courts of the land —that the jurisdiction in this respect where land has been abandoned by approval of the board of transport commissioners, rests entirely with the provincial governments, and through the provincial governments in their creations, the local planning authorities, or in the appropriate case in the provincial departments of municipal affairs.

For that reason I do not feel it would be useful putting the crown to the expense of getting an opinion from the Supreme Court of Canada on a question which is eminently clear. What I do suggest is that the very commendable efforts of my hon. friends from Middlesex West and Renfrew South should be directed to the provincial authorities, and it is for them to take action to impose upon the local planning authority the jurisdiction and power to make orders for railway companies with regard to the proper, convenient and socially acceptable use for lands formerly devoted to railway purposes. Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I must advise the house the time for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. Before calling it six o'clock maybe the house would agree to go into committee of supply in preparation for the business that is for consideration at seven o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 7 p.m.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply, on the estimates of the Department of Justice, vote No. 1.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

1. Departmental administration including grants and contributions as detailed in the estimates, $1,378,100.

The Chairman: Shall this vote carry?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, I know it is unusual for the head of the government to speak on the introduction of the estimates, on item 1, which initiates a general discussion. I do so on this occasion because I want to take advantage of the opportunity to make a brief statement concerning some changes that have been introduced in policy and procedures relating to the security of the operations of government and of the defence services. The fact that I am doing it—and I will be followed by the Minister of Justice—is, I hope, an indication of the seriousness which the government attaches to this problem, the importance which we attach to it and my own interest, as the head of the government, in it.

Security is one of those things that is essential and, at the same time and in some respects, rather distasteful. I think we would all prefer if we could ignore the necessity of security and do away with the procedures and precautions it imposes upon us. Unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, we cannot; we have no immunity from this responsibility. While we in Canada have not had for some years a sharp and immediate shock in the exposure of espionage, that does not mean the threat has vanished or that the necessity to meet it has diminished. We have had ample evidence both here and in allied, friendly countries—recent evidence—that security is as important a matter today as it has ever been.

It is still the responsibility of government to ensure that every reasonable precaution is taken to protect the security of the nation in all its aspects. The security which I am talking about tonight—and it is only one aspect of security—and which must be provided is of two kinds. First, the government must ensure the physical safety of the secret, classified information for which it is responsible by devising effective regulations for its proper handling and proper storage. However, physical security is in itself of little use without the added assurance that the people handling the material in question are people in whom government can have full confidence. It is in this area of personnel security that most of our difficulties lie, in which government responsibility is, I think, heaviest and perhaps most difficult to discharge. An important phase of that responsibility is to ensure that the protection of our security does not by its nature or by its conduct undermine those human rights and freedoms to which our democratic institutions are dedicated.

If our security policies ignored, or did not take sufficiently into account, the basic rights of the individual, they could operate not to defend but to destroy the liberties which are our first concern. The reconciliation of these competing responsibilities and these competing obligations is not easy. Governments in this country, in the United Kingdom, the United States, France and in free countries everywhere have wrestled, and indeed are wrestling, with this problem. There is no perfect solution to it; there is no perfect answer to it. There is no solution that does not entail some risks, risks to security or risks to individual rights, or risks to both.

Mr. Chairman, there have been recent expressions of concern in this House of Commons and elsewhere, not so much about the adequacy or, if you like, effectiveness of our defence security measures as about the fairness and justice to the individual citizens concerned. I recognize, as I am sure all hon. members of the house recognize, that concern and find it reassuring and, indeed, gratifying.

Let me make it quite clear, Mr. Chairman, that the concern which has been expressed about this matter is fully shared by this government, as I believe it was fully shared by those responsible for government in the past. The security measures which have been developed here in Canada, through sometimes bitter experience, are intended to be preventive and not punitive. Their purpose is to protect the safety, interests and indeed the freedoms of all Canadians. They are under constant and continuous review, with the purpose of striking the balance I have referred to between the protection of the state and the protection of the individuals who, in a free society, alone give the state its direction, its purpose and indeed its meaning.

Since they were introduced in this country in 1947, the so-called security screening procedures adopted have, on the whole, worked well, though of course, Mr. Chairman, there have been mistakes. But I believe we have for the most part avoided excesses both of over-caution and over-confidence. There are nevertheless admittedly certain flaws in the system and it is to these that the government has been directing its attention recently. It is also to these that members have been addressing questions to the government in the House of Commons.

It has been suggested that our security system might be better served by the establishment of a quasi-judicial tribunal to which persons who had been denied employment in government or dismissed from government employment for security reasons might have a right of appeal against that decision. This proposal has been given intensive study by various Canadian administrations over a number of years and the conclusion invariably arrived at has been essentially this: quasi-judicial procedures cannot fairly and effectively be applied to these matters. By the very nature of the security risk and the measures which have to be taken to try to meet that risk, it is often impossible to bring forward for open scrutiny all of the relevant information in any particular case. To some degree the consideration of employee security in the consideration of this problem in judicial or in legal terms beclouds rather than clarifies the issue.

No lawyer thinks of judicial procedures and the canons of evidence when he decides to trust a secretary with private or secret papers. Confidence is not the kind of thing which is always capable of determination by concrete or specific evidence. It may depend on many things—the record of a man, his character and his habits, the nature of his activities, the stability of his personality, the company he keeps, and the pressures to which he may be susceptible. Judgments of character and confidence are important in private affairs; they become far more important when the security of a nation is at stake. But they are not, however, different in their essential nature. Every minister and agency of government is accountable for the security of their operations. Consequently, each must be responsible for the reliability of the people to whom it gives access to the things on which national security may depend.

The granting or the denial of a security clearance is an administrative matter, one of managerial responsibility. In making a decision that an applicant or employee may not safely be given access to secret and confidential information, the head of a department or of an agency is not denying an individual a right. No person, of course, has a right to see official secrets. The department head is merely exercising the judgment he is expected to apply on the basis of all the information available to him in the way that any sensible person would exercise such judgment in hiring a secretary, a cashier, a lawyer or a doctor, ensuring that such person could be trusted with his property, his private business or his physical health. The government also has an obligation to provide itself with every reasonable assurance that those of its employees who require access to the government's, the nation's secrets are loyal and trustworthy and not vulnerable to persuasion, coercion or blackmail.

While it is the responsibility of departments and ministers to take the ultimate decision on the security of their personnel, this is of course done within directions as to policy laid down by the government. The question has arisen whether it might be desirable to have some procedure for a hearing or a rehearing of employees, short of a judicial or quasi-judicial procedure, which would ensure that their side of a case was fairly heard. The United Kingdom and the United States do have such procedures, while they leave the final decision to the agencies involved. So far in Canada we have not had these procedures.

After careful consideration the government has come to the conclusion that the essential advantages of these procedures can be achieved within our system by requiring all departments and agencies of government to do two things which they have not previously been required to do. The first of the new requirements is to inform the person involved when his security or reliability is in doubt and may have to involve his dismissal. Employing departments and agencies will in future be required to tell an employee everything that is possible of the reasons for the doubt, if there is a doubt, and to give him an opportunity to resolve that doubt. This practice has been followed in several departments and agencies of the government for many years, and often with very good results, but it has not been mandatory. There will, of course, Mr. Chairman, be cases, which I think will be few in number, in which the sources of the information giving rise to doubt are such that little or nothing can be told the employee of the reasons for doubt without jeopardizing the sources from which the information comes. In these cases, which will, I repeat, be few in number, there will be an added responsibility to exercise the greatest care to ensure that the employee does not suffer unfairly.

The second new requirement is to ensure that a second look is always taken by a separate body before dismissal is finally decided upon. Once the individual is told of security doubts he will have the opportunity to give his side of the case. The employing agency will consider it, consult the staff of the government security panel, and arrive at a conclusion. It may be to accept the person as reliable, in which case no problem arises.

It may be to transfer him to a less sensitive employment, as has been the case certainly more than once in the past, where he would not have access to secret and confidential material. But if it is that his dismissal must be recommended, the individual will be given a second hearing, this time by the deputy minister or head of the agency. If that interview does not resolve the doubts, and if the agency head agrees with the view that dismissal is necessary, the whole case and the relevant information, including anything that the employee himself has submitted, will be submitted to a board of review.

At this point, Mr. Chairman, I would like to say something about the government's advisory agency on security policy. This agency, which has been in operation now for a good many years, is called the security panel. It is composed of senior officers, mostly of deputy minister rank, who have had years of responsibility and experience in the personnel and administrative fields. Security is not their main or sole responsibility. Advice on policy in this area has to be based not on security alone but on a broad understanding of the nature of our democratic institutions and principles, on the policies of government, on the requirements of administration, and finally, and importantly, on the needs of security.

The government has decided that the board of review to which I have referred should be drawn from the members of the security panel. In all cases they will be men who have not been involved in the particular case. They will come to it without bias or preconception. There is no question at all in my mind but that they will provide as fair, humane and sound an evaluation of every case as can be provided in this difficult field.

The board of review will provide its views on each case where dismissal is recommended. It will then be for the responsible minister, in the light of all the information and study, to decide whether or not to recommend dismissal to the governor in council.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that these procedures are as painstaking and thorough as can be devised to ensure the protection both of the safety of essential classified government information and of the welfare and rights of the employee.

A most difficult aspect of security, and one which has always been a matter of concern, is the necessity of taking into account the character and activities of an employee's immediate relatives, or their places of residence. The question has often and properly been asked: Why should a man be denied a security clearance because his father, his uncle, or even his estranged wife, may have been engaged in subversive activity, or may be an active communist? It is not the kind of relationship, whether by blood, marriage or friendship, which is of primary concern. It is its closeness in degree and the circumstances surrounding it in respect of the nature of the job, most particularly the extent of influence that might be exerted, which must dictate a judgment as to a person's reliability. And reliability, of course, is something more than loyalty. It is usually very difficult to establish this, but that does not remove the need of trying to do so.

The collective experience of all nations of the western alliance agrees on the necessity of exploring these difficult matters and arriving at a considered judgment. This experience also shows that security may be in danger if a person in sensitive employment has a mother, father or other close relative behind the iron curtain. Human emotions cannot be expected to be proof against the possible anguish of a loved one—and the brutal fact is that such anguish may be imposed by those who are ruthless in getting, or trying to get, what they want. These are harsh and unpleasant facts, but they do not go away if we pretend that they do not exist.

I feel confident that the procedures which we are now adopting will assist us in making judgments concerning loyalty and reliability in a manner which will protect individual rights as well as national interests.

In making this statement, I hope I have contributed to a better understanding of the principles and issues involved in this aspect of national security, and the means by which we endeavour to preserve it and discharge our responsibility in government.

I have necessarily spoken in general terms, but if the committee would agree—and I know this is an unusual procedure—my colleague the Minister of Justice could follow me and fill in some of the details.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If you let me precede the hon. gentleman, he could answer me and then the detail could be set out.

Mr. Chevrier: The statement I have to make follows upon that which the Prime Minister has just made and, if I might have the permission of the committee to do so, I should like to make it now. If it were separated from the speech which has just been made, I think the effect would be spoiled.

The Chairman: Is that agreeable?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Chevrier: I wish to say at the outset that I think this is a rare occasion, one of the few occasions which I have seen, at least, in my long years in the House of Commons upon which the Prime Minister makes a statement on the estimates of another minister. I am not saying it has not been done before. I am simply saying it is a rare occasion and it underlines the importance which the Prime Minister and those who sit on this side of the house attach to this subject.

The committee may remember that the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam brought to my attention, and to the attention of the government, the procedure which was being followed by the Department of Justice and other departments with reference to this matter and I agreed to give the subject consideration, along with my colleagues. I believe the hon. gentleman, together with his hon. friends, thought that this consideration was taking too long but I am sure he will have realized this evening at once, not only by the statement which the Prime Minister has made but by the statement I am about to make, that this is a question which has to be considered in all its aspects, aspects which affect every department and agency of government. That is why a decision with reference to the procedure to be adopted in future has not been reached until now.

I would like at this juncture to make a more detailed statement concerning national security within the context of the statement on security policy by the Prime Minister. In light of the many recent expressions of interest in the means by which the government of Canada protects her secrets and those of her allies entrusted to her, and in light of continuing indications, here and elsewhere, that the need for such protection not only continues but continues to grow, I welcome this opportunity to contribute to a clearer understanding by the people of Canada of the issues involved in this vital, although often misunderstood area of human activity.

I need hardly remind this house of the dangers of permitting information about our defences, the defences of the western alliance or other matters essential to our security to fall into unfriendly hands. I need scarcely recall what happened many years back when certain matters were discussed here and outside. We know that there have been, over the years, undeniably effective efforts of espionage in Canada, in the United States, in the United Kingdom, elsewhere in the democratic countries of the west, and, indeed, through the world.

All the countries of the west know that in addition to the professional agents, a very effective group in securing and passing on vital and secret information are open or clandestine sympathizers with the communist ideology. In their minds they have another—perhaps they think a much higher—loyalty.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

In any event, there is no doubt but that they play a major role in securing information that others want for purposes unfriendly to our objectives.

Apart from the use of such allies or sympathizers, one of espionage's most effective tools has always been the exploitation of human vulnerability, whether of the body or of the mind. In recent years there has been a frightening concentration on the exploitation of human failings to achieve the ends of offensive intelligence. Any evidence of exploitable weakness, whether it be greed, lust, dishonesty or plain stupidity, is carefully documented and may be carefully nurtured. Eventually, through the patient accumulation of compromising evidence, or simply through a veiled threat that a relative may have some difficulty with the police, it is possible for an intelligence agent to apply pressures which may prove intolerable unless co-operation is forthcoming. If it is not, the evidence, whether it is real or concocted or both, is sent anonymously to employers, relatives and friends, often with the result that a promising career is ruined, not to speak of the personal effect on the individual himself.

Should there be any doubt in anyone's mind, let me say at once that these things have happened to Canadians, as we all know, and will probably happen again. For obvious reasons I do not propose to go further into this matter, but I should like it clearly understood that, for reasons such as I have given, the defensive security measures which have been developed over the years are intended not only to protect our secrets but to protect the individuals who, in having access to them, are thus automatically potential targets for ruthless attacks of the kind I have described.

I should like now to say something about the security screening arrangements which have been devised to prevent espionage, as distinct from those intended to anticipate and control subversive activities generally. I do so with some reluctance because the effectiveness of even these measures is usually reduced in providing information about them. At the same time, I fully appreciate how frustrating it is to members of this house as well as to the public generally, who are rightly concerned that individuals be treated fairly, to be faced with official silence on this vital subject. There will always be matters in this area which cannot be discussed fully in public if our defensive arrangements are to have any effect at all. I am sure all members of the house will agree with the principle of that statement. On the other hand, the effectiveness of these arrangements does not depend solely upon the measures or the individuals involved with them. They depend too upon the understanding and co-operation of all Canadians on whose behalf, in the last analysis, these measures have been instituted.

In many ways the secrecy which tends to surround defensive security measures has clouded the homely fact that these measures are essentially a part of good personnel administration. As the Prime Minister pointed out a moment ago, the purpose of our security program is preventive, not punitive. In deciding whether it can have sufficient confidence in an employee to trust him with its secrets, the government is not deciding whether or not he is guilty of anything nor is it dealing with a person's rights as a human being. No one has a right, and I emphasize that, to have access to secret information any more than he has a right to be someone's trusted private secretary. The employer has a right, indeed in most cases a duty, to entrust his secrets and give his confidence only to a person whom he can trust. In withholding that trust he does not infringe the rights of such a person nor accuse him of a crime. Some inference of untrustworthiness in such a case may be implied or conveyed privately. In some cases, as a very last resort, it may have to become public. In all cases, however, the essential question is simply whether an employee can be relied upon in a position of confidence.

Each department and agency of the government is responsible for the safekeeping of the secret information it holds and must administer, and is therefore required by direction of the government to establish beyond reasonable doubt the loyalty and reliability of its employees who have or may readily obtain access to such secret information.

In the first instance, such employees are asked to provide certain basic information about themselves and about close relatives who may influence them or cause them to be influenced in a manner which would bear on their loyalty or reliability. They are also asked now to give the names of persons as character references. This basic information is provided through the completion by the employee or prospective employee of what is called a personal history form. I might add here that this form, which over the years has been subject to revision in the light of growing experience, has recently been reviewed and revised by the various officers in order to establish loyalty and reliability through future and further investigation. In addition, the employee is required to be fingerprinted in order to determine through a comparison with the central fingerprint records of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police whether he has any record of criminal activity of a nature which would bear on a judgment as to his reliability. If there is no such record, the fingerprints may be returned to the employee at his request.

Next, the completed personal history form is forwarded by the department or agency to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police with a request that it be checked against their records to determine whether there has been any indication of participation in communist or fascist organizations or association with persons suspected of espionage. In some cases a further request is made that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police conduct a detailed investigation of the background of the employee concerned. This necessarily involves conversations with former employers and others who can be expected to be able to assist in judging the trustworthiness of the individual in question.

In providing the results of these investigations to the requesting department or agency the Royal Canadian Mounted Police make no comment—I should like to bring this particularly to the attention of the house—give no opinion and come to no conclusions to be drawn from the information which they provide and give to the department or agency. They simply pass it on with any assessment they can give as to the reliability of the sources of the information. The conclusions as to the relevance of that information and the weight to be given it in light of all the circumstances are solely the responsibility of the employing department or agency and the minister in charge of it.

I should like to emphasize this as it appears to be an unfortunate misconception on the part of many Canadians, both in this house and elsewhere, that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police proffer or are asked for advice or opinions concerning the significance of the information they are asked to provide. In fact, quite the opposite is true, and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police have taken extreme care not to interfere in any way with the formulation of a decision, which is the heavy responsibility of the employing department or agency. Advice in arriving at decisions is available to departments through the interdepartmental security panel, and the Prime Minister has given some information on that panel.

I said a moment ago that the responsibility of arriving at a decision as to an employee's suitability to be given access to secrets was indeed a very heavy responsibility. This is so because the senior officers concerned, and eventually the minister responsible, must ensure that a proper balance is struck between the safety of vital information on one hand and the fair and just treatment of the individual concerned on the other. It is in the making of this decision and in its consequences that the difficulties and dangers lie.

A wrong or hasty or ill-informed conclusion may result in a serious loss of vital information. It may result in a Canadian government employee, his family or his friends, being subjected to intolerable pressures, even though none of them may be seriously at fault and the ruination of careers and reputations through the actions of unfriendly intelligence services. On the other hand, it may result in an able, loyal and trustworthy Canadian being denied an opportunity to serve his country in a position or calling of his own choice. These are some of the possible consequences of an unwise or incorrect decision. It is because the consequences can be so serious that the government has decided to introduce changes such as the Prime Minister referred to earlier. These are changes designed to make more certain that the individual has every opportunity consistent with security itself to give his side of the case. This he did not have an opportunity to do before. Now, he will have this opportunity, not once but twice. He will be assured in future of a chance to present all considerations to the permanent head of his department or agency personally. After that, to be sure that no point has been missed and no misinterpretation given, a board of review drawn from the security panel will re-examine the case. In the last analysis, however, the decision whether to recommend dismissal will be that of the responsible minister.

The new and carefully devised procedures will improve our measures and give a new assurance to individual employees. They will not, however, mean that dismissals will not be necessary in some cases in the future as in the past. When they are necessary, however, every attempt will be made to treat problems of unsuitability on grounds of security or reliability in the same way as other problems of personnel management are treated. Departments will do their best to hold in strict confidence the information they get concerning individuals, and to take any action necessary in a way that does the least possible damage to reputations and self-respect.

I said a moment ago that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police had been charged with the responsibility of keeping the government informed about subversive activity in Canada. As is well known, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police also carry out, on behalf of the departments and agencies of government, the majority of the background investigations I have referred to of present or prospective government employees who are being considered for appointment to sensitive positions. In performing both of these tasks, the police have been subjected at times to public criticism. Some of this criticism has sprung from the university communities in Canada, who have expressed concern over a variety of matters pertaining to security, particularly that our security measures should in no way interfere with the freedom of thought and discussion which is essential to the very purpose of any institution of learning. The government wholeheartedly agrees with this view. In the late summer, the Prime Minister and I had occasion to discuss some of these matters with officials of the Canadian association of university teachers. Those discussions, I believe, contributed to a clearer understanding of the issues involved, and I trust that the statements the Prime Minister and I have made will further add to a better understanding on the part of all interested organizations and individuals of the nature of our security measures and of the reasons for them.

In closing, sir, may I re-emphasize one point? In carrying out their investigative and fact-finding functions in this difficult field, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police do not act upon their own initiative but rather upon instructions from the government of Canada. As a police force in a democratic country, and indeed one of the finest forces in the world, they are at all times accountable, both by law and by tradition, to the government of Canada and through it to this parliament and the people of Canada. They will undoubtedly be criticized in the future, as they have been in the past, for carrying out policies and instructions that the government of the day lays down, within the laws of Canada, as being necessary in the public interest. Mistakes may be made in the future as they have been made in the past. I am certain, however, that so long as these matters are open to public scrutiny and free discussion, we need have no undue concern that essential security measures can deviate far or for long from the principles that are essential to a free and democratic nation. I am equally certain that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in this, as in other tasks that fall upon them, will do no more than carry out honourably and conscientiously the responsibilities that the government and people of Canada place in their trust.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, the matter under discussion is one of the most difficult problems that faces a government today. It is understandable why the Prime Minister should have made a statement this evening as to the policy of the government, for the responsibility of national security rests primarily on the Prime Minister. In discharging that responsibility, he has the benefit of the assistance of the Minister of Justice and the other agencies connected with that department. I found it somewhat difficult to understand the necessity for the detail into which the Minister of Justice went. Certainly, that detail did not add very much, except in volume of words, to the statement that was made by the Prime Minister.

In the latter part of his remarks he dealt with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, which force comes particularly and peculiarly under his direction and control. May I say at once that I have known this force from its earliest days. I knew them on the prairies when they were the North-West Mounted Police. I knew them, as counsel, when they were the Royal Mounted Police. I have known them, of course, in the last years since 1920 when they took unto themselves their present name. It is a force great in its heritage, great in its achievements and great in the contributions that it has made to law and order in Canada. I am one who has a peculiar knowledge in that regard, for over the years I acted in the courts from day to day and had on the witness stand, generally on the other side except when I was prosecuting, members of that force. In the hundreds of cases in which I participated, only in one did I find on the part of any member of that force a departure from the elemental justice which has been characteristic of the force.

These criticisms to which the Minister of Justice has made reference are easily made. The force becomes the object of the attack of the individual against the system which they administer. This has its effect. I hope at all times we, and Canadians as a whole, will have that sense of responsibility and not aim our attacks at the force unless there has been, on their part, an injustice perpetrated by them. In that case the other members of the force are generally the first and most immediate judges.

One of the members of the present house, the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Bigg), was for a long time a distinguished member of that force, and his father before him. We have had other members of the force in this house. One was General Pearkes, and each and every one of them have served here as they did in the force, to the honour of their country.

I feel, and I am going to be perfectly frank about it, that having the R.C.M.P. act as traffic officers and the like, in carrying out their duties in urban municipalities, has not been in keeping with the tradition of that force, and has had effects that have not been entirely beneficial to the greatness of it. Having said that, I now want to say a word on the subject of national security.

I began by referring to the responsibilities that rest on the Prime Minister's shoulders. From time to time these matters are brought before the people. He carries in his head information in respect to the subject of security that he is almost frightened at times of revealing. The Prime Minister has spoken of the difficulties.

How are you going to maintain security while at the same time preserving and maintaining the fundamental rights of the individual? It is a difficult problem. It is so easy to criticize, but it is so much more difficult, having that responsibility, being desirous of maintaining those freedoms, to be able to carry out one's wishes. Loyalty is expected of all Canadians. It is imperative as a quality of public service.

The maintenance of security is of prime importance to the survival of the state. How often do cases come before a prime minister and he cannot go into the details in the House of Commons. You have the evidence. Often it is secondary evidence; sometimes it is hearsay. The accumulation of hearsay placed before one has an effect, no matter how one endeavours to adopt a judicial attitude.

There are many cases in which the loyalty of the individual is not in question. But that individual may still not be reliable as a security risk, as was stated a moment ago, because of defects in character which subject him to the danger of blackmail. It is in blackmail mainly, not in the greed of the individual as such, that espionage among non-professionals takes place. That was so in the Vassal case in the United Kingdom. It is a fertile field for recruiting by the U.S.S.R., where public servants are known to be the companions of homosexuals. Those are the people who are generally chosen by the U.S.S.R. in recruiting spies who are otherwise loyal people within their countries.

The fear of exposure, the danger that all of us feel that something in our past might be revealed, have a tremendous effect on the mind of the potential spy or the prospective dispenser of security information to the U.S.S.R. The human element is involved. Someone is brought before you who is suspected. He tells his story. If the story is an admission it is generally accompanied by the statement of the individual in question that he meant no wrong, but was acting in self-defence for the preservation of his reputation. Within our own country, in the time when I was prime minister, I do not recall any case in which the activating reason for participation by the individual was monetary gain. The promise of monetary gain from the U.S.S.R to prospective spies is small indeed. The rewards are small and the dangers are great.

What can be done? The Prime Minister has reviewed this at length and in a dispassionate manner. When the Minister of Justice says this just began with this administration, he forgets we worked on it for several years. We endeavoured to bring about a system which primarily would preserve to the highest degree possible the safety and security of the state while maintaining the rights of the individual.

My life has been in that field, in the preservation of the individual's freedom. Mention was made of universities. You come to a point when, if you challenge my right to think as I will, you destroy democracy. Freedom is never the right to do wrong: Freedom is the right to be wrong. In other words, no matter whether I am a minority of one within the state, so long as I keep within the law and do not endeavour to undermine the state by overt acts, I have the right to advocate that thinking. That is one of the reasons that when people spoke about outlawry of communism I stated it could not be outlawed. It could be inlawed; but you cannot outlaw a philosophy unless overt acts foul the thought of the individual. If you start outlawing the right to think, no matter how strongly you feel about that, you place everyone who is associated with the communists in the position where they must prove to the court that they are not communists. When I came into the House of Commons we had as a member here one who was afterwards convicted of espionage, a communist. If we had had a law outlawing communists, everyone in this House of Commons at that time would have had to prove that, having been associated with this man, they had not suffered from communism osmosis in consequence. That is the danger of these short cuts.

It would be easy to be critical of the plan that is offered this evening. I believe, on the basis of my experience, that the measures proposed by the Prime Minister go a long way to bringing into alignment the security of the state without endangering the freedom of the individual. I feel, and I have felt, that this matter might have been studied by a committee of the house. I realize the danger in that connection, because no matter how a thing is designated in the various orders of top secret, secret, confidential or restricted, the difference between top secret and restricted is too often simply a question of whether a matter appears in the press today or three weeks from now. It is a strange thing how matters that are designated as top secret very soon find their way into the public press.

I feel, too, that in the measures announced the individual will have an opportunity of making known his defence. The step is taken officially that previously was followed unofficially. The individual has had that right, not in consequence of a declaration made in the House of Commons but as a result of its being a rule of practice, without which freedom might very well be denied to an individual. The review of the evidence by a separate body, with the individual having the right to give his side of the case, should go a long way to avoiding and preventing injustice. The setting up of a board of review taken from the membership of the security panel—as I understand the Prime Minister's statement—is a step forward; but I do not think it goes as far as it should. Here you have the security panel, the representatives of the various departments of government. They are the ones who actually examined the case as against the individual. They are then going to sit on appeal, as it were, on the same case that they judged or that certain ones of them judged. I have never been particularly successful in the court en banc when the same judge who sat on the trial sat on appeal in the court en banc. Even though there were two others present with him, his influence was fairly effective.

I do not know the degree to which the government has given consideration to this matter. I felt, when we were considering it, that in setting up a board of review to assure that the individual may not only have justice done to him but may feel that justice is done to him, the board of review should have presiding over it a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada or the President of the Exchequer Court of Canada. It will not take up much of their time. It is a contribution that I am sure either judge would be willing to make. There are not many cases; but when justice is the issue, the number is not of importance. The question is, is justice being done?

I think, agreeing as I do with the desirability of the action being taken along the line indicated by the Prime Minister, representing as it does the study that we made in the past few years, the accumulation of information on the subject, discussions with the minister of justice and by the minister of justice with the commissioner of the mounted police and other law enforcement officers, to add a judge would have a great effect, a major effect in assuring that this board of review, in the findings it would make, would have the benefit of the viewpoint of one who would be entirely detached from the membership of the board and would be able to give to that board experience and knowledge which would be beneficial.

Having said that, Mr. Chairman, may I conclude by saying what I began by saying, that I know the weight of the responsibility that is on the Prime Minister in matters like this—this matter above all. He cannot put it off on somebody else. He in his person has the custody of our survival and our security. In the views he has placed before the house he has been given the benefit of the study that was made by dedicated public servants whose purpose was to assure that justice shall be done. Fiat justitia ruat coelum—"Let justice be done though the heavens should fall".

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, may I say at once that we in this party welcome the statement that has been made by the Prime Minister. We believe it represents a step forward in dealing with an extremely important and very difficult subject. We believe that the statement constitutes a recognition of the very grave hardships done to individuals by the mistaken application of security procedures. I think that this recognition no doubt owes something to the liberal—and I use the word with a small "l"—tendencies of the Prime Minister and some of his colleagues. I should also like to say that it owes a good deal to the vigilance and effectiveness of the members of the house who, despite official discouragement from time to time have insisted on bringing this matter and individual cases to the attention of the house. I think, for example, of the Knott case where, if it had not been for the persistence of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands the case would have died on the files and a young man dismissed or discharged from the navy in the mistaken belief that his uncle was a communist, as though that had anything to do with the matter. While we welcome this statement we have serious reservations about the effectiveness of the methods and the tribunal which is proposed. Our basic criticism is that this tribunal remains an internal tribunal. It is not a judicial tribunal.

The Prime Minister has given reasons why the government decided not to have a quasi-judicial tribunal, and I acknowledge at once that the ordinary method of appeal and trial is not suitable to the determination of security cases where it is impossible to confront the person affected with all the information. But, Mr. Chairman, I know of a precedent which was adopted in wartime which I suggest could and should have been adopted here. During the war the minister of justice, acting under the powers conferred by the War Measures Act and the defence of Canada regulations, found it necessary to intern quite a large number of individuals, sometimes on mere suspicion. After public representation it was found possible to set up a tribunal, which was not a tribunal of civil servants or department heads or within the structure of government, but included, as I recall it, a member of the judiciary who was free, and bound to be free, from the necessity to consider the internal or departmental matters and who was able to apply a clear judicial judgment to the problems which came before him. Security, of course, prevented the disclosure by the minister of justice of that day of the details and sources of information against the internees, but the outline of the case was disclosed. The internee had the opportunity to give to this independent tribunal his side of the case, and as a result of that many persons were let out of the internment camps and a continuing injustice was remedied. If this can be done in wartime, Mr. Chairman, I ask why a similar quasi-judicial tribunal cannot be set up in peacetime, when the jobs and reputations of Canadians are secretively filched from them by the present procedures we adopt.

There are other reservations in our minds as to the announcement which has been made. For example, we are concerned whether the protection is extensive enough. Most members of this house are familiar with the large number of cases of refusal of citizenship, of refusal to allow otherwise qualified persons into the country, relatives of people who are here now; and the very same secretive type of proceedings are adopted whereby they are denied any knowledge of the nature of the case made against them.

As I read this statement it applies to government agencies, but this problem extends far beyond that. These procedures apparently do not apply to the services at all; yet the most notorious case in this field which has been brought to the attention of this parliament was the case of a man discharged from the navy. There are also other bodies and corporations working on security matters who are also given information, and people discharged in such cases lose their jobs and their reputations, and their future is endangered in precisely the same manner as those who are actually discharged from the government service.

While we welcome this statement, we think there are many other questions which should be asked, and I will just mention a few of them. What about the training of the people who do this particularly delicate and difficult security task? I do not know what the training is, but from the results which occur I suggest it is not good enough. I have nothing against the Royal Canadian Mounted Police as a force. I echo, though not with the same eloquence, the tribute paid by the Leader of the Opposition to that force. But in this sensitive field of security I do not believe that the police, including the R.C.M.P., are trained in that delicate political judgment which is necessary to prevent them from making mistakes, and we only know a very small and insignificant fraction of all the cases involved. We want to know on what sort of principles the security officers are to act.

I have read with great interest what the Prime Minister said about the fact that in certain cases relationship creates a security risk. Yet, Mr. Chairman, have the principles for applying this been worked out so that we do not get the situation as revealed by the Knott case and many other cases where a remote—indeed in that case a mistaken—relationship was used to debar a person from useful service? Every one of us in this house will probably know of someone who has an uncle or aunt who has attended a communist meeting or might be in the bad books of the R.C.M.P. Are their nephews and nieces to be debarred from public service? It is true the procedure we have here will assist in enabling those cases to be scrutinized, and as I have said I welcome what has been done. But I say to the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice that although this is a step forward, I think they would do better to avail themselves of tried judicial independent proceedings to solve their problems, as was done by their predecessors in wartime in the last great war.

I am not happy about this tribunal of internal civil servants, no matter how much we may happen to respect them. I give warning to the government that there are many other matters dealing with this field which require to be carefully investigated, and we feel it is our duty as an opposition to bring these cases forward and keep up a continuing vigilance. We are not going to be fobbed off by a tribunal, no matter how much we welcome this as a recognition of the problem. We are going to continue to urge that these matters be scrutinized in parliament and that independent procedures be preferred.

I have a number of observations I wish to make about the estimates generally, Mr. Chairman, but I take it at this stage it would be appropriate to deal only with the matters announced by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Knowles: No, go ahead.

Mr. Brewin: I am encouraged by some of my colleagues in my immediate neighbourhood to deal with other matters affecting the Department of Justice as well. I know that one point I have to make the minister will agree with, if he agrees with nothing else, and that is the Department of Justice over which he presides is a key department, and at the present stage of the Canadian history the leadership of the minister and his department is urgently needed. I hope the minister will demonstrate I am wrong when I say it does not seem to me that he and his department have shown the type of leadership required to do the important task committed to them.

I do not propose to discuss at length the skyrocketing price of sugar. I am aware that the small staff of the combines investigation branch does the best it can. I am also aware, as the minister indicated, that there are constitutional difficulties about controlling the price of commodities. But I must say that the impression given by the minister in answering questions on this subject seems to me to indicate the futility of the present machinery and the lack of decisive will to tackle profiteering in essential commodities.

We live in an age when the ramifications of government are many and growing. The struggle between liberty and authority which characterizes all human societies is unending and is particularly acute at the present time. In this battle, the grievances of citizens who find themselves badly treated by those in authority require, if they are to be remedied, new institutional methods as well as unceasing vigilance on the part of the Department of Justice. We have heard today about one field of these interests but there are many others which are important. One of the pieces of machinery which is being suggested from every side of this house is the creation of a parliamentary commissioner or ombudsman. This proposal has been before the house for some time. Indeed, it is the subject of a resolution sponsored by the hon. member for Port Arthur. I do not propose to discuss this subject at length, but I say to the Minister of Justice that such a commissioner has proved his value overseas in countries where the system has been tried—in Sweden, and, more recently, in Denmark and in New Zealand. The existence of a great bureaucracy is not, in my opinion, a sinister thing. It is inevitable. Most of its purposes are beneficial. But people get hurt by the activities of government. When men of substance get hurt they do not have too much of a problem; they can hire expensive lawyers to defend their interests. But when men of lesser means get hurt by this infinity of regulations and procedures they often find themselves without any effective remedy. What I suggest is needed is an official of parliament who has full power to investigate, to secure the production of documents, to arrange a settlement of grievances where possible and to report to the house. On May 22, the Minister of Justice, in answer to a question of mine, expressed interest but disclaimed responsibility. I should have thought the Minister of Justice had a special responsibility to advise parliament of steps which could be taken to strengthen the civil rights of Canadians and not leave it to the often futile procedure of private member's resolutions.

In my opinion there is a still more fundamental responsibility placed on the Minister of Justice, and that is to take the necessary action to protect human rights and freedom by bringing about the incorporation within the constitution of Canada of a bill of rights. This brings me to a question of the first importance facing Canada, a question whose solution demands the leadership of the Minister of Justice. Are we serious in saying, as we approach Canada's 100th birthday, that we intend to repatriate the Canadian constitution? Are we serious in saying we intend to take a new look at it and bring it up to date? Last Monday the minister is reported as having told the Liberal federation of Quebec—I am not certain that I have the name of the organization right—that it was necessary to re-think the whole form of confederation and adapt it to present conditions to ensure specific rights to Quebec and to French Canadians in general. I do not wish to underestimate the importance of giving clear and binding effect to the special rights of Quebec and of French Canada in confederation. But I say to the minister that in taking a new look at the constitution it is necessary for him to consider the rights of all Canadians. It is necessary to bring the new constitutional compact which I hope will be made in Canada and within this framework to recognize the basic rights and liberties of all Canadians so that they shall be immune from attack by provincial and municipal authorities as well as parliament and its agencies. We need a bill of rights composed not only of noble words but having the force of law, with teeth for its enforcement. We now have a declaratory bill of rights, a bill which has been cited over and over again in the courts with no effect. The former prime minister himself described this declaratory bill of rights as a first step. It is about time another step was taken.

What has been done about the re-thinking and adapting of our constitution? On June 19, as reported on page 1326 of Hansard, I asked a question about this subject. I asked what steps were being taken or contemplated with a view to having the constitution of Canada repatriated, or what consultations had been held for this purpose. The hon. member for Rosedale, answering in his capacity as parliamentary secretary, said: "None, by the present government." That was his answer. He said:

> No steps have yet been taken, and if and when it is decided to do so, the government will so indicate in due course.

The answer, in short, was a complete negative. Let me warn the minister that this re-thinking and adaptation of our constitution to the needs of the present day cannot be done by a few officials behind closed doors at a hastily summoned interprovincial conference. I have received a statement from Professor Ryan of the University of New Brunswick, president of the association of Canadian law teachers. I am not going to read that statement, though I should like to, but he urges the view of his association that the widest opportunity should be afforded for public representation and discussion before a formula for amendment is adopted by the conference which is proposed.

If the minister faces a much wider task than merely finding a formula for amendment; if, as he has indicated, what is involved is the re-thinking and adaptation of the whole form of confederation, these remarks apply even more clearly. I suggest there is no time to be lost in instituting the necessary process of public discussion and consideration which will involve not only government officials, but Canadians in every part of the country, members of opposition parties as well as of government parties, and people of all occupations.

I come, now, to another serious matter, which I have already discussed with the minister and which, in my view, gravely affects the administration of justice.

The high and unsullied reputation for integrity enjoyed by our judges is one of the foundations of our system of justice and, indeed, of any civilized system of justice. But now, in public statements in the press and in the legislature of Ontario, implications have been made affecting the integrity of a justice of the supreme court of Ontario.

It is necessary for me to go back in time to give the house the background of what I have to say. In 1958 an investigation was made into the manner in which northern Ontario natural gas issued stock at advantageous prices to public officials to promote its interest in Ontario. As the result of the investigation three ministers of the crown in Ontario resigned. At that time, Mr. MacDonald, a member of the legislature told the legislature in considerable detail that a block of 14,000 shares of stock had been issued to a company known as Continental Investments and used to secure approval by certain municipal officials in some northern Ontario town of the granting of franchises to northern Ontario natural gas.

This matter was inquired into by the Ontario securities commission and the then attorney general, Kelso Roberts, stated in the legislature that there had been no impropriety in relation to the issuing of the stock.

Last year, however, more information was discovered by the B.C. securities commission. Further investigation was made at Mr.

Roberts' request. In April of this year Mr. Roberts, the former attorney general, stated in the legislature that a politician in a municipality doing business with northern Ontario natural gas got the major part of the 14,000 shares at a nominal cost. Mr. MacDonald in answer to inquiry, named Mr. Justice Landreville as the official involved. Mr. Justice Landreville before his appointment as a supreme court justice in 1957, was the mayor of Sudbury. He was appointed shortly after the franchise was granted. The new report of the commission was made available to the present attorney general of Ontario, Mr. Cass and, presumably, to the government of the province in July. Mr. Cass caused proceedings to be instituted—

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. While it is true that the hon. member did give me some indication he was going to do exactly what he is doing now, I submit to you with deference, sir, that it cannot be done under the rules unless the hon. member is prepared to move for the impeachment of the judge he has in mind. I refer to citation 149 of Beauchesne, fourth edition, which reads as follows:

> Besides the prohibitions contained in standing order 35, it has been sanctioned by usage both in England and in Canada that a member, while speaking, must not:
>
> (j) cast reflections upon the conduct of judges of superior courts, unless such conduct is based upon a substantive motion.

Unless the hon. member is prepared to move a substantive motion I am afraid he is in contravention of this citation.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order, I want to make it clear, and it would have been made clear in a few sentences if I had been able to do so, that I am asking that this matter be investigated, not because I make any charge or accusation against the judge but because others have done so and I believe it to be in the interests of the administration of justice and in the interests of the judge concerned that this matter be cleared up. All I propose to ask is that the Minister of Justice do what I believe to be his duty in the circumstances, and that is to institute a full inquiry into this particular matter.

I am not making any accusations. As the matter will develop, it will be made perfectly clear that I believe the judge is entitled to every presumption of innocence. But I wish to point out that this matter has been raised and reported upon in publications, newspapers and national magazines and I say it is only fair to the justice involved and to the whole administration of justice that it be cleared up by the minister at the earliest opportunity.

[Mr. Brewin.]

I say that the citation from Beauchesne to which the Minister of Justice has referred does not deal with this particular matter. As I intended to say in a few minutes, I sincerely hope and believe that the judge will be able to clear up the imputations made against him, but I say that the minister responsible to the house for the administration of justice has a responsibility to inquire into this matter and that later, if anything is discovered that is derogatory of the judge at all, it will then be the minister's responsibility to make the necessary motion.

In case Your Honour should rule against me on this matter and abbreviate what I have to say to the house, I want to make it perfectly clear that I am only repeating accusations made in responsible publications and spread across the press of the country, and I am only doing so in order to urge the minister to give the judge, through a full and open public inquiry, the right to meet these innuendos and insinuations that have been made against him.

A further point has been called to my attention. I am not saying anything about the judge in his judicial capacity. The events in question took place some months before the appointment of the judge. What I am saying is that the statements made about him constitute a contempt of the administration of justice and that as Minister of Justice the minister has a responsibility to look into this matter. I am not accusing the judge of judicial misconduct. If by any chance the facts are as alleged and the minister finds that to be so on proper inquiry, the time to act will then come and the responsibility will be his.

But, Mr. Chairman, I am not making these accusations. I do not propose to make a substantive motion. This matter has had widespread publicity given to it already. I would have hesitated to mention it if I were the first to raise it, but in view of the publicity given to it I believe I am within the rules of the house in making the proposition to the minister that it is his duty as minister and in the interests of the judge himself to see that this matter is cleared up at the earliest possible opportunity.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I would not ordinarily rise at this point because normally I believe it is the practice to allow other members to speak before the minister replies. But because of what the hon. member has said I feel it is my duty to rise now and bring to the attention of the house, not so much the fact that the hon. member has repeated accusations made elsewhere, but the fact that by doing so he has impugned the reputation of a judge of the supreme court of this province. While he may say he has made no personal attack on him, the very fact that he has repeated these allegations is in my opinion tantamount to the same thing.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chevrier: I am not through. I have the floor.

Mr. Douglas: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I want to know how the minister got the floor. The hon. member for Greenwood had the floor. Is the minister speaking a second time on the point of order?

The Chairman: My understanding is that the minister raised a point of order and this is why I have allowed the minister to speak. He is not speaking a second time.

Mr. Douglas: He is certainly not discussing the point of order. He is now replying to the hon. member for Greenwood who had not finished his statement and I think the member should be allowed to finish his statement.

Mr. Chevrier: But the hon. member sat down and I rose after he sat down.

Mr. Douglas: No, he sat down because you interrupted him.

Mr. Chevrier: I did not interrupt him. The hon. member did not see what was happening. I saw the hon. member for Greenwood sit down.

Mr. Douglas: On a point of order; the hon. member for Greenwood sat down because he thought Your Honour was going to rule on the point of order.

The Chairman: Will the hon. member kindly resume his seat. My understanding of the matter, and it should not be too complicated, is that a point of order was raised and I understood that the hon. member for Greenwood was still speaking on the point of order. As far as the Chair is concerned, I was still looking up authorities and deliberating on the point of order. At this point the Minister of Justice stood and the hon. member for Greenwood sat, so I believe he yielded the floor on the point of order. If he did not, I suppose I should allow him to complete his point of order and then allow the Minister of Justice to speak on that point.

Mr. Brewin: I want to make it perfectly clear I am speaking only on the point of order. I think it would be advantageous for the house and advantageous for the individual concerned if I were permitted to complete my statement. I make it in all responsibility as a serious statement. In my submission I should be permitted to complete my statement and I respectfully submit it is not out or order. I am casting no aspersions. I do not fall within the citation which has been given and I hope that I will be permitted to proceed. I certainly have not concluded my remarks.

Mr. Chevrier: May I say that I rose on the point of order and cited Beauchesne as my ground for submitting that if the hon. member wanted to discuss the matter further he should move a substantive motion. This he said he was not prepared to do, and when I was interrupted by his leader I was going on to deal with the question of my responsibility. If the house and the hon. member do not want to hear me at this stage I am quite prepared to resume my seat, but I think the house should know, in answer to what the hon. member for Greenwood has said, whether or not there is under the circumstances a responsibility on the Minister of Justice in this case.

Mr. Douglas: No one denies that. The point I am making is that the hon. member for Greenwood had not had the opportunity to finish his statement. He sat down because he thought Your Honour wanted to rule on the point of order raised by the Minister of Justice. I assume that the reason you have not risen is that you do not agree there is a point of order and that the hon. member for Greenwood can be allowed to complete his statement, after which the minister can properly reply to him.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, perhaps you are in a position to make your ruling on the point of order now.

The Chairman: I am sorry, I could not hear the Prime Minister.

Mr. Pearson: I asked whether you were in a position to give your ruling on the point of order now.

The Chairman: Yes, I am. Perhaps I could make a ruling now on the point of order which was raised a moment ago. The feeling of the Chair is that the position which the hon. member for Greenwood seeks to adopt is out of order on two counts. First, I should like to refer him to standing order 59(2) which reads as follows:

> Speeches in committee of the whole house must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under discussion.

My submission is that the administration of the courts is not a matter directly under the jurisdiction of the Department of Justice. On this count, I do not think the subject matter which is now being raised by the hon. member for Greenwood can be discussed.

Then, I should like to refer the hon. member to citation 149 (j) of Beauchesne's fourth edition, to which the Minister of Justice referred earlier. It reads in part:

> —a member, while speaking, must not:
> (j) cast reflections upon the conduct of judges of superior courts, unless such conduct is based upon a substantive motion;

I should like to refer also to citation 152 (4), which reads:

> All references to judges and courts of justice and to personages of high official station, of the nature of personal attack and censure, have always been considered unparliamentary—

Now, I understand that the line of argument taken by the hon. member for Greenwood is this: I am not, myself, saying these things, but I am repeating what other people have said. In my submission, this is an attempt by the hon. member to do indirectly what he cannot, under our rules, do directly. I submit, therefore, that he cannot continue along this line and that his remarks on this subject are out of order.

Mr. Douglas: Is it your ruling, Mr. Chairman, that the subject is closed and the hon. member for Greenwood cannot discuss the matter further and, consequently, the Minister of Justice cannot reply?

The Chairman: I cannot anticipate what the hon. member for Greenwood may wish to discuss from now on, but I am ruling that what has been said up until now has been out of order.

Mr. Brewin: It may be that on some other occasion, Mr. Chairman, I will have an opportunity, within your ruling, to complete the remarks I intended to make. I intended to point out that I was doing this so that a judge would be able to clear his reputation because, in my view, the administration of justice demands that something be done about this matter.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, on the first point that you raised—

Mr. Chevrier: Order, the chairman has handed down a judgment.

Mr. Fisher: We have an opportunity to appeal it.

I should like a further elaboration of the first point you raised, Mr. Chairman, concerning the administration of justice not being the responsibility of the Minister of Justice. We passed a bill in this house raising the salaries of judges. I have a file of letters from judges on various matters, and I think many of us have been in communication with judges. We are quite aware of the fact it is the federal government that chooses judges, and pays them. The point I should like to make is, if this precedent is allowed to stand some remarks I intended to make about judges which had nothing to do with this judge, would be out of order. I do not know what the process is, but I would appeal to you, sir, to reconsider that part of your ruling.

Mr. Chevrier: May I—

[The Chairman.]

The Chairman: Perhaps I might say one word here. I should like to make my ruling as restricted as possible. I am not suggesting that no one can discuss anything relating in any way to judges. I feel that the ruling which has been made by the Chair at this point should be limited to the particular circumstances which were before the committee at that time.

Mr. Bell: I wonder if I might ask a question of the Prime Minister, without taking the place of the hon. member for Medicine Hat in the order of debate?

I just want to ask the Prime Minister, appreciating the seriousness of his statement as well as the drama that has been created around the corridors by members of the press, if he can give us his assurance that there has not been any recent episode or breach of security that brought about this statement?

Mr. Pearson: I can give that assurance without equivocation. We have been working on this revision of security procedure for some two or three months now, and as soon as the work was completed and the opportunity arose on these estimates, we brought it to the house. There is no particular circumstance which made that desirable at this particular time.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I had intended to say quite a lot about the matter of the security and intelligence division of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and the method they have in determining who ultimately becomes a security risk. The statement which has been made by the Prime Minister tonight concerning the three steps he has suggested will be taken in the future, to some extent will answer the matters I was going to raise. I am not sure we can accept these provisions as the ultimate answer to the problem that we have in these security risks. I agree, too, that I do not believe it is possible at this stage to comment upon all the ramifications of these steps, or the success that they might be. For the present, Mr. Chairman, I am willing to give this a trial and see what happens.

I know that in my own constituency, and I am sure in the constituency of nearly every member in this house, there are Canadian citizens and other people who have been refused citizenship who honestly believe that wrong evidence has been presented to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in classifying them as security risks. I hope these steps the Prime Minister has outlined will, in fact, provide an opportunity to these people to present their case to someone. Perhaps, as the Prime Minister has said, they could even be faced with some of the information that has condemned them.

I turn now to another extremely important matter that is facing Canada today. First, we can all agree that the first duty of the Minister of Justice is to enforce the law and protect the lives of our citizens and give them some measure of freedom from fear. I do not think anyone in this house would be in disagreement on that matter. As a matter of fact, earlier tonight the Prime Minister said we should not allow the undermining of our basic principles. He even said that citizens give the state the direction in enforcing and upholding law. I am not suggesting that these are direct quotations, but I think it is a paraphrasing of some of the things the Prime Minister said tonight. He was referring to things of a political or ideological nature which were unfriendly to Canada in which a person may have been involved.

However, I believe it is equally as bad, and it may even be worse, to allow any organization in Canada, be it a labour union or otherwise to rule by force or intimidation. To suggest, as the Prime Minister has said, that the citizens give the state directions in enforcing and upholding the law, to suggest that the citizens of Canada are prepared to tolerate the intimidation that has gone on in the seamen's union during these past four years, I think is absurd. These weaknesses of law enforcement are today putting Canada and democracy on severe trial to maintain the confidence of our citizens in the maintenance of law and order.

At the outset I want to say that this matter of enforcing the law is not confined to enforcing it on labour unions. Some of the things that have gone on and are documented in the Norris report are matters of encroachment on human rights and liberties. Citizens, whether they be members of a labour union or not, are entitled to protection under the law from such encroachment, and I might mention that this question of enforcement of the law with respect to labour unions is giving some labour unions and their members a black eye which they do not deserve.

There may be what Justice Norris has described as jurisdictional jealousies troubling the Minister of Justice in getting down to the question of enforcing the law. Mr. Justice Norris has this to say at page 312 of his report:

> Local police forces are not equipped to deal with mass action by irresponsible persons. All police forces, federal, provincial and municipal should extend their efforts to the utmost in co-operation with each other—avoiding jurisdictional jealousies—to the end that there shall be certainty in the enforcement of the law and that respect for the law will be maintained. It should not be difficult by co-operation between all police forces to reach a common understanding as to action in connection with labour disputes. It might be that police officers should have some special training on labour matters.

If the Minister of Justice has run into this problem, then I think it is his responsibility to look into the matter and come before parliament to introduce what might be called emergency legislation, giving him the power to deal with this mess. Most of us are agreed that it is this intimidation, particularly in the S.I.U., that allowed the situation to develop to the point it reached.

Even today the Minister of Justice suggested, with respect to some men who were beaten up on the train last Monday night, that one of the men involved refused to testify. We must ask ourselves why, and I am sure we are all agreed the reason is that he is scared. He has no confidence that the law will protect him and is afraid to testify, even though he had a severe beating.

Questions were asked repeatedly of the Minister of Justice, as far back as early July, about what he was going to do concerning Justice Norris' recommendations on prosecutions. They are to be found at pages 2234, 2302 and 2303 of Hansard. I shall not enumerate all the pages, but on almost every occasion the minister replied that the matter was under investigation and he could say no more at this time. I believe our common law states that if justice is to be done it demands justice without delay, and in this respect the previous ministers of justice are equally guilty, because many of these acts of violence took place when they were in office.

I hope that soon—indeed the day is long past—the minister will find some way to enforce the law and restore confidence in the people that the law will be maintained. If he cannot find anything in the present statutes to enable him to do this, then he should come before parliament and ask for additional power. The action taken respecting this whole mess for the last three or four months can be described as a despicable display of dereliction of duty.

The minister's first responsibility is to enforce the law, and I suggest he has not been doing it. He has not taken all the steps he could have to remove fear and intimidation from the men who have been involved in these things.

Schedule 31, which was published along with the Norris report, quotes 75 cases of what are called, "examples of intimidation and violence." To my knowledge there has not been a single conviction in any of them. For example you find—and I am not going to read this all into the record because hon. members have it in their possession—that on October 24, 1958, a man was beaten up and under the section headed, "Action taken if any," it states "no mention" of any action taken by the law enforcement officers.

On November 6, 1959, another man was beaten up and again under the section headed "Action taken if any" it says, "Wife called police. No mention of police action." Mr. Justice Norris has said that the evidence did not clearly indicate that the officers of the S.I.U. were responsible, but one thing the victims all had in common is that they were opposed to the S.I.U.

I appeal to the minister tonight to get on with the job of enforcing the law of the land so that our citizens can be freed from the kind of intimidation which has been so pronounced over the last months and years.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) announced early this evening that there would now be a board of appeal for persons who have or may have access to secret documents to enable them to justify themselves, should circumstances require them to do so, and to allow the government to make sure that its employees, in departments where secret documents do exist, are reliable. In my opinion, the setting up of that board of appeal is a most commendable thing.

Be that as it may, I feel that, this evening, we have more important things to discuss concerning the estimates put forth by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier).

At noon, on the orders of the day, some questions were asked but, unfortunately, the few answers given were vague, even evasive. The matter is either being examined or else there is nothing to reply.

A while ago, the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) spoke about seamen who were being threatened by some labour leaders.

It is now my turn and I would like to talk about a very serious problem, that of an international trust that managed to make the price of sugar rise even though there is no shortage—

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I should not want to stop the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) from making his remarks on the estimates of the Department of Justice but I feel that he should speak on the statement made by the Prime Minister.

The hon. member is dealing with item number one of the department's estimates, which is contrary to the rules since members of the official opposition have the privilege of being first to express their criticism. It is only out of courtesy that we did not interrupt the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) a few minutes ago.

Since members of the official opposition have precedence, I feel the hon. member for

[Mr. Olson.]

Lapointe should postpone until later on his remarks on the estimates of the Department of Justice.

The Chairman: I think that the hon. member for Lapointe may proceed with his remarks along those lines. Since we are considering the first item of the estimates of the justice department, he is entitled to keep on discussing the point he raised and which is actually related to the estimates of that department.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, I refer again to the point of order, because I understand that the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) had already intimated that he wanted to speak on the estimates of the Department of Justice. You reversed the order of priority earlier and by courtesy we did not object when the hon. member for Greenwood took the floor, but he was supposed to confine himself to the criticism of the estimates of the justice department, instead of commenting some other point or the statement of the Prime Minister and of his colleague, the Minister of Justice. We did not deem it necessary then to create a precedent to the effect that the official opposition should yield to another party of the opposition which has priority over the party represented by the hon. member for Lapointe. I therefore suggest that the member for Bow River be recognized.

The Chairman: I did not make any agreement with a party to the effect that the comments of each member would be strictly limited to the point raised by the Prime Minister. I therefore suggest, once again, that the hon. member for Lapointe is in order and he may go on.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I was talking about a problem which has again been raised lately, that is, the increase in the price of sugar.

Obviously, one may ask what this has to do with the estimates of the Department of Justice. However, I believe that it can easily be related to the problem in question because, in my opinion, the whole matter of the increase in the price of sugar rests on the fact that the Department of Justice tolerates at this moment a combine of a number of companies which fix the prices in spite of normal trade practices.

There lies on the part of certain concerns an infringement due to the fact that there is no competition, as it were, in the sugar trade, and that Canada, like many other countries in the world, when it comes to certain commodities, sticks to regular suppliers and remains a faithful member of the London Sugar Exchange without even calling for tenders on the world markets.

There are in the world various places for the marketing of sugar. But Canada is caught in the toils of the sugar trust which is connected with the London exchange.

Mr. Chairman, there is in those continuous increases a case which really goes against Canadian anti-trust legislation. When it has been established that sugar is not scarce at the present time, it is realized that despite that fact some companies, by a common scheme, succeed in increasing the price of a certain product, like sugar, as in this case.

In the month of May, when such a thing happened, the Minister of Justice announced that he would investigate the problem. Immediately the companies, by common agreement, decreased the price of sugar.

The result of the investigation announced in May by the Minister of Justice was never made known to us. There was no announcement or press release, reporting that the Department of Justice, following its investigation, had discovered such or such a thing. The companies took advantage of the situation recently to increase once again the price of sugar, so that it reached an all-time record, the highest since 1943.

What is going on at the present time and why is the Minister of Justice tolerating so long that companies speculate that way, at the expense of the Canadian people and to the prejudice of Canadian trade?

I do not understand how the Department of Justice has put up for such a long time with the monopolizing of a group of companies who try to keep the prices at a high level at the expense of the Canadians, while there are federal acts to deal with such companies which, by means of a trust, thus manipulate prices.

I wonder why the Minister of Justice does not act more quickly in the case under consideration.

We hear about investigations, but those investigations have been going on for many months, in fact since May, and we have yet to hear some of the results. Are things dragging on or are the minister's hands tied in any way by the companies that impose their will on the government? That has happened before. Are we witnessing today the repetition of one of those acts? How is it that the minister does not proceed more expeditiously in his investigation? He does not give an answer to the house, he does not say what is going on while the sugar companies are playing their little game.

That is all the more serious because at the present time those sugar companies are practically all foreign companies that come here to exploit the Canadian people in that field.

In fact, Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Justice should investigate that matter or at least he should submit the report of his investigation as soon as possible and see to it that those problems be dealt with, to the benefit of the Canadian citizens.

I have now, Mr. Chairman, another matter that I should like to explain, for a few minutes, to the members of the house. I am referring to the parole board.

Several weeks if not several months ago, the Minister of Justice announced—in fact he promised that there would be an investigation in regard to the parole granted some individuals—incidentally, there have been two or three—who, on account of their behaviour, have proven that parole was not justified in their case.

In my riding, several families—and at least one officially—have been the victims of the parole system. The Minister of Justice certainly knows of whom I am speaking: it is the man Dionne, from Quebec. We have not yet seen the report on the inquiry the Minister of Justice was to make in this matter.

I now want to point out to the government another problem which, I think, is a most important matter at this time. It is the question of loans and interest rates.

The federal statutes contain no legislation to control loans and rates of interest. In our counties, we see a proliferation of finance companies or individuals who lend money at excessive interest rates, so that it could almost be called legalized theft.

I, myself, have found many cases where farmers in my county had been granted loans at rates of 40 and even 45 per cent. Lately, in Ontario, the provincial government appointed a committee to inquire on the activities of some finance companies. That inquiry has shown that some individuals or loan sharks were lending money at such abusive interest rates that it was nothing less than a theft.

At this time, there is no federal law in our statute books to control the interest rates charged by moneylenders.

Mr. Chairman, I humbly submit to this government that if there is a case of urgency, it is surely to provide some legislation in this field, in order to establish some rules regarding loans, whether they be mortgage loans, small loans by finance companies, or loans in excess of $1,500. That legislation would set down rather strict rules to put a stop to the unfair practices now going on in Canada in that field.

A while ago, I heard the hon. member for Greenwood deal with another problem, the revision of our constitution. The Minister of Justice announced last week end that a federal-provincial conference would be held to re-examine the constitution in order to bring it up to date.

I do not want to spend too much time on that problem. Those who will have to deal with it will take it upon themselves to re-examine our constitution and look at it from every angle. However, I should like to remind the Minister of Justice that, before that federal-provincial conference for the revision of our constitution is organized, there must be at least some guiding principles to inspire Canada's new constitution.

I have been given the opportunity to realize that such an idea could be the main inspiration for a new constitution. I have been aware of that since I have become a member of this house, from the time I learned about several bills put forward to deal with various problems and since I have had the opportunity to talk with members from other provinces, from this other great nation which is part of our country.

I must agree that too many French Canadians are unfortunately not familiar with the workings of the English mind. In fact, that was somewhat my case before I came here. My opinion has changed on certain points since then. However, I have become more and more attracted by an idea which could truly become the fundamental principle of a new constitution, that is that, in the future, it will be useless to consider Canada as the federation of ten provinces.

When some piece of legislation is enacted in spite of the opposition of one province, then the latter must bear the consequences.

On the other hand, if a statute is favourable to one province only, then it is the nine other provinces which suffer from its adoption.

It is my feeling that in reviewing our constitution, we will have to take into account the two nations which live side by side in this vast country of ours which goes from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Mr. Chairman, during a sitting of the miscellaneous bills committee, I got the confirmation of the allegations I am making now.

At the time, the committee was examining the bill to incorporate a national association of pharmacists. Under its new federal charter, the association would have acquired certain rights and privileges. Nine provinces were in favour of the bill to incorporate the association whose board of directors would issue licenses to qualified pharmacists. However, one province was against this legislation.

And then, if a province should decide to block passage of a bill that nine other provinces are requesting, these nine provinces will have to suffer the consequences, while if we lived in a confederation made up of two nations, enjoying more freedom, more rights and more privileges within the said confederation, we would not witness the clashes which are seen nowadays.

In fact, we see, for instance, that in the field of education, nine provinces welcome the centralizing of education services and that, maybe, with a view to set up better communications between them and—

The Chairman: Order. I regret to have to interrupt the hon. member, but I must say I find it quite difficult to see any relevancy between his remarks and the estimates now before the house.

Besides, I would draw the attention of the hon. member on the fact that paragraph 2 of standing order 59 reads as follows:

> Speeches in committee of the whole house must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

Now, I do not think the hon. member's remarks and the arguments he is trying to bring forward have any relevancy to the estimates now before the committee.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I was under the impression that when the first item of the estimates of the Department of Justice was called we were entitled to make our views known to the house at any time.

Moreover, as the task of preserving and rethinking the constitution, when this is required, comes under the jurisdiction of the justice department, I thought I was in order in dealing precisely with a subject which concerns particularly the Department of Justice: that is, the Canadian constitution.

However, if you are of the opinion that the ideas I submit are out of order, I shall abide by your decision.

The Chairman: I want in no way to limit the remarks of the hon. member, but I think very sincerely that the remarks he is presently making, and the arguments he has been offering to the committee in the last few minutes, do not relate closely enough or directly enough to the estimates.

Mr. Gregoire: Very well, Mr. Chairman, I shall try to find another appropriate moment to submit certain ideas concerning the revision or the rethinking of our constitution, as the Minister of Justice has expressed the wish, for some time. In fact, I want to congratulate him for his serious work in that field; that work was necessary and I am of the opinion that the revision should not be delayed too long.

Mr. Chairman, there is a last problem which I wish to raise in connection with the consideration of the estimates of the Department of Justice. It is that of bilingualism within the said department. We shall have an opportunity to ask questions on this subject, later on, for we think that bilingualism is a must in such an important department as that of justice, for if an individual has rights and privileges to claim, he must often claim them before the courts, and, then, if he wants adequate means to defend himself, he may resort to the services of bilingual civil servants of that department.

We also wish to make recommendations to the minister regarding civil servants, not only concerning quantity, but also with regard to quality. It would be advisable that senior posts be equally distributed between representatives of the two great races which make up Canada.

As for the purchasing division of that department, it should consider that there are French Canadian companies in addition to English Canadian companies and allow both to get their share of orders, in order to promote the economic development of both groups.

I know that the Minister of Justice has been the member for an Ontario riding which is so well represented by the present chairman of the committees of the whole (Mr. Lamoureux). I am also aware that he now represents a riding in the province of Quebec. This might have brought him in contact, better than any of us, with the two great nations in this country. In fact, I am of the opinion that he is in a better position than any other member—I have no ulterior motive in saying this—to understand the problems of the two great races, on account of his past experience. That is why we are going to be more demanding as far as he and his department are concerned. In so doing, the officials of the other departments will understand exactly what we mean by bilingualism —that it is not simply a matter of duties, but rather a way of thinking on the basis of the two great races which make up our country.

[Text]

Mr. Woolliams: I think we were all interested to hear the Prime Minister outline new methods of preserving security in our country. I should like to congratulate him on setting these changes out so clearly. I was glad to hear that a board had been set up before which those concerned may be heard. I hope the suggestion made by the Leader of the Opposition that someone accustomed to sitting in a judicial capacity should be a member of such a board, because unless its members include some independent person I am sure those who come before the board will not feel that justice is being done. I trust that this recommendation made by the leader of my party will receive serious consideration.

I should like to join, also, with what my right hon. friend had to say with reference to the R.C.M.P. I have had a good deal of experience of the R.C.M.P. and I have expressed my views about this distinguished body on earlier occasions. I have always found that these men, when they administer the law, stay within the ethics which we expect of the R.C.M.P. in this country. They are respected not only in Canada, but by those who come from other lands to visit Canada, by those who know them almost as well as Canadians know them.

I was interested to hear the hon. member for Medicine Hat speak about the enforcement of law in this country. The administration of justice, after all, falls within the sphere of the Department of Justice. I had something to say about the administration of justice and the enforcement of the law this week when we debated an amendment to a supply motion. I think it might be well to read what the new prime minister of Great Britain had to say with reference to law enforcement as he sees it. This is what he had to say in one of his earliest addresses as prime minister:

> Some people are suspicious of law and order, as though the rule of law was a mere trick to freeze the status quo. It is quite the opposite. Its observance is the sine qua non of peaceful change. The rule of law is a lesson learned from centuries of human experience, from many mistakes and much suffering. It amounts simply to this: that only by submitting ourselves to obey the law can we reconcile conflicting ambitions and serve the interest of mankind as a whole. Without the rule of law we destroy one another.

I think an admission was made in this house that certain groups or associations of groups were breaking the law. I still think it is the duty of the government to enforce the law, especially when there is an admission that the law is being flouted each day. Now this situation has changed in a practical way. The men concerned have gone back to work on their ships. Possibly the practical benefits will be some compensation in a small degree for the law not having been enforced. I do not wish to say any more on this subject, but I do feel the government has been most remiss and irresponsible in failing to enforce the law as it applies in this case.

I wish to go on to deal with the penitentiaries system of this country. Some time ago it was planned that there should be built in the city of Drumheller a penitentiary, an institution for young offenders, which would cost approximately $4 million. There is a growing need for such an institution in this country. I should like to go into this subject in some detail. I have here an article entitled "Children To Penitentiary". The heading goes on: "We must overhaul our treatment of juvenile delinquents, says the man who heads our first coast-to-coast study of this pressing problem." This refers to a statement made by the commissioner of penitentiaries A. J. MacLeod, who was a member of a commission which investigated conditions among young prisoners in penitentiaries in this country. I should like to congratulate Mr. MacLeod for bringing these matters to light and I hope we shall quickly get some real reforms in this field through the Minister of Justice. It is true that the hon. gentleman, like the former ministers of justice, Mr. Fulton and Mr. Fleming, inherited a great many of these problems. Changes are not made overnight. But it is only when we raise our voices in the House of Commons that these reforms come about. I think one of the most shocking things revealed by this investigation is that there are young children of 12 and 13 years of age in our penitentiaries serving terms alongside hardened criminals. I wish to read from the February 23 issue of Weekend Magazine. Remember it was the hon. Davie Fulton who set up this investigation so that the facts could be brought before the Canadian people. This is what the article says:

> It was difficult for me to find anything wrong with this cheery classroom in St. Vincent de Paul, near Montreal. It was brightly lit, well ventilated, had a good collection of books and educational aids for both public and high school courses and was presided over by a man anybody would have been proud to have had as a teacher.
>
> The only thing wrong was that the children in this classroom, some of them no more than 14, were penitentiary inmates.
>
> The federal training centre, an institution for offenders below the age of 25 which forms part of St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary, often gets 14 and 15 year olds as inmates.

Later, it is disclosed that children of the ages of 12 and 13 are serving terms of more than two years in the penitentiaries of this country. One of these children was so small in physical size that he was able to squeeze through the bars, the article says. It seems to me it is a disgrace in a country such as ours that we should have a situation of this kind in our penitentiaries. The article goes on to say:

> Most have been convicted of theft, breaking and entering and automobile stealing. All have been sentenced to two years or more.
>
> You see children in prison uniforms carrying history and geography books and arithmetic tables and you know they may be finishing their homework in their cells.
>
> Not so long ago, a 12 year old boy found himself in St. Vincent's federal training centre.
>
> And everybody in the prison for women in Kingston remembers the tiny 14 year old girl who went behind the walls to serve a two year term—for stealing a bicycle.
>
> In Dorchester penitentiary in New Brunswick one of the boys was so small guards were afraid he might squeeze out between the bars.

If John Howard were to investigate some of the penitentiaries of this country he would be more shocked by the conditions there than by those he found in Britain during his time. I may say I am happy to see the hon. member for Vancouver East in his place. He is one of the persons in this house who has pressed for prison and penitentiary reform over the years. He was doing so long before I came to this house. I am sure that some of that pressure rubbed off on Davie Fulton, the former minister of justice, as a result of which certain reforms and investigations took place. The article from which I have been reading goes on to say:

> We are putting more children in penitentiary today than we were 10 years ago. Last year, we put away almost three times as many as we did in 1952.

This is a statement which was made by the commissioner of penitentiaries. This is not something we did 50 years ago; it is something we are doing today. Many people may ask: how did it come about? Well, under our criminal code children over the age of seven can be confined in penal institutions. That is shocking. The Minister of Justice should take a look at that, and there should be an amendment made immediately. Any child of the tender age of 7 to 12 years surely should not be confined in a penitentiary with hardened criminals. I could name one or two that are now released but I will not do so. It was alarm over figures like these showing a general penitentiary population increase that resulted in a five member justice department team going out across the country last year to examine the whole field of delinquency in Canada. The committee on juvenile delinquency was established by a former minister of justice, Davie Fulton, and made its report to former justice minister Donald Fleming.

I am quite sure the Minister of Justice has read the report. I hope he does something about it immediately. This is an urgent matter. It is something that should not be left for a year from now or two years from now. These children are still in the penitentiaries of this country. These children are like our own children, except that they ran afoul of the law, which could possibly happen to our own children. Because they ran afoul of the law and because the Criminal Code says that any child seven years of age or over may be placed in the penitentiary they have been coldbloodedly placed in the penitentiaries of this country with hardened inmates.

Imagine how you would feel, members of the House of Commons, if a son of yours eight or nine years old was in a penitentiary, if his only classroom was in a penitentiary, if the only place where he could study and do his homework if it is called homework in a penitentiary, was a cell.

The reason I am pressing this matter is twofold. We should do something for the youth of this country who have been categorized as juvenile delinquents. In the second place, the previous government promised to build a penitentiary at Drumheller worth approximately $4 million which was to be for young offenders. It was not to be the kind of institution surrounded by walls or fences but the kind that might rehabilitate some of these young boys and girls who have run afoul of the law. This is what the former government promised to do. There has been some suggestion that the previous government said it would not be built until 1964. I am not going to get into an argument with the Minister of Justice because I do not think I have ever had an argument with him and I do not think I can sell him on the idea of building a penitentiary in my riding.

It is quite clear to me that the penitentiary was to go ahead in 1963. There may have been some move made by the commissioner of penitentiaries to shelve the project for one year, but after I have set out additional facts with reference to these juveniles who are in our penitentiaries I should like to hear from the minister when the government intends to start the construction of this institution for young offenders, so they can be kept away from the kind of penitentiary described in the article that was written as a result of the findings of the commissioner of penitentiaries, A. J. MacLeod.

To come back to the point as to where it was to be built, may I say I am quite sure the Minister of Justice would respect the word of the former minister, Davie Fulton, in this regard. After this institution for young offenders had been announced there was a press report in July of 1962 in the Calgary Herald headed "Cutbacks Won't Hit Pen Work". It reads in part as follows:

Cutbacks in government spending announced last week will not affect the decision to proceed with the $4 million Drumheller penitentiary, the Herald learned today.

An Ottawa source close to justice minister Davie Fulton said the Drumheller penitentiary and other new institutions are "fairly urgent business" because of crowded conditions in other Canadian prisons.

I do not know whether it is a good or bad thing but I might say Alberta is the only province in Canada that has no penitentiary of any kind. All people sentenced in Alberta to penitentiary are taken to Prince Albert in Saskatchewan. Conditions there are such that that penitentiary is badly overcrowded. Just imagine the overcrowding of men in that penitentiary, and the sending there of offenders 12, 13, 14 or 15 years of age.

I say to the Minister of Justice that this is an urgent matter. It is true that the previous minister was a Conservative minister and that there was an austerity program for a period of time, but I say to the present minister that he must review the position and consider it again. I have some other facts to put on the record with reference to the children in our penitentiaries, but when he speaks I should like to hear from him when the government plans on going ahead with the institution for young offenders.

Let us look at some of the facts as far as juveniles are concerned in this country. Canada's total penitentiary population was about 4,700 in 1952. In 1962 the figure was 7,100. Statistics indicate a penitentiary growth of 5 per cent per year and at the present rate of growth the population in 10 years will be 12,000. The largest increase of all is in youngsters 16 years and under. There were only 32 such admissions in 1952, but by 1962 there had been a 300 per cent gain. In other words, there were 300 per cent more children in the penitentiaries in 1962 than there were in 1952. To quote the article:

"I'm in a rage when I see these kids," J. C. A. LaFerriere, director of inmate training for Canada, told me when I visited St. Vincent's federal training centre recently.

He goes on to point out what happens at night. This is something that should be placed on the record. It is not a case of handkerchiefs and tears. These are facts.

"They cry at night and it breaks my heart. They have no right to put children in penitentiaries."

That was the recommendation made by the commissioner to the former minister of justice. That government then went to the country and was defeated. You, sir, are now the Minister of Justice and I hope you will do something about this soon.

In 1959, the latest year for which these statistics are available, 11,686 youngsters between 7 and 15 were adjudged delinquent in Canada. Of these, 19 were 7 years old, 92 were 8 and 212 were 9.

Of that number 32, plus 300 per cent, were confined to penitentiaries serving terms of two years or more with hardened criminals. In dealing with the increase of 300 per cent I want to refer to one story. This is the story of a little fellow called Henri and I want to show hon. members what happened to him.

There are many sad stories about children in prison but the case of a 12 year old Chicoutimi, Que., boy who will be referred to as Henri has gone down in penitentiary history as a classic. Henri had all the cards stacked against him.

This is not unusual.

He was the product of a shiftless father and a prostitute mother, who had separated. In his short lifetime he had been in all sorts of trouble. He had been sentenced to reformatories and at one time had been committed to a mental hospital.

Anyone who has had any experience with reference to juveniles who have been placed in custody and have come up on charges will appreciate that 60 per cent or 70 per cent of those children confined in penitentiary, and of the 11 thousand odd convicted of juvenile delinquency involving one crime or another, are the products of divided homes, so the fault is not theirs. The fault is ours in society and the fault is all the greater when we place them in institutions with hardened criminals.

The judge considered the matter for some time. The nature of the boy's previous offences indicated that he was in serious need of help. But there were no facilities for handling such a case. The judge finally sentenced Henri to two years in St. Vincent de Paul.

This was for striking a man whom he had found in a certain condition with his mother, as a result of which he was charged with assault. Let me tell you the story. He was so small and so young and he had no toys to play with. Even the guards in the penitentiary felt sorry for him and they took up a collection and bought him a bicycle so that he could ride around within the prison walls. This is Canada. This is the administration of justice in its practical sense which we are supposed to be proud of. The boy had one request to make. What was the request? One day he said to the guard, "Could I go outside these walls and play"? This boy, Henri, is 12 years of age. What was the answer? The rules do not permit criminals who are confined to the penitentiary to go outside the walls to play." This is our country.

I have raised this question before. I hope that tonight, now that I have raised it in the House of Commons, something will be done about it. I hope something will be done about it, not a week from now but tomorrow. Let us do something immediately about this. This could be your child, and these are Canadian children. The only thing they have done has been to run afoul of the law. Surely, what we should be doing today is putting these children in some kind of institution where they could be educated, where the proper environment would be provided. If they come from broken homes, surely they should be in institutions where they can be rehabilitated to enable them to take their places as men and women in society.

An hon. Member: It has been done.

Mr. Woolliams: It may have been done, but just look at the record. Would you say tonight there are no juveniles in the penitentiaries? If you or the Minister of Justice can say that tonight, I will be the most happy person and I will take my seat. You cannot say it. I am sorry about this interruption because this is a very serious matter which affects the youth of our country.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

I say to the minister, therefore, that there was a plan to build an institution for young offenders in Alberta. The land has been purchased and $100,000 has already been put into this project. The water has been put through to the site because of an agreement between the Department of Public Works and the city. Why does the government not proceed with this plan forthwith? If the government decides to stick by this decision to postpone the building of this institution until 1964, when will they start? How much will be built in 1964?

I want to deal with another matter, and that is the reason Drumheller was chosen as the site for this institution. Drumheller is one of the depressed areas of Canada. I am not talking about the farming area, but the mining area. Back in the fifties there were 20 mines operating. By 1962, there were six mines operating and today there are only two mines operating. In 1950, these mines employed 1,866 men. By 1963, only 183 men were employed. Now the Minister of Industry has removed Drumheller from the list of depressed areas. He said the statistics in the unemployment office revealed there were not too many unemployed. These men have been unemployed for a long time. They were unemployed in 1954, 1955, 1956 and 1957. They were unemployed when we were in office, but some of them went to Canmore, where they obtained employment in connection with the shipment of coal to Japan. They have been unemployed so long they have no unemployment insurance benefits left. They are not statistics in the unemployment insurance office. Therefore, when the minister removed Drumheller from the list of depressed areas, that was wrong.

They talk about rich Alberta, but there is no place in Canada where conditions are such as they are in East Coulee, Newcastle, Rosedale and those areas which were coal mining areas surrounding the city of Drumheller. Even the former minister of labour agreed with this statement. When the demand arose in Canada for an institution to rehabilitate the youth, Drumheller was chosen because it was a depressed area. In addition, the province of Alberta was the only province in Canada which had no such institution. I say that to shelve this project until 1964 is an injustice to the youth of this country whom I have described and who are in our penitentiaries. It is an injustice to the unemployed men in that area who were brought there during the last war. During the last war there was a demand for the soft coal in that area and the men were brought from various parts of Canada. When the war ended, the market for soft coal disappeared because of competition with petroleum and natural gas.

These men were left there and they are a monument to the previous Liberal government.

I say these men were brought there during the last war. At least, I was frank enough to admit that whatever steps the Conservative government took in this particular area, they were not of much help. However, at that time the area was declared a depressed area and received some benefits under that particular legislation. The fact is that it would take a large pool of labour to build a penitentiary of this nature. The unemployment insurance office in the district said that they had such a pool of labour because the unemployed coal miners had become skilled in other trades and could be used on this project. For these two reasons, I press the minister tonight to get this project started so that there will be some attempt at rehabilitation of these children who have been convicted and placed in the penitentiaries of this country. I want to repeat that if John Howard, the great prison reformer, were to see some of the conditions under which these children are living he would be shocked. If he would be shocked now, in the light of conditions in his day when he brought about reform, one can readily envisage the conditions.

We can sit here, like corporation lawyers, who never go down to the police court. If they ever went down there, as one did recently to bail out his son, they would find that these places are in need of reconditioning. They are a disgrace. I refer especially to the places where people are held while awaiting bail. People say, you have a bill of rights, but try to get a solicitor when you are in one of these places. If you get one, then try to get bail. It might be your daughter or your son or it might even be you. I say this is one of the most disgraceful things we have in Canada today. I trust that the Minister of Justice will make sure that something is really done in connection with the reforms to which I have referred.

Mr. Deachman: I enter this debate briefly this evening on the question of the recent changes in the price of sugar. This is a matter which has been mentioned in this house today, and recently by the hon. member for Lapointe. The intimations are that some kind of conspiracy exists in connection with the price of sugar, and that this is a question which should be brought before the Minister of Justice for reference to the restrictive trade practices commission. It is with this in mind that I should like to make a few remarks this evening.

Let us look first of all at raw sugar prices. By raw sugar prices I mean the prices which the manufacturer or refiner of sugar in Canada must pay in order to land sugar in Canada for refining purposes. Last year around this time the price was 6.5 cents per pound. The figures I shall give you are from the Financial Post, and the dates which I give you are the dates of the Financial Post on the day raw sugar prices are quoted. The price quotations for raw sugar per pound are, in the Financial Post of October 5, 1963, 8.2 cents; on October 12, it had moved up to 8.5 cents. On October 19, it had moved up to 9 cents, and in the current issue, October 26, raw sugar prices had moved up to 9.7 cents.

Now, what should cause the price of sugar to rise over a relatively short time at such a rapid rate?

Looking back over the course of the last couple of years we find that the world's production of cane sugar—and these are cane sugar prices I am dealing with—fell below world consumption by 3 million tons. This was the case in 1962-63, and also in 1961-62 production was slightly under consumption, so that for the past two years world inventories have been shrinking, and the cane sugar crop has not come up to world demand or world consumption. We may add to that the virtual removal of Cuba from the world trading market in sugar, as we know it.

Despite the shrinkage in production the sugar market responded early in the fall, as a result of optimistic predictions as to what the current sugar crop would be. On looking at the Financial Post of August 10, 1963, I see that in response to predictions that the crop would be fairly good the local refinery price, that is the finished sugar price in Canada, responded sensitively to this indication that prices would drop. I quote from that issue of the Financial Post:

> Refinery price early this week was $13.45 per 100 pound bag in the Toronto area. This works out to 67.25 cents per five pound bag (there is an additional delivery charge.) Refinery price in late May-63 was 91.75 cents per five pound bag. This price now is down by 27 per cent in a little over two months.

As quickly as price changes appeared in the raw sugar market the local refinery markets reacted sensitively, and one could not call this a conspiracy to rig the price.

Let me deal for a moment with the question of what makes up sugar prices in Canada. First of all the Canadian sugar price is affected by the sugar tariff. This is an old, unchanged tariff dating back for a considerable number of years. In connection with this tariff I would like to quote from the 1957 restrictive trade practices commission report on the sugar industry in Canada. This says that the commonwealth preference tariff is 28.7 cents per 100 pounds, so that to get the Canadian price of raw sugar you must take the world price as it fluctuates on the raw sugar market and add the commonwealth preference tariff of 28.7 cents.

In addition to this you must add the proportion of commonwealth tariff averaged over the most favoured nation tariff appropriate to the commonwealth producer, and this amounts to about 85 cents, which must again be added to the raw sugar price per 100 pounds of raw sugar. Therefore the first element in fixing the price in Canada is the tariff upon sugar.

After the raw sugar has been landed, the price of refined sugar is affected by the following factors. First there is the raw sugar price related to the tariff as we have discussed it, and then the refining margin, which in this 1957 report at page 55 is quoted at $1.20 per 100 pounds, freight 80 cents, delivery $1.89, insurance .02 cent and other expenses totalling 20 cents.

Now let me deal with the question of inventory. Somebody mentioned in the house earlier this evening or this afternoon that inventories are excessively high and that sugar refiners in Canada are speculating in inventory and making enormous profits. I do not know what present sugar inventories in Canada are. Perhaps they are excessively high, but because raw sugar production in the world has been falling off, and was below the level of consumption in 1962-63 and 1961-62, one would not expect to find that inventories are excessively high. However, let us assume for argument's sake that they are; but inventories of sugar cannot be converted into dollars for speculative purposes until such time as the sugar is sold to the public.

How is sugar sold? Each one of us consumes approximately 96 pounds of sugar a year. This figure does not vary very much, so that in Canada we consume approximately one million tons of sugar a year. If we want to reduce that to a unit we can look at easily, it comes to 13.5 tons for the members of the House of Commons, which is quite a lot of sweetening to go into the people in this chamber—and one wonders whether it has always been effective. Therefore it is not likely that much speculation has taken place on inventories, because inventories are not converted into sugar and sold, except at a relatively even rate on a fixed annual basis of 96 pounds per person.

To sum up I want to say that while the sugar industry in Canada has tended to be monopolistic and is almost by way of a utility, because it must be made up of large concerns, it has been under constant investigation by the federal government to see that it does not fix the price and become burdensome upon the public. One government after another has had long experience in dealing with the sugar companies and, as a result of this, these companies have become relatively cautious about speculating in price and in rigging the price.

I conclude by saying that while there is reason to look very carefully at fluctuations in price of the kind that have taken place over the last few months, I submit that much of this is the result of world conditions, over which the Canadian industry has little control, and that that industry is not necessarily the culprit or the conspirator with regard to the present price.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I was most pleased to hear the remarks of the hon. member for Bow River exposing one of the problems still outstanding our penitentiaries system. It is my intention to speak on some of the other problems and difficulties. In my estimation, sir, there are two important matters upon which I feel the Minister of Justice should make a detailed statement. First, he should give us an expose on his theories on penology and how and when he intends to put his theories into practice. Second, he should explain to this house his understanding and theories relating to the problem—and it is a serious problem—of narcotic addiction, and tell us how and when he intends to tackle this problem. Dealing with the penitentiaries system first, to the best of my understanding the purpose of our penitentiaries system is for the punishment of those who are anti-social and have broken the laws of this country; and second, to the best of our ability to rehabilitate them, so as to make them upon their release from the penitentiary useful and law abiding citizens.

If we deal with the second question first as being most important, which I think it is, surely it should be axiomatic that in order to rehabilitate a person into becoming a useful and socially conscious person you have to change his mental attitude. Surely changing a person's mental attitude and bringing about his rehabilitation depends to a great extent upon his environment. I say, sir, that to a considerable extent the environment in our penitentiaries is an absolute disgrace to a country which calls itself modern and civilized. I am not completely, or to any great extent, blaming our penitentiary officials for this situation. The greatest onus or responsibility rests upon governments, past and present, and to a great extent upon Liberals who have made up the governments of the past. Because let us not forget the Archambault report of 1938. Judge Archambault outlined in detail a most positive, disgusting, disgraceful situation in the penitentiaries system of Canada. He pointed this out completely even back in 1938. He said there were 400 cells in the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary that were unfit for human occupation—unfit in 1938; and today those self-same cells are occupied by prisoners.

I only wish more members of this House of Commons would visit the federal institutions and see the conditions for themselves. I do not think the members of this house need worry about getting into a penitentiary or getting out, because I have always found that if I got in in the morning I always got out in the afternoon or evening. So there is no danger there. But I am convinced that if the members of this house would do this—because this is part of our responsibility; we have a duty to deal with penitentiaries and penology—they would take immediate action to rectify the appalling conditions that were exposed by Judge Archambault in 1938. I say that not only to the male members of this house, but to the female members also. I wish the women members would visit the women's jail at Kingston. If they were to spend one day in that jail they would come back here and get action from the Minister of Justice to improve the conditions at that jail, or they would tear out what little hair he has left. The conditions at Kingston are appalling.

How are you going to rehabilitate these women when they have to live under such shocking conditions? This is an institution that was never meant to be an institution of this kind. It is absolutely outdated and obsolete. The laundry room is right next door to the boiler room, and the dozen girls who have to work in the laundry room do so in temperatures that reach 108 degrees. The steam pipe system in that institution is so terrible, so deplorable, that it is in a continuous sweat, and because of the continuous sweat the condensation of the steam is rusting the cells and everything in them.

They can paint the cells—as they do—in that institution and within a few weeks it is all stripped off; it sweats off. This is the type of institution in which these women are confined. You can go into the penitentiary at Kingson or St. Vincent de Paul and see these terrible conditions. I say that something is wrong with us if we do not do something about it. I do not believe we should mollycoddle these criminals; I do not believe we should pussyfoot with them. They are there because they have broken the law. They are there for punishment, yes. But they are there for rehabilitation also. We spend millions and millions of dollars on a so-called policy of trying to rehabilitate these people. How can we do it when they are confined in conditions such as these? In the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary, for example, there are hundreds of cells in which there are no sanitary facilities; where there is a bucket alongside the so-called bed, into which you can respond to nature. And alongside the bucket is a little jar containing your drinking water. The sanitary bucket is cleaned out once a day, and many of these people are in the cells 24 hours a day. People talk about rehabilitation. We are pouring the taxpayers' money down the drain, and we are certainly not preparing these prisoners to lead useful lives.

During the last two years in particular we have had riots in our prisons. There have been riots in St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary which have cost the taxpayers over $2 million to repair the damage. Why? Because of conditions which no man could bear; because not only are there these conditions in the cells but there is also the question of food. Yes, the food is good. I do not think anybody confined in our penitentiaries today would complain about the quality, quantity or preparation of the food. But these men have to go and pick up their food, and the distance is so great from the place where they collect their food to their cells that by the time they get back to their cells the food is cold. Therefore for three meals a day you are eating a cold-plate, and food which is supposed to be eaten hot, but which is eaten cold, does not taste very good.

Adding all these things together, no wonder we have had riots and the complaints. Then when they do riot—and nobody can commend them for rioting—they are put into segregation cells. I am not talking from hearsay; a number of us spent a day there. What did we find? We found men who are ringleaders, who are dangerous, who are mentally unstable, emotionally upset, easily aroused, incarcerated in these cells week after week after week after week. They were never let out of the cell for even a half hour of recreation. Why? Because there was not a gate unlocked leading to the recreation section. The contractor had not done his work properly and the Department of Public Works had not seen that something was done about it. I know they were asked to do something time after time. Yet men of this type, who become easily aroused, are confined in these cells week after week and their mental condition is worsened to the state where they are incited to riot. These situations cannot be allowed.

Hon. members have all read in the newspapers about the cockroaches, the vermin, the rats that infest our penitentiaries. The warden at St. Vincent de Paul employs a man who does nothing else all day and every day but go around with exterminating material trying to kill this vermin. If you had 100 men going out every day you would never get rid of them, because as fast as you killed them they would come up the sewers and drains and start all over again.

In addition, when are we going to get away from solitary confinement? If any hon. member does not understand solitary he should visit a penitentiary and ask the warden to lock him in a small cell without a watch. Then when he thinks five minutes is up, let him kick the cell door open and he will find that he has been there most likely for a minute and a quarter or a minute and a half. I was asked to try that and I did. I asked others to do it and they did. When I felt five minutes was up in actual fact it was only a minute and a quarter. Men are put in solitary on occasion for days and days with no human contact, nothing but the bare walls. We have to do something about this. I am pleading that we do something about it, and the responsibility for any delay rests in the hands of the government.

I know for a fact that A. J. MacLeod, the commissioner of penitentiaries, has for a considerable time had a development plan for penitentiary construction consisting of maximum security, medium security and minimum security prisons. Up to a few weeks ago you could go down to the offices of the commissioner of penitentiaries and in the lobby you would see a model prison, comprising the workshops and accommodation, of modern construction and architecture, so well thought out that looking ahead to the time when we have partially resolved our criminal problem and the numbers in institutions diminish it can be reconverted quite easily to other uses, such as a hospital for the aged or other purposes. But those plans which are now on the drafting board have to be put into operation. If my memory is correct the thinking and planning of the commissioner of penitentiaries extends over a period of seven years, with a completion date in 1970. I say that, although I appreciate his thinking, 1970 is too late.

We have to do away now with the present type of maximum security prison and build a new type. We have to speed up the building of minimum and maximum security prisons, and we must insist that this be done. The longer we delay, the more will building costs go up; second, it will cost more in human lives because we will not be able to rehabilitate the hundreds and thousands over this seven year period in these institutions under existing conditions in the maximum security prisons we have today. I speak particularly of maximum security prisons because I think an excellent job has been done in minimum and medium security institutions I have seen of recent construction which are minimum and medium security prisons. But if we allow the present conditions of occupation to continue, then we will again waste millions of dollars of taxpayers' money, not only because we cannot rehabilitate these people but because we are inviting more and more riots and destruction. So from whatever angle the problem is examined, there surely can no longer be any pussyfooting, and if we do not do anything more this year we must start removing the conditions of which Judge Archambault complained in 1938.

That is all I have to say, Mr. Chairman, on the penitentiaries problem because I want to say a few words about another serious problem, that of narcotics in Canada. I hope the minister will give us a somewhat detailed exposition of his approach in handling this matter. Personally I feel from years of studying the matter that we are not tackling it in the right way. We still seem to have the opinion that narcotics addicts should be treated as criminals when every authority, or practically every authority, in the world says that they should be treated as sick people. I was most interested to read the other day a report of the New York academy of medicine's subcommittee on drug addiction, which among other things said this:

> There should be a change in attitude toward the addict. He is a sick person, not a criminal. That he may commit criminal acts to maintain his drug supply is recognized; but it is unjust to consider him criminal simply because he uses narcotic drugs.

The academy believes that the most effective way to eliminate drug addiction is to take the profit out of the illicit drug traffic and proposed a national network of federally-controlled dispensary clinics at which addicts could receive low cost drugs. In the same study which was later carried on by the United States medical association's council on mental health, an examination was made of various systems in the world, particularly in the United Kingdom. While they have a cautious view of the system used in the United Kingdom, they found that it was of such importance that they felt they should quote one of the regulations, and I should just like to put it on the record:

> It has been demonstrated that the patient, while capable of leading a relatively useful and normal life when a certain minimum dose is regularly administered, becomes incapable of this when the drug is entirely discontinued.

I completely agree with that view, Mr. Chairman, but I am afraid that there has not been the approach by governments in the past, or the Department of Justice, to lead to the necessary educational program to bring to public understanding the meaning of this disease of narcotic addiction. I know from experiences I have had that some people who were narcotics addicts were so badly addicted that in order to feed their need they were in and out of penitentiaries year after year for crimes of breaking and entering to get the money required to buy heroin. I know where these individuals were able to get a doctor to give them treatment, but they could not be cured and were given a minimal dose. The doctor saw to it that they were able to get that minimal dose and they are getting it today; and after seven years in one case and nine years in another those two individuals have never again broken the law but are useful members of society.

This experiment has been proven time after time in the United Kingdom and other countries, and I ask why we give no thought to that. I admit I am disturbed by our present policies. We are now letting or have let the contract for a $4 million structure a few miles outside of Vancouver in which we will institutionalize the drug addict as a criminal. In the light of experience accepted throughout the world, the experience of the New York academy of medicine and of the American medical association, it is not possible to cure these people by confining them under compulsion in the manner now proposed. It is necessary to change their mental attitude, and that cannot be done by collecting them from all over Canada and incarcerating them in one huge institution under the criminal law. There is one particular aspect of this treatment which concerns even those who are ready to approve what the government plans to do as being, at least, a first step. I am referring to arrangements for the after care of those we propose to rehabilitate. What is going to happen to these people once they are released? This is the danger point, the point at which there must be rehabilitation, the point at which employment must be found and when the individual must be re-integrated into society. Unless this work forms a major part of our narcotic addiction treatment policy we will be wasting money when we spend this $4 million or whatever it will cost to build this institution outside Vancouver.

There are different viewpoints, but I do not think we shall solve this narcotics problem until some system is arranged whereby the profit is taken out of the sale of illicit drugs. As long as there is the possibility of a profit, somebody will try to make somebody else an addict. We know we have addicts who must obtain certain drugs until they can be cured. Why, in the name of heaven, do we not make arrangements whereby they can get them legally, without having to go into the illicit market where the profiteer gains his living? I think our laws should be particularly stringent as applied to any pedlar of narcotics who is not himself an addict. I think that such people should get life imprisonment because of what they are doing. This problem will always be with us until we bring in policies establishing dispensaries, so that those who need these drugs are not forced to go into the illicit market.

I am seriously concerned about these matters and I sincerely hope the Minister of Justice will do us the courtesy to make a statement on the situation, possibly when we get into the estimates in more detail. I have had the privilege of seeing and discussing the plans and programs of the commissioner of penitentiaries, and I sincerely hope the minister will be able to put the hooks on the Minister of Finance so that funds will be available with which to proceed in a civilized manner, so as to make Canadian penology the most admired in the world.

Mr. Baldwin: I had intended to make reference to a number of unrelated subjects which come under this item, but having in mind the lateness of the hour I shall restrict my remarks to a brief comment on the statements made by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice tonight.

I am happy to say that these statements indicate that the government recognizes there is a problem. That is the first requirement, the first step toward a solution. But in my opinion, recognition of the problem has not been followed by an adequate solution. I should like to refer briefly to what the Minister of Justice has said. He said: "As the Prime Minister has stated, the purpose of our security program is preventive, not punitive". If that statement is intended to relate to the criminal law, it has never been my understanding that the criminal law was punitive. It, too, is intended to be preventive. Our system of criminal law administration is by no means perfect. All such systems are imperfect. But I would say this—that in our experience we have reached a greater measure of perfection than any other system. This is because our trials take place in open court. There is a confrontation of accused and witnesses. Here, in these circumstances, with a judge sitting high on a dais, dressed in sombre robes, in the presence of friends, and witnesses subject to cross-examination by learned counsel, we come close to purifying the stream of justice. I recognize, of course, that in cases such as those the minister has in mind we cannot reach this measure of perfection but, I suggest, we could go a lot further than the government has seen fit to go today without imperilling our security.

I have two suggestions to make, and I will put them briefly before the committee. Is it not possible that a digest of the statement made in respect of each employee whose position is imperilled could be given to him, not in such a way as to permit him to identify the person providing the statement against him but at least so as to permit him to know in what respect he is charged, in order that he might have an opportunity to meet those statements. Second, having in mind the degree of unanimity necessary to protect the people who are making the statements, surely these witnesses could be subjected to at least some measure of scrutiny or cross-examination either by this tribunal or by an agent of the tribunal. This would not go as far as I would like to go, but if they were adopted we might come a little closer to providing a more equitable system.

May I call it 10.30?

Item stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: I should like to ask the acting leader of the house if he can tell us whether the business for Monday and Tuesday remains as a supply motion.

Mr. MacNaught: On Monday the Minister of Finance will move to go into supply. I regret I cannot give any further details of the legislative program for the balance of the week. I understand that talks are going on between the representatives of the various parties and that early in the week a statement will be made concerning the program for the rest of the week.

It being twenty eight minutes before eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

END OF VOLUME IV