The house met at 2.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

STATEMENT BY MR. SPEAKER RESPECTING SEATING ARRANGEMENTS

Mr. Speaker: May I take this first opportunity to welcome all hon. members back to the house to what I am sure will be a very energetic, strenuous and without doubt profitable session for the public of Canada.

[Translation]

It gives me pleasure to find us all together again, ready to get back to work.

I am quite convinced that the months to come will be of benefit to all our fellow-Canadians thanks to the knowledge and intelligence of all those around me, both on my right and on my left.

Now I have a statement to make, and I thought of expressing myself both in English and in French. On the other hand, it might be better if the French text were distributed immediately so that hon. members who wish to do so can refer to it while I read the English.

[Text]

Before calling the orders of the day I would crave the indulgence of hon. members in order to permit me to make a statement on a situation which has developed since the adjournment of the house on August 2. The problem with which the house is faced is a new one. May I be allowed to refer, in a chronological order, to certain correspondence by which I was apprised of the facts.

On September 9, 1963, the hon. member for Lapointe wrote me a letter to the effect that his party had chosen a new leader and claiming certain rights and privileges.

On September 13, 1963, the hon. member for Red Deer wrote me a letter to the effect "that the separation of Mr. Real Caouette and his followers from the party poses several problems".

On September 16 the hon. member for Villeneuve wrote me a letter reading in part as follows:

[Translation]

> Since September 1, our movement has become a national group under the name of Ralliement Creditistes.

[Text]

On September 18 the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre wrote me a letter reading in part:

> In view of recent developments it seems quite clear that the New Democratic party, with its 17 members, is now the third largest group in the House of Commons.

Later on in the letter he adds:

> Since we are now the largest of the smaller parties we will expect to be seated immediately next to the official opposition.

The events which have taken place and the correspondence in relation thereto, which I am prepared to lay on the table if the house so desires, have given rise to a number of questions. Among them is first the recognition of a new party and of its leader; second, the seating arrangements in the chamber; then the question of the allowance to "the leader of a party that has a recognized membership of 12 or more persons in the House of Commons"; and following that the allocation of rooms, personnel, and other matters. I do not think it is necessary to deal with those problems at the moment; it is sufficient to mention them.

"Party" as defined by Burke in the classical passage on the subject, "Thoughts on the Causes of the Present Discontent" is a body of men united for promoting the national interest on some particular principle in which they are all agreed.

Have we a new party according to this definition and, if so, has this party been recognized by the house? To my mind this is a question for the house to decide.

The question of third parties in itself is not a new one. After the last election, apart from the Liberal and Conservative parties, as all hon. members know, there were recognized the Social Credit party and the New Democratic party.

Third parties have existed continually in the house practically since 1921. In 1921 there were 117 Liberals, 50 Conservatives, 66 Progressives and 2 other members, independent and labour. This third party situation has continued throughout the years, that is after the elections of 1925, 1926, 1930, 1935, 1940, 1945, 1949, 1953, 1957, 1958, 1962 and 1963.

If the house is used to third parties, that is to having a third and fourth party in the house, it will be admitted that it creates quite a new situation to have a third party divide into two sections or blocks a few months after a general election and during an adjournment of the house.

I have already indicated some of the problems which are created by this unprecedented situation. There now remains to consider my position as Speaker of the house in connection with these recent events.

The legal rights and duties of the Speaker are to be found in the statutes of Canada, the standing orders of the house, in the constitutional and parliamentary authors and finally in the customs and precedents which have become constitutional conventions. According to Campion, the Speaker is the representative of the house itself, in its powers, proceedings and dignity, and the chief characteristics attaching to the office of Speaker of the House of Commons are authority and impartiality. Campion states also that it is the duty of the Speaker to see that the house is properly constituted before it proceeds to business.

It is in consequence among the duties of the Speaker to see that the standing orders of the house are followed in the course of its procedures and that the privileges of the house, once they have been defined and recognized, are protected. It is also the duty of the Speaker to be impartial and removed from politics, which has always been my aim since, hon. members, you did me the honour to elect me as your Speaker.

Sir Erskine May, sixteenth edition, page 42, has stated:

> that parliamentary privilege is the sum of peculiar rights enjoyed by each house collectively as a constituent part of the high court of parliament, and by members of each house individually, without which they could not discharge their functions, and which exceed those possessed by other bodies or individuals. Thus privilege, though part of the law of the land, is to a certain extent an exception from the ordinary law.

Dawson, in his book on "The Government of Canada", writes:

> The privileges, immunities and powers of the house of parliament of Canada are thus potentially those of the British House of Commons, although their primary basis is statutory and not established custom and inherent right.

In the Canadian house, questions of privilege take a wide range, but it may be stated in general terms that they refer to all matters affecting the rights and immunities of the house collectively, the rights of recognized parties, or to the position and conduct of members in their representative character. In this category may be placed questions affecting the recognition of a party, touching the seat or election of members, questions affecting the internal economy or proceedings of the house.

If the Speaker is to take any notice of these privileges and at the same time to exercise the high degree of independence and impartiality which is justly expected of him, it is well that those privileges be first defined and decided by the house itself. Anson, in "Law and Custom of the Constitution", at page 130, as quoted by Beauchesne, fourth edition, page 94, says:

> The house has always asserted the right to provide for the constitution of its own body, the right to regulate its own proceedings and the right to enforce its privileges.

Allow me to refer once more to the special traditions that surround the office of Speaker. While he is the servant of the house he is, at the same time, its spokesman and its symbol. His value to the house and its members continues effectively only when the house assists him in every way to maintain his dignity and his impartiality, and during my short term I have had the confidence of the house to the point where I know I can place myself and my problems in its hands.

It seems to me that having in mind the authorities from Sir Erskine May to Lord Campion, from Bourinot to Beauchesne and from Anson to McGregor Dawson and many others, a situation such as that now facing the house must be resolved by the house itself. It is not one where the Speaker ought by himself to take a position where any group of members might feel that their interests as a group or a party have been prejudiced. Nor should the Speaker be put in the position where he must decide, to the advantage or to the disadvantage of any group or party, matters affecting the character or existence of a party, for this surely would signify that the Speaker had taken what was almost a political decision, a decision where the question involves the rights and privileges of the house itself.

I cannot conclude this statement without some reference to the significance of these events for the future of the definition and status of parties in this house. It is not my place to evaluate the significance of these matters for the future of the ever changing structure and character of political parties; yet it is my duty, I believe, to bring to the attention of the house the novel character of the situation now before it, and more particularly the payment of allowances and the effect on the organization of parliament and parties and of the work of this house that naturally must be reflected by the emergence from time to time of new groups that invite the house to accord them the status of parties. Profound constitutional questions arise; for example, can a group of members which did not exist as a party at the time of the election of a parliament be recognized as a party before it has submitted itself to the electorate?

Having indicated this new development to the house with its suggestive consequences, may I end my statement by relying upon the house to give me the necessary guidance required for the due administration of my duties in view of the issues presented to me by the letters from the hon. members concerned, and which have required me to make this statement today.

For these reasons I am of the opinion that the interests of the house, of members and of all parties will best be served if the questions raised by the hon. members for Lapointe, Red Deer, Villeneuve and Winnipeg North Centre in the various letters addressed to me were referred at this time to the proper committee for consideration and report so as to bring about a solution thereto.

As Speaker, I shall carry out the orders of the house and apply such interpretations to the rules of the house as the house itself may require of me.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, if I may I should like to rise on a question of privilege. My point of privilege relates to an aspect of the matter covered by the statement you have just made to the house. I think I should say at this time that I believe the house will agree with me that we are all indebted to you for the very helpful statement you have made with respect to the situation which now confronts us in this House of Commons. I may say also that at the conclusion of my remarks I should like to indicate my agreement with the suggestion you have made; in fact, as a matter of privilege I will suggest a motion along the very lines of your statement.

First of all may I indicate why in my view I feel, on behalf of this group, the New Democratic party, that there is a question of privilege to be raised at this time. Following the election of June 18, 1962, when the Social Credit party and the New Democratic party both came to this house with certain numbers of members, the question of our seating and our priority arose in discussions between representatives of these parties and the then Speaker, Mr. Michener, and the subsequent Speaker, the present hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). It was my contention that on the basis of the precedents of former years, notably 1935 and 1940, seniority and certain other considerations entitled us in the New Democratic party to be recognized as the third party in the house. May I make it clear that we in this party accepted the judgment that was given by Mr. Speaker Michener and by Mr. Speaker Lambert that other considerations had to be set aside in light of one overriding consideration, namely the number of members in each group. Therefore, because following the election of June 18, 1962, the Social Credit party had 30 members and we had only 19, the Social Credit party was recognized as third party in the house and we were given the position of fourth party in the house.

A few months later came the election of April 8, 1963. As a result of that election again the Social Credit party had more members than we had: they had 24 on the night of the election, which was reduced to 23 a little later. In any case our number, as hon. members know, was 17. The issue was raised again but there was no extended argument about it, because we were all agreed that the decision had been made the year before, namely that so far as the seating of, and other matters affecting, small parties were concerned the number of members was the key factor. The Social Credit party had more members than the New Democratic party had; therefore the Social Credit party was given third place.

Mr. Speaker, as you have indicated in your statement, I wrote you about this matter on behalf of this party on September 18, pointing out to you that reports in the press seemed to make it quite clear that we, with our 17 members, had become the third largest party in the house. In my letter, which I note you are prepared to table—I should be glad if all this correspondence were tabled—I did not happen to name the Social Credit party, but I referred to recent events and said that in the light of these events we were obviously the third party in size in this house, and I indicated that I expected that when the house met on September 30 we would be seated in third position next to the official opposition.

I might point out, Mr. Speaker, that on the two previous occasions to which I have referred—the occasions following the election of 1962 and following the election of 1963—the decision was made before the house met. When the house met we sat in the seats allotted to us. Therefore it was my view when I wrote my letter of September 18 that this decision should have been made before today, and that on coming into the house today we should have been placed in seats which would recognize our position as the third largest party in the house.

There is involved, so far as our position is concerned, not only the question of where we sit; because after all it is a privilege to sit anywhere in this house, whether in the front row or the back row, up at that end or down at this end; there is a question of the order of speakers in debates, the question of the right to move amendments in certain cases, and so on. Therefore we feel it is a matter of concern not only to us but to all members of the house, a matter of concern to all who want the practices and privileges of the house to be respected, that our position, if we are the third party in size in the house, should be that of the third party as far as seating position and other matters are concerned.

As I say, it was my belief and contention that this decision should have been made before we took our places in the house today, and that we should have been given our seats next to the official opposition. However, I recognize readily that to have made such a move earlier than today would have involved other considerations. It would have involved the questions you have raised, Mr. Speaker, as to whether there has in fact been a division of the Social Credit party into two parties, whether they are two parts of the same party or two separate parties, and so on. From what we have read in the papers I find it strange they should be sitting together, cheek by jowl, without exchanging any blows; at least not yet.

Mr. Gregoire: No worse than sitting beside you.

Mr. Knowles: May I indulge in the use of at least one French word I know, and say "touché".

There is also the question of determining, if we are to be moved up, the order in which the other two parties are to sit. I realize it is unfair to ask you, Mr. Speaker, to make this decision in advance. I think the situation is sufficiently unusual that your suggestion is an appropriate one, namely that this is a matter which should be decided by the house. For these reasons we are prepared to possess our souls in patience for a few days so far as seating is concerned. We are prepared to see this matter referred to a special committee of the house so that the committee may consider it and bring back its findings at the earliest possible date. We do think that if it is established before that date—and one has to get the evidence in order to find out—that there are now three so-called smaller parties and that their numbers are 17, 13 and 11, there should be no question but that the party with 17 should be the third party in the house and sit next to the official opposition. We think that if the committee could ascertain the facts and make a decision quickly in this respect it should do so, and that the change should be made. If it takes longer to decide as between the other two, perhaps the committee would take somewhat longer to determine that particular issue.

[Mr. Knowles.]

I think the house is indebted to Your Honour for having taken the trouble to prepare the statement you have given us today. It is a statement that is likely to be referred to a number of times in the course of the progress of this parliament. One does not know what lies ahead in terms of our parliamentary arrangements. The people of Canada have the right to elect the governments and parties they wish to elect. Nevertheless, here in this house it is our responsibility to see that the arrangements we make with regard to the seating of parties, the priority of speakers, the moving of amendments and so on are made in accordance with the best practices of parliamentary democracy.

Therefore it gives me pleasure to move a motion along the lines suggested in the latter part of Your Honour's statement. I move, seconded by my hon. friend from Burnaby-Coquitlam:

That the matters raised and the statement made to the house this day by Mr. Speaker be referred to the committee on privileges and elections and that the said committee be instructed to report its findings thereon to the house with all convenient speed.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): First may I say that I think Your Honour has done the house a great deal of benefit by the research which has been shown in the production of this statement you have just made. I was particularly interested in the quotation you made from Burke, the title of his speech being "Thoughts on the Causes of the Present Discontent". It was very applicable and it was an example, once again, of history reliving itself, though in a manner not within the contemplation of Burke at the time he made the speech in question.

The responsibility which will rest on this committee will be a great one; to determine when is a party not a party; when does disagreement within a party cause such a cleavage as to proliferate the number of parties within a party.

An hon. Member: It might happen to you.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I might say also, to my friends on the left, the question might arise as to whether the New Democratic party is a separate party or whether it is just a section of the Liberal party ready to vote with the government on occasions or to abstain altogether. These are all questions which will, I am sure, be of tremendous interest as this committee carries out the responsibility which will belong to it should the house pass the motion before us.

However, I must say that all of this, all these events, underline and emphasize the danger I pointed out when I spoke in the house last July on the measure which provided for the payment of $4,000 per year to leaders of parties other than the official opposition. If such a payment were not available I doubt very much whether there would have been the division which has taken place. I therefore express my wonder that he who has received credit for having been the inventor of this plan should now, like so many inventors in the past, decline to share in the profits from that invention.

I pointed out then that the recognition of parties other than the official opposition in the manner I have already indicated was contrary to the basic principle of British parliamentary government, the contemplation of which has always been two parties; a party which governs, and a party in the opposition composed of the largest group. Again I wonder whether the chickens have not come home to roost somewhat earlier than expected. I expressed the fear that this measure might lead to a multiplicity and proliferation of parties in the days ahead. Certainly whatever the cause, the result is as I had anticipated.

If the committee is set up this party will be represented thereon and will make such decisions as in the wisdom of its membership are in keeping with the responsibilities that will rest on the committee. Certainly this committee, with all the potential problems that will be before it, will require all of the wisdom of a Solomon to carry out all the facets of the undertaking that will be theirs.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we on this side are happy to support the motion which has been moved and which has been based on the suggestion you made to the house in such impressive terms. We are also grateful to you for the research you have done on this important subject. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) was good enough to comment on that research in impartial and objective terms. He has reminded the house, in terms which were not too flattering to some of his fellow members and which I think are regrettable, that some chickens are coming home to roost.

He has also reminded us of his prescience and his wisdom in the debate last July on the legislation to which he referred. But I should like to recall the circumstances of that particular debate to the right hon. gentleman, and remind him that in respect of this particular provision and all other provisions in that legislation he managed to find only five of his own party to support him in the house, and those five did not include a single member of his front bench or of his former colleagues in his government. I also recall that although he had the opportunity he did not move a single amendment to any provision of that bill, including the provision to which he now takes such strong exception; and when I asked him during the debate if he intended to move that this legislation, to which he was then taking exception, be referred to a committee where it could be considered he disclaimed any such intention and did not take advantage of the suggestion I made. Therefore it is a little late for the right hon. gentleman to be so wise in respect of this particular measure.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, not only on behalf of the Social Credit party—

An hon. Member: Which one?

Mr. Thompson:—of Canada but also on behalf of myself I wish to thank you for the thoughtful statement you have just made to us. I think it outlines the situation very well, and I agree with your suggestion that it is logical that this situation should go before a committee. The problem is not an easy one for you to decide.

I recall well the discussions we had before the first session of the former parliament began regarding the party order within the house, and I concur in the statement of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that it was agreed at that time that on the basis of numbers the Social Credit party should take second precedence among the opposition parties. I believe that the proposition he has presented in his motion, provided it is in order, is reasonable.

However, the problem we have before us now is not really just the consideration of who or what a party is. It comes down to the fact that there are a number of people who as far as we know—their views have been expressed only in the press—have decided to break from the party which it is my privilege and responsibility to lead, and that in no way alters the status of the national Social Credit party. On this basis, Mr. Speaker, unless you have some direct word from the members concerned, it would seem to me that you would have to take the action you have taken. The situation comes down to this, that a number of members of our party have chosen to separate themselves from us, and thus they stand before us officially as a group of independents.

It is not for me to define what a party is or what should constitute a party, but there has been considerable discussion in this regard on other occasions. It has been brought out on a number of occasions, particularly with regard to the allotting of time for political broadcasting on the C.B.C., and it has generally been agreed that a party must be one that has contested an election and that has fielded candidates for at least half the number of seats in the nation and has been successful in winning some of those seats.

It is my opinion that you have recommended correctly, and we will concur in the motion that is before us so that this matter can go before a committee. You can be assured, Mr. Speaker, that we will give you our wholehearted support whatever the decision may be. In fairness to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who has been speaking on behalf of the New Democratic party, on the basis of discussions we have had in the past I likewise agree that his statement is correct and that the party having the largest number of seats, provided it is a party, should be placed in the order of its numerical strength. On this basis I agree with the action you have taken and will support the motion that has been placed before the house.

[Translation]

Some hon. Members: Where is your leader?

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) will return to Ottawa around five o'clock this afternoon.

I listened closely to the remarks made earlier on this motion by the leader of the official opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), and I wondered whether he realized that what is happening today to the former Social Credit leader might also happen to him before long. It was rather shabby of him to mention that the leader of the government had rightly termed the matter of the $4,000 which could have affected the decision. I must point out to him that when that question was put to the house last July, the hon. member for Villeneuve voted against it on second reading, just as he did himself; which goes to prove that opposites attract one another.

The reference made concerning the hon. member for Villeneuve reminded me of the saying by Pascal to the effect that everything is evil to the evil-minded.

Mr. Speaker, we think it is our duty if possible to support the motion introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), but there is one thing which I noticed in your memorandum, upon which I would like to draw your attention:

> Are we facing a new party and, if so, has it been officially recognized by the house? I think it is up to the house to decide that question.

As far as we are concerned, we believe that it is not up to a political or other party to decide whether a group of members who want to form a political party have the right to do so. That is a matter for the voters to decide, if they wish their elected members to form a political party.

The voters in our ridings have elected us under the Social Credit label and so we remained. That is a well-known and officially recognized fact. We are and remain in the Social Credit, that is seventeen members who have been elected under the label of the Social Credit rally. We are therefore a group recognized by the Canadian people, by the supporters of that political party. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said, the party which is the most numerous enjoys certain privileges in the house. Therefore, I think that the Social Credit, that is the Social Credit rally should be recognized as a third opposition party in the house. As the New Democratic party numbers 17 members, we do not claim to take their place. I only want to mention one thing, Mr. Speaker, in closing my remarks, that is there are, none the less, in this house, 24 members who believe in Social Credit, and they are more numerous than those who follow socialist principles.

I hope that when the committee on privileges and elections makes its recommendations and a decision is taken, there will not be so many changes in the house.

Mr. Speaker: The house has heard the motion. Does the house agree to pass the motion?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, the following questions are to be answered today: 766, 833, 834, 863, 890, 922, 935, 947, 956, 965, 976, 977, 1024, 1028, 1035, 1046, 1049, 1083, 1084, 1085, 1087, 1095, 1102, 1104, 1105, 1118, 1121, 1122, 1123, 1130, 1135, 1139, 1140, 1142, 1143, 1144, 1146, 1147, 1148, 1152.

If starred questions 1036, 1044, 1067, may be made orders for returns, the returns can be tabled immediately.

If Your Honour would be good enough to call starred questions 705, 917, 962, 1057, 1058, 1081 and 1107, I would ask that the remaining questions stand.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give consent to making these questions orders for returns?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Peters: I should like to raise a question of privilege in relation to question No. 1024 which is answered today. I raise this question because of the fact that during the recess I ascertained that this question should have been answered before we left. Certain information must have been available to certain senior officials of one of the departments. There was a public tender called for one of these auxiliary airfields I mentioned, and it is my opinion that contempt was shown in not presenting this answer at that time in view of the fact a public tender had already been let while parliament was still in session. This information could have been made available.

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty to call the starred questions, unless there is a reply.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

*HIRING OF OUTSIDE CONTRACTORS FOR BUDGET PREPARATION

Question No. 705—Mr. Fisher:

Has the Minister of Finance or the privy council office any precedents, exact or analogous, to the hiring of outside contractors for help in preparing the budget and, if so, what are they in terms of persons, dates and minutes passed and orders issued?

Mr. Benson: Yes. Under authority of P.C. 10/7354 dated December 14, 1940, Walter Lockhart Gordon, C.A., Toronto, was appointed as special assistant to the deputy minister, Department of Finance, and was entitled to receive an allowance of $600 per month to cover living, travelling and other out of pocket expenses, and served in this capacity from December 9, 1940 to February 28, 1942.

Under authority of P.C. 4912 dated June 9, 1942, Professor Frank A. Knox, Kingston, Ontario, was appointed temporarily as assistant to the deputy minister of finance, to assist in the making of current estimates and forecasts of Canada's foreign exchange situation, and to be paid out of pocket living and travelling expenses.

Under authority of P.C. 33/11160 dated December 9, 1942, Professor V. W. Bladen, University of Toronto, Ontario, was appointed to assist the Department of Finance, on a part time basis, in making investigations and reports in regard to certain tax problems, and was paid an allowance of $20 per day for the time spent on this work, together with actual out of pocket expenses, effective November 25, 1942.

Under P.C. 29/262 dated January 23, 1948, authority was granted to pay the Bank of Nova Scotia out of pocket costs incurred as a result of making available to the Department of Finance for the periods from November 13 to 21 and from November 27 to December 19, 1947, the services of J. Douglas Gibson for work on measures made necessary by the foreign exchange situation at that time.

DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN U.S. AND CANADA

Question No. 766—Mr. Howard:

Are any matters currently under discussion or negotiation with the government of the United States of America or any agency or branch thereof, regarding the interest of both the U.S. and Canada or of interest only to Canada, and, if so, what specifically are these matters?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Discussions and negotiations on matters of common interest are being carried on continuously between the government of Canada and the government of the United States. It would be contrary to the public interest and to generally accepted practice to describe them while they are in progress or to specify all the subjects being discussed or negotiated. Both governments are, of course, conscious of the necessity for keeping the public well informed, and wherever discussions have matured to the point where a public announcement can be made this is done and, in particular, the house is appropriately informed.

PROTESTS AGAINST SALES TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS

Question No. 833—Mr. Nesbitt:

How many letters or telegrams have been received by the Minister of Finance in criticism of the imposition of the 11 per cent sales tax on (a) building materials (b) production machinery?

Answer: (a) 371 (b) 61; 54 communications were received mentioning both building materials and production machinery.

BUDGET ASSISTANCE BY OUTSIDE CONSULTANTS

Question No. 834—Mr. Gundlock:

1. In what particular taxation field or fields were each of the following persons regarded as possessing special knowledge or experience (a) Mr. D. C. H. Stanley (b) Mr. M. P. O'Connell (c) Mr. G. R. Conway and (d) Mr. R. J. Anderson?
2. On what portions of the budget were each of the said persons specifically consulted or did they give advice on to the government or minister?

Answer: 1. (a) Mr. D. C. H. Stanley has had many years of experience in the investment business and because of this experience he has been engaged by the royal commission on banking and finance to make a study for the commission.

(b) Dr. M. P. O'Connell is a former professor at the University of Toronto, has had several years of experience in the bond business, and is a specialist in the field of municipal finance.

(c) Mr. G. R. Conway is a chartered accountant who had been engaged in research on taxation at Harvard University. He has recently joined the staff of the royal commission on taxation.

(d) Mr. R. J. Anderson is a chartered accountant.

Questions

2. Messrs. Stanley, O'Connell and Conway assisted the Minister of Finance in regard to various aspects of the budget speech and resolutions, as did officers of the Department of Finance, but no record was kept of the particular aspects on which individuals were consulted or gave advice.

C.B.C.—PROGRAM EXPENDITURES AND UNION AGREEMENTS

Question No. 863—Mr. Orlikow:

1. For the years 1958, 1960, and 1962, how much money did the C.B.C. spend for dramatic and variety programs (a) purchased from the U.S.A. (b) purchased from Great Britain and (c) produced in Canada?

2. Is the C.B.C. negotiating an agreement with (a) association of radio and television employees of Canada (b) national association of broadcast engineers and technicians, and (c) "fédération des auteurs et des artistes du Canada"?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. The information requested is not readily available under the program coding used by all radio and television stations according to B.B.G. regulations. To provide explicit replies to the three parts of this question would require a large expenditure of man hours by the corporation, in isolating and collating the information. Generally speaking, it is estimated that of the corporation's annual total expenditures for fees to musicians, dramatic and other performers, writers, payments for copyrights, performing rights, etc., less than 10 per cent is paid to non-resident individuals and organizations.

2. Yes, these proceedings will continue with the assistance of a conciliation officer appointed by the Minister of Labour. (b) Yes, these proceedings will continue before a conciliation board on October 22 and 23 next. (c) Negotiations have been completed with a two year agreement effective July 1, 1963.

HYDROFOIL VESSEL RESEARCH

Question No. 890—Mr. MacEwan:

1. How long has research on hydrofoil vessels been carried out by the government?

2. What is the total cost to date of research on hydrofoil vessels including naval research costs?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1. Since 1943.

2. $2,745,702.

*USE OF THE WORDS "AIR CANADA" BY T.C.A.

Question No. 917—Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi):

1. Are the words "Air Canada", as well as the words "Trans-Canada Air Lines", used at any time in T.C.A. offices or establishments in Ottawa, Chicoutimi or elsewhere?

2. Has T.C.A. ever used both phrases in their advertisement, notices, etc., and if so, when, and where was such practice followed?

3. Has the company made a study to ascertain whether the use of the words "Air Canada" would assist control officers in the identification and direction of company aircraft in order to promote the safety and welfare of passengers on the air line?

4. Has an estimate been made of the expense which would be involved in the adding of the words "Air Canada" on each side of the fuselage of T.C.A. aircraft and, if so, what is the amount of such estimate?

Mr. Cantin: 1. Yes. Both names appear on some company signs, advertising material, etc.

2. Yes. The company has used both names in business when it was appropriate and practical.

3. The company has given that matter much thought.

4. No estimate has been made because it is impossible for reasons of security and control to use both names at the same time on the fuselage.

R.C.A.F. NON-PUBLIC MESSES

Question No. 922—Mr. Enns:

Has the R.C.A.F. regulations concerning non-public messes and, if so (a) who authorizes insurance on non-public messes at R.C.A.F. stations across Canada (b) what percentage and amount of such insurance was placed with Mr. N. D. McRae's agency at Montreal; and, of this amount, how much was recommended by R.C.A.F. station commanders (c) what insurance company does Mr. McRae represent as agent (d) what are the general terms of the coverage offered (e) what is the current rate of insurance and (f) do local insurance agents in communities adjacent to R.C.A.F. stations have an opportunity to tender on the specified insurance coverage?

Answer: (a) Yes, section 39 of the National Defence Act provides that all the non-public property of a unit shall vest in the commanding officer who shall administer such property in accordance with orders issued by the chief of the air staff, and Queen's regulations and orders stipulate that the commanding officer must obtain insurance on non-public funds and property and he alone is responsible for procurement.

(b) 88½; the R.C.A.F. station commander is responsible for selecting the insurance agency in every case.

(c) McRae and Company, 214 St. James street west, Montreal. Policies are underwritten by Lloyds of London, Canada Security Assurance Company and Norwich Fire Insurance Society.

(d) The general terms of the coverage are as follows:

Property and Merchandise

Covers: All risks of physical loss or damage from any external cause. While within any building on station premises or elsewhere, and during transportation. Including buildings and/or improvements and renovations to public buildings. Including property and/or merchandise for which M & I may be responsible, e.g. articles accepted in a check-room when a tag or check is issued. Including loss or damage to vehicles resulting from the operation of station auto clubs.

Co-insurance Requirement: 90 per cent insurance to total values at risk on station.

Dishonesty: (Merchandise, Money or Securities).

Covers: Blanket Fidelity Bond: All employees, service or civilian covered. No requirement to advise of changes in personnel.

Applicable to each employee identified. Applicable to loss when employee cannot be identified. Applicable to position of mess and institute accountant officer.

Money and Securities: Dishonesty, disappearance or destruction caused by persons, known or unknown.

While on station premises. While away from station premises, during transportation, or elsewhere. Exclusions: Loss from any bank safety deposit box. Forgery of the cheques for deposit.

Legal Liability

Covers: Employers Liability: (Civilians paid directly by non-public funds). Legal liability for bodily injuries or death. Includes Voluntary Benefits: Lost time wages and hospital and medical expenses.

(e) Insurance rates are based on the degree of risk involved. Because of factors such as unit location, number of personnel, scope of non-public operations, type of buildings and seasonal fluctuations in the size of inventories at some units, the rates in effect at any unit normally apply to that unit only.

(f) Commanding officers are expected to obtain the insurance coverage at the lowest price available. The business is not normally awarded on the basis of tender call but the insurance programs of any agent will be considered on a competitive basis. McRae and Company have tailored insurance programs to meet the needs of these stations and have been able to offer favourable rates.

RADIO AND TELEVISION—HOURS OF BROADCASTING AND EXPENDITURES

Question No. 935—Mr. Prittie:

1. How many hours of television programs for the national network originated in Toronto, Montreal (English only), Vancouver, Winnipeg, and Halifax during the years 1960, 1961, and 1962?

2. How many hours of television programs originated in each of the same centres for use in the region in which the centre is located?

3. What were the capital expenditures for television broadcasting facilities in the abovementioned centres during 1960, 1961 and 1962?

4. What were the capital expenditures for radio broadcasting facilities in the abovementioned centres during 1960, 1961, and 1962?

5. What capital expenditures are planned for television and radio broadcasting facilities in each of the above-mentioned centres for 1963 and 1964?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

R.C.A.F. STATION, SUMMERSIDE, P.E.I.—LEASE OF PROPERTY FOR SERVICE STATION

Question No. 947—Mr. MacLean (Queens):

1. Has land been leased on Department of National Defence property R.C.A.F. station, Summerside, to an oil company for a service station and, if so, what is the name of the company?

2. What is the annual rental or lease fee?

3. What service, if any, is the R.C.A.F. required to provide by way of fire protection, snow removal, or any other benefits?

4. Has the company the right to provide gasoline and oils to any but service personnel?

5. Is the service station required to pay local taxes?

6. Is it a general practice to have civilian service stations located at military bases in Canada?

Answer: 1. No land has been leased to any oil company, however, pursuant to an agreement between Canadian Petrofina Limited and the commanding officer of the R.C.A.F. station, in his capacity of administrator of non-public funds, Canadian Petrofina Limited is building on station lands allocated by the commanding officer, a service station which, upon completion, will be owned and operated by the commanding officer in his aforementioned capacity.

2. No charge is made to the commanding officer for land.

3. The following services are provided by the R.C.A.F. station facilities:

(a) Heat: $1.50 per M lbs. of steam which shall be metered by use of steam flow or condensate return meter. Should natural gas be the source of heat, this rate may be altered at the discretion of air force headquarters;

(b) Power: To be metered and charged at cost plus 10 per cent;

(c) Water: To be metered and charged at cost plus 10 per cent;

(d) Sewer: Recover an amount equal to 75 per cent of the water bill;

(e) Garbage removal: Flat rate of $5 per month;

(f) Snow removal: No fixed charge has been computed as costs vary from season to season. A charge will be levied on the basis of cost plus 10 per cent.

4. The company is not concerned with the direct operation of the retail outlet. The commanding officer, as the service station operator, may sell only to service personnel, members of their households and civilian employees of the Department of National Defence.

5. The commanding officer is responsible for all rates, taxes, assessments and license fees which may be legally levied or assessed on the installations or improvements to the land or any business carried out thereon.

6. It is not the general practice to have civilian service stations located on military bases, however, in locations not adequately serviced by existing gasoline outlets, various self-help projects similar to the Summerside arrangement are permitted.

RAILWAY TRACKS, CAMP BORDEN, ONT.

Question No. 956—Mr. Madill:

1. How many miles of government owned (Department of National Defence) railway tracks are there at Camp Borden?
2. How many men are employed in the maintenance of these tracks?
3. What is the annual labour cost of the maintenance of these tracks?
4. Is it proposed to change the system of maintaining these tracks and, if so, how many employees will be displaced?
5. Will such employees be offered alternative employment of equal rates of pay and, if not, at what rates of pay will these men be offered employment?
6. If a new system of maintenance is contemplated, what is the estimated additional cost or saving of such a system?

[Mr. MacLean (Queens).]

Answer: 1. Five and one half miles.

2. Four.

3. $14,240.16.

4. Yes, four.

5. The track foreman whose present wage scale is $1.90 per hour, will be offered employment as a trades helper at $1.48 per hour. The three trackmen, whose present wage scale is $1.48 per hour, will be offered employment at $1.43 per hour.

6. A maintenance contract is estimated to save $3,049.16 annually.

*WORLD FAIR—TOTAL FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION

Question No. 962—Mr. Fisher:

What is the estimated total contribution of the federal government to the world's fair including its share of the cost of the proposed upstream ice dam, the ramps from the Jacques Cartier bridge to the proposed Ile Notre Dame, the bridges from Ile Notre Dame to St. Helen's island and the proposed bridge from St. Helen's island to point St. Charles?

Mr. Badanai: The federal government is committed under the statute and the agreement between Quebec and the city of Montreal to provide a maximum of $20 million to the world's fair corporation. The corporation is responsible for providing services on the completed site. The federal government has also agreed to pay on the construction of an ice control structure the amount required in excess of $2½ million to be provided by the city. The amount of the excess has not been determined pending the results of engineering studies.

The federal government is not responsible for providing access by the bridges mentioned in the question.

May I add that the federal government will, like many other countries and some provinces, have an exhibit at the world fair, for which it will assume the cost.

WINTER BERTH, HYDROGRAPHIC SHIP "ACADIA"

Question No. 965—Mr. MacEwan:

In what port will the Canada hydrographic ship Acadia be berthed during the coming winter?

Mr. Benidickson: Pictou, Nova Scotia.

E.M.O. LODGING FACILITY CARDS

Question No. 976—Mr. Fisher:

1. Has EMO designed and ordered a "Canada lodging facility card—dwellings" and a "lodging facility card, commercial and congregate" and, if so, what quantity has been ordered, received, and at what cost?
2. Is such a card so framed that it enables EMO to determine the religion, language, colour of skin, and occupational class group of a citizen and, if so, what is the need and the future use for each of these categories of information?
3. Whose duty or responsibility will it be to see that these forms are filled in?
4. Where will the forms be kept?

5. Whose responsibility, and how, will the forms be kept up to date?

6. What is the total estimated administrative cost to the federal government in translating these forms into complete and useful files?

7. Are duplicate files to be kept at any central location, well protected from destruction during a nuclear attack, in order that the information cannot be irretrievably lost?

8. What communication systems will this file set-up be geared to in order to relay information and to backcheck on both lodgings and persons who may be destroyed in the nuclear attack?

Miss LaMarsh: 1. The emergency welfare services division of the Department of National Health and Welfare has designed and ordered a "Canada lodging facility card—dwelling" and a "lodging facility card, commercial and congregate".

2½ million (English and French total) "Canada lodging facility cards—dwellings" have been ordered, costing $11,400.

27,000 "lodging facility cards—commercial and congregate" have been ordered, costing $200.

This material is prepared as an aid to the provinces in carrying out responsibilities which rest with them. The extent to which it is used will depend on the views of the province. Provinces which wish to use the material are responsible for any arrangements with the municipality which are required.

2. The "Canada lodging facility card—dwellings" provides for the recording of information about the language, health, religion, origin, and occupation of residents of the dwellings concerned.

The information about any one or more than one of these factors may be recorded if, in the opinion of the municipality concerned, the use of the data relating to these factors may help to ensure the success of the long term placement of evacuees in private dwellings in that community in the event of an emergency.

Questions

3. The municipal service responsible for emergency lodging within the emergency welfare services is responsible for seeing that these cards are completed.

4. The cards should be kept in the municipal offices.

5. The municipal service responsible for emergency lodging within emergency welfare services is responsible for keeping the information on these cards up to date. There are many ways to do this, one being to combine their revision with the assessment review.

6. It is impossible to determine what municipalities are spending on this work, as the job is ordinarily done by municipal employees as part of their normal workload with assistance from volunteer workers within the emergency lodging service.

7. These cards are completed only for dwellings and buildings in reception communities, not for those in probable target areas. Therefore no duplicate cards are produced. These cards require the same care as is given to all municipal records.

8. The use of these cards is confined to the selection of accommodation in reception communities for those evacuees who are without housing due to an emergency.

MEDICAL SPECIALISTS, VETERANS AFFAIRS DEPARTMENT

Question No. 977—Mr. Chatterton:

How many medical specialists 2 are employed in the Department of Veterans Affairs, and of these (a) where are they located (b) what is each of their specialties and (c) how much salary is each of them being paid?

AUXILIARY AIR FIELDS, NORTH BAY AND EARLTON, ONT.

Question No. 1,024—Mr. Peters:

1. What plans is the government making for the immediate use or disposal of the former auxiliary fields to the air bases at North Bay and Earlton, Ontario?

2. Is it the intention of the government to dispose of these auxiliary fields and, if not, does the government intend to maintain the cleared landing field and control the weeds of these fields?

3. If it is the intention of the government to dispose of these fields, will they be disposed of by public tender?

Answer: 1. No plans are being made for the use of the former auxiliary fields to the air bases at North Bay and Earlton.

[Mr. Chatterton.]

2. It is the intention of the government to dispose of these auxiliary fields and they are no longer maintained as aerodromes.

3. Land provided by the province of Ontario for aerodrome purposes is being returned to the province. Land purchased for aerodrome purposes is being disposed of by public tender.

SILVER BOUGHT BY MINT

Question No. 1,028—Mr. Peters:

1. What was the total tonnage of silver concentrate exported to the United States last year?

2. What was the cost of silver imported into Canada for coinage purposes by the Royal Canadian Mint?

3. What was the price paid per ounce by the Canadian Mint for American silver?

4. What was the price paid for silver produced in Canada and shipped to the Royal Canadian Mint?

5. What assistance, if any, has been given by the federal government to aid in the production of silver in Canada?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1. The tonnage of silver concentrate exported to the United States in 1962 was 935 tons, which contained 2,803,300 troy ounces of silver. In addition, impure silver bullion containing 668,111 troy ounces of silver and weighing about 25 tons was exported to the United States.

The total amount of unrefined silver exported in 1962 to the United States in all concentrates, including those of lead, copper and zinc as well as of silver, was 6,751,273 troy ounces.

2. $12,985,072.82.

3. $1.164364 (average price).

4. $1.154839.

5. Silver mine producers, in common with other mine producers, are eligible for certain allowances in computing income tax. These include a 3 year tax exempt period for new mines, deferred write-off of preproduction expenses and an allowance for depletion of the ore body.

As was announced on February 1 in the House of Commons, the Royal Canadian Mint reached an agreement with Cobalt Refinery Limited to deliver from 2 to 6 million ounces of silver per year for five years, effective April 1, 1963, at competitive prices to be determined by negotiation every year the agreement is in force. This long term purchase contract provides encouragement for the production of silver in the Cobalt-Gowganda area of Ontario.

PUBLIC WORKS PROJECTS, COMPTON-FRONTENAC CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 1,035—Mr. Latulippe:

What are the projects included in the public works estimate of $4,800.00 for the constituency of Compton-Frontenac, where, and by whom will these work projects be carried out, and what are the amounts in each case?

CONSTRUCTION OF GRAIN STORAGE ELEVATORS, BRIDGEWATER, N.S.

Question No. 1,046—Mr. Crouse:

Is it the intention of the government to construct grain storage elevators at Bridgewater, Lunenburg county, N.S.?

Mr. Pickersgill: No.

PENSION INCREASES UNDER ADJUSTMENT ACT

Question No. 1,049—Mr. Knowles:

1. How many persons (retired civil servants or widows, children or orphans thereof) are receiving increases in their pensions under the provisions of the Public Service Pension Adjustment Act?

2. What is the average amount of the increases being received by (a) retired civil servants (b) widows (c) children and (d) orphans?

3. How many of such increases are (a) less than $6 per month (b) more than $6 but less than $10 per month (c) more than $10 but less than $20 per month (d) more than $20 but less than $30 per month (e) more than $30 but less than $40 per month (f) more than $40 but less than $50 per month and (g) $50 a month or more?

4. Of those now receiving such increases, in how many cases do the increases bring the total pension being received to (a) $50 per month or less (b) $50.01 to $100 per month (c) $100.01 to $150 per month (d) $150.01 to $200 per month (e) $200.01 to $250 per month and (f) more than $250 per month?

5. How many persons whose pensions (a) as retired employees, are $250 a month or less (b) as widows, are $125 a month or less (c) as children of employees, are $25 a month or less and (d) as orphans, are $50 a month or less; are receiving no increases in their pensions under the provisions of the Public Service Pension Adjustment Act?

6. Are there any persons whose pensions (a) as retired employees, are $250 per month or more (b) as widows, are $125 per month or more (c) as children, are $25 per month or more (d) as orphans, are $50 per month or more; who are receiving increases in their pensions under the provisions of the Public Service Pension Adjustment Act and, if so, how many in each category?

7. Is consideration being given to amending the Public Service Pension Adjustment Act to provide a higher scale of increases and other improvements?

Answer: 1. 10,534.

2. (a) $18.14; (b) $10.30; (c) $.92; (d) $.57 per month.

3. (a) 2,401; (b) 2,070; (c) 3,659; (d) 1,586; (e) 568; (f) 168; (g) 82.

4. (a) 3,624; (b) 3,930; (c) 2,120; (d) 558; (e) 302; (f) 0.

5. (a) 17,621; (b) 6,078; (c) 2,156; (d) 334.

6. (a) none; (b) none; (c) none; (d) none.

7. The government, after carefully considering this question, has advised representatives of retired civil servants that it will not recommend amendments to the Public Service Pension Adjustment Act at this time.

Questions

*TRANSPORT DEPARTMENT AIRCRAFT CF-OTX

Question No. 1,057—Mr. Marcoux:

1. Of what type is the Department of Transport aircraft bearing markings CF-OTX?
2. On what date, and from whom, was it purchased?
3. What was its total cost?

[Translation]

Mr. Cantin: 1, 2, 3—The department does not own or operate an aircraft bearing markings CF-OTX. It is assumed that this question concerns the Lockheed Jet Star CF-DTX purchased from the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation, Marietta Division, and accepted for delivery on January 29, 1962. The total cost of that aircraft was $1,136,000.

*PERMITS FOR EXPORTS TO RED CHINA

Question No. 1,058—Mr. Mather:

1. Within recent weeks has the government received appeals from the Gain Import Company of Vancouver concerning alleged U.S. blocking of Canadian auto part exports to mainland China?
2. Have a number of export permits issued by the government not been used because of U.S. controlled companies in Canada declining to supply goods to which export permits have been granted by the government?
3. If so, what action does the government contemplate in respect to freeing Canadian manufactured goods which have been approved by the government for export?

Mr. Pepin: 1. Yes.

2. Permits expire unless used within their period of issued validity, normally six months. It is assumed that an applicant for a permit has goods to export. The department does not inquire into the reasons why permits are not used.

3. See No. 2.

*T.C.A.—USE OF TERM "AIR CANADA"

Question No. 1,081—Mr. Marcoux:

Does the Minister of Transport intend to take action against Trans-Canada Air Lines for the irregular use of the term "Air Canada" on its timetables, tickets and posters?

[Translation]

Mr. Cantin: The use of the term "Air Canada" by the "Trans-Canada Airlines" is not irregular.

WEIGHTS OF COMMODITIES FOR RETAIL SALE

Question No. 1,083—Mr. Orlikow:

Is the government considering legislation or regulations establishing reasonable weights or quantities or fractions or multiples thereof, in which that commodity shall be distributed for retail sale?

Mr. Pickersgill: None beyond that now in effect.

[Mr. Knowles.]

COMMODITY PACKAGES FOR RETAIL SALE

Question No. 1,084—Mr. Orlikow:

Is the government considering legislation or regulations preventing the distribution of that commodity for retail sale in packages of sizes, shapes or dimensional proportions which may deceive retail purchasers as to the net quantity of the contents thereof (in terms of weight, measure or count)?

Mr. Pickersgill: None beyond that now in effect.

DESIGNATION OF CONTENTS OF PACKAGES FOR RETAIL SALE

Question No. 1,085—Mr. Orlikow:

Is the government considering legislation or regulations establishing and defining standards of designations of size (other than statements of net quantity of contents) which may be used to characterize quantitatively the contents of packages containing that commodity?

Mr. Pickersgill: None beyond that now in effect.

INGREDIENTS AND COMPOSITION OF CONTENTS OF RETAIL PACKAGES

Question No. 1,087—Mr. Orlikow:

Is the government considering legislation or regulations establishing and defining standards for the quantitative designation of the contents of packages containing any consumer commodity of a kind the net quantity of contents of which cannot meaningfully be designated in terms of weight, measure or count; and requiring (consistent with requirements imposed by or pursuant to the Food and Drugs Act, as amended) that sufficient information with respect to the ingredients and composition of any consumer commodity (other than information concerning proprietary trade secrets) be placed in a prominent position upon packages containing that commodity and upon labels affixed thereto?

Mr. Pickersgill: None beyond that now in effect.

LANDING STRIPS, NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Question No. 1,095—Mr. Rheaume:

1. Is the Department of Transport considering the establishment of emergency landing strips for any of the following communities in the Northwest Territories (a) Lac la Martre (b) Fort Rae (c) Fort Liard (d) South Nahanni (e) Fort Wrigley (f) Fort Norman (g) Fort Good Hope (h) Snowdrift (i) Arctic Red River (j) Fort McPherson (k) Coppermine (l) Spence Bay (m) Gjoa Haven (n) Arctic Bay (o) Pond Inlet (p) Pangnirtung (q) Cape Dorset (r) Chesterfield Inlet (s) Bathurst Inlet (t) Colville Lake, (u) Fort Franklin?
2. To what extent does the Department of Transport co-ordinate its plans for emergency airport construction with such other programs as the winter works projects planned by the department of northern affairs in the N.W.T.?
3. What new airports or extension to existing airports are planned for the 1963-64 fiscal year in the N.W.T.?

Answer: 1. No.

2. The department does not normally provide airports other than those required for use by scheduled and regular air line passenger service, although it makes grants in aid for construction of airstrips necessary to serve remote areas where there is a local authority to undertake the construction and operation of the strip. Any airport construction undertaken by the department in the Northwest Territories is the subject of close co-ordination with the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

3. While no new airports are planned for construction by the department in the Northwest Territories for the fiscal year 1963-64, the following extensions to existing airports are planned to proceed this year: (a) Banks island—extend existing landing strip. (b) Cambridge bay—install approach lighting for two runway approaches. (c) Inuvik—install approach lighting for two runway approaches.

MEDIUM SECURITY INSTITUTIONS

Question No. 1,102—Mr. Orlikow:

How many medium security institutions have been established by the federal and provincial governments since 1956, as recommended by the Fauteux report, and how many inmates are there in these institutions?

Mr. Chevrier: Two new medium security institutions have been built by the federal government since 1956 and two institutions that were operated as maximum security institutions are now operated under conditions of medium security. These institutions are kept as filled as is practical to their capacities of 1,850 inmates.

The federal government has no statistics of the security classifications of the provincial institutions.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY—TOLLS THROUGH NATIONAL PARKS

Question No. 1,104—Mr. Leboe:

1. Are fees charged at entrances to national parks through which the trans-Canada highway passes and, if so (a) are such fees intended to cover (i) the use of the highway (ii) the use of other park facilities (b) are travellers, who follow the trans-Canada highway and who do not stop in the national parks, compelled to pay the same fee as those who use the park facilities and (c) under what authority are commercial and other travellers charged fees for passage on the trans-Canada highway through national parks?

2. Where no comparable alternative roads exist, is the government giving consideration to the waiving of fees for travellers not using park facilities?

Answer: 1. (a) A park automobile licence has been required on vehicles used in parks in western Canada since 1928. The fee is intended to offset in part the cost of park facilities, including highways, picnic areas, and semi-serviced campgrounds provided for the motoring public.

(b) All private cars used in these parks are required to carry a park licence.

(c) National parks highway traffic regulations.

2. No, since highways in the parks are themselves the most expensive of park facilities.

FILMS FOR C.B.C.

Question No. 1,105—Mr. Thompson:

1. How many half hour, and how many one hour, programs did the C.B.C. itself produce on film last year?

2. How many half hour, and how many one hour, programs did the C.B.C. contract out to the national film board?

3. How many half hour, and how many one hour, programs did the C.B.C. contract out to private Canadian film producers?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1963 the answers are as follows:

	Half hour	One hour
1.	137	15
2.	68	1
3.	196	16

*HOMES FOR OLD AGE SECURITY RECIPIENTS

Question No. 1,107—Mr. Rynard:

1. Do any agreements exist between the federal and any provincial government with respect to shelter and/or care and board provided for old age security recipients by (a) provincial, municipal or county homes for the aged (b) private nursing homes and (c) private homes for the aged?

2. Does the federal government maintain statistics on the number and location of old age security recipients in homes for the aged and, if so (a) how many are in governmental institutions and (b) what is the breakdown by provinces?

3. Are there any joint federal-provincial arrangements with regard to the care in homes of old age security pensioners and, if so (a) what is the nature of such agreements and (b) how many provinces have entered into such agreements?

4. By virtue of caring for old age security recipients, do any homes or welfare institutions receive, either directly or indirectly, financial aid from the federal government?

Miss LaMarsh: 1. Yes. Under the Unemployment Assistance Act and agreements, the federal government reimburses the provinces and their municipalities for 50 per cent of the costs of maintaining needy persons, including old age security recipients, in homes for special care which include homes for the aged, charitable institutions and proprietary nursing homes. The payments are based on costs of operation or on rates which are set or agreed to by the provinces and their municipalities.

2. Statistics on living arrangements of old age security recipients are not maintained.

3. (a) Yes. Under the Unemployment Assistance Act, the federal government reimburses the provinces and their municipalities for 50 per cent of supplementary assistance payments to recipients of old age security living in their own homes. In order to be shareable, the payments must be based on a test of need which takes into account the recipient's requirements for items such as food, shelter, clothing, household incidentals and personal care, as well as his financial resources.

3. (b) All provinces have entered into agreements under the Unemployment Assistance Act.

4. See answer 1.

S.S. "TRITONICA"

Question No. 1,118—Mr. Orlikow:

Has the government any information concerning the vessel Tritonica, recently involved in a collision on the St. Lawrence river and, if so (a) at the time of the collision, where was the vessel registered (b) was the vessel owned, directly or indirectly, by a Canadian steamship company (c) what was the nationality of the vessel's crew, and to what union, if any, did they belong (d) did the vessel operate between Havre St. Pierre and Sorel, Quebec, and (e) was the vessel ever picketed by the S.I.U.?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes; (a) Hamilton, Bermuda; (b) no; (c) the crew was of mixed nationality, consisting of British subjects, Chinese and Burmese; it would appear that the seamen did not belong to a trade union organizing in Canada; (d) yes; (e) no.

PROCEDURE RESPECTING GRANTING OF PARDONS

Question No. 1,121—Mr. Orlikow:

Has consideration been given to the Fauteux report's recommendations with respect to (a) the establishment of a procedure for the granting of pardons, with or without condition, on a more liberal scale (b) ensuring more frequent resort to the Criminal Code provisions authorizing the governor general in council to grant pardon rather than to grant them under the royal prerogative of mercy (c) devising some means by which unjustified inequalities in the length of sentences of imprisonment, especially in the case of co-offenders, can be remedied, and (d) the granting of a free pardon, whether or not one is sought in all cases where the innocence of a convicted person is established?

Mr. Chevrier: (a) The recommendation has been under consideration for some time.

(b) Under consideration together with (a).

(c) No.

(d) There is no information that such a situation has ever arisen.

PRODUCTION OF ELECTRIC POWER BY THERMAL UNITS

Question No. 1,122—Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke):

1. What information does the government have regarding the development of high temperature thermal units for the production of electrical power; units using coal, oil or natural gas as fuel?

2. Has the government any information concerning the price per kilowatt hour of power produced by these latest units in the United States of America and the U.S.S.R.?

[Miss LaMarsh.]

Mr. Benidickson: 1. All thermal power units installed in electric utility plants in Canada since the last war are of the high pressure-high temperature type though many operate for peak power only. Summarized information, including statistical data, may be obtained from the current issue of the Canada Year Book. Detailed information on plants can be obtained from the provincial power commissions.

2. A large U.S. modern generating unit with favourable fuel costs on base load can produce electric power from 3 to 4 mills per kwh exclusive of fixed charges and administrative expenses.

Estimated, average total cost of electric power produced by a Soviet regional power station is 8 to 9 mills per kwh.

INCREASED CONSTRUCTION COSTS FROM INCREASED EXCISE TAX

Question No. 1,123—Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke):

1. Has the government assessed the probable increase in the present estimated construction costs of the Columbia river treaty projects as a consequence of the imposition of an 11 per cent excise tax on building materials and production machinery and, if so, what is the amount of this increase?

2. Has the government estimated the cumulative increase on loans for construction which may be amortized over 20, 30 or 40 years at an interest rate of 4 per cent and, if so, what is the cumulative increase for each period?

Answer: 1. No.

2. No.

R.C.M.P. PICTURES USED IN U.S. BEER ADVERTISING

Question No. 1,130—Mr. Howard:

Is the government aware that life sized (or larger) bill board style pictures of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are being used in the state of Michigan to advertise Drewry's beers and ales, and if so, has any representation been made to the appropriate U.S. authorities about the propriety of such an advertising association?

Mr. Chevrier: The government has been aware for a number of years that Drewry's Limited U.S.A., have been using life sized pictorial representations of a member of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for advertising purposes.

On May 10, 1948, a similar question was asked in the House of Commons and the minister of justice, in reply, stated that no permission was given to advertisements of this nature. The commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police has, on several occasions, brought to the attention of Drewry's Limited U.S.A., the fact that this form of advertising would not be permitted in Canada as it is contrary to the provisions of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act.

These efforts to have Drewry's Limited U.S.A., discontinue this type of advertising have been to no avail.

CONSTRUCTION OF SCHOONER "BLUENOSE II"

Question No. 1,135—Mr. Crouse:

Was the construction of Bluenose II, recently launched at Lunenburg, subsidized by the federal government and if so, (a) what is the total amount of subsidy to be paid to the owners (b) what is the estimated total cost of the ship, and (c) what percentage of total cost was used when computing the subsidy?

Answer: A construction subsidy toward the cost of Bluenose II was authorized by the federal government on January 10, 1963, but no claim for subsidy has yet been presented nor has payment of subsidy been made.

(a) Under the regulations the subsidy is paid to the shipbuilder and not to the owners; the total amount of subsidy authorized is $103,880.

(b) The estimated cost of the ship, as set out in the joint application for subsidy, is $259,700.

(c) The authorization stipulates an approved cost for subsidy purposes of $259,700 and the regulations provide for the use of 100 per cent of that sum as the basis for computing the subsidy.

CANADIAN WORKERS IN NEW ENGLAND STATES

Question No. 1,139—Mr. Dionne:

1. Does the government have statistics concerning Canadian workers employed in the states of Maine, New Hampshire, New York and Vermont each year from 1955 to 1963?

2. Have agreements been entered into between Canadian and American authorities with respect to the payment of U.I.C. benefits to Canadian workers employed in the states of New York and Vermont and, if so, what is the nature of such agreements?

Mr. MacEachen: 1. Information regarding the number of Canadian workers employed in the states of Maine, New Hampshire, New York and Vermont for the years 1955 to 1963 is not available in so far as the Department of Labour and the unemployment insurance commission are concerned.

2. Yes. These agreements provide that a person who has acquired a right to benefit in Canada, who moves to either the state of New York or Vermont and who becomes unemployed while residing there, may make a claim against Canada by visiting the local unemployement compensation office, of the state, nearest to his residence and completing an application for benefit. That office sends the application to Canada, where eligibility is determined.

The claimant reports to the state office each week and makes a declaration as to his being unemployed the previous week. This declaration is forwarded by the state office to Canada, which then makes payment direct to the claimant.

Conversely, a person who has acquired a right to benefit in either New York or Vermont, who moves to Canada and who becomes unemployed while residing there may make a claim, against the state concerned, by visiting the nearest local office of the unemployment insurance commission in Canada and completing an application for benefit. The unemployment insurance commission office forwards the application to the state concerned, where eligibility is determined.

The claimant reports to the unemployment insurance commission office each week and makes a declaration as to his being unemployed the previous week. This declaration is sent by the unemployment insurance commission office to the state concerned, which then makes payment direct to the claimant.

In summary, Canada acts as agent in taking claims for New York or Vermont for persons residing in Canada who have acquired benefit rights in either of these two states. On the other hand, these two states act as Canada's agent in taking claims for persons residing in those states and who have acquired benefit rights in Canada.

FEDERAL EXPENDITURES, KAMOURASKA-L'ISLET COUNTY, QUE.

Question No. 1,140—Mr. Dionne:

What was the cost of federal public works in the county of Kamouraska-L'Islet from 1955 to 1963 (a) for the maintenance and repairs to wharves (b) for the construction and repairs to post offices?

Answer: (a) $146,118.52; (b) $20,119.97.

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT BANK LOANS, TIMISKAMING RIDING

Question No. 1,142—Mr. Peters:

Has the industrial development bank made any loans to entrepreneurs in the riding of Timiskaming during the years 1959 to 1963 and, if so (a) how many requested loans in each year (b) how many were completed for each year, giving name and amount in each case, and (c) how many of these loans are now in default, and what are the names of the companies involved in each case?

Answer: The information requested is not available. Loan approvals are classified by provinces on pages 16 and 17 of the last annual report of the industrial development bank and by types of businesses on pages 18 and 19 of that report.

RURAL MAIL CONTRACT, SIEGAS, N.B.

Question No. 1,143—Mr. Bell:

1. Has a rural mail contract been awarded, renewed, or extended to Mr. Abel Thibodeau, R.R.1, Siegas, N.B., and, if so, were public tenders called?

2. Did the Postmaster General personally approve of this contract and, if so, under what authority?

Questions

3. Was there any increase in the existing rate of $3,095.85?

4. What was the date of approval?

5. Were complaints received concerning the service of said mail carrier during any previous contracts?

6. What is the present policy regarding tendering for mail carrier contracts above $1,000?

7. Has there been any recent change in this system?

Mr. Denis: 1. Present contract with Mr. Thibodeau for Siegas R.R.1 expires 30th September 1963 and it was our intention to renew the contract under authority of the Post Office Act, Section 31 (1). However, the contractor has asked for an increase in rate but negotiations with the contractor have not yet been completed.

2. See No. 1.

3. See No. 1.

4. See No. 1.

5. No service complaints.

6. Tenders must be called for a new contract, but an expiring contract may be renewed with the same contractor.

7. No.

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND MEETING

Question No. 1,144—Mr. Thompson:

1. Will Canada be sending a delegate to the meeting of the international monetary fund in September and, if so, who will be the delegate?

2. Will matters relating to international trade and settlements be discussed at this meeting?

3. Will Canada have any specific plan or policy to submit on this question?

4. Does Canada have any official policy on international monetary arrangements (e.g., a preference for a flat money system rather than the use of gold for international settlements)?

5. Will the House of Commons have an opportunity to discuss any arrangements that will be made before they become binding on this country?

Answer: 1. The Minister of Finance, Hon. Walter L. Gordon, is the governor for Canada of the international monetary fund and will be attending.

2. Yes.

3. Any announcement of government policy will be made in due course.

4. Canadian policies in these fields are represented in the management of government affairs including foreign exchange reserves and in the objects and operations of the international organization such as the international monetary fund of which Canada is a member.

5. Yes.

USE OF AIRPORT RUNWAYS, BOUNDARY BAY, B.C.

Question No. 1,146—Mr. Mather:

Are runways at the disused Boundary Bay, B.C. airport being used from time to time for go-cart racing?

[Mr. Bell.]

Answer: No, go-cart racing has never been permitted on the runways at the Vancouver wireless station, Boundary Bay, B.C. However, five dependant children, ages 12 to 15 years, living on the station have purchased or constructed go-carts and have been permitted the use of a disused section of the runways

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FUND

Question No. 1,147—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

1. From May 16 to August 1, 1963, what has been the net change in the balance of the unemployment insurance fund, not including government subsidies and reimbursements of them?

2. From May 16 to August 1, 1963, in what amount was the unemployment insurance fund subsidized by government loans?

3. As of August 1, in what amount has the government been reimbursed for the above loans?

Mr. MacEachen: 1. Not available.

2. $5 million.

3. $33 million.

CONTRACT WITH BUSINESS CONSULTANTS, PUBLIC PRINTING AND STATIONERY

Question No. 1,148—Mr. Fisher:

1. Is treasury board aware of any employment by the Department of Public Printing and Stationery of the services of any business consultants during the years 1961 and 1962 and, if so (a) what was the name of the business consultant firm (b) when was the contract authorized, and by whom, and (c) what was the contract price?

2. If the employment was terminated (a) by whose authority (b) for what reason and (c) what was the final price paid?

Answer: (a) P. A. Management Consultants Ltd. (b) October 5, 1961, by treasury board. (c) $111,600 (estimated), plus travelling and subsistence when consultants are engaged on the department's business away from the office or plant to which they are assigned, based on a fee of $900 per week per consultant, plus travelling and subsistence.

2. The treasury board has received no submission from the Department of Public Printing and Stationery concerning the termination of the contract.

SUPPLY OF "HANSARD" TO NEWS DISTRIBUTING MEDIA

Question No. 1,152—Mr. Smith:

1. Are copies of Hansard supplied to all daily and weekly newspapers in Canada and, if so, upon what terms?

2. Is Hansard supplied to radio and television stations maintaining their own news and/or editorial staffs upon the same basis as newspapers?

Mr. Drury: In so far as the Department of Public Printing and Stationery is concerned—

1. Copies of Hansard are sent to those daily and weekly newspapers in Canada who supply a copy of their paper to the reading room of the House of Commons. The necessary copies distributed by the Department of Public Printing and Stationery are supplied by the House of Commons.

2. Hansard is not supplied free to radio and television stations.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

WINTER WORKS PROJECTS, COMPTON-FRONTENAC CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 1,036—Mr. Latulippe:

1. Have one or several applications from the town of East Angus in the constituency of Compton-Frontenac, been received for federal assistance in winter works projects and, if so, (a) for what projects, and what are the respective amounts granted in each case (b) has the federal government received claims from the provincial auditor for payment of the federal share?

2. Have one or several applications from the town of Cookshire in the constituency of Compton-Frontenac been received for federal assistance in winter works projects and, if so (a) for what projects, and what are the respective amounts granted in each case (b) has the federal government received claims from the provincial auditor for payment of the federal share?

3. Have one or several applications from other municipalities in the constituency of Compton-Frontenac been received and, if so (a) what municipalities (b) what were the works projects in each (c) what sums were granted in each case (d) were claims made by the provincial auditor for each of these cases?

Return tabled.

EXPENDITURES ON CAMP SITES AND PICNIC GROUNDS

Question No. 1,044—Mr. Hamilton:

1. What is the total amount spent by the federal government on camp sites and picnic grounds under all programs in the fiscal years 1957-58 to 1962-63 and, of this, what amount was spent in each province?

2. What is the estimated number of camp grounds and picnic sites, by provinces, that have resulted from (a) the trans-Canada program and (b) the winter works camp ground and picnic site program?

3. Is there any estimate, by provinces, of camp ground spaces that their program provided and, if so, what is the number by provinces?

Return tabled.

TOURIST PROMOTION EXPENDITURES

Question No. 1,067—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. What was the total dollar value of the tourist industry to the Canadian economy in 1962?

2. What was the total grant made by the government of Canada to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in 1962?

3. What role does the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation play in encouraging the tourist industry through (a) its television facilities (b) its radio facilities and (c) its overseas transmissions?

4. Does the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation have any plans to expand its tourist promotion activities?

Return tabled.

Inquiries of the Ministry

LABOUR RELATIONS

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—THREATENED STRIKE OF LONGSHOREMEN

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the serious consequences to the movement of grain through the St. Lawrence ports, what action is the government contemplating to abort the threatened walkout of longshoremen at Three Rivers, Quebec and Montreal on Friday? What is the general plan, and what is being done in this connection?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it the strike vote was taken yesterday among the longshoremen following a recommendation from a committee within their organization which had previously decided to reject the unanimous report of the conciliation board that had dealt with this dispute. Within the law a legal strike cannot occur until Friday of this week. In the meantime the Department of Labour is keeping in touch with the situation, and every possible consideration is presently being given to what constructive role the department, or a representative named by the department, might take in resolving the difficulty before the expiry of the strike notice.

Mr. Diefenbaker: As a supplementary question, is this threatened strike in any way attributable to the close relationship which existed in the past between Hal Banks of the S.I.U. and the international longshoremen's association?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the outcome at the present time is the direct result of a long series of steps taken since the beginning of this year to reach a work contract between the Shipping Federation of Canada and the longshoremen's union. That is, of course, a sequence of events with which I think we are all familiar. I do not comment, nor do I have any knowledge which would allow me to comment, on any association between this particular decision and Mr. Banks.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): As a supplementary question, in the event that no solution is possible between the two parties to this dispute, is the minister contemplating or planning putting in a mediator in order to bring about a settlement prior to a strike?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I think my answer to the Leader of the Opposition indicated that this is one of the possible lines of action that might be taken by the department.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. L. P. Antoine Belanger (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. I apologize for not giving him notice of my question.

Is the government contemplating action to protect Canadian seamen in danger of losing their jobs to American seamen, because of the dispute between the various seamen's unions?

[Text]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge of this particular aspect of the problem, namely that there is some threat to Canadian jobs from United States seamen. I have no information on that point. I would be glad to receive any, however.

GREAT LAKES—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRESENT POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Will he make a statement regarding the negotiations or discussions that he has had with the secretary of labour of the United States? Furthermore, on the basis of discussions either with Mr. Wirtz or with labour union leaders has any settlement been arrived at with respect to the situation on the great lakes? It is very important that we have this information to know whether the government intends to proceed at once to take action to ratify certain suggestions of the Norris commission.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity provided by the Leader of the Opposition to say a word or two about this very important matter. The intention of the government at the present time is to proceed with the legislation setting up the trusteeship and I think that the resolution preliminary to the bill itself will appear on the notice paper tomorrow.

When I announced the decision of the government with respect to the public trusteeship I stated that the interval would provide an opportunity to search for a possible alternative method for a private settlement undertaken by the labour centres in Canada and the United States. We have used this interval to hold discussions directed toward that objective. On the week end we held a meeting in Boston with the secretary of labour of the United States and representatives of both the United States trade union movement and the Canadian trade union movement. From that meeting no solid foundation developed to lead us to believe that we can obviate the necessity of proceeding with this legislation.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I think I should tell the house in all fairness that I have some faint hope that if we get a break in the next short time we may be in a different position in several days, but at the moment the decision is to proceed at the earliest possible opportunity, having given the necessary notice, with the trusteeship legislation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thank the minister and ask him to tell the house what he meant by those words, "if we get a break"?

Mr. MacEachen: May I say, Mr. Speaker, that in these discussions there have been certain lines of possibility opened up on the week end, and if those lines lead to a fortunate consideration or decision there may be an alternative present itself. However, at the moment, I cannot give any assurance nor would I wish to mislead the house on that point. It was for this reason I wanted to indicate that possibility.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): May I ask a supplementary question? Would this possibility have the same desired effect as the recommendation of Mr. Justice Norris?

Mr. MacEachen: In my statement on August 1, I indicated that any substitute action would necessarily have to be effective action. When I use the word "effective" I mean that it would have the effect of restoring peace on the great lakes and on the waterfront, and provide for clean and democratic unionism.

Mr. Starr: What I was referring to in particular was the recommendation of Mr. Norris concerning the disposal of Mr. Banks as head of the union. Will this alternative now being contemplated have the same desired effect?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it would be prudent for me to go beyond the statement of these two particular objectives.

PENSIONS

INQUIRY AS TO CONSIDERATION OF LEGISLATION THIS SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the statement he made on television last night will the measure to provide for a contributory pension plan be proceeded with in this session, or will he wait until he has final approval from the province of Ontario before making further progress with the matter?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the procedure with regard to this matter will be determined by developments and decisions that will be taken by the provinces concerned, including the province of Ontario. I cannot make any further statement at this time on the matter.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, can the Prime Minister say whether the government will ask the house today to proceed with the other legislation raising old age pensions by $10 a month?

Mr. Pearson: We shall get to that in a few minutes.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Since the Minister of National Health and Welfare visualizes, as a possible result of a large state controlled pension fund such as that envisaged by Mr. Lesage of Quebec, a degree of government control tantamount to that under national socialism in Germany, will the Prime Minister inform the house whether her statement in this regard represents the official government view?

Mr. Pearson: The government's view will be made known in due course, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is a very poor answer.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can he tell the house whether the Minister of National Health and Welfare was speaking on behalf of the government when she stated, as reported by the Globe and Mail, that the Quebec government's pension plan is along nazi lines.

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: I have no knowledge that the minister made any such statement; therefore the question cannot be the subject of a reply.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: I wish to put a supplementary question. Does the Prime Minister intend to advise the Minister of Justice to dispatch a R.C.M.P. squad in the province of Quebec to check the rise of nazism?

[Text]

[Later:]

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare having to do with the Canada pension plan. I should like to know whether any effort is being made by herself, or by the government, or both, to try to bring Mr. Lesage into the plan in order that it may be truly a Canadian pension plan. I am sure the hon. lady would agree that the participation of Quebec in this plan is just as important as the participation of Ontario.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I think the hon. member knows that two provinces, Ontario and Quebec, have been asked to nominate members to attend technical committees to discuss this question of pensions.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

PENHOLD, ALBERTA—USE AS JET TRAINING BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. During the past few weeks an apparent reversal of policy has been reported in the press regarding the extension of the R.C.A.F. base at Penhold into a jet aircraft training base. Because this is causing a good deal of concern and confusion throughout central Alberta I would ask the minister whether it is correct that his department does not intend to carry through with plans which are completed even to the extent of having received tenders for construction work and, if not, what are his reasons for reversing the decision of his department?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is true that the Royal Canadian Air Force had planned to use the R.C.A.F. station Penhold for jet training. In order to accomplish this there were certain things that had to be undertaken. These included the acquisition of additional land, the extension of the runways and the determination of whether there was sufficient available air space to make jet training feasible. Some additional land was in the process of being acquired and tenders were called for the extension of the runways, but in the course of the negotiations with the Department of Transport with respect to the use of available air space it became obvious that sufficient air space could not be made available to make jet training at Penhold feasible. It was this fact that determined beyond peradventure that the department had no course open to it other than abandoning jet training at R.C.A.F. Penhold.

Mr. Thompson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In the light of the remarks of the Minister of National Defence I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport or, in his absence, to his parliamentary secretary. This being the case, how can he explain the position of the Department of Transport regarding the conflict with normal air lane traffic having left it to this very late date when preparations had been made, as has been stated, by the Department of National Defence, and when it was a foregone conclusion that the development would be proceeded with forthwith?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): I will take the question as notice, Mr. Speaker, and bring it to the attention of the minister.

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am not at all sure that the last question asked by the hon. member for Red Deer was in order. It seems to me he was advancing an opinion rather than asking a question. If that is true, I do not think a supplementary question can be asked. If the hon. member has a direct question to put, he may put it.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): My question is supplementary to the one that was in order, Mr. Speaker. I would like to direct my question to the Minister of National Defence. Is it not a fact that the minister reversed the position that he took about three weeks ago in reference to this matter because of a conflict with his colleague the Minister of Transport?

Mr. Hellyer: No, Mr. Speaker. As soon as the facts were before me the decision was obvious.

An hon. Member: So you made the first decision without having the facts.

[Later:]

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence. In the light of the views expressed today with regard to the Penhold site, could the hon. gentleman tell us if Saskatoon is being considered as a possible location for the R.C.A.F. jet training base?

Mr. Hellyer: The R.C.A.F. is looking at a number of sites in western Canada for its jet training. A number of other stations where this training could take place are presently available and no decision has yet been reached. As soon as a decision has been made we shall announce it.

Mr. S. J. Enns (Portage-Neepawa): Is one of those other sites the R.C.A.F. station at Macdonald?

Mr. Hellyer: I do not think it is being considered, but I am sure it will not be overlooked.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humboldt-Tisdale-Melfort.

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Tisdale-Melfort): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, but the question I intended to direct to the Minister of Trade and Commerce pertaining to Churchill has already been asked by the hon. member for Churchill.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NUCLEAR WARHEADS—REQUEST FOR PARLIAMENTARY CONSIDERATION OF AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister and ask him whether it is the intention of the government to lay before parliament for approval the agreement recently signed by the Canadian and United States governments regarding the conditions under which nuclear warheads would be made available to Canadian forces.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my hon. friend for giving me notice of his question. The answer is in the negative. The agreement to which my hon. friend refers is not a treaty or heads of state agreement, which would require ratification and the customary prior approval of the House of Commons. It is an executive agreement, an exchange of notes between governments. The customary and appropriate constitutional procedures have been followed in respect of this matter, which has already been discussed in the House of Commons.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the changed circumstances brought about by the nuclear test ban agreement, does the Prime Minister not think this is a matter which ought to be submitted for the opinion of the house?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the nuclear test ban agreement, which we all welcome, changed the situation in respect of this particular matter in a way which requires the government to alter the normal constitutional procedures with regard to it.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister be prepared to table that agreement?

Mr. Pearson: As I announced at the time the agreement was signed, there were military details in this exchange of notes which, in accordance with NATO practice and considerations of military security, could not be made public, as I am sure my right hon. friend will appreciate.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is it not possible to produce excerpts from the agreement other than the actual sections which come within military security? Surely the Canadian people have a right to know something of the subterranean operations that have gone on.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, when the press statement was issued all the information which it was possible to give was given, and the procedure which was followed was that which I am quite sure the right hon. gentleman would have followed in similar circumstances if he had brought to a conclusion the draft agreement which he was considering at the time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I still ask the right hon. gentleman whether this cannot be done. There was a tremendous reversal of opinion on his part in this connection.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will he not consider tabling the sections of the agreement which do not contravene security? That is the simple question.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman of course knows, because he has followed the procedure himself in the past, that in an exchange of notes of this kind dealing with military matters, to take out of an agreement two or three paragraphs and make them public would not only be a breach of security but would be a quite improper constitutional procedure.

Mr. Pigeon: The Nobel prize answer.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Quite improper politically, possibly.

[Later:]

[Translation]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lucien Plourde (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the federal government received official or unofficial protests from the Quebec government concerning the acquisition of nuclear arms by Canada, and their storage at La Macaza, in the province of Quebec? If so, what has been the reply of the government?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: To my knowledge no such protests have been received.

BOBCAT PERSONNEL CARRIERS—INQUIRY AS TO PRODUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. I should like to ask him if the production of the armoured personnel carrier called the Bobcat has been discontinued?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): No, it has not, Mr. Speaker. Production of the prototype model is still continuing.

Mr. Churchill: Is it the intention to continue production or has the minister given instructions to discontinue it after the present program has been completed?

Mr. Hellyer: There have been no instructions, Mr. Speaker. There are 20 prototypes being produced. They have not yet been accepted as technically acceptable to the armed forces. If there is any further word on that, it will be announced.

PARLIAMENT HILL

COLLECTION OF OVERPAYMENTS TO CHAR STAFF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the house leader in his capacity as Secretary of State. I refer to a press article of this morning from which it would appear that the char staff on parliament hill have been subject to the collection of what is alleged to be an overpayment during the summer, which has led to their receiving very, very small pay cheques. Has the matter been brought to the attention of the minister and is any action contemplated?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that strictly this question comes within my constitutional purview, but since Your Honour cannot answer the question I can assure the house that it will be taken into immediate consideration and that any redress that can be made will be made as quickly as possible.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

WINNIPEG—TRANSFER OF OVERHAUL AND MAINTENANCE BASE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question concerning the T.C.A. overhaul and maintenance base in Winnipeg. My question will not take him by surprise because he has received a telegram from E. A. Smith, the chairman of the special committee on this subject.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he is now prepared to announce his decision concerning this base, in order to honour the commitment he made during the election campaign and when he met with the Manitoba delegation on June 18.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will undoubtedly honour the commitments I have made on this matter, which have been misrepresented in so many quarters. The decision of the government in this matter will be made known as soon as it has been able to give consideration to all the factors involved, including the report in question, which is only one factor.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could ask a supplementary question of the Prime Minister. The Winnipeg Tribune of Thursday, September 26, quotes Mr. Molgat, the provincial leader in Manitoba, as saying concerning this overhaul and maintenance base—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Churchill:—that he had no assurances "at present" that the base would be retained "except statements by Mr. Pearson in December". Do we take it from this that the Prime Minister gave certain assurances to Mr. Molgat in December that the base would be maintained in Winnipeg?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I gave no assurances to Mr. Molgat that I have not already given in public and about which my hon. friend knows.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. In view of the fact that plans are under way in Manitoba for another delegation to come to Ottawa on this matter, can the Prime Minister say whether the government's announcement will be made soon, so this delegation can ascertain whether or not it will have to make the trip?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I hope the announcement will be made at the earliest possible date.

TRADE

WHEAT—INQUIRIES AS TO SALE TO RUSSIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, there is talk among farmers that the price had to be greatly lowered, by 25 cents to 30 cents a bushel, in relation to the March future price at Chicago in order to close the wheat deal with the Russians. Can the Minister of Trade and Commerce give us some idea of the price sacrificed per bushel on this Russian wheat deal?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for making the first reference in this house to this magnificent transaction.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sharp: I should have been very reluctant to do so myself.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Sharp: May I assure my hon. friend that the reports he referred to are pure fiction. The Canadian wheat board entered into the contract with the Soviet authorities at the going market price at that time.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): A supplementary question of the minister. What was the going market price at that time?

Mr. Sharp: As the hon. gentleman knows, the Canadian wheat board does not reveal its transactions. If the hon. gentleman would like to know what going market prices were at that time he has only to look at the list.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. As I understand it, the minister informed the newspapers of this country that it was a $500 million deal. If he can tell the newspapers what the price was, then surely he can disclose that fact to this House of Commons.

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In light of the very disturbing reports that none of the shipments of grain to Russia will be exported through the port of Churchill, can the minister tell the house how this unbelievable situation has arisen, and would he also take another look at the situation and see whether a good portion of this grain can go through this port by means of keeping it open a little longer this fall?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to answer this question. I received notice from the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam that he would ask the same question. Although the feasibility of using Churchill for shipments to the Soviet union was a matter of discussion between the Canadian wheat board and officials of the U.S.S.R., it was not found possible to use Churchill as a port of exit for the grain recently sold to that country. This important port has a heavy program for this navigation season, and it is expected that Churchill will have a record high volume of wheat movement this year. I have before me the figures of recent movement, and for those who are familiar with the subject the estimated movement for this crop season will be 22,500,000 bushels, which I think everyone will recognize is a new record. The Soviet union required shipment prior to the opening of the 1964 Churchill navigation season, and the contracts were drawn up accordingly.

The government is very anxious to maximize the movement of wheat through Churchill. It is very conscious of the advantages of moving wheat in that direction, not only to the farmers but in order to reach as high a volume of exports as possible this season. The Canadian wheat board have advised that they are still prepared to enter into further commitments for shipment out of Churchill this fall. Account must be taken, however, of the buyers' wishes in this regard, and to date the fact is that no buyer has been prepared to charter vessels for Churchill that would involve movement beyond October 20. In this connection marine insurance is increased on October 15 and no insurance is available after October 20.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): A supplementary question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In light of reports that most, if not all, of the flour shipments in this Russian deal are going through the port of Halifax, would the minister be prepared to state the government's intentions in this regard in regard to all eastern ports, since flour is the most lucrative commodity for the communities involved?

Mr. Sharp: All I can say to the hon. member is that everything possible is being done to export every bushel of wheat and every barrel of flour that can be moved out of our ports this year. If there are any suggestions that any hon. members have for ways in which the total movement might be increased, we would be very happy to have them.

Mr. Kindt: A supplementary question. Was the wheat deal with Russia on the basis of Canadian funds or U.S. funds or sterling? If it was on the basis of Canadian funds, was the exchange rate of 92½ cents to the U.S. dollar kept in mind and the Canadian wheat farmer protected? We are all happy about the Russian sale—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Kindt: —but I would like to make sure the Canadian farmer has been protected.

Mr. Sharp: All I wish to assure my hon. friend of is this. The Canadian wheat board does everything possible to get the highest possible price and to safeguard the interests of the farmers for whom they act.

Mr. Kindt: Yes, but was it made in Canadian or U.S. funds?

Mr. Sharp: The Canadian wheat board fixes its price in Canadian dollars but is willing to accept U.S. funds or sterling as long as they can be converted to Canadian funds.

Mr. Kindt: But was the contract in terms of Canadian funds or U.S.; I mean the over-all contract?

Mr. Sharp: The Canadian wheat board always sells its grain at the going market prices which are expressed in Canadian funds. It does not really matter to the Canadian wheat board how the transaction is carried on as long as the wheat board gets its price and gets its money.

Mr. Simpson: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The most recent publication of the Manitoba Co-Operator carries a statement by the president of the St. Lawrence seaway, Mr. R. J. Rankin, which indicates that it is probably intended to keep the St. Lawrence seaway open longer this year if possible. This statement and these plans have apparently been made since the Russian wheat deal was finalized. Could not the same situation apply as far as Churchill is concerned? Were the Russian negotiators made aware of all the desirable features of shipping out of Churchill?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I can assure the hon. member that the Canadian wheat board did everything possible to ship as much wheat as possible through Churchill. The fact that they were not able to persuade the Soviet union to take more out of Churchill was simply because they found that, everything considered, it was better to take the wheat out of other ports in this season. We are still hopeful that in 1964, if there can be a renewal or extension of this agreement, Churchill will be used.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): I have a complementary question for the hon. minister. I wonder whether the minister would elaborate on the remarks which he is supposed to have made during his recent pilgrimage to western Canada, when he told the western grain growers that the Russian wheat deal was more or less a fluke, that they were not to expect a repeat and should be encouraged to grow less wheat?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wellington South.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Martineau: Well, I wonder whether the minister would care to give an answer.

Mr. Sharp: May I say, Mr. Speaker, that if what the hon. member says I said is true, then I was misquoted.

Mr. Martineau: Well, what did the minister say on that occasion?

LABOUR CONDITIONS

BRANTFORD, ONT.—DESIGNATION AS DISTRESSED AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, perhaps we can bring the questioning round to a more central part of Canada. I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry. In view of the great difficulty of attracting new industries to the Kitchener-Guelph-Galt area due to Brantford having been designated a distressed area, I am wondering whether the minister would consider removing Brantford from the list of designated or distressed areas in Canada.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): I am sure the hon. member is aware that employment in the Brantford national employment service area is, and has been for a number of years, at a much lower level than in the Guelph area. In view of this disadvantage which the Brantford area has suffered over a number of years I am sure he would not wish it to be placed at a continuing disadvantage in favour of the Guelph area which, for one reason or another, has been more favoured than Brantford over the past years.

Mr. Hales: A supplementary question. Would the minister, recognizing the proximity of these two cities, which are only 35 miles away from each other, consider putting both of them, or all the cities in this area, on an equal basis?

Mr. Drury: I would be glad to consider it.

(Translation):

CRITERIA USED FOR DESIGNATION OF DISTRESSED AREAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the President of the Privy Council a question.

Is it true that it was stated by the President of the Privy Council that the criteria used to determine the economically "depressed areas" were not final criteria, and were the discussions concerning those criteria held in cooperation with the provincial governments of the country?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I do not recall having made any such statement.

QUEBEC—REPORTED INCREASE IN NUMBER OF UNEMPLOYED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): May I direct a question to the Minister of Labour? In view of the ever increasing number of people out of work in the province of Quebec, can the minister tell the house whether he has taken steps to reduce the number of unemployed in that province in the years to come?

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I think the facts indicate the contrary to the assertions made by my hon. friend.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

REPORTED CANCELLATION OF AIRCRAFT SALES TO U.S.

[Translation]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Industry? Is it true that the United States have recently cancelled a $31 million order for Cariboo planes? If this is the case, does the minister think that such an action might be interpreted as a retaliation against the Canadian government, in view of the latter's intention to expand our automotive industry?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to confirm such a cancellation, and I am confident that the United States will continue to place orders with the de Havilland Company.

[Text]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ST. JOHN'S, NFLD.—CONSTRUCTION OF TELEVISION STATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Richard Cashin (St. John's West): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. I wonder if the hon. gentleman could inform the house when the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation will be granted a licence to operate a television station in the city of St. John's.

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): The government this morning authorized the Minister of Transport to issue such a licence.

INDUSTRY

NOVA SCOTIA—ESTABLISHMENT OF HEAVY WATER PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I have a question for the Prime Minister. I apologize for not having given him notice but I am sure he is familiar with the subject matter. In view of the favourable industrial climate created by the government of the province of Nova Scotia, is the right hon. gentleman prepared to announce now that a heavy water plant will be established in that province?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Urgent consideration is being given to this very important question and a decision will be announced shortly.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF PRESIDENT

[Translation]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Beaule (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Since the term of office of Mr. Donald Gordon, the president of the Canadian National Railways, expires today, can the Prime Minister disclose the name of Mr. Gordon's successor?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. The term of office of Mr. Donald Gordon as a director of Canadian National Railways expired today, that is true; but under the Canadian National Railways Act a director whose term of office has expired remains a director until a successor is appointed, and he himself is eligible for reappointment. An announcement on this matter will be made in a few days.

An hon. Member: In the house?

Mr. Pearson: In the house.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Prime Minister assure the house that he will not appoint Mr. Gordon for another term of office until he has appeared before the committee on railways, air lines and shipping?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: I said an announcement would be made on this matter in a few days. That is all I can say about it at the moment.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Gregoire: May I ask the Prime Minister if it is possible to wait until the president of the C.N.R. comes before the sessional committee on railroads?

Mr. Pearson: I shall be very glad to take that suggestion into consideration.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. Is it true that the government intends to replace Mr. Gordon by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier)?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: We do not intend to replace him by the hon. gentleman, I assure you.

HOUSING

EFFECT ON RENTS OF OLD AGE PENSION INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Webster (Vancouver-Kingsway): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Is it true, as reported, that old age pensioners living in housing projects financed by federal money have been given assurance that their rents will not be increased when they receive the anticipated advance in their pensions?

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): I wish to thank the hon. member for having given me notice of his intention to ask this question. In view of the interest in this subject perhaps I could best answer it by saying that there are 220 National Housing Act projects in Canada lived in by over 8,000 elderly persons. In these 220 projects, because of changes in local taxes and costs of administration, rents occasionally have to be increased. As the minister responsible for housing I instructed Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation early in September to inform all limited dividend companies operating elderly persons' projects that no rental changes are to be made without the written consent of the corporation.

In addition to such projects nearly 1,000 rental units have been built in Canada for elderly persons under special agreements between the federal and provincial governments. The same sort of units are available for other low income families and in most instances the rents are geared to income. Here again I have asked Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to recommend to our provincial partners in such schemes that there be no automatic increase in the rentals to elderly persons because of the raising of pensions. Should a rental adjustment prove necessary for any reason in such federal-provincial arrangements, I would request the joint concurrence of the federal-provincial partners before any change is made.

It is intended that the above steps will ensure that the higher pensions, when they become effective, will not be automatically dissipated in higher rentals in any accommodation built under the provisions of the National Housing Act.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I wonder whether the minister will ensure the return of the Stanfield government by arranging to participate in the Nova Scotia provincial election?

Mr. Fred F. Stenson (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, my question could be supplementary to that asked regarding the Canada pension bill. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether it is his intention to replace the Minister of National Health and Welfare after his statement of last night that the government needs the support of the Ontario government to bring forward a strong pension act.

AGRICULTURE

SUPPLIES OF FEED GRAIN FOR EASTERN FARMERS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Can the minister tell the house if the plentiful harvest in the western provinces will enable eastern farmers to buy their wheat at the same price as the Russians?

[Text]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the translation was faulty, but I do not know whether the hon. gentleman referred to wheat or corn. Did he mean corn in the generic sense or did he mean corn like maize?

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I shall repeat my question. I asked the minister if, in view of the fact that the wheat crop in western Canada this year is abundant, the eastern farmers would be able to buy their wheat at the same price as the Russians?

[Text]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I cannot, of course, give any assurance about the price of wheat. This is completely within the control of the Canadian wheat board. I can tell my hon. friend, however, that very special efforts are being made to assure that the needs of eastern farmers, as far as supply is concerned, will be adequately protected.

TRANSPORT

RAILWAY BRANCH LINES—SUGGESTED POSTPONEMENT OF ACTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of Transport but in his absence perhaps the Prime Minister would take it. Considering the valuable contribution that the branch railway lines are making in facilitating the delivery of grain as a result of the recent large sales, would the government give consideration to delaying any additional railway line abandonments until such time as a further study can be made in the light of this new development?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad to discuss this matter with the Minister of Transport. I know how important it is.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

INQUIRY AS TO REASONS FOR INCREASED RATES

[Translation]

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General.

I should like the minister to give us the reason for the substantial increase in the rate of money orders and other instruments or services provided by his department, which causes much confusion.

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the increases have become necessary for various reasons and particularly because of the deficits accumulated under the previous administration; second, in order to set up the normal additional mail delivery services which were put off by the previous administration.

Mr. Martineau: Could the hon. minister tell us—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure hon. members will have taken note of the fact it is now nearly 4.20 p.m. This is the opening day of the resumed session. There is some very pressing and important legislation to come before the house. While it is not my desire to stop the question period, some hon. members have asked two or three questions and I am wondering whether we could not limit questions to two or three more in the next few minutes and get on with the business before the house.

INCOME TAX

QUEBEC—REPORTED DELAY IN MAKING REFUNDS

[Translation]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Remi Paul (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue.

Could the minister inform the house of the reasons for the delay in reimbursing the taxpayers from Montreal and the neighbouring areas the amount of taxes paid in excess during 1962 and, so as to make up for that delay, would the government consider paying interest on these amounts not yet reimbursed, as must do the taxpayer who is late in filing his return?

[Text]

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first part of the hon. gentleman's question may I say I will be glad to take it as notice and bring forward the answer that I am sure he sincerely desires.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS—REQUEST FOR EARLY MEETING OF COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to either the house leader or the chief government whip? In view of the fact that the house today, by unanimous decision, has referred a matter to the committee on privileges and elections, will one of these gentlemen see to it that a meeting of that committee is called right away so that it might deal with the matter? I realize that normally one would address this question to the chairman of the committee, but it is my understanding that the committee has not met, is not organized, and does not have a chairman.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I am sure that the chief whip and I will both look into the matter.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): May I ask a supplementary question? In view of the situation which has arisen within the Social Credit party, can the house leader give some indication how he expects to resolve the problem of deciding upon the membership of the Social Credit party on that committee? Are they going to be followers of the leader of one of the splits, or followers of the other?

Mr. Pickersgill: This presents no problem whatever. The committee has already been set up by the house. Its membership is known, and until someone asks to have a change made in it, the committee will be as the house already has decided.

QUEBEC—ADMINISTRATION OF ESKIMO AFFAIRS

[Translation]

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Could he tell the house what progress has been made with respect to the discussions regarding the possible transfer to the government of the province of Quebec of the federal government's jurisdiction over Eskimo affairs?

[Text]

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): In reply to the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, I would tell him that we have had some discussions with the province of Quebec and there have been some discussions by various people with the press and with others. I expect further communications from the officers of the province of Quebec, and we will be glad to meet with them. There has been no substantial change in the relations existing with the province of Quebec or in our responsibility towards the Eskimo people.

Mr. Martineau: May I ask a supplementary question. Does the minister plan an early meeting with the minister of national resources of the province of Quebec on that subject?

Mr. Laing: I rather expect I will be hearing from him very quickly, and I will be glad to see him.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF DRAFT AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): May I ask a question of the Prime Minister in connection with the Columbia river? What details are still to be settled? Are they major details or merely administrative?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): There are only one or two details that remain to be settled. Whether or not one would call them major is a matter of opinion. They are important. I have no doubt this matter will be cleared up very shortly.

Mr. Pugh: Are there any changes to be made of major importance in relation to the original treaty signed with the United States?

Mr. Pearson: It is a matter of opinion whether or not they are major. There have been changes agreed upon by the two governments, and I think they are important changes. They have been agreed upon by both governments and by the government of British Columbia as well.

There is one other, I think, outstanding matter between the government of British Columbia and the United States government and we hope that will be cleared up shortly, too.

Mr. Pugh: Is there any time limit set on this now? Has the Prime Minister any word of comfort for those in British Columbia that this matter will be settled shortly?

Mr. Pearson: I will be anxious to give a word of comfort to the people of British Columbia tomorrow, Mr. Speaker.

OLD AGE SECURITY

PROVISION FOR INCREASE IN AMOUNT OF PAYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): If we have, as I hope, concluded the questions on orders of the day I wonder, in view of the fact that no business was indicated for the house at the time we adjourned, if I could say a word about the business for today. I had hoped, and I made approaches to the representatives of hon. gentlemen opposite, that there would be consent to taking as the first item today the resolution, notice of which has been given to the Clerk, concerning the amendment to the Old Age Security Act. This would require unanimous consent, and I was not able to get an indication that there would be unanimous consent forthcoming.

However, sir, if I may I should like to point out that it is the desire of the government to have this legislation, if the house is willing to deal with it, dealt with rapidly so that the increase contemplated in the legislation may be made in the present month without having to be made retrospectively. I believe the cheques actually go out about the twentieth of the month. I believe all hon. members appreciate the difficulty of getting the parliamentary time to deal with these things. If there were any disposition on the part of hon. members to permit the hon. lady to advance the resolution to the stage where it could be debated, that is permit the house to go into committee and debate the resolution only, we would be prepared to do that.

We of course, would not ask the house to deal with the bill today. If we could dispose of the resolution, which is in very simple language, it would expedite what I believe everyone in the house is agreed, is a desirable objective.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to see that the government is desirous of paying old age pensioners this additional $10 a month. It was the opposition that pointed out, over and over again, that the undertaking to do this was given during the election campaign, but when we dealt with this matter on July 18 last it was made very clear to us that the $10 increase would not be given unless the legislation covering the Canada pension plan was brought into effect.

Since then there has been a change of heart. The burning of conscience has brought about an alteration in the thinking of the government. I would point out this fact, Mr. Speaker, that we are most desirous of assuring the old age pensioners of that which they were promised and which we insist should be implemented.

I would further point out that the resolution introduced by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, as recorded at page 2340 of Hansard for July 18, among other things said:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to establish a comprehensive pension program to be known as the Canada pension plan—

Then a little later it said:

> —for the payment of an additional pension of ten dollars a month to all persons to whom a pension may be paid under the Old Age Security Act.

And so on.

It will be recalled, sir, that in order to give the house an opportunity to recommend immediate payment to the government, and in compliance with the undertaking made by various hon. members now belonging to the government, I moved an amendment, seconded by the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith), as recorded at page 2363 of Hansard for the same date:

> That the said resolution—

—the resolution to which I have already made reference—

> —be amended by adding after the words "ten dollars a month" in line 9:
> "and this house asks that the government give consideration to making the payment of such additional pension to commence on this date."

The amendment was moved and the Deputy Speaker said he would have to take the question under advisement. The matter is still before the house and there has been no ruling by the Deputy Speaker. Therefore there has been no opportunity for the house to give consideration to this amendment.

While we certainly welcome with open arms the conversion of the government to the needs of the old age pensioners, we ought to keep the proceedings of parliament regular. What about this amendment? It was not acceptable in July. The minister stated that under no circumstances could there be separation. That was before there was any question of any of the provinces refusing to participate in the plan.

Now we have a new situation, but the resolution of July is apparently forgotten about. Mr. Lesage has said he will not join in the proposition, and if newspaper reports are correct, according to one of the ministers of the government his action in that regard places him in a very unsatisfactory position, when a fund is built up, of being a follower of national socialism or nazism.

So far as Ontario is concerned, the ministers have met and they have discussed the matter. Surely then we ought to have a report on the proceedings to date. What is the present position? What has happened to the resolution that was rushed into with such a flash of arms and with such trumpet calls? The trumpet has a different sound now—an uncertain sound. Mr. Lesage has taken one blow on the trumpet and other provinces want an opportunity to do the same. What is the reason for this great change, this metamorphosis?

An hon. Member: Another retreat.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not want to bring anything of a political nature into this, but the hon. gentleman has a point.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, are we to take it from the fact that the Leader of the Opposition seems to be debating the question of an increase in the old age pensions that he has given consent to our discussing this matter today, and that we are going ahead? Otherwise under what heading or order is the Prime Minister speaking?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: We are confused today. Has he given his unanimous consent?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the number of times I have been so designated indicates there is a hope in various parts of the house that it won't be long now. The hon. member rose, apparently with the leave of the house, to ask as to the business of the house, and I understand there has been general agreement to cover certain matters today. I feel this is a matter on which we need an explanation from the government. Why is there this change? We want to assure that by the twentieth of the month the increased pensions will go out, provided the two houses agree; but we also want to know why there has been this great change of viewpoint. What has happened? We recommended consultation with the provinces, and now the government retreats.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): If the right hon. gentleman will participate in the giving of unanimous consent to proceed with the resolution, he will get the explanation. This will be the test of his sincerity.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, a prime minister who has taken the number of somersaults he has in the last few months, in reversal of policies, should not talk about sincerity.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I do not think this is the time to debate why the government has changed its mind. The important thing is that the government has indicated it is prepared to go ahead and present the legislation giving old age pensioners a $10 per month increase. So far as we are concerned, instead of rehashing over old straw we are prepared to give consent to proceeding with that resolution immediately, and I think the Leader of the Opposition, by drawing red herrings across the trail, is certainly not doing the old age pensioners much good, despite all his protestations of friendship for them.

We also want information about the Canada pension plan. There are a great many things we want to know, but we will not get the information on orders of the day. The thing to do is let the government bring down its resolution and then, when we go into committee of the whole, we can question the minister and get a statement from the government.

I urge all hon. members to give unanimous consent to proceeding with the resolution now so that the old age pensioners can get the increase as early as possible.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas), we feel that there is no need to deliberate very long before agreeing unanimously to study the proposed resolution to increase the old age pension. That is why, on behalf of the members of the Social Credit party, I give this unanimous approval. We agree to discuss that resolution immediately.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready to give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Old Age Security Act to increase the pension under the said act from $65 a month to $75 a month, effective October 1, 1963, and to increase the rate of old age security tax from the present rate of 3 per cent with a maximum of $90 to a rate of 4 per cent with a maximum of $120 on the taxable income of individuals, applicable to the 1964 and subsequent taxation years.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, I am privileged today on behalf of the government to introduce a measure calling for an increase in the old age security benefit from $65 to $75 a month, effective October 1, 1963. The last such increase in the flat rate pension to our older citizens, from $55 to $65, was approved in this house 19 months ago.

You will have realized, Mr. Chairman, that the introduction of this resolution was made both necessary and urgent by recent developments respecting the Canada pension plan. It was originally the government's intention that the $10 increase in the old age security benefit be paid out of contributions to the Canada pension plan. When this house recessed two months ago, it was still our announced intention to present the necessary legislation at as early a date as possible.

Then, consequent upon the decision of the government of Quebec to forego the Canada pension plan in favour of a contributory plan of its own, it became evident to one and all that the part of the federal plan providing an increase in the flat rate pension had to be separated from the rest of the scheme. Contributions raised in provinces participating in the federal plan obviously cannot be used to provide benefits in a province from which no such contributions are forthcoming. That is the situation today and it is the aim of the subject amendment to provide the additional $10 benefit to all provinces, irrespective of the Canada pension plan.

I might mention here that section 94A of the British North America Act was designed to provide for concurrent jurisdiction in the field of old age pensions and that the future development of pension arrangements over and beyond the universal flat rate pension will depend upon mutually satisfactory arrangements being worked out. In the case of the province of Quebec there is a preference for a provincial contributory plan. The possibility of developing an earnings-related pension plan for the rest of Canada will depend upon the attitude of the other provinces and, in particular, Ontario which already has legislation on the statute books dealing with a pension plan. The federal goverment has made clear the kind of Canada-wide plan it believes would provide adequate old age income security for Canadians. The onus now rests with the other provinces as to whether we proceed with this plan.

The present pensionable age under the Old Age Security Act is 70 years. As you may be aware, Mr. Chairman, it has been the government's hope, as expressed in earlier statements made in this house respecting the Canada pension plan, to make reduced benefits available to old age pensioners who desire them on a graduated scale, between ages 65 and 70. As already announced, under the Canada pension plan these reduced benefits would apply both to the flat rate pension and to benefits under the earnings-related plan.

The question of age adjusted benefits, both with respect to graduated and flat rate pensions, is a matter which will be the subject of discussions with the provinces and, in particular, with the provinces of Quebec and Ontario with respect to their plans for pension arrangements. The government will give this aspect further consideration following these discussions and if, as we hope, the outcome of these negotiations is successful, the matter will be considered at the time the Canada pension legislation is placed before this house.

In the meantime the present pension increase will result in a substantial rise in expenditure under the Old Age Security Act on behalf of some 960,000 pensioners. At the present figure of $65 a month, the over-all expenditure for the fiscal year 1963-64 would be $750 million; for the year 1964-65, with a normal increase in the number of pensioners, the figure would be $766 million.

At the proposed rate of $75 per month, effective October 1, 1963, the expenditure for the fiscal year 1963-64 would be $807 million; for 1964-65, it would be $882 million. Now, therefore, the difference for the year 1964-65 between expenditures at the present rate and at the proposed rate of $75 per month would be $116 million. This raises a question as to the source of the additional revenue for this increased expenditure. You will be hearing more about this a little later from my colleague, from the Department of Finance.

This present measure is, Mr. Chairman, a solid step in the right direction, but the government sincerely hopes that the Canada pension plan will be introduced before too long to provide adequately for the retirement of our older people. I am confident that this present amendment will be followed by further measures which will in fact provide that added cushion of security and dignity so richly deserved by our senior citizens.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Perth will be discussing this matter in particular, but I would like to ask the hon. lady if she would read the resolution about which she has been speaking. We would like to know what the resolution is, because we have not seen it. Would the hon. lady let us have the resolution?

The Chairman: Perhaps I should read the resolution for the benefit of the committee:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Old Age Security Act to increase the pension under the said act from $65 a month to $75 a month, effective October 1, 1963, and to increase the rate of old age security tax from the present rate of 3 per cent with a maximum of $90 to a rate of 4 per cent with a maximum of $120 on the taxable income of individuals, applicable to the 1964 and subsequent taxation years.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, I must admit that I did not know this matter would be introduced so soon after the reconvening of the house, but I am certainly very pleased that it has. I still fail to understand why the amendment suggested by the Prime Minister on July 18 was not followed through.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, I did not suggest any amendment on that date.

Mr. Monteith: I am sorry; I think this is the first time I have made that mistake. I am following the example of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. First of all, Mr. Chairman, I would like to have a copy of the resolution. It does not appear on the order paper to my knowledge, and I think we should have a copy of it before us. This is certainly indicative of the changing, retreating and jumping about from pillar to post of the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Monteith: I am simply looking forward to the day when my previous comment holds forth. The amendment as proposed to the previous resolution on July 18 by the Leader of the Opposition says this:

That the said resolution be amended by adding after the words "ten dollars a month" in line 9: "and this house asks that the government give consideration to making the payment of such additional pension to commence on this date."

If that advice had been taken, Mr. Chairman, the elderly citizens of our country would have had this $10 a month earlier than they are going to get it now, despite the fact that the minister presently says that she does not want any hold up, that she wants to get on with it. This is certainly a different type of approach, a very humble approach today, compared with her speech on July 18. At that time she went into much detail ridiculing the opposition for their efforts in social security, which over the years have certainly been much more beneficial to the senior citizens than those of the present government.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to review one or two things the previous government did in its short term of office, a period of five and a half to six years. In that time the old age security and related benefits were increased by $19 a month. This was done in two stages. The government of that day had no sooner taken office than it proposed an increase of $9 a month, which was one of the most pleasant duties I had to perform as minister of national health and welfare. This proposal was acceded to by the house, unanimously I believe. The previous government did that following the almost abortive attempt in the previous spring to do something for the elderly citizens. At that time the then minister of finance proposed an increase of $6 a month. We knew what that meant. We knew how inadequate it was. We appreciated the fact that the elderly citizens should have had more than this. As a consequence, when we came into office we immediately proposed this $9 increase. This was in November 1957 and it became effective that month. Then in the spring of 1962, effective I believe on February 1, there was a further increase in old age security of $10 a month which the previous government felt was necessary at the time.

We are also very much in favour of this increase, as exemplified by the amendment of the Leader of the Opposition on July 18. I think that this proves that our party, the previous government, has had the welfare of the elder citizens uppermost in mind and has certainly done everything possible to relieve the hardship which these people suffer.

During my term of office, Mr. Chairman, I had many meetings with the elder citizen groups. I know the present minister has undoubtedly had similar meetings also. I came to believe, however, that the country as a whole does not appreciate the real plight of many of these people in the circumstances under which they live. I feel that the present suggestion is not only necessary but is delayed. This could have been achieved and could have been effective as of last August 1 at the latest, if the present government had only listened to the suggestion put forward by the Leader of the Opposition at that time.

Instead of that the present minister was imbued with political venom. In fact, she reminded me of the Minister of Finance in his budget speech debate; they were two of a kind. The Minister of Finance had to make some retreats following that, and it is obvious what has happened in this case. The present Minister of National Health and Welfare has had to make a retreat. Perhaps she has seen the light; I hope it is for that reason. I was not in the house at the moment but I understand she indicated that the change in this respect was because of the attitude of the province of Quebec. During recent efforts in the province of Ontario she did not indicate that this might be the reason for her change, quite so much as she was trying to indicate, I think, that the present government of Ontario might be wholly responsible for this change in attitude. I have seen flip-flaps and that sort of thing in the past, Mr. Chairman, but I do not know when I have seen two more striking examples than the Minister of Finance in his budget speech and the present Minister of National Health and Welfare when she introduced the original resolution on July 18.

May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock it is my duty to leave the chair in order for the house to proceed with private members' business pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed with the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motion.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO COMPLETE CONSTRUCTION IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): Mr. Speaker, in view of the announcement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) regarding this matter, may I have the permission of the house to withdraw this motion?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Has the hon. member leave to withdraw this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

TRANSPORTATION

SUGGESTED APPOINTMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I am wondering if I could ask the house leader on the government side if he would oblige and stand the notice of motion standing in the name of my hon. friend from Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell), and also that in the name of my hon. friend from Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt)?

Mr. MacNaught: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that motions 13 and 14 stand at the request of the government?

[Mr. Monteith.]

Mr. MacNaught: And No. 15.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Numbers 13 to 15?

Mr. Pickersgill: Numbers 13, 14 and 15.

Motions stand.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

MOTION RESPECTING TRANSFER OF JURISDICTION

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the interest of the western grain producers and their marketing agency should be under the jurisdiction of the minister responsible for agricultural policies which have a direct effect upon the economic welfare of the western grain producer; and that it is a retrograde step to place the Canadian wheat board—which has, in addition to its original role, the administration of cash advances, acreage payments, the issuing of permit books, and the quota allocation—under the Minister of Trade and Commerce who has no responsibility for domestic policies of direct interest of the western grain producers.

He said: Before I say what I have to say with regard to this resolution I should like to express my regret that neither the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) nor the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) is present in the house.

Mr. Pigeon: The parliamentary secretary knows the problem very well.

Mr. McIntosh: I should like to have told the Minister of Trade and Commerce that all westerners and all members of this party, in my opinion, are pleased with the large grain sale to Russia. However, this does not preclude us from asking questions about the deal. I am sorry the Minister of Trade and Commerce cannot take any credit for this sale. I am sorry his party cannot take any credit for it either.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. McIntosh: Well, they have said on previous occasions that neither the minister nor the department has any responsibility for wheat sales. We do not believe that to be the case, but since it was the hon. members opposite who made that statement they cannot very well contradict what they have told the public on previous occasions—or can they? We would, I am sure, be pleased to have the minister tell this house and the Canadian public in general exactly how these wheat sales are made. There can be no doubt that the Canadian wheat board is under the sole control of the government and that it is the only marketing agency for wheat produced in western Canada. As westerners, we have been amazed at times at the interpretation which the people of eastern Canada have placed on the transactions of the Canadian wheat board. They do not seem to realize that it is the sole marketing agency for our grain. I was surprised to hear comments which indicated that even some members of this house thought that every time an initial payment was paid to western producers it came out of the Canadian treasury. Such an impression is entirely wrong. Under the marketing system through which western Canadian grain is sold, that payment represents the farmers' own money.

In trying to get some information with regard to the actions of the Canadian wheat board I have looked up a number of editorials which have appeared in eastern as well as western papers. I should like to read parts of these editorials—I do not intend to read them all—in order to illustrate my contention. I shall refer first of all to an editorial which appeared in the Calgary Herald on April 24, 1963, right after the general election. This editorial is headed: "New Wheat Board Management" and it says:

> The federal department of agriculture over which Hon. Harry Hays of Calgary is to preside as minister will differ in two major respects from its Conservative counterpart.

The article goes on to discuss the changes briefly—I shall not read it all—and then it says:

> The wisdom of these two Liberal changes will be determined by the future course of events. At the outset they appear to be good ones.
> When the retired minister of agriculture, Alvin Hamilton, had the wheat board operations transferred to his jurisdiction in 1960, complaints were rife that the trade department had not been devoting sufficient effort to wheat sales abroad. It was alleged that time and effort which should have been going into wheat disposal were being devoted to consultations and arguments between the wheat board and the trade department on policy and procedure.
> Certainly, after Mr. Hamilton took the wheat board under his wing there was a speedy revitalization of wheat sales. Credit agreements were negotiated abroad and, along with a fortuitously light Canadian crop in 1961 and a famine in China, sales zoomed and surpluses declined.

Actually, when we were selected the majority of Conservative members from the west had one major problem. As grain politicians we were careful; we did not make too many promises to the western people. But one promise I made was this: I undertook to do all I could to help the Canadian government solve the problem of surplus grain. At the time I made the promise I was not too much concerned about which party would form the government. As I hope to show in a few moments, I criticized our own party, which formed the government at that time, for its attitude with regard to the Canadian wheat board. As I have indicated, along with others I made the promise that we would try to solve this surplus grain problem. Today, in the light of political statements which have been made by ministers and others, people are still confused as to who does actually make these sales. This confusion has existed for some time. I am not sure whether the former minister said he made the sales or not. I do know that the opposition definitely said he did not. But somebody did make these sales, and all I have to say today to whoever was responsible is that this sale of wheat to Russia has done Canada a lot of good.

The editorial from which I have been reading goes on to say:

> But if previous sales efforts had been less than successful, the blame largely could be laid at the door of the trade department which was concerned with trying to push industrial and commercial sales to the neglect of agricultural products.
> Under the new leadership of Hon. Mitchell Sharp however, the Department of Trade and Commerce is not likely to make the same mistake.

I question that statement, and I do so in the light of the previous record of the Canadian wheat board at a time when Canada was losing sales on the world market. The present Minister of Trade and Commerce was then the deputy minister responsible for the department, and unless he has changed his ways with respect to western agriculture and sales of western grain we shall revert to placing this board under the direction of the Department of Trade and Commerce which, I say, would be a retrograde step.

In order to show hon. members what the thinking of eastern people is with regard to western farmers I should like to refer to an editorial which appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail dated August 13, 1963. I presume this paper could be considered as being a supporter of the Conservative party, while the other paper to which I have referred, the Calgary Herald, could be considered a supporter of the Liberal party. I do not know for certain but I imagine from the comments made that this would be correct. The article in the Globe and Mail was written by Scott Young, who apparently had been out west. He was writing about western Conservatives and about the wheat situation out there. He referred to a feeling that the Diefenbaker government had demonstrated an understanding of the west's problems, and said:

> As long as he leads the Conservatives no other party is going to make five cents worth of progress out here.

I think that is correct. Referring to the promise made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) regarding $2 a bushel for wheat, the article says:

> The nonsensical quality of the promise was strongly demonstrated by the trade minister's rather petulant suggestion that westerners should grow less wheat.

I do not think the minister denies that he went out west and told the farmers union, in Edmonton, I think it was: Do not grow more wheat, because we cannot sell what you are already producing. This Russian sale makes that statement sound somewhat ridiculous. I have contended all along as a representative from western Canada that whoever is responsible for selling wheat, whether it be the grain board or the Department of Agriculture or the Department of Trade and Commerce, is doing so as an agency of the government itself. Selling wheat is a government responsibility, and if it cannot sell it the western people must be told so.

Now I shall read from what is, I presume, a Liberal paper. This seems to reflect the attitude of a number of eastern people. Commenting in the Kingston Whig-Standard on Mr. Young's article, the writer says:

> But, quite apart from politics, this business of wheat in the west is obviously something concerning which Mr. Young has let the farmers out there talk him into a daze. The western wheat farmer has no interest in what kind of a market he has for his wheat; all he cares about is selling it at as high a price as possible. It is, he thinks, his God given right and destiny to grow and sell wheat—this is the heart of the western mythology. ...They don't want to work any harder than that and they betray no hesitation in saying so.

That is absolutely ridiculous. If this is the opinion that the government or the Liberal party has of western wheat producers, it will be a long, long time before they will have sufficient members from the prairies to appoint a minister of agriculture from that region. They were quite fortunate last time.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I don't know that they were.

Mr. McIntosh: I also want to refer to another eastern paper which I think has an actual grasp of what the situation is in the west. This is the story that I am quite sure western Canada wants to put across to eastern Canada, because it is true, and if anybody wants to take the time to delve into the subject he will find it is so. I wish to refer to the Sudbury Daily Standard of June 20, 1963. The article is headed, "Farmers Fear New Policies Will Damage Export Markets", and it reads in part as follows:

> Revelation that the Pearson government in Ottawa hired "outside" experts to assist in the preparation of the budget should not be surprising. Informed Canadians know that there is sometimes little relation between Liberal election propaganda and performance.
> The most recent election campaign was no exception. This was the party of "experts" in the matter of economics; this was the party with the men of ideas "to get the economy rolling". But once in office the Liberals hired experts "outside" of government and the civil service.
> Nor is this delusion on Liberal know-how confined to matters of finance. One section of the farm press that came out strongly in support of the Liberal party and urged a change in government is now having second thoughts, and nearly all published letters written by farmers disagree with the Liberal policies. It is now a matter of record that the farm vote in Canada was almost solidly in support of the Diefenbaker government.
> It may be remembered that Liberal government dairy policies were made known only 36 hours before the May 1 deadline and decisions on policy changes made only some 50 hours after agriculture minister Harry Hays and agriculture minister-to-be Rene Tremblay took their oaths of office.
> The farm press has been taking a long, hard look at these policies which indicate greater dairy surpluses, lower exports, higher prices to consumers and reduced income for dairy farmers. It is feared there will be serious export loss in British and European markets. The Liberals, who favour more trade with the United States, cannot look for markets for farm products in that country. It is already plagued with stockpiled surpluses.
> It will also be remembered that in its first days of office the Liberal government returned the Canadian wheat board to the Department of Trade and Commerce.
> This is significant? It could be. The Diefenbaker government put the board under the Department of Agriculture and export wheat sales soared. By mid-May, under the Liberals, export wheat sales were already down by 30 million bushels from the same time last year. There seems to be little likelihood that the Liberal government will be able to match the Diefenbaker government's record in wheat exports.

That would have been correct had it not been for the one sale to Russia. I will prove later with figures that under the Liberal administration, whether they were the ones who sold wheat or whether the wheat board under their direction sold wheat, Canada was gradually losing all her foreign markets for wheat. The article goes on to say:

> Canadian wheat farmers also have long memories They can recall a previous Liberal administration that lost Canadian wheat sales by trying to collect another five cents a bushel from prospective European customers. It was a Liberal administration that tried to unload Canadian wheat at $1.50 a bushel when the world market price was $3. a bushel.

I think that is sufficient information from the press to convey to the house that the issue is a very confusing one, and the government by its action of putting the wheat board back under the Department of Trade and Commerce has confused the issue more. When the wheat board was under the Department of Trade and Commerce at the time that the present minister was deputy minister the policies were also confused.

I have mentioned before that I was very critical of our party in this regard. I refer to page 7693 of Hansard for August 6, 1960, at which time I said:

> As the government has complete control of the marketing of wheat on the prairies, then it is the responsibility of the government to see that markets are obtained or tell the producers they are unable to do the job.

I also said at that time:

I have reason to believe that the present wheat board policy in determining its daily selling price for Canadian wheat offerings to domestic and foreign buyers is too rigid, and that as a result of this inflexibility we have lost foreign sales which should have been available to our western producers. I am aware that those who do not agree with my remarks will charge that I am trying to interfere with the orderly system of marketing western grain. I hasten to say that if such a system solves or will solve the problem of the western grain surplus, then I will support it wholeheartedly.

In talking about the western grain surplus I may say that there are other problems created because there is a surplus. There is the problem of cash advances on farm stored grain. There is the problem of quotas. There is the problem of the allocation of box cars. I am quite sure that the present Minister of Trade and Commerce has some knowledge of what these problems are, particularly with regard to cash advances on farm stored grain, because I understand that under the Liberal administration he was one of those who said it could not be done. It was one of the first things that was done under the Conservative administration when they took office in 1957. I continue:

On the other hand, if the present orderly system of marketing works to the disadvantage of the western grain producers whom I represent, then I suggest that some of the conditions in this system should be changed.

I am not advocating that the orderly system of marketing should be discarded. I believe I am offering evidence that proves that the way it is functioning at the present time can lead to only one result, the loss of further grain markets for our producers. It is essential that we avoid this downward pattern.

To show what the downward trend was we did a lot of research at that time. On that occasion I said, as found on page 7692 of Hansard for August 6, 1960:

I would draw your attention, Mr. Chairman, to the grain trade year book, which indicates that in some foreign markets Canada's grain sales were reduced by a considerable amount during the grain year 1958-59 from those of the previous grain year.

I went on to say:

I have also before me a table which shows that during the past year Russia exported 40 million bushels of wheat to western European countries, and many of these countries were former customers of Canada. It is to be noted that Canadian wheat sales to the Netherlands dropped from 21 million bushels in 1957-58 to 7 million bushels in 1958-59. That is an actual decline of 14 million bushels in one year in sales to one of our most valuable customers.

I should say that at that time under a Conservative administration the wheat board was also under the Department of Trade and Commerce and it was later that the decision was made to transfer it to the Department of Agriculture. I went on to say:

During that same period, 1958-59, Russia sold to the Netherlands almost 10 million bushels of wheat. ...It is also to be noted that Sweden purchased over 2 million bushels of wheat from Russia during 1958-59—

And so it goes on and on. If you wish to pursue the matter further you will see that in practically every country with which we had been dealing we were losing out as far as the export of Canadian grain was concerned, and Russia was gaining on us. What we seemed to lose the Russians apparently were taking over. This not only applied to all European countries but also to the United Kingdom. Our research also proved that we were losing out in the case of the United Kingdom. It also proved that world demand had increased from 660 million bushels, prior to the war, to 1,220 million bushels. In fact, the demand for wheat was growing constantly but Canadian exports to world markets were declining. Whose fault was that? Was that the fault of the government or was it the fault of the Canadian wheat board? I am not too sure that we have the answer. I will say this, that after similar speeches were made in this house when action was taken to transfer the Canadian wheat board from the Department of Trade and Commerce to the Department of Agriculture, something happened. Markets for Canadian grain became available. I am quite sure Canadian producers do not care who was responsible or who gets credit for that. The grain was sold.

As I mentioned before, we solved the problem of surplus grain and the problems related to surplus grain such as storage, quotas, box car allocations, cash advances and everything else. It is for this reason I say a retrograde step was taken in transferring the wheat board back to—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order; I regret that I must interrupt the hon. gentleman, but his time has expired.

Mr. Jean-Luc Pepin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): Since the motion was introduced in English, I think it would be appropriate for me to give the first half of my speech in English. As we understand it, the present question is not a question of philosophy, of political, economic or administrative theory, it is a question of efficiency. The question is: Can the Department of Trade and Commerce sell wheat more effectively than the Department of Agriculture? The opposition, of course, takes the negative view.

In my opinion, the question is one of common sense, so I will proceed in a common sense manner. I should like to preface my remarks with three notes. The first is this: The question is not one related to the growing of wheat but to the sale of it. We understand that the growing of wheat is the business of the farmers, and the Department of Agriculture can advise them on this matter. However, the question is about the sale of wheat, the trade in wheat, and of course we believe this matter should come under the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Pepin: I am really rather rushed because I understand the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture wishes to say a few words. Perhaps I could answer later.

My second point is this: It is private enterprise and the wheat board that sells wheat for Canada. A moment ago the previous speaker was asking about the policy of the department and of the minister in respect of government intervention. On that subject the minister said this in a speech on September 23:

> I am sure that you would wish the government to recognize the wheat board and its chief officer in this way. The Canadian wheat board is given responsibility by parliament for marketing western wheat, oats and barley and it is important that this responsibility should not be usurped by any minister of the crown.

This is quite clear.

> The government does have a responsibility in the marketing of western grain and that is to support the wheat board and to create the conditions under which the board can sell wheat, oats and barley to best advantage.

Referring to the sale to communist China, the minister went on to say that the government's role was to improve the terms of access for Chinese goods, and to underwrite the extension of credit, both of which were essential to the successful outcome. This is the function of the government, and this is the function of the Department of Trade and Commerce, to help the wheat board in selling wheat. We Liberals do recognize the importance of the wheat board. We also recognize the importance of God in connection with these sales. There is no doubt about it—an act of God can be negative or positive—without an act of God these sales might not have taken place, no matter how good our sales department is. This attitude, I believe, is quite clear. I think you will find it very difficult to find any other than the one I am expressing now.

Mr. McIntosh: Why didn't you sell wheat before?

Mr. Pepin: My third point is that the wheat board has always been under the Department of Trade and Commerce. The present arrangement is not new.

[Mr. Pepin.]

Mr. McIntosh: Not always.

Mr. Pepin: The present situation is the regular one. The only exception was during the period 1960-1963 when the wheat board was placed under the supervision of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton).

Mr. McIntosh: When was it formed?

Mr. Pepin: I should like now to state my three main arguments in favour of the present arrangement. The first one is related to history, and it goes like this. In the past, Canada has sold as much wheat when the wheat board was under the Department of Trade and Commerce as it has when the wheat board was under the Department of Agriculture, with the exception of the sales to China, and in some years with the inclusion of the sales to China. As you know, the previous record sale of wheat was in 1952-1953 when 385 million bushels were sold. I might say that at that time the present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) was the deputy minister of that department.

Mr. McIntosh: What is your authority for those figures?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pepin: I should like to add to what I just said, that at the present time, under trade and commerce, the wheat board is selling more than it was under agriculture at any time from 1960 to April 1963. There is then no question of efficiency. The wheat board does as well, if not better, under trade and commerce now as it did under agriculture at the time that department was headed by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle.

My second point is that wheat cannot be treated as something entirely apart from general trade. You cannot isolate the trade in wheat from the general preoccupation of the government in respect of trade. Negotiations in relation to world trade are not divided into compartments. For example, in the GATT negotiations the preoccupation for agricultural products cannot be isolated. The over-all picture must be kept in mind by Canadian representatives.

[Translation]

The press communiqué released before the last meeting of GATT stated as follows:

> The agenda is the following:
> 1. Measures to expand trade of countries under development.
> 2. Arrangements to lower or eliminate tariff barriers.
> 3. Measures giving farm products and other primary materials a better access to the markets.

It can be seen that in GATT negotiations, the farm problem is not separated from other trade problems.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, Canada experiences great difficulties in the field of trade and we must at all cost put all advantages on our side. The authorities representing us in such large international negotiations must be able to make arrangements on the widest possible basis. And surely, Canada cannot isolate the wheat trade from the general trade.

Mr. Speaker, I also wish to call to the attention of the house the fact that the Department of Trade and Commerce has an excellent team of trade commissioners who are acting as scouts in every country of the world. Besides, the commercial equipment of the Department of Trade and Commerce is by far better than the one to be found in the Department of Agriculture. That is common sense.

My third point concerns the distribution of tasks between the government departments. Well, only a few weeks ago, the members of the opposition were accusing the government of having taken away from the Department of Trade and Commerce part of its authority to hand it over to the Department of Industry. And those same gentlemen who were then complaining that we were draining authority from the Department of Trade and Commerce now come here and ask that we take away from the Department of Trade and Commerce some of its authority over the Canadian wheat board. Is this consistent? They are again contradicting each other. This is not the first time and it is certainly not the last.

Mr. Speaker, I want to add this. My friends in the agriculture department say they already have lots of work, indeed enough to keep busy and the administration is even prepared to appoint a second minister of agriculture because of the volume of work in that department.

Mr. Pigeon: Both of them are on a trip.

Mr. Dupuis: Homing pigeons exist you know.

Mr. Habel: Where do you come from?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I shall continue my remarks.

Besides, the fact that the Department of Agriculture has quite enough work and civil servants there are extremely busy is confirmed by the former minister of agriculture. In fact, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton), during his last days in office, was complaining that he had not had any time to adequately deal with agriculture in the east.

I am not making that statement, I am only repeating what the former minister of agriculture used to say:

[Text]

The Minister of Agriculture has admitted that Canadian farm policy is prairie oriented. A rational farm policy would require disproportionately greater attention to the maritimes and the province of Quebec.

Mr. McIntosh: What date was that?

Mr. Pepin: May 1963. Yours was August, I think.

I have another clipping from the Ottawa Citizen of May 8, 1962:

Mr. Hamilton told the Progressive Conservative nomination meeting western farmers could expect the government to pay more attention to eastern Canadian farmers. Many farmers in low income brackets were in the east and "in the next four years much of my time is going to be spent in those regions."

So, after three years in the department, the then minister admitted he had been too busy to be concerned adequately with eastern agriculture, and I quote this in order to prove that there is plenty of work in that department.

Mr. McIntosh: That is your interpretation.

[Translation]

Mr. Pepin: Moreover, other press clippings which I do not have time to read are quite clear on that point.

[Text]

Mr. McIntosh: What date was that?

[Translation]

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, in closing, I wish to submit another point of plain common sense.

The hon. gentlemen opposite must not think that just because the Canadian wheat board has been transferred from the Department of Agriculture to that of trade and commerce—I beg your pardon, has returned to the Department of Trade and Commerce—that means all contacts will cease between the two concerning wheat. On the contrary, relations between them are growing closer and closer. In fact, just a few days ago, both the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) and the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) publicly set forth the first components of a new policy, in short, of an adequate agricultural policy for eastern Canada as regards feed grains.

[Text]

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to congratulate the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh) for moving his motion today so that it would give hon. members an opportunity to discuss some of the pros and cons respecting sales of Canadian wheat during the last few years.

We know there has been an attempt, successful to some extent, to sell the idea to Canadian wheat farmers that they were immeasurably better off in terms of activity and efforts to sell their wheat when the Canadian wheat board was under the administration of the Department of Agriculture.

I do not believe any hon. member would deny that there was one single success of a size so large that it overshadowed many other sales during the period when the board came under the Department of Agriculture. But the next question which must be asked is whether those who wish the board transferred back to that department also want to give the department the responsibility for the great droughts in China and Canada in recent years? I do not think that is a valid argument, and I do not believe even those members of the Conservative party who support this motion would like to assume that responsibility.

The hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Pepin) has mentioned that there are many other things which must be considered in addition to agricultural policy. For example all hon. members will agree that the last three very large wheat sales were directly tied to some credit arrangements and might not have been completed had it not been for the existence of these arrangements. I suggest that these credit arrangements can be handled just as successfully by the Department of Trade and Commerce and its minister as by the Minister of Agriculture. I am also sure it will be agreed that such a kind of agreement must be reached by the entire cabinet, and that there is no significant difference whether the Minister of Agriculture or the Minister of Trade and Commerce makes recommendations to the cabinet.

There are other trading arrangements involved in the sale of wheat. These were referred to by the hon. member who spoke just before me, and I have a whole stack of editorials and statements which I have gathered throughout the years, and which indicate without doubt that the leading grain spokesmen—if one wants to call them that—have over the years tried to convince the government that there is a direct relationship between trading policies respecting other commodities and the promotion of sales with regard to wheat.

For example I have before me a letter which appeared on the editorial page of the Winnipeg Free Press and which was sent to the former prime minister, Mr. Diefenbaker, by Mr. W. J. Parker, president of Manitoba pool elevators, on behalf of the Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba wheat pools and United Grain Growers Limited. I shall only read a few paragraphs from this letter to prove that what I have said is correct:

[Mr. Olson.]

> In concurrence with and on behalf of the United Grain Growers Lmiited, Alberta wheat pool, Saskatchewan wheat pool and Manitoba pool elevators, I desire to acquaint you with a matter which is causing grave concern among the combined membership of these producer organizations.
> Doubtless you are aware that Japan has of recent years become our second largest market for wheat, and from time to time an important market for Canadian barley and oilseeds. It is the considered opinion of those in a position to judge that Japan will in the not too distant future become the largest market for Canadian wheat, provided Canada pursues a trade policy designed to encourage the purchase by Japan of cereals from us.

The letter concludes by saying:

> I assure you, Mr. Prime Minister, that the farmers our organizations represent would appreciate assurance from you that the government is not attempting to reduce Japanese participation in the Canadian market in 1960 below the level obtaining in 1959 for any commodity, and that it remains the policy of your government year by year to increase each and every quota on Japanese imports, with a view to their eventual removal.

He mentioned earlier the problem of allowing customers for wheat to sell sufficient of their own products in Canada in order to earn Canadian dollars to pay for our wheat. This has been going on for so long that it is almost repetitious to mention it at this time. One reason advanced is that if we have the Department of Trade and Commerce directly involved in the selling of Canadian wheat we would also receive a more sympathetic response from them in advocating import quota increases, and so on, which would allow our customers to sell their goods in Canada to earn the dollars that are necessary. There are other matters, which were raised by the hon. member who spoke previously such as GATT and various other negotiations that are necessary. Surely, Mr. Speaker, no hon. member of this house will argue that all these integrated matters are primarily the responsibility of the Department of Trade and Commerce.

There is one other point. I refer to the matter of financing. I dealt with this subject briefly a few minutes ago. I have some quotations of what has been said by the previous minister of agriculture, now the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton), who stated that it was becoming increasingly difficult to get approval from his colleagues in the Conservative government for the credit necessary to finance some of these large scale sales. For example, in The Western Producer of November 15, 1962 there is this quotation:

> Mr. Hamilton's speech reflected growing pressure against credit sales from eastern Canadians and those who do not understand the problems of the farmers.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Like the Social Credit party.

Mr. Olson: If we agree that credit was essential to make the major sales the last few years, I think it is important that this question should also receive some sympathy in the cabinet. This was admitted by the previous minister of agriculture. In this way credit sales can be promoted.

The mover of the motion says, amongst other things, that it is a retrograde step to place the Canadian wheat board—which has, in addition to its original role, the administration of cash advances, acreage payments, the issuing of permit books, and the quota allocation—under the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Taking each one of these items separately, I think we should consider whether there was any distinct advantage in transferring this board to the Department of Agriculture. I might say, Mr. Speaker, that some ministers of agriculture even before the hon. member for Qu'Appelle stated that the Canadian wheat board was not under the direct direction, if you want to call it that, of any department; that they in fact pursued the policy of selling wheat almost independently of the government.

Then there is the matter of the administration of cash advances. In 1957, prior to placing the wheat board under the control of the Minister of Agriculture, I know of no difficulty that the board had in administering cash advances.

Mr. McIntosh: They did not have any.

Mr. Olson: I do not think they are having any now. I cannot see that this is a matter of any great significance.

Mr. McIntosh: You had better study it.

Mr. Olson: With regard to acreage payments, I think they will be using the same staff, the same cheque-writing machinery and the same officers in regard to this particular function as have been used since the transfer of the board to the Department of Agriculture. There may be some kind of argument as to whether or not the present government and its cabinet is going to authorize acreage payments at all. But whether they are administered by the Department of Trade and Commerce or the Department of Agriculture presents no significant difference that I can see.

With regard to the issuing of permit books, this was done by the Canadian wheat board for about 18 years prior to its being taken over by the Department of Agriculture. I know of no significant problems experienced by them during those 18 years which would change for the better if this function were under the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. McIntosh: We will tell you more about that later on.

Mr. Olson: Then, Mr. Speaker, we come to the question of quota allocation.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Are you for or against credit sales?

Mr. Olson: Quota allocation is something that comes about after taking several factors into consideration. One is the matter of having sold a certain grade of wheat and the requirements of the Canadian wheat board to get it into export position. For example—and this has happened on a number of occasions —they have sold a large quantity of No. 5 or No. 4 wheat and if there was a shipping point that had frost, or there was some other reason, and there was a large quantity of this kind of wheat and a sale was made, there was an effort on the part of the Canadian wheat board to move as much of that wheat as quickly as possible into export positions so that it could be delivered. Perhaps this comes under the Department of Transport to some extent, and I think the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) has just as free access to the Department of Transport as has the Minister of Agriculture. I can therefore see no significant improvement in this regard.

By and large, Mr. Speaker, I have to agree with the mover of the motion, the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh) and the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Pepin) when they suggest that these administrative details are not of major concern. The major concern is to generate and enhance our over-all trading position in the international market so that we have more customers. We have to make some arrangements to take in some of the products of these other countries, and this is not easy. I know that even today there is some discontent in the textile industry. They are a little apprehensive that some of the sales made to China and Russia may have included an agreement, whether signed or not, which will mean there will be a flood of textiles into Canada to pay for some of this wheat. This is a matter of justifiable concern, but I am not convinced that the Minister of Agriculture could handle this problem any better than the Minister of Trade and Commerce. As a matter of fact I think all these integrated things could be better handled by a department that is totally concerned with trade and commerce.

The last thing I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, is that perhaps the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) also has something to contribute to the over-all sale of Canadian wheat in the international market. We know, for example, that a number of suggestions have been put forward to the effect that we should accept some so-called soft currencies for Canadian wheat. We have heard that the United States, in competing in the international market, have in fact accepted local currencies and have left those currencies in the countries to be used in the form of foreign aid. If we are going to try to compete with the United States on this basis, I suggest the Department of Finance will also have a very large say in the matter.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I can see no great advantage in adopting this motion and I can in fact see some disadvantages, one of which would be perhaps losing a little of the position we might have within the cabinet in having both the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Trade and Commerce responsible for advancing the welfare of agriculture through increased wheat sales.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak to this motion I see my time is limited. I should like to say a few things in support of the motion. Basically the crux of the problem is whether or not western Canada and the wheat board, the jurisdiction of which lies solely in western Canada, is represented by a western or an eastern minister. History will bear me out that over the years the minister of agriculture has always been a western member, although that may not be the case in the future. Therefore, I think the first point is that he should have a closer contact with the area within which the jurisdiction of the wheat board lies—western Canada, and western Canada alone.

We have heard the record of the pros and cons of the two boards as they operated under the two departments in years gone by. The hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Pepin) knew very little about what he was saying, because he compared sales of wheat and said that under a former government the wheat board sold as much wheat as they did in the last few years under the very able direction of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton). Now, what is the case? In previous years the wheat board sold about 2 per cent of Canada's wheat under a former minister of agriculture and the Department of Agriculture. Under the direction of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle we sold by direct agreement up to 35 per cent of Canada's wheat. There is the difference between the two types of administration so far as the wheat board is concerned.

We have heard some talk about the various ministers. We westerners, and we western farmers in particular, know the record of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) with regard to the wheat board. What did he say about cash advances? He said they were not necessary and could not be administered, that they would ruin the wheat board. What did the Right Hon. C. D. Howe say about wheat sales when he was minister of trade and commerce? He said if they want to buy wheat let them come and get it. That was the attitude of the then government and the then deputy minister of trade and commerce.

What did the hon. member for Qu'Appelle do for the wheat board? He convinced the cabinet that Canadian wheat should be sold on credit. That is a principle that has been established and is continued today by the present government: they are selling wheat on credit. This was never done before. Western farm delegations came to Ottawa during past years and asked the government to sell their wheat, to give credit. We amended the Export Credits Insurance Act to make possible the first sale of wheat to China. This new principle has been accepted and the Export Credits Insurance Act was the vehicle, you might say, by which the Russian sale was made possible.

It is very important to western Canada that the wheat board have control to a great extent of the economy of the farmers generally. And what do the farmers want? I have here an editorial which I should like to read. It says:

> According to the national farmers' union, the government is wrong on two points of agricultural policy.

They are referring to the present government.

> It should not appoint a second minister of agriculture to deal with the farm problems of eastern Canada.

Apparently the government has realized that and done away with the idea.

> The wheat board, which sells all wheat, should not have been transferred from the Department of Agriculture to the Department of Trade and Commerce.

That is what the national farmers' union said about the action taken by the present government.

We have heard a lot of talk about the Russian and Chinese wheat agreements. Two basic principles were accepted and I hope will continue to be accepted, no matter which party forms the government. These principles were sales on credit and the acceptance of sterling. They are two important points which never before had been accepted by any minister of trade and commerce, and would not likely have been accepted today were it not for a hard-working and aggressive minister of agriculture who had the foresight to ask the cabinet to transfer the wheat board to his jurisdiction.

I must congratulate the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh) for bringing forward this motion. He, along with other western members, convinced the government that wheat should be sold on credit if necessary; that if wheat were sold it would lift the burden off the backs of the western farmers generally. I am sure hon. members from western Canada will bear out that statement; it has lifted a tremendous burden from the backs of farmers generally in western Canada.

We have heard a lot of talk about the recept China wheat sale. The hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska referred to the part God had played. I am sure they are thankful for the part that somebody played because it came as a complete bombshell and surprise to them. I say that because the Minister of Trade and Commerce said, according to page 2562 of Hansard, during the question period for that day:

> I say to the hon. member who has just interrupted, I do not think it helped greatly when the former minister suggested the farmers should grow all the wheat they could, and that he would sell it for them.

That is what he suggested to the farmers during the election. He did not suggest $2 a bushel for wheat as they suggested—a promise they knew could not be kept when they suggested it. The former minister said grow the wheat. He said we have now achieved credit sales and are accepting sterling. He was confident that through the continuation of his efforts and the efforts of the wheat board sales could be made and markets found. This house owes—certainly the western farmers owe—a great deal of appreciation for his hard work on their behalf. It is not like the present Minister of Trade and Commerce who travels out to western Canada even after a large wheat sale and tells the farmer not to grow any more wheat, to reduce their acreage because he cannot sell it. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays), like little Sir Echo, travels along with him and says: "Don't grow any more wheat; we can't sell it". What kind of attitude is this? The province of Saskatchewan is now considered the bread basket of the world. It is the only part of the world in which surplus wheat sales have been made possible through aggressive technological changes which the farmers have been ready to adopt in order to grow wheat and, in order to meet competition and the cost price squeeze they find themselves in today. Certainly—

OLD AGE SECURITY

PROVISION FOR INCREASE IN AMOUNT OF PAYMENT

The house resumed consideration in committee of the following resolution—Miss LaMarsh—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Old Age Security Act to increase the pension under the said act from $65 a month to $75 a month, effective October 1, 1963, and to increase the rate of old age security tax from the present rate of 3 per cent with a maximum of $90 to a rate of 4 per cent with a maximum of $120 on the taxable income of individuals, applicable to the 1964 and subsequent taxation years.

The Chairman: It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Monteith: When the committee rose at five o'clock I had been indicating that in my opinion and in the opinion of this party the resolution which is now before the house represents a complete flip-flop as opposed to the resolution which was presented originally on July 18. We all remember how the Liberal party claimed in successive months that it had all the answers. All I can say is: what answers? They have been searching around here and there. I have never seen such bungling. It has been a complete about-face and now hon. gentlemen opposite are running for cover.

The minister said on July 18:

> Unfortunately, however, in recent years some of the increases in payments made under this legislation have been based not upon increase in productivity, not upon progress of the economy, but only upon pure political expediency. This can no longer be countenanced.

I have never seen such an example of political expediency as this particular move. Further, I would say that the whole matter has been ill prepared. We did not even have a copy of the resolution at the time this subject came up for discussion. Rightly or wrongly, it appeared to me that there was only one copy available and it seems that the rules, not to mention house etiquette, should provide for more.

I suggest we look at the resolution itself. It includes provision for raising the rate of old age security tax from 3 per cent, with a maximum of $90, to 4 per cent with a maximum of $120 on the taxable income of individuals. I wonder whether or not this includes an increase in corporation income taxes. There is no mention of an increase from 3 to 4 per cent in the sales tax. Is this included? We all know that the present formula is a three-three-three formula which sets out what money should go into the fund from each source. I believe this resolution is ambiguous. It contains the phrase "applicable to 1964 and subsequent years" but we do not know what is covered. I feel the whole thing has been very hurriedly constructed, as have many of the efforts of the present government in the past. I do not say the law officers of the crown were not consulted but, if they were, I suggest their advice was not accepted. I know that the resolution which was provided in 1957 and 1962 with regard to a similar increase under this and related acts contained nothing concerning the financing of those proposals; that was considered to be a matter for the Department of Finance.

I am sorry I was not in the house this afternoon when the minister spoke. I may have missed what was said at the time, but I do not recall, among what I did hear, any mention of the related acts dealing with old age assistance, blindness and disability allowances. When the former government presented resolutions on these matters embodying an increase of $9 in November, 1957 and $10 in February, 1962, we came to this house prepared. The resolutions were placed on the table of the house in the proper manner and action was taken in accordance with the correct legislative procedure. I think we have been asked once again to buy a pig in a poke to pull this government out of a hole. I should like to know when these related acts are likely to be amended. I suggest this government should get its feet on the ground and find out where it is going. Those planners over there certainly lack any sense of planning in this case, though they are noted as being planners. In that speech on July 18, the minister made what appeared to me and, I think, to the public as a whole, to be some terribly biased political and partisan statements.

Miss LaMarsh: Who, me?

Mr. Monteith: For one thing, she indicated that practically nothing had been done by the previous government while it was in power. I should like to recall just a few of the things which that government did in the space of some five and a half years. First, I would point out that we acted with promptness immediately after our election promises had been made. The second piece of legislation dealt with in the fall session of 1957 had to do with the increase in old age security benefits. Effective November 1, 1957, we increased old age security payments by $9 and increases were made under related acts such as those dealing with old age assistance, blindness and other disability allowances. We reduced the residence requirement from 20 years to ten years. Allowable earnings were increased. Early in 1958, in this field of social welfare, we removed the threshold of 45 per cent of provincial population under which the government could give unemployment assistance. We increased the rate from 40 per cent to 50 per cent by which we participated at that time. In those days there were only four or five provinces in the scheme. Subsequent to our amendment, all the provinces in Canada came into the arrangement. Early in 1958 we doubled hospital construction grants, increased nurses' accommodation grants, chronic hospital bed grants and added internes' accommodation and major alterations and renovations. Early in 1958 we amended the clause whereby a majority of the provinces representing a majority of the population had to have legislation on their books before there could be any hospital insurance in force in Canada. We brought in an amendment and by July 1, 1958, five provinces in Canada had hospital insurance and the citizens of Canada in those provinces were receiving the benefits of it. Subsequently all 10 provinces and the two territories joined in the scheme.

In 1960 we made it possible for the people of Canada to enjoy benefits while out of the country by allowing absences from Canada which had not been hitherto enjoyed. In the fall of 1961 we brought in the fitness and amateur sport program. In the spring of 1962 we amended the national health and welfare act to set up a national council on welfare. We introduced national welfare grants starting at $500,000 with increases of $500,000 a year to a maximum of $2,500,000. In February of 1962 we increased old age security payments by another $10 and also all related acts and, of course, there was a consequent increase in allowable earnings.

or an increase of 72 per cent. If you will look at the books of estimates for the years 1956-57 and 1963-64 you will see that the total increase in health and welfare estimates is from $881 million to $1.959 billion, or 122 per cent.

Over a period of time the minister has tried to indicate that the efforts of the former government left something to be desired. I beg to point out that no government in the history of Canada has ever increased its social security payments to the people of Canada, or its social security measures, by as great an amount over a similar period.

I had the honour of bringing in the increase in old age security in the autumn of 1957 and I should like to point out the actual timetable of the discussions in that session. We brought it in in the proper legislative manner. Four resolutions were put on the order paper, one having to do with old age security, another with old age assistance, another with blindness allowances and the last one with disabled persons allowances. On Thursday, October 24, we discussed the first resolution on old age security. We further discussed it on Friday, October 25 and again on Thursday, October 31. On Friday, November 1, the first resolution was completed after four days of discussion. On Friday, November 1, the old age assistance resolution was completed as were the blindness allowance resolution, and in part the disabled persons allowance resolution. On Monday, November 4, the disabled persons resolution was completed. On November 4 also, second and third readings were given to the old age security bill. The others were given second and third readings on the Tuesday following.

The Secretary of State mentioned today that there was a timetable with regard to this matter. We appreciate this. We do not wish to hold up any measures affecting the elder citizens of Canada. But I would point out the number of days it took at that time to discuss the resolutions and the bills and I would remind him of the fact that the payments still were made to the people of Canada as of the 1st of November.

In 1962 we were faced with a somewhat similar position. On Monday, February 5, the old age security resolution was agreed to and the old age assistance resolution was discussed. On Tuesday, February 6, the old age security bill received second reading. On Wednesday, February 7, the old age security bill received third reading and the old age assistance resolution was passed, as was the blindness allowances resolution. On Thursday, February 8, the disabled persons allowances resolution was discussed and again on Friday, February 9. On Friday, February 9, second and third readings were given to the old age assistance bill and the blindness allowances bill while the disabled persons allowances bill received second reading only. It was postponed until Monday, February 12, at the behest of a member of the opposition of that day, at which time it was then given third reading.

This only points up that the plea of the Secretary of State today for fast passage of this legislation in order to try to help them out of a predicament into which they themselves walked is, I think, beyond comprehension. I should like to emphasize as strongly as I can that the increase now proposed would have been in the hands of our senior citizens by last August at the latest if the government had listened to the amendment proposed by the Leader of the Opposition on July 18. I should also like to emphasize that no ruling has yet been made on that amendment. I suggest that the government should accept it. Why not accept that amendment? If the government accepted it the same end would be achieved and our senior citizens would receive their just increase from that date. This party tried to get that increase through the house. The government has boobed again. It has bungled. It has procrastinated with the elder citizens. It is now playing politics with what should be rightfully theirs.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, we are very happy to have placed before us so soon after the reconvening of the session the resolution preceding the amending bill to increase the pensions of our senior citizens. There are many factors involved that require detailed study and analysis, but I do not think there is anyone who will disagree with the contention that this increase is past due. Our senior citizens have been waiting, I might say very patiently, for consideration of their needs. As I have indicated, we are very happy that we have this resolution before us at this time.

I feel there are a number of reasons why consideration must be given to the matter at this time. We are all aware of the fact that the cost of living is continuing to increase. This is placing our senior citizens, as well as others in the low income brackets, in a very difficult position. As they are endeavouring to face the increased cost of living and live on a decent standard, they are finding it almost impossible, if not impossible, on the present allowance of $65 per month.

I think there is another consideration, and it is this. Our senior citizens are observing a rising standard of living of a great many of their fellow Canadians. Although they recognize the assistance that has been given them in the past, yet they have a legitimate feeling that their income as well ought to be increased to take care of the situation and to help them enjoy some of the benefits that other citizens of Canada are enjoying now.

We have all had representations made to us concerning this particular matter. We have had letters from individual senior citizens or from senior citizens' organizations across the country pointing out the position in which these people find themselves now. Some of the provinces have recognized this need and are now providing supplementary benefits in order to assist our senior citizens in meeting the increased cost of living. In my own province of British Columbia, these people are receiving as much as $24 per month and this is of very real assistance in meeting the challenge before them today. May I say, Mr. Chairman, that not only our senior citizens but a great many people in other categories are facing similar problems. We hope that in the very near future the government will see fit to introduce legislation to assist these people who are facing serious economic conditions. I refer to the war veterans, the superannuated civil servants and different groups who are just barely getting by on pensions that were set some years ago.

It has been suggested that in the past this question has been made a political football, and unfortunately that has been so. Auction sale tactics have been used for political advantage in trying to gain the support of our senior citizens. I believe the time has come when we must take a sane and responsible attitude towards the necessity for making adequate provision for these people advanced in years. We are fully conscious of the fact that in a nation such as ours we are well able to provide adequately for those who, in building up this nation, have been unable to make provision for their declining years. I believe that today the responsibility is pressing, is urgent, and therefore we are very happy that this measure has been introduced at this time.

The method of financing, however, is open to question. We do not believe that an increase in taxation is necessary or desirable.

Mr. Woolliams: How would you finance it?

Mr. Patterson: We believe that the revenues coming into the federal treasury are sufficient if consideration were given to proper methods of financing and proper attention were given to monetary policies in relation to Canadian requirements. Therefore, while we would support without hesitation the proposal to increase this pension to $75, we would suggest that careful consideration be given to the matter of financing. If the government is convinced that additional taxation is required, then we would say that only sufficient additional revenue should be obtained or additional taxation levied to cover the actual cost of administration in connection with this particular situation. Many times we find that instead of just sufficient revenue being collected to take care of additional expenditures, there is additional revenue required for something and this additional revenue is obtained under these various measures. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, we are not going to take any more time discussing this matter at the resolution stage. We are looking forward to the introduction of the measure, and various members of the group will be taking part in the discussion and making constructive criticism in relation thereto.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, on behalf of this party I wish to indicate our pleasure that this proposal is before the house, namely to increase to $75 per month the pension paid under the Old Age Security Act. I should like also to indicate our pleasure that at least a beginning is being made in connection with this legislation on this first day that the house has met since the recess. I want to make it clear that I do not need a crying towel to assist me in expressing my pleasure that this proposal is now before the committee. I do not see any point in belabouring the fact that the government has changed its mind or gone through a flip-flop or what have you. The plain fact of the matter is that starting last July 18 opposition members in this house, and I think we were supported by the members on the government side as well, began to urge the government not to delay this $10 increase. We urged in every way we could that it be brought in at the earliest possible date.

Now the government has done this, and that is good. They have had a change of heart or whatever you may call it, and we welcome the fact that there is to be no further delay in making this increase in the pension paid under the Old Age Security Act. I hope we need not have any more time spent in berating the government for having done precisely what the house as a whole wanted it to do.

Mr. Churchill: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Knowles: Gladly.

Mr. Churchill: How much time does he want to spend in praising the government?

Mr. Knowles: Perhaps if the hon. member gets an opportunity to speak in this debate he will explain that question, because the meaning of it escapes me completely.

I may say, Mr. Chairman, that we do wish the government would reconsider the effective date of this increase. The minister has indicated, and the resolution indicates also, that the effective date is to be October 1. This means, of course, that the $10 increase, if this legislation goes through in time, will be in the cheques received by our old age security pensioners at the end of October. It is still our belief that this increase ought to be made retroactive at least to April of this year. I make that suggestion having in mind the fact that certain other increases that were provided in this chamber a short time ago were made retroactive to April, and indeed some other increases for civil servants and so on, were made retroactive to last October. I think the least we can do for our old age pensioners is to make this $10 increase retroactive to April of this year. I hope that somewhere along the line, while this legislation is before us, the government will consider making this change in the proposal that has been presented.

We agree that if we are going to ask and receive an increase in old age pensions we have to face up to the matter of paying for it, but we are puzzled as to why the government has proposed an increase in personal income tax of a full percentage point and has not made any suggestion about increasing the corporation tax. We also wonder if consideration has not been given to raising the ceiling on the amount that is paid under the Income Tax Act so far as old age security is concerned. We feel the rate might well have been left at 3 per cent, that the $90 ceiling could have been raised, and a percentage point added to the corporation tax. A method of that sort would be a fairer way of raising the money, rather than imposing a straight percentage point across the board on income tax.

We should have more details about this matter. Perhaps the Minister of National Health and Welfare will give us these details as we go along; but even so, I do not want undue time to be taken up because my concern is that this piece of legislation be put through so that the pensions can be adjusted and so that our old people can get this increase as soon as possible.

The main change which I think should be made in the legislation now before us relates to the effective date, and we in this party believe it ought to be made retroactive to April of this year.

I would also point out that it is recognized by all of us that this is just one step that is being taken with respect to improving the position of our old age pensioners, and we recognize that this step is being taken because the government was persuaded to change its mind during the so-called summer recess. That is the reason it was not on the order paper. The hon. member for Perth knows that, and he does not have to make such fuss because it was not on the order paper. On the night of August 2 the government had no intention of proceeding with this increase. Motions for today's order paper had to be in that day; but the government changed its mind in the meantime and so it was not technically possible to have it on the order paper. Today, however, we gave unanimous consent to proceed with it, and having done so we should not complain about the resolution not being on the order paper.

The whole question of the eligible age for receiving old age pensions is one with which we must grapple and to which we must find an answer. We in this party feel that the pension, as of right, must be available at age 65. We would like to see the Old Age Security Act amended to provide that the pension payable under it be payable at age 65, but we are not going to hold up this measure for that purpose. In the meantime I would go so far as to say that we welcome the statement made by the minister to the effect that consideration will be given, when the Canada pension plan is brought before the house, enacting legislation making it possible for people to take their old age security pension at an earlier age on a reduced basis.

Instead of our talking about 70 being the normal age, it should be the other way around. The normal age for people getting a pension as of right should be 65, and if people want to continue working past that age they should have the right to do so. Also if they want to delay taking their pension they should be able to receive a greater amount at a later age.

One of the real gaps in our present set-up is this five year period between the ages of 65 and 70. Retirement generally seems to be around 65 years of age. This is normal in industry and many other kinds of employment; but here the pension is put off until 70. During that five year period our people are in the wilderness and do not have what Canadians generally feel should be theirs as of right. Therefore I hope the consideration of this matter, which was implied in what the minister said this afternoon, will be speeded up as quickly as possible.

This leads me to say that I hope there will be the least possible delay in bringing forward the Canada pension plan in whatever revised form it will now have to be presented to us. Since the $10 increase in the old age security pension will no longer be an item in that plan, it seems to me this would involve a change in the computations, either a change in the amounts to be charged or a change in the amount of the pension. It will certainly call for a revision of that actuarial document which the minister provided a few days ago; and if one province is to stay out of the national plan, this too will call for certain changes in it. But, whatever changes are necessary, we urge the minister and the government to bring this matter before the house as soon as possible. Delay in placing before the house a proper pension plan, such as a joint arrangement of a flat rate pension and a contributory pension, could cost many years in providing the people of Canada with a desirable piece of social legislation.

In regard to this matter I want to make a plea directly to the minister. I urge her to get the chip off her shoulder as to where the opposition stands to a proper pension plan. She seems to think the opposition to adequate pensions lies with the other parties across the floor from her. She does not seem to know we want an adequate pension plan as much as she does. In fact there is more opposition to it from the people who are sitting behind her. By mistake I almost said the people sitting beside her, and maybe it was not a mistake after all.

I also suggest that she get the chip off her shoulder with regard to the province of Ontario. I am one of the last people in the house to defend the Tory government of Ontario, but I would say to the minister that a little wooing of the Ontario government in this field might be a little more effective than the sledge hammer tactics she has employed thus far. Indeed a little wooing of Quebec would be in order too.

The minister should realize that if there is opposition to this kind of pension plan, which she and the rest of us want, it does not come from those of us who are elected on a platform in favour of it. The opposition lies with the insurance companies, and she should realize she can get support from all sides of the house. In fact I think she can get support from the governments of Ontario and Quebec if she drops the political chip off her shoulder and if she realizes that, in the name of the people of Canada, all of us in this house should be working for a proper pension plan for all our people.

There has been talk about the timetable in getting this legislation through. By all means let us do it as quickly as we can, but it is also important to get the other legislation through at this session. If the kind of delays, which the Kilgours and some others are seeking, were permitted we would not get the Canada pension plan through this session, and if our outside opponents win it will be another session before we can have it. In the meantime a time will come when we will need another increase in the flat rate, and this will put off the day when we can get an old age security plan with both the flat rate and the contributory pension.

When we talk about pensions we are not talking about just enough money for people unable to provide for themselves in their old age. We are talking about a social philosophy and real security for our older people.

We in this house are here as members of political parties. When we left on August 2 we were members of four political parties. Now we are members of five political parties. I do not expect, and in fact I would not want, politics to be removed from the House of Commons. Politics is the life of this house. It is out of the cut and thrust of debate and out of the cut and thrust of conflicting ideas that we are able to make progress. But if ever there was an area in which we should try to work together, I suggest it is in this field of providing adequate security for our older people.

The hon. member for Perth indulged in a little recent history. If he wants history we could tell him what happened 35 or 37 years ago when Mr. J. S. Woodsworth, the former member for Winnipeg North Centre, was here. We could speak of the early years of this century and recount the efforts made by trade unions to the governments of those days to get started on old age pensions. Having started, having the idea of pensions accepted, having the idea of universal pensions accepted, we now want adequate pensions provided, which can only be provided under the auspices of government and not private companies making their profit out of it. We have this principle accepted; let us work toward achieving this end.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare should make up her mind to seek our co-operation. She will get it from this side of the house. We congratulate her because she was not quite as political in her speech today as she usually is. I think she must have found it painful to make that moderate, objective statement. I see the minister nodding her head. This kind of pain is good for her, and if she will just stay with that kind of approach we will make good headway. I say again, Mr. Chairman, that we welcome this $10 increase and we are glad to be dealing with it on this first day of parliament following the recess. We hope this measure can be approved in very short order so that our people may receive this additional money in their cheques this month; and we hope the government will give consideration to making the date retroactive to last April.

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Chairman, as has been said by each of the previous speakers, there is no question but that all hon. members of this house are in favour of the payment of an additional $10 a month to our senior citizens. I do not think anyone will take issue with that particular objective. But issue is taken, and rightfully so, with the methods used by the present government to bring about this increase.

Before entering into that particular phase of the matter I should like to say that in the hurried plan that has been put before us we are not told whether any consideration has been given to a differential payment. The method proposed, apparently, is following the same pattern that prevailed in the past, namely paying the same amount to everyone whether or not it is needed. I am not saying that is not the right way to do it, because I know it is extremely difficult to enter into a qualitative discussion or make a determination as to who should have more and who should not. It therefore becomes a question of raising enough money to pay everyone the $10 increase.

With regard to the question of the effective date of the commencement of this, it has already been said by one speaker, and I agree, that the date should be effective from April 8 last; the payment should be retroactive to that date. With regard to the period for raising the funds, I note that in the last paragraph of the statement which has been put into our hands there is a mention of a postponement in the collection of funds to meet this additional $10 payment, and it is to be applicable to 1964 and subsequent taxation years. In other words the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the present government intend to borrow money to meet this obligation, rather than raise it immediately out of taxes. They realize that if they wait until the 1964 income tax year, when we are filling out our income tax returns for that year it is quite possible we may have a different government, and they will leave on the door-step of that government the problem of raising this additional money in the form of taxes.

An hon. Member: Wishful thinking.

Mr. Kindt: My hon. friends across the way smile, and I can quite understand why they do so. But why was this trick played at this time, when the government is asking us to approve and is placing before the House of Commons a measure proposing to postpone for a year the collection of funds to meet the additional payment. They are borrowing the money in order to make it appear they are doing something which they have been forced into, and they are simply choosing that plan which is most expedient to get out from under. These are clumsy, inept and bungling tactics on the part of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who in her arrogance is looking for an opening to blame somebody else instead of coming out and saying, "We promised it during the last election campaign to win votes and now we are sorry and have to go through with it".

That is the situation placed before us this evening. I for one intend to vote for the resolution, as I think most hon. members will. But there are some things about it which I do not like. I have already stressed that the tactics which have been used and a lot of the circumstances leading up to this measure being introduced are certainly not commendable to or to the credit of the present government.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I was most pleased to hear the hon. member for Macleod arguing just now for retroactive taxation in order to finance the increase in the old age security pension. This would not be acceptable to those on this side.

In the resolution which is before the committee the government, I believe, has taken a responsible position in saying that the proposed $10 increase in old age security must be financed by additional revenue. With the indulgence of the committee I should like briefly to outline the history of the old age security tax and the results of the government proposal to increase the contribution from personal income to the old age security fund in order to finance this well deserved increase in benefits to our senior citizens.

When the Old Age Security Act was passed in November, 1951 to provide pensions of $40 per month commencing January 1, 1952, the act provided for old age security taxes consisting of, first, a tax of 2 per cent on sales of goods subject to the general sales tax. This applied to all sales on and after January 1, 1952. Second, a tax of 2 per cent on the taxable income of corporations became effective January 1, 1952. Finally, a tax of 2 per cent on the taxable income of individuals, with a maximum tax of $60, was imposed. This tax was at the rate of 1 per cent, with a maximum of $30 for the 1952 taxation year.

In the budget of April 9, 1959 the then minister of finance announced that the old 2-2-2 formula of old age security taxes would be increased to a 3-3-3 formula. First of all the tax on sales was increased to 3 per cent with effect from April 10, 1959. Second, the tax on taxable income of corporations was increased to 3 per cent effective January 1, 1959. Finally, the tax on taxable income of individuals was increased to 3 per cent, with a maximum of $90, to take effect on July 1, 1959.

Although the taxes imposed to raise revenues for the old age security fund had been referred to as the 2-2-2 formula, and more recently as the 3-3-3 formula, the amount derived from each of the three taxes has been far from equal.

The sales tax has provided by far the largest proportion, with the tax on individuals next and the tax on corporations producing the smallest portion. This I can illustrate in a table which, with the permission of the committee, I should like to have inserted in Hansard. May I have this permission, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The table above referred to is as follows.]

Revenue from O.A.S. taxes in dollars

Year	Sales	Individuals	Corporations	Total
	(millions of dollars)
1956-57	179.3	125	67.3	371.6
1958-59	173.6	146.4	55.3	375.3
1960-61	270.2	229.4	103.5	603.1
1961-62	284.9	259.0	100.1	664.0
1962-63	302.2	273.6	115.3	691.1

Proportion of O.A.S. tax revenue from each tax

Year	Sales	Individuals	Corporations
1956-57	48.3	33.6	18.1
1958-59	46.3	39.0	14.7
1960-61	44.8	39.0	17.2

Mr. Benson: This table shows that going back to 1956-57, the old age security portion of the sales tax yielded $179.3 million, the tax on individuals yielded $125 million, and the corporation tax $67.3 million, for a total of $371.6 million. This increased each year until in 1962-63, which is our last completed fiscal year, the sales tax contributed towards the old age security fund $302.2 million, the tax on income of individuals $273.6 million, and finally the corporation income tax yielded $115.3 million, for a total of $691.1 million. If one looks at this on a percentage basis he would find that in 1956-57 the sales tax was yielding 48.3 per cent of the total contribution to the old age security fund, the individuals income tax 33.6 per cent, and the corporation income tax 18.1 per cent. Moving on to 1962-63 one would find that the sales tax yielded 43.7 per cent of the total contributions to the old age security fund, the individuals income tax 39.6 per cent and the corporation income tax 16.7 per cent.

The withdrawal of sales tax exemptions for building materials and production machinery announced in June 1963 will increase the old age security tax revenue from the sales tax by approximately $90 million a year commencing in April 1965. The rate of tax on corporations in Canada, including the old age security tax and provincial income taxes, now is 52 per cent in Ontario and Quebec, 51 per cent in Manitoba and Saskatchewan and 50 per cent in the remainder of Canada. The government considered it inadvisable to increase these rates at this time. One will find when the Canada pension plan is passed, as I am sure it ultimately will be by this house, that the employers will have to make additional contributions based on payrolls to the Canada pension plan, and this will largely affect corporations.

It was thus considered that an increase in social benefits to be financed on a pay as you go basis should most appropriately be paid for by contributions by individuals. The increase in tax for each individual is not large; in fact the increases per year for those with smaller incomes is quite small. This is shown in a table which, with the permission of the committee, I would like to insert in Hansard.

The Chairman: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

*Before abatement for provincial tax.

Note: It is assumed that all taxpayers claim $100 standard deduction.

Mr. Benson: This table shows that for a single taxpayer who has an income of $1,500 per annum and takes the standard exemption, including the $100 exemption for donations, medical expenses and union dues, the old age security tax would increase his tax by $4 per annum, and the maximum contribution of $30 per annum would not be reached until he had an income of $4,100 per annum. So that the new tax would involve a maximum contribution of $30 per annum for a single person when that person reached an income level of $4,100. For married persons with no dependants, it would mean that there would be no contribution at a level of income of $2,000 per annum or less. At the level of $2,500 per annum the contribution required from individuals who are married and have no children is $4 per annum and the maximum contribution of $30 is not made by a married person until he reaches an income of $5,100 per annum. Similarly, if a person is married and has two dependants one would find that at an income level of $3,000 per annum his required contribution to the fund under the additional 1 per cent tax would only amount to $3, and the maximum contribution of such married person with two children amounting to $30 would not be reached until he earned $5,700.

The position of the old age security fund in recent years and up to March 31 of this year, the end of the last fiscal year, is shown on page 97 of the appendix to Hansard of June 13, in the budget papers. This indicates that at the end of last year there was a temporary loan from the Minister of Finance outstanding of some $41 million to make good the deficiency in the fund as of that time. The Minister of Finance stated that on the basis of the outlook and tax structure before the budget, the old age security fund would incur a further deficit of $25 million during the current fiscal year as reported on page 1008 of Hansard at the bottom left hand side of the page. The removal of the exemptions from the sales tax were expected to add $45 million to the income of the fund in the current fiscal year, but this portion of the increase in the sales tax, payable into the old age security fund, was later deferred until 1965. The current expectation is that the taxes presently in effect, payable into the old age security fund, will yield $729 million this year, and the pensions before the increase of $10 that is being proposed will cost $750 million, leaving a deficit for the current fiscal year of $21 million. The $10 a month increase in the pensions will add $57 million to the amounts payable out of the fund, increasing the total to $807 million, and the increase of one per cent proposed in the contribution based on personal incomes will add $13 million to the revenues of the fund during the current fiscal year. This will leave the total fund with a deficit of some $65 million for the current year; that is, 1963-64.

It is expected that the additional 1 per cent contribution based on personal incomes which is proposed will yield approximately $100 million in a full fiscal year at current income levels. It is not feasible to put this increased contribution into effect forthwith, but only from January 1. For this reason the amount actually collected and credited to our accounts in the current fiscal year is relatively small. Nevertheless, the additional revenue being secured for the fund is roughly comparable with the additional $116 million being added to expenditures by the increase in the pension rate.

When one considers the situation in the next fiscal year it is of course less easy to make forecasts at this stage because of the greater difficulty of anticipating the levels of income at that time. Moreover, there will still be some lag in collections even in that year, owing to the delay in receipt of final payments of the taxes payable on 1964 incomes. For that year, therefore, we expect that this additional 1 per cent contribution will yield some $93 million that will compare with the additional cost of the $10 increase of approximately $116 million. On the other hand, we would anticipate some growth in the yield from the present taxes which would have produced a modest surplus of revenue over the pension payments during 1964-65. This increase in revenue would include a small amount from the application of the sales tax on building materials and machinery commencing in January, 1965. As a result, I would expect that the $93 million additional revenue which I have forecast from this additional 1 per cent contribution will, roughly, bring the old age security account into balance for the next fiscal year, that is, the 1964-65 fiscal year; the old age security fund, based on the increase of $10 which is being paid currently and the contributions from now to the end of the 1964-65 fiscal year will be brought into balance for that year.

Looking beyond that, I would expect there would be sufficient revenue available to make good relatively soon the deficit incurred in the current fiscal year. Thus, if the old age security payments were continued at $75 a month commencing at age 70 I would forecast some annual surplus in the fund each year beyond 1965. However, when the Canada pension plan is approved by parliament and benefits under the Old Age Security Act are paid at earlier ages, as is anticipated under the plan, the calculations which I have indicated will have to be adjusted accordingly.

Mr. Kindt: In view of the fact that this plan is not to come into effect until 1964 as far as taxation is concerned, this would mean that April 30, 1965 would be approximately the date of the first revenue received from many taxpayers. If these payments start on October 1, an interval of one year and seven months would elapse before substantial additional funds came in or, in other words, approximately $175 million would be paid out while little or no revenue was coming in. Does the minister agree with that statement?

Mr. Benson: I must tell the hon. member for Macleod that I disagree wholeheartedly with him. Individuals in Canada pay taxes quarterly, or by monthly payroll deductions, so one can quickly estimate revenue from personal income tax, and the first monthly payments for 1964 will be received in February 1964 while the first quarterly payments for the 1964 calendar year will be received on March 31. Thus we shall get the $13 million I have estimated in that period. Also, at the end of 1964, we shall have received approximately the whole of the amount payable during the 1964-65 calendar year, or at least the majority will have been received by December 31. I think that if the hon. member will read the figures I have outlined as they will appear in Hansard tomorrow his question will be answered.

Mr. Churchill: Does the parliamentary secretary consider that the resolution as it appears before us is correct inasmuch as it includes the method by which money will be raised for the purpose of the earlier part of the resolution? Should the second part of the resolution not be brought forward as an amendment to the Income Tax Act.

Miss LaMarsh: Perhaps I might answer that question. On the last two occasions when there was an increase in both the level of taxation and in payments out it was done, I understand, in one bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, at the outset, it should be pointed out that we have no intention of delaying the present debate and that we cannot but be in favour of this increase in the pension for the aged in Canada or at least for those who have reached the age of 70 and who will receive it starting this month.

However, since there already exists a rather direct relationship with another pension scheme to be introduced later, I feel a few comments are in order concerning the two plans which are to be put forward this year.

First, we wish to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh) to try and obtain the details of the new provincial contributory and portable pension plan for which a bill will be introduced at the next session of the Quebec legislature and to make them available to this house before the debate begins on this contributory and portable pension plan.

If a provincial government introduces a bill along that line, while the federal government introduces one also, the members of this house and those of the province concerned should be allowed to choose between the two pension plans.

It should not be believed that the electors in a province have necessarily made their minds up on that matter, Mr. Chairman. On the contrary, I believe that the citizens of the province of Quebec, as well as we in this house, must wait until they know all about those two schemes in order to be in a position to pick out that which will seem the most appropriate.

Of course, at first sight, we prefer the contributory and portable provincial pension plan because we want to protect the provincial autonomy which we respect. The leader of the government said last night on television, during a special program, that the provinces needed revenue to meet their increased responsibilities and that the same was true also for the federal government. Well, the responsibilities of the federal government have increased because it has taken over fields of jurisdiction that belonged to the provincial governments. Consequently, it would be fair to limit the responsibility of the federal government by handing over to the provincial governments the responsibilities and sources of revenue which are theirs under the British North America Act.

We tried to obtain details about the provincial portable and contributory pension plan, but all we could gather from people close to the Quebec government is that apparently the province wants to set up a contributory and portable pension fund with accumulated funds. It is said that, over a period of four years, the accumulated funds would total $500 million. At that time, the government of the province of Quebec could use that half a billion dollars to develop certain sectors of the provincial economy. Otherwise, the provincial government would have to raise taxes or borrow elsewhere, from the chartered banks or the finance companies, or issue savings bonds. If the province of Quebec considers the establishment of a consolidated fund through the portable and contributory pension plan, it is precisely because it intends to borrow from that fund. In other words, it is using the pension scheme as an excuse to increase taxes. It also means that its contributory pension plan will be more costly and that a worker who contributes to a cumulative contributory pension plan will pay more than if he were contributing to a pension scheme under which there is no accumulation of funds.

If contributions are three times higher per month or per year than under the federal plan, he will have used it as an excuse to raise a new tax on personal incomes in the province of Quebec.

If the provincial government needs revenues through new taxes, it should say it without beating about the bush, instead of hiding the fact behind a new contributory and portable pension plan like the one which is now suggested. However, we will be able to make a decision only when those two plans are known and bills are introduced by the various governments.

That is why we feel that before introducing her bill or when introducing the legislation relating to the system of contributory and portable pensions, the minister of national health and social welfare should at least give us the opportunity to consider the bills which will be introduced by the government of the province of Quebec and by other provincial governments who will wish to establish their own pension plans, so that we can choose between them.

And now, Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Order. I think I have been very lenient towards the hon. member for Lapointe by permitting him to proceed with his remarks up to this point. I remind him, however, that the house is not considering at the moment the resolution introduced last July concerning the system of contributory pensions. It is simply a resolution preceding the introduction of a bill to amend the Old Age Security Act, in addition to increasing the monthly pension from $65 to $75.

I therefore suggest that the hon. member should restrict his remarks to the resolution now under discussion.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I had just finished expressing my views on the subject, but if I departed from the matter under discussion—I am sorry I did—it is because you had allowed some previous speakers to express their opinion on the contributory pension plan. I felt bound in my turn to inform the house of one of the reasons why the other act should be looked into most carefully.

As for the particular plan which is being submitted to us, that is the increase of old age pensions from $65 to $75, we are undoubtedly in favour of it and we shall see to it that it is passed as soon as possible.

However, in our opinion, the present government takes advantage of the situation to increase taxes, especially the additional 1 per cent tax on personal income tax. I agree with the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) who stated earlier that it would be difficult to increase further the sales tax, because it has just been increased in a very important field of our economy, i.e. in a field which accounts for $8.5 billion, namely building materials. Therefore, it was impossible to increase that 11 per cent sales tax.

But why should the burden of a tax increase such as this one, always be borne by the small wage earner? This burden is laid on the low income groups and again they will have to bear it.

Figures were quoted a while ago and I have noted a few which I should like to bring to the attention of the house.

For instance, we were told that in 1961, for the sole purpose of the old age security plan, personal income tax reached $229 million while corporation income tax amounted only to $103 million, which is less than half what is collected from individuals, from the small wage earners of our country.

Mr. Chairman, it was suggested a while ago that other sources of taxation could have been found. In my opinion, it would have been better for the population as a whole to raise the tax on corporation income.

Mr. Chairman, we know that in the United States, President Kennedy has come to the conclusion that taxes must be reduced in order to get the economy moving again. And I must confess that I was quite surprised to find that the present government had decided to increase taxes, because it is in the habit of following the Americans step by step and of doing everything they do.

Well, in order to rebuild the American economy, President Kennedy has reduced taxes by $11 billion in a single year. He expects that the annual income of each wage-earner will thus be raised by $340.

Right there and then, President Kennedy, with all his teams of economists and experts, says: that will enable us to rebuild our economy, to reduce unemployment and to encourage national production.

And what is being done in Canada? Exactly the opposite. An additional tax of 1 per cent is being levied on personal income.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that the Minister of National Health and Welfare could find another source of revenue, and it was precisely suggested to her by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) who, at that time, was replacing the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) who was absent.

In fact, we asked the Acting Minister of Finance if he could have borrowed from the Bank of Canada the $400 million he needed for loans to the municipalities. We asked him first if it was possible to do so, since the Liberal government had done it previously. The Minister of Trade and Commerce said then that it could be done but that it was not possible to borrow as much as $400 million.

Therefore, since the Minister of Trade and Commerce in the present government has stated that it could be done, I am of the opinion that the opportunity to do so is given him today and the amount is smaller now; it is expected to reach approximately $57 million the first year.

Mr. Chairman, if the ministers could agree among themselves, the Minister of National Health and Welfare might convince the Minister of Finance to adopt that proposal. Then I am convinced that the Minister of National Health and Welfare would become the first minister in any government to have increased the old age pension rate without increasing at the same time the income tax rate. To attain that distinction, she would have only to convince her colleague the Minister of Finance, since the Minister of Trade and Commerce is already convinced, that when a small amount is involved it is possible to get the money from the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Chairman, the Minister of National Health and Welfare seems to ask me where we should take the money without increasing taxes. Well, the Minister of Commerce himself made this suggestion, and as a reasonable amount is involved, that is an amount of $57 million, he suggests that we get it from the Bank of Canada. And as it is well known that the Canadian economy is in a state of stagnation, we would help to start it moving by so doing.

At the present time, we merely have money moving by taking it from wage earners to give it to our citizens 70 years of age or over. But if we were getting the necessary money from the Bank of Canada, we would increase the purchasing power. We would not take money from the young people to give a little more to our old people. We would leave some to those who work and who have worked hard to earn their living and at the same time give a little more to our senior citizens.

Mr. Chairman, I will never be able to say how much we are against taxation, for taxation does not solve our problem; it only redistributes it as regards the citizens as a whole. On the other hand, we are in favour of the old age pensions' increase and that is the reason why we repeat our suggestion to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, for we believe that following the explanations given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce the other day, it would be possible for the ministers to agree to this suggestion for, after all, the amount involved here is a mere $57 million whereas the Liberal government of 1947 did not have any compunction to deal with $200 million.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to dwell for a moment on another question. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), has already raised that point a moment ago. Should we lower the age limit for old age pensions? We will naturally be told that, in so doing, we shall need new funds, and will thus have to increase the income tax. The present-day government seems to know of no other answer. However, let us think about the help we could bring to a great number of our fellow citizens, and boldly proceed with the proposed resolution.

A plant of the aluminum company is located in my own electoral district. Once they reach 65, the workers are pensioned off, and receive a monthly pension of $80 to $125 at the most. They are not entitled to anything else. For years, they have worked in the plant and at 65, as they can find no other work, particularly at a moment when unemployment is high, they have to wait five more years before receiving an old age pension which amounts to $75.

That, in my opinion, constitutes a gap which we should strive to fill and we should take steps so that those people who, at age 65, are used to a certain standard of living, should not have to work until they can get an extra $75 a month. Or perhaps, we should see to it that all those who are laid off or who are forced to retire because of a compulsory retirement plan or of an industry which no longer wants their services, people who have been unable to save any money because their salary was barely sufficient to make both ends meet, that such individuals automatically benefit from a scheme under which they would get an old age pension of $75 per month at the age of 65.

The problem would be solved if a worker who is compelled to retire at the age of 65 because his services are no longer required, automatically received a pension of $75 a month even if he owns a house. But as it happens he is told today: you still own a house, sir, you still have a small bank account or something else in your name, a two-family dwelling, or something else. But if an individual has been clever or thrifty enough to buy a house, I do not see why, in order to be able to benefit from an old pension at 65 years, he should have to sell this house and wait for his capital to be spent before obtaining his $75 when he is 65. There is another suggestion I am making to the Minister of National Revenue. That any worker pensioned off at 65, should automatically come under the old age pension plan and get his pension from then on, so that there would be no more five-year period in his life during which he would not have enough to live decently or not be allowed to work.

Mr. Chairman, those are the few remarks I wanted to make on behalf of our group. I hope they will be favourably considered. They are not beyond the realm of possibilities. There is no exaggeration in these suggestions. The minister might have an estimate made of the additional cost to the pension fund so that those who are necessarily laid off benefit automatically from the old age plan without having to sell their house should they have one.

I believe that with all the tax increases that we have seen this year at the federal, provincial and municipal levels—the people are overburdened. And if that old age pension were to be financed through the Bank of Canada, I believe that the Canadian people would quickly forget about the vexations they have experienced and they would say; that minister managed to find the best way out of our economic problems in Canada.

[Text]

Mr. Nugent: I am looking at the mimeographed copy of the resolution which has been handed to us, and I am constrained to note that this increase in the old age pension was proposed a considerable time ago and that the Prime Minister made his announcement about two weeks ago that it was going to be brought forward. However, we have not got the item on the order paper. I am sure, Mr. Chairman, that we can understand the item not being on the order paper. At the time this resolution was moved, there was only about one copy of it in the house. Mimeographed copies were made available this evening. This causes us to wonder if suddenly, at the last moment, the government decided to introduce this measure in this form.

Miss LaMarsh: Would you like to see the printed bill?

Mr. Nugent: At the moment we have before us also the previous resolution embodying the proposal for a $10 increase in pension and the amendment moved by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition to make this $10 increase payable immediately. Certainly, the easiest method of implementing the government's desire would be to accept the amendment.

I was at a loss to understand the attaching of a monetary clause to this resolution by which taxes would be increased. Certainly the measure itself by which old age pensions are increased, compared to the contributory plan that the government previously considered, is broad enough in scope to allow us to debate both measures at one time. I suggest that the part of the measure by which taxes are increased would more properly be the subject of a separate budget resolution. I can understand why the government, in view of the trouble they have had with the budget and the number of changes they have had to make, would not be particularly anxious to introduce an individual budget item at this time. They hope, perhaps, that parliament and the country will treat them kindly in this respect because the old age pension item is attached to the item increasing taxes. Perhaps the two items are tied together because the government has finally become aware of just how much trouble they are running into in connection with their portable pension plan. They hope that this item, presented in this way, will draw attention away from that other pension plan and make the people of the country forget how much fire the government is drawing from various quarters in connection with that plan.

I realize, Mr. Chairman, that the specific resolution before us does not include the portable pension plan, but the method of financing is before us. We have to contrast this suggested method of financing with the method of financing suggested by this government just a couple of months ago in connection with the same item. I must say that the fact there were not even any copies of this resolution available until today makes me wonder if this measure was not brought before parliament in a great hurry. Certainly, it would not be the first time we have had reason to suspect this government of acting on impulse, not the first time we have seen them act hurriedly and without sufficient thought. Certainly the complete change from

The previous plan suggested by the government is sufficient in itself to make us look with considerable suspicion on those wonders on the government benches who have made us wonder before.

If the change in content were not enough, certainly the change in the manner and method of presentation of the minister would be enough to make us wonder. Most of us who were present in the house when the hon. lady introduced the portable pension plan can recall the positive glee, the almost triumphant manner, in which she presented this plan. We can recall her saying with a beautiful smile, how glad she was to see pensions now being taken out of the realm of politics, while at the same time giving the most political speech ever given in the presentation of such a bill. Certainly this afternoon her speech was very short and her manner most subdued. In fact, the amount of information that she gave was minute. One gained the impression that the minister had learned from her previous dealings on the subject of pensions in this house, and the public and press reaction, that perhaps the less said by her the better. It might be, too, that the result of her intervention in the Ontario provincial election, the reaction of her opponents as well as the reaction of the voters of this province, has taught her a lesson that perhaps will have a lasting effect not only on the hon. lady but on her conduct in this house.

I am in agreement with the increase in the old age pension, and I am sure most of us have realized the house must pass this needed piece of legislation. We all urge the government to honour the commitment it made to the voters during the last election to give this increase immediately. We recall how indignant we were when the government indicated it had no intention of carrying out that commitment and how it denied there was a commitment to put the increase into effect immediately.

I continue to be amazed at the manner in which the members of the government can use the English language. I am amazed at the lengths to which they will go to find a commitment on the subject of nuclear arms. Here we find the government committing itself to a policy it does not agree with, and stretching the English language as an excuse for doing so. On the other hand, and for a very worthy project on which they convinced every voter in the country they were committed to a $10 pension raise, they are unable to find a commitment, and have been unwilling to honour it until forced into doing so by the events and public pressure of the last few months.

I am sure most of us who know Canada's prosperity as a nation and the general standard of living we enjoy, realize that this makes it mandatory on us to recognize our responsibility to our old people in a substantial form. This $10 increase is justified and it is incumbent on us to pay it. In saying that, I am not unmindful of our responsibility to raise the money and to consider how it will be raised. However I am a little surprised to find this subject tied in at the same time as the increase is being passed.

It is not usual in the House of Commons, whenever a bill is presented calling for an expenditure of funds, to tack on to it a clause in the resolution preceding it outlining in detail the method by which the money should be raised. In fact the customary procedure is to deal with the matter in two stages, to consider whether we ought to carry out certain plans and then at another time consider the question of raising money for that purpose in the debate on raising money generally. In this manner we are able to keep our spending and the raising of money in proportion and each item, taken together with all the rest, is capable of being assessed regarding its effect on the tax paying ability of the country.

Dealing with the present measure, we have to consider not only whether the old age pension should be increased but we have also to decide whether we should change the general formula which has existed for the last 10 or 12 years, of finding increased funds for pension purposes by an orderly increase on each of three classes of taxpayers. We have to consider whether it is wise for the house to vary that formula, and I submit that this question alone could be the subject of a very long and learned debate.

It is worthy of note that the minister made only passing reference to the subject of raising the money. It was only after three or four hon. members had spoken on the subject that the parliamentary secretary contributed to the debate and we heard any discussion on the question of raising the necessary funds. Considering that the subject of taxation is rather difficult at the best of times, and knowing you cannot raise taxes in one area without having a considerable influence on the well-being of the general economy of the country, I would think the government would have been anxious to approach this subject of additional taxation with some diffidence, and to have approached the subject of a change in the concept of taxation with some difference, and furthermore with some advance notice.

We were told a couple of weeks ago that the government planned to increase old age pensions, but I do not think we were told exactly how it was to be done. There was nothing on the order paper and nothing was said specifically about it until today. I suggest that this is rather a quick method of asking the house to deal with so serious a subject. In fact I begin to wonder whether the minister has really learned to leave politics out of these questions.

It looks to me like another political trick to propose the increase and the financing of it in such a way that we, as legislators, would be rather careless in looking at it and examining it closely. Then, if we dare to examine or question the propriety and wisdom of raising the money in this manner, it could be said we were guilty of prolonging debate and keeping the old age pensioners from getting their money. However I believe that the people of the country will see through this political trick.

I suggest the minister has not learned that public pressure is not just brought about by insurance companies complaining about portable pension plans. Public pressure is the awareness of the ordinary men and women of Canada of what is going on. It is the realization by them that the Liberal government came into power because of what it promised to do, and this is a commitment the government had to carry out because of that public pressure. Even at this late date I would suggest the government would be well advised to accept the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition.

I have a few questions in my mind despite the illuminating and interesting information supplied by the parliamentary secretary. There are the questions of other expenses that usually accompany a straight raise in old age pensions. Contributory pensions usually go up at the same time, and there are the same considerations to be given to contributory widows pensions and blind pensions. We will run into all these increases. The argument that holds good for one holds good for the others. They usually have gone up at the same time, so that added to the question of whether the government has acted properly in tying in this method of raising money with the increase in pensions, is the question of whether it has only attacked the problem piecemeal.

Surely public pressure on the Liberal government which forced them to agree to this $10 increase is not to be satisfied by this sort of action without regard to the kind of common sense it makes. The same public pressure will want to know about the other pensions; it will want to know why the government has not handled them all together, and it will want to know why the government does not put its taxation house in order all at once. Certainly the fact is that so little is left of the budget, and the ordinary citizen of Canada is so much in doubt as to where the finances of this country are, that a new budget for this year is more than past due.

Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that instead of putting these two things, the money spending and the money raising, in the same resolution, the government should merely put through the old age pension increase and the minister should tell us what she intends to do about the contributory pensions, pensions for the blind, etc. Then the government can put its mind to work on the question of bringing in a new budget. The parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance quoted some figures which indicate—if I sorted it out in my mind correctly, and without the tables to which he referred it was rather difficult to get them straight; but I made some notes —that the 1 per cent increase in the old age security tax payable by the individual would amount to about $90 million in a taxation year. When the minister made her statement to the house she said the difference in cost on this one item would amount to about $116 million for a year. So that for the one year the two items are nearly ad idem and it would seem, whether I use the term "taxation year", "fiscal year" or "calendar year", this will not be too inaccurate. I do not want to get confused, as did my hon. friend from Macleod, with regard to what we call the year. I take it that whatever year we are talking about, it is the same year, calendar or taxation.

However, I remember the minister's speech on the contributory plan and I note that we still have this on the order paper, and we have had no indication from the government that it intends to drop the contributory plan. We are going to have the complication of financing that, which may have a bearing on the amount of money realized from this increase in taxation and which is certainly going to have an influence on the ability of the taxpayer to pay it. I am wondering whether the minister, when she next deals with this topic, would mind straightening out the house in this regard, bearing in mind some of her remarks of July 18 as reported in Hansard, where she made reference to the variable amounts that might be required to be paid out under the contributory scheme.

All we know about the participation of the other provinces in the federal scheme is that apparently Quebec is not going to take part in it. I would think that in itself might be warning enough to the minister that some of the weighted criticism across the country with regard to the portable pension scheme is perhaps worth looking at very closely.

We are not sure, of course, that the rest of the provinces are going to agree, and perhaps of more moment to this debate is the fact that the provinces may very well ask the minister to reconsider part of that other scheme. That part may be the method of financing and the amount of contributions, etc. We certainly saw, for instance, in the winter works program that the government had to practically throw out its scheme and adopt the one the provinces wanted, in order for them to accept it. We do not have the acceptance of the provinces and I therefore suggest it is quite possible that the provinces may force the government to bury its contributory scheme to the extent that the fund raising aspects of it will throw a totally new and unexpected load on the government.

I suggest that even though, as the minister said originally with regard to the contributory scheme, we are not exactly fixed on the contributions from the individual, that part of the finances the provinces expect the federal government to pay will have to come from additional sources of tax revenue. It might very well be that the minister will be in the position of having to come back to the house and say, "I want to increase each of the categories from 3 per cent to 4 per cent"; that is, not just the tax on the individual, but the sales tax and the corporation tax, right across the board. In that case we would be presented with a whole new set of figures.

Might I suggest to the minister that she seriously consider withdrawing from this resolution the fund raising part of it. Also, I suggest that an entirely new budget be presented, or an amendment to the budget, so that we can get on with granting the increase in pension without this further complication, and so we can give the fund raising aspect of this matter the kind of attention it deserves.

Mr. Paul: Mr. Chairman, during the last federal election, the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh) was a member of the truth squad. Probably worried about her conversion, she remembered the words of Socrates, the philosopher: Know thyself. Then, she changed her mind but she nevertheless retained a certain personal knowledge which she has used today and which she acquired while she was following the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) who was Prime Minister at the time. The best evidence we have of that is the resolution which the minister introduced this afternoon. Indeed, the hon. lady had to agree that the Leader of the Opposition spoke the truth last July 18 when, seconded by the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith), he moved the following amendment:

That the said resolution be amended by adding after the words "ten dollars a month" in line 9:

[Mr. Nugent.]

"and this house asks that the government give consideration to making the payment of such additional pension to commence on this day."

The Minister of National Health and Welfare has now decided to accept this proposed amendment. At that time, she and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) rose and stated emphatically that the proposed amendment was unconstitutional. And I think it is you, Mr. Chairman, who on that day said that you would take under advisement the matter of legality of the amendment proposed by the Leader of the Opposition. In my opinion, the resolution introduced this afternoon by the minister relieves you from rendering a decision which we were anxious to know.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare accepts the suggestion made by the Leader of the Opposition, except for the last words of the amendment: "to commence on this day", because the resolution before us indicates that this legislation on old age security will come into force on October 1, 1963.

I would like, Mr. Chairman, to draw your attention to a particular point which came up in discussing this resolution. I did not look very deeply into the matter, but I wonder if the resolution does not come in conflict with some clauses or rules of the house, because I do not know whether we are allowed two resolutions on one bill. I shall not stress the point, I only mention the fact. But, I wonder if it is not creating more of that confusion often found among government members, and which is characteristic of them since they took over. If we look over the text of the resolution introduced this afternoon, and refer to number 15 on the order paper, we shall see that it also mentions an increase of $10 a month in the pension paid under the Old Age Security Act.

No doubt the leader of the house, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) did not have time to submit the question to the government's legal adviser because after the triduum which followed the closed retreat of last week end which the members of the Liberal party attended, I think the Minister of National Health and Welfare—in order to regain political prestige was forced to submit this resolution in a hurry, without studying all its legal aspects. But there is no doubt that all members of the house will support this motion since we of the official opposition, were in favour of a $10 per month increase as early as July 18, we still are, even more than ever.

That legislation, as I said a moment ago, was prepared in great haste, did not have time to ripen or to be completed, and could not give satisfaction to all those who need social aid in any guise or form from the federal government.

Besides, the Minister of National Health and Welfare when she saw at the last federal-provincial conference that her contributory pension scheme was turning out to be a failure—a failure that was much more humiliating since it was coming on the heels of the last federal election—then, the minister should have taken the opportunity offered her when she met with the provincial premiers to discuss the advisability of amending the act in order that the provinces and the federal government might offer pensions not only to those over 70 years of age, but also to those now coming under the handicapped and blind persons acts.

Now, I believe that the minister of health and welfare, as well as the government, would have shown the Canadian people that their plan was not submitted for the purpose of bolstering the Liberal party which is sinking fast since it is the first constructive piece of legislation introduced by this government.

Since April we have been faced only with incomplete legislation meant to put the taxpayer in a difficult position. I am thinking of those different taxes which have been levied by a certain minister of finance who turns out to be a pretty poor administrator. He may be a competent accountant, but as far as I am concerned, he does not know the first thing about administration. Besides, the measure brought forward is nothing but patchwork and intended to make the people forget the government's mismanagement at this time and, as the previous speaker just said, I think that the government should not introduce immediately this legislation to impose a 4 per cent tax to provide for the increase of that pension. We should rather be given the opportunity to think over and revise the whole social legislation. Then, the government might find out in that financing method a form of taxation which would not only help to meet the expenses of its social assistance plan, but also help all the various classes of society, the various classes of government pensioners.

I think the minister should give more thought to the old age problem even though the government will not get much political advantage from it. When the Prime Minister made his announcement during the last election campaign in Ontario, several old persons in my riding were delighted over the statement, but everyone without any exception told me that the Prime Minister was afraid of being defeated in the house and that it is the Leader of the Opposition who imposes his views and makes the government realize that to keep that election pledge is in their own interest.

Last year, when we introduced legislation to raise from $55 to $65 the payments to all government pensioners, there was no mention of new taxes to be imposed. It is to be hoped that the famous planning program will be carried out without new taxes having to be imposed on Canadian taxpayers.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I was wondering whether we could pass the resolution now and if other members who wished to speak would be willing to speak on the bill instead of the resolution. It would save almost a day of parliamentary time.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I have prepared a speech which I intended to make tomorrow.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. member object at all to making it on the bill instead of on the resolution?

Mr. Nasserden: I want to speak on both.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, I just inquired, sir.

The Chairman: It being ten o'clock shall I rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: I should like to ask the house leader if he would give us a forecast of the business for the rest of the week, which I hope will be done in orderly fashion without these special requests to go on after the hour, and things of that nature.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I think most hon. members will feel that the country will expect us, even if we once in a while have to sit a little late, to do the country's business.

The first item we shall take tomorrow is the continuation of this debate, and if it is completed, as I hope it will be, we shall then take the two bills respecting Northwest Territories. I may say there is some urgency about these because of the need to hold an election in the territories this autumn. If they are completed there is a resolution standing in the name of my colleague the Minister of Labour with respect to vocational training which would be taken next.

If we conclude the debate on the old age pension resolution we would want to take the bill on Wednesday, and on Thursday, I should like to suggest, the Minister of Finance will be asking for interim supply. It was our thought that we would ask for two months supply so as not to interrupt our business again. We would hope in that time to be able to get through all the estimates.

The resolution respecting the measure to which the Minister of Labour referred earlier today will appear on the notice paper of today and will, of course, appear on the order paper on Wednesday. We would expect to advance it one stage on that day. As the minister has indicated, its progress beyond that stage will depend to some extent on developments which may or may not take place outside the house. It is therefore necessary to have some reservations about business in the latter part of the week.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask the leader of the house a question? If, as we hope, the debate on the old age pension resolution is ended early tomorrow, might it not be possible to have the bill printed and proceeded with later tomorrow in place of some of the other legislation to which the hon. gentleman has referred?

Mr. Pickersgill: That would be exceedingly agreeable to the government, but unanimous consent would be required.

It being five minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, October 1, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

EXTENSION OF INCREASED OLD AGE PENSION TO WAR ALLOWANCE RECIPIENTS

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is the intention of the government that recipients of war veterans allowances and corresponding civilian war allowances who are over age 70 shall not be deprived of the proposed increase of $10 a month in old age security pensions. We therefore intend that an item will appear in the supplementary estimates to be tabled later this week which will provide for this adjustment, so there will be no reduction in the amount of the cheque to be issued to war veterans allowance recipients.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, the statement just made by the Minister of Veterans Affairs will be very well received by veterans across Canada, particularly those at the age of 70 and over who come under the war veterans allowance arrangements. These persons are deserving of this type of assistance, and this corresponds to and follows what we put in practice in instances where the old age pension was increased. We immediately made the increase available to those on war veterans allowances. We welcome this announcement, and we are pleased to see the minister has now got some grasp of his department.

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, we are happy to learn that the government intends to act immediately regarding the increase in the old age pensions as well as the veterans'. We are anxious to see the estimates introduced. The most anxious are certainly the veterans and the old people across Canada.

We congratulate the government on this action and we hope to see the measure before us as soon as possible.

[Text]

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the members of the New Democratic party welcome the announcement made by the minister, and I am sure it will be welcomed by people right across Canada. I hope that when the government is considering the effects of the proposed $10 a month increase for old age pensioners, it will also give some thought to legislation dealing with blind pensioners and disabled persons. The whole picture has to be rounded out, and I am sure the government has it under consideration. I certainly hope legislation will be brought down accordingly.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare a question. Does the minister intend to bring forward resolutions and consequential amendments to the Old Age Assistance Act, the Blind Persons Act and the Disabled Persons Act, so these unfortunate people may receive equal benefits to those covered by the Old Age Security Act, and from the same effective date?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, may I point out to my hon. friend, who held this portfolio just before I did, that the government can only bring forward one piece of legislation at a time. As he knows, we are now dealing with the largest mass of the people. When we have completed this matter the house will be informed of the next piece of legislation to be dealt with.

Mr. Monteith: Does this mean these people benefiting by these related acts will or will not receive this extra benefit dated from October 1, the same as those receiving benefits under the Old Age Security Act?

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker, this will of course be announced in due course.

LABOUR RELATIONS

GREAT LAKES—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRESENT POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour and ask if he would bring the house up to date on the discussions he has had with Mr. Jodoin and other labour leaders. In particular would he comment on a statement made by a reliable member of the press gallery, Mr. Ed Murphy, to the effect that an informed government source said that the S.I.U. had threatened to tie up Canadian ports if the government goes ahead with its proposed union control?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, discussions were held yesterday evening between myself and the executive officers of the Canadian Labour Congress, at which time the ideas that had been explored in Boston over the week end were reviewed and canvassed. I was informed yesterday that the executive committee of the congress would be meeting this morning, and as yet I have received no report from the congress as to the results of its deliberations.

With respect to the second part of the question, as I stated in reply to a question on the week end, I have received no communication about nor have I any knowledge of this particular threat, namely that the implementation of the government's intention would produce this result. I as Minister of Labour have received no communication nor have I any reason to believe that the department or any member of the government has received any communication of that kind.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CONSIDERATION BY COMMITTEE OF PROPOSED POLICY CHANGES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of National Defence based on an article in the Globe and Mail reporting his speech at Hamilton last evening. My question is, is it the intention of the minister to ask the special committee on defence to examine and report on the proposed changes in defence policy before he makes a decision?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I am not sure, from the question the hon. gentleman has posed, just exactly to what changes he is referring.

Mr. Churchill: The newspaper reports the minister using these words:

> We are well on the way toward decisions in respect to these things. Some decisions can be made very shortly.

I simply ask, will he refer these problems to the special committee on defence to get their findings before he makes the decisions about which he talks?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt that the committee will wish to consider all these problems, and I will be most happy if it does so. While I am on my feet perhaps I should take this opportunity to correct one error which appears in that report, and say I did not indicate that the white paper would be available in December. I said the review, I hoped, would be completed by the year end, but the white paper would probably not be available until some time next year, after the government has had a chance to consider it.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister again, will the committee have an opportunity, before he makes his decision, to inquire into and give him advice with regard to proposed changes in policy?

Mr. Hellyer: I am not a member of the committee, Mr. Speaker, and I cannot really control how fast it acts. If it acts with dispatch I have no doubt it will be able to consider some of these problems before the decision is made. If it is tardy in its deliberations it may not be able to do so.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, as a member of the defence committee I should like to ask this. We have been told by the minister that we have nothing to say as to the decision. Will he now present his proposals to the next meeting of the defence committee, or is he acting as a prevaricator, saying one thing in committee and the opposite in the House of Commons? Will the minister tell us now, in view of his answer, whether he will give evidence before the committee?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I will give evidence before the committee any time I am called to appear there.

NATO—REPORTED REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN CANADIAN FORCES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister a question? Can the government tell us whether it has been requested by NATO to increase its military forces overseas and, if so, will the problem be put before the house?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. I know of no such attempts. As a matter of fact, NATO has not the authority and is not in the habit of making demands on governments in the terms in which the question has been put.

NUCLEAR WEAPONS—PAYMENT OF RENT BY U.S. FOR STORAGE IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Lucien Plourde (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Does the American government pay rent to Canada for the use of our territory at La Macaza and North Bay for the storage of American nuclear warheads? If so, what is the amount of such rent?

[Text]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, if I understood the question correctly the answer is that the government of Canada does not pay rental for this land. It owns it outright.

FINANCE

USE OF MONEY FROM WHEAT SALE TO RUSSIA

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

Could the monetary unit that we are accepting in payment for the wheat we sell to Russia be used to pay off our debts with the United States?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the $500 million we hope to receive will be put to a very good purpose indeed.

REMISSION OF UNION DUES TO UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. P. Antoine Belanger (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon). In view of the deficit of our balance of payments with the United States, is the Minister of Finance considering taking steps to prevent Canadian assets under the form of union fees from leaving Canada for the United States?

[Text]

Mr. E. J. Benson (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I shall be most pleased to take this question as notice and bring it to the attention of he Minister of Finance.

PENSIONS

SUGGESTED REFERENCE OF PLAN TO HOUSE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Last week the hon. lady was reported as saying that she was opposed to the idea of a committee of this house having referred to it the Canada pensions plan. On Sunday the Prime Minister indicated that he was quite prepared to accept such a reference. Has the hon. lady now changed her mind in this regard?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I did not see the report to which my hon. friend refers.

INDUSTRY

MOTOR VEHICLES—DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING INCREASED PRODUCTION AND TRADE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. E. Gray (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry. I should like to ask whether the minister can assure the house that discussions are continuing with the manufacturers of motor vehicles and parts to work out methods of increasing production and trade with respect to Canadian automotive products.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for having given me notice of his intention to ask this question. Discussions have been taking place between members of the government and the motor vehicle manufacturers and automotive parts producers. The purpose of these discussions has been to explore possible means of improving the balance of trade in motor vehicles and parts.

The government has received a number of suggestions from these industries on measures to achieve this objective. A high priority is being given by the government to formulating a plan to improve the trade balance, a plan which will also provide opportunities for the vehicle and parts manufacturers to realize economies of larger scale production. We are not yet in a position to announce the details which are being considered, although I can say that we contemplate a measure which will encourage a substantial increase in the production and trade in Canadian automotive products. Such a plan would not be of a restrictive nature, but rather it will provide incentives to encourage trade expansion.

[Later:]

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry arising out of his reply to the carefully rehearsed, spontaneous question put to him by the member for Essex West. Could the minister indicate to the house the extent to which United States authorities are involved in the plan to change the importing of automotive parts, particularly in view of the published threats of retaliation in some form by Secretary Hodges? Could he indicate the degree of involvement of United States authorities in his plans and whether subsequent meetings are going to be held to discuss the plans with them?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, at the recent ministerial conference in Washington with the United States authorities an outline was given to the United States representatives of Canada's intentions in regard to redressing our imbalance of payments without, however, disclosing any specific plan to do this. The measures that the government of Canada has in mind to accomplish this purpose would in no way invalidate or go against our agreements, either specifically with the United States or under the general agreement on tariffs and trade. Consequently in the completion of these plans it would not be necessary to involve the United States administration at all. We would, however, welcome their co-operation and will seek to keep them informed of the steps we contemplate.

STORMS

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Would the hon. gentleman tell us if the government of Quebec has addressed a request for financial assistance to the federal government in order to help the victims of last June in Abitibi West?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge, the answer is no.

[Text]

HARBOURS

COAL HARBOUR, B.C.—LEASES OF WATER LOTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Webster (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. What commitments have been made by the federal government through the national harbours board in respect of long term leases of water lots in Coal Harbour in Vancouver to Coal Harbour Investments Limited, who are planning a comprehensive scheme of development at the entrance to Burrard inlet?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): To check the files in order to see precisely what commitments or leases have been entered upon would require detailed research work, and I should think that a question of this type should be put on the order paper. I shall be glad to get the information if the question is put on the order paper.

WORLD FAIR

INQUIRY AS TO SITE AND COMPLETION DATE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. Minister of Public Works a question? In order to stop the rumors which are spreading, would the hon. minister state in the house whether the world fair will be definitely held in Montreal, on St. Helen's island and on the set date in 1967?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I think that the recent statements of the commissioner responsible for the world fair and of his assistant would answer the hon. member's question.

However, I may add, with regard to the world fair site, that there is no doubt at this time that the site will be handed over to the World Fair Corporation not only in time, but before the date provided.

With regard to the approaches, they will, but for a major impediment, also be completed in good time for the world fair.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question? Following his statement regarding roads, would the hon. minister tell us whether those approaches include the trans-Canada highway leading to the world fair site?

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, when the three-way agreement was concluded about a month ago in Montreal, between the Minister of Public Works, the provincial government and the authorities of the city of Montreal, it was understood that the eastern section of the trans-Canada highway from Montreal would not be completed in time for 1967. The efforts of the three governments will bear on the western section which extends from Decarie boulevard to St. Helen's and Notre Dame islands, and which is recognized as the vital one for the fair.

We were, at the time, assured by the Quebec government engineers that this section, which is vital for the world fair, will also be completed in time for the fair.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question? Could the minister give us the real reason for the resignation of Messrs. Bienvenu, Carsley and Robillard?

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, when Mr. Bienvenu and Mr. Carsley handed in their resignations, which were regretted at the time, they gave their reasons for doing so and it would not be proper for me to add anything to what they said.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-l'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, speaking of roads of access to the fair, could the minister tell the house if the federal government will contribute about 90 per cent of the construction cost?

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, as regards work on the trans-Canada highway, the federal contribution is provided for in the Trans-Canada Highway Act and it will be the same in this case as in the other provinces.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that it is urgent and timely, I hope the Prime Minister will inform the house and the public as to which member of the cabinet answers for the world fair.

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the reason I answered the previous question with the words "Of course it was inaccurate" was because there was a minister already designated as minister responsible for the world fair. That has been made public and it is the Minister of Public Works.

[Translation]

Mr. Valade: I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Public Works.

Could the minister tell the house whether the new general commissioner has accepted the $75,000 yearly allowance which his predecessor refused?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of the question and answer it tomorrow.

[Text]

REPORTED APPOINTMENT OF MEMBER FOR ST. LAWRENCE-ST. GEORGE AS LIAISON OFFICER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask a question relating to the very well thought of hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George. I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works whether there is any substance in the reports that the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George has been appointed to or given the task of providing liaison among the federal government, the government of the city of Montreal and the Quebec government in matters relating to the world fair.

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, this matter is a prerogative of the Prime Minister and I would refer my hon. friend's question to him.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the report is of course without foundation.

TRANSPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Has the minister anything new to report on the proposed railroad abandonment in the light of heavy grain movements on the prairies?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker. There have been no rail line abandonments on the prairies, and I do not think there is anything new or different about the situation. I hope we can move the prairie wheat to the complete satisfaction of the hon. member.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): A supplementary question. I should like to ask the minister if he would care to comment on reports that further sales of wheat are being discouraged, or at least inhibited, because the transportation industry is unable to cope with any further movement.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether it is good practice to comment on such statements, but it is perfectly obvious that the statement is untrue.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

INQUIRY INTO ADMINISTRATION OF PAROLE BOARD

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Justice. Can he inform the house of any progress made by the committee which is at present considering the problems of the national parole board?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I had difficulty understanding the last part of the question. I imagine the hon. member's question has to do with the Dion case?

Mr. Marcoux: I am particularly interested in the Dion case, Mr. Speaker. I am concerned about the work of the committee investigating the national parole board, and I am asking the minister if he could inform the house of any progress made in that regard?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, before the adjournment, in early August, I appointed two persons for this investigation. I now have their report before me. I am examining it and I will report to the house in due time.

AGRICULTURE

PROVISION OF FEED GRAIN STORAGE IN EASTERN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerard Perron (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that wheat is a popular topic of debate, does the minister intend to order the construction of feed grain bins for the benefit of eastern farmers, so as to reduce the cost of feed grain to the eastern feed mills.

[Text]

Mr. B. S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for bringing this question before the house. I will bring it to the attention of the minister and an answer will be forthcoming.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

SAINT JOHN, N.B.—PROPOSED SALE OF GRAIN ELEVATOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport of which I have given him some notice. In view of the recent announcement that the C.N.R. will be selling its grain storage elevator at Saint John, and in the light of the strain on existing facilities, will the minister reconsider this proposal and perhaps have the elevator operated by the national harbours board to the fullest extent?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not know that this is exclusively a matter for the minister but I will certainly look at the question posed by the hon. member to see that the movement of grain out of that harbour is not interfered with in any way.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS—REQUEST FOR SETTING UP OF COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is it the intention of the government to set up the public accounts committee at an early date so that the Auditor General's report and public accounts tabled in this house on January 31, 1963 may be examined and thus maintain the continuity of the committee's work?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad to take that matter into consideration. I think the committee should be set up at an early date.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

EXTENSION OF BENEFITS TO WORKERS IN U.S.

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Charles-Eugene Dionne (Kamouraska): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Can he inform the house of the result of negotiations undertaken by representatives of the Canadian government to reach an understanding with the American authorities in order that Canadian workers in the United States, particularly in Maine and New Hampshire, may become eligible for unemployment insurance benefits?

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, last week in an attempt to reach a decision on this matter with the state of Maine, a matter which I might add has been outstanding for the past 20 years, I visited Augusta and put the claims of the Canadian workers before the governor and also before the state employment commission. It would appear to me that there is a very just case for pressing to have an agreement concluded quickly between the state of Maine and the unemployment insurance commission of Canada to provide for reciprocal treatment of workers moving from one area into the other. As all hon. members know, we have such an agreement with 47 other states.

I received no definite indication from the authorities in Maine though I pressed for a decision at an early date. Once a decision has been made the government and the unemployment insurance commission will then be in a position to assess what further steps ought to be taken.

NATIONAL PARKS

BANFF, ALTA.—REPORTED APPOINTMENT OF ADMINISTRATOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. This is an important question so far as the national parks and our tourist trade are concerned. Is it correct that the present government has abolished the elected Banff advisory council and intends to appoint an administrator to run Banff national park and other parks in Canada?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I always thought it was a somewhat dangerous practice for a private member to announce government policy. I noticed in a copy of the Albertan yesterday that the hon. member had announced that this was government policy. I want to tell him that the advisory committee has not been abolished, nor is there any intention on the part of the government to abolish it.

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When the minister was at Banff national park did he not announce that an administrator would be appointed to look after the affairs of Banff? If so, what is the name of that administrator?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, I announced that it was the intention of the government to appoint an administrator for the townsite of Banff. I announced at the same time that I would expect that administrator to work as closely as possible with the advisory council. I have no names in mind whatsoever for the position of administrator. We are seeking a person with civic experience and who also has some recognition of the long term objectives with regard to the parks.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HEALTH AND WELFARE

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—PAYMENT TO SCHOOL CHILDREN OVER 16

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Six months ago in the last political campaign all political parties—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the hon. member would just state his question.

Mr. Alkenbrack: When does the government propose to implement the promise made to pay family allowances to those over 16 years of age who are still at school?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Government policy will be announced in due course.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—CHECK OF LEVELS OF CAESIUM 137

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gene Rheaume (Northwest Territories): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, which arises out of press reports that the level of radioactive caesium 137 is approximately 100 times as high in the people who live in northern Alaska as compared with people living elsewhere in the United States. My question is, what steps is the federal government taking to check the levels of caesium 137 in residents of the Northwest Territories at the present time?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): If I am not mistaken such a question is already on the order paper for answer.

OLD AGE SECURITY

INQUIRY AS TO INCREASE IN AMOUNT OF PENSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that government orders Nos. 15 and 19 on today's order paper both call for an increase of $10 in the old age pension, are we to assume that the total increase will be $20? Is there any answer, Mr. Speaker?

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ALASKA HIGHWAY—INQUIRY AS TO PAVING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence whether he has received a communication or resolution from the Alaska highway paving conference held in Whitehorse recently? If he has, does he intend to take any action in respect to it?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, a copy of that resolution has come to my office. The question of the probability of paving the highway would be a matter of government policy. So far as I know it has not yet been placed on the agenda.

QUEBEC—ADMINISTRATION OF ESKIMO AFFAIRS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Will the government finally transfer to the government of the province of Quebec jurisdiction over Eskimo affairs in New Quebec in accordance with the legitimate wishes of the province and those of his good friend, Mr. Rene Levesque?

[Text]

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for his courtesy in giving me some notice of this question. The question has been raised in the house several times, and at present I can tell him there have been a number of discussions, but there have been no negotiations of any kind. I think it is now suggested that this matter might become a subject of more discussion at the dominion-provincial conference in November. Meanwhile if the minister of natural resources of the province of Quebec should wish to discuss it we would be glad to hear from him.

I would like to assure the hon. member that we are proceeding in respect of capital expenditure and maintenance with the fullest discharge of our responsibility as a federal government, as set out for us in the decision of the supreme court in 1939, in respect to these people.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell the house whether the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George was talking on behalf of the government when he made a statement recently before the Arctic institute at McGill University?

[Mr. Nielsen.]

[Text]

Mr. Laing: In response to that, Mr. Speaker, I want to tell the hon. member that I have an extremely high regard for my parliamentary secretary, and I think this regard is shared in other parts of the house.

The hon. member may recall that my parliamentary secretary, in discussing this matter before the Arctic institute in Montreal recently, made it one of the conditions of his statement that he was representing only his own opinion and not that of the department or the government. However, I think it related to a suggestion that education in the area should be combined with a proposed Bill 60, and this proposal of his, which was his own suggestion, has since been commented on rather widely.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the minister has stated that this matter might become one for discussion at the dominion-provincial conference, is it his intention to somehow obtain the wishes of the Eskimo people, who are most concerned in this matter, before any decision is made?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, during a recent visit to the area, when complaints were registered with me I did make the commitment to the Eskimo people that in respect of any changes we would keep them aware of the situation and advise them of prospective changes.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Are any prospective changes contemplated at this time?

Mr. Laing: As of now, no. I think I made that very clear in my statement. We are conducting these affairs clearly under the responsibility given to us by the decision of 1939.

Mr. Nielsen: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Rather than advising the Eskimo people of any changes to be made, is it the minister's intention to consult the Eskimo people before any decision as to change is made?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, let me say to the hon. member that I think it would be the opinion of all hon. members of this house, of the legislature of Quebec and all other provinces, that the sole consideration is the benefit to the primitive people concerned. When I have said that I think I have taken care of the situation as between advising people or seeking their consent. I think there is a wide opinion that the sole purpose in the discharge of this responsibility is the benefit to the people themselves.

[Later:]

Mr. Gene Rheaume (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources whether he was enunciating his future policy in dealing with the Eskimos, whom he rather casually described as primitives, when he said that in future they shall be advised rather than consulted in a democratic manner.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I point out to all hon. members that we have discussed this subject at length in two successive days, and I would hope the urgency has gone out of it for at least two weeks.

BROADCASTING

REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT ON WORK OF INQUIRY COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to ask the Secretary of State whether he has received a report or advice from the Jamieson, Stewart, Ouimet trio on broadcasting matters, and if they have recommended an amendment to the Broadcasting Act or a general commission of inquiry.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I have received an interim report which I got last week. I have not a copy of it right here at the moment, but if hon. members would be interested I would be glad to make it available and even to lay it on the table if that is the wish of the house.

[Later:]

Mr. Pickersgill: Before Your Honour proceeds to private members' business I wonder if I might have the permission of the house to revert to motions in order that I may table a document which was asked for earlier by the hon. member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Churchill: What document is it?

Mr. Pickersgill: It is a letter signed by Mr. Jamieson, Mr. Ouimet and Mr. Stewart about their discussions on broadcasting.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Has the hon. minister leave to table this document?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CAPE BRETON HIGHLANDS NATIONAL PARK—INQUIRY AS TO WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I have a question for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. In view of the serious unemployment situation existing in Inverness and Victoria counties, in which the Cape Breton Highlands national park lies, can the minister advise if a winter works program is planned for this coming winter? If so, how soon would it commence?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): If my memory serves me correctly I think there is a winter works program for allocation in that park. It will be announced very quickly.

BRANTFORD, ONT.—DESIGNATION AS DISTRESSED AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry. In view of the answer he gave to a question I asked yesterday concerning the possibility of declaring the Guelph-Kitchener-Galt district a distressed area, and in view of the decision of a company to move from Guelph to Brantford, would he give an answer to this question within the next week?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Yesterday I undertook to give consideration to the proposal made by the hon. member. I do not believe he would wish to press for a hasty or ill considered answer. I have given my undertaking to provide consideration and an answer, and this I will do.

CRITERIA USED FOR DESIGNATION OF DISTRESSED AREAS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Labour a question. Can he tell the house why in the establishment of the criteria for the designation of depressed areas it was decided that an area must have been depressed for eight years before being entitled to government assistance? Does the minister want to indicate that it takes eight years before one can die of hunger in any area?

REPORTED DELAYS IN IMPLEMENTING CERTAIN PROPOSALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct another question to the Minister of Labour, since he did not answer the first one. Can he tell us why his department waited such a long time and is still waiting to release information that would enable contractors to take advantage of the planned and announced forms of aid, such as the payment of 50 per cent of the salary to people 45 and over, as well as the $500 bonus to people having a house built in the winter months? Why did he wait so long before giving information in that regard?

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the winter house building program there has been no delay whatsoever. The details were announced some weeks ago, and if the hon. gentleman had been following the press he would have noticed the advertisements have for some time been placed therein giving the details of this program and giving individuals the source of further information on the program.

With respect to the older workers program, this is not to come into effect until November 1 and already sufficient detail has been made available and further information will be made available at the appropriate time and in the appropriate way so that interested employers may take advantage of this forward looking step.

[Translation]

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question. Does the Minister of Labour intend to send those releases and information to local unemployment insurance offices, since the officials themselves are worried because they have not reached them yet?

[Text]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the officers of the unemployment insurance commission are fully apprised of this program, because they have requested additional staff. In order to implement these programs, this request has been approved by the government.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a related question of the Minister of National Revenue and ask him whether the $500 bonus, if it is collected by individual people, will be treated as income and subject to income tax, or will it be exempt from income tax.

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I would prefer to take that question as notice.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Labour. Is the minister putting out a pamphlet outlining the qualifications necessary in order to obtain the $500 grant on these houses?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, that kind of question ought to go on the order paper.

[Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John).]

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO LETTER IN "VETERANS ADVOCATE"

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, a paper called The Veterans Advocate published an open letter to the minister in the August edition. A report in the September edition states they received no acknowledgment from him. May I ask the minister now if he received The Veterans Advocate for August, and if he has replied to the very reasonable request made by the veteran author of that article?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I do not know to what the hon. gentleman refers, but I will check to see if there was a letter. I do not recall reading it.

HOUSING

EFFECT OF PROVISION FOR DIRECT LOANS BY C.M.H.C.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue who is also responsible for the operations of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. In view of the rapid withdrawal of private mortgage lenders from the house building field and the announcement that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation will make available $80 million for house construction, can he tell me how many housing units this would represent, and whether he feels this is sufficient for the needs of the house building industry across Canada?

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): Without going into a debate on the orders of the day, I believe that the action I announced on Monday, a week ago yesterday, for direct lending will be sufficient to make up for any withdrawal by the private lenders from the field. This is the purpose of the exercise. Action was taken, rather than sitting around waiting for something to happen, because we wanted to make sure our winter program for house building would continue with all possible speed.

Mr. Starr: May I ask a supplementary question. I wonder if the minister would mind letting the house know how many units this $80 million represents.

Mr. Garland: I am sure that the hon. gentleman is quite capable of making his own calculations. The announcement I made, if he would confine his thinking to the announcement, stated that we expected about 10,000 new units would be created.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—EFFECT OF B.C. ELECTION RESULT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Perron (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the hon. member for Kootenay West, who would undoubtedly have asked the question himself, I will put it to the Prime Minister.

Does he think that the result of yesterday's election in British Columbia will hasten the final agreement on the harnessing of the Columbia river?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I hope that the speed of these negotiations will not depend on political considerations of the kind mentioned by my hon. friend.

PASSAMAQUODDY—INQUIRY AS TO PRELIMINARY DISCUSSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister in a position to provide the house with further details of the talks between Canada and the United States relating to the development of the Passamaquoddy tidal power?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, not at this moment, but if the hon. gentleman will put his question on the order paper I will be glad to look into it.

SHIPPING

COASTAL TRADE—INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION THIS SESSION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. P. Antoine Belanger (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

Does his department intend to amend the Canada Shipping Act, with a view to limit coastal shipping strictly to ships built and registered in Canada?

[Text]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): I am sorry, but it is not possible to reveal the contents of proposed legislation in advance. The government's decision on that matter will be announced in due course.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REPORTED REACTION OF DIRECTORS TO REAPPOINTMENT OF PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Has he received any indication that several members of the board of directors of Canadian National might resign if Donald Gordon is reappointed and that several others might resign if he is not reappointed?

HOUSE OF COMMONS

WELCOME TO MEMBER FOR SASKATOON ON RETURN TO HOUSE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, with your permission, and on behalf of all members of the house, I should like to welcome back into our midst our very valuable member from Saskatoon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. H. F. Jones (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, through you I would like to thank the members of the house for their kindness during my recent illness, and I must say I am pleased indeed to be back here and to have been successful in avoiding the necessity of a by-election.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I was rising to answer a question, but before doing so I would like to say that from this side of the house we warmly join in what was said by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

INQUIRY AS TO TRANSLATION OF WORK BY BEAUCHESNE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Could the minister inform the house whether any progress is being made at present on the translation of Beauchesne into French?

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I have any information on this subject but I will be glad to make inquiries and find out. I should perhaps remind hon. members that Beauchesne's learned work is, after all, not an official publication.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PARLIAMENT HILL

COLLECTION OF OVERPAYMENTS TO CHAR STAFF

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer a question which was put to me yesterday by the hon. member for Carleton, and to say that, thanks to the speedy intervention of Your Honour, I understand the hardship imposed on the charwomen is now going to be ameliorated.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INQUIRY ON PROGRESS RESPECTING BILINGUALISM

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, my question is intended for the Secretary of State. Could the minister tell us what progress has been made with regard to the royal commission on bilingualism within the federal civil service which he had promised to set up before the summer recess last August?

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I may say I drew this matter to the attention of the civil service commission immediately after the discussion we had in the house, and I have asked them to let me have whatever they can by way of interim report on the matter, so that it can be presented to the house. I hope to have it at an early date.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

INQUIRY AS TO SALARY OF COMMISSIONER

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, my question is intended for the Prime Minister. When the hon. gentleman announced the appointment of the new general commissioner for the 1967 world exhibition, he did not mention the indemnity to be paid to the incumbent. Could he tell the house whether the new commissioner and his assistant will receive indemnities of $75,000? Will such indemnities be paid to the commissioner and to his assistant?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer that question.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

INCOME TAX

QUEBEC—REPORTED DELAY IN MAKING REFUNDS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Robert Beaule (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Garland). Have steps been taken within his department to avoid undue delays in making refunds of overpaid personal taxes?

[Text]

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): I wonder if the hon. gentleman would be kind enough to indicate to which tax he is referring.

Mr. Beaule: Income tax.

Mr. Garland: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. gentleman, because it gives me an opportunity to reply to the question posed to me yesterday by the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere (Mr. Paul) when he asked me to inform the house of the reasons for an alleged delay in making refunds of overpaid income tax for 1962 to taxpayers in the Montreal district, and further whether the government would consider paying interest on such delayed refunds.

I find, on inquiry from my officials, that less than 6,000 taxpayers in the Montreal district have yet to receive their refunds. Since this represents less than 1 per cent of the number of refund claims filed this year with the Montreal office of the taxation division, I do not believe there has been any undue delay in processing them. I can assure the hon. member who asked the question yesterday that this small number of cases remaining will be cleared up before the end of the month.

With regard to the second part of the hon. member's question, I am pleased to inform him that the law already provides for the payment of interest on overpaid income taxes, provided they amount to at least $1.

REDISTRIBUTION

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION THIS SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State. In view of the minister's concern a year ago that parliament get on with the appointing of a commission to deal with the redistribution of seats in the House of Commons, can he say when it is the intention of the government to bring this measure before parliament?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I hope it will be possible to arrange an informal conference of members representing all parties in the house with a view to discussing the best and the most expeditious way of dealing with the problem. I would like to have that arranged at the earliest possible moment, and I will have some suggestions to put forward at that time.

Mr. Knowles: As a supplementary question, is it intended that the next redistribution be done by an independent commission, or is there anything to the report that parliament might do it once more itself?

Mr. Pickersgill: I pray heaven, since all parties in the house are committed to having this done by an independent commission, that there will be no backsliding in any part of the house.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Although in the past there have been reasons to suspect roots of national socialism in the province of Quebec, does the minister still foresee any grounds to accuse the Lesage government of "nazi to be"? If not, would she be prepared to deny her previous statement?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the opportunity which is given me to deny that I have made such a statement at any time to anyone.

TRADE

REQUEST FOR DEBATE ON GOVERNMENT OBJECTIVE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. F. Jones (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question. In view of his widely advertised objective of the creation of an Atlantic community, and in view of the equally widely advertised but diametrically opposed role for Canada as a world trader advocated by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, would the Prime Minister arrange for an early debate on this question in order that the fundamental difference of opinion in the cabinet may be resolved or clarified?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Of course, Mr. Speaker, there is no such difference of opinion, fundamental or otherwise. As to when debate in which these points of view, which are in accord with each other, can be brought before the house, the hon. gentleman and his friends may have an opportunity at the first supply motion.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

INQUIRY AS TO BILL TO CHANGE NAME

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Will the minister present, as a member of the cabinet, the private bill she presented during the previous session as a private member regarding the change of name of Trans-Canada Air Lines for a bilingual expression meaning Air Canada?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is normally the practice for a minister to do that, but I refer my hon. friend to the list of private members bills, where he will see one in identical language to the one I submitted, which has been submitted by an hon. member on this side of the house.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

APPEAL BOARD TO DEAL WITH SECURITY RISKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice and ask him what progress is being made in setting up an appeal board to hear the cases of persons who feel they have been unjustly labelled as security risks. The minister undertook to look into this matter about three months ago or more, and I wonder what progress has been made.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it is true that I did undertake to look into this matter and this I have done, together with my officers and officers of other departments. I am sorry to tell the house that up until now I have not been successful in finding a formula; neither have my officers been able to advise me upon a formula which would at the same time protect the public interest and provide a judicial or quasi judicial appeal. Meantime, if any hon. members have complaints to make they might make them to the responsible minister or to myself, and I shall continue my study to see if a satisfactory formula cannot be found to meet the situation.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. May I ask the minister this. Surely he does not think that matters of this importance regarding justice for the citizens of Canada should be dependant upon their being able to get some member of parliament to take up their case with the minister? Surely the minister can find some better means of serving this purpose than that.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I think I made it clear on an earlier occasion during a discussion of this matter that if any hon. member felt that he or any of his constituents was aggrieved I knew of no other method by which he could dispose of the matter than by taking it up with the responsible minister. Again I offer those circumstances pending the time when I hope it will be possible to find a formula which will meet the position.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to that asked the Minister of Justice by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. Have the minister and his advisers considered a formula similar to that in effect under the defence of Canada regulations, where a judicial tribunal investigated matters of security to the satisfaction, I believe, of the government at that time?

Mr. Chevrier: I can assure my hon. friend that that formula is one of the things we have considered, together with other aspects of the case, including a formula such as that which is prevalent in the United Kingdom at the present time.

OLD AGE SECURITY

PROVISION FOR INCREASE IN AMOUNT OF PAYMENT

The house resumed, from Monday, September 30, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Miss LaMarsh—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Old Age Security Act to increase the pension under the said act from $65 a month to $75 a month, effective October 1, 1963, and to increase the rate of old age security tax from the present rate of 3 per cent with a maximum of $90 to a rate of 4 per cent with a maximum of $120 on the taxable income of individuals, applicable to the 1964 and subsequent taxation years.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to traverse the ground which was covered by the hon. member for Perth, but there are one or two observations I should like to make with regard to this resolution, which in itself represents a complete about face on the part of the government.

Indeed, it is difficult to understand the attitude taken by the government, particularly when in the month of July a plan was available. The Canada national pension plan was completed, and all that was required was its passage through parliament. Yet in the intervening months things have changed; alterations have taken place in the thinking of the government. That is not new. It is something we have learned to expect since this government has been in office. The haste which marks the introduction of legislation is equalled only by the lack of repentance consequent upon revision or even withdrawal, in whole or in part, of such legislation. This is just another example. What a sorry mess it has been.

I think one of the most interesting phases in the spectacle had to do with the President of the Privy Council, who made a speech the other day which is reported in La Presse of September 28. He requested that France should send some planners to Canada in order to assist the Canadian government, and that Canada in return would send accounting and fiscal experts to France. That, I think, was the capsheaf so far as this government is concerned.

However, I want to make a few references to statements made by the minister of health. They have certainly had the planners here. They have had planners in every direction. They are planning today, and then planning tomorrow to get out of the plans which are today determined upon.

The minister of health and welfare said, as reported on page 3038 of Hansard:

You will have realized, Mr. Chairman, that the introduction of this resolution was made both necessary and urgent by recent developments respecting the Canada pension plan. It was originally the government's intention that the $10 increase in the old age security benefit be paid out of contributions to the Canada pension plan. When this house recessed two months ago, it was still our announced intention to present the necessary legislation at as early a date as possible.

Then, consequent upon the decision of the government of Quebec to forego the Canada pension plan in favour of a contributory plan of its own, it became evident to one and all that the part of the federal plan providing an increase in the flat rate pension had to be separated from the rest of the scheme.

I remember, Mr. Chairman, some of the statements made at that time, and I think they should be recalled. The minister of health and welfare said, as reported on page 2343 of Hansard:

While this government is committed to this increased payment at the earliest possible date, it is committed not to pay it out of general revenue but from a flow of contributions under the new contributory pensions scheme.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I am sure almost anyone would find it most difficult to follow the government in its changing attitude and its tortuous courses. I was interested to hear the minister deny today that she had ever made any statement which was adverse to the premier of Quebec. Yet it was reported in all the press on September 28. The storm broke only yesterday or today in Le Devoir and some of the other papers in the province of Quebec. What the hon. minister denies having said was in quotations, and those quotations are as follows. I know she did not say it, but I think the record should be clear as to what she did not say:

> Tremendous power could be wielded by a government with so much money.

That would be the government of Quebec if it adopted this plan of a fund out of which payments would be made.

> By controlling investment capital it could control business. We could end up with a sort of national socialism like they have in nazi Germany and not much free enterprise.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The article goes on:

> Miss LaMarsh, who has established a reputation for brutal candor, said the Lesage portable pension scheme "could finish the private insurance business in Quebec if he has large levies".

Naturally a statement such as that has aroused interest, and there have been some editorials on it. It was not said, and what the minister tells us in that regard is, of course, accepted. But it just shows how far astray the press can go when it even ascribes quotation marks to statements purporting to have been made but which, the hon. lady indicates, were not made.

Then there is another interesting aspect of this question. We wonder why the change is now being proposed. Somebody suggested that a committee be set up by parliament to look into the Canada pension plan. If ever there was a botch brought before parliament it is the Canada pension plan in its present form. It has not been thought through. We have been told of the degree to which economists have worked on this. All I can say is that nobody has been able to find out who those economists were, because the civil service were surprised when they found the concoction which had been brought before parliament.

Somebody suggested a committee. We want to know the reason for the change. Why this sudden transition? The Prime Minister said in his fireside chat that he was willing to set up a committee. The Minister of National Health and Welfare said, as reported in the Globe and Mail on Friday, that a parliamentary committee on pensions would be made up of members lacking the competence to discuss such a matter.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They lacked the competence to discuss the matter, she said. Now they have produced this alternative. I do not intend to say very much in this regard, but remember what the promise was; "old age pension increases without additional taxation". I know it is farcical. There was a pretense that somehow or other this thing could be set up under a Canadian pension plan and before ever sufficient money came in to be disbursed, a disbursement of the funds could take place without costing anybody anything. Well, that is another example of promises, in the light of experience such as this, being found to be without foundation.

As far as the present resolution is concerned—and I do not intend to speak at length, as I said a moment ago—the changes of attitude on the part of the government, the upside down ways in which this administration is acting, certainly had their effect in the Ontario elections.

Mr. Pearson: Tell us about Mr. Fulton.

Mr. Diefenbaker: At the moment I am dealing with a problem which makes some of you feel awfully sick over there. I am glad the hon. member for Carleton is in the house, because he is the one who gave me the idea that the major reason for what happened in Ontario was the mess which the present government has made of various matters which have come before it. As reported in the press the hon. member for Carleton, when asked for comment, gave reasons why these things happened, and the article says:

> He also felt a 'series of mistakes' by the federal Liberals (budget, construction industry, pensions) proved costly to the local provincial Liberal candidates.

That is the problem and, the hon. member doesn't know the half of it. Now look at the somersault they have turned on the pension question. Look at what has happened since the momentous events in the province of Ontario. The promise was—and I shall not go back on what I said on July 18—the promise was a minimum $10 increase. True enough, when one reads the entire advertisement one finds in the small print near the bottom that they were going to set up a plan for the purpose of bringing a national pension scheme into effect.

I am surprised that they did not consult with the provinces beforehand. I am more than surprised that Mr. Lesage's plan was not made known to the government before they brought in this legislation in July. I say this because there is a nice spirit of co-operation here—or was, until the other day.

Coming back to the resolution directly, we ask ourselves now, is the promise going to be carried out? Is the payment going to be made immediately following the election? That is what the old people across Canada believed. We endeavoured in the month of July to bring an amendment before the house. We brought it down and there was no ruling thereon. All of that is now a thing of the past. Today we have before us a plan whereby $10 is to be paid, a plan whereby the promise that there would be no additional taxation is being completely changed.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, as you will recall, the promise was that the payments would be made as a result of levies on industry, on labour, and in the manner indicated in accordance with the plan previously announced. Now every person in this country who earns wages is to be taxed. This comes as passing strange from a government which was going to bring about a reduction of taxation; no increases. The first thing it does when it is circumvented as a result of its failure to consult the provinces in advance is to bring in this legislation in the form of a resolution. Why, one could almost call it the second of the budgets brought down by this government. It provides for taxation, and it places the house in the position of either accepting the taxation or of being misinterpreted as being opposed to the $10 increase.

That is the reason the resolution is phrased in this form. We have had experience, since the present government took office, in dating things back to April 8, and I feel the committee would like the opportunity to ensure that the promises and undertakings made to the old people of this country by the present government will in fact be carried out. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith):

That the said resolution be amended by striking out the words "effective October 1, 1963" in line three thereof, and substituting therefor "and this house asks that the government give consideration to making the payment of such additional pension to commence as of April 8, 1963".

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, before Your Honour puts the motion may I say I do not think there is any need for an extended debate but I do want to ask Your Honour to consider whether or not the amendment is in order or is simply a colourable device to ask the house to do something which no one who is not actually a minister of the crown has the constitutional right to do. We know that the right hon. gentleman who moved the amendment has not got used yet to being on the other side of the house—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: What about your promises?

Mr. Pickersgill: —but I submit to Your Honour that this would impose an additional charge upon the exchequer or it means nothing at all. If it means nothing at all it should not be before the committee and if it means an additional charge, that cannot be done without a message from the crown.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I will answer that immediately. No additional charge will be imposed by the wording we have used namely, "this house asks that the government give consideration to making the payment of such additional pension to commence as of April 8, 1963". We do not direct them to do it. We suggest that they give consideration to it. That is all we are asking, and I say that the amendment comes within the rules.

The Chairman: The amendment proposed by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition is, of course, very close to the one moved on July 18 last on which your chairman has had the opportunity to prepare a ruling, although I have never had the occasion to submit it to the committee. At that time I gave serious thought to the problem and since then I have continued to give serious thought and consideration to this type of amendment.

I must say that my feeling is very much along the lines of the argument and thoughts expressed by the Secretary of State. If this amendment means something it must be a charge on the treasury and if it means nothing I am in agreement with the suggestion of the Secretary of State that we have nothing on which to rule. If it means something it is a charge on the treasury, and on that basis I have to rule, with great regret, that the amendment is out of order.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I respectfully appeal your ruling.

Mr. Deputy Speaker resumed the chair, and the chairman of the committee made the following report:

The question is as follows: During discussion in committee of the whole on a resolution to amend the Old Age Security Act, the Leader of the Opposition moved the following amendment:

"That the said resolution be amended by striking out the words 'effective October 1, 1963' in line 3 thereof and substituting therefor 'and this house asks that the government give consideration to making the payment of such additional pension to commence as of April 8, 1963'."

The chairman ruled that the amendment was out of order on the ground that if there is substance to the amendment as proposed it is a charge on the treasury and could not therefore be proposed at this time.

From this ruling, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) appealed. Is it the pleasure of the house that the chairman's ruling be confirmed?

The house divided on the question: Shall the ruling of the chairman be confirmed? And the ruling was confirmed on the following division:

Mr. Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Speaker, I was paired. Had I voted I would have voted to sustain Your Honour's ruling.

Mr. Cashin: Mr. Speaker, I was paired. Had I voted I would have voted to sustain Your Honour's ruling.

Mr. Cardiff: Mr. Speaker, I was paired. Had I voted I would have voted against your ruling.

And the house having resumed in committee:

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of the whole on a certain proposed resolution to amend the Old Age Security Act.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, it was not my intention to speak on the resolution as there will be another opportunity to discuss the subject matter when the bill is brought before the house. However, I think it is necessary to make a few comments at this time because it seems to be the order of the day in this house to try to confuse the issue before us by covering it over with something else. The matter we have just voted on concerned an amendment which was moved by the leader of the Conservative party to the effect that consideration should be given to making the payment of $10 to our pensioners and senior citizens retroactive to the day the government took office. We sustained your ruling, Mr. Chairman, that this was out of order, as this was the basis of the vote we have just taken.

The real issue that has concerned many of us at this time is whether or not the payment of this $10 should be made retroactive or whether it should take effect as of October 1.

An hon. Member: That is what you have just voted on.

Mr. Thompson: Personally, I think that the government should give consideration to whether this payment should be made retroactive to April 8.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: Sit down.

Mr. Thompson: May I again make it very clear that we voted on the chairman's ruling and nothing else.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, would you please ask some of the members of the Conservative party at least to be quiet so that I may resume my speech.

The Chairman: May we please have some order so that we can give the hon. member who has the floor the opportunity to be heard.

Mr. Thompson: The much talked about and publicized Canada pension plan has been running into trouble. Basically the trouble has been over the question of interference with provincial rights. This has caused dissension which runs very deep right across public opinion in Canada, and has resulted in the immediate measure which has been brought forward to meet the needs of our senior citizens and our pensioners of two wars. This is what we are dealing with today.

There is no question whether the intent of this resolution is or is not right. It is right simply because, with the cost of living increasing right across the board, no one can be expected to have a decent standard of living on $65 a month. Therefore, the raising of this amount by $10 a month is a correct and logical step, and I think in fairness to our senior citizens and pensioners concerned it is only right that we should expect the government to make it retroactive to the date when they took office.

The real problem concerned here is simple. It is, where will the money come from? The suggestion has been made that it should be raised from revenue which will be obtained from the increase in personal income taxes. We in the Social Credit party have suggested over and over again, and we emphasize it once more, that if we could use our own Bank of Canada to finance in particular the capital development of our public needs—I am thinking of what we have termed social capital—and could bring in some of the measures we have spoken about many times, we would be able to save enough money presently being spent because we do not make use of the Bank of Canada as we should. Then the consolidated revenue fund would have sufficient in it to take care of our pensions. If we look at the problem squarely for what it is, and in order to bring about a greater degree of equilibrium between the money which comes into the treasury and that which is paid out, hon. members will understand that we cannot continue to go along as we are. If we refuse to do that, the only alternative is to increase taxes and I do not think the tax levy can go very much higher without bringing real hardship upon the very people we are trying to help by means of this resolution.

There are other means which might be suggested whereby the revenue necessary to finance these proposals could be found. I have in mind a so-called secret report which was prepared for the former prime minister and released by the Minister of Finance on May 8—a report which was printed in a number of our newspapers. I am thinking in particular of the June 18 issue of the Western Producer published in Saskatoon, where reference is made to an immense untapped source of revenue, enough to finance this $10 increase and, indeed, a greater increase than that, not only from October 1 but from April 8. These untapped resources are to be found in undistributed shareholder dividends. One of the major loopholes in our taxation system at the present time is the way in which company profits are not distributed as dividends but are reinvested, thus increasing the equity held by shareholders in a company. In due course the shareholders reap a capital gain from the sale of their shares and make a tax-free profit. The estimated loss, to the federal treasury, according to the report contained in the June 18 issue of the Western Producer, is in the region of $150 million a year. If only the government would face up to the inadequacies and inequities of our taxation system, this would be found a much more lucrative and much fairer source of capital for use in financing such proposals as we have before us at the present time.

I mention these as examples of the type of legislation which the government could be bringing before the house—legislation which would not only assist in its desired objective of bringing about a balanced budget, but which would also lead to a more equitable tax load as far as our people are concerned.

I do not intend to continue at any great length. I do, however, express the view that in meeting the need expressed in this resolution—a resolution to which we give our wholehearted support—the government should be considering various ways and means of meeting these and other expenditures other than by imposing a greater tax load on the individual taxpayer. Again, I urge the government to give careful consideration to making the $10 increase in these pensions retroactive to April 8.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I wish to say only a few words on this resolution.

This last vote has made perfectly clear that the government refuses to give a retroactive effect to this raise to government pensioners. If we are to get that pension increase, it is because of the pressures exerted by our leader and by us who sit on this side of the house, because otherwise, government pensioners would not get that increase of $10 per month.

I hope that the government will reconsider its position and grant retroactivity to this pension raise to April 8, in order to be logical with itself and carry out the promises made during the last few weeks.

Mr. Chairman, we introduced an amendment which was turned down by the government, but in face of the pressures exerted by the official opposition and by the Canadian people, the government is forced to retreat, and has to comply with our demands and grant that pension raise, I strongly advise the minister, if she wants to be able to face the electorate again, to grant retroactivity to this increase as from April 8 last.

Mr. Chairman, we on this side of the house, were amazed and astonished by the statements made recently by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh) against the province of Quebec, against the people of that province. Clause 94(a) of the constitution stipulates that in our provinces—

[Text]

Miss LaMarsh: I think the hon. member was present in the house when I rose this afternoon and denied having made the statement attributed to me. I denied having said anything of that kind to any person.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I have high regard for the opinion of the minister, but her statement came as a great surprise to me as all the newspapers throughout this country have reported the statements that she has made to the Globe and Mail and that have been published in all Canada's French newspapers.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: I am rising on a point of order. It is a well-known rule of this house, and surely, an experienced member like the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm should know it, that when an hon. member makes a statement about any statement he or she may have made to somebody else we have an obligation as gentlemen to accept the hon. member's word.

[Translation]

The Chairman: I am sure the hon. member understands the situation and will take into consideration the suggestions which have just been made to him.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I merely ask the minister to tell the house which one of her statements I quoted, and I shall then withdraw the words I credited to her.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member must understand that this is not the question period. If he has a statement or a speech to make, he should make it. If he decides that he has nothing more to say, I shall recognize another member. But he cannot require another member to make a statement in reply to a suggestion he has made himself.

[Text]

Mr. Churchill: With respect, Mr. Chairman, during the resolution stage it is altogether permissible to ask questions of ministers.

The Chairman: The type of question to which I was referring is a question such as was asked by the hon. member. He said he is not in agreement, possibly, with what had been declared by the minister and he wanted the minister to reiterate what she had already said.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I have not quoted as yet any of the minister's words but I was just going to do so. Now, I will give the minister the extracts from the French newspapers and from all this country's newspapers. Should the minister believe—

Mr. Caron: She has denied it.

Mr. Pigeon: What has she denied?

Mr. Caron: She has categorically denied it.

Mr. Pigeon: What is it she has denied?

[Text]

An hon. Member: Five o'clock.

The Chairman: It being five o'clock it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

Private Bills

PRIVATE BILLS

THE GOOD NEWS BROADCASTING ASSOCIATION OF CANADA

Mr. S. J. Enns (Portage-Neepawa): Mr. Speaker, this is the second time this bill has come before the house and the events leading up to second reading of the bill are somewhat unusual, to say the least. The house will recall that the bill was passed by the Senate at the session before this one and this was repeated in the spring session of the twenty sixth parliament. The bill was actually read a second time in the house in July of this year but because the preamble was not carried the bill was almost killed in the house.

I have a motion I will present at the end of my remarks seeking to have the bill referred again to the standing committee. Does the Speaker wish me to make my motion at this time or may I make a few additional comments?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think it would be in order for the hon. member to make his comments and then move his motion.

Mr. Enns: I think the reason that there remains an astounding and very unfortunate lack of understanding of the main purpose of the bill lies in the fact that not sufficient evidence was provided at the last hearing before the miscellaneous private bills committee, and the reason for this may be explained by the fact that there seemed to be no objection to the bill. Several questions were asked in a routine way and it seemed that the bill would be accepted. In fact, every item was discussed clause by clause and the bill was approved by the committee. I should add that certain amendments were accepted by the committee and these too were passed.

In view of this the sponsor did not feel that additional comments or explanations were necessary at the time, so that no further explanations were given prior to the question being put by the chairman. When the chairman did put the question the bill was defeated by a narrow margin.

I feel this was most unfortunate and arose because of the lack of understanding of the main aim of the bill which really is to promote the dissemination of spiritual values by means of radio broadcasting. The sponsors of the bill have in mind the various uses to which radio broadcasting is now put, for instance, to promote the use of soaps, detergents and deodorants, and they believe there is another purpose for which radio broadcasting can be used, the discussion and promotion of spiritual values in this and other countries.

[The Chairman.]

This is the essential purpose of the bill. The sponsors have asked for the incorporation of an association to be known as The Good News Broadcasting Association of Canada. I should point out that the parent body of this association is American and has been operating for some 24 years from Lincoln, Nebraska. Their programs seem to be well received by the people across the line. The association is supported by voluntary donations from people who derive spiritual benefit and wish the work of the association and the program to continue. In the United States the association buys radio time at commercial rates. This allows them to buy time of the optimum value and thus they are not restricted to that which stations might donate for charitable purposes.

The association is actually purchasing radio time at commercial rates and the funds collected by the association are used essentially for this purpose. There are various other explanations and additional information I should like the miscellaneous private bills committee to have. For the purpose of bringing in further witnesses to speak to the bill I respectfully move:

That Bill S-15 entitled "An act to incorporate The Good News Broadcasting Association of Canada" be recommitted to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills for reconsideration.

This motion is seconded by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Moore).

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to hear from my hon. friend opposite that additional witnesses are to be brought before the miscellaneous private bills committee when the bill to incorporate The Good News Broadcasting Association of Canada is discussed there. When the bill was brought before that committee prior to the recess some of its features were discussed, giving rise to considerable doubts in the minds of members of the committee whether or not the government of Canada should involve itself in the passing of a bill of this kind. It was for these reasons that it was returned to the house with the report that the preamble was not proven.

I do not propose to oppose the bill at this time but I wish to indicate that I am not in favour of the principle of the bill as it was brought before the private bills committee in the period before the recess. When additional witnesses do come before that committee I hope they will be able to provide further explanations to satisfy the committee that the passing of a bill of this nature is a legitimate function of the parliament of Canada and not properly a function of a provincial legislature or some licensing body within a province.

Basically the reasons that I and other members of the private bills committee hesitated before to approve the bill were these: The Good News Broadcasting Association of Canada purported to be an association—

Mr. Churchill: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I do not like to interrupt the hon. member, and the arguments he is advancing may be perfectly sound, but are we not simply considering a motion to recommit this bill to the standing committee, rather than considering the bill itself, which is not before us?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes, the hon. member is quite right. We are considering a motion to recommit this bill and the remarks of the hon. member should be limited to that point and not deal with the substance of the bill, which has already been discussed in the house.

Mr. Deachman: With respect, I must be able to discuss the reasons for not approving of the bill in principle at this time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not my opinion. I believe the hon. member should limit himself to considerations relating to the advisability of referring the bill to the committee.

Mr. Deachman: I will stay with the question of referring the bill to the committee. Certainly a majority of those who listened to arguments in favour of The Good News Broadcasting Association of Canada at the time the bill was brought before the committee prior to the recess did not approve of the bill as it was presented, on the basis of the facts given at that time. It was for this reason that the bill was returned to the house with the report that the preamble was not proven. It is for this reason I am glad to hear that additional witnesses will be brought before the committee. When my hon. friend is discussing the matter with the witnesses who will be brought before the committee I hope he will suggest to them that they indicate to us what the purposes of The Good News Broadcasting Association of Canada are in regard to a single proprietorship, or whether or not the association is in fact a voluntary one, of some kind, as is usually the case with regard to charitable associations.

The Good News Broadcasting Association comes before the House of Commons for incorporation as an association, not as a proprietorship. However, when the bill was discussed in the private bills committee, this association gave every evidence of being a single proprietorship, and a profitable one indeed. It is this aspect of the matter to which we objected at that time in the private bills committee and which we would like to see cleared up when the witnesses return to that committee. We should like to know that we are not looking at a single proprietorship, and a profitable one, but looking at a charitable association which has the right to go out and solicit charitable gifts from the public and to account to the public for the way in which it handles the donations made to it.

These were the principal objections made in the committee and these are the reasons the bill was returned to this house. These are the reasons the committee found the preamble of the bill not proven as a charitable association, and I do not propose to agree to the principle of this bill. I hope this matter will be cleared up when the bill is referred to the private bills committee again.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

MADELEINE FRANCOISE HANKOWSKI

The house in committee on Bill No. SD-5, for the relief of Madeleine Francoise Hankowski —Mr. Wahn—Mr. Lamoureaux in the chair.

On clause 1.

Mr. Scott: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the sponsor of the bill several questions? This is a bill in which the hon. member for Timiskaming was very much interested when it was before the house on a previous occasion. I believe he drew the attention of the committee to the fact that there seemed to be some irregularities in procedure in connection with this bill. I wonder if those matters were looked into when the bill received consideration in the committee itself.

Mr. Wahn: As has been pointed out, certain alleged regular irregularities were brought to the attention of the committee. They were discussed and the committee decided that it was proper for the bill to be reported back to the house. There were a number of other bills of like nature which would have been held up had we not allowed this particular bill to stand before the summer recess. The committee did consider the irregularities which have been mentioned and the committee was satisfied such irregularities did not exist.

Mr. Scott: I am not going to hold up the bill in any way, but the main irregularity that worried some members was the fact that after the divorce proceeding had been commenced an objection was registered by the husband through a solicitor in Ottawa. At a later date, the objection was withdrawn by the solicitor for the plaintiff without consultation with the solicitor who had originally entered the notice of objection. I understood that the particular solicitor has not yet been consulted on this matter. I am wondering if he appeared before the committee or if the committee interviewed him or ascertained his position on that matter?

Mr. Wahn: The committee did not interview him, Mr. Chairman, or communicate with him directly. It is possible that someone in the committees branch may have done so, but it is the right of any citizen to dispense with the services of his solicitor. My recollection is that it appeared from the record this particular solicitor was no longer representing the husband in the case, and for that reason we thought there was no necessity for the committee interviewing the solicitor in question personally.

Mr. Scott: In view of what the sponsor has said, that he has investigated the situation and is satisfied that the bill is in order, I will not raise any further objection.

Clause agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read a third time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Wahn moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to, and bill read the third time and passed.

ALLSTATE LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

The house resumed, from Thursday, August 1, consideration of a motion of Mr. Ryan for the second reading of Bill No. S-28, to incorporate Allstate Life Insurance Company of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, once again we are dealing with a bill which the house finds to its liking since it has been put before us several times already and will come back to us again. I refer to the bill designed to incorporate the Allstate Life Insurance Company of Canada, an American insurance company which is 87½ per cent American-owned and only 12½ per cent Canadian-owned. That means, as we have often said in this chamber, that such a company will return to the charge and that another company will establish itself in our country, when we have no need for it.

And now, Mr. Speaker, since we are discussing that bill once again, there is one point I should like to clear up. The first time the measure was put forward here, we were against it. Now, during a televised press conference held recently, the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Marcoux) stated that a representative of the Allstate Insurance Company had come to meet the member for Lapointe and that, as soon as the meeting was over, the member for Lapointe no longer wished to oppose the bill and had said: we shall let the bill pass.

In my opinion, such a statement was but an insinuation to give the impression that the member for Lapointe had agreed to let the bill pass because he had been approached by a representative of the Allstate company.

As I mentioned a moment ago, that statement was made at a press conference which was televised from 8 o'clock to 8.30 not so long ago.

I think it is quite in order, in view of the fact that a similar accusation has been made against another member, that I should have the right to put the record straight, which will take me only a minute or two at the most.

Mr. Speaker, it is true that I met an official of the Allstate company, but that was because the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) expressly asked me to. Moreover, the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) was present at the meeting with the representative from the Allstate company.

Mr. G. C. Lachance (Lafontaine): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. If the hon. member—

Mr. Gregoire: If insinuations have been made about me, the member for Medicine Hat will be able—

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. If the hon. member for Lapointe wants to rise on a question of privilege about a statement that was made by another member, I am of the opinion that he should do so before the committee on privileges and elections and should not take advantage of the fact that the bill is now being studied by the house to discuss the matter.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I feel there is no need to make it a question of privilege because I wanted at the same time to deal with the bill and explain what our position will be with regard to the measure under consideration. And, right now, I am of the opinion that the debate is quite in order.

Besides, I was through explaining that point and I was going to deal with another matter.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Am I to understand that the hon. member for Lapointe has now finished explaining the point he has just raised and that from now on he will limit his remarks to the principle of the bill now under study?

Mr. Gregoire: That is right, Mr. Speaker, I had finished.

I challenged the malicious insinuations made against me, and I say that they are false and untrue, as well as spiteful.

And now, to come back to the bill now under study, I must tell the house that we are still against it. As I have already said here, our country does not need any more American life or automobile insurance companies when it already has so many good Canadian insurance companies which have served our people so well.

We have our own Canadian companies. To my mind, we do not need any more competition from American corporations.

Mr. Speaker, I have another suggestion to make. If we refuse new insurance companies in this country, it might help keep our capital at home, more particularly at a time when we have such need of it.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) complains of an outflow of Canadian capital to the United States and other countries. I think that is a significant factor.

It will be said that the insurance companies are going to reinvest their funds in our country. The Allstate may indeed reinvest some capital in a country like Canada. But if they put back their money in a secondary company like the General Motors, the profit they reap from such a company will be profit from a second industry, neither more nor less, which will create a second circulation of capital which will be transferred to other undertakings through another corporation in their own country.

We do not want to be misled by such promises of reinvestment in this country, because we know that ultimately, after a second reinvestment, profits are going to increase and return to the United States.

However, there is a facet of the matter which I would like to mention here. When we met the representative of the Allstate company, he asked us to let the bill be referred to the committee to explain this particular point: when an insurance company like Allstate has a Canadian charter, the Canadian employees of such a company may reap some additional benefits because, being employed by a Canadian company, they will be able to set up their own pension plan, their own retirement scheme, and obtain other advantages and benefits, instead of being just employees of one branch of an American company. At this point we are told: Why treat our Canadian employees like second-class workers in this country, like second rate employees, and not like first class personnel entitled to all the benefits which a Canadian company extends to its employees. Now, the fact should be recognized; I think that there are 600 Allstate employees in Canada. It is unfortunate for them, but we are not looking upon people employed by the Allstate company as second-rate personnel. I think that argument may be bypassed by saying that though they are employed by the branch of an American company, those employees may set up their own social security plan by forming some union of Canadian employees, even if they work for an American branch.

I think the argument that they are considered second-class employees because we do not want to give a charter to an American company is hardly valid, for we consider that they can achieve the same social security benefits by creating their own services, like pension, retirement or health insurance funds, etc.

It is not the employees of the insurance companies that we consider second class in our country, but rather the capital because we want first-class capital in our country to be above all Canadian capital. If foreign interests want to invest in a particular field in our country and that enough Canadian capital has already been invested in such a field, the foreign capital must be second-class capital.

There is free competition in this country, but I believe that in a field where Canadians are able to develop themselves and to reach the top, there should be a difference between first-class capital or Canadian capital in a particular field, and second-class foreign capital when the Canadian capital is sufficient to satisfy the business in that particular field. However, if, in other fields, foreign capital want to invest where Canadian capital is not sufficient or does not meet demand, then we could slightly modify the point of view I have just explained. But I suggest that in the field of insurance—life, automobile, fire, accident insurance—we have at the present time enough companies and that we should protect our Canadian companies, their capital, their management and their staff against an invasion by foreign-based insurance companies.

I do not know of many Canadian insurance companies trying to compete on the foreign markets. They are not allowed to do business abroad. Now, we should do the same thing in our country and we should start by giving protection to our Canadian companies. Those are the companies which later on will have enough capital to invest not in foreign industry but in our own Canadian companies. When we start keeping our capital, our savings in Canada to invest in our country we will be in a better position to develop our economy across the country in such a way that Canada will develop to the advantage of all, to the advantage of our private companies and to the advantage of our fellow citizens.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) has mentioned, a meeting was held between some of the officers of the company and some hon. members of the house. I was one of the hon. members, and I want the house to know that I gave no commitment either to oppose or support the bill. I gave no commitment not to oppose the bill, but I did suggest it would be desirable for the house to refer it to the committee on banking and commerce where the members of that committee, as representatives of the house, would have an opportunity to cross examine the officers of the company. In that way we could determine in detail what are the objectives and the advantages to Canada, and particularly to the employees of the company, of having it incorporated by parliament.

We know the company is operating in Canada as a subsidiary of an American company. We were told there would be some decided advantages to the employees, through profit sharing and their pension plan, if the company were to be incorporated and operated as a separate Canadian identity. I have no opinion on whether these advantages are sufficient reason for us to pass the bill. But I do agree that we ought to have an opportunity to examine the officials of this company before the banking and commerce committee. We could then make up our minds whether we wish to pass this bill. In my opinion there will be plenty of opportunity, after that examination has taken place in the banking and commerce committee, for hon. members to either pass the bill or kill it.

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Girouard (Labelle): I rise once again on this bill because a lot of time has gone by since we discussed it last. I thought that the company had had time to think it over and might have provided us with additional information.

The first time I dealt with this bill was after the sudden illness of the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire). The hon. member for Lapointe had himself pointed out, the first time, the weakness of such a bill. And then I had to take his place. Therefore, I rose in my turn to oppose that bill.

At that time I advanced as an argument the fact that the investments came mostly from abroad and that no way was seen to force the company to invest here in Canada.

I must also admit that, during the summer recess, I received the visit of some gentlemen from that company. I met them here in Ottawa with some colleagues I could get in touch with and, in my office, with the door open and the stenographers present, we discussed the company's problem.

At that time, so that the bill could be passed by the house, the company was prepared to give the assurance that their funds would be invested in Canada. I asked them how they could give such a guarantee. The company was ready to write us a most official letter in order to prove to the house that they really intended to invest their funds in Canada and give Canadian manufactures an opportunity to benefit by them. So we would have been justified to examine the matter and see whether we could let the bill go through but today, since we have received none of the information we asked for and, since the company, having promised to write us a letter failed to do so, I find myself in the position where I must ask that the bill be held up in order to give the company an opportunity to think the situation over a little longer.

Mr. Robert Beaule (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, if I object to the passing of this bill it is because, in my view, I have sufficient reason to do so. Here is some of the information gathered from insurance brokers concerning the operations of the Allstate Company. First of all, in the field of automobile fire and theft insurance, the company offers unfair competition as far as rates are concerned. Here is what I mean. Allstate does not insure in the business sector. It does not provide coverage for apartment buildings of more than six units. As far as automobile coverage is concerned, that company does not insure people under 25 years of age and cancels the contracts of those unfortunate enough to be involved in more than two accidents.

That is why it can give preferential rates. If that company were to sell insurance policies with less limitations, it might be in a better position to ask parliament for the right to sell life insurance.

Mr. Speaker, this is the third consecutive time that this Bill S-28, providing for the incorporation of the Allstate Life Insurance Company of Canada has come before this house.

Frankly, I am astounded by the stubbornness of the mover of this bill. I do not know what interests urge him to such an act of bravery, but certainly it is not true Canadian spirit, because after all the reasons brought forward for rejecting such a bill, the idea of bringing it back before the house should long since have been given up.

We in the Social Credit party have been fighting for years to help Canadians regain possession of their economy. Not only do we want to talk about this, but we want to put this into practice at every opportunity. And every self-respecting Canadian should be bent on working along those lines with our group.

Mr. Speaker, we are now faced with a typical case of American control over life insurance, while in this particular field we have all the Canadian controlled companies we need that are able to serve all Canadians' needs. It is therefore illogical to allow a company with 84½ per cent American control to collect premiums from Canadians and once again take the profits away to the neighbouring country.

I wish to point out that I have absolutely nothing against American capitalists; but I am here to protect my Canadian fellow citizens and I dare say that I will stand up for them all, from one ocean to the other, and to the extreme limit. And I pray all the hon. members to do the same if they do not want to fail in their duty by hindering their country's efforts to take hold of its economy.

Some may say that the present government cannot go on playing the dictator towards the companies which want to come to this country and work for the progress of its economy. Well, Mr. Speaker, I see no dictatorship in this; the government is merely doing its duty in defending our private Canadian companies against foreign trusts.

We have already said in this house that life insurance is the best way for our Canadian companies to reach the goal that has been set, that is to become masters in our own house.

Indeed, contrary to companies engaged in the development field, life insurance companies require little initial capital; they need very small investments since they merely channel the savings of the people.

Section 1 of the bill states that most Canadian directors live in the city of Toronto.

That again is nothing but a smokescreen to hide the truth.

We, the Canadian people, have had enough of being taken for idiots. We have come of age and will no longer tolerate such tricks even when they are executed by Canadians.

This is an American concern which presents itself under the guise of a Canadian company. I have always heard it said that the cowl does not make the monk. That is why I say that the new company is not welcome merely because it has a few temporary directors. You will note that section 2 of the Allstate bill foresees even now that the persons named in section 1 are only provisional directors.

The company is kind enough to let Canadians witness the opening but after that, the show will be over.

So, American companies will keep on taking over our country. I am always amazed when I hear certain Canadians state that foreign capital helps us develop our economy.

Let us never forget that any foreigner who has invested here has not done so for humanitarian considerations but for the benefits he could derive from it. We are the ones who have paid the piper and we continue to do so every time we accept foreign capital when we have the required funds ourselves. When are we going to understand this principle which is the very basis of the control of our economy?

If we were as keen to develop and encourage our own industry as we are to welcome foreign companies, I feel a major step would have been made on the road to economic self-determination.

We are told that with this type of insurance, premiums can be reduced, Mr. Speaker. Of course, premiums must be taken into account in matters of insurance. But above all, it is about the service provided by a company that the government should concern itself. The service is always in relation to the premium paid. If the premium is low, you will necessarily get poor service. I know for a fact that the service given by those foreign companies is very poor indeed. They are good at collecting premiums and for that, they never fail to pick experts in pressure salesmanship. But when the time comes to provide service, a small clause in fine print is always found in the contract containing an exception to the case in point. Those companies are perfectly legal, but the people they insure would have to be legal wizards to make out the terms of such contracts.

In this connection, Mr. Speaker, we hope that one day a commission will be set up to study all those various sales or insurance contracts in order to protect the general public against certain companies which take advantage of the loop-holes in our legal code.

Thus, with a proper organization and laws to protect small wage earners, as well as industrialists and businessmen, we could provide a greater security to our population, while protecting our Canadian companies against the intrusion of foreign capital.

It is precisely the duty of the government to protect, not to control, but to give the necessary protection to the Canadian people.

It is our duty here to work for the people.

Mr. Chairman, it has been suggested to refer the bill to the committee on banking and commerce, in order that it may be carefully studied.

I think that the house has now sufficient details on this bill to make a decision and vote if necessary, because, as I see it, only those who are financially interested would vote in favour of such a bill.

A word to the wise is sufficient. We will at last learn who in this house are working for the Canadian people and who are the representatives of American interests. You are well aware that American capital accounts for 87½ per cent, while Canadian capital should represent at least 30 per cent. And you know also that we do not need foreign capital in this field since our Canadian companies meet our requirements.

You are well aware that the millions of dollars of profits which that company will make each year will still increase the already tremendous amount of over $1,200 million pocketed each year by foreigners at our expense.

You are well aware that by voting in favour of this bill, you are betraying a solemn promise made by your party, namely to enable Canadians to regain possession of their economy.

Do not forget however that insurance companies represent at the present time one of the largest saving and investment funds in our Canadian economy.

In voting in favour of this bill, you would have to answer to all our insurance companies as well as all other companies.

If you realize the full implications of your action at a time when a wave of nationalism is being felt throughout the country, then go ahead.

So, on behalf of the Canadian people, I again ask the sponsor of the bill to put his mistake right by simply withdrawing it. I know that we are asking a lot. You would then be considered a great patriot. Otherwise, we would be compelled to draw the opposite conclusion.

To refer the bill to the committee on banking and commerce would only delay the approval which we refuse to give today.

I have had a rather short experience in this house, but the few months which I have spent here compel me to distrust such an easy way out.

Mr. Gerard Perron (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, some people seem to think that the sponsor of the bill is only interested here in a change of name. And as mentioned by the hon. member who spoke before me, if it is just a matter of changing the cowl without changing the monk, I wonder why so much importance is being given to this bill which comes again before the house.

No matter what arguments are put forward, it should be understood, as was pointed out a while ago, that we do not want to pretend to be blocking the entry of foreign capital into this country. We are against the methods used by the insurance companies.

In the case of the Allstate company, it is not the investment of foreign funds that is to be feared but rather the shrewdness shown by some people in channelling the vital resources of the nation. We are against those methods used by insurance companies in any field whatever. If we consider the insurance field, we realize that it absorbs the major part of the savings of the citizens in this country, since the sum total of such savings, of such funds, is about $10, $12 or even $15 billion.

It is not so much the inflow of foreign capital into our country which must form the basis of our opposition to the bill but rather the means used to come and get our money.

In this field, a great number of Canadian companies are capable of giving adequate service. Now, if one looks at the way that company operates, especially as far as sales at the counter are concerned, one often finds that its rates compete successfully with those of certain Canadian companies.

In order to reduce their operating costs, such a company resorts mainly to sales made at the counter. I know something about it because of the surprising number of complaints I have received about that from a few persons they have insured. When somebody puts in a justified claim following an accident, he cannot even get paid. Here is the advice given to him at the same sales counter: get yourself a lawyer and if we lose we shall pay, but if you lose you shall have to pay your lawyer.

If that is the way to deal with people after having succeeded in selling them insurance, I feel we are right in saying that Canadian companies are better suited to the needs of our fellow citizens both in the field of life insurance and in that of protection against fire and automobile accidents.

We hear very often in the house about our balance of payments. We often hear about the difficulties of meeting our obligations towards our friends and neighbours in the field of finance.

Once again, I say that the investing of foreign capital in fields that do not compete directly with our own interests is acceptable.

The present application is submitted in the form of a new incorporation. It is merely requested to change the name of the company and to allow it to do business, which it already does.

I wonder why they insist. What is there hidden behind this application? I think that we should do our utmost to make the parties concerned aware that they should explain their views before the committee.

I think all hon. members should be interested to know the background of the question in order to be in a position to judge as adequately as possible whether, in the interest of the people, the government and the whole country, we should accept so easily an incorporation screen such as the one sought by Allstate at the present time.

Whatever the names of the directors, whatever the arguments that can be brought forward concerning the reinvestment of the funds in Canadian corporations, I think the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) raised a point that no one can find obscure. Less and less of the profits made by those corporations are reinvested in this country. Therefore, why is there so much insistance from some hon. members in this house?

As I said, and as it was repeated a while ago by my colleague from Quebec East (Mr. Beaule), some day accounts will have to be rendered to people who decided to go into the insurance business in our country. We seem to be getting more and more strength in that field while giving our people as adequate a service as possible.

Too many fields are held by foreigners. They managed to get into those fields behind that screen I mentioned a while ago. I think the bill should be referred to the committee and some members of the company should be brought back before the committee so that we can hear their arguments again. Then, we would be in a better position to know whether we should pass that bill. But as things stand, I think it would not be in the interest of our people to pass this bill to incorporate the Allstate company.

[Text]

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say one or two words on this bill because when it first came up in the previous parliament I did move that it be not now read a second time. Since we have had our discussions in the house I suppose all hon. members have been interviewed by representatives of the company, who have pointed out to us their desire to try and meet our objections to the bill. The bill itself is not really that important but it does point up the whole problem of United States control of Canadian companies, and whether or not any practical and effective schemes can be devised to remove the more objectionable features of such control. It is an extremely difficult problem and the more one looks at it the more difficult it becomes to devise any solution which will not prove to be as undesirable as the condition we are trying to remedy. However, the representatives of the company did come to Ottawa and we had the opportunity to present our views to them and, as I say, they indicated a very real desire to try and meet these objections. I am not sure that they will make the type of concessions that we feel should be required, but there are other areas in the world where this problem has been attacked and where devices have been worked out in company law to deal with situations of this type. In Germany, for example, the companies act has been amended so that major policy decisions can be made only if more than 75 per cent of the shareholders agree. Thus there may be some devices available which we could adopt in order to deal effectively with this problem.

Many of the objections which hon. members have raised are perfectly valid. It is true that this company, if incorporated, would be 87 per cent controlled from the United States. But we should also be fair and remember that the company is already operating, in fact, in every province in Canada under provincial licences and that it is at the moment 100 per cent owned in the United States. So, at least, this is a step in the right direction. I understand that the 25 per cent which is to be Canadian-owned is all that the Canadian company can afford to purchase at the present time, although they are prepared to write into their charter arrangements providing that a greater equity can be controlled by the Canadian company at a later date.

While I would not want to be construed as in any way endorsing the general principle of this bill—I still think there are serious objections to it—the problem which occurs to me is how we can effectively deal with situations of this kind. I think the bill should go to the committee because this would give us an opportunity to determine whether this whole problem of the foreign ownership and control of Canadian companies can be dealt with effectively. The representatives of the company come forward and we can discuss with them and with the law officers of the crown and with the members of the committee this whole problem and then, perhaps, we can come to some solution, some formula, which would be acceptable to the house.

As I have said, the passage of this bill is really not of first importance. The company will carry on in full force whether we pass it or not. Passage of this bill would, however, permit it to have a Canadian entity, and certain advantages or benefits would accrue.

We could hold it up here indefinitely if we so desired, but I think there is a case to be made for letting it go to the committee since, as I said, this demonstrates the whole problem raised by United States or foreign control of Canadian enterprises. With the spirit which some of these people have shown, this may be a case where we could sit down intelligently and spend some time on this bill trying to see whether there are formulae, provisions in the relevant acts or amendments to other statutes which we could bring in to provide some effective method of dealing with what is a most important and troublesome question. So, like the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson), without in any way endorsing the bill I think it does provide us with an opportunity to take constructive action and I urge the house to send it to the committee.

[Translation]

Mr. Lucien Plourde (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, having listened today to various speeches and statements about Bill S-28, which comes before us for the third time, we note that Canadians are more and more anxious to see their country controlled by Canadians, from the financial point of view.

The presence in this country of too many foreign companies, particularly American companies, rather disturbs us. Canadians are waking up and want to keep their funds for themselves in order to develop their own country.

A careful study of the present situation shows that Canada is rapidly becoming foreign controlled. That is why we feel that the bill should be considered again by the committee on banking and commerce, where the parties concerned would make themselves heard, through their representatives, and answer the questions put to them.

I am convinced that the bill will not be carried, but rather that it will be referred to the committee on banking and commerce.

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I was surprised to hear the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Girouard) state that the directors of the company who have sponsored this bill and seek its adoption have pledged that the company's profits will be invested in Canada.

If they have made such a promise, how is it that they have not fulfilled it? They have had sufficient opportunity to inform those who are against this bill, or all hon. members, of the fact that they have made such an undertaking which, if I am not mistaken, was done before witnesses.

When one makes a promise before witnesses and one is responsible, it is only normal for one to live up to it.

[Mr. Scott.]

Mr. Speaker, I have noticed that each time this bill has come before us, it is French-speaking Canadians who, for the most part, have opposed it. Perhaps we have adopted this attitude because we remember a certain historical event. As a matter of fact, let us recall this historical event of General de Salaberry who, with 300 Canadian soldiers, prevented Canada from becoming an American colony. It is probably the memory of this event which today enables us, forces us, I should say, to speak against this bill which, in short, would tend to legalize the intrusion of an American firm into Canada.

Mr. Speaker, one of the most curious things is that this company is already carrying on financial operations in this country, even though it does not seem to be legally incorporated. I am wondering what our legislation is worth when this company can be allowed to do business without being legally recognized.

Here is one of the strangest things that can be imagined, and, personally, I cannot admit that a firm may have such privileges.

Like several members who have preceded us, we want Canada to become a country able to run its business by herself. In fact, we have been depending on others long enough: I feel the day has come at last to become masters of our destiny, for after all, if we, the 18 million Canadians, are unable to control our economy, what is the use of believing that we are the parliamentarians elected to run the business of the nation?

If we are unable to do our duty, it seems to me that we should leave the responsibility to others. I feel we are able, all by ourselves, to take such responsibility, and that is why, like several of my friends, I personally object to the passing of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, may I ask you to call it six o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour for consideration of private members' business having now expired, the house will revert to the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

OLD AGE SECURITY

PROVISION FOR INCREASE IN AMOUNT OF PAYMENT

The house resumed consideration in committee of the following resolution—Miss LaMarsh—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Old Age Security Act to increase the pension under the said act from $65 a month to $75 a month, effective October 1, 1963, and to increase the rate of old age security tax from the present rate of 3 per cent with a maximum of $90 to a rate of 4 per cent with a maximum of $120 on the taxable income of individuals applicable to the 1964 and subsequent taxation years.—

The Chairman: It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I fail to understand how the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh) can recommend the levy of a tax to pay for this increase in pension. In my opinion, the government is not being honest with the people since, during the last election, it never mentioned this tax, this additional burden on the shoulders of the Canadian taxpayers.

Furthermore, as I said previously, we on this side of the house were surprised to hear the dangerous—and I use the word intentionally—statements made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare during an interview she gave to a reporter of the Globe and Mail last September 27. Indeed, that interview was recorded on tape and then published in the newspapers. I will quote the statement.

Mr. Caron: That is not true.

Mr. Pigeon: Thus, the minister will have the opportunity of making comments on each statement.

[Text]

Mr. Caron: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the minister has said on her word in the house today that none of these statements was made by her. Has the hon. member the right to read them when the minister has said on her word in the house that she never made such statements?

Mr. Woolliams: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, she did not say she did not make any of the statements in the report covering almost two pages in the Globe and Mail. She said there was a little part she did not think she said.

Mr. Caron: She never said a little part.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: We know what kind of truth she utters, especially since she was a member of the truth squad.

[Text]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I should point out to the hon. member that if the hon. lady has already denied the statement, then as a member of the house the hon. gentleman will have to accept that denial, and I would hope that the hon. member would carry on with his speech without pursuing this line of argument.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, section 94A of the Canadian constitution gives to the provinces complete powers in the field of social security. If a province like Quebec wishes to set up a retirement fund, it is up to her; she is the only one concerned and it has nothing to do with the federal Minister of National Health and Welfare.

If we want peace—and we really want national unity—let the minister first respect the Canadian constitution and the wishes of the province of Quebec. That province wants to set up a large fund and thus have money for her cultural, economic and educational needs.

And the newspaper La Presse of September 28 reports this:

> The minister considers that the Quebec pension plan is steeped in nazism.

Following that interview which she gave to the Globe and Mail and I quote in English—

[Text]

I will quote in English, Mr. Speaker.

> By controlling investment capital it could control business. We could end up with a sort of national socialism, like they had in nazi Germany, and not much free enterprise.

I have quoted what was said by the minister. I think this is against national unity.

[Translation]

Such a statement from the minister contributes to undermine our national unity.

I protest on behalf of my province and government members should denounce the minister who uses such words which are inconsistent with our national unity.

Mr. Chairman, the minister went even further. She said that this plan would not be referred to a committee of the house because the members were not qualified.

Well, I feel that statement is an insult to the members of this house, because how can we vote for a bill if we are not qualified enough to study it in committee?

Mr. Chairman, those statements are, in my opinion, the most injurious ever made by a minister of the crown in a long time.

The minister assumes rights and prerogatives she does not have. I think she is a drag on the government. In fact, she reminds me of Madame Nhu; she is the Madame Nhu of the House of Commons and she annoys everybody.

Mr. Chairman, I have more confidence in the newspapermen of the Globe and Mail who have reported everything she said in an interview which was published in all Canadian papers, including those of French Canada. I have more confidence in the reports made by our excellent journalists than in the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Besides, everyone knows the way she used to report facts while she was a member of the truth squad.

Mr. Chairman, the Canadian people have enough of this and the minister should resign for having talked that way, because such remarks are detrimental to national unity. Before concluding, I maintain that the minister should apologize to all members for having uttered such remarks. She should urge the cabinet to make this increase of the old age pensions retroactive to April 8 last.

She should also ask the government not to levy new taxes on the common people who need their money to live.

Mr. Chairman, since the Liberals rule the country, government is a complete fiasco. The government is unable to run Canada's business in time of peace and we demand that it resign as soon as possible. Let it yield its place to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), because he has always been able to increase pensions without increasing taxes.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I shall not take up too much of the house's time, because I feel that we are all under an obligation to our elder citizens, and that is to grant them a pension increase as soon as possible.

However, I have a few words to say to my hon. friends opposite. Let me remind them of some of the promises they made early in 1963 during the election campaign. They said at that time that a Liberal administration would increase old age and veterans' pensions, family allowances, and all this, mind you, without raising taxes.

To that end, the Liberals were supposed to cut the wasteful expenditures of a Conservative government which had been spending public moneys lavishly and inconsiderately. And with the money thus saved, the Liberal government could increase all types of pensions and family allowances without raising taxes.

Now, we have before us a resolution which will be followed in a few days, I hope, by a bill entitled "Increase in old age and veterans' pensions in the country", and we are advised at the same time that this pension increase will be paid by means of a tax increase.

That is exactly the opposite of the promises made during the election campaign. Besides, that is how the two old line parties usually proceed. As a matter of fact, they are very able when they sit in the opposition, but as soon as they come into office, they become so disabled that they should be covered by a measure to increase the allowances for disabled persons while they are members of parliament.

Mr. Choquette: What about the veterans' pensions?

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, my good friend, the hon. member for Lotbiniere, has spoken about veterans' pensions. I feel that he should be granted such a pension; he would find it much more useful outside parliament than within its precinct.

Mr. Chairman, when it was decided to raise the emoluments of members of parliament, we did not link that rise to a tax increase. But when it is thought of raising the old age pensions, one hears talks of new taxation.

The increase in our parliamentary indemnity was made retroactive to April 8, whereas in the case of our senior citizens, the increase in their pensions will only apply as of today October 1.

Mr. Chairman, regardless of the amendment which was proposed in the house this afternoon, we move that the government might submit a bill providing for retroactivity to April 1 or 8 for all such pensioners.

The provisions of the resolution before us do not include the case of our people from 55 to 70 years of age. However, every single member is aware of the difficulties confronting some of his voters of 55, 58, 60 or 63 years of age, who are unable to work to earn a living and who receive no assistance from anyone. Then, why not take care of these people right now?

Everyone knows that on account of automation, men are being increasingly replaced by machines and we find ourselves confronted with a problem which is urgent and national in scope and which cannot be solved elsewhere but here, in this federal parliament.

It is the duty of every member, whatever his political allegiance or the party which he represents, to take a stand in favour of these people.

The proposed resolution now before us is one of a rather general nature, which does not contain very accurate specifications. In fact, here is what it says:

—to increase the pension under the said act from $65 a month to $75 a month, effective October 1, 1963, and to increase the rate of old age security tax—

We are going to ask our young people of 18, 20 and 22 years of age who have jobs, to start right now paying for old age security.

The proposed resolution goes on:

—on the taxable income of individuals—

When all individuals have too much to pay at the present time.

—from the present rate of 3 per cent with a maximum of $90 to a rate of 4 per cent with a maximum of $120,... applicable to the 1964 and subsequent taxation years.

Mr. Chairman, I think that we—I do not mean the Social Credit party but the Liberal government—are being stingy toward the people and generous to the members of this house, the senators and a few privileged groups.

Mr. Chairman, following the emergency conditions created by the war in 1939—and the Liberals surely know something about that since they held power at that time—we appealed to the Bank of Canada to get new credit, to finance the first stages of the war. That was the Liberal mint, my friends.

How strange you should find that mint only to finance a war effort and cannot manage to find it to let people live.

Mr. Chairman, there was no mention of the money press when it came to putting Canada into debt for $13 billion during the 1939-45 war, whereas today there is talk about it when we, of the Social Credit party, put our financing philosophy forward.

That reminds me of what the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis) was already saying to the people on television, while showering bank notes all over himself: it will create inflation.

Did not the same member vote himself an increase of $8,000 not very long ago? No one said anything, then, no one worried about inflation. But an increase for the people and an increase of $10 in the old age pension, that is inflation. Is that what those members consider logical?

An hon. Member: Nobody refused our increase.

Mr. Caouette: That is absolutely right. But the members of our party did not brag to the people as you did.

Mr. Chairman, if it was possible to use the Bank of Canada for war purposes, we feel that it would be easy for the government to use the Bank of Canada to increase social security in Canada without taxing the people, the small worker, the labourer, the farmer or the small shopkeeper. Those people are today finding life very difficult and you know yourselves how that is true in your own ridings.

We are faced with an acute and urgent problem simply because the government stubbornly refuses to go to the Bank of Canada, which is owned by the state and belongs to all Canadians. They are still trying to pick some pockets to fill others; that is the solution of the Liberal party.

Mr. Chairman, we approve wholeheartedly the increase in old age pensions. However, we do not agree to the string that is attached to it: taxation. As the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) said this afternoon, we are forced to vote for the tax increase when we vote to increase the old age pension. They offer us a "package", as they call it, and quite a nice package it is. First of all, they bring up an increase of old age pensions and right after that, an increase of taxes.

Mr. Chairman, we suggest that the government present its bill in a definite and clear-cut way, not one which will put a further burden on taxpayers, but a progressive bill which, for once, would favour the interests of the Canadian people in placing the Bank of Canada at its disposal. It must be added that the Minister of Finance acknowledged it himself: we can resort to the Bank of Canada. Why then not use its services instead of paying interests to private financing enterprises and force our people to pay two, three or four times the amount borrowed by the government.

Mr. Chairman, an amendment was moved this afternoon. Here is another one. I move, seconded by Mr. Gilles Gregoire, that the government resolution be amended by adding after the word "years" the following words: "and the house asks that the government give consideration to lowering the age requirement in respect of old age pensions to 65 years for everyone without a means test and to 60 years, subject to a means test.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, before you put the amendment moved by the hon. member, I wonder would you give some consideration as to whether or not it is in order. In some respects it is similar to the amendment moved by the right hon. gentleman earlier today, but it seems to me that it would be out of order on an additional ground in that it is not an amendment at all but an attempt to attach another and quite separate proposition to the one that is before the committee, because we have a concrete proposition before the committee about the old age security legislation as it now exists, namely that it would be expedient to make an amendment to that legislation.

This motion does not attempt to amend the motion already before the committee. It purports to attach a lot of other words to it, urging the government to consider something else entirely different, that is to say, reducing the eligible age for pensioners to 65 years without a means test, and to 60 years with a means test.

The main principle of the old age security legislation is that there is no means test at all and therefore, apart from all other considerations, this would import something entirely new into the question. It seems to me it falls to the ground like the right hon. gentleman's amendment, which was ruled out of order and which ruling, on appeal, was sustained by the house, in that it seeks to impose a charge upon the exchequer, which can only be done with a message from the crown and can only be proposed by a member of the treasury benches.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of State stressed two definite facts.

First of all, he stated that this would only be an addition to the resolution and it would not make any sense.

Now, the resolution deals with an increase from $65 to $75 in the monthly pension provided by the law, that is the over-all Old Age Security Act to which two amendments are proposed in the next resolution. There are two amendments, one providing for the increase in the amount of the pension and the other for the tax increase.

This is what we wish to add. If there is to be a tax increase, then let there also be an extension of the number of years during which elderly citizens will be entitled to this pension. The whole thing boils down to this: the tax increase will be balanced by an increase in pension. Consequently, since the amendment deals with both a tax increase and a boost in the amount of pension, our proposal comes under the same resolution and does not involve the expenditure of government funds. In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, this must be thoroughly understood. We are not necessarily asking the government to reduce the minimum requirements to the age of 65 merely to have a greater expenditure than foreseen. We are interested in one thing only; that in adopting this amendment, the house express the wish that the government consider the advisability of reducing the requirements concerning the age at which a person is entitled to a pension. This is nothing more than the expression of an opinion on the part of the house for the benefit of the government. Members of the opposition and private members on the government side as well can recommend to the cabinet the introduction of a resolution to reduce the requirements concerning the age limit. We are not necessarily asking the government to make a bigger expenditure of public funds. We are just suggesting that the government consider our recommendation and the latter should not be ashamed of getting proposals from members of the house since there is nothing wrong with that.

He is free, after hearing the suggestion and the distinct request made by the members of this house, to comply or not with that request.

I submit, therefore, in spite of the ruling that may have been made this afternoon, that the amendment would not have the effect of increasing the government's expenditures. It is only a wish asking more or less the government to take the matter into consideration. I believe that it is quite in order and consistent with the resolution.

Mr. Chairman, such an amendment can be introduced at this stage, that is at the resolution stage. According to parliamentary procedure, a measure must go through various stages before being passed. The bill is not introduced in the house at the first stage. Why? Because if a resolution is introduced at this stage, opposition and government members can suggest some improvements and then the cabinet is always allowed a certain period to include in the bill, if it wishes to do so, the changes that might have been suggested at the resolution stage. Otherwise, the British parliamentary procedure that we have been following by tradition for several centuries would not have been designed so as to allow several stages, the first of which gives the government a chance to change its mind without losing face by having to reprint the bill.

If the government wishes to decide on the age of 65 years, details will be mentioned in the bill. It is why the British tradition allows at the first stage discussion of such details in order that the government may rely on public opinion and on the members' opinion before writing the bill for submission to the house.

I submit that this stage, which was created by the British tradition—and the Secretary of State will admit it with me—was established in order to allow suggestions of this kind.

The Secretary of State should be happy to see that our institutions are still democratic, to such a degree as to allow the opposition, at a stage that was intended by the procedure and the rules, to allow suggestions to the government, while the government is not committed through specific, textual and full clauses.

I submit that the Secretary of State would be ill-inspired to oppose the hon. members' suggestions. It seems to me that he should withdraw his opposition to the amendment. The government could later state its views, and try and convince us as to whether an amendment is advisable or not.

When the debate on the legislation reaches the decision stage, it will be too late to present amendments.

I submit that the present amendment is in order and does not contravene the rules.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gregoire: I realize that I have won over most of my Liberal friends. I maintain that, according to our rules and procedure, and following tradition—that magnificent British tradition of a democratic parliament—the amendment is in order.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. May I read to the committee citation 246, section 3, page 207 of Beauchesne, fourth edition.

Mr. Gregoire: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of State this afternoon mentioned that Beauchesne's manual of procedure was not an official one in this house. Therefore we object. As long as this manual is printed only in English, it will not be recognized as an official manual of procedure of this house which should be employed by the house.

We are a bilingual country and no manual of procedure should be recognized in this house unless it is printed in both languages. The Secretary of State recognized that fact himself this afternoon in saying that it was only unofficial. So we do not accept the Chair ruling according to Beauchesne's manual, as long as it is not translated into French.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It is the opinion of the Chair that this amendment is out of order on at least two grounds, first because it extends the scope of the resolution before the committee, and second because, if the amendment means anything, it is a charge on the treasury. I declare the motion out of order.

Mr. Gregoire: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, it is laid down in the book of procedure, standing orders—the only one that is official in this house—that on an occasion such as this you should mention the section in the authority under which we are out of order. I would like you, Mr. Chairman, to cite the number of the section according to which we are out of order. I refer to the official one.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. May I read standing order 59, section 2:

> Speeches in committee of the whole house must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

If, then, speeches must be relevant, I declare that the amendment must be relevant too.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I appeal your ruling.

Mr. Deputy Speaker resumed the chair, and the deputy chairman of the committee made the following report:

> The question is as follows: In committee of the whole, when a resolution to amend the Old Age Security Act was being considered, the hon. member for Villeneuve proposed an amendment as follows:
> "That the said resolution be amended by adding after the words 'subsequent taxation years' the following words: 'and this chamber asks that the government consider the opportunity of lowering the age for old age pensioners to 65 years for all without a means test, and to 60 with such test' ".
> The chairman ruled the proposed amendment out of order on the ground that it was irrelevant to the proposal before the committee; that it extended the scope of the resolution and also that it introduced a financial charge on the treasury: whereupon the hon. member for Lapointe appealed to the house from the ruling of the Chair.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the house was in committee of the whole and when a resolution to amend the Old Age Security Act was being considered, the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) proposed an amendment as follows:

> I propose, seconded by Mr. Gilles Gregoire, that the said resolution be amended by adding after the words "subsequent taxation years" the following words: and this chamber asks that the government consider the opportunity of lowering the age for old age pensioners to 65 years for all without a means test, and to 60 with such test.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

Mr. Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace): I was paired. Had I voted, I would have voted to sustain the ruling of the Chair.

And the house having resumed in committee:

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I am very happy to take part in this debate tonight, particularly after I was accused by one of the ministers of the crown of establishing Liberal policy. If that is true, of course, there is one happy aspect to it and that is that I can always withdraw it tomorrow morning.

Seriously, though, there is no difficulty in a Conservative rising in parliament to support an increase in pensions for our senior citizens from $65 to $75 per month, since it was the Progressive Conservatives who moved an amendment to the resolution presented by the Minister of National Health and Welfare concerning contributory pensions which was introduced by that lady on July 18 last. We moved an amendment on July 18. I was rather amazed to hear the statement made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who spoke for almost his allotted time advocating a pension increase and who said, let us get on with the job. His main theme seemed to be that it did not matter whether the Liberals had changed their minds or had followed their policy of retreat or their policy of capitulation. The fact was that they had indicated they were going to increase this pension, as we are attempting to do at the moment, and that was good enough.

However, the senior citizens of this country have now been aware of the fact that the official opposition has a very important function to perform in parliament. It is because of the 96 Conservative members that we are witnessing the change of mind of the Liberal party tonight.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: The senior citizens of Canada know tonight that it is because of the stand the 96 Conservatives took on July 18 last that they are getting an increase in pensions as promised to the Canadian people by the Liberals when they were seeking to obtain a mandate from the people.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): There have not been 96 Conservatives in the house since the last election.

Mr. Woolliams: Well, that may be true; but there is one thing of which I am sure, when the hon. member says there have not been any Conservatives in the house since the last election, and that is that there are certainly a lot of socialists around this House of Commons.

I cannot be so glib when it comes to agreeing with the words uttered by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre who said that because the practical effect of this resolution will be an increase in pensions to senior citizens, all is well. I may say, with respect, that all is not well. I cast my mind back to the evening of July 18 when we had a procedural argument that lasted for almost an hour and a half concerning an amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition to the effect that this pension increase should be paid forthwith, and that our senior citizens should not have to wait until the contributory pension plan was adopted before they got their increase. The Liberals were organized on that occasion by the Secretary of State to set forth those procedural arguments, so that in effect the motion before the house on July 18 never came before the house. The point I want to make is that if that motion had died there, then the effectiveness of the opposition would have died with it. It might have been considered a new form of closure, because on that occasion the decision was reserved and to this date we have never had a decision on the motion.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I am rising on a point of order. The hon. gentleman, who is a distinguished member of the bar, and who has therefore no real excuse for not knowing the rules of the house, surely realizes that on the debate on this matter he cannot open a subject that is up for debate on the order paper on another matter, and that what he is doing now is quite against the rules.

Mr. Woolliams: I do not want to get into an argument with my good friend across the way because I see he has been suffering from political phthisis for a long time, but I do wish to say that I cannot sit by and give silent approval to such political conniving.

The effect of what happened on July 18 was to silence the opposition, and if this is to be a precedent in the House of Commons, and it would seem to be an unprecedented one, then the very function, the very effectiveness and the very purpose of the official opposition would be destroyed.

I want to repeat my point, that there are those who still put an ounce of freedom above a pound of security, and I am sure there are those in Canada who are to be the recipients of this $10 increase, and who, knowing whatever party were in opposition was to be silenced, would give up that pound of security for a good ounce of freedom.

It has been the opposition's functioning properly and effectively that has brought about the desired result. Destroy that effectiveness and the purpose of the opposition will be stopped. There is no better authority for that than the minister herself who, in the Globe and Mail, is reported as saying:

> In the first place, there is no assurance the Quebec premiums will be small. Mr. Lesage wants a big fund for investment and he can't get it fast enough with a 2 per cent levy.
> Besides, I am not sure that a very large investment fund in the hands of a government is a good thing. It is taking too much money out of private hands. Tremendous power could be wielded by a government with so much money. By controlling investment capital it could control business.
> We could end up with a sort of national socialism, like they had in nazi Germany, and not much free enterprise.

Why was the decision not made? What was her position on July 18 last? I want to refer once more to the position which the 96 Conservatives took in the House of Commons on that occasion, and contrast it with what her position was. This is what she said, quoting from page 2342—

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order, the hon. gentleman is now breaking an express rule of the house by quoting from another debate in the same session, which is absolutely contrary to the rules and makes orderly debate impossible.

Mr. Woolliams: The only reason I was going to quote it was because I was afraid the minister would say I misquoted her. However I can set out very carefully her position on that occasion. She took the position that until the Liberal government had implemented its contributory pension plan, and until the contributions had started to roll in, not one dollar would go out in old age pensions to our senior citizens.

Then we have the position taken by another Liberal member on that occasion, as recorded at page 2363 of Hansard.

Miss LaMarsh: Who is that?

Mr. Woolliams: The hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Byrne) sitting right behind the minister took the same position. He also said that what would happen would be that it would cost the Canadian people $100 million, and that was the reason the government was not going to increase the old age pension. That was the position which the Liberals took on July 18 last; but that was not the position which they took during the election. They committed themselves to the Canadian people to increase old age pensions by $10 a month and it was only after the minister herself was embarrassed, and the cabinet and the entire government was embarassed—

Miss LaMarsh: Perhaps the hon. member would permit a question. May I ask him if he will produce one solitary document in which the Liberal party committed itself to paying $10 immediately after the election, without any relationship to the Canada pension plan?

Mr. Woolliams: I think some of my colleagues can. I can only say this was in the newspapers. It may have been another misquote, as people on the opposite side of the house are always being misquoted.

In brief, here is the government's position, that while the resolution was in suspension they argued, they submitted and they alleged that adoption of the Conservative resolution would wreck their ill-conceived and ill-planned contributory pension plan. I say it is ill-conceived and ill-planned because, if implemented, it would stretch out like an octopus into those financial institutions in which private interests invest their money. The illustrious minister said herself it would place $2 billion in the hands of the government and therefore give the government tremendous political power so that those institutions that encourage private investment would become eroded and be mere puppets and servants of a grandiose government.

In fact, here are her exact words as quoted in the Globe and Mail of September 27 last, and she has not yet said she was misquoted on that occasion. She gave a press conference, and this is what she said:

> The danger of having that much money sitting around is that political pressures would develop to spend it on increasing flat rate pensions, and that would throw the whole system out of balance.

Miss LaMarsh: On a point of privilege, Mr. Chairman, I have never had a press conference with the Globe and Mail at any time.

Mr. Woolliams: The lady minister is becoming very sensitive, but it does seem to me that on page 7 of the Globe and Mail for September 7 there is a beautiful picture of the minister. I am sure she will not deny that is her picture. In fact there is a whole page there and it is headed "Judy LaMarsh talks on pensions." Are we to take it that she has been misquoted and that the Globe and Mail, which supported the Liberal party during the last election, would print a whole page in which she has been misquoted?

Miss LaMarsh: Read the rest of it.

Mr. Woolliams: I leave it to my good friends opposite to read it—those capable of reading. The minister says she is the mother of pensions, and that she is going to rock those pensions, like a baby, to sleep. However she may suffer some miscarriage. The Liberal pension plan was conceived in haste and delivered in confusion. What has been the position as far as the provinces are concerned? Let us look at that position. First of all, the minister said it is all right for Mr. Lesage to oppose the contributory pension plan because he said he would challenge its constitutionality in the courts. Therefore, because Mr. Lesage put it on a high intellectual level—

The Chairman: Order. I am sure the hon. member who has the floor will admit that the Chair has exercised considerable indulgence and leniency in allowing him to deal with the contributory pension plan. This subject is, to my mind, obviously beyond the restricted terms of the resolution now before the committee.

Mr. Woolliams: I appreciate the Chair's remarks but I am only answering the argument made by the minister herself on this particular resolution. The same arguments were made and replied to by other hon. members on both sides of the house. With the greatest respect, Mr. Chairman, I would like to finish my remarks on this subject because this is the whole point. At one time—

The Chairman: Order. I am sure the hon. member will want to abide by the ruling the Chair is now making. If he will read the resolution that is before the committee I am sure he will know he is going beyond its terms by continuing the remarks he is making at this time.

Mr. Woolliams: I am only going to say this, Mr. Chairman. We are dealing with the question of old age pensions, and when we are considering pension plans there must be some kind of agreement with the provinces. My point is that Mr. Lesage placed it on a high intellectual level. But because the premier of Ontario said he wanted to study and examine the plan and compare it with the plan as far as the province of Ontario is concerned it is said that Ontario should accept the plan without a word. Therein lies the great difference. Let us see what she herself had to say about this matter.

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Chairman: Order. I will have to ask the hon. member kindly to comply with the ruling which has been made that he is out of order. The hon. member is clearly out of order. He must realize that I have, as I said, exercised as much indulgence and leniency as I can in allowing him to complete the short remarks he was making a moment ago. I would appreciate it very much if he would now find it possible to get back to the essential subject of the resolution.

Mr. Churchill: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. The minister, in introducing the resolution on September 30, dealt with the proposed Canada pension plan in the first half of her remarks. Why, then, are not other hon. members of this house given the same privilege as the minister to deal with a subject which she herself raised?

At that time, sir, the minister should have been called to order and restricted to the resolution which was placed on the order paper. On page 3038 of Hansard you will find her remarks concerning the proposed Canada pension plan, and subsequent speeches by other hon. members of this house should be permitted to deal with the subject that she herself raised.

Mr. Woolliams: In reference to this matter, Mr. Chairman, I just want to say, what a mockery, when it is all right for one province and not all right for another, which is in effect what the minister said. Why should it be fair for one and not fair for the other? I have in my hand a document from which I would like to quote. The minister challenged me and said that at no time did the Liberal party in literature which they put out, or in campaign speeches, which were printed in the newspapers, say they would immediately increase the pension for senior citizens. I want to read from "This is the man". This is a document put out by the official Liberal association authorized by the Liberal association and printed by D. W. Friesen & Sons, Limited.

Miss LaMarsh: When?

Mr. Woolliams: This was in the last election campaign, 1963. And if you deny this program, then you must deny everything you said to the Canadian people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: Get the truth squad out again, and the pigeons and the colouring books.

Mr. Pickersgill: You have the "Pigeons".

Mr. Woolliams: I now quote from this document, which reads:

> That Canadians need a contributory pension program, over and above the present universal old age pension. They offer a program that will give pensioners an additional $10 immediately—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lamontagne: Go on.

Mr. Woolliams: It continues:

> —with ultimate benefits as high as $295 a month per couple.

I want to go further. This was promised to the Canadian people by the Prime Minister on the grounds that there would not be an increase in taxation. I submit that he made those speeches in the province of Quebec; he made those speeches in the province of Ontario, in the maritimes and in western Canada. They told this house and the Canadian people that the senior citizens of this country would get an increase of $10 a month immediately. It is only because the 96 Conservatives in opposition took the position which they did take on July 18 that today we find the government have reversed their position. For what reason? I say, the reason of straight political expediency. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that when we are dealing with welfare benefits or an increase in pensions we cannot consider the subject without—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Woolliams: I wonder, Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Order. Could we have order in the chamber.

Mr. Woolliams: I know, Mr. Chairman, that you have asked for order on several occasions and I would appreciate it if there were a little more order.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Chairman, I would like to know, on a question of privilege, whether the hon. member could table the document he just read.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, my good friend knows the rule—

The Chairman: There is no question of privilege here.

Mr. Woolliams: —that a private member does not table documents. Whether he is looking for a job in the cabinet, I do not know. However, dealing with the commitment made by the Liberal party, I think there is a little restlessness lately in that party and we now read in the newspapers that certain backbenchers consider that the present minister should resign.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Woolliams: I want to say this, with great respect, to the minister. I do not believe this plan was visioned by the minister; I believe it was visioned by the Prime Minister of this country. I believe the contributory pension plan, which I described earlier in my remarks as being one which would stretch out like an octopus in its present form to crush all kinds of investment, was really the Pearson plan, being part of the election campaign of 1962, and it happened to fall to the lot of the minister to implement this plan. So when the Liberal backbenchers are considering the resignation of the present minister they should put the bell on the right neck and find out whose plan it was.

An hon. Member: Bell the cat.

Mr. Woolliams: It is interesting to note what has happened recently, because in the last election campaign the Liberal party seemed to have the financial institutions behind them. I would like now, in reference to the question of pensions—and I am sure this is relevant—to quote from the Financial Post. This article is headed "Nation's Business. The whole truth not being told". This is what the Financial Post has to say about this plan:

> What's wrong with the truth about pensions? When did Canadians ever more urgently need plain speaking and honest comment about a proposed welfare plan?
> Whatever the aspirations of all Canadians for a decent retirement income, it is clear that they are now getting considerably less than the whole truth about the real costs and the real implications of Ottawa's grandiose plan for pensions.

This is in the Financial Post of this week. The article continues:

> For instance, Ottawa has devoted much oratory and rhetoric to extol the virtues of a "pay-as-you-go" plan based on contributions from employers and employees.

May I pause for a few moments. Not long ago, two elections or the last election ago, we all know that the Liberal party criticized the former Conservative government, that they did not pay as they go; that they had deficits. Here is what the Financial Post has to say about the present social welfare program under the contributory pension scheme, as far as the Liberals are concerned:

> But why have our federal politicians failed to make it clear that those who do most of the paying will be a very different group from those who collect the biggest benefits?

Then dealing with the very situation the minister mentioned the Financial Post goes on in words with which I am in accord:

> Ottawa also claims that the Canada pension plan can be financed with a levy on wages that starts at only 2 per cent (1 per cent from the employee, 1 per cent from the employer on the first $4,000 of the employee's income) and rises to only about 6 per cent in 2050.

This, says the Financial Post, is outright deception. They are not my words: they are the words of the Financial Post.

I could read more but I will end with this, and this puts them in their proper perspective as far as their change in attitude in respect of pensions is concerned.

> The real truth about the Canadian pension plan is that it is a grotesquely bad piece of legislation. It was conceived in political expediency. It is being rushed into the world for reasons of political urgency.

May I ask the minister to explain what "political urgency" there is? Why was this change made? I suggest it was made because it was straight political expediency. The ministers of the present government had on their desks letters from people all across the country saying that the Conservative stand indicated by our leader on July 18 was a proper stand. In fact, if I may pause there, I think the senior citizens of this country can look with some pride to the Leader of the Opposition.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Woolliams: Well, Mr. Chairman, they can shout me down but I hope that you will just be a little more liberal with the time. It was the Leader of the Opposition who led the fight on July 18 for the increase in pensions. If it had not been for his grand fight on that occasion, which ended up in a procedural argument, the citizens of this country would still be waiting for their pension plan. That is why the Financial Post said that it was conceived in political expediency; that it had been rushed into the world for reasons of political urgency. They go on to say:

> No public hearings have been held to examine its objectives, its real costs, its adequacy, its workability or its acceptance. As it stands now, the plan is an escalator to inflationary costs and candy for the haves at the expense of the have-nots in our society.
> Every Canadian, rich or poor, now has very good reason to demand that Ottawa declare a pension pause and face up to the miserable facts about its ill-begotten scheme.

When they realized that public opinion was against this type of contributory pension, which stretched out, I want to repeat, like an octopus into financial institutions in which private investors invest their money, and when they got the protests through letters on their desks from all across the country, the Liberal members on the treasury benches had to change their attitude. As a result, pressure was brought to bear on the minister of health, and it is through that pressure that the backbenchers blame the present minister of health. But this pressure was spearheaded by the present Prime Minister. In fact, I will go further. The contributory pension plan, as it seems to be now, is a plan for the socialization of the financial institutions of this country and the working men of this country.

Now I want to go back to where I started. On July 18 last the Leader of the Opposition moved his amendment. There was a procedural argument lasting about an hour, and decision on it was reserved. We have had no decision yet with reference to that question. Then the identical resolution was presented by the government. It is really in the exact terms which the opposition placed before the House of Commons on July 18. The position taken by the Liberal party on July 18, the position they have taken as far as the contributory pension plan is concerned, and the position they took as far as the procedure for bringing about a pension is concerned, will long haunt them.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to indulge in the flights of fancy to which we have just been listening. I intend to deal with a few facts. First of all, I think it surprised many hon. members when they heard the last observation of the hon. member for Bow River. He said that the motion now before the house is identical—the word he used—with an amendment moved by his leader on July 18.

Mr. Woolliams: As far as pensions are concerned.

Mr. Pickersgill: If that is so, I should like to know why his leader moved an amendment to this motion here today.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I listened patiently to the hon. member but now I have the floor.

Mr. Woolliams: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: I want to go on, sir, and say that when the hon. gentleman talks of political expediency, he of course comes from a school experienced in that field. When one recalls the recent history in old age pensions, when one recalls what was done just after the 1957 election and just before the 1958 election, and then when the old age pensioners were forgotten till just before another election, I think we know what political expediency is.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: The difference between hon. gentlemen opposite and people on this side of the house is that we are not contemplating an election; we are doing something after an election. For four years the hon. member for Perth—

An hon. Member: Call in the truth squad.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, it seems that hon. gentlemen do not want to listen. For four years the hon. member for Perth dusted off the report of that professor from British Columbia, Professor Clark. He dusted it off once a year and put it back again till it was just time for an election, and then suddenly something was done. But not what Professor Clark had talked about. Not what the former prime minister had promised at the time he established the Clark commission. Something entirely different was done.

Mr. Churchill: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I presume you are able to relate this speech to the resolution, but I doubt if anyone in the committee can do so. My point of order is this: what relevance have these remarks about something which happened four years ago to the resolution now before the house?

Mr. Pickersgill: I have no difficulty, sir, in doing that. The hon. gentleman—

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I respectfully request a ruling on my point or order.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am speaking to the point of order. The hon. gentleman, who a few moments ago defended the hon. member for Bow River on a point of order, is now objecting to my replying to the things the hon. member for Bow River said, things he said he had a right to say. That is just another flip-flop.

Mr. Woolliams: I should like to speak to that point of order.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Woolliams: Briefly, what the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has suggested is that although you ruled me out of order, Mr. Chairman, he can still speak on the subject on which you ruled me out of order.

Mr. Chevrier: You disregarded the ruling. You carried on.

The Chairman: Although I suggested the hon. member for Bow River was out of order, my ruling did not seem to create too much of an impression and I do feel that the remarks which are now being made by the Secretary of State are just as relevant to the resolution as those which were made by the hon. member.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, you ruled twice, if not three times, to restrict the hon. member for Bow River in speaking on the subject he was dealing with. Now you suggest that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is speaking on a similar subject and, while you may not have been too successful in curtailing the remarks of the hon. member for Bow River you apparently intend to give the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate a free hand. I object entirely to that procedure.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

The Chairman: Order. I appreciate that much has been said in the course of this debate which was probably beyond the terms of the resolution we have before us. It is not always easy for hon. members to limit their remarks strictly to the terms of the resolution. On the other hand, I am sure hon. members appreciate that it is not easy for the Chair to limit debate at all times, and to impose a ruling on hon. members, if they insist on continuing the trend of thought on which they have started. I feel sincerely that when I interrupted the hon. member for Bow River he was out of order to some extent. I asked for his co-operation and he did co-operate to some extent. A point of order has been raised and I think we should give the Secretary of State a chance to relate his remarks to the resolution before us.

Mr. Woolliams: With the greatest respect, I am sure you did not mean any slight on an hon. member of this house when you suggested that I co-operated only slightly, or used words to that effect. I am sure you did not impute any motive, or infer that I did not endeavour to co-operate.

The Chairman: There is no question of motives at all, I can assure the hon. member.

Mr. Pickersgill: I intended to quote, as the hon. gentleman purported to quote—

Mr. Woolliams: On a question of privilege. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has challenged me. He said I purported to quote something and I challenge the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate to say I misquoted the document from which I was reading. I ask him to withdraw those remarks.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Woolliams: I appreciate that the hon. gentleman sits on the front bench, but I see no reason why there should be one rule for him and another for the backbenchers.

The Chairman: Hon. members should realize that the Chair is the servant of the house. If there is to be any order in the committee there should be some co-operation with the Chair, even if the Chair should be wrong or make rulings which are not entirely to the satisfaction of individual members. I think hon. members should try to co-operate with the Chair to that extent. There are only three minutes to go before ten o'clock—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Call it ten o'clock if you like.

The Chairman: The Secretary of State has the floor. It is up to him to make his speech and he should be given an opportunity to complete what he has to say in the last few minutes we have this evening.

Mr. Pickersgill: I asked the chief whip opposite to send me the document from which the hon. gentleman quoted. Instead of doing so, the hon. gentleman left the house with the document. But I am not concerned about that. I have the floor, and I want to quote from the official—

Mr. Winkler: On a question of privilege.

[The Chairman.]

The Chairman: Order. Will all hon. members sit down, please. The hon. member for Grey-Bruce has the floor on a question of privilege.

Mr. Winkler: As is my duty as chief opposition whip I like to endeavour to the best of my ability to keep my members served with honest proof of the points they are putting forward. As soon as the leader of the house raised this point—I have found him amiable on most other occasions, though not on this one—I communicated with the person who supplied me with this document, but that person did not give me permission to transmit this document to the leader of the house. I therefore left the chamber and made further communications but privilege was still not extended to me. However, it is at this time, and I should like to relate what this document—

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. My point of order is that there is obviously no question of privilege whatsoever. This is nothing but an attempt to prevent me from making quotations from these two documents I have in my hand and I hope I shall be permitted to make those quotations without further interruption. I listened without interruption while the hon. member opposite was making the quotation—

An hon. Member: A point of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: The documents from which I wish to quote—

Mr. Winkler: May I speak to that point of order?

Some hon. Members: Closure.

Mr. Winkler: There is no attempt being made on my part to curtail the speech of the Secretary of State on behalf of the government, none whatsoever. He can quote from any documents he desires. However, I should like to read into the record from the two documents I have, documents which were printed as official literature by the Liberal party.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have the floor, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Order. Would both hon. members please resume their seats.

An hon. Member: Whoop it up.

The Chairman: A point has been made by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce—

Mr. Winkler: I have asked that I might have the privilege of reading these documents.

Mr. Gregoire: On a point of order. May I call it ten o'clock?

The Chairman: I do not expect we have unanimous consent to go beyond ten o'clock, so, it being ten o'clock, shall I rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again?

Progress reported.

Mr. Pickersgill: You succeeded very well.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: I wonder if the leader of the house would let us know the order of business for tomorrow.

Mr. Pickersgill: Tomorrow we shall continue with the debate on this resolution and I am sure the Canadian public will be edified to learn that, although there has been almost no participation from this side of the house, the opposition is taking three days to give the people the old age pension.

Mr. Monteith: I should certainly like to point out—

Mr. Pickersgill: It is ten o'clock.

Mr. Monteith: I should like to point out—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being ten o'clock I do now leave the chair.

Mr. Pickersgill: I appeal to Your Honour to let him speak.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Some hon. Members: Closure.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being ten o'clock this house stands adjourned until 2.30 tomorrow afternoon.

It being two minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, October 2, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, 1963-64

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting supplementary estimates for the financial year ending March 31, 1964, was presented by Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance), read by Mr. Speaker to the house, and referred to the committee of supply.

FINANCE

MACHINERY—TABLING OF TARIFF BOARD REPORT ON REFERENCE NO. 130

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table a report which I received from the tariff board. It is the first volume of the board's report on reference No. 130 relating to machinery and equipment used in the mining industry and the oil and gas industries.

Volume II has not yet been received from the board. I am tabling copies of the report in French and English, also a transcript of the evidence received at the public hearings. The volume which I am tabling contains recommendations relating to articles of oil field machinery, equipment and apparatus used in natural gas plants. These recommendations, together with those to be included in the part of the report which is not yet available, will receive full consideration by the government.

WORLD FAIR

INVITATION TO MEMBERS AND PRESS GALLERY TO RECEPTION AND LUNCHEON

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to extend to all hon. members on behalf of the commissioners of the world fair corporation and His Worship the Mayor of Montreal a cordial invitation to visit the site of the world fair on Saturday morning and a reception and luncheon which will follow on St. Helen's island. I should be pleased if the whips of the various parties would let me know some time today how many propose to attend. We hope to be able to leave by air from Ottawa around 9.30 in the morning and be back around four o'clock in the afternoon. May I also extend this invitation on behalf of the commissioners and the mayor of Montreal to the members of the press gallery.

INCOME TAX ACT

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I move for leave to introduce Bill C-95, to amend the Income Tax Act, based on the Income Tax Act resolution concurred in by the house on July 23, 1963.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PROVISIONS RESPECTING EMPLOYMENT OF BILINGUAL PERSONS

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-96, respecting employment of bilingual persons in the public service and in crown corporations.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: In so far as the thing is possible, this bill would provide for the suppression, within the civil service and the crown corporations, of the discrimination which marks at the present time the hiring and employment of French speaking personnel, and it would give preference to bilingual candidates.

Such a bill would surely be of much greater use than a royal commission.

[Text]

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN FLAG

PROVISION FOR ADOPTION OF RED ENSIGN

Mr. J. N. Ormiston (Melville) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-97, to adopt a national flag (Canadian red ensign).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Ormiston: The purpose of this bill, Mr. Speaker, is to adopt by formal act of parliament the Canadian red ensign as the national flag of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house that the hon. member shall have leave to introduce the said bill?

Proposed Legislation

Mr. Gregoire: On division.

Motion agreed to, on division, and bill read the first time.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the second time?

Mr. Gregoire: In 20 years.

Mr. Speaker: Next sitting of the house. Agreed?

Some hon. Members: On division.

NATIONAL CENTENNIAL ACT

AMENDMENTS CHANGING NAME, ENLARGING MEMBERSHIP OF ADMINISTRATION, ETC.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to amend the National Centennial Act to change its short title from the National Centennial Act to the Centennial of Confederation Act and to change the title of the national centennial administration to that of the centennial commission; to provide also that the centennial commission shall consist of a commissioner, an associate commissioner and not more than twelve directors in lieu of eight directors and to provide further for certain administrative changes in connection therewith.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAY ACT

AMENDMENT EXTENDING PAYMENTS FROM GRADE CROSSING FUND

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Railway Act, chapter 40 of the statutes of 1958, as amended by chapter 35 of the statutes of 1960, to permit certain grants to be made from the railway grade crossing fund for a further period of three years beyond January 31, 1964.

Motion agreed to.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY AUTHORITY ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE BORROWING AUTHORITY

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act to provide that the authority, with the approval of the governor in council, may from time to time borrow money from Her Majesty or otherwise to an aggregate that shall not exceed at any time $535,000,000 in lieu of $345,000,000 which it is already authorized to borrow by section 13 of the act.

Motion agreed to.

AERONAUTICS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING CHARGES FOR USE OF FACILITIES AND SERVICES

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Aeronautics Act to authorize the governor in council to make regulations prescribing charges for the use of any facility or service provided by or on behalf of the Minister of Transport for or in respect of aircraft or at an airport and to make such regulations as he deems necessary to impose upon the owners or operators, wherever resident, of any aircraft, charges for the availability during any flights of such aircraft within or outside Canada of any facility or service provided by or on behalf of the minister; to provide also for the payment of certain expenses of witnesses attending before boards of inquiry established by the minister to investigate aircraft accidents; and to make certain other amendments for the better administration of the act.

Motion agreed to.

ADMIRALTY ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING SALARIES OF JUDGE AND REGISTRAR

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Admiralty Act to permit the governor in council to authorize the payment of a salary not exceeding four hundred dollars per annum to a surrogate judge in admiralty and a salary not exceeding three hundred dollars per annum to a registrar in admiralty.

Motion agreed to.

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING CO-ORDINATION WITH OTHER NATIONS, ETC.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation Act to extend the co-ordination of Canada's external telecommunication services to include co-ordination with nations outside the British commonwealth; to increase the number of directors of the corporation by two; to provide for the appointment and salaries of vice presidents; and to provide further for certain consequential changes in connection with the administration of the act.

Motion agreed to.

MARITIME TRANSPORTATION UNIONS

PROVISION FOR MANAGEMENT AND CONTROL BY TRUSTEES

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the placing of the maritime transportation unions of Canada under the management and control of trustees; to provide for the establishment of the board of trustees of the maritime transportation unions consisting of a chairman and two other members; to provide for the payment of their remuneration and expenses and to authorize the employment and remuneration of such personnel as may be necessary for the carrying out of the duties and powers of the trustees under the said measure.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

Mr. Pickersgill: The following questions are being answered today: 1,002, 1,003, 1,011, 1,062, 1,063, 1,075, 1,086, 1,097, 1,100, 1,109, 1,131, 1,133, 1,145, 1,149, 1,151, 1,153, 1,160.

If questions Nos. 477, 690 and 1,096 could be made orders for return the returns would be tabled immediately.

If Your Honour would be good enough to call starred question No. 1,064 I would ask that the remaining questions stand.

Mr. Pigeon: On a question of privilege, I do not know why my starred question No. 1,054 is not answered. I think there is no problem about answering that question.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will have inquiries made.

Mr. Pigeon: I hope so.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

(I) Work of organization and co-ordination necessarily incumbent upon the secretary of the department in almost the entire field of its activity.

(c) Yes.

(d) Yes, as follows: "to act as departmental control officer on miscellaneous matters such as condemnation boards, declarations of surplus to crown assets, stationery, furniture, telephones, accidents involving damage to departmental property, travel regulations, translation, etc.; to be responsible for the proper functioning of the departmental central registry, mail room and messenger service; to act as chairman of the departmental suggestion award plan;"

WORDING OF TEST FOR CHIEF PURCHASING AGENT

Question No. 1,011—Mr. Fisher:

On what official devolved the responsibility of filling the vacant post of chief purchasing agent in the purchasing and stores branch and (a) was he the originator of the test of the competition (b) was the wording of the original test changed in any way and, if so, specifically and in detail, (i) what words were added (ii) what words were deleted and (c) by whose direction were the changes made?

Mr. Pickersgill: I have been given the following answer by the civil service commission:

The responsibility for filling the vacant position of chief purchasing agent in the purchasing and stores branch rested with the civil service commission, and in this regard the poster advertising this position was examined and authorized by direction of the commission by Mr. J. H. Barron. Mr. P. R. Powers was the civil service commission officer chosen to conduct the oral examinations for this competition. No written examination was held.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES ADVERTISING ACCOUNTS

Question No. 1,062—Mr. Fisher:

1. What agency or agencies have the T.C.A. advertising accounts?

2. When did it, or they, receive it, and what is its estimated value?

3. Does a contract exist?

4. Was the account put up for speculative bid and, if so, what companies submitted bids, and at what price?

5. If not, on what grounds, in detail, did T.C.A. find for choosing the present agency as best for its purposes?

6. At any time in the negotiating or signing of any contract or completion of any arrangement, was T.C.A. in communication, for advice or approval, with a Mr. Keith Davey?

Mr. McIlraith: The management of Trans-Canada Air Lines advise as follows:

1 and 2. (a) Mather & Crowther, London, England, 1946; (b) McCann-Erickson, New York, 1956; (c) Foster Advertising Ltd., Toronto, 1961; (d) Cockfield, Brown & Co. Ltd., Montreal, 1948-1961; reappointed, 1963.

The value of these accounts varies from year to year according to the amount of the company's advertising budget. The total value of advertising to be placed through agencies for the year 1963 is estimated at $4,000,000.

3. No contract exists with any advertising agency.

4. Advertising accounts are not put up for speculative bids but agencies are selected on the basis of analytical criteria and continual review is made of these criteria to ensure the maintenance of a proper standard of service.

5. The present agencies were selected on the basis of the findings of a comprehensive survey of some 27 Canadian agencies.

6. No.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS ADVERTISING ACCOUNT

Question No. 1,063—Mr. Fisher:

1. What advertising agency handles the bulk of the C.N.R. account?
2. How long has it held the account, and what has been its value, by year, including the estimated value in 1963 and 1964?
3. Was the account awarded as the result of speculative bids and, if so, how many, and what companies submitted bids?
4. What capabilities of the successful agency led to its receipt of the account, if it was on another basis than price?

Mr. McIlraith: The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. McConnell, Eastman and Co. Ltd.

2. Since March 1, 1960, the volume of advertising placed through the agency has ranged between $800,000 and $950,000 per annum.

3. Twenty four agencies were invited to submit information about their respective facilities, personnel services, existing accounts, etc. Following a study of this information discussions were held with each of the agencies and the selection made.

4. The selection was based on Canadian National's assessment of the agency's professional competence and its ability to service the company's advertising need.

*F.L.Q. MEMBERS, PRINTING BUREAU

Question No. 1,064—Mr. Fisher:

1. Has the R.C.M.P. investigated at the printing bureau in Hull any personnel suspected of belonging to the F.L.Q. and, if so, how many employees, if any, were found to belong to this organization?
2. What action has been taken on the matter, either by the R.C.M.P. or by the authorities in the queen's printer offices?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1. No.

2. None.

PICTOU LANDING, N.S., WHARFINGER

Question No. 1,075—Mr. MacEwan:

1. Will George E. Mason be replaced as wharfinger at Pictou Landing, Nova Scotia, on August 1, and, if so, why is he being replaced?
2. Under what authority is this change being carried out?

Mr. McIlraith: 1. Yes. Retired on grounds of age (70 years).

2. Section 6(1) of the Government Harbours and Piers Act.

DESIGNATION OF "SERVING" ON RETAIL PACKAGES

Question No. 1,086—Mr. Orlikow:

Is the government considering legislation or regulations establishing and defining the net quantity of any commodity (in terms of weight, measure or count) which shall constitute a serving, if that commodity is distributed to retail purchasers in a package or with a label which bears a representation as to the number of servings provided by the net quantity of contents contained in that package or to which that label is affixed?

Mr. Pickersgill: No.

RECEPTION CENTRES AND CLASSIFICATION OFFICERS, PENAL INSTITUTIONS

Question No. 1,097—Mr. Orlikow:

How many reception centres, recommended by the Fauteux report for classification of inmates initially committed, are there in Canada's penal institutions, and how many classification officers are there in each institution, and what are their academic qualifications and experience?

Mr. Chevrier: No reception centres have been established separately from receiving institutions in Canada's penitentiary service. Receiving institutions segregate newcomers in a special area and the procedures for reception, recommended by the Fauteux report are carried out, i.e., physical examination, psychological testing, educational and social histories.

At the institutional level, there are 65 classification staff positions on establishment. Five of these positions are at present vacant.

The classification positions in each institution, the academic qualifications and experience of their incumbents are as follows:

MEDICAL CENTRES FOR CERTAIN PRISONERS

Question No. 1,100—Mr. Orlikow:

Is the government considering implementing the recommendation of the Fauteux report that special prison medical centres be established for prisoners who are alcoholics, drug addicts, sex offenders or psychotics, which centres would provide suitable security or custodial arrangements but would have the atmosphere of a hospital?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, as part of its long range plan of penitentiary construction.

AUTOMATIC PAROLE REVIEW

Question No. 1,109—Mr. Orlikow:

Is the government considering the recommendation of the Fauteux report that a system of automatic parole review should be instituted in Canada thereby dispensing with the present system which requires an application for parole and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. Chevrier: The Parole Act, proclaimed in force as of February 15, 1959, provides, at the time prescribed by the regulations, for a review of "the case of every inmate serving a sentence of imprisonment of two years or more, whether or not an application has been made by or on behalf of the inmate". In the case of an inmate serving a sentence of imprisonment of less than two years, the obligation to review exists, upon application by or on behalf of the inmate.

The parole regulations became effective on September 1, 1960, and the system of automatic parole review recommended by the Fauteux report came into effect at the same date in the case of penitentiary inmates and of prison inmates serving aggregate sentences of two years or more.

DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS WITH COMMUNIST CHINA

Question No. 1,145—Mr. Lambert:

Has the Prime Minister received a communication from the state council of the province of Alberta of the Knights of Columbus embodying a resolution expressing the strongest opposition to diplomatic recognition of communist China by Canada and, if so has the government made a review of its diplomatic relations with communist China, and what has been the result?

Mr. Pearson: The answer to the first part of the question is yes.

With respect to the second part of the question, communist China is a subject which is receiving the government's attention. As my colleague, the minister for external affairs, emphasized to the house on July 26, this should not be taken as an indication of the adoption of a new policy on recognition of communist China.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

Question No. 690—Mr. Howard:

What action, in detail, has been taken with respect to each of the following recommendations of the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Indian affairs:

"(a) Education is the key to the full realization by Indians of self-determination and self-government.

(b) Education of Indian children in schools under the jurisdiction of the provinces should be continued and expanded.

(c) Kindergarten facilities for Indian children should be provided.

(d) The provincial authorities should be approached to ensure that a more comprehensive and accurate account of the Indian people is used and described in history courses and texts.

(e) Agreements should be entered into with provincial authorities to extend adult education facilities to Indians with the program expanded.

(f) Travelling library facilities to Indian communities should be expanded wherever possible.

(g) Academic upgrading and social orientation courses to prepare young Indians for placement or specialized training should be greatly expanded.

(h) Full support and encouragement should be given to formation of home and school or parent-teacher associations.

2. How many of these projects for each of the above areas will be carried out by (a) Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources and (b) private contractors?

Return tabled.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

ACCEPTANCE OF FISHERIES COMMISSION RECOMMENDATION RESPECTING HALIBUT

Motion No. 62—Mr. Knowles (for Mr. Barnett):

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency for a copy of the cabinet minute or other official document which authorized the Secretary of State for External Affairs to notify the executive director, the international north pacific fisheries commission, by telegram under date of May 10, 1963, that the commission's recommendations for the removal of the halibut stocks in the eastern Bering sea and the herring stocks west of the Queen Charlotte islands from the annex to the convention had been accepted by the government of Canada.

Mr. Hellyer: I wonder whether in view of the absence of the minister the hon. gentleman would care to let this motion stand?

Mr. Knowles: Yes.

Motion stands.

MAINTENANCE OF ALASKA HIGHWAY

Motion No. 64—Mr. Nielsen:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all documents, reports, engineering or other surveys, communications, correspondence or other papers, with respect to the (a) all-weather maintenance of the road from Haines junction in the Yukon Territory to Haines in the state of Alaska, U.S.A. (b) existing maintenance costs of the northwest highway system in maintaining the said road by the northwest highway system of the Canadian army and (c) paving of the said road.

He said: The Minister of National Defence has kindly supplied me with most of the information I require and has given me permission to consult with his officials as to the remainder. However, there are certain reports and correspondence which come under the jurisdiction of the minister of northern affairs and which still require production. I do not see the minister or his parliamentary secretary in their seats. As I say, there are still these reports which should be produced.

Mr. Hellyer: In those circumstances perhaps the hon. gentleman would allow the motion to stand.

Mr. Nielsen: Yes.

Motion stands.

ROAD FROM CARCROSS, Y.T. TO SKAGWAY, ALASKA

Motion No. 65—Mr. Nielsen:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all documents, reports, engineering or other surveys, communications, correspondence or other papers, with respect to the construction of a road from Carcross in the Yukon Territory to Skagway in the state of Alaska in the U.S.A.

Mr. Hellyer: In view of the absence of the minister in this case I wonder whether the hon. gentleman would agree to allow the motion to stand?

Mr. Nielsen: Yes.

Motion stands.

PAVING OF ALASKA HIGHWAY

Motion No. 66—Mr. Nielsen:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all documents, reports, engineering or other surveys, communications, correspondence or other papers, with respect to the paving of the Alaska highway through to the Yukon-Alaska boundary.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this motion has been satisfied by the Minister of National Defence co-operating with me and producing the material. While I am on my feet, may I draw Your Honour's attention to the fact that motions Nos. 78, 79 and 80 are duplications, and if it is in order for me to do so perhaps I might be allowed to withdraw those motions.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give consent to the withdrawal of motions for production of papers Nos. 78, 79 and 80 as requested?

Mr. Hellyer: And No. 66.

Mr. Nielsen: And No. 66.

Mr. Speaker: And No. 66?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Orders discharged and motions withdrawn.

REPRESENTATIONS BY CANADA RAILWAY EMPLOYEES ASSOCIATION

Motion No. 76—Mr. Fisher:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all replies of any kind given by the Prime Minister or other cabinet ministers to representations made by the Retired Canada Railway Employees Association, Incorporated, to the Prime Minister in August 1963.

Motion agreed to.

PENHOLD, ALTA.—USE AS JET TRAINING BASE

Motion No. 81—Mr. Lambert:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all telegrams, correspondence, reports, briefs and memoranda, and any replies thereto, received by the Minister of National Defence the Minister of Transport, or any minister of the government or any government official, from the cities of Edmonton, Calgary and Red Deer, any civic organizations therefrom or any other interested parties, since January 1, 1963 to date, relative to the projected use of R.C.A.F. station Penhold, Alberta, for a jet training base of the Department of National Defence.

Motion agreed to.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

PENHOLD, ALTA.—REPORTS RESPECTING USE AS JET TRAINING BASE

Motion No. 82—Mr. Churchill:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of the 1963 report of the Department of Transport regarding the establishment of the Penhold jet training base which was made prior to the calling of the tenders for construction of facilities in the said base; and any further report secured by the Department of Transport which preceded the reversal of the earlier decision to establish the jet training base.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I would draw your attention to the fact that the report asked for, if there were one, would be a departmental document made by certain officers within the department and therefore could not be produced. In addition I might say that there is no such report on record. Therefore I would ask the hon. member to withdraw the motion.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member consent to having the said motion dropped?

Mr. Churchill: I understand from the minister that there is no such report. Therefore nothing can be done.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

LETTERS FROM AND TO HAL BANKS

Motion No. 83—Mr. Churchill:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all letters and replies thereto that passed between Hal Banks and/or other officials of the S.I.U., and any member of the government or any official of a government department, since the 12th of April last.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

Motion No. 84—Mr. Diefenbaker:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house copies of all correspondence between the federal and provincial governments or any ministers thereof in regard to the Canada pension plan.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the right hon. gentleman would permit this motion to stand until next week.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes.

Motions stands.

CANADA—U.S. AGREEMENT ON NUCLEAR WEAPONS

Motion No. 85—Mr. Diefenbaker:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of the recent agreement on nuclear weapons entered into between the government of Canada and the United States of America.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, this motion is for the production of a defence agreement with the United States of America, which cannot be made public for reasons of national and NATO security and in accordance with the position taken by the right hon. gentleman himself on February 20, 1959 and subsequently. Therefore I would ask that it be withdrawn.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the right hon. gentleman has seen fit to refer to me I should be able to reply. I never provided expurgated editions. The right hon. gentleman did so when the press announcement was made in regard to this agreement. Having done so, he waived the right of the government to take the stand he now takes, and I want the motion proceeded with.

Mr. Speaker: Under the rules of the house I am obliged to put the motion to the house.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Diefenbaker) which was negatived on the following division:

Inquiries of the Ministry

LABOUR RELATIONS

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—THREATENED STRIKE OF LONGSHOREMEN

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour and ask him what is being done at the moment to bring about the settlement of the strike of the longshoremen of the St. Lawrence ports scheduled for Friday. What action is being taken, and will he take the house into his confidence and let us know that this strike will not take place, affecting, as it will, not only Canada's exports but her economy as a whole?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to give this information to the house. Earlier in the day I announced that in order to provide the parties with a final opportunity for settlement of the dispute involving longshoremen employed by the Shipping Federation of Canada at Montreal, Three Rivers and Quebec, a federal mediator had been appointed in the person of Judge Rene Lippe of Montreal. I have advised the representatives of the international longshoremen's association and the shipping federation accordingly.

Judge Lippe has had wide and successful experience as a conciliation and arbitration board chairman for both the federal and provincial authorities and is in an excellent position to assist the parties to reach an early settlement. Judge Lippe is in contact, I understand, with the parties this afternoon in an initial effort to reach a settlement before the strike on Friday, and it is to be hoped that his efforts will prove successful.

Mr. Diefenbaker: By way of a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, if those efforts are not successful, in view of the dangerous state of affairs that will result, what action does the government intend to take?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be premature to prejudge the efforts of Judge Lippe. We ought to wait until time has taken its course before deciding what would be the best way to deal with any eventualities. But the government is aware of all the possibilities inherent in this situation and is giving full consideration to what ought to be done under certain conditions.

NORRIS COMMISSION—REPORT OF SPECIAL COUNSEL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Justice. Has the minister received any report from the special counsel whom he appointed to delve into possible charges that might be laid in connection with the Norris commission report?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have received an interim report from Mr. John Robinette, Q.C. and Mr. Jean Martineau, Q.C. The report is now being studied by the officers of the Department of Justice. From the report it is clear that there will have to be consultation between the officers of the department and the two persons who were asked to make recommendations, namely Mr. Robinette and Mr. Martineau.

[Later:]

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice a question supplementary to the one I asked earlier. Can he give us any indication when the meeting between the special counsel and the department heads with regard to the Norris commission report will be held?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I cannot add anything to what I have already said. I think the answer to the question would depend on what the report is as between our officers and the two counsel appointed to deal with the matter in question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Banks seems to be a favourite son.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT FUND

REPORTED INTENTION NOT TO PROCEED WITH LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all hon. members would want to welcome back the Minister of Finance from his visit to Washington and his appearance before the international monetary fund administration.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas: I would like to ask the minister whether he would either deny or confirm reports that the government has decided not to proceed with the Canada development fund legislation. This is an important matter, and I think the house ought to be informed if the government has definitely decided not to proceed at this session with this important measure.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for his kind remarks. I can assure him that the government has not reached any such decision; that is, not to proceed with this legislation. When we will proceed with it is a matter that will be worked out by the cabinet with the advice of the house leader.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister give us some idea of when it is the intention to proceed with this measure?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I think I really answered that question in my reply to the original question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Was that not in the 60 days?

Mr. Gordon: As I say, Mr. Speaker, it will depend on how fast we get through the various things that are now before the house.

AIR TRANSPORT

REQUIREMENTS RESPECTING AIR LANES AND BUFFER ZONES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I address my question to the Minister of Transport. Would the minister inform the house of the latest regulations of his department concerning jet training as they relate to requirements in regard to air lanes and buffer zones.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I can take the time of the house on orders of the day to set out the details of the safety regulations in this connection. The hon. member raised a question on this subject two days ago in relation to the air field at Penhold. I would like to point out to him that our responsibilities under the Aeronautics Act place a primary emphasis upon the maintenance of safety in flying, and we in Canada are proud of the record which has been achieved in this regard. It is our responsibility to ensure that arrangements relating to flying provide the maximum degree of safety to those in the air and those on the ground.

This has involved not only an extensive, well equipped and highly competent air traffic control system and a well equipped and well laid out system of high level and low level airways and air routes across Canada, but general arrangements for the separation of various types of traffic to avoid the risk of air collision.

I can give the hon. member more information on this subject if he wants it, Mr. Speaker, but I do not know how much time I should take on orders of the day.

Mr. Thompson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Are these regulations to which the minister is referring uniform for all air patterns across the country and for all areas where training is taking place?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, but there is a situation where aircraft are not uniform in different parts of the country. There are problems like that which arise. For instance, certain types of aircraft do not fly over 30,000 feet; they are not capable of it. There are questions like that which enter into this matter.

Mr. Thompson: A supplementary question. The minister has answered my question as it relates to safety. My question was, what are the safety zone requirements as they are presently laid out for this type of training? This question requires only a very short answer, and it is an urgent matter.

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that his question be put on the order paper. The answer requires a great deal of detail.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO NEW U.S. BASES IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence, if you please.

Does the agreement between Canada and the United States on nuclear weapons include the setting up of new American defence bases in Canada?

[Text]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it does not include the construction of any new defence bases.

USE OF FRENCH AS COMMAND LANGUAGE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence. Could the minister tell the house what practical reasons account for the fact that the French language has no place in the three Canadian armed services, as he stated not so long ago?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend has misinterpreted the statements I made. I feel sure he knows what steps have been taken and what steps are planned to encourage bilingualism in the Department of National Defence and within the three armed services of Canada.

However, in the case of Canadian armed forces taking part in a mission under an international body such as NATO or NORAD, where headquarters are made up of officers from various countries and the forces of several nations are supposed to work together, in order to avoid any misunderstanding from a security point of view, it has been agreed that words of command are to be given in English.

Now, for my hon. friend's information, I might add that neither France nor Italy nor Germany nor any of the other member countries of NATO were opposed to English being the language of command and that none of those countries felt that decision was unfair to them.

D.E.W. LINE—REPORTED OBJECTION TO EMPLOYEES JOINING UNION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister inform the house why the United States firm that is responsible for the maintenance and operation of the D.E.W. line objects to giving 600 workers the right to affiliate with a union, as was reported in the newspapers?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I think that is another question that should be put on the order paper.

Mr. Pigeon: On a point of order, I think this is a proper question to address to the Minister of National Defence. It is an urgent question. It is the right of these workers to be affiliated with a union and it is the duty of the Minister of National Defence to answer the question right now.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—STATEMENTS MADE DURING PROVINCIAL ELECTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question of national significance to the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Herridge: In view of the fact that Mr. Ray Perrault when speaking in the Kootenays during the recent provincial election said "Throughout the entire course of negotiations with the United States and with the government of B.C. the Liberal party of B.C. has been in constant contact with the federal Liberal government"—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Herridge: —and later said that Canada is negotiating with the United States to postpone the high Arrow dam in favour of the low Arrow dam—

[Mr. Cardin.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will you please come to your question?

Mr. Herridge: Yes, Mr. Speaker—and in view of the fact that Hon. Ray Williston said this was nonsense, would the Prime Minister inform the house who is telling the truth?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would certainly be out of order if I commented on the accuracy of statements of various participants in the recent election in British Columbia.

INDUSTRY

REQUEST FOR IMPROVED OPPORTUNITIES ON INDIAN RESERVES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, but in his absence I will direct it to the acting minister. With reference to a booklet describing the Department of Industry which has come to our desks today, which says in part under "Functions of the department", that the department——will work with all agencies at various levels of federal, provincial and municipal government to provide improved industrial opportunities in designated areas—

—can the minister inform the house whether consultation has taken place, or will take place, with the officials of the Indian affairs branch so as to provide improved industrial opportunities in the truly depressed areas, industrialwise and employmentwise, namely, the Indian reservations of Canada?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Acting Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I feel that this question should be put on the order paper.

LANGUAGE REQUIREMENTS RESPECTING PERSONNEL OF NEW DEPARTMENT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Perron (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Industry but, in his absence, I shall direct it to the Prime Minister. My question is based on a press report. Is it true that the new Department of Industry requires a knowledge of both languages only from applicants who will be called upon to work in the province of Quebec or to deal with that province?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): It is important for all members of this new department and other departments to have a knowledge of both languages.

EDUCATION

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF FEDERAL OFFICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Prime Minister. The question arises out of a report in the Globe and Mail about a parent-teacher organization calling on the Prime Minister asking for the creation of a federal office of education. The report seemed to indicate that the Prime Minister adopted the proposal but thought it would require the consent of the provinces. My question is this. Does the government approve in principle of the creation of a federal office of education and, if so, will it be placed on the agenda of the forthcoming conference between the federal government and the provincial premiers?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when the delegation was before me I said that I endorsed the aims of such an office which were put forward by them, those aims being for the exchange of educational information. But I went on to point out that this kind of education office should not be established without the consent of the provincial governments. This may be a matter which will be considered at the forthcoming provincial conference.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOUTH AFRICA—SUGGESTED TARIFF ADJUSTMENT ON LEAVING COMMONWEALTH

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs I shall direct my question to the Prime Minister.

Does the Canadian government intend to change its preferential tariff policy toward South Africa, which withdrew recently from the commonwealth?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, questions of tariff policy cannot be answered in this way on the orders of the day. When the estimates of the Departments of External Affairs and Trade and Commerce are up there will be an opportunity to discuss all these matters.

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF CANADA-U.S. PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister anything to report on the convening of the United States-Canada interparliamentary committee? Last May 29, in response to a question of mine, the Prime Minister said a meeting would be convened at an early date. I wonder how early is early.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter in the efficient hands of Mr. Speaker, I believe, and it is not a responsibility of the government.

AGRICULTURE

MILK—REQUEST FOR RESTORATION OF SUBSIDY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Perron (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Does the minister intend to restore soon the premium which was paid to milk producers until last May, to assist the farmers of eastern Canada who were the most affected by the government's decision?

[Text]

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this is a question of government policy and any change will be announced after this matter has been dealt with.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE ON PROCEDURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State. In light of the nature of the proceedings of this house during the last two days, does the government intend to bring forward at an early date the resolution on the order paper for the appointment of a select committee to suggest changes that will assure the more expeditious dispatch of public business and other reforms of parliamentary procedure?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the objective the hon. gentleman has in mind and I renew at once the offer I made repeatedly before we adjourned, that I would bring this motion on today or any other day if it could be passed without debate so the committee could start sitting tomorrow. If that cannot be done, I will seek at the earliest possible time after certain urgent matters, such as interim supply and the measure now before the house, are disposed of to bring this matter forward for debate. But if there could be agreement to do it without debate it would facilitate the objective that the hon. gentleman has in mind and which, I should judge from the applause, every hon. member has in mind.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I address a supplementary question to the Secretary of State. Why is he constantly asking for matters to be handled here without debate? Does he want to set up a dictatorship in this country?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, sir, but it does seem to me that perhaps one of the most useful reforms we could make is to refer matters to committees without debate, and then to debate them in the house after they have been considered by the committees and there is some subject matter to be debated.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

May I take this opportunity to ask the Secretary of State when he intends to call the privileges and elections committee to study and decide upon the situation which exists at present in this part of the house?

Some hon. Members: That has already been announced.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, Mr. Speaker, since the government has no interest in attempting to impose a dictatorship in any part of the house, I feel I should tell the hon. gentleman that that is no part of the business of government. The committee has been set up; it has been established by the house and there is regular machinery for calling it together. However, I have ascertained from the chief government whip that a notice has gone out for a meeting tomorrow at ten o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Ten thirty.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am told it is ten thirty.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO IMPLEMENTATION OF GILL REPORT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre-Andre Boutin (Dorchester): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister.

Does the government intend to study soon the recommendations of the Gill report on unemployment insurance or does it intend to introduce this fall legislation on that subject to assure the liquidity of the fund during the coming winter months?

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, legislation will be introduced on this important measure as soon as possible.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ASSISTANCE TO OTHER THAN DESIGNATED AREAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry. In his absence I will direct it to the Prime Minister. What assistance will be forthcoming from the Department of Industry to areas other than those designated as depressed areas?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to take that question as notice.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): A supplementary question to the Minister of Labour, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister assure all hon. members of the house that before certain areas are designated as depressed areas local authorities are at all times consulted?

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, they have regard for municipal autonomy.

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): The designation of certain areas has been undertaken on the basis of the most objective criteria available, namely the unemployment and employment records of these areas. Such areas are eligible for assistance under special measures in order to accelerate their growth. That is the purpose, and I am sure municipalities in any part of Canada which feel any need of special assistance will welcome these particular measures, which apply solely to areas of designation.

Mr. Grafftey: Yes, but are local authorities consulted before they are designated as distressed areas, or is that name imposed on them by Ottawa without consultation?

Mr. MacEachen: I think the emphasis there is completely misplaced. The purpose is not to describe these areas as depressed, but rather as areas of future opportunity under the proposals made by this government.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): My question is directed to the Minister of Labour, and it is supplementary to the question asked earlier. Would the minister consider changing the criterion used in designating areas by reducing it from an eight year average of unemployment figures to a lesser number of years, so that it would be more in line with recent conditions?

Mr. MacEachen: I would say in reply to the hon. gentleman that the government is designating these particular areas for a period of one year. The situation will be reviewed at the end of that year and, in the interval, careful consideration will be given to perfecting the methods of designation so that these criteria may truly reflect the need in particular areas of this country.

Mr. Grafftey: With or without consultation with the municipalities?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Grafftey: Answer yes or no.

Mr. MacEachen: It ought to be pointed out, too, that it is not fully accurate to speak of an eight year period as the period of designation. If these areas are to be eligible for special assistance because of their failure to grow as rapidly as other areas then, in order to test the need as a chronic condition, a certain time period must be used. That is why a duration of time is established among the criteria, as was done by the former government in its designation of areas under the double depreciation program; so this is not a novel idea at all.

Mr. Grafftey: The former government always consulted the municipalities.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Now that the Minister of Labour is in good spirit to answer questions, possibly he would answer this simple one. Before a municipal area is designated as a distressed area in order to qualify, are the officials of the municipality consulted?

Mr. MacEachen: First of all, I take exception again to the term "depressed" or "distressed". That is not the intention at all. We felt as a government that, given the opportunity, we ought to take responsibility, as we said we would do, for areas which ought to be given special assistance, not to do as the former government did and ask the municipality to come forward and make an application.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

DATE OF COMMENCEMENT OF WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Can the minister tell the house why the government has delayed the winter works period until November 1?

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): This particular point was fully covered in the statement made to the house last June announcing the winter works program.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

ELIGIBILITY OF VETERANS LAND ACT HOMES FOR BONUS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour because I think this matter comes chiefly under his jurisdiction. Do persons building homes this fall and winter under the Veterans Land Act become eligible for the $500 bonus in connection with the winter housing program?

Hon A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): My understanding is that they do, but if I am proven wrong on investigation I will tell the hon. member in the house.

INQUIRY AS TO PROGRESS OF CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. F. Jones (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker I wonder whether the Minister of Veterans Affairs is in a position to advise the house of the government's intentions in respect of proceeding with the completion of necessary construction in his department this fall and, in particular, is he in a position to advise when he intends to call for tenders for the erection of the veterans home in Saskatoon?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. gentleman for advising me that he was going to ask this question. The government has a continuing long range program for the replacement, reconstruction and renovation of departmental treatment facilities. Announcements of the progress of this program will be made at appropriate times.

With respect to the veterans home in Saskatoon, instructions went forward some time ago to proceed with the replacement of existing facilities. I am informed by public works that tenders will be called in approximately three weeks.

May I say that I am very pleased to see the hon. member here. When I was in his fair city some three or four weeks ago, I was not able to see him. I understand that conditions then were not as good. I welcome him back, however, and I am pleased to see him in good health.

Inquiries of the Ministry

SHIPPING

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—SUGGESTED CLOSING BECAUSE OF U.S. UNION ACTION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Could he tell the house whether he is thinking of forbidding the use of the St. Lawrence seaway to ships coming from the United States should some people in the United States keep on using dilatory measures to prevent the setting up of the trusteeship over Canadian shipping unions?

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I find the question too vague to allow of a precise answer.

FINANCE

MEASURES TO DEAL WITH BALANCE OF PAYMENTS PROBLEM

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

Since the minister stated recently that Canada did not intend to reduce the deficit in her balance of payments to the prejudice of the United States, can he tell the house what actual solution he intends to put forward and what he means exactly by multilateral but not bilateral measures.

[Text]

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I made no such statement in those terms, without going into in much more detail; and I do not think I could answer the substantive part of the question on the orders of the day.

DIFFICULTY OF COLLECTING PROPOSED TRANSACTION TAX

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance and ask whether during his recent discussions with officials of the United States treasury department they revealed to him a plan of administration to cover the proposed 15 per cent transaction tax. If so, did this plan of administration overcome some of the difficulties which he ran into when he proposed a similar tax?

[Mr. Teillet.]

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I think there are difficulties in the collection of all taxes, not only in this country but in some others as well.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question. Since the collection of all taxes involves many problems is the Minister of Finance considering the withdrawal of them all, as he has done for the 30 per cent tax?

[Text]

TAXABILITY OF $500 GRANT FOR WINTER HOUSE CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to reply to the question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Ontario respecting the $500 bonus to be paid to the first purchaser of a new house constructed mainly during the winter period.

A person who purchases the house as a personal residence for himself will receive the $500 payment without income tax consequences.

Where the first purchaser rents out the whole or a part of the house or otherwise uses it for revenue purposes, the payment of $500 which he is to receive from the government will reduce the capital cost of the house which is the basis for the capital cost allowance which he may claim for income tax purposes.

Where the first purchaser of the house is subject to tax as a trader in real estate, he will have to take the payment of $500 into his calculation of the profit or loss of the business.

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN PRICE OF GOLD

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, but as he is not here, I am going to put it to the Prime Minister.

Since the government has declared our region a depressed area, does it intend to consider increasing the price of gold, in order to help our region and those which are in a similar situation to recover? In my opinion, such a step would be quite important.

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a question which concerns not only one region but economic policy generally, and it will be dealt with in the normal way.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Could he tell the house if it is true, according to rumours which are circulating, that the Minister of Justice will soon be appointed president of the Canadian National Railways?

[Text]

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ALASKA HIGHWAY—INQUIRY AS TO PAVING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Defence arising out of my question yesterday concerning the Alaska highway paving conference. The minister said that as far as he knew the resolution concerning it had not yet been placed on the agenda.

Can the minister inform the house what he means by "the agenda", and whether there is an implication in the answer that this matter will be placed on whatever agenda there is.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): There was no such implication, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nielsen: Can the hon. gentleman inform the house what he meant by "agenda" in his reply?

Mr. Hellyer: I was referring, I think, in the previous sentence to government policy, and the agenda to which I was referring was the agenda of the cabinet which would consider policy matters.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

SAINT JOHN, N.B.—PROPOSED SALE OF GRAIN ELEVATOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Has the Minister of Transport any information on the grain elevator at Saint John which was to be sold by the government?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am glad to be able to tell the hon. member that there is no such intention in mind. The grain elevator about which he is asking will not be sold.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

WINNIPEG—TRANSFER OF OVERHAUL AND MAINTENANCE BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question either to the Prime Minister or to the Minister of Transport? Is the government in a position today to make its promised statement on the retention of the T.C.A. maintenance and overhaul base at Winnipeg? If not, will a statement be made this week?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): I am not in a position to make such a statement today but I expect to be able to make it this week, either tomorrow or Friday.

TRADE

REPORTED INCREASE IN IMPORT QUOTAS FOR U.S. TURKEYS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce? Could he explain to us the reason why he has raised the quota of turkeys imported from the United States when statistics show that the Canadian production is adequate at present to meet the demand?

[Text]

HARBOURS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway directed a question to me concerning certain leases of water lots in the Coal Harbour area of Vancouver. On reading his question this morning I noticed that it referred only to Coal Harbour Investments Limited and consequently I am able to give him the information without the necessity of putting the question on the order paper.

While negotiations have taken place between the national harbours board and Coal Harbour Investments Limited in respect of a possible lease of certain water lots on Coal Harbour in Vancouver, no final commitment has been made by the federal government through the national harbours board. Any such commitment can only be made following approval of any lease or leases by the governor general in council.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—REQUEST FOR INCREASED PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that it is proven that purchasing power is not sufficient in Canada and that the cost of living is going up steadily, could the minister tell us when the government intends to raise family allowances to remedy the situation?

[Text]

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, any such announcement would be a matter of government policy and therefore would be made at such time as the government had determined the policy.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

QUEBEC—IS F.L.Q. A SUBVERSIVE ORGANIZATION?

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice a question arising out of the answer to my starred question 1,064 relating to the F.L.Q. and the R.C.M.P. I should like to ask the minister whether the Department of Justice defines the F.L.Q. as an organization subversive to the interests of the country. If so, could he give us any report on what our national security forces are doing in winkling out this organization?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): With all due respect, it seems to me that this is the kind of question that should be placed on the order paper. In addition, in view of the answers I gave to related questions in the earlier part of the session it would seem that the hon. member might find a reply there. A great deal of the information he seeks has to do with something that comes under provincial and municipal jurisdiction and I would be loath to make any statement other than in reply to a question on the order paper.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I raise the point that it is simply a question of whether this is a subversive organization. I do not think the minister can explain to me how he can expect a provincial jurisdiction to look after a subversive matter relating to the nation as a whole.

Mr. Chevrier: This is clearly not an urgent question. My hon. friend can put it on the order paper and I will see that he gets an answer.

Mr. Fisher: One more bomb and it may be.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

QUEBEC CITY—REQUEST FOR FRENCH TELEVISION STATION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Robert Beaule (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Could the minister inform the house of the progress made to date in the negotiations for the establishment of a French C.B.C. television station in Quebec city?

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I regret that I did not catch the question at all. I apologize to the hon. gentleman. I am afraid I was not paying attention.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaule: I will repeat the question. Could the minister inform the house of the progress made to date in the negotiations for the establishment of a French C.B.C. television station in Quebec city?

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: I think that is the kind of question which would be much better put on the order paper.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST FOR IMPROVED QUARTERS FOR INTERPRETERS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Lucien Plourde (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State. Would the hon. gentleman inform the house whether the government intends to improve the office of our interpreters or to move them to new quarters? I am speaking of room 504 which is too hot in summer, very cold in winter and much too small. I feel that this office is unsuitable for them, in view of the services they render to parliament.

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am sure Your Honour will take note of that question. It is well known that accommodation in this building is still pretty difficult.

WORLD FAIR

STATEMENT RESPECTING SALARY OF COMMISSIONER

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I should like to answer a question asked yesterday by the hon. member for St. Mary (Mr. Valade).

Mr. Dupuy is still with the Department of External Affairs and upon his return from various courtesy calls which he is now making in Europe, his salary will be determined.

OLD AGE SECURITY

PROVISION FOR INCREASE IN AMOUNT OF PAYMENT

The house resumed, from Tuesday, October 1, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Miss LaMarsh—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Old Age Security Act to increase the pension under the said act from $65 a month to $75 a month, effective October 1, 1963, and to increase the rate of old age security tax from the present rate of 3 per cent with a maximum of $90 to a rate of 4 per cent with a maximum of $120 on the taxable income of individuals, applicable to the 1964 and subsequent taxation years.

Mr. Pickersgill: Last evening when the committee adjourned I sought to put on the record one paragraph from a publication called, "Policies of the Liberal Party, General Election, 1963." Perhaps I could just read it. The heading is "Establish a new national minimum of $75 a month pension," and it is as follows:

To help people already retired, who have not had the chance to contribute under the new Liberal plan, a minimum supplementary pension of $10 a month will be paid from the start, out of the pension fund established by contributions. This will raise the total old age pension to $75 for a single or widowed person, $140 for a married couple.

Now, when the government considered this matter after the election we came to the conclusion that it was not practical to limit it to $140 for a married couple and that all persons should be treated alike, whether or not they were married, and it should be uniformly set at $75. Up until late August or the beginning of September it was hoped that the government, as was evidenced in the house, could carry out the plan in all other essentials as outlined in this literature. When it became apparent, as it did early in September in the light of developments in two of the provinces, that in order to work out arrangements that would be fair to the public in those provinces and elsewhere in Canada it would take a longer time than had originally been expected, it was then decided to go ahead with the measure that is now being recommended to the house.

The only other point on which I wish to say a single word is this: It was said by several hon. members on the other side, and quite correctly, that the government said this would not be done out of taxes but out of contributions. This is quite correct, as is shown by the passage that I read. Now, sir, when that was put in the literature I think all of us understood quite clearly what that meant. It was not going to be paid out of general revenues, and indeed in one of the other publications we said quite specifically it would not be added to the budgetary deficit. Therefore, when it was decided to separate these two measures, it was felt whatever funds would be required to defray this extra $10 should be raised separately and distinctly and be paid into the existing old age security fund. This is what is proposed in this measure. While it is true that, in one sense, that is a tax, it does not go into the consolidated fund but into a separate and distinct fund which can be used only for old age security. It really does, I think, perhaps not fulfil the letter but it does fulfil the spirit of this phrase that the $10 a month will be paid from the start out of the pension fund. It is true it is out of the existing pension fund and not out of the new one. It certainly does not conform with the letter of this paragraph, and I do not think any of us pretend it does.

We have sought to deal with the matter responsibly. While raising the pension, we have sought at the same time to make provision for the raising of the necessary funds to pay this pension so it will not add to the general budgetary deficit of the country.

Mr. Grafftey: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes.

Mr. Grafftey: Can the hon. member inform the house whether or not the government was aware of Mr. Lesage's intention when the hon. lady introduced the contributory plan before the recess? Was she informed of Mr. Lesage's intention to go ahead with a provincial plan when she introduced her plan to the house before the recess?

Mr. Pickersgill: Quite frankly, I am bound to confess I am not in the position, without reference to the documents, to answer that.

Mr. Hales: The minister is in the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister is in the house, and I am sure the minister is well able to speak for herself and will probably answer when I have finished these few remarks. I do not believe I should attempt to answer for the minister. I can say this, that at the time the speech from the throne was presented in the other place there was no knowledge on the part of the government of the plan that Mr. Lesage subsequently announced.

The sole point I am seeking to make is that we admit right off that, because of circumstances, we were not able to carry out the plan we originally brought before this house within the time in which we expected to do it. Because of certain expectations, which I think in a good many cases were justified, we came to the conclusion we should deal with the matter in the best, practical way—that is what most members of the government—

Mr. Pugh: A high tax government.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think that is what most of the people in the country would like us to do. I do not believe the members of the public are interested in the threshing of old political straw. I hope we can now get on and adopt this resolution.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Let us adopt it, then; sit down.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I could be heard? Since there has been general concurrence on this question, perhaps we could get on and adopt the resolution with which all of us seem to be in substantial agreement.

Mr. Starr: I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare a question. It is based on a fact of which I am aware, namely that a 1 per cent tax will raise some $150 million annually.

Now, if that is so is it not then logical to assume that the difference between $116 million and $150 million would pay for the six month's retroactivity we have asked for in order to have this dated back to April 8? Why raise this money to that excess when you are not going to use it for the purpose of increasing the old age pensions? Why not use the difference in that amount to make the pension increase retroactive to April 8, in the same way as we members of the house voted an increase in our own salaries retroactive to April 8?

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, my colleague the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance would ordinarily answer such a question, but since it has been asked of me I would refer my hon. friend to Hansard of yesterday's date and the day before, in which it was indicated that the amount to be raised in a full year is $100 million per 1 percentage point of personal income tax, and not $150 million; that it is some $13 million which will be raised in the last three months of this fiscal year when it is proposed to be instituted; and that $116 million will be required in a full year for the old age pension increase.

Mr. Grafftey: Would the hon. lady be kind enough to answer the question I put to the Secretary of State as to whether or not, when she introduced her universal contributory pension plan, she was aware of Mr. Lesage's intention to proceed with a provincial plan in the province of Quebec?

Miss LaMarsh: I think my hon. friend is under some misapprehension. It was the unanimous action of the Quebec legislature in August of this year, while this house was not in session and as a matter of fact when I was out of the country studying pension matters in other countries, which resulted in adopting a resolution calling for a comprehensive and compulsory provincial program. This was the triggering factor in the decision to proceed with the separation of the $10 increase from the Canada pension plan.

Mr. Grafftey: Was the hon. lady not aware at the time she introduced her plan on July 18 that Mr. Lesage intended to go ahead with a provincial plan in Quebec?

Miss LaMarsh: Well, Mr. Chairman, I have used one of our two national languages in as clear and explicit a manner as I can, and I am sorry that through some personal deficiency of his my hon. friend is unable to comprehend my answer.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Chairman—

[Translation]

Mr. Grafftey: —The question can be put to you in French. I shall ask you the question in French, if you want.

[Text]

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale has the floor.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Chairman, in speaking on this resolution to amend the Old Age Security Act, I would like to say at the outset that I am in full agreement with amending it in order to bring about an increase in the pension from $65 to $75 per month. However there are one or two things with which I do not agree, and one is that I believe the pension should be made retroactive to April 8.

The other matter, which is of much concern to me and to some old age pensioners in my area, is that while a married couple will benefit greatly from the increase, a single pensioner or a remaining spouse will find it very difficult to live on $75 per month. Actually this is not sufficient. First the cost of living has gone up, and even though single pensioners may own their own homes, their taxes have also gone up. This all creates hardship for the single pensioner.

I am prevented by the rules from presenting an amendment but I would like the minister to give some consideration to this matter. It might be possible to establish a means test so that single pensioners could get more than $75 a month. In the northern area of Saskatchewan which I represent there are many people who will not benefit greatly from this pension increase, and during my stay at home during the recess I was approached by some of them and was asked to bring this matter to the notice of the minister.

I would like to ask the minister to give consideration to this matter before the bill is introduced, so that it may be possible to devise measures whereby the pensioners to whom I have referred will receive a benefit equal to that received by married couples.

Mr. Nesbitt: I have just a brief word to say to the minister concerning something about which perhaps she may not be aware. It has been brought to the attention of myself and a number of other members that there are certain companies in Canada who have former employees on pension, but the pension arrangements are such that if an increase is given in the old age pension these few companies—and I take it that fortunately there are very few—have the unpleasant habit of reducing the pensions they pay to their former employees by the amount of old age pension increase.

I realize the difficulty which the minister would have in doing anything about such a situation, but I hope she would discuss it with the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue. Sometimes there are indirect ways, if not direct ways, of stopping this kind of unpleasant occurrence.

I have a number of letters on my desk dealing with this matter, but I will not take the time to read them. I know other members have received similar letters, and perhaps the minister has also. I hope some consideration could be given to attempting to stop these companies from doing this.

Miss LaMarsh: The matter to which my hon. friend refers was recently brought to my attention by the hon. member for Kootenay East who headed a delegation to me regarding one such company pension program. It will be appreciated that each individual program differs and the legal position depends on the phraseology of each particular program. In this particular instance it appeared that the amount of the pension would be reduced by any contribution which the company might have to make directly or indirectly through taxation; but I would call my hon. friend's attention to the way in which the money for this increase is being raised, that is by way of personal taxation. In my own opinion, although I do not intend to give the house a legal opinion, that company would be unjustified in making a reduction in payment to their pensioners on such a basis.

However, all such contracts may not have the same phraseology, and it may be appreciated that there is no way in which the federal government can interfere in private matters. Certainly such action is frowned upon, and in passing legislation such as this it is the intention of the government, and indeed of the whole house, to pass the benefit on to the old age pensioners, and not in effect to reduce the obligation of a company to pay pensions to those already on pension.

Mr. Herridge: I am very pleased to hear the minister's comments with respect to this proposal, which has been made by a certain company in the constituencies of Kootenay East and Kootenay West, the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company. I am sure she has been well informed of the situation which has arisen there and which has caused serious concern to the pensioners, employees, unions representing them, and many other people in the district who have been rather appalled at the suggestion on the part of the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company that, as a result of a certain bylaw in their pension fund, they have the legal right to deduct this $10 if there is an increase in old age security pensions. Therefore I think the minister raised a very good point—it is one that I intended to raise—on the basis of their not being taxed for this increase. In this case, whether we agree with it or not, the proposal in the resolution is a personal income tax increase, and I know the minister has received representations from the representatives of the employees concerned.

I must say I was very pleased to hear her sympathetic approach to the situation. No doubt there is sometimes an advantage in having a lady minister. You can arouse a lady minister's humanitarian instincts when sometimes this cannot be done with the Secretary of State and some others I know. I am sure this statement on the part of the minister will be welcomed by the employees concerned and I trust the government will use its good influences to make certain there is no effect to the proposal of the company as forwarded to the pensioners a short time ago. The company must see that it is most unfair and has not the support of this government or the members of this house.

Mr. Chairman, I rose just briefly to say how pleased I am that there is this increase of $10 a month. It should be more. It is very necessary. But even the $10 will be very welcome to the thousands of pensioners in this country who have been looking forward to it for some months.

[Translation]

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Chairman, I had no intention of taking part in this debate, but since we are on the third day of the debate and I realized that many members still want to express their views, I figured I should do the same myself.

I see that a matter we all agree on takes several hours of discussion to be adopted even at the resolution stage. I am very sorry about that.

I would particularly like to raise the following points. I would like to talk about the history of the proposal. When the Minister of National Health and Welfare submitted her resolution last spring, it seemed to be linked with the pension plan. At that time, the opposition exerted pressures to have the $10 separated from the pension scheme. During the summer, events forced the government to modify its view and I wish to thank the administration for making the $10 old age pension increase a plan separate from the pension plan. Otherwise, the government would have linked two things entirely different in nature.

Mr. Chairman, yesterday we saw the official opposition ask that the $10 increase be paid retroactive to April 8. I am wondering about their sincerity. Why not make it retroactive to June 22 of last year, when the official opposition was in office, a time when it could have offered that $10 increase to old age pensioners. The government of that time could have relied on our support and would have also been able to rely on the support of the then official opposition. I feel that this $10 increase would have been welcome at the time and we would not have to try and make it retroactive today.

Therefore, I believe that yesterday the gentlemen in opposition did not prove their earnestness in any way.

If we admit that the $10 increase is justified, we must make sure that it is adopted as soon as possible in order that our old people may receive an extra $10 at the end of this month with their regular cheque.

If we admit that the increase is necessary, I feel we should not continue to play politics as was done during the past three days at the expense of the elderly people of this country, who are waiting for us to deal fairly with them.

Mr. Chairman, this increase in the old age pension will be financed through a 1 per cent increase of the workers' income tax. According to the philosophy that we advocate in Social Credit, obviously that old age pension increase would not have been accompanied by an increase of the personal income tax. Where are we going with a system where everything boils down to a tax increase?

The minister said that she had to look for the $118 or $120 million she needs in the taxpayers' pockets. However, I notice that in her general pension scheme, there is a key phrase which, in my opinion, is the substance of the whole program, and that is where she says that the amounts of money which shall be given back to the Canadian citizen upon their retirement, will include the contributions of all the people, less administration costs which have been estimated at about $12 million per year. In short, a dollar will be taken from us and we will get it back years later, less the value of those $12 million in the total amount.

Mr. Chairman, we must ask ourselves what efficiency there is in this procedure. I regret that, in the twentieth century, it is still impossible to finance social security measures in our country without taxing the income of the workers who are growing fewer and fewer. That will inevitably put a heavier burden on each worker.

I am of the opinion that all those increases will discourage the workers from showing initiative and that the government will have to study, as soon as possible, ways of financing the country's administration other than by taxation.

Mr. Chairman, in the private sector there is a growing tendency to prepare budgets according to revenue, that is to say, an estimate of revenue is made and expenditures are reduced so that they may be covered by revenue.

On the other hand, at all levels of government, the opposite is true today, that is to say, governments make an estimate of their expenditures and then look for sources of revenue. Departments prepare estimates of expenditures, sometimes more or less justified, and which do not give the results reasonably expected. And the ministers then ask the house to finance the cost through tax increases.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that this procedure should no longer be followed and that means should be found to finance increased social security benefits without resorting to personal taxation, affecting workers especially.

As a matter of fact, I wonder who the government will tax in the year two thousand, when it is expected that workers will no longer be employed as such, will no longer be paid by industry, or will be replaced by electronic brains? Will taxes be levied on electronic brains then? This is what we should ask ourselves.

Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion that the resolution should be passed immediately so that the bill may be considered and passed for the benefit of all those who will get the increase at the end of the month.

[Text]

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Chairman, I have one question. We know that the old age security program is very closely related in the minds of the people to our over-all welfare program. I would like to ask the minister whether the government has in mind extending this $10 per month increase to those entitled to old age assistance, blind persons and disabled persons. To do otherwise at this time would, I think, create a great deal of confusion in the minds of our elder citizens, and I think this question should be cleared up. I would like to ask the minister what the government intends to do about the extension of this $10 increase to the shared programs of the provinces.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, we consulted the provinces with respect to our intentions in this regard at the conference held earlier in the month, and my hon. friend can rest assured that when the consultations are completed an announcement in this regard will be made. I personally share my hon. friend's view with respect to the shared-cost programs. However, it should be borne in mind that two of the programs are shared fifty-fifty by the province and the federal government, and one is shared 75 per cent by the federal government, and 25 per cent by the provincial and that increases which are enacted by the federal government without consultation with the provinces may, particularly in a smaller province, impose a rather heavy financial burden which has not been budgeted for. It is for this reason that the government is consulting with all ten provinces before making any announcement.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, just before passing this resolution, which could have been passed last night had it not been for the intervention of the Secretary of State—we were ready to go ahead with it and we could have been on second reading of the bill today; it is unfortunate that delay should have occurred —may I rise for a minute or two to make a remark concerning the statement made today by the Secretary of State. I hope it will not pass unnoticed that he has now publicly admitted that which we all knew, that the election literature of the Liberal party this year was inaccurate and deliberately calculated to mislead the public. He has now made this statement in the house, and I hope it will serve as a lesson to his party in the future not to put before the people facts which cannot be verified, and mislead them by inaccuracies such as were displayed in their literature. The fact that he has now admitted this is surely an indication of a change of heart on the part of the Liberal party. But I hope this has not gone unnoticed. Yesterday when we drew attention, through the hon. member for Bow River, to inaccurate statements in Liberal party election literature, it was denied by the minister of national health and objected to by the Secretary of State, and we produced proof that these inaccuracies occurred in their literature.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to intervene in this debate on the resolution but I feel impelled to do so on account of the statements which have recently been made and the spectacle we had last night. This resolution and the bill it precedes is a matter of great importance to hundreds of thousands of old age pensioners—heart-rending importance. It is also a matter of great economic importance to the whole community. One would have thought it would be possible to discuss the merits of this bill, the material and substantive content of it. But what did we have? We had a debate, if one can dignify the performance yesterday by that word, which resolved itself merely into name calling, into attempting to prove that this cabinet minister said this and that private member said that, and finally degenerated into a most vulgar shouting contest in this house, a display which brought no credit on parliamentary institutions and must have created an extremely bad impression in the galleries of this chamber.

I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that those who have been using this bill as a political football should realize that the old age pensioners of this country are not interested in whether or not this party or that party misled them. They are interested in some relief from the straitened circumstances of their lives. It was perhaps too much to be hoped that hon. members, having raised themselves to the economic level of $18,000 a year in a society that measures all virtue in dollars, would have improved their intellectual contributions in this chamber. After all, intellectual contributions are dependant upon intellectual capacities. But surely it was not too much to hope that having accepted, shall we say with graciousness and a certain alacrity, this generous treatment on the part of the people of Canada, some hon. members might at least have taken some lessons in elementary civilized behaviour. A fool is always difficult to endure. A well-mannered fool is less unendurable than a lout. I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that members of this house should bear in mind that the public are watching them, watching them with a very much more critical eye than they did before the recent increase in the indemnities of the members of parliament. I hope that we are not again going to be treated to the disgraceful exhibition to which we were treated yesterday.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Old Age Security

Miss LaMarsh thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-98, to amend the Old Age Security Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the second time?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether it would be the disposition of the house to start second reading now. That would require unanimous consent. I am entirely in the hands of the house in the matter. If we do not do that we would proceed with the resolution for the remaining 20 minutes concerning vocational training. As I said, I am entirely in the hands of the house.

Mr. Douglas: Is the bill printed and are copies available?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am informed by the Chair that there are 20 copies here and others coming up.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the request but with only 20 minutes available and the bill not yet distributed throughout the house we might very well defer this to another occasion. I do not see any prolonged debate now that we have passed the resolution stage; but why cannot we do this in the ordinary manner?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am perfectly agreeable. Then I think we should say the next sitting of the house, and we can go ahead with the vocational training resolution for the remaining time today.

Mr. Knowles: Before that is done may I ask whether, despite the announcement made about future business, the bill could be proceeded with tomorrow? We seem to be assured that it will not take very long. Cannot we do that, rather than leaving it over to next week?

Mr. Pickersgill: I thought I would defer any announcement of the business until six o'clock, but if hon. members would permit me perhaps it is convenient to announce it now when more members are here. The government, as I indicated earlier, intends first of all tomorrow to ask for interim supply, and like all governments we hope that that will not take long. Then we will go on immediately after that with the old age security bill as soon as interim supply is dealt with.

Mr. Churchill: You should reverse the order.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I would hardly think that interim supply would go so quickly tomorrow that we would deal with it in that time. This seems to me an excellent opportunity to deal with the bill now. It is very small bill. There is hardly anything in it that can be discussed which has not already been discussed on the resolution. It might be that the private members would be willing to forego some of their time, in which case it would give us another hour, or an hour and twenty minutes on this bill. If we leave this bill until after interim supply has been considered it would mean we would not reach it until Friday, or possibly, Monday.

[Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

Mr. Churchill: Why not put the bill on tomorrow as the first item, and interim supply as the second? No matter what we do today or tomorrow, or the next day, and should the house be in agreement, the cheques would not be issued tomorrow or the next day; the amount would be added to the next monthly allotment, so no old age pensioner would be deprived in any way. All I am suggesting is that we conduct the business of this house in accordance with the normal procedure, and the normal procedure will not delay the passage of this measure, except for the next 20 minutes. That is all.

Mr. Pickersgill: So that there may be no misunderstanding, I wish to make it clear that the government has no option but to go ahead with interim supply as the first item of business tomorrow. Otherwise, there would be other cheques which would not go out in time. We are asking Their Honours in another place to be available on Friday to deal with interim supply. I am told by the treasury that on account of the Thanksgiving holiday and other considerations we are under a certain pressure. I had originally hoped we would not be obliged to ask for interim supply until Friday but I have been advised we would be taking unnecessary parliamentary risks if we waited until then and I think it would not be responsible to do that. I still hope that since the estimates of all the departments except two have still to be considered hon. members will find it possible to deal with interim supply quickly and that we can then get on to this bill in the normal course of business, as the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) has suggested. Perhaps, meanwhile, the vocational training item could be called.

Mr. Monteith: So that there may be no misunderstanding about the inclusion of an increase in the October cheques, may I say that the bill providing for an increase in old age security in 1962 received its second reading on February 6 and third reading on February 7; the February cheques included the increase. The date today is October 2 and there is ample time to assure that these people receive their money.

Mr. Speaker: When shall this bill be read the second time? Next sitting of this house.

TECHNICAL AND VOCATIONAL TRAINING ASSISTANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES, ETC.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (for the Minister of Labour) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient, as a means towards the further development of manpower in Canada and towards increasing employment opportunities for Canadians, to introduce a measure to amend the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act:

(a) to provide that in respect of the costs incurred by a province as training allowances for unemployed persons, the contributions payable by Canada to the province be increased from 75 per cent to such percentage, not exceeding 90 per cent, as may be specified in the agreement made under the act between the Minister of Labour and the province;

(b) to provide in respect of the costs incurred by the province for such part of the program for training employed persons in industry as may be specified in the agreement, the contributions payable by Canada to the province be increased from 50 to 75 per cent thereof;

(c) to extend, until such date as may be specified in the agreement made under the act between the Minister of Labour and the province, the period during which the contributions payable by Canada to the province will be 75 per cent in respect of costs incurred by the province for capital expenditures on training facilities; and

(d) to increase the number of members of the technical vocational training advisory council from twenty three to twenty eight and to provide an honorarium for the chairman thereof.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should just like to say to the committee that the absence of the Minister of Labour arises through no discourtesy on his part but as a result of very urgent business which, as I am sure all hon. members will understand, makes it impossible for him to be here. His parliamentary secretary will, with the leave of the committee, be acting on his behalf.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): In the limited time at my disposal I shall attempt to make a statement outlining the program to be established under this bill. Having regard to the fact that the first resolution to be considered during the private members' hour has to do, I believe, with the problem of older workers, I am wondering whether the committee would not agree to allowing me, if necessary, three or four minutes extra in which to complete this statement so that it may be complete before we continue the discussion at the next sitting of the house.

On June 10 the minister announced to the house a number of measures which set forth the government's new employment and manpower development program. This program is designed to provide a co-ordinated attack on unemployment, to stimulate manpower development and training, and to increase the employment security of the Canadian work force, particularly during the winter months.

A number of these measures are designed to improve the federal-provincial program of technical and vocational training, particularly in the strategic areas of increasing the training of the unemployed and in stimulating the training of adult and employed workers so that they can adapt to automation and other industrial changes.

Most importantly, the provision of capital facilities for the training of youth and adults under the Technical and Vocational Training Act of 1960 is far from complete in many of the provinces. It is, therefore, important to continue a high level of federal financial assistance to those provinces which still need to develop extensive training facilities.

These amendments to the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act are intended to stimulate greatly the training of the unemployed; to provide for the stimulation of training in industry, particularly where such training is important to the adaptation of workers to technological change; and to provide for the extension of capital facilities in the provinces where the needs are greatest.

I should like now to take up the objectives of each of these amendments in more detail so as to provide the committee with a basis for their detailed consideration.

Raising the federal share of training allowance of unemployed persons from 75 per cent to 90 per cent

The importance of training the unemployed cannot be over-estimated. Basically, a large portion of the unemployed are not suited for the expanding employment opportunities of the Canadian economy because of their relatively low levels of education and skill. Many of them will not be in a position to secure re-employment, until they are provided with new skills and their basic levels of training raised. The necessary stepping up of the rate of training for the unemployed depends on the co-operation and resources of the provinces and of municipalities across Canada. The basic role of the provinces in this program is to provide teachers and training facilities for which they are, of course, reimbursed to the extent of 75 per cent of their expenditures. The proposal that 90 per cent of cost of training allowances be assumed by the federal government will release needed funds for the provinces to undertake their basic job of providing training programs. The minister would like to see the rate of training of the unemployed reach a level of 70,000 over the next 12 months, from the level of 38,000 which was achieved during the last fiscal year. In addition to providing additional support for training allowances, the government intends to strengthen the national employment service so as to improve selection and placement facilities for those undertaking training programs and to provide every necessary technical support to assist the provinces in improving the techniques for the training of the unemployed. In short, it is the minister's intention to do everything possible to provide effective and balanced training programs for the unemployed in line with their individual needs and those of the economy.

Raising of the federal share of training costs in industry from 50 per cent to 75 per cent

Training in industry is basic to meeting the technological and other needs of the changing industrial scene and in avoiding unemployment which results from technological displacement. Very little has been done under the auspices of the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act to stimulate training in industry, particularly in those areas of training which are not directly related to the short term of occupational needs of employers. Our proposals to amend the act are designed to enable industry to develop those kinds of training which are important to the long run employment security of workers, but which do not yield immediate returns to industry.

The increase to 75 per cent in the rate of the federal reimbursement to the provinces will enable them to provide increased support to the training activities of industry in three strategic areas.

First, the upgrading of the general educational level of the employed labour force through programs of basic training for skill development. This is important if workers' skills are not to become obsolete, resulting in unemployment and income loss.

Second, apprenticeship training programs, which are a basic form of training for the skilled trades, are lagging badly and this increased financing will provide much needed additional support for the development of apprenticeship programs in Canadian industry.

Third, on June 10 the minister announced the introduction of a program designed to assist industry and labour to provide for the development of manpower adjustment programs to meet the needs of changing technology in industry. An important aspect of the development of manpower adjustment programs is the provision of retraining for workers who will be permanently displaced if they are not retrained. Again, under this amendment we will reimburse the provinces for 75 per cent of industry's costs of conducting retraining programs for potentially displaced workers in the context of a manpower adjustment program.

The third objective is the extension of the 75 per cent contribution in respect of capital costs for training facilities. The Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act provides in section 4 for a contribution by the federal government of 50 per cent of capital expenditures incurred by the provinces in training facilities until the expiry of agreements on March 31, 1967, plus an additional 25 per cent if these capital expenditures were incurred before April 1, 1963. The additional 25 per cent federal contribution in the legislation was intended to act as a special incentive to encourage the provinces to close the gap in vocational training facilities rapidly in the two years from April, 1961, to April, 1963.

This provision of the legislation resulted in an uneven response by the provinces in meeting their needs for training facilities. The plans of some of the provinces were much more advanced than others at the beginning of the period. Today the provinces stand in an unequal position with respect to the degree to which they have succeeded in meeting their needs for vocational training facilities.

The approved federal contributions to capital expenditures up to March 31, 1963, on a per capita basis in the age group 15 to 19 years, indicate that there is substantial variation among the provinces. This figure ranges from $51 per capita in Quebec to $480 in Newfoundland. For Canada as a whole the per capita average is $225.

These variations in the per capita contribution per person in the student age group represent substantial differences in the extent to which the provinces have been able to meet the needs for increased training facilities. This is not to say that the need on a per student basis is equal in each of the provinces but rather that there exists at present considerable inequality in the outstanding needs of the provinces for additional training facilities. The government is proposing, to enable these provinces which have not as yet undertaken building programs sufficient to meet their needs, that the 25 per cent additional contribution be continued on the following basis, which will be provided for in the amendment to the legislation.

The highest per capita federal contribution approved up to March 31, 1963, is $480, which sets the top standard for the federal contribution on a 75 per cent basis. This happens to be the case for the province of Newfoundland. It is proposed that other provinces be allowed to meet this per capita standard of $480 so that the additional federal contribution of 25 per cent will be continued in each province until the per capita of federal payments in the province has reached this standard of $480, or until expiry of the present agreement on March 31, 1967, whichever is sooner. Once the $480 per capita standard has been reached in a province, they will, of course, be eligible for a continuing 50 per cent contribution to capital until the end of the agreement.

Mr. Douglas: I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary a question. The $480 is the per capita of what? Certainly it is not of the population. It is not clear. What is it?

Mr. Byrne: Students in the 15 to 19 age group.

Mr. Douglas: I see.

Mr. Byrne: This formula is designed to equalize the application of the additional 25 per cent contribution to capital up to the standard of the highest province. As a result all provinces will be enabled to meet their needs for vocational training facilities on the basis of an equitable sharing of the federal contribution to capital.

I have a table here which, of course, is not completely accurate because to a degree it is difficult to determine the number of students in the age group between 15 and 19. However, if the committee permits I should like to table this schedule which shows the amount available to each province up to 1967 based on $480 per capita of students in the 15 to 19 age group. The figures range from a high of $224 million in Quebec to $367,000 in the Yukon. I ask permission for this table to appear in Hansard.

The Chairman: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The table referred to above is as follows:]

Amount Available To Each Province Up To 1967 Based on $480 Per Capita Of Students 15 To 19 Age Group

Newfoundland	$ 21,037,920
Prince Edward Island	4,260,000
Nova Scotia	30,834,720
New Brunswick	25,686,720
Quebec	224,364,480
Ontario	209,703,840
Manitoba	33,987,840
Saskatchewan	34,974,720
Alberta	47,521,920
British Columbia	54,073,440
Northwest Territories	815,520
Yukon	367,200

Mr. Byrne: As of March 31 of this year 138,000 additional student places have been provided under the capital provisions of the act. If all provinces were to take maximum advantage of the additional 25 per cent contribution, on the basis of the formula that has been outlined above there would be at least a doubling of the enrolment capacity of our vocational and technical training system.

The fourth objective is an increase in the number of members of the technical and vocational training advisory council. It is proposed to amend the legislation to provide for an increase in the number of members of the technical and vocational training advisory council from 23 to 28. The council has done an effective job in advising on the technical and vocational training programs in Canada and in assisting in co-ordinating the activities of the federal government and the provinces. It has become evident, however, that representation from labour and employer organizations and from other national groups, interested in technical and vocational training, requires strengthening in the light of the greatly expanding training programs, particularly with respect to the training of adult employed and unemployed workers. It is also proposed that the chairman of the council, who is making a significant contribution, be provided with an honorarium for his services.

The Chairman: So that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15, it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to sit again later this day or at the next sitting of the house as the case may be.

Progress reported.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the house may proceed to consideration of private members' business pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ENCOURAGEMENT OF EMPLOYMENT OF OLDER PERSONS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should take into consideration the establishment of appropriate measures to encourage the employment of persons over the age of 40 in business and industry.

He said: I believe, Mr. Speaker, that perhaps one of the greatest problems faced by most members of this house, and one of the most difficult problems, is requests for aid from constituents who are over the age of 40 and who find difficulty in obtaining employment. This problem, of course, has existed for a good many years. I believe it has been aggravated and accelerated very greatly since the conclusion of world war II. There are several reasons for this. The first is the increased rate of automation in industry, where hand labour is more and more becoming less and less important. Many persons who are in their forties or fifties, and who have learned to do one thing during their lives, find they have been displaced. They feel they are unable to learn a new trade at this age. They feel at a loss, and do not know what to do.

Another reason that this matter is becoming more aggravated since world war II is the terms of some pension schemes that we find in industry. This has particular reference, of course, to the cost of these schemes. The third reason is the extension of the human life span in the last 25 years or so. Formerly people used to live perhaps only to 55, 60 or 65. The life span has been greatly extended, of course, and this should affect our thinking about retirement age. Certainly during the depression of the thirties, it was felt these people should retire to make work available for younger people. This thinking is pretty well outdated now. People live very much longer. A great many people at the age of 65, so I am told, do not feel a bit like retiring. They are quite capable of carrying on useful work and perhaps, in some cases, better able to do their work as a result of the experience they have gained.

These are three reasons that I believe have aggravated ths problem since world war II. If I may repeat them, they are, one, automation; two, the terms of many company pension schemes; three, the extension of the human life span which has not changed the thinking of people but should have changed the thinking of people in respect of retirement age. This subject has been brought before the house by myself and other hon. members on various occasions within the last ten years. Some of these members are here today and some are no longer with us. I have dealt with this subject at great length on previous occasions, so I do not believe I should repeat what I have said in the past and so waste the time of the house. Today I wish to bring forward some new ideas and suggestions for dealing with this subject. For those who are interested, I may say that I dealt with this subject previously and my speech is recorded in volume 1 of Hansard for 1959, page 526. I mentioned one thing at that time to which I should like to refer now. If I may say so, Mr. Speaker, I think I put the matter rather succinctly at the time and as it is rather important background material, I shall, therefore, take the liberty of quoting myself for a minute or two.

The fact that the Canadian population is growing older, coupled with trends which result in the reduction or withdrawal from employment of important proportions of our older workers, constitutes a very grave national problem that requires the closest scrutiny, not only from all levels of government but from labour, industry and private individuals as well.

If I may elaborate on that briefly, Mr. Speaker, I would say this is not the prime responsibility of the federal government by any means. It is the responsibility of provincial governments, labour groups, employer groups, and indeed the public at large.

It is very interesting to note that in 1881 the number of Canadians over 40 comprised about 20 per cent of the population. By 1951 they had increased to about 33 per cent. When we consider this trend in relation to the fact that one of the chief difficulties facing the national employment service in matching unplaced applicants with unfilled jobs is the tendency on the part of employers to reject applicants over 40 years of age, one major aspect of this increasingly grave problem is illustrated.

Again, if I may refer briefly to the population figures in 1881, we see that there were 15 adults under 65 years of age to every 1 over 65, whereas today there are only 7 adults under 65 to every 1 over 65. By 1970 it is estimated the proportion will be over 5 to 1. When we consider the effect of the trend toward more pension plans with the compulsory retirement age now normally set at 65, another major aspect of this problem is seen. We are confronted with the problem of whether or not it is economically possible to maintain a high standard of living here in Canada in the face of trends which show an increasing number of older people retired or withdrawn from the productive section of our economy. At the same time the effect of this trend is to reduce their ability to consume goods, and to place the burden of production and taxation upon a decreasing percentage of the population. This trend is not likely to change. I am not including in these remarks those older workers who through ill health or personal desire wish to withdraw from the labour force. I am dealing solely with those older workers who wish to work and who either cannot obtain employment or are forced to retire.

Apart from the economic factors involved in this matter, severe social problems are also created. When older persons cannot obtain employment or are forced to retire, many feel that society has no further use for them and they become depressed and dejected. Older persons in this group who have not developed hobbies and other interests during their lives are often left completely alone; their families grow up and their friends either move away or pass away. If such people could work their time would be occupied and they would feel they were doing something useful. Without the work which they desire, there is often very little left but the feeling that they are a burden on society.

There are reasons given for the present resistance by business to hiring older workers, and I would like to refer the house to two surveys made in this regard. One report has been prepared by the information branch of our Department of Labour. This was in 1952, and while there have been some additions to it since then, it is a very complete work and I would commend it to the attention of hon. members.

Another report on this matter was prepared by the Ontario department of public welfare, and it refers to a survey made in the United States, known as the Seven Cities Survey. It was made in seven major industrial cities contiguous to the Canadian border where conditions are very similar to those in Canada.

Both reports set out a number of reasons for this resistance by business to hiring older workers. In my previous remarks I have referred to these reasons at some length. I do not intend to repeat them here, except very briefly to enumerate a few of them.

One of the reasons given by business is that it cannot maintain normal production standards with older workers. In one survey 22.4 per cent of the businesses queried gave this as their reason.

Another reason was that older workers could not meet company physical requirements. Some 20 per cent of the businesses questioned gave that reason. A third reason was that older people are inflexible and set in their ways. Thirteen per cent gave that as their reason, but only 10 per cent gave pension and insurance costs as the reason for not hiring older people. The public normally believe that older workers are not hired because of pension plan costs, but apparently only 10 per cent of the businesses questioned gave that reason, and this is quite interesting.

I might say that these figures which I quote are taken from the Seven Cities Survey. A number of other reasons of less importance are also given, but I will not deal with them.

The survey made by our own Department of Labour says that employers are prejudiced against hiring older workers because these workers will not adapt to learning new techniques, second because of absenteeism through ill health, and third because older persons slow down and lessen activity.

It also says that company training programs call for the hiring of young people and for the development of their talents over the years, and that it would be unprofitable to invest in the training of older employees. It also says pension plans prevent companies from hiring workers of advanced age, and experience showed that in certain instances younger employees were preferred, such as waiters and waitresses, and sales people. Finally it adds as another reason, pension plans which compel workers to retire at an arbitrary age regardless of their fitness to carry on. These are the principal reasons given as a result of the surveys made in this country and the United States into the objection of companies to employing persons over the age of 40 years.

On careful examination it has been found that not one of these reasons is completely valid. Although many of them have varying degrees of validity others are purely fictional and have no validity at all. For instance, one of the reasons given is that older persons slow down and lessen productivity, but a very careful study which was made of this in Canada and the United States has shown no difference at all between people of 17 and 71 years in the amount of work they can do under "moderate" working conditions. "Moderate working conditions" means conditions prevailing in most modern industrial plants.

Another reason given was that people often prefer to have young people wait on them and work for them, but this is certainly not always the case. Very often when one goes into a store he might prefer to have an older person, experienced in handling a product, wait on him.

Something which has given rise to this problem, which I might mention here, is that since world war II, and particularly through the advertising business on this continent, there has been promoted the idea that all workers are young, beautiful girls and healthy, robust young men. This creates an image in the mind of employers that this is what the public expects and wants to see. In many service industries this is true, and it is most unfortunate that such an image has been created.

This brings us to the question of what has been done so far by the federal government, and over the years a great deal has been done by the government to help alleviate the problem.

First I would mention the national employment counselling service for older workers. People in the older age categories with difficulty in obtaining work can obtain advice and counsel from officials of the national employment offices. This is a very good thing and very helpful.

Second, there is the public education undertaken by the federal Department of Labour. This has been done by trying to persuade the public that it is a good thing to employ older workers, and it has done much to remove the prejudice against employing such people. The department, through its public relations and information branches, has done a good job in this respect.

Third, there are the technical and vocational training courses which were set up under the former minister of labour (Mr. Starr), by which persons out of work are provided with vocational and technical training in order to help them obtain employment.

In this regard the federal-provincial plan for building technical and training schools all across the country has been of great effect, not only in helping to educate young people coming into the labour market but in providing courses for those who are unemployed and requiring additional training.

Those are three things which have been done, and now there is the portable pension plan which has been a matter of some controversy in the house. For that reason I do not wish to deal with it at this time. Certain of the provinces also have similar plans, but undoubtedly when some plan is worked out it will also help matters very greatly in respect to the problem of older people finding employment.

The last thing I want to mention in this regard is something which the present Minister of Labour has introduced and which is also a very commendable scheme. It has not come into effect yet, but when it does on November 1 outright payments will be made to industrial plants which employ persons over the age of 45. As I understand it, during the three months from November 1 to January 31 next, companies taking on workers over age 45 will be given an outright grant of 50 per cent of the wages paid, or $75 a month, whichever happens to be the lesser. These payments will continue for 12 months. The onus will be on companies and workers to prove certain information.

First of all, a company will have to prove that it has not fired some younger person and hired an older one in order to get the subsidy. Further a person being employed has to have been unemployed for six months, must be receiving no benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act, and must have no other pension. This is certainly a step in the right direction and the minister is to be commended on introducing the scheme.

Despite all these various things that have been done, and that are being done by the federal government, the problem is still very acute indeed. I think, Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out earlier in my remarks, it will probably increase rather than decrease over the next few years because of the trend toward an increased percentage of aged people in the population. Something more has to be done than has been done to date, and something more than is being done at the moment must be done to meet this problem. Certainly a great deal is being done to benefit the younger workers who are coming into the labour force, with all the new education schemes, technical training, and so on. This is very commendable because it will help solve the problem in the future, but to date very little has been spent on older workers.

Like most hon. members of this house I do not approve of subsidies in principle, but I think subsidies can perform a very useful service to meet a temporary emergency. While one might not like to describe assistance to older workers in this way, it is in fact a type of subsidy. One might as well meet these arguments head on and say that in the case of emergency—and I think this is an emergency—some form of subsidy or assistance should be given to older workers who through no fault of their own cannot get employment. I feel it is a valid criticism of the program of the present administration that temporary or seasonal measures are not a complete answer to assisting older workers. They are all very helpful as far as they go, but they are not a complete answer. We are faced with this problem 12 months a year, not three months a year. While I agree it is sometimes wise to try something for a short period of time to see how it works, nevertheless I think there should be long range planning and thinking in this regard. Those in government should be making some provision to assist older workers on a longer range basis than just the three months included in the plan of the present Minister of Labour.

I know that other hon. members will wish to make some remarks on this subject, Mr. Speaker, and I will try to conclude my remarks very briefly. There are a number of suggestions I should like to make for the consideration of the present government as additional ways of meeting this problem. The first is a more intensive advertising campaign by the Department of Labour. I know that to date there has been some public relations and information program in this regard, but it has not been nearly enough. It should be much, much more. I would say that an advertising campaign by the Department of Labour should emphasize the—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I apologize for interrupting the hon. member for Oxford but the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Has the hon. member for Oxford the unanimous consent of the house to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank hon. members of the house for their courtesy in this regard. I will try to conclude my remarks in about two minutes. First of all, as I mentioned, there should be an advertising campaign by the Department of Labour. I think this advertising campaign should emphasize the following items. First, there are the positive benefits of hiring older workers, those likely to encounter less absenteeism and who very often are more conscientious and more stable. Second, the false prejudice and myth about hiring older people should be exploded by a good, strong advertising campaign. Third, persons who are over the age of 40 at the present time should be encouraged to take training in vocational courses which are available to them. A great many older people feel they do not want to go back to school, but with a good advertising campaign I think they could be encouraged to do this.

The fourth thing which I think should be advertised in such an advertising campaign is that it should emphasize to the public that it is in the public interest to hire older workers, and I think it is a public duty to do so. As a matter of fact there could be some sort of slogan, such as, "If you are not over 40 yet, you soon will be and this might affect you too". This is just the kind of slogan that might be used to bring to mind the fact that everybody can be affected.

The second thing that I think should be done, apart from advertising, would be the giving of tax incentives to encourage companies to alter their present pension plans and retirement schemes and replace them with new ones so that compulsory retirement will not be at the age of 65. I realize this would take some working out but this is the principle I have in mind. As I say, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take up the time of the house by going into this question in detail. I think companies could be encouraged by tax incentives to change a number of their present pension plans which force retirement at the age of 65.

Last is the question of tax credits. I dealt with this subject on the previous occasion, in January, 1959, and it is reported in Hansard. I will not take the time of the house to go over this matter again. I would just mention the question of tax credits or deductions from taxable income of corporations. This could be done on a 12 months basis and would encourage the retaining, rehiring and employing of (a) persons over the age of 65 and (b) a similar scheme for persons over the age of 40, not in that case for rehiring or retaining but for anyone just hiring persons over the age of 40. I know this is giving a preference to people in that age group; you are now considering older workers, but in this case, because of the present problem I think such measures would be necessary for the time being.

As I have said, Mr. Speaker, I shall conclude my remarks at this stage in order that other hon. members may have an opportunity to speak on this subject. With regard to the question of tax credits, this matter was dealt with in some detail in my previous remarks and those who are interested can refer to Hansard for the details.

Mr. Joseph Macaluso (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) for the remarks he made with regard to the problems of the older worker. I must agree with him to some extent, probably to a great extent, with regard to the suggestion that this is one of those problems which has really to be considered by all hon. members of this house as one that is not partisan and is completely devoid of politics. I think the hon. member showed this in his remarks and I commend him for it.

The continued growth and prosperity of any country depends to a large extent on whether industry makes the best use of available manpower. It is vital that an industrial nation like Canada fully utilize its human resources. One of the greatest barriers, as the hon. member for Oxford has stated, facing older people is that it is the policy of many employers to refuse to hire persons in the older age group regardless of whether or not they are capable of doing an efficient job. In some cases even men and women as young as 35 in my own riding have been rejected as being too old.

The belief held by many employers that a worker who has passed the age of 40 is no longer able to maintain production standards is a fallacy. It is an indictment, I believe, against our social system that workers in the over 40 age group should be deprived of gainful employment, regardless of ability and job qualifications, simply by reason of age. It has been said that the twentieth century belongs to youth. Increasing mechanization and the use of high speed machinery has quickened the tempo of industrial life and given added importance to youthful qualities. In the minds of many people, including some older persons themselves, the belief has arisen that once the bloom of youth has faded, rapid mental and physical deterioration begins. One need only to look around this chamber, Mr. Speaker, to see this is not so. This belief has spread to the labour market and has created discrimination in employment against older persons. Thus we have what has been called "the problem of the older worker", the majority of this group being in the 40 and over age bracket.

Canada's population has aged during the first part of this century. This has been shown by studies. This trend is likely to continue in the years ahead. These changes have affected Canada's labour force in that more than one third of Canadian workers are 40 years of age and over, and this age group will continue to increase in number. Further, young people are entering the labour market in increasing numbers due to the high birth rate of the last 15 or 20 years.

Maintaining an age balance in a company's work force is an important part of manpower planning. Many Canadian companies have been able to reduce the effects of automation and technological changes on their employees because of an age balance in their work forces, and lay-offs have been limited because planned retirements took care of the reduction in workers.

Efficient operation can result from the blending of the strength and ability of youth and the experience and judgment of mature workers. Hiring on the basis of ability, not age, can bring about a proper balance. A worker's qualifications and personal suitability are two important and main factors upon which an assessment of ability can be made.

All workers, regardless of age, have special qualities which can be useful to employers; these attributes are found in all age groups and depend largely on the individual. Young people, Mr. Speaker, generally offer speed, physical strength, agility, ambition and vigour. Older workers generally offer mature judgment, knowledge gained by experience, stability, low turnover, less absenteeism, as mentioned by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt), and lower accident rates—qualities, Mr. Speaker, which can reduce costs and are essential to the success of any enterprise.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let us look at and consider some of the common obstacles to the hiring of persons past the age of 40 years and ask ourselves if these statements are correct. First, frequency of illness increases as we grow older; therefore, there is more absenteeism among older workers than among younger workers. Second, physical deterioration is synonymous with age; therefore, older persons are accident prone. Third, age has a direct bearing on insurance rates; therefore, the cost of pension plans mounts excessively with each new participant over 40 years of age. Fourth, as people grow older their ability to learn decreases; therefore, it is harder to train older people in new industrial methods and techniques. Fifth, a person over 40 is not as productive as he was at 20. And last, the cost of pension plans increases in proportion to the number of older workers hired, and pension plans are so set up that companies cannot accept anyone past a certain age; also many companies state that they would be happy to hire older workers except that, since they cannot enter the plan or can contribute for only a few years, it would mean turning them out at 65 with either no pension or one that is inadequate. These statements, Mr. Speaker, are in effect commonly known as "the myth of the older worker".

When is a worker an "older worker"? Although there are different points of view which may provide different answers to this question the following definition has been suggested: "The worker may be regarded as an older worker when his employability begins to become more limited because of his age". From studies which have been made it would seem that about 31 per cent of the unemployed persons in Canada at any given time are over 40 years of age and many experience prolonged periods of unemployment. Conclusive evidence that we generally subscribe to this myth that older workers are second rate employees can be found in the want-ad columns of any metropolitan daily newspaper. A study shows that over 51 per cent of classified advertisements stated definite age restrictions.

Many companies, Mr. Speaker, suffer heavy costs of labour turnover in certain job areas. Much of this recurring loss can be halted by the hiring and retention of mature workers who are more inclined to stay with the job than their younger counterparts. Industrial studies have shown in a comparison of workers over 50 with those under that age that: first, in most occupations productivity often reaches a peak in the 50's; second, older workers are less frequently absent through ill-health and fewer accidents; third, that the learning processes do not appreciably decrease; and last, that there is nothing inherent in the nature of a pension plan which makes it impossible to hire an older worker.

In many companies, it is a company's employment policy, not the pension plan itself which stands in the way of hiring older workers.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, the myth of the older worker has become very important to all Canadians. At one end of the scale, age prejudice cuts off work to increasing numbers of Canadians, while at the other end, education keeps more and more young people in school for longer periods of time. In between these two, a diminishing proportion of wage earners are maintaining the balance and are paying the bills for the many. A more even distribution of costs can be achieved through the employment and retention of more older workers.

Let us consider cutting the cost of labour turnover in industry. Canadian employers can cut their costs of labour turnovers by the hiring of the older worker, for there is less turnover among older workers, once they are employed, than among younger employees. Studies show that the worker 40 years of age and over quits his job less than one half as often as a younger worker. Further, the older worker is fired from his job less often than a younger worker. If an older worker obtains a regular job, he is more likely than a younger person to stay with the firm up to the age of normal retirement; thus older workers are better employment risks than younger persons.

There are many areas, Mr. Speaker, where the older person can readily fit into industry. There are highly skilled supervisory positions in which experience is a prime requirement. Further, there are clerical positions, repetitive jobs and jobs which offer little in the way of a career for younger people, and many other casual work positions which are more suitable to the temperament and abilities of older workers.

Further, Mr. Speaker, the older worker is just as capable of learning new processes and skills as a younger person, yet industry reserves training positions almost exclusively for youth and in doing so increases labour turnover. Industry and business can ill afford to pay the price of age prejudice.

With respect to the learning process, I submit that no one age group has a monopoly in the world of learning. Scientific studies, Mr. Speaker, have shown that generally man is intellectually more able at 50 than he was at 20; and I repeat we need only look around this chamber, Mr. Speaker. Contrary to general belief, the ability to learn does not decrease with age. It is quite possible to learn new skills, even in the twilight of life. Speaking on the mental ability of elderly people, Dr. E. J. Steiglitz, U.S. medical expert on the aged, said:

> The hair may stop growing and the pate become a polished dome fringed with silver, but the mind below this shining cupola can continue to grow in understanding, wisdom and appreciation of life.

A Canadian study in the retail trade lends weight to the fact that older persons can readjust, and in the light of this evidence it is time that industry and business accept the fact that it is possible to learn at any age and that learning ability is not the exclusive property of any age group.

Contrary to popular belief, the older worker is less prone to accidents and less likely to be absent than the younger worker. The accident and absenteeism records of older workers are reasons in themselves why the older worker should be welcomed by employers. The absenteeism rates of workers show marked improvements after age 45, and at the same time, are less prone to accidents.

Any industry concerned with the reduction of direct and indirect costs of absenteeism is hardly doing itself a service when it refuses to hire older workers. Studies have shown that the people under 20 have the highest absenteeism rate and every age group above 50 workers lose fewer days on the job than in any age group below 50. I ask, why? I submit it is because of his more highly developed sense of responsibility towards his house, his family and his job. Studies of accident rates give a similar picture—the older worker is less accident prone than the younger worker. Here again is an area where industry can save money. A study by the workmen's compensation board of Ontario shows a marked drop in the number of non-disabling accidents after the age of 40 as compared with the age group 20 to 24.

All this, Mr. Speaker, shows that there is no truth in the claim that older workers are poor employment risks because of absenteeism and accident rates. Hiring on the basis of ability, forgetting about age, will give industry the chance to tap this reservoir of high quality labour with its excellent records of punctuality and steadiness.

Now let us discuss the plan from the argument that these people over 40 cannot fit into a company's pension plan. Few of the problems associated with pension plans as they affect the employment of older workers are insurmountable. I quote, Mr. Speaker, from a study of Canadian pension plans:

> The restrictive clauses incorporated in some plans would appear to stem more from employment policy than from pension policy.

The increase in cost from hiring of a limited number of older workers is likely to be insignificant in relation to a firm's total pension costs. Any extra cost is likely to be more than offset by the productivity and general stability of older workers, with their better records in the costly matter of absenteeism, accidents and labour turnover.

Pension plans are classified into two main groups:

(a) Unit benefit plan. Under this plan the employer must contribute more for the older worker; the employee contributes a fixed percentage of his earnings, regardless of his age. The employer pays the balance of the cost of providing the worker's pension and this involves a higher payment for those in the upper wage brackets. This would apply equally to contributory plans and non-contributory plans.

(b) Money purchase plan. Under this plan both the employee and the employer contribute an agreed percentage of the employee's earnings and the cost to the employer is the same whether he hires older or younger workers.

A method used to reduce the higher cost is to make special provisions which allow the older worker to increase his percentage contribution to the unit benefit pension plan while maintaining the employer's contribution at the usual level. This could be made a condition of employment and would be a small price for the employee to pay in order to obtain steady employment. At least, he should be given the chance to make that choice.

The federal government pension study, completed in 1957, recommended the removal of age restrictions from pension plans and the removal of the waiting period before entry into a pension plan or a system whereby the employee could make retroactive payments into the pension fund to cover the waiting period.

Many companies use the fear of bad public relations arising from retiring an employee on an inadequate pension as one of their main arguments against hiring older workers. However, they seem to overlook the fact that it is probably worse public relations to become known as an employer who denies men jobs because they are over 50 and cannot join the company's pension plan.

The method which can be used to overcome this fear of bad public relations is to tell the older worker when he is hired that the few years of service he will have by the age of 65 will give him only X dollars of pension and that he must make other arrangements for retirement.

However, the most effective way of overcoming the problem related to pension plans and the employment of older workers is to develop a system of portable pensions. There is no simple solution to the pension problem as it relates to older workers; the present inflexibility of pension plans is detrimental to the effective use of our manpower resources. In this respect, the policy of the present government is in the right direction —to bring about a portable pension scheme which is, I believe, the objective of all members of this house.

Refusing people over 40 an interview or a job because of their age aggravates a social and economic problem as the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) has said. Is it economically possible to have an improving standard of living if increasing numbers of older persons are rejected or forced prematurely to withdraw from the productive section of society?

Effects on the individual are felt by the whole community. The male older worker is likely to be the head of a family; his children will probably be of secondary school or college age. If he is not continuously employed, his children may have to stop their education prematurely and he and his wife and family may have to cease participation in community affairs. If he is not steadily employed during his middle years, he is more likely to become a welfare case, with a consequent drain on the public purse, by the time he is 65. The decrease of purchasing power is a factor which can add to the spreading of unemployment generally. Therefore, it is in the social and economic interest of every community, quite apart from the humanitarian aspects, to keep its mature workers as steadily employed as possible.

There is also to be considered the effect of unemployment on the individual of advancing years. With each rejection in his search for employment, his morale is lowered, he begins to think of himself as a forgotten man, unwanted by a society to which he may have devoted himself for many years. He meets rebuff after rebuff from employers and he finally believes that they must be right—that he is too old. He loses confidence in his own ability and the result is a loss of desire and initiative.

Much has been said and written about the employment problem of the older worker. There are really two distinct problems, each requiring a different kind of treatment. First, there are those men and women of advanced years who are no longer physically capable of carrying on in their customary occupations. Most of these are 60 years of age or more, but many years of productive capacity remain for them if the proper job can be found. The treatment here is the rehabilitation of the individual worker. Learning by older people need not be limited to those of professional pursuits or scholarly bent. One can learn to do creative things of many kinds. We should combat like the plague the notion that older people are too old to learn.

In a second category are those workers who are described as "the too old at 40 group"—a group of people who at the peak of their productive capacity experience difficulty in finding employment solely because of chronological age and the policy of many employers to refuse to hire persons in these upper age groups regardless of whether or not they are capable of doing an efficient job. The treatment here lies in changing the attitude of employers and in rehabilitating the employer rather than the worker.

Chronological age is not a sound foundation upon which to build hiring policies, because it gives no indication of a person's ability, skills or knowledge. The economy of this country cannot remain healthy if human resources are not properly utilized, and this means that no one age group can be given special privileges to the detriment of another, whether it is youth or older workers.

Canadian employers would do well to examine more carefully the abilities of older workers. By maintaining arbitrary age limits and hiring, which automatically bar the older worker from an interview, employers are narrowing the chances of obtaining the right person for the job. The qualities sought in a good employee are as prevalent among the over-40 workers as they are among workers in any other age group.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I thank the sponsor of the motion who enables us again today to study the problem of unemployment, especially in the case of workers over 40 years of age.

The hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) mentioned elderly persons. In my opinion, one cannot say that a person over 40 is old. Otherwise, considering the house, we certainly pass for old people, since members are 40 and yet, their experience enables them to make an interesting contribution.

We wish to help people 40 years of age and over to readily find a position. Now, the government has recently, through the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen), submitted an interesting measure, providing as it did for a special allowance to those who hire workers who are 45 or over and who have been employed for a certain period during the winter months. This step should encourage contractors and industrialists to prefer hiring a man of 45 or more when he needs work.

Obviously, a man over 40 may be handicapped because of the fact his pension will be more expensive to his employer, but we must not attach too much importance to that fact considering the huge advantage of his experience. Last year I personally stressed that point of the experience acquired by the worker of 45 or over, because having had some experience in industry, I can re-affirm before this house without any fear of making a mistake that a worker aged 45 or more constitutes a real asset for industry because in addition to being an experienced worker he is responsible and is really devoted to the interests of the firm to which he contributes through his efforts. In my opinion that advantage alone should lead employers to think twice when selecting employees and it should prevent them from considering that a man of over 40 constitutes a liability because his pension would be more expensive, for they will derive in so doing, advantages which will more than make up for that.

Now, all those steps to give assistance to people 40 years old and over by finding jobs for them are only a temporary remedy, a poultice, because in my opinion there is only one true solution, and that is a progressive economy offering employment to all workers anxious to work. It is not by increasing such measures of assistance that we will be able to create a progressive economy.

I am pleased to call attention to the assertion by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Macaluso), who says that senior people do not work because there is less purchasing power and, as a result, more unemployment. So, he admits that a lack of purchasing power on the part of the people is a direct cause of unemployment in our country. I thank him for this assertion which confirms what we, in this corner of the house, have repeated for years.

It is useless to be oversubtle. Therefore, let us provide the purchasing power in Canada and instead of increasing Canadian production, let us increase the purchasing power for that production.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that here is the core of the problem, and that it is useless to look for a mere poultice. For a good many years we have had governments which offered a great many poultices. I think that the most efficient of those poultices in the past five years has been the winter works program. Yet, it was a mere poultice, and after applying it for five years, conditions have become quite impossible and intolerable. Consequently, Mr. Speaker, poultices are hardly a desirable thing and, to my mind, all suggested legislation, once applied, proved a mere temporary remedy. What we want in this house are permanent formulas, enabling us to solve the unemployment problem.

I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that the day when there will be a job for every worker in Canada the problem of the older people of 40, 45, 60, 65 and even 70, will disappear. Indeed, I remember that, during the war, that problem did not come up, because all those people, even if they had only one arm —and some of them even lacked both arms —had some job or other which helped Canadian productivity.

So, Mr. Speaker, let us give a new upsurge to our Canadian society by producing for Canadians what Canadians consume, and we shall, by such action, solve every problem now facing this country. Let us not lose any more precious time in looking elsewhere for a solution.

[Text]

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the hour makes it imperative that I should make my remarks extremely brief. I am in the happy position of being able to congratulate all of those who have spoken before me, the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) for having introduced this extremely important subject, the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Macaluso) for having given us a very thoughtful contribution, and the hon. member for Lake St. John (Mr. Lessard) for having pointed out a very important matter, namely, that the problems of older workers cannot be solved in isolation from the general economic problems of the country. As he very well pointed out, until there is opportunity for employment for all employable people, the tragedy of older people who are unable to secure work at the age of 40 and beyond is one that we will see again and again.

We must recognize that, although exhortation of employers is all very well, although certain measures that have been mentioned here are all very well, the basic solution is a change in the whole economic climate, and I would go so far as to say the whole nature of our society. Until we are ready to take these problems seriously and solve them we will go on with these pious debates, which are important to call attention to problems but do not solve anything.

The hour of six approaches, Mr. Speaker. One would have hoped that we could have had a longer discussion of this problem of extreme importance to many of our constituents, but as that hour approaches and I should not like to be the one who talked out this particular measure I will resume my seat, commending it and hoping we may have a vote on it at this moment to show our approval of the principle of the resolution before us.

[Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John).]

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Rinfret (St. James): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with the hon. members to stress that when unemployment is heavy people over 40 are precisely among those who are hit first—

An hon. Member: Question.

Another hon. Member: It is six o'clock.

Mr. Rinfret: The first responsibility with regard to this problem rests with the employers. It is a public duty for them not to eliminate automatically a candidate because of his age but rather to accept applications from unemployed people of 40 years of age and over and to consider each of them on their merits.

The manufacturers' association and the chambers of commerce must be asked to co-operate so that a candidate's age will no longer be held against him and he will no longer be told: "You are too young, come back when you have more experience", or else: "You are too old."

Governments must also co-operate to stop that bad habit—

An hon. Member: It is six o'clock.

Mr. Rinfret: —through the different government services, such as the national employment service—

An hon. Member: It is time to call it six o'clock.

Mr. Rinfret: —the civil service commission—

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. It being six o'clock I must advise the house that the hour for consideration of private members' business has expired.

Mr. Scott: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, as there is such unanimity of endorsement of this proposal perhaps hon. members would like to sit an extra half an hour so we could discuss it further and then vote on it.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, since there does not appear to be unanimous consent to this interesting suggestion, it occurs to me that since many hon. members look at the very end of Hansard to see what the business is perhaps it should be reiterated without any further discussion. Tomorrow we will start with interim supply. As soon as that is completed we will take the old age security bill. If that should be completed we will go ahead with the two Northwest Territories bills, and if all of these things should be disposed of tomorrow we would go back to the vocational training resolution. For reasons that everyone understands, I cannot forecast Friday now.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, October 3, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MISS LAMARSH—CORRECTION OF NEWSPAPER REPORT RESPECTING RECORDED INTERVIEW

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege. In the debate on the amendment to the Old Age Security Act two evenings ago there was an unfortunate reluctance by some members opposite, and in particular the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon), to accept my word with respect to an alleged tape recorded interview which had been held and published in last Friday's issue of the Toronto Globe and Mail. I beg to call to the attention of the house, and particularly the hon. member, a report which appears on the front page of today's issue of the Globe and Mail. I wish, sir, to read it into the record. It is as follows:

> Health minister Judy LaMarsh has denied in the commons that she suggested there were any grounds for accusing the Lesage government in Quebec as "Nazi-to-be". Thanking the member who gave her the opportunity to make the denial, Miss LaMarsh said she had never made such a statement at any time to anyone.
> The issue arose as the result of an interview on the subject of pensions which Miss LaMarsh had given to a staff writer of the Globe and Mail. The interview was published in Friday editions of this newspaper.
> A report in Wednesday's editions of the Globe and Mail on the commons exchange stated erroneously that a tape recorder had been used during the interview. While the newspaper had considered the possibility of recording the interview and while this possibility had been mentioned to Miss LaMarsh, no tape recorder was used. The Globe and Mail regrets this error in its account of the debate and any embarrassment it may have caused Miss LaMarsh.

LABOUR RELATIONS

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—THREATENED STRIKE OF LONGSHOREMEN

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour and ask him what is the present position with respect to the threatened strike by the longshoremen. What action is being taken, and what are the hopes of this dispute being settled?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the special mediator appointed to deal with this matter has met with the shipping federation, and he also met separately with the longshoremen. I understand he has a meeting this afternoon with both groups, and at that meeting he will attempt to mediate the differences between the two parties concerned. I think we must give Judge Lippe an opportunity to exhaust all possibilities in the process of mediation before undertaking any further action at this time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In the event that there is not a settlement, has the government a plan in mind to prevent this very serious situation developing?

Mr. MacEachen: I think the situation is serious in light of a possible strike. It ought to be realized that any strike contemplated is fully lawful in the situation, because it would occur after a seven day interval following the report of the conciliation board. However, the government is keeping a very careful watch on the situation and will decide what steps should be taken in the event of any breakdown in the mediation process. But I think it would be premature to assume at this stage that they will be unsuccessful in reaching a settlement.

GREAT LAKES—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRESENT POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether he can advise the house what the delay is in dealing with the great lakes situation, and when is the government expecting to take action in order to resolve this serious situation?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the government has placed on the order paper at the earliest possible moment a resolution providing for the introduction of legislation for the establishment of a public trusteeship. Under our parliamentary process today would be the first day that it would be possible to deal with that matter. However, a very intensive consideration of this problem is being undertaken today in Ottawa. The under secretary of labour for the United States, Mr. Reynolds, has been in Ottawa since ten o'clock this morning; discussions are going on and contact is being maintained from this central discussion with other groups in the search for an inter-union settlement. In those circumstances it would be my view that it would be premature to proceed until all the possibilities for an inter-union settlement have been exhausted.

Mr. Starr: A supplementary question. In view of what the minister has said, are we to believe that it is now left to the United States government to resolve this dispute?

Mr. MacEachen: On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government realizes the importance and seriousness of this matter and has been acting in a very constructive and determined way since the receipt of the Norris commission report. On the other hand, as I have said already, the government intends to proceed with this legislation unless a solid and effective alternative is presented. The Canadian labour movement, I am sure, is quite capable of deciding what should be done in consultation with the Canadian government, and the government is quite capable, following such consultation, of deciding what is an effective and solid alternative. I think it would be irresponsible in the situation not to allow for the possibility of an inter-union arrangement in which the Canadian Labour Congress would be a full participant.

Mr. Starr: I should like to ask the Minister of Labour a further supplementary question. What is the role of the undersecretary of labour for the United States in this dispute, since he is here in Canada?

Mr. MacEachen: I think it has been obvious for some months now that the good offices of the undersecretary of labour of the United States have been available to assist in the settlement of the situation which, as the hon. member knows, has very serious international implications. The secretary of labour and his under secretary have lent their good offices in the search for this solid, effective alternative in the form of an inter-union arrangement.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Newspaper reports suggest that the Minister of Labour is bringing pressure on Canadian trade union leaders to accept a private trusteeship in which the final appeal will be to the A.F. of L.-C.I.O. labour movement of the United States. I want to ask the minister first whether he will deny that; and second, whether he will assure the house that if government trusteeship legislation is abandoned we can be sure that any private trusteeship will be effective, and that it will be vested in Canada and under the control of the Canadian labour movement?

Mr. MacEachen: I think it is altogether false to suggest that the Minister of Labour of Canada has put any pressure on the officers of the Canadian Labour Congress to accept any such settlement, and I believe the officers of the Canadian Labour Congress would be the first to admit that I have consulted them in a spirit of responsibility at every stage of these negotiations. The Canadian Labour Congress and the various labour bodies concerned in Canada will obviously be permitted to express their views and to make their own decisions, because any alternative to government action will provide for an arrangement between the two labour sectors, one in the United States and one in Canada; and surely it is not the purpose of the Canadian government to put pressure on the C.L.C. to reach a decision which in its judgment would be contrary to its best interests.

I can assure the hon. member that our purpose in this situation is to establish an effective alternative if possible. If that should not be possible the government will proceed with its public trusteeship legislation. I assure hon. members there will be no disposition on the part of the Canadian government to enter into an arrangement, or withdraw, in this situation if the alternative in our judgment would not be effective, or fail to protect Canadian interests.

Mr. Douglas: A further supplementary question. May I ask the minister if he himself has seen the United States under secretary of labour, or if the latter is here for the purpose of exerting such pressure as he may choose on the Canadian trade union leaders?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I saw Mr. Reynolds this morning and had a discussion with him in which we reviewed the situation. To my knowledge the under secretary has had no direct contact with the officers of the Canadian Labour Congress, and in the circumstances any contact would be undertaken, at least initially, through officials of my department or myself. I wish to assure the hon. member that the under secretary of labour has come to Canada as the result of a request which I made to the secretary of labour of the United States that an honest search should be continued toward a solution of this difficult question. We are honestly searching to find out what alternatives may still remain and whether the differences may be reconciled. That is the purpose of the under secretary's visit. There is certainly no intention that he come here to exert pressure on the Canadian government or the Canadian Labour Congress.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I listened with interest to the fulsome praise of the activities of the secretary of labour of the United States in this connection—

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Pearson: How cheap can he get?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Hon. gentlemen say "shame". Apparently they want United States interference in Canadian labour matters. I want to ask the minister this. Did the secretary of labour, Mr. Wirtz, advise the shipping company in Toronto that it ought not to allow its ship to go to Chicago? I am referring, of course, to the Leitch shipping company.

Mr. MacEachen: I have no knowledge whatever that the secretary of labour has made any representations to Mr. Leitch with respect to the disposition of any ship. I wish to assure the right hon. gentleman that the secretary of labour has made no such representations to me as Minister of Labour.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. Has the government taken any decision regarding the appointment of a new president of the Canadian National Railways and if not, when does it intend to do so?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I hope to be able to make an announcement on this matter tomorrow.

OLD AGE SECURITY

DISTRIBUTION OF PROCEEDS FROM INCREASED TAX

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): May I direct a question to the Prime Minister? Could he tell the house whether it is true that the raise in taxes to pay for the old age pension increase is due to the fact that the province of Quebec refuses to take part in the federal pension plan, as stated by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh)?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the tax in question will be for the purpose of increasing the pension to all Canadians; therefore all Canadians will participate in the plan.

INQUIRY AS TO INCREASE IN AMOUNT OF PENSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister concerning today's order paper. As he will notice, item No. 16 is to introduce a measure to establish a Canada pension plan, and this particular resolution includes a clause:

—for the payment of an additional pension of ten dollars a month to all persons to whom a pension may be paid under the Old Age Security Act;

My question is, would he give a little direction and leadership to the house, and I think probably to the house leader and the Minister of National Health and Welfare, to get the resolution off the order paper, or explain to the house whether he is going to add this on to the $75 provided in item No. 8?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would like to give a little direction to the hon. gentleman, because I know he needs it, and I will look into this important matter.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

H.M.C.S. "DOCKYARD", HALIFAX—INQUIRY AS TO LAY-OFFS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. F. Kennedy (Colchester-Hants): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Are lay-offs of personnel employed at H.M.C.S. Dockyard, Halifax, expected this fall? If so, when, and how many employees will be affected?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think this is the type of question that should go on the order paper.

D.E.W. LINE—APPLICATION OF EMPLOYEES FOR UNION CERTIFICATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has the attention of the minister been called to a press dispatch in Le Devoir of September 26 to the effect that a United States company is arguing before the Canada labour relations board that its 600 employees on bases on the D.E.W. Line should be deprived of their rights to belong to a trade union and to bargain collectively by virtue of a Canada-United States treaty relating to these bases? What action does the minister propose to protect the rights of the Canadian workers concerned?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I thank the hon. member for notice of his question. I just wish to tell him that the international brotherhood of electrical workers covering the employees of the Federal Electric Company has an application for certification before the Canada labour relations board at present. Recently the board heard evidence on this point and reserved its decision. I feel we must wait first for the decision of the Canada labour relations board before going further into the matter.

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR DESIGNATION OF CERTAIN AREAS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Remi Paul (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Could the minister inform the house of the decision reached by his department and the government following the energetic, loud but well-founded protests of the hon. members for Bonaventure and Gaspe (Messrs. Bechard and Cyr) to the effect that the Gaspe region be designated as a depressed area so that it may benefit from the advantages granted by the government in such cases?

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the Department of Labour has had a proposal under consideration for some time, as I indicated in the house some weeks prior to the adjournment, with respect to the declaration of certain areas in Canada of high winter unemployment and to cover two special programs that I announced, I believe on June 10; namely the accelerated supplementary construction program and the additional 10 per cent for the municipal incentive program. These two measures were intended specifically for the areas of high winter unemployment.

The government has made a decision as to the designation of these areas of high winter unemployment, and I hope to be able to give the details to the house as soon as possible. I am sure this matter will be of interest to all hon. members of the house, including the two hon. gentlemen to whom my hon. friend has referred.

FINANCE

CONSUMER CREDIT—INQUIRY AS TO SETTING UP OF COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Solicitor General. When will the committee be set up to deal with the problem of consumer credit?

[Mr. Brewin.]

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, that committee will be set up as soon as more urgent business of the house has been disposed of.

REGULATIONS RESPECTING MUNICIPAL LOAN LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Could the minister tell us when the regulations under the municipal development act will be published so the act can become operative?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): These are now in the process of being discussed with representatives of the provinces, and it is my hope that they will come to a conclusion shortly.

REPORTED THREAT OF RETALIATORY ACTION BY UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. F. Jones (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a question in regard to his recent meetings in Washington. What was the nature of the retaliatory action threatened by United States commerce secretary Hodges in the event that the Canadian government presses forward with the action commenced by the previous Canadian administration in encouraging the manufacture of more car parts and components in Canada? The retaliatory action referred to was mentioned by Mr. John Meyer in today's Gazette.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have no idea.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

APPOINTMENT OF CANADIAN REPRESENTATIVE TO VATICAN

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. P. Antoine Belanger (Charlevoix): My question is intended for the Prime Minister. Is it the government's intention to consider in the near future the possibility of accrediting an ambassador to the Vatican?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of government policy, and when there is an announcement to be made it will be made in the house.

REPORTED NEW PROGRAM TO AID COMMONWEALTH COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Press reports indicate that he informed the United States government at the recent joint cabinet meeting in Washington that Canada had a new three year aid program to benefit commonwealth countries. Would the minister let the house in on the secret?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question of the right hon. gentleman I should like to say that I have not seen the report which suggested we had indicated an announcement of policy. I did inform those with whom we were conferring in Washington that Canada was giving consideration to its external aid program and hoped to be in a position some time within the foreseeable future to make a definite announcement as to the nature of that new policy.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Stripped of the extra words, did the hon. gentleman tell the United States government that Canada had a new three year plan for commonwealth assistance?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has asked me another question. I did say in addition that I hoped we would be in a position to announce that program of external aid for a period of at least three years.

An hon. Member: What does that mean?

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

[Translation]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerard Perron (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister. The morning papers report that the hon. member for Iles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Sauve) has stated before the Montreal Rotary Club that the federal government should vacate the provincial field. Was he then expressing the policy of the government?

[Later:]

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister? Would the Prime Minister tell the house if he shares the view expressed last night by the hon. member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Sauve) who said that the central government cannot go on any longer acting as it does now, that is presenting legislation and then, following a province's reactions, reach a compromise satisfactory to all concerned?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): As you know, Mr. Speaker, it is against the rules to ask questions of this kind relating to private members' statements. This question is quite improper.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

EXPENSE ALLOWANCES OF MEMBERS AND SENATORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. It has been brought to my attention that expense allowances for members of the other place are being paid on a different basis than those being paid to members of the House of Commons. Can the minister assure the house that the law is being compiled with in respect to these allowances?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad to look into the matter and advise my hon. friend as soon as I have the information.

INQUIRY AS TO SITTINGS ON THANKSGIVING AND ARMISTICE DAYS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the house leader and ask whether he would inform the house what course will be followed for Thanksgiving and Armistice days.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I think that, with the amount of business that still requires to be done in the present session, it will be necessary for the house to sit on both these days, and indeed on every possible sitting day for most of the rest of this year. I would imagine, however, that if there are ceremonies in Ottawa that would conflict in any way with the sittings of the house on Remembrance day, the sittings would be suitably adjusted. I refer to national ceremonies.

May I be permitted to respectfully suggest to Your Honour that on an early occasion you read to the house the admirable statement made by your predecessor, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) about questions on the orders of the day?

Mr. Mandziuk: Which you ignored.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN CRIMINAL ORGANIZATION IN U.S. AND CANADA

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Did the minister get in touch with the Attorney General of the United States in order to obtain all possible information regarding the connection between the American crime syndicate (Cosa Nostra) and organized crime in Canada, in conjunction with legal authorities of certain provinces, Ontario among others?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is no. As to the second part, I think that this is a matter which comes under the jurisdiction of provincial rather than federal authorities.

[Text]

[Later:]

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. Will the minister initiate a meeting of Canadian and United States police officials to establish a police liaison committee which would speed information about and action against crime?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to look into this question, but my understanding is that such a relationship already exists between the officers of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and their opposites in the United States.

AGRICULTURE

TURKEYS—REMOVAL OF QUOTA ON IMPORTS FROM U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture; I am sorry I have not given him notice. Would the minister advise the house whether the government has removed the quotas on United States turkeys entering Canada? If so, on what date were they removed?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): No, Mr. Speaker, the quota has not been removed.

Mr. Hales: A supplementary question. I am under the impression it has been, and following the minister's answer I was going to ask him if he had been able to secure any concession or reciprocal arrangement with regard to Canadian cheese entering the United States.

[Mr. Mandziuk.]

Mr. Hayes: Mr. Speaker, this is quite involved and probably the question should be put on the order paper.

[Later:]

Mr. Hales: In view of the answer which the Minister of Agriculture gave me a few moments ago with regard to quotas on United States turkeys coming into Canada, and in order to relieve any confusion in the industry, I wonder whether he would care to review that answer and maybe clarify it right now.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Speaker, I am glad the hon. member brought this question up again, because we have been discussing the removal of the quota on turkeys since last spring.

On August 21 it was decided that this should be done, and an order in council was passed on August 26 to this effect. Our reason for doing this was that turkeys imported into Canada are protected by a tariff of 5 cents per pound, and also the fact that the discounted dollar provides for another 2½ cents per pound protection which, plus the freight, amounts to something like 9 cents per pound before United States turkeys compete with Canadian turkeys.

It was also our feeling at the time this was decided that feed conditions in Canada were such that turkeys could be fed as reasonably here as they could in the United States, and there was no danger of any importations of United States turkeys affecting the price of Canadian turkeys. The matter was discussed with the turkey people before we decided on this course and they are quite familiar with the action that has been taken. I am referring to the Canadian turkey federation.

Mr. Hales: A supplementary question to the minister, Mr. Speaker. I thank him for bringing us up to date, because we were in a state of confusion until he clarified this matter. I would like to ask the minister, is it not a fact that he is in accord with the devaluation of the Canadian dollar that made this transaction possible?

CHEESE—INQUIRY AS TO IMPORTS FROM NEW ZEALAND

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Agriculture.

In view of the position of the Canadian cheese market, does the government intend to proceed with its plan to import cheese from New Zealand in order to transform that cheese into a by-product for export to the United States, notwithstanding the objection raised by the Canadian farmers' unions?

[Text]

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this question should possibly be directed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. We do have in Canada a very favourable trade balance with New Zealand and we are not importing any cheese from New Zealand. This will be government policy. If it is changed at that time, it will be announced in the house.

WHEAT—SUGGESTED ALTERNATIVES TO DECREASED PRODUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. During his recent swing through the prairies he asked the farmers to produce less wheat. What is the alternative to the production of wheat?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Oats, barley and cattle.

An hon. Member: And turkeys.

SUPPLIES OF FEED GRAIN FOR EASTERN FARMERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): While I am on my feet, on orders of the day on Tuesday last the hon. member for Beauce inquired whether I intended to order the construction of feed grain bins for the benefit of eastern farmers so as to reduce the cost of feed grain to the eastern feed mills.

As the hon. member undoubtedly knows, the government announced in August a new feed grain policy under which it will pay storage charges over the winter months on western feed grains in eastern elevators, and an estimate will be presented to the house to implement this program which, along with the freight payments, provides very substantial assistance in reducing the cost of feed grains to eastern producers. It will also help materially in ensuring adequate stocks of feed grains for eastern Canada.

CANADIAN FLAG

INQUIRY AS TO COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL FLAG AND ANTHEM

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister of Canada? Following some of his previous statements, could the Prime Minister inform the house when he intends to set up a special committee to choose a distinctive emblem for Canada, that is a flag and a national anthem, as he has promised to do before 1965?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): We will discharge our commitment in this regard, and it might not require a committee of the House of Commons first.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

PENHOLD, ALTA.—REPLACEMENT AS JET TRAINING BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. I understand his department is now closing the $50 million air force jet training station at Penhold. I wonder if he would mind telling the house where the personnel of that training centre will be placed, and where a new training centre will be opened?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): The personnel who will not be required there will be used at another base where service flying will be undertaken. This will be chosen from existing R.C.A.F. bases, and will be well suited for the purpose.

Mr. H. F. Jones (Saskatoon): Can the Minister of National Defence tell us whether Saskatoon is on the list of those air force stations that will receive consideration for the new jet base?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I think all R.C.A.F. bases would be considered, but I would not want to hold out too much hope to the hon. member.

Mr. Woolliams: How many jet air training stations could replace this station at Penhold? Some are suitable and some are not.

Mr. Hellyer: In view of the fact that the list is lengthy, Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. gentleman would put his question on the order paper.

SHIPPING

LOWER ST. LAWRENCE—INQUIRY AS TO ICEBREAKING ACTIVITIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): I should like to ask the Minister of Transport if the department contemplates a change in the activity of the departmental icebreakers on the lower St. Lawrence next winter in view of the importance of winter navigation in that area.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): I could get a complete answer for that question if it were put on the order paper. I could answer it now, but I do not think it has the urgency of the type required by our rules.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker will decide that.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

QUEBEC CITY—REPORTED COMPLAINTS RESPECTING ACCOMMODATION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Lucien Plourde (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. Can the Postmaster General tell the house whether he received a request from the Quebec city letter carriers concerning the numerous disadvantages which exist in the new post office, such as, for instance, rooms too small for the gathering of letter carriers and a ceiling light badly set up for good visibility.

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, as far as the first part of the question is concerned, the answer is no. As for the second part, I deny it as such.

[Text]

TISDALE, SASK.—REMOVAL OF TELEPHONE FROM POST OFFICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Postmaster General. Would the minister instruct his officials to investigate the reason for removing the telephone from the post office at Tisdale?

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member will please put his question on the order paper he will get a complete answer.

INQUIRY AS TO ISSUE OF COMMEMORATIVE STAMPS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

In view of the government's intention to issue a postage stamp dedicated to world peace, does the government also intend to issue a postage stamp commemorating the acquisition of American nuclear arms by Canada?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I regret that so many of the hon. gentleman's questions are both foolish and out of order.

[Mr. Balcer.]

UNITED NATIONS

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON WORK OF ASSEMBLY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and perhaps before doing so I may be permitted to welcome him back to the house for this part of the session. Does he intend to submit a report on the activities of the United Nations assembly which he has been attending, with particular reference to whether the serious financial problem they had has been resolved and if the solution has been acceptable?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for his initial remarks. The question to which he refers has not been resolved, and it will be one of the matters that will be considered in part at this assembly. It will probably not be resolved until the next assembly.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

HAINES ROAD—INQUIRY AS TO MAINTENANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question to the minister of northern affairs arises from the fact that he sent a committee of his officials to the Yukon to report to him on the feasibility of maintaining the Haines cut-off road. Has the minister received this report as yet, and if so is any action intended by the government to keep the road open this winter?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows I made an extensive tour to the northwest, including the United States panhandle, the Prince Rupert area and the Yukon, and I became aware of some important transportation problems of considerable consequence to Canada. I arranged for some five senior officials to go there and make a report on the problems. They have now returned to their posts in Ottawa but their report is not completed, and until it is I cannot say what government action will be taken.

INQUIRY AS TO RECREATIONAL PARKS PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Could the minister inform the house whether the recreational parks program that was discussed in the house last June 26 has been launched; and if so, will it be included in the winter works program?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, may I take this question as notice?

YUKON—WORK OF COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURAL DEVELOPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. I wonder whether he could inform the house what progress the special interdepartmental committee set up by his predecessor and minister of northern affairs has made with regard to agricultural development in the Yukon?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. member to put that question on the order paper.

PUBLICATIONS

IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State. I note that in the legislation that is proposed for the rest of this session there is no mention of the recommendations which were contained in the O'Leary report. Would he inform the house whether any legislation is planned this session to implement any of these recommendations, or otherwise to protect the Canadian magazine industry?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, of course that is a matter of policy on which I would not be in a position to give an answer.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO GENERAL FRIGATE PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Before the house adjourned the minister was considering the general frigate program. I am wondering whether the minister is still considering that program, and whether he has at last reached a decision on it.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Well, Mr. Speaker, I hope that a decision will be reached soon.

BILINGUAL SIGNS ON DEFENCE HEADQUARTERS VEHICLES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre-Andre Boutin (Dorchester): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of National Defence.

Could the minister tell the house when his department intends to have bilingual markings placed on trucks and other vehicles serving national defence headquarters? What positive measures is the department taking in that respect?

[Text]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I will take the question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REPORT OF COMMITTEE RESPECTING COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can he say when the government expects the report from the committee which was appointed to inquire into the possibility of establishing collective bargaining rights for the civil service?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot say when that report will be received. My hon. friend knows this is an important and complicated matter and will take some time, but I will be glad to look into it.

Mr. Knowles: As a supplementary question, is it still the hope of the government to introduce legislation on this matter this session?

Mr. Pearson: It is the hope of the government to have legislation on this matter as soon as that can be arranged, but it will be some time before that will be possible.

TRADE

RUSSIA—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but perhaps in his absence the Prime Minister would answer because of the widespread interest in the matter. Would the Prime Minister agree to table in the house the recent trade agreement signed between his government and the government of Russia, excluding from it those portions dealing with the wheat sale?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad to take that up with the minister and see what can be done in that respect.

WHEAT—SHIPMENTS TO RUSSIA THROUGH CHURCHILL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. F. Jones (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister of Agriculture would tell us what steps, if any, he took to advise the Russians of the advantages of making use of the port of Churchill with regard to the recently announced wheat shipments?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this was answered by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, I just do not know which day. I think it was last Monday.

Mr. Jones: I was asking what the Minister of Agriculture had done in this regard, if anything?

AIRPORTS

ST. IRENEE, QUE.—OPERATION DURING WINTER SEASON

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Antoine Belanger (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

Is it expected by the government that the St. Irenee airport, Charlevoix county, can be maintained in operation during next winter?

[Text]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): I will take that question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

BAGOTVILLE, QUE.—INQUIRY AS TO TERMINAL CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Transport. Could the minister inform the house as to the new developments that have taken place as regards the building of an air terminal in Bagotville?

[Text]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can do that if the hon. gentleman will put his question on the order paper so that I may have the opportunity of preparing a suitable reply.

[Mr. Scott.]

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

REQUEST FOR EMPLOYMENT OF BILINGUAL PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport.

In view of the fact that unilingualism still prevails on several T.C.A. lines in the province of Quebec and elsewhere, what steps does the department intend to take in order to provide us with the service of bilingual stewardesses on all T.C.A. lines?

[Text]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's lengthy question contains some assertions that are not in accordance with the facts. As to the substantive part of the question, I will deal with that later if I am permitted to take the question as notice. I will bring the hon. member an answer in the next day or so.

CONSTRUCTION IN CANADA OF NEW PLANES TO BE ACQUIRED

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Robert Beaule (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour.

Could the minister tell the house whether there were recent developments concerning the construction of Caravelles by Canadair in Montreal for T.C.A.

[Text]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker; I did not catch the whole of the question. I wonder whether the hon. member would put his question on the order paper.

FISHERIES

NORTH PACIFIC TREATY—REPORTED IMPASSE IN DISCUSSIONS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Is it true that the negotiations relating to the North Pacific fisheries are in a stalemate?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if I understood the question correctly, I must say that the negotiations are not yet completed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Mr. Gordon moved:

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $747,449,955.03, being the aggregate of—

(a) two twelfths of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1964, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, except fisheries item 45, northern affairs and national resources item 10 and public works items 20 and 190 for which the proportion is one twelfth and except atomic energy item 5, external affairs item 107 and loans, investments and advances item L20 for which no proportion is requested, $640,449,276.00;

(b) an additional three twelfths of the amount of transport item 35, $820,000.00;

(c) an additional two twelfths of the amount of agriculture item 50, $178,833.34;

(d) an additional one twelfth of the amounts of agriculture items 25, 100 and 145, citizenship and immigration item 30, transport item 10, of the said estimates, $3,583,608.34;

(e) two twelfths of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the supplementary estimates (A) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1964, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, except external affairs item 96a, finance item 5a, northern affairs and national resources item 110a, and loans, investments and advances items L13a and L63a, $48,103,070.00;

(f) an additional three twelfths of the amount of external affairs item 117a, $84,240.00;

(g) an additional two twelfths of the amount of external affairs item 116a, $280,800.00;

(h) two twelfths of the amount of the item set forth in the supplementary estimates (B) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1964, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, $1,166,666.67;

(i) two twelfths of the amount of the item set forth in the supplementary estimates (C) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1964, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, $3,333,333.34;

(j) eight twelfths of the amounts of the items set forth in the supplementary estimates (D) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1964, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, $49,444,457.34;

(k) an additional three twelfths of the amount of external affairs item 117d, $5,670.00;

be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending March 31, 1964.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I am taking the first opportunity which has presented itself—

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi.

Mr. Grafftey: Before I proceed, Mr. Chairman, was the Minister of Finance about to make a statement at the outset of the debate?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I had not planned to make a statement at the outset of this debate at the resolution stage, but if hon. members have any questions they would like to put to me I would be very glad to do my best to answer them.

Mr. Churchill: Just on a point of clarification, is the minister going to give the usual undertaking regarding the submission of these estimates?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I understood that that was usually given when the bill was before the committee, but I will be glad to do it now. This resolution provides two twelfths of the items in the main and supplementary estimates tabled prior to the adjournment and includes eight twelfths of the supplementary estimates tabled yesterday, bringing the total supply which would be released to date up to eight twelfths of the total estimates if the bill is passed. There are a small number of items required in addition to these proportions because of the seasonal nature of the expenditures.

When the bill is presented it will also include additional borrowing authority up to $500 million. I should like to assure the committee that the proportions requested in the bill, as hon. members will see when it is before the committee, are intended to provide for all necessary requirements of the public service up to November 30, 1963. In no instance is the total amount of an item being released by the bill. The form of this bill is the usual one for interim supply bills, and the passing of this bill will not prejudice the rights and privileges of hon. members to question or criticize any item in the estimates when it comes up for consideration. The usual undertaking is hereby given that such rights and privileges will be respected and will not be curtailed or restricted in any way as a result of the passing of this measure.

Mr. Grafftey: I should like to thank the minister for his most helpful and useful statement. Before this committee votes interim supply it is my duty and my purpose to bring to the notice of hon. members certain recent developments in this country, developments which, in the opinion of the majority of our members on this side of the house, if continued will have serious effects on Canada and on all Canadians.

These developments relate to the total collapse of the majority of the government's major legislative proposals as contained in the speech from the throne. They relate, in fact, to the total collapse of the Pearson plan for moving our economy ahead and for upholding the myth of improving Canada's prestige abroad.

Why has such a collapse taken place? Many Canadians of all political stripes are asking this question today. It has happened because the government, by its dictatorial arrogance and by its lack of consultation with the people and with local authorities during its short time in office, has lost touch with reality and with the people of Canada.

In my brief remarks this afternoon I should like to touch with equal brevity on some background historical material. During the war years and the post-war years, Canadians willingly gave up many of their normal freedoms in order to bring the world conflict to a successful conclusion. In the fifties the Liberal establishment was denied by the people of Canada, speaking through their duly elected members in this House of Commons, the possession of complete emergency powers forever. That was in 1956 and 1957. One would have thought the Grits would have learned their lesson. Yet the dictatorial arrogance of 1956 and 1957 was only a minor tune as compared with the symphony of confusion we have today. I say that the Pearson-Gordon-LaMarsh attitude must go. Canadians of all parties—and this includes Liberals, Conservatives and members of other political parties from the Atlantic to the Pacific—demand that it should go for the good of Canada.

Many people in Canada today say they see little difference in the approach of the political parties to major public issues. Perhaps that is something for which all members in this house are to blame to a greater or lesser degree. Nevertheless, for those of us who have examined Liberal doctrine and the position taken by the Grits, there is no difficulty in discovering the reason for contemporary confusion. Only the other day backbenchers of the party opposite castigated the cabinet in general and individual ministers in particular. I am sure this is the first time in the history of modern democracy that a ministry has been castigated by its backbenchers for losing touch not only with the people of Canada but with its own supporters in parliament.

There is another matter which I think should be brought up again and again both on the floor of the chamber and outside; something which will make clear beyond doubt the difference between the political parties in this country today, a difference which will soon become readily apparent to all Canadians. The hon. lady who a number of weeks ago proposed or seconded the address in reply to the speech from the throne enunciated a Liberal collectivist theory which was not denied by anyone in the Liberal high command. This theory means, in essence, that the individual today does not count in the eyes of the government; he does not know what is good for him. According to this theory the Liberal establishment will tell him what is good for him, and government decisions will be enforced in every locality whether wanted or not.

What happened yesterday? We asked the Minister of Labour whether, before he decreed that certain municipalities were to be declared depressed areas, the local authorities had been consulted in advance. The minister did not answer because he knew the local authorities had not been consulted. These municipalities are to be declared depressed areas whether they want it or not, merely because someone here in Ottawa has a chart which says they must be called depressed areas. Lack of consultation is one of the major reasons why the whole government's domestic program is on the rocks. Arrogance, lack of humility and lack of consultation have produced this situation. I notice the superior attitude of the President of the Privy Council. He looks across at me as if I were a young school boy who knows nothing about the intricacies of the planners. I say to him that planning or no planning, in a confederation such as Canada you should consult the local authorities before superimposing decisions on them from the top.

Before I catalogue in some detail the results of this attitude there is another thing I should like to say. It relates to our great civil service. But before I bring this subject to the attention of our members, and to make sure that responsibility will surround the debate in this regard, I wish to say that in my opinion Canada happens to be blessed with one of the finest civil services in the free world. Nothing that I have to say relates to any desire on my part to amend the Civil Service Act or the departmental regulations concerning political activity in the civil service. I want to make that perfectly clear before I proceed with the remarks I wish to make.

Having said that, I wish to emphasize and re-emphasize that we are witnessing a phenomenon which I think is unprecedented in parliamentary history in the modern western world, namely the composition of the ministry which is before us today. The Liberal ministry of today is made up to the extent of more than one third, of former senior civil servants.

I do not intend to suggest that this in itself is a bad thing, but I am going to say this; that in Canada today under the parliamentary system, Montesquieu's separation of powers theory does not necessarily, in toto or in part, apply to parliamentary democracy. We in the Canadian parliament only have true freedom when there is a real separation between the administrative and legislative wings of government and I maintain that with the present ministry, one third of which is composed of former senior bureaucrats, we do not have that desirable state of freedom today. Having already said, and I reiterate, that we have in Canada one of the finest civil services in the western world, I say that this point must be placed again and again before the people of Canada.

I have often talked to the Secretary of State privately and I know he feels that I belabour this point to an absurd degree, but I think this situation must be looked at seriously today regardless of any consideration of amendments to the Civil Service Act or departmental regulations.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could the hon. gentleman repeat that sentence? I apologize to him. As he knows, I have one deaf ear and I was giving the other to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Grafftey: Since I am not reading from a text it is hard for me to go back. I will never forget the spectacle of the Prime Minister meeting all the deputy ministers after the election. I thought this was a very poor move. It was as if he was saying "Hello, boys, here we are again; we are the only establishment you can ever work with for the good of Canada". What palpably absurd nonsense. No matter how much yelling I hear from the opposite benches I am going to bring this point before the house and the people of Canada time and time again.

I have brought the point before the House of Commons that much of the Liberal economic program has foundered on the rocks because of a lack of consultation with local authorities and the people. It has always been a Conservative principle to put emphasis on the wishes of the people and the dignity of the individual. We realize that in our federal union, to dictate from Ottawa without consulting the local authorities crushes individual initiative and spells disaster.

I am not thinging about this only for today, Mr. Chairman. Burke, one of the great founders of Conservative principles, placed great emphasis on the importance of local self-agency. This is a principle or doctrine that Liberalism has never been able to claim, so let us not be surprised at what is happening today. The people of Canada should recognize this difference in principle. Burke's idea of local self-agency is a principle which is very important to Canadian Conservatism in 1963.

In the speech from the throne we heard about the notion of co-operative federalism. As far as most members on this side of the house are concerned, co-operative federalism denotes a high degree of consultation. What have we seen in the few short months since? I put this straight question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. When the hon. lady introduced the universal contributory pension scheme on the floor of the House of Commons on July 18 last was she aware—yes or no—of Mr. Lesage's intentions, either from her colleagues in the cabinet or through reading the province of Quebec press? If she was aware, why did she go blindly ahead? This question has not been answered. Here again we have a lack of co-operation and a lack of consultation with the provinces.

The Minister of Labour admitted that he did not consult the Minister of Finance before he brought in the $500 bonus for home builders. I asked the Minister of Labour repeatedly yesterday, do you intend to consult the municipalities before declaring that they are depressed areas? I did not get an answer. Why? Because Liberal doctrine dictates that there is no consultation. Whether or not the municipality wants to be designated a depressed area, it is going to be called one. Under our administration we did not call them distressed areas; they were labour surplus areas. The legislation was made public and situations were dealt with on the basis of local initiative.

Surely the Minister of Finance must realize that his budget and the major economic measures he intended to introduce on the floor of the House of Commons—hon. members may laugh, but these are the facts and the people of Canada know them—to move the economy ahead floundered. Why? Because of a lack of consultation. With regard to the municipal loans legislation there was no consultation with local authorities or the provinces. In respect of the budget there was no consultation with senior civil servants. It is no wonder that because of a lack of consultation an integral part of the whole economic program of the government has floundered, much to the regret of all Canadians who put country before party.

I hope that never again will a tax be levied and then revised as was done in the case of the tax on building materials. I am not going into details in this regard.

However, the retail lumbermen's association met in Vancouver last week, and its members were most alarmed at the slow-down in construction which is directly attributable to this tax. In the city of Calgary alone construction has declined by $30 million in the period from June 14 until now compared with a similar period last year.

Much to our incredible surprise we also see no consultation among the cabinet ministers themselves. The Prime Minister says that the health plan should be submitted to a parliamentary committee. The Minister of National Health and Welfare says that she hopes it will not be and it should not be. We hear free trade doctrines coming out of the mouth of the Minister of Trade and Commerce while on the other hand the new Minister of Industry preaches protectionism.

Every Canadian wants to see the world fair under way and preparations completed on time, but look at the confusion and lack of consultation that have existed up until now. Just the other day a suggestion emanated from the government that they may name a Liberal backbencher as a liaison officer between the authorities in Montreal and Ottawa. Will this add more confusion to the confusion already existing? We do not know, but we do know that many of the difficulties with regard to the world fair up to now have been caused by a lack of consultation. That is a phrase I am reiterating time and time again in my brief speech this afternoon.

A few weeks ago I asked the Minister of Agriculture whether before designating areas for ARDA projects the local authorities were consulted. The minister could not even give me an answer. In every country in the western world with legislation like ARDA the programs are based on the idea of local initiative, but even after repeated questioning the Minister of Agriculture could not guarantee to the house that ARDA projects would be designated only after consultation with the local authorities.

I am not taking sides at the present time in the classical debate of centralization versus provincial rights, but whether you feel that Canada is in danger of being balkanized too much or whether you feel that Canada should not have too much central government, no matter what side you take in this debate, I think all hon. members recognize the desirability of setting up within a very short time some sort of agency or secretariat for federal-provincial relations.

I say, and many members have said inside and outside this house, that such an agency or secretariat will not necessarily solve all the problems, but it will go a long way toward helping to channel communication with different levels of government. I say to the ministry opposite in the name of the people governed, first of all let us consult local authorities. Let us all realize that the original Pearson myth for improving our image abroad is long dead, as the Pearson plan for moving our economy ahead is dead. Let us make it plain that dictatorial arrogance has no place in a young, dynamic nation like Canada that will soon be celebrating its 100th birthday.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, at the outset I would like to mention my satisfaction at the re-election to the Social Credit government in British Columbia. It is a fact, as Premier Bennett of British Columbia often said, that every time a Social Credit government is elected in any part of Canada, nobody seems able to defeat it. The same thing will happen federally as soon as the Canadian electorate decides to rely on a progressive government instead of having an administration resorting to the same old tricks since confederation.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a few words about the ways some income tax inspectors are terrorizing the people of the province, of the country and more particularly of my own riding. No sooner were the last income tax returns submitted by the Canadian taxpayers, than inspectors in the Rouyn-Noranda area office started playing around with the receipts for charitable donations and established on their own initiative the amount allowable for each taxpayer. Receipts for $700 or $800 were reduced in the Rouyn local office to $100, a reduction of $500 and $600. And the government gives a free hand to those inspectors, those leeches who are literally terrorizing the people who are earning their living through hard work. I consider shameful that such zealots be tolerated in the service of a government or a state such as Canada.

I therefore vehemently protest against the acts of those people who enter almost forcibly in private homes, small businesses and practically paralyse the economy of our area. Please note, Mr. Chairman, that the government has designated that district as an economically depressed area. In the same area were also included Val d'Or and Rouyn. I will have something more to say about that depressed area in a moment.

There is another point I would like to raise in this house, and I am sorry that the Postmaster General (Mr. Denis) is away, because it concerns his department. This concerns patronage. We often hear from civil servants and government members that there is no patronage at the federal level, that in Ottawa British traditions are respected and that a man is entitled to only one vote; the member of parliament is respected; the Conservative, Social Credit and N.D.P. or Liberal member was elected by a majority in his riding and he is respected as such.

Recently, in my constituency, without my knowing it and without anybody being aware of it except those who imparted the information to me, the Post Office Department issued a tender call for repairs to or repainting of mail boxes. The Liberal candidate in the last election, Mr. Stephen Cuddihy, received tender forms, met a painting contractor and asked him to tender for those repairs saying:

"You have two employees working for you, make them each send a tender a little higher than yours in order to obtain the job for yourself." Take good note of that. The Liberal candidate who lost by 11,000 votes at the last election is the one going around with tender blanks. Note that those tender forms concerning that job were never posted in the Noranda post office nor advertised in the papers.

Well, the man in question makes his tender. I have a copy here and the copy, like the original, was prepared at the Noranda post office by the postmaster, Mr. Langlois. Now, those tenders never reached Ottawa or North Bay. They seem to have remained in the Noranda post office. But the funniest part is that the next day—note that the tenders were called on July 25, while the date limit was August 7, 1963—the same Mr. Cuddihy goes to another Rouyn garage, the Thibault Garage Limited, hands over three other tender forms to the Liberal organizer, Mr. Georges Thibault, who is treasurer of the Liberal party in Villeneuve riding, and tells him: "Prepare a tender and find two fellows in the garage who will turn in a tender higher than yours, so that you will get the contract." Imagine that. No patronage. It does not matter.

Then I wrote to the post office deputy minister in Ottawa asking him the names of those who had tendered to repair mail boxes in Noranda and he answered on September 20, 1963:

> Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of September 23 concerning the repairing and painting of 16 relay cabinets in Rouyn-Noranda.
> We received the three following tenders:
> Mr. George Thibault, 25 Mgr Rhéaume street west, Rouyn, $352.
> Mr. J.-H. Thibault—

He is Georges' brother, and the owner of the garage where Georges is employed. As you see, it is quite complete. I go on:

> Mr. J.-H. Thibault, 33 Gamble street west, Rouyn, $384.

An hon. Member: It is a family compact.

Mr. Caouette: Third tender—because three were required—

> Mr. Marcel Pepin.

He is the sales manager at the Thibault garage—

Mr. Pigeon: Any relation to the minister?

Mr. Caouette: They may be second cousins.

Mr. Chairman, the suggestions of the defeated Liberal candidate are then followed. Four hundred dollars for Marcel Pepin, $384 for J. H. Thibault and $350 for Georges Thibault. The three are employed in the same garage.

But that is not all. He tells him: "Prepare your tender, and you are sure to get the contract if yours is lower than the others."

The deputy minister wrote me at the time:

> Considering the average price asked throughout Canada for that kind of work, it should be possible to have those boxes repaired and painted for about $200, which, as you will realize, is considerably less than the lowest tender we received.
> In view of the foregoing, we intend to call again for public tenders—

The letter upset things to a certain extent at the time.

There was the intention of calling for tenders again to find a contractor who would do the job at a more reasonable price.

The three other tenders did not reach Ottawa, because the deputy postmaster general gave me the list of all tenderers, and there are three of them.

Are you aware that after the 1958 election, a Conservative candidate in that district was sentenced to 24 months, I think, for having played around with the government funds in that way.

Mr. Chairman, I maintain that it is plainly dishonest when a Liberal candidate, or whoever it may be, goes with three tender blanks to the owners of one company and suggests a price increase so that they may obtain the contract. This should be condemned and if the postmaster at Noranda is in coalition with the Liberal candidate in this case, I would ask the Postmaster General to have that representative or the postmaster of Noranda sacked. We shall not tolerate such patronage.

A Conservative member purged a prison sentence two, three or four years ago for an offence which may have been more serious, but not very much. And a fellow gets five days for making $115 on a federal government contract. We, in this house, are administering funds belonging to the public, which should be kept in mind.

You know that those three men from the same garage are not in the painting business—don't ask Marcel Pepin to paint mail boxes, because he never saw a paint brush in his life. To ask a gas station manager to paint mail boxes is silly. One should rather ask professional painters. There are complaints about unemployment in that field, more particularly in this season. Those contracts should therefore be given to professional house painters, whether they be Liberal, Conservative, Social Credit or N.D.P. for all I care.

We are not here to serve a party, but the people as a whole.

So I called the Noranda postmaster and asked him: "How many tenders did you receive?" "Three," he told me. "Do you know who sent them?"—"Yes."—"Did you get any others?"—"No."—"You did not receive any other tenders?"—"No."

Two hours later, a copy of Mr. Henri Trepanier's tender, for the sum of $305, reached us. He had not received any reply to his tender. Then I was told at the post office: "It is not my fault. I sent it to North Bay."—"Who is the postmaster in North Bay?"—"Mr. Aurele Filiatreault."

So I wrote Mr. Aurele Filiatreault, in North Bay, to find out what the feeling was about those tenders. And here is what I told him:

Sir,

Would you be kind enough to let me know how you proceed to call for public tenders in the case of mail boxes in your district?

Is it normal and decent to give the tender blanks to the Liberal candidate, S. Cuddihy, defeated by more than 11,000 votes last April? Is it normal and decent that the said Mr. Cuddihy should deliver those blanks to three persons connected with Garage Thibault Ltee of Rouyn.

Are you supposed to play political patronage with tax money paid by everybody?

In case you are not aware of the fact, I wish to inform you that I am the member for Villeneuve.

And no one in this house can doubt it.

And that as such, I shall not tolerate to see persons rejected by the people practising patronage. I have nothing against calls for tender being public, displayed in post offices and advertised in the papers. But I strongly object to any dealings going on behind my back, to such an extent that I shall raise the matter in the House of Commons for the sake of democratic principles.

In addition to these three tenders by Garage Thibault Inc., a regular painter submitted a tender in Noranda which was not forwarded to the department. I should like to know who.

Sincerely your,

Real Caouette, M.P.

Two days later I got the following letter:

Dear Mr. Caouette,

I refer to your letter of September 25 with regard to the procedure being followed for the repair of mail boxes.

The repair program is under the direct supervision of the Post Office Department headquarters in Ottawa, through the district office and the local postmaster.

Does this mean that those who deal in patronage are the officials of the department headquarters. Nobody knows.

I am therefore taking the liberty of handing over your letter to the headquarters from which you will receive the requested information.

I am waiting for that information from headquarters to see who is meddling with the affairs of the Post Office Department in Canada, at least in Villeneuve county.

Mr. Chairman, the postmaster of Noranda is a perfect gentleman. Mr. Filiatreault's letter indicates that it is the Ottawa office which give orders, but I would be rather inclined to believe that the matter is arranged between Noranda and Ottawa, namely Ottawa and the Liberal candidate and his treasurer, Mr. Georges Thibault, connected with the Thibault garage.

In any event my investigation goes on in that case and, as I said a while ago, if the postmaster has taken the liberty to go in for political patronage in the constituency of Villeneuve, I ask for his dismissal from the Post Office Department.

Now, let us deal with another matter. Our area is underdeveloped and the government has proposed a solution for all underdeveloped areas in Canada. From what the Prime Minister said yesterday, I conclude that from the economic standpoint all areas in Canada are now underdeveloped, that is in October 1963.

In any event the proposed solution consists in a tax exemption for new industries which settle in our area. Fine solution.

What secondary industries would settle 425 miles from Montreal and Toronto, in the north of the province, when there are not enough people to justify setting up a new industry.

Why not provide for an exemption from direct taxes for the people of that area? They would buy more if their income were higher. The increased demand would bring in new industries.

When the population has doubled in size new industries will be set up. Now, the population is no longer increasing in the district and people are moving north to other places. Some try their luck in the Montreal area, in the eastern townships, in the Quebec district, and in Ontario. Our people are scattered everywhere in the province of Quebec and the western provinces.

It is proposed to give tax exemptions to those new industries. That is like putting a poultice on a wooden leg. It is a worthless solution because, as everybody knows, industry is not interested in paying more for transportation, thereby increasing production costs.

Mr. Chairman, Social Credit has a solution under the present plan. According to mining engineers of our district, if the government were to decide to increase the price of gold by $10 an ounce, there would probably be 30 to 40 new mining concerns in our area. Such companies are basic industries in our region. We have agriculture and lumber but mining is the big thing.

We have mines in Villeneuve, Noranda, Malartic, Cadillac and Rouyn. The possibilities are beyond imagination. The government would just have to raise the price of gold by $10 an ounce for the companies concerned to work those mines. That would increase employment to an unprecedented level. Population would probably double in northwestern Quebec. At that point, secondary or ordinary industries might think it worth their while to open plants there, because we would have a population and incomes large enough to set the wheels turning. That would be one way to bring about some improvement and a means to pull our district out of its economic stagnation.

Mr. Chairman, the other possible solution has been rejected by the Conservative government. By increasing personal income we would have been able to act, not upon Canadian consumption, but upon Canadian production. It is indeed futile to expect people to buy products when they have no money to do it.

Of course, some industrial sectors would close down. Throughout the length and breadth of Canada we see industries which are at the same economic level as the plants at Noranda. Naturally, the people concerned would like nothing better than to step up production, but what would be the point if nobody were able to buy?

And then you hear about planning. In fact, throughout the country, planners say: Production must be planned, Canadian economy must be planned. And yet, producers do not need the government to tell them to produce.

The government has never accomplished anything alone. It is private enterprise which has made Canada what it is today. Why wish to punish private enterprise now? To meet the needs of government, those of socialism and even communism are trying to permeate everywhere in our country, in the western world and throughout the world.

Mr. Chairman, we have production. Producers do not refuse to produce. Moreover, when they have money in their pockets or in the bank, consumers do not need the government to tell them what to do and what not to do. They do not need the government either to tell them what they should buy and what they should not buy. As a matter of fact, it is at that time that the consumer, the individual, the human being really fulfils himself. We also find that a human being enjoys freedom and security when he can choose what he wants with his purchasing power.

It seems that the government has always caused trouble for consumers and producers, both throughout the country and in every province individually.

Mr. Chairman, Social Crediters have a solution. The first is the monetary reform. In fact, everybody knows that this is the most important question. But they cast it aside in order to deal instead with private enterprise. As governments tried to do in the past, they stir up consumers against producers. On the other hand, they refuse to deal with the monetary problem. They say to themselves: Let us forget about that, we cannot concern ourselves with that.

Let us now see what happens here. At a time when we should be considering the bill providing for an increase in old age pensions we are asked to consider interim supply so as to delay somewhat the examination of the old age pension bill. Later on, when we examine interim supply, we will be accused of having delayed the adoption of the bill to increase old age pensions.

Now, what was to stop the government from introducing that bill this afternoon—and it would probably have been adopted today—to enable treasury board officials to pay the increase to old age pensioners throughout Canada.

But no, they are trying to play politics and later on they will accuse us of delaying the adoption of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, our purpose in taking part in the debate on interim supply is not to delay the increase in old age pensions but to express our views on urgent questions, and especially on monetary reform in Canada.

I know that both Liberals and Conservatives find that funny. They imagine that Social Credit advocates the use of a money printing press.

Well, that is not what Social Credit is; that has never been its policy and our opponents know it.

Gentlemen of the Liberal party, you repeated such things during the election campaign but you knew that you were not telling the truth to the people. We know that and the people are more and more aware of it.

I said yesterday that during the election campaign all members of the Liberal party were discrediting Social Credit throughout the country, saying that it was a hoax. They said that Social Credit had existed in Germany and that it had proven to be a complete failure. And they were also saying: give us a stable Liberal administration in Ottawa and you will not get any tax increases while your pensions and your family allowances will be increased. In fact, not a single Liberal candidate mentioned tax increases during the election campaign.

Yet, once they were elected to power, the first thing the Liberals did was to raise taxes.

We know that in his first budget speech, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) suggested a 30 per cent tax on foreign capital. American interests compelled him eventually to abolish that tax, and then the American government lost no time in levying a 15 per cent tax on American investments in Canada. United States citizens grow wealthy on our natural resources, they batten on our toil and our sweat. We know also that American interests were responsible for the Liberal victory in Ottawa.

Mr. Chairman, Social Crediters have a solution. Instead of listening to financial interests and of deriding us, the government would be well-inspired to lend an ear to the voice of the people, who demand just and equitable laws.

We should listen to the voice of our electors, of the entrepreneurs in our country, of the true builders of Canada, because they are the ones who need us to ensure the economic progress of our country, to create employment of course and to build a prosperous Canada, free from American finance and able to govern itself with its own finance and through the Bank of Canada. In my opinion, it is only if we create such a situation that we will have results.

Mr. Chairman, I said, not only in Quebec but all across Canada: you want to rebuild the Canadian economy? You have no solution, no way to create employment. I said also that we should try an experiment and see the results two years from now, because the results would not be any longer in coming.

I suggested the distribution of $100 to each Canadian citizen, credit based on the wealth of Canada, not extravagance, not an unlimited allowance. I suggested to the people that we should try that.

A family of ten would have received $1,000, a family of five $500, a single person $100. That way we would have put into circulation in Canada a sum of $1,800 million. This would have enabled 80 per cent of the citizens at present involved with the finance companies to pay their debts. This would also have enabled us to sell our produce which is only waiting for buyers at the present time, as it would have enabled us to give industry a new start and to create jobs. Shopkeepers and wholesalers could have increased their staff.

And instead of having his plant in operation only three days a week, the owner could have had it running five days. Then you would be really fighting unemployment efficiently by putting more buying power into the hands of the consumer.

Mr. Chairman, there you have an experiment that should be tried. But some people just will not accept the things Social Credit is asking for. All we ask is Canadian credit based on Canadian wealth. We are not asking for credit based on nothing—

An hon. Member: It is not worse than the $500 grant.

Mr. Caouette: It would be along the line of the $500 grant proposed by the hon. Minister of Finance to assist those who will be building homes during the winter. On the other hand, everybody knows that in our area it costs $500 more to build in winter. So those $500 would not be of much use.

Mr. Chairman, we must increase the income of the Canadian citizens and more particularly family allowances. On the other hand, they should not be increased only by a dollar, as the Liberals did some 10 years ago. Family allowances should be raised in proportion to the cost of living index. This would be a lot fairer. As it is recognized that the cost of living increased considerably since 1945, let us raise family allowances proportionally.

Let us give also a national dividend to everybody, and poverty among abundance will vanish.

What solutions did they bring in the United States? One could read recently in the newspapers that President Kennedy suggested a reduction in personal income tax in order to increase the people's buying power. In doing so, the government actually loses nothing, because indirect taxes are included in the price of goods. Now, if the consumer spends more the government receives almost as much. The consumer stirs the products and activates the economy of the country.

It is also the means we suggest. Let the government reduce the taxes, and so increase the purchasing power of the consumer, of the human being, and then the consumer shall buy more. With increasing purchases the government will collect indirect taxes which are included in the price of goods, and it will not be deprived of any source of income. Moreover, the producers will be satisfied to sell their products to the consumers in the country.

Mr. Chairman, before resuming my seat, let me say that I hope we will act according to the mandate under which we were elected.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Caouette: I hear some members applauding. Let me say to them that in view of the system and the government they are putting up with at the present time, they will not win applause from their electors, and that will happen soon.

Mr. Chairman, I wish no evil to my colleagues, but I feel that we should act directly according to the physical possibilities which exist in Canada today. Only then will we have served truly our country and our fellow-citizens, consumers or producers, all those who work for the good of our country and the growth of our economy, thus enabling Canada to hold its own against any country in the world.

[Text]

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I am availing myself of the first opportunity which has presented itself since parliament reassembled to register a protest against the action of the government in entering into an agreement with the United States for the acceptance of nuclear weapons for Canadian forces without submitting this agreement to parliament. Indeed, the government has gone much further and has refused to allow parliament to see the agreement upon which this commitment is based. The only document we have which tells us anything about this agreement is the official communique issued by the Prime Minister's office, and therefore I think I should place it on the record since it is, as I say, the only document we have giving us any information at all. It is dated August 16, 1963 and says:

> The Right Hon. L. B. Pearson, Prime Minister, announced today that as a result of negotiations begun three years ago and resumed by the present Canadian government after taking office the Canadian and United States governments have reached agreement on the conditions under which nuclear warheads will be made available for Canadian forces engaged in North American defence and assigned to NATO. The weapons systems affected are the "Bomarc B", the Voodoo interceptor, the Honest John artillery rocket and the CF-104 Starfighter strike-reconnaissance aircraft.
> In accordance with the requirements of national security and with NATO practice, details will not be published. The arrangements relating to custody and control satisfactorily protect Canada's national interest and conform with the position Canada has taken internationally on the non-dissemination of nuclear weapons.
> When the stockpiles are established the warheads will remain in United States custody, and for this purpose small units of United States custodial personnel will be stationed at the Canadian storage sites at bases which will, of course, remain under Canadian command and control. With custody remaining with the United States the arrangement does not add to the numbers of governments having nuclear weapons at their independent disposal. It is also to be noted that provision is made for the application at all times of the most stringent safety measures. Finally, these nuclear warheads cannot be used operationally without the authorization of the Canadian government. Joint control is thus assured.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to make two points with reference to this statement. The first is that the Canadian government has no right under our parliamentary democratic system to make commitments on behalf of the Canadian people without the approval of parliament. The Prime Minister's statement last Monday, September 30, to the effect that this is an agreement and not a treaty is to my mind sheer subterfuge.

This agreement between Canada and the United States does three things. First, it commits Canada to accept nuclear warheads from the United States. Second, it requires Canada to station United States military personnel on Canadian soil, and third, it involves a partial surrender of our national sovereignty under conditions of which we, the members of parliament, have no knowledge. We in this party insist that control of all commitments being vested in parliament is a basic tenet of our democratic process. This has long been established in Canada and one would have taken it for granted.

I refer to a statement which was made by the Right Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King when he was Prime Minister in 1928. This is what he said:

> The day has passed when any government or executive should feel that they should take it upon themselves, without the approval of parliament, to commit a country to obligations involving any considerable financial outlays or active undertakings.
> In all cases where obligations of such a character are being assumed internationally, parliament itself should be assured of having the full right of approving what is done before binding commitments are made. I would not confine parliamentary approval only to those matters which involve military sanctions and the like. I feel that parliamentary approval should apply where there are involved matters of large expenditure or political considerations of a far reaching character.

I quote from a little book called "Diplomacy in the Nuclear Age" written by one L. B. Pearson. At page 43 the Prime Minister of Canada says this:

> No democratic state—as I have already said—can or should countenance commitments secretly entered into, or adopt policies or make engagements without the people knowing about them and the legislature passing on them.

I want to draw the attention of the committee to the fact that there is no word here about treaty. It says that they should not—> —adopt policies or make engagements without the people knowing about them and the legislature passing on them.

May I now refer to another well-known volume called "The Liberal Way" written by J. W. Pickersgill, with a foreword written to it by the Prime Minister in April 1962. On page 133—

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether I could interrupt the hon. gentleman. I do not think he gave the correct title of that book.

Mr. Douglas: "The Liberal Party".

Mr. Pickersgill: I thought the hon. gentleman said "The Liberal Way".

Mr. Douglas: I am sorry. I meant "The Liberal Party".

Mr. Knowles: There is quite a difference.

Mr. Douglas: Yes. It has turned out to be the Liberal give-away.

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, no, it was sold.

Mr. Douglas: Well, the Liberal party has given itself away so palpably that it might well be called a Liberal give-away.

Then, on page 133, it says:

> The Liberal party believes that Canada can make a more appropriate and effective contribution to the joint defence of this continent and to the military alliance of the free world by strengthening the so-called conventional armaments of the Canadian forces than by seeking to become a very junior nuclear power with a limited supply of nuclear weapons which, in present circumstances, could not be under Canadian custody.

That is precisely what we are doing. We are becoming a junior partner in a nuclear complex with nuclear arms stationed on our soil, arms over which we do not have complete custody. I say it is sheer subterfuge for the Prime Minister or for any minister of the government to maintain that they do not need the consent of parliament and are not required to place before parliament the details of this agreement on security grounds. I draw the attention of the committee to the fact that the Polaris sales agreement between Great Britain and the United States signed on April 6, 1963, has been tabled in the United Kingdom house of commons. This agreement providing for the purchase of Polaris missiles by the United Kingdom government has been made completely public in a document which covers some 11 pages of fine print. In making this information available, the United Kingdom government did as one would expect a democratic government to do, namely to make all the facts available to members of parliament and allow them to express their opinions on the matter. I say that the action of this government in refusing to submit this agreement to parliament and in refusing to allow parliament to even see the agreement is an affront to this parliament, and an attempt to commit the Canadian people to a course of action without having secured the approval of their elected representatives.

Even worse is the fact that they insist that the agreement be treated as a security document. The elected representatives of the people sitting in this chamber do not even know the terms and conditions upon which these warheads have been received. We do not know what machinery has been set up for determining their use. Will a final decision to use these nuclear weapons rest with the commander in the field? In the case of NATO, will it rest with the commander of the NATO forces, or will the use of these nuclear weapons require the joint consent of the Prime Minister of Canada and the President of the United States? We do not know. We are simply told that this is a secret agreement which has been entered into by the government of Canada—an agreement which may have far reaching and serious implications for the people of Canada—but that their members of parliament are not to be allowed to know anything about it or to express any opinion concerning it.

The Liberal party has always talked loudly about its devotion to the supremacy of parliament. Well, that claim has a very hollow sound now. Just a little over a year ago, Liberal members, many of whom are now sitting across the way, made a great deal of noise about the Conservative administration levying import duties without referring the matter to parliament. We agreed with their criticism. We thought the imposition of these import duties should have been referred to parliament. But, surely, the signing of an agreement providing for the acquisition of nuclear warheads has far more serious implications for the people of Canada than did the import duties measure. For any party which professes, as the Liberal party does, to believe in the supremacy of parliament and control by parliament, to take the action they have taken in signing this agreement without reference to parliament, and refusing to let parliament see the agreement, is to be guilty of conduct contrary to the basic tenets of parliamentary democracy.

The second point I wish to make is that this agreement has been signed at a time when the whole international situation has changed and when defence requirements have radically altered. It is now apparent that the two great nuclear powers, the United States and the Soviet union, have reached a stalemate. The test ban treaty was the first step in reaching a rapprochement with regard to nuclear weapons. We are in the course of entering upon a phase of defence strategy which has already passed. Defence secretary McNamara made it clear what a relatively unimportant part nuclear warheads on Bomarc missiles play in the present world situation when he appeared before a congressional committee, as reported in the Toronto Star of March 29, in which the following story appears under a Washington dateline:

> Defence secretary McNamara says one of the uses of Bomarc anti-aircraft weapons is to draw enemy ballistic missile fire in the event of war. But he agrees that the Bomarc has turned out to be "a very expensive target" for this purpose.
> He said he would remove the Bomarcs altogether but for the fact that the annual maintenance costs are no more than $20 million and "I think we are getting our money's worth."

The article goes on:

> "If there were any real amount of money to be saved, I would propose taking them out," he told the congressional appropriations committee in closed-door hearings.

The story then continues:

> Rep. David Flood (D., Penna.) suggested that if the Bomarcs are pulled out, "we have stuck the Canadians for a whole mess of them and we have another problem on our border."

The fact is that the nuclear warheads which the government is now proceeding to acquire belong to a phase of military activity which is past. We have entered upon a new situation and military men are beginning to recognize this.

In this morning's Globe and Mail there is a report of a speech made by General Macklin. His views are reported as follows:

> Canada is throwing away billions of dollars on an ineffective, unco-ordinated defence system, a former adjutant-general of the Canadian Army said yesterday.
> Speaking at a luncheon meeting of the Optimist club of Toronto, Maj.-Gen. W. H. S. Macklin suggested unification of the three services and development of a fully-equipped mobile force capable of being moved anywhere at speed.

Later in the report it says:

> He suggested the air force should be equipped with transport to move the force, and that there should be tactical aircraft to help the army.

As a matter of fact, there are indications that the Minister of National Defence and some of this advisers are slowly coming around to a new concept of Canada's military role. It is certainly about time, because we have never clearly defined our military role, and for Canada to talk about having a nuclear role in the world of giants, when the two great nuclear powers already have stockpiled sufficient nuclear arms to destroy the human race ten times over, is sheer nonsense. Our role is a role, as military experts are now coming to recognize, of supplying a mobile, highly trained airborne army to provide service either under NATO or as part of a police force for the United Nations. The Toronto Star of Wednesday, September 4 last carried this news item:

> A new defence policy based on a small, mobile and airborne army with tactical air support is beginning to take shape, informed sources say.
> Object is to create a conventional multipurpose force which could serve the North Atlantic alliance or the United Nations. This will mean eventual integration of the armed forces into a single service, long an idea of Prime Minister Lester Pearson.

It goes on in the latter part of the article to say:

> Canada is expected to drop its jet interception role but maintain its detection and warning systems in North America and the North Atlantic in co-operation with the United States.
>
> The background to the emerging defence policy is the nuclear stalemate. Authorities here say the nuclear missile forces of United States and Russia are invulnerable to the extent that neither could knock out the other at the first blow. Thus neither would dare to attack the other.
> In these circumstances, officials see no meaningful nuclear role for Canada once the Voodoo jet interceptor and Bomarc anti-aircraft missile have served their time—another two or three years.

I think it is pretty apparent that the government, for some reason best known to itself, is entering into a military agreement which might have made some sense in the 1950's but which has no meaning at all in the 1960's. They are under the impression that the previous government three years ago made certain commitments. I have no desire to get into the argument whether commitments were or were not made. Let us at least give the present government credit that they think certain commitments were made. But surely it is the height of stupidity to continue to make agreements on the basis of commitments which were given when circumstances were entirely different from what they are today. The international situation has changed. Canada's defence role in the world has changed. Yet here is the government entering into an agreement which is a sheer waste of money and which will involve Canada in the expenditure of millions of dollars which could be better used.

Mr. Pugh: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Douglas: Yes.

Mr. Pugh: With regard to our having an agreement, was the hon. gentleman's view the same in January of this year?

Mr. Douglas: I am not sure what my friend is asking. My view has not changed since January.

Mr. Pugh: The hon. member has just finished saying that one should remain flexible in government as well, and that a person has a right to change his mind and also the government. Were you of that view in January of this year?

Mr. Douglas: I think that is the most muddleheaded question I have ever heard asked.

Mr. Pugh: Well, I am asking it.

Mr. Douglas: If my hon. friend wants to make a speech he can make one. There will be lots of time to take part in the debate. We will be very glad to hear what his views are on this question. Certainly anybody ought to have flexible views. I am simply saying that if the government feels that the previous administration made commitments under given circumstances this does not excuse them now continuing these commitments and entering into an agreement when circumstances have entirely changed. The international situation has changed. There is a thaw in the cold war. We now have a nuclear stalemate. Canada's defence role has completely altered, as all military experts now seem to be agreed, and at this time it is a sheer waste of money and the essence of stupidity to spend hundreds of millions of dollars preparing Canada for a nuclear role when there is no possibility at all of her being called upon to fill a nuclear role.

Therefore I want to conclude by urging the government to reconsider this matter and to submit the agreement regarding nuclear weapons to the parliament of Canada for its serious consideration. I also ask that they revise their defence policy in the light of changed circumstances so that it will fit in with the most effective role that Canada can play for the preservation of world peace.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, we have listened to a moderate speech by the leader of the party sitting close to the gangway. Because of some of the observations he has made it is important that we should set aright the procedural situation with regard to this matter. My hon. friend speaks as though the government had just announced a policy which it was preventing parliament from discussing, or in connection with which parliament had been denied the opportunity of expressing its views.

First of all, the hon. gentleman said that the government refused parliament the right to see the agreement which was signed with the United States on the 16th of August last. I am sure that on reflection my hon. friend will agree that is not the situation. The government has not refused parliament the right to see this agreement. Parliament yesterday decided that it was not—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —in the interests of the security of this nation or the security of the NATO alliance—

An hon. Member: Of the Liberal party.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —that an exchange of notes of this nature should be made public at this particular juncture. That was the decision of parliament yesterday based on a motion introduced by the right hon. gentleman who leads the official opposition.

Mr. Churchill: How did you vote on it?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What the government did yesterday is precisely what the Leader of the Opposition said was the right course to adopt when he was prime minister. The present Leader of the Opposition said in the house on February 20, 1959, as found on page 1223 of Hansard:

> We are confident that we shall be able to reach formal agreement with the United States on appropriate means to serve the common objective. It will of course be some time before these weapons will be available for use by Canadian forces.

Then the Leader of the Opposition went on to say:

> [Mr. Douglas.]
> The government, as soon as it is in a position to do so, will inform the house, within the limits of security, of the general terms of understanding which are reached between the two governments on this subject.

That is precisely what this government has done.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Not at all.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The right hon. gentleman says "not at all". We will see if that is not the case. On the 16th of August the Prime Minister of Canada announced that an agreement had been concluded with the United States in this matter and, in the terms referred to by the present Leader of the Opposition, the Prime Minister gave what information was consistent with security.

Mr. Douglas: What general terms did he use?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend has read the release. Those were the general terms. Those were the very terms underlined by the former prime minister in limitation on the information which, in the interests of security, could be given to the nation. It is not a case of the government of the right hon. gentleman, or of this government or any other Canadian government not trusting the membership of this house or the people of this country. There are others, however, who would be very interested in knowing the terms of this agreement.

I may say to the right hon. gentleman, knowing something of the role he played as prime minister in certain negotiations with the United States, I found it a little difficult to understand how he, in the light of his experience and position could have urged this house to persuade the government to produce the documents which he himself said on February 20, 1959, could not fully be produced because of the limitations imposed by security.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I ask the hon. gentleman this? Did he read the question the day before yesterday when I asked the Prime Minister whether he would bring before the house those portions that would not violate security, and he said no. I can only conclude, as I am sure he would conclude, that the selectivity was based on the political security of the government.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In a matter of this importance, I do not propose to engage in an emotional debate with my right hon. friend. I say to him, as a former prime minister of this country, that he knows quite well that to give a portion of some document would amount to production of the entire document in this particular case.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Not at all.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My friend says, "not at all". I ask him to recall his part, and that of the former government in negotiations, to examine the agreements that came before him and his colleagues, and to conclude, as I am sure he will, that the statement he has just now made is one that cannot and could not under any circumstances, in the interests of our security, be justified.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not agree with that at all.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend says this government has secured an agreement with the United States in a matter of great importance without giving this house the right to pass upon the government's policy. Let us examine the facts in this regard. In the month of January last, the Prime Minister, then leader of the opposition, in a speech in Toronto announced the policy of the Liberal party in regard to the proposal to enter into an agreement with the government of the United States for the storage in Canada of nuclear warheads for the use of Canadian forces in respect of certain weapons systems which would be valueless without the nuclear warheads. This was an announcement of policy and there was nothing secret about it.

Then, the government came into office on April 22. Shortly thereafter in this house, in the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, the Prime Minister announced the government's policy. I want to read what he said. His words are to be found in Hansard, page 65, for May 20, 1963.

> I can also state that regarding the obligation to discharge certain commitments for the common defence undertaken by the previous governments, the commitments to carry out certain roles which cannot be carried out effectively, as the right hon. gentleman has so often pointed out, without the use of nuclear ammunition for the warheads and weapons required for the role, in order to discharge these commitments we have entered into negotiations with the United States, taking up where the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues left off some time ago. We have begun these negotiations for a bilateral agreement between our two countries, without which no technical agreement can be made, for the joint control of nuclear warheads. The bilateral political negotiations to this end which were carried on for such a long time by the previous government have been resumed. They will cover defensive nuclear weapons systems for Canada, as well as other matters which have been the subject of previous discussions with the United States including, of course, the role of the air division and the use of the Honest John weapon with our forces attached to NATO in Europe.

This was a statement by the Prime Minister of Canada in the first speech he made in the first debate in this house after the present government was elected to office. It was in that very debate that my hon. friend moved the following amendment, as recorded on page 85 of Hansard for May 21, 1963:

> We regret that Your Excellency's advisers have indicated their intention of acquiring nuclear arms for Canadian forces, thereby lessening the chances for nuclear disarmament and increasing the danger of nuclear war.

My hon. friend took issue, as he had a right to do, and he did it with dignity and force. He took issue with the government's policy as announced by the Prime Minister. There was a vote on that amendment in this house and that vote sustained the position of the government. Therefore, when my hon. friend says that this parliament has had no opportunity of expressing its view on the decision of the government to enter into an arrangement with the United States concerning the storage of nuclear warheads in Canada for use by Canadian forces, he has overlooked what we decided in this house in the month of May last.

Mr. Douglas: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. If the hon. gentleman will look at my words he will see I did not say that the government had acted without parliament discussing the question. I said that they had acted without parliament having had any opportunity to express its opinion on this agreement.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Well, that kind of refinement, I am sure, will not really be taken seriously by the hon. gentleman or by other hon. members in this house. The policy is now embodied in the agreement, and we say that in the interests of security that agreement cannot be tabled in this house. It cannot be tabled in the parliament of any NATO country, for the reason I have mentioned, for the reason the right hon. gentleman himself mentioned in 1959, namely, security.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is misconstruing what I said.

The Chairman: Order, it being five o'clock I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the house may proceed to private members' business pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

PRIVATE BILLS

ALLSTATE LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

The house resumed from Tuesday, October 1, consideration of the motion of Mr. Ryan for the second reading of Bill No. S-28, to incorporate Allstate Life Insurance Company of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, since this bill seems to be a repeating one, brought forward every week during the hour reserved for private members' business, we realize here perhaps more than anywhere else that strangers need only have money to take over the Canadian economy. We will not stop repeating it here in this house until all hon. members present, representing all the Canadian people, are convinced that the company must have at least 25 per cent Canadian capital to operate in our country; otherwise, we have not even made the first step toward the repatriation of our economy. We have opposed this bill and we will oppose it again if we are not satisfied with its terms and conditions.

We agree to let this bill be referred to the committee on banking and commerce to know all the details and all the amendments they say they want to make. Let the authorities of that company be assured that our group will be watching for this bill on third reading and that if we are not satisfied with the proposed amendments, we pledge to reject it.

We think it is time this government should take its responsibilities. It is time you learn that you are here not only to tax, but to protect our Canadian institutions and the public generally.

We have had enough of the old parties making this parliament a mere taxing-machine allowing foreigners to become rich at our expense.

During the debate before third reading, Canadians will be able to judge between those who are protecting finance and those who are doing the duties for which the citizens have elected them.

I do not want to delay the study of this bill any further. We will give Allstate corporation an opportunity to become Canadian by allowing them to explain themselves. I also invite before this committee those who vilified our great French Canadians on television.

Concerning this bill, I think that, after a serious and extensive study, we will be able to make a decision once and for all on the life and death of such a company.

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, being one of those—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. To begin with, I must ask whether the hon. member has already spoken during this debate. The record available to the chairman shows that the hon. member had the floor during this debate on July 25 last. Therefore, he cannot speak a second time.

[The Chairman.]

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

SWEEPSTAKES

LEGISLATION TO AUTHORIZE PROVINCIAL SWEEPSTAKES FOR HOSPITALS AND UNIVERSITIES

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-21, with respect to hospitals and university sweepstakes.

[Translation]

He said: Mr. Speaker, let me begin by saying that it is with regret that we learned about the resignation of the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron) as whip. We knew the hon. member had very heavy responsibilities since he is also parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister and, as his colleagues say, he has done an excellent job.

May I also say how happy I am to see that the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Walker) has been named to replace the hon. member for Hull and to congratulate the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret), who will act as deputy whip. To both of them, my best wishes.

Mr. Speaker, I do hope that Bill C-21 will be passed by parliament. I feel it is time the Criminal Code be amended to enable the provinces to have their sweepstakes if they so desire.

At various times, I inquired from the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) if the government intended to amend the Criminal Code for the benefit of the provinces, at least those who may wish to hold sweepstakes. The minister went a bit off the track in his answers and gave me to understand that it was impossible for the government to amend the Criminal Code and thus allow the provinces to conduct sweepstakes if they wished to do so.

We know on this side of the house and members of the government also know that the premier of the province of Quebec, in his ultimatum to the federal government, asked that the Criminal Code be amended so that the province of Quebec might establish a sweepstake, in view of the fact that the provincial statutes already contained legislation to that effect.

I have been quite surprised, Mr. Speaker, to hear the answer given to me on some occasions by the Minister of Justice since, during the last election campaign, as evidenced in La Presse of March 4, 1963,—the hon.

member for Dollard (Mr. Rouleau), as his party's spokesman, said in Malartic the following:

A Liberal government would allow provincial lotteries (Mr. Rouleau)

Malartic—The Liberals are quite prepared to give the provinces absolute freedom in a field which can surely be of importance for many of them: that of provincial lotteries.

Following the election, April 8 next, a Liberal government, said yesterday in the federal parliament, the member for Dollard, Guy Rouleau, lawyer, will amend section 179 of the Criminal Code in order to allow the provinces, which will choose to do so, to set up provincial lotteries.

Speaking in Malartic, following the Liberal convention, the member indicated that the matter of a provincial lottery had been discussed on many occasions, especially in the province of Quebec, during the last few years.

Then, the hon. member proceeded along the same line.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder why the government, at the outset of this session did not announce, even in the speech from the throne, that it would introduce an amendment to the Criminal Code so that the provinces may have lotteries. Since the hon. member for Dollard was his party's spokesman during the last election, this is an official commitment. Either the hon. member for Dollard is not influential in his party, or the party has not fulfilled its election promises. Mind you, —it would not be the only time a promise made by this government would not have been fulfilled, Mr. Speaker. Moreover, the government whose friends are in power in Quebec should please the premier of the province of Quebec, offer him a gift for all the insults and abuses that province has been subjected to from the Minister of Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh) on the one hand, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) on the other hand, and even from the Prime Minister, (Mr. Pearson) as they constantly criticize the policy of the Quebec administration. The central government could then correct itself by acting in a positive way, that is in amending the Criminal Code.

Moreover, we shall see, Mr. Speaker, when the 12-month ultimatum has expired, which attitude Mr. Lesage will adopt. I say to the Quebec government: the federal government has already assumed rights, even without requesting the authorization of the provinces, including the province of Quebec. Now, I say that, when the 12-month ultimatum has elapsed, if the federal government has not amended the Criminal Code, the government of the province of Quebec should nevertheless set up lotteries. If Mr. Lesage follows this course of action, he will have the approval of Quebec citizens, in other words, if his ultimatum has not been heeded.

Mr. Speaker, I should not like to be too long. I know that certain members want to speak about this bill, but I wish it would be adopted.

There is at the present time—the Postmaster General (Mr. Denis) knows something about it—a black market of lottery tickets. I would not be surprised if all members in this house have or once had lottery tickets in their pocketbook.

Mr. Rouleau: Do you have some yourself?

Mr. Pigeon: I have had, and when I have the opportunity to buy some, I do. I say this most sincerely, because I am not going to lie in this house. I know that the hon. member for Dollard, in view of the speech he made in Malartic during the last election campaign, has bought some tickets, I am sure, and he probably has some on him now.

Mr. Rouleau: Mr. Speaker, I will not permit such a statement without taking issue with it. I do not have any lottery tickets with me and I never bought any, because that is illegal.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, have you noticed that humility.

An hon. Member: He is a Puritan.

Mr. Pigeon: Look at the shocked maid. In any case, Mr. Speaker, I hope that the government will allow the passing of this bill which is absolutely logical. The country has to withstand at present an outflow of several million dollars, which are going abroad. I hope that this bill will be approved so that the provinces who wish to initiate the sweepstakes they have in mind will be able to do so.

Should the federal government object—I repeat—should it refuse to amend the Criminal Code, I advise the provinces who wish to have sweepstakes to set them up just the same, for it would be illogical and ridiculous to do otherwise.

The state of New Hampshire is presently setting up sweepstakes in its own territory—

An hon. Member: I protest.

Mr. Pigeon: You are protesting?

An hon. Member: We'll all become protestants.

Mr. Pigeon: In any case, Mr. Speaker, I know that the government will be consistent and that it will keep the election promise made by the hon. member for Dollard and that once Bill C-21 is passed, the Criminal Code will at last be amended.

Mr. Guy Rouleau (Dollard): Mr. Speaker, I am very grateful to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) for giving me the opportunity to speak about this question.

We all know him. The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, as usual, thinks he is Don Quixote and tilts at windmills. In his premise, he said that the present government had insulted, through his Prime Minister and through cabinet members, the premier and the cabinet members of the province of Quebec.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I deny any such an assertion, for the present government wishes to co-operate with the governments of all provinces in the interest of the people of every province of this country. And the province of Quebec, if I am not mistaken, is part of the Canadian confederation.

It is true, Mr. Speaker, that during the last election campaign I, for one, recommended an amendment to our Criminal Code, in order to allow the provinces, if willing, to create a provincial lottery. If the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm had read, from beginning to end, the newspaper dispatch which he has mentioned and which was published by La Presse, on March 5, 1953, he would have seen that—

Mr. Pigeon: 1963.

Mr. Rouleau: I am sorry, I mean 1963—he would have seen that what I said was:

> The Liberal government, which Mr. Pearson will head after the April 8 election, after it seriously studies the problem, will only give back to the provinces one more of the rights they are entitled to.

In the Hansard of June 10, 1963, on pages 845 and 846, we read the answer of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) to a question asked by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm who wanted to know whether the government intended to amend the Criminal Code. The minister stated on that occasion: "I am carefully studying the question".

It is quite true, as I said, that during the election campaign, I advocated an amendment to the Criminal Code which would allow the provinces, if they so wished, to have a lottery within their borders. I still think that such an amendment would be a good thing and that all the provinces of confederation should benefit by it.

However, Mr. Speaker, I cannot help thinking that it is rather amusing to see the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm submitting such a bill today, while, during the six years the Conservatives were at the helm, he could easily have influenced the then government and persuaded it to amend the Criminal Code in the way he is now suggesting.

We are bound to think that either the hon. member never really attempted to put across his ideas in private talks or that he had no influence whatsoever over the Conservative government.

The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm speaks of the influence I could bring to bear on the present government. May I remind him that, in that field, things get done mostly through team-work and co-operation between all members of the house. We know for sure today that the member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm did not have much power in the Conservative gov ernment.

Indeed, what is, in the field under consideration, the record of the Conservative party which governed our country during six years? The previous government did nothing to amend the Criminal Code so as to enable the provinces to set up their own lotteries.

That is quite understandable when one considers that every single bill that was introduced during the Conservative regime to amend the Criminal Code was talked out not by Liberal members but by government members.

As an example—

Mr. Pigeon: Let the bill pass.

Mr. Rouleau: Wait. I have concrete evidence to support my allegations.

For instance, during the 1960-61 session my hon. friend introduced Bill C-18, but it was remorselessly buried, as reported in Hansard of that year. Now, it was not a Liberal member who talked out the bill but a Conservative.

That same year, a similar bill was sponsored by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Brown). That measure was given the six month hoist by none other than the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell), a Conservative.

In 1962, the former member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Brown) introduced another amendment to the Criminal Code and once again it was put off by a Conservative, the hon. member for Regina City (Mr. More).

The same year, a similar bill in the name of the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Smith) was talked out by the Conservative member for Acadia (Mr. Horner).

In spite of the fact that all those bills were talked out by Conservative members, if the hon. gentleman from Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm had had some influence with the government of the day and especially with the then minister of justice, he could have expressed his views to the government and convinced the latter that the Criminal Code should be amended to enable the provinces to set up their own lotteries—

Mr. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, will the hon. member allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. Rouleau: I will be glad to.

Mr. Ricard: Would the hon. member give us the names of the Liberal members who talked out a similar motion before 1957?

Mr. Rouleau: Mr. Speaker, I was just going to assess the Conservative party's record in that respect and give concrete evidence of what was done in that regard under a Conservative government. Knowing that the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot is a very talkative man, I am convinced that he will take part in the debate himself. If he wants to criticize the previous Liberal governments, he will have the opportunity to do so.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the hon. member a brief question.

The hon. member for Dollard seems honest in what he says. Therefore, I ask him, if he is sincere, particularly after the statement he made in Malartic, if he would advise the government to let that bill be adopted, in the interest of the Canadian people and the provinces who want it?

Mr. Rouleau: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member will let me get on with my remarks, I am convinced he will know quite soon what I am driving at and will get his answer.

I was saying that the hon. member for Joliette-L'Asssomption-Montcalm did not have much influence within the government that was headed by the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker).

And I find additional evidence to what I have said a while ago in the remarks of the minister of justice of that time, when questions were directed to him on the matter now before us. In reply to a question put to him by an hon. member on the government side, the minister of justice, as reported in page 1294 of Hansard for February 27, 1962, said this:

> Practically speaking, the question of amending the Criminal Code to authorize the organization of lotteries by provincial governments is obviously one which concerns all the provinces. It would therefore be difficult, if not improper, to get in touch with one province only, without consulting the others. We have not consulted them and I am therefore not in a position to make an official statement.

But the minister of justice was still more explicit the following year. In fact, in reply to a similar question directed to him by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher), he stated, as reported in page 3436 of Hansard for February 5, 1963:

> I have had some correspondence with Premier Lesage. In it, of course, I made no attempt to comment on the legality of such operations. Premier Lesage asked if the federal government was prepared to sponsor legislation to legalize lotteries conducted by provinces for revenue purposes. The reply I conveyed to him was that the government does not contemplate the introduction of any bill at the present session to amend the Criminal Code.

Mr. Speaker, if we judge by the answers given by the minister of justice of the time, one of the leaders of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, we realize that he did not have much influence on the Conservative government.

Mr. Speaker, my position is clear and definite. I believe I speak on behalf of my colleagues from the province of Quebec when I say that we are in favour of amending the Criminal Code in order to allow those provinces within the Canadian confederation that wish to do so to set up provincial lotteries.

In that connection, I refer to a statement made in 1961 by the present Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets). As reported on page 8 of the appendix to Hansard for March 10, 1961, he said:

> I see many problems at this time in the establishment of a federal lottery. We must have regard for the views expressed by some provinces which do not seem prepared to agree. Well, in Quebec, we are ready and I do not see why an amendment to the Criminal Code could not be introduced permitting the establishment of a lottery in order to give effect to the wish expressed by the people of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, we are now faced with a problem that is relatively easy to solve. We are up against enough difficult situations at the present time, and I feel that we should find an answer to the problem of provincial lotteries in order to give satisfaction to the provinces wishing to establish their own lottery.

As federal members of parliament, our first duty is towards our Canadian fellow citizens. Since we form part of a confederation, it is our duty to see that confederation is respected, that is, we should also act in the best interests of every province by amending the Criminal Code in the manner suggested by my hon. friend. By doing this, we would not be depriving any province of their rights, but we would be granting them what they want. Briefly, the provinces wishing to establish a provincial lottery will be able to do so if we amend the Criminal Code. As for those that do not wish to establish lotteries, they will not have to do so.

I am from the province of Quebec, and I know that the premier of my province expressed the wish to organize a provincial lottery to give assistance to the hospitals and to education.

May I point out at this time that the government of the province of Quebec under the leadership of Hon. Jean Lesage accomplished more for education and public health than was accomplished in the 16 years the province was led by a man about whom I will not talk since he has gone to his reward.

I do not regret any of the remarks I made in the last election campaign when I advocated an amendment to the Criminal Code enabling the provinces to establish lotteries.

I mentioned a moment ago the reply of the minister of justice on that point, and I am sure that after examining the whole file that data it contains will be of service to all those concerned.

I am sure that it will be under the government of Hon. Lester B. Pearson with a Liberal minister of justice from the province of Quebec that the Criminal Code will be amended to allow all the provinces who so desire to establish a provincial lottery.

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I shall be brief, so that a vote can be taken on the bill, as the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) requested. I take pleasure in supporting the bill on my own behalf, as on the whole it respects provincial autonomy.

It is clear, as the hon. member for Dollard (Mr. Rouleau) so properly said that we, in Quebec, want the matter to be settled once and for all so we may stop talking about it.

The sponsor of the bill may be assured of my support. Unfortunately, he lingered, as usual, over political and partisan considerations and, therefore, incurred a rather sharp reply from his opponent. I deplore such things, but I may assure him of my support as member for Lake St. John.

I approve the bill because, to my mind, it is excellent and will have splendid results. It will enable us to keep a small part of that revenue which flows regularly out of this country every year. Some people may be somewhat embarrassed about the situation, but I think that lottery tickets are sold in all Canadian provinces. We see, from press reports, that individuals, residing from Vancouver to Halifax make considerable profits at this game. This means that lotteries are accepted by people, in a general way, everywhere in Canada.

I think that an amendment to the Criminal Code would enable those provinces who wish to do so to pass a similar legislation and insert it in their own statutes. This would be a true observance of provincial autonomy which would enable the provinces to make their own decisions in the matter.

That is all I have to say and as I have already said, I support the bill.

[Text]

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): I should like to add a few words to the discussion of this proposed legislation. I think the measure before us is non-political in the sense that members in all parties have their own views for or against the principle of extending the licensing of lotteries. I am in favour of the proposal which is before us. I am in favour of extending government control over sweepstakes and lotteries. It seems to me that when thousands of Canadians participate every year in the purchase of lottery and sweepstake tickets, with the result that millions of dollars leave our country, a situation is created which might well be remedied by legislation such as is before us. Indeed, money would be encouraged to flow into the provinces from sources outside this country as people abroad bought Canadian sweepstake or lottery tickets.

As things stand we already have in Canada something like 28 operations which are in conflict with the present law. The results of public opinion polls across the country continue to show that in a large measure the public would support the steps contemplated in the bill now before us. It represents, of course, a step toward government operation and legalization of sweepstakes. I am opposed, as are other members of my party, to hospital or educational boards setting themselves up to derive direct benefit from the sale of lottery tickets. Like my colleagues, I think this field should be strictly one for taxation. However, I approve the idea of extending to the provinces the right to license lotteries which would bring in money for general revenue purposes. It is clear we have already accepted in principle in the various provinces the idea of sweepstakes or lotteries, whether it is churches which promote bingo games or governments which derive provincial revenue from the operation of such things as parimutuel racing. Extension to the provinces of the right to run sweepstakes and lotteries would simply provide for a do-it-yourself tax which would allow the people to have a little fun while contributing something to provincial revenues.

I have much satisfaction in supporting the proposal before us. Having said that, I shall resume my seat in the hope that the house may be encouraged to come to a vote.

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, in rising at this time I should like to advise the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) at the outset that I am 100 per cent in favour of his motion. I sincerely hope the government headed by our present Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) will bring in laws and regulations to enact this bill, that is, to amend the Criminal Code so that the attorneys general of the provinces may authorize sweepstakes on behalf of universities and hospitals.

I must say, however, it seems somewhat ridiculous that we should be debating a principle which is largely accepted throughout the country, even though it may not have been legalized. No fewer than three members of the federal cabinet have already admitted by their actions that drawings or lotteries are acceptable to them. There was an occasion not so long ago when a member of the cabinet rose in his place and reporting on two identical bids which had been received in respect of a large amount of concrete necessary for the South Saskatchewan dam, advised this house that since he did not know how to settle the question he intended to put the two bids in a hat and make a drawing. Drawings and lotteries are the same thing.

Another cabinet minister, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) himself, the hon. gentleman who is responsible for enforcing the Criminal Code, has also expressed an attitude, if only indirectly. I was interested to read in the Ottawa Journal, a paper which is widely read by hon. members of the house, an article on June 26 listing the names of three holders of Irish sweepstakes tickets. Included among the list of ticket holders printed on page 41 of that newspaper we find, in the second paragraph:

> One of the ticket holders in Cyril Rich, 34, 41 Ashburn Drive, an employee of the Justice Department. He holds a ticket on Vic Mo Chroi.

I personally drew the matter to the attention of the Minister of Justice and I wondered whether the hon. gentleman would be congratulating Mr. Rich for having secured a lucky ticket or whether he would be condemning the man for breaking the law of the land. I received a smile in reply. A day or two later a picture of Mr. Rich appeared in the Ottawa Citizen, again giving his name and address. He had won something like $30,000. My congratulations to him. I would simply point out that the Minister of Justice took no action and we can therefore take it that what is being done by the people of Canada in this regard is being condoned by the Department of Justice. Frankly, I should like to see their actions legalized.

Then we come to the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill). He, too, approves lotteries, drawings, or games of chance. We have a member sitting in this house today who was elected on the flip of a coin, as was admitted in a widely publicized statement by the returning officer. If this hon. gentleman can hold his seat on the flip of a coin after all that publicity, and if the Secretary of State takes no action, I maintain that yet another member of the cabinet is approving games of chance and is in favour of altering the aspect of the law with regard to lotteries which Mr. Pigeon would like to have legalized throughout Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I be permitted to remind the hon. member that he should not refer to another hon. member by name but by the constituency he represents.

Mr. Cowan: I have in my hand three tickets on the Cambridgeshire, the date of which is to be announced in the public press any day. I know of no reason why I should conceal the fact that as a member of parliament I buy these tickets. I would point out that in two of the provinces of Canada the attorneys general are now conducting lotteries. I am not the greatest moose hunter in the world but I am an ardent one and I have had many a happy fall hunting season in the area which is represented by my good friend, the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Habel). I have often hunted there and I expect to hunt again this year.

When I was speaking the other day to a member from New Brunswick about my moose hunting hopes for this fall he said to me, "You are lucky; you must have won the lottery". I said to him, "Lottery? What has that got to do with moose hunting?" He said, "Down in New Brunswick people who want to go moose hunting are so numerous that the government of the province regulates them. These people make application for the right to hunt, send in their fee, a drawing is made by the New Brunswick government and the first couple of hundred names drawn are given moose hunting licenses." People win the opportunity of going moose hunting in the province of New Brunswick. This has been going on for some years and it is known as a draw in the province of New Brunswick.

I hold in my hand page 4 of yesterday's Montreal Gazette. The Canadian Press reports from Quebec city that 37 moose have already been killed in Laurentide park, but the interesting thing about this story is the last two sentences.

> The Quebec government has allowed a special short season in the park since last year. Only 300 hunters are allowed into the park, and they are chosen by lot before the season opens.

If the law forbids attorneys general to conduct lotteries, I wonder under what pretence the attorneys general of New Brunswick and Quebec are O.K.'ing the drawing by lot of moose hunting licences in those two areas.

In the province of Ontario the little town of Penetanguishene on Georgian bay has organized, as a wonderful pastime and business developer, one of the largest and greatest winter carnivals held annually in Canada. It is now in its seventh or eighth year, and each year thousands of people come. The feature of this winter carnival is fishing through the ice. For $1 the people who come there are given the necessary bait, a small fishing line and a small rod and they fish through the ice for a period of two hours. The person catching the largest fish wins a boat and outboard motor valued at over $1,000.

Some people who did not like the idea of a boat and motor being given away for the largest fish protested the matter to the attorney general of the province of Ontario. I should like to tell you what the Hon. Kelso Roberts, attorney general of Ontario at that time, had to say. He said that the Penetanguishene winter carnival, where a boat and motor are given away for the largest fish produced in the fishing derby, is "the largest legal lottery in Canada" and he was unable to take any action as attorney general of Ontario because in his opinion it was legal. He termed it "the largest legal lottery in Canada".

I would also refer to Ralph Day, a former mayor of the city of Toronto where I reside, and who is still prominent in public life. At one time he was the chief magistrate of the city, and I emphasize the fact that he was the chief magistrate. However, after his term in office was over and he retired into the shade, where ex-mayors reside he bought some Irish sweepstake tickets, as I do and as I believe the majority of Canadians do, and he won a $100,000 prize. My hat is off to the ex-chief magistrate of the city of Toronto. I welcome his good fortune. I trust he has enjoyed his winnings. But I ask hon. members: What action has the federal government taken against the former chief magistrate of the city of Toronto? It is no trouble to find him. Everybody knows where he is. He is a member of the Toronto Transit Commission at present and the government could locate him without any difficulty whatsoever.

I have shown that the purchase of lottery tickets or taking part in drawings is recognized by Canadians from coast to coast and I have mentioned men prominent in public life who should know this is against the Criminal Code. I might point out that at the first Penetanguishene winter carnival the boat and motor were presented to the successful winner, a resident of the city of Barrie, by the then deputy speaker of the House of Commons, the late William Robinson. Following his death his constituency has been represented by the present member and I should like to point out that the hon. member for Simcoe East (Dr. Rynard) has always been a regular attendant at the Penetanguishene winter carnival along with me. We enjoy the day we spend together at Canada's largest legal lottery.

After 40 years in the newspaper business I do not care to mention the names of newspapers, but another interesting aspect with regard to lotteries is that some of these papers write thundering editorials condemning lotteries as a terrible drain on the public purse and a detriment to the morals of the nation. The papers that write the most thundering editorials, of course, are the ones that run the numbers of the tickets drawn in the Irish sweepstakes in order that they may increase the sales of their papers.

In fact, I know of one paper that every year sells thousands of extra copies to one of the biggest sweepstakes tickets operators in Canada. He has an interesting use for these papers. He mails them to the United States because they contain a list of the numbered tickets drawn. It is illegal in the United States for any newspaper to publish the numbers of the successful tickets in draws, so this man takes these Canadian newspapers and mails them to his sales agents in the United States, of whom there are thousands. He says, for example, "See, in the state of Ohio you are selling tickets numbered A1267532 and so on, and you will notice that tickets very close to that number are in the list in this Canadian paper I have sent you. Show it to the people in Ohio so they will know they are getting the real McCoy and are buying the real Irish sweepstakes tickets." The amazing thing is that this paper, which sells thousands of extra copies, at the same time condemns lotteries as being immoral.

Most hon. members know that in 1956 Great Britain introduced national premium bonds. I have here the parliamentary debates for April and May, 1956 at which time Prime Minister Macmillan introduced the national premium bonds and it can be seen here that Lady Tweedsmuir endorsed them and persuaded Mr. Macmillan to expand the sale of these bonds into the commonwealth countries. She said that their sale in commonwealth countries would tighten the bonds of empire. Maybe it does but, as a former speaker said, it takes money out of Canada which remains in Great Britain for some years.

These premium bonds bear no interest. Those who buy them do so on the basis of chance. It is all right for the moralists to tell you and me that is is wrong to rely on chance. True. In the ninth chapter of Ecclesiastes we read in the tenth verse:

> Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might.

That is a good injunction and I hope all will take it to heart. But in the very next verse the writer of Ecclesiastes, the wisest man that ever lived, says:

> I saw... that the race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong, neither yet bread to the wise, nor yet riches to men of understanding, nor yet favour to men of skill; but time and chance happeneth to them all.

All my life I have been forced to listen to longwinded statements by puritans decrying the evil influences that would emanate from the legalizing of lotteries in Canada, which influences would in time undermine the entire moral fabric of our Canadian nation and ultimately lead to the disappearance of this great country as we know it. Always these puritanical folk have stressed that if only the people of this country would follow the Biblical injunction to tithe their earnings every week then, ipso facto, there would be more than enough money for all good works, including hospitals and universities as mentioned in this bill. But, they urge, if people are allowed to purchase lottery tickets, then they would not accept the obligation to tithe their earnings and the country would suffer from the lack of good works.

All my life I have been hearing this sort of argument, and all my life the taxes imposed on the people by themselves—because in a democracy all taxes are in the final analysis imposed on the people by the people—have been climbing and climbing and climbing. Now they have reached such a point that today finance ministers and provincial treasurers reiterate that the rate of taxation has finally reached the breaking point and they do not know where to turn for more revenue. But I would point out to you, Mr. Speaker, and to all within the sound of my voice, that as the years have rolled along more and more of the good works that are demanded of us are being performed by the people under the heading of taxation, rather than church givings. If you will stop to analyse the division of the moneys raised in taxes today you will be amazed and pleasurably surprised at the vast amounts that are devoted to good works.

Gone are the days when hospitals are erected only under the protection of religious organizations. Gone are the days when a hungry man could only hope for succor by calling at the parsonages or rectories of the nation. Gone are the days when instruction could only be secured from the educated clergy who introduced schools and universities in this country. Today the cost of hospitals comes primarily out of the taxes of the country. Our annual levies are spent in erecting schoolhouses and universities across the land and relief or welfare is available to those in need from government operated agencies.

If you will consider the vast amounts of money spent today by municipal, provincial and federal governments in the dispensation of welfare, in the administration of justice, in the relief of widows, orphaned children, prisoner rehabilitation, workmen's compensation, unemployment insurance, safety on the waterways of Canada, safety on the highways, you will see that God-fearing Canadians from coast to coast are to be counted "among the blessed of our Father, for their works do follow them."

Paul tells us in his great epistle to the Hebrews, chapter 7, verse 5, "They . . . who receive the office of the priesthood have a commandment to take tithes of the people", and in the 27th chapter of Leviticus we read, "And all the tithe of the land whether of the seed of the land or of the fruit of the tree is the Lord's; it is holy unto the Lord".

The practice of tithing is a blessed one but we are also urged "to heal the sick, cleanse the lepers." We are advised in St. Matthew's gospel that on judgment day the Lord shall say to many, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world for . . . I was sick and ye visited me . . . Then shall the righteous answer him saying: Lord, . . . when saw we thee sick . . . and came unto thee? And the King shall answer and say unto them, verily I say unto you, inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." In all reverence I say that the Lord will not ask you whether you tithed through a church or paid for your good works through taxes which were devoted to good works, but will bless you for having healed the sick, cleansed the lepers and visited the fatherless in their affliction, even if it was under the guise of government operated welfare agencies.

I say, Mr. Speaker, with unlimited admiration for the people of Canada, that if they are given due recognition for the manner in which they spend their income through taxes for good works they are tithing every day and every year. Statisticians provoke me when I read from time to time that one of them has uncovered the fact from income tax reports that the charitable givings of the people of Canada are 2 per cent or 3 per cent or some such distressingly low figure. But do those long-faced mathematicians stop for a moment to calculate how much of the income of those income tax paying Canadians has already been spent in charitable endeavours through the medium of their municipal, provincial or federal governments? Seldom if ever, I have to answer.

Surely, if the taxpayers of Canada are meeting their obligation of tithing through their own taxes, the tax exemptions which they grant to churches and local charities and the share they pay of corporation taxes, plus their givings, they are entitled to "a little flutter" for themselves, if they so choose. I support the bill wholeheartedly.

Mr. J. J. Greene (Renfrew South): Mr. Speaker, we do not have too much time today to cover the many points pertaining to the bill. I do want to bring before the house a little of the history of lottery legislation which I think might be pertinent and interesting to the members of the house before they go so far as to vote on the bill.

In my research, Mr. Speaker, I determined that the first time that lotteries were ever invoked by any government was by the government of France in the early eighteenth century. They were suggested to the government of France, in fact propounded and operated for the government of France, by a gentleman by the name of Casanova who is better known for activities of another type. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, whether there is any affinity between the sponsor of this bill in this house and his historical antecedent Casanova, who introduced the bill before the government of France. I point out that in a book in which Casanova tells how he introduced this bill to the government of France he says he was enjoined to raise $30 million for a military school. The government wished to get this sum without a charge on the state or emptying the treasury. Casanova answered that it was God alone who had the creative power. Casanova, out of his genius, evolved a lottery such as the hon. gentleman is doing here and obviously he, along with Casanova, has the divine, creative power.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Since all the hon. members agree, I would ask that the question be put immediately.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member must admit that there is no question of privilege here.

[Text]

Mr. Greene: I might point out that at the same time Casanova was suggesting this piece of legislation to the government of France by means of which a lottery would be created, he was told by one of the officers of the government that the government would lose on the first lottery because this would be an incentive to the people to invest even further sums in the lotteries in the future.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order; the hour appointed for private members' business having expired, the house will now resume the business interrupted at five o'clock.

[Mr. Cowan.]

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

The Chairman: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, in challenging the refusal of the government to table the storage warheads agreement of August 16, has cited the United Kingdom Polaris agreement which contains 11 pages of detailed information. I say to him that this is quite a different matter and one that does not involve the disclosure of classified information. It deals with the acquisition of weapons delivery systems and is comparable to our unclassified agreements with the United States to acquire the Bomarc and the Voodoo.

With regard to the former, that is the Bomarc, the details were given by the government, and that document is to be found in the Canada treaty series. I regret I do not have the date. The one dealing with the Voodoo, which is part of the triangular swap deal, was published as No. 5 of the Canada treaty series, of June 12, 1961. None of these involved the disclosure of information which could be prejudicial to national security.

In the course of his remarks the hon. gentleman said that Canada was becoming a junior partner in arrangements to establish nuclear weapons on our soil without our having complete control over them. The hon. gentleman, for whom I have a high regard, will not misunderstand me when I say I thought this was a very strange argument to come from him, because of his sincere desire, which I share, that there should be a limit on the proliferation of nuclear weapons.

The logic of my hon. friend's argument is that Canada should have insisted on complete national control over the warheads for the Voodoo and the Bomarc, but the disastrous effect of any such insistance on our part would be to breach a principle underlying all U.S.A. and NATO arrangements concerning nuclear weapons, and which has been unanimously endorsed by the United Nations in the Irish resolution opposing the dissemination of nuclear weapons. Therefore I say that I find this argument coming from him to be a very strange one indeed.

We are not, by the agreement the government signed on August 18, acquiring nuclear weapons. We are not joining the nuclear club. The custody of these nuclear weapons continues to be with the United States. In no sense of the word can we be accused on the basis of this agreement, which has to do with the storage of nuclear weapons for defensive purposes on this continent, and in the case of the CF-104 in Europe as in any way participating in an expansion of the nuclear club.

When my hon. friend says that we do not even know what the arrangements are, to the extent that these arrangements can be spelled out without violating the principles of security I would refer him to the release to which he drew our attention today. The final paragraph of it contains the kind of information, and the only kind of information which the right hon. Leader of the Opposition said in 1959 could be given—

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is a misinterpretation of my remarks.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —when he presaged what would happen. That is what the right hon. gentleman said. I have reread what he said and I cannot agree with the observation which he now makes. Here is what the release says:

> When the stockpiles are established, the warheads will remain in United States custody, and for this purpose small units of United States custodial personnel will be stationed at the Canadian storage sites, at bases which will of course remain under Canadian command and control. With custody remaining with the United States, the arrangement does not add to the numbers of governments having nuclear weapons at their independent disposal.

—which is the purport of the Irish resolution.

> It is also to be noted that provision is made for the application at all times of the most stringent safety measures. Finally, these nuclear warheads cannot be used operationally without the authorization of the Canadian government. Joint control is thus assured.

My hon. friend says that the argument on which the government bases its case, namely, that commitments were made by the previous administration, is no excuse for going on with the role. I would ask him to be good enough to recall what I placed on Hansard when I reported the conclusions of the NATO ministerial meeting of last May. What I said will be found in Hansard of May 27 last at page 305, and I think what I said then is relevant to the discussion now before us:

> I want to make perfectly clear that Canada has undertaken no new commitments at the meeting just concluded. It is, however, the policy of this government to take the steps needed to make it possible for the Canadian forces to discharge the role accepted for them by the previous government. This was as long ago as 1959. That role would not disappear if Canada failed to carry it out; all that would happen would be that some other member or members of the alliance would have to shoulder the obligation in our place.
> The kind of forces Canada agreed to contribute were to meet part of an established NATO military requirement, and I am sure that no hon. member of this house would wish Canada to be placed in the position where it would be foisting upon others a task voluntarily assumed by Canada through the former government as part of the collective defence effort of the alliance.

So, I believe the argument of commitment is relevant. The honour of the nation was at stake. The extent of our participation in the alliance is involved. The question of our relations, not only with the United States but with the other members of the NATO alliance, is definitely involved. These were the considerations that the right hon. gentleman opposite I am sure had in mind when he spoke about this matter as he did in 1959 and which we, confronted with the responsibility, had to consider with regard to this very important matter.

The hon. gentleman said today, and I can well understand this observation, that since the international situation seems to have changed, the nuclear role was now meaningless. I will at once admit that if one could see the evolving events following the signing of the test ban agreement, he might find some comfort in the observations of the hon. gentleman. But what are the facts? The facts are that the test ban agreement, important achievement that it is, marking an obvious and sincere detente, I think, between the Soviet union and the United States in particular, the Soviet union and the United Kingdom, the United States and the western world generally, was made possible not only because of a willingness on the part of the Soviet union to sign this agreement with regard to the three environments involved, but it was encouraged strongly, I suggest, by the events of last November arising over what Mr. Gromyko called the other day in the United Nations the Caribbean situation or, more particularly, the situation arising out of the placing of offensive nuclear weapons on the soil of Cuba not far from the shores of North America, and also by the fact that the Soviet union is absorbed with other important considerations.

I say all this without in any way wishing to depreciate the extent of the steps that have been taken in the newly evolving understanding between the Soviet union and the west. But I think it may well be argued that we have been able in part to achieve this happy situation, which we hope will continue to grow, as a result of the fact that we in the west were able to argue from a position of strength. In the face of the present world situation one must not forget that this situation governs international relations, regrettable as that may be.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman mentioned something about the efforts being made to reduce the nuclear armaments that now confront both east and west. All of us in this country are anxious to see progress made in the field of disarmament. But the nuclear test ban treaty is not a disarmament treaty. It is an arrangement outside of the consideration that now governs the deliberations of the 18 nations who have been conferring in Geneva and who, I hope, shortly after the conclusion of the disarmament discussions in the present general assembly of the United Nations will return to their task. I do not deny that the test ban treaty may be an encouragement for success in these disarmament deliberations. But does anyone seriously argue that the policy of the government of Canada is inconsistent in any way with the desire of this country and of the people of the west under conditions of security to minimize the occasion of war by accident or by miscalculation merely because we resort to steps which I believe have been partly responsible for our ability to sit down at the bargaining table and bargain from a position of strength?

If one were to adopt that argument, he would have to apply it to every member of the NATO alliance; and it must not be forgotten that in the important talks which have been taking place between the three great powers in Europe, two of them are members of the NATO alliance and share much greater burdens in that alliance than does Canada, great as is our obligation and burden. We will work for disarmament. We will recognize the difficulty of achieving it in the face of an absence of decision with regard to the major political problems that divide east and west. But we will pursue every course that we can, through our spokesman in the person of General Burns, to try and bring about some understanding that will add to the detente which now seemingly is under way between the Soviet union and the nations of the west.

I would suggest that there is reason for optimism. There is reason for believing that some progress can be made. There is reason for believing that it can be made before the meeting in Geneva of the 18 states of the disarmament committee shortly after the general assembly of the United Nations. There are three areas now in this field of disarmament in which I think we should strive for agreement at the earliest possible moment. These have been mentioned by the President of the United States, they have been referred to by the foreign minister of the Soviet union, and the day before yesterday they were underlined by Lord Home, the foreign minister for the United Kingdom. They are, first, an agreement by the United States and by the Soviet union for the outlawing of nuclear weapons in outer space. Second, the establishment of control posts and inspection teams on both sides of the iron curtain; and third, steps to be taken for the non-dissemination of nuclear weapons. Those are the three areas of possible agreement, one of them, I hope within the course of the next two or three months, the other two possibly only at Geneva. They are far from being a comprehensive disarmament arrangement but they do represent important steps. The one having to do with the placing of inspection teams would serve to eliminate the possibility of surprise attack. In the growing understanding, which I believe to be solid and which I hope will continue to be firm and represent a sincere desire on both sides, we must recognize the limitations which confront those countries who have not yet had placed before them the ultimate result of this detente. So I say to the hon. gentleman—

Mr. Churchill: Will the minister permit a question? I am just wondering, with regard to the third area in the disarmament conference proceedings, the prevention of the further dissemination of nuclear weapons, would he say that Canada is now going to be able to argue from strength, having agreed to have nuclear weapons placed on her soil?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Certainly. Nothing that we are doing in the policy that has been announced by the government, as I said a moment ago, is contrary to the Irish resolution which deals with the non-dissemination of nuclear weapons. There is nothing inconsistent between the policy of this government and that resolution. We have not joined the nuclear club. The custody of these weapons will be, and will continue to be with, the United States. It is only when there is a question of operational use that the element of joint control arises.

These are the facts. I know my hon. friend, is sincere in this matter. Over many years I have had with him a community of interest in this problem. He and I and a former member for Greenwood, Mr. Denton Massey, went as young members from this house to Geneva to join with the voices of other young people from this country and the world to try to bring about some understanding between peoples of various countries on both sides of the iron curtain. Nothing that we are doing in this policy, nothing that this government, headed by the right hon. gentleman who has done so much for peace and for the United Nations, is doing can in any way be regarded as an abrogation of these ideals and these former efforts.

Mr. Churchill: I wonder if the hon. gentleman would permit one more question for clarification. What does he mean by the dissemination of nuclear weapons? Does he mean the dispersal of them in other countries than the United States, Great Britain and Russia, or is there some other meaning attached to this term?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, Mr. Chairman, there is no hidden meaning. The nondissemination of nuclear weapons is defined in the resolution introduced by the ambassador for Ireland at the United Nations two years ago. Canada subscribed to that resolution. An analysis of the resolution will show that present government policy is perfectly consistent with it. That resolution sought to limit the number of nations with nuclear weapons under independent control. Only four countries in the world now have that kind of nuclear capacity. Canada is not one of them. As I have argued tonight, I hope sincerely and with moderation, that is the position of the government. I believe that is the position of this house. That is the position which is embodied in the government's policy.

Mr. Churchill: We are just a chore boy for the United States.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I intend to detain the committee for only a few minutes. I just want to say that in my opinion the minister has made a very sincere attempt to defend a position which is indefensible. He tells this committee that, having himself on behalf of the government signed an agreement for the acquisition of nuclear arms for Canadian forces, this does not make Canada a nuclear power; nor does it entail Canada joining the nuclear club.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Would the hon. gentleman permit me to make one intervention here? I did not say that we had an agreement for acquiring nuclear weapons. I said we had an agreement with the United States with regard to the storage of nuclear weapons for Canadian forces.

Mr. Douglas: The Secretary of State for External Affairs has signed on behalf of the government an agreement under which Canada acquires nuclear warheads on Canadian soil under the custody of United States military forces. He says that this does not mean we have become a nuclear power and it does not mean we have joined the nuclear club. I wonder whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs really thinks that anyone will accept this kind of hocus pocus. The government of Canada may say that this does not make us a nuclear power and that it does not mean we have joined the nuclear club, but certainly the attitude of other nations will be that we have become a nuclear power and that we have joined the nuclear club. The mere fact that these nuclear weapons are under the partial custody of the United States does not remove the fact that they are on Canadian soil and are in the hands of Canadian forces.

May I remind the committee that it is not many months ago that nuclear weapons were placed in Cuba; they were not in the hands of Cuban forces, they were in the hands of Soviet forces. This did not stop the United States and ourselves and other members of the western alliance from being alarmed that nuclear arms were in Cuba. We did not take the position that because nuclear arms were in the custody of Soviet forces Cuba had not joined the nuclear club and constituted no threat to western hemispheric security. Not at all; we took the position that they should get those nuclear arms out of Cuba, and get them out fast. The minister is not fooling anyone by saying that, because these warheads are in United States custody, this does not put us in the class of being members of the nuclear club or make us members of a nuclear society. As a matter of fact it is only a year and a half ago that the Liberal party was taking the position that the acquisition of nuclear arms by the Conservative administration would have made Canada a nuclear power and would have put her into the nuclear club.

The other thing is that the Secretary of State for External Affairs made mention of the fact that I had criticized or referred to our being a junior member of a nuclear complex with the United States. I certainly was not suggesting that nuclear arms should be in Canada solely under Canadian control. My statement at that time related to a quotation from the book "The Liberal Party" written by the Hon. J. W. Pickersgill, in which he said that the Liberal party was opposed to accepting nuclear weapons, not only because it was not a suitable role for Canada and would lessen the chances of peace, but because there was no possibility of Canada having custody, and therefore we would be surrendering part of our national sovereignty. My objection was to Canada's surrendering part of its national sovereignty without reference to parliament.

The secretary of state has gone all around the subject and not dealt with the main question I raised. I was not saying that we had never discussed nuclear arms in this house.

I agree that the government went to the country last April and that the present Prime Minister, as leader of the Liberal party, announced that if his government were elected they were prepared to enter into some type of agreement for nuclear arms. They came back to this house with the largest group. But I certainly deny that they got a mandate from the Canadian people. They are a minority government. I also agree that in the speech from the throne debate this general question was discussed and was voted on. What I am saying is that having entered into a specific agreement, and particularly an agreement signed by a minority government, that agreement ought to be submitted to parliament for approval and parliament should know the terms and conditions under which we have been committed.

It seems to me amazing that a party which has talked so much about the supremacy of parliament should now be beating all around the bush talking about disarmament and the hopes for the future, talking about everything except the subject relevant to this discussion, namely, why has the government not given this parliament an opportunity to approve and ratify this agreement? The President of the United States, who under their constitution has far broader powers than has the Prime Minister of Canada, would not dare enter into an agreement like this committing the United States to a certain course of international action without first submitting the matter to the congress of the United States.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Would my hon. friend permit me to point out that he is talking about something else. This agreement, for instance, is not being put forward for the examination of the congress of the United States, just as it is not being put before parliament in specific terms, consistent with its classification as a secret document.

Mr. Douglas: That is very apparent, Mr. Chairman. The United States already has the legislation which has made it a nuclear power, and the United States already has the legislation by which it can grant nuclear warheads to other nations under bilateral agreement. The United States does not have its status altered in any particular by virtue of this agreement; but I suggest that the signing of this agreement has altered our status in the eyes of the world. It has altered our commitments, and these commitments ought not to have been entered into on behalf of the Canadian people without reference to the elected representatives of the Canadian people.

Mr. Winkler: The admission having been made that we have now sacrificed a degree of our sovereignty under this agreement, I am wondering whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs may not be able to say that the reason for not wishing to disclose the full terms of this agreement to the house indicates that there is a further and more serious loss of sovereignty within that agreement.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In answer to that question, I would deny the hon. member's initial observation about the loss of sovereignty. With regard to what he said later, he knows perfectly well the limitations which are placed on anyone with regard to a classified document. I recall to him the words of his own leader spoken in this house on February 20, 1959, which were:

> We are confident we shall be able to reach formal agreement with the United States an appropriate means to serve a common objective. It will, of course, be some time before these weapons are available for use by Canadian forces. The government——that is, the government of the right hon. gentleman, as of that day—

> —as soon as it is in a position to do so, will inform the house within the limits of security of the general terms of understanding which are reached between the two governments on this subject.

That is exactly what we have done.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is exactly what you have not done.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask if the United States government has asked for this document to be kept secret, or whether this decision was reached by the Canadian government of its own accord?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This is a classified document and that secrecy is observed by every NATO country with regard to its own people and its own legislature.

Mr. Hales: I am sorry to interrupt such an interesting discussion as the one which is before the committee at the present time but I should like to take this opportunity to protest another of the ill-conceived and discriminatory pieces of legislation which have gone to make up the Pearson plan. I refer to the legislation setting up designated or distressed areas in Canada as announced in a press release on September 6 by the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Industry. At that time some 35 designated or distressed areas in Canada would qualify, it was stated, for special measures of federal assistance.

I point out, first of all, that this was announced in a press release. That is how we seem to find out about most things. I had to get my copy by coming to Ottawa; I do not think any hon. member of this house received a copy of the release. I know that some hon. members were very much interested in this question as it affects south-western Ontario. I am thinking, in particular, of the hon. member for Waterloo South who, I am sorry to learn, is ill and unable to be with us. I know that the hon. member for Perth, the hon. member for Oxford, the hon. member for Wellington-Huron, Waterloo North and others did not receive copies of this press release.

Even the mayors of the municipalities concerned were not notified. What did they have to say? I should like to read from the Guelph daily Mercury of September 12, in which the mayor of Guelph had this comment to make:

> The federal government should at least tell the public what constitutes a depressed area, what special considerations are involved and when this became effective.

> When the depressed areas were first announced, the mayor of Brantford was surprised to know he was living in one. It should be publicly known just what constitutes a depressed area.

Having in mind the public relations branches attached to the two departments of government concerned, I think the least that could have been done was to have advised every member of this house of this important piece of proposed legislation.

What are likely to be the effects of this measure? I am speaking not only as one who represents a particular area of Canada. This proposal affects all areas of Canada. This ill-conceived piece of legislation, like so many others introduced by this fumbling and bumbling government, was certainly not carefully studied or considered before it was introduced. The government did not take time to analyse the conditions which cause depression and, above all, did not stop to consider what reaction the designation of a particular area in the heart of an industrial district might have on neighbouring cities within a few miles of each other. For example, let us suppose we have a father with four children. They are all in one room and the father gives one of the children a ten dollar bill without giving the others anything. You have a family row on your hands immediately.

Here we find a similar situation. Guelph, Hamilton, Kitchener, Waterloo, Stratford, Preston and many other smaller communities were all one happy family in this area. The government has given to the city of Brantford concessions, in this case worth $400,000 to one particular industry. Similar concessions are not available to the other members of this happy family of towns which are all in that area—towns which had been getting along nicely and which have been competitive in getting industry and in improving economic conditions. They were getting along well until this government interfered.

Let us review the steps leading up to the introduction of this discriminatory legislation. It was announced on September 6. The criteria for designation were set forth in the same announcement and I think that for the record I should read the main ones. They are these:

> A national employment service area qualified as a designated area provided—
> (A) it has been classified by the Department of Labour as a labour surplus area for one half or more of the summer months (May to October) during the past eight years; and it has experienced an employment increase of less than one half the national average over the same period; or—

So it goes on, with "and" and "or" and "or" and "and". If you can understand it, you are better than I am at deciphering things, Mr. Chairman. However, no consideration is given to the present or future employment potential of an area.

I should like to read, now, from a brief presented to the Minister of Industry in connection with this discriminatory move. This is a brief which was presented to the Minister of Industry by the mayors and reeves of the municipalities concerned. It states:

> As you, Mr. Minister, know, farm machinery manufacturing has long been a major industry in Brantford and to some extent must bear the blame for some of the gyrations that the city of Brantford has experienced. But surely some of the misfortunes that have befallen Brantford during the past five years were unique and by this we mean the closing of the Cockshutt plow plant several years ago, and the razing of the Massey Ferguson's Market street plant. But the fact that these industries are now being replaced by new plants must certainly be considered now. It is known that a new $13,000,000 Massey Ferguson plant is under construction at the present, as well as a new division of Cockshutt Farm Equipment, which is now a subsidiary of Oliver Farm Corp., U.S.A. The increases in employment and assessment that will result from the construction of these two plants and their eventual operation will, no doubt, once again put the Brantford area in the vanguard of progressive communities in southern Ontario.

So nothing was said in the criteria about the present or future potential with respect to the employment picture. Then we move along to the time after the announcement was made and the criteria were laid out. The policy of the government was that of central control and sidestepping the municipalities and the province. The government took the matter into its own hands and said to Brantford: We will name you a designated area. The municipality was not consulted.

The government also sidestepped provincial autonomy. Just a few years ago the provincial government brought in legislation to prevent municipalities competing with one another for industries. The situation had got to the point where a municipality would offer an industry freedom from municipal taxes for so many years in order to entice it to come to that area. This went on and on until things got out of hand. The provincial government then said: No, this must stop; and legislation was passed to that end. Here we have the federal government stepping in, going over the provincial legislation and saying: Brantford, you are a designated area and we will give you this and that.

The federal government is sidestepping municipal autonomy. They are not even consulting the municipalities. They are not even asking them: Do you want to become a designated area or not? In the criteria that have been established, too much emphasis has been placed upon statistics. I should like to place on the record an editorial headed "...and Statistics", which appeared in the Guelph Guardian of October 2, 1963. It reads:

> Brantford may well be statistically a depressed area according to the formula used by Ottawa to determine that state of affairs; but if it is, then the formula should be changed.
> It is absurd for the taxpayer to foot the bill to give industries concessions amounting to more than $400,000 to establish in Brantford, rather than in Guelph or some other community.
>
> There are said to be lies, damned lies and statistics. It is only on the basis of far from convincing statistics that tax money is being used in this curious way.
>
> Under the principle of cabinet solidarity the government presumably is in accord with the answer given the delegation from this area by the minister they interviewed, the Hon. Charles M. Drury, who represents Montreal St. Antoine-Westmount. Mr. Drury simply stands or falls by the statistics. It is a reasonable prediction that such simple faith in statistics will lead the minister into more troubles than his ability will get him out of.
> This is a case of a statesmanlike measure being applied in anything but statesmanlike fashion. There would be little objection to the taxpayer's money being used to transfer plants to, say, a one industry town that had lost that industry; or to a community under special difficulties which could not provide a reasonable standard of living for its citizens.
> But Brantford is a highly industrialized city with higher wage rates, for instance, than Guelph, and certainly no greater unemployment problem than this or many other cities. Reconsideration of the policy is urgently necessary, and the sooner the better.

And so these were the steps taken. How does this affect a community? I can give you a concrete example of just how it has affected the city I represent, Guelph. Last August it was announced by the city that a company was coming into our community. A lease was signed for 10 years. A few weeks ago the contractor had the footings in and the ground plumbing installed. Two thirds of the steel was on site. Overnight the company heard that if they went to Brantford, a designated area, they could receive concessions up to $400,000 over the next five years. These concessions are arrived at by taking into account the legislation which provides a three year holiday from income tax, a 50 per cent write-off on new machinery and a 20 per cent write-off on buildings. You cannot blame the company for taking advantage of these concessions which have been handed to it on a silver platter.

Here we are, as citizens and taxpayers of that great metropolitan area of western Ontario, contributing taxes to the federal government so that we can sit back and whistle and watch factories going over to the Brantford area, and this after we in our area and many other areas throughout the region have developed an industrial basin and have spent millions of dollars to attract new industries. We were aggressive. We worked hard to build up these industrial basins and now we must sit back and watch industries flit by our doors on the way over to establish themselves in Brantford.

I ask the minister to reconsider this discriminatory piece of legislation; and when amendments to the Income Tax Act come before this house, to make possible these provisions for depressed areas, I hope hon. members will think twice before they vote for such amendments to the act.

I point out to members from industrial areas that something else can happen. Do you know that an old, established industry in your city can move to a designated area, change its name, build a new factory, put in new machinery and make a new product and thus be eligible for these concessions? I say to any member who has an industry in his riding that that industry can move to a designated area and get these concessions.

Some may say that if I were a member for a designated area the situation might work in reverse. Yes, it can work that way. A member can represent a designated area tonight and tomorrow morning on the say-so of the government it will no longer be a designated area. You may have been negotiating with a company previously to come to your riding and establish a plant. You may spend one to two years trying to get the company to to your area as a designated area; but then overnight by the stroke of a pen you are no longer a designated area and all your work is of no use. It works both ways.

Briefly that is the situation. In conclusion, I would ask the government, particularly the Minister of Industry, to revise their thinking as to this type of legislation. First of all, respect municipal autonomy. Consult the municipalities and ask them if they want to be designated areas. Revise the criteria by which a designated area is established. I think we will all agree in principle that there are areas in Canada in need of help, but let those areas come to Ottawa and ask for assistance. Do not put so much emphasis on statistics but rather on the practical application of the scheme. Think about the distance between a designated area and non-designated areas. Keep out of highly industrialized areas. I do not think for a minute that this legislation was ever intended to apply to a highly industrialized area and thus start a family row among all the cities and communities in that area. Do not override the provincial legislation already in effect. These areas should not be selected on a patronage basis. I am not accusing the government of doing that, but I do say that 63 per cent of these designated areas in Ontario have Liberal members. There are five areas that have Liberal members, two are Conservative ridings, while one is an N.P.D. riding. I say that 63 per cent of the designated areas in Ontario are represented by Liberal members or Liberal senators.

The government should prevent further steals of industry from one city to another. If you want to help this situation, then help move the employees from one area to the other. The area of which I am speaking covers a radius of 25 miles, and today people can commute easily. If there is a need for help in one area, it is not a problem for people to commute a short distance like that.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I would say to this government they should do one of two things. They should either remove Brantford from the list of designated areas, or give the rest of us in southwestern Ontario the same concessions. We would rather not have these concessions. It hurts our pride. We do not not want this help. We would rather go it alone. We are not happy about the cartoon published in the Globe and Mail which showed the mayors of all these municipalities playing violins in the street and begging for support. We would rather go it alone and get industry into these areas as we have done in the past. This problem requires immediate and serious thought on the part of the government, which introduced this legislation in a hasty and ill-considered manner in order to beat the 60 days of decision. Then they found themselves in a real muddle. If you do not believe me, just go into southwestern Ontario, and talk to the people in the area to which I have been referring and have the honour to represent.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, only a few short days ago I had the privilege of having lunch with the New Zealand ombudsman. We discussed the cases that he had had come to him during his first term of office. It thrilled me to hear him express satisfaction with the part he had been able to play in bringing justice to a great number of people who, as a result of bureaucratic government, found themselves in difficulty.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to interrupt my hon. friend, but I do rise on a point of order. It should be understood that the subject matter introduced by the hon. member for Wellington South may be continued, even though there is a break now when the hon. gentleman discusses another matter. I have no objection to this. On the other hand, I refrained from speaking a while ago on the question of nuclear weapons because I realized it was a subject of great importance and if I were to break in the result would be that the debate could not be continued. If it is understood in the committee that, after the hon. gentleman has spoken about the ombudsman, hon. members may speak in this matter which particularly affects the economy of this country, then I have no objection. Otherwise, I raise the point of order.

The Chairman: My understanding is that since we are in committee there is no difficulty about the point which has been raised by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They can come in at any time.

The Chairman: That is quite right.

Mr. Thompson: If the Leader of the Opposition would be just a little bit patient he would find I will not be breaking the trend of the discussion that has been started. I will be dealing with very much the same problem as that to which the previous speaker was referring.

In any event, I picked up a newspaper last night and I read where this same ombudsman in New Zealand had presented his first report to parliament. The government was so satisfied with the first year's operation of his new office that they are going to expand his powers. A few months ago I had the opportunity of presenting a bill before this house that would have given us in Canada an ombudsman. However, Mr. Speaker saw fit to disqualify my bill and throw it out. Now, I am rather happy that he did so, although I am convinced that before long we are going to have an ombudsman in Canada, because bureaucratic government requires that we have one.

If this office had been established, I am afraid that every citizen in Red Deer would be appealing to him tomorrow because of the injustices that have been perpetrated upon them in the last couple of days. The reason for this is simply the bureaucratic actions of government departments, in this case the bungling and inefficient administration of the transport and defence departments in relation to the Penhold air base and its development into a jet training base.

As long ago as seven years, plans were being made to develop this important training centre into a jet training base. At that time the government was well aware of the implications that would be brought about through the newer developments in aircraft training. This awareness carried right on through the Conservative government's administration. These plans have finally come to a head. This meant the purchasing of the Tudor jet aircraft which would lead to a program whereby young men would go directly into training on jet aircraft. In recent months plans developed to the point where the government, carrying through the policies of the previous government, had let the tenders for the construction of the necessary runways. The tenders had been opened, and even the treasury board had considered the expenditure of approximately $3 million, or, to be exact $2.8 million for this purpose. The contractor concerned had moved in equipment planning to begin work on runway construction. In addition to this, the air force moved in a lot of equipment. Not only that, but they had called for a program of additional housing in the city of Red Deer which, just the night before last, was cancelled. Last Monday night the city council had given approval for this $1 million housing program. As late as three weeks ago, both the mayor of Red Deer and myself were informed that this program was going to go through, and we were informed by the defence department.

Then, suddenly the project was withdrawn. What has been the result? Well, the contractor has lost thousands of dollars because the contract that had been more or less assured has been cancelled. We find that a $1 million housing project has likewise been cancelled after the city had reserved the area and made the necessary plans to supply the essential services. The whole community of central Alberta is upset because of this decision reversal.

We investigated and we have found out that as long as nine months ago negotiations had been carried on by the two departments concerned, at departmental level, regarding the safety requirements relating to air traffic lanes and buffer zones. All through these discussions it had seemed to the air force that they would be going forward with the project, and the outline I have given is proof of that. Then all of a sudden a new regulation was introduced and this regulation or recommendation—no matter what it is called it amounts to the same thing—set up a 20 mile buffer zone on either side of the normal air traffic lane, making it absolutely impractical for the air force to use this area as a training centre, because the air space was not sufficient for the high speed aircraft involved.

What is the result? It is a waste of taxpayers' money. It has caused a great deal of confusion and distress for a great many of our citizens. Half the village of Penhold will find itself empty because the people living there are working at the air base. Many of them will have to move elsewhere or become unemployed in the city of Red Deer. In the case of Penhold debentures were floated in order to provide the essential services for a housing program. These will have to be cancelled, and now the village is in extreme financial difficulties, and is even facing the threat of bankruptcy. This is the problem we find because there is not the proper consultation and co-ordination between two government departments that there should be. This is the danger that is involved when governments become as vast as they have become today.

I demand that the government publicly and fully make known what has happened in this matter, and that appropriate action be taken to clear up what appears to be vast interdepartmental blundering.

This is only an illustration concerning one constituency of the chaos that exists between all levels of government. One department simply does not know what another is doing. Were I to go into the number of instances where provincial and federal government programs do not coincide and are not co-ordinated, I could take more time than the rules of the house allow. We have already seen first rate examples during this session of parliament.

The Canada pension plan, introduced with such a flourish a few months ago, is now in a position where the government cannot go forward with it without the co-operation of a single provincial government. We, the duly elected members of the house find that we have been wasting our breath, time and efforts becoming acquainted with this vast subject, because in the end we have found that the future of this proposal does not depend on our efforts but on the whim of a single provincial government.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Thompson: I do not think a question is necessary at this time.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I am sure he would like to clarify my mind—

The Chairman: Order. If the hon. member who has the floor does not yield to the hon. member asking a question, then he should be allowed to complete his speech.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I will ask my question later when he has finished.

Mr. Thompson: Another example is the municipal loan fund. This was also introduced with a great flourish. When he spoke about it in the city of Toronto the Prime Minister said something like this, "Come on and get it boys. It is here for you." However it did not take very long before it was discovered there were problems relating to it, and a conference of provincial premiers had to be called. As a result this loan fund has not been implemented in the way it should have been, nor has it met with needs it was intended to meet.

What could be a better example of this bungling between governments, provincial and federal, than that set forth by the hon. member who preceded me when he spoke about assistance for distressed areas? How does the federal government know which area in any province is a distressed area? I can give an example in my own province. One particular town has been named. I do not deny that that town is not in a needy area, but what about the other areas adjacent to it? What about other areas in other parts of the province?

An hon. Member: Penhold.

Mr. Thompson: Yes, Penhold will be one too, unless something is done. How can the federal government know the needs of the municipalities, and what right has it to designate, over and above the authority of a province, what is a special, needy area? This is just another illustration of the problems we face when there is not adequate consultation between governments at the various levels.

I can give another illustration. What about the history of the Columbia river treaty? How long has it been held up for this very same reason? Because there has not been proper co-ordination, discussion and planning between the provincial government and the federal government, the result is that the economy of the nation is held back.

The announcement of bold plans that quite obviously affect provincial governments, before those governments have been consulted, has led to a great sense of ill-will on the part of provincial governments towards the federal government, and what better illustration of that could we find at present than the province of Quebec? The need for government by consultation is one of the most urgent things facing us.

I have previously demanded that the government establish a department of federal-provincial affairs. It should be a full-scale ministry, having the prime purpose of dealing with those matters that concern the different levels of government, federal and provincial, and the provinces one with another on a broader scale. To me it seems just as important that the provinces be consulted, ahead of time, on matters of federal action and policy that will affect them, as it is that every piece of legislation and order in council be examined to assure conformity with the Canadian Bill of Rights. The need is self-evident and does not require further emphasis from me at this time.

Several provinces have seen the need for such a department and have themselves set up departments of provincial-federal affairs. If that could be done in every province, with the lead being given by the federal government, then how much easier would it be to deal with the problems that resolve around legislation such as the Canada pension plan, the municipal development fund, and that relating to distressed areas? We must have an even greater degree of co-operation in the future between the provinces and the federal government. We all realize that it will not be too long before a power grid is necessary across the whole country. We know we are in desperate need today of a national highways program. What about the tax sharing problem? I am sure the Minister of Finance realizes this better than any of us in the house at this time.

If we are going to have unity—and I mean unity of purpose—among the different levels of government in this land, if we are going to avoid the faux pas and cost to the taxpayers caused by the bumbling and the rivalries between different levels of government that go on at the present time; if we are going to avoid a potent source of friction between provinces and the federal government; if we are to make the whole machinery of government run smoothly at all levels in Canada, then I say a department of federal-provincial affairs within this government is a necessity.

I therefore call on the government to show their initiative in setting up such a department in order that it will save us the distress and the problems that face us at the present time with regard to the various pieces of legislation I have mentioned. We need only consider the budget to realize the problems that have been raised. Certainly the problems that arose out of the budget as they related to the tax on construction materials would have been avoided altogether, I am sure, had there been a little consultation among the people who were in the know, and who understood the problems that would inevitably have arisen and which we know have been brought about.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I would urge the government to take action along this line in order to bring about the efficient operation of our government and the more efficient and effective spending of our tax dollars.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. member one quick question, if I may. While I agree with much of what he said with regard to the jet training base, he referred to one single provincial government in Canada having blocked the Canada pension plan. I wonder if he would enlighten me and other hon. members as to which single government he was referring to.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I was referring to the remarks made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare just the other day, when she said that it depends upon the provincial government of Ontario whether they are going to be able to go forward with the Canada pension plan at all.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I am in slight disagreement with the hon. member. I think there is more than one, and I am glad he has enlightened me as to which one he thought it was. I thought it was Quebec.

Mr. Thompson: I was referring to a specific instance, Mr. Chairman, and I am correct in that reference. If there are other provinces so involved, then the hon. member can make his own speech about them.

Mr. Weichel: Mr. Chairman, in speaking on this interim supply motion I feel it my duty as member of parliament for Waterloo North to express my views and those of others in the house on behalf of my industrial area and the surrounding districts, especially with regard to the designation of depressed areas which was so well explained by the hon. member for Wellington South.

The Minister of Industry has been advised of the storm of regional protest by a protest delegation which came to Ottawa last Friday. This delegation was arranged by my friend and neighbour the hon. member for Wellington South, whose city of Guelph was first affected in our area by the designation of certain industrial centres as "depressed" or "slow growth" areas. The method being followed by this government in applying these regulations is typical of the method they have followed in other fields, such as the pension plan. There is a lack of consideration and consultation. Under the previous government, experts were sent into these areas to be designated as labour surplus areas. These experts consulted with municipal authorities; they consulted with the officials of the national employment service; they talked to industrialists and businessmen.

The present government has not seen fit to follow this procedure. As usual, they are in too much of a hurry to do the job properly. As a result we have had the same confusion, misunderstanding and complaints surrounding the application of this measure as we have had with such measures as the municipal loans program and the winter works program. It is surprising that this government does not seem able to undertake the most ordinary and routine administrative responsibilities without botching up the job. When they bring in legislation, they cannot get it accepted. An example of this, of course, is the budget, with regard to which they had to withdraw, retreat or revise their original plans.

With regard to depressed areas, these are important measures brought forward by the Waterloo and Kitchener city councils as well as many others in my area. Such proposed legislation could, and will, affect the economy of our country. It is impossible to get business by panic methods. Evidently the watchword of this government is "scramble". They scrambled up the municipal loans program; they scrambled up the pension scheme; they gave us a scrambled budget, and now they are scrambling up this distressed area measure. Everywhere it has been applied, it has caused distress.

Consider the situation in Brantford, Guelph, Kitchener, Galt, Waterloo, Hespeler, and my home town of Elmira. I am sure that if the hon. member for Waterloo South were here he would explain the situation in this way, as would the hon. member for Wellington South.

If there had been even a minimum of consultation with local authorities this situation would not have arisen. There was none of this trouble with the previous Minister of Labour. There were no complaints from the provinces; there were no complaints from the municipalities. The present government set up a new department to handle things formerly handled by the Minister of Labour, together with his other duties. The result has been only to add to the confusion. During the debate on the measure to appoint a Minister of Industry I suggested that this minister look after this department and not try also to cover the work of defence production. After seeing what has happened during the last two or three weeks I believe my suggestion at that time was a good one and the fears I expressed have become reality. There should be one job for one man.

My complaints do not originate with the opposition. There is no obstruction here. These are complaints originating with responsible municipal and civic bodies, people who have no partisan axe to grind, people who have an interest in the prosperity and welfare of their particular municipalities. These are people who feel that a decision such as that designating a distressed area in my district and other places, without consultation, is doing damage to the Canadian economy at the provincial, municipal and national levels.

Other legislation that has brought criticism is shortening the season for the winter works program by six weeks. Mr. Chairman, they have courses with essentially the same school program as the former government, but with no new schools being built this winter. The tax on building materials was vigorously protested by the Kitchener-Waterloo home builders association and other people across Canada. All these things, rather than helping the economy are making it that much more difficult for provinces and municipalities to cope with their problems.

Resolutions from the twin cities mayors and councils, and others in my area, have been sent to the Prime Minister, the Minister of Industry and other members in the House of Commons. These resolutions have strongly opposed the announced intention of the government of Canada to include the city of Brantford as a designated depressed area.

While agreeing in principle with the necessity of some type of assistance for fully qualified depressed areas, these councils oppose the designation of Brantford as a depressed area, which designation is apparently based on unemployment statistics in the past, with no other factor being considered, including present and future employment potential.

Further, these councils feel that the other designated depressed areas in southern Ontario should be revised to include only those making convincing representations to the federal government and proving actual distressed conditions. The Kitchener-Waterloo Record of Tuesday, October 2, 1963, in an editorial had this to say:

> Seven municipalities in the Grand River valley complex are combining to battle the federal government on its recent designation of Brantford as a distressed area. They are afraid they will lose industries to Brantford under the special assistance offered to plants to locate in the officially named area. The opposition is understandable.

Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt in my mind that such legislation would rule out future fair competition for industry, and in such industrialized areas as Waterloo North and Wellington South, where progress and stability are combined, this would be disastrous. May I ask the Minister of Industry to give this matter a second look—yes, a very serious second look.

Mayor Bauer of Waterloo has summed up this criticism with a sound explanation. He said he could not understand why Brantford is classed as a distressed area because two industries from there are advertising in the Kitchener-Waterloo Record for labour help. Mr. Chairman, surely such remarks should make the minister sit up and take notice regarding this serious problem.

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Chairman, may I use this opportunity to bring to the attention of the committee, in particular to the attention of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, a matter which affects several thousand people in this country. I refer to the fact that a great many immigrants to Canada are denied citizenship because of the arbitrary power given to the minister by section 10 of the Canadian Citizenship Act. Not only can the minister, one man, by himself deny applications for citizenship but, what is worse, he does not have to give any reason for his denial. It seems to me that this is arbitrary authority of the worst kind and runs counter to what we generally consider to be the best principles of British justice.

There are undoubtedly reasons for denying citizenship to some persons. They may not have learned either of our two official languages or they may have criminal records, which it seems to me constitute valid reasons for denying citizenship. But we know that persons are denied citizenship because of their membership in certain social and political organizations, and it is about this that I wish to speak at the moment. This was admitted a year ago when the then minister of citizenship and immigration replied to a question put at that time by the hon. member for Kootenay West. Here I quote from a news story which refers to the reply given by the minister to the hon. member. It is dated April 5, 1962, and is a United Press dispatch:

> The federal government has disclosed that membership or association with organizations believed to be subversive could bar new Canadians from obtaining citizenship.
> Immigration minister Ellen Fairclough, in a written reply to a question asked in the Commons, said such membership or association was taken into consideration when deciding whether applicants had "an adequate knowledge of the privileges and responsibilities of Canadain citizenship."
> Mrs. Fairclough revealed that from January 1947, when the citizenship act came into force, until January 1 last 3,317 applications for citizenship had been rejected and 582,299 granted.

As far as I know, there has never been published a list of those organizations considered to be subversive. In this respect the government of the United States is more forthright than we are. They do publish such a list. I do not know which persons determine which organizations are considered to be subversive and undesirable, but at least a new immigrant to the United States knows where he stands. If the Canadian government authorities in charge of these matters feel that certain organizations, political as well as social, are subversive, then I think we ought to know about them. Perhaps we should go further: if they are undesirable and subversive they should be made illegal. I would remind you, Mr. Chairman, that as we stand at the moment even the communist party of Canada is not an illegal organization. But the fact is that citizenship is denied people because they belong to certain organizations, and we are never told what these organizations are.

I complain, Mr. Chairman, that the minister is vested with arbitrary power. To make matters worse, there is no appeal from his authority. Over 3,000 persons have been refused citizenship since 1947, and we assume that a great many of them have been denied citizenship because of membership in certain organizations. Many of these persons have resided in Canada for many years, some for 40 or 45 years. There are many specific cases here which could be cited. If a person is not ready for citizenship after all that time in Canada, then perhaps the logical thing to do is to send him out of Canada.

I believe there has been general satisfaction with the new Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. A number of members have told me that he has given very sympathic hearing to individual cases involving immigration and citizenship matters—cases which members have taken to him. In fact, I understand that he has personally reviewed many cases where he felt an injustice had been done. But I think that we need more than a sympathetic minister; I think we need a change in the procedure. I think we should have a removal of the arbitrary power of the minister. I also feel, along with that, that there should be a right of appeal from a denial of citizenship, and preferably a right of appeal to a judicial body, to a court, rather than to an administrative agency. And it would follow that when Canadian citizenship is denied, a person should know why he is being refused.

The present minister was in Vancouver recently, and on September 23 spoke to the Chinese community there. As hon. members know, the Canadian Chinese have suffered certain discrimination regarding immigration. The minister seems to be taking a sincere interest in removing these discriminations, and I should like to conclude with a short quotation from his speech to the Chinese community of Vancouver at that time. He said:

> I have been distressed by the accusations of discrimination which have reached me. If prejudice exists in immigration matters it must be eliminated. True Canadianism permits no discrimination.
> All citizens are equal in rights and responsibilities, regardless of ethnic origin or creed. It is with this view in mind that I am most sincere in my effort to weed out discrimination and prejudice.
>
> You can count on me to work in the interests of all ethnic groups and to seek a fair and just solution to the vexing problem of Chinese immigration to Canada.

[Mr. Prittie.]

I like the attitude of the minister in these matters, and my only purpose in speaking this evening is to urge on the minister and his cabinet colleagues a review of this situation whereby arbitrary power is held by the department to refuse citizenship, and to set up fair procedures and let people know where they stand. I think that we have to do away with the type of system we have at the present time, where an informer can inform the department of the activities of certain persons but never has to face the person upon whom he has informed. I would appreciate very much if the government would take under consideration a reform of the procedures for applications for citizenship.

Mr. Munro: Mr. Chairman, I should like to inform the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond that I will certainly bring his comments to the minister's attention. I am sure the minister would want me to indicate his gratitude for the kind references he has made.

[Translation]

Mr. Belanger: Mr. Chairman, now that we come to the discussion of an expenditure of public funds, and particularly the distribution of these outlays, may I call the attention of the government to the Charlevoix riding which I have been representing for about a year now.

If I call the attention of this house to that county, it is because, in my opinion, it has been forgotten in the last few years in turn by the members of the Conservative and the Liberal administration.

In the course of a speech made during the early part of this session, an hon. member gave us a poetical description of the charms and beautiful scenery of that county, for which I congratulate him.

But, Mr. Chairman, what is spoken of a great deal less, because it is truly shameful for the older parties which are responsible for it, is the economic situation with which the people of that county are trying to cope desperately but without much success.

I can tell the house that, as the member for that riding, I have inherited a dreadful situation, owing to the inefficiency of the previous governments and particularly the representatives of that county.

The county of Charlevoix is one of those in the province of Quebec which suffers most from that terrible plague called unemployment. That is why I request that this county be included in the designated areas in order to receive special economic benefits.

In that part of the riding which, geographically, makes up the county of Charlevoix live about 8,000 families. The statistics published during the month of March by the La Malbaie unemployment insurance office, indicated that there were then 3,000 unemployed.

That also means hardship, worry and lower standards for those families who have not deserved that fate and I wonder how much longer those people will accept placidly to remain in such conditions.

The economic situation in my county began to go downhill in 1954 and has not improved since, although we have had in office during that period a Liberal, then a Conservative and again a Liberal government.

But what is most urgent today is not so much to determine who is responsible for that situation but rather to face the facts and try to find a solution to the problem.

Many things would have to be done to revive industry in my county. To mention but a few, may I be allowed to say that one reason why trade is slowing down more than anywhere else in that county and why very few industries are going there is that we have no modern or speedy means of transportation to encourage them to do so, apart from the fact that that county is located far from the large centres of the province, in spite of the fact that it has the shortest road to reach the territory where lies the greatest potential in ore and other resources of the province and probably of all Canada as well.

To cope with the situation, and although I do not pretend to be an expert in such things, may I be allowed to suggest that the government should consider the possibility of making highway 15, which goes from Quebec to Seven Islands, and even beyond, a section of the trans-Canada highway. I am sure that it will be proven in the future that such a section would be more useful to Canadians than the present laying-out of the highway on the south shore of the St. Lawrence. Nobody can deny that the territory located on the north shore of the St. Lawrence river, from Quebec city to Labrador, includes many times the land located to the south over the same distance.

Moreover, that territory's natural potential constitutes the determining factor of future economic activity as, up to now, enough of it has been discovered to prove its extraordinary importance.

It is only logical to reverse, in a suitable way, the present trend which causes the industrial, commercial and tourist traffic to make use of the south shore in order to reach the north shore.

Another suggestion, which could be put into practice immediately would be the removal of the tolls collected for crossing the Saguenay, as they are a hindrance to trade. I have not tried to find out whether these tolls are warranted or not, but I had occasion to ascertain that trailer-trucks had to pay up to $9 to cross the Saguenay, which is about a mile wide.

I suggest consequently that the government should enter into some sort of an agreement with the company concerned and subsidize it, so that these rates could be cut down or altogether abolished. Besides, the government should make a few inquiries about the material and financial possibilities of building a bridge across the Saguenay.

Under the ARDA program, the government would be wise to take stock of the land under cultivation at the present time, so as to decide upon the best methods. In my part of the country, the farmers eke out a bare existence, mostly because there are very few transportation facilities towards the marketing centres.

The harbour facilities in Charlevoix county should be studied and the necessary improvements brought about as soon as possible. Thus, one would kill two birds with one stone, by allowing hundreds of families to find work and, at the same time, by promoting trade in that part of the country. Many harbours and wharves need improvement because they are dilapidated and represent a loss of money for the government. Some money was rightly spent at those places but it would not be reasonable to let them deteriorate and it would be illogical to waste money for their destruction as it is presently done in the case of the wharf at Port-aux-Saumons.

I am thinking for instance of the wharf at Pointe au Pic, the wharf at St. Simeon; those I will only mention to say I appreciate the fact that this government is now spending money appropriated last year for rebuilding. But there are other small wharves such as those at St. Fidele, Ste-Irénée, Baie Ste Catherine and many other places and there are many wharves which could be useful to facilitate shipping and stimulate the tourist industry. But what is most urgent, in my opinion, is to build a deep water wharf at Baie St. Paul, because this would help the development of the mining industry. An iron mine is now in operation on a very small scale but its production would be increased if the necessary facilities for shipping the ore were available. I am informed that if thorough examinations were made other places could be found. On that same subject, concerning the mining industry in my riding, the government should look for means to promote research and prospecting because I have often been told that the rock formations in the Charlevoix hills indicate possible important mineral deposits.

Another way to remedy unemployment in that depressed area would be to promote the tourist industry. There has been a good start, part of which was the building of a landing field at Ste Irénée, which the government should keep in good shape during the winter season. Charlevoix is well known for its unique scenery, its lakes full of fish, its mountains and forests, where one can hunt fine moose and deer—in the proper season, of course. I trust that if the government made the necessary publicity, the tourist industry would develop considerably.

There is another point which I would like to mention. An attempt is being made now, at great cost and with incomplete success, to maintain navigation and keep the Quebec ports open for the whole winter season. With regard to this matter, I would have a suggestion for the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIlraith). He should send some engineers to examine the deep water wharf project undertaken at Beaupre by St. Ann Paper Limited. This wharf, though yet incomplete, might, I think, easily be acquired from the said company and completed, so as to give to the district and city of Quebec a deep water wharf where navigation might be kept open all winter, because the river never completely freezes at that point which is only 20 miles off the city of Quebec. Ships of all sizes might load and unload there all year round. Then, highway 15 becoming the trans-Canada highway, and with the railways serving the district, we would be able to solve that almost insoluble problem of winter navigation in the port of Quebec.

Those, Mr. Chairman, are some suggestions I am making to the government to help it forget the errors of the former administrations which made of the county of Charlevoix one of the least developed areas of the province of Quebec.

I even urge the government to act as quickly as possible in order to rectify the intolerable economic conditions now prevailing in my county of Charlevoix. The suggested projects are by no means all those which the federal government might carry out in my riding—they are mere indications.

To come back to the estimates, I am surprised to see that, in spite of several economists being present—

[Text]

Mr. Nugent: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I believe there is a rule of the house against reading speeches. The hon. member is obviously so doing and, not only that, he is doing it in a manner that makes it look like he has never seen it before. He might at least give us the name of the author.

[Translation]

The Chairman: The hon. member knows that as a general rule, it is not permitted to read a text or a speech. But every hon. member might have realized that on several occasions, speeches have been read and the chairman of the committee, until now, has been lenient for the speakers who were out of order in that way.

But hon. members are allowed to follow notes to refresh their memory and I would suggest to the hon. member to do so.

Mr. Belanger: Mr. Chairman, I accept your ruling. I was saying that in spite of the presence of several economists in the Liberal cabinet, they have not been able to avoid what the Conservatives were so much blamed for, that is a deficit. I think it could be said on that matter that the mountain brought forth a mouse. The present budget bears out what we have said during the last election campaigns, that people had nothing to lose in voting against the old parties because they used the same tactics, and followed the same policies.

Again this year, in spite of all the shoutings by the Liberals against deficits, they are also headed for another deficit.

I do not object to a deficit budget in the framework of the present economic system because I think human beings are more important than money. On the other hand, I realize, like everybody else, that we cannot keep going deeper into debt year in and year out. There must be a more proper way than the one in use at present, that is having no alternative but to go into debt or let people starve to death.

Mr. Chairman, we have heard all sorts of things concerning money during the last election campaign. On one side, the present hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) told us over the radio and on television: "Do not vote for Social Credit, for it would be dangerous. The monetary theory of its adepts was never tried anywhere, has not asserted itself, and it would not be clever to take a chance in such a venture." Sometimes, only a few minutes after the Minister of Justice, the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis) would appear on television, and shout himself out of breath, saying: "Do not vote for Social Credit, for that theory was tried in Germany, Hungary and France and resulted only in inflation and poverty." I will not say which one of the two lied to the public at that particular moment, but certainly one was lying, for one said exactly the opposite of the other.

That is why we try to impress upon the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville and on the Liberal party generally that when you want to increase purchasing power, that does not mean printing dollar bills, when they took such pains to have the people swallow that.

Besides, we never spoke about having dollars printed in order to increase or facilitate credit, and whoever believes it is an idiot and a liar, and whoever preaches to the nation that such is our party's policy becomes a slanderer.

That state of affairs does not astonish me so much, since I read an article in the Commercial and Financial Chronicle of April 23, 1959, the author being the United States secretary to the treasury, Mr. Robert B. Anderson. I quote:

> Fiscal matters are not clearly understood, even by some people in high places who are generally well informed in other fields. I found that out one day when a man who had come to see me at my office told me: You talk, Mr. Secretary, about the danger of monetizing the debt. You know, I simply do not believe in that danger, probably because I do not clearly understand what monetization means.

Here is the explanation given by the Hon. Robert Anderson:

> I gave my visitor the following reply: Let us suppose that I want to issue $100 million in cheques starting tomorrow morning but that the treasury is empty. If I called a bank and said: "Would you lend me $100 million at 3½ per cent payable in six months, if I sent you a promissory note?", the banker would reply: "Yes, certainly, Mr. Secretary".

Where would he take those $100 million to be credited to the account of the United States treasury? Out of somebody else's account? Certainly not. He would merely create that sum of money—provided he did not cut into the prescribed reserves—by crediting it to our account and by accepting the government's note as an asset. Once I had finished making out cheques for $100 million, the operation would have added that amount to the money supply. That is monetization about to the same extent as if I were to call the bureau of engraving and printing and ask them to print $100 million worth of bills and to send them to me tomorrow at the latest.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, according to the United States secretary of the treasury, in that case, $100 million have actually been put in circulation without a single new dollar having been printed. All that had to be done was to ask a chartered bank to monetize part of the real credit value of the United States with the promise that the sum would be paid back with a 3½ per cent interest. Obviously, the bank which loaned those $100 million simply created this money.

This is what is called creating money. Now, I ask most sincerely all members of this house to tell me, first, why chartered banks are entitled to create money, which they do in fact, when the Bank of Canada cannot do so.

I ask them, and I challenge anybody to prove to me, how $10,000, $100,000 or $100 million created by the Bank of Canada will cause more inflation than $10,000, $100,000 or $100 million created by the chartered banks. I challenge anybody to show me the difference.

This method has already been suggested in this house. It consists for the government to control the issue of money, to increase slowly, gradually, the percentage of liquid money that the chartered banks must have in relation to the credit they are entitled to create. In other words, credit created by the banks should decrease in the same proportion as the credit created by the Bank of Canada. But the difference in the process relating to the issuance of credit created by the Bank of Canada and the charter banks would be tremendous because, instead of encouraging production directly by that credit, we could encourage consumption which, naturally and unavoidably, would finance that production.

If the government would enact the necessary legislation for the adoption of this process, it could do a lot which it is impossible to do under the present financial system. To begin with, because this is most urgent, it could restore to the provinces—especially to the province of Quebec—not only 25 per cent of the estate tax but the totality of that tax, because if the present government does not take immediate action in that field, I am sure it will be too late four years from now, and confederation will unfortunately break up before then. In saying this, I am not uttering a threat; I am merely doing my duty in pointing out signs of increasing dissatisfaction that I note every day among French Canadians.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to go on outlining the benefits we could give to the Canadian people, and especially all the good we could do in order to strengthen confederation ties, if the government would use the Bank of Canada to finance its projects and get the economy going. After all, the rights claimed by French Canadians are more economic than racial or religious. However, I cannot conclude before reminding the government that our children also are entitled to the recognition of their rights and this will come about only when, according to its promise, the government will increase family allowances.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, during the debate on interim supply, we heard a while ago—and I think this question should be brought up—about the acquisition of nuclear weapons by our country.

Many events took place during the summer. First there was the signing of a nuclear test ban agreement by the big three: the U.S.S.R., the United States and England, and that agreement was approved and signed by several other countries, including Canada. At that time, people were talking of an easing throughout the world and it was said that the cold war was getting hot.

Barely a few days later, our country, in turn, signed with the United States a treaty or a commitment to acquire and stock nuclear weapons on our soil.

Mr. Chairman, I want to point out the nonsense of those two actions. Canada cannot proceed with nuclear tests. Canada is entirely unable to make tests today, and yet she signs the agreement. Whether she signs it or not does not change a thing. Canada never made nuclear tests, she never exploded a nuclear or atomic bomb. She cannot do it. She cannot do it, but the Prime Minister nevertheless signs the agreement. What obligation does that impose on him? He will not explode nuclear weapons. And yet he signs the agreement. He has no risk to run, and he says: "Here, we take part in the easing in the world". He cannot do otherwise, because he is unable to explode a nuclear bomb.

But what he could have done for the easing of the situation, the part he could have played to warm the cold war, was to refuse nuclear weapons. He was able to do that, but he did not do it. He says he will do what he cannot do, but he does not do what he can do. That is exactly what our present government did. It acquired nuclear weapons and it is ready to stock them on Canadian soil.

Well, Mr. Chairman, only a few days after Canada committed itself to acquire nuclear weapons and to store them on our territory, I had the opportunity to attend the annual session of the United Nations. I must say that in the climate prevailing at that time, when every country of the world was talking of eased tension, Canada cut a sorry figure indeed, since our country was the only one in the world to have taken a further step in the direction of nuclear weapons and world destruction, by accepting such weapons on its territory. All the others were talking of disarmament and Canada was the only one, since the signing of the Moscow treaty, to acquire nuclear arms.

[Mr. Belanger.]

What was our position at the United Nations before the other countries of the world? I heard the Prime Minister of Canada make a fine speech, but I could not help thinking: those are only words, words and words, but nothing practical, nothing real, except the acquisition of nuclear weapons by our country and their storage on our territory.

Moreover, Mr. Chairman, two days later, I heard at the annual session of the UN the day after President Kennedy proposed to Russia to co-operate and set up a joint Russian and American expedition to the moon, the minister of external affairs for Dahomey said in very simple terms: "Americans and Russians, when you go up to the moon hand in hand, just ask yourselves then if you have performed your duty towards your brothers remaining on earth." And he added: "For us, the greatest country is not the one who will first land on the moon; for us, Africans, the greatest country in the world is not the one who will have the most destructive bombs, but the greatest country will be the one which will have done the most on earth to fight illness, ignorance, hunger and destitution throughout the world."

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, there was another member of the house between the Prime Minister and myself and I could not resist looking at him and saying: "That is a role suited for us, a role that we can play. We could fight sickness, ignorance, hunger and misery throughout the world. That is a role cut out for Canada. It is a role for Canadians because we can co-operate in that field instead of trying to find out who will stockpile the greatest number of nuclear bombs in our country, a military role which will inevitably lead us to use those means of destruction one day. On the other hand, if we help other countries and the United Nations to fight sickness, ignorance, hunger and misery, as all other countries advocate, then we will be acting as human beings who are more concerned with the welfare of their fellow men than with knowing whether hay, wheat or barley grows on the moon.

Mr. Chairman, I notice it is ten o'clock.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, before you leave the chair I wonder if I might appeal to the committee to see if there would be any possibility of getting interim supply completed this evening because in order to carry on the business of the country, in order to pay the public servants, it is necessary that this money be voted. We have spent the whole of one day on this subject now, and I wondered if there would be any possibility of getting co-operation to complete interim supply this evening.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I must inform you that we do not intend to end the debate on interim supply either tonight, tomorrow or as long as the privileges and elections committee has not remedied the ridiculous and illogical situation which prevails in this corner of the house. We tried to do it and it was supposed to be done as soon as possible. Last Monday, the house asked that the situation be settled but it has not yet been done. When the committee met this morning, I asked that a solution be found to the problem but nothing was done about it. A resolution was introduced calling for a new meeting of the committee tomorrow morning but it was voted down. The committee is to meet Monday morning. Because of that, the leader of the Ralliement des créditistes and I will have to make a special trip by automobile at that time to be here for ten o'clock. Well, we are not ready to end the debate tonight.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: I just wish to ask the house leader to inform us whether he intends to continue with interim supply tomorrow?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes. I think the government would have no option but to make every effort to get the necessary funds to carry on the public business of the country which is, of course, the first business of this house.

It being three minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, October 4, 1963

The house met at 11 a.m.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull) presented the first report of the standing committee on privileges and elections, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF REAPPOINTMENT OF MR. DONALD GORDON

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make an announcement regarding the chairmanship of the board of directors of the Canadian National Railways. Mr. Donald Gordon has been today reappointed to that position by an order in council passed pursuant to sections 6 and 8 of the Canadian National Railways Act, and in accordance with an understanding referred to by him in an exchange of correspondence with me, which I would like to read to the house.

My letter to Mr. Gordon is dated October 2, and reads as follows:

Dear Mr. Gordon:

Some time ago, when I discussed with you the question of the expiry of your present appointment on September 30, you indicated that while reluctant to bear any longer than necessary the heavy responsibilities that you have now shouldered for many years, you were also concerned about the completion of certain work to reorganize and strengthen the railway.

The government now invites you to complete that work by accepting reappointment as chairman and director. We believe that this would be not only to the advantage of the railway but also of the country.

In asking you to accept this reappointment to the position which expired last Monday, I wish to express to you the great appreciation of the government for the distinguished and tireless service that you have already given as chairman and president of the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. Gordon's reply to that letter on October 3 is as follows:

My dear Prime Minister:

I have received your letter of October 2 inviting me to continue as chairman of the board of directors of Canadian National Railways.

As you mention in your letter, I am anxious to be relieved, when it is possible, of these heavy and varied responsibilities which, I have learned, go beyond the field of railway management. I am nevertheless also concerned, as I have already told you, with seeing through to completion the work referred to in your letter.

This work should be finished in about a year and a half, in which case I will, in good conscience, ask to be released from the duties which I have always done my best to perform in a way which would be of benefit to the railway and to the country which I have now had the great honour to serve for many years, in war and in peace.

In accepting reappointment on the understanding above mentioned, I would like to recall the exchange of correspondence we have had on certain unfounded charges, which have distressed me greatly, that I have discriminated against or am unfair to French speaking employees of Canadian National Railways.

In this connection, I would remind you of the evidence I have recently sent you which should dispel any feeling that in Canadian National Railways we do not sufficiently recognize the claims of French speaking Canadians to posts of responsibility or the importance of bilingual qualifications in the holding of such posts.

Yours sincerely,

D. Gordon,
President.

I would be glad to table the order in council, this exchange of correspondence and the evidence which Mr. Gordon refers to in his letter to me, namely the letter he has written to me on the subject of certain charges made against him and a memorandum on that matter.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Has the minister agreed to reappoint Mr. Donald Gordon only on condition that he would succeed him, in a year and a half, when the present chairman will retire?

[Text]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Mandziuk: You have not denied it. Deny it.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Could he tell the house whether the cabinet has unanimously recommended that the term of office of Mr. Donald Gordon as chairman of the C.N.R. be renewed?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I gave a description to that kind of question yesterday, and it certainly applies to this one.

Mr. Pigeon: It is a proper question. I take it that you do not want to answer. You are afraid to answer.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the disagreement which preceded the reappointment of the president of the C.N.R., could the Prime Minister assure the house that, pending completion of his program over the next 18 months, the incumbent will see that fair consideration is given to the representations of the two major ethnic groups in Canada in the administration of that important crown corporation?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I have already made a statement on this matter, and if the hon. member would read the document which was tabled I think he would derive some reassurance on this score.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

AMENDMENTS PERMITTING REFUSAL OF INCREASED INDEMNITIES

Mr. Speaker: I have received a letter from the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Marcoux) in which he indicates that he must be absent today and requests consent of the house for the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Côté) to move the following motion on his behalf, seconded by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Ouellet). Does the house give consent accordingly?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Maurice Côté (for Mr. Marcoux) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-99, to amend an act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act and the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi): In the absence of the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency who had to attend a funeral in his riding, I am pleased to introduce this bill on his behalf. I shall read the explanations he had prepared himself for the occasion.

Some time ago, hon. members of this house, with no intention whatsoever of playing politics and in all sincerity, had some serious twinges of conscience about the proposal to increase the allowances paid to senators and members of parliament.

The application of the present legislation would enable them to feel free to refuse such an increase. It would be most unfortunate and immoral, in actual fact, that an act should come into direct conflict with their principles and their conscience.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

LABOUR RELATIONS

STRIKE OF LONGSHOREMEN—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, under standing order 26 I ask leave to move the adjournment of the house in order to discuss a matter of urgent national importance, namely the threat to the flow of grain shipments on the great lakes and the St. Lawrence seaway due to a lack of any effective action being taken by the government of Canada which has had its culmination this morning in the strike of longshoremen in the St. Lawrence river ports.

This is a matter of urgency and national importance. The disruption of grain shipments to the U.S.S.R. which will result will mean serious and possibly irreparable damage to Canada's economy as a whole.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ontario, seconded by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, has presented a certain motion asking for leave to adjourn the house under standing order 26 on the grounds of great urgency. May I remind the house that "urgency within this rule", standing order 26, "does not apply to the matter itself, but it means urgency of debate, when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the house do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough and public interest demands that discussion take place immediately". That is Beauchesne, fourth edition, paragraph 3 of citation 100. Also:

The reason for allowing such a motion... is to afford members an opportunity of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance which they could do in no other way.

That is Mr. Speaker Black in the Journals of the house, March 31, 1931, page 50.

The urgency of debate is something that has to be considered. ...In my experience it has never happened in the house that while the speech from the throne was being currently debated a motion for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance under the new standing order 26 was agreed to.

Perhaps that is a little bit off the rails; nevertheless it deals with the same subject. That is Mr. Speaker Beaudoin, Hansard, January 11, 1956, page 20.

On June 27, 1961, as will be found on page 7105 of Hansard, Mr. Speaker Michener expressed a similar view with regard to a motion made under standing order 26 during the budget debate, when he said:

> It seems to me that it is a matter which could very readily be debated in the budget debate.

Later on the same page he added:

> "I accept the proposition that this is an urgent and important public matter to which the Leader of the Opposition draws attention. It is a definite matter of public importance. However, that is not the criterion in determining whether standing order 26 should be applied. The criterion is whether there is an opportunity to debate this matter in an effective way."

He concluded his remarks on page 7106 by saying:

> ...I am not satisfied that there is not ample opportunity to put before the house and the government all the considerations that apply to this important matter in the debate which will follow immediately after the calling of the orders of the day.

Therefore he rejected the request of the then leader of the opposition. For similar reasons, in view of the fact that interim supply will follow within half an hour, let us hope, it seems to me there is ample opportunity today to discuss this urgent and important matter. Therefore I do not feel that the motion is in order at this time.

Mr. Starr: May I just say a word on a point of order. I realize there is ample opportunity to discuss any matter one wishes on interim supply. However, it has been said by the members of the Social Credit party, particularly by the hon. member for Lapointe, that they intend to debate continuously the question of their seating in the house and to take up all the time for that purpose. Therefore sufficient opportunity would not be provided to discuss this very serious matter of national importance. It was indicated, rather, that the Social Credit members would continue the debate on interim supply and speak about their seating arrangements in this chamber. Consequently, in view of that statement, we felt that we should move the adjournment of the house in order to give a proper opportunity for discussion of this very serious matter.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I should like to clarify one point that the previous speaker made. He said it has been stated by members of the Social Credit party that they are planning to carry on this debate. The members of the Social Credit party have not said so. The hon. member for Lapointe may have made such remarks, but it is not our intention to do that because I believe it is the customary practice that interim supply pass with the least possible debate.

However, in so far as this particular issue is concerned, while we are still discussing the interim supply motion and it is our privilege to speak on any particular subject, it seems to me there is ample opportunity to debate this very important issue relating to the strike which has been called this morning. I feel, therefore, that the arguments which you have made, Mr. Speaker, are the logical ones.

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, certainly I speak for 13 members, which is a larger group than that which the previous speaker represents. We do not intend, on this motion for interim supply, to speak only about seating arrangements in this chamber, so there will be an opportunity to speak about this strike in Quebec and Montreal. We only intend to prolong the debate on interim supply until a decision has been reached, because we do not believe the house should sit as long as this problem has not been solved.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Your Honour has agreed that this matter is of urgent importance. The only question is whether or not there is an adequate opportunity for discussing this matter on the motion for interim supply. I submit that any review of what has happened in this debate and previous debates on interim supply would indicate that the tendency is for a member to raise grievances relating to his particular constituency or region; consequently the debate is likely to roam over a very wide field. It seems to me that the longshoremen's strike, affecting as it does large grain shipments and our economy, is of such vital importance that this house ought to devote some specific time to debating that subject.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I do not really think there is anything that needs to be said, because Your Honour has said it all.

Some hon. Members: Sit down, then.

Mr. Pickersgill: Your Honour has indicated quite clearly that there will be ample opportunity for debate on this subject, and has cited precedents for that statement. Hon. members may choose what they want to debate. There is no restriction, because one speaker has spoken on one subject, upon another member proceeding with another subject. In view of the urgency of carrying on the country's business and getting supply voted, I feel Your Honour has correctly interpreted the rules.

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): If I may speak to the point of order, I may say that the only way we can debate this point, which is very important, is to have the government give some indication that it intends to take some action. There is no opportunity to debate government action at this time. I suggest this is a matter that should be before the house, and the government should give some indication that it does not intend to abandon its duty to avert this strike.

Mr. Speaker: I thank all hon. members for their views today, and I hope that within a few minutes we can start discussion of this urgent and important matter.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Since we are confronted by a seamen's strike in Quebec city, Three Rivers and Montreal, this morning, and as the minister has already stated that if the mediation board presided over by Justice Lippe could not prevent the strike, the government intended to take other steps, I wish to ask the minister if he could tell the house what steps the government now intends to take to settle the dispute as soon as possible.

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to keep this situation in perspective. The strike that began this morning, which has been in effect for only three and a half hours, is fully lawful; it is a legal strike under Canadian law. I want to say further that the mediator is still at work. He is meeting with the parties beginning at ten o'clock this morning, and while he is at work and obviously feeling that progress is still possible I think it would be premature for me to begin to comment in detail on this matter, which comment might affect the successful outcome of this mediation process.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the recommendation of the conciliation board suggesting a 22 cents an hour increase was rejected by both the union and the shipping companies, has any attempt been made to persuade the men to return to work pending the setting up of a conciliation board to review this matter, with the understanding that any increases granted and accepted would be retroactive to the time of the previous conciliation board recommendation?

Mr. MacEachen: The mediator, Judge Lippe, has been advancing, as I understand it, various proposals for the consideration of the parties. The meetings were adjourned last night at midnight; they are to continue today. The mediator has these proposals before the two parties, and while there is a willingness on the part of the two parties to meet and to consider the problem it would be premature on the part of the Minister of Labour or any member of the government to make a statement with respect to government policy that might affect his work.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the minister can say whether he has taken any precautionary measures to stop the strike from spreading, through sympathy or otherwise, to Atlantic and other ports.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that the situation in Halifax and Saint John has been settled by agreement.

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the minister would tell us if he has set a time limit to this mediation, so that failing agreement within that certain length of time government action would be taken. Has he announced or set any time limit?

Mr. MacEachen: I think we have to recognize the dangers to any mediation process in undertaking that kind of action.

Mr. Nugent: I take it the answer is no. Is that the answer?

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Robert Beaule (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour.

Will the strike of longshoremen in the harbours of Quebec, Three Rivers and Montreal delay the shipping of wheat to Russia?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that question be put on the order paper, if it is necessary.

GREAT LAKES—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRESENT POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether Mr. James Reynolds, assistant secretary of labour of the United States, had talks with Mr. Jodoin yesterday. Was the Minister of Labour or any representative of the Department of Labour present? What is the present position of the discussions that have taken place between Mr. Wirtz, Mr. Reynolds, Mr. Jodoin and representatives of the government or representatives of the civil service in this connection?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): To my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, there was no discussion yesterday between Mr. Jodoin and Mr. Reynolds. With respect to discussions generally yesterday, I would say that they have not produced any clear conclusions as of this moment.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I ask a supplementary question. This morning's Globe and Mail carries a story that there is a demand for a system of appeals against decisions of the trusteeship, being composed of two members of the C.L.C. and one member of the A.F. of L., and that a tribunal would be set up to which appeals could be made before Mr. Hal Banks could be removed from his position as president of the seafarers' international union. This is quoted as coming from some fairly informed sources. I wonder whether the minister would deny that any such proposal for a private trusteeship is in contemplation.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be inappropriate for me at this stage to disclose the details of the exchange of views between the two labour centres, but I assure my hon. friend that on the appropriate occasion I will be very happy to provide him with as full information as is possible on this and other points. However, I do think it is a matter for decision in connection with the congress and the A.F. of L.-C.I.O. initially, and for that reason I do not think I should give details with respect to those exchanges.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question. Is not this strike the direct result of an ultimatum Banks laid down to the present government?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, of course I deny quite categorically that the present government has received any ultimatum, and I ask the house to accept that denial as a true statement.

NORRIS COMMISSION—INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): May I ask the right hon. Prime Minister a question? In view of the statement by the Prime Minister that the legislation concerning the Norris report would be the first legislation brought forward after the resumption of the session, and in view of a statement by the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) that such legislation would be discussed this week, could the Prime Minister inform the house when that bill will be brought forward?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): This legislation will be considered immediately there is no hope of a satisfactory private settlement.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

PENHOLD, ALTA.—REPLACEMENT AS JET TRAINING BASE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the wasteful and apparently illogical decision regarding the Penhold jet station, and the well defined rumour that the Minister of Agriculture has taken particular interest in this matter—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, I know it hurts. In view of this, is the minister prepared to give consideration to having this matter brought before the defence committee so that witnesses can be called and this whole illogical situation looked into?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I reject categorically the implication that the Minister of Agriculture had anything whatsoever to do with this decision. It was strictly on technical grounds, and once the facts are examined closely the decision is obvious. The decision to commence jet flying training at Penhold was taken by the government of the right hon. gentleman opposite, and if we followed in his footsteps for a few months I think it is no credit to us. As soon as we reviewed the facts, however, it was obvious that it was an erroneous decision and we acted just as quickly as we possibly could without wasting any more of the taxpayers' money.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Following in the footsteps of the previous government has been the course of this government in practically everything in which it has been successful.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Diefenbaker: I ask the minister, is he prepared to permit this matter to be placed before the committee on defence so that the facts can be ascertained?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, if the defence committee would like to have the technical briefing which demonstrates beyond peradventure that the decision we have just taken is the correct one, we would be delighted to supply the witnesses.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And witnesses would be called?

Mr. Hellyer: Absolutely.

AGRICULTURE

RAPESEED—SUGGESTED ALTERNATIVE CROP FOR WHEAT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Has the United States agricultural attache advised the minister that his country is interested in the Canadian rapeseed crop; and if so, will the minister advise the house of his reasons for not including rapeseed as an alternative crop to wheat for western producers?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I probably neglected yesterday to mention this in my statement as far as growing wheat was concerned. This could also include rapeseed, rye and the feeding of cattle and hogs as well as turkeys.

TOBACCO—REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF SUPPORT PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. McBain (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Have members of the Ontario flue cured tobacco growers marketing board recently visited him, or officials of his department, asking for a price support on the marketing of the 1963 crop of tobacco? If so, is the government giving consideration to putting a price support on this crop?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): They were in my office this morning at 8.45, and we are giving consideration to their request.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—REPORTED DISCONTINUANCE OF NEGOTIATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. This is my first opportunity to welcome him back from his grand tour of the Columbia. In view of press reports that the negotiations between Canada and the United States would be discontinued for some time with respect to the Columbia river treaty, would the minister inform the house when he expects they will be resumed?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there has been no discontinuance of the negotiations between Canada and the United States on the Columbia river treaty. A meeting was held on September 6. The negotiations are under way. There is no delay being encouraged by either side with regard to this important matter.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources a question in regard to the Columbia river negotiations. Has the minister reconsidered my request of the early part of this session to give to the house an interim report on the national grid transmission study, and has he now realized that there is a connection between this study and the Columbia river negotiations?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle made a request to the house for a briefing on the present situation with respect to long distance transmission. I recall that a statement was made to the house, and I hope it was made when the hon. member was here. I will check that. If it was not a full statement, we will make it tomorrow; otherwise I will draw it to his attention.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

WINNIPEG—TRANSFER OF OVERHAUL AND MAINTENANCE BASE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport and concerns the T.C.A. overhaul and maintenance base in Winnipeg. He suggested to us on October 2 that he would make a statement on this urgent problem today. Is he now prepared to advise the house on this matter?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I said on October 2 that I expected to be able to make the statement this week, either on Thursday or Friday. I regret to have to advise the house that I am not able to make it today, but I hope to make it very early next week.

TRADE

WHEAT—SHIPMENTS TO RUSSIA THROUGH CHURCHILL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. On September 30, in answer to a question of mine regarding the possibility of shipments of grain through Churchill, the minister answered in part as follows:

> Although the feasibility of using Churchill for shipments to the Soviet union was a matter of discussion between the Canadian wheat board and officials of the U.S.S.R., it was not found possible to use Churchill as a port of exit for the grain recently sold to that country.

Now, in a letter to the minister from the secretary treasurer of the Hudson Bay route association, Mr. J. F. Gray, he reports that he had an interview with Mr. Matveev, who apparently negotiated with the deal for the Russians, and Mr. Matveev stated to him that "had he known of the benefits to be gained by both purchaser and producer—"

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member please state his question or put it on the order paper?

Mr. Simpson: My question is that Mr. Matveev stated that had he known of the facilities at Churchill he would have been very anxious to see the wheat shipped through that port. Can the minister assure me and the house that the negotiators were made fully aware of all the facilities at the port of Churchill?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. gentleman that I was present when such assurance and such information were provided.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Who is correct?

FINANCE

SUGGESTED INCREASE IN SUBSIDY TO GOLD MINES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys; but in view of his prolonged absence, I shall put it to the Prime Minister.

Does the government intend to raise the subsidies to gold mines in order to encourage economic recovery in mining areas that are otherwise depressed, such as Abitibi?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, a question of this kind was asked yesterday, and I now give the same reply. It is a matter of policy and if any action is to be taken it will be announced in due course.

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND—PURCHASE OF RUSSIAN GOLD

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Finance.

Has Canada received a request from the international monetary fund for the purchase, during September alone, of 200 tons of gold, when the I.M.F. bought that amount of gold from Russia?

[Text]

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

FISHERIES

NORTH PACIFIC TREATY—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON NEGOTIATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of reports of continuing conflict of views on the part of participating delegations, could the minister bring the house up to date with regard to the negotiations currently under way in Tokyo with respect to the north Pacific fishery treaty?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member I wish to state that I have just received a cable from the chairman of the Canadian delegation in Tokyo to the effect that the conference will adjourn on Monday next and will reconvene at a later date. I think it would be more appropriate for me to give a full report on Wednesday next, after the return of the Canadian delegation to Ottawa.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC—CANADIAN POSITION FOLLOWING RECENT EVENTS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre-Andre Boutin (Dorchester): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Could the minister inform the house of the stand the Canadian government intends to take in view of the events which occurred recently in the Dominican Republic?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I did not quite make out the question on account of the noise.

Mr. Boutin: Could the minister inform the house of the stand the Canadian government intends to take in view of the events which occurred recently in the Dominican Republic?

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, I shall take this question as notice.

[Text]

ISRAEL—INQUIRY AS TO EXTRADITION TREATY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and I do so at the request of a number of people interested in it. Can the minister inform the house whether he or any of his officials have had discussions recently with any representatives of the state of Israel with respect to signing an extradition treaty with that country?

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest to the hon. member that that is a question for the order paper.

TOBAGO—INQUIRY AS TO OFFER OF ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Has the government offered financial and other assistance to the West Indian island of Tobago which was recently devastated by a hurricane?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this tragic destruction at Tobago took place the day before yesterday. No request for assistance has come from the island, but I think we ought to look into it and see if we can help.

[Later:]

Mr. Pearson: My answer to the hon. member for Royal was incomplete. I am informed by my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs that steps have already been taken by representatives of our government to inquire what the damage has been and how we can assist.

REPORTED REDUCTION IN EXTERNAL AID BECAUSE OF RUSSIAN WHEAT SALE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister.

[Mr. Boutin.]

Is there any truth to the rumours that following its sale of wheat to Russia, Canada will have to reduce its assistance to friendly countries which are in need?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. Those rumours are entirely unfounded.

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): This question, Mr. Speaker, will be supplementary to the one asked by the hon. member for Villeneuve. I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether it is not a fact that in the press release announcing this sale of wheat to Russia it was mentioned that the sale would have the effect of diminishing the volume of our aid to underdeveloped countries.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I do not recall anything in the press release on this subject which said anything to that effect. It will be evident to all hon. members, I think, that it would not be the intention of the government as the result of any sale in any direction to diminish the aid which is now being given.

However, the house will recall that some weeks ago I did make a statement to the effect that it would be government policy gradually to increase the amount of wheat which would be made available to countries wishing to make use of it. In the present year the amount of additional aid which will be provided in the form of wheat under that program may be less than it would otherwise be; in other words, it might take a little longer to build up to the $40 million which was mentioned at the time I made that announcement.

An hon. Member: Is that why you are asking the farmers to cut back their acreage?

Mr. Gregoire: On the same date that the press release was issued by the Department of Trade and Commerce, a press release was put out by the Department of Agriculture saying there was a surplus of butter amounting to 200 million pounds. Could the Minister of Agriculture not give part of that surplus to the Minister of Trade and Commerce so that it might be sent as increased help to underdeveloped countries instead of wheat?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Wherever possible we are helping those countries that need aid. I can assure the hon. member we do have in storage about 241 million pounds of butter and butter oil which have accumulated since 1958. This is causing a great deal of concern, and we are doing our best to deal with this unhappy situation.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I should like to address a supplementary question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce relating to the foreign aid program. Did the previous answer indicate that the amount of the increase in our foreign aid which the government is contemplating will depend on the size of our surplus?

Mr. Sharp: No. I was talking specifically about wheat, and I was suggesting that the quantities of wheat which would be available in addition to those now being provided might be reduced. There is no suggestion that we should ever permit anything to interfere with the aid program which has now been arranged. All I was suggesting was that the program for increasing the amount of wheat which might be provided under this program would probably not build up as quickly this year as it otherwise would, in view not of the shortage of grain but of the limitation on transportation. However, this has nothing whatever to do with the attitude of the government toward foreign aid as a whole and my colleagues, the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, can give these reassurances to the house.

Mr. Aiken: A supplementary question. If we do not have the wheat, do we substitute money or other goods?

Mr. Pearson: Perhaps I might answer that question by saying that wheat is only one element in our foreign aid program and not the most important, since consumer goods are not those normally required in those countries. The government is now considering ways and means of increasing our effort under the foreign aid program.

ALGERIA—EFFECT ON CANADIAN INTERESTS OF NATIONALIZATION PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Does the minister know whether Canadian industries or funds are involved in the nationalization carried out at present by Mr. Ben Bella's government?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): That matter will be looked into next week but, at this moment, I think it should be put on the order paper.

AIR TRANSPORT

APPLICATION BY U.S. CARRIER FOR LOS ANGELES-MONTREAL SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Transport. Could the minister tell the house whether the air transport board has approved the application by a United States carrier for the right to carry passengers between Los Angeles or San Francisco and Montreal? Perhaps in the minister's absence his parliamentary secretary would take the question as notice.

Mr. Speaker: I do not see any special urgency in this question. Perhaps the hon. member would put it on the order paper. I take it the matter has been under consideration for some time.

CANADIAN REPRESENTATION AT ASSOCIATION MEETING

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. P. Antoine Belanger (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

Would he tell me if Canada will send delegates to the Strasbourg conference called by the International Air Transport Association for October 22, in order to set new air rates over the North Atlantic.

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I take this question as notice.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

HAINES ROAD—INQUIRY AS TO MAINTENANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the minister of northern affairs. Could he inform the house of the nature of the discussions or negotiations which are now taking place, or have taken place, with the government of the United States or the government of the state of Alaska with respect to the maintenance of the Haines cut-off road in the Yukon?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I reported to the house that a group of senior officials had just returned to Ottawa following a study they had pursued in the U. S. Panhandle and the Yukon on all transportation matters. It would certainly be premature to suggest any policy on the part of the government until the report of these gentlemen is studied.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Nielsen: As a supplementary question, can the minister inform the house whether discussions or negotiations have taken place or are taking place with the United States government or the government of the state of Alaska with respect to this matter?

Mr. Laing: There have been a great number of studies, our studies as well as individual studies, but I do not think negotiations are taking place at the moment.

NORTHERN TRANSPORTATION COMPANY—COMPETITION WITH PRIVATE ENTERPRISE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce; perhaps the hon. gentleman would clarify government policy on this matter. Does the government intend to permit Northern Transportation Company to extend its operations in the north in direct competition with private enterprise?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): This is a question of which I would require some notice. As the hon. gentleman knows, there have been discussions between the Northern Transportation Company and some of the other carriers. We have had this matter under consideration for some time, and I think it would be in the interests of all concerned if I had a little time to prepare an answer which would be as clear and satisfactory as possible.

Mr. Nugent: Is it true that the minister is being advised on this question by a committee composed of his deputy and the president of Northern Transportation Company, although the question being considered is the competition between Northern Transportation Company and private enterprise in the north?

Mr. Sharp: I can assure the hon. gentleman that I am receiving advice from many quarters, including those he has mentioned.

STATEMENT AS TO RECREATIONAL PARKS PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Brandon-Souris asked me when he might expect a report on recreational parks, and with special reference to winter works therein. I wish to announce that the government has approved a very extensive program of winter works in respect of its national parks that are located near designated development areas. In respect of recreational parks I want to assure him that this matter is under active study and an announcement will be made soon.

[Mr. Laing.]

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the federal-provincial committee on parks be reconvened this fall and will this matter of recreational parks be brought to its attention?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, I agree entirely with the implication of the hon. member that the best job in respect of recreational parks can be done by understanding and co-operative agreement between the federal government and the provinces, and we will certainly pursue that aspect actively.

SHIPPING

ATLANTIC AREA—REPORTED DISCONTINUANCE OF NAVIGATION CHAIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport, but I hope his parliamentary secretary will be able to reply. As a result of the many representations I have received from the fishermen concerned and also owners of fishing trawlers, can the minister advise why the Decca navigation chain No. 6, which covers the area of the Atlantic between Nova Scotia and Newfoundland, has been discontinued? I understand the discontinuance of the chain is causing extreme hardship and possible loss of fishing gear.

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will take that question as notice.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

INQUIRY AS TO CONSTRUCTION PROGRESS ON MATANE-STE. ANNE DES MONTS LINE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Charles-Eugene Dionne (Kamouraska): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

Could the minister tell the house what the government intends to do with regard to the construction of the railway line between Matane and Ste. Anne des Monts, since that legislation was adopted over 18 months ago? Will the project soon become a reality?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I take this question as notice.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REPORTED DISQUALIFICATION DRIVE AGAINST FARM LABOUR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. I would like to ask him whether the unemployment insurance commission is currently undertaking a disqualification drive against persons living on or connected with farms. My question arises from a mimeographed disqualification form which came into my hands this morning.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to take that question as notice.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR SETTING UP OF COMMITTEE ON RAILWAYS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport, or in his absence, to his parliamentary secretary.

Could the minister or his parliamentary secretary tell the house when they intend to call the special sessional committee on railways, in order to allow us to hear what the president of the C.N.R. has to say?

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Perhaps, sir, I could answer that question as house leader. The committee will be set up as soon as the house can find time to do it.

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): As a supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I think there was a complete answer given by the Secretary of State. However, I will not prevent the hon. member from asking the question.

Mr. Valade: I regret having to put a supplementary, but I think it is in order and I do not think it should be disallowed. Can the Secretary of State say whether the president of the C.N.R. will oblige the members of parliament in a much better way than he has in the past at committee hearings, since in the past he has refused to answer many questions put to him by members of parliament?

NATIONAL DEFENCE

QUEBEC—REPORTED CLOSING OF CERTAIN RADAR STATIONS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbiniere): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence.

Can the minister tell me whether a new defence policy is being worked out which would result in the closing in the near future of some radar stations, particularly the radar station at St. Sylvestre, in the constituency of Lotbiniere?

[Text]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): As part of our general review of defence requirements we are taking a look at our radar capabilities to see whether economies can be effected without seriously reducing the effectiveness of the system as a whole. As soon as the review is complete, any decisions which are taken will be announced.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Choquette: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In such an occurrence, can the minister tell the house whether the government intends to take special steps to prevent the non-employment of people who would be laid off following such a decision?

[Text]

Mr. Hellyer: It will be the general policy of the Department of National Defence whenever there are dislocations caused by moving or closing bases to give as much warning as possible and, in addition, to collaborate with other departments of government, including the Department of Labour, to see how we can alleviate any hardship which might be caused to employees on those stations.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

CONSIDERATION OF SECOND TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works and ask him, in view of the urgent need for a second trans-Canada highway, especially through northern British Columbia, and the statement made by the minister on July 17 last that he hoped to arrange for a dominion-provincial conference to consider highway matters this fall, whether such arrangements have been made and when the conference will be held.

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): No arrangements have been made as yet. As the hon. member realizes, this is a matter of government policy and a decision will be taken in due time.

Interim Supply

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

WEST BLOCK—REQUEST FOR ELEVATOR REPAIRS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): In view of the wide variety of questions asked this morning, might I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works on a matter which affects all members of this house. Before the one year warranty or guarantee runs out on the elevators installed in the west block, will the hon. gentleman issue an order that the elevators there be corrected so that if a member wishes to go to the third floor he does not have to push the button for the second floor, and if wishes to get down from the third floor he does not have to play bingo with all the buttons in order to arrive at the floor he wishes to reach?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, this is a very urgent question, because I was nearly trapped last Saturday in an elevator in the west block. I can say to my hon. friend that the matter has been reported and I am informed that the engineers are reviewing the whole system immediately.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $747,449,955.03, being the aggregate of—

(a) two twelfths of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1964, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, except fisheries item 45, northern affairs and national resources item 10 and public works items 20 and 190 for which the proportion is one twelfth and except atomic energy item 5, external affairs item 107 and loans, investments and advances item L420 for which no proportion is requested, $640,449,276.00;

(b) an additional three twelfths of the amount of transport item 35, $820,000.00;

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I wish to continue my remarks this morning and deal especially with a statement made a while ago by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson).

It is plain that the appointment which the Prime Minister announced this morning constituted a difficult problem for the present government. On the one hand, pressure was brought to bear by the directors of the Canadian National Railways and certain heads of labour movements to maintain the present chairman in office. On the other hand, pressure was also brought to bear to remove him from office or rather not to reappoint him.

In the first place, I want to congratulate the Prime Minister for his courage and his boldness in taking such a decision which was not an easy one in the circumstances.

As far as I am concerned, Mr. Chairman, I had sometime earlier the opportunity to question the chairman of National Railways. It also happens that I in no way agreed with him on certain points, but, personally, I never asked for the head of the present chairman of the C.N.R. I asked him to use his head, but I never wanted to see his head chopped off as chairman.

In the letter he wrote to the Prime Minister, the chairman of National Railways today admits that there is a problem of bilingualism within the C.N.R., and that the representation of French Canadians on the higher levels is inadequate. He does take a step forward when he acknowledges existing conditions, and we have always welcomed repentant sinners with open arms.

If the chairman of National Railways is ready to admit that some errors have been committed in the past, if he is ready to admit, as he has done, that there actually is a problem of biculturalism and bilingualism in that crown corporation, I think he has taken a great step forward and that it would be well to give him a chance to do now what he failed to do in the past.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

I think that this is the more important because, thanks to his many years of experience, and following all the pressure put on the National Railways administration, he is better able to see that one should actually reconsider all those things, this whole French fact inside the most important crown corporation, that is, the C.N.R.

I seem to understand that his term of office would be renewed for only a year and a half. However, we are not to be fooled, because it is obvious that those two letters have been written by arrangement and that the whole business was concocted so that the chairman of National Railways would himself put a limit to his term, which would more or less be a compromise suggested and accepted by the chairman now in office of the Canadian National Railways.

We understand perfectly well what is behind all that—a year and a half. The president of the Canadian National Railways will come before the committee, and we will be ready to give him a fond welcome and tell him exactly what we want.

We do not wish to confine ourselves to destructive criticism. We want our criticism to be quite constructive. By criticizing in a practical way, by means of realistic suggestions and positive ideas, we want to help solve the problems which may exist within confederation and not try to stir up the two races one against the other. Instead of that, one race must tell the other what it means by confederation and the other one must try to understand the other's point of view.

Mr. Chairman, in my opinion, that is the only way we can succeed in solving the problems Canada now faces. I believe in confederation, providing we are fully aware of what can happen, that is that French Canadians have to become first class citizens of this country. They want their responsibilities as such and, moreover, they want to be able to say and do by themselves what they want to say and do. And I think that all the civil service and cabinet members know now that the one who is still the most able to ensure the survival of confederation at this time and who carries the heaviest burden is the Minister of Finance since he holds in his hands the ultimatum of the premier of Quebec to the effect that he wants the province to get back 25 per cent of the tax on corporations, 25 per cent of personal income taxes, and 100 per cent of succession duties.

It is a first request but it is the most important and that which comes first place at this time if we really want confederation to survive.

April 5 next will be "D day" for confederation. Will the present government agree to give back to the provinces the sources of revenue they are entitled to? I hope so, otherwise I believe that day will see the greatest split within confederation; at that time, we French Canadians will be in a position to say: Well, after all, maybe we are better off alone than in confederation where we are refused our responsibilities and the sources of revenue that would enable us to assume them. Mr. Chairman, that is a determining factor.

The other day, I heard the Prime Minister say on the C.B.C.'s French and English television networks: We agree that the provinces have responsibilities, but the federal government also has its own responsibilities. That is true. But the Prime Minister should seriously tell himself that the present government has assumed responsibilities that did not rightly belong to it.

By entering the fields of highways, education, hospital insurance, etc., the present government has assumed responsibilities which the federal government did not have to assume; and if the federal government had not assumed those responsibilities at that time, it should not have been forced to take away from the provinces sources of revenues which they need. If the provinces had retained their sources of revenues, they could assume their responsibilities in the fields of education, highways, hospital insurance, agriculture, etc. If the federal government has greater responsibilities today, it is because it has entered the provincial field.

During the first part of the session, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne) said that where a province wanted to resume its responsibilities in certain fields, there should be no reason why it should not at the same time get back its former sources of revenues.

I am surprised, Mr. Chairman, to note that the government of Quebec has not asked officially to resume those responsibilities, which should be his, as well as the moneys related to them. I hope the provincial government will carry out the suggestion of the President of the Privy Council, that is resume its responsibilities in those fields as well as the sources of revenue to carry out those responsibilities.

Mr. Chairman, I apologize if I am slowly coming near my Liberal colleagues. The reason is that I realize that they need to be convinced. I should not say convinced but indeed persuaded. I know they are convinced of what I said today.

Mr. Habel: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. It is not so much the fact that the hon. member for Lapointe is coming nearer to us that concerns us, but the fact that he is standing in front of the Sergeant-at-Arms while he is speaking, and this is altogether out of order.

Mr. Gregoire: There would always be a solution, Mr. Chairman, that is to move the Sergeant-at-Arms.

I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that these are important factors in confederation—determining factors for the French Canadian race and Quebec Liberals are of the same opinion. I am convinced that it is partisanship that prevents them from saying out loud what they believe down in their hearts, and I hope, Mr. Chairman, that for the greatest benefit of all, they will put aside party considerations.

The Prime Minister himself, the leader of the Liberal party, said on television that partisanship must be put aside in order to solve the great problems facing Canada.

I have a suggestion to make that I did not expect to make this morning, it has to do with the reappointment of the president of the Canadian National Railways. We want to prove that we are without bias, that we are willing to help toward the solution of problems, and that we know what they actually are. They have nothing to do with the appointment of an individual, of a president in particular, but they consist in a group of very definite principles the most important of which is to give back to the provinces their sources of income. There are others, such as a greater participation of French Canadians in the federal public service. After what happened in the past, I am sure that the present C.N.R. president has decided to assume his responsibilities.

Mr. Chairman, before concluding my remarks, I wish to tell you that the present problem raised in the house could easily be settled by recognizing a group of 13 French Canadian members from the province of Quebec who wish to assert without fanaticism but with determination, the French fact within confederation. And now after a week, nothing has been done and it seems that this group of French Canadian members who wish to be recognized are being deliberately ignored.

It rests with certain members of the government to see that a decision is taken as soon as possible, because it is absolutely illogical and utterly ridiculous not to recognize a group of 13 members of the province of Quebec who have been elected with majorities comparable to that of any of your members.

Certain members have formed a political party and wish to assert the French fact within confederation.

Mr. Chairman, I think that the present government must take a decision in this connection, not in a week's time, but immediately. I think that the problem can be solved before the end of the week. The following fact cannot be disregarded: 13 members who wish to emphasize a definite point in this house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, what I intend to do on this occasion is deal with some elements of the question that was raised by my hon. friend the member for Ontario, namely the threat to the flow of grain shipments on the great lakes and the St. Lawrence seaway which, as stated in the motion, we believe is due to lack of any effective action being taken by the government of Canada.

I start by a reference to a statement made by the Minister of Labour this morning when he referred to this matter while answering a question. He stated that, after all, the strike had only been on for three and a half hours. This statement, I feel, may well rank with other classic statements that have been made by ministers throughout the years, not losing sight at the moment of the one, "What's a million dollars, anyhow?". This was a most unusual statement for the minister to make, because he is usually a member who chooses his language with great care. No doubt harried by the experiences of the last few days he made that statement, which taken literally does not show that regard for the seriousness of the situation that should characterize a minister of labour.

I should like also to refer to the statement made by the Prime Minister this morning in relation to the Banks situation. He said, when asked by the hon. member for Three Rivers when the trusteeship legislation would be proceeded with, "When there is no hope of a private settlement". This answer is one that completely disregards the interests of the Canadian people.

The Minister of Labour has reiterated a denial he made to me the other day, that to his knowledge there has been no threat by the S.I.U. to the effect that if there were a possibility of the legislation for trusteeship being proceeded with there would be trouble and a tie-up of shipping on the St. Lawrence. When he says he has not heard that, I naturally accept his statement in that regard. But I would point out that is not the view of others intimately connected with this matter. I would point out that there has been some correspondence between Mr. J. D. Leitch, president of Upper Lakes Shipping Limited, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Labour. This correspondence consists of telegrams one of which is dated, as I am informed, October 1. In the course of that telegram Mr. Leitch has pointed out that while his company has been directly interested in what is taking place, in the lawlessness on the great lakes, his company has not been consulted at any time. He says this:

> Regret that at no point has a representative of our company been consulted.

Then he says this:

> It is my firm conviction that as a question of law and order there is no room to compromise... and the Canadian government must give firm leadership and not be deterred by the threats of waterfront hoodlums.

Mr. Pearson: May I ask the right hon. gentleman from what he is reading?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am reading from a telegram about which the Prime Minister should know, he having received it from Mr. Leitch on October 1.

Mr. Pearson: May I ask the right hon. gentleman how he received it?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, I will tell him. Apparently a moment ago the Prime Minister did not know he had received it. I would point out that a copy of the telegram was sent to me. Apparently the Prime Minister paid so little attention to it he did not know from what I was reading.

There was a further telegram sent to the Minister of Labour by Mr. Leitch complaining that there had been no opportunity given to his company to make representations. The other day in the house I suggested that Mr. Wirtz or representatives of his department had warned that no other ships of this company should be allowed to go to Chicago. I will return to that a little later, because I find that a representative of one of the unions quoted the United States labour department as having stated that Mr. Wirtz had informed him that it would be dangerous, if not indeed improper, for a Canadian ship to use the great lakes and continue on its course to the port of Chicago.

This morning we endeavoured to secure some information, and we received the usual brush-off. Because of the series of evasive replies that have been received, the hon. member for Ontario moved a motion and that motion was not placed before the house by Mr. Speaker. I am not arguing in any way about that, the determination having been made. I would point out, however, that this is a matter of deep concern. It was a matter of deep concern in the month of August when this house adjourned. There was lawlessness and tyranny being perpetrated on the great lakes. A report was made by Mr. Justice Norris, and the government decided to adjourn parliament. Parliament adjourned. The minister had stated that if there was any outbreak of lawlessness, parliament would be recalled. There was a dynamiting. There may have been, in addition to that, other acts of lawlessness to a lesser degree, but a dynamiting took place. I am not going to argue at the moment that therefore parliament should have been called between September 10 and 30, although that is a long delay on the part of a government that was full of determination to protect Canadian interests and the rights of Canadians to the use of the great lakes.

The house convened on September 30. Naturally we expected legislation then. First there was the promise that if certain things were done, this legislation would be proceeded with. Then, finally, the answer of the Prime Minister today indicates that it is now part of the Pearson plan that this legislation will not be brought before parliament until the hope of a private settlement is entirely terminated. That is passing strange. The resolution is here. I am sure the house as a whole would be willing to proceed immediately with it. Why the delay? Why these movements, these pilgrimages back and forth between here and Washington that have become so characteristic in the last few weeks and months, and so devoid of success?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What of these pilgrimages? Why has no action been taken? Why this delay? Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Ontario this morning endeavoured to bring this matter before the house. Let me point out this. He was minister of labour for a period of five and one half years or more. He gave to this country a degree of amity in labour relations that we had never enjoyed prior thereto. The minister suggested there was no pressure on the government. We realize they have a lot of problems on their hands. We recognize their difficulties. We see their faces showing the disconsolateness that comes from responsibility. We see all that, Mr. Chairman. But surely there has been time to take some action.

I am going to refer particularly now to the longshoremen's strike. I am not going to argue the question as to its legality. The Prime Minister smiles, Mr. Chairman. He does not even know what a legal strike is, judging from his lack of knowledge of a few minutes ago of a wire he received pointing out the great seriousness of the situation that prevails. Here we are with tremendous orders for available wheat that is waiting to be shipped. Apparently 60 million bushels of wheat are ready for shipment at the port of Montreal or are en route there. What has the government done? Why did it wait until the last minute of the last hour before acting? There are 3,800 members of the international longshoremen's association in Montreal, Three Rivers, Quebec and Sorel. These ports handle an average of 75 ships a day at the peak of the shipping season. Montreal alone can load 3 million bushels of grain per day.

There were long negotiations with the shipping federation. This is not a recent matter. Last March the federation offered the I.L.A. a 12 cents an hour increase, plus 4 cents in fringe benefits. The I.L.A. refused. The executive accepted, but the membership declined. A conciliation board was set up. It unanimously recommended a 22 cents package. Both parties rejected the recommendation. Then came the wildcat strike on the waterfront on September 9 and 10. Then the government, with the Russian wheat deal on the books, saw the need for some action and proceeded to act. The cause of this strike was rank and file dissatisfaction with dragged out negotiations with the shipowners; the members of the union were fed up with the delay. The union leaders persuaded the members to return to work, and shortly after the conciliation board report was brought in.

Why was there such delay after the report? This is just another example of the government's complete lack of decisiveness. It makes plans, but they are mainly theory without action. This is just another example of that. The government apparently saw no urgency in the situation until the Russian wheat shipments were in jeopardy. This is one time they cannot rely on Mr. Wirtz or anyone else outside our country. The attitude to date in so far as the Montreal, Three Rivers, Quebec and Sorel situation is concerned has been that of too little and too late. On Wednesday the government appointed as federal mediator Judge Lippe of Montreal. Why all the delay? Why wait until the last moment?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Prime Minister laughs. That is the way he tries to laugh off the seriousness of Canadian problems that he is beginning to realize. He laughs; that is his attitude.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the right hon. gentleman has mentioned my name, I may tell him that I am laughing at his suggestion that there was delay in making an appointment which was made immediately after the time it could have been made; and I remind him of the year and a half delay in appointing the chairman of the board of the C.N.R.

Mr. Starr: What a comparison that is.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, the Prime Minister smiles when he is most annoyed and hurt. There is a guilty conscience there. Why did he mention the C.N.R. presidency? If you could have seen the face of the Minister of Justice today, Mr. Chairman, you would have understood that the Prime Minister has his troubles.

Mr. Robichaud: He can make decisions, though.

Mr. Diefenbaker: All I can say in this connection is that the House of Commons breathes more freely today. I do not know how he could have stood the loss of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Pearson: Or the Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I can understand why the Prime Minister referred to that matter. Nothing has been done. There has been nothing but delay. Smokescreens of that kind do not deter me from placing the facts before the house. Shipping is tied up. Newspaper reports claim that officials hope to divert wheat and flour loading to other ports. I will make reference to that a little later. The hon. member for Saint John-Albert has been endeavouring to secure some consideration for Saint John and Halifax, and the hon. member for Churchill has placed a very strong argument before the house on behalf of the port of Churchill, which for some reason was circumvented under these plans.

What is going to be done about this? We would like to know what is the situation. Why the delay? The government realized it would need the ships and shipping facilities when it entered into this contract. The Minister of Trade and Commerce pointed out that at our seaports approximately 640 vessels each of 10,000 tons average would be required to transport the wheat. This house needs from the government a statement, not the evasion of the last few days, setting forth what it is going to do; for the minister must be the first to admit it is imperative that there be no interference with the smooth flow of loading and shipping if there is any expectation of commitments being met.

The house cannot tolerate a situation of this kind, because the prospect of continuing violence and disruption on the seaway and the lakes threatens interference with free movement on these waters. I repeat that the information given to me, despite the fact that it has not come to the notice of the Minister of Labour, is that the S.I.U. threatened that if any action were expected or anticipated under the Norris report, there would be difficulty in Montreal.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, would the right hon. gentleman give us the source of that very important information?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am making the statement, Mr. Chairman, and I do not have to give the source. I am saying that everybody knows it but the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: If everybody knows it, why won't the right hon. gentleman tell us the source?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I might also add that the Minister of Labour was directly asked the question by a member of the press gallery on Saturday last, as to whether this took place, and my information is that his answer was "I am not going to discuss that."

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I think this point is of some consequence. It is true that last Saturday at the airport a member of the press gallery asked me had I any comment to make on a report that had been issued and put on the air during my absence from Ottawa, to the effect that there was this relationship between the I.L.A. and the S.I.U., and I said I had no comment. I went on to say that I hoped reason would prevail, a bit of advice which I would tender to the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There is no denial that the answer was he had nothing to say about that. In so far as the minister's advice is concerned I say, physician heal thyself.

I shall go on from there. I have mentioned this threat which is common knowledge, and it is also suggested in the wires to which I have made reference. Why has there been the delay in action? It is a strange thing that all through the past Mr. Banks has received the kindest of treatment from successive Liberal governments.

I am going to refer to that because it is strange that here the government says to the House of Commons, "We have a resolution on the order paper and we are going to act on it." Then the government suddenly changes its tone today and says, "We will get on with it only if we do not get a private arrangement."

Many people are involved, including Mr. Meaney, Mr. Paul Hall and representatives of the United States department of labour. It is very obvious there is a difference of opinion, and that what is good for Canada is not regarded by Mr. Wirtz, and those associated with him, as good for the United States. That has been made very clear, and there are many quotations I could give of statements and conclusions to that effect by members of the press gallery following the interview they had with him.

In behind all these things we have the shadow of Mr. Banks and the solicitude this man has received from successive Liberal governments, this man who Mr. Justice Norris said is of the stuff of the Capones and of the Hoffas. Throughout his career he has been protected by the Liberal party in this country. He was given, after conviction in Canada, the unassailable status of landed immigrant.

What manner of man is this demi-god? When he came to Canada and signed the immigration entry paper the question was not there and was not asked: "Have you a criminal record?" That would have been an embarrassing question because his criminal record would have kept him out.

In those days the minister was Hon. Walter Harris.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the right hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Certainly.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could the right hon. gentleman say on what date Mr. Banks first came to Canada?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have got everything and I am very glad that question has been asked. I did not think I would have the opportunity to put it all on the record, and I thank my hon. friend because this is very helpful. I will give him the entire record, because he has asked for it.

I have previously mentioned Mr. Banks' criminal record and I will deal with the items one by one, including the hon. gentleman's question. Mr. Banks lived in the United States and had a criminal record from 1930 until 1947. He faced various charges upon which he was convicted, and I will come to the date in a moment.

After his arrival in Canada a series of charges were preferred against him from time to time and finally, on April 14, 1952, he was convicted at Montreal on a charge of being in possession of smuggled United States cigarettes, to which he pleaded guilty. After that he was immediately subject to deportation, but nothing was done about it. No action was taken to deport him on the basis of his conviction.

I have the order in council here, and it is interesting reading. I will not belabour the committee with it at this time, but I have it for future use.

Mr. Banks came to Canada in January, 1949. He entered as a non-immigrant with a minimum of formality, that minimum of formality consisting of failing to ask him the question that would have kept him out. From 1949 onward his period of stay was extended in six months periods, and on May 8, 1952, he applied for the status of landed immigrant.

The hon. gentleman who has asked me the question about the date of his arrival did not become minister of citizenship and immigration until July 1, 1954.

Mr. Pickersgill: The right hon. gentleman has that fact correct.

Mr. Diefenbaker: But it is of interest that this order in council was passed during his term of office. In June, 1954, Mr. Jean St. Onge of the Montreal office of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, designated as an inquiry officer under section 11 of the immigration act, recommended Mr. Banks' deportation on the basis of his criminal record involving moral turpitude.

In June, 1954 Mr. Banks appealed to the then minister of citizenship and immigration, Mr. Harris, against deportation, and there was an amendment introduced in the House of Commons, and passed through parliament, enabling an appeal to be made to the minister against such orders. I am sure hon. gentlemen opposite would say that it was only coincidence—

Mr. Pearson: Did you vote against that?

Mr. Diefenbaker: —but it had a wonderful effect. It enabled the appeal to be heard by Mr. Harris, and in the same month Mr. Harris allowed the appeal and set aside the deportation.

I am glad the Secretary of State asked me this question, because it clears up the atmosphere. I will now refer to the order in council, because it was passed during the period when he was minister. Mind you, I should point out that the determination was made earlier, after parliament ended. Parliament ended near the end of June and the appeal was then allowed, with the order in council being passed, and this order shows a masterful capacity for forgetting the facts. Attached to it is his record, and that order in council is P.C. 1954-1015, dated July 6, 1954, and reads as follows:

> The committee of the privy council have had before them a report dated 30th June 1954, from the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, representing:
> That under section 5 of the Immigration Act, a person who has been convicted of or admits having committed any crime involving moral turpitude is prohibited from admission to Canada;
>
> That notwithstanding this prohibition the governor general in council may—and this was the effect of the amendment passed by the House of Commons—

> —upon satisfactory evidence of successful rehabilitation, authorize the admission of such a person to Canada if a period of five years in the case of an adult and two years in the case of a minor has elapsed since the termination of the imprisonment period or the completion of the sentence; and
> That the person named in the appendix hereto appears to have been successfully rehabilitated.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

> The committee, therefore, on the recommendation of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration,—

That was not the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. He had not become minister at the time the recommendation was made. He was just the minister at the time the order in council was passed.

> —advise that Your Excellency may be pleased, pursuant to the Immigration Act to authorize the admission to Canada of Harold Chamberlain Banks, of whom particulars are set out in the appendix hereto.

This appendix is really something. It is what you might call an abbreviated appendix. No operation has ever been more complete in removing from an appendix the serious portions of it. All it says is that Harold Chamberlain Banks was convicted on September 27, 1930 by the Los Angeles superior court and sentenced to 14 years in San Quentin. The document goes on:

> Twenty years have elapsed since the termination of the sentence. He entered Canada at intervals from 1948 as representative of the seafarers' international union and has resided here since 1952. He has been executive director of the union...
> In view of his important contribution to the Canadian shipping industry, it is recommended that authority for his admission be provided under section 5(d)(i) of the Immigration Act.

I said this was an abbreviated appendix. They forgot to mention that he was convicted of having smuggled goods in his possession only two years earlier, an offence for which he could be deported but which, for some reason or other, was not mentioned in the record. This is no attempt to deal completely with the record he has. That has already been dealt with in the Norris report. Look at the situation. Review that evidence, and ask yourselves whether Harold Chamberlain Banks has not got a great deal to thank the former Liberal government for. I wonder whether the solicitude shown in 1952, 1953 and 1954 by the governments of that day will be forgotten by the Canadian people.

That is the picture. Today this man enjoys the status of landed immigrant with established Canadian domicile although citizenship has been refused to him. He applied for citizenship but his application was refused. When we were in office we looked into this situation to see what could be done. We found that as a result of the action taken by the former government under the order in council to which I have alluded there was no action which we could take against him. That shows how complete, how thorough a job was done in assuring Mr. Banks that whatever his lawlessness might be he could not be interfered with as far as his residence and domicile in Canada are concerned.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the right hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I answered one, and I have not completed—

Mr. Pickersgill: I can understand that the right hon. gentleman does not like the facts.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have the floor, and I am trying to answer the hon. gentleman in the detail he asked for.

Miss LaMarsh: Don't confuse him with facts.

An hon. Member: You should talk.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I ask, why the failure of the government to act? Why all this playing around? When I asked the minister the other day whether Mr. Wirtz had tried to stop a Canadian grain ship he said he had no information. All I can tell him is that it was in the press on September 27. I have the clipping here.

> Washington (CP)—U.S. labor secretary Willard Wirtz will attempt to use his influence to discourage a Toronto company from sending another grain ship to Chicago, a trade union source said Thursday night.
> The informant said Wirtz made this promise in a brief discussion Thursday with Peter McGavin, secretary treasurer of the AFL-CIO maritime trade department.
>
> Earlier, McGavin told a press conference that any move to send the grain ship John Ericsson to Chicago would be considered a deliberate provocation designed to stir up new trouble in the great lakes labor battle.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is that evidence?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why, what manner of work is this?

May I call it one o'clock?

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I have not gone into lengthy detail in answer to my hon. friend, the Secretary of State. There are many more details that could be given and will be given at an appropriate time in regard to Banks' record. I have simply given a general outline and have left out quite a series of events in the Alger story of Mr. Banks' life. I can, of course, deal with these matters in more detail on another occasion. However, I feel I have answered the question asked.

I would point out that various questions were asked in the House of Commons in June of 1954 regarding Mr. Banks, and Hansard records the discussions that took place. I would refer particularly to Hansard of the 26th of June, 1954, page 6825, where reference was made by Mr. Harris, the then minister, to the Immigration Act with regard to an appeal to the minister of an order to deport and the exercise of clemency by him on grounds of satisfactory proof of rehabilitation.

The record of Mr. Banks in Canada, apart altogether from the conviction for having in his possession smuggled goods, was sufficient for his deportation.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether the right hon. gentleman would permit me to ask him one question. Was there any other conviction in Canada? I am afraid I have not made a careful study of the record recently such as the right hon. gentleman has, but was there any other conviction in Canada except the one for being in possession of smuggled cigarettes?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I did not expect that would be asked. I have the record and I will endeavour to locate it. I may have it here and as I come to it I will deal with that point, because the question is a perfectly proper one. I know that the minister is very much interested in the position of Mr. Banks because it was during his period of office that the order in council was passed; but the direction was made by Mr. Harris a day or so before he turned over his portfolio to the hon. gentleman. You see, parliament stopped sitting on the 26th of June and in those four days—I know the minister will agree that the department works very fast—the department operated at an unusual speed. The minister looked into the whole question and, while he expressed doubts that a decision would be made at an early date, within four days a decision had been rendered.

The decision, of course, must have been a decision of cabinet. Indeed, there are records showing that generally speaking not only did the principle of cabinet solidarity apply but the Secretary of State gave his personal imprimatur to the high quality of Mr. Banks. There is one hon. gentleman in the house who used to take a very firm stand on this question. I refer to the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) who has turned in my direction now. He dealt with this matter at length on a number of occasions but did not receive much consideration.

During the noon hour Maclean's magazine for February, 1955, Canada's national magazine, was brought to my attention. It contains an article dealing with the appeal in question and says:

> Banks appealed to the minister of the department, Walter Harris. In his last day of office, before taking over the finance ministry, Harris quashed the deportation order.

Then it goes on to say:

> Harris' successor, Jack Pickersgill, says, "I wholeheartedly agree with Walter Harris' decision. I hope that a lot of questions will be asked about it."

In addition, there were other ministers who decided to add their enthusiastic support to

Mr. Banks. Among them was the labour minister of that time and, according to Maclean's magazine, again the Secretary of State supported Mr. Banks with his personal judgment.

Mr. Pickersgill: With what?

Mr. Diefenbaker: His personal judgment.

Mr. Pickersgill: I must confess, Mr. Chairman, that I do not understand what that statement means. It does not seem to me to make much sense. But if I may say one word I think it is probably correct, though I have forgotten the article, that I did say I agreed with the decision that Mr. Harris had made. I am perfectly sure that Mr. Harris made that decision as he made every other decision, in the full knowledge of his duty to this country—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: —and no man did so more conscientiously.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. gentleman said he was rising to ask a question. He just makes the situation that much worse by again giving his support to the course that was followed that was so detrimental to Canada. He now embraces Banks once more.

Mr. Matheson: Nonsense.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The degree to which he again embraces Banks indicates that Mr. Banks has friends in government circles.

Mr. Matheson: Nonsense.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A question was asked of me, and that question referred to any other charges—

Mr. Pickersgill: No, I said conviction. I asked the right hon. gentleman if Mr. Banks had been convicted in Canada before June 30 of any other charge except the one he mentioned. I said "convicted", not charged. Whatever the right hon. gentleman may feel about it, I do not feel that a charge is a conviction.

Mr. Matheson: Hear, hear.

An hon. Member: Another friend of Banks.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I now want to appropriate the words of the hon. gentleman during an interruption a moment ago. He said, "I am not in the habit of repudiating my friends". The whole story now becomes unveiled—my friend Banks; he is not in the habit of repudiating him.

Mr. Bell: They are both sailors.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The seriousness of the situation along the St. Lawrence is shown by the telegram I received a few moments ago from Mr. A. P. Gleave, president of the national farmers' union. He says:

I have sent the following telegram to Prime Minister Pearson. Strike of longshoremen union creates intolerable situation of bringing grain movement through St. Lawrence ports to a standstill thus jeopardizing completion of grain sales to Soviet union and other countries during the current crop year. Resumption of grain movement is of vital interest to western farmers and general economy. Therefore we urge immediate legislative action.

This is an example of how serious the situation is, and of the need for immediate action.

I have already pointed out the tremendous delays from August until now. I am not going to quote Hansard to cite the reasons for the delay in taking action. The undertaking given by the government was clear and unequivocal. It was this: If disorder were to break out, if tyranny were to again ride, parliament would be called back. Days have gone by since, and yet the government continues to fritter away time by meetings, considering, discussing. I said a moment ago that there seemed to be a relationship between the situation that has arisen in Montreal and the action threatened to be taken by the government in relation to Mr. Banks.

It is interesting to go back as far as November 22, 1960 to find a beautiful picture of brotherly love. The Secretary of State said: "I am not in the habit of repudiating friends." Here they are together, the five leaders, attending a union conference at S.I.U. headquarters. They are as follows: Thomas Gleason, general secretary of the international longshoremen's association; Hal C. Banks, vice president, seafarers' international union and director of its Canadian district; Paul Hall, who called the conference, president of the S.I.U. and the maritime trades department of the AFL-CIO; Tony Anastasia, vice president of the I.L.A., and Rod Hayes, vice president of the international brotherhood of teamsters.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is the aggregation. They are all together there in one picture. The article says they are agreed all legal means of action will be taken to stop the operation of British vessels in competition with Canadian ships. Anastasia is gone, and his son-in-law now runs things. Paul Hall is the man who is telling Canadians what they can do. He wants Canada to fall into line with his ideas. What manner of system is this, whereby Canadians are being told by Paul Hall what they should do? To the credit of Mr. Jodoin, I must say he made it quite clear that he, for one, was not going to take that kind of dictation. I want to emphasize that fact.

Now, we are looking forward to hearing from the government in connection with this matter. I have just touched the fringes. This was in answer to a question, as you know,

Mr. Chairman. I dislike taking so much time to answer a question, but I had to do it.

Now then, can we tolerate the situation, the prospect of continuing violence and disruption on the seaway? Can we tolerate the autocratic interference with the free movement of shipping? Is that not intolerable at any time? Can we allow the perpetuation of tyranny perpetrated by this man Banks who enjoys the position of being the pampered pet of the former Liberal government? Today the Secretary of State said, in effect, I will not desert my friends. This situation must be faced, but I am not going to disagree with the minister that if he can arrive at a system whereby Banks will be out, directly or indirectly, with no control over Canada, it will be welcomed on every hand. In any event, if any settlement which so many across the line are trying to bring about removes Banks from Canada physically but still allows him, directly or indirectly, control over Canada, it will not be tolerated by this parliament and cannot be accepted by the Canadian people.

I will say no more at this time. There is a great deal more in the record. I found that revealing it part by part is always more effective than producing the entire record at once. I now leave it to the government to say why all the delay, why the playing around, why the procrastination? We have had six months of this government. The record has been one of continued postponement, failure to act, much planning, uncertainty and incoherence. There has been a complete denial of unity as between ministers occupying portfolios in the same government. I ask the government, what are you going to do about this? Are you going to instal Hal Banks as the uncrowned king over the rights of Canadians?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a very brief statement in respect of the two major issues that have been raised by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition. One has to do with the serious development that began this morning at Montreal and which extends to the ports of Quebec and Three Rivers. This morning I suggested that we ought to keep this situation in perspective. The strike that began this morning had been in effect for only three and a half hours when the hon. member for Ontario proposed that the house be adjourned in order that the opposition may belabour the government for failing to take what he described as effective action to deal with this situation.

I stated that this strike is fully lawful; it is legal under Canadian law. The right hon. gentleman thought my statement this morning would be regarded as a classic one. Well, I doubt whether it will ever have that high station. But it certainly underlines my belief in free labour, not slave labour.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacEachen: It underlines my belief in free collective bargaining. It underlines my belief in the right to strike as a part of that process of free collective bargaining which is fully protected under Canadian labour law and which is one of the fundamental rights of Canadian workers. I am surprised that any hon. gentleman would suggest that at this stage the government ought to have moved to remove this fundamental right from this class of Canadian workers.

Mr. Churchill: Nobody said that.

Mr. MacEachen: There can be no other interpretation placed on the intervention of the hon. member for Ontario and the Leader of the Opposition. The alternative to moving rapidly to prevent this right to strike was to follow the course that was followed by the Canadian government, and that was to appoint a mediator in order to bring the parties together.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Too late.

Mr. MacEachen: I believe this decision was the correct decision in the circumstances. I ought to remind hon. gentlemen opposite that this dispute is not of recent origin. The dispute or the lack of agreement between the shipping federation and the longshoremen is not a development of recent days or even recent months. It began with the termination of the contracts on December 31, 1962. There were two offers made with regard to which the shipping federation agreed and the officers of the locals agreed. These offers were submitted to the membership, and my understanding is that on both occasions these offers were turned down by the membership. The first, as I understand it, occurred in January of this year, and the second in February and March, when the full powers for amity ascribed to the hon. member for Ontario by the Leader of the Opposition could have been fully employed. But the fact is that notwithstanding the best efforts of the hon. member for Ontario, this dispute was not resolved though two sincere efforts—and I believe they were sincere efforts—were made under his direction to resolve them; or at least, there was one effort made under the aegis of the Department of Labour.

The next development was the appointment of a conciliation board, which is provided for under Canadian law. The chairman, Judge Lafleur, was nominated by both parties and he rendered his decision. He secured a unanimous conclusion as a result of his deliberations. The conciliation board report was made public on Monday of this week. It had been released to the parties earlier and it was submitted to the membership of the union last Sunday. On Sunday last the membership decided not to accept the unanimous recommendation. Then, in the light of that development, it was up to the government of Canada to decide at what stage a mediator could be most effectively employed. This is a judgment that has to be made in the circumstances, and depends on the judgment of experienced officers of the labour department who have assessed the situation. It would have been easy to rush in on Monday and appoint a mediator, or on Tuesday. Our judgment was that the time to appoint a mediator was on Wednesday. We proceeded to appoint him on that day and he has been working ever since. I suggest that any earlier appointment would have been indiscreet and unwise in the circumstances.

The fact is that the mediator is at work with the parties. He is still in active contact with both groups as of this moment. Surely it is right on the part of the government to say that the mediator ought to be given full opportunity to explore the situation before the government takes further action or considers further action. I noticed, Mr. Chairman, that the right hon. gentleman did not make any proposal as to what ought to be done.

Mr. Pearson: He hasn't any.

Mr. MacEachen: There was no proposal put forward because in the circumstances the government is taking the only possible and sensible course.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacEachen: We realize this is a serious situation. Of course we do. And we are as concerned about it as any hon. member in the house or any other person. But we intend to take whatever action is necessary in the light of developments in the mediation process.

That is the situation. There has been no delay. The normal lawful procedures have been followed by the Canadian government that ought to have been followed. I suggest it was premature to raise the matter as a matter of debate today. If the desire had been to reach a settlement, then all of us ought to have applied to ourselves a self-denying ordinance until the work of the mediator could have proceeded further.

Mr. Woolliams: The farmers of western Canada will not agree with you.

Mr. Churchill: Sixty million bushels of wheat.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, may I say a word about that aspect of the problem, with respect to the imposition of a public trusteeship. The government of Canada received a report of an industrial inquiry commission that had been set up by the former government, an act that had been undertaken by the government only after the St. Lawrence seaway closed. Despite repeated requests by the Canadian labour movement to the government to take some action to deal with this problem, the government refused to take any action until it was forced to do so following the closing of the St. Lawrence seaway by the Canadian labour movement. That was the way in which the government of the day acted. Those are the circumstances in which the commission was appointed.

We received the report of the commission and within a matter of two weeks the government decided to accept the major recommendation of the Norris inquiry, namely to impose a public trusteeship on all the maritime transportation unions. Before making that decision we had consulted with the Canadian Labour Congress. We had secured its co-operation. We had received the full assurance of all affected unions, save and except the S.I.U., that they would accept the trusteeship in the interests of cleaning up what all of us admit is a dreadful situation in this particular segment of the Canadian labour movement on the great lakes. There is no difference between us on that point.

I hesitate to review again the circumstances which obliged the government to delay the introduction of legislation until this particular part of the session. But the fact of the matter is that the officials of the justice department advised the government that it would be impossible to prepare the legislation, to examine each of the constitutions, each of the collective agreements in a short time; that this work would take most of the summer. And that work did take most of the summer. We have a resolution on the order paper. We had a bill ready and it will be introduced if and when this resolution is accepted by the House of Commons. Surely that is sufficient evidence of the determination of this government to proceed along the lines of its announced policy of last July.

When this decision was made it was evident in this house that any person who believed in free labour felt that the house of labour should be given an opportunity to put its own house in order before the government would step in with what each of us regarded as an unprecedented act. That is why the pilgrimages have been undertaken; that is why the travels have been made. It has been in an effort to provide an opportunity for an interunion arrangement that would be entered into by the Canadian labour centre in Ottawa and the United States labour centre in Washington. If at any time the Canadian labour movement says that the terms that may be under discussion are unacceptable, that ends the matter. It is a decision that must first be made by the Canadian Labour Congress in the light of its responsibilities to its own members. That is why in this past week I have not asked the house to deal with this resolution, because I thought this effort had to be continued until we were all assured that it offered no possibilities.

I want to assure you, Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, that just as soon as I am convinced, and the government is convinced, an effective alternative is not possible with a private arrangement, the Canadian government will proceed at once with its public trusteeship legislation.

Mr. Martineau: Would the minister permit a question? If I understood him correctly he stated in regard to the longshoremen's dispute that the only possible line of action for the federal government was the appointment of a mediator.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me there are two major alternatives, either to stop the normal course of collective bargaining by preventing a strike by law at this stage, or to pursue that other line of reaching a settlement through the mediation process, and surely mediation would be the first step to secure a settlement without the imposition of Canadian law?

Mr. Martineau: I asked the minister that question because the other day, in answer to a question put by the hon. member for Ontario, he stated that mediation was only one of several possible steps that could be taken by the government. I wonder if he would now reveal what these other steps might be.

Mr. MacEachen: I think in the circumstances it would be quite imprudent, as I have already stated, to prejudice the work of the mediator by indicating what further lines might be followed.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, I am glad that the Leader of the Opposition has used this opportunity to bring before us a matter of grave and urgent importance, and that is the breakdown of law and order as revealed by the Norris report.

I know that my hon. friend, the Minister of Labour, is struggling with a difficult situation. I know he has to listen to advice and put up with the pressure of many people and many interests, and I for one do not blame him for seeking consultation with his opposite number in the government of the United States; because that government is, and may well be, directly concerned with the matters in question here. Indeed, it is the duty of the minister to keep in touch with his opposite number in the United States government. I share, along with the other members of this party—and I think I dare speak for all hon. members of the committee, or most of the hon. members—and most of the Canadian people, a very deep distaste for any suggestion of government intervention by trusteeship in the internal affairs of a trade union, or indeed of any other voluntary organization.

But, Mr. Chairman, I want to repeat, reiterate and re-echo one thing that the Leader of the Opposition said, and that is that I do not believe the people of Canada will tolerate any sort of a compromise, or so-called solution, that in any manner, direct or indirect, leaves Banks or his associates in a position in which they can influence in any way the future of the maritime unions of Canada.

Mr. Banks has been described in loving detail, not only by Mr. Justice Norris but, in his own inimitable style, by the Leader of the Opposition. I will not attempt to rival their colourful language, but may I be permitted to summarize in my own way Banks' achievements in this country.

He was able to use a trade union, with the co-operation of shipping companies, to undermine and destroy democracy in an important section of the trade union movement. He was able to establish a reign of terror on the Canadian waterfront. He was able to employ fraud and defamation to achieve his purposes and enrich himself at the expense of Canadian seamen. Above all, he was able to defy the laws of the country openly and repeatedly.

Throughout the long story of violence, intimidation and illegality, the law stood mocked and impotent. The fault was not the fault of the members of the S.I.U. They were cowed and intimidated. Those who attempted to employ the democratic rights conferred on them by the union constitution were victims of violence or were soon without a job. The fault did not lie in the organized trade union movement of this country. Four years ago the S.I.U. was expelled from the ranks of legitimate trade unions in Canada.

The fault lies with Banks himself and his associates, and it also lies with the shipping companies who conspired with Banks to mock and to defeat the law of this country. Furthermore, it lies with the complete failure of law enforcement by those responsible for it. It lies with laws that lack teeth, and it lies with the effective exercise of influence in high places.

Today the Leader of the Opposition, as is his wont, sought to make great political capital out of the failures of the previous Liberal administration. I must agree with some of his structures; but since he is fond of biblical quotations I will give him one or two to ponder. "Let him who is without fault"—I should say sin—"cast the first stone"; and there is another one about hypocrites casting the beams out of their own eyes. I apologize to the committee for stumbling over biblical quotations but I have not, like many other hon. members, been directly trained in theology.

I ask the Leader of the Opposition—and he does not need to answer me now—what happened in the battle against S.I.U. lawlessness during the years from 1957 to 1963 when the right hon. gentleman headed the government of this country? There are some revealing incidents reported in the Norris commission report. I do not propose to read from them at length, but at page 54 of that report there will be found a brief statement of what the personnel manager of the C.S.L. stated to the head of the union whose rights it was about to tear up at the request of Mr. Banks. He said:

> Did you read the statement I made a couple of days ago before our management assocations? There are no teeth in the labour laws. Have a look at the act. First of all you have to go to the minister and get permission to prosecute. That will take you a couple of months. We will kick it around in the courts here for a year and if necessary we will take it to the Supreme Court of Canada. That will take about two years.

Then he says:

> We have assurance from Mr. Banks of indemnification. By this time you will be out of business if you do not get your dues coming in, you know that. That is the way of life.

That is the head of the personnel department of the Canadian Steamship Lines speaking to the man whose rights he was about to tear up. The thing gets worse and worse, and this is what I want to test the Leader of the Opposition with, and see if he or his former minister of labour have any explanation.

A Mr. Scott Misener, the president of one of the smaller companies, writes a letter to Mr. Bernard Wilson, who appears to be a high official in the Canadian Department of Labour—the director of industrial relations. In that letter, which is dated 1959, he says this:

> Dear Mr. Wilson:
>
> This is to inform you that Scott Misener Steamships Limited and Misener Holdings Limited have signed an agreement with the seafarers' international union of North America—licensed division.
> This, of course, we realize is against the Labour Relations Act but, under the circumstances that I have explained to you, we have no alternative but to do so. There is also a copy enclosed of a letter from Mr. Banks indemnifying our companies from any lawsuits, etc. that may arise out of signing of his agreement.

So, Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of members of the committee to the fact that as early as 1959, when the administration headed by the right hon. gentleman was in power, a high official of the Department of Labour was informed by the president of a steamship company that he proposed to defy the law, to tear up his agreement with another union, and to enter into an agreement with Banks that he knew was illegal.

He informed the Department of Labour of this fact in 1959 and he forwarded a copy of the indemnification agreement in which Banks had the insolence to write and say to the effect, "If you disregard the law of Canada I will indemnify you against the result."

Absolutely nothing happened.

Mr. Jones: We appointed the Norris commission.

Mr. Brewin: Yes, in 1962, three years later; and the reason for that was because a union, the Canadian brotherhood of transport workers, tied up the Welland canal as a demonstration that the government had to take action; and it was forced to take action in 1962, three years later.

I think the important question which faces the people of Canada is this: how long should we tolerate this sort of lawlessness? I repeat: it will not do to have any solution or so-called solution which involves agreement with those who have broken the laws. I know the Minister of Justice is receiving a report from his legal advisers as to possible prosecutions arising out of the matters with which we are dealing. All I can say is that those responsible for this defiance of the law, whether they be Banks and his associates or whether they be steamship companies, should be prosecuted for their defiance and evasion of the laws of this country.

Mr. Starr: May I ask the hon. member a question? May I ask him whether he has acted as solicitor for the S.I.U. at any time?

Mr. Brewin: I could give the hon. gentleman a technical answer; the answer is, no. But I have acted as counsel for Mr. Banks for a short period in a libel action. I should have thought the hon. member for Ontario was sufficiently aware of the legal practices of this country to know that those who are engaged in their duty as counsel are in no way involved in the affairs of those for whom they happen to act, sometimes very briefly, as I did, in a purely technical matter some time ago. I have not been involved with Mr. Banks in any shape or form; neither has this party.

Now I want to ask the former minister of labour a question. Was he aware of this letter which was sent to his senior officials, and why was no action taken? Let the hon. gentleman answer that question. A little less of this "holier than thou" attitude on the part of the official opposition would be helpful in reaching a solution of the issues raised by these serious matters.

I do not think there is anything further I can add except to say that we in this house, without casting stones at each other, should consider very seriously the grave issues which have been raised, and even though it may be necessary to do unprecedented or distasteful things we should make sure we take action which goes to the root of the grave situation disclosed by the Norris report.

[Translation]

Mr. Perron: Mr. Chairman, since we have been criticizing a labour leader for the past two hours, I trust that my colleagues will allow me to make a critical review of the past record of the two old parties.

Not so very long ago, and we still remember it today, when the government party sat on this side of the house with us, we often heard them criticize the indecision of the then Conservative administration, the government of indecision, they called it, for the past five years. I wonder today, after a few months of administration by the present government, whether the people are not telling themselves: we no longer have a government of indecision but a government of bad decisions.

Mr. Chairman, when one considers the change of attitude and the about-turn effected within barely a year in our country by the members of the two old parties, one wonders if that would not actually be the basis on which the people could pass judgment on them, perhaps more easily than we think.

When we consider especially their about-face, following the remarks made last night by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas), I think that our Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) would deserve, in the opinion of the Canadian people, the title of minister of war.

Hardly a year ago, we heard statements for and against nuclear weapons; we accepted them and signed a treaty through the Minister of National Defence. Contrary to the usual practice of the house, the treaty was not approved by the house, but the government made no bones about it and placed us before an accomplished fact.

We were blamed in the past for our indecision, for the failure to produce those very important documents concerning nuclear agreements with our neighbours. The same request is turned down today, and I wonder whether the title of minister of war would not be more appropriate than the one of Minister of National Defence.

As for the Department of Agriculture, we were informed recently that from now on the Canadian wheat board and wheat sales to foreign countries would come under the Department of Trade and Commerce. I remember that, last year, the then minister of agriculture had succeeded in disposing of a very large quantity of surplus Canadian wheat and the possibility, and there was even some discussion on the necessity of creating a second Department of Agriculture to meet the needs of this country. Today, we see a Department of Agriculture taking out the wheat board from that field in order to transfer it to the Department of Trade and Commerce. Of course I realize that it looks somewhat more commercial, a little more like trade; this happens perhaps because we are used to following in the steps of others and because we are closely linked with the most commercial country in the world which Great Britain was at one time, and because it is hoped that Canada will one day rank second among trading nations.

As far as the Minister of National Health and Welfare is concerned (Miss LaMarsh), I think that her case will be dealt with as quickly. The would-be mother of contributory pensions in Canada links the first legislation on pensions to a tax increase, to justify a raise of $10 a month for the beneficiaries of state pensions, those people who have given quite a few years of their lives to build this Canada which we, of this generation, inherit today. I, therefore, believe that it would hardly be wise to look upon her as the mother of pensions, more particularly if we think of the contributory pension scheme mentioned by her. When we look at the result, I wonder whether it is really of interest to sponsor such legislation. It has only led to further misunderstandings and another quarrel between two provinces and the federal state.

In regard to the President of the Privy Council who was made responsible for the survey on biculturalism, I wonder, like all those who are used to reading thrillers, if he is quite certain to be looked upon as agent X-13 in those suspense stories in regard to the promotion of bilingualism, when, in a recently established department, I mean the Department of Industry, we find that among the high officials who are occupying 230 key posts, all they had to say, in respect of the absence of bilingualism among the high officials of that department was: We could not go and take away officials having the required qualifications for those important functions from existing departments. Consequently, there are only unilingual people in charge of the department. I would like to know whether the new agent X-13 is not being taken for a ride, as we would say among French Canadians.

Now let us consider other decisions. We have also a Post Office Department. I still remember and it was not so long ago, hardly six months, the various inquiries made by today's Postmaster General (Mr. Denis) who wanted to know whether the then postmaster general, (Mrs. Fairclough) had not thought of putting some mint-flavoured glue on the back of stamps because, as he said, it had been tried in some countries.

The hiring of additional mailmen was also sought on various occasions or during the Christmas period. In addition, an increase of expenditures by the Post Office Department was asked. I am wondering today if, instead of speaking of mint-flavoured glue on the back of stamps, the Canadian people are not tasting a famous fish glue with the increase of postal rates in the country?

And that is not all. According to a statement made in the house by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), I wonder if we should not do as previously proposed in certain provinces, that is establish a department of patronage in the Liberal party.

Let us consider another department, the Department of Finance. I still remember that, during the last election campaign, our hon. friends opposite went around in Quebec making fun of the utopian formula of Social Crediters; I wonder what solutions the economists of the Liberal party have found and especially the Minister of Finance who seeks advice, everyone knows where, to draw up his new budget.

I wonder what the people think of this new 11 per cent tax on materials, which has been withdrawn to be replaced by a 4 per cent tax? I wonder if this action was not taken to enable powerful trusts to purchase and store surplus materials which they will later put up for sale to realize supplementary profits when small contractors do not even have the necessary means nor the credit to promote their own little businesses. In my opinion, those are bad policies and decisions.

The same applies to a chairman of the Canadian stock exchange or a chairman of the Montreal stock exchange.

The 30 per cent tax on foreign investments is withdrawn and the tax on materials against small businessmen is maintained. Taxes against the powerful interests are withdrawn.

Mr. Chairman, I think that the people realize today that the mighty are in a position to defend themselves and that those who should be protected are always exploited and subjected to the increase in the cost of living on account of a system which has been supported here thanks to the two old parties.

And what about the president of the stock exchange, who today is the Quebec minister of revenue and who, through a feat of strength, succeeded in convincing the Minister of Finance to remove his 30 per cent tax on foreign investments in Canada? I wonder if such an action was not especially designed to neutralize the evolution now taking place in Quebec.

In my opinion, that is something the people once again will be called upon to judge. As a matter of fact, the people may be called upon to pass judgment on the old parties' attitude toward them sooner than we think.

A word now about the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets) who, early this week, invited us to visit the world fair site during the week end.

Yet, it was only about 15 days ago, following the use of electronic brains and I.B.M. machines, that we were told that the world fair probably could not take place before 1969.

I quite understand the reason for electronic brains and I.B.M. machines when I consider that, in a country as big as ours, and especially in as large a province as that of Quebec, islands have to be built. I wonder whether there was not a special reason for electronic brains to be called upon to decide when the world fair will take place?

Maybe they wanted a way out in case the world fair should not be held in 1967, for fear of something happening like the demonstration which took place recently at the Place des Arts, in Montreal. If such demonstrations keep up, I feel it is because there is a reason for them.

An hon. Member: Which one?

Mr. Perron: Mr. Chairman, my hon. friends may keep on interrupting me, their cutting in on me does not disturb me in the least. I am simply reminded of an old saying of the renowned fabulist: "Let men of good will do as they should do, and let others boohoo".

Mr. Chairman, I am fully aware of the heavy load of work which is weighing down our ministers, and more particularly the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill). He attends regularly the meetings of this house, he has a lot of work to do, but in spite of all that his position is rather sticky. Indeed, when one has promised two flags to the Canadian people, it is extremely difficult to choose only one; when one has spoken of giving Canada two national anthems, it is not easy to decide upon a single one.

I realize that the Secretary of State is also tied up with the various problems of the C.B.C., and it pains me greatly to have to chide him, when I think of his tremendous task.

As for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, two bills have been brought in during the present session: Bills C-83 and C-84, both relating to the Northwest Territories.

The purpose of these pieces of legislation seems to be the formation or the creation of two new Canadian provinces. Let us remember, however, that for 97 years our ten provinces, supposedly united by a confederative pact, have witnessed constant bickering between federal and provincial authorities; I wonder whether it would be advisable today to create two new provinces? Unless, of course, the idea is for them to replace such provinces which are threatening to withdraw?

But the biggest bills introduced in the house during this session are those dealing with the north.

Mr. Chairman, we can also ask ourselves what all the members who hope some day to join the cabinet think, particularly following the election campaign launched in this country on February 7 last.

I wonder what the members are thinking who hope to become ministers or even the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis) and especially our ultra-nationalist member for the Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Sauve) who had so carefully prepared his speech on bilingualism in Canada. What was his reaction when he learned today of the reappointment of the chairman of the Canadian National Railways, even prior to his appearance before the sessional committee on railway, air lines and navigation?

What do these hopeful members for a cabinet post think today of their party? During the election campaign the Liberals, and especially the member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville, talked about the rainfall of dollars that Social Crediters would cause to fall on the Quebec people. However, the people of Quebec did not see any dollar rainfall, but the country inherited a tax storm under the Liberal administration.

I understand that a program known as the 60 days of decision had been prepared. During that period, the economy was supposed to start rolling again, and the Canadian taxpayers' problems were to be settled by the Liberal team during that same period.

I wonder today whether the people are not thinking the matter over and wondering if the famous 60 days of decision are not in the process of becoming the tales of the Arabian nights.

I wonder if, after those Arabian nights, we will not have the story of Ali Baba and the 40 thieves.

Mr. Chairman, I understand also that, in some quarters, when a vote was taken recently, we were threatened and asked: Do you want an election? I can assure the house that it is not an election, near at hand or far off, that will impress those who represent the voice of the people here, those who had no election fund to wage their campaign. And, at that time, I could hear the voice of the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette) who seemed greatly interested in finding out whether or not we wanted an election soon. I advise him not to worry because, at the next election, I will help him in Lotbiniere the same way he came to my help in my riding of Beauce.

Mr. Choquette: You should come because your candidate lost his deposit.

The Chairman: Order. The member who is speaking should not be interrupted, unless he agrees.

Mr. Perron: Mr. Chairman, I say it again, we are here not to represent the private interests of a group nor those of the financial powers of the country, but rather as representatives of the people who elected us to make heard the voice of those who are suffering and who, unfortunately, are forced to remain silent under the threat of patronage, afraid of the masters of finance and patronage.

We also want to make heard the voice of the people with regard to agriculture. There is on the order paper a resolution to appoint a minister of agriculture for eastern Canada, but we are still waiting for that measure to be presented. However, as head of that department, some bills have already been signed by the minister of agriculture for eastern Canada, and without anything having been done about his appointment.

What is being done about agriculture in the east? The premium on milk was abolished only a short time after the appointment mentioned. A sales tax on building materials, which affects farmers just as much as city workers, was levied.

Mr. Chairman, I wonder if those who speak of stimulating the economy to enable eastern farmers to take their rightful place in Canada are truly serious.

If the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) wants to fulfil every function and carry out every task, it seems to me that he should also be concerned with the lot of eastern farmers. He should look after families which have lived 25, 35, 50 or 100 years on the same farm, families of eight to ten people who have lived on the income from their farm and who, in 1963, when we have devised means of sending men to the moon, are unable to make a decent living with the income they derive from the family farm.

I can understand that schemes such as ARDA should be established, but do you know how the implementation of that program is envisaged by some people?

In some areas of the province of Quebec, a policy of what could be called decolonization is being practised.

We have an example of that in my own riding and in the constituency next to mine, Dorchester. This is what is being done under a plan of social welfare. Heads of families cannot make an honest living; they are unemployed six months a year because they go to work in the state of Maine. When they come back and find that they cannot live decently from the income of their farm, they submit a request for social assistance.

And what is done? The first advice they get is to leave their farm and to go and live in a village or a town. For, if they remain on their farm, they will not be able to benefit from social welfare legislation. But as soon as this family head leaves his farm, the Liberal party favorites of the community can be seen buying the farm to control it and then probably put it to use under ARDA. Or perhaps they want to establish collective farms? I do not know.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. Perron: After I am through with my remarks.

Mr. Chairman, when we speak about the income of our farmers in eastern Canada, we do not speak through our hat if we say that their complaints are justified today. As a matter of fact, if we look at the figures tabled in the house on June 13, 1963, showing the average income of Canadian farmers, we can see that in 1950 their total income amounted to $1,219,757,000, while it reached $1,630,310,000, in 1962.

Using the same chart, it is noted that in 1950, the Quebec farmers' income was $211,416,000, whereas in 1962 it was only $179,668,000. Whereas there has been an increase in the farmers' revenue for the country as a whole, in the province of Quebec it has decreased from $211,416,000 to $179,668,000.

What is the reason for that situation, if not poor administration, and lack of foresight with respect to the needs of the eastern farmers? This amply justifies the establishment of this new department of agriculture for eastern Canada, which will be in a better position to understand the needs of our farmers who are operating family farms.

Now, in order to give additional assistance to families, there is among social measures one called family allowances. We hear no more about it in Liberal circles.

I see that the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette) is applauding. I know he spoke about it in his constituency and I know that throughout the province of Quebec the Liberal party promised an increase in the family allowances immediately after the opening of the session.

An hon. Member: It is untrue.

Mr. Perron: I still have in my desk a folder issued by my opponents. Not only did they mention it in their speeches, but in their written material as well.

An hon. Member: It is false.

Mr. Perron: Is there a measure which requires more attention and more consideration? We have only to consider the hardship which prevails among large families.

I have here before me resolution No. 67 of the labour congress, which met in Philadelphia in 1947, wherein are clearly set forth the fundamentals underlying family allowances. I quote:

> Society should normally co-operate with parents through general assistance measures designed to ensure the well-being of dependant children.
> (1) Public subsidies, in kind or in cash, or in both forms, should be used to bring up children in healthy surroundings, to help support children of large families and to supplement provisions for children who come under the family allowance plan.
>
> (2) When the aim is to bring up children in healthy surroundings, subsidies should be in the form of advantages such as free or cheap food for young children, school canteens and for families living in low rental housing units or having several children.
>
> (3) When the purpose is to help support large families or supplement provisions for children, by providing advantages in kind or provisions established under social insurance, subsidies should take the form of family allowances.
> (4) Such allowances should be paid, regardless of parents' income, according to a set scale that would represent a substantial contribution to the maintenance costs of the child and would make allowance for additional expenses required for older children.

That is a principle we should endeavour to follow more and more, because our economy must be increasingly distributive; otherwise we shall fall into collectivism, when individuals lose their personality and the family, the very foundation of society is dismembered. Collectivism will be detrimental to the family, and if we do not act promptly, we might have cause for regret.

So, Mr. Chairman, I suggest it is high time that we should raise the level of family allowances paid out under the family allowances act—and that as soon as possible—and at the same time set up a bonus system on milk production in order to help milk producers and provide for the setting up of secondary industries in our country.

At the present time, momentous changes are taking place in the province of Quebec, and we see more and more slogans like this one: "Masters in our own house". Such a slogan should not be only an election incentive. We can definitely become masters in our own house and for that purpose, we should first of all start thinking. I am aware of the sovereignty of the house over its own institutions, over the Bank of Canada and if there is one area where we should really use the Bank of Canada to handle new credits and thus increase the purchasing power, this is it. It is not for nothing that those social security acts catch the eye.

Instead of levying a 1 per cent personal income tax to pay for old age pensions, instead of postponing any longer the increase of family allowances, why do we not, on this one occasion, use the Bank of Canada, the same way it was put to work during the war when the time came to launch defence activities for the construction of war plants?

Then surely, it is high time, that we should use that same Bank of Canada; it is time that we should amend the Bank of Canada Act and that the bank should really work in the interest of the house, of the people and of the nation.

The Bank of Canada will be in the service of Canada when, without jeopardizing a sound economy, it will meet the needs of the human person. So long as we cannot satisfy the needs of the people, so long as we accept budgets, we will always be hamstrung by those budgets and we will never succeed in promoting the full flowering of every citizen by following a system which makes the human person subservient to money instead of money being in the service of man.

I wonder whether today we should not view that false philosophy in another light. Instead of moulding men, I wonder whether the government should not respect the yearnings of men and of families, allowing them to live as they should in a country with tremendous resources and a production which can meet the needs of one and all. Everybody needs food, clothing and adequate housing in the country. It is nothing else that is wished for by the Canadian people, by the farmers, the workers on the farm, in the city and in the plants.

The small businessman realizes very well that something is not running true within our present system. Most of the time, he is overburdened by taxes.

But come the next election campaign, our politicians will come back before the people and I think that once again, the province of Quebec will live up to its motto: "Je me souviens", which is close to our hearts.

Mr. Drouin: May I ask a question?

The Chairman: The hon. member for Beauce's time having expired, he cannot be asked a question.

[Text]

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, this morning an effort was made to adjourn the house to discuss a matter of urgent public business. One of the reasons advanced in seeking this adjournment was the suggestion that, as a result of the type of motion now being discussed, we might not be able to concentrate our attention on this very urgent matter. Events of the last few minutes, I think, have indicated that this fear was valid. As we listened to the Minister of Labour making his serious-minded defence of the government today, I am sure it must have passed through the minds of many that here was a man dedicated to his own righteousness putting forward a group of platitudes, the like of which we have not heard in this house for many months.

Who is attacking the rights of free labour? Who is attacking the essential principles of freedom in this motion? There is no intention in our motion except the moving of this grain to the markets. Yet we have this red herring drawn across our path. And worse than that, the minister, by the type of statement he made, blamed for his own ineptness and the ineptness of his colleagues the civil servants in his own department. This was the significance of reading out all the steps he was taking. He was not content with putting the blame on the heads of his own department, but he also put it on the heads of the Department of Justice.

I think it is about time that the men who prowled this country in the years 1958, 1959, 1960 and 1961 saying they were confident that only they could govern Canada, and only they had the ability and experience to govern, should face up to the fact that they have made a miserable mess of their efforts in the last six months.

Mr. McIntosh: Amen.

Mr. Hamilton: When I hear a member of a Liberal government speaking about applying force to labour, I ask, who was the government in power in 1950 when the railway unions were forced to their knees by legislation passed in this very house by the party which now occupies the benches on the treasury side of the chamber? Our motion this morning was to provide an opportunity to explore the seriousness of the situation that is now before us. It was to give the house an opportunity to hear a statement from the government about what it planned to do to take advantage of this wonderful opportunity that had been given to us. I wonder if we fully understand the significance of this grain movement at this time in our economic history. It is not just a matter of moving 230 million bushels to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. It is a matter of an opportunity to make sales of wheat to regular customers which, with the big sales to China and the extraordinarily large sale to Russia, would enable us to move this year close to 550 million bushels of wheat into foreign markets. This amount of wheat has a value of over $1 billion. This is the value of this one item of export alone. This means thousands of jobs for Canadian workers. This strike means, as the newspaper reports indicate, a loss of $2 million a day to the harbour of Montreal alone. On the sale of wheat to China alone it has been estimated that the port of Vancouver benefited to the extent of $48 million in wages to the men who worked on the dock, the longshoremen, in wages to the men who worked in the terminals, the railway workers, and so on. This sale surpasses by far even that tremendous over-all movement.

I would like to mention at this stage that the tremendous opportunity we have at the moment is being hurt, and perhaps nullified by the reluctance of this government to plan together, each member of the cabinet, and decide upon a course of action. This negligence on the part of the government is hitting the port of Montreal. That port, due to the economics of moving grain today, is becoming a marginal port. The whole economic tendency is to move grain further downstream and keep it below the ice in order that it may have access the year round to the markets of the world. This is the worst period for Montreal in which to have a strike. I point that out, Mr. Chairman, because this question involves not only the western farmer losing the sale of his grain, but we have a good, hard commercial competitor to the south who has over a billion bushels of grain to sell and who is willing to sell it, if I understand the newspaper reports correctly. Therefore I should like to suggest that this is not an ordinary labour dispute with management in which one should use the tried and true techniques of labour officials dealing with the matter of a strike in the ordinary way. This is a type of strike that hits at the vitals of the Canadian economy.

The Minister of Finance sits in his seat. He knows that this government had a heaven-sent opportunity this year to come close to balancing our international payments. He knows this sale will not only be for this crop year, but will continue in part for next year as well. He knows these markets are going to continue, and we must not endanger them because this very precarious position we have had with regard to our balance of payments for the last 10 or 15 years can only be met by expanding our exports and, as the minister himself has said on other occasions, by producing more in Canada. It was a heaven-sent opportunity to help the Minister of Finance, and because of the bungling and lack of cohesion in the thinking of the ministers over there, this sale is now in danger.

Our purpose in moving the adjournment of the house was not to interfere in any legal strike but to bring to the attention of the government that this was not a picayune question between the longshoremen in Montreal, Three Rivers and Quebec and the shipping companies; that this was something that hits at the whole economy of our country and is just as serious as was the railroad strike in 1950. The Leader of the Opposition divulged to the house today part of the record in this regard to indicate that this is not just a strike in the narrow sense of the word; that this is not a local strike but is a matter of national importance. Above all he laid before us something which I believe is a fact, that this strike in Montreal, Three Rivers and Quebec is a part of a struggle between the unions of Canada to preserve their own independence, and the desire of international unions to control labour unions in Canada. That I think is the essence of the problem. This connection between Hal Banks and the longshoremen, Hall and Hoffa is part of a struggle that the United States government as well as the Canadian government has to face up to at the earliest possible opportunity.

This is not just a question of the western farmers moving their grain. It is not a question of the eastern farmers getting enough grain to feed their livestock and poultry this year. It is a matter of great importance to our future as an independent and sovereign nation. Perhaps I am a little biased, but this government strikes me as one that is too fat to fight and too frightened to run. I do not try to go about this country causing difficulties in the movement of grain. I have tried to help, and all we get in return for trying are statements that they do not need advice. "We know everything. We have all the answers", has been their attitude; and today we heard the most startling of pronouncements when the Secretary of State, when talking about Hal Banks, said he was not one to repudiate his friends. He does not have to go that far to show his loyalty to Hal Banks, because he is holding up the whole operation of this tremendous grain movement.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Hamilton: Somebody says "Nonsense". You will find out how much nonsense it is when you go back and present your record on this to the country. Instead of 60 days of decision this period will become known as the Pearson program for panic. Two weeks ago today I made six proposals which I hoped the government would take into consideration, because they might have helped to move this grain. I did have some experience of difficulties in moving grain in 1961 but, I might say, on a much smaller scale than the tremendous difficulties which now face the government.

In the spring of 1961 it came to my knowledge that there was a possibility of a substantial sale of grain to China, not only for cash but a larger sale that we could arrange for credit. I asked those who are qualified to advise on these matters how much grain we could move through the four western ports. I was told, after due consideration had been given to my question, that the maximum amount of grain we could move through the four western ports was 15 million bushels a month. This was the advice of men who had spent their lives in the grain business. It was advice based on the experience of years in the business. Naturally, as a minister I am elected by the people not only to listen to the advice of my officials but to use the brains that God gave me. When you have an opportunity to sell grain and they tell you that all these difficulties are in the way, you try to find ways around them. So after asking a few questions as to what the difficulties were and finding out that, as is natural when so many organizations are concerned in the matter, each organization blames the other, I did what I thought was the natural thing to do: I called these 17 or 18 organizations to one meeting in Vancouver and put my problems before them.

I did not tell them to which country we were hoping to sell this grain, but I did say this could be done through the west coast ports if they could increase their capacity. Those same gentlemen, who had been telling me for a week before all the reasons for not being able to move this grain, settled this question. They sat down with their opposite numbers in the other groups, put their difficulties on the table, elected their own chairman, and within a week they came back with suggestions to improve the situation on the railways, grain handling, on the docks, on the prairies of Saskatchewan and so on. They were able to come back to me some weeks later and say, "We now have a capacity of 21 million bushels a month". That was an increase of 40 per cent. This was obtained by a group of men some of whom had told me there was no possibility of moving more than 15 million bushels a month. It was done by working together, and there was no extra capital cost required.

I want to emphasize that among the groups there was the longshoremen's union and the union for the terminal workers. Those labour men gave me their word that they would co-operate. They said they had in their contracts with their employers certain terms with regard to double and triple time, but they did not take advantage of those terms; and they offered to train new men to handle more grain. Those men kept their word, and when their contracts ran out last fall and they asked for a certain percentage wage increase, an increase which the unions at the head of the lakes had received when they asked for it, and they did not get it, they did not go on strike; they honoured their commitment to keep that grain moving because they had made a pledge to the minister, not to me personally but to the people of Canada that the grain would move forward to communist China.

In the light of that experience I suggested two weeks ago that there should be an immediate calling together of all the groups which deal with the movement of grain through the eastern route, through the St. Lawrence; that these groups should include the labour unions not only on the docks but those concerned with the terminals, and not only those at Three Rivers, Montreal, Quebec and Sorel but those in the Atlantic and the downstream ports. I suggested that the government should put before them the fact that in the national interest this was a great opportunity and they should consider these matters in the light of national responsibilities. I think if the minister had gone to the unions directly—because they are Canadians, they think as Canadians and they are not one bit different from the union men in Vancouver—and given them an opportunity to see how they fit into the over-all picture, they would have made every sacrifice. The same holds true for the shipping companies.

I gave the minister this experience because I think it has a bearing. However, there was nothing done about this suggestion. There was a meeting between the government and the railways, and a good system of allocation of box-cars was worked out; but this should have been done with all the groups associated with the moving of grain to the St. Lawrence area.

I am sorry to say that the second suggestion I made has become a bit of a political football. For the last 40 years there has always been a disturbing thought in western Canada that there are interests opposed to the movement of grain through Churchill, and this disturbing thought never seems to get pushed far into the background.

I have no doubt in my mind that the Canadian wheat board and the government officials must have told the Russians about the operation of Churchill. I am sure they must have; but unfortunately the Russians were not impressed sufficiently to want to change the shipping which they had already arranged. This was commercial shipping, and the situation as I understand it is that commercial shipping will only be using Churchill until October 20.

Western Canadians, rightly or wrongly, feel that the shipping period from Churchill can be extended beyond October 20. They know there is no difficulty with ice, even though they know that there is a little difficulty with slush along the docks. They know the federal government will also be willing to provide icebreakers and they should know—I hope most of them do—that it is because of the insurance regulations, which are not made in Canada, that ships stop coming into Churchill after October 20.

This is an outstanding opportunity to try and press forward with new ideas. The second suggestion I made two weeks ago was that the government—because the wheat board has nothing to do with this question of insurance on the oceans—should go to the Russians and say, "We know you are hauling most of this grain on commercial bottoms, but if you have any ships of your own that you can collect together and move into Churchill, we will guarantee they will not only get into the docks and be loaded but we will also guarantee they get out with the help of our icebreakers."

I know, from the records of ice in the north, that we could extend that shipping season a minimum of two weeks into November and, if one wanted to take a little bit of chance, right to the end of November and a little longer; but you have to give a guarantee that the ships will get out.

It may be that it was not in the Russians' interests to direct their own ships to Churchill, and if that is the case then a second proposal should be considered. They should have been told, "If you can persuade any shipping companies to bring their ships in there, we will not only guarantee to get them out but we will pay the loss if any of them are damaged. That is how sure we are of that shipping route. In other words, it will not be necessary for them to worry about insurance from the London source."

I do not know if these two ideas would have been acceptable to the Russians, but I do want to know from the government if they were tried, because the minister's duty is not only to listen to the advice he is handed. A civil servant can only give advice within his experience, and no matter how dedicated and able he is, he only works within that limit; but the people elected as ministers can lift themselves above that level, and they will be judged on the success they have in the difficulties they meet, and not on their performance in coming into the house and reading out all the reports which the civil service gives them about this or that. They will be judged on their ability as ministers.

A third proposal I put forward at that time, two weeks ago, was that the government should go to the St. Lawrence seaway authority and ask them to extend the shipping season to a specified date. I have read in the press that the corporation has announced the shipping season will be extended, but that is completely useless. Men who control the movement of shipping on the ocean shipping lanes do not care for generalizations of that sort. They want to know if they go ahead and ship into the St. Lawrence, and maybe up to the head of the lakes, whether they can get their ships out again.

Shippers know there is no ice problem on the lakes and that it only occurs around the locks. I would say to the corporation, "We will come in and give you people our help to keep your locks free of ice, and we will guarantee those locks will be free of ice until such and such a date. Announce that date to the world and tell ships all over the world, 'if you come in we will guarantee you will get out' ".

That announcement has to be made, and there is no use in making a request to extend the shipping season a little bit. That is useless to the shipping people of the world unless there is a definite date guarantee.

The fourth suggestion I made deals with grain storage on the lower St. Lawrence. I mentioned in my introductory remarks that the economics of the grain market today suggest it is better to have grain-handling terminals on the lower part of the St. Lawrence where they have access to ocean shipping ways all during the year. There has been, of course, an enlargement of plants at Baie Comeau and Quebec city, and there are requests in for other enlargements.

These matters were before me when I was minister and I recall the discussions we had to make sure—particularly if these terminals were being built by United States interests—that the interests of the Canadian producer in the west and the Canadian consumer in the east were protected in the licence issued for the new space to be set up. That is what we called the 40/60 formula, so that all that the American shippers could get in those terminals was the maximum of 40 per cent, on condition that they requested the board of grain commissioners to get it.

I now suggest that the board of grain commissioners should be asked to consult with the government and terminal shipping operators to make sure that every bushel of space available in those lower river terminals is reserved for Canadian wheat this winter. This is reasonable. All I am asking is that we exercise the rights we have under the licences. This is not only a matter for the producers of the country, and I am speaking now about all the terminals on the east coast, on Georgian bay and the St. Lawrence.

The question that has been in the back of my mind since the big Russian sale was announced, is that it is so easy for us, in our delight and general jubilation over the possibilities which this tremendous sale will have on the economy, to forget that there is a steadily growing market for coarse grains in eastern Canada, particularly for barley and low grades of wheat. This market will develop steadily until 1980, which is as far as we have projected, at which time it will be double what it is today.

The minister knows about this, and he has been making speeches to the farmers in western Canada telling them that they should take advantage of this opportunity. However, I am suggesting that he is not dealing with this in a practical manner. To make it practical you have to do several things.

I am speaking now about the eastern farmer and his need for grain. You have to guarantee him a stable supply, and you cannot do that, even by these new feed grain regulations brought in by the Minister of Agriculture, for the simple reason that the shippers make more money by hauling grain to the export markets, and they get more money out of storing that wheat for export than for storing domestic wheat.

My hon. friends who come from Quebec should be aware of these things because they are of more value to farmers in Quebec than the issuance of bogus money. You must give the eastern farmer feed grain at a price he knows is going to be stable. At present he does not know he can be assured of this, and once there is any hesitation in the flow of grain to the eastern market, the shippers know they can get more money moving grain for export and storing it for export.

Mr. Chairman, the following wire reached me at one o'clock today:

> Following protest sent government on behalf domestic feeders: vigorously protest discrimination by Canadian wheat board not allowing domestic markets to purchase any feeding grades wheat except immediate use. Now price advanced five and one eighth cents since Monday representing along with increase in water freight rates hundreds of thousands of dollars extra cost to domestic feeders. Captive domestic market treated unfairly in relation to export sales. If CWB uncertain over available grades for feed some provision for purchase at price levels prevailing early September should have been made.

This was signed by Mr. W. D. Dernier of the Maritime Co-ops, and I am simply pointing out to the minister that I was not being facetious when I made these proposals. I know of the considerations and difficulties of moving feed grain from western Canada into the eastern market. I know the attitude of the buyers, that they do not want to take any loss; and I also know the attitude of the farmers down east who want to use this feed grain at a stable price. I suggest to the minister that if he goes into the reports available to him he will find the evidence of what I am talking about.

Something has to be done. There is no use in going out to the western farmers and telling them to reduce their acreage and cut production by 10 per cent, and I would remind the minister that after all this fanciful talk his colleague the Minister of Agriculture recently went to Moose Jaw and said, "Boys, don't squander your money." Hon. gentlemen opposite have separated the wheat board from the board of grain commissioners and from the Department of Agriculture. But it is necessary to work together with the Department of Transport; and the board of grain commissioners has to be brought in, because in addition to its other functions the board has to handle all these elevators, a job which is of vital importance. I know that hon. gentlemen over there have many competent men working for them. These men know what to do, so why not get them all together and tell them you want to make this move forward?

I wish, now, to make a number of other suggestions which may be of less importance individually but which, taken together, may add up to the moving of a number of millions of extra bushels. One of my first memories as minister was a problem we faced because shipping companies on the great lakes had transferred their tonnage to the hauling of iron ore for stockpiling in the United States because of an expected strike. I may say that the steel companies in the United States were not as negligent as this government has been; they planned ahead, and made arrangements for these ships to haul the iron into position. I suggest that now we are in an emergency, even if this strike stops tomorrow, or one week or two weeks from today. We should ask the shipping companies to reciprocate and turn these iron ore bottoms over to us so as to help move the grain. A move of this kind cannot be made by the wheat board. This, ordinarily, is a commercial operation. But let us put on the pressure of the Canadian people and ask these companies to serve our nation, as Canadian companies operating in Canada, by transferring their ships to us for the hauling of grain for the balance of the season. This is one suggestion which should be tried out for size.

The sixth suggestion I have to make deals with floating storage. This is the phrase used to describe the practice of storing grain in ships which have tied up for the winter, usually at their home ports—Georgian bay ports and great lakes ports. I suggest the minister should approach these companies and say: We want to use your space for storage. You will be paid the full rates and you will not lose anything; but instead of your ships staying in their home ports we want them to move into the ice free area of the St. Lawrence. If this were done it might give us twenty to fifty million bushels of extra storage in export position without the necessity of moving grain by rail.

I wish to conclude by making a few observations of a general sort. I have already suggested that in my judgment, because of the great opportunities we now have, it would be of tremendous value to the economy if we could, to use the words of a United States presidential candidate, get the country moving forward again. Ministers have to use some initiative. I know many of them are former civil servants bound together by their habit of fitting into the lock step of the civil service. No matter how brilliant they may be it is hard for them to get out of that lock step; but I appeal to them to forget this attitude of being civil servants and show some initiative.

The Chairman: Order. I regret very much to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

The Chairman: He can carry on, of course, if he is given unanimous consent by the committee. Is that agreeable to the committee?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hamilton: That is very kind of you, Mr. Chairman. I am almost finished.

[Mr. Hamilton.]

The second suggestion of a general kind that I have to make is that all the ministers concerned should work together. I know how desirable this is from my own experience. It is necessary that the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Agriculture, besides, if you wish, the representative of eastern agriculture, who also has an important part to play, should come together, make a plan and go forward with it. If hon. gentlemen opposite rely on the advice of individual departments they will get lost in the morass. Bring these departments together and they will come up with answers; it cannot be done separately.

I have said all this, partly, I suppose, because I see such a wonderful opportunity and because I envy the opportunity which presents itself of doing something about it. But I am not over there on the treasury benches. The hon. gentleman and his colleagues are over there, and they have got to make these decisions. I know that what I call the Pearson plan for panic has been bothering them lately. I know that everything they have done has fallen flat on its face. But, I say to them: Do not let this one opportunity fall flat, please. Here is an opportunity for them to take their government out of its automatic shift type of attitude, where they shift every time there is opposition, and change it to one where they choose one gear and ride it for a while.

An hon. Member: Even if it is low gear.

Mr. Hamilton: Do not let us have any more statements from the Minister of Labour saying he is keeping a careful watch on the situation. That is the same sort of statement as has been given for the last 30 years. We do not want a watch kept on this situation: We want some action.

My final advice, to the government, Mr. Chairman, is: For heaven's sake set a course and follow it.

Mr. Douglas: Earlier in the day's sitting, when an attempt was made to adjourn the house I suggested that if the subject matter of that motion were left to discussion in the committee on interim supply the chances were there would be a wide variety of subjects discussed and that we would not be able to debate satisfactorily the topic which was of paramount importance. I think what has happened has proven the correctness of my contention. I think it is regrettable we did not have a debate on the particular subject of the longshoremen's strike, which is a matter of such great importance to the people of Canada. I do not wish to repeat what has already been said about how important it is, not only to the agricultural economy of western Canada but also to the entire economy of this nation, that wheat should move in an uninterrupted flow from the prairies to the seaports and out into the markets of the world.

All Canadians were delighted at the agreements which were reached with communist China and the Soviet union. However, reaching these agreements and delivering the wheat are two different things and the task which now devolves upon the Canadian people and upon the Canadian government is to see that no obstacle is allowed to stand in the way of these wheat deliveries. That is why this strike is of such tremendous importance and why it could have such serious and far reaching consequences.

I rise for the purpose of pointing out to the government that this question did not arise overnight. The collective bargaining agreement which the longshoremen had with the shipping federation expired on December 31 last. It is customary to begin negotiations at least three months before a collective agreement expires. Yet when the agreement expired on December 31 nothing had been done to bring about an understanding. Negotiations dragged on until March, and in March the shipping companies made an offer which, as the Minister of Labour has pointed out, was accepted by the union executive but turned down by the membership. This was the offer of 12 cents an hour plus another four cents an hour fringe benefits, if I remember correctly. But the amazing thing is that nothing happened between that date in March and the setting up of the conciliation board a short time ago. About five months were lost and it was only when the membership of the union, or some of them at least, indulged in a wildcat strike which threatened to tie up shipping, and did for a day or two, that a conciliation board was established—the board whose findings were brought down at the end of last week.

Well, there is not much use crying over spilled milk, but I think the government should know that if there is any attempt to place blame they must assume quite a share of that blame for not stepping into this situation much sooner than they did. The Minister of Labour said this afternoon that the decision to strike was only taken last Sunday and he appointed a mediator on Wednesday. I am not complaining about that two or three day lapse. I am complaining about the months that went by last spring and last summer when absolutely nothing was done to bring this matter to a head and to try to mediate the dispute, and so have prevented the strike which has now broken out.

I should like to say that I hope the government will use all the influence it can to bring these two parties together. I hope that the government through their mediator will make the proposition to the men that if they will go back to work the government is prepared to set up another conciliation board and to let the decision of that board, if accepted by both contracting parties, be made retroactive. I think that under some such arrangement, by which the men are sure that delay does not involve loss of income, they might be prepared to go back to work. Certainly some concrete proposals should be put before these men and the companies as quickly as possible.

I think the government should know that parliament and the people of Canada are not in the mood to allow the dilly-dallying tactics of the companies to bring about a situation which could have very serious economic consequences for the people of Canada. I hope that the government and particularly the Minister of Labour will take notice that members of the house will be expecting not later than next Monday some report as to what type of proposals have been put before the men and the companies, and what response they have received.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, like many of my colleagues, I should like to comment on the present discussion concerning the $10 increase in old age pensions. First, I should like to assure the house as well as the people that I am giving my utmost support to this increase although I find it impossible to agree with the government as to the steps to be taken in order to secure the extra money required for such an increase.

The Liberal government's legislation to this effect seems most contradictory and it is rather hard for me to conceive that a government which pretends to protect the people's interest should once again be bold enough, more particularly in view of its notorious record in the field of taxation, including the 11 per cent sales tax, to secure, by means of a new tax, from the already thin budgets of private citizens, the capital required for the new legislation now under consideration.

Although they are attempting, by means of most disappointing economic theories, to prove that the private citizens' contributions will be tiny, not very large in the case of those whose income is low, the fact remains that private citizens pay proportionately more than the corporations and companies and that the burden lies once more upon the people's shoulders.

The Canadian corporations' income tax rate, including the provincial income tax and the old age security tax, is now set at 52 per cent in Ontario and Quebec and at about 50 per cent elsewhere in Canada. The Minister of Finance, Mr. Gordon, having been forced to retreat from the requirements put forth by Mr. Eric Kierans, the former president of the Montreal stock exchange, did not want to draw once more the financiers' ire and as the people do not constitute, as the companies, a monolithic financial power except on election day, it was easy, by juggling figures to impose upon them once more a new tax.

According to the government's policy, the companies or the corporations would be too poor to assume the cost of this new tax. The corporation income tax reaches 50 per cent from $35,000 on without any limit as to profits, while individuals have to pay from 50 to 80 per cent on taxable income of $25,000 and up, which affects them more directly. Moreover, individuals have to pay succession duties and are taxed at the source, while companies do not pay succession duties and otherwise, pay taxes only after taking into account depreciation, not to mention the many fiscal advantages which are allowed by legislation.

Moreover, our authorities seem to ignore, in their truly Liberal wisdom, that at least 2,400,000 taxpayers do not earn enough to pay income tax, and that 10 per cent only of the taxpayers, that is about 700,000, are earning more than $6,000.

It is then quite easy to realize that our population cannot assume this new tax. Would companies be able to pay it? Certainly. Here is the proof.

In the financial page of the newspaper Le Devoir of June 16 last, a notice shows that stock listed on local stock exchanges—about 730 corporations—were worth $54,837,791,829 at the end of April 1963, compared to $52,503,742,402 at the end of the previous month. Listed stocks had then increased by $2,334,049,427 during April 1963.

In 1962, on a gross national product of $41 billion, re-invested profits amounted to $10,400,000,000 for prosperous companies, while human beings and families did not have the bare necessities of life. Were you aware of that? Have you thought of that? Do you admit it?

Humans are more important than companies' stocks on the stock exchange of Montreal, Toronto or Vancouver. Humans should have more influence on your administration than stock listings.

In a country such as Canada, what is more important, prosperity and increase in value of stocks of 730 companies or the economic situation of 18,800,000 citizens? Would stock listings be more eloquent in the eyes of our governments than poverty and complaints of 6,700,000 children under 16 years old who do not have the bare necessities in 2,800,000 Canadian families?

[Mr. Latulippe.]

If we take a look at the assets of the 8 chartered banks in Canada, we realize that from 1930 to 1961, those assets have increased by $1,970,729,464 or 11 per cent. As of January 10, 1962, the Bank of Canada has issued $2,097,659,244, while the credit issued by the eight chartered banks was $17 billion, that is about eight times the actual money in circulation. So, it is obvious that the situation is rosy for the directors of the large financial companies of our country, but the government, blinded by figures and dual sets of books sees only one solution to the problem, to impose taxes upon the people who are already overburdened by the increasing tax load.

In 1962-63 for instance, for old age security purposes, the sales tax yielded $302.2 million, personal income tax $237.6 million, and corporation tax $115.3 million, that is a grand total of $691.1 million. This is to say that corporations pay 16.7 per cent of the total amount, individuals 39.6 per cent, or about 2½ times as much as the corporations, and the sales tax absorbs 43.7 per cent of the cost, and who is paying the sales tax? The private citizens pay proportionately much more than corporations. Those figures are indisputable and they show that it is the private citizens who are footing the major part of the bill, not the corporations.

Now, when we analyse this government budget, either the whole budget or the interim budget that the Minister of Finance comes up with regularly, it is easy to see that the interests served are not always those of the citizens in general but of some privileged group. For instance, the estimates for 1963-64 provide for only 19.1 per cent to national health and welfare whereas the defence estimates represent 25.6 per cent. Instead of increasing the estimates of the Department of Public Works, which gets only 2.8 per cent, in order to create more jobs and so that a smaller number of Canadians may live on welfare, we increase the war expenditures. The cost of the service of the debt increases continually and this year it represents 13.5 per cent of the budget and no positive action is taken to change that situation.

We could easily raise family allowances to $30 a month, which would represent only 2 per cent of the gross national product, but no, family allowances remained unchanged, between $6 and $8 a month. From $11,400 million in 1945, the gross national product has reached $41 billion in 1963. Investments, which in 1945 were $1,284 million reached $8,770 million in 1960. Family allowances should have been raised in the same proportion to maintain the economic balance and to prevent inflation and unemployment. But no.

If the government obstinately refuses to do something along that line, it should at least legislate a reduction in the exorbitant interest rates paid by our people. Because at the rate things are going, with the increasing burden put on the people with all those successive taxes, with this choking of family finances by the finance of great corporations and other companies, the day is coming when we too will have to deal with revolutions such as South America has known these last few days. Why, along with commissions on the civil service, education and public services, not create a monetary commission made up of experts in figures and people with a great sympathy for the poor who would be charged with the task of balancing need and goods, insuring a decent living for all, finding payment and credit conditions with foresight and honesty? If the whole country guarantees our money, would not the people be entitled to benefit from it, to establish the exchange rates which others can upset?

We of the Social Credit do not advocate taking money from those who have to give to those who have not. But since the government finds our economic and financial theories unapplicable and since our political philosophy does not agree with the present leaders of this country, since they obstinately refuse to use the Bank of Canada, we ask them at least to go and find the money where it is and to make the corporations pay proportionately as much as the individuals. We are definitely against any increase in taxation, we are for any social legislation which will alleviate hardships among the people, but not at the expense of the people.

The issuing of new money should be done not by the banks which charge interest, but through work projects, family allowances, pensions to the handicapped, etc., to give those people the means to buy a production which is going to waste. Then everybody will be able to eat one's fill, to produce according to his ability, to establish his family, and to enjoy a minimum of happiness on the road to his reward.

The nation should support itself before looking for foreign markets, before fighting its way in the field of foreign trade which creates depressions, privation, rivalry and war every 20 or 25 years. Let a national money more fairly distributed help us finance production and consumption and then we could import what we need. We would pay for our imports with our production or with that gold the Lord has placed in our soil and which brings no nourishment.

Capitalism is in very bad shape at the present time. It should be tapped in order to relieve the pressure and the barriers preventing the proper flow of riches, just as the Nile waters lower Egypt by means of an irrigation system.

It would be better to consider the means of giving back the money to the people rather than deny and refuse everything, check everything to the point of giving rise to a righteous irritation resulting in unfair take-overs.

We should not be afraid of words, because the facts are actually there, real and obvious. If there is an abundant production and it is properly distributed, everyone will have its share, all needs will be met, the material, spiritual and intellectual needs. Why suffer and go without necessities of life with an extremely abundant production?

I advocate above all the establishment of an extensive national program of social security. If old theories and doctrines provide no answer to present problems, we shall have to find other remedies, other doctrines and other solutions. Thank goodness, the Quebec Social Crediters, who know of other remedies, of other tenets, of other solutions, are breeding another type of men. Democracy will probably be saved by them, and not by politicians who mouth beautiful theories while, at the same time, doing the very opposite of what they preach.

If we are to judge of the efficiency of an administration, let us remember that facts speak louder than books. Let us try to consider where people live, what clothes they wear, if their homes are heated, if they can afford medical care and if they have their share of educational facilities.

Those are, indeed, the real criterions, and they should be the yardstick of the present and future action of any Canadian government, no matter what party is at the helm.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if hon. members would permit me to say just a word? I think all hon. members should be aware, if they are not already, of the fact we are on an interim supply motion. This is the fourth day of October, a Friday, and the next day that the house will be sitting will be the seventh. We are practically at the point where the government will not be able to pay the public servants or make other essential payments unless the business now before the committee is completed with very little delay. It had been the intention of the government, unless some emergency legislation was required, to have a supply motion on Monday, at which time all hon. members would have, as they always have, the greatest possible freedom of debate. I wondered, Mr. Chairman, if there was any possibility of bringing these proceedings to a conclusion now and dealing with the supply bill so that it could go to the other place and the ordinary business of the country could go on. It seems to me that if this could be done, anything that might be said on this motion could also be said on another occasion.

I am not seeking in any way to restrict hon. members, but I am sure the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, who was frequently in the position I am now in, is well aware of the urgency of this matter. I am not seeking to suggest in any way that the debate be restricted and I have no fault to find with any hon. member in any section of the house, because some very urgent matters have been discussed today and we recognize that these matters are urgent. But I thought it only right for me to bring the situation in which the whole house finds itself at the moment to the attention of the committee.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

[Translation]

Mr. Plourde: I regret I cannot accept that proposal. When we are recognized in the house, we shall then be able to agree, but for the time being I must carry on with this debate on supply.

Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to take part in this debate this afternoon, since you know that this country is now faced with several urgent problems. I shall mention only a few, so that my constituents may know that I am here to defend their interests.

When winter is around the corner, you no doubt realize that there is a general uneasiness in trade circles as well as among consumers. What is the reason? I think it is known by all of us in this house: it is the evil of unemployment, which we anticipate for that season. What does the present government intend to do to correct the situation.

In my opinion, this problem is of prime importance and should be before the house at the first opportunity, so that we try to prevent by all means this evil which will result in so much misery for our population, especially in the province of Quebec.

As for me, I make the following proposal pending the others that may be brought forward later. Why does not the government amend the act on family allowances by increasing these allowances so as to make them proportionate to the actual cost of production? This would at least result in preventing our large families, which will be greatly affected by unemployment this year, from being stricken by poverty, and thus prevent innocent victims from suffering due to want of foresight on the part of our present government.

As you know, Mr. Chairman, I represent the constituency of Quebec West which is known as a workers' district, that is a district where high wages are scarce and income is low. Consequently, when there is a restriction such as the one imposed now in construction, which is caused by this notorious 11 per cent tax, who are the first victims if not the workers and through them entire families?

This poverty spreads and many sectors of industry and commerce are paralysed. For instance, a family whose head becomes unemployed has to rely on temporary credit to feed and clothe the children. Grocers especially are affected, being almost forced to extend credit to those families so that they will not starve. And I repeat that there is nothing to help those grocers to support such credit.

I have already talked about that in the other parliament and I hope that this government will deal with my requests concerning the corner grocer—

Mr. Olson: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, it is now five o'clock and I wonder if I could suggest that we obtain unanimous consent to continuing in committee through the next hour, which would give an opportunity to those hon. members of the house who have a special interest in prolonging this debate to exhaust all their presentations to the committee.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee give unanimous consent to carrying on after five o'clock in committee?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Chairman: I understand there is not unanimous consent. So that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15, it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to sit again later this day or at the next sitting of the house as the case may be.

Progress reported.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock p.m. the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills, private bills.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE ACT

AMENDMENT TO CREATE DEPARTMENT OF FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

On the order:

Second reading of Bill No. C-22, to amend the Department of State Act—Mr. Grafftey.

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member even before he starts, but I have serious doubts about whether his bill is in order. If the hon. member cares to speak to that point, there is no objection. I have an opinion to give on this matter. I do not want to cut the hon. member off without hearing the reasons he may wish to advance as to why the bill is in order.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, since this bill apparently affects my department—and I am ashamed to say that I have not looked at it—I wonder whether the hon. member would agree to letting it stand so that both of us could have another look at it. I would be glad to ask that it stand at the request of the government.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): The alternative, Mr. Speaker, would be to allow the hon. member to introduce his bill and then perhaps adjourn the debate.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is a very acceptable alternative, but I was wondering if, in view of the rather unusual circumstances, the hon. member would be willing to let the matter stand today. Then perhaps the house could go back into committee of supply and public business.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member give consent to letting the bill stand?

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, before consenting to my bill standing I would like to reply to the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill). Had not Your Honour made the suggestion that you have made, for personal reasons I would rather not let the bill stand at the present time. This is because there is a certain degree of urgency relating to my bill that I would have raised during the debate. I think I have some idea of the grounds that Your Honour is going to raise in regard to the bill, but perhaps Your Honour would indicate the grounds upon which you feel the bill is out of order before we proceed any further. Would you indicate the general area, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: I am quite prepared to give my views now.

Mr. Grafftey: I would prefer that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I understand the Solicitor General (Mr. MacNaught) asked for the floor. I do not know whether he wishes to make a short statement.

Mr. MacNaught: No, Mr. Speaker; the Secretary of State has expressed my views.

Mr. Grafftey: Could I simply say, Mr. Speaker, that I have taken great care in regard to this bill. I recognized this difficulty in the last session, and I have been exceedingly careful to make sure that this bill in no way whatsoever affects ways and means or the expenditure of money by the crown. If anybody suggests for a minute that my bill will incur any expenditure by the crown and therefore constitutes a money bill—I say this in a general sense—I would say that the effect of my bill would simply enable the Secretary of State to second personnel from other departments. The bill is more or less concerned with straight administrative changes within the department of the Secretary of State and would enable him to second personnel from other departments. By no stretch of the imagination—and I say this in good faith—could this bill be interpreted as being one which would incur the expenditure of money. I took great pains this summer, together with competent officials, to satisfy myself in this regard, Mr. Speaker, because I realized the difficulty in the last session. I am sure that if there were any indication of this my bill would not be here, because I would have been forewarned long before today.

Mr. Speaker: I can certainly appreciate the emotion with which the hon. member has spoken. He understands fully the personal regard that I have for him as a person, but it is my duty not to allow personal feelings to enter into these matters. It is my duty to give an opinion, which I would like to do now.

This is a bill to change the title of the Department of State to "department of the secretary of state for federal-provincial relations" and to constitute a new department. See clause 2.

The bill also provides transfer to the new department of "any officer from elsewhere in the public service". See clause 3.

Furthermore, the bill vests the Secretary of State with new powers and duties. See clause 4.

I am of the opinion that this bill is a money bill and for that reason it cannot be introduced by a private member. It is inconceivable that the increased function of the department as suggested in the bill could be assumed without a vast expenditure of money. The officers transferred from other departments will have to be paid, probably at an increased rate of pay; they will have to be replaced in the departments from which they have been transferred by new employees, thus creating a number of new employees.

On May 17, 1918, Mr. Speaker Rhodes decided that "A motion to amend a bill so as to provide for the appointment of additional government officials is out of order as it involves an increased grant of public money." (See Speaker's Decision—Beauchesne's third edition, 1943, at page 439).

On the same date the Speaker also ruled that "An amendment proposing to increase the membership of a government paid board involves an expenditure and cannot be moved by a private member." (See Beauchesne's third edition at page 475).

On March 2, 1927, Mr. Speaker Lemieux ruled that "A bill to create a new department of the government .... out of order because it was not introduced by a minister of the crown with the recommendation of the Governor General." (See Beauchesne's third edition at page 475).

On February 21, 1936, Mr. Speaker Casgrain decided that "A bill providing for the transfer of a government service from one department to another involves the custody of public moneys and cannot be introduced by a private member." (See Beauchesne's third edition at page 478).

In the course of rendering the above decision the Speaker said, inter alia, "Another element which places this measure in the category of money bills is that the adoption of same would mean the transfer of the authority under which appropriated money is to be spent." And further: "When money is voted, the main conditions imposed on its expenditure are embodied in resolutions. All the circumstances concerning its destination form part of the appropriation with which they are considered and if any alteration is to be made it must be by the same process as the original resolution." And still further: ".... the circumstances under which an expenditure is to be made are indivisible from that expenditure. The choice of the minister responsible for paying out the money is a material condition of an appropriation, and in order to change it, the house would have to amend the principal clauses of a money bill."

To conclude with the words of Speaker Casgrain in this last decision:

> I am therefore of the opinion that the proposed measure has all the earmarks of a money bill and cannot be introduced by a private member. I declare it out of order.

I regret that I must declare this bill out of order.

Mr. Grafftey: Is that a final ruling?

Mr. Speaker: I can assure the hon. member that I do not propose to amend my ruling.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Grafftey: With due respect, Mr. Speaker, it comes as a very great surprise to me that I am only informed at this stage my bill is out of order. I would have thought in the spirit of parliament, some system would have been devised whereby I would be informed before this, particularly considering the experience we had last session.

Second, I am not creating a new department by my suggestion. I am asking for the renaming of an old department. So far as I can see the seconding of officials from one department to another means that officials can be lent from one department to another. At any rate, naturally I accept Your Honour's ruling, with great disappointment.

Other hon. members will find themselves in the same position if such a fine distinction is going to be drawn in future. It would be convenient for them if they were forewarned, and I think this matter indicates a general situation which should be looked into immediately.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, maybe I might be permitted to say a word. I can understand the hon. gentleman's disappointment in this matter, and I think it is one we would all like to look into when Your Honour's committee is set up. It would be much more satisfactory if some means could be found to avoid having this kind of situation arise. I would like the hon. gentleman to know I think there should be some remedy.

Mr. Grafftey: I should assure you, Mr. Speaker, we have been forewarned of this situation, and many very eminent legal minds got together and tried to draft a bill which was not a money bill.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the hon. member who introduced this bill that I cannot accept his statement that he was not forewarned, because Your Honour made a ruling on July 7 last, as recorded at pages 2092 and 2094 of Hansard, citing the same reasons for ruling another bill of a somewhat similar nature out of order.

I regret, sir, that you had to invoke these citations and rulings because it does, in fact, draw a very fine line between what is a money bill and what may not be a money bill. At the same time I think the house and you, sir, are seized with these precedents, and until the house is prepared to make some ruling to change them, in my opinion almost all of the public bills on the order paper would be ruled out of order.

Mr. Speaker: May I take this opportunity of telling the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) that I listened to his remarks very carefully, and if I have anything to do with it they will be submitted to the new committee on procedure.

SWEEPSTAKES

LEGISLATION TO ESTABLISH HOSPITAL SWEEPSTAKES BOARD

On the order:

Second reading of Bill No. C-24, an act to provide for the establishment of a hospital sweepstakes board—Mr. Horner (Acadia).

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Acadia.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I break the rules by interrupting at this point? We have been proceeding rather quickly. As I understand the house leader, he suggested that if we were not going ahead with the bill recently dealt with, we might stand other public bills and go back into committee of supply if he could have an assurance from this side that we and other members of other parties would stand our bills. I presume our people would be willing to do that.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I may say I appreciate very much the offer of co-operation made by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill). So far as we are concerned, we would be very happy if this could be done, but I would go further and say I would hope today would not be counted as a private members' day, so that this day would not be lost to private members, and would be treated as if private members' time had been forgotten today.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we would be very happy to comply with this suggestion. Progress should be made on the interim supply bill and, if possible, with the old age pensions bill as well.

[Translation]

Mr. Plourde: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the group I represent in the house, I object to such a procedure. We have lost enough time as it is. We have now reached the hour set aside for consideration of private members' bills and we should proceed with that business. That is all.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: In the circumstances, it would appear the only thing that could be done would be to call each bill in turn and see if anyone is prepared to speak when his bill is called. If not, we would go back under the rules into committee of supply.

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, suppose we take the suggestion the house leader has made and do stand our bills, we would lose one private member's day.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, it is clearly understood it would not be lost.

Mr. Knowles: Anyway, this is a Friday. You cannot lose a Friday.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to stand my bill for these reasons, provided all other bills are stood.

Mr. Speaker: I cannot give any guarantee. We can only find out. The hon. member for Acadia is prepared to allow his bill to stand.

Order stands.

Mr. Speaker: There being no other private members' business the house will revert to the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

[Translation]

Mr. Plourde: Mr. Chairman, I now rise with some sadness in my heart because of what is being done. That is what may be called a trick well played "to attain one's ends". I am confident that the voters of this country will know the facts when the next election comes. I shall now proceed with my remarks which were interrupted at five o'clock.

I now want to devote a few moments to reminding the government that it was fully explained by Social Credit what it should do to apply the financial program we advocate in Canada.

The government may turn a deaf ear to our claims, but the day will come when it will be forced to do otherwise, or the people will take it upon itself to defeat it. Then you will see, for the first time in Canada, a Social Credit government, which will undertake to give to the Canadian consumer enough purchasing power to buy all the goods produced by Canadians. On the other hand, it will see to it that our farmers, fishermen and other actual and eventual producers are able to obtain the required credit to produce more and more goods of an ever increasing variety.

Then you will see unemployment dwindle to the point that our workers will, for once in their lives, have the freedom to find the job they really like. By that very fact, you will see that Canadians will be proud and happy to work for the development of their country because they will realize that their security will be ensured. That is what we, of the Social Credit, want—full development for all Canadians.

Meanwhile, I want to say that contrary to the claims of some papers and others, who are adept in wishful thinking, Social Credit is very much alive, and I would even say that, right now, people in general know that it is our group which holds the key to this country's survival. If freedom is to survive, the Social Credit theories must be spread throughout Canada. Nobody will contend that this Liberal government is leading Canada on the road to liberty. Those who say so would say anything.

The government is reducing us as quickly as possible to a kind of slavery quite similar to the Russian's. The means it is taking may be devious, but the final result will be identical. Nowhere else can you find fear equal to that which is felt in the heart of the average Canadian who wants to keep his family in a country where there is over production. People are worried about losing their jobs and are afraid to be in no position to meet an ever rising cost of living. This has resulted in sorrow and anxiety which can be in the heart of every man whom I have met in any walk of life. This is a very serious situation which condemns the Liberal government.

It is true that the Liberal government has raised old age pensions by $10 but we also know how this will be financed. People in my riding are disgusted with that new tax and they have asked me to oppose it in no uncertain terms.

What does the government intend to do about the disabled and the blind who, like everyone else, are faced with the ever increasing cost of living?

Surely no one can remain forever unaware of that fact. If one fails to understand it, it is because he is totally without any sense of reality.

Before closing, I would like to point out to my friends opposite the main role the Bank of Canada was to play after its creation in 1934, under legislation adopted that same year. When it was established, the Bank of Canada had almost unlimited power to create money, provided it kept certain gold reserves. However, following amendments to the act in 1940, the Bank of Canada is no longer required to maintain gold reserves.

Let our friends opposite take notice, since they still think that our money is based on a gold reserve and that a one million dollar bond of the dominion can be converted into money and then into dollars which can be spent as if those funds were part of our national revenue, so long as an adequate volume of goods are offered on the market.

All this can cost no more than a piece of paper, some ink, a pen and so on. This is an extremely important point.

Social Crediters claim that since the Bank of Canada has all the powers enumerated in the finance acts, why, in the name of common sense and in the interest of Canada does the bank not use them, not only to lend money to the people for production purposes, but to enable them to buy what they need or everything that is for sale. That is what Social Crediters think, and it is quite simple.

Yes, it is simple, because we have behind us the Bank of Canada which must back the value of the country in figures, in pieces of paper. That is what is quite simple according to Social Credit. Abolish misery in the midst of abundance and give the Canadian people a right to live.

As the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) said so often, the human person must come before the dollar sign. That is what is claimed by Social Credit, that we will respect the human person.

We of the Ralliement Créditiste, elected under the Social Credit flag, have not rejected Social Credit and we are still bound to it.

I hope that no later than Monday, we shall be officially recognized in the house as a separate group. Then, we will respect individuals who were elected in their ridings as such.

My nomination certificate said simply Lucien Plourde, nothing else. It didn't read Social Credit or Le Ralliement du Credit Social, and much less Liberal or Conservative. It was Lucien Plourde who was elected to the house and I hope that next Monday the numbers will be recognized, that is 17, 13 and 11 of Social Credit here.

I say that we should do away with misery in the midst of plenty. There will always be poor people, I know. We cannot do otherwise, because it says so in the Good Book. But it does not say that misery will always exist. It is on behalf of Canadians that we are here and that we want to defend the rights of the worker.

In life, there is a privileged class. They make the laws. Then, there is the other class, the middle class; they always pay for the mistakes of society. And there is a third class, made up of those who live in misery, the working class who can be helped. At present, that class is bled to death.

In my riding, there are 37,000 voters. They all belong to the working class, and they need to be defended. They sent me here to defend their interests and we shall defend those people in this noble chamber.

The day you will see a Social Credit government, you will see that legislation will not be discussed day after day under pretense that such is the tradition. We will know where we are going, we will come here with a precise and detailed program and in a jiffy we will see Canada on the road to progress again.

An hon. Member: There will be no more strikes when you are in power.

Mr. Plourde: The federal government cannot do without the provinces, but the provinces can do without the Canadian parliament, and they would be very happy about it.

Then, Mr. Chairman, should the house pretend that Social Crediters are unable to do anything whatsoever, are not sufficiently aware of procedure, it errs, for one of my colleagues shall also take the floor till six o'clock. And on Monday, we shall be able to pursue the debate on the subject of interim supply.

As to the recognition of the French fact, we have all found that—

An hon. Member: Why soil it?

Mr. Plourde: —in the house, there are more French since the Social Crediters came here. We work more for bilingualism, and we know how to put a French Canadian on the same footing as an English Canadian. For the time being, we do not intend to separate, we favour unity, understanding within the ten provinces of Canada with a view to a strong country, a country which should be able to govern itself, without having to bow before other countries stronger than ours.

We are blessed with an immense territory, big enough to encompass, within its borders, a population six or seven times larger than the present one. If, one day, the Canadian government thought of increasing our population by encouraging a higher birth rate, it would become evident that our land can feed many more people. Any measure which would tend to increase births, would give us a larger population. The day would then come when we, Canadians, could say: "As from now, we shall not be imposed on any longer." And we would become a truly independent country, with its own flag and its own national anthem.

For many years all we have been hearing in this house are promises to give Canada a flag. In fact, the man who is elected always has a flag design to submit within the next few years. And yet, after 97 years, we are still waiting for a flag, a national anthem of our own, as French Canadians, so that we would be recognized from one end of our country to the other and even throughout the world.

At the present time, what do you see on the ballot boxes when you cast your vote? "Dominion of Canada", that is colony of Canada.

That must change and it is high time it does. We count on the good will of the Liberals who have promised to adopt a flag, as well as a national anthem, within two years. Then the people will know what to do, if they fail to do so.

If it is decided to adopt a flag, I hope we will have enough imagination not to choose a ready-made one, but that we will take the time needed to study the design and that will truly represent French Canadians.

A few years ago, over one thousand flag designs were studied. One of them was selected, and I hope it will not be put aside, that it will be studied again, that its meaning to the people of Canada will be considered.

Mr. Chairman, this will conclude the few remarks I was pleased to make in this house at the beginning of this second part of the session that was adjourned at the beginning of August.

Mr. Boutin: Mr. Chairman, I wonder what trick has made it possible to resume consideration of this interim supply motion at five o'clock when we were supposed to examine private members' business.

However, I am pleased to take the floor following my colleagues to discuss problems arising in my constituency, and there are many. That is why I want to submit them to the house, and particularly to the ministers present, as well as to the Canadian population.

Mr. Chairman, last year, I had the opportunity to speak a few times and to make these problems known. But because of the inefficiency of the government, who did not take some of these problems into consideration, I want to submit them once more to the house today.

The riding of Dorchester, one of the oldest on the south shore of the St. Lawrence river, comprises, so to speak, two classes of citizens. On one hand, you have farmers, on the other, lumbermen. And it is especially of those two classes of people that I wish to speak, since they appear to be the most dejected.

Mr. Chairman, there is no question of speaking of industry in my constituency, for it is small; wood cutting and agriculture are among the main industries we have.

Moreover, there are two classes of lumbermen. There are those in the upper part of the riding who work in the woods of Maine and New Hampshire, and those in the lower part, who work in Ontario or in the other provinces of Canada during the winter.

Last year I had an opportunity to raise the problem of the lumberjacks who work in Maine and I notice this year that the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) who I must congratulate, at least tried to do something to reach an agreement with the state of Maine to bring those lumbermen under the unemployment insurance.

For 20 years, discussions have been going on with the state of Maine to solve that unemployment insurance problem and we do not seem any further ahead now than in 1944.

Mr. Chairman, in reply to a question from the hon. member for Kamouraska (Mr. Dionne) the other day, the Minister of Labour stated that he went to Maine to take up the matter with American authorities. There seems to be some hope and I trust that before next spring our lumberjacks from Dorchester and the neighbouring ridings who work in those states will be entitled to unemployment insurance benefits, because, Mr. Chairman, those lumberjacks do not work all year round; they may work six or seven months a year, and that is why, we are asking for them the same rights as the other lumber workers and other workers in Canada enjoy, namely unemployment insurance benefits when they are out of work.

Mr. Chairman, the trade of the woodsmen is not a very safe one—

Mr. Pepin: It is a very good trade.

Mr. Boutin: It is a very good trade, as the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Pepin) has just pointed out. But it is also a hard one and I am proud to have in my riding many of those hard working people who put their hearts in their jobs and who are paying taxes to the Liberal government, because when a sales tax of 11 per cent was imposed—and the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska knows it—the lumberjacks were the first affected since this 11 per cent tax was imposed on their equipment.

That is why, Mr. Chairman, on behalf of those men I am asking the Liberal government to suppress the 11 per cent tax on wood cutting equipment. They are taxed enough; their income is not too high at the present time and this is why I feel that the federal government should take into consideration the lot of those men who are not making that much money.

And I hope that the Liberal government, which has been elected because it promised to increase everything but taxes, will show the same goodwill it had before the election of April 8 last, and will be pleased to abolish that 11 per cent sales tax on lumberjacks' implements.

Mr. Chairman, we also found a certain anomaly with regard to lumberjacks who are not going to work in the state of Maine. Everybody knows that for about every trade, when necessary working implements have to be bought, like in the case of a garage keeper, a commercial traveller or any other trade, the cost of those instruments may be deducted from income tax. That is why I ask this government to take action so that our lumberjacks do not pay too much income tax, because they have to buy new implements every year and to travel to their work.

That is why I claim that they should be allowed to deduct the cost of those purchases and the travelling cost which they have to pay each week or every month to go to their work.

Mr. Chairman, I now want to deal with the problem of farmers in my riding.

Ten or 15 years ago those farmers were able to live on the land, but since then they are seen to abandon their farms more and more frequently. And as the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Perron) said this afternoon, everything seems to be organized in such a way that our farmers have to leave their farms.

I do not know whether I should call the existing practice patronage, but as the hon. member for Beauce said earlier today, what do we see? When a farmer makes a claim to benefit from some welfare plan, it is suggested to him, as a first condition, to leave his farm to go and live in the city. Today, everything of which we in Quebec were proud before, is being destroyed, which means that the family farm is now rejected.

But, Mr. Chairman, I can very well remember the attitude of the former hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Dumont) last year, when he was defending the right of our farmers to keep their family farm, which has always been a source of pride in Quebec. There were, last year, demands to the effect that the government should build storage space for feed grain in the east of the province of Quebec. This would have resulted in greatly lowering the price of grain and also enabled our farmers to make a little more profit, besides enabling them to remain and bring up their family on their own farm.

Mr. Chairman, it is a pity that such methods are used against our farmers today, to have them abandon their farms, which will enable the patronage people, probably Liberal, to buy those farms and turn them into a sort of collective farms.

Mr. Chairman, there is another point on which I want to draw the attention of the house. A few weeks ago the Minister of Labour designated some parts of the province of Quebec which might be helped financially by the federal government. Now, at that time, they forgot southern Quebec, that is that part of the province situated south of the St. Lawrence; and yet that area would be fine for the setting up of new industries or manufactures of all kinds, because, as I just said, our farmers abandon their farms more and more, in brief they are unable to get a living out of those farms of which Canada was so proud in the past.

That is why I blame the Liberal government for overlooking the ridings of Beauce, Dorchester, Montmagny, and even the Gaspe peninsula. This last one was not considered because the Liberal member for the Gaspe peninsula had protested and because the Gaspe peninsula should not be considered as part of the country needing the assistance of a central Liberal government.

That is why I would ask also that all the ridings south of the St. Lawrence river be considered as needing federal assistance. Industries are needed there, not only to give work to labour, but also to prevent our young people from leaving the area and swelling the number of unemployed in the cities. Today, it seems that everything should be centered in towns, everything seems to encourage our young people to leave the country for the cities. The solution is not there. The solution consists in preventing our young people from leaving their home town. We can see the consequences of all that.

As a matter of fact, at every election, there are from 200 to 300 and even 500 fewer names on the voters' lists. And this is not due to a decrease in the birth rate, but to the fact that our people are no longer able to make a living in our parishes, in our respective counties, and must leave their homes for the cities where they swell the number of unemployed and small wage earners.

Mr. Chairman, I humbly ask the government to take due notice of the few remarks I have just made, because if the government was able to carry a bill in order to increase the indemnities of members of parliament, it could also pass a measure to increase family allowances, which are sorely needed today since the income in all classes of society is not sufficient to provide for the children's needs.

It is urged more and more that children should get an adequate education, that they be better educated in order to learn a trade and be in a position to work anywhere. This is the reason why I would again urge the government to keep one of its promises made in April, namely to increase family allowances, an excellent social measure. The government had not promised to increase the members' indemnities, yet that was the first legislation to be passed.

But I urge the government to see that an increase in family allowances should not result in higher income tax. Private individuals are always the ones to pay, they are always singled out, but corporations, whichever they may be, are always favoured by the government. The poor and the lowly must always yield to the government. That is why, Mr. Chairman, as an excellent social measure, I request the immediate adoption this autumn of legislation providing an increase in family allowances. That will not only stimulate our country's economy but it will enable fathers to give a better education to their children.

Mr. Chairman, I should also like to speak against the patronage which is spreading throughout my riding just like in every other constituency. There has always been patronage since confederation because it has always been either Conservatives or Liberals who were in power.

As I was saying a while ago, the Liberal government or the Minister of Labour should sign an agreement with the state of Maine so that our lumberjacks who work there may get unemployment insurance benefits. The first advantage of this would be a reduction by half of the number of requests submitted for social assistance in my constituency. You know how social assistance requests work. If you belong to the Liberal party, everything is fine; there is no investigation and social assistance is granted without question. The organizing parties, the parish or the county chiefs have their say in such an organization. In the case of a Conservative, one is a little wary for this method has been largely put into practice by the Conservatives. But in the case of, let us say a private citizen, who will surely vote for Social Credit, there the trouble begins. An investigation is made, he is asked to give away all he has even to the last cent and once he is destitute, completely destitute, then he is given social assistance.

Mr. Chairman, that is how the two old line political parties have always treated the Canadian people, especially the people in the province of Quebec, as patronage in the province of Quebec is ten times worse than in Ottawa. As there is close relationship between the Ottawa and Quebec Liberals, you are aware that it is the same patronage that brews immense troubles for our Canadian families, especially those that are in need.

I should like to protest against abuses in the field of unemployment insurance. It seems that we have all kinds of legislation concerning unemployment insurance. We have unemployment insurance in our area, but one could say that there is a different act governing every unemployment insurance office. We submit a case to one unemployment insurance office and there they quote all sorts of acts. In another office, other acts are quoted which are almost in contradiction with what we were told in the first one.

I know that the laws were made for lawyers and by lawyers. One should absolutely be a lawyer to be a member in Ottawa. That is why the people were so much taken in, because we had in Ottawa representatives too far above the people and that is why the Canadian people, at the 1962 election, made no bones about returning to Ottawa men who were not floating in the clouds, but who had their feet on the ground, men who are able to walk along with every class of the society and who, most of the time, took into consideration the cases of the little people.

Mr. Chairman, I shall conclude my remarks now. Since there are only four minutes left before six o'clock—

Mr. Teillet: That is long, four minutes.

Mr. Boutin: Maybe the minister could suggest a few matters I could discuss.

Just the same, I shall let some other colleagues have the floor until six o'clock so that we can keep on discussing how the government is going to present the interim supply bill now before us.

Since we know so well the Liberal party's underhanded tactics, we were not surprised to find out at five o'clock that there were not enough of us to continue the discussion on interim supply. It was thought that the Social Crediters had gone home. Social Crediters are courageous people, they keep their eyes open, and they decided to defeat the tricks of the Liberals. We have a sufficient quorum to carry on until six o'clock the debate on interim supply. As long as our party, the creditist group, is not recognized in this house, as long as we do not have our own seats, we shall be compelled to tell our hon. friends opposite, who sit on the treasury benches that we are happy to carry on with the discussion on interim supply so as to be able to explain the problems which beset our constituencies.

Mr. Chairman, I am happy to have the floor, for this allows me to put Dorchester county in the limelight. I have been able to ascertain by thumbing through Hansard that since 1867, the year of confederation, very seldom did the members for Dorchester set forth the claims of Quebecers, and more particularly of the electors of the various constituencies. We must indeed remember that the problems relating to woodsmen have not sprung up lately, but have always been with us. The state of Maine was also constituted years ago and I am surprised that none of the members for Dorchester, either Conservatives or Liberals—indeed a Liberal represented the riding of Dorchester for quite a while—have risen and requested from the Canadian government that the lumbermen who work in the state of Maine be treated fairly.

Yet between 1940 and 1944, 47 American states agreed to negotiate with Canada and to enact legislation concerning the unemployment insurance benefits of Canadians from the English speaking provinces who work in the United States. At that time, there were 75 Tories and Whigs in the House of Commons and not one of them rose once to ask the same benefits for the people of Quebec who work in the states of Maine and New Hampshire. That is why I blame the federal government and all its followers. We should not have to blame again the Liberal government, for if it is well disposed toward those unemployed, it will take as soon as possible the necessary steps to confer with the American states in order that our lumbermen working in those states be entitled to unemployment insurance benefits.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Perhaps the house leader would like to give us his revised version of the order of business for next week.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it would be very wise for me on this occasion to attempt to forecast the business very far ahead, because until interim supply has been granted it will of course not be possible, I am afraid, to do any other business at all. Therefore that will be the first item of business on Monday.

I would hope—as I think the vast majority of hon. members hope—that we might dispose of it fairly quickly on Monday after reflection over the week end. In that case I think we would have to reserve until Monday morning any indication of precisely what would be taken next. If circumstances made it otherwise possible, however, of course we would like to take the old age pension bill first of all. But in the light of the labour situation with which all hon. members are familiar, the situation both in Montreal and on the lakes, the government simply has, I think responsibly to reserve its judgment as to what should be taken after interim supply is concluded if, as I hope, it should be concluded.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may we take it for granted that on Monday morning at the latest the government will advise each of the parties what the plans are for that afternoon.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will endeavour as early as possible on Monday to advise the representatives of the parties what would be taken after interim supply, if it should be concluded, as I hope it will be, on Monday.

Mr. Churchill: Would the house leader definitely rule out a supply motion on Monday and Tuesday?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am afraid we would be depriving hon. members opposite—even if the interim supply was disposed of in half an hour—of time to which they are traditionally entitled. I would not like to ask for that unless there was general agreement in the house that hon. members would be satisfied to do that. The government would like to have these supply motions because, as I have indicated very clearly, we must have five of them in the next few weeks, and time marches on.

It was our hope originally, as I indicated to hon. members opposite, that we could take a supply motion on Monday, but several unexpected circumstances have arisen since I gave that indication and I do not think anyone would now like to predict what may happen tomorrow and Monday in the field which was the subject of discussion for a good part of today.

Mr. Churchill: I appreciate the difficulties of the house leader. He will be reminded of my difficulties a year ago.

Mr. Pickersgill: My recollections are vivid.

It being five minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, October 7, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

DETAILS OF OLDER WORKER INCENTIVE TRAINING PROGRAM

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I should like to announce the details of an older worker employment and training incentive program which will become effective on November 1, 1963.

The duration of unemployment for workers over 45 is generally much longer than for younger workers. The government has therefore initiated this program which is designed to assist long term unemployed mature men and women to re-enter employment and secure necessary skills. This plan involves incentive payments to employers to hire eligible older workers between November 1, 1963 and January 31, 1964. The payments will amount to 50 per cent of the monthly wage paid, or $75 per month, whichever is less. The program will assist employers during the period in which an eligible older worker is being given the training and work experience necessary for his continued employment.

The conditions governing the payment of incentives to employers are as follows:

1. Incentive payments apply only to employment which is insurable under the Unemployment Insurance Act, excluding employment by governments at all levels and by government owned business enterprises.

2. The employer must provide the worker with a significant amount of approved on the job training or, if this is inappropriate, other approved programs to assist the worker to continue in gainful employment.

3. The employer must hire the worker during the period November 1, 1963 to January 31, 1964 and employ the worker or his eligible replacement for at least three months before the incentive becomes payable.

4. The worker must not be employed in a job vacated by another worker after September 1, 1963.

The conditions applying to the eligibility of workers for employment under the program are as follows:

1. The worker must be 45 years of age or over and not in full time employment at the time of hiring.

2. The worker must not be eligible for regular unemployment insurance benefits.

3. The worker must have been unemployed for at least six of the previous nine months. Evidence of unemployment can be provided by registration with the national employment service, receipt of unemployment assistance payments or other satisfactory evidence of attachment to the labour market.

4. The worker must not be in receipt of the universal old age pension or any other retirement or pension benefits equivalent to or higher than the amount of universal old age pension.

5. The worker must be the only member of the family household for whom an incentive payment is made.

I might add that the national employment service will be responsible for the implementation of the program at the community level. The Department of Labour will be responsible for the general promotion of the program itself.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, this announcement by the Minister of Labour is a further example of the way in which the present government, having made policy announcements well in advance, comes out with the working details of those policies only 24 days or so before those policies are to be put into effect. In other words it has been the habit of this government to announce policies without working out their details; and even when the details have been worked out, it has been evident that those policies do not operate in the way which was intended.

This incentive of $75 per month to employers who employ workers of 45 years of age and over from November 1, 1963 to January 31, 1964 is an attempt to encourage the hiring of these older workers. The period for which they will be hired is another matter. The duration of their employment is a vital matter, and it should not be on a temporary basis; it should be done on a permanent basis. When the former government, the Conservative government, was in office our concern was for the older worker and his employment, as was the concern of everyone in this country. We endeavoured, through an educational process, to acquaint employers with the ability and dependability of the older worker. In this effort we were successful to a considerable extent.

It now remains to be seen whether this new gimmick for the employment of the older worker will work out as well as it is hoped, or intended, it will, or whether it will be just another flop in the gimmicks promoted by this government.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, we accept the decision just announced by the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) and which is along the lines of the policy he stated briefly in June. In fact, when he did make that statement, we tried on several occasions to get additional information.

Last week I asked for further enlightenment in that connection.

The Minister of Labour informs us today that the assistance will start on November 1, 1963, and will continue up to January 31, 1964, that is over a period of three months. During that time, employers of workers 45 years of age or over who were previously unemployed will be entitled to an allowance of 50 per cent of the salaries paid up to a maximum of $75 a month.

In his statement, the minister referred to the fact that employers will have to prove that they will provide the training required to enable those unemployed to keep their new jobs. Such a condition, I must say, will probably be exceedingly difficult to control.

What kind of training will be considered as required for an employer to be entitled to that special payment? What, in the minister's view, constitutes training capable of helping a man keep a job after three months?

Can we consider that somebody who has been previously unemployed for six months will be able to benefit from the training as set forth in the act?

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, that is one of the points which will be eagerly discussed and with which some might play politics, something which I for one deplore at this time.

I am of the opinion that the civil servants who will have to decide who is entitled to that grant and who is not, will find themselves in a very difficult situation and even liable to make unfair decisions.

I feel that point had to be raised and I hope the minister, in a further statement, will be able to clarify what will be considered sufficient training to enable employers to benefit from that allowance.

I said last week that those measures were good in themselves but were still only of a temporary nature and that nothing would really solve the problem facing young people and those not so young as long as the economy is not moving again and does not improve enough to offer employment to all those who are looking for work.

[Mr. Starr.]

[Text]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we share with all members of the house concern for the position of the older workers in our country. However, we shall have to take a closer look at the program announced earlier and supplemented today by the Minister of Labour to determine whether or not this program goes any distance in dealing with this problem. The minister can look to his left a couple of places and see a colleague who spent a little while this summer in Sweden studying what they have done there in another field. Some of us who have been in that country think the Minister of Labour might also go to Sweden and discover what they have done in providing full employment for all age groups.

LABOUR RELATIONS

SHIPPING INDUSTRY—REVOCATION OF APPROVAL RESPECTING VACATION PAY ARRANGEMENTS

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the house that I have revoked the approval previously given under the Annual Vacations Act to vacation pay arrangements contained in collective agreements between the seafarers international union and a large number of shipping companies.

Where approval is given such collective agreement arrangements, the act no longer has application. With the revocation of approval in these cases the act will now apply and employers in the shipping industry will henceforth pay vacation pay direct to employees instead of to the S.I.U.

It will also be recalled that Mr. Justice Norris found that the conditions laid down in granting approval had not been fulfilled by the S.I.U. and the shipping companies.

Detailed directions in this regard have gone out to the trade union and the great lakes shipping companies concerned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MOTION TO SUSPEND ADJOURNMENT TIME AND TO PERMIT SEVERAL READINGS OF SUPPLY BILL

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State) moved:

That, until the proceedings on the interim supply resolution, now before the house, and on the supply bill to be based thereon have been disposed of, the provisions of section 3 of standing order 6 concerning the time of evening adjournment shall be suspended; and that, in order to allow for several readings of the said supply bill in any sitting, the provisions of standing order 75 shall be suspended in relation thereto;

Provided that, if any other government order is taken in any such sitting, the terms of this order shall not be operative.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is with the very greatest reluctance that I rise this afternoon to propose the motion standing in my name on the order paper. I think all of us are perhaps more sensible than we have been for quite a long time that the eyes of the whole country are upon this house at this time; and I think most of us, at any rate, feel that the electorate, regardless of party, expect us first of all to discharge the business of the public.

Now, it is well known that we have before us, or will have before us when the orders of the day are reached today, the resumption of the debate on interim supply. It is known that there are peculiar procedural and other difficulties that could arise in the discussion of interim supply. As successive governments have often reminded the house, it has usually been possible to deal with interim supply fairly quickly. However, there have been times when that has not been possible.

It does seem to me that there were somewhat unusual circumstances in this particular case, because the house had recessed for the best part of two months and there was a resumption of a session in which there were a number of questions of real moment and concern. The interim supply debate went on for two days last week, and not one word of exception was taken from this side of the house to that fact. No attempt of any kind was made to restrict that debate in any way. In fact several members of the government, notably the Minister of Labour, took part in that debate. There was, therefore, an effort on the part of the government to deal with matters relating to public business that were raised during those two days. Moreover, sir, it had been the intention of the government, had interim supply been granted on Friday, to have a supply motion today which would have provided every opportunity to hon. members to air any grievances that might have arisen against the government in the conduct of public business.

At the end of two days of debate on Friday there was a disposition in the committee, if I understood it right—I am not relying on my own memory, but I am relying on the words of certain hon. gentlemen opposite—to grant supply. I should like to refer very briefly to what was said by the hon. member for Medicine Hat, as recorded at page 3236 of Hansard:

> Mr. Chairman, it is now five o'clock and I wonder if I could suggest that we obtain unanimous consent to continuing in committee through the next hour, which would give an opportunity to those hon. members of the house who have a special interest in prolonging this debate to exhaust all their presentations to the committee.

So far as I could judge this was acceptable to everyone then present in the committee with the exception of one hon. member, who exercised his undoubted rights under the rules to object. Then the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre made what I thought was an admirable and responsible intervention. At a later stage, when we had taken up the private business and the order had been called for second reading of a bill relating to sweepstakes, standing in the name of the hon. member for Acadia, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre said, as recorded on page 3239 of Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, may I break the rules by interrupting at this point? We have been proceeding rather quickly. As I understand the house leader, he suggested that if we were not going ahead with the bill recently dealt with, we might stand other public bills and go back into committee of supply if he could have an assurance from this side that we and other members of other parties would stand our bills. I presume our people would be willing to do that.

I think the hon. gentleman was speaking for his party, as the evidence showed a few minutes later. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre almost immediately afterward said this:

> Mr. Speaker, we would be very happy to comply with this suggestion. Progress should be made on the interim supply bill and, if possible, with the old age pensions as well.

Why then, sir, in view of this almost universal evidence of co-operation and willingness to dispose of the matter, should there be any excuse whatever for bringing on this motion at the present time? I think I have to found that upon a statement made by the hon. member for Lapointe the evening before. It will be found at page 3197 of Hansard for Thursday, October 3, in which the hon. member said:

> Mr. Chairman, I must inform you that we do not intend to end the debate on interim supply either tonight, tomorrow or as long as the privileges and elections committee has not remedied the ridiculous and illogical situation which prevails in this corner of the house. We tried to do it and it was supposed to be done as soon as possible. Last Monday, the house asked that the situation be settled but it has not yet been done.

Then on Friday the hon. gentleman said, as reported at page 3212 of Hansard:

> It rests with certain members of the government to see that a decision is taken as soon as possible, because it is absolutely illogical and utterly ridiculous not to recognize a group of 13 members...

and he continued from there. I think the hon. gentleman on reflection—and I know he will reflect on this—will realize that this is not, and under our rules cannot be, a matter for the government. The whole house accepted a motion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, on the day the session resumed, to remit the matter of the seating in the house to a committee; and under our rules, while that committee is deliberating it is contrary to the rules for the matter to be debated here in the house.

I do not intend to debate it but merely to draw attention to the fact; that the house, by a decision which no hon. member opposed, remitted this matter to the committee, and until it comes back from the committee the house has not power, under its rules, to deal with the matter. Moreover, the friends of the government are not a majority on that committee or any other committee of the house, any more than the government itself has a majority in the house, so that it is quite impossible for the government as a government to settle this matter. It is a matter for the house. It is a matter, as Your Honour properly pointed out, of the organization of the house; and whatever the disposition of the government might be it is not within its power under our constitution, and it would be an attempt to usurp powers the government has not got and has not the right to have, to attempt to settle any question which is a question for the whole house.

Therefore it seems to me, sir, it is rather illogical to hold up the business of the country because a committee of the house has not yet been able to discharge an obligation placed upon it. I believe there are other ways under our rules by which one can air a grievance against a committee, but to hold up supply in the house would not, it seems to me, be a very effective remedy in that regard.

On Friday, as reported at page 3244 of Hansard for that day, when asked to announce the business of the house for this week by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre I pointed out:

> Mr. Speaker, I do not think it would be very wise for me on this occasion to attempt to forecast the business very far ahead, because until interim supply has been granted it will of course not be possible, I am afraid, to do any other business at all. Therefore that will be the first item of business on Monday.

I think it is only fair to hon. members in all parts of the house for me to indicate as briefly and as clearly as I can just what is the degree of urgency of the public business. I am informed by the officials of the treasury that there are already bills which ought to be paid by the government and which are unpaid because the house has not yet seen fit to vote the supply necessary to make it possible to pay them. I am also informed that unless this grant of interim supply can be made by the end of the day tomorrow—and that means dealing with the matter in both houses, securing the royal assent and then having the supply released by the governor in council—certain of the cheques for the payment of public servants which normally go out in the middle of the month and which are normally spread over three days at the middle of the month—which process is affected to some degree by the fact that Monday next is Thanksgiving day and a bank holiday—and which would normally be received by public servants on Thursday, cannot be given to them because the money will not be available; and that for every day's delay the number of public servants so affected will be greater.

I am also advised that unless this house and the other place are able later this week or, at the very latest, at the beginning of next week to deal with all stages of the amendment to the Old Age Security Act, it will not be practical to include the additional payment in the cheques which are normally received, I believe, in all parts of Canada by the recipients on the twentieth day of the month. Therefore it is a matter of some urgency which will affect a great number of our fellow citizens. It is for that reason, and for that reason alone, that the government has felt that in view of the statement made in the house by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire), assuming he was speaking for those associated with him in making that statement, we should take every step it was reasonably possible to take under the rules to make as sure as we could that these bills would be paid. Of course we are in the hands of the house; we cannot do more than accept what the majority of hon. members wish to have done in this matter, but we thought we should take every feasible step to see that ample time was available for hon. members to air any additional grievances they might feel they had and still enable the house and the whole parliament to discharge its duties and to enable the fundamental business of the country, the public business, to go on.

I cannot believe, sir, that the country really would feel that this house was justified or that any part of the house was justified in holding up the public business, the business of all the people of Canada, because anybody in any part of the house was not satisfied with the place in which he happened temporarily to be sitting, particularly when a procedure had been provided whereby this question could be settled. This is a question which has some real complications in it, as I think all of us with any sense of the history of parliament realize, and the house has already provided unanimously for another way of dealing with that question.

Therefore, sir, it seemed to us that there was no real choice in the circumstances but to put forward this motion, the more so when one considers the exchange which took place between myself and the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Plourde) on Friday afternoon. I would like also to put that on the record. When the hon. member for Quebec West rose to speak, he was good enough to let me interrupt him, and I made this statement:

I wonder if hon. members would permit me to say just a word? I think all hon. members should be aware, if they are not already, of the fact we are on an interim supply motion. This is the fourth day of October, a Friday, and the next day that the house will be sitting will be the seventh. We are practically at the point where the government will not be able to pay the public servants or make other essential payments unless the business now before the committee is completed with very little delay. It had been the intention of the government, unless some emergency legislation was required, to have a supply motion on Monday, at which time all hon. members would have, as they always have, the greatest possible freedom of debate. I wondered, Mr. Chairman, if there was any possibility of bringing these proceedings to a conclusion now and dealing with the supply bill so that it could go to the other place and the ordinary business of the country could go on. It seems to me that if this could be done, anything that might be said on this motion could also be said on another occasion.

I am not seeking in any way to restrict hon. members, but I am sure the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, who was frequently in the position I am now in, is well aware of the urgency of this matter. I am not seeking to suggest in any way that the debate be restricted and I have no fault to find with any hon. member in any section of the house, because some very urgent matters have been discussed today and we recognize that these matters are urgent. But I thought it only right for me to bring the situation in which the whole house finds itself at the moment to the attention of the committee.

The deputy chairman then asked, "Shall the resolution carry?" and I think most hon. members who were here said "Carried". Then the hon. member for Quebec West said this:

I regret I cannot accept that proposal. When we are recognized in the house, we shall then be able to agree, but for the time being I must carry on with this debate on supply.

What does that statement mean? It means that the hon. gentleman said in effect that he had nothing more to say on supply and he would be prepared to agree to the supply but only if something else, that was not in the power of the committee of supply to do or that time in the power of the house to do, because it had been remitted to the committee on privileges and elections, had been done. It seems to me that on reflection all hon. members will realize that it will be a very serious thing for the public interest if a question of the mere internal organization of the house, the house-keeping of the house so to speak, should be put before the public business which we are elected to discharge. That, it seems to me, is the problem with which we are faced. It seems to me that the government, unpleasant as it is to ask hon. members to forego the usual adjournment and to prolong the debate, had no option in the circumstances, in view of the urgency of the public business which I have sought to state in as accurate and as temperate a manner as possible, but to bring this motion before the house.

I may say that if the government at this stage could receive satisfactory assurances that before ten o'clock today the interim supply could be concluded, I would be very happy indeed to ask the house to permit this motion to stand. But in default of those assurances it seems to me—

Mr. Woolliams: You will pull the trigger.

Mr. Pickersgill: —we have an inescapable duty in this matter.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is one of the historic days in the Commons of Canada. We have now seen the spectacle of the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) and government house leader coming before the house in sackcloth and ashes to ask forgiveness for his sins of the past. This is the most amazing development in the 12 years that I have been here in the House of Commons. Apparently if you wait long enough things happen which change the course of history, and sinners finally repent. So we have today the house leader, the arranger of government business, the man behind the scenes who fixes things up—the "grey eminence" as we used to call him in years gone by before he entered the government—now trying, in his capacity as house leader, to persuade the house to do, as he puts it, things which are solely for the good of the country. It is not the government which is so seriously concerned; it is the putting ahead of all other considerations for the good of the country.

This is a complete change in the character of my opposite number here, the government house leader. In all the years I have been here and that he has been in the house he has been working around this way and that, particularly when he was on the opposition side, to make it difficult for the government of that day to carry on. I had several years of that experience and I know whereof I speak. Now in sackcloth and ashes he comes here before us and says, in effect, that his plans have all failed; that it is not possible to organize the business of the house; that despite all his experience in the past and all the lectures which he gave me for about four years he now finds it impossible to organize the business of the house. We start with one subject matter; he then withdraws it, brings another bill before the house and has a go at that; and then changes around and brings on something else.

Perhaps the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) will also enter into this debate today. He was the champion last year of leadership and good government. He was telling us that if only we had leadership in this house and the business was properly organized we would get things done. This is the man who said: "Why don't you start with a bill and carry it right through to completion?" Well, he has now had an observance of another government in office with an experienced operator in charge of government business, and I hope that he will get up and say again that what we require in this house is leadership and a proper organization of the business, and that if we are going to start with something, that we stay with it and carry it through to completion. Because that has not been the case in this session.

Now, Mr. Speaker, how did all this trouble arise? The trouble arose through the fault of the government itself. The house leader has read to us the ultimatum which was delivered to the house on Thursday night by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire). This took us by surprise, because the hon. member for Lapointe has so frequently been seen to cross over to get, as we always thought, instructions from the Secretary of State or people on that side of the house. We have seen messages apparently relayed to him on this side so that a question can be asked which is easily answered to the satisfaction of the originators of the question. Now, what has spoiled this friendship?

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I think the hon. member is now assuming some of our intentions and I think he is completely wrong. He should remember what he was doing last year. I think he would—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I was hoping that with this reminder the hon. member for Lapointe would subsequently get into the debate and give us a statement with regard to what he is attempting to do in the House of Commons. I simply said that, as observers here, this is what we thought was going on, and that now what we had considered to be a beautiful friendship seems to have been destroyed. This disturbs us no end. How is the government going to be sustained in office if this beautiful friendship is destroyed? They may be forced out of office by these actions.

The ultimatum to which I have referred was given to us on Thursday night. The house leader has already drawn attention to it, but let us make sure of the words again. At page 3197 of Hansard the hon. member for Lapointe is reported as having said:

> Mr. Chairman, I must inform you that we do not intend to end the debate on interim supply either tonight, tomorrow or as long as the privileges and elections committee has not remedied the ridiculous and illogical situation which prevails in this corner of the house.
> [Mr. Churchill.]

And so, faced with this ultimatum, this is the response of the house leader. He says: "I cannot deal any longer with my former friend so now the house has to come to my rescue and we must sit night and day until those who wish to operate a filibuster in this house are worn out." This is the state of affairs at the present time.

The Secretary of State spoke about the urgency of this matter and told us that unless the interim supply is granted by Tuesday night very dire consequences will result. He pointed out that we have already had some time on interim supply and should now terminate the debate. He is constantly giving advice to the house as to what to do. Just the other day he wanted to have a committee set up without debate. He did not want debate in the house. Now he wants us to debate night and day, so I do not know what side he is on.

I think that the proper organization of the business of the house is to make arrangements, and confidential arrangements, so that when a controversial issue is coming before the house it may be possible for one spokesman for each party to speak on behalf of his party, and then the measure might well go through rather quickly. But he rises in the house and says: "I should like to bring this measure before you but I do not want any debate on it". What does he want? We now know that he wants to debate endlessly night and day all week. The hon. gentleman mentioned urgency. Unless this matter is settled by tomorrow night there will be difficulty, he said. Well, we have been all through this before. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, a diligent student of the House of Commons in the past, made a review in 1956 of interim supply procedure over many preceding years. I have done the same myself. In 1956, when a critical moment was approaching the House of Commons and when interim supply was up for consideration on June 11, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre recited for the benefit of the house the way in which interim supply had been dealt with over the years. Quite correctly, the Secretary of State has suggested that it can be dealt with very quickly on occasions, and the practice of the house normally has been to deal with interim supply very quickly, sometimes in 30 minutes, sometimes in an hour and a half, sometimes in half a day and sometimes in one day; the discussion rarely exceeds one day's sitting.

The urgency of such a motion has always been recognized by the House of Commons. It is important that the cheques go out to the people who are expecting their mid-month's salary, to those whom money is owed by the government. As the Secretary of State has pointed out, there is an arrangement whereby the cheques, which are numerous, are spread over three days. I have talked over the years with members of my staff who have been drawing cheques of this nature and they say this three day period is normal. They can take their cheques down to the bank on the 13th, 14th and 15th of the month, if these are weekdays and the banks are not pressed; and the people who are cashing government cheques do not have to form longer queues than are now required. We recognize the urgency of this matter but it is strange that in 1956 interim supply was passed on June 11 without serious objection being taken and I think we will be able to find other instances when interim supply was passed as late in the month as that. However, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre pointed out in his survey in 1956, it has been customary for the house to deal with interim supply about two weeks before the cheques are required, in other words, toward the end of the month.

I thought that when we reassembled a week ago the first item to be considered would be interim supply which, perhaps, would have gone through in 20 or 30 minutes. But it was postponed until Thursday. Despite the urgency which the leader of the house draws to our attention he failed, it seems, to remind the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) of the object he had in mind. The Secretary of State for External Affairs intervened in the debate on interim supply in order to make a statement regarding his particular problems related to external affairs. Would it not have been better to have arranged for a special debate on external affairs early in the session, as has been requested by hon. members on this side of the house, rather than to have had the Secretary of State for External Affairs intervene on Thursday to make a speech dealing with one of the most controversial subjects which has been before the House of Commons in years. Then, I presume, other hon. members were not to reply. The hon. gentleman has spoken, and that is the end of the debate. I should have liked to take part in that debate on external affairs and to have answered some of the questions put forward by the minister. I should have liked to take up his statement that Canada is now in a stronger position to favour disarmament, because she has nuclear arms on her soil.

Hon. members will appreciate the range of subjects which are opened up by the intervention of ministers other than the Minister of Finance. Interim supply should be carried on by the Minister of Finance. The leader of the house should absent himself and other ministers should remain silent. Then something would be done and the urgency of the matter would be met. Why did not the leader of the house speak to his colleagues and tell them: keep out of this debate, let the opposition people speak and we shall get the measure through. He did not adopt that course.

As a matter of fact, the cheques for those who are expecting payments by the government could be cashed on the 15th of this month, that is, on Tuesday of next week. Monday, of course, is Thanksgiving day, and there is, of course, Saturday and Sunday. If the normal practice were followed, the cheques could be cashed on Thursday and Friday of this week and the following Tuesday. I doubt very much if anybody will be seriously inconvenienced if the cheques are not cashed until Friday or the following Tuesday. They are dated the 15th of the month. The banks, relying on the government, will, I am told, accept them a day or two in advance. However, the Secretary of State tells us that unless we deal with this matter by tomorrow night, people are going to be seriously inconvenienced. I wonder if that is completely accurate. Granted there has been a three day period for the cashing and distribution of these cheques in the light of the difficulties which confront this house perhaps the cashing of the cheques could be done in two days rather than in three or, at the worst, on the day on which they fall due, which is the 15th. I should much prefer the matter to be dealt with more expeditiously and in a more orderly fashion, but I question the statement of the Secretary of State that this matter must be settled by Tuesday night.

I would say the wrong method of dealing with interim supply was indicated to this house last year by the Liberal party which now forms the government. During the course of last session alone, just consider the delays which were involved. Hon. members can look at the whole calendar year, 1962, and they will find that in the closing weeks of that session—and the house was dissolved in April—the opposition took 27 days discussing supplementary estimates which were just a continuation of the main estimates. That had never been done before in the House of Commons. Considerations of urgency they brushed aside. For 27 days they continued to discuss expenditures which they had been discussing earlier when the main estimates were before the house.

Then, after the election of 1962, when the house resumed in the fall of 1962, what did they do? Talk about urgency in granting supply. They blocked everything we brought before this house in the way of supply. We had a supply motion and six departments were called. Not one item of the estimates for 1962 was passed by the House of Commons: Not one item. Yet the Department of Agriculture was before the house for three days. Other departments were called and dealt with. But their estimates were not passed—not one single item.

Then, as to interim supply, we called for interim supply in December last year. This government, if it survives, will be calling for interim supply in December of this year and if we grant the present supply motion for which they are asking they will have had interim supply for eight months.

We will hear from the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) about giving the government a blank cheque for a period of eight months with no estimates having been passed by the house except those of the Department of Trade and Commerce, which I arranged by asking Conservative members on this side to refrain from lengthy debate. Those estimates were passed. The estimates of the Department of Transport were almost finished and we also started on the estimates of the Department of Finance. But last session not a single estimate was passed and interim supply was asked for. Now it is being requested for a period of eight months. A blank cheque is being sought and two thirds of all estimates for the fiscal year are being voted in this way without careful consideration, item by item.

Those are the arguments that were used against us last fall. In December of last year when we asked the house to vote interim supply for the month of January the members of the Liberal opposition were fully familiar with the urgency of interim supply. They knew how urgent it was and that the voting of money was required to carry on the normal business of the country, to provide for the pay cheques of people who were on the government payroll and to pay debts and things of that nature. Despite their knowledge of the urgency they took seven days, Mr. Speaker, to pass interim supply.

An hon. Member: The chickens are coming home to roost.

Mr. Churchill: Yes, the chickens are coming home to roost. They taught our friends here, who are new to the House of Commons, what to do on interim supply: Hold up the government; do not pass interim supply in 30 minutes or an hour and half or one day or two days; stretch it out. They took six full days and part of a seventh, and the present Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), then leader of the opposition, intervened twice in the debate on interim supply. Not content with one go at it he came back again. He admitted he was roaming rather widely, to use his own words, but he intervened a second time in order to hold us up.

[Mr. Churchill.]

On February 4, 1963, when we were dealing with interim supply again, all the arguments were raised again about spending money without the estimates having been passed by the house, and so on. I drew attention to a statement by the present Prime Minister, then leader of the opposition. I said, as found on page 3422 of Hansard:

> I should like to consider now the question of interim supply. Interim supply has loomed very largely in the mind of the house recently, and I think the Leader of the Opposition threatened us today—did he not?—with regard to the next interim supply.
> Mr. Pearson: Oh, no.

I went on to say:

> "Wait till Wednesday", he said, "when interim supply is likely to be called, and then you're for it".

Mr. Pickersgill: What page is that?

Mr. Churchill: You will find it on the 4th February of this year. Then the mentor in all this, the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill), set out in an article in the Winnipeg Free Press in January of this year what should be done with regard to interim supply, and I presume he has passed this on to this former friend, the hon. member for Lapointe. He pointed out that in June, 1956, when there had been quite a dispute in the house over the pipe line debate, it was in the hands of the opposition of that day to bring the government down by refusing to vote interim supply. On January 29, 1963, the Secretary of State recounted this past history and drew to the attention of his party and, of course, his other friends, the way to do it. He said at that time, and these words are worth recording:

> Theoretically there were these two choices—

Applying closure or dissolving parliament. He only had two choices in January, 1963, applying closure or dissolving parliament, but now he has come up with a third—sit night and day. These are his words:

> Theoretically, there were these two choices, but in fact there was not. The government had been deeply wounded by the battle over the use of closure in the pipe line debate. Notwithstanding the fact that the pipe line debate had lasted a full month, the opposition had succeeded in creating the impression that freedom of speech was being denied and that the ministers were riding roughshod over parliament. To impose closure on the debate on a supply bill would have been to limit the right of the Commons to control the expenditures of the crown and the Liberal government was not, in fact, prepared even to consider closure as a possible course of action. Moreover, if closure had been tried, it would have required nearly two weeks to secure the passage of the bill, the public servants would have gone without pay, and other urgent expenditures could not have been made. All the opposition had to do in the week of June 11, 1956, was to go on debating the government's expenditures for three or four days and the government would have been forced to ask for a dissolution of parliament and an election.

There is the mentor. That is the way you do it. In February of last winter that is what they were prepared to do. "Wait until interim supply comes up on Wednesday", said the then Leader of the Opposition, "and you are for it". I hope everybody in the house understands what can be done with regard to interim supply, and I presume this is what the Secretary of State was attempting to teach his party and to bring before others who might in their turn want to do something about interim supply.

I want to examine the proposal now before us, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: Well, you have to lay a basis and to give the history of the past to show how the Secretary of State in his sackcloth and ashes tries to approach this problem. He has dismissed closure as being a little too much related to the pipe line debate of 1956 under the autocrats of that day in the Liberal government. So he has come up with night and day sittings. He has proposed that we now sit night and day to get interim supply through and he has put a deadline on it, Tuesday night.

This is a clear indication, Mr. Speaker, of the failure of the government to organize the business of the house in a satisfactory manner. They have brought on themselves the dispute which is progressing in one of the committees of the house. It was their doing. They suggested this method of fragmentation of parliament and now they are caught with a real problem. But they are not content to wait for the decision of that committee. They now want to force interim supply through the house, whether or not that committee reaches a decision. This is a big stick indeed that is being waved before the House of Commons.

Why is it not possible for the committee to settle this matter? There are a large number of members on that committee. There are 14 members from the government side on the committee and surely they have some friends among those people who frequently cross the floor of the house when a vote is about to take place to get instructions apparently as to what to do. Why do their friends on that committee not come to their assistance now? The membership of the committee is 29, with 14 government members. They need one more, and they can decide the issues. Why are they delaying? This is what we would like to know. Let that committee decide, and then we will not have to go through this method, and this procedure, of sitting night and day to try to wear out some people who have a grievance against this government.

I should like to propose a solution to this difficulty, Mr. Speaker, but before presenting that solution may I say that the actions of our party on Thursday and Friday, when we were debating interim supply, were clearly set out. We withdrew from any debate on interim supply in the last hour and a half on Thursday. Similarly, on Friday, we withdrew from the debate. We were not opposed to interim supply going through on Thursday or on Friday. We were quite content to proceed. As a matter of fact, at my request, the hon. member for Acadia consented to forgo his bill. We were prepared then to go ahead. We could have continued the sitting of the house until six thirty or seven o'clock on Friday, and concluded the matter.

Well, that is the position of our party on this. We want to get ahead with other matters. We want to see other aspects of the government's program, and to let them continue making the mistakes which they are so proficient at making instead of stalling on the interim supply bill. This is something which should be passed and dealt with by the house very quickly.

However, the solution proposed by the Secretary of State is, I think, unsatisfactory under the circumstances. In view of the fact the problem is not one resting here on the floor of the house at the moment, but is in front of a committee of the house, if that committee will report to the house then we dispose of that particular problem and get on with interim supply. We have had an ultimatum from the hon. member for Lapointe. Let the committee settle the question and, I take it from his remarks, there will then not be a filibuster on interim supply. If the committee does not settle the matter, then there will be a filibuster. However, let us divide this question up into its two components. What is the report of the committee? What is its decision, since that committee is heavily weighted with government supporters?

Consequently, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert):

> That, all the words after the word "that" in line one be struck out and the following be substituted therefor:
>
> "In order to facilitate the proceedings on the interim supply resolution now before the house, and on the supply bill to be based thereon, the matters in dispute which the house has not yet resolved and which were referred to the committee on privileges and elections on Monday, September 30, 1963, be determined and to that end the standing committee on privileges and elections shall be empowered to sit while this house is sitting and, effective on the adoption of this resolution, shall immediately resume its sittings and shall sit daily and shall direct its attention to making a final report to this house on the said matters within 48 hours".

Mr. Speaker: In the short time at my disposal, I have considered this amendment to the motion as carefully as possible. In my view it is beyond the scope of the motion as moved this afternoon. It is a new and distinct motion which, itself, requires notice. It is also in the nature of giving instructions to the committee. For these three reasons, I must declare that, in my opinion, the amendment sought by the hon. member is out of order.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, it would have been helpful perhaps to have heard hon. members on this particular point. However, a decision has already been made and I have no recourse but to appeal your ruling.

Mr. Speaker: The house has heard the decision of the Chair, from which the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre has appealed to the house. All those in favour of sustaining the decision of the Chair will please say yea?

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

Mr. Speaker put the question as follows:

"The question before the house is an appeal from the Speaker's ruling.

"To a motion to provide for the suspension of the hour of evening adjournment and also to provide for several readings in any sitting of a projected interim supply bill, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) proposed an amendment, namely:

"That all the words after the word 'That' in line 1 be struck out and the following be substituted therefor:

"In order to facilitate the proceedings on the interim supply resolution now before the house, and on the supply bill to be based thereon, the matters in dispute which the house has not yet resolved and which were referred to the committee on privileges and elections on Monday, September 30, 1963, be determined and to that end the standing committee on privileges and elections shall be empowered to sit while this house is sitting and, effective on the adoption of this resolution, shall immediately resume its sittings and shall sit daily and shall direct its attention to making a final report to this house on the said matters within 48 hours".

The Chair having decided that the proposed amendment was beyond the scope of the main motion, that it was in the nature of a substantive motion which required notice thereof, and also that it was in effect an instruction to a standing committee, ruled the proposed amendment out of order. Whereupon the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre appealed to the house from the decision of the Chair.

The house divided on the question: Shall the Speaker's decision be sustained? And the decision of the Chair was sustained on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the decision sustained.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, if I had voted I would have voted against your ruling. I was paired with the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey).

Mr. Cashin: Mr. Speaker, I was paired. Had I voted I would have voted to sustain your ruling.

Mr. Granger: Mr. Speaker, I was paired. Had I voted I would have voted to sustain your ruling.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Chretien (St. Maurice-Lafleche): Mr. Speaker, I was paired. Had I voted, I would have voted to sustain your decision.

[Text]

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, should not those who stand to say they are paired state with whom they are paired?

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, coming back to the motion before the house it is my intention to make only a brief intervention at this time to indicate the position of the Social Credit party with respect to the motion now before us. As we listened to the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) in his rebuttal of the motion we witnessed an interesting display of political showmanship, rather profound in its presentation but so insipid in its content and wasteful of our time. My advise to the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre—

An hon. Member: You are the one who needs advice.

Mr. Thompson: —is simply that two wrongs can never justify a right. The height to which politics has risen in this house today is merely the pot calling the kettle black. Yes, the country still looks for leadership and responsible action from us who collectively make up this House of Commons.

The real issue is not one of urgency or non-urgency; it is a matter of right and wrong. The question which is before the committee on privileges and elections at this time is one which has existed since confederation. It is not a matter of immediate politics; it is a matter of principle upon which we have asked the committee to make a recommendation to this house. The question before them is simply, what is the correct and proper thing to do? I did say, as I have said before, that when a piece of legislation is brought before the house we should go through with it. All that this resolution is asking at the present time is that we go through with the interim supply motion.

The motion introduced by the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) has been occasioned by the announced intentions of a small number of members of this house to block the passage of an interim supply motion and the bill which follows, as well as other important legislation, until and unless parliament yields to some demands which are of a purely political nature, thereby denying the house the right to decide an issue in a democratic manner. This amounts to tyranny by a minority. We submit, Mr. Speaker, that this constitutes blackmail of the most odious nature and indicates the necessity for such drastic revision of the rules of this house as are necessary to make such a situation impossible in the future. Parliament cannot be bullied into submission. No matter how we disagree with the views of its members, democracy involves the giving of a fair hearing to minorities. It must also involve the fact that the majority finally decides what action is to be taken on a matter. Perhaps consideration should be given at this time to suspending any further meetings of the committee on privileges and elections until this threat is removed. If it is not, the committee will be sitting under a cloud; it will be sitting under a threat and that is not the way in which democracy should function.

The motion calls for the suspension of standing order 6 concerning the time of the evening adjournment which, of course, would permit an uninterrupted sitting of this house until the interim supply resolution had been approved. Although we have doubts as to the effectiveness of this measure we are prepared to support the motion in the hope that it will in the long run expedite the business of the house and allow us to go ahead with the important legislation which awaits us including the measure to increase the pensions of senior citizens, as well as interim supply in order to assure the continuance of monthly cheques in respect of other assistance measures such as family allowances, quite apart from the payment of our civil servants and members of the armed forces. We wish at this time to identify our position. We wish to dissociate ourselves from any attempt to coerce parliament in the way which occasioned the introduction of this motion, and we hope that good judgment and concern for national welfare will yet prevail in this house and that we shall act as legislators rather than just as political opportunists.

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I feel the motion introduced by the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) shows that the Secretary of State enjoys resorting to blackmail—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Caouette: —by making us believe that if we refuse to let interim supply pass the government will be prevented from paying its bills and its civil servants, from passing legislation to increase old age pensions in this country.

Mr. Speaker, such statements, made to get the newspapermen's attention, may have the effect of throwing the blame on the group I represent in this house by suggesting that we prevent the old people from receiving their pension, the civil servants from getting their pay and the government's bill from being paid.

I do not believe a word what the Secretary of State said a while ago, not any more than I endorse the purely political statements the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) made when he blamed the government for not doing what they themselves did not do when they were in office.

In the present circumstances, we are of the opinion that we should proceed with the adoption of as much legislation as possible. It is a fact. But, Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw your attention to the fact that over a month ago I wrote to you personally to ask you to consider the seating arrangement in the House of Commons, as well as the allocation of offices in the parliament building. Now, Mr. Speaker, I submit most humbly and with all possible respect that you could have settled the question in five minutes. You yourself could have made the decision.

Reference has just been made to the majority rule in a democracy. Well, the political party to which we belong held a provincial convention in Granby. There was also a caucus of members of parliament at which all were invited and where there was a majority vote in our favour. And when we submit that—

[Text]

Mr. Knowles: I rise on a point of order. I do not do so because I have any particular grudge against the hon. member for Villeneuve, but merely because I think this is a matter which should be dealt with early in the proceedings.

Is it in order to discuss in the House of Commons a matter which has been referred to a standing committee and upon which that committee has not yet reported? I know that already references have been made to the subject but, for the most part, they have been to the effect that that is where the matter is now under consideration—that the subject should not be dealt with in this chamber. But when it comes to discussing the merits of the question, whether by the hon. member for Villeneuve or by any other hon. member, the point of order arises: can members of this house discuss something which has been referred to a standing committee?

Mr. Speaker: I am indebted to the hon. member for having raised the question of relevancy. I agree with the hon. member in his contention and I was hoping that the hon. member for Villeneuve was merely making a few introductory remarks because the matters he was about to discuss are, it would appear, matters for decision by the committee to which they have been submitted.

On the question of relevancy, which is the point at issue at the moment, I think it would be useful if I were to refer to Bourinot, pages 340 and 341, section V:

> Freedom of debate requires that every member should have full liberty to state, for the information of the house, whatever he honestly thinks may aid it in forming a judgment upon any question under its consideration. But it is nevertheless the duty of the Speaker of the house (or chairman of committee), to interfere when he finds that the member's remarks are not relevant to the question before the house. On such occasions, he may very properly suppose "that the member will bring his observations to bear upon the motion before the house"; or "that he will conclude with something that will bring him within order". And he may find it necessary to caution a member that "he is approaching the limits of propriety which confine hon. members in speaking to that which is relevant to the subject in hand", and to express the hope "that he will be careful to confine himself to that which is relevant." In other words, he must direct his speech to the question before the house—

And, of course, the question before the house is the motion of the Secretary of State.

> —or committee, or to the motion or amendment he intends to move, or to the point of order raised. If the Speaker or chairman believes that his remarks are not relevant to the question the member so transgressing will be called to order. The precise relevancy of an argument is not always perceptible, but the Speaker must be satisfied that it is relevant, otherwise he reminds the member that he must speak to the question. It follows therefore that the debate must not stray from the question before the house to matters which have been decided during he current session, nor anticipate a matter already appointed for the consideration of the house.

In the circumstances I can only suggest to all hon. members that they confine their remarks to the motion which is under discussion at the present time.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I will continue by pointing out that I firmly believe that in a democratic country it does not belong to any political party, in this house, or elsewhere, to decide our own political status.

When we held a convention—as I said earlier—which was perfectly legal—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Caouette: —we decided to join forces, 13 members of parliament.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Caouette: Why then ask the Liberal party or the Conservative party to decide whether or not we are a political party? That is what it means.

Today we are accused of wanting to boycott legislation. The committee has been meeting since last Monday—I did not and will not go there. We are told that the committee sits; it does not sit; it meets, and no decision is reached.

Personally I wish to suggest something to the house. If we were given the assurance that a decision will be reached at the earliest possible moment, then we would be most willing to co-operate with the government. But until now we have had only discussions, and that since last Monday, a week ago today.

We ask to be given our own seats as well as our own offices, because in this corner of the house—you will agree—we are two separate groups, and it is ridiculous to keep us in the situation we find ourselves in.

We ask to be recognized. That is democracy, recognizing the rights of minorities. We are a minority party, I admit, but democratic rights should be recognized. The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) said: Two wrongs do not make a right. That is true. Something is right and something is wrong.

[Text]

Something is wrong and something is right but at this time I feel that he is wrong and we are right.

[Translation]

We are seeking nothing but the recognition of democratic principles. After that, we will object no more.

Do not come along with sad stories or blackmail by telling us that civil servants will not be paid tomorrow evening or the day after, that they will have to cash their cheques Thursday or the following Tuesday. That is nothing but hogwash.

It was stated a while ago that in the past—in fact, no later than last year—we took a week or ten days to adopt interim supply and civil servants were paid just the same. At the time, we had a Conservative government in power instead of the present Liberal regime, but there is little difference between the two. When one party takes over from the other, he inherits the problems of his predecessor. The same problems are always there and the same far fetched solutions are proposed. Now, Mr. Speaker, I draw the attention of all hon. members to the fact that we are recognized as members elected by voters in our ridings of the province of Quebec. Well, we must be recognized as a group in this house, and then we shall be willing to help the government and even support it. But a decision must be arrived at within one or two hours of discussions during the whole week, the decision being postponed until the next day or the day after, to reach a solution, in two months' time, that perhaps would not be acceptable. Whether or not the solution is acceptable, this committee should come to a decision which will recognize our existence in the house.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that no member likes the idea of removing the hours of adjournment so that we face the prospect of sitting all night. Nevertheless I am prepared to support this motion if there is no other compromise that can be found so that the business of the country can be continued and certain important legislation, particularly that having to do with increasing old age pensions, can be dealt with at the earliest possible date.

Let us take a brief moment to see why we are in the situation in which we find ourselves. The supporters of the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) feel they have a grievance with reference to their seating in the house, and their recognition as a political party or group. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I think this is an important question, and the members of the New Democratic party are also concerned about the question of seating in the house and recognition of priorities. That is why the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) a week ago today moved a motion to refer this matter to the committee on privileges and elections. That committee was only constituted last Thursday and it has not had very much time. I would say to the hon. member for Villeneuve that if it becomes apparent that this committee is dragging its feet or that it is stalling or deliberately putting off reaching a decision, we will be as active as any other members in raising the matter in the house and urging that the committee reach a decision and make a report to the house.

But I want to say to the hon. member for Villeneuve that surely the seating arrangements in this house, whether for the Créditistes or for the New Democratic party, are relatively unimportant compared to the conduct of the public affairs of Canada. As my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, said last week in introducing his motion, it is an honour to sit in any part of this house, and while we will be just as zealous as any other group in asking that we be given proper recognition I do not think this justifies any group in the house, no matter how important they may think they are, being allowed to hold up interim supply and thereby making it impossible to meet accounts which are due.

What is just as serious, Mr. Speaker, is that by holding up interim supply we are holding up proceeding with the amendments to the Old Age Security Act. I think the house wasted three days last week discussing the resolution precedent to that bill. It could have been passed in a couple of hours but three days were lost. I want to point out that as far as this group is concerned we put up two speakers, both of whom spoke less than 10 minutes. We were prepared last Thursday to see the interim supply measure go through. We do not think that any group of members, on the basis of a personal grievance affecting their privileges in this house—not on a matter of policy, not on something which affects the welfare of Canada—has the right to stop the conduct of public affairs; and that is what holding up interim supply amounts to.

I want to make an appeal to the hon. member for Villeneuve and to those who are supporting him. After all, not only the eyes of Canada but the eyes of many countries are upon this democratic parliament. In the world in which we live democracy is on trial as it has not been for many decades. Democracy can be destroyed and discredited just as much by people from within as by its enemies from outside. The very essence of democracy is a capacity for self-discipline. The success of democracy depends upon the willingness of those who sit in parliament to forget their petty bickerings and partisan advantage wherever the public good is involved.

I would say that parliament is making a pretty poor spectacle of itself when interim supply is held up and when a bill to increase old age pensions is held up merely because we in this corner of the house feel that we have a grievance about the seating arrangements, a matter which I might point out is already before a parliamentary committee and under consideration. I would therefore urge the supporters of the hon. member for Villeneuve to reconsider their attitude. I would urge them to consider the public image which we are creating for the people of Canada. If we are to restore people's faith in democratic procedures, I think it can only be done if the general public are convinced that this parliament is serious about conducting public affairs.

I am sorry the government did not give some consideration to the amendment which was moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, because I am not sure that removing the closing hours and sitting all night is necessarily going to push through interim supply. I suppose eventually, by a process of exhaustion, we will get interim supply through. But that is not a very happy way in which to conduct the affairs of this parliament. It seems to me that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre made an eminently sensible proposal. Your Honour has ruled the amendment out of order, and so I am not going to discuss it. But it seems to me if some agreement could be reached among the various parties, that the committee will sit while the house is sitting, that it will try, within 48 or 72 hours or a shorter time if possible, to bring down a report, then the hon. member for Villeneuve and his supporters could be assured that this committee is not going to drag out this matter for weeks or months or that this is simply a stalling device. If this course could be agreed to by the government, and the gentlemen who feel aggrieved are prepared at the same time to allow interim supply to go through, then we could get on with the business of the house.

I make an appeal to both the government and the Creditistes to get together to see if a compromise cannot be worked out. I am prepared to support this motion if it is the only alternative, but I am not sure, Mr. Speaker, that it will solve our problem. It will certainly mean that for the next 48 hours or so we will be sitting night and day listening to an interminable discussion, not by members who are objecting to some vote in the interim supply measure, but simply listening to speeches that are made for the purpose of holding up the business of the house. It seems to me that is not a spectacle that is likely to enhance the prestige of democracy either in Canada or in other parts of the world.

I do hope some agreement can be reached whereby the committee would undertake to meet while the house is sitting, and to bring down a report before the end of this week.

I hope, at the same time, the hon. member for Villeneuve and his supporters will agree to forgo the filibuster which they have threatened, and forgo the attempt to blackmail this house into bullying the committee into doing something it is not prepared to do. If they are prepared to make this kind of compromise, and the government is prepared to accept such a compromise, we can get on with the business of the house. However, if such a compromise cannot be reached, I would like to make it clear I am prepared to support the motion.

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I should like to tell the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam that I have called a meeting of the steering committee for this afternoon. We want to decide when we are going to sit, and it is the steering committee that is going to decide. If the house wants to give us the right to sit while the house is sitting, we can sit this evening for as long as it is desired to decide the question. However, I have to get orders from either the house or the committee, and that is the thing for which I am waiting.

Mr. H. F. Jones (Saskatoon): In view of the remarks that have just been made, and in view of the remarks of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, as well as the fact that Your Honour ruled out the amendment made by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre on technical grounds, I wonder whether or not that suggestion could be concurred in by unanimous consent. It does seem to be the feeling in all parts of the house that an effort should be made to settle this question without involving the house. Perhaps by adopting the suggestion made by the hon. member for Hull, this might be considered over the supper hour and either the amendment concurred in or a compromise motion made.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I be permitted to say a word on the point that has been raised? I know this is completely contrary to the rules, sir, and if anyone objects I will sit down. If there is no objection, I should like to take up the point made by the hon. member for Saskatoon in pursuance of the point made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam.

As the hon. member for Hull has pointed out, the steering committee is going to meet this afternoon, and perhaps that could be done while we are considering private members business. Perhaps they could agree to have a meeting of the full committee at six o'clock, which it would be quite legal to do. The committee could then ask for the permission of the house to sit this evening, which we could give at eight o'clock. Then, it might be that this whole matter could be resolved this evening while the house is sitting. If that could be done, I would be very happy indeed to suspend my motion right away.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to set straight a certain impression which might seem to prevail. We never intended and we still do not intend to needlessly delay the proceedings of the house.

We would not want the house to think that we are prepared to delay the proceedings merely to have the seats distributed in the house. Such is not the case.

There is one situation which was brought up as far back as last Monday; it was dealt with in the press all across the country, in the province and in our ridings, and it was said that there would be a discussion as to whether the Ralliement des creditistes would be recognized or not. At that time, the people of the province of Quebec were asking us how it was that with 13 French Canadians in the house, we could not be recognized as a political party.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I see the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) motioning to sit down. He often pulled on my sleeve in order to make me sit down when we were discussing matters concerning the problems of the French Canadians in this house and I wish to protest.

[Text]

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, I did not ask the hon. member for Lapointe to sit down. I want that on the record.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: It is so true that he has risen on a question of privilege, and I should like to answer that the hon. member for Red Deer has suggested—

Some hon. Members: Order.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the hon. member for Lapointe to stick to the matter before the house, which is the motion. As a matter of fact, I should like to suggest at this time, in view of the suggestion of the Secretary of State, that perhaps the house might consider the adjournment of the debate. Would the hon. member for Lapointe accede to such a suggestion?

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, we are willing to accept the suggested solution, namely that the committee sits as soon as possible. At one time, as we said, we talked about delaying the carrying of interim supply in order to draw the attention of the house on what we consider as an illogical situation, that is the fact that the proceedings of a committee cannot be carried out more speedily.

Now that there is an indication that the proceedings of the committee will be hastened, now that the attention of the house has been drawn on that point and that the committee is ready to proceed as quickly as possible, I shall say once again that we are not here to block the business of the house nor the increase in old age pensions. We merely wanted to draw the attention of the house on the present situation, and it seems to me that this is enough.

[Text]

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, I should like to go on record, on behalf of our party, as indicating that we would be very happy to go along with the suggestion made by the Secretary of State, should that suggestion receive approval from all corners of the house.

Mr. Speaker: May I point out that we would need a motion to adjourn this debate.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound): Mr. Speaker, if I may make one suggestion, it does not seem to me that the committee has to ask for leave to sit while the house is sitting. This is a motion which can be made in the house itself by the house itself. I would suggest, with unanimous consent, we might have that motion made now because there is no need to go through with the procedure which the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron) has suggested, and the house on its own can give instructions to the committee.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think that is a very sensible suggestion and if it were known there would be unanimous consent to have such a motion made by the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron), and if the house would concur in a motion that the committee be allowed to sit while the house is sitting, then I would suggest someone should move the adjournment of this debate and let the hon. member for Hull make that motion. Then we could proceed in the ordinary way with the business of the house from now on.

Mr. Knowles: Since there seems to be no objection I move, seconded by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) that this debate be now adjourned.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS—LEAVE TO SIT WHILE HOUSE IS SITTING

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I make a motion that the steering committee meet right away—

[Mr. Gregoire.]

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Caron: —and that the committee should have the right to sit while the house is in session.

Mr. Speaker: I understand that you are adding to the motion "by unanimous consent of the house"?

Mr. Caron: By unanimous consent of the house.

Motion agreed to.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-100, to amend the Combines Investigation Act (Captive sales financing).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD ACT

SUBSTITUTION OF FRENCH NAME "TROIS RIVIERES"

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport) moved the first reading of Bill No. S-39 (from the Senate), to amend the National Harbours Board Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Speaker: There is no debate on this bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, the following questions are to be answered today: 691, 973, 1,071, 1,098, 1,099, 1,101, 1,103, 1,110, 1,155, 1,157, 1,158, 1,159, 1,171, 1,176, 1,177, 1,178, 1,187, 1,193, 1,204, 1,209, 1,210, 1,212.

If Your Honour would be good enough to call starred questions 1,182, 1,183, 1,186, 1,192, 1,194, 1,195, 1,241 I would ask that the remaining questions stand.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

Question No. 691—Mr. Howard:

What action, in detail, has been taken with respect to each of the following recommendations of the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Indian affairs:

"(a) The question of transferring health services for Indians to the provinces should be discussed at a dominion-provincial conference, but the present health program should be continued and extended until such time as this can be accomplished.

(b) Provincial welfare legislation and services should be used for the benefit of the Indian population.

(c) Social welfare should be placed on the agenda of a dominion-provincial conference with a view to transferring jurisdiction to the provinces.

(d) A substantially increased public investment should be made in Indian housing and sanitation facilities.

(e) A revolving loan fund for housing purposes should be established."?

Mr. Munro: (a) This matter is under consideration for possible inclusion on the agenda of a dominion-provincial conference.

The level at which the health program for Indians has and is being maintained can be gauged from the following information which represents expenditures from the organization and maintenance vote of the Indian and northern health services:—

1960-61	$21,066,958
1961-62	22,127,361
1962-63	23,083,138
1963-64	23,479,215

(b) It is the policy and practice to use provincial welfare legislation and services for Indians wherever possible. Welfare services and social benefits available to Indians, other than those financed entirely by Indian affairs branch or through band funds, are provided from one of two sources:

(i) welfare programs developed through cooperative cost-sharing arrangements with provincial, municipal and private organizations; and (ii) welfare programs operated by other federal and provincial departments of government.

Categorical assistance

Indians are eligible for family allowances and old age security administered by the federal government as well as for old age assistance, blind and disabled persons' allowances administered by provincial governments.

In Ontario and Quebec, Indian women receive mothers' allowances on the same basis as non-Indian mothers. Under the Nova Scotia assistance program, Indian mothers and abandoned Indian children are recipients of provincial social assistance.

Public assistance

In Quebec there has been some experimentation with the inclusion of Indians in an over-all assistance program.

Under the Ontario general welfare assistance act, 33 Indian bands (about half the Indian population of Ontario) participate in the provincial welfare assistance program.

In Saskatchewan, all provincial welfare services are available to Indians living off reserves.

The province of British Columbia provides welfare assistance to Indians, who are living off reserves and who have not established residence in a municipality, on a refundable basis from Indian affairs branch.

Child welfare

As the field of child welfare is a provincial responsibility, there is a variance from one province to another in the administration and financing of the child care programs. In all provinces, Indian affairs branch assumes responsibility for the maintenance of Indian children under the care and supervision of the child welfare agency.

In British Columbia, Alberta, Quebec and Prince Edward Island, child welfare services are available to all children of the province on the same basis.

An agreement between the federal and British Columbia governments provides for a federal contribution toward the administrative costs of two social workers employed full time among the Indian population in the Smithers and Prince Rupert areas.

Child welfare services in Saskatchewan are extended to Indian reserves on a very limited referral basis from Indian affairs branch to the provincial department of child welfare.

An agreement between the federal government and the children's aid societies of western Manitoba provides for the extension of child welfare services to the reserves within the area of jurisdiction of the children's aid societies of western Manitoba.

Child welfare services are available to all reserves in Ontario through agreements with the federal government and the children's aid societies.

In New Brunswick, certain children's aid societies have provided limited child welfare services on reserves; however, there is no agreement with the provincial government and/or societies.

An agreement between the government of Nova Scotia and the federal government allows for the extension of child welfare services to all Nova Scotia reserves.

The federal and Yukon territorial governments have an agreement whereby the territorial government assumes responsibility for the administration of child welfare services and the federal government makes a financial contribution toward the administrative costs.

The department has an arrangement with northern affairs by which child welfare services and professional consultative services in all aspects of welfare in the district of Mackenzie are provided by northern affairs and national resources.

Rehabilitation

In British Columbia, in Ontario, and in the maritime provinces, the benefits and services of the provincial rehabilitation programs are extended to Indian handicapped persons on the same basis as to non-Indians.

In Alberta, an agreement has been negotiated whereby the Alberta tuberculosis association has assumed responsibility for extending rehabilitation services to handicapped Indians at Indian affairs branch cost.

In Saskatchewan, an agreement has been in effect for some years with the provincial council for crippled children and adults whereby the Indian affairs branch pays a service charge as well as direct costs for work done with handicapped Indians.

In Manitoba, the sanatorium board of that province has been operating a rehabilitation program, under contract with the Indian affairs branch, that has been specially designed to help the young rehabilitants adapt to urban living conditions.

(c) This matter is under consideration for possible inclusion on the agenda of an appropriate dominion-provincial conference.

(d) A substantial investment in public funds for housing and sanitation facilities on behalf of Indians has been made in recent years. Since 1959, expenditures for these purposes are as follows:

Year	Sanitation	Houses	Total
1959-60	$ 46,387.29	$1,995,896.73	$2,042,284.02
1960-61	254,276.98	1,979,702.82	2,233,989.80
1961-62	354,806.98	2,191,693.12	2,546,500.10
1962-63	381,740.39	1,951,807.26	2,333,547.65
Total	$1,037,211.64	$8,119,099.93	$9,156,311.57

(e) The operation of a housing loan fund for Indians on reserves is contingent upon suitable amendments being made to the Indian Act.

INDIAN AFFAIRS—RELIEF FOOD ASSISTANCE

Question No. 973—Mr. Howard:

1. With respect to the Indian affairs branch maximum scales of relief food assistance, what are the names of the settlements which are eligible for supplementary relief food allowance, and of these settlements which ones fall into each of the categories A, B, C and D?

2. By whom was the determination made so to establish each such settlement as being eligible for the supplementary relief food scale, and upon what date was each such determination made?

Mr. Munro: 1. Indian bands eligible for supplementary relief food allowances:

2. Eligibility of Indian bands for supplementary relief food allowance is based upon local food prices. Recommendations for increased assistance are submitted by Indian agency superintendents through the office of the Indian commissioner for B.C. or through the appropriate regional office in other provinces and forwarded to the Indian affairs branch in Ottawa for approval. Alternatively, an enquiry regarding food costs is initiated by branch headquarters if there is reason to believe that consideration should be given to granting supplementary allowances in any particular area.

JAMES COUTTS

Question No. 1,071—Mr. Fisher:

1. What office does Jim Coutts hold in the government?

2. What is his age, place of birth, institutions of education attended and educational qualifications, governmental or business experience (position held, length of experience, name of firm or employer), and initial and present salary with the government?

3. What length of time has this gentleman undertaken to serve the government and/or what engagement in length of time was given to him?

4. In brief, what particular qualities of Mr. Coutts led to his engagement?

Mr. Pearson: 1. Secretary to the Prime Minister.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF FAUTEUX REPORT

Question No. 1,098—Mr. Orlikow:

Is the government considering repealing the Ticket of Leave Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act, and certain portions of the Penitentiary Act, and their replacement by one statute that deals in a comprehensive manner with the matters now dealt with in these acts, as recommended by the Fauteux report?

Mr. Chevrier: The government is not presently considering the consolidation of the legislation referred to by a single statute. However, the Ticket of Leave Act was repealed and replaced by the Parole Act, which came into force on February 15, 1959; a new Penitentiary Act came into force in 1961; and the Prisons and Reformatories Act is under review.

VISITS BY JUDGES TO PENAL INSTITUTIONS

Question No. 1,099—Mr. Orlikow:

1. What arrangements has the government made for visits of magistrates and judges to penal institutions to which they sentence offenders who appear before them, as recommended in the Fauteux report?

Questions

2. What steps has the government taken to implement the recommendations of the Fauteux report that courts rely to a much greater extent upon pre-sentence reports?

Mr. Chevrier: 1. In most penitentiaries, magistrates and judges are frequent visitors and such visits are encouraged. Every request from the judiciary to visit penitentiaries receives immediate attention and the visit is arranged. An item of $5,000 is included in the current estimates of the Department of Justice to cover travelling expenses of judges for this purpose.

2. No action has been taken by the federal government but it is understood that, in certain provinces at least, the use of pre-sentence reports is being extended.

OBSERVATION BY JUDGES OF CORPORAL PUNISHMENT

Question No. 1,101—Mr. Orlikow:

Is the government considering requiring that magistrates and judges who order corporal punishment be required to observe the actual imposition of such punishment at least once annually?

Mr. Chevrier: No.

LEGISLATION RESPECTING SUSPENDED SENTENCE, PROBATION, ETC.

Question No. 1,103—Mr. Orlikow:

Is the government giving consideration to legislation to effect (a) the abolition of a number of the restrictions on the power of the courts to suspend the passing of sentence (b) the authorization of probation without conviction (c) the amendment of criminal law to prevent imprisonment in default of payment of fines by persons who are unable to pay them and (d) that distinction be made in the law, as far as times for payment of fines is concerned, between indictable offences and summary conviction offences, all of which is recommended in the Fauteux report?

Mr. Chevrier: As to (a) and (b) the desirability of such legislation is being studied by the Department of Justice in connection with the continuing criminal law amendment program.

As to (c) and (d) sections 622 and 694 of the Criminal Code were amended in 1959 to provide, in respect of indictable and summary conviction offences alike, that where an accused person is fined the court shall consider any representations made by him as to whether time should be allowed for payment, and lay down other conditions designed to prevent imprisonment for inability to pay fines.

AFTER-CARE FOR CERTAIN PAROLEES

Question No. 1,110—Mr. Orlikow:

Is the government considering what means could be used to provide specialized after-care for particular types of parolees such as sex offenders, drug addicts, alcoholics and psychopaths, as recommended by the Fauteux report?

[Mr. Orlikow.]

Mr. Chevrier: Supervision is provided for serious sex offenders, drug addicts, psychopaths and most alcoholics while on parole, either by parole officers or private or public agencies under the direction of the parole board.

Arrangements are made in appropriate cases for referral to and treatment in, psychiatric or specialized clinics, where available, and in some cases special conditions are imposed in the parole agreement signed by the parolee.

The government is considering also what means could be employed to expand or improve the existing facilities and to provide more intensive supervision and surveillance in these classes of cases.

SURVEYS RESPECTING CAESIUM 137 LEVELS

Question No. 1,155—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Has the government any information concerning the results of surveys conducted by U.S. health authorities in Alaska and, if so, (a) what was the nature of such results and (b) what level of caesium 137 was found by surveys?

2. Is the federal government conducting similar surveys among Eskimos in northern Canada and, if so, (a) have any preliminary results been received and (b) has any comparison been made between U.S. results and any Canadian results?

Miss LaMarsh: 1. Yes. The results indicate that the levels of caesium 137 in Alaskan Eskimos who feed largely on caribou and reindeer meat are higher than those found elsewhere in Alaska or in the rest of the United States. Whole body counting measurements of caesium 137 in adult Alaskan Eskimos in 1962 ranged from 3 to 790 nanocuries. The highest observed level is less than the level recommended by the international commission on radiological protection as a basis for health assessment for individuals within the population. The highest average level for any community was 421 nanocuries. Typical levels in adults in other parts of the United States in 1962 were 5 to 7 nanocuries.

2. Yes. A study of fall-out levels in northern Canada has been initiated. This is a co-operative project involving units of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources and the Department of National Health and Welfare. The study is composed of a number of related but separate surveys. To date no direct measurements of caesium 137 in Canadian Eskimos have been made by whole body counting. Arrangements have however been made for such measurements. Urine specimens are being collected now and will be measured to give an indication of average caesium 137 levels in people in different communities. Samples of caribou and reindeer meat are also being received and measured for caesium 137; it is hoped that the first report on these measurements will be available in about a month. Levels of caesium 137 in Canadians living in the more populated parts of Canada were about the same as those found in the United States during 1962.

NON-PRESCRIPTION SALE OF ANTIBIOTIC PREPARATIONS

Question No. 1,157—Mr. Orlikow:

Has the government any information concerning proposals by the U.S. food and drug administration to ban the non-prescription sale of lozenges, nose sprays, mouth washes, deodorants and skin lotions containing antibiotics and, if so, are steps being contemplated for similar control in this country?

Miss LaMarsh: The Department of National Health and Welfare is being kept informed by the United States food and drug administration of its study of this subject.

No product registered in Canada under the Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act is permitted to contain an antibiotic. Only a few antibiotics are permitted in non-prescription preparations whose sale is subject to the Food and Drugs Act and regulations and the relevant regulations are under constant review in the light of any health hazards that may be observed in their use.

FROBISHER BAY—ADMISSION OF ESKIMOS TO RECREATION QUARTERS

Question No. 1,158—Mr. Orlikow:

Are Eskimos refused admittance to the quarters of the Department of Transport employees at the Frobisher Bay recreation association at Frobisher Bay, N.W.T. and, if so, under what authority, and when were these regulations promulgated?

Mr. McIlraith: No. The Frobisher airport recreation association is not operated by the department but is organized by its employees to provide recreation for themselves and their families, and membership includes Eskimo employees and their families. Active membership is open to all employees of the Department of Transport, associate membership to other residents of Frobisher Bay.

USE OF ANTIBIOTICS IN ANTI-COLD PREPARATIONS

Question No. 1,159—Mr. Orlikow:

Is the government considering banning the use of antibiotics now used in many anti-cold preparation prescriptions on the grounds that they are of no value in preventing colds or in protecting otherwise healthy people from the complications that sometimes follow a cold?

Miss LaMarsh: The primary responsibility for determining the possible therapeutic value of a prescription drug containing an antibiotic rests with physicians. The government would consider a prohibition of the inclusion of antibiotics in prescription drugs sold for the alleviation of cold symptoms only if a serious health hazard were demonstrated to exist.

POULTRY EVISCERATION PLANTS, MANITOBA

Question No. 1,171—Mr. Jorgenson:

1. How many poultry evisceration plants are there in the province of Manitoba?
2. How many of these are licensed by the health of animals division?
3. When were they licensed?
4. What is the total volume of birds processed through each of the plants in Manitoba from 1959 to 1962?
5. What are the percentages of condemned birds from each plant, each year, from 1959 to 1962?

Mr. Hays: 1. The department's records indicate there are 24.

2. Nine.

3.

Plant	Address	Date of Registration
Canada Packers Ltd.	Winnipeg	Jan. 8, 1951
Swift Canadian Co. Ltd.	Winnipeg	Feb. 6, 1952
Swift Canadian Co. Ltd.	Neepawa	Oct. 6, 1958
Manitoba Dairy & Poultry Cooperative Ltd.	Winnipeg	Oct. 23, 1957
Blumenort Cooperative Produce Ltd.	Blumenort	Nov. 6, 1957
Geo. Dueck & Sons Ltd.	Niverville	Sept. 30, 1958
Pembina Poultry Packers Limited	Morden	Oct. 1, 1956
Dominion Poultry Sales Limited	Winnipeg	June 27, 1950 (not operating at present)
Winkler Cooperative Creamery Ltd.	Winkler	May 8, 1957 (temporarily closed for 1963 season)

4. and 5. Inasmuch as this information represents the volume of business of private concerns available to the department through the provisions of the Canada Meat Inspection Act, it is not published. However, total volume of all poultry slaughtered through health of animals branch inspected plants in Manitoba is available and is shown in the following table along with the number condemned.

Questions

	Eviscerated	Condemned	Percentage
1959-60	3,642,159	44,377	1.21%
1960-61	3,572,742	46,480	1.30%
1961-62	4,463,224	Not yet available	—

ARDA PROJECTS, INTERLAKE REGION, MANITOBA

Question No. 1,176—Mr. Stefanson:

1. Has an interim report been received by the government on the two research projects and the five community and economic studies of the interlake region of Manitoba, approved by the federal government on March 15, 1963, under the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act and, if so, will it be made available to members of the House of Commons and other interested parties?

2. Has the government any plans for projects in the interlake area, in addition to the eleven cost sharing projects announced on March 15, 1963 and, if so, what are they, and the estimated cost?

Mr. Hays: 1. No report has been received.

2. Five additional projects have been approved in the interlake area of Manitoba. The nature of these projects, the total cost of each and the amounts allocated as the federal share are set forth in the following table:

Project	Total Cost	Federal Share
Land capability surveys in the interlake and west lake regions to develop a land capability map of fringe or frontier areas.	$24,800	$12,400
A land utilization study of the interlake region to prepare a land zoning or administration map for guidance in development.	62,000	62,000
To appraise the commercial fishery to determine the economic benefits which could be derived by the rural people of the interlake area.	99,290	49,645
To accelerate the soil survey program in the interlake region to provide background information for the soil capability inventory.	23,000	23,000
To determine the leadership structure of people associated with agricultural-fishing communities.	7,500	7,500

AIRSTRIP SURFACE, FORT SIMPSON, N.W.T.

Question No. 1,177—Mr. Rheaume:

1. Has the Department of Transport any plans to put a gravel surface on the airstrip at Fort Simpson, N.W.T. and, if so, when will this project begin, and what will be the cost?

2. If not, will the department examine this matter and provide for this urgently required surface as soon as possible?

[Mr. Hays.]

Mr. McIlraith: 1. The department's forecast of estimates provides for the gravelling of runway 12-30 together with the apron and taxiway. No estimate can be given as to when this project will begin since it depends on provision of sufficient funds but it is tentatively scheduled for the year 1966-67. The estimated cost for the whole project is slightly over $1,000,000.

2. A full economic and engineering study will be undertaken before the work outlined in the answer to part 1 is undertaken.

ACCESS TO AIRPORT, FORT SIMPSON, N.W.T.

Question No. 1,178—Mr. Rheaume:

1. Does the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources have any plans to construct a causeway from the mainland to the island to allow year-round access by the residents of Fort Simpson to their airport and, if so, when will this project get underway?

2. If not, will the department consider providing this vital and urgent link?

Answer: 1. No.

2. Yes, when the volume of traffic increases to such an extent as to warrant the high cost involved. There is at present a causeway between the island and the mainland which is useable throughout the year except a few weeks in spring during the break-up of the Mackenzie river.

*TRIP TO WINDSOR BY EXTERNAL AFFAIRS MINISTER

Question No. 1,182—Mr. Irvine:

1. Did the Secretary of State for External Affairs make a trip to and from Windsor, Ontario, on September 25 last in a government aircraft at government expense?

2. If so, what was the purpose of this trip?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the answer to No. 1 is yes. The answer to No. 2 is, on government business having partly to do with trade and economic matters which were being discussed with the representatives of the government of another country in Ottawa that day, and as I had to participate as chairman of the Canadian delegation, it was necessary to make these arrangements.

*PAYMENT FOR WHEAT SOLD TO RUSSIA

Question No. 1,183—Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi):

1. Does the government consider the Russian rouble to be convertible currency?

2. Will the payment of wheat sold to Russia be made through a bank transfer from the Bank of Moscow or the Bank of London?

Mr. Pepin: Export agents of the Canadian wheat board receive payment following the loading of wheat on each vessel on presentation of documents to a Canadian bank. The question as to how the Canadian bank receives the funds from the U.S.S.R. is a private commercial matter between the buyer and the Canadian banks.

*PASSAMAQUODDY TIDAL POWER DEVELOPMENT

Question No. 1,186—Mr. Coates:

What is the status of the negotiations between the government of Canada and the government of the United States related to the Passamaquoddy Tidal Power Development?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, in response to this question I may say that we do not feel that we have sufficient information at the present time to give any positive indication as to the government's position. This matter, however, has been discussed with the premier of New Brunswick, and we have asked for some more information from the United States. There are no negotiations under way.

PERSONS PRESENT AT RUSSIAN GRAIN SALE NEGOTIATIONS

Question No. 1,187—Mr. Simpson:

What are the names of all those present during the negotiations with the Russians in relation to the recent grain sale?

Answer: The negotiations of the Canada-U.S.S.R. trade agreement and the wheat sales to the U.S.S.R. were closely related. The following were present during either or both discussions:

Canadian government trade delegation

Honourable Mitchell Sharp,
Minister of Trade and Commerce.

J. H. Warren,
Assistant deputy minister, trade policy, Department of Trade and Commerce.

W. C. McNamara,
Chief commissioner, Canadian wheat board.

W. Riddel,
Assistant chief commissioner, Canadian wheat board.

V. L. Chapin,
Department of Trade and Commerce.

R. V. N. Gordon,
Department of Trade and Commerce.

R. M. Esdale,
Department of Trade and Commerce.

C. J. MacCallum,
Department of Trade and Commerce.

O. G. Stoner,
Department of External Affairs.

S. A. Borisov,
First deputy minister, ministry of foreign trade of the U.S.S.R.

A. H. Manzhulo,
Ministry of foreign trade.

V. M. Ivanov,
Ministry of foreign trade.

L. M. Matveev,
Head of V/O exportkhleb.

B. L. Popov,
Ministry of foreign trade.

A. P. Korostelov,
Ministry of foreign trade.

V. N. Platonov,
Ministry of foreign trade.

N. J. Kuzminsky,
Head of bureau of translation, ministry of foreign trade.

*RICHARD O'HAGAN—SALARY

Question No. 1,192—Mr. Fisher:

1. What is the salary, as of October 1, of Richard O'Hagan of the Prime Minister's office?
2. Has Mr. O'Hagan received any salary or expenses from MacLaren's Advertising Agency since April 22, 1963?

Mr. Davis: 1. $10,000.

2. No.

PASSAMAQUODDY TIDAL POWER DEVELOPMENT

Question No. 1,193—Mr. Rondeau:

1. Has the American government recently made representations to the Canadian government regarding negotiations concerning the tidal power at Passamaquoddy and, if so, what stage has been reached in these negotiations?
2. Has the commission on territorial waters submitted a report on the matter recently?

Questions

[Translation]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The United States government has indicated that it was willing to discuss the matter with the government of Canada but there are no negotiations under way at the moment. See also my reply to question No. 1,186.

2. The final report of the joint international commission on that matter was published on May 1, 1961.

*SUGAR BEET SUBSIDY PAYMENT, ST. HYACINTHE-BAGOT CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 1,194—Mr. Ricard:

Since the establishment of the agricultural prices stabilization board and up to March 31, 1963, what has been, for each of the fiscal years concerned, the amount of the grants paid to the producers of sugar beets in the constituency of Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot?

Mr. Beer: The agricultural stabilization board has not recorded payments to producers of sugar beets by constituency but up to March 31, 1963, total deficiency payments to producers of sugar beets in the province of Quebec were as follows:

Fiscal year 1959-60 crop	$ 73,040
Fiscal year 1960-61 crop	$ 76,502
Fiscal year 1961-62 crop	$122,085
Fiscal year 1962-63 crop	$168,891

*MILK SUBSIDY PAYMENTS, ST. HYACINTHE-BAGOT CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 1,195—Mr. Ricard:

Since the establishment of the agricultural prices stabilization board and up to March 31, 1963, what has been paid as a grant of 25 cents a hundredweight of milk to the operators of each of the following factories: Société Coopérative Agricole, St-Germain, Co. of Drummond; Théodore Jodoin, St-Théodore d'Acton, Co. of Bagot; Société Coopérative Agricole, St-Hugues, Co. of Bagot; Deslauriers & Frère-Paul Jodoin, St-Liboire, Co. of Bagot; Felice DiPalma, St-Liboire, Co. of Bagot; Helidore Parent, Ste-Hélène, Co. of Bagot; Société Coopérative Agricole, St-Simon, Co. of Bagot; Théodore Gevry, St-Pie, Co. of Bagot; Alfred Bernard, La Présentation, Co. of St-Hyacinthe; Produits Laitiers Val Maska, St-Damase, Co. of St-Hyacinthe; Charles Benoit & Irénée Larivière, La Présentation, Co. of St-Hyacinthe; Lussier & Frère Enr., St-Hyacinthe, Co. of St. Hyacinthe; Produits Laitiers Mont St-Hilaire, St-Hyacinthe, Co. of St-Hyacinthe?

Mr. Beer: The agricultural stabilization board does not make grants of 25 cents per hundredweight for milk to the operator of any processing plant.

Plants are reimbursed for payments made to individual producers on behalf of the agricultural stabilization board.

[Mr. Rondeau.]

PREFERENTIAL TARIFF WITH SOUTH AFRICA

Question No. 1,204—Mr. Rondeau:

1. Does the government of Canada intend to maintain its preferential tariff policy for the republic of South Africa even if that country has withdrawn from the commonwealth?

2. On what ground has the government made its decision in this regard?

3. What was the amount of trade with the republic during the last fiscal year?

4. What part of that amount went to the preferential tariffs granted?

Answer: 1. Canada exchanges tariff preferences with the republic of South Africa on the basis of the bilateral trade agreement negotiated with that country in 1932. The validity of that agreement does not depend on membership in the commonwealth.

2. The basis on which the government continues to extend preferential tariff treatment is, as indicated above, a trade agreement which continues in force unless denounced by either party on six months' notice.

3. For the fiscal year ended March 31, 1963, South African exports to Canada totalled $17.5 million. For the same period Canadian exports to South Africa amounted to $42 million.

4. In 1962 approximately 25 per cent of Canadian exports to South Africa entered at preferential rates of duty. There is no specific figure available on what percentage of South African exports to Canada enjoy tariff preferences. However, in 1962 of the nine leading South African exports to Canada valued at $12 million, $6.5 million or 54 per cent entered under a preferential tariff.

CANADIAN BORROWINGS IN U.S.

Question No. 1,209—Mr. Scott:

1. Does the government have statistics as to the total amount of Canadian borrowings in the U.S.A.?

2. If so, what was the total value of such borrowings from (a) January 1, 1963 to July 18, 1963 and (b) July 18, 1963 to September 30, 1963?

Answer: 1. Yes.

2. The sale to residents of the United States of new issues of Canadian bonds and debentures produced $401 million in the period from January 1 to March 31, 1963, and $366 million in the period April 1 to June 30, 1963. These totals included amounts sold earlier for delivery in these quarters. Sales in the first quarter totalled $531 million and in the second quarter $134 million.

Data are not available for parts of quarters and totals for the third quarter are not yet complete.

REPORT RESPECTING INVISIBLE TRADE BARRIERS

Question No. 1,210—Mr. Scott:

1. Has the government's attention been drawn to the report on invisible trade barriers between Canada and the United States recently published under the sponsorship of the Canadian-American committee?

2. Is the government presently investigating the extent to which trade liberalization in Canada and the U.S.A. may be limited by (a) discretionary authority given customs officials to value and classify imports (b) interpretation by such officials of escape clauses in trade agreements (c) administrative zeal in restricting imports in ways not sanctioned by law?

3. Briefly, what plan does the government have to deal with the problems raised by the above mentioned report?

Answer: 1. Yes. The government is aware of this publication by the Canadian-American committee of the national planning association (U.S.A.) and the private planning association of Canada.

2. The government considers any subjects bearing on trade liberalization, on a continuing basis and as a matter of day to day business. There is no special investigation being conducted in respect of the points mentioned in the question. As regards (a) procedures are available in both countries to consult the customs authorities about value and classification problems, to seek a review, and to appeal decisions of officials. As regards (b), the invocation of escape clause procedures of international agreements would be a matter to be decided by the government in Canada; under United States law decisions on these matters are made by the president, after a report by the U.S. tariff commission has been made. As regards (c), it is of course the case that the laws of a sovereign country must be administered. As indicated above, established appeal procedures are available.

3. Invisible barriers to Canadian exports, or non-tariff barriers as they are called, are a matter of interest and concern wherever they exist. We are continuing to press for removal of such barriers in our international trade consultations with other countries. The subject of non-tariff barriers to trade will be considered at the GATT trade conference next year.

CANADIAN-POLISH COMMON TRADE DEVELOPMENT POLICY

Question No. 1,212—Mr. Scott:

1. Have the talks between deputy trade minister James A. Roberts and foreign trade minister Witold Trampczynski of Poland been completed?

2. Briefly, what is the nature of the "Canadian-Polish common trade development policy" that the Polish press agency PAP reported as having been agreed upon during such talks?

Answer: 1. Yes.

2. The deputy minister of my department has just returned from a visit to Poland and other eastern European countries. This visit was in return for a number of visits from officials of these countries to Canada and in response to invitations which have been extended on various occasions. These were, of course, opportunities to exchange views on various trade matters. In the course of these discussions it was made clear that both sides are interested in developing mutually advantageous trade between the two countries. To this end there is in prospect a return visit to Canada later this month of a Polish trade delegation. Such a visit will provide a further opportunity to exchange views on trade matters.

*SCOTT MISENER STEAMSHIPS LTD.

Question No. 1,241—Mr. Cowan:

1. Is the Scott Misener Steamships Ltd., mentioned at the bottom of page 54 in the report of industrial inquiry commission on the disruption of shipping (Norris report), a federally chartered company?

2. Who were the directors of the company in 1959, and who are the directors in 1963?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1. Yes—incorporated on December 5, 1933 under name Colonial Steamships, Limited,—name changed to Scott Misener Steamships Limited by supplementary letters patent dated December 31, 1958.

2. According to the annual summary as of March 31, 1959 the directors of the company were: R. Scott Misener, Port Colborne, Ont.; J. N. McWatters, Port Colborne, Ont.; Ralph S. Misener, Winnipeg, Man.; F. H. Brown, Vancouver, B.C.; A. E. Pequegnat, Waterloo, Ont.; E. P. Murphy, Ottawa, Ont.; N. T. Berry, Toronto, Ont.; John E. F. Misener, Welland, Ont.; John A. France, Winnipeg, Man.;
as of March 31, 1960:

R. Scott Misener, Port Colborne, Ont.; Ralph S. Misener, Winnipeg, Man.; John E. F. Misener, Welland, Ont.; John A. France, Winnipeg, Man.; J. N. McWatters, Port Colborne, Ont.; N. T. Berry, Toronto, Ont.; A. E. Pequegnat, Kitchener, Ont.; F. H. Brown, Vancouver, B.C.; E. P. Murphy, Ottawa, Ont.;
and as of March 31, 1963:

J. N. McWatters, R.R. No. 2, Wainfleet, Ont.; N. T. Berry, 7 May Street, Toronto, 5, Ont.; A. E. Pequegnat, 241 Frederick St., Kitchener, Ont.; F. H. Brown, Suite 1312, Standard Bldg., Vancouver, B.C.; R. Scott Misener, 74 West St., Port Colborne, Ont.; Ralph S. Misener, 300 Dromore Avenue, Winnipeg, Man.; John E. F. Misener, 55 Parkway Ave., Welland, Ont.; John A. France, Fonthill, Ont.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day. It being five o'clock the house will revert to private members' business.

SHIPPING

SUGGESTED INQUIRY INTO WINTER NAVIGATION ON ST. LAWRENCE

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, it is expedient that Her Majesty's government consider the advisability of appointing commissioners under Part I of the Inquiries Act:

(a) to inquire into the extent of winter navigation on the St. Lawrence river and its effect on the Atlantic provinces;

(b) to determine whether such action is in accord with the original spirit and mutual pledges of co-operation in which confederation was conceived;

(c) to make such recommendations as they deem appropriate having regard to forging a dynamic national policy with particular respect to air, sea and land transportation in which the future of every region will be fully utilized with maximum benefits to that region.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this private members' notice of motion has been drafted a little wider than might have been necessary. In essence it simply deals with the effect of winter navigation on the ports of Saint John and Halifax. I have brought it under the Inquiries Act because of the present aversion to royal commissions. It is not inappropriate, either, that we should be discussing the St. Lawrence at the present time, in view of the problems that exist there. This matter has not been debated to any great extent through the years. There has been some discussion on the estimates of the Department of Transport and a few questions have been asked in the house from time to time, but I find no complete record of a full debate. I approach this matter, Mr. Speaker, in a non-partisan way, and I understand that the hon. member for Halifax, and others, will be joining in this debate. I want to point out at the beginning that we in the maritimes do not stand in the way of progress: we, ourselves simply do not wish to be paying for this progress.

Some history should be placed on record in connection with this matter. We could go back to confederation to find various statements that were made at that time about the importance of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia and their ports, and how they should be considered in any plans that might be put into effect in 1867. Sir John A. Macdonald is on record as having referred to this matter. I came across a very pertinent excerpt from the pre-confederation debates of 1865, in the provincial parliament of Canada, in Quebec, third session, page 349. Mr. Joly, the member for Lotbiniere, in speaking about Sir Etienne Taché, the president of the council, said this:

The honourable president of the council tells us that he is favourable to confederation, because it will give us a seaport at all seasons of the year—a most powerful argument, he adds, in its favour. We stand in great need of a seaport in the winter season, more especially if the United States abolish the right of transit. Absolutely, without reference to that, we require it in order to perfect our system of defence.

Various statements have been made by people through the years about this matter. I recall the late Mr. Clarence Gillis, at one time a member from Cape Breton, was always a strong advocate about the problems that would be presented with the St. Lawrence seaway. In fact, in the light of the remarks made recently about maritimers by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher), I often wish Mr. Gillis was with us in the house again, because he certainly would have dealt with the hon. member from his own party in his own strong way. Mr. Rand Matheson of the maritime transport commission always had fears in the early days of the seaway that when business was taken inland it would mean a greater use of the St. Lawrence in the summer. I recall Mr. Sam Balcom, a former member for Halifax, who on many occasions tabled questions about this matter, and Mr. Yvon Tasse, who was a member from Quebec, was also a great advocate of winter shipping in the city of Quebec.

We pointed out to him on many occasions that his difficulty in promoting the port of Quebec in the wintertime was that once Quebec was fully open the traffic would go past the door and on to Three Rivers and Montreal. I only mentioned these names, Mr. Speaker, to show that there has been some interest in this question, although there have not been any recorded debates. I mentioned this matter in the house on June 11, 1954, and the minister of transport at that time, now the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier), said:

I can tell my hon. friend that I cannot see any possibility of keeping the St. Lawrence route open during 12 months of the year. Certainly there is nothing envisaged in the plans for the development of the seaway, either jointly or separately, in connection with power and navigation, which would have anything to do with that subject either directly or indirectly. I do not foresee that in the immediate future, unless it be by atomic power, with which I am not competent to deal, there is any possibility of a longer season of navigation on the St. Lawrence.

Mr. Speaker, that brings the matter up to date. The icebreaking continues and we in Saint John and Halifax are faced each year during the winter season with the headlines of the newspapers that plague us incessantly. I have just copied some newspaper headlines to give the house an idea of the apprehension that exists in our minds. "Eleven icebreakers for St. Lawrence"; "More icebreakers urged for gulf"; "Labour protests policy on Quebec icebreaker"; "Halifax becoming 'ghost town' port". These, I may interject, are headlines from Halifax and Saint John newspapers. Then "Montreal winter shipping—'feasible sooner or later' "; "Testing methods of removing ice"; "Icebound ship set free". That was on the St. Lawrence. "Nova Scotia port union boss says icebreakers shortening season"; "Year-around route stimulates industry—$100 million Levis development"; "Icebreakers have busy gulf season", and so on.

In order to prove my case conclusively, Mr. Speaker, I have some official figures published by the dominion bureau of statistics which show the traffic which has been built up at the ports of Quebec, Three Rivers and Montreal in January, February and March, the full winter season, from 1958 to 1963. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, and the permission of the house I would like to have this brief table printed in Hansard.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. Has the hon. member for Saint John-Albert the permission of the house to have this table printed in Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The table referred to above is as follows:]

Tons of export and import cargoes loaded at Quebec, Three Rivers and Montreal, P.Q. in the months January, February and March—1958 to 1963 inclusive

	1963	1962	1961	1960	1959 (See note)	1958
Tons loaded—export	63,733	39,833	30,303	40,943	13,815	nil
Tons unloaded—import	28,020	29,796	25,671	24,824	245	nil
Total tons—export & import	91,753	69,629	55,974	65,767	14,060	nil

Note: Excludes 41,506 tons loaded at Montreal which were carried in ships caught at Montreal in 1958 fall freeze-up and subsequently released by icebreakers in January of 1959.

Mr. Bell: This matter has been presented on many occasions. The last formal time I recall its being raised was in a brief to the former minister of transport on May 30, 1961. This was a brief presented by the ports of Halifax and Saint John. It was most constructive. I refer to the part at the end of their brief where they dealt with the test of this matter of icebreaking and said:

> The question should not be where the icebreaker is working, but what it is doing and whether the results meet an essential public need or national interest; or maybe whether the results are to some extent contrary to national interest and policy.

Certain representations were made in Saint John and Halifax to the MacPherson royal commission, but they felt that the terms of reference did not include a treatment of this subject. While there was a veiled reference in volume 2 of the MacPherson report there was not anything of a helpful nature in so far as concerns this matter which looms so large to these ports.

We were encouraged, however, when recently the Atlantic development board accepted as one of their first projects this entire subject. The former member for Halifax, Bob McCleave, was aggressive in his approaches to the Atlantic development board, as it was newly constitued and they accepted, as I say, a full study of this matter. I notice that this is to be continued by the new directors who made a statement on September 27, 1963, to the effect that the Atlantic development board will continue the economic examination of the effect on Atlantic ports, of winter shipping in the St. Lawrence seaway, and a scientific and engineering study of winter shipping in the St. Lawrence. This will be carried out together with existing studies that are being made by the national harbours board, and others.

I feel that one should be constructive about a matter such as this. I have jotted down a few questions that the Atlantic development board and others interested in this matter might wish to consider. First of all, will the ice in the straits still be a danger, even with icebreaking in the St. Lawrence? What is the threat from fresh water ice in the spring? Would all the winter traffic figures for the St. Lawrence be business that would otherwise have come to Saint John and Halifax? Has any activity that formerly went through American ports been diverted to any Canadian ports because of winter navigation? Have insurance rates changed in any way to spread extra costs for winter navigation over all ports of eastern Canada? Has export business been held up in the spring in order to wait for the opening of the St. Lawrence; and also, are orders rushed through Montreal in the fall before closing? Has there been any actual benefit to Halifax from the opening of Quebec in the winter as suggested? Is it possible to assess the costs of icebreaking even in a general way? If the St. Lawrence were navigable all year, would any legitimate new business be created that does not presently exist?

I throw those thoughts out, Mr. Speaker, and in addition suggest that some of the solutions might be of this nature. First, special costs assessed to shipping companies varied to the thickness of ships' plates, as in many northern European countries such as Finland.

Second, individual icebreaker service should be paid for when and if needed. And third—and this is the suggestion that meets with more favour from responsible bodies in the maritimes—set freight rates on a directly competitive basis with the St. Lawrence; that is to say, with no advantage to the St. Lawrence, at least in wintertime. This equalization would, of course, be in the nature of a direct subsidy. It would be interesting to compare the estimates of these subsidy proposals with that of the entire cost of icebreaking services throughout the winter season on the St. Lawrence. Those are some solutions.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I merely say that this is a fast-moving transportation world. We are very apprehensive in Saint John and Halifax. I am speaking particularly from a Saint John standpoint when I say that we were at one time the fourth largest city in Canada, and probably the largest port at the time of confederation. We have many problems. We have a transit type of port activity, and the St. Lawrence would take more from us than Halifax. We are primarily serviced by Canadian Pacific. They are changing their passenger plans and making many other different moves, especially with regard to freight. We hear of trans-oceanic air freight, and such air freight is a big issue. We also wonder about trucking. If trucking had been given a completely free hand, would it have made a difference to our ports? As far as Saint John is concerned, the West Indies has always loomed large to us from an economic trading point of view, and we have had what business there has been from Cuba. What is our position in the future in this regard? These are all questions which have to be answered. I quote from the Ottawa Journal of recent date with reference to this matter:

> Perhaps Saint John is but the victim of our geography; a geography which, left to itself, ordains that Canada's growth must mainly be with our central regions, and beyond these to the west and the Pacific. Nor is it easy to combat geography; to overcome the consequences of resources—or lack of them—in given areas.
> Yet Saint John's position, one of the problems of a Canadian nationhood, deserves the thought of all of us. For a land half prosperous and half poor is hardly the stuff of greatness.

We in the maritimes, Mr. Speaker, realize that we cannot stop the inevitable, as I said in my opening remarks. This is a request for the full, ungarnished facts. We want the cold truth so that we will know where our future lies. The people there, I am sure, will accept as we have in the past, certain facts of life, and go from there in co-operation with government to different or even related activities. This has been demonstrated on many previous occasions, and certainly a challenge such as this can be met with our usual forthrightness.

Mr. Maurice Rinfret (St. James): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that I represent a riding which is interested in harbour development, I welcome this opportunity of stressing with all hon. members the importance of harbours throughout Canada and the impact of their operation on our economy.

The hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell) is worried about the harbours of the maritimes and his concern is due to winter navigation on the St. Lawrence river.

The hon. member for Saint John-Albert does not seem to share the views expressed by his former Conservative colleague, the former minister of transport, Hon. George Hees, at the annual dinner of the dominion marine association and of the lake carriers association held at Montebello on January 22, 1958. Speaking of aids to navigation, Mr. Hees stated that it was possible for certain ships to ply the St. Lawrence in winter and he had this to say:

> Thanks to those ships, practically all needs should be met within a few years in the St. Lawrence river and the gulf districts, including the winter navigation that might be possible in the various ports of the lower St. Lawrence and even in Quebec harbour.

The hon. member for Saint John-Albert must not have appreciated either the statement made by his Conservative colleague, the present member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer), minister of transport in the previous Conservative government, who on January 4, 1962, delivered a speech about winter navigation.

The January 5, 1962 issue of La Presse published an item about the official opening of winter navigation in Three Rivers, in which Hon. Leon Balcer was reported as having said:

> The federal government will endeavour to encourage shipping as far as the port of Three Rivers, because such an activity will promote to large extent the economic development not only of the Three Rivers area but of the whole country.

The hon. member for Saint John-Albert was a member of this house in 1958 and in 1962, and we never heard him complain to his two colleagues who were ministers of transport from 1957.

To reassure the hon. member for Saint John-Albert about his fears concerning prosperity of maritime ports, I will quote him a few figures which are an indication of the prosperity of these ports. Reviewing statistics published by the national harbours board, we can see that the gains in tonnage for the port of Saint John, show an increase of 82 per cent in 1960 compared to 1959, an increase of 14 per cent in 1961 over 1960 and a slight decrease in 1962.

Concerning the port of Halifax, it maintained the same tonnage in 1960 and 1961; in 1962, the tonnage increased by 7 per cent.

Those figures indicate that, at the present time, the ports of Halifax and Saint John are not only maintaining their operations but are experiencing an increase in tonnage for import and export goods, even though during the winter navigation on the St. Lawrence has increased.

Hon. members realize that the Department of Transport's icebreaker service must ensure winter navigation on the St. Lawrence so that merchant ships may proceed on the lower St. Lawrence and in the gulf itself.

It is imperative for the industrial development of the north shore that ships carrying ore, paper and aluminum from nearby plants to the United States and Europe stop over in centres like Port Cartier, Seven Islands and Baie Comeau.

The south shore will one day be more industrialized than it is at present. Assistance should be given by both the federal and provincial governments to that economically underdeveloped area to attract new industries. Communities like Chandler, Perce, Rimouski and Riviere du Loup will require water transportation facilities all year round.

The co-operation of icebreakers is also required to assist the ferryboats which ply between the north shore and the south shore of the St. Lawrence, as well as the small coasting vessels which give the service between the neighbouring ports of the lower St. Lawrence and the north shore of the gulf, in order that, in the absence of a railway, those centres may be supplied and may ship the goods produced by the local industries.

For a few years, European and Canadian shipyards have been building boats reinforced to such a degree that they can resist to navigation amidst the floating ice. Some of those ships have gone upstream and reached the ports of Quebec and Three Rivers, thus promoting our imports and exports at a reduced rate for the cost of transportation. Such reinforced boats resort to icebreakers when they find deep ice, but they can navigate without help in the regions covered with floating ice or thin ice.

Above Three Rivers and up to Montreal, the icebreakers are in service to prevent the floods caused by ice piling up along the shore and in the channel. Therefore, the icebreakers are called upon to prevent such ice jams.

After all, winter shipping on the St. Lawrence river is done thanks to the icebreakers, reinforced ships, coasters and ferryboats which are essential in order to supply and ensure the economic life of certain areas along the river.

The hon. member for Saint John-Albert which are essential in order to supply and inquiry and study the shipping situation all across Canada. I do not think that an inquiry is necessary. This government has set up two boards which are certainly aware of this problem, the Atlantic development board and the national economic development board.

These two national agencies, following research and surveys, will be in a position to make recommendations for the continuation by the Canadian ports of their operations on the present scale and for an increase of their yearly volume of goods.

Science progress and the development of new industrial areas will ensure an increased traffic in our Canadian ports, and all the areas served by harbours should be able to take advantage of these benefits.

I hope that all our national ports will share in the economic growth of our country and that governments at all levels, as well as private industry, will provide them with the necessary funds in order to meet their objectives, that is economic prosperity and stability.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): We should like to support the motion advanced by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell) while expressing some regret that the hon. member who has just spoken from the government side should have given us what is almost the traditional answer—"Why didn't you do something about it when you were in power?"

The hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Habel) interjects: "He did not say that". I am paraphrasing what I think was the effect of what the hon. member was saying. I stand corrected if I gave the impression that he said so in those exact words.

Part (b) of the motion would, of course, be very difficult, I imagine, for any board of inquiry to analyse and develop, but I certainly agree very much with what is stated in parts (a) and (c). I have brought up this subject on a number of occasions in previous parliaments, as I think the hon. member for Saint John-Albert will probably remember. One of my reasons for doing so, and I should probably be somewhat ashamed about it, was that it was guaranteed to start some kind of argument because, obviously, the interests of the maritime members, particularly of those members who represent Halifax and Saint John, are strongly affected by developments on the St. Lawrence.

It was obvious to me that there were some differences of opinion within the previous government with regard to the gradual development of icebreaking services and other aids to winter navigation which were being pushed forward by the Department of Transport. I feel there was a marked tendency for people in politics to speak differently in different parts of the country in connection with this controversy. I have always felt there should be a consistency in approaching this problem. My personal feeling is that the Department of Transport has, under instruction, gone out of its way to assist in the development of winter navigation on the St. Lawrence and I believe the people in the maritimes have had every right to complain about this, since it has not been stated in a context which had regard to the interests and facilities they have.

I recall that on one occasion when I brought this question up in a debate in this house I was told by a government employee who is an authority on shipping that there would be a saving of approximately $20 a ton on the freight of everything brought into Montreal or Quebec in the wintertime, compared with having it go to Halifax or Saint John first. This figure in itself, given to me by a government employee, was argument enough to convince me that this matter ought to be examined very thoroughly.

I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Saint John-Albert for having brought this question to the attention of the house and I hope the government will consider accepting his suggestion that there should be such an inquiry. Among other things it would, if adopted, remove this extremely controversial subject from the tricks that can be played with it by people pushing a partisan point of view.

If I might speak on a side issue for a few moments, I should like to say to the hon. member for Saint John-Albert—and this has to do with his suggestion to the house that I was unfair to maritime members—that if he would look at the script of my remarks he would see that their substance is somewhat different from the story which ran in the newspapers. The main point of my remarks—and they have a relation to the problem which is before us now—was to the effect that the maritime members of parliament are often kept so busy by their constituents chasing constituency matters that they do not have time to work on the larger issues within the national framework which relate to their region. I am delighted that in this particular instance the hon. member for Saint John-Albert has, in a sense, given the lie to that particular interpretation. But, if it is any consolation to him, he will find that in my remarks I made particular reference to him as one of the exceptions.

As to the way in which this inquiry could be carried out, I should like to suggest that this subject is of sufficient importance as to warrant an inquiry of the kind suggested in the motion before us. I am very doubtful about any promise by the Minister of Transport to have it examined by a departmental committee. It seems to me this would really not get anywhere. I should not like to have it examined by a departmental committee because it seems to me we really would not get anywhere. On the other hand, I should not like it to have the status of a full royal commission in the sense that I think this would perhaps blow the matter up beyond an economic analysis and the development of a strictly alternative transportation policy. For that reason we believe this is a good motion and we would hope that the government would consider accepting it. It certainly seems to me that it was presented in the best of spirits and it is worth real consideration.

Mr. Gerald A. Regan (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I rise on this question eagerly because there is no matter of greater interest to me or, indeed, to the city of Halifax and its economy than the question of the continuing inroads on our port traffic being made not only by winter navigation but also by the St. Lawrence seaway, and the diversion of so much Canadian exports and imports through United States ports to points of destination or from points of origin in Ontario and the west.

I speak in support of the principle of the resolution introduced by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell) and I compliment him on his thorough approach and research on the matter. I say that I support the resolution in principle because it is my understanding that the Atlantic development board is already undertaking such an investigation, and I feel that this is the proper board to supervise, if not to carry out, an investigation of this type.

Before going into the question of winter navigation, may I say I regret that the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) did not consider the (b) part of the resolution of great importance, because I feel that it is. Before confederation was consummated, indeed as far back as 1851, Joseph Howe in his memorable speech at Southampton, as did all other Nova Scotian people contemplating confederation, spoke of the consequences of our port and the ports of Nova Scotia and

New Brunswick generally becoming winter ports for Canada. This was agreed upon as part of the spirit of confederation. Perhaps I will return to that a little later.

I agree with the sentiment expressed by the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret) when he hopes that our commerce will develop in such a way that the economy of each and every port in Canada will greatly improve; but with all deference to him I cannot agree with the statistics he quotes regarding total tonnage in the ports of Saint John and Halifax. The hon. member quotes tonnage figures for the port of Halifax as being unchanged from 1960 to 1961 and showing a slight increase in 1962. But he has dealt with the question of gross tonnage, and gross tonnage has increased only because of an increase in oil and gypsum products being handled which, while they inflate the total tonnage, provide little in the way of man-hours of employment on the waterfront. I have had occasion to say previously in the house that it is packaged general cargo, the type that the longshoreman has to swing his hook into, which provides employment to labour on the waterfront.

Mr. Ricard: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Regan: Certainly.

Mr. Ricard: Does that mean that the hon. member is not in agreement with his colleague from St. James on this subject?

Mr. Regan: If my hon. friend had been listening closely he would have heard me say that I was, with deference, disagreeing.

Mr. Ricard: That is what I wanted you to say.

Mr. Regan: I am very pleased that honest disagreements can at times take place within our party. The problem in the port of Halifax and also in the port of Saint John is that general cargo decreased all during the Tory years in office and during the years of increasing icebreaking activities on the St. Lawrence, and this has resulted in a very serious unemployment situation on our waterfronts.

I think that the question of winter navigation can be approached from two beginnings. First, I do not believe that, economically, winter navigation on the St. Lawrence is a good thing. I do not think it is a good thing at all, but I think that we in the maritimes are broadminded enough to recognize that some increasing measure of winter navigation on the St. Lawrence is inevitable. I say it is not a good thing because let us remember that navigation in the winter on the St. Lawrence does not create any new commerce. It merely takes away trade from the Atlantic ports and transfers it to the St. Lawrence ports, which already enjoy a prosperous summer trade. If you accept the premise that the St. Lawrence ports and port workers are already more prosperous, then surely we must reach the conclusion that the use of government funds to expand winter navigation on the St. Lawrence at the expense of the Atlantic ports is a policy of robbing the poor to help the rich.

Not only has our gross packaged cargo tonnage not increased during the past six years, but at the same time the tonnage in the St. Lawrence ports of Three Rivers, Montreal and so on has increased sharply. The natural growth of our population and of our economy alone should have resulted in some increase in the volume being handled through the Atlantic ports, but this has not been the case.

Having accepted as being to some degree inevitable the proposition that winter navigation will continue to exist, I say that the position of the maritime provinces is that we must have a more realistic freight rate structure so that our ports can compete. This matter was touched on by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert, and I am in wholehearted agreement with him in this respect. After all, much of the freight being imported or exported through maritime ports is hauled by the government-owned railway to or from those ports, and if the railway is not fully utilized it will build up a larger deficit than otherwise. This railway always operates at a deficit, and I cannot see that there is much national wisdom or economic gain from a national point of view in using the St. Lawrence ports as the result of great expenditure of public funds to keep these ports open in the winter, when as a consequence you cause railwaymen to be laid off and the railways to have less revenue and a larger deficit because goods are not being transported by the railway to or from the maritime ports.

I think this last point is more particularly significant inasmuch as we do not have a Canadian merchant marine at the present time. We are therefore left in the position that the money involved in the transporting of goods from central Canada to a point on the ocean equivalent to Halifax or Saint John, and the wages earned by the seamen involved, go outside of the nation and are lost. It goes to foreign owned ships, and the wages go to foreign seamen, whereas if the goods are shipped through Atlantic ports in the wintertime our railways remain more prosperous. This surely is of interest to our nation, and in addition it is Canadians who receive employment.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that at the present time under the Maritimes Freight Rates Act, no subsidies are paid on goods imported or exported through the Atlantic ports. I suggest that we certainly need to undertake a revision of our freight rates structure. If this were done, and if for every dollar spent on icebreaking and allied activities in the St. Lawrence a similar amount were spent by way of subsidies on freight rates, then we would again be in a position to compete. As I have said before, no ship owner in the world will risk a vessel on the St. Lawrence during winter, despite icebreaking activities, if he can ship through the ports of Halifax or Saint John at no extra cost.

Earlier I said that it was part of the agreement under which the maritimes went into confederation that we would have this wintertime business, that we would be the winter ports of Canada. I would remind hon. members on all sides of the house, particularly those from Ontario and Quebec, that when they talk about the spirit of confederation, the undertakings of confederation, they must also remember that the maritimes were given these undertakings.

[Translation]

If Quebec wishes to remain faithful to the spirit of the British North America Act, may I remind that province of the reasons and motives that led the maritimes to enter confederation.

[Text]

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I say that we have not even received the gain in cargo that should have come about as a result of the natural growth in population and the natural growth in commerce. Our package cargo has actually decreased in volume and we have suffered losses in our winter business. They have been made more severe because we have been steadily losing business in the summertime to the St. Lawrence seaway.

I cannot agree that this house should undertake this investigation, because it is being undertaken by the Atlantic development board, the group that can best deal with this matter. Nevertheless I would urge the government to pay strict attention to these investigations and give very serious consideration to a new national freight rate structure. I do not believe this structure should be of the postage stamp type, which would enable anyone to ship commodities from one point in Canada to another at the same charge. However, the system adopted should be a little closer to the postage stamp type of freight toll, and then we in the maritimes would have an opportunity to share in the prosperity of the rest of Canada.

Mr. J. E. Lloyd (Halifax): It was my privilege many years ago, Mr. Speaker, to unite the efforts of the cities of Halifax and Saint John in solving a problem which this house and its ministers had been unable to solve for many years. I refer to the subject of taxation on crown properties. We began with railway properties in Halifax and Saint John, and, following that, we evolved a municipal grants system in Canada.

I am in the fortunate position, Mr. Speaker, of not knowing what happened prior to April 8 and I am not burdened with concern about what I may have said before that date. On the contrary, I am concerned with something of a more vital nature. Until recently I happened to be a member of the port commission of the city of Halifax, while acting also in another official capacity. This brought me into very close touch with the problems of Saint John and Halifax, vis-à-vis the national government and its policies in respect of navigation on the St. Lawrence.

It might be well if I were to recall briefly something of the anatomy of winter navigation which was put together by the port commission some time ago. For many years it was customary for practically all movements on the river to cease some time early in December, until some time about the middle of April. This was known as the closed as opposed to the open season. During the closed season the only exception to the general paralysis seems to have been the cross-river ferries, the flood control operations of the icebreakers working from the Quebec bridge to above Three Rivers, and a small commercial movement from Pointe au Pic where, if the winds were right, there was usually sufficient open water for coasting vessels to serve north shore points to the east which had no other transportation or connection with the outside world.

During this period between December and April the St. Lawrence river, in so far as export and import cargoes were concerned, was closed. Such cargoes between Canada and other countries were loaded and discharged at Halifax or Saint John. It cannot be over-emphasized that it was upon this condition that the major portion of the business of the Atlantic ports was based. Indeed, it was in part on this condition that the arguments for the maritime provinces to enter confederation were based and were accepted, as my colleague so well pointed out a few moments ago. This house frequently hears references to constitutional obligations under confederation. We have our obligations to which we are asking this house, from time to time, to have a sense of responsibility. I would hope that we could all forgo them. We would be willing to forgo them if there were new ways of doing things and better understanding between the peoples of this great nation. When we hear this talk about constitutional rights, we must remind people that we have them too. Indeed, all parts of Canada have them.

We, in the maritimes, believe it is a good thing to look at the problems of the other fellow through his eyes from time to time. We think that this is a practice that might be observed occasionally in this house, and indeed throughout other parts of Canada. It might bear benefits to all the Canadian people. I mentioned earlier the anatomy of shipping policy, but we now find that certain changes have occurred. We find that flood control operations have extended to the lower shore, with its natural resources. We do not criticize that whatever. We see this gradual increase in icebreaking services up the river. We recognize this is a national development; but we also know that none of those costs are being included in the charges against ship users. This is a public service. This is not economically sound.

One result of the increased federal government subsidies and services to open up a new route of transportation has been to destroy our competitive position. We say, therefore, the Canadian government definitely has an obligation to correct this growing imbalance in our competitive position.

I may say, Mr. Speaker, perhaps some people do not realize the extent to which the Atlantic development board has already gone in recognizing the plea for action on this matter.

Mr. Pigeon: Come to our side.

Mr. Lloyd: The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) is making some suggestion, as he has done quite frequently. I would be glad to answer him when the opportunity presents itself, but right now we have more important business to deal with.

Briefly the situation is that you have a conflict of interests in the Atlantic provinces with the sincere and well-motivated interests of the people along the St. Lawrence river, and you can only resolve such a conflict of interests in the light of the most exacting study of the justification of the claims of both. It cannot be resolved by a debate across the floor of the House of Commons.

This problem confronted the former minister of transport in the same way as it now confronts the present minister, and it cannot be solved in any way other than within the principle of a scheme of organization such as that proposed by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell). However, I think it must be recognized that the Atlantic development board now has the staff and skill to do the essential research work that is basic to an intelligent decision regarding the kind of policy that must ensue, and that will work in the mutual interests of both areas.

I understand the board has two gentlemen who are skilled in these fields and who would be able to define the nature and scope of the problem. Having defined the nature and scope of it, the board will then be able to get people together who are not biased in favour of either the Atlantic ports or the St. Lawrence ports, and who will be able to make an objective examination of this critical problem.

To some people, on the face of it winter navigation is sheer economic nonsense. Some have gone so far as to say that; but on the other hand there are those along the St. Lawrence who say the economic development of Canada demands the maximum utilization of this great seaway. We feel, however, that the case has not yet been fully justified by those who support the St. Lawrence development.

I believe that the principle and objectivity sought by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert can be assured by the steps now taken by the Atlantic development board in putting together personnel on a team who will view the problem objectively, report to the minister, and through him to the house. In that way we can achieve a realistic policy that will be in the interests of both areas.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Quebec South): Mr. Speaker, we heard many views exchanged this afternoon on that ever ticklish matter of winter navigation. As far as I am concerned, you know where I stand; I represent the Quebec South riding. You know how much this matter of winter navigation was discussed in Quebec these last few years. This afternoon, I would not want anyone to think that I am speaking in any capacity other than that of hon. member for Quebec South.

Having heard the version given in this house by the hon. members from the maritimes, I think the question should be first considered in its constitutional context and then in its economic aspect.

I think and I agree with my hon. friends that the matter, in its constitutional context, must be discussed with the same objectivity as any other matter concerning the constitution of our country. When we talk about reshaping our constitution, I think we will have to take into consideration the examples given this afternoon.

Now, as far as the economic aspect is concerned, the solution advocated by this government is to charge the new Atlantic economic council with the requested investigation. I think that council will have in its hands all the tools, all the required information and will get in contact with every profession and every person interested in this great problem. I am sure that on the basis of their investigation we can get very happy results.

Of course, at the time the maritimes entered confederation, it must be recognized that we had transportation systems other than those in use today. Transportation is improving every day and we must reconsider our transportation system, not at the expense of some people but to the advantage of all.

In that particular field, I was reading, a few weeks ago, that the United States are presently considering the feasibility of keeping the St. Lawrence seaway open 12 months a year.

If, thanks to modern technology, we find ways and means to improve navigation and expand its volume, I feel that we might then draw the blueprint for a new policy which would not discriminate against anyone, but would be to the general advantage.

Mr. Speaker, I am confident that through an exchange of objective viewpoints, and with the necessary good will on every part, we shall be able to find in this country of ours a place for everyone, and that all Canadians will benefit thereby.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hour appointed for consideration of private members' business has now expired.

[Text]

May I remind hon. members that at eight o'clock we will resume the business interrupted at five o'clock. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

WINNIPEG—TRANSFER OF OVERHAUL AND MAINTENANCE BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Could he tell us whether he knows how much longer we will have to wait for a statement on the retention of the T.C.A. maintenance and overhaul base at Winnipeg?

[Mr. Cantin.]

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand from the statement which was made last week by the Minister of Transport that he will be in a position soon to make the statement that the hon. member desires.

Mr. Knowles: That is what he said last week.

[Later:]

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister of Transport would now answer the question I put to the Acting Prime Minister before the Minister of Transport came in. I asked when we might expect a statement, which for several days now has been promised soon, with regard to the retention of the T.C.A. maintenance and overhaul base at Winnipeg.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing I can add to my answer of Friday last.

OLD AGE ASSISTANCE

INQUIRY AS TO INCREASE IN TAXATION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Could the hon. lady tell the house whether it is absolutely necessary to take money away from some people by means of a tax increase in order to provide better living conditions for the aged, that is to give them $10 more a month?

[Text]

NATIONAL MUSEUM

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON REPORTED RESIGNATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister responsible for the national museum whether he would consider informing the house in the next day or two of the situation regarding the resignations at the museum, or the rumours of resignations, and giving some explanation as to what may be involved in the matter.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Yes, Your Honour, I would be glad to make a statement in the course of the next several days. There have been a number of resignations, which I regret as much as, I am sure, my hon. friend does. I hope to be able to make a statement in a few days.

TRADE

INQUIRY AS TO MEASURES TO REDUCE DEFICIT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre-Andre Boutin (Dorchester): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Has the minister succeeded in convincing the automobile industry, which is under American control, to undertake a vast development program in Canada as he stated he would do at the close of the meeting of the international monetary fund? If not, what other steps are being considered by the government to reduce our trade deficit?

[Text]

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the government's policies in this and other matters will be announced in due course. I am afraid this is not the time to do it.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

TORONTO—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question of which I have given notice is addressed to the Minister of Labour. In view of the urgent representations made by the board of control of the city of Toronto, has the minister given consideration to extending the period of the winter works program by commencing it on October 15 and concluding it at the end of May, as requested by the board of control of Toronto?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for giving me notice of this question. I would like to take some further notice before answering it.

HOUSING

FRASERVIEW PROJECT, VANCOUVER—REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF ADMINISTRATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Webster (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. Has the minister received a brief from the Fraserview veterans home owners and tenants association requesting a review of the administration of the Fraserview housing project in Vancouver? If so, what action is contemplated?

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. In April of this year Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation received a brief from a committee of purchasers of veterans homes in the Fraserview subdivision. The petition recommended that the market values of houses be reexamined to determine whether any of the houses were overpriced in relation to the current market; that the $1,000 rebate arrangement be removed and that all possible steps be taken to change the project from a rental project to home ownership. The corporation immediately caused a study to be made. Based on this study the corporation recommended, and I agreed, that:

(a) The $1,000 rebate arrangement be cancelled.

(b) The net sale price of 137 unsold basementless houses be reduced by a further $600.

(c) That monthly rentals be increased from $3.50 to $11 per unit per month to eliminate the existing operating deficit only. On August 27 the proposed rental increases were deferred as a result of a telegram received from a newly formed Fraserview veterans ratepayers and tenants association. The matter is being further studied and a decision on the rentals will be made shortly.

INQUIRY AS TO RESEARCH GRANT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Since the government agreed to pay a $78,000 grant to the Canadian council on housing research and community planning, under the National Housing Act, did it reserve the right to check on the manner in which this amount is or will be spent?

[Text]

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

FINANCE

REPORTED U.S. ACQUISITION OF CANADIAN BANK STOCK

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Finance. What action does the Minister of Finance intend to take in order to prevent further attempts by American interests to control Canadian business, more particularly following the recent take-over of the Mercantile Bank of Canada by the Rockefeller interests?

[Text]

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as far as I know there is no law which prevents anybody from acquiring the shares of any bank in Canada. In fact I can say there is no such law. Until the Bank Act comes up for revision I think it would be unwise to speculate further about this subject.

UNITED NATIONS

SOUTH VIET NAM—CANADIAN POSITION ON HUMAN RIGHTS RESOLUTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that a resolution was introduced in the United Nations today by Ceylon on behalf of 16 African, Asian and Latin American delegations charging that human rights are being violated in South Viet Nam, would the minister inform the house whether Canada intends to support this resolution and express its opposition to the policy of oppression and torture of Buddhists and others by the government of Viet Nam?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that no one in this country will support any policy of oppression against any religious group. To the extent that this problem is one within the jurisdiction of any individual country, my hon. friend may be sure that Canada will assert its position as it should in the light of any obligations it has as a member of the United Nations.

This resolution is being studied at the present time in accord with the assessment that is being made by the representative of Canada in Viet Nam. Canada is a member of the international supervisory commission in Viet Nam, and is expected to maintain a rather objective position in the interests of Viet Nam itself. With this consideration in mind, however, we are giving the resolution in question the most careful examination.

Mr. Herridge: All I wanted to know was whether Canada intended to support the resolution.

INDUSTRY

NOVA SCOTIA—ESTABLISHMENT OF HEAVY WATER PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, in view of only having returned from Nova Scotia some two hours ago I would like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the information circulating in Nova Scotia is correct, to the effect that the government has agreed that there shall be established a heavy water installation in Cape Breton on a five year guarantee of the sale of its product.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that the information that the hon. member has is not factual. The matter is under consideration.

PUBLIC WORKS

GASPE—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. During a recent trip the minister made in the Gaspe peninsula, he spoke of huge public works projects undertaken or to be undertaken by the federal government to further the development of that area. Could the minister inform the house of the projects he has in mind to help regions now in a state of stagnation, particularly the Lake St. John area?

Hon. Jean Paul Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of my visit to the lower St. Lawrence valley and the Gaspe peninsula was precisely to get first hand information about the problems there. I can assure my hon. friend that, on my return, I told my colleagues about those problems. We have several projects but, as they are government projects, they will be announced in due course.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

OTTAWA-MONTREAL—LACK OF BILINGUAL PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Following a trip between Ottawa and Montreal, on the Canadian National Railways, with the hon. member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine and the hon. member for Richmond, we found that the train crew could not speak French, and that on the Ottawa-Montreal run. Can the Minister of Transport tell us if the president of the C.N.R. has really undertaken to improve bilingualism aboard C.N.R. trains?

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

CARIBOU AIRCRAFT—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON U.S. PURCHASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production. Does he intend to make any representations to the United States government concerning the apparent decision of that government not to buy any more Caribou aircraft from Canada?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, the events of the past couple of days in Washington have in fact resulted in a decision by the congress of the United States to reduce the appropriations for the coming year for the United States army. While this reduction has been directly related by certain members of the United States press to a reduction in orders for Canadian aircraft, in fact such a direct relationship is not the case. My department has been in continuous communication with the U.S. defence department to do what it can to ensure that the orders already placed are not cancelled.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

VAL D'OR, QUE.—REPORTED CONSTRUCTION OF NUCLEAR STORAGE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Would the minister confirm to the house the announcement made recently to the effect that a nuclear heads depot would be built in the city of Val d'Or, in the riding of Villeneuve?

[Text]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the question is on the order paper.

REQUEST FOR APPEARANCE OF MINISTER BEFORE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister and of the Secretary of State for External Affairs I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the speech made by the Prime Minister at the United Nations and in view of certain declarations made by himself, would the Minister of National Defence now be prepared to appear before the defence committee of this House of Commons to relate these various speeches and outline how the committee can function in respect thereto?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): As I indicated to the house on a previous occasion, I am prepared to appear as a witness before that committee at any time the committee deems it would be helpful.

Inquiries of the Ministry

LABOUR RELATIONS

GREAT LAKES—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON UNION POSITION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre-Andre Boutin (Dorchester): Mr. Speaker, I would have liked to put a question to the Prime Minister, but in his absence, may I direct my question to the Minister of Justice. Could the minister bring the house up to date on the latest development between the unions in the great lakes labour dispute? If not, when will a report be forthcoming?

HOUSE OF COMMONS

EXPENSE ALLOWANCES OF MEMBERS AND SENATORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I asked the Minister of Finance a question on October 3 in regard to whether parliamentary expense allowances were being paid both in the other place and in this house according to the law, and he promised me an answer as soon as he had the information.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to my hon. friend for raising this interesting point. I should explain that under the recent amendment the expense allowances are paid quarterly, whereas previously they were paid on an annual basis. In connection with the Senate allowances, the chief treasury officer, after consultation with the Clerk of the Senate and on his advice, was of the opinion that the recent amendment permitted the payment of the residual portion of the smaller allowance of $2,000 per annum which applied from January 1 to April 7 to be paid on September 30; that is, at the end of the quarter. The chief treasury officer for the House of Commons, on the other hand, was of the opinion that the amendment to the Senate and House of Commons Act did not affect the operation of the former provision in so far as the period from January 1 to April 7 was concerned. He accordingly declined to make payment of the allowances for that period before the end of the year.

Section 31(6) of the Financial Administration Act provides that where the comptroller is of the opinion that a doubt exists as to the legality or otherwise of a proposed charge to an appropriation provided for the expenses of the Senate or the House of Commons, he shall report through the Minister of Finance to the appropriate minister, who shall obtain a decision in accordance with such procedure as may from time to time be prescribed. It is my understanding that this would be the internal economy committees of the respective chambers.

As there is in the opinion of the comptroller a doubt existing as to whether these allowances may or may not be paid at the present time for the period January 1 to April 7, this matter is being drawn to the attention of the Speakers of the House of Commons and of the Senate. I have written to them and suggested that they get together and obtain legal advice, and perhaps we may straighten out the point which the hon. member was so kind as to bring to my attention.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $747,449,955.03, being the aggregate of—

(a) two twelfths of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1964, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, except fisheries item 45, northern affairs and national resources item 10 and public works items 20 and 190 for which the proportion is one twelfth and except atomic energy item 5, external affairs item 107 and loans, investments and advances item L20 for which no proportion is requested, $640,449,276.00;

(b) an additional three twelfths of the amount of transport item 35, $820,000.00;

(c) an additional two twelfths of the amount of agriculture item 50, $178,833.34;

(d) an additional one twelfth of the amounts of agriculture items 25, 100 and 145, citizenship and immigration item 30, transport item 10, of the said estimates, $3,583,608.34;

(e) two twelfths of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the supplementary estimates (A) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1964, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, except external affairs item 96a, finance item 5a, northern affairs and national resources item 110a, and loans, investments and advances items L13a and L63a, $48,103,070.00;

(f) an additional three twelfths of the amount of external affairs item 117a, $84,240.00;

(g) an additional two twelfths of the amount of external affairs item 116a, $230,800.00;

(h) two twelfths of the amount of the item set forth in the supplementary estimates (B) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1964, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, $1,166,666.67;

(i) two twelfths of the amount of the item set forth in the supplementary estimates (C) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1964, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, $3,333,333.34;

(j) eight twelfths of the amounts of the items set forth in the supplementary estimates (D) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1964, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, $49,444,457.34;

(k) an additional three twelfths of the amount of external affairs item 117d, $5,670.00;

be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending March 31, 1964.

[Mr. Gordon.]

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, since the committee on privileges and elections is supposed to sit tonight, I do not intend to speak at great length on interim supply.

If I take part in the debate tonight, it is not because we merely want to kill time, as was suggested these last few days. Such is not the case at all. I have some facts to bring to the attention of the house which mainly concern my riding, and I take the opportunity of this interim supply motion to point out to the house some of the facts that clearly show to what extent the present administration and the previous one have placed the country in an untenable position. Besides, the present government is aware of it now. As a matter of fact, one realizes it readily to see the government act.

Even though Canada is a very rich country with a very high production and producing capacity, our people have great needs, as evidenced by the large number of depressed areas, such as my own riding of Abitibi in northwestern Quebec.

[Text]

The Chairman: Order. May I suggest to hon. members that their conversations in the house make it extremely difficult for other members, including the chairman, to follow the speech now being made by the hon. member for Chapleau?

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The government is slow in answering the plea of the people for the right to benefit from the wealth which now exists. That only goes to show that the Liberal party was not ready to take over last April. Ready to levy taxes, yes, but not to administer the country.

Tax increases lead us to believe that the government is concerned about the annual deficits which are reaching astronomical proportions, and the people of this country as well as its business and industrial leaders are also worried about them.

The government is aware of present needs, but its actions are paralysed by a lack of funds. Taxes do not bring in enough money to balance the budget, and the government knows how unpopular taxes are. That is surely why the government and especially the Department of National Revenue, since last spring in particular, have been constantly pestering the taxpayers in my riding.

As a matter of fact, since last spring, income tax inspectors from the Rouyn district office have not stopped making cuts on the receipts for charitable donations contained in the income tax returns of certain people. I say certain people because there is apparently some discrimination in some working-class areas of my constituency.

Indeed, while in some cases receipts for charitable donations are being cut from $372 to $150 without reason, letters are written to the Rouyn office, information is sought to find out where, when and how the investigations were made. And in this regard, last June 5, I received the following reply from the office of the director of income tax:

> We can assure you that we have not reduced the amounts specified for charitable donations without prior investigation.

I asked again where and when those investigations had been made and by whom. Here is the reply I got on August 27, 1963, from the chief assessment officer in the district income tax office:

> We draw your attention to the fact that in the case under consideration, under section 133 (1) of the Income Tax Act, the employees of the division are not authorized to give information to a third party.

Mr. Chairman, that third party was the member for Chapleau who wanted to know where and when the investigations mentioned had been made, and it seems there is no way of finding that out, but it still holds true just the same that some workers, some miners see their receipts for charitable donations cut while other miners, other workers, who have practically the same revenue, the same salary and the same dependants, see their income tax return and their receipts for charitable donations accepted in full.

Consequently, it makes one wonder if there is not some kind of patronage granted to some taxpayers, and people are wondering in my riding if that is not a kind of punishment for some.

Mr. Chairman, I protest against the action taken by inspectors of the income tax office in Rouyn and I ask the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Garland) to put a stop to that situation and to find, with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon), another way to finance government operations. I urge him to study carefully the suggestions made by the Social Credit party and to give back to the Bank of Canada the role it must play in our country's economy. Mr. Chairman, I want to talk about another matter in this chamber, that is television.

National radio and television is not available in all parts of my riding. I know that Chapleau is a sprawling riding, but I am also aware that it is relatively easy to bring radio and television services everywhere. I do not think that there is some insurmountable physical obstacle. In fact, private industry has managed to make television broadcasts available in the towns of Chibougamau and Chapais but at an exorbitant cost. Consequently, physical obstacles are not insurmountable since private industry did it. Thus it is only a matter of financial limitations which prevent the broadcasting of radio and television programs.

In this regard, I should like to refer to a case which is typical of the mining area of Chibougamau and Chapais, where some 2,000 families must pay $200 for the television cable and $6 a month payable a year in advance, that is a total sum of $272 before enjoying T.V. services that the majority of Canadians in other sections of the country enjoy free of charge. And yet the miners from Chibougamau and Chapais pay taxes and they may be the highest per capita in the country.

The Minister of Finance should make available to C.B.C. a larger budget so that it may satisfy the wishes of the citizens from those communities, such as Parent and Clova, which are scattered along the C.N.R. tracks or, in the meantime, he should grant the corporation some funds so that the rental of the television cable may be reduced and the poor as well as the rich in the towns of Chibougamau and Chapais may enjoy television broadcasts.

At the present time, the mining area of Chibougamau and Chapais is served for television purposes through Saguenay-Lake St. John. And yet, this mining area is actually in the political riding of Chapleau. I am of the opinion that it is irregular to give television service through an area not politically connected with the area to be served. The same thing was done for the railway service. A railroad was started in direction of the Lake St. John area.

Again, when time came to build a road for cars and trucks, a dirt road, the same thing was done; the Saguenay-Lake St. John was the first to be served.

Mr. Chairman, please note that I am not at all jealous of the fact that the Saguenay-Lake St. John was the first to be connected to this mining area, but I find it quite strange that, in order to develop an area, the first thing done is to provide exits to another area.

Consequently, I urge the C.B.C. to take immediately the necessary steps to give the citizens of Chibougamau and Chapais radio and television services at a price comparable to other parts of the country.

Mr. Chairman, people complain about unemployment which has been prevailing for a long time in our area and which not only reduces and cripples trade and industry but also brings about undeserved poverty and concern in many families thereby affected.

And yet, those numerous families suffer from privation, not because we lack things in this country, but rather because they need things that exist. And if those needs are not satisfied, it is rather due to the fact that they lack purchasing power.

Mr. Chairman, when we see the advertising which is done now to sell things, to sell goods produced by Canadians, we may ask why, in a country known as the richest in the world, it is still necessary to collect old clothes to dress poor children who want to go to school in some areas called "underdeveloped" or "emergency areas".

And concerning that matter, I want to speak about Chapleau county, in Abitibi, which is designated as such an area at the present time, amid plenty and surpluses. In fact, people there are still in that condition where they have to collect old clothes to enable children to attend school, in order to take advantage of the opportunity to get an education which they need.

Mr. Chairman, in order to enable those citizens to get the things offered to them in quantity in all ways, and in quality, the government should use the Bank of Canada to coin production and services offered in surpluses, and distribute them, in the form of dividends, to all Canadian citizens, because everyone, in one way or another, has taken part in the production of goods and services in this country.

Mr. Chairman, the Canadian government should not be so mean when it comes to paying a retirement pension to our senior citizens, and I am of the opinion that the present retirement pension should begin immediately at 65 years, without any test, and at 60 for people without any resources.

Mr. Chairman, I cannot see why those in need would not be able to benefit from the production and resources of this country without taking anything away from the people who work, or depriving others from part of their income.

Mr. Chairman, I maintain that old age pensions, retirement pensions, old age assistance pensions, pensions for the blind or the disabled, family allowances, and all similar social welfare measures, should be financed by the Bank of Canada. The necessary funds could be drawn from the production surplus we accumulate year after year, that is, the unsold surpluses.

We must allow the Bank of Canada to play the part it was created to play, and it behooves the government to instruct it to play that part.

Mr. Dionne: To date, Mr. Chairman, my interventions in the discussion never contributed at all to any inconvenience for the Chair and, therefore, I can sum up my remarks in compliance with the traditional procedures.

[Mr. Laprise.]

Congratulations to those who carry out those functions; they do it in all fairness and with a sense of responsibility which is all to their credit.

Mr. Chairman, as a representative for a riding which made a tremendous contribution to the development of several neighbouring areas through many sacrifices, during a few centuries of history, I should like to take this opportunity now offered to me to call the attention of the house to the need to adopt an attitude more consistent with the needs and the purposes of the people in our region and of all Canadians in general who showed, by their labour and their sense of sacrifice that the sources of courage, of good will and of generous dispositions are far from exhausted so long as they are given a chance through legislation which allows for a reasonable proportion of economic realities.

All Canadians still wish to participate in the development of their country. To be effective, that participation must involve the essential elements of security and of proper freedom for one and all.

The implementation, as soon as possible, of appropriate public works in order to alleviate unemployment in our region is absolutely necessary and would be greatly appreciated. The decisions taken by the government to designate the so-called distressed areas will have to be altered to take into account the needs of our region.

During the month of September, in the course of a regular meeting of the municipal corporation of Kamouraska county, in which nearly all the mayors of the municipalities in the county took part, a resolution was passed and a copy thereof was forwarded to the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) and his colleague, the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen), asking them to include the county of Kamouraska in the list of those which can benefit from a federal grant for unemployment works and from a tax cut for industries wishing to settle in the county.

During the last week of the month of September, the members of the chamber of commerce of St. Pascal, Kamouraska county, of which I am a member, also adopted a similar resolution. I hope the ministers will take those requests into consideration and that appropriate decisions will be taken so that the county of Kamouraska will get from this government the share of benefits it can rightfully expect.

Quite a number of these plans could be carried into effect without delay; some studies have been completed, various programs have been referred to the authorities several years ago, but their implementation often seems to be paralysed through a lack of agreement and co-operation between the central and provincial governments.

We hope that the necessary decisions will be arrived at as soon as possible by the responsible authorities, for in Kamouraska and elsewhere, people have had enough of all these discussions and, quite naturally, expect action.

The same thing applies to the implementation of the ARDA program, and to the generous distribution of subsidies to farmers. It is true that Kamouraska county is not included among the depressed areas, but let us not forget that due to the prevailing economic conditions more than 30 per cent of our citizens depend on social welfare services for their livelihood.

The constant worry created by a financial system which functions contrary to present economic realities has led us to a way of life which is truly upside-down.

Too many are those who are attracted by the moon while entire families still have to go without the necessities of life. We no longer have enough room in our jails for criminals, most of whom have taken to that kind of life because of a lack of guidance. Not only is society responsible for that state of affairs but it must take the necessary steps as soon as possible to correct a situation it contributed to create.

It is a shame that in a country as young as ours, the need for policemen is such that the taxpayers' money has to be used to secure enough candidates to fill the vacancies. We all know that police duty involves great responsibilities. It is most unfortunate that many policemen fall in line of duty.

I do not hesitate to say that unemployment and the demoralizing insecurity which have been prevailing for too long are greatly responsible for what is happening.

Has a second thought been given to the feeling of fathers who can barely make both ends meet with incomes of $1,000, $1,500 or $2,000 a year, to the feelings of those who, in their sickness, must accept the restrictions imposed by social service officials regarding their own subsistence and that of their families, and even worse, to the feelings of the unemployed? There are thousands of them, as everybody knows, who live in constant fear.

What was their reaction when they saw that legislators were looking after their own interests instead of settling urgent problems such as unemployment, family allowance increases, boosts in old age pensions and in pensions to veterans who, more than any others, have given their all for the survival of democracy, for which their countrymen should have been ever grateful. I could continue enumerating quite a number of undeserved cases of destitution. Have we considered those unsettled cases before granting ourselves an increase of indemnities?

It is unfortunate, but such actions contribute to increase dissatisfaction among the people. Canadian citizens are always ready to pay their administrators handsomely, as long as they do not forget to give them in the first place the necessary means to earn a decent living.

Let us compare the imbalance between the increasing rise of salaries of the average Canadian heads of families and the unchanged rates of family allowances.

Allow me to point out, by the way, that the cost of living for all Canadian families is increasing. Nevertheless, family allowances which were established in 1944 at $5, $6, $7 and $8 per month were only increased once, such an increase averaging about 35 cents, to the minimum being raised to $6 up to 10 years of age and $8 from 10 to 16 years of age, while the maximum of $8 was never altered.

During the same period the salaries of members of parliament have passed from $4,000 in 1944 to $6,000 in 1945, and from $10,000 in 1954 to $18,000 in 1963. From $4,000 to $18,000, which means four and a half times what they were in 1944. By adjusting family allowances on the same basis, we would reach an average of $30 a month.

If hon. ministers and members had been consistent they would be ashamed of having adjourned the session and taken holidays before raising the present level of family allowances. It is yet time to make a gesture to that effect, and it is clear that the increase in the cost of living calls for such an adjustment.

And what about those irregularities with regard to pension adjustments for veterans, considering that, after five or six years of war those ailments from which the veterans are suffering today are certainly, to a great extent, due to their military service for Canada. There are some revolting cases of discrimination with regard to some veterans who have given the best of themselves to ensure what little freedom Canadians still have today.

Now what about the problems of Canadian workers on American territory who have been waiting for 20 years for a settlement enabling them to benefit from unemployment insurance payments? What about all those railway maintenance workers, more particularly on temporary teams, where salary increases are in a proportion of 1, 2, and 3 cents an hour, considering that they have to use bunk beds to rest after a ten-hour working day. Labour unions succeeded, as we know, after ten years of negotiations and pressure in having legislation passed by the Quebec government prohibiting the use of bunk beds for bush workers. Now, how does it happen that a corporation like the Canadian National Railways, whose president is paid $75,000 a year and certainly has all the comfort he needs, did not think of a better distribution of salaries for the working teams, granting them a little more comfort with regard to living conditions and housing.

There is blatant discrimination with regard to temporary team employees, those who are only entitled to one day's holiday a month, which is paid on an eight-hour day basis, whereas they are regularly working on a ten-hour day basis.

All those errors accrued in various quarters and administrative services, are not likely to create an atmosphere of good will and understanding among our people.

Exaggerated expenses of all sorts, in anticipation of so-called defence schemes, are not likely to give Canadian citizens a feeling of security.

Sometimes, you get the feeling that the next war will be caused by the disarmament question.

It is, nevertheless, odd to see the friendliness between Canadian and American leaders when it comes to agreeing on such programs, whereas it seems impossible to solve the problem of having Canadian workers on American territory share in the benefits of the Unemployment Insurance Act.

One more word about the budget. Why, there again, does the government not pay greater attention to the thousands of letters and claims dealing with the 11 per cent tax on building materials, which affects so many people? The workers, builders and saw-mill owners have all been upset by the contents of the last budget and protest has been raised everywhere in order to convince the Minister of Finance of the extent to which the building industry in all fields will be affected. The remedies brought in afterwards, at the beginning of July, are, to our mind, quite inadequate and leave the working class, and mainly the workers in the building trade and lumber industry who are still so cruelly suffering from unemployment, with the added burden of a tax which we find not only unjustified but impossible to justify.

It would be worthwhile, I believe, if all the solution seekers looked seriously beyond the ordinary economic routines and outside the beaten track, because wherever we look at present all the citizens admit that a monetary system, whichever it may be, must be guided by a bookkeeping system. Everybody will agree that the first quality of a bookkeeping system should be accuracy; the solution of any problem, to be correct, must demonstrate that the computation has been properly done.

If we consider the results of the present monetary system, we find easily that the volume of credit put into circulation under the form of numbers is not at all in keeping with the goods for sale or, if you prefer, is not at all proportional to the production to be disposed of.

The main source of worry for Canadians is the fact that we pay more attention to the "symbol" than to "reality": yet, the human being is more important than the dollar sign.

We are able to produce too much, but unable to allocate sufficiently.

Good sense should lead our legislators to admit, not only in principle but also in practice, the fact that what is physically possible must be possible financially, that it is possible to adapt our bookkeeping system to the needs and wants.

It is necessary that we should get used to thinking in terms of thousands of useful things instead of thinking in terms of millions of dollars.

Whatever is said about it, I declare that the present system is unable to cope with the burden which is imposed on it, that it is imperative that other means, another economic and financial system be devised.

In my opinion, the duty which devolves upon us at the present time is to work out for Canada of tomorrow a system capable of ensuring a standard of justice according to which the interests of human beings may have precedence over financial interests.

We know that consumption is the object of production. That it would be useless to make shoes if people were not to wear them. That houses have no value whatsoever unless people live in them. That food will perish unless it is consumed.

We also know that all these things can be produced in unlimited quantities. Nevertheless, it seems that our legislators, for this or that reason, do not believe that man can have them.

Imaginary obstacles bar their way: they are remains of the periods of scarcity when it was claimed that there was "no money". We keep up with the times as far as knowledge is concerned, but our beliefs belong to the past. Thus, we go from bad to worse like a boat equipped with a powerful motor that flounders on reefs because its pilot has no faith in the compass.

Now we benefit from the results of thousands of years of learning, discoveries and inventions, but we lack self-confidence to put them to use.

Lack of confidence paralyses our action, and instead of using our plentiful resources, we always have shortages. Any progress, scientific discovery and invention originate in the human mind.

It is first an idea and then it becomes an actual fact when man is convinced that its realization is possible and that he is capable of bringing it into being.

America would never have been discovered if Christopher Columbus had not thought it possible to reach land by sailing westward.

Lindbergh would not have succeeded in crossing the ocean if he had lacked self-confidence.

It is not fear that has prompted our missionary settlers to venture into remote countries and the coureurs des bois to explore the far reaches of the forest.

Many thinkers and inventors were ridiculed by the so-called scholars of their times. However, Pasteur was acknowledged as a benefactor of humanity and everybody realized with Galileo that the earth revolves around the sun.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I will be short because I know that you do not want to spend the night here. The Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) expressed good intentions this afternoon and we congratulate him for that.

However, I would like to point out two or three developments in my constituency.

If we seem to be the only ones to take the floor in this house, it may be because events force us to do so. We are the last ones to have the floor. We have the last rank and we are the last to express our views. I regret that my party seems to be lagging behind the others, but I have every confidence that the Secretary of State will remedy that within an hour or two.

We are asked to vote money to enable the government to make the necessary expenditures for its good or bad administration, for the implementation of the good and the mediocre legislation.

If you bear with me, I will examine some of that legislation. For instance, let us talk about the unemployment insurance and the winter works program. The Unemployment Insurance Act is certainly not perfect since the government has deemed it appropriate to launch an investigation on the subject. The unemployed will wait a long time for this report to be considered before recommendations are implemented. The unemployed will wait with anxiety for the amendments to the act.

Mr. Chairman, I very much fear that the inquiry commission on unemployment will not be any more fruitful than the commissions created up to date. It will be a good opportunity for the party in office to give new life to its defeated candidates or to reward those who worked hard in the last election.

I was told that the commissioners are getting a mere $100 per day. It is obvious that with such a low salary the investigation will be twice as long, because the important part is not the investigation itself, but the volume a few hundred pages thick, it will produce or some millions of dollars it will cost the taxpayers.

However, this is advantageous in many ways for the government. First, it gags the member who is accused of being the cause of the undue delay in the said investigation because of his claims. Then, it is the best escape for the cabinet. As a matter of fact, all through this investigation, the minister only has to answer that it is under way and if questions are increasing, the reply will be that the investigation is continuing. If the questions become persistent, the minister himself will remind us that the important investigators are putting the final touches to their document.

And when the investigation is over and the report is published, a process of two or three years, then the government will at last —unless there is an election—start considering the report, which will last a long time. If an election is brought about by the intolerable inactivity of the government, the winning side will wonder whether the report is not obsolete or—what is more usual—it will be said that the report was badly prepared, since anything the previous administration did could only be bad.

I have no doubt that this is the fate that will befall the Gill report. The investigation cost thousands of dollars. No matter, the people are paying. And the same game continues and the people keep hoping for better days.

I want to take this opportunity, Mr. Chairman, to show the house the serious specific needs of my constituency of Roberval.

In my riding, strange things are happening and I would like the government to seriously investigate in order to find ways to stop some of them. The federal civil service will be the screen used to cover up some appointments, but everybody sees through that kind of thing. The manager was appointed judge in all cases that can be easily rejected at the local office; if there are any complications, they go to arbitration and the joke is all the better.

The insured is told that his case has been submitted to the head office in Montreal. I wonder what poor little employees in Montreal, who know nothing beyond the ground floor of the tax office could possibly know about the situation of an unemployed worker in Dolbeau or St. Felicien.

Mind you, I have nothing against the employees, because they are the helpless victims of the legislation itself which is simply ridiculous. Millions of dollars have been spent, I know, for the production of a report on unemployment insurance. But I am still wondering if that inquiry has not been used, as many others, to reward those who have served the party well, especially when we know that the staff of all those agencies is made up of people who helped the party.

We are still waiting for the members to study at least the Gill report in the house. Meanwhile, the unemployed are waiting in vain for justice to be done.

To give you just an idea of the unforgivable injustice done in our areas, I shall only refer to some cases about loggers.

The main industry in my riding is the forest industry. The workers leave in the fall to come back only in February. When the work is done, each man goes to the unemployment insurance office. And there the clerk, a little sulky, glances at the book. He asks himself two questions. Are there enough stamps? If not, it is simple, the clerk says "You may go, you do not have enough stamps" without any further explanation.

On the other hand, if there are enough stamps, it is a different story. The worker will be sent where no worker could go, for instance, to cut wood for a small contractor who never pays his men. And if he should refuse, this is a sufficient reason to cut off his benefits.

Another time a farmer comes during winter to get his benefits at the unemployment insurance office. He leaves his home in the morning and travels through a snow storm for about two, three or four miles; he gets stuck in a snow bank and arrives fifteen minutes late at the unemployment insurance office. What happens then? The clerk deducts five or ten dollars, depending on how long he was stranded in the snow bank. One must not come two or three minutes late to the unemployment insurance office. You must understand that those clerks are very punctilious. Mr. Chairman, I assure you that I am aware of cases similar to those I have just mentioned.

For instance, the head of a family comes to the unemployment insurance office and is refused his benefits, although his booklet is full of stamps. That man was sent to log where he could not earn only a dollar a day, just to deprive him of his benefits. For three months he did not get a penny from an insurance he had paid for himself; and mind you, when one pays for insurance, one must get coverage.

In fact, suppose you hold fire insurance and your house burns down. If you do not get your money from the insurance company, you will get a lawyer to settle your claim.

But it is not the same with unemployment insurance. A worker goes into the bush and he is not asked if he wants to contribute or not; the unemployment insurance premium is simply deducted from his pay cheque. And when the time comes to draw benefits, when he is unemployed, he is told: You are not entitled to draw benefits. We had the right to have you pay premiums for one, two, three or four months but you do not have the right to draw unemployment insurance benefits.

Mr. Chairman, last spring, following a small investigation, I found that more than 25 per cent of the heads of families in my area—I know my area is somewhat unusual —were entitled to unemployment insurance benefits. But it had been decided to eliminate by all possible means their benefits; and then they went back home with their four, five or six children, and for two or three months they received nothing except public charity to support their families.

Mr. Chairman, that is the reason why I should like to draw the minister's attention to those cases of hardship in order that his high officials make inquiries in our offices. It is not because we are somewhat far away, almost at the other end of the province, that insurance of people who paid for it should be stolen.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that those remarks will be taken into consideration by the minister.

Mr. Chairman, the other point to which I want to draw the government's attention concerns the areas designated as "depressed areas". All hon. members and the people wonder why 35 areas were designated as entitled to special federal assistance measures to promote economic and industrial development, because of their high rate of unemployment and slow economic progress. And they answer us that the choice was made by the area development and the assistance to economic development agencies.

I am convinced that hon. members would be very happy to fathom that mystery if the Ministers of Labour and Industry (Mr. MacEachen and Mr. Drury) would send them a list of the responsible people to every member.

Although we do not know more than any other citizen, if we look carefully at some of the other areas, we soon realize that many of the forgotten areas are much more in need than the others.

As far as I am concerned, I am very glad the Dolbeau district and few other ones have been included in the areas designated by the government.

However, if a survey were made in the district of Roberval, especially at the far end of my riding, namely St. Felicien, La Dore, St. Edwige, as far as Bouchette lake, we would be forced to conclude to the similarity between the two areas that make up the riding of Roberval.

The minister stated that the criteria used for the choice of the areas are established on employment and unemployment statistics taken during summer months instead of using the yearly average, to avoid giving too much importance to winter unemployment in areas where the problem is seasonal. In fact, the statistics have been based during the last eight years on the period between May and October, without taking into account considerations of time and place for each of these areas.

It seems that the board did not stop to consider that the Gaspe peninsula could not be compared to the Lake St. John area, and, moreover that they could not be compared for a given period of the year. Board officials have forgotten that the distance between Quebec and Ontario can have great influence on such a survey.

It seems that discussions are always held around a conference table where decisions are taken. As in most fields, it is assumed that four eggs give four chickens, and eight eggs, eight chickens, and nobody enquires about whether or not all conditions are fulfilled.

Every year, the Department of Labour intends to make a survey of all the areas, but always under the same conditions, the same causes unavoidably producing the same effects.

Mr. Chairman, are you not of the opinion that better results would have been achieved if they had ever dared to consult the members in each riding?

If the hon. members were asked to make a survey with the help of each organization in their ridings and then report to the Department of Labour, it would be much more logical and useful. We still have to cope with bureaucratic action in its simplest form, a disease affecting modern society. It is also the screen behind which hide the little dictators of various parties whose mission in life is to keep honest workers, the hon. members, from fulfilling faithfully the functions for which they were selected by the people.

Half of the areas in my riding were declared depressed areas and therefore entitled to a 60 per cent federal grant for winter works, in addition to the benefits provided for new industries.

I am quite happy to see the Dolbeau area included in the regions designated by the government.

But I am very much surprised that the other part of my riding is excluded or forgotten.

A strange thing is the fact that at St. Felicien, for instance, where the river divides that economic area in two, one side of the river is designated as a depressed area while the other side is not. I am therefore asking the Department of Labour to see about correcting that anomaly immediately.

And more specifically in the case of St. Felicien, the matter is urgent because they are developing the river bank into a wonderful driveway which will be the pride of the town and will give work to the unemployed.

We are told that the department based their decision on the statistics issued by the unemployment insurance office. As regards the Roberval office, I cannot understand the conclusions of its report. Indeed, there is only one community where the population has decreased in my riding and that is in the Roberval district. I find the same error in that part of my riding as the one made in the Gaspe peninsula ridings, for instance.

The department has corrected the situation in the Gaspe region and I am sure they will show the same fair play in the Roberval riding.

It is hard to say what winter will be like in my constituency since the largest lumber corporations plan to close down their operations around the end of January. That is to say that winter works granted to 60 per cent of my riding will prove to be a necessity for the months to come. And as evidence, Mr. Speaker, I have here a resolution by the municipal council of Roberval asking the minister to come to their help.

I sent a copy of that resolution to the Minister of Labour and I hope he can act in time because there are only about ten days left to place the necessary requests and obtain approvals in time.

In the name of all my fellow citizens of the Roberval riding, I am asking the government to revise the case of the Roberval office so that the whole riding be declared a depressed area and be entitled to the benefits provided under the act. The minister is surely aware of the situation after all the telephone calls made and all the letters sent by the authorities in my riding.

We are craving for one thing, a little work for our unemployed this winter. I am sure the Minister of Labour will find a solution to that problem immediately and take into serious consideration the suggestions contained in the resolution of the St. Felicien council.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the members who sit immediately next to us who seem for the time being to be both without a name and a purpose. It would appear, on the surface in any event, that the debate in which they are engaging this evening is a gross abuse and misuse of the interim supply procedure to attain some sort of end which is not yet clear. In any event, I think it is a misuse of this particular procedure to obtain interim supply for Her Majesty.

As far as the name is concerned I think we might, while sitting here, properly refer to them in English. I do not know how this would be translated into French, but in English it would, perhaps, be the national union of 13 separatists. You will immediately see, Mr. Chairman, that with the propensity of the newspapers to condense almost everything to some alphabetical nomenclature, taking the first letters of the national union of 13 separatists, it comes out to "nuts".

Mr. Langlois: We are happy to find that there are some who are capable of recognizing nuts when they see some. These animals can be recognized when they are out in the fields; we must be careful, or we are liable to be collected by them.

I do not intend to speak for very long, but before trying to get order anywhere else I believe it is time to establish some order here. It is the business of the government to see to it that justice is done, one way or another. It is up to the government to make its own decisions, not to depend on anybody else or to hope that a decision will come out of the blue. I hope a decision is reached tonight and that it will be taken for the benefit of all.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, I have several matters to discuss, but I shall limit myself to pointing out only a few, so that the government may understand the exact meaning of what I want to say without getting mixed up. I am well aware that as could be noted until now the government has a very quick perception, and is quick enough to grasp this country's problems, but not quite as quick when it comes to finding solutions. I shall therefore list a few problems which we have to face, more particularly in my riding, as well as others which affect the country as a whole, like unemployment and farming.

My fellow member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) has just mentioned the unemployment problem, and though he dealt at some length, there are still a few points he did not mention. I consider, for instance that as far as the federal administration is concerned, that committee should be responsible to the house, because there is now perhaps unintentional, discrimination against those who have to deal with the officials of the unemployment insurance commission.

Let me quote as an example the case of a fellow in my county—and there may be several others throughout the country—who, having worked for somebody and paid his stamps, goes to the unemployment insurance office in the fall to get his insurance pay, as he is unemployed. Being a carpenter, he had worked in the building industry. His job having come to an end he went to that office and was told by an officer: "You are not entitled to any benefits, sir, just because you did not work for a man normally called a 'jobber'." And the official in that office simply tore up his stamps.

My friend spent all winter without drawing any benefits. The following summer, he went to work again. The same man who had provided stamps the previous year re-employed him. He went back to the unemployment office and the official told him that he had to affix stamps. Why is it, Mr. Chairman, that in the case of the same two persons, one the employer and the other the employee, it was necessary to pay stamps the previous year, but that the employee was not entitled to draw benefits, because the stamps were not valid? Why does the government compel citizens to do such a thing and then change its decision? It is an injustice of the federal authorities through the unemployment insurance commission. Such a thing does not only happen in the county of Megantic but throughout the country. Perhaps these things are not consciously done, perhaps the government is unaware of them, but they happen in many ridings and parishes in this country. It is high time the government assumed its responsibilities and started solving its own problems, before trying to tell others what to do.

There is another case in my county—that of a man, working in a mine, who takes a holiday and is dismissed. The worker is told: "You are dismissed for two weeks and this will be your holidays, but he is not explicitly told that the work will be resumed after two weeks. He is also told: Go and submit a claim at the unemployment insurance commission. Then our friend submits a claim in order to draw benefits.

After two weeks, work is resumed. But one of them had not been to the unemployment insurance office to submit his claim. He had been paying unemployment insurance contributions ever since the enactment of the act and was entitled to draw benefits for 52 weeks. At the end of the year, in December, this individual reached 60 years of age and was retired. He applied to the unemployment insurance commission for his benefits. He drew them until the month of August, but then, the payments stopped. Since then, that person did not get any money. He actually lost his benefits for September, October, November and December and yet, he had been paying his contributions for ten years.

Mr. Chairman, if a worker paid all his contributions even though he did not submit any claim, he is supposed to get some money, because in all fairness, he is entitled to his benefits even though he did not apply to the unemployment insurance office. Workers know that the commission is under federal jurisdiction. All those who have their work cut out with government representatives or with opposition members, as well as those who have trouble getting their unemployment insurance because it is federal business, naturally lose faith in the Liberal and Conservative parties.

I am convinced that Conservative and Liberal governments, and even the New Democratic party have been harried by workers.

Sometimes commission executives themselves lose their bearings. In my constituency, if the unemployment insurance officer does not have the necessary answers, or if the case appears too involved, he tells people to go to Montreal and find out what it is all about. And so, poor people without a cent in their pockets are compelled to go to Montreal to clear things up. The office in my part of the country should certainly not be a sort of travel bureau which sends workers on trips to Montreal.

Here is a case which arose in my county in connection with unemployment insurance and winter works. A man claimed his unemployment benefits, and got them. Some time later, say in October, when he scarcely had worked at all, he is called because he is available for work.

Mr. Chairman, if the fellow who gets $32 to $36 a week in unemployment insurance benefits is deprived of that on the pretence that he is available for work and able to cut branches along the road during a period of three days at a modicum of $8 per day, that is $24, it is no wonder that he should recriminate. He would rather be unemployed and get $36 a week than work for $24, and that is the sort of things we get at present.

So, we are using the unemployment insurance fund in order to give work to the workers during wintertime. Thus it is their own money; they have worked; they have paid for stamps and they are forced to dig ditches along the roads.

I know that such an injustice happens in various parishes and that it has happened in my own constituency; and we wonder afterwards why the workers protest when they are being told that they cannot get unemployment insurance benefits on the pretence that they are available for work, if they refuse to cut branches along the road.

Another case, Mr. Chairman, has happened in my county: a fellow has been taken ill since he was temporarily laid off by the mine. He has collected his unemployment insurance benefits and then, after having been hired again by the mine, he had to pass a medical test whereby he was found to be suffering from tuberculosis. They told him: "We cannot hire you, my friend." In the meantime, the unemployment insurance commission officers had found out that the man was not working. The commissioners went to his house and said: "How is it that you are collecting unemployment insurance benefits?" He answered: "Listen, I was unemployed, I have been fired". They told him that he could not get unemployment insurance benefits on account of his illness, that he was not entitled to them, that he had failed to state that he was ill, hence that he had made a misleading report.

Mr. Chairman, that man did not know he was sick during those three months he was unemployed. It was only when he came back to work and the mining company forced him to take a medical examination that his illness was discovered. That man did not know he was ill when he applied for unemployment insurance benefits.

Such an injustice should be corrected and the unemployment insurance commission should take its responsibilities. It is up to the house and the government to correct the situation.

It is quite likely that the same thing is happening elsewhere.

Earlier, I asked the hon. Minister of Labour what he was doing with the Gill report and whether a committee of the house would be set up to examine the report, to enact its recommendations and to put an end to those injustices. What did he reply? The same thing as usual: We will take it under serious consideration.

I hope the time for consideration is over, that we are now going to see some action and that the minister will take his responsibilities. It is up to the government to act if it wishes to do so. Otherwise, it will do the same thing as its predecessors, it will drag its feet for 95 years.

The Gill report is not the only topic I wanted to discuss here. Let us hope that the present government will act faster than its Liberal predecessors.

It would seem that there are, within the government, men who are able to take advice and make decisions, but let them do something. Whether they do right or wrong, let them do something for heaven's sake. They have done nothing until now, so let them wake up.

There is not only the Gill report and the matter of unemployment insurance, there is also agriculture.

Mr. Chairman, last year, the former member for Bellechasse (Mr. Dumont) discussed both eastern and western agriculture. This year, there is some talk about the appointment of two ministers of agriculture, one for the east and one for the west. Frankly, I find that a bit embarrassing. The government has trouble finding one good man; how can it find two of them? Indeed, my colleague has asked for the construction of storage facilities along the St. Lawrence. What was to be their purpose? They would be for the benefit of farmers of the province of Quebec who may be, at present, in worse financial straits than western farmers and who envisage the coming winter with great anxiety.

Even I do not know where they will get the funds required to operate their farms and look after their families. When the former member for Bellechasse asked for storage facilities along the St. Lawrence, it was so that there would not be too many hands tampering with western wheat on the Canadian wheat board. At the present time, the government is paying the western farmers 45 cents for a bushel of oats and 55 cents with the adjustment payment, while the eastern farmer has to buy it at $4 and $4.50 per cwt. In between, who is tampering with bushels of wheat and oats? The situation is the same in Alberta and British Columbia. Certain apple growers—

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): May I ask the hon. member a question? Could he give us the meaning of the word "tampering"?

[Text]

Mr. Langlois: I will. It is not in the same sense as fooling around.

[Translation]

An hon. Member: In French.

Mr. Langlois: It is not used in the sense of fooling around with grain, but simply of speculating on grain. Does that answer your question?

An hon. Member: I shall look it up in my dictionary.

[Mr. Langlois.]

Mr. Pigeon: The word is rather slangy.

Mr. Langlois: Maybe so. It is a good thing to resort to such words from time to time in order to be understood. They are very expressive.

Mr. Chairman, to come back to agriculture, in Alberta and British Columbia, we have wheat growers and apple growers. Here is an example of what I mean by speculating on Canadian products. In British Columbia, which is an apple-producing province, to get a bushel of wheat in Alberta, a farmer has to give from 4½ to 5 bushels of apples. Now, let us reverse the roles and go into the province of Alberta. We know that in Alberta a farmer is obliged to furnish from 4 to 5½ bushels to have one bushel of apples, whereas both are equivalent to 60 pounds. Who benefits from the 3½ to 4 bushels of wheat or apples? Who gets the profit? Here, what does the Canadian wheat board do once it relinquishes its control; it is the Winnipeg wheat exchange which ships the goods to Montreal and Toronto? But it continues the same speculation so that the eastern farmer pays more than the special amount on the exchange of wheat and grain originating in the west.

That is what the former member for Bellechasse asked. He wanted to avoid that speculation by having warehouses along the St. Lawrence. It is the Canadian wheat board that pays transportation costs for the wheat directly from the great lakes to the St. Lawrence river. He wanted to dispense with the province of Quebec co-operative societies paying an additional amount on those bushels of grain to the Canadian wheat board, to the western farmers.

Mr. Chairman, there are in the province of Quebec as well as in the other provinces a great number of farmers whose lands are presently encumbered with farm loans, lands that were nevertheless free of debt for generations, that were cleared by the ancestors of today's occupants. That is the present situation, although some claim our economy is sound whereas the farmers' lands are mortgaged to the hilt to either the federal or the provincial farm loan boards.

Mr. Chairman, such a situation depends only on one thing. We cannot charge that all the farmers are poor managers, that they are imbeciles, that they know nothing about production. I believe that there are some farmers who can produce much more than some members of parliament. It is not up to us to judge them. We should seek here at home the reason for this state of affairs. Is it our laws, our own administration in this house which force those farmers to mortgage their farms?

Mr. Chairman, it is not by lending more to the farmers through farm loans that we shall resolve the problem. What the farmer wishes presently is to obtain a better price for his products and to pay a little less in taxation. Thus, the farmers may succeed in making both ends meet. Mr. Chairman, there is another point I should like to deal with; it concerns our young people, unemployment, unemployment insurance, but also the economic development of this country. And at this stage of my remarks, I would ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh) and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) to listen carefully to what I am going to say.

I want to deal with the problem facing our young people today when they wish to join the armed forces and benefit from federal government assistance. When a student wants to join the armed forces, he is paid a salary, given military training, clothed, lodged and fed. But when the same student wants to get a scholarship to go to university, he is told: "Wait a minute, the government does not give scholarships".

How is it that the government has money to give our young men military training, but have absolutely nothing to offer to those who want to carry on their studies at the university?

Mr. Chairman, one must not forget that our university students can defend our country as well as our young military trainees, for every man defends his country in his own way.

Now, why does not the government give direct assistance to those who want to carry on their studies at the university, as it does in the case of those who wish to join the army?

It is all very well to defend our country, but we must not only defend it, we should also develop it, and those who will develop it will be perhaps in as good a position to defend it as those who will have had military training.

Everybody could work along the same lines, some looking after the country's military defense while others would look after its growth.

Mr. Chairman, that is the point I wished to raise about youth. I know that the Minister of National Health and Welfare takes a special interest in the young people of Canada, since she has already started a campaign and made sacrifices herself by giving up smoking. That is already a good example she has set our young people in order to keep them in good health.

I am asking the government whether they have a solution, as quite often they have not, why—

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, could we be informed of the friendly agreement that seems to exist between the member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) and the leader of the house?

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, it is always better to have friends than enemies.

Mr. Pigeon: So the divorce is over.

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Chairman, I did not get the question or the remarks of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) but if they are in any way similar to his other remarks I will not lose any time in trying to reply to them.

In conclusion I would simply suggest to the government, seeing that they are unable to solve the problem of unemployment, misery, hunger and insecurity in our country at present, and have not found any solution in their own political structure, after 95 years of trial and errors, that they should change their routine and try some other means, like the monetary reform advocated by the Social Credit party. You may call that "funny money" but instead of calling the Social Credit monetary system the "funny money" system you should examine your own financial systems when you have to devaluate the dollar, when you have a revaluated or devaluated dollar. That never happened under a Social Credit administration because there never was one, but it happened under the Liberal and Conservative administrations.

At the present time we need solutions to wipe out the national debt which is increasing day by day and to remedy unemployment, misery and hunger.

I am asking the Minister of Finance, the Prime Minister and their colleagues in the various departments to consider the solutions offered by Social Credit; they may find solutions to the problems they have to face at the present time.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate your giving me the floor at this moment. The hour is getting late and I would like to appeal to every hon. member of the house to appreciate the circumstances under which we are presently operating, and to understand something on principle and not on expediency. I ask, right now, will all hon. members and all parties agree to call all speeches to a complete halt and vote on the important issue before us?

Anyone who stands now is guilty of denial of principle and expediency. May we now, sir, have the vote?

Mr. Gregoire: I will stand but for one moment, and then we will have the vote. We are putting an end to our speeches, but before that I would like to say that I have attended the committee on privileges and elections since 8.30 o'clock and it is not serious at all. I was not able to see they were willing—

[Translation]

The Chairman: Order. I must remind the hon. member that he is not permitted to refer to the matters presently under consideration in the privilege and election committee.

Mr. Gregoire: Very well, Mr. Chairman. I just wanted to say that we are confident that the other side of the house will deal with the problem as quickly as possible, and we shall leave it at that.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Mr. Gordon moved:

Resolved, that toward making good the supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending March 31st, 1964, the sum of $747,449,955.03, be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada, as set forth in the resolution concurred in this day in the committee of supply.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Gordon thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-101, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1964.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second times and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

Clauses 1 to 6 inclusive agreed to.

Schedules agreed to.

Title agreed to.

On the preamble.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, there is one matter I would like to raise. I would appreciate very much knowing from the house leader what compromise he made with Social Credit about this?

The Chairman: Order.

Preamble agreed to.

Bill reported and read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I would like to know from the house leader, now that the hurricane warnings have been taken down, what business will be ready for the ship of state tomorrow, on the calmer seas?

Mr. Pickersgill: I sincerely hope that the hon. gentleman's forecast is correct and that the hurricanes are over, both in the Caribbean and here. We would go ahead tomorrow with the old age pensions bill, the two Northwest Territories bills and the vocational training resolution. That, I think, would probably occupy the greater part of the day. If there were any time left the government would reserve the right to take anything on the order paper of a relatively non-controversial character.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Pickersgill: It would be my hope that progress would be made both in the house and in the committees.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, October 8, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Maurice Sauve (Îles-de-la-Madeleine) presented the second report of the special committee on defence, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MOTION TO SUSPEND ADJOURNMENT TIME AND TO PERMIT SEVERAL READINGS OF SUPPLY BILL

On the order:

Motions—Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of the Secretary of State:

That, until the proceedings on the interim supply resolution, now before the house, and on the supply bill to be based thereon have been disposed of, the provisions of section 3 of standing order 6 concerning the time of evening adjournment shall be suspended; and that, in order to allow for several readings of the said supply bill in any sitting, the provisions of standing order 75 shall be suspended in relation thereto;

Provided that, if any other government order is taken in any such sitting, the terms of this order shall not be operative.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether there would be unanimous agreement in the house to have the motion standing in my name dropped in view of the passage of time.

Mr. Pugh: As long as you go with it.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to the request of the Secretary of State that his motion be dropped?

Mr. Nowlan: As amended.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

LABOUR RELATIONS

LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE—DENIAL OF RUMOURS RESPECTING COMPULSORY ARBITRATION

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I should like to advise the house that this morning I had discussions with representatives of the longshoremen concerning the dispute involving dock operations in Montreal, Three Rivers and Quebec city. These representatives were gravely concerned with respect to misleading and erroneous reports to the effect that the government was holding the club of compulsory arbitration over the heads of the parties to the dispute, and that the government had decided to impose compulsory arbitration to effect a settlement of the dispute.

Here and now, Mr. Speaker, and in the strongest possible terms I wish to state that the government has made no threats of compulsory arbitration directly or indirectly and, further, that the government has made no decision with respect to imposing compulsory arbitration by legislation. We have appointed a mediator who is engaged in a sustained and intensive effort to settle the dispute on a voluntary basis, and I am in full agreement with the representatives of the longshoremen that innocent or malicious speculation regarding the imposition of arbitration can have nothing but an inhibiting effect on the efforts of Judge Lippe. I have received tributes to the skill and patience of Judge Lippe in this difficult situation.

Finally, I would refer members of the house to my statement last Friday. Both parties in this dispute have complied fully with our labour law and are free now to engage in other processes available to them under that law. We have gone beyond our usual efforts to assist the parties because of the national importance of a resumption of the dock operations. The government expects the parties, by voluntary methods and with the able assistance of the mediator, to work out their economic affairs in good faith, and I hope this statement will assist them to that end. Meanwhile Judge Lippe is continuing his efforts and will discuss with the parties this afternoon, as he did to the early hours of this morning, proposals for the settlement of the dispute.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

WINNIPEG—TRANSFER OF OVERHAUL AND MAINTENANCE BASE

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a short statement concerning Trans-Canada Air Lines overhaul and maintenance facilities at Winnipeg, the Dixon-Speas study and matters arising out of it.

On the basis of full and confidential information involving T.C.A.'s forward planning of its operations for the next 10 years, the consultants think that the most economic course for T.C.A. would be to close the Winnipeg facilities.

Both T.C.A. and the government recognize that, while this is indeed an important consideration, there are other factors which have to be considered too. T.C.A., therefore, stands by its previous decision to maintain the Winnipeg facilities until 1966.

Now that the Dixon-Speas report has provided full information on one aspect of the problem, the government will consider this in relation to other aspects, the general shape of national aviation policy and policies for regional economic development and manpower adjustment. The decision as to whether the Winnipeg facilities should be adapted for use beyond 1966 will be based on all these considerations, as the Prime Minister has promised it would be. The government appreciates the importance to the people affected, of an early decision. Therefore, complex though the problem is, it expects to come to a conclusion by the end of the year.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): We have been waiting with a great deal of interest and some impatience for a report by the minister. We had hoped that he would have given the house and the country a decision by the government right now. He has not given us any additional information. We have been aware that the recent technical report dealt with the economic factors. We have been aware also that the government, through the Prime Minister and others, has made commitments to the people of Winnipeg and the employees of T.C.A. that other factors would be considered.

There is nothing new, therefore, in what the minister has now stated except that other matters are going to be decided upon before the decision is reached. He mentioned, I believe, a policy with regard to regional industrial development and aviation policy; and his colleague the Minister of Veterans Affairs was reported somewhat earlier to the effect that there was a third policy, job displacement and regional manpower adjustment. These three policies have to be formulated and implemented, according to the Minister of Veterans Affairs, before a decision is reached concerning T.C.A. overhaul and maintenance base.

This means a great deal of unnecessary delay, in our opinion, and is very frustrating indeed to the employees of T.C.A. in Winnipeg and to the general economy of that great city.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I am certain that the statement made by the minister today will be a great disappointment to everybody in the greater Winnipeg area. This is a subject which has received unanimous support from all sectors of the province, labour, management, business and provincial and municipal governments. The Prime Minister, the minister and other members of the government met a large delegation here last May, and the Prime Minister made it clear that the economic effect of this move on T.C.A. would not be the only consideration which would be looked at by the government. In other words, something besides the mere saving of money by T.C.A. would be considered.

We are all disappointed that the report to which the minister referred has been kept secret and has not been made available to the interested parties. It is our understanding that the only thing the report says is that T.C.A. would save money. There is nothing in the report which changes the original contention of the parties that the move would be a real blow to the province of Manitoba and to the greater Winnipeg area, and a tremendous hardship on the people who work for T.C.A. in Winnipeg who would be forced to move to Montreal.

There is nothing in the minister's statement which would at all allay these fears, and I certainly join with the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre in expressing disappointment that the people of Winnipeg will again have to wait, this time until the end of 1963. On the basis of past experience with T.C.A. in this problem, at the end of 1963 we will probably hear that it will take until the end of 1964.

What we are worried about, aside from this delay, is that while this is going on T.C.A. will continue the process of the last 10 years of chipping away the whole position of T.C.A. in Winnipeg. Despite all the assurances of T.C.A. and ministers of transport, there has been a continuous drop in T.C.A. jobs at Winnipeg, and I hope the minister would at least make it clear to T.C.A. that there should be no reduction of jobs in Winnipeg, and no transfers from Winnipeg to Montreal, until the government has enunciated its policy much more clearly than the minister did today.

TRADE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND BULGARIA

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce that on behalf of the government of Canada I have just signed a three year trade agreement between Canada and the People's Republic of Bulgaria. In connection with the negotiation of the agreement it has been my pleasure to welcome to Ottawa Mr. I. Boudinov, Bulgarian minister of foreign trade, who is in the gallery today witnessing our proceedings.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Boudinov signed the agreement on behalf of the government of his country. The agreement provides for an exchange of most favoured nation treatment between our two countries, and a commitment by the People's Republic of Bulgaria to purchase a minimum of 100,000 metric tons of wheat in each of the three years of the agreement. However, Bulgaria will purchase an additional 150,000 metric tons of Canadian wheat, subject to the Canadian supply position, during the current crop year, and the way is open for both parties to negotiate for even greater quantities in the future. At buyer's option, all or part of the above mentioned quantities of wheat may be taken in flour equivalent.

The agreement provides for consultation between representatives of the two governments respecting implementation of the agreement, should this be required. In addition, it has been agreed that trade offices may be opened both in Canada and Bulgaria for the purposes of market exploration and trade promotion. The conclusion of successful negotiations followed preliminary talks which have taken place between representatives of the two countries over several months.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, the house and the country will be very well pleased to hear that the minister is taking advantage of the tremendous demand for products of this country in countries behind the iron curtain. There was no secret about the fact that over the last two or three years this demand was rising and these countries were in the market for long term agreements for our products, and that we in return would have to make them some concessions in order to get into our markets here. I only hope the most favoured nation treatment that has been granted to Bulgaria today will result in considerable trade between our two countries, and I hope the government keeps up this program of dealing with countries behind the iron curtain.

I would like to mention this specifically. On August 3 last I gave a list of countries which I think would be interested in receiving the same type of treatment. If the minister would go to Hungary, for example, I think he could probably make an agreement for 300,000 tons a year. I think this could be done by giving them most favoured nation treatment.

I would like to congratulate the government for its wisdom in following the sound policies already well established.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I would like to welcome the announcement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce respecting both the specified quantities of wheat that have been sold to Bulgaria and also the fact that most favoured nation trade arrangements have been set up with that republic. I think it is going to tax our transportation facilities in Canada to the maximum to deliver all the wheat involved in the commitments we have made for the balance of this crop year. I therefore hope there will be a very high degree of co-operation among the Department of Transport, the labour unions and others involved in order that we are able to meet the delivery commitments. I would like to commend the government for continuing, if you want to call it that, or initiating, if you prefer that, the expansion of trade in this area.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, all Canadians will welcome the announcement by the Minister of Trade and Commerce to the effect that a trade agreement has been entered into with the government of Bulgaria, that this will involve sales of Canadian wheat over the next three years, and that in return we will be extending to Bulgaria the most favoured nation provisions.

I think the government is wise in recognizing two basic principles; first, that we ought to be prepared to sell food and other non-strategic materials to any country which is willing to pay for them either in cash or on a credit basis. I think the second principle which is recognized, and I hope they will continue to recognize it, is that if we are to sell export commodities like wheat we must be prepared to accept some of the goods of other countries in exchange. We cannot have one way trade; trade is a two way proposition. Certainly the government is wise in exploring the whole field of what goods from these other countries we can accept so as to enable them to earn the necessary Canadian dollars with which to pay for the wheat.

I would like to say one other word; that some of the ministers who have been advising western farmers that they had better get out of wheat will probably now have to reverse this advice. I am convinced that the wheat acreage on the prairies could be greatly expanded and that there will be no difficulty in increasing the production of wheat if that is necessary to meet these further orders.

POWER

ANNOUNCEMENT OF NATIONAL POLICY

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I wish today to announce on behalf of the government a national power policy. I do not think I have to emphasize the vital role the power industry is playing and must continue to play in the development of our nation. The story of the electric power industry of today is one of constant evolution as it strives successfully to reduce costs. Canada must provide the climate in which we can take advantage of these technical breakthroughs.

Our policy places particular emphasis on (a) the desirability of Canada taking fullest advantage of the evolutionary changes that have taken place in the nature of the power industry, including technological improvements in generating and transmission facilities, and the reduced costs of power associated with these; (b) the provision of abundant supplies of electrical energy to consumers throughout Canada at the lowest possible cost to encourage and accelerate economic development and growth; (c) the need for Canada to have a flexible export policy which, inter alia, would permit the export of large blocks of power to the United States for a relatively long period of years to assist in the immediate development of certain large scale Canadian power projects, particularly undeveloped hydro resources which might not be viable in the near future unless provision were made for the marketing in the United States of a significant portion of their output; and (d) the strengthening of our balance of payments position through the export of power surplus to our own needs.

The policy now being announced reflects important changes which have taken place in the circumstances affecting export of power. The government is fully aware of the body of public opinion that has been opposed to export of power, in the first instance because of events which occurred over 50 years ago.

The National Energy Board Act now provides that all exports of power must be licensed by the national energy board with the approval of the governor in council. Licences may not be issued for a term in excess of 25 years. The national energy board is required to certify that the power to be exported does not exceed the surplus remaining after due allowance has been made for the reasonably foreseeable requirements for use in Canada, and this has been interpreted to mean surplus to Canadian requirements which can be supplied economically from the generating facilities producing the power for export. Further, the board must satisfy itself that the export price of the power is just and reasonable in relation to the public interest.

From 1907 until the coming into force in 1959 of the National Energy Board Act, the export of power was subject to licence under the Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas Act. By regulation under that act the term of a licence was limited to one year. This was intended to prevent permanent alienation of Canadian power capacity which, though surplus when installed would be required in Canada as time went on. It was realized that if an industry or a community in the United States became dependant on a Canadian power supply it would be difficult, if not impossible, to withdraw that supply.

Such difficulties as have occurred in respect of the recapture of power exports arose in part because over 50 years ago long term contracts—up to 85 years—were made by Canadian power producers with specific industries in the United States. The contracts contained no provisions for the repatriation of the power. The Canadian supplier, in effect, had taken on within the United States the responsibility of a public utility to maintain continuity of supply for its customers. As a result, the protection of the one year limitation on licences was illusory.

The nature of the power industry today is very different from what it was in 1907 and in most of the intervening years. It is now unusual for the capacity of a large, modern electric plant to be dedicated to a single industry, or for a large utility to be dependant on one source of power supply. We are entering the era of large private and public electrical utilities, interlinked with high voltage lines and operated pursuant to interconnection agreements designed to take advantage of the new technological improvements and the economies of scale.

A public utility, whether in Canada or the United States, now takes it as a matter of course that it must contract for or instal capacity to replace a portion of its total power supply when the contract covering that portion runs out. The old aphorism that an export sale, once established, cannot be terminated without hardship in the export market and danger of international friction is no longer valid if the export contract is made with a public utility in the United States under reasonable terms and conditions.

When the National Energy Board Act came into effect in 1959, power export licences which had been issued under the Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas Act were continued in effect for some time, so that the board might apply to each case with minor exceptions the procedure of application, public hearing, detailed analysis and recommendation to the governor in council.

In 1959 actual total exports, as distinguished from licensed authorizations, were 4,582 million kilowatt hours. In 1962 export had declined to 89 per cent of the 1959 total. In 1962 Canada produced 117 billion kilowatt hours, including 11.4 per cent from thermoelectric plants. Of the total production, only 0.47 per cent was exported as firm energy and 2.8 per cent as interruptible energy. Of the latter, 86 per cent was interchanged with United States utilities, having been returned to Canada at the same time over other circuits, or over the same circuits at other times.

In the light of the circumstances I have outlined the government has decided to develop and carry forward effective policies embracing two essential concepts; first, encouraging development of large low cost power sources and the distribution of the benefits thereof as widely as possible through interconnection between power systems within Canada; second, encouraging power exports and interconnections between Canadian and United States power systems where such induce early development of Canadian power resources.

More specifically, our policy is as follows. The government, having due regard to the rights of the provinces with respect to the development and distribution of power, and keeping in mind its own responsibilities in this field, desires to encourage interconnection agreements and maximum utilization of intertie facilities between electrical systems, both publicly and privately owned. The government, in co-operation with the provinces, has already undertaken studies to investigate the possibility of interconnecting power systems across the country. It realizes that the complete interconnection may not be economically feasible for some years to come. Nevertheless, it would appear that by establishment of interconnection facilities between utilities in adjacent regions, wherever practical, a national system might be developed by a succession of stages, each valuable in itself.

The government believes that it would be beneficial to Canada and to the United States, and not prejudicial to the national interest, to encourage interconnection agreements and interties between utilities in the respective countries in cases where the interconnection agreements suitably protect the Canadian interest. In cases in which Canadian utilities enter into appropriate interconnection agreements with United States utilities, the government will be prepared, upon recommendation of the national energy board, to give favourable consideration to the authorization of export of power to United States utilities for purposes including the following. First, to provide stand-by service in the case of emergencies, thus making possible the reduction of reserve generating capacity otherwise required by the utilities; second, to provide for economy flows between plants or systems; third, to provide for sales of surplus interruptible energy; fourth, to provide for exchange of power and energy to take advantage of load, watershed or other diversities; and fifth, to provide for exports of firm power for limited periods to make possible the step by step construction of the most economical generating facilities on either side of the boundary.

The government also believes that it would be in the national interest, in suitable cases, to license the export of large blocks of firm power to United States utilities to permit the development of large scale remote hydro or other power projects which would not be viable unless supported by the export for long periods of a significant proportion of the power generated. The National Energy Board Act permits such exports for periods of up to 25 years. Provision would have to be made for the recapture of such exported power over a period of years, in stages commensurate with the need or ability of the Canadian market to absorb it, and upon notice adequate to enable the importing utility to arrange for replacements. The provisions of the National Energy Board Act would, of course, apply to any case of this nature, as to any export of power.

The government will, upon recommendation of the national energy board, continue to authorize the export of relatively small amounts of power and energy to border areas in the United States where, for geographical reasons, Canada is the economic source of supply.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the long disquisition by the Minister of Trade and Commerce was summarized in about two lines in the speech from the throne in 1962 presented by the government of which I had the honour to be the head.

The minister went back to 1907 and dealt with the statute of that time which denied the export of power, and he left the impression that this announcement today was something that represented cogitation and consideration by the present government. I would point out this fact; that three years ago we took the stand that the rules which had heretofore been in effect denying export should be removed, and that export of power surplus over and above foreseeable needs could be made to the United States. In addition, at the same time or somewhat earlier we established the national energy board in order to bring about power development in Canada which would assure our future needs and we gave that board the power to recommend the export of power subject to the agreement of the governor in council. All these things were done under the previous government.

The announcement made today adds thereto the establishment of a national grid. This was part and parcel of our policy, a policy for which we received little support from those who now sit opposite. Much is made of the fact that consideration is now being given to preserving and maintaining provincial rights in this connection. That, too, is a welcome change on the part of the government. We had negotiations under way for the establishment of a national grid. In short, this announcement was made by us several years ago—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: However, in the words of a familiar quotation, while the lamp holds out to burn the wandering sinner may return, and we are glad to see that hon. gentlemen opposite have repented of their former attitude.

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): I rise only to say I am very pleased indeed with the announcement which has been made this afternoon in connection with power policy. For some time now there has been a dire need for changes to be made in the policy of the federal government relating to power and power distribution in Canada.

I may say I am not interested in the pot calling the kettle black or in the skunk saying "I smell something", if that is a better term. I am not interested in recriminations of that kind. I am interested in the progress that is being made, whether it began with the Conservative party or with the Liberal party; and I think if they are honest hon. members in all parties will be bound to admit that the difference between the two parties is very slight.

However, I know the province of British Columbia in particular will welcome this announcement. I can see that it is likely to have a direct effect on the plans which that government has for the development of the Peace river and of the Columbia river basin. This is of importance to the people of Canada as a whole, as was pointed out in the statement which the minister made, inasmuch as it concerns the arrangements made for the exchange of power between this country and the United States.

In conclusion I should like to renew a plea to the government that they give serious consideration to the establishment of a department of federal-provincial affairs. The circumstances surrounding this announcement provide one more illustration of the need for setting up such a department. As I say, we welcome the announcement and I am sure it will go a long way toward making possible the development which is to take place in the province of British Columbia, a development which will create markets for the manufacturing centres of eastern Canada.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): This is much too important and complex a matter to be dealt with on motions on the orders of the day, and it seems to me some early opportunity should be given for a full debate on the subject by this parliament. This is a matter of far reaching importance to the people of Canada, and I hope the government will find an opportunity to arrange for a fuller discussion at an early date.

There are two aspects of the minister's statement upon which I should like to comment. The first has to do with the establishment of a national power grid. This is a project which has interested many of us for a number of years. Some progress has been made by utilities concerned, both public and private, as well as by the provincial governments in their discussions over the past few years, but I should like to say this to the minister. In our view the public and private power utilities of Canada do not merely require assistance in conducting studies. A good many studies have already been conducted, and I think the companies are able to undertake such studies without any great measure of assistance. The real problem which the power utilities face is the heavy capital expenditure which will have to be made if a national power grid is to be established.

New techniques have now made it possible to transmit power over long distances without a heavy line loss. In Sweden they are now transmitting power some 1500 miles without serious power loss and, I learned from engineers there, that in the Soviet union they are carrying power over distances even greater than this. But these developments require heavy capital expenditure, and if the government really wishes to help develop a national power grid it will, I believe, have to be prepared to make loans available to the public and private utilities so that construction may be undertaken with the result that wherever there is cheap power available in our part of Canada, it may be made available in other parts of the country. This would avoid part of our present deficit on our balance of payments account, because at the present time we are spending large sums on the purchase of United States coal for central Canada to provide power through thermal units.

The second point I have to make concerns the export of power. I would say that if the government now proposes to agree to the export of power there are two conditions which ought to be laid down in order to safeguard the interests of the Canadian people. First, no power should be exported if it can be used to advantage in Canada. We should not be exporting Canadian power if it can be used near the point of production or transmitted to a part of Canada which could use it economically.

I do not know whether the government made this announcement today as a prelude to some decision with reference to the Columbia river development, but I think before any final agreement is signed with the province of British Columbia the whole question of that development should be submitted to the committee of external affairs of this house in order that the entire subject may be reviewed, and witnesses like General MacNaughton called, in order that hon. members may be fully aware of the situation. I say this because we are dealing here not only with the export of power but with the release of all the water of the fifth largest river on the North American continent. It is a most important matter and I hope it will not be referred to the committee on external affairs only after an agreement is signed and the house is faced with a fait accompli.

The second thing I wish to say about the export of power is that agreements for the export of firm blocks of power—arrangements for stand-by or emergency power are another matter—should be permitted only if there is provision for the progressive withdrawal of that power in blocks over a period of years in order to meet the growing needs of Canada. Power demand is increasing at an amazingly rapid rate, and we could easily sign long term commitments for power which we ourselves would need in the course of the next ten, 20 or 30 years.

I hope that the energy board will be instructed by the minister to see that in any export permits which are granted, there is adequate provision that this power can be restored to Canada as our demand load grows.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce arising out of his statement on power. Now that the new government has adopted the power policy of the former government, is the minister in a position to make a progress report on the Nelson river power study that was launched last year in co-operation with the province of Manitoba?

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for expressing his general accord with the statement I made on power. On the particular question of the Nelson river, I am not in a position today to make such a statement, but if he would like a progress report I will get one for him.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question which is directed to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, who knows that I have been trying since June to get an interim report on the national transmission grid study that is being carried out, without which information we cannot make any sort of decision on any policy as to export. I wonder whether the minister, in view of the statement of last June 11 in which he mentioned that there would be meetings in August and September of this year, would now tell the house whether he is prepared to make some sort of interim progress report on what is happening in regard to this very important matter.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think I informed the hon. member for Qu'Appelle at that time that we expected a report early in September. We have been told by the professional firm that is undertaking this work for us that there is a greater amount of work involved than they expected, and now we do not expect the report until early in December. I think it would be premature on our part to make an interim report of any kind until we see the entire report.

Mr. Hamilton: Following that answer, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might ask a question, which is not facetious but is meant very seriously. Is the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources in close consultation with the Minister of Trade and Commerce in regard to any potential export of power, to keep him in touch with the findings of any committee that is studying the advantages of a transmission grid to move the power east and west rather than north and south?

Mr. Laing: I am quite certain, Mr. Speaker, that in connection with matters of policy in the export of power the opinions of my department go to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In regard to the statement the minister made today, I am in complete concurrence with it in its spirit and its eventual execution. I am quite certain that the good of all the people of Canada will be borne in mind in the attempts of this department to maximize the use of Canadian water and at the same time do the best we can for development in Canada by making possible certain exports.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Hamilton: If I may be permitted to ask another supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, does the minister now appreciate the significance of my question on the relationship between the national power grid and the Columbia river?

Mr. Chevrier: Order.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, I was not unappreciative of its significance the first time the hon. member asked the question.

[Later:]

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the problem which you have been having, but I might say that I have been seeking to catch your eye since the beginning of the question period, but have been badly obscured most of the time. My question, addressed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, arises out of the statement he made today, and I feel it pertinent in view of the exchange between the hon. member for Qu'Appelle and the minister for northern affairs. I should like to ask the minister whether he will refer to a standing or a special committee of this house the statement on power policy which he gave the house today so that we may have the advantage of expert testimony in assessing and evaluating the policy announced?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, may I say two things about this question. First of all, I should not have made this statement had it not appeared to the people of the country that some clarification of power policy was desirable, notwithstanding what has been said on the other side. Second, I put this statement on the record in full, so that it would be available to any committee, private citizen or group that wanted to have the relevant information.

LABOUR RELATIONS

GREAT LAKES TRUSTEESHIP LEGISLATION—CANADIAN SHIP AT CHICAGO

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, can the minister of Labour say what the present position is regarding the bringing in of legislation to provide for a trusteeship; and second, whether within the last two or three days a Canadian ship in Chicago has been denied loading? What has been done in that connection? Have representations been made to the United States against this continued lawlessness that denies to Canadians the right to the use of the facilities of the great lakes?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the position with respect to the introduction of the trusteeship legislation is somewhat as follows. The search has been for an arrangement between the Canadian Labour Congress and the A.F. of L.-C.I.O. in the first instance to provide a method of dealing with the situation. The executive council of the Canadian Labour Congress is meeting in Ottawa today, and I have decided to wait until I get a formal communication from the congress as to their final disposition of the matter. Just as soon as that is received I think I can make an announcement quite quickly.

I am aware that the John Ericsson has not been loaded in Chicago, and while I cannot report for the Secretary of State for External Affairs I am also aware that this matter has been discussed with representatives of the United States government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is the minister in a position to say whether he made any representations, and what the reaction was?

Mr. MacEachen: I have discussed this matter with the officials of the labour department, to my recollection, and I have an indication of certain knowledge that the Canadian ambassador discussed this matter yesterday in the United States. I can only report that the reaction to these representations has been that the United States authorities will fully comply with United States law with respect to this situation.

As the right hon. gentleman knows, the case of the Howard L. Shaw was before the courts, and Judge Parsons dealt with the situation by levying fines for non-compliance with the non-boycott order, so to speak. To my knowledge similar legal action has not taken place yet with respect to the Ericsson.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that those most directly concerned with the problem of shipping on the great lakes are the seamen, is the government taking steps at the present time to enforce section 157 of the Canada Shipping Act prohibiting the operation of hiring halls by unions, as recommended by Mr. Justice Norris in his recent report?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the establishment of a trusteeship itself would take into account this particular problem of hiring halls, and once a decision has been announced with respect to the date of bringing the legislation forward I think an opportunity will be provided to deal with that particular point.

Mr. Thompson: A supplementary question. Not only is it our seamen but our farmers and the Canadian people at large who are suffering from this situation.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Thompson: Can the minister assure us there is going to be some immediate action in regard to the trusteeship, or how long is the situation going to continue as it is?

Mr. MacEachen: As I indicated to the Leader of the Opposition, it is my expectation that today I will be receiving a formal communication from the Canadian Labour Congress as to their disposition with respect to the private arrangement. When I have received that formal communication I will then be in a position to proceed with the public trusteeship legislation, I would expect.

[Later:]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet I might tell the house and the Leader of the Opposition that I have received an indication from the Canadian Labour Congress that efforts to secure a voluntary solution to the lakes problem have been unsuccessful.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): In view of the statement by the Minister of Labour to the effect that the Canadian Labour Congress has notified him that there is no disposition to proceed with a private trusteeship plan, may I ask the hon. gentleman how soon we may expect him to proceed with the introduction of legislation for public trusteeship?

Mr. MacEachen: I believe the government is in a position to move at the earliest possible moment. The exact date will depend on arrangements made by the leader of the house and on the consultation he holds.

WHITE PASS AND YUKON RAILROAD—EFFORTS TO SETTLE STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. In view of the international complications of a strike of the craft and shop workers on the White Pass and Yukon Route railroad, I wonder whether the minister has caused any assistance to be given by his officials to those negotiators who are trying to settle this strike, which is very seriously affecting the economy of the Pacific northwest?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I will take the hon. gentleman's question as notice and report to him tomorrow.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I have a related question to ask the minister of northern affairs with respect to the railroad strike in the Yukon, British Columbia and Alaska, of which he is aware. In view of the answer which he gave to my question to him concerning discussions which were being held with officials of the government of the state of Alaska, could he now clarify his answer as reported on page 3208 of Hansard and inform the house whether or not any such discussions have taken place, in view of the fact that it may be coming increasingly important to keep this road open all winter?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): As the hon. member knows, there are a great number of considerations to be borne in mind in dealing with transportation there—considerations of tremendous consequence to Canada. As I have informed him, some five senior officials of various departments who have been charged with holding conversations, not with making policy, have been in the area. Until they report, and until some action is taken by the government, the situation remains unchanged. In other words, these men were sent up there to have conversations and make a report to the government, out of which policy may come. But they cannot create policy.

PENSIONS

REPORTED INTENTION TO INCREASE BLIND AND DISABLED PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the note by the editor appended to a letter to the editor in one of our newspapers correct when it says that the Ottawa government is seeking the necessary provincial co-operation to raise blind and disabled pensions at the same time as the $10 increase in old age pensions?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am sure my hon. friend was present in the house last week when I answered a similar question and advised that this matter is under consultation with the provincial governments at the moment.

Mr. Starr: A supplementary question. Along with this, is the government prepared to grant the request made on behalf of the blind for a specific allowance of at least $25 per month free of means test to help to cover the extra costs arising from blindness?

Miss LaMarsh: I am sure my hon. friend will understand that while matters are under consultation with provincial governments I should not comment further.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. From how many provinces has the minister received a favourable reply with regard to an increase in blind pensions, disabled pensions and old age assistance pensions?

Miss LaMarsh: I do not remember offhand. This was discussed, of course, at the last conference dealing with pensions, and it may be on the agenda for the November meeting. I am not sure whether this has been decided yet.

Mr. Starr: A further supplementary question. Is it the intention of the government to put into effect the increase to the disabled and the blind at the same time as the $10 increase to old age pensioners?

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question. In the event of there being some delay until the federal-provincial conference is held, will it be understood that the increase will be retroactive to the 1st of October?

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker, I do not know that that has happened in the past. I have not looked into it.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LANGLOIS—CLARIFICATION OF EXPRESSION USED IN DEBATE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Langlois) has advised me that he wanted to rise on a question of privilege. Consequently, he now has the floor.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, it will not be very long. It is about an interjection during the speech I made last night. The interjection came from the hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Côté) and the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon), and it had to do with the word "tripotage". They insinuated that I had used that word wrongly and they were not even sure it was in the dictionary.

I used the word "tripotage" in the sense of "speculating". According to the Petit Larousse, here is the meaning of "tripotage": unclean or foul tasting mixture. F.: embezzlement, cheating, scheming, influence trading.

Therefore, I would suggest to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm that he speak up only when he knows what he is talking about.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I must say I do not see any immediate urgency in that so-called question of privilege. Perhaps it is an explanation that could be requested later, but there is no reason to interrupt the orders of the day.

[Mr. Douglas.]

MR. RICARD—ALLEGED INCORRECT ANSWER TO QUESTION ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege.

In the order paper under date of October 2 last, there appeared the following question in my name:

Since the establishment of the agricultural prices stabilization board and up to March 31, 1963, what has been paid as a grant of 25 cents per hundredweight of milk to the operators of each of the following factories:

And the list of various factories follows: I insist on the word "operator" of the factories.

The answer read as follows:

The agricultural stabilization board does not make grants of 25 cents per hundredweight for milk to the operator of any processing plant.

Plants are reimbursed for payments made to individual producers on behalf of the agricultural stabilization board.

The reason I raise the question of privilege is this: it seems that the answer to the question was based on the English version as printed in the English order paper. The word "operator" of a factory is clear for all those who know what a processing plant is. For them, the word "operator" means the producer.

I feel that the answer is not accurate and I would ask my question be automatically put back on the order paper so that it may be answered.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: The matter raised by the hon. member seems to me more in the nature of a complaint than a question of privilege. However, it is within the hon. member's power, jurisdiction and right to replace his question on the order paper.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, is it automatically replaced on the order paper, or do I have to do that?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest that the hon. member do it himself.

Mr. Ricard: I will be doing the work of somebody else because somebody made a mistake.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

HAITI AND CUBA—OFFER OF ASSISTANCE FOLLOWING TORNADOES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister but in his absence may

I direct it to the Minister of Justice, who I assume is leading the government side of the house. Is the government of Canada giving any consideration to offering assistance to Haiti and Cuba which have suffered very grievous damage as the result of tornadoes in the past few days?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has the matter under consideration at the moment.

VIET NAM—INQUIRY AS TO CANADIAN DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre-Andre Boutin (Dorchester): Mr. Speaker, my question was meant for the Secretary of State for External Affairs but, since he is absent, I shall direct it to the Acting Prime Minister.

Now that Washington has decided to discontinue its financial aid to Viet Nam, could the minister give us some information about the present diplomatic relations of Canada with the Vietnamese government?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I shall take the question as notice and bring the matter to my colleague's attention.

TRADE

RUSSIA—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that the Russian-Canadian trade agreement has been signed for over three weeks, would he consider following the example of the minister of trade and commerce in 1960 by tabling in the house that agreement and all the documents that go along with it?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes. It had been my intention to table it today, but I became engaged in these signing ceremonies with the Bulgarian delegation and I did not bring my documents with me. They will be tabled immediately.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): May I ask a supplementary question. Are transcripts of the negotiations between the Canadian wheat board and the Russian negotiators available relating in particular to the possibility of shipping wheat through Churchill? Will the minister make these available for examination?

Mr. Sharp: I intend to table, probably tomorrow, copies of the trade agreement between the Soviet union and Canada and copies of the undertakings in respect of the purchase of wheat. Contracts between the Canadian wheat board and other countries are privileged documents which have never been revealed, and I do not intend to reveal them now.

Mr. Hamilton: May I ask a supplementary question. I know it is not customary to divulge any secret documents. However, I should like to ask whether, under the agreement made with the Russians, the Russians have the right to susbtitute other purchasers of wheat if there is any amount of our grain overdue. In other words have they a clause in the contract or an understanding with the government that if the strike continues they can divert their purchases to another country?

Mr. Sharp: My understanding is that there is in this contract, as there is in all wheat board contracts, a strike clause. I do not think there is any reference to diverting purchases to another country.

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): May I ask a supplementary question. Can the minister tell the house whether those who negotiated the recent trade agreement on behalf of Bulgaria were made fully aware of the tremendous advantages of shipping through the port of Churchill?

Mr. Sharp: I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that partly as a result of the efforts of my hon. friend and partly as a result of the efforts of others of us on this side of the house, the virtues of Churchill are very well known. In so far as these particular negotiations that were concluded today are concerned, the particular points of purchase or the particular ports through which the wheat would be shipped have not yet been discussed. I can assure him that the wheat board, as usual, will make the advantages of shipping through Churchill known to the Bulgarians.

Mr. Korchinski: May I ask a supplementary question. Has the minister any intention of abandoning the port of Churchill, since it is obvious the government has no intention of telling anybody of its advantages?

Mr. Sharp: As I said to one hon. gentleman on the other side the other day, I expect the movement of wheat through Churchill will be at a record this season, greater than ever before in history even when my hon. friend's party was in power.

Mr. Olson: May I ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Simpson: May I ask a supplementary question?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: I must point out that supplementary questions are not in fact recognized according to standing orders. They are building up through customary recognition in this house. When we have six, seven or eight supplementary questions, then I believe it is becoming a technique for asking for information when a question should be asked directly. May I suggest to hon. members that they ask questions directly and not use the supplementary question technique.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that my question is a valid supplementary question arising directly out of the reply the Minister of Trade and Commerce gave. He mentioned that he was not going to reveal the details of the agreement between the Canadian wheat board and the Russian negotiators. I should like to ask him, therefore, if Russia has the privilege of refusing to accept wheat deliveries outstanding if the Soviet union is dissatisfied with the Canadian evaluation of Russian exports to Canada, as was reported in the Globe and Mail a few days ago.

Mr. Sharp: Well, Mr. Speaker, I saw the report to which my hon. friend is referring, and I was puzzled as to what the writer was talking about. As I see the situation it is open to both countries to denounce the treaty at any time; that is a right that both countries have. Of course if the Soviet union want to denounce the trade agreement they can do it, and so can we. This is the situation and always has been in respect of any treaty signed by any two countries.

[Later:]

Mr. Simpson: I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The hon. gentleman has referred to the record year of grain shipments out of Churchill. I assure him we are always pleased to hear this, as we have been in the last five or six years. Is the minister aware, however, that despite the fact that insurance regulations covering shipping out of Churchill do not expire until October 20, there will be no further grain shipments this month due to a lack of further shipping orders?

Mr. Sharp: I thank the hon. member for the information he has given me on this occasion.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

REPORTED SPEECH BY MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, now that we have talked about wheat, we will go on to something else.

[Mr. Simpson.]

I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the fine statements of policy which he made yesterday before the chambers of commerce gathered in Quebec city, and with which I fully agree, could the Minister of National Defence tell us what steps he intends to suggest and take in order that Canada can maintain its political independence, its economic independence and its military independence?

[Text]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I am sure that the answer to this question will become obvious as time passes.

[Later:]

Mr. H. F. Jones (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. member for Trinity—not in his role as Minister of National Defence but rather as incipient finance minister—does his recent excursion into economic affairs last night at Quebec, wherein he represented as an antidote to American takeover—

Mr. Speaker: Please pose your question.

Mr. Jones: I am putting my question.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I submit, on a point of order, that Your Honour's predecessors have ruled on many occasions that ministers may only be questioned on orders of the day about their departmental responsibilities, and it is contrary to the rules of the house to ask ministers questions on extraneous matters.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): In connection with the point of order I am sure that the statement made by the hon. gentleman is not in accordance with the facts, because yesterday the Minister of National Defence gave this country the benefit of his wisdom, and what is being asked is whether what he said represents government opinion, decision, or intention. Surely the house has the right to have the benefit of the wisdom this hon. gentleman made available to all of us.

Mr. Jones: Well, Mr. Speaker, to continue with the question—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Jones: I am speaking on the point of order raised by the hon. member.

Mr. Pickersgill: Then I apologize to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Jones: The hon. member for Trinity made a statement yesterday to the Canadian Chamber of Commerce wherein he recommended certain policies which he said were designed to increase the savings available for investment in this country. That policy is completely contrary to the effects of the Pearson pension plan—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I know the hon. member himself is a student of procedure, and I was hoping he would rephrase his question. But, as a matter of fact, it is well established in this house that ministers may be questioned with regard to their administrative duties, but if a question concerns policy then that is a matter for the government to answer.

Mr. Jones: The simple question I am asking the minister is whether this is a departure in government policy, or is the government adhering to its announced policy as set forth in the Pearson pension plan? This is a very simple question, and a very vital and urgent one for the voters of the country to have answered.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a further word on the point of order, because it seems to me that while the question is a simple one, the point at issue is a very important one as we would never get business of the house done if members could be asked questions about anything that came into someone's mind.

I recall very well an occasion when I was sitting on the other side of the house when I sought to ask Hon. Mr. Browne, who was then a minister without portfolio, a question about a speech he had made with reference to matters of importance in Newfoundland. Exception was taken by the government of the day on the ground that it was not a part of his administrative responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker Michener sustained the government on that occasion, and my question was ruled out of order. I submitted at once to His Honour's decision on the matter, and I submit that that is the proper practice of the house and should be sustained on this occasion.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Speaker, I would be very glad to submit at once wholeheartedly to your ruling, and direct the question to the Acting Prime Minister. Do the views as expressed by the Minister of National Defence yesterday in Quebec represent government policy, or are the views as expressed by the Minister of National Health and Welfare in relation to the Pearson pension plan the views of the government?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there are two things I would like to say in reply to that question. First, I doubt very much, notwithstanding what has been said from the other side, whether the question is in order; and second, the speech speaks for itself.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Bell: Cabinet solidarity.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—INQUIRY AS TO RATIFICATION OF TREATY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I intended to address this question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but in his absence I shall address it to his proxy. My question is based on information concerning the Columbia river treaty which I have received from the United States, because we cannot get any here.

In view of the statement by Mr. Earl Coe, director of the Washington department of conservation, that the prospects for Canadian ratification of the Columbia river treaty have been dimmed by the re-election of Premier W. A. Bennett, would the minister inform the house whether the government is still as optimistic about the progress to be made with this treaty as indicated by the Secretary of State for External Affairs on previous occasions?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs all I can do is draw this question to his attention.

Mr. Herridge: May I ask a supplementary question. Can the Acting Prime Minister inform—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but if the hon. member wishes to pose another question, let him do so. In view of the reply of the minister I do not see how he can originate a supplementary out of it.

Mr. Herridge: I wish to pose another question. In view of reports from Washington in my possession that United States negotiators are proposing to drop the high Arrow from the Columbia river treaty, can the Acting Prime Minister substantiate this information?

Mr. Chevrier: I am not in a position to do that. I have not seen the report. As I said in reply to the main question, since the hon. member considers this a supplementary question, I shall draw it to the attention of my colleague.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

EXTENSION OF BILINGUAL POLICY TO CROWN CORPORATIONS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Could he tell us whether the government intends to have other crown corporations and the various departments of the federal administration take up and put into effect the plan devised in the C.N.R. by Mr. Donald Gordon for the recruiting and promotion of French speaking employees, as well as the methods used by that crown corporation to promote bilingualism on a practical and rational basis?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): I am glad to learn that the hon. member for Three Rivers approves the policy initiated by the C.N.R. concerning bilingualism. With regard to this policy being applied to other crown corporations, I may tell him right away that the matter is under review.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Does the program include the appointof French speaking vice presidents?

Mr. Chevrier: I imagine that the question of the hon. member refers to crown corporations. If such is the case, crown corporations have only appointed presidents up to now and very few vice presidents. If the hon. member refers to C.N.R. vice presidents, I am convinced that C.N.R. authorities intend to increase the number of those vice presidents.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF BENEFITS TO AGRICULTURAL WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Could the minister inform the house whether the government intends giving consideration during the present session to having the Unemployment Insurace Act amended so that unemployment insurance coverage can also be provided for agricultural employees, in accordance with the recommendations of the Gill report?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it the Gill committee recommended the inclusion of farm workers under the Unemployment Insurance Act, provided certain administrative difficulties were cleared up. This matter naturally is being given very careful consideration, as are any proposals before presentation to parliament.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): As a supplementary question, would the minister inform the house whether consideration is also being given to including the employees of tree farmers in any amendment to the legislation, because tree farming is allied to agriculture?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the review of the act will include consideration of all possible classes of employees that might be brought under coverage, and that would apply to this particular category.

INQUIRY AS TO IMPLEMENTATION OF GILL REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the statement made by Mr. C. A. L. Murchison, commissioner of the unemployment insurance commission, at Quebec yesterday, that if certain recommendations of the Gill report were implemented the unemployment insurance fund would be lifted out of the red, can the minister state what are the reasons for the delay in the government implementing such recommendations?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour) Mr. Speaker, there is no delay whatever in implementing the Gill committee report. As my hon. friend knows, it is a very important document that affects the welfare of all insurable employees in Canada, and naturally very careful consideration must be given to it before introducing a measure that would have far reaching effects.

Mr. Martineau: Would the minister convey that information to his commissioner, Mr. Murchison?

LABOUR CONDITIONS

BRANTFORD, ONT.—DESIGNATION AS DISTRESSED AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry. My question arises out of the minister's answers to my questions of September 30 and October 1 concerning the designation of Brantford as a depressed area. I wonder has the minister given this very serious matter further consideration, and is he now prepared to make a statement?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, this matter is continuing to receive consideration, and I have nothing to add at the moment to what has already been said.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON UNIVERSITY SECURITY INVESTIGATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Has the minister received a request from the national federation of Canadian university students seeking a government statement regarding on-campus security investigations and, if so, will the government make a statement to parliament on this problem?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it is a fact that I did see a report in the press of a discussion that had taken place at a meeting of the federation of students, but so far as I am concerned I have received no representations from them at this time.

WORLD FAIR

INQUIRY AS TO OPENING BY HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbiniere): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Can he tell the house whether he is aware of a certain rumour to the effect that Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II would preside at the official opening of the world exhibition in 1967?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I have heard many rumours until now about the world exhibition, but this is a new one. However, I shall report the matter to the authorities of the exhibition.

INQUIRY AS TO REPLACEMENT OF DIRECTOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Is it the intention of the government to soon replace Mr. Claude Robillard, who resigned as managing director of the world fair?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, when Mr. Claude Robillard has been replaced, I shall make an announcement in the house.

FISHERIES

NORTH PACIFIC TREATY —REQUEST FOR TABLING OF COMMUNIQUE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I would like to pose a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Will the minister, when he makes the statement which he promised for tomorrow on the conference recently held in Tokyo regarding the extension of the north Pacific fisheries treaty, consider tabling the joint communique which was issued when that meeting adjourned, with a view to having it printed in Hansard?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, as I informed the house on Friday last I expect to make a complete statement tomorrow. The chairman of the Canadian delegation is expected to arrive in Ottawa this evening, and I want to discuss the situation with him. I will take into consideration the question of tabling the joint statement that was made following the meeting in Tokyo.

HOUSING

REPORTED REDUCTION IN LOANS AVAILABLE FROM BANKS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue.

Since in 1960 chartered banks had practically ceased granting the usual housing loans provided for in the National Housing Act—they authorized only four such loans in 1962—does the minister know if they now have a more liberal policy in this field?

[Text]

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the National Housing Act has no jurisdiction over the interest rate on loans by the chartered banks of this country. This is controlled by the Bank Act, which limits their interest to 6 per cent, as against the National Housing Act ceiling of 6¼ per cent.

Mr. Speaker: May I point out to hon. members that it is now four o'clock, and I have a line-up—I use that word advisedly—of at least 15 questions, some of them from hon. members who have already asked two or three questions. May I suggest to hon. members that if we are to accomplish any work at all today perhaps some of these questions could and should be put on the order paper, and the others might be delayed until tomorrow.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, in view of your statement and your having brought to the attention of hon. members the matter of questions, may I point out that Your Honour did not bring to the attention of the house the fact that the ministers took up one hour in the statements they made in this house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

IMMIGRATION

BULGARIA—INQUIRY AS TO ASSISTANCE TO IMMIGRANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Now that Canada and Bulgaria have signed a most favoured nation trade treaty, I am wondering whether the minister will assist the entry into Canada of citizens of Bulgaria who are prevented by administrative procedures from coming to Canada at the present time?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think that is a very appropriate question for the order paper.

AIR TRANSPORT

REPORTED STATEMENT RESPECTING FARE REDUCTIONS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Transport. Could he give us information as to the position the government intends to take concerning the recent statement made by Mr. William Hildred, the general manager of the international air transport association in Rome, to the effect that tariff reduction would solve air transport problems?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I shall take this question as notice.

FINANCE

REPORTED STATEMENT BY MINISTER RESPECTING BALANCE OF PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance regarding a statement in respect of the imbalance of trade and payments between the United States and Canada. The statement I refer to is a Canadian Press news article headed "U.S. charge denied by Gordon". May I preface this question with a few remarks taken from the article:

> Gordon became concerned by a New York Times report published Monday—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, with the greatest respect to those wolves who are trying to howl me down, I did say that I wanted to preface this question, which I think is important, with a short quotation, and I should have thought that I could be heard. I should like to preface the question with a short remark.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Woolliams: It is a remark made by the Minister of Finance. He said:

> "We are not trying to eliminate the deficit with the U.S. altogether," Gordon said. "We are not trying to resolve our payments deficit on a bilateral basis only. We believe in multilateralism as strenuously as always".

Is that the policy of the government and, if so, how does he reconcile that policy with the statement made by Robert Roosa, the under secretary of the United States treasury?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that is the policy of the government, and I do not have to reconcile it with anybody else's statement.

CANADA COUNCIL

INQUIRY AS TO UNIVERSITY SCHOLARSHIPS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice, in his capacity of Acting Prime Minister. Could the minister tell the house if Dr. Trueman, chairman of the Canada Council, was accurate when he told the Rotary club of Toronto that the government plans to grant important scholarships to students wishing to obtain their B.A. or B.Sc. degrees?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): With all due deference to my hon. friend, it seems to me that the question is not pressing, and should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Pigeon: On a point of order. I have great regard for the opinion of the Minister of Justice, but here I find myself at variance with him.

NATIONAL MUSEUM

STATEMENT ON REPORTED RESIGNATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Port Arthur asked me a question concerning resignations from the museum staff. I have prepared a statement, but as it is about two pages in length I wonder whether he would agree, and if I could obtain consent, to have it printed in Hansard?

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreeable to the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Churchill: On a point of order. Mr. Speaker, the printing of statements in Hansard, the contents of which are unknown to the house, would establish a precedent which I think should not be established at this time. If it is an official document, then that is a different thing; it can be put in as an appendix. But if it is just an answer to a question, then it should be tabled so that it is there available for the hon. member who asked the question. It should not be printed in Hansard.

Mr. Laing: That being the case, Mr. Speaker, I will read the statement.

Over the past months letters of resignation have been received from four senior officers, including the director of the natural history branch. In resigning, two of these officers indicated that they wished to return to university teaching, another to take up a particularly attractive research appointment in Mexico, and the director to accept a professorship at the University of Toronto and a senior appointment at the Royal Ontario museum. There was not, in short, any common purpose in the resignations. While I regret the departure of these gifted scientists, I think it is a healthy thing that there is a frequent interchange of senior personnel between the museum and the universities, which are both part of the academic community. I would like to acknowledge publicly the important contributions which Dr. Russell, Dr. MacNeish, Dr. McFeat and Dr. Oschinsky have made to the scholarly work of the museum, and to wish them every success in their future careers.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF APPOINTMENT OF DIRECTOR OF HUMAN HISTORY BRANCH

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): At this time, Mr. Speaker, and as part of the interchange

I mentioned earlier, I would like to announce the appointment of Dr. Richard Glover, professor of history at the University of Manitoba, as director of the human history branch of the museum. Dr. Glover, who will take up his appointment at the beginning of the new year, will be responsible for the development of the museum of Canadian history as a new component of the national museum.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

REQUEST FOR REDUCED RATES FOR MILITARY PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport in connection with a request which was submitted to T.C.A. by Canadian servicemen. Could the latter benefit from reduced fares when they are on leave?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that this question be put on the order paper.

PUBLIC SERVICE

OTTAWA—RESIDENCE REQUIREMENT IN ADVERTISEMENT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Alexis Caron (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State, as the minister responsible for the civil service commission in the house.

A competition poster published by the civil service commission concerning a position in Ottawa states that the applicants must live in Ontario. That actually eliminates all people from Hull and the vicinity. Therefore, I would ask the Secretary of State to kindly inform the civil service commission that that sort of thing was done away with a long time ago and should not be brought back.

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I am sure the civil service commission will take account of the observations just made by my hon. friend from Hull.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INQUIRY AS TO FRENCH REPORTING AND TRANSLATION STAFFS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, my question concerns you directly, but may I have it relayed through the Secretary of State. In view of the problems which have been arising in the last days in various parliamentary committees, would it be possible to consider having the house provided with its own complete staff of translators and reporters, instead of depending on the bureau for translations on the one hand, and on the division of French debates reporters on the other hand?

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I am well aware of the difficulties to which the hon. gentleman has referred, and I am seeking to do everything that can possibly be done to meet them. I hope to be able to make a statement to the house very shortly.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

HAINES ROAD—INQUIRY AS TO IMPOSITION OF TOLLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources relating to the so-called Haines cut-off. Is it the hon. gentleman's intention to institute a system of tolls on this road to cover the cost of keeping it open on a year round basis?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): No consideration has been given to such a proposal.

OLD AGE SECURITY

PROVISION FOR INCREASE IN AMOUNT OF PAYMENT

Hon. Judy LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-98, to amend the Old Age Security Act.

Mr. Monteith: I wonder whether the minister has a statement of any kind to make at this time?

Miss LaMarsh: I made a statement at the resolution stage. The bill is now before the house, as it has been for several days. It consists of only two clauses, the first giving the increase and the second dealing with the method of financing, and I suggest that in order to leave sufficient time to allow hon. members opposite to say whatever they wish to say about the bill there is no necessity for me to make a further statement on this occasion.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): I agree with the minister's comment that this is a brief bill containing only two clauses, the first indicating the increase in the amount as of October 1 and the second providing the means by which this increase is to be financed.

[Mr. Marcoux.]

I feel I cannot let the occasion pass without repeating a statement I made at an earlier stage to the effect that we, on this side of the house, had advocated this particular move —the bringing in of this bill separately—as far back as July 18. I repeat, also, that if this had been done at that time, and if our advice had been followed, the recipients of old age security benefits would have received this $10 increase considerably earlier. We are pleased to see that the government has now adopted our proposal and dissociated this part of the pension plan from the over-all Pearson plan, something which should have been done in the first place.

This is something which was promised by the government during the election campaign. I am convinced it is being put into effect, now, only because of prompting from this side of the house. In my opinion this whole question has been mishandled in much the same way as was the budget. First of all, the government came out with a grand scheme in a hurry, and then it backtracked under pressure. I accuse the minister of doing the same thing now.

Clause 2 of the bill deals with the financing of this proposal—the levying of 4 per cent of a taxpayer's taxable income for the year to a maximum of $120. In speaking on the resolution stage, the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) said the total deficit in the fund as at March 31, 1964 would be $106 million. He went on to point out that in the year 1964-65 there would probably be receipts from the new tax amounting to some $93 million and that about $116 million would be paid out. However, some increase in revenue from the sales tax on building materials and supplies would probably wipe out any deficit in that year. Thus, it seems to me that for a year and a half hence, at least, taking the figures of the parliamentary secretary as accurate, there will be a deficit in this fund of $106 million. The hon. gentleman gave estimates of certain increases in revenue and I ask him whether he had taken into consideration the natural increase to be expected in the numbers of those over 70 who would be receiving old age security payments a year and a half or two years from now. My main criticism is simply this. The government said they were going to increase old age security payments without any increase in taxes. This is not so.

Mr. Grafftey: Broken promises.

Mr. Monteith: They are increasing taxes $93 million, according to the parliamentary secretary's own estimate, in the year 1964-65 and roughly $100 million a year thereafter. They no sooner got into power than they clamped a sales tax on building materials and supplies and now we have a 1 per cent increase in personal income tax up to a maximum of $120. This may not be the time to do it, but with all these increases in taxes I certainly must predict an over-all record budgetary deficit. However, that can be discussed at some time in the future.

We are anxious to get this legislation through, and we have been ever since it came before the house. We are more than happy to support the bill. I suggest very forcefully that if it had not been for the actions of the Leader of the Opposition on July 18 the older citizens of Canada would not be receiving this increase even as of the late date of October 1, 1963.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who has just spoken seems to wish to leave the impression with the House of Commons and the people of Canada that certain statements made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) are the reason that the $10 increase is now being proposed—

Mr. Monteith: Made in this house.

Mr. Olson:—although it was originally linked with the Canada pension plan introduced earlier this year. I should like to suggest that perhaps some of the problems encountered by the government in their negotiations with the provincial governments may have had a great bearing on bringing in this increase separately. I think that some of the very real problems they did have in discussing the over-all pension plan with the provinces should have been anticipated and that negotiations should have been carried on long before the resolution was even introduced in the house.

We know, of course, that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh), along with her colleagues, got caught in their 60 days of decision propaganda, if you want to call it that. Because of the 60 days of decision, as they prefer to call them, I think there was undue haste in bringing in the over-all Canada pension plan. I believe they have now come to realize that the pension plan is of such magnitude it is absolutely necessary that some agreement be reached with the provinces rather than bringing it in in an ill-conceived way, and this realization should give them some kind of guidance in trying to convince the electorate these things can be done quickly.

We support the bringing in of the $10 increase separately, and while it may be another violation of Liberal election propaganda I personally think it is desirable that the amount of additional taxes necessary to pay for it should be fastened right to the bill. I say that because I think there is growing concern in Canada that political parties have on a number of occasions tried to outbid each other in offering benefits without bothering to tell the people how much it is going to cost them. Now that we have legislation before us offering increased benefits, with the bill for these benefits attached to it, perhaps this will sober the response of the electorate to those political parties who offer benefits, and then worry about paying for them with deficits such as we have seen in the last four or five years.

I do not wish to take a great deal of time. I believe that all parties in the house can support the bill and I do not think there is going to be any division, because members voting for it will also have to assume the responsibility of making provision for the collecting of the money to pay for these benefits.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak briefly on second reading of the bill, not to repeat the arguments that were advanced at the resolution stage but to develop a point of principle which was touched on but not elaborated upon by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I do not refer to the principle embodied in clause 1 of the bill. This clause, as members realize, provides for an increase in the pension to $75 a month. With that proposal we and all other members of the house, I understand, are heartily in accord. We have expressed as clearly as we can our approval of this move. It is our view that this matter should be separated from the complexities of the Canada pension plan and dealt with promptly. Indeed, we think it should have been dealt with earlier than it has been.

However, Mr. Speaker, it is the principle involved in clause 2 of the bill that I wish to discuss. I wish to say that in our view the principle in clause 2 is wrong and ought to be changed. That clause deals with the question of how the additional moneys required for the increased pension should be raised.

It is our opinion that the method proposed in clause 2 of the bill is wrong in principle, regressive, and fails to take advantage of the possibility of giving a dynamic stimulus to the economy which is inherent in the proposed pension increase. The proposal in clause 2, as members will realize in reading the bill, is to increase the rate of tax on all taxable income to 4 per cent instead of the present rate of 3 per cent, and to raise the ceiling on the tax to $120 in place of the $90 under the present act.

We say that, assuming the decision of the government not to add to the prospective deficit, the proper way to raise the funds necessary to finance the increase, assuming as the government does the necessity of doing so, would be to remove the ceiling and leave the tax at the same rate of 3 per cent. By removing the ceiling, now $90, and $120 in the proposal, roughly enough money would be raised—I have inquired into this—to pay the whole of the increase without any other addition to taxes.

If our plan were adopted the effect would be that the increase would be paid by taxpayers whose taxable income exceeds $3,000 a year or whose actual income, to take an average case, is in the neighbourhood of $5,000 a year. Our proposal would relieve income taxpayers below that figure of any additional burden. We believe this solution would be economically wise and socially just.

When this measure was first introduced in the house in 1951 by a previous administration the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, the same hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre who sits in the house today, made these remarks. I am not going to quote extensively from what he said, but as found on page 397 of Hansard, second session, 1951, he said:

> I refer in particular to his statement—
>
> The statement by the minister of finance.
> —that this 2 per cent personal income tax is to have a ceiling of $60 a year. That means that anyone who has taxable income—and I emphasize the words "taxable income"; that is, income over and above his personal and family exemptions—of more than $3,000 a year, will pay no old age security tax on the portion of his income that is above that $3,000. I regard that situation as grossly unfair. It means that the bulk of the burden of financing the old age security plan will be met through the sales tax on everybody, including those who cannot afford to pay it, and through the income tax on the middle income group, those in the brackets where they have taxable income of between $2,000 and $3,000 a year.

Later on page 398 of Hansard, the hon. member is reported as saying:

> The Minister of Finance comes along today and tells us that the principle of excluding upper income has been included in this plan, with the result, as I say, that people who have over $3,000 of taxable income will not pay any old age security tax on that portion of their income above $3,000 a year. I think that is socially and economically wrong. I think it is completely indefensible, and for my part it will have to be fought as hard as we can fight it when we get to that part of the bill.

I venture to repeat what the hon. member then said made good sense. If it made good sense then, it makes even better sense today, and for this reason. Placing the burden of this additional and necessary tax on the lower and middle income groups and relieving the upper income groups by maintaining the $120 ceiling is a regressive and uneconomic measure. The increase in old age pensions is not only a belated measure of justice to older people who are in need, it is also needed to give a fillip to the economy. This $10 will be spent largely by old age pensioners on consumer goods in small retail stores. This will be a dynamic impetus to a stagnating economy. Typical of this government, what they give with one hand they take away with the other. The imposition of the additional 1 per cent tax and the maintenance of the ceiling means that, in effect, the tax burden will be borne entirely by the people in the lower and middle income brackets. The taxpayers in the higher income brackets will go free. It is the people in the lower and middle income brackets, Mr. Speaker, who, it can be assumed, would spend their income in purchasing consumer goods. The effect of this tax, as proposed by the government, will be to reduce the purchasing power of this lower and middle income group, thereby undoing the good that is done, economically speaking, by the increasing of the old age pension.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this difference between the government and the members of this party represents a fundamental cleavage of opinion on principle. Apparently the Liberal party does not see the power of taxation as we do, as an instrument of social justice for the redistribution of income. We believe that social advances, such as increased and more adequate old age pensions and a national health plan are not only important in themselves, they are also a means for allowing the well-to-do to contribute their proportionate share to the provision of essential services for those who cannot afford to pay for them themselves. In other words, measures of social security should be financed in accordance with ability to pay. It should not be a principle, as we have it embodied in this particular act, that the well-to-do should be relieved of the burden and those in the lower brackets should be asked to assume that burden. In our opinion this is contrary to sound, fundamental principles.

To put the matter as simply as I can, the proposal which we make would put the burden of supplying the $115 million which is required upon those whose taxable income exceeds $3,000 a year and whose actual income, in most cases, would be in excess of $5,000 a year. The government proposal, on the other hand, is that the burden shall be borne by the taxpayers below the taxable income level of $3,000 or below the average income of $5,000. I have taken the trouble to ascertain that the proposal which I make, namely of removing the ceiling altogether and keeping the tax at the same rate would, financially speaking, produce roughly the same result.

I should like to illustrate the point I am making by referring to hon. members of this house. Under the government's proposal, their contribution to this increase in the old age pension, or their total payment towards old age pensions, would be $120 because they would be able to take advantage of the ceiling proposed. Assuming they are married and without other dependants, under the proposal I make members of this house, with $12,000 of income and assuming $2,000 of deductions, would have to pay 3 per cent or $300. I merely give this as an illustration of the fact that those in the upper income brackets could well afford to assume this burden. Is there any member in this house who does not think it would be fairer if the increased tax required for this increase in old age pensions were paid by those who, like the members of this house, are in a position to have a higher income rather than that it should be paid by their constituents who, under similar circumstances, would have incomes of under $5,000 a year?

In conclusion, may I repeat that we in this party warmly and enthusiastically support that part of the bill which gives the overdue $10 to old age pensioners. However, we regret, and we will oppose, the method of paying for the increase proposed by this government. I refer, in other words, to the method which puts the burden on the lower and middle income taxpayers. We will oppose the exemption of the higher level of income from the burden of this tax. We say the method is economically indefensible and socially unjustifiable. If it is not too late, I appeal to the government to reconsider the method of financing this particular increase.

[Translation]

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to speak at great length this afternoon but I should like to direct a question to the minister.

The other day I asked the same question but without any success. Yet, I am sure all hon. members are interested.

When will the hon. lady give a frank and direct reply to my question, which is really very simple?

When, on July 18 last, the minister introduced a plan here to establish a universal pension, was she or was she not aware of the plans of the Quebec premier, Mr. Lesage?

In my opinion, it is important that the house should get a straightforward answer from the minister today.

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, many things have been said about this legislation amending the Old Age Security Act. I think that to reiterate that we are happy to see that the government intends to increase old age pensions, would be just a repetition of what everybody said before. Moreover, to state again that, on the other hand, we are much less happy, and even disagreeably surprised at the government's tax increase, would also be mere repetition.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this bill brings up the old age pension from $65 to $75, but we may wonder whether the tax which is increased at the same time as the old age pension, will help that whole group of people who are not yet 70 and who will have to pay it all their lives?

We are helping a group of people over 70, but those who are working hard to earn their living will have their taxes increased under the same legislation.

I wonder, Mr. Speaker, why this government did not find the opportunity, or did not think it advisable to introduce two bills, that is one to increase old age pensions and the other to increase taxes. Then, we would have been able to let the first one pass and to fight the other. But, under the circumstances, the government puts us more or less before the alternative of either rejecting the old age pension increase or accepting higher taxes. We have to choose the package deal; we cannot agree to the first proposal and reject the other.

Mr. Speaker, I think that this is a regular practice with the system under which we live. When there is a question of helping, of taking steps that are called for, we also find rising taxes and measures being taken which the people can only disapprove.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh) should have this bill amended, more particularly because taxes have risen so considerably of late, and see that they are not increased again following the other bills which will be passed.

I also appeal to the Minister of National Health and Welfare to withdraw clause 2 of this bill so as not to increase taxes at the same time.

You may wonder how to finance the bill. Mr. Speaker, all our legislation is connected with one and the same matter, how to finance social legislation passed by the house? At this time, as always before, it is done by increasing taxes.

We will have an amendment to move to clause 2. Amendments were made before to other clauses on other bills. As far as this one is concerned, we want to explain it right now. It might perhaps be easier to accept for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon).

It concerns another amount of $57 million or $307 million, as the Minister of National Health and Welfare said the other day. We ask that it be financed by the Bank of Canada and not by taxing the small wage earners, workers, farmers, etc. We think it can be done. Thus a worker would not be taxed more between 20 and 70, that is during 50 years of his life, taking the chance that he might or might not draw the old age pension.

Mr. Speaker, we want to amend article 2 in such a way because we believe that, even if our social legislation is being improved on the one hand, on the other our whole economic system has to bear the consequences because taxes and prices go up, which brings inflation to our country.

Mr. Speaker, we want to say that although we are in favour of increasing the old age pension we object to a tax increase at the same time. We are disappointed that the minister did not deem it advisable to consider the suggestions made in the house the other day. Votes were taken and a large number of members voted to make the old age pension retroactive to last April 8; others voted to lower the age limit to 65 and 60. We would have liked the Minister of National Health and Welfare to take those suggestions into consideration. We hope that she will do so before long and agree to improve that legislation by lowering the age limit to 65 and 60 for all, without any means test.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, there is a question I should like to ask before the house goes into committee.

I would appreciate it if the minister were to give it a perfectly direct answer, and I would remind her that everything here in this house is taken down, so that her reply will not be subject to a different interpretation.

Why do the government and the minister refuse to increase pensions from the age of 65? Why does the government also refuse to increase pensions for the blind and the disabled?

I feel that amounts to discrimination on the part of the government and its leader, who are wholly responsible for it.

I would ask the minister to tell us why such discrimination is being resorted to by the government toward the other government pensioners.

Mr. Robert Beaule (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question?

[Text]

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker, with respect to—

Mr. Aiken: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker; before the minister speaks I think it should be pointed out that she will close the debate.

[Mr. Gregoire.]

Mr. Speaker: I understand the Minister of Finance wished to secure the floor.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I just wish to say a brief word in reply to the points made by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin). I thought his main point was that there should be a steeper progression in the rates of personal income taxes, and this should be introduced in so far as this particular item is concerned. I do not mean to put words into his mouth that perhaps he did not intend, but I think he suggested that in this particular case the ceiling should be removed, which would have the result of a steeper rate of progression.

Mr. Brewin: No, the same rate all the way.

Mr. Gordon: Well, the net result would be—

Mr. Howard: Better consult your advisers again.

Mr. Gordon: This is something I think I can handle myself, thank you. The net result in this case would be that it would have the effect of changing the amount of taxes at all levels.

I fully appreciate that there are arguments in favour of a steeper progression in the rate of personal income taxes, but as all hon. members know, there are also arguments being advanced each day of the week before the royal commission on taxation in favour of a smoother rate of progression, and it is argued that the present rates are a deterrent to expansion and incentive. I agree with my hon. friend from Greenwood regarding the ability to pay of those in the higher income brackets, although some people in those brackets feel they are now taxed as high as they would like to be.

I am not arguing the point; I am merely saying that there are two points of view, and I am not prepared to say at this stage whether I agree with one argument or the other. I would not wish to reach a conclusion until the royal commission has made its report, and I might say that the sooner the royal commission reports, the better pleased we will all be.

I am not at all sure, and I will go further than that and say I do not believe that, with regard to this particular item, it would be wise to make a change along the lines suggested by the hon. member for Greenwood. If there is a case that can be made for changes in the present progression of personal income taxes, then I think that should be done in connection with the whole structure of personal income tax rates, and not with this particular item which deals with old age security.

Old Age Security

I have some reservations as to whether over a long period of years this particular segregation between the old age security fund and the consolidated revenue fund is necessarily the best arrangement for all time. However, I did not think this was the time to make a change. I think it is reasonable to expect that people who will be asked to pay in this period roughly the equivalent of this particular increase in the old age security benefit will inevitably relate the additional tax they will have to pay, or some of them will, to the additional benefits they will receive from this measure.

As I say, there may be a good case for a complete review of the whole personal income tax structure and all the other tax structures that are now in effect. But I would not like to see this particular measure used in a way which in my opinion could easily provoke a feeling of opposition by those people who would be inclined to relate what they were asked to pay, in terms of additional taxes, to what they will expect to receive some day in the form of an increased payment under the Old Age Security Act. As the hon. member for Greenwood pointed out, a man with a gross income of $12,000, who under this bill would be paying an additional $30, or a total of $120, would under the proposal made by the hon. member pay $300. So he would be paying an extra $180.

Mr. Brewin: He could afford it.

Mr. Gordon: He could probably afford to pay four or five times that much, but I am not arguing that point. I am saying that some people would relate one thing to the other, and for the benefit of getting an extra $10 a month at age 70 he would be being asked to pay $15 a month from now on. I think this would not sit too well with some people who might not relate it to the whole structure of the income tax rates. Because I do not think it would be wise to restructure the income tax rates on this particular point, I do not think it would be wise to accept the hon. member's proposal.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the minister a question? Does he not think that the people who would object would be a relatively small and perhaps rather selfish minority?

Mr. Gordon: I think they would be a minority. Whether they would be small or selfish, I am not prepared to say.

Mr. Brewin: Try.

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief in my remarks because I am sure all hon. members are anxious to have the bill pass. I would like to ask the minister, and through her the government, whether she would consider making an additional allowance to widows, widowers, spinsters, bachelors and those who are living in homes where only one person is drawing assistance. I think we are all aware of the fact that whether people are renting or own their own homes, the taxes or the rent amount to about the same figure. They pay taxes or rent, hydro, maintenance, insurance and the many other expenses involved in living, and these amount to at least $50 a month. Therefore these people are left with $15 or $25 a month with which to buy groceries and the other necessities of life.

Sweepstakes

I think we all agree, also, that although two cannot live as cheaply as one, two can buy more economically than one.

Mr. Ian Grant Wahn (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all of us welcome the unusual harmony and agreement prevailing amongst all hon. members of the house on the proposed $10 increase in the universal old age pension. We have been told that the cost annually of this increase will be in the neighbourhood of $116 million. Because this is a large sum of money perhaps I will be excused if I take just a few minutes to review the principles which justify this increase and also the record of old age pensions since their inception in 1950.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the hon. member a question? Would the hon. member be so kind as to keep his eye on the clock?

Mr. Wahn: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could call it five o'clock and continue after the private members' hour.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the minister? I think he has time.

Mr. Wahn: I would not wish the debate to be closed off, Mr. Speaker, until I have had an opportunity to continue my remarks.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock the house will proceed with the business on the order paper, namely private members' bills.

SWEEPSTAKES

LEGISLATION TO ESTABLISH HOSPITAL SWEEPSTAKES BOARD

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-24, to provide for the establishment of a hospital sweepstakes board.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in introducing this bill I follow in the footsteps of many hon. members before me, some of whom in the past did a great deal of work and undertook a great deal of research on the subject of lotteries and sweepstakes. This bill is somewhat similar to the one introduced a year ago by the then hon. member for Calgary South. The main purpose of this bill is to establish in Canada a national sweepstakes board to manage, run and control sweepstakes in Canada. I added the words "to manage and control sweepstakes in Canada" because in many facets of our life in Canada today we have, although they might not be called sweepstakes, what are certainly huge lotteries, gambling by tickets, and so on. One has only to look around to realize that this is a fact. In fact, Mr. Speaker, you can now play bingo when sitting at home watching the television. This is an interesting form of gambling, to some extent.

Throughout Canada I think there is a wide demand that the federal government establish once and for all a sweepstakes board and that the function of this board be to set up a national sweepstake in Canada. One could go back and read all the press clippings of responsible groups which are in favour of such a board being established. I have here a newspaper clipping which states that the federation of Canadian mayors and municipalities passed a resolution in favour of a national lottery. From time to time Gallup polls on this question have been taken. A recent one showed that 82 per cent of Canadians were in favour of a national sweepstake. A poll taken by a well-known paper in the province of Quebec, La Presse, showed that of 98,000 people polled only 149 were against the establishment of a sweepstake. Two years ago, I think it was, a group of women took it upon themselves to campaign across Canada in order to determine whether or not a national sweepstake had universal appeal. They covered an area of something like 12,000 miles, talked to a huge number of people, received some 300,000 signatures, and at no time met anyone who was strongly opposed to the establishment of a national sweepstake. The Canadian Chamber of Commerce has passed resolutions endorsing the principle outlined in this bill. Nearly all the Canadian labour unions have also endorsed the establishment of a national sweepstake.

We hear from time to time that too much gambling is a bad thing and will ruin the moral fibre of the people. What bothers me about this is actually the converse—a continuation of gambling, raffles and bingos which, according to the Criminal Code, are directly contrary to law enacted by this house. Yet raffles, bingos and ticket draws go on. People more or less come to regard the law relating to gambling as something to pay no attention to, because there is no meaning to it and it would not be enforced in any case. We also see from time to time, as we have this fall, a crackdown on Irish sweepstake tickets, and a certain number of people are arrested for selling them. But the moral fibre of the nation is receiving more harm from the continual disregard of this problem by the law enforcement officers of the country and the attorneys general of the various provinces. And we are not changing the law. We are letting young people grow up to disregard the laws of the land. We are bringing them up in an environment which teaches them how to disregard the law. And no one will do anything to correct it. To me this is a matter of prime importance. We here, as legislators, should be prepared, if that is the case, either to enforce the laws or to change them, and I firmly believe that this particular law should be changed. I could use the old saying that 100,000 people cannot be wrong, because nearly every person in Canada gambles in one form or another. The wide appeal of raffles, the wide appeal of bingos—

Mr. Winkler: They certainly gambled when they elected this government.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): My hon. friend says that they gambled when they elected the present government, and they certainly did. But the odd thing about that, Mr. Speaker, is this. We western farmers, who gamble every day of every season in our lives, have certainly shown that a little experience in gambling pays off, and we use our judgment perhaps a little more wisely than others in other parts of the country, because of that experience. However, I am getting sidetracked a little.

This hypocrisy in Canada which has grown up with regard to sweepstakes and lotteries of all kinds must be stopped. We must have the power to act and implement legislation to establish a national lottery or sweepstakes plan. We hear talk of huge prizes and of people who are lucky enough to win on sweepstakes. Both last year and this year the Calgary stampede raffled a $50,000 gold brick, and the lucky winner was chosen by means of a ticket drawn out of a box, a hat, or whatever other container it was. The only difference between this type of lottery and a sweepstake is that in a sweepstake horses help decide the winner; they decide who wins the first prize, the second prize and the third prize. But there is no real difference between this and a $50,000 gold brick raffled in the city of Calgary to promote the Calgary stampede, a very worth-while cause.

But, Mr. Speaker, surely we can make even better use of money than this. We sometimes think of ourselves in this country as being too righteous; that we live a very sacred life and should not indulge in this sort of gambling and risk our last dollar in the hope that we will be the lucky winner of a $50,000 gold brick. I ask the people who feel that if this legislation is implemented it will decay the moral fibre of the country: Does it harm the moral fibre of the country if the government raises money from horse racing, that is now legalized or from the sale of alcohol, that is now legalized? Premier Manning, the premier of the province of Alberta, knows where the blow will hurt less, and when he needs money he taxes the people accordingly. I am sure that many people in Alberta realize this. It does not bother him when he increases the percentage the provincial government will get from the sale of alcohol and other taxes in that province.

I think we should take some action on this problem. Much has been said about the Irish sweepstakes and a number of articles have recently been printed on the subject. I think the former member for Vancouver-Kingsway put some facts on the record some time ago; in fact on June 23, 1961. According to Hansard—and the source of this information was direct from the management of the Irish sweepstakes—he stated that the Irish sweepstakes was the largest in operation and had been in operation for some 97 years. It has paid out in prize money a total of some £117 million. In addition to the prizes some £48 million went to Irish hospitals.

I am rounding these figures out, Mr. Speaker, but in bringing them before the house again the question is certainly pointed up that money can be raised in this way for worth-while purposes. It really does not matter what we think; people are going to continue to wager. People are going to continue to take a risk. It is our very instinct to do so, and even though we outlaw gambling at the present time in this country, people still wager. A few years ago I remember reading in the newspaper that New Zealand, a country with something like two and a half millions of population, was very disturbed by its currency losses due to no lottery being operated there. They were losing money to Australia because of this urge to gamble, and to keep money at home they decided to implement their own lottery scheme. It proved such a success that to some extent they were embarrassed by it. I should just like to read this article from the Ottawa Journal of June 26, 1963:

> New Zealand's national lottery has reached its century with the 100th drawing, a year and a half after it was established.
> In that time it has settled down to become a basic fact of national life.
>
> At first the lottery was such a sensational success that sellers were unable to keep pace with the demand. Tickets were rationed and drawings were held twice a week.
>
> With time, the demand has become more stabilized. Drawings are held about once a week. Competition from overseas lotteries, at first almost extinguished to the benefit of New Zealand exchange funds, has been renewed in some measure.

The article goes on to say:

> Reviewing results of the first 100 lotteries, Sir Leon noted that $9 million had been paid in prizes to 180,000 winners. The government had received $1,875,000 in tax and ticket sellers had been paid the same amount as commission. After allowing for advertising and other expenses, some $5,400,000 had been available for distribution to good causes.

Some members on the government side may think that $5 million is a small amount of money but, surely, it is an amount which would go well toward providing hospital beds for the needy, for example. I suggest it could provide many worth-while and needed services for the benefit of this country.

I do not intend to go into detail as to how I believe this proposal could be implemented or how I think it should be run. The bill provides clearly for the establishment of a board to manage and operate a national sweepstake. Bills have been presented to the house seeking to amend the Criminal Code so as to allow provinces to set up their own lotteries or sweepstakes. I, personally, think it would be better to have a national sweepstake board controlled federally, rather than to run sweepstakes on a provincial basis. I think it is time, especially in view of the fact that two provinces have voted in favour of the establishment of provincial lotteries, that this federal parliament took action in this regard before the pressure builds up in the provinces to such an extent that the federal government gives in and allows provincial governments to run their own sweepstakes. In my opinion this would not be as good for Canada generally, because there would be a continual shift of money from provinces which did not run sweepstakes into provinces that did. A provincial government which was short of money or which needed a little more revenue for its hospital or medical care plan would, no doubt, decide to hold another lottery or two, in other words to tax citizens of other provinces, and this, I believe would be harmful. This would be an argument against the suggestion that the Criminal Code be amended so as to allow lotteries to operate on a provincial basis.

I think a national sweepstake in Canada would curtail the amount of money which flows out of this country every year in connection with the purchase of sweepstake tickets abroad. To some extent it would be likely to improve our balance of payments position, a subject about which we hear a great deal. Most of the prizes would be retained in Canada. With regard to the moral fibre of our people, I think it would actually be improved because they would grow up having respect for the laws of the nation, not learning to disrespect them. The people of Canada, by their willingness to purchase lottery tickets, have shown that they are in favour of this method of raising money, one might say, for worthy purposes. Perhaps it would be in order if I added this, too: we were dealing at five o'clock with a 1 per cent increase in our taxation to cover the cost of an additional $10 pension. I believe it is appropriate to mention that here is one way of raising money which the government might well examine closely with a view to taking the initial step of setting up a sweepstake board through which a sweepstake could be managed, run and controlled for the benefit of Canadians all across this country.

Mr. J. J. Greene (Renfrew South): We must all be struck by the similarity of thought shown in this bill as compared with the bill brought in on Thursday of last week by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon). I think I was able to point out to the house at that time that this was not an original idea. A politician or financier bankrupt of any other ideas as to how to raise funds might, naturally, turn to this method of doing so which was conceived originally by one Casanova in France. At the time the original bill was brought in by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm I envisaged that this measure, as so often happens, might come to be popularly known by the name of its author. Indeed, it might come to be known as the Casanova bill and I had in mind that the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, as its sponsor, might soon be known as the Casanova of the House of Commons. It would have been a worthy title, in view of the fact that the hon. gentleman had subscribed to this bill and to the same type of thinking as Casanova subscribed to in an earlier age. It is, in my view, appropriate—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): On a point of order. While I respect the hon. member's right and willingness to speak, I should like to draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, that we are now dealing with Bill C-24 which is to some extent different from the one brought in by the hon. member of whom he was speaking.

Mr. Greene: On that point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think, with respect, that to consider two bills presented in two subsequent weeks—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The point is well taken. We are not considering today a bill which was discussed in the house on another occasion. We are considering the particular bill which was introduced by the hon. member for Acadia and I would respectfully suggest to the hon. member who has the floor that he should limit his remarks to the scope of that bill which is now before the house.

Mr. Greene: I bow to your ruling, Mr. Speaker, though I respectfully suggest that we are permitted to draw analogies between this bill an another one which was brought before the house, and to consider the advantages or disadvantages of this particular approach as compared with some other approach.

But to continue with regard to the antecedents of this bill, I was surprised to see the hon. member for Acadia bringing in a measure of this kind because, while I am able to see some affinity between the mover of the bill last week and Casanova, the hon. member for Acadia is a rugged western type of hon. member and I would not think he had any affinity with Casanova. Therefore I thought it was peculiar that he should be subscribing to the same type of proposal. However, it may well be that within this honourable house there is room for a western Casanova bill and a western Casanova. This being a bilingual and bicultural house it might be altogether fitting that we should have a Casanova of either tongue, one from the east and one from the west.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): A really high level of debate the hon. member is engaging in, worthy of his remuneration.

Mr. Greene: Apart from the historical background or antecedents of the bill, I think the first thing the house should consider is the question of its constitutionality. It may be that technically it is constitutional. However, in view of all the fuss and furor we have had in the last few months and the loud proclamations we hear from day to day as to provincial rights, even though according to the strict letter of the law the bill may come within the ambit of federal powers, namely, criminal justice as envisioned by the sections now in the Criminal Code, nevertheless we have apparently reached the stage in confederation where any matter affecting provincial rights under the British North America Act and which in any way comes close to section 92 of that act should not be legislated upon by this house without very careful consultation with and agreement by the provinces.

Who have been more righteous and more indignant in their protestations in this regard than the members of the party to which the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner) belongs? Yet he brings before the house a bill which patently, on its face and in its essence, will affect private property, civil rights and taxation in the provinces. To the best of my knowledge, and I have listened very carefully—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Are you for or against lotteries? Quit the guff.

Mr. Greene: If my hon. friend would listen for a while to these pearls of wisdom I am bringing forth—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): These pearls of wisdom.

Mr. Greene: —he might find out my subjective as well as my objective views on the matter. Quite apart from the implications of this matter with regard to provincial rights, I think it is one on which we have had so many fulminations by so many people in the past that the people of the provinces individually as well as their elected representatives are vitally interested in the subject. If ever there was a subject which should not be legislated upon without consultation, it is a matter such as this.

Without referring specifically to any prior bill, I would say that an approach whereby the provinces are given rights over subject matters such as these might be preferable to federal legislation, or certainly preferable at least to federal legislation without consultation such as we have before us. I do not know whether the hon. member for Acadia has consulted with Mr. Lesage on this bill or whether the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon), who is so fond of telling the house that nothing should be done without consulting with Mr. Lesage—

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Lesage has done so many times. May I ask a question of the hon. member?

[Translation]

May I ask the hon. member a question? Does the hon. member know about the ultimatum of the Quebec premier through which he asked the federal government to amend the Criminal Code in order to set up lotteries in the province of Quebec?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, the premier of the province of Quebec never asked the house to pass such a bill.

[Text]

In this regard I reiterate that I believe there should be consultation and that no bill of this nature should be brought before the house either the joint authority of the federal government and the provinces or consultation with the provinces. Having regard to the manner in which this particular bill is drawn, I suggest again that there may be some question as to its constitutional validity, apart from the political wisdom of bringing it forward without consultation.

The bill does not present a new idea. It has been mooted and talked about in the house many times. I would point out that as late as 1956, I believe it was, a joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons considered the idea of a national lottery, at which time there was a most excellent government in power and a fine majority in the other place. In their wisdom that joint committee decided that a national lottery was not in the national interest. Whether or not times have changed to any degree since 1956 I do not know.

There are also certain things we should take cognizance of. We are not necessarily bound by them, but I think they should be drawn to the attention of hon. members. It is my understanding that the national bodies of the Anglican Church, the United Church and the Canadian council of churches have legislated against any form of national lotteries. Again I say that the views of these bodies are not binding or necessarily enforceable in this house, but I do think we should take cognizance of them. Surely the views and ideas of these strong Protestant bodies should be borne in mind before we decide to legislate in a manner contrary to their precepts.

Apparently the proponent of the bill also has the thought in mind that lottery revenues will be such as to lessen the tax burden to a substantial degree in some way. If we are going to consider such bills, then I suggest we should consider the facts as they are and not as we would like them to be. The hon. member for Acadia referred to statistics from New Zealand which would indicate that, having regard to the large amounts of money put into lotteries, the amount available for beneficial work on the part of the state, be it hospitals or otherwise, is very little. I think this has been the experience with lotteries. It may appear as though there is a great deal of money going into them, and a great deal does; but the returns to the state are not as great as we would expect from the turnover of money involved. Possibly this is because of administrative expenses or the fact that if people are handling gambling money in an enterprise of this kind they are not as careful with it as they are in handling general tax revenues, and therefore the expenses are greater.

The hon. member for Acadia indicated he was anxious to have some of the smaller and poorer provinces share in the benefits that would flow from this bill. I do not think he would want his province to become the Nevada of Canada. I do not think we want a Las Vegas here. These things are a matter of degree, and judging by the New Zealand experience in particular I do not believe that the returns from this kind of investment warrant a new form of taxation at the present time.

I quite agree with my hon. friend that on this topic, like so many other controversial topics, the majority of the people of Canada should have the right to speak. It may be that this is the type of matter that could be put before the public by way of plebiscite. It may be sufficiently important to do so. I feel there is one aspect we should consider in connection with this matter. Of late years, this type of suggestion has been very popular. I believe we should give some thought as to why, all of a sudden, this type of painless taxation, as it is supposed to be, has come to the forefront and has won the approval of so many members and of so many segments of the public. It may be that this is a symptom of the age. There has been a thought in the minds of people, probably more in this country than elsewhere in the past few years, that in some magic way, by some waving of a magic wand, revenues can be raised to do all those things we wish to do for our people without paying, without effort and without digging in as we used to do.

Evidently the attitude is that this is the easiest method. It is painless. It is fun. Everybody has a good time. We raise the revenues we need for the things we want to do. The hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner), who sponsored this bill, spoke of the moral fibre. Taking his argument to its logical conclusion, this would mean that the people with the toughest moral fibre would be the inhabitants of Las Vegas because they gamble more than anybody else. I do not believe this is necessarily a proper conclusion. Even if lotteries would do no harm, even if they might raise some revenue painlessly, I still have some qualms about this suggestion. I think that to propagate a national philosophy at this time that there is an easy way, that there is something for nothing, that we can have a higher standard of living in this land by some easy and painless method, that we can have more social benefits for our people without paying the price for those social benefits, is dangerous.

We have seen how well the people of Germany and Japan, those lands that were decimated by the war, have re-established themselves since the end of the war. No doubt this has been the result of the help the allies gave, to some considerable measure. However, I think we must pause for a moment and reflect upon the way Germany and Japan in particular have come back. This has resulted, to a very large degree, from the fact that the people were willing to work, to make sacrifices, I do not believe they expected great social benefits. The unions held the line in wages, and I think capital held the line in dividends. These people pulled together as a nation and, because of the decimation of the war, they were willing to do so. They had something for which they were willing to work, to rebuild their countries, and they have done so to a large degree. People who have been to Europe and Japan during the past few years tell us that there is no unemployment, that there is an increasing standard of living. There is this national philosophy, apparently, that the people of the country must work hard and pull together if they are to achieve the things they wish.

The politicians here have certainly been guilty of propagating the idea of getting something for nothing. Vote for A or vote for B or vote for party one or party two, and you can have all these things that you would like to have without any national effort. I feel this is a very dangerous thing in our Canadian political thinking. This is a great land of boundless opportunity. Our people can have all the things they would like to have, but they cannot have them through the use of any magic formula or in any easy way.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret that I must interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Quebec South): Mr. Speaker, here is another matter which carries a full range of arguments. We shall add to it, if possible.

Arguments on grounds of moral, ethics and religion are put forward against lotteries. However, hardly a Sunday goes by without a Canadian minister or priest asking his flock to make a donation to such and such organization by buying a raffle ticket. So, I fail to see how a national or provincial lottery could be such a sin when it is not in the case of the charities recommended by those priests and ministers.

If we take a look at the newspapers for a knowledge of the public opinion, we see—as has already been said here—that the newspaper La Presse, a few years ago, made a survey on that matter which revealed that out of 100,000 people only 149 were against the setting up of a lottery. The Toronto Telegram, in a survey on the same subject which it carried out also a few years ago, received 8,990 answers in favour of lotteries against 814 opposed to them; and about 700 people admitted having bought in the past lottery tickets from various organizations.

On the other hand, the most convincing argument for the adoption of such legislation is to keep Canadian money in Canada. As far as I know, nobody has ever objected to the stock exchange transactions. Nobody has ever objected to the hazards of life. In a certain sense, aren't both of them a gamble? And yet who would consider prohibiting them?

The lack of money therefore remains a temptation for our rulers to encourage lotteries. If you look at a number of countries in the world, you notice that during the past few years, many countries have adopted that solution.

Australia has organized five annual lotteries and a newspaperman stated that lotteries are a means of survival in that country thanks to the profits brought in to the public, the government, the hospitals and charitable institutions.

As was said earlier, New Zealand established in 1961 a lottery called "The Golden Kiwi". It has been so successful that they even wondered for a time how to distribute the profits.

France keeps 40 per cent of the proceeds of its lottery, which does not prevent that country from awarding a $100,000 prize to the winner. West Germany has its lottery since 1955. Austria established a lottery in 1813. Italy has four big lotteries every year which are held by means of horse races, car races or even popular songs.

Switzerland, Portugal, Spain and most Latin American countries hold private or public lotteries, not to mention countries behind the iron curtain, such as East Germany, Poland and Soviet Russia, which also have their own lotteries.

Israel, where any form of gambling is prohibited, including horse racing, has nevertheless established a state lottery which yields $8 million a year. The money is used to build schools and hospitals. And yet, this is a country where all types of gambling are prohibited.

It is common knowledge that horse racing is organized in Canada.

Whether you are listening to the radio, looking at television or reading a newspaper, everywhere you are offered a premium of some kind or another with the purchase of a product. If that is not a lottery, I feel the principle is the same.

Moreover, the state of New Hampshire legalized lotteries recently. That will be the first legal lottery in the history of the United States since 1894. It will be held twice a year in connection with a race and tickets will be $3 each. Prizes will total $200,000 and the state will build schools with the $4 million it expects to get every year from its lotteries. In my opinion, those surveys prove beyond doubt that the great majority of Canadians are now in favour of lotteries and I hope that the Criminal Code will soon be amended to make them legal.

At any rate, the province of Quebec has been waiting to hold a lottery for a long time. I understand that under our system of government the views of each and every province have to be respected. That is why I feel that the law should be amended so that each province may set up its own lottery if—but I doubt it very much—there are still in Canada provinces which are against lotteries.

Let there be a serious survey, let the people discuss the idea and I feel that it will soon be obvious that everybody is in favour of such a move.

Mr. Speaker, the newspaper La Presse, in its February 28, 1962 issue, published an article written by Mr. Vincent Prince. The article was entitled: Mr. Fulton must say "yes". I quote:

> Premier Lesage has attempted for months to have the federal government amend section 179 of the penal code. That section, as everyone knows, has always been the obstacle which prevented the province of Quebec from fulfilling its legitimate wish to institute a provincial lottery.
>
> Twice in the past, in 1934 and in 1950, the Quebec legislature approved measures for the institution of such lotteries, so as to give assistance to our hospitals and educational establishments. Each time, our legislators' will was frustrated by Ottawa's refusal to amend its legislation on games of chance. Indeed, it was the coming into force of that same penal code, in 1893, that put an end to the only lottery which Quebec ever had and which goes back to the days of curé Labelle.
> Mr. Lesage is quite right to urge the federal Minister of Justice along, and the whole population of the province supports him. In February 1961, C.K.A.C. radio station and La Presse organized a poll, the results of which were quite revealing. One hundred thousand Quebecers answered a very precisely worded questionnaire, and barely 149 people opposed the idea of a provincial lottery. That allows us to assert that the feeling is unanimous on the subject in Quebec, as the sampling was broad enough to lead to valid conclusions.
>
> One could naturally contemplate a nation-wide sweepstake, and actually the idea has been put forward. In the past, several resolutions have been presented to that effect in the house, but in spite of the sympathetic attitude of the Senate, none of these resolutions were concurred in. It appears clearly that there is a cleavage of Canadian opinion on that point, and many years could go by before all hon. members are in complete agreement.
> That the federal government is not ready to use that type of tax, surely a direct tax, does not seem to me a worthy reason to stand in the way of the provinces which have decided to enter that field. Indeed, Mr. Lesage does not request an exclusive privilege for his province. So much the worse if the other areas of this country do not want of it.
> There are still people—and I respect their opinion —who maintain that the state should not favour unrestrained gambling. And yet I think that those people are deceiving themselves. They are deceiving themselves because, in any event, few citizens do not have the opportunity to gamble. The argument would be acceptable if gambling were an evil in itself, but such is not the case. And I am of the opinion that people will not gamble more if a lottery is set up. The difference is that the state will benefit thereby.

How many million dollars are drained from the province of Quebec at the present time by the Irish sweepstake only? Would it not be a boon if that money served our own institutions?

And what about underhand betting? What about hockey lotteries? On March 29 last, the Canadian Press informed us that $500,000 of "hockey tickets" were sold every week in Canada. Only yesterday, the police seized 3,760,000 of those tickets on Perrot island. And it was the third confiscation of the sort in one month.

No, a provincial lottery would only channel towards Quebec state revenue which, at the present time, is going to foreign institutions or private individuals here.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to the attention of the house something that happened in Australia, I think. A young bookkeeper working in a bank managed to embezzle about $74,000 without getting caught. One day he won first prize and decided there and then to reimburse the bank, principal and interest. That goes to show that sometimes a lottery will indeed help some people.

But, in my opinion, one very serious reason warrants holding lotteries. The article I just read mentioned the outflow of Canadian money, what are called invisible monetary deficits, which are a serious factor in our unfavourable exchange situation with foreign countries.

In that regard, I wish to read to the house an article written by Mr. Amedee Gaudreault, parliamentary correspondent for the newspaper Le Soleil. Here is what he said:

Why not have a lottery?

National or provincial?

Many people think that, in Canada, a lottery should have a national character to ensure a fairer distribution of the yield among the provinces.

But if Ottawa does not want to enter that field, it should not stop one or several provinces from doing so, if they want to.

Some of us, like the hon. member for Manitoba (Mr. Regnier), suggested a national referendum. Others would like the provinces to be consulted first and say whether they are for or against the idea of a national lottery.

If the provinces were against a national lottery, they could not, later on, oppose a provincial project of that kind, first of all because they objected to a national scheme, and also to leave others free to do as they like at home.

Ottawa might amend the Criminal Code later for its own benefit or that of interested provinces, and nobody would be obliged in that case to buy lottery tickets against his will.

The recent experience in New Zealand revealed an unexpected phenomenon: a great number of tickets were sold in Australia and other countries.

If a lottery with substantial prizes were created in Canada, it is also probable, according to many observers, that such a lottery would get an important part of its revenues from the United States. It was pointed out to us that with the long Canadian-American common border, the good friendly relations between our two countries and our considerable trade deficit, it is probable that the United States would not oppose some restoration of the balance of "invisibles" where our deficit is equally quite high, particularly in the tourist trade.

Consequently, and this is the opinion I would like to leave with this house, I am in favour of the Criminal Code being amended to allow for a lottery.

Mr. Remi Paul (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere): Would the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Cantin) allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. Cantin: Yes.

Mr. Paul: I was very much interested in his remarks, and as he lives in the same riding as the premier of Quebec, could he tell me whether with reference to the article by Mr. Vincent Prince, which he read in extenso, the heading of the article could not be changed to read:

Chevrier must say yes.

Mr. Cantin: For the information of my hon. friend, and also for the information of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon), I will say that I am also in favour of a lottery.

Mr. Chevrier declared in the house that the file on lotteries was quite voluminous and that it was being considered. We trust that a practical agreement will be reached and that a practical solution will be found.

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, in rising to support Bill No. C-24 I can assure you that as a result of remarks I made the other day in favour of another bill of the same nature I have received correspondence from across the country, and every letter, every telephone call and every personal visit has been in favour of a bill such as the one introduced by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner)—except one. That objection, as I expected, came from a reverend gentleman, a minister of one of the recognized communions in Canada, where I maintain a great body of opposition to these sweepstakes and lotteries bills rests and where the opposition is fanned by the ministers.

I am greatly in favour of sweepstakes and, as I stated the other day, hundreds of thousands of dollars go out of the country in the purchase of sweepstakes and lotteries tickets. They are supposed to be illegal, but hundreds of thousands of tickets are bought every year by Canadian citizens and no action is taken against them. A direct result of my remarks the other day has been a letter from London, Ontario, where 50 men have now been charged in connection with the sale of sweepstakes tickets in Ontario because it is against the Criminal Code. This letter from a resident of London, who advised me that he is one of the 50 men who have been summonsed, points out under the date of October 5:

> Very shortly the horse racing season will commence at the London fair grounds. It will then be possible to enter the race track, approach a wicket, set down $2, receive a ticket and if a winner, collect in cash. This will all be under the close scrutiny of the minions of the law. Several weeks ago we staged our local London fair and here we had the opportunity of playing the roulette wheels and receiving our winnings in cash. Also under the eyes of the local police. I could go on and on adding to this list of so-called legal but out and out gambling. We live under a set of codes which are most unjust when on one hand they allow the above while on the other hand our guardians of justice will be hauling into our London court about 50 Canadian citizens who will probably have meted out to them severe judgment because of the sale of some sweepstake tickets. Australia, New Zealand, Jamaica, England, Ireland, etc. all make sweepstakes available to their citizens with no adverse effect.

This gentleman then says:

> To yourself, to Guy Rouleau, to Louis Joseph Pigeon and to Barry Mather I wish you all success in your splendid efforts to amend the codes. Please tell the Prime Minister that many thousands of Canadian citizens in this area are seething at the injustice which is now prevalent under our present Criminal Code and do ask that he and his legislators take immediate action to rectify this inequality in our laws.

I can assure the writer that I will personally place this letter in the hands of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) as expressive of much of the thought that is in Canada today. Reference has been made by previous speakers to the success of the New Zealand lottery. I will not burden the house by referring to quotations they have made, but there is an interesting paragraph at the tail end of the Canadian Press dispatch on this matter. This was in the Globe and Mail of July 16, this year, and I would read it to the house:

> Churches and other anti-gambling interests continue to criticize the principle.

Note the next sentence:

> But public opinion is so overwhelmingly and obviously in favour of the lottery that its opponents have realized that their views cannot prevail.

I maintain that the same condition exists here in the Dominion of Canada as in New Zealand. We have before the House of Commons at the present time five private bills on this one subject introduced by private members. These five private bills have been introduced by five representatives from three different provinces in the dominion, which shows how widespread is the feeling on legalizing lotteries and sweepstakes in this country. I sincerely hope that this sweepstakes bill introduced by the hon. member for Acadia will carry, and carry by an overwhelming majority.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Pierre Côté (Longueuil): I should like to say only a few words about the lottery bill—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member cannot address the house unless he speaks from his own place. I understand he is not at his own seat at the present time.

Order. I must inform the house that the hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has expired.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Ottawa, October 8, 1963

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Robert Taschereau, P.C., Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, the 8th October, at 9.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,
A.G. Cherrier
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General

OLD AGE SECURITY

PROVISION FOR INCREASE IN AMOUNT OF PAYMENT

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Miss LaMarsh for the second reading of Bill No. C-98, to amend the Old Age Security Act.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Wahn: Mr. Speaker, the unusual harmony and agreement prevailing among all hon. members of this house in connection with the proposed $10 increase in the universal old age pension is most refreshing and is actually a striking tribute to the work done in 1950 by the joint committee of both houses of parliament on old age security, on which committee all members of this house were represented. As a result of the report of that committee the government then in office established a basic and universal pay as you go pension without a means test in the amount of $40 a month. This legislation was adopted unanimously and with universal acclaim. In its 1950 report the joint parliamentary committee emphasized that the program it recommended could be financed and administered satisfactorily only by the federal government. They said:

> Only the federal authority can establish a sufficiently broad base of contributions to make such a program possible, and only the federal authority can ensure that an individual will receive the benefit to which he has contributed, regardless of whether he moves from one province to another.

All hon. members will recall that this vital report was signed by the chairmen of the committee, Senator J. H. King and the Hon. Jean Lesage, now premier of Quebec.

The $40 old age pension without a means test commenced on January 1, 1952. From 1952 to 1956, with balanced budgets and no inflation, the purchasing power of the pension expressed in constant 1952 dollars was well maintained. In 1957, as a result of two successive increases, the pension was raised to $55, but with the inflation which commenced in that year the purchasing power of that $55 pension was actually only $52.56 in constant 1952 dollars. This was a 31 per cent increase over the initial $40 pension. In the same period average weekly wages and salaries expressed in constant 1952 dollars had increased by only 21 per cent, much more slowly than the increase in pension benefits.

Hon. members of the house will recall a continuing series of massive budget deficits experienced between 1957 and 1962 totalling some $3 billion. As a result Canada experienced a continuing and accelerating inflation, and by 1962 the $55 pension had been reduced to $49 expressed in terms of constant 1952 dollars. In 1962 the pension was increased to $65, this being the equivalent of $57.94 in constant 1952 dollars. This represented a real increase of 45 per cent over the 1952 pension rate. During the same period average weekly wages and salaries had increased by 33 per cent expressed in constant dollars. When this current $10 increase in the pension is made the pension increase in constant dollars over 1952 will be 64 per cent. The increase in average wages and salaries over the same periods will be about half that, namely 37 per cent. As between 1962 and 1963 the increase in old age pensions will amount to 13 per cent, as compared with an increase in average weekly wages and salaries during the same one-year period of 3 per cent. I have documented this record, Mr. Speaker, because the concern shown by the Canadian public generally in increasing the old age pension by 64 per cent in a period in which their own wages and salaries have increased by only 37 per cent must surely be a record without parallel among other countries and one of which all Canadian taxpayers can be justly proud.

I believe that those who are now retired or on the verge of retirement would be the first to recognize this and would also be the first to insist that while appropriate respect should be paid and provision made for them, it is of prime importance to expand opportunities for those of all ages who have suffered from the massive unemployement of recent years and for the generations who will follow.

On this side of the house we believe that in this country, with the opportunities we have, we can and will do both these things.

I have emphasized that the increased pension benefits are being provided by Canadian taxpayers and not through the generosity of successive Canadian governments. The members of the government do not provide pensions and other social benefits out of their own personal funds; they merely transfer money from one group of Canadians to another, and in doing this they act as trustees and representatives of the Canadian people. Whenever the pension is increased and whenever social benefits are increased we as trustees and representatives of the Canadian people should give careful thought to the principles on which the increase is based. In considering the amount of old age pension it must be remembered that it has never been claimed that this pay-as-you-go flat rate pension provided a proper subsistence pension for all. Speaking in the House of Commons in 1957 when the pension was raised to $55, the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith), then the minister of national health and welfare stated:

> It will be sufficient in our judgment, together with the other means that most pensioners have at their disposal, to provide a decent minimum level of living for most pensioners.

The view that the hon. member for Perth so clearly expressed in 1957 is consistent with the views expressed in the 1950 report of the joint parliamentary committee. The committee at that time pointed out that the universal pay-as-you-go system is costly by its very nature and that benefit payments cannot be limited to that section of the population which can prove need, as in the case of old age assistance or to those who have previously made the required number of contributions as in the insurance approach.

The committee pointed out that considerations such as these had made it necessary for countries such as New Zealand and Sweden to set the rate of their universal benefits substantially below minimum subsistence levels. Like considerations also led the committee to the view that benefit rates under any universal system considered for Canada should not be set so high as to make the over-all cost too burdensome. The members of the committee also pointed out that this was particularly true of a country such as Canada where living costs and wage and salary levels varied widely from one section to another. They emphasized that the rate of benefit should be set at a level which would avoid so far as possible the social inequity of a situation in which the retired beneficiary group in any area of Canada might find themselves in more favourable economic circumstances than those not yet retired who are still actually engaged in productive employment. At the same time, care should also be taken not to diminish the area of incentive for private savings or supplementary provision for old age security through employee pension schemes or individual purchases of annuities. In view of these considerations Canadians generally can take pride, I believe, in the institution of the universal old age pension without a means test and with the successive increases which have taken place and which are now proposed.

It is true that some members of the opposition parties have suggested that the increase should be made retroactive to the beginning of April and others have implied that the government has shown doubtful taste in insisting that the resolution which provided for the proposed increase should also provide the moneys required to pay that increase. Indeed, some members have gone as far as to suggest that this was a Liberal trick.

Mr. Woolliams: I do not think that.

Mr. Wahn: Even the able member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Nugent) somewhat plaintively remarked:

> I was at a loss to understand the attaching of a monetary clause to this resolution by which taxes would be increased.

And, later, the same hon. member said:

> Might I suggest to the minister that she seriously consider withdrawing from this resolution the fund-raising part of it. Also, I suggest that an entirely new budget be presented, or an amendment to the budget, so that we can get on with granting the increase in pension without this further complication, and so we can give the fund-raising aspect of this matter the kind of attention it deserves.

One wonders just what kind of attention the hon. member had in mind.

The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm was even more explicit, and even more indignant. He said:

> I fail to understand how the Minister of National Health and Welfare can recommend the levy of a tax to pay for this increase in pension.

There appears to be complete unanimity among the members of this house as to the desirability of the proposed $10 increase. Some may wonder why the round figure of $10 was chosen. I recall that in the early days of the Alberta oil industry, oil in the ground was customarily valued at $1 per barrel. When asked why, one operator said it was the only figure he could multiply by. Perhaps somewhat similar principles operate in leading members of parliament to favour increases by ten-dollar amounts.

But though there may be complete unanimity in this house, we must base a pension increase at this time on some logical grounds, since there is a quiet, but strong demand across the country for financial responsibility on the part of this government.

I hold in my hand a letter from a constituent who says:

> I understand the government may be considering increases in corporate and personal income taxes in order to pay for the recently proposed increase in old age pensions. As one who voted for you in April, I urge you to do everything you can to prevent such an increase which would, coming at the present time, have serious and far reaching effects on the Canadian economy.
>
> It now seems almost certain that personal and corporation taxes in the United States will be lowered in the early part of 1964. This in itself, in the absence of any parallel Canadian tax reductions, will result in a worsening of our competitive position vis-à-vis the United States. If at the same time we actually increase our taxes, Canadian industry will have a tax 'tariff' of 4 or 5 per cent to overcome in competition with United States industry, to say nothing of the inhibiting effect of tax increases on incentive. The adverse balance of trade with the United States, which the government is rightly trying to alleviate by various means, would deteriorate rapidly and the effects on employment and on the whole economy could be disastrous.

I have here another letter from a constituent—

Mr. Knowles: Author.

Mr. Wahn: Let me read this, and I do not think you will then demand the name of the author.

Mr. Knowles: Why not? The hon. member is required to give it.

Mr. Wahn: The hon. member may have it if he desires, after I have said what I have to say.

I have another letter from a constituent who tells me that he entered St. Michael's hospital in Toronto where he has undergone a major surgical operation for the removal of a kidney. He tells me he has been in receipt of the maximum welfare allowance of $57.10 per month and that we should recognize that in Toronto such an amount is not sufficient to provide a human being with essential food, housing and clothing. He says:

> Hospitalization recently plus the costs of x-rays and a major operation is going to cost my fellow taxpayers some money. Perhaps my kidney could have been saved had I been able to secure medical treatment several months past. The miracle seems to be that I have survived, considering the fact that for months prior to the operation I was eating only the skin-and-bones food allowance of welfare recipients. If I have to continue on such a niggardly allowance it may cost my fellow taxpayers more hospitalization costs in the future. There are thousands across Canada with the same problem as myself.

I shall be glad to show this letter to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

We have been told that the $10 a month increase will mean the expenditure in a full year of $116 million. Of this amount, approximately $16 million should be recovered in income taxes, so the cost of this $10 increase will be $100 million annually and the amount will no doubt increase in future years. This huge sum of money, if received each year and properly directed and co-ordinated with expenditures of provincial governments, municipalities and the numerous charitable organizations in the field, could probably eliminate forever poverty and need among those in our country who for age or other reasons are unable to work and to provide for themselves. Yet we know that this annual expenditures of $100 million spread out in $10 monthly payments among the entire population over 70 years of age will not achieve that result.

Why then, sincere people ask, do we not mass, direct and co-ordinate all our resources in the war to eliminate forever poverty and need, instead of dissipating our available resources ineffectively in small amounts over a wide area? Why do we not use these vast sums of money to supplement income, not on the basis of the outmoded "means test" but on the basis of actual needs and without restriction to the arbitrary $10 amount?

While such arguments are persuasive, there are valid reasons for rejecting this approach and accepting, instead, a general increase in the universal pension, provided always that we can afford the increase and that the increase is provided in a manner which is consistent with financial responsibility on the part of the government. I should like to refer again to the 1950 report of the joint parliamentary committee on old age security.

In paragraphs 59 and 60 of their findings the committee said:

> The committee has carefully considered the argument that such a universal system for persons 70 and over is economically wasteful in that it provides the same benefit to rich and poor alike regardless of their need. It is true, of course, that, under any system which abolished the means test for the group presently of pensionable age, benefits will be paid to some persons who do not "need" them on any test of personal need. But it must be remembered that to the extent that the universal pay as you go system is based on individual contributions, individuals in the upper income groups would, through their personal contributions, have bought and paid for their own retirement security, as well as making a substantial contribution towards the cost of retirement security of others.
> In view of these facts, the committee does not consider that it would be equitable to impose a "means test in reverse" and wholly deny retirement benefits to those individuals who have actually made the largest direct contributions to the revenues from which the universal benefits will be paid.
> A certain amount of the benefits paid to persons in the upper income levels will be recovered through the normal operation of the income tax.

The committee also pointed out that to make payments to those in need while refusing payments to those who have saved during their working years to provide for their retirement has the effect of penalizing and discouraging thrift and private arrangements for old age retirement which the committee felt on the whole to be desirable to maintain. Much the same point is made in the Clark report on economic security for the aged.

These principles explain the pension arrangements for which Liberal members campaigned in the last election. We campaigned for a national contributory pension plan which would be self-supporting through contributions from those now working, and their employers.

Contrary to what has been implied by members of the opposition, we did not promise an additional $10 immediately we took office and out of general tax revenues. I hold in my hand the pamphlet which formed the basis of our election campaign entitled "Better Pensions for All" published by the National Liberal Federation of Canada. It says:

> A new Liberal government will make it possible for all Canadians to take part in a contributory pension plan geared to growth in our economy. The plan will from the start be financially self-supporting through contributions. It will not require any addition to taxes. As soon as the plan can be put into legislation, a minimum additional pension of $10 a month will be paid.

And, later:

> As soon as the legislation is passed, and contributions start, the pension fund will be used to pay a minimum $10 a month to everyone aged 70 who would have been a contributor if he had been younger. Added to the existing old age pension this will mean pensions of $75 a month.

I also hold in my hand the pamphlet which summarizes the entire Liberal platform, entitled "The Policies of the Liberal Party", general election, 1963, published by the National Liberal Federation. It says:

> To help people already retired who have not had the chance to contribute under the new Liberal plan, a minimum supplementary pension of $10 a month will be paid, from the start, out of the pension fund established by contributions. This will raise the total old age pension to $75.

The suggestion made in this house by a number of the members of the opposition that we promised there would be a $10 increase immediately after the election, and that therefore the increase should be retroactive to April, 1963, is not true.

An hon. Member: You are reading too fast.

Mr. Wahn: After the Liberal government took office, it moved immediately to introduce the contributory pension plan which it had promised during the election campaign. Very soon, however, Quebec announced its decision to institute its own pension plan and the premier of Ontario, while indicating his acceptance in principle of the federal plan, indicated that its implementation would require detailed study. This, of course, would necessarily result in delay.

A new situation was therefore created. With Quebec definitely out there can be no truly national contributory pension plan. If ultimately Ontario also decides to proceed with its own pension plan, it is difficult to see on what basis we can institute a federal contributory pension plan.

These circumstances, which were outside of the control of the federal government, led to the decision to split off the $10 increase from the general contributory plan. With Quebec out of the plan it would have been unfair to pay Quebec residents the $10 increase out of contributions made under the plan by the residents of other provinces. To have paid the $10 increase only to provinces which accepted the contributory plan and not to other provinces such as the province of Quebec would have caused disunity at a time when greater rather than less Canadian unity is required.

The decision was therefore made to pay the $10 increase to all residents of Canada and to pay it by increasing the rate of old age security tax from 3 per cent with a maximum of $90 to a rate of 4 per cent with a maximum of $120 on the taxable income of individuals applicable to the 1964 and subsequent taxation years. By providing that the increased cost of these pensions would be paid out of an increase in the old age security tax, the government came as close as it could in the circumstances to carrying out its election pledge to increase old age pensions in a financially responsible manner and without increasing the deficits which between 1957 and 1962 proved so damaging to Canada's economic strength and reputation.

Members of the opposition have suggested that the increased pensions should be paid out of general revenues rather than by the old age security tax.

An hon. Member: Don't read so fast.

Mr. Wahn: As was pointed out in the 1950 report of the joint parliamentary committee, such suggestions are more consistent with a means test than with a system of universal old age pensions which should emphasize the contributory principle.

The committee at paragraphs 29 and 30 of its findings stated:

> Under an old age assistance program, the determining factor, both as to receipt of assistance and to amount of assistance, is the need of the individual. This is the system that we have presently in effect in Canada.

That is to say, before 1952.

> Any system of old age assistance involves investigation and inquiry into the individual resources of the applicant with a view to determining eligibility for assistance and the amount thereof. It is this feature of the old age assistance program which has been most strongly criticized. But it must be kept in mind in this connection that such investigation procedures are an almost inevitable requirement of any old age security system which derives its funds from the general revenues of the country, rather than from specific contributions levied for the purpose.

Members of all parties in the house participated in that committee. The government therefore has, I believe very wisely, provided in the same resolution not only for the $10 increase in the universal old age pension but also for the means whereby the money required will be provided, from specific contributions levied for the purpose rather than from the general tax revenues of the country. It was important in 1950 and it is still important that the principle should be established, maintained and clearly understood by all Canadians that increases in social benefits, including old age pensions, can only come directly or indirectly from the income of the community generally. Anyone who suggests otherwise is guilty of attempting to mislead the public.

An hon. Member: You misled them.

Mr. Wahn: Another most important principle is involved. Failure to pay social benefits out of current taxes or out of current contributions—the habit which was followed during the years 1957 to 1962 of paying for social benefits by running massive deficits—is one of the main causes of inflation.

An hon. Member: Wait till the deficit next spring.

Mr. Wahn: Inflation is the great enemy of thrift and self-reliance, the great enemy of those who attempt to provide for their own security in their old age through their own savings.

May I refer once again to the Clark report, paragraph 1609. Professor Clark quotes Professor Kenneth Boulding who wrote in 1958 with reference to the United States:

> Inflation and deflation are by far the most important agencies in changing the distribution of income, and this has been especially so in the past three or four decades. Indeed, all the other forces affecting the distribution of income, the rise of the labour movement, the development of agriculture policy, the tariff, even the progressive income tax itself, all taken together have not achieved half the revolution in the distribution of both income and wealth that decades of successive inflation, deflation and inflation have achieved.

Professor Clark says that while this statement is virtually impossible to prove it is probably true for Canada as well as the United States.

Consider the significance of this statement. Consider the immense importance of the labour movement, income tax, tariff and agricultural policy on the redistribution of income. But all those have not had half the effect of our failure to maintain the value of our money.

Yet the forced redistribution of income of Canadians by variations in the value of our money has not been authorized by legislation passed by this house, concurred in by the other house and assented to by the governor general. These vast changes affecting the income and property rights of each one of us have not been assented to by the people or by their representatives in parliament. In fact, the forced transfer of wealth among various groups in our country as a result of the changing value of our currency amounts to taxation without representation. It violates a fundamental principle for which members of this house are supposed to stand.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have waited until the hon. member appeared to be on the last page of his speech before raising the point of order so that he would not think I was trying to prevent him from making his speech. Citation 144 of Beauchesne, fourth edition, reads:

It is a rule in both houses of parliament that a member must address the house orally, and not read from a written, previously prepared speech, for the reason that "if the practice of reading speeches should prevail, members might read speeches that were written by other people, and the time of the house be taken up in considering the arguments of persons who were not deserving of their attention."

Mr. Wahn: I think my answer will satisfy the hon. member that he was in error. I was not in the last page of my speech.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: Then I must press my point of order. The hon. member has now admitted that he has before him a written speech and his addressing the house in this way is clearly against the rule that I have just drawn to Your Honour's attention.

Mr. Pickersgill: He admitted no such thing.

Mr. Wahn: Because of the shortage of time—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I also was reading citation 144 of Beauchesne with considerable interest. I must say that remarks should be kept as closely as possible to the bill before the house, and we do seem to be wandering a little bit beyond the precise, shall I say, explanatory notes. The hon. member obviously is refreshing his memory from rather full and rounded notes, but nevertheless the explanatory notes are very short and Bill No. C-98 is very short too. I wonder whether the hon. member could not capsule his remaining remarks into, shall we say, a few more minutes.

Mr. Wahn: I will be glad to do that. The notes I have in front of me do contain a large number of statistics and quotations, the product of careful research. But following your suggestion, Mr. Speaker, to capsule my remarks, may I say that I think I have made the point about the social evils of inflation and I will dispense with a long quotation from the Clark report, which I will hope to put on the record of the house at some other time, and go on to say—

Mr. Knowles: Go on to read.

Mr. Wahn: —that, as I pointed out at the beginning, between 1952 and the beginning of 1957 the value of the Canadian dollar and purchasing power were well maintained. But since that time, from 1957 to 1962, there was a continuing degree of inflation which affected the value of pension rights. I have pointed out, Mr. Speaker, that in constant dollars pension payments, after giving effect to this proposed increase, will have increased at almost twice the rate of the wages and salaries of those who must bear the cost of these pension increases. But on the basis of justice, this increase in pensions is required. Between the date of the 1950 report of the joint parliamentary committee and January, 1952, when the $40 pension payment was commenced, the purchasing power of the Canadian dollar had dropped about six points. In addition, society must in justice make compensation, because of the fact that the personal savings of those now retired and those who will soon be retiring have, over the years, been eroded as a result of persistent inflation.

If I may be permitted by hon. members opposite, I should like to quote from one whose authority in this house should be unquestioned. I refer to Graham F. Towers, former governor of the Bank of Canada, who was reported in the Financial Post of February, 1963, as follows:

Devaluation by a country with large imports of goods and services—that is certainly Canada's position—effectively lowers the purchasing power of the currency. This is not just a by-product of the move, but one of the intended results. While it improves the competitive position of industry by—note this—its downward influence on real wages, it also reduces the value to recipients of welfare payments of all kinds.

Devaluation is a solution which has from time to time appealed to countries overburdened by public expenditures and caught in the whirl of a relatively high cost structure. In this day and age, it is difficult to reduce the scale of payments for welfare and wages. The remedy sought is to reduce the real burden of the payments. Obviously, if the effect of devaluation is then offset by increases in the scale of payments, nothing has been accomplished and the machinery may be set in motion for repetition of the process.

In other words, the intended result of the devaluation brought about by the government of which the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith) formed a part, was the reduction in real value of wages and social benefits of all kinds. The fact we have had a degree of inflation, Mr. Speaker, is the real justification for the increase in old age pensions which this government is proposing.

I wish to conclude my remarks on these pension increases, Mr. Speaker, by congratulating the government upon recognizing the need, and for its sense of responsibility in establishing, in the same resolution, the principle that taxes shall be increased to pay for the increased pensions. Quite properly members of this house insist upon proper respect being paid and proper provision made for those who are retired or are on the verge of retiring. These older people would be the first to insist that it is also of prime importance to create expanding opportunities for those who have suffered from unemployment in past years, and for those generations which are coming. We on this side of the house believe we can and we will do both of these things.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask the hon. member a question? My question is based upon a statement that he made. I do not wish to bring these facts into the house on a controversial basis or to prolong the discussion, otherwise I would make a speech later in the evening. I understood the hon. member to state that his colleagues campaigned—he did not specify in what election campaign—on the basis of a contributory pension plan and not the increase of $10 to the old age pensioners. Am I correct in this assumption?

I am asking the hon. member if he made that statement?

Mr. Wahn: I purposely cut my remarks short so hon. gentlemen could ask questions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Wahn: What I said, Mr. Speaker, was that we campaigned in the 1963 election for a contributory pension plan, out of the contributions to which the $10 increase in old age pensions would be paid. This is set forth in these pamphlets which I have, and which I would be prepared to make available. I shall quote from the pamphlet, which says:

To help people already retired, who have not had the chance to contribute under the new Liberal plan, a minimum supplementary pension of $10 a month will be paid, from the start, out of the pension fund established by contributions. This will raise the total old age pension to $75 for a single or a widowed person—

I am prepared to table this pamphlet or give it to the hon. member if he wishes.

Mr. Winkler: At this particular point, the hon. member for St. Paul's certainly did mention the 1963 election campaign. However, in his previous remarks he did not say 1963.

Some hon. Members: He did.

Mr. Winkler: No, he did not. We will have a look at the record tomorrow, and if it is not changed it will not be there.

However, I should like to ask the hon. member if he is aware that other statements have been made? I am asking the hon. gentleman now because I do not want the evidence stolen out of my hands. Is he aware that it was stated in the 1963 campaign that the $75 per month pension would be paid immediately? Then, I go back to a statement made by the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin), as contained in a transcript from the C.B.C., on January 30, 1962 in which the hon. member said that the Liberals will establish, at once, a new national minimum of $75 pension. I emphasize "at once". Does the hon. member know that?

Mr. Wahn: I am not familiar with the statement referred to by the hon. member. However, I do hold in my hand the official pamphlets of the National Liberal Federation of Canada, the specific pamphlets on pensions and general policy. With the consent of the house, I am prepared to table them.

Mr. Winkler: Let me assure the hon. member that I am prepared to table these statements as well.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please; this is developing into a debate between two members when the matter before the house is Bill No. C-98.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to take part in this debate because I understood that the government were most anxious to get this legislation passed. However, it would appear that the government is not anxious to get it passed when one of their own members has taken up a good deal of time—

An hon. Member: Forty minutes.

Mr. Douglas: —damning the legislation with faint praise. I would certainly be interested in knowing if the antediluvian views which have been advanced by the hon. member for

St. Paul's represent the views of the government. If one were to judge by the applause which came from government benches when he sat down, one would assume that what he said was fully concurred in by his colleagues on the government side of the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the hon. gentleman would permit me to ask him a question? Does the hon. gentleman not realize that his party is not the only one in which there can be a variety of views?

Mr. Douglas: At least when we have a variety of views, we do not applaud the views with which we do not concur. When hon. gentlemen opposite applauded the hon. member for St. Paul's, I can only assume they agreed with the views he was expressing. It was for that reason I rose to make mention of it, because I think it is rather significant that the only member who has taken a dim view of this $10 per month increase is a member of the party supporting the government.

If I can gather his ideas from the welter of statistics he quoted, I understand he is making two points. The first is that the old age pension, since old age pension legislation was first introduced, has risen more rapidly than wage levels. But surely this is understandable when one realizes that old age pensions started at the miserable figure of $20 a month and have always been too low? To make a comparison between that and the increase in wage levels is a reflection on the Liberal party's viewpoint with respect to social welfare.

The second point which the hon. member was seeking to make is to the effect that putting on a tax to raise money to pay these pensions is, as he described it, an enforced redistribution of wealth. We can therefore take it that he is opposed to any type of taxation which is based on ability to pay, in order that funds might be raised to provide for those who are less fortunate than others.

This also should be made a matter of record as to where the Liberal party stands on welfare programs. As a matter of fact, far from injuring their economies, the nations which have had the most buoyant economies during the past 25 years are those that have had what the hon. member for St. Paul's calls this enforced redistribution of wealth. The table which was published by the United Nations on the standards of welfare set up by various western countries, placed Canada seventeenth on the list. It is not a very proud record; and the nations that are ahead of us, the nations that have the highest standards of health services and welfare, are all countries which have experienced a better economic growth than we have, for the very obvious reason that their welfare programs are important economic tools for redistributing wealth and redistributing purchasing power. Far from a welfare program injuring the economy of Canada, such a program will do much to promote and stimulate the economic activity of the country.

Those who have spoken on behalf of this party have made it clear that we support this increase of $10 a month. We have been asking for it for a long time. We do not think it should have to wait until there is an election in order to persuade either of the old parties to give an increase which has been so long overdue.

We also believe that this increase in pensions should be made retroactive to April 8, for the very obvious reason that the increases to civil servants were made retroactive and that the increased indemnities to members of parliament were made retroactive to April 8. For that reason alone I do not see how the government can refuse to grant the same consideration to the old age pensioners.

As my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), pointed out the other day, we think the government should move steadily toward the goal of lowering the qualifying age for the universal old age pension to 65 years, because in industry today 65 has become the normal age at which workers retire, and there is a hiatus of five years between 65 and 70 when the average worker has no means of support unless he belongs to a private superannuation plan. Therefore by lowering the qualifying age to 65 years we would make the pension available at the normal superannuation age.

I want to say to the government that we are glad it decided to separate this increase in old age security pensions from the Canada pension plan. When the minister introduced the Canada pension plan we felt then that it was wrong to ask the old age pensioners to wait until that plan had been put into effect. We are now glad the government has separated the pension plan and the increase to old age pensioners, and that the increase is now being proceeded with.

will not pay any more, although their ability to pay is much greater.

I contend that if the government were willing to remove the ceiling and to apply the 3 per cent, which is now in effect, as a surcharge on all incomes, it could raise sufficient money to pay for this increase without raising the rates at all.

I am very much concerned with one statement which was made by the hon. member for St. Paul's, to the effect that if the provinces of Quebec and Ontario decided to opt out of this plan, then we cannot have a national Canada pension plan. Mr. Speaker, we did not criticize the government for changing its mind and proceeding with the $10 per month increase without waiting for the Canada pension plan. We do not criticize it, because we are glad it changed its mind, but we think we have a right to some assurance from the Minister of National Health and Welfare that this change of mind does not mean the Canada pension plan is to be dropped. We are entitled to some assurance from the minister that there will be no uncertainty about proceeding with that plan.

We know the Canada pension plan is under attack from the insurance companies of Canada. We know they are carrying on a lobby against it, a lobby of the provincial premiers and of the members of parliament. We know that speeches are being made, and literature is being disseminated, to discourage public men and women from proceeding with the Canada pension plan. Before this debate concludes the minister ought to give the house some assurance that the reason the government changed its mind, and decided to proceed with this $10 per month increase now, is merely because it did not want the old age pensioners to have to wait a number of months.

She should also assure the house that the reason is not because it is the government's intention to drop the Canada pension plan, because I disagree most strongly with the hon. member for St. Paul's and I say that if Quebec decides to have its own plan, and if the province of Ontario decides to proceed with its plan, there is no reason whatever why the other sections of Canada, which may want to proceed with a plan, should not enjoy the privileges of a national Canada pension plan.

Legislation can be drafted by which the provinces that want to opt out and conduct their own plan can do so. The Canada pension plan could apply to the remaining provinces. Within the terms of the legislation provision could be made for portability between the national plan and any provincial plans which may come into effect. But I must say I am disturbed that the hon. member for St. Paul's may be flying a kite for the government when he suggests that if Quebec and Ontario opt out it may not be possible to have a national Canada pension plan. I hope the minister will take the opportunity in this debate to make it clear beyond any shadow of doubt that it is her intention and the government's intention to proceed with the Canada pension plan legislation so that those provinces which do not wish to opt out and are prepared to avail themselves of a universal, national pension plan will be able to do so. I think the house and the country are entitled to that assurance. If we do not get that assurance the suspicion will be widespread in Canada that already the death knell has sounded for the Canada pension plan.

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Girouard (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I did not intend to participate in this debate but after hearing the opinions expressed in the various corners of the house, I came to the conclusion that it would not be difficult to say something which would be just as interesting and useful for the Canadian people.

May I say, first of all, that I commend the government for introducing a bill to increase old age pensions. It might be appropriate to point out that it was thanks to the co-operation of the opposition that the government was able to propose such an increase.

It will be recalled that, at the beginning of the session, the government had decided to grant an increase only in January. However, following the pressure that was brought to bear by the people and the opposition, the government has decided that the increase will start in October.

Does this mean that I am commending the opposition for the part it has always played up to now? I do not think so. As a matter of fact, I feel that it is proper at this time to remind all members of the house that the people sent them here to play a part and that they must do their best as far as possible.

I should also like to remind opposition parties that if the Canadian people had wanted them to be in power, they would have elected them.

That is why I think that we have lost valuable time on the matter of pension increases simply because party leaders attempted to exaggerate the mistakes of the government, to set traps for it and try on every occasion to introduce non-confidence motions.

Once again, if the Canadian people had wanted one or the other of the opposition parties to be in power, they would have elected them as such.

Once more, I repeat that the role of the opposition is to guide the government, to make suggestions and to hope that it will propose the best possible legislation, and not to constantly set a trap, to offer amendments which only delay the implementation of legislation such as this one, which, at first sight, seems to us absolutely sound.

It is evident that had this increase been retroactive to May 8, our older people would have had more benefit. It is equally evident that had retroactivity gone back to 1957, 1958, 1960 or 1961, our older people would have equally gained more. But, alas, such is not the case.

We hear today that it would have been preferable for the increase to be retroactive. It would equally have been preferable to grant our older people this increase at the age of 65 years, or even better, at 60 years, 55 years, 50 years. Well, the government has brought in legislation which specifies that they will get an increase of $10 a month at 70 years.

I realize that the government could have found a more interesting way of levying taxes, and on this point, I am almost in agreement with the leader of the New Democratic party when he says that the government could have left the tax at 3 per cent and taken away the ceiling, so that the person whose taxable income is $5,000 or more would pay a larger part of the cost.

On the other hand, I am sure that if we went around the country today and asked the son whose father is 70 years old if he is ready to pay 1 per cent on his salary in order that his needy father might receive an increase of $10 on his pension, I am sure that everywhere in Canada that son would say "Yes, I am ready to do that for my needy father."

In my opinion, the opposition has played its role and has suggested an alternative to the government. I hope that the government will adopt the best possible policy to help our older people and that it will bring in other beneficial pieces of social legislation.

But I say nevertheless that the role of the opposition is to guide the government; and if the government brings in other similar social measures, which will benefit all Canadians, it is with pleasure that we shall support those measures.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Waterloo North.

Mr. O. W. Weichel (Waterloo North): Mr. Speaker, in order that we may close this debate I will forgo my time to speak now. I would like the debate to come to a close.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka.

[Mr. Girouard.]

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I will also forgo my right to speak.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. Speaker: Miss LaMarsh, seconded by Mr. Pickersgill, moves that I do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of the whole on the said bill. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a minor point, but the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) is not in the house and it is impossible for him to second the motion.

Mr. Speaker: With the unanimous consent of the house Mr. MacNaught will second the motion. Agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacNaught: I second the motion, Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1—Payment of pension.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, needless to say, we heartily endorse this first clause in the legislation. However, I want to ask the minister if she is prepared to make any statement now regarding the matter I raised in the debate on second reading. I thought she might make some statement at that time, but she may have felt that to prolong the debate would involve the risk of carrying the debate on until tomorrow. However, it seems to me that clause 1 would provide a very excellent opportunity for the minister to give some assurance to the committee and to the country that the government's change of mind with respect to separating the increased pension for the old age security recipients from the Canada pension plan was motivated purely by a matter of timing and that it is still the government's intention, irrespective of what may be done by either the insurance companies or the provinces of Ontario or Quebec, to proceed with the Canada pension plan legislation at an early date.

Miss LaMarsh: My hon. friend has asked something which should be apparent to him. May I refer him to page 3038 of Hansard, where I am reported as having said at the resolution stage of the bill:

> This present measure is, Mr. Chairman, a solid step in the right direction, but the government sincerely hopes that the Canada pension plan will be introduced before too long to provide adequately for the retirement of our older people.

I hope that satisfies my hon. friend.

Mr. Douglas: Just to follow that up for a moment, the minister has answered in a very nebulous manner and I would ask the minister to be fairly specific. Does that mean that we will proceed with the Canada pension plan legislation at this session of parliament?

Miss LaMarsh: My hon. friend knows that there is a reference in the speech from the throne to the Canada pension plan. He knows that a resolution appears on the order paper. He knows that the house has been delayed in presenting this legislation in the past two weeks. We were three days on the resolution alone, although the bill has only two clauses. I can only say that my intentions are as always with respect to the Canada pension plan.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I do not like playing cat and mouse with questions like this.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Douglas: I apologize, Mr. Chairman. I should have said kitten and mouse.

Miss LaMarsh: I rise to purr.

Mr. Douglas: Surely it was not too difficult for the minister to have said yes, rather than to tell us that it was in the speech from the throne. Every hon. member here can recall things in the speech from the throne which have never seen the light of day. That it was in the speech from the throne does not mean anything. The fact that there is a resolution on the order paper does not mean that it may not remain there and die on the order paper. All I am asking the minister to say is yes, that it is the intention of the government to proceed with the Canada pension plan legislation at this session of parliament. That is all, there is no problem.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, I should just like to ask the minister if she will clarify the point, because actually the resolution on the order paper now states, among other things:

> —for the payment of an additional pension of ten dollars a month to all persons to whom a pension may be paid under the Old Age Security Act;

I ask the minister simply whether she is going through with this resolution. Does she contemplate amending it?

Miss LaMarsh: Obviously, Mr. Chairman.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, during the debate on second reading, I asked the minister a question and I wish to repeat it because she did not reply.

Why does the government refuse to increase pensions from 65 years of age and also increase pensions for the blind and disabled, as is done by this legislation for persons 70 years of age and over.

I think that this is a discriminating attitude on the part of the government, a discrimination against the disabled and the blind and persons from 65 to 70 years of age.

I ask the minister, who is a very charming person, to give me a logical and positive explanation.

[Text]

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member, who has shown in the recent past that he has either little knowledge of, or little care for, the rules of the house, should be well aware as a member of some experience that one does not amend the Old Age Assistance Act, the Disabled Persons Act and the Blind Persons Act by presenting an amendment to the Old Age Security Act.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, as a supplementary question, I should like to ask the minister: Does the government intend, in the course of this session, to present another bill to increase the pension paid to the disabled and the blind?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Chairman: Order. I am sure the hon. member will agree that during this debate we must talk solely to the resolution before the committee.

[Text]

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Chairman, I hope I will succeed in getting an answer if for the third time I put my question to the minister. I believe the answer is either yes or no. It is very important for the purposes of debate that the house have a final answer from the hon. lady. Again I ask her: When she introduced her legislation for a universal contributory pension plan on July 18, was she or was she not aware of Mr. Lesage's intentions to proceed with a plan in the province of Quebec? Now, yes or no.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Grafftey: I do not think that is too much to ask for.

The Chairman: Order. I would think that that question—

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: I suggest to the hon. member that he should remain seated while I make my comments regarding the objection raised. I do not want to be too strict because this is a discussion in committee, but it seems to me that the question which has been asked by the hon. member now is considerably beyond the scope of the bill before the committee.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Chairman, I have read comments outside this house in the last two days, and a lot of people feel that it is irresponsible politics on my part that I keep asking this question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Grafftey: But this could have been avoided a long time ago if the hon. lady had taken the house into her confidence and given us a forthright yes or no answer to what she realizes is a very important question. Because a lot of the time of the house would have been saved if the hon. lady had been forthright with us. It is terribly important that she tell us whether or not she was aware of Mr. Lesage's intentions when she introduced her legislation.

Mr. Forgie: I suggest the hon. gentleman ask Mr. Lesage.

Mr. Grafftey: I am sure the chairman will forgive me if I do not treat that interjection with any seriousness. But I do hope that the hon. lady will finally give the house an answer.

Miss LaMarsh: Perhaps I might treat my hon. friend's interjection in the same way in which he treated the previous member's interjection.

Clause 1 agreed to.

On clause 2—Tax payable by individuals.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, before we proceed with clause 2 I should like to take the opportunity of following up the very eloquent and forceful remarks and suggestions made by my colleague for Greenwood earlier when discussing the bill on second reading. He made the suggestion that we have no need to raise the tax by one percentage point, and that a much more equitable and fair manner of dealing with and raising the money for this increase of $10 would be by way of removing the ceiling on the tax and leaving the level at the same rate of 3 per cent. The Minister of Finance, when he replied to the suggestion by the hon. member for Greenwood, approached the question with such gentleness that I am sure in his heart he agreed with the suggestion, but for the sake of putting up a good front on behalf of his cabinet colleagues he had to reject the idea, well merited though it was.

The leader of our party, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, has just said that the Minister of Finance indicated that there was much to be said on both sides, which is quite true and is typical of the attitude of this particular minister and his government, that of taking a stand on anything and putting up each side of the question.

However, I should like formally to move an amendment to this clause in order to put into effect the principal point made by my hon. friend from Greenwood earlier today on behalf of the New Democratic party. The amendment reads as follows:

That clause 2 be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

I believe the deletion of the entire clause is necessary because two or three alterations are proposed and the amendment reads with greater clarity if that is done. It continues:

2. Subsection (3) of section 10 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "(3) Every individual liable to pay tax under Part I of the Income Tax Act for a taxation year shall pay an Old Age Security tax for the year equal to 3 per cent of the taxpayer's taxable income for the year."

The amendment uses the wording of the proposed statute but it does, in reality, three things. It leaves the proposed tax as it is at the moment, at 3 per cent, but eliminates the ceiling so that those of us in higher income brackets or above that ceiling—and all members of parliament are now at that level or above it—will be paying a just and equitable share toward the old age security fund. The amendment, in addition, eliminates the proposal to make this applicable to the coming taxation year. Instead, the tax becomes applicable in the current taxation year, the one in which members of parliament received such a substantial raise and the one in which the old age pensioners are to receive the $10 raise.

Mr. Gordon: The hon. member for Skeena in presenting this amendment suggested I had been somewhat gentle in discussing the proposal which was put forward on second reading by the hon. member for Greenwood. I hope I shall always be gentle when I am replying to the hon. member from Greenwood, who is an old friend of mine. The hon. member for Skeena also said I had suggested there was something to be said on both sides of this question. I agree with him. I think there is something to be said on both sides of most questions. But I also said I had reached the conclusion that it would be unwise to accept the proposal which was put forward by the hon. member for Greenwood, and that if there was a case for a review of the structure of personal income tax it would be far better taken up when the subject of the personal income tax itself was under review. I think it would be wise to wait—

The Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. minister but it seems to me that before going into the essence of the proposal put forward by the hon. member for Skeena the Chair should be given an opportunity to rule on the validity of the amendment.

In the very few minutes I have had at my disposal since this amendment has been proposed to the committee I have looked up certain authorities and I should like to make the following ruling: This amendment is out of order for the reason that it seeks to introduce a new proposal which is outside the scope of the bill as it was approved earlier today on second reading. It is, therefore, irrelevant and I should like to quote from May's Parliamentary Practice, sixteenth edition at page 421, where it says:

> Stated generally, no matter ought to be raised in debate on a question which would be irrelevant if moved as an amendment, and an amendment cannot be used for importing arguments which would be irrelevant to the main question.

The proposal put forward by the hon. member is one which would have the effect of negating an essential principle of the bill as approved on second reading.

I submit, also, that it is out of order because it seeks to change the incidence of the tax as implied in the bill. I should like to refer hon. members to Beauchesne, fourth edition, paragraph 276 where it is stated:

> In early editions of this book (Sir T. Erskine May's Parliamentary Practice), it was stated that "the crown has no concern in the distribution of taxes." Hence amendments were at first permitted which proposed the substitution of a different tax for a tax proposed by the government (provided that both were estimated to yield an equivalent amount) on the ground that the necessity of next taxation to that extent had already been declared on behalf of the crown. In modern practice this view is regarded as incomplete, and so requiring to be, supplemented by the view that the royal initiation in taxation implies the exclusive right to define the incidence as well as the amount of burdens to be placed upon the people, and that an amendment which transfers a burden to taxpayers not previously liable is an infringement on this initiative.
> The motion by which a tax is proposed in committee of ways and means is now treated as an effective expression of the financial initiative of the crown, and therefore as the standard in relation to which the admissibility of amendments is determined. Accordingly an amendment is debarred, not only from increasing the rate of a tax, but also from extending its incidence to new classes, even while proposing to relieve other classes of payers.

For these reasons I declare, with regret, that the proposed amendment is out of order.

Mr. Douglas: If Your Honour rules this amendment out of order—and I do not agree with you on the question of relevancy, though I do not intend to argue your ruling now you have given it—may I say I think it is a great pity that the government should not be prepared to accept it. The reasons given this afternoon by the Minister of Finance for not doing so were, it seemed to me, flimsy. The first ground for refusal was, as I recall it, that if we intend to revise personal income taxes this is not the time to do it. Well, of course, it is never the time to do it. The fact is that we are now proposing taxation which is not equitable, taxation which is not levied on the basis of ability to pay. The hon. gentleman says some other time would be the time at which to do what we are asking, which means it will never be done. If the committee intends to deal with this question it should deal with it now.

The other objection the Minister of Finance had was that those in the upper income brackets would be paying a great deal more than the rest, but they would not be eligible for any greater benefits and that we would therefore be taxing them in respect of benefits they were not going to get. I submit that this is precisely what we are doing now, only with respect to people in the lower income brackets. For instance, a man who all his life never earns more than $2,000 or $2,500 a year may never pay this tax, yet he will naturally draw a full pension. Surely, the whole principle of taxation is "From each according to his ability to pay and to each according to his needs". That is the principle of all welfare legislation.

An hon. Member: It is the principle of Marxism, too.

Mr. Douglas: We pay our taxes on the basis of ability to pay and the return we get is not necessarily commensurate with what we have contributed. No one has ever suggested that this is an insurance plan. It is an old age security measure which entitles people to a certain income at a certain age irrespective of whether they have contributed anything to the fund or not. The return which a senior citizen is entitled to receive has nothing to do with what the citizen may have paid in over a period of years. Therefore it is beside the point to suggest that if the ceiling is removed a taxpayer with $10,000 or $12,000 taxable income will be paying more without getting any larger return when he is eligible. It seems to me that on the basis of good welfare legislation—not insurance legislation but good welfare legislation—the proper thing to do is to say that the payments will be levied on the basis of ability to pay on the entire taxable income. If this were done it would remove the necessity of increasing the rate from 3 per cent to 4 per cent. I certainly believe that the government should give very serious consideration to this point because I think the people of Canada would recognize the equity in the proposal we have made.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Does the hon. member for Kootenay East wish to ask the previous speaker a question or is the hon. member asking for the floor?

Mr. Byrne: I am asking for the floor.

The Chairman: I have already recognized the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre.

Mr. Churchill: I will not be very long. The remarks made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam indicate a serious weakness in this particular portion of the bill to which objection was taken by the hon. member for Perth at the resolution stage. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam was entering upon a debate on income tax or methods of raising money which would have been more fitting in a budget debate.

I am surprised that the Minister of Finance has permitted this section of the bill to be included in the legislation because it restricts his room to manoeuvre in his budget arrangements. I wish to reinforce the protest lodged earlier by the hon. member for Perth against this method of combining in a bill a system of raising the money to pay for the expense created by the other portion of the bill. I think this is unsound and I want to put it on record that we do not accept this as a precedent if other legislation should come forward involving a section on money raising in the bill.

The nature of the bill is such, and the time we have spent on it has been sufficiently prolonged, that we do not wish to take any more time discussing these matters. Nevertheless, the particular subject I have been dealing with is vital in legislation, and consequently I make these remarks at this time so there will be no mistake about our position in the future if something similar is done with some other piece of legislation.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Chairman, in intervening at this point in the debate it is not for the purpose of assisting the minister in defending the legislation because certainly she is quite capable of handling it entirely on her own. However, I do take exception to certain statements made by the hon. member for Skeena when he spoke and introduced the amendment which you subsequently ruled out of order. In supporting his contention that the tax should be applied to taxable incomes above $5,000 he said that members of parliament had increased their pay during the spring session.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Byrne: If the hon. member feels that was improper or if he now feels that he should not have accepted the increase, I suggest that he avail himself—

[Mr. Churchill.]

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Byrne: —of the suggestion made by the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency.

The Chairman: Order. I am sure the hon. member will recognize that he is straying quite far from the bill before the committee and I would ask him to limit his remarks to the bill and particularly to clause 2 thereof.

Mr. Byrne: I am limiting my remarks entirely to the clause. Surely if the hon. member for Skeena has the right to introduce matters extraneous to the clause I should have the right to reply.

The Chairman: Order. I would remind the hon. member that the Chair brought the previous speaker to order when I felt he was straying from the bill before the committee. Even if by error the Chair failed to bring a previous speaker to order when it should have done so, if at this time the situation is recognized in the way it should be I would ask for the co-operation of the hon. member.

Mr. Churchill: On a point of order, I was the previous speaker. I do not think you intended to refer to me.

The Chairman: No, to one of the previous speakers.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Chairman, I feel that the determination of the maximum at $120 is a reasonably fair arrangement. I want to remind hon. members that members of parliament, who may now reach a taxable income of $5,000 or more do not at any time receive old age security payments by reason of the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Byrne: They do not receive old age security payments. This is really no argument that the hon. member for Skeena has presented, and if on reflection he feels he should not be receiving the increased indemnity he should in conscience opt out.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I was somewhat surprised that the Minister of Finance, in rejecting some of the suggestions made by members on this side of the house, said that this was an inappropriate time to amend the Income Tax Act. If clause 2 of this bill is not a partial amendment or revision of the Income Tax Act, what is it?

[Translation]

Mr. Perron: Mr. Chairman, at this stage of the bill and before dealing with the subject matter, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh). I hope that, with her usual kindness, she will give me an answer.

Does the minister admit the correctness of the statement of the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Wahn), who suggested that it was a matter of principle that the increase in old age pensions is to be financed by an increase in income tax?

[Text]

Miss LaMarsh: I am sorry, but either the interpretation was incorrect or I did not understand the question.

[Translation]

Mr. Perron: Mr. Chairman, for the information of the minister, I will repeat my question.

Does she consider that the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Wahn) has stated the policy adopted by the government, that is to finance the cost of higher old age pensions by means of an income tax increase?

[Text]

Miss LaMarsh: I am not sure I understood the purport of the question. However, I should like to say to the committee that I quite agree with the hon. member for St. Paul's that the proposal of the government was always tied to taxation, that taxation being by way of contributions to the Canada pension plan. The payment of the increased $10 was to be paid from that source, which is a type of taxation; the government, by reason of the unanimous resolution of the Quebec legislature was required to separate this $10 increase from the Canadian pension plan. The government therefore continues to apply the principle of raising, by contributions from the public, the necessary amount for the increase.

An hon. Member: We have the reason at last.

Miss LaMarsh: I said that at the resolution stage.

[Translation]

Mr. Perron: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this does not answer exactly the question I had asked, but since nearly half an hour has been necessary to outline a principle aimed at justifying the increase in income tax to finance a $10 increase in old age pensions, which we approve, it is imperative to set the record straight.

During his speech, the hon. member for St. Paul's quoted certain statements made by Mr. Graham Towers in support of the principle he was setting forth.

Now, allow me to point out to the house that at the time he appeared before the committee on banking and commerce, in 1939, Mr. Graham Towers made other statements. In fact, when he was asked about the way the government obtained funds, Mr. Towers replied:

> There are three ways for the government to secure money: by taxation, by borrowing the savings of the people or by borrowing to create additional money in the economic process, an act which is connected with the monetary expansion policy.

Since Mr. Towers has been quoted as an authority on financial matters, I feel that we should also recognize the principle of creating credit for the government of Canada and for the country, since Mr. Towers agrees that the government can obtain money by means of monetary expansion, a scheme which consists in borrowing to create additional money in the economic process.

Mr. Chairman, at this stage I feel it would be time to change our system and to move an amendment to the section under consideration. I hope that the government will not give us the same reply as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) who said earlier that we could not put estimates out of balance, when the last budget did not mention at all this 1 per cent increase.

In addition, the Minister of National Health and Welfare admitted a moment ago that provision was made in the speech from the throne for another means of financing her old age pension contributory plan.

Therefore, I feel that the amendment I wish to introduce is in order and would change nothing at all to the provisions of the present Old Age Security Act.

Consequently, with the support of the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier), I move:

> That section 2 be repealed and that the following words be substituted therefor: "The necessary funds for the increase will be advanced by the Bank of Canada".

[Text]

The Chairman: Perhaps the Chair might be allowed to rule at this point on the proposed amendment. In my opinion, this amendment proposing a change in the propositions contained in the bill is in error for at least one of the reasons which I advanced in connection with the previous amendment. In my opinion, the amendment is not relevant to the question on which an amendment is proposed.

I should like to quote again from May's Parliamentary Practice, sixteenth edition, page 421:

> Stated generally, no matter ought to be raised in debate on a question which would be irrelevant, if moved as an amendment, and an amendment cannot be used for importing arguments which would be irrelevant to the main question.

Clearly the suggestion made in the amendment is irrelevant to the main question in that it brings forth arguments which are irrelevant to the main question. I think that for this reason principally, and others which might be cited but which are not necessary, I shall have to rule the amendment out of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Chapdelaine: It is with a great interest that I listened to the unacceptable solutions of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas), and the amendment he proposed was, of course, declared out of order. The amendment of the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Perron) inviting the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) to obtain money in another way than the one mentioned in section 2 of the bill, was also rejected.

I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether it would not be possible now to initiate a reform of the Bank of Canada in order to find the necessary amounts. The time will come when we will have to stop levying taxes, as they already have started to do in the United States under the Kennedy administration.

I should like to know whether the minister is aware that the chartered banks have now the power that we, members of parliament, grant them, namely to create 12 times the money they have in deposit with the Bank of Canada. If gradually we want to cease levying taxes, we shall have to take away from the chartered banks—

The Chairman: The Chair would be grateful to the hon. member if he would come back to section 2 of the bill under study.

Mr. Chapdelaine: I was suggesting to the minister how to find the necessary funds without having to levy taxes, and this is relevant to section 2 which provides for the raising of the funds necessary to finance the increase in old age pensions.

I merely want to know if it would be possible to gradually take away from chartered banks this power which we, the parliament, have given them and which enables them to create 12 times more money than their deposit with the Bank of Canada. Then, if we took away from chartered banks merely one fourth of the powers which we gave them to create this money, we could find more than five times the money necessary for the financing of this increase in old age pensions.

Could the minister tell me if he realizes that such a solution could be carried out?

[Text]

Mr. Peters: I would think, Mr. Chairman, after listening to the remarks that have been made tonight, the government would be aware of the fact that there are a number of ways in which this $10 increase could be paid and clause 2 of the bill could be operative. Having listened to the remarks of the chairman and the citations he used, I would think it would be very difficult for an opposition member to move a motion which would accomplish what a great many people want accomplished, to have the tax spread over a wider structure so that those better able to pay could do so.

I believe this is a problem which will face the government in the next few days. There is a general resentment amongst the public at increasing taxes at this time, and this is due to the statements made during the recent election and some of the promises that were made. The Minister of Finance knows that if we maintain the rate of 3 per cent and remove the ceiling this will bring in about $116 million, which is very close to the $100 million suggested by that 1 per cent raise. It is just that simple.

We must ask ourselves, are we going to satisfy the rich people of the country and add 1 per cent on to the amount paid by the poor people, when we could accomplish the same thing if we took the ceiling off and let the rich make payments? Are we going to support the rich of the country at the expense of the overburdened poor?

Mr. Valade: I have just a few remarks to make, and I want to pick up what the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Chapdelaine) has said. If the Minister of Finance has some difficulty in raising the funds, then I suppose that in Social Credit ridings he could always annul the $10 per month contribution that Social Crediters are obliged to pay to their party. This would amount to $120 per year per member, and could be used as a contribution to the old age pensions.

[Translation]

Mr. Chapdelaine: Mr. Chairman, to restore some degree of seriousness in this house after the broad remarks of the hon. member for St. Mary (Mr. Valade), I would ask the Minister of Finance—

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. I know that the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Chapdelaine) is a newcomer to the house, but he has no right to make unparliamentary remarks, such as the rude words he just used.

When I speak of Social Crediters, I know that I am being free-spoken because the word is broad.

Mr. Chapdelaine: Mr. Chairman, broadness is something that is inborn, it is not external.

Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance was ready to answer the question I put to him. I simply want to ask him whether he is aware that it would be possible to raise money in that manner.

[Text]

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I suppose all government expenditures for a time could be financed either by borrowing or by inflation of the monetary system, but sooner or later this would lead to a great deal of trouble which would hit everybody in the country, and particularly those in the lower income brackets. Obviously there are alternative ways in which this particular expenditure could be financed, but in the opinion of the government, and in the circumstances, the method proposed is the preferable way.

Instead of indulging in a longer answer to this question perhaps I might be permitted to remind hon. members of the committee that we are about to have royal assent and they might be willing to leave this question. This is the view of the government, that this particular expenditure should be financed in this way, and perhaps we could move on to the next item of business.

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, would you call for the yeas and nays on this clause?

Clause agreed to: yeas, 127; nays, 25.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported and read the third time and passed.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major Alfred Fortier, Assistant Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1964.

An Act for the relief of Madeleine Francoise Hankowski.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: May I ask the house leader if there is any change in the order of business for tomorrow?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I hope the hon. gentleman will not feel that there is any departure from proper procedure but the Prime Minister did indicate some time ago that if the effort to establish a private trusteeship was not successful the house would be asked to proceed immediately with the first stage of that legislation, which is the resolution now on the order paper. That, therefore, will be the first item of business for tomorrow. As tomorrow is a Wednesday I suppose it will probably be the only item of business, but should it be concluded we would then proceed with the program which was uncompleted today, that is to say the Northwest Territories bill and the bill for the other territory, and the vocational training measure.

It being ten minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, October 9, 1963

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF STORAGE OF NUCLEAR WARHEADS AT U.S. BASES IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the house of the continental defence arrangement which the government has entered into with the United States government concerning the storage of nuclear warheads in Canada for United States interceptor aircraft stationed in two United States leased bases in Newfoundland. The arrangement which has been concluded was the result of negotiations to which I referred in the house on May 20 and again on June 7. It is in the form of an exchange of notes and specifies the conditions under which nuclear air to air defensive weapons will be stored for United States air force interceptor aircraft under the operational command of the commander in chief of the joint North American air defence command stationed at United States leased bases in Newfoundland.

Under the arrangement operational use of these defensive weapons would be governed by the operational plans of NORAD, approved by both governments. In other respects as well, such as the strict safety measures which will apply, the terms now agreed parallel those relating to the conditions under which warheads will be made available to Canadian forces as announced on August 16. In accordance with the requirements of national security, military details cannot be made public.

This exchange of notes complements that of August 16 relating to Canadian forces in that it will permit all NORAD air defence forces stationed in Canada, regardless of their nationality, to be equipped with weapons which, it has been agreed, are presently required for them to fulfil effectively their role of protecting this continent against bomber attack. As a result, the Canadian and United States forces assigned to NORAD for the air defence of North America, wherever they are stationed, will have the means at their disposal to discharge their defensive task, a task which we all hope they will never be called upon to perform.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, of course, the house is in the same position as it has continued to be under this government in that the information made available to us is of so sketchy a character as to deny us the opportunity of knowing whether or not, in any agreement entered into, the sovereignty of Canada is protected or whether Canada is placed in a subservient position. Furthermore, it is a matter, I think, of interest to know that during the election campaign the present Prime Minister told us that the Canadian government intended to negotiate itself out of the possession of nuclear weapons or their storage in Canada.

Naturally the house would appreciate the opportunity to learn something of the negotiations, if any, that have gone on, for it strikes me as passing strange that a government that intends to negotiate out of nuclear weapons now places itself in a position where millions of dollars will be expended for the storage of nuclear weapons. At the same time, in the back of its mind, the government intends to bring about by renegotiation the removal of those things that they are now going to expend money upon for storage purposes.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the statement which has been made by the Prime Minister simply forges another link in the chain which is now binding Canada to the United States as a military satellite, and is one more step toward making Canada a nuclear power.

We in this group protest most vehemently that these announcements are being made without any documents being placed before parliament and without full knowledge of the facts being made available to hon. members of the house. It seems to us that this agreement ought to be filed in the house, as should the agreement with reference to the acquisition of nuclear arms for Canadian forces.

I would urge the Prime Minister first of all to make this information available to the house. If he is not prepared to make it available to the house, he might at least agree to make it available to the parliamentary committee on defence so that the members of that committee would have an opportunity of perusing this information and of questioning the ministers concerned regarding it.

I would also urge that the Prime Minister set aside a day fairly soon for the discussion of this whole question of Canada's becoming a military satellite of the United States or being boxed more and more into a nuclear role, out of which the government itself promised to negotiate us. If the government does not avail itself of such an opportunity, then those of us in the opposition groups would have to take whatever opportunity we can find to raise this question and have it fully debated in the house.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, we note with keen interest the announcement which the right hon. Prime Minister has made in regard to the continuance of what has been the declared policy of the Liberal party respecting our obligations for the defence of this continent. However, I am of the opinion that this information, in its greatest maximum detail, should be made available to the defence committee so that the committee can fulfil the obligations which rest upon it, and so that we can know for sure that the policy which is being followed by the government is the one that is essential at this point.

So far as defence is concerned the real need which we in Canada have today is to strike out on a new role, such as that which we heard the Minister of National Defence talking about a few weeks ago, concerning our share in the defence of the continent as it relates to a non-nuclear mobile defence force which can play an essential part in the defence of our country, and can also play its part in the defence of the free world whenever it may be called upon to do so. We in our party trust the government will move forward with this suggestion and that the defence committee will be utilized to its maximum effect.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I must point out, even though it should be obvious to everyone in the house and I hope it is not misunderstood, that I have taken the stand from the opening of the present session, and will continue to do so until I have received formal instructions from the house, that on motions I am bound by the rules of the house just to recognize spokesmen of recognized parties in the house.

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

In my opinion, we have the right to express our opinion at this time when the Prime Minister makes a statement.

Considering that we are legally elected representatives of the people, why are we denied the right to speak when we have something to say?

I should like you to give a decision in that regard, since I have a few remarks to make concerning the Prime Minister's statement.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I am very sorry but I must hold to the original position I have taken from the beginning, and when the house gives me formal instructions to recognize the leader of a new party I will be delighted to do so. Until such time I am bound by the facts as they are.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, since it does not belong to the house to recognize a political party but rather to the voters themselves and to the members to form such a party, I appeal from your ruling.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members will have heard the discussion and the decision of the Chair. From the decision of the Chair an appeal is taken. Those in favour of upholding the decision of the Chair will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those against will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: I believe the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker put the question as follows:

The hon. member for Villeneuve, having risen to comment with regard to a ministerial statement, and the Chair having stated that in recognizing the hon. member it would, in effect, be deciding upon a question which had been referred to the standing committee on privileges and elections, the Chair went on to say that in accordance with practice it was bound to recognize only leaders of recognized parties; whereupon the hon. member for Lapointe appealed to the house from the ruling of the Chair.

The house divided on the question: Shall the Speaker's decision be sustained? And the decision of the Chair was sustained on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I should like to give a ruling on the question of privilege which the hon.

member for Lapointe has raised. First of all, I do think it is in general terms. There is nothing specific about it. It is more in the nature of a grievance than a question of privilege. The specific matter referred to is under consideration at the present time, and in the circumstances I see no question of privilege.

Mr. Asselin: I was paired. Had I voted, I would have voted to sustain the Chair.

Mr. Cashin: I was paired. Had I voted, I would have voted to sustain the Chair.

Mr. Roxburgh: I was paired, and I would have voted for your ruling.

Mr. Nugent: I was not paired, but I was outmanoeuvred.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker—

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. May I know under which standing order—

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: I move, under standing order 29, that the hon. member for Eglinton be heard.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but I did not hear what the Secretary of State said.

Mr. Pickersgill: I move, under standing order 29, that the hon. member for Eglinton be heard.

Mr. Gregoire: The hon. member for Villeneuve raised a question of privilege before Your Honour recognized the Secretary of State. I think Your Honour should recognize the hon. member for Villeneuve.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the hon. member for Villeneuve raised a question of privilege I could not make my motion. However, I was observing carefully and I observed that the hon. member for Eglinton rose even before the pairs were declared, and he certainly rose before the hon. member for Villeneuve. If these were just the ordinary proceedings of the house, standing order 29 would apply. Of course a question of privilege, if there could be a question of privilege at this time —which I doubt, sir—could be raised at any time.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, may I be informed under which standing order you are prevented from recognizing the hon. member for Villeneuve?

Mr. Dupuis: There is no rule or regulation to prevent people from spitting on the floor.

Mr. Caouette: You, you spit into the wind, and get it in the eye.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: First, may I say that questions are not asked of the Speaker in that fashion. Second, as you know, until the house instructs me I cannot act on those instructions. I do not believe I need to say more at this stage.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. With reference to the announcement he made this afternoon regarding the agreement with the United States for air to air nuclear missiles for northern North American defence, could I ask the Prime Minister whether it is the intention of the government to make this agreement available either to the house or to the defence committee of parliament?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman must know that this is a military agreement which contains facts which bear on military security and the security of the country, and it would therefore be quite improper to make all those facts and all those details public. In that respect we are following the course followed by the previous government and outlined more than once by the right hon. gentleman who then led the government. All the information which can be made available will be made available. The matter can be discussed in the defence committee of the Commons. Next Monday we hope to have a supply motion, so the hon. gentleman can bring up the question at that time and debate the whole issue, if he sees fit, in spite of the fact that the issue was debated for four days in the early part of the session.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question. May I ask the Prime Minister what assurance can we have that there is adequate provision for joint control, and that there is no danger of unilateral action which would precipitate an unfortunate situation?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I will give my hon. friend the assurance of myself and the government that there are adequate provisions for joint control. I will also tell my hon. friend that this agreement is based substantially on a draft which was submitted by the previous government to the United States government in 1959, accepted in principle by that government, and not proceeded with by the Canadian government of the day.

Storage of Nuclear Warheads Announced

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this is apparently going to become a debate. May I say at once that the statement of the Prime Minister is not in accordance with the facts. Let that be clear and unequivocal.

Mr. Pearson: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman apparently forgets that I have access to the records, and my statement is strictly in accord with the facts. If the right hon. gentleman will raise this question on the supply motion next Monday, we can go into the record.

While I am on my feet, the right hon. gentleman said earlier in the day that this agreement would cost the Canadian taxpayers millions of dollars. It will cost the Canadian taxpayers nothing.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, this is a very strange statement on the part of the Prime Minister, that if we move a motion or an amendment he will then reveal that which he has refused to place before parliament. Whenever he finds himself in a corner he always becomes peevishly annoyed.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I did not say that if the matter was debated I would reveal information which I say now cannot be revealed. I said that I would reveal the record of the government, and I would be delighted to do that.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I may say to the Prime Minister that I am sure Canadians will find that in the long run, most things which appear to cost them nothing cost them a great deal. I want to ask the Prime Minister whether the sections of the agreement having to do with joint control could be made available to the house. This would not involve security information which would be privileged.

Mr. Pearson: Well, Mr. Speaker, the agreement does provide for joint control, I have said that. Surely the hon. gentleman will take my word.

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. I should like to ask the Prime Minister how the control can be joint control, and still cost Canada nothing. Will it be the United States which is going to pay for the Canadian part of the joint control?

Mr. Pearson: You are mixed up.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. With reference to the statement made by the Prime Minister concerning nuclear bases, there being five air defence stations, the two Bomarc stations and the two leased bases in Newfoundland, will the minister inform the house if consideration is being given to establishing such a base at Val d'Or in Villeneuve and, if so, what would be the nature of the target it was intended to protect?

TRADE

RUSSIA—TABLING OF DOCUMENTS IN CONNECTION WITH TRADE AGREEMENT

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): As requested, Mr. Speaker, I am tabling today two copies in English and in French of the protocol renewing the trade agreement between Canada and the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics, signed at Ottawa on September 16, 1963, together with an exchange of correspondence between Mr. Borisov and myself of the same date in respect of the purchase and sale of wheat by the wheat board and by the Soviet agency.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I should like to bring to the attention of the house the fact that we are very glad to have this protocol and correspondence tabled. I should like to point out to the house the very embarrassing circumstances under which this is done. This agreement was signed over three weeks ago, and it is being tabled in the house on October 9. This matter has been discussed in the public press of the United States for two weeks. Now we are in the embarrassing position of having put before us, on October 9, a subject matter that was under discussion in our neighbouring country for over two weeks.

I should like to point out to the house the embarrassing position in which have been put. It is a question of experience in these matters, I know, but when you do sign these protocols you table them as soon as possible. On the last occasion a protocol was signed on April 18, 1960, and was tabled in the house on April 25. There was none of this leaking of information or discussion in the public press by the central intelligence agency and other parties to the agreement until we, in Canada, had a chance to see the agreement, not between the United States and Russia but between Canada and Russia.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I am in order, but perhaps I am as much in order as the hon. member for Qu'Appelle. I just wanted to say that I gave a full explanation of this transaction, and the discussion that has proceeded subsequently has been on the basis of that explanation and not on the basis of the documents I am tabling today which merely show formally what I had announced publicly.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce with reference to the trade agreement between this country and Russia. Was this agreement shown to the United States government or to any of its agencies, or to any joint agency or committee of the two countries before its tabling in the Canadian parliament today?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I am not certain of the answer to this question but, as I said in the house in answer to earlier questions, we kept the United States informed during the course of the negotiations about the contents of this agreement. Whether they actually saw the terms as I tabled them today, I am not certain.

Mr. Ian Grant Wahn (St. Paul's): I wish to direct a further question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the headline in last night's Toronto Star reading "Canada Won't Ship Russian Wheat in Time —U.S. View", is the government considering, or will it consider, underwriting government insurance or providing other incentives to shipping through Churchill or other available ports so that the wheat from Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba may be delivered in time to fulfil Canada's commitments despite strike action at certain Canadian ports and any possible irresponsible action on the part of the S.I.U?

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that the hon. member's question is one for the order paper.

Mr. H. F. Jones (Saskatoon): I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce a question supplementary to the one asked by my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle. I wonder whether the minister could ascertain the facts in this connection and advise the house as to what action was taken with regard to informing the United States about this agreement?

An hon. Member: Why?

[Later:]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce following the question which was asked by the hon. member for Saskatoon and which remains unanswered. When the United States authorities were made aware from time to time as negotiations went on between Canada and the U.S.S.R. regarding the sale of wheat, is there any foundation for the suggestion in the United States press that strong objections were raised by the United States to the fixing of the price at an average of $1.74 which they contended would have a detrimental effect on their sales of wheat abroad? Were objections raised by the United States or not?

Mr. Sharp: I think the short answer to the question put by the Leader of the Opposition is, no. We kept the United States authorities informed of the general course of the negotiations, but we did not at that time talk about price at all.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Subsequently, when the question of price had been determined, were their any objections by the United States to the price comprised in the agreement as stated in the Canadian Press dispatch, from Washington, as I recall it?

Mr. Sharp: The question of price, as the hon. gentleman knows, and as members of the house are aware, is a matter which is decided by the wheat board from day to day and from time to time, as they are negotiating. This price is determined by the wheat board in the interests of the western farmers. As far as the Minister of Trade and Commerce is concerned, this is not a matter with which he ordinarily concerns himself, so I would not have had any discussions about prices. I have heard, however, that some members of the United States administration have made some comments about the prices which the wheat board felt it advisable to charge its customers.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What was the nature of those comments?

Mr. Sharp: They were comments rather of the kind which appeared in the newspapers.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Along those same lines, with regard to the pricing of our wheat, there are reports in this morning's Globe and Mail that Canada has entered into a fixed price arrangement for the next eight months in connection with a trade deal with Japan. Is this true? Have we set a price eight months hence?

Mr. Sharp: I have discussed this matter with the Canadian wheat board. As I have explained, the wheat board is responsible for the pricing and sale of Canadian wheat in foreign markets. I have been advised by the board that current reports suggesting that the Canadian wheat board has altered its methods of selling wheat for forward delivery and the pricing of such sales are inaccurate. The Canadian wheat board has continued to follow its usual marketing policy this season as in the past. The board's quoted price for wheat has advanced approximately 8 cents per bushel since the recent sale to the U.S.S.R., and contracts with traditional customers have been completed recently at the board's quoted prices then current for shipment during the crop year which ends next July 31. There is nothing new or unusual about this procedure. The Canadian wheat board has always been prepared to sell to buyers wheat for forward delivery at its current daily quoted prices.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): I have another supplementary question, and this is on the point. Has the minister received information that, because wheat shipments from western Canada have been held up due to strike conditions here, the department of trade and commerce in the United States, and other departments there intend to take advantage of the situation in concluding wheat deals with Russia?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I am sure it is no secret that the United States government has been reconsidering its position. It was reconsidering its position even before there was any strike or threat of strike on the great lakes amongst the longshoremen. I do not think the United States government, whether or not it changes its policy, will be influenced by the strike now going on.

Mr. Woolliams: Will it reduce our contract?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): A supplementary question. Is it the intention of the government and the Minister of Trade and Commerce to have the wheat board appear before the standing committee on agriculture, as has been the usual pattern in the past, so that we can be given full details with regard to this proposed new implementation of forward pricing?

Mr. Sharp: I have just denied there is anything new about this, but I can assure my hon. friend I shall have no objection whatever and shall encourage the Canadian wheat board to appear before the committee.

Mr. Herridge: A supplementary question—

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question? Does the Minister of Trade and Commerce know that, this morning, it was reported that the United States reached a wheat sale agreement with Russia yesterday, I think?

[Text]

Mr. Sharp: I really have no information about the policy of the United States government, other than has appeared in the newspapers.

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kootenay West.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, the answer the minister has just given to a prior question answers my question.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the necessity of restoring orderly shipping along the St. Lawrence, would the minister consider calling together repersentatives of the union and representatives of the shipping federation, as well as representatives of the grain handlers, elevator companies and railway transportation companies with a view to bringing before all these segments of commerce a common understanding and purpose with regard to the movement of goods going into international trade?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest that is a question for the order paper.

[Later:]

Mr. Jones: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce relating to an earlier reply. He said he had kept the Americans informed of the progress of the discussions in regard to our negotiations with the Russians for the wheat sale, and he just said a few moments ago that the Americans have not similarly kept him informed. I wonder whether he can explain the reason for the difference in treatment, and why we were not informed.

Some hon. Members: Order.

FISHERIES

NORTH PACIFIC TREATY—STATEMENT ON PROGRESS IN NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): As I stated last Friday, Mr. Speaker, and repeated to the house yesterday, I should like to inform the house of the progress made in the negotiations at Tokyo concerning the north Pacific fisheries treaty, as reported to me by the Canadian delegation which returned to Ottawa last night. I also table, for the information of the house, the press release issued at the close of the Tokyo meetings.

As I informed the house on June 24, the negotiations between Canada, Japan and the United States on the north Pacific fisheries convention commenced in Washington, D.C., on June 6 and recessed on June 21 after a useful exchange of views. At the close of the Washington meetings, Canada and the United States believed that the conservation and rational development of the north Pacific fisheries would be assured best by continuation of the present conventions embodying the abstention principle. Japan, on the other hand, proposed a new convention omitting that principle but providing for joint conservation measures by the three countries.

The negotiations were resumed in Tokyo on September 16. At the opening session I emphasized Canada's concern for the protection of our salmon, halibut and herring fisheries in the north Pacific. Canada, in co-operation with the United States, has maintained these fisheries at highly productive levels through extensive research and strict regulation of our own fishing and, in the case of salmon, through measures to protect and assist their production in our fresh waters. These fisheries are fully utilized by our fishermen and should be reserved for their use. On the other hand, Canada wants protection for these fisheries with minimum interference with Japan's use of other fish stocks not now fully exploited.

In the course of the Tokyo meetings, the United States presented a modification of the draft convention proposed by Japan in Washington. Discussions are proceeding on the basis of this draft which would provide the necessary protection for our fisheries but without explicit statement of the abstention principle as it appears in the present convention.

The negotiations were most productive and greatly improved the understanding by each country of the interests and positions of the others. It was especially promising to discover the high degree of protection for our fisheries which Japan is prepared to afford under a new convention. The meeting recessed to enable the delegations to consult further with their governments, but with a feeling of optimism regarding agreement on a mutually satisfactory convention. It is hoped that this will be accomplished at the next series of meetings which, the conference recommended, should be reconvened next spring. The Canadian delegation expressed the hope that these meetings could be held in Ottawa.

The differences which remain to be resolved are concerned mainly with the manner in which the basis for protection of these fisheries is expressed in the new convention. In the case of salmon the Canadian position is that the convention must recognize Canada's special interest in the stocks which spawn in our rivers, based on long continued scientific management and full utilization, and also on positive cultural measures and restrictions of other water uses damaging to salmon production. In the case of halibut the joint special interest of the United States and Canada should also be explicitly recognized in view of the restoration of the fishery to highly productive levels by effective study and regulation by the international Pacific halibut commission.

Canada's special interest in our intensively fished herring stocks should also be recognized. We want the basis for our special interest in these fisheries to be so expressed in the convention as to give general and continuing protection. It is still necessary to reconcile this objective with Japan's reluctance to include any statement of principles which might hinder the development of her far-flung fisheries. Nevertheless the reasonable and constructive tone of the discussions gives hope for eventual agreement. In the meantime the present convention remains in force.

As I have indicated before, when any agreements are reached they will be fully discussed before the standing committee on marine and fisheries before final acceptance by the government.

Mr. Nielsen: It sounds pretty fishy.

Mr. Robichaud: That is about the only kind of remarks you can make.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I think the house is indebted to the minister for the information he has given on the situation as it now is with regard to the renegotiation of this very important treaty. The systematic exploitation of the living resources of the sea is one problem of great international importance, and its importance will increase as time goes by.

I am pleased that the minister has stated that the importance of recognizing the need for protecting Canada's interests, especially in these three particular stocks of fish, has been stressed, and I am particularly pleased that he has given an assurance the present treaty will remain in force until some determination has been reached in the present discussions.

I would hope that there would be a reconvening of the conference at an early date, preferably before next spring, if this is at all feasible.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, we also appreciate the statement which the Minister of Fisheries has made on the negotiations that have been carried on in Tokyo regarding this fisheries treaty.

The fishermen of British Columbia have been very perturbed over developments of the past several months. They have been watching the proceedings very closely, and in many instances have been somewhat disturbed with the attitude that has been taken with regard to a number of the problems involved.

The minister has called attention to the difference of opinion between Canada and Japan regarding the abstention principle. In this connection I would point out that I had the opportunity of attending a meeting of west coast fishermen at Steveston before the resumption of the session. Several hundred attended and this matter was discussed. As the minister knows, communications were relayed from that meeting, as well as from us individually, and it is the general feeling that Japan is trying to force its way into Canadian fishing areas piece by piece, just moving forward gradually, and making one demand after another until our fishermen are afraid they will be in a position where they will have all their rights taken away from them.

I do not think Canadian fishermen are particularly concerned that the wording "abstention principle" be retained in the treaty, but they are certainly very desirous that the principle itself be maintained. I appreciate the fact that the minister has indicated the Canadian delegation has pressed very strongly for the retention of this principle, and I hope that in any future negotiations it will be kept in mind that only by such a principle will Canadian rights and prerogatives be maintained.

Therefore we welcome this statement today, but once again urge that in all the negotiations that will be carried on in future this principle will be kept in mind and Canada's interests fully protected.

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the reason the treaty negotiations have been adjourned is because Japan is really not interested in having a treaty on the north Pacific fisheries which contains the abstention principle. It may well be in the interests of Japan not to have such a treaty, but it is certainly in the interests of the other fishing countries of the north Pacific, Canada, the United States and the Soviet union.

We believe that Japan has been encouraged in its opposition to a treaty by what we consider the weak positions taken by the governments of both Canada and the United States over the past two years. This spring the government of Canada acted with undue haste, and I think with irregular procedure, in agreeing that Japan be allowed to fish for herring and halibut in areas from which it was formerly excluded. We think the Canadian government has taken an apologetic attitude, both before and during these negotiations. Our delegation seems to be fighting a rearguard action against the demands of Japan, but it should not be afraid to state that we intend to protect our very great investment in conservation against exploitation by other countries.

[Mr. Patterson.]

We suggest that the government take the position that fishing for salmon on the high seas be discontinued, and that a circumscribed area be drawn west of a line of demarcation within which no high seas fisheries be allowed. When the negotiations resume we hope that the Canadian delegation will advance these proposals and make it unmistakably clear that Canada intends to protect the fisheries which Canadian conservation methods have preserved.

In the past a great many suggestions were put forward that, in negotiations such as this for a north Pacific fisheries treaty, the Soviet union be invited to participate. Incidentally this was advocated by the Liberal party in British Columbia in 1952, and I feel there is a very great weakness in any agreement concerning the north Pacific if the other major fishing nation of the north Pacific is not included in it. I think the contracting parties to the convention should once more take this matter into account.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries based on the statement he made earlier today. Will the minister table copies of the draft treaty presented by Japan and the United States?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): As I have stated in the house on other occasions, it is not the practice to table such draft treaties while negotiations are under way or before an agreement is reached.

QUESTIONS

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, the following questions are being answered today: 1,070, 1,108, 1,115, 1,116, 1,120, 1,165, 1,166, 1,173, 1,190, 1,199, 1,200, 1,201, 1,205, 1,208, 1,211, 1,215, 1,219, 1,221, 1,222, 1,226, 1,229 and 1,252.

If question No. 854 could be made an order for return the return would be tabled immediately. I would also ask that question 1,244 be made an order for return.

If Your Honour would be good enough to call starred questions 1,054 and 1,225, I would ask that all remaining questions stand.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

*PERSONNEL OF PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

Question No. 1,054—Mr. Pigeon:

What are the names of the personnel attached to the office of the Prime Minister, giving for each (a) his or her title (b) annual salary and (c) bilingual status?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to answer this question orally but it would take four minutes to read the answer. I therefore request the permission of the house to have it printed in Hansard without reading it aloud.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give permission?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

3. No given period.

4. Ability to do the job.

IMMIGRATION FROM CENTRAL AMERICA

Question No. 1,108—Mr. Fisher:

1. Did the Department of External Affairs issue circular No. 32/62 regarding immigration from Central American nations and, if so, to whom did it circulate?

2. Did this circular raise the question of the small number of immigrants coming from Central America and suggest that more qualified immigrants could be found and procured?

3. Has there been any change in policy with regard to instructions given external affairs representatives in Latin America over the last five years on either the encouraging or discouraging of immigration to Canada?

Questions

Mr. Martin (Essex East): 1. (a) Yes, on August 2, 1962; (b) to all external affairs posts and trade commissioner's offices abroad.

2. Circular documents concerning internal departmental administration are privileged and it has never been the practice to reveal the contents of such documents.

3. Yes. The revision of February 1, 1962 of the immigration regulations encouraged immigration from Latin America.

ASSISTANCE TO BEAVERHOUSE INDIANS, ONTARIO

Question No. 1,115—Mr. Peters:

Has the government given any assistance to the Beaverhouse Indians resident near Dobie, Ontario, and, if so (a) what assistance towards education has been provided and (b) what other assistance has been provided?

Mr. Pickersgill: The group is known as the Beaverhouse lake Indians and reside in the general area of Dobie, Indian point and Beaverhouse lake, Ontario. There is no Indian reserve in that area and with a few exceptions, all members of the group are of non-Indian status. The few persons of Indian status residing in this area are self supporting and no assistance from the Department of Citizenship and Immigration has been required.

With respect to Indian health services, the isolation of the area, the difficult travel conditions and the small Indian population make regular medical coverage impractical. Emergency medical care, when required, is provided and all registered Indians are insured under the Ontario hospital services commission.

ASSISTANCE TO INDIANS, MATACHEWAN, ONT.

Question No. 1,116—Mr. Peters:

Has the government given any assistance to the Indian band located at Matachewan, Ontario, and, if so (a) what assistance has been provided towards education, and (b) what other assistance has been provided?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1. (a) These Indians reside in the town of Matachewan and not on an Indian reserve. Their children have been attending public and high schools in the district which they are entitled to do as residents and accordingly no educational assistance has been provided by the Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

(b) Notwithstanding the fact that these Indians reside off the reserve, relief assistance in the amount of $1,379.93 in 1961-62 and $3,553.50 in 1962-63 was provided to various members of this group. In 1959 the department purchased a number of trap lines for the Matachewan Indians. These were in addition to those set aside for this band under the Ontario fur agreement. Assistance was also provided to this band to commence logging operations on the Matachewan Indian reserve and in the placement of Indians in employment, particularly in the forest industry.

In so far as the Department of National Health and Welfare is concerned, an Indian health services public health nurse visits the village every six to eight weeks. A Red Cross nurse is stationed in the village. The nurses refer cases requiring a higher level of treatment to a designated physician at Kirkland Lake. The department pays for care provided to Indians on a fee for service basis. Transportation of the patient is usually at departmental expense. All registered Indians are insured under the Ontario hospital services commission.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT RESPECTING PRISONERS UNDER 16

Question No. 1,120—Mr. Orlikow:

Will the government consider appropriate legislative amendments to the Criminal Code to provide that no person under the age of 16 years shall be committed to a penal institution where adult prisoners are confined, as recommended by the Fauteux report?

Mr. Chevrier: Legislation in the direction suggested is contained in section 1 of the Penitentiary Act and juveniles dealt with under the Juvenile Delinquents Act may not be confined in a place where adults may be imprisoned. Extension of this principle is being considered in connection with the continuing criminal law amendment program.

STORAGE FACILITIES FOR NUCLEAR TIPPED ROCKETS

Question No. 1,165—Mr. McIntosh:

1. Are suitable storage facilities available now in the R.C.A.F. to store nuclear tipped Genie rockets for Voodoo aircraft and, if not, when did construction begin at each base, and when will construction be completed?

2. Is construction of suitable storage facilities being undertaken as a result of a public tender call or by negotiated tender?

3. Who have been the successful tenderers?

4. What will be the construction costs of the storage facilities?

Answer: 1. No. Tenders for construction are to close in October 1963 and it is planned that construction will be completed by October 1, 1964.

2. Contracts will be awarded as a result of public tender call.

3. Contracts have not been awarded.

4. The actual costs will not be known until all contracts are awarded.

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT BANK, MONTREAL—ENGLISH-FRENCH PERSONNEL

Question No. 1,166—Mr. Douglas:

In the Montreal branch of the industrial development bank, what is the number, by grades, of (a) French speaking employees (b) English speaking employees?

Answer:

	English speaking		French

Total	26	11	30	67

INCENTIVE AREA PLAN, P.E.I.

Question No. 1,173—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. What were the reasons for the non-inclusion of any area in the province of Prince Edward Island in the government's designated incentive area plan?

2. Have representations been received from the government of Prince Edward Island and municipal authorities, or other sources, relative to the designation of such areas in the counties of Kings and Prince?

Answer: 1. National employment service areas were examined to determine the areas of the country with the most severe conditions of chronic unemployment and slow economic growth. Thirty five areas have qualified for special measures of assistance under the designated areas program. The national employment service areas of Summerside and Charlottetown, in Prince Edward Island, in recent years have experienced substantial growth in employment which was considerably above the national average. Thus, they have not met the criteria established for the selection of designated areas.

2. Yes. There has been an exchange of correspondence between the premier of Prince Edward Island and the Minister of Industry.

CANADIAN EXEMPTION FROM U.S. SECURITIES TAX

Question No. 1,190—Mr. Noble:

Has the government secured an agreement with the United States government that Canada shall have a recognized exemption from the 15 per cent tax proposed by the Kennedy administration on the purchases by American citizens of foreign securities; and, if so, (a) what are the terms of such exemption (b) will a copy of the signed agreement be tabled in the house?

Answer: The agreement with the United States government that Canada shall have a recognized exemption from the 15 per cent tax proposed by the Kennedy administration on the purchases by American citizens of foreign securities is contained in the communique of July 21, 1963, agreed between representatives of Canada and the United States.

Ottawa, July 21, 1963: Hon. Walter L. Gordon, Minister of Finance, issued this afternoon the following statement which had been agreed between representatives of Canada and United States meeting in Washington during the week end:

"Representatives of Canada and the United States met during the week end to appraise the impact on the Canadian financial markets of the proposed United States "interest equalization tax".

The two governments recognized the need for effective action to improve the balance of payments position of both countries and are both equally determined that such action shall not impair the intimate economic relationships between the two countries, nor impede the growth essential for both economies.

For many years the capital markets of the two countries have been closely interconnected, and United States exports of capital to Canada have financed a substantial portion of the Canadian current account deficit with the U.S. This need continues. A portion of these flows must be supplied through the sale of new issues of Canadian securities in American markets. U.S. officials had considered that ample flows for these needs would continue under the proposed "interest equalization tax". However, Canadian representatives stated that this would require a very substantial rise in the entire Canadian interest rate structure. It was recognized by both governments that such a development would be undesirable in present economic circumstances.

In the light of this situation U.S. officials agreed that the draft legislation to be submitted to the congress would include a provision authorizing a procedure under which the president could modify the application of the tax by the establishment from time to time of exemptions, which he could make either unlimited or limited in amount. The President would thus have the flexibility to permit tax free purchases of new issues needed to maintain the unimpeded flow of trade and payments between the two countries, and to take care of exceptional situations that might arise in the case of other countries. U.S. officials made clear that this did not modify their proposals regarding the taxation of transactions in outstanding securities; over the past year such transactions between Canada and the U.S. have not been a major factor.

The Canadian authorities stated that it would not be the desire or intention of Canada to increase her foreign exchange reserves through the proceeds of borrowings in the United States, and it is the hope and expectation of both governments that by maintaining close consultation it will prove possible in practice to have an unlimited exemption for Canada without adverse effect on the United States.

It was agreed that active consultations would continue to strengthen the close economic relations between the two countries and at the same time facilitate measures for making the maximum practicable contributions to economic expansion and the strength and stability of both currencies."

The conversations which were conducted in the United States treasury on Saturday and Sunday included for Canada ambassador Charles S. A. Ritchie, Louis Rasminsky, governor of the Bank of Canada, Wynne Plumptre, assistant deputy minister of finance, and A. E. Ritchie, assistant under secretary of state for external affairs; for the United States Douglas Dillon, secretary of the treasury, George Ball, under secretary of state, Robert V. Roosa, under secretary of the treasury for monetary affairs, and Stanley Surrey, assistant secretary of the treasury.

ARMY CORPS ESTABLISHMENT

Question No. 1,199—Mr. Douglas:

What is the establishment by ranks of an army corps headquarters, and what is the approximate number of troops normally to be found under it?

Answer: There is no corps headquarters in the Canadian army as now organized. The establishment for such a corps headquarters based on that used in 1945 would be as follows:

Officers
Lieutenant general	1
Brigadier	6
Colonel	3
Lieutenant colonel	5
Major	28

The approximate number of troops normally to be found under the command of an infantry divisional headquarters is 20,000.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES FOR INDIANS

Question No. 1,205—Mr. Simpson:

Has the Department of Industry had any consultation with officials of the Indian affairs branch in relation to the plan for setting up the designated areas to provide improved industrial opportunities and employment in the various Indian reservations of Canada and, if not, will the Department of Industry consider taking such steps?

Answer: 1. (a) No; (b) Yes.

APPLICATIONS UNDER MUNICIPAL LOANS ACT

Question 1,208—Mr. Scott:

1. Has the board to administer the fund under the Municipal Development and Loan Act been set up and, if so, who are the members?
2. How many requests have been made to date for loans under the provisions of the said act?
3. Who have made such requests, and what projects are covered by them?

Answer: 1. Yes. The members are: Mr. K. W. Taylor, chairman; Mr. Jean Miquelon, vice chairman; Mr R. B. Bryce; Mr. Stewart Bates.

2. To date one request for a loan has been made to the board.

3. The greater Vancouver water district has requested through the B.C. department of municipal affairs, a loan to assist in financing construction of the Sasamat pumping plant.

TAXES ON PURCHASES BY EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS

Question No. 1,211—Mr. Scott:

1. Has the government received representations to remove or rebate duty on all books purchased for educational institutions and, if so, what was the government's response to such representations?

2. Has the government received representations to exempt from sales tax all materials and equipment purchased for public educational institutions and, if so, what was the government's response to such representations?

Answer: 1. No representations were received by this government prior to October 3, 1963, to remove or rebate duty on all books purchased for educational institutions. However, a number of representations have been received relating to tariff item 173, which provides inter alia for the free entry of "books which are included in the curriculum of any university, college or school in Canada for use as text books or as works of reference, not to include dictionaries". These representations have included suggestions that the foregoing item be amended by deleting the reference to dictionaries and by including a reference to text books containing notes and/or exercises. The government's response was that these suggestions would be considered in the preparation of material for the budget, or in the context of international negotiations.

2. No representations were received by this government prior to October 3, 1963 requesting that all materials and equipment purchased by educational institutions be made exempt from sales tax.

Representations were made after the presentation of the 1963 budget urging that building materials used in the construction of educational institutions be exempt from sales tax. Bill C-90, an act to amend the Excise Tax Act, which received royal assent on August 2, 1963, provided this tax relief.

FRENCH LANGUAGE TELEVISION STATION, QUEBEC CITY

Question No. 1,221—Mr. Beaule:

What steps have been taken up to now for the establishment of a French language C.B.C. television station in Quebec city?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that good progress is being made in the work necessary to establish the French language television station at Quebec city. Purchase of the sites for the transmitter on Orleans island and the studios at Ste Foy are nearing completion. Orders have been placed with suppliers of the technical equipment required. Tenders for construction of the transmitter building were called last week. Studio plans and specifications are being put in final form which will enable the calling of tenders within a few weeks.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

ACCEPTANCE OF FISHERIES COMMISSION RECOMMENDATION RESPECTING HALIBUT

Motion No. 62—Mr. Barnett:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency for a copy of the cabinet minute or other official document which authorized the Secretary of State for External Affairs to notify the executive director, the international north Pacific fisheries commission, by telegram under date of May 10, 1963, that the commission's recommendations for the removal of the halibut stocks in the eastern Bering sea and the herring stocks west of the Queen Charlotte islands from the annex to the convention had been accepted by the government of Canada.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if this motion could stand, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, I agreed on two occasions prior to the recess that this motion should stand. I would hope the matter would be dealt with shortly.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will do my best.

Motion stands.

MAINTENANCE OF ALASKA HIGHWAY

Motion No. 64—Mr. Nielsen:

Than an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all documents, reports, engineering or other surveys, communications, correspondence, or other papers, with respect to the (a) all-weather maintenance of the road from Haines junction in the Yukon Territory to Haines in the state of Alaska, U.S.A. (b) existing maintenance costs of the northwest highway system in maintaining the said road by the northwest highway system of the Canadian army and (c) paving of the said road.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, there is no date indicated in this motion. However if the hon. member will accept the date January 1, 1959, subject only to the retention of certain privileged documents, we will accept this motion.

Mr. Nielsen: That is perfectly satisfactory to me, Mr. Speaker, I have spoken to the minister in connection with one of the documents, and to his parliamentary secretary. I do not know whether the particular document about which I have spoken to him is privileged, but if he will grant me the courtesy of looking at it, I am perfectly agreeable to accepting the conditions that the minister has expressed.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is agreed to, subject to the reservation as expressed by the minister.

Motion agreed to.

ROAD FROM CARCROSS, Y.T. TO SKAGWAY, ALASKA

Motion No. 65—Mr. Nielsen:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all documents, reports, engineering or other surveys, communications, correspondence or other papers, with respect to the construction of a road from Carcross in the Yukon territory to Skagway in the state of Alaska in the U.S.A.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, we are entirely agreeable to accepting this motion, subject to the hon. member accepting the starting date January 1, 1959.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is agreed to, subject to the reservation as expressed by the minister.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, before we leave 64 and 65 I wonder whether I might, as a question of privilege, simply draw the attention of the Minister of National Defence to the fact that the material which I thought was going to be supplied to me and which I was told was going to be supplied to me on October 2 has not yet reached me.

Mr. Hellyer: I am sure it will.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

Motion No. 84—Mr. Diefenbaker:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house copies of all correspondence between the federal and provincial governments or any ministers thereof in regard to the Canada pension plan.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, there is no objection to this motion, subject only to securing the consent of the provincial governments.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is agreed to, subject to the reservation as expressed by the minister.

Motion agreed to.

Questions

GIMLI, MAN.—ACCESS ROAD TO AIR STATION

Motion No. 86—Mr. Stefanson:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and briefs, and the replies thereto, received by the Minister of National Defence or any other government official, from the Manitoba provincial government or any other interested parties relating to a cost-sharing arrangement for grading and hard surfacing the access road from the town of Gimli to the Gimli R.C.A.F. station.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, there is no objection to tabling the correspondence asked for in this motion, provided it is also agreeable to the government of the province of Manitoba.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed?

Mr. Stefanson: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

MUNICIPAL LOAN FUND

Motion No. 87—Mr. Starr:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house copies of all correspondence between the federal and provincial governments or any ministers thereof in regard to the municipal loan fund.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, there is no objection to this motion, subject to the usual reservation about obtaining consent from the provincial governments and from the ministers concerned.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is agreed to, subject to the reservation as expressed by the minister.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

Motion No. 88—Mr. Martineau:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all telegrams, letters or other documents received by the government of Canada from insurance companies or other corporations, firms, associations or individuals concerning the Canada pension plan.

Mr. Pickersgill: Carried.

Motion agreed to.

LISTS OF CONSULTANTS

Motion No. 89—Mr. Orlikow:

That an order of the house do issue for a list of consultants prepared in the office of the Secretary of State for the guidance of cabinet ministers and copies of all correspondence between ministers of the crown and the consultants in each riding.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a question of privilege in regard to this motion in as non-contentious a way as I can. The motion refers to something which does not exist. It apparently arises because of a statement that appeared in the Globe and Mail—at least, that is the only reason I can find for it—on August 27, 1963, which it was indicated at the time was entirely fictitious. It does not seem to me that the motion should be on the order paper at all. In any event, if it did pass there would be nothing whatever to produce.

An hon. Member: Oh, come on.

Mr. Knowles: Nothing that you would produce.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to drop his motion?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I read that article very carefully and I did not see anything in it which indicated that the story was fictitious. I did not see any statement by the minister later that it was not true. But if the minister tells the house there is no such list of consultants and that he is not writing to the defeated Liberal candidate in the constituency of Danforth, Toronto, as the story says, I guess I will take the minister's word.

Mr. Peters: That is not what he said.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I think there is a rather important point involved here. The hon. gentleman said he guessed he would take my word. I want it very clear that no one in my office, to my knowledge—and I have questioned everybody in my office—ever had anything whatsoever to do with anything of this character. I want to make that abundantly clear. What is more, sir, I would also let the hon. gentleman know that since this was just an allegation and had nothing to do with my administrative responsibility, I am rather accessible and he could have questioned me before putting it on the order paper.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member withdraw his motion?

Mr. Orlikow: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw it.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

ARDA PROJECTS, ALBERTA

Motion No. 90—Mr. Horner (Acadia):

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all telegrams, correspondence, reports, briefs and memoranda, and any replies thereto between the federal government and any of its departments and the province of Alberta concerning projects under ARDA since April 8, 1963.

Mr. Beer: Mr. Speaker, this motion is quite acceptable, subject to the consent of the province of Alberta to tabling the correspondence, reports and other documents requested.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is agreed to, subject to the reservation of the minister.

Motion agreed to.

FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN TOTE ROADS, YUKON TERRITORY

Motion No. 91—Mr. Nielsen:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of the Tote trail progress report for 1963, with respect to federal government financial participation in tote roads in the Yukon Territory.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, the document referred to is an internal document prepared for departmental use only. I think such documents have always been considered to be privileged, and probably the hon. member would wish to withdraw this motion. If it would mollify him I would assure him at once that the document for 1963 is not yet prepared and I have not seen it.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the report for 1963 is not yet complete I will withdraw the motion. But the minister can expect to see it replaced on the order paper at a future date.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

D.E.W. LINE—CONDITIONS OF EMPLOYMENT

Motion No. 92—Mr. Orlikow:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all notes exchanged between Canada and the United States relating to the conditions of employment of employees working for the Federal Electric Corporation on the Canadian sector of the D.E.W. line and any other documents or agreements between the government of Canada and/or agency thereof and the government of the United States and/or any agency thereof, or between the government of Canada and the Federal Electric Corporation, relating to the terms and conditions of employment of the said employees on the D.E.W. line.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, there are two sets of documents asked for in this motion, both relating to terms and conditions of employment on the D.E.W. line. The first series of documents relates to exchanges of notes. There have been no exchange of notes specifically relating to conditions of employment. The exchange of notes which embodied the actual contract between the governments was tabled in the house on May 28, 1955. With respect to the other documents or agreements between the government of Canada and the United States, or the Federal Electric Corporation, the Department of Labour and the Department of National Defence have no objection to their production, subject to the usual reservations.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is agreed to, subject to the reservation as expressed by the minister.

Question of Privilege

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege affecting the business of the house, Your Honour has been concerned about the length of the question period upon calling the orders of the day. Nearly every day ministers are telling us that some of the questions asked would be better put on the order paper. I should like to draw the attention of the leader of the house to the fact that there are questions on the order paper which have been there since the first week of July. One of them, the very first question, was there on July 2 and it requires simply a yes or no answer. Certainly if you want to discourage members from putting questions on the order paper, the easiest way to do it is to leave the questions there for three months. Hon. members will then have no recourse but to ask them on orders of the day. It seems to me that some review of the questions should be made by the leader of the house in order to speed up answers.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I would just draw attention to the fact that that particular question is not a question about something that is being done. It is a question about the intentions of the government, which I think is probably an improper question even to appear on the order paper, if the rules were strictly adhered to, because the purpose of a question is to find out not what is in the minds of ministers but what has been done by the government. Some of these questions for that reason are very hard to answer. But I think that if the numbers of the questions are looked at and it is seen that there are only five questions up to No. 1,000 which have not been answered, the record is not really very bad.

Mr. Douglas: I just point out that if the government has intentions, whether honourable or otherwise, they certainly ought to be stated, and it should not take three months to tell us what the intentions are.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Perron (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I think I should put my question as a question of privilege, since three times in this house I have asked the party in office whether it was normal that an English answer be made to questions on the order paper which are drafted in French.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the bilingual character of our country, I am of the opinion that this question is one of privilege, and that more precisely because I noticed only a few minutes ago that the answer given to question No. 1,219, which appears in today's order paper, was drafted in English only. I refuse to accept this answer and I insist upon an answer in French.

LABOUR RELATIONS

LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRESENT POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour if he is in a position to give a report regarding the situation of the longshoremen's strike, having regard to the serious situation both economically and with particular reference to the Russian wheat agreement. Can something be done in this connection?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the federal mediator, Judge Lippe, is meeting again with the parties this afternoon and is continuing his efforts to secure a settlement. At this stage we are concerned, as is the right hon. gentleman, with the serious aspects of this work stoppage, but at the present time we feel that the federal mediator should be allowed to pursue his activities.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, surely there must be something more than this that can be done. It begins to have the appearance of outrageous indifference to a serious situation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is a view which is being generally held. I am asking the minister how long these negotiations will continue and what are the hopes; for from day to day delay is taking place and the economic situation is deteriorating, so far as the sale of wheat is concerned.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I might remind the right hon. gentleman that when he was prime minister of this country he allowed a strike to prevail for 17 days in Vancouver, which he himself described as a work stoppage which throttled the western economy and paralysed the western farmer.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the allegations with reference to myself have to be answered, and I answer them as a matter of personal privilege. There was no economic dislocation. There was no endangerment of a large sector of the Canadian economy at that time. We acted and got results when we acted.

[Later:]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which is supplementary to the answer given a few minutes ago by the Minister of Labour. In his answer to the Leader of the Opposition the Minister of Labour said that the federal mediator was still meeting the parties. Will he tell the house whether it is a fact that the longshoremen have today rejected the proposals made by the federal mediator?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I have been advised that the proposals made by the mediator to the union membership were rejected, in fact, this morning. But surely it is not wise in this situation to conclude that there is no room for mutual concessions in an effort to reach a settlement.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister inform the house how long ships now waiting in the St. Lawrence to load grain are prepared to wait there in order to take on cargoes?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I am not in a position to answer that question directly. I can assure the hon. member that we hope the interval will be as short as possible.

Mr. Harkness: I wonder whether the minister could get that information and let us know tomorrow, so that we may have some idea what the repercussions may be as far as grain movement is concerned.

Mr. Sharp: I will try to get such information as may be helpful.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour a question. Does he intend to implement the recommendation of the chairman of the board of conciliation in the dispute between the shipping federation and the international longshoremen's association in Montreal, namely to have a royal commission investigate the retirement fund of the employees, which is under the sole management of the companies?

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have examined the report of the conciliation board, and I think any comment on any particular aspect of this matter should be reserved for the present.

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has the minister received official complaints from Canadian Pacific officials because of the fact that the liner Empress of Canada was unable to anchor in the harbour of Quebec city following the strike of some 200 longshoremen?

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS—INQUIRY AS TO MEETING OF COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Lloyd (Halifax): Can the leader of the house advise the house when he anticipates the convening of the standing committee on public accounts?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I hope the committee will be convened right away, or just as soon as possible. I believe the Prime Minister has a word to say about this.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I should like to add that it is hoped a member of the official opposition will act as chairman of this committee, as was done under the previous government.

WORLD FAIR

INQUIRY AS TO SALARY OF COMMISSIONER

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works.

On October 2 I asked the minister a question concerning the salary to be paid the commissioner general of the world exhibition. The minister told me then that he would answer my question the next day. Since the commissioner general is now back from Paris, could the minister give me an answer now?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I shall answer that question in a few days.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

SUGGESTED CONFERENCE TO CONSIDER UNEMPLOYMENT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Could he tell the house if he is still thinking of calling a federal-provincial conference to study the unemployment problem and the means to deal with it? If so, when does he expect to call the conference?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): A federal-provincial conference has already been called for November—I forget the exact date—and this is one of the important subjects which will be discussed at that conference.

SHIPPING

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF CANADIAN MERCHANT FLEET

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. P. Antoine Belanger (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether the government intends, in co-operation with the Minister of National Defence, to take the necessary steps to give Canada a true merchant marine, with a view to making our country politically as well as economically independent.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that is a question for the order paper too.

COASTAL TRADE—INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION THIS SESSION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Lucien Plourde (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport.

Does the government intend to bring in soon a bill to amend the Canada Shipping Act in order to limit coastal navigation to Canadian ships?

[Text]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the matter of what legislation is going to appear on the order paper is one of government policy to be announced in the ordinary way. I think the hon. member has misused the name of the act that would have a bearing on the subject with which he is concerned.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence.

Is it true that the Minister of National Defence stated in Quebec that Quebecers should decide in favour of a strong central state at the expense of provincial rights?

[Text]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to send my hon. friend a copy of the address.

Inquiries of the Ministry

LABOUR CONDITIONS

BRANTFORD, ONT.—DESIGNATION AS DISTRESSED AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the report in the Globe and Mail today that the town of New Hamburg in Waterloo South has announced its decision to join the councils of the neighbouring cities in protest against the government's designation of the city of Brantford as a distressed area, has the Prime Minister anything further to add on this matter?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. I had the pleasure of an interview with the mayor of Guelph yesterday and I told the mayor, who brought this matter up in its particular reference to his city, that we were looking into the problem and I would be in touch with him before the end of the week.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, in view of the time I will address my question tomorrow.

REPORTED ECONOMIC FORECAST RESPECTING WINTER UNEMPLOYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government has in its possession an economic forecast prepared by government economists which indicates that unemployment in the coming winter is going to be lower than for eight years. I ask the Prime Minister, because I have seen accounts in the press which indicate that this information has been released to some newspapers. I feel that if the government has this information in its possession it would be of interest to members of the house.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I have no reports of that kind, and none have been brought to my attention. I do not believe they are completed yet, but I would be glad to look into the matter to see if they do exist.

REQUEST FOR LONGER APPLICATION OF HOUSING BONUS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Labour.

Since the incentive program for housing construction during the winter months is to be in force from December 1 to March 30, and considering that the northwestern area of Quebec, which includes the towns of Rouyn and Val d'Or, was designated as an underdeveloped area, and that the weather in the area is extremely severe, would it be possible to extend this period from November 1 to April 30 instead of December 1 to March 30?

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I shall be glad to consider that point.

WINTER WORKS—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF PERIOD

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I should like to ask a supplementary question of the Prime Minister. Is he prepared to accept the reasonable and logical request of Mr. Donald Summerville, the mayor of Toronto, requesting that the former period of duration of the municipal winter works program, which was inaugurated by the former government, be re-established so that it may be as effective as it has been in past winters?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I shall be glad to look into that matter of the reasonable request of the mayor of Toronto as described by my hon. friend.

CONSULTATIONS RESPECTING PAYMENTS TO OLDER WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Charles-Eugene Dionne (Kamouraska): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour a question concerning the experimental program to pay a $75 monthly bonus to the employer of every worker 45 years of age or older. Could the minister tell the house whether the unions were consulted as regards the seniority clauses in a great many collective agreements?

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I do not relate the question that is asked to the effect of the older workers' program.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

NORTHERN TRANSPORTATION COMPANY—COMPETITION WITH PRIVATE ENTERPRISE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Would the minister advise the house if Northern Transportation Company now intends to refit for northern use the L.S.M. which it has brought into Vancouver, or has the minister instructed that crown corporation to get rid of this vessel in order to discourage further expansion of this crown company's competition with private enterprise?

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that is a question for the order paper?

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, I think the minister was prepared to answer it.

Mr. Speaker: Then may I suggest to the minister that this is a question for the order paper.

Mr. Nugent: On a point of order, may I suggest the point is that the northern people have to make their plans well in advance, and this is the appropriate time. By the time a question on the order paper might be answered it would be a little too late to help private enterprise.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to go contrary to your advice with regard to the answer to this question, but I do owe an answer to the hon. member which I think I perhaps should make now. He asked me the other day for some statement on general policy in this area and I should like to put this on record. I think it may go some way toward answering his question.

It is the government's intention that Northern Transportation Company Limited shall continue to function as a common carrier in the Mackenzie basin and along the Arctic coast, and in so doing help to provide these areas with an efficient and dependable transportation service. In performing this function the company will, as it has done in the past, operate as a normal business corporation. It will, for instance, continue to replace and improve its equipment when, from the viewpoint of service and economy, such action is justified, and will provide additional equipment if the volume of traffic or the development of the area indicates that such equipment is needed.

The Northern Transportation Company has for many years provided the Mackenzie basin with a dependable freighting service during the summer months and last year, at the request of the Hudson's Bay Company, took over the Hudson's Bay's freighting operation on the Arctic coast. A similar transaction took place between the Hudson's Bay Company and Northern Transportation in 1958 when Northern took over the Hudson's Bay's Mackenzie river transportation system.

As the hon. gentleman knows, one of Northern Transportation's functions is the delivery to the stations of the midsection of the D.E.W. line of the portion of the yearly resupply that cannot be delivered by air.

Private enterprise is also providing service and will probably continue to do so. It seems to me that under existing circumstances both Northern Transportation and the private companies operating in the north are needed to provide a dependable and efficient transportation system.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

QUEBEC—TRIALS OF ALLEGED MEMBERS OF F.L.Q.

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of Justice a question. Following numerous representations from citizens in the province of Quebec, and though I disapprove the acts of terrorism of the F.L.Q., would the minister have an inquiry made to establish whether, in the admission of guilt of the members of the F.L.Q., the necessary measures were taken to abide by the Criminal Code, the Canadian Bill of Rights and the law?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, as I stated in the house on several occasions, the Department of Justice and the R.C.M.P. are particularly interested in the happenings in the province of Quebec, with regard to the F.L.Q. However, the maintenance of law and order, and the administration of justice as well, is under another administration, and I think that the hon. member should rather submit his questions to the latter.

Mr. Gregoire: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I spoke of the Criminal Code, which is after all a federal act, and I asked the Minister of Justice whether he intended to investigate whether, in the admission of guilt of the F.L.Q. members, all Criminal Code provisions have been observed?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, it is true that the Criminal Code is under federal jurisdiction, but it does not define a subversive organization. On the other hand, the constitution clearly states that the administration of justice is under another jurisdiction.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

HAITI AND CUBA—OFFER OF ASSISTANCE FOLLOWING TORNADOES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Yesterday I directed a question to the government which was left over because the Prime Minister was absent. I asked whether or not the government had given any indication it was prepared to provide some assistance to Haiti, Cuba and Jamaica which have suffered very serious damage because of the tornadoes of recent days?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The matter is under consideration. We are trying to ascertain the nature and extent of the damage and what can be done to help.

TRADE

TOBACCO—REQUEST FOR PERSONNEL OF DELEGATION TO RUSSIA

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre-Andre Boutin (Dorchester): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can he give the house the names of the members of the Canadian trade delegation which initiated last Monday in Moscow negotiations for the purchase of Canadian tobacco by Russia?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that question should be put on the order paper.

MARITIME TRANSPORTATION UNIONS

PROVISION FOR MANAGEMENT AND CONTROL BY TRUSTEES

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the placing of the maritime transportation unions of Canada under the management and control of trustees; to provide for the establishment of the board of trustees of the maritime transportation unions consisting of a chairman and two other members; to provide for the payment of their remuneration and expenses and to authorize the employment and remuneration of such personnel as may be necessary for the carrying out of the duties and powers of the trustees under the said measure.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, in introducing this resolution I would remind the members of the house of the statement I made on August 1, the day before adjournment. On that occasion I announced the decision of the government to establish a trusteeship to deal with the critical maritime shipping situation affecting trade, labour and other international relations between Canada and the United States.

It will be recalled that Mr. Justice Norris delivered his recommendations in mid July of this year, following what I described at the time as one of the most intensive inquiries ever made in Canada in a labour relations situation. Justice Norris' report has received praise throughout Canada. There has been some criticism as well. In commenting on the latter, I have said the facts of the report speak for themselves, and that no detailed challenge has been made which goes to the basis of the facts as they were established before the commission.

When I announced the government's decision in respect of the trusteeship, as recommended by the commissioner, I said the government would proceed with legislation to provide for such a trusteeship when the house reconvened, unless an effective alternative were found in the meantime. I informed the house in August that the proposed action was supported by four of the five unions directly involved and by the Canadian Labour Congress. It is a matter of record also that spokesmen for all the other parties in the house strongly endorsed the decision of the government in this regard. Naturally, Mr. Chairman, I am grateful to hon. members for this support.

Since August, and more particularly during the past three weeks, some criticism has been directed at a public trusteeship, and pressure has been generated both in Canada and the United States for a voluntary form of trusteeship. The latter has been urged as being in the best tradition of free unions, and as being consistent with the sound development of international unions in Canada and the United States over the past 100 years.

Everyone agrees a private arrangement, whereby union organizations themselves establish controls over their own members and institutions, is the desirable and preferable way to proceed, provided this would end the disruption of shipping and restore clean and democratic unionism where this is lacking in the water transportation industry.

In view of this position which we in the government have maintained throughout, and in view of the strong representations received in this connection, we have since August explored exhaustively and continuously the possibility of an effective alternative, while at the same time proceeding with the task of preparing trusteeship legislation so as to be ready for prompt action if all possibility of action by unions themselves failed.

Immediately after the house recessed on August 2, the deputy minister of my department, Mr. Haythorne, went to Washington to discuss the whole situation with Secretary of Labour, Willard Wirtz. This was followed by other direct discussions involving members of the government and departmental officers with members of the United States government and their officers. In addition there has been almost daily contact by telephone and telegram with United States authorities, either directly or through our embassy in Washington.

Hon. members will also know that the United States Secretary of Labour came to Canada for a second time on September 11 following the deplorable dynamiting of the vessel, Howard L. Shaw, at Chicago.

There have, of course, been numerous discussions throughout the period with officials of the Canadian Labour Congress, and it is also well known that officials of the Canadian Labour Congress have visited Washington from time to time to establish a meeting of minds with U.S. labour officials.

More recently on September 28 I discussed the situation with the U.S. Secretary of Labour in Boston with representatives of the A.F.L.-C.I.O., the C.L.C. and our respective officials. The Secretary of State for External Affairs has also discussed the matter with the U.S. secretary of state during a recent visit to Washington.

In all of these discussions a determined effort has been made to find an acceptable alternative approach to a public trusteeship which would restore union rights to thousands of Canadian seamen as well as ensure, along with that action, freedom of passage of Canadian vessels in United States waters and ports without fear of harassment and violence.

It has not proved possible to secure full agreement of the union leaders in our two countries to such an alternative approach. While it will be clear to all hon. members that the government has never wished to close the door to voluntary settlement, it must under the circumstances now proceed with the legislation.

There has been speculation as to the reception some union leaders in the United States might give to a trusteeship approved by parliament, and even a fear has been expressed in some quarters that a total boycott might be directed against all Canadian maritime shipping in United States ports. Any such reaction would be a grave concern to the government of Canada and all Canadians. It could only result in a serious disturbance to friendly relations between the peoples of our two countries, and I am sure no one wants that. But, no Canadian can accept a state of affairs whereby labour problems, subject to and settled under Canadian law, are exported to another country in an attempt to set aside due process of law in Canada.

The government of Canada can take action to deal with those matters which are under Canadian authority. With respect to violence or other acts of harassment in the United States, we must rely on the good offices and co-operation of the United States government and of responsible union leaders who believe in and are committed to the support of the civil rights of union members and the maintenance of clean and democratic unionism.

A labour union in Canada, whether it is national or international, is free to pursue all legal acts in conducting its business in Canada. It must, however, not seek to flout and disregard Canadian law through attempting to export or transfer Canadian problems, already settled in Canada, to another country for extra-legal determination.

There is a matter of the rights of Canada involved in this situation that transcends the desire of any organization to be dominant in an industry at all costs and regardless of all law.

I would ask hon. members of the committee to give their support to this resolution in the knowledge that we are facing, and may face in the future, a potentially dangerous situation, a difficult situation which cannot be allowed to persist. I ask them to realize with me that the situation may in fact grow worse before it gets better, and I would strongly urge all union members and others concerned with this situation, in both Canada and the United States, to lend their assistance and support to the action which the government, and I feel sure the committee, consider must be taken at this time.

It is my profound hope that through this action we shall see a return to the democratic, free and constructive unionism that is essential to the well-being of labour in Canada.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, the remarks on behalf of this party will be made by the hon. member for Ontario, and I rise merely for the purpose of asking a question. Under all the circumstances, would the minister feel free at this time on the resolution stage to give the committee a preview of the bill itself—a general summary of it? Ordinarily that is not done but we are endeavouring to assist in passing this legislation, and it would be most helpful for the discussion and would reduce very considerably the time taken on this matter if the minister did feel constrained to give this information.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I am willing to co-operate in that suggestion. Maybe I cannot give the information as clearly as it is given in the bill itself, but, with the consent of the committee I will say, the purpose of the bill is to establish a trusteeship of three members to be entrusted with the management and control of the Canadian maritime transportation unions.

The schedule to the bill provides that all the five unions and their maritime locals will be covered by this trusteeship. The authority of the trustees will be the authority that is normally vested in the officers of these trade unions by their constitutions and by-laws, except that certain additional powers are given to the trustees, including the appointment of advisory committees of seamen and joint committees of seamen and employers to advise the trustees; the appointment by the trustees of negotiating committees to bargain; advice to the members for prospective changes in the constitutions of the unions; and also authority to remove and suspend officers and employees of any union and provide alternatives in their place. Certain action is taken to place in the hands of the trusteeship the business affairs of the union, but I would rather leave that until we come to the details of the bill. We have placed a provision in the bill that this will be of a temporary character. It will be, I think, for a period of five years; this period has been selected for obvious reasons. There is also a provision that if it is advisable, in the opinion of the trustees, the unions may be removed from the trusteeship and the trusteeship may end before the expiry date. We made an effort to provide a terminal date and make it a temporary and not a permanent arrangement that would continue, once the situation had been cleared up. Those, in general terms, are the provisions of the bill.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thank the minister.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make some remarks in respect of this resolution. I do not intend to make any further remarks during the passage of the bill after I have concluded at this time, unless after careful perusal of the provisions of the bill it is thought necessary to deal with some of its provisions or lack of provisions. This situation on the great lakes is a struggle between Mr. Banks, his lieutenants, his aides, and the bona fide labour movement in this country. It is not a struggle, in effect, between the membership of the S.I.U. and others; it is a struggle between Hal Banks, his lieutenants, and the labour movement of this country. I say this because many of the members of the S.I.U. are good Canadians, but they have been held down and exploited by the leadership of the seafarers international union. There was also, and had been for some time ever since the entry of Mr. Banks into this country, an amiable situation existing between the Liberal government of that day and Mr. Banks. This was very forcefully pointed out by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition when he spoke in this house on Friday last. Evidence of this and the expectation of Mr. Banks that this prolonged amiable friendship with the former Liberal government would be projected to the present government has been set out very effectively.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

I want to refer to a press clipping from the Toronto Globe and Mail of recent date in which it was said:

> Minutes filed before the Norris inquiry by the S.I.U. said the union got along well with former labour minister Milton Gregg, a Liberal, but not so well with the current minister, Michael Starr, a Conservative.

Mr. Banks was looking forward, as I pointed out, to the continuation of that amiable relationship, because in the speech in Washington after the federal election of 1963 he made a statement to the effect that he could not get along with the former minister of labour, meaning myself, but looked forward to more friendly relations with the present, the new Liberal administration. So much for this—

Mr. Pearson: So much for politics.

Mr. Grafftey: A terrible thing, politics.

Mr. Starr: —friendship. That friendship has now come to an end with the introduction of this resolution and the bill that will follow. But let us look back for a brief moment to the events that have transpired up to the moment. The Norris commission was set up at the behest and the demand of the Canadian Labour Congress because the situation on the great lakes was intolerable. It is obvious to everyone that no government could impose such an inquiry on unions without great criticism from the labour movement in Canada unless it were done at their request. The labour movement is suspicious of moves of this kind, and unless and until they themselves feel the time is ripe for such an inquiry governments cannot move in this direction. It was the former government which moved in this direction. This inquiry was set up with Mr. Justice Norris as the commissioner. He did an excellent job after a long and careful study of the problems and after going into the various aspects of the trouble on the great lakes. Then he made his report. The revelations in that report were such that they shook the whole nation and demands for immediate action on his recommendations were pouring into Ottawa from every part of our country.

This was when the present government began to delay action on the report. The recess was called for parliament. No action was taken. At that time—and I repeat what the Leader of the Opposition said last Friday—we were given assurances that if anything untoward happened during that period of recess, parliament would be called to deal with the situation. The dynamiting of a ship took place. Well, it seemed to be of no consequence to this government. Parliament was not called. Then when we get back here again we find we are in the second week of this parliament before the resolution is brought forward.

What has transpired in the meantime? One can probably contemplate on this and look into the crystal ball, because we have not been given the facts. I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the government was looking for a way out, other than implementing the recommendations made by Mr. Justice Norris. Also, they were trying to bring into their orbit help from wherever they could find it. They went to Washington. They may have suggested that Mr. Wirtz come to Canada and look for some other solution to the problem in this country. Mr. Wirtz came to Canada and, as reported in the newspapers, upon questioning as to what could be done in respect of this matter, he said:

> I would rather answer that a little obliquely. I am a great believer that in the free labour movement there are the elements for dealing with a situation of this kind. I hope very much that some way will be found whereby the assertion of this basic responsibility of free trade unions in this country and in the United States will produce an answer to this.

He also said, as reported in the New York Times, a clipping of which I have here:

> I think we believe in both countries that whatever can be done privately is much better done privately than done publicly.

This seed was planted. Then the movement was made to try to find some solution other than that recommended. They even went so far in the last, dying moments as to send the under secretary of labor, Mr. Reynolds, here to see whether a last ditch stand could be taken to find a solution. But all in vain.

The government has now been forced to take the action that they should have taken last July. The Canadian Labour Congress, a responsible body of representatives of the free Canadian labour movement, were probably forced to look into the situation. They knew very well that they could not work out an agreement with the United States unions because of the attacks by the leaders of that movement in the United States upon the leaders of the Canadian Labour Congress. They knew their attitude was such that would bring about no solution. In the release yesterday of the Canadian Labour Congress they advise the people of this country:

> The executive council of the Canadian Labour Congress, meeting in Ottawa, today decided to inform the government that repeated efforts to effect a voluntary method of cleaning up the union situation on the great lakes and the St. Lawrence seaway have been unsuccessful. We are therefore unable to make any recommendation regarding a private trusteeship.

Mr. Chairman, let us look to see what their attitude is with respect to this situation. They say:

> —the intolerable situation which currently exists has to be corrected. Everything humanly possible has been done by the congress and its affiliates to resolve the problem without government intervention. Unfortunately, the other trade unions could not be convinced to co-operate.

They mean those in the United States.

> In view of this failure and the position of the affiliates involved, all four of which have indicated that they are prepared to accept temporary government trusteeship—

So that the government has eventually been forced to take action which they could have taken last July, because even then it was evident that no other solution could solve this problem.

However, when this trusteeship is set up and goes to work there remains a very difficult problem with respect to shipping on the great lakes. The harassment of Canadian ships which has been experienced in the past will be redoubled in the future, not only in United States ports but in other ports. The Minister of Labour mentioned that the Secretary of State for External Affairs took up this matter in Washington. I refer to a clipping from the Toronto Telegram dated September 9 which says:

> The U.S. department of labour called on the F.B.I. to investigate this latest flare-up in the union war on the great lakes. But in Chicago the F.B.I. said "We're taking no action at present." Secretary of state Rusk labelled it "an unfortunate incident".

This refers to the dynamiting of a Canadian ship in a Chicago port. Secretary of state Rusk labels it "an unfortunate incident". No action was taken. The report goes on:

> An official said the state department would want to hear the F.B.I.'s findings but added: "There is very little that this department can do."
> Canada's external affairs minister Martin complained to Mr. Rusk over lunch here Saturday.

The minister did not ask or demand that something be done; he complained to Mr. Rusk over lunch. This is the method of approach of this government with respect to this very serious situation.

> The timing was unfortunate. Minutes before the two statesmen had exchanged compliments about 150 years of peace along the U.S.-Canadian border. Mr. Rusk handed over an ugly big woodcarving to mark the anniversary of the last great lakes battle—lake Erie, 1813.

No action has been taken in the United States to deal with this matter. The courts there have issued injunctions. These injunctions have been completely ignored and no action taken to put them into effect. We must look at this situation seriously and not just go and discuss over lunch what happened on the great lakes in 1813. The happenings now on the great lakes are far more important and far more dangerous to Canada. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, as has been stated, complained about the matter. I think that we should make strong demands, in order to bring about peace on the great lakes, that the United States government take some strong, effective measures to see that Canadian ships are able to arrive at United States ports and load and unload their cargoes without harassment such as that experienced in recent months.

I must point out that the setting up of a trusteeship is not something that a Canadian labour movement or any labour movement likes to have happen. It is very distasteful to the labour movement. But I think that all who are affected by this will realize that it is probably the only solution to the problem. I want to point out to the government that this trusteeship should be on a temporary basis. There should be some clear understanding that the trusteeship should have this matter cleaned up by spring, before the season on the great lakes opens again. It should certainly be underlined that this should not be taken as a precedent to sustain the present situation in the labour movement in Canada; that it will not be a practice of government to put unions under a trusteeship unless the situation warrants it, or the position is as serious as that which has been experienced recently on the great lakes. I fully realize the fear which the Canadian Labour Congress and other unions across this country have with respect to this action, and consequently I think their fears should be allayed by a statement from the government to the effect that it is not setting a precedent, and that this trusteeship is of a temporary nature.

We will look closely, Mr. Chairman, at the legislation when it comes before us, and we will examine it to see whether it is effective and workable. I hope the members of the house will find their way clear to pass this legislation as quickly as possible.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, it being five o'clock, may I call it five o'clock?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the house would give consent to continuing in committee of the whole for the next hour and dispense temporarily with the private members' hour for today. The hon. member for Melville, who has a notice of motion for debate, might agree to postpone it to some future occasion. The subject matter now before the house is of such importance that I think we could more usefully spend our time for the next hour dealing with it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, that course would be agreeable to the government, if it were agreeable to other members of the committee.

[Mr. Starr.]

Mr. Herridge: I think that would be agreeable to our members, Mr. Chairman, provided the debate terminated for this evening when the leaders have spoken.

An hon. Member: That will save time.

The Chairman: Actually, the rules should not be changed unless the Speaker is in the chair, but I presume the chairman of the committee can be blind to the clock. Does the committee give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Then it is agreed.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, my remarks will be confined to the principles involved in this resolution, and to the situation which has existed for the past number of months on the great lakes as it concerns, in particular, the S.I.U. In approaching this legislation I believe it is the first duty of this house to grasp clearly the depth and the importance of the issues which are involved. The legislation is the last step in a long chain of events, a continuous story of violence, disruption of commerce, defiance of law and exploitation of seamen on the great lakes. This has continued for many years and it has culminated in the formation of the Canadian maritime union, numerous acts of violence against its members and, finally, a retaliatory boycott of S.I.U. ships on the Welland canal by members of the C.B.R.T. This is what precipitated the inquiry held by Mr. Justice Norris, and the recommendations which we are now asked to pass into law.

No one who has read the report of Mr. Justice Norris—and I believe this report gives us the true facts of the case as they would have been found had one judge or 50 sat on this royal commission—can have any doubt whatsoever as to the basic issues involved. We are dealing with the issue of the preservation of law and order as against mob violence. We are asked to restrain a man who, according to the commission's report, is lawless and prepared to use any weapon to gain his own ends. The commission has found a grisly tale of the exploitation of Canadian citizens, financially and economically, by the dictatorial legal and extra-legal powers assumed by the management of the S.I.U. There is not the least shadow of doubt that the management of this union has been directly responsible for instigating violence against the persons and property of those, particularly the members of the new Canadian maritime union, who threatened its monopoly of power.

There is not one law in this country for citizens who live inland, and another law for the waterfront. It is the duty of this government—of this parliament, ultimately—to make sure that the Queen's justice and the Queen's peace extend to every part of this dominion and, yes, integrity and honesty in both labour and commercial operations. Dishonesty by consent, whether by the S.I.U. or the C.S.L. is wrong. Extraordinary situations arise, and extraordinary measures such as those proposed today are needed to deal with them. But unless we regard the maintenance of simple law and order within our nation as the first and the highest duty of government, we are failing the citizens of this country whom we represent, in the most elemental duties of government.

The second major issue with which we are dealing is that of the position of the Canadian workingman. There is not the least shadow of doubt, as one studies the Norris report, that it is the Canadian seaman who has been the real sufferer in this affair. It is he who has been charged the excessive initiation fees. It is his money that has gone into the welfare funds of the union, funds for which no proper accounting has been made. It is he who has found his bread and his livelihood taken away at the whim of a dictatorial union boss with a criminal record; it is he who has been beaten up, or has found himself on the infamous "do not ship" list, should he have dared to defy the power of this dictator. Let us remember that it is we ourselves—the parliament of Canada itself—who have approved the legislation under which the S.I.U. has been operating, and this includes the right to make collective bargaining agreements which compel all sailors employed on ships manned by the union to belong to it. When such abuses as these are found to exist, we must examine the legislation itself under which we have allowed the union to operate, to see if it is entirely free from blame.

The third issue that confronts us is the future of the labour movement itself in Canada, as a body independent of control from outside the country. This is raised squarely by the issues in this case, and we must face it squarely. The Canadian maritime union was created through efforts of the Canadian Labour Congress as a Canadian answer to the corruption of a foreign controlled international union. On its creation, something approaching open warfare broke out, a situation to which the government of the day appears to have turned a blind eye until compelled by the blocking of the Welland canal to take some action. Government inaction continued for too long, in spite of repeated protests to the Department of Labour, which placed the government of the day in full possession of the facts of the case. Unless the power of the S.I.U. is curbed; unless the principle is established that Canadians have the effective, practical right, fully guaranteed by effective enforcement of law, to form unions of their own and conduct their union affairs peaceably and without interference, we may as well confess that an independent Canadian labour movement is at an end, that from now on the activities of Canadian workers will be controlled from outside the country. We will be forced to confess that we can no longer control for ourselves the labour conditions of our own Canadian citizens, that we have allowed them to pass from our own control to that of gangster-dominated foreign unions, exploiting our workers for their own advantage. This is a situation that is perilously close, unless the government acts with decision at this time.

There are two key factors in deciding the course of action that the government proposes. The first of these is the element of time. The navigation season on the seaway can be expected to close in less than two months from now. The cost to ship owners of having their vessels tied up beyond that date is heavy. This is a fact well known to those concerned in this dispute. Time is on the side of the existing union management. The longer the delay in having the S.I.U. placed under effective control, the greater the bargaining power of that union in dictating its demands to ship owners. Two months have gone by while parliament has been in recess and this legislation has been in preparation. Freeze-up is approaching. There is no room for pussyfooting. Action, immediate action, is necessary now.

There is no ground for giving these powers to the government if, as some reports indicate, it is the government's intention to delay making use of the legislation once it has been obtained. Delay is only going to make matters worse. This situation has been deteriorating season after season and it will continue until resolute action is taken. We cannot waste any more time.

The second key quality which I demand be shown by the government here is courage. Let us keep our basic sense of what is right and what is wrong in such a situation as we are facing now. The law has been defied and the rights of Canadian citizens have been shamefully disregarded. A royal commission has put us in possession of the facts. It has made this key recommendation of trusteeship which has now been embodied in legislation. There is only one thing which remains to be done, and that can be spelled out in a single word—action. Are we going to enforce peace, honesty and the law in this matter or not? To say that we are not, to allow defiance of the law and the principles of justice to continue because of lack of courage on our part would certainly be an abandonment of the responsibilities we have to the Canadian people as their representatives in this house. Heaven knows, we follow the example of the United States in a lot of things, but for once let us have the courage to show that we in Canada can take action that will protect our citizens and maintain the law, about which we talk so much.

We have seen a Canadian ship, the Howard L. Shaw, tied up in a United States port for the whole of the summer. We have seen how this ship has been boycotted, abused, even dynamited. The Prime Minister has made complaints directly to the President of the United States in the matter. The owners of the ship have reported they have suffered a loss of something more than $3 million in endeavouring to assert their right to man their ships with crews belonging to a Canadian union. Court orders and court injunctions have been obtained and have proved to be not worth the paper on which they were written. The law and the executive have been defied. The word of the union boss on the Chicago waterfront is stronger than the word of the courts of the United States or its president. Perhaps this is good enough for the United States, but I believe it rests upon us as Canadians to insist on something better so far as our own country is concerned.

We as members of this House of Commons must realize that there is a great deal at stake, and certainly this is not an easy matter. The Banks problem would not be nearly so acute were it not for the key position that Banks himself holds as the man who controls a large block of Canadian votes, which are a matter of expediency to the international union in the United States. There is in the United States a conflict between the eastern and western elements of the S.I.U., and the leadership of the S.I.U. itself is an important factor in the control of other groups of unions in the United States. Banks through his Canadian votes as a non-citizen of this country holds this balance of power in the labour union struggle that is going on in the United States.

It is for this reason that I would point out to the Minister of Labour and the government that I believe the government would have been running an unwarranted risk if they had allowed any form of private trusteeship to take place. Perhaps it is not possible for us to say with any degree of supporting evidence that the very forces that have permitted this situation to develop and continue in Canada are responsible for the strike we have on the St. Lawrence waterfront, but certainly the facts of the situation would indicate that they are.

We must have a guarantee that justice will be maintained and that the rights of Canadian citizens will be protected. We can only do that in this extreme situation on the basis of a government trusteeship. There must be a guarantee that Banks will not still be able to pull the wires and control affairs from the other side of the border. The only way we can be positively sure of complete integrity will be if the functions of the management of the Canadian branch of the S.I.U. are placed under the direction of a government trusteeship.

We in the Social Credit party are convinced that such action must be taken and taken quickly. Let us remember that the Canadian Labour Congress has willingly agreed to submit to such a government trusteeship, and even after the congress has been given the opportunity to try to work out something on a private basis it has come back and said that the situation is hopeless. Thus the Canadian Labour Congress is behind the trusteeship and is supporting it. At least, those unions in the congress that are not dictated to from the United States support it, because we know that pressure from across the border on the part of some other international unions has been brought to bear upon the Minister of Labour and the government to avoid taking the very action which is being recommended now. If a union that has nothing to hide expresses its willingness to be placed under trusteeship, why should we hesitate to impose this on a union whose record shows clearly that it is corrupt and completely gangster dominated.

Finally, I believe that this legislation is the necessary first step, but it is not the end of the affairs about which we are now talking because there are ramifications which go much farther. This legislation can and must be a temporary matter—we agree on that—because we must straighten out a situation that cannot otherwise be controlled. But after the trusteeship is imposed I believe it is of the utmost importance that a committee of the house go thoroughly into the legislation under which unions operate in this country at the present time, to make sure that the legislation is in the best interests of those it is designed to protect, Canadian workingmen.

It is quite plain that much of the excessive power that a union has over its members arises from a right that the union is given by federal statute law, the right to impose a closed shop agreement within a bargaining unit so that only union members can obtain employment. Let us recognize that, although the right of a workingman to strike against his employer is always to be jealously defended as one of labour's precious rights, a closed shop such as the S.I.U. has imposed is in fact an effective device to remove all power from a worker to exercise his right to strike against his own union management.

This is a very fundamental point. The worker is treated not as an intelligent citizen with the power to make his own decisions but as a commodity for sale on the labour market. This is exactly what the S.I.U. has been doing through the right it apparently assumes under our existing legislation of hiring and firing workers on the great lakes ships.

The profit from the monopoly of labour that flows from such a position has been going, not to the workers themselves but to the corrupt labour boss who stands as a broker between the workingman and the employer who wants to make use of his services, charging each side the maximum that the market will bear for his own selfish interests. Such a monopoly is even able to force a company like The Canada Steamship Lines into dishonesty, by consent, which results in the perpetuation and expansion of the very thing against which the working people of Canada should have protection.

We, the parliament of Canada, have established the laws that permit such a situation. I suggest respectfully to the government that the next step they must take in this matter, when the trusteeship has been set up, is to refer the Canada Shipping Act and other federal legislation involving the rights and privileges of labour to the appropriate committee of the house so that the effective working of this legislation, in the light of the interests of Canadian citizens, can be thoroughly reviewed, particularly in the light of the events which have developed during the last couple of years.

I am also extremely concerned about one recommendation made by Mr. Justice Norris in his report, which appears to be that the trusteeship should be imposed for the purpose of integrating the unions on which the trusteeship is imposed. I should like to question whether the government considers it a legitimate fact that a government trusteeship should be used to influence the actual union organization that exists in this area. I do not think it is. I would suggest that this part of the Norris report be questioned very seriously because I am convinced this is an interference with the individual rights of the workingman.

A trade union is not an organization that should be started, directed or controlled by government, except in the case of most flagrant abuse, an example of which we now have in the case of the S.I.U. Both the government and members of the opposition should be well aware by now of the blunder they made in permitting Hal Banks to take charge of the Canadian waterfront. Directed labour and directed labour organizations, belong in Soviet Russia or communist China, not in a free country such as Canada.

The purpose of this legislation, then, is quite simply to ensure respect for Canadian law and to protect Canadian seamen from the abuses to which their union has subjected them. It is no more than that. It will only be making a bad situation worse if the trustees, themselves, begin to make organizational decisions which interfere with the free run of an association of Canadian citizens and union members.

These are the basic reasons, Mr. Chairman, for our support of this legislation. At the same time, we caution the government that their responsibility under this legislation is twofold. First of all, it is to protect the rights of our Canadian workingmen from a union which has become corrupt, which is oppressing them. The other responsibility is to maintain justice, which it is our responsibility to maintain for every Canadian citizen. Beyond that we must not interfere with individual rights which belong to each of us, whether or not we choose to belong to a union of workingmen.

When the legislation is introduced, I am confident that all of us in this house will face up to these responsibilities, and will not think in terms of five years, although five years may be necessary to make a blanket coverage for any eventuality that may occur. However, I am sure we will quickly once again permit normal operations to continue in the great lakes shipping area and on the St. Lawrence, and at the same time protect the Canadian workingman who works as a seaman on the various shipping lines operating in this area.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, as one who has had a long association with trade unions, the idea of a public trusteeship is very naturally repugnant to me. But I propose to support this legislation because I deem it to be an extraordinary measure to meet an extraordinary situation. The question which the parliament of Canada faces is not whether we want a public trusteeship but rather what other alternative is there, in the light of the appalling situation which obtains in the maritime shipping industry of Canada?

In order to see the situation which does obtain, may I just briefly review a few of the facts. Hal C. Banks was brought to Canada in 1949 with the co-operation of the government, the trades and labour congress of Canada and the shipping companies on the great lakes in order to displace the Canadian seamen's union which, it was claimed, was a communist dominated union. In 1952 Banks applied for status as a landed immigrant. His application was rejected by the department of immigration on the grounds he had a criminal record in the United States. He appealed this decision to the minister of immigration, and in June, 1954, an order in council was passed giving him the status of a landed immigrant. In 1958 he applied for full citizenship. This application was rejected by Mr. Justice Lafontaine.

Banks and the S.I.U. were not long in operation until it became apparent that Banks was building a hoodlum empire based on intimidation, extortion and lawlessness. First, he destroyed democratic control of the S.I.U. Second, he conspired with some of the shipping companies to illegally break the existing collective bargaining agreements which those companies had with properly certified trade unions. Third, Banks and the S.I.U. used lawless tactics in an attempt to destroy other unions in order to extend the membership of the S.I.U. I think a reading of the Norris report makes it quite clear that the blame for this intolerable situation falls on three separate groups.

It falls, first of all, of course on the S.I.U. and its president who instituted a reign of terror on the waterfront. There were the "do not ship" lists and the hiring halls by which Banks had control of whether or not any man would be able to get a job, and how long he would keep it. There was the control of the pension fund, which he mismanaged as the record will show. There was the fact that, with the consent of the Canadian government and the companies, the men's vacation pay was turned over to the S.I.U. and not to the men. I think the record shows that some $300,000 of that has never been distributed to the seamen. This gave him control of the union so that democracy was steadily destroyed. First, the blame lies with Banks and his organization.

The second share of blame lies with the shipping companies, at least the majority of them, and particularly Canada Steamship Lines who were in collusion with Banks and who, by working with Banks, sought to gain competitive advantage over the other shipping companies. I should say that credit should be given to the Upper Lakes Shipping Company and to its president Mr. Jack Leitch who, according to the Norris report, stood up almost alone against the depredations of Banks and the union. As a matter of fact, I probably should just document that by referring to page 41 of the report where the commissioner says:

> The Canada Steamship Lines and its affiliates, with their diverse interests and integrated operation in many fields tributary to the business of lake transport, found it easy to make accommodations with Hal C. Banks and his union—the S.I.U. of Canada—and did not suffer from union action. Other lake shipping companies, if they wished to survive, had to fall in line and accept the terms arranged between C.S.L. and Banks regardless of their own situation. The resulting tendency was to deprive the public of the benefit of real competition in the lake transport field and to strengthen the individual power of the president of the S.I.U. of Canada.
> With the weapon of monopoly in his hands, Banks endeavoured to impose discriminatory terms on Upper Lakes Shipping Limited which alone stood out against him and this company was forced to turn to the C.B.R.T. and the C.M.U. to man its ships.

The record, I think, is clear. Canada Steamship Lines was every bit as guilty as Banks for the exploitation of workers and for the undemocratic conditions under which they worked. I shall have something to say about the companies later on.

The third share of blame certainly falls squarely on the Department of Labour. They were made aware of this situation, as is shown on pages 54 and 55 of Mr. Justice Norris' report, which I will not bother to read into the record unless someone wants to question it. It is apparent that a letter was sent on April 10, 1959, to Mr. Bernard Wilson, chief industrial relations officer, Department of Labour by Scott Misener Steamships Limited, pointing out that this company had a working agreement with a certified union, certified by the Canada labour relations board, and the company was breaking that agreement to enter into an agreement with Banks.

The Scott Misener company even had the audacity to enclose a copy of a letter from Banks guaranteeing them indemnification from any loss they might sustain as a result of having broken the law. As I say, this happened in 1959, and it is difficult to understand how a situation like this could have been left to fester without any action being taken by the Department of Labour at that time. Therefore I say the blame for the situation on the great lakes can be apportioned equally to the S.I.U., to the shipping companies who entered into these dubious arrangements with Banks, and to the failure on the part of the Department of Labour to act.

The situation got so bad that on May 23, 1962, the president of the Canadian Labour Congress, Mr. Jodoin, wrote to the Prime Minister. His letter will be found on page 404 of the schedules printed by the Norris commission. I will not take time to read the letter, but the president of the Canadian Labour Congress listed all the grievances, documented and dated the beatings, the violence, the lawlessness and intimidation that had gone on under the reign of terror initiated by Banks and the S.I.U.

No action apparently was forthcoming, and on July 6, 1962, the Canadian Labour Congress and the C.B.R.T. closed the St. Lawrence seaway in order to enforce the appointment of a commission to inquire into the situation, and Mr. Justice Norris was appointed by order in council on July 18, 1962.

At this stage I want to point out that the Canadian Labour Congress had itself expelled Banks back in 1959. Therefore there is no doubt about where the C.L.C. has stood throughout this entire period, beginning with its expulsions of the S.I.U. up until its demand for an investigation in 1962.

I quote now from the submission which the Canadian Labour Congress made to the Norris commission on March 13, 1963. I quote only three short statements and I put them on record because I want to make it abundantly clear that the one voice which has been raised most consistently against the evil doings of Mr. Banks has been that of the Canadian Labour Congress. On page 5 of their submission they say this:

> The seafarers' international union of Canada on the record—on the abundant and incontroverted evidence before this commission—is not a free association of workers. It is a captive legion of dragooned and helpless individuals. It is a racket; it is not a union. Like the constitution of the U.S.S.R., the constitution of the seafarers' international union of Canada makes profuse reference to the principles of democracy and contains elaborate provisions designed to put the principles into effect. In both cases, behind the facade of the documents, there is the reality of totalitarian rule.

On page 33 of their submission they say this:

> We have stated that the S.I.U. is not a part of the Canadian labour movement—it is a growth upon it. Equally, we submit that the S.I.U. is not a part of Canadian society—it is a growth upon it. We submit that your lordship should be prepared to recommend whatever social surgery is necessary to relieve both the trade union movement and society from this growth. There is no place in our social structure for a hoodlum empire which works hand in glove with certain shipping companies to the advantage of both, and to the disadvantage of the workers and the general public.

Then there is another short quotation from page 35 of the C.L.C. submission:

> In formulating your report to the Minister of Labour, we ask Your Lordship to find and to advise the Minister of Labour that the S.I.U. is not a bona fide trade union and to recommend that such steps should be taken, as you may consider advisable, to ensure that legal and practical efficacy will be given to such a conclusion. We will not presume to submit to Your Lordship the precise steps which should be taken in the attainment of this end.

The result of the investigation was, of course, the Norris report, which has been in the hands of hon. members for some weeks. It shows several things. It shows first of all that the S.I.U. is not a legitimate, democratic trade union. It fully vindicates the demands of the Canadian Labour Congress for an investigation, and it fully corroborates the statements which I quoted that were contained in the brief of the Canadian Labour Congress.

I shall quote just two brief passages from the Norris report. On page 296 Mr. Justice Norris says the real issue——is not an effort to right any wrong nor to assist seamen, but is part of an irresponsible campaign to maintain one rapacious and violent man, Banks, in power as a dictator.

He goes on to say:

> Banks obtained his absolute control in his union through the misuse of union funds, the hiring halls, the D.N.S. and R.O.C. cards, and the welfare plan. This has been fully established. He and his union operated the vacation pay plan unlawfully and contrary to the directions of the minister of labour. The maritime appeal board set up by Banks is not useful for the purpose that it is alleged to serve.
> Under Banks' control, the seafarers' international union of Canada becomes less and less a trade union and more and more of a mere hiring agency, operated by Banks through fees extracted from the wages of the crew members supplied through the hall.

He goes on to say at page 299, and I shall not bother the committee by reading it in detail, that there will never be peace on the great lakes and there will never be established a democratic, free trade union movement on the great lakes until Banks is removed.

I also want to point out that Mr. Justice Norris gives a clear bill of health to the other unions operating on the great lakes and in the ports. He says that——the Canadian unions, by establishing the C.M.U. have done a service to the country in bringing out into the open the lawlessness of Banks.

He says further:

> This is not a private quarrel between Upper Lakes and the Canadian Labour Congress on the one hand and the S.I.U. on the other, but that it is a matter of grave public concern that there should be an attempt to force on Canada the rule of lawlessness in labour matters which exist in the Teamsters' and I.L.A. organizations in the United States and which is apparent in the combinations now operating against Canadian vessels in United States ports.

He goes on to say on page 302, referring to the boycott by the C.B.R.T. in 1962 to enforce an investigation:

> The actual boycott of the seaway by the C.B.R.T., while it may be understood, cannot be condoned as it was in breach of the collective agreement. The C.L.C. and the C.B.R.T. are, however, to be commended for taking action to set up another union in order that there might be an end to the oppression and control by Banks.

He goes on to say at page 303:

> The other labour organizations acting on behalf of employees engaged in work affecting shipping operations in the great lakes are operated democratically and their funds are protected. Their welfare plans are established on sound bases.

Having laid the blame squarely, first of all, on the S.I.U. and having given to the other trade unions a clean bill of health, Mr. Justice Norris recommended a public trusteeship which would have three functions: first to administer existing collective agreements with such amendments as are approved by the Canada labour relations board; second, to supervise the renegotiation of subsequent collective agreements by negotiating committees democratically elected by members of the unions; and third, to take steps to bring about an assurance of democracy in the unions.

Nobody who is interested in a free trade union movement likes the idea of a public trusteeship if it can be avoided. We prefer to have a free association of workers acting together through their democratically elected officers. But the S.I.U. has lost all semblance of democracy and its members have no control whatsoever over policy. A private trusteeship would of course be preferred, but the Canadian Labour Congress, who have been looking into this matter and seeking to find some such solution, issued a statement last night the last paragraph of which reads:

> Our position with regard to an imposed trusteeship remains today as it was when we expressed objection to the original proposal advanced by Mr. Justice T. G. Norris. We have now reached a point where no alternative appears available. Responsibility for this rests squarely on those who have continually refused to support a reasonable and effective plan of voluntary control.

We therefore come reluctantly to the conclusion that no settlement is possible on the great lakes other than through legislative action. There is no alternative that would not leave Canadian seamen helpless captives of an industry-wide company union run by racketeers. Naturally public trusteeship is unpalatable, but it is less unpalatable than lawlessness, extortion and intimidation. And we have the fact that the other unions on the great lakes, those who have been declared by Mr. Justice Norris to be clean, democratic, legitimate unions, have indicated their willingness to come voluntarily under a public trusteeship.

There are some advantages in a public trusteeship over a private trusteeship even though the latter would have been preferable if it had been possible. First, under a private trusteeship you always have the danger that the S.I.U. could regroup under another name and continue to terrorize workers on the waterfront. By setting up a public trusteeship you prevent this possibility. The other advantage of a public trusteeship is that it will be able to deal with the boycotting and sabotaging of Canadian ships in United States ports. It is difficult to see how a private trusteeship could deal with this situation, unless you had the co-operation of the United States government and the United States labour movement. The third advantage is that a public trusteeship will permit the adoption of policies which will apply not only to the unions but also to the shipping companies, some of whom must accept a very large share of the blame for the present situation. As a matter of fact, when we get into the legislation we in this group will want to know why the companies are not being brought under trusteeship.

The situation which we have on the waterfront today could not have deteriorated to its present state without the collusion and the connivance of companies like Canada Steamship Lines. Why we should be crying on the one hand for the removal of Mr. Banks but on the other hand leaving the officers of Canada Steamship Lines alone seems to me to be putting all the blame on one party and overlooking another party which is equally guilty. One of the advantages of a public trusteeship is that it will ensure that the companies will not flout the law in Canada as they did when they were dealing with the S.I.U. and breaking their collective bargaining agreements with democratic, bona fide trade unions. As I see it, the task of the public trusteeship when it is established will be:

(1) To get rid of Banks and his high priced goons who masquerade as trade union officials.

(2) To police existing agreements and if necessary negotiate new ones with the co-operation of the union membership.

(3) To amend the constitution and bylaws of unions to bring them into line with democratic trade union practice.

(4) To introduce democratic procedures for the election of new officers and to restore control of the union to its membership.

May I say here to the Minister of Labour that if this fourth objective of the trusteeship is to be realized there will have to be some person on that board of trustees who has a first hand knowledge of the trade union movement but one, of course, who is not involved in this dispute. I hope the minister, when the bill is being discussed, will give us some idea as to the kinds of persons he intends to appoint to this board. I think they will have to be selected with great care. This is not just a matter of appointing chartered accountants or business executives. If one of the functions of this board of trustees is to restore democracy in the unions on the great lakes, it cannot be done in an office. There will have to be someone on the board of trustees who can go down amongst the men, talk to them and help them recover the control of their trade union. I hope some outstanding trade unionist will be appointed to this board.

I believe that if it is properly administered this trusteeship can be a victory for democratic trade unionism. But I point out first that the trustees will need the wholehearted support of the government and of this parliament. I want to point out, second, that we in this group shall insist that this legislation not be considered a precedent, but that it is extraordinary legislation to deal with a particularly odious situation. Third, we shall insist that this legislation be for a specific period of time. I was glad to hear the minister say he agreed with the idea of a specific period of time, though when he mentioned five years I was appalled. This parliament is going to turn over the union affairs of five unions to a board of trustees and give them complete control of the management of those unions, the drafting of their constitution, the negotiating of their collective bargaining agreements, the operation of their welfare plan, the election of their officers. To give them this authority for five years without there being any review in this period seems to me to be totally unwarranted. I think this should be for a very limited period of time. At the very most I think it should be until December 31, 1965. If at the end of that time the board of trustees can convince the Minister of Labour that their work is not finished and that they need an extension of time, the Minister of Labour can come into this house and ask for an extension. If his arguments persuade the members of parliament that an extension of time is warranted, I have no doubt that it will be granted. I for one will take very strong exception to giving the board of trustees a five year period of almost complete domination and dictatorship over the affairs of these maritime trade unions. I hope that before the legislation is brought down the minister will give serious thought to a much more limited and shorter period of time. I believe the people of Canada and most trade unions will support this legislation if it is recognized that it is not a precedent and that it is a temporary measure for a limited period of time, with the understanding that the board must come back to parliament for a renewal of its responsibilities.

I should also like to say that we need not think that passing this legislation will solve all the problems. A reading of the Norris report concerning the serious situation which has developed over the years on the great lakes indicates that our federal labour legislation is badly in need of an overhaul. A lot of it is completely antiquated. Otherwise this situation would never have come about, the federal Department of Labour and the Canada labour relations board should have intervened long ago. It should not have required a strike by the C.B.R.T. to tie up the St. Lawrence seaway and force the government to look into something it had known about for three years; at least, its officials had known about it for three years. Something is wrong with the basic machinery of our labour administration and legislation, and I hope the minister will set himself the task of bringing it up to date and submitting legislation to the house for that purpose.

In supporting this legislation, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that one of the reasons I am glad to support it is because it will make possible the settlement of an important labour dispute in Canada by Canadians, with the control vested in Canadians. As a Canadian I resented the intervention of U.S. labour secretary Willard Wirtz. It seemed to me that it was none of his business to express opinions against a public trusteeship, and certainly none of his business to try to exercise influence through the United States labour trade union movement on the Canadian labour trade union movement and on the Canadian public. As a matter of fact, if secretary Wirtz has spare time on his hands, one of the things he might do is to see that Canadian shipping in U.S. ports is free from harassment and sabotage. One of the reasons why, in my opinion, we have no choice but to agree to this public trusteeship is because this is a clear struggle to decide whether or not labour matters affecting Canadian workmen are going to be settled in Canada under the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada. For that reason, Mr. Chairman, and because we think that this is the only alternative there is to clean up a situation which has been neglected far too long, I am prepared to support this legislation, with the restrictions and modifications which I have already outlined.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, may I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think we should proceed, Mr. Chairman, with all the time and dispatch there is. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would not mind allowing us to pass the resolution, and he can speak on the bill?

Mr. Peters: I also should like to say something, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Orlikow: As far as I am concerned I have no objection, but a number of members in our group have signified their intention of speaking on this matter. I know that the house leader is interested in speed, but I suggest that if this legislation had been brought forward sooner it would have been passed long ago.

The labour movement of Canada, Mr. Chairman, has almost from its inception faced opposition from all sides. It has faced determined and violent opposition on the part of management on many occasions. It has been harassed by laws and by governments. Labour leaders through the years have gone to prison on more than one occasion because they fought to improve the conditions of the workers they represent. The labour movement has reached a final impasse in Canada with regard to working for the improvement of working conditions of the people they represent and helping to educate the public with reference to the need for the improvement of social legislation. We in this group realize why labour people have expressed themselves as doubtful about the imposition of a government trusteeship and about interference on the part of any government with the internal affairs of trade unions. It is with a good deal of doubt that we face this question of the great lakes shipping problem and the unions involved. It is with a good deal of soul-searching that we have come to the conclusion that we will have to support the recommendation of Justice Norris that a public trusteeship be imposed on the shipping unions on the great lakes. In taking this action and in proposing the resolution today, we feel that the minister has really moved in to control only one evil; he has moved in to control the evil brought to this country by the head of the S.I.U., Mr. Banks.

But, Mr. Chairman, we also find it strange that having done this the minister had little, in fact nothing, to say about the fact that Mr. Justice Norris indicated in his report that Mr. Banks could not have done the things he did except for the fact that he had the active co-operation of the steamship companies. Indeed, I do not think it would be too strong a term to say that he had their collusion, particularly so far as the largest company in the field, Canada Steamship Lines, is concerned. I want to say both for myself and other members of this group that I find it strange that there is no proposal by the minister that the government will take the same stern, drastic action with Canada Steamship Lines which it is proposing to take with the unions in the lakes shipping industry. We think this step is necessary, Mr. Chairman. We think it is long overdue and that the government should have acted before on the matter. We are going to support this legislation, but I suggest that it should be strengthened; and I will point out in what way the government should move before the legislation is passed.

I should like to call it six o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the house leader if we may assume that progress will be made tomorrow with this particular debate?

Mr. Pickersgill: Once we reach the orders of the day tomorrow—and one can only pray that that may be soon—we shall proceed with the committee stage of this resolution and I hope the discussion will be concluded fairly early in the afternoon. Then we would take the two bills about the territories in connection with which, as hon. members know, there is also a certain urgency, and the vocational training resolution. During this time, if we should conclude the resolution stage reasonably early and the bill could be distributed, hon. members would have had the opportunity to peruse it and, if there were a disposition, say, at eight o'clock, to go on with the second reading of the bill—the government realizes it is completely in the hands of the house—we should be very glad to get on with what I feel is an urgent matter and one which, having been started, should be pursued with dispatch.

If not, I will reserve the right, when the other business has been completed, either to call any other government business or to call supply.

Mr. Churchill: It is very convenient for the house, should the resolution have been completed and the bill distributed, to have a short interval, at least, in which to study the measure before proceeding further. That would suit us.

Mr. Pickersgill: I certainly think there should be at least a couple of hours during which hon. members would have the opportunity of looking at the bill before it is proceeded with. We certainly do not think that a bill of the extraordinary character of this one should be rushed through without receiving the most careful consideration. However, debate on second reading is a debate on the principle, and the bill would still have to go before a committee of the house where every clause would be scrutinized.

Mr. Douglas: We are anxious to expedite the passage of this bill, but we think it is of such far reaching importance that we would not care to telescope any of the stages. In short, we wish to study it carefully and if we could have copies of the bill early it would help.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will make every effort to see that, once the resolution stage is completed and the measure has been given first reading, copies will be distributed to hon. members as early as possible. In view of the statement just made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam I think I can say that if we finish the resolution stage tomorrow we would, unless some extraordinary circumstance forced us to change our plans, go ahead with the second reading as the first item of business on Friday.

It being five minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, October 10, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CARIBBEAN—ANNOUNCEMENT OF PROVISION OF RELIEF SUPPLIES

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it was decided today that the Canadian government would make available to the Canadian Red Cross Society an amount of $20,000 for the provision of Canadian relief supplies to the peoples in the Caribbean area suffering from the destructive effects of hurricane Flora. Five thousand dollars of this amount has been earmarked for Tobago, and the remainder would be available for possible use in other areas affected in the Caribbean such as Jamaica, Haiti and Cuba, where the Red Cross considers the most effective use of this contribution can be made.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the statement made by the Acting Prime Minister regarding assistance to countries that have suffered from the hurricane in the Caribbean, is consideration being given to sending some of our surplus butter, powdered milk and other surplus food products to the assistance of these countries?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact I agree with the hon. member that we should send them some butter but unfortunately most of these countries do not have refrigeration to take care of it. Under these circumstances we have to send them something which will keep in the hot weather.

Mr. Gregoire: As a supplementary question, can the minister not send the butter and the refrigerators too?

[Later:]

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): At the opening of our business, the Minister of Justice in his capacity as Acting Prime Minister announced, if I heard him correctly, that some $20,000 would be given by way of assistance to the Caribbean area to relieve the distress caused there by the recent hurricane. I believe the hon. gentleman announced also that $5,000 of this amount would go to Tobago, which would leave $5,000 for Haiti, $5,000 for Cuba and $5,000 for Jamaica. May I ask the minister if he considers this an accurate reflection of the generosity of the Canadian people?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): I am sure the hon. member understands that when decisions of this nature are made they are weighed by officials of the Department of External Affairs in consultation with the Canadian Red Cross. This is what was done on this occasion, and this is how the amount was arrived at.

LABOUR RELATIONS

LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRESENT POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I direct a question to the Minister of Labour and ask him how the processes of mediation are operating in connection with the longshoremen's strike, and whether those processes give an indication of having arrived at the point of exhaustion. I also ask whether, under all the circumstances, the words of the Prime Minister in Toronto today would indicate that the government intends to act effectively now so as to assure that Canadian national interests shall no longer be permitted to deteriorate.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would like to advise the right hon. gentleman that Judge Lippe had further discussions this morning. He is holding discussions as of this moment with both parties, and has indicated he is not yet satisfied that a settlement is impossible, and that he is continuing his activities.

There is no one more concerned than I about this particular dispute and its ramifications, but I do believe that having given this responsibility at this stage to Judge Lippe we ought to give him our confidence and support until he has exhausted all the mediation processes. That is all I would like to say at the moment.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister what has been done, if anything, to allow the passengers aboard the Empress of Canada to land. I understand that the representatives of the Canadian Weekly Newspapers Association are most desirous of getting home, and that yesterday they endeavoured to get off but have had to stay on the ship, at least until an hour or so ago. Has the minister any hope of the freedom from ransom of these newspapermen?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the task of the Department of Labour is to lend all assistance to the settlement of this dispute, of which this particular matter is a manifestation. With respect to any legal activities I think the right hon. gentleman should direct his question to the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The question is so directed.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the subject matter which the right hon. Leader of the Opposition has just brought up is one which has been engaging the attention of the government since it was first brought to our notice, and the position is that an interim injunction is being sought by the national harbours board which was to have been heard at 2.30 o'clock this afternoon. I have not received any information as to the disposition of it, and until I have I am not able to inform the house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, would the minister say what is the nature of the injunction?

Mr. Chevrier: I understand the injunction is to restrict and restrain members of the I.L.A. from entering national harbours board property, so as to permit the disembarking of passengers from the Empress of Canada.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question I would like to ask the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that the requests of the longshoremen seem to be fair and reasonable, is there any indication that the companies are dragging their feet in the hope that compulsory arbitration will be imposed; and may I ask the minister whether he has given any thought to bringing the two parties together personally, with a view to seeing whether this problem can be resolved?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be improper, much as I would like to accommodate my hon. friend, to attempt to describe the bargaining positions taken by the various parties with respect to the current mediation efforts. For that reason I cannot possibly attempt to describe what either party has attempted in the way of concessions at this stage. I have said that the government has assigned a very important responsibility to Judge Lippe, who is discharging that responsibility, I think, with a great deal of courage, skill and patience at the present time.

It is our objective to support him until his efforts are concluded. That is the time when other matters that are under consideration might be decided upon. But I assure the hon. gentleman that the government is aware of the very serious aspects of this problem and has them under consideration, but no decision has been made with respect to further steps.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Labour. Could he tell the house whether the meeting of Judge Lippe with the two parties this afternoon will be the last one before the government or the minister himself steps forward and takes over the mediation between the two parties?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the assumption behind that question is that Judge Lippe is going to fail.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Because of reports which have come to my attention this morning I would ask the Minister of Labour, is it true that in the event of continued failure to settle the longshoremen's strike the government is contemplating making use of Canadian armed forces to load and unload shipping, in order to maintain essential shipping services?

Mr. MacEachen: I have no comment to make on that question, Mr. Speaker, which has within itself, it seems to me, the kind of possibility that will not assist in the settlement of this problem.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): May I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In answer to a question I asked him the minister announced yesterday that the Canadian Pacific had filed an official protest because of the fact that the Empress of Canada was unable to anchor at Quebec city. Has the company asked the government to pay for the additional expenses thus incurred? Would the government agree to do so?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) is not here, may I point out that this question, and the second part in particular, does not seem to be urgent as it refers to future damages. I would suggest that it be put on the order paper.

[Text]

[Later:]

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question of the Minister of Agriculture. How long does the minister and his colleagues intend to allow the intolerable situation created by the longshoremen's strike to continue before taking positive action to protect the interests of the western farmers, and indeed of the whole Canadian economy?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have every confidence in the Minister of Labour that this will be resolved as soon as possible.

[Later:]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the Prime Minister back to the house after his sojourn in Toronto and would ask him a question with regard to the words he used today in his Canadian club speech in Toronto:

—that if the national interest is seriously and demonstrably damaged, if serious national consequences are flowing from a strike, and if all reasonable efforts at mediation are exhausted, then government must intervene to stop the strike—

Did he have reference to the longshoremen's strike when he made that statement?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, that certainly was in my mind when I made that statement. But perhaps I had better put the full statement on the record, seeing that the right hon. gentleman has quoted part of the paragraph. I was talking about Canada's national purpose, and I quote from the text:

A strong Canadian national purpose rejects, I believe, the idea that the government should forcibly intervene in a labour dispute which has become a lawful strike after the required processes of collective bargaining have been exhausted; intervene, that is, in order to force men back to work.

But a strong national purpose means that if the national interest is seriously and demonstrably damaged, if serious national consequences are flowing from a strike, and if all reasonable efforts at mediation are exhausted, then the government must intervene to stop the strike.

I went on:

But the intervention should be of a character to get people back to work, and legislative measures for intervention do not always have that result. The intervention should also be of a kind to ensure that there is no prejudice to the interests of either the employee or the employer in a subsequent fair settlement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that additional words have been included by the Prime Minister over and above those that appear in the release he gave to the press. However, making due allowance for that, would the Prime Minister say now, with regard to the various qualifications necessary to impel this indolent government to act, which of these qualifications are now regarded by the government as being in existence? Is there serious and demonstrable damage to the national interest? Are serious national consequences flowing from a strike? Does he think those elements have been established?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman characterizing this government as indolent in this matter is being as inaccurate as if I characterized his question as being entirely irresponsible.

Some hon. Members: Arrogance.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, in view of the Prime Minister's statement today that the strike cannot go on indefinitely, will the Prime Minister state when he will take action to put an end to the strike if necessary.

Mr. Pearson: The government will not step in until all the resources of mediation are exhausted. I am sure my hon. friend would agree with that procedure.

Mr. Martineau: What did he mean by his statement that the strike would not go on indefinitely?

NORRIS COMMISSION—REPORT OF SPECIAL COUNSEL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice and ask him whether he has yet received a decision on the report made by the special counsel who were appointed to look into the Norris commission report to see whether any charges could be laid.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have the preliminary report. As I have indicated once before, that preliminary report is under discussion between the officers of the criminal section of the Department of Justice and the two counsel. As yet I have received no final decision.

OAKVILLE, ONT.—STRIKE AT FORD PLANT

[Translation]

Mr. L. P. Antoine Belanger (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Have representations been made to him about the wildcat strike in Oakville, Ontario at the plant of the Ford Company of Canada? Has the minister any statement to make in this regard?

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I wonder whether the hon. gentleman would mind repeating his question?

[Translation]

Mr. Belanger: Mr. Speaker, I was asking the minister whether he had received representations about the strike involving employees of the Ford company, in Oakville, Ontario, and whether he could make a statement.

[Text]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I hope that is really under provincial jurisdiction.

WHITE PASS AND YUKON RAILROAD—EFFORTS TO SETTLE STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Minister of Labour, but before doing so I want to speak on a question of privilege. I tried yesterday for 45 minutes to ask a question on a rather urgent matter, and I have been trying today for 50 minutes to do the same thing. Perhaps it has not been intentional on Your Honour's part, but hon. members all around me have been recognized. In so far as the numerical distribution in this house is concerned, three or four members from the small opposition parties to our left have been recognized.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: You shouldn't stand sideways.

Mr. Nielsen: This is quite out of all proportion with the representation in this house. I am sure Your Honour has seen me, because you have recognized the hon. member who sits to my right, the hon. member who sits to my left, the hon. member who sits in front of me and the hon. member who sits behind me. I do not know whether there is any purpose in refusing to recognize me, but I have stood on every single occasion after an answer has been given by the government.

The question I have to ask concerns a reply given to me by the Minister of Labour on October 8 last, when I directed a question to him concerning the strike of the shop and craft employees of the White Pass and Yukon route and referred to the very serious consequences that strike was having on the economy of the Yukon and the northwest generally.

The Minister of Labour told me he would be giving me a report on October 9, which was yesterday, and I am wondering whether he has yet anything to report on this matter.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): The labour situation in question is not exactly a strike. I understand the railroad laid off its employees in anticipation of possible action by the employees themselves. I understand that the Alaska mediator is ready to assist the parties to solve this difficulty.

Mr. Nielsen: My question to the minister was: has he or any official of his department offered any assistance to those concerned with this labour problem which is affecting the economy of this area of Canada, in the hope that some solution may be found?

Mr. MacEachen: I am sure the Department of Labour intends to discharge its responsibilities in this situation as it is doing in others, but in this instance the responsibility lies primarily with the Alaska mediator. If there is anything we can do we shall be glad to do it.

Mr. Nielsen: Here is a Canadian-based railroad which is being tied up by labour problems in the United States. Surely, the Minister of Labour could offer the facilities of his department in an effort to put this railroad back into operation so that the economy of the area would be revived.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

VAL D'OR, QUE.—POSSIBLE ESTABLISHMENT OF NUCLEAR BASE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence, but in his absence I shall ask the Acting Prime Minister to give me an answer.

When I put a question last week concerning the new nuclear bases, the Minister of National Defence replied that under the Canada-U.S. agreement, no new nuclear base would be established in Canada.

I would like to know if there is any truth in the rumour that a new nuclear base would be established at Val d'Or, in the riding of Villeneuve?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add to the statement made last week or early this week by the Minister of National Defence, in reply to the question put by the hon. member. Since the minister concerned is absent today, may I suggest to the hon. member for Villeneuve that he ask his question again when the minister returns.

TRADE

WHEAT—U.S. REACTION TO CANADIAN SALES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the understanding between the Canadian and American governments and the fact that information regarding wheat sales by both countries is exchanged on a confidential basis, has the minister made a protest officially or unofficially to the United States government about the disclosure of this confidential information to the United States press and the consequential harm to the interests of western farmers and Canadian-United States relationships in general?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, as far as I am concerned the answer to the specific question asked by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle is no, we have not yet made any protest. I do not think at this particular time any such protest would be helpful. However, he may be assured that we are not very happy about the disclosure of confidential information provided to the United States government, particularly about sales that the Canadian wheat board has made to Japan.

May I be permitted, Mr. Speaker, in view of the question that has been asked, to say just a word about relationships between Canada and the United States in this field?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, naturally the hon. gentleman would have to ask to revert to motions so that we would have the opportunity of dealing with and dissecting the statement made.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. A dispatch from Washington this morning quotes spokesmen of the United States department of agriculture to the effect that on August 6 Canada dropped the price of wheat 6 cents a bushel to coincide with wheat sales to China. It claims that the sale to the U.S.S.R. was at the same price, and that the sale to Japan was at 5 cents below the world price. Will the minister confirm or deny these statements, and will he tell the house whether it is true, as the press report states, that on September 20 Canada assured United States representatives that no further fixed price agreements would be entered into following the wheat deal with the U.S.S.R.?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of questions asked by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, and I will see if I can answer them in order. First of all, the Canadian wheat board sells wheat from day to day at the prices that it publishes. The sale to mainland China was made at the published price of the wheat board on that day. So was the sale to the Soviet union, and so was the sale to Japan. As to the suggestion that the price on any of these occasions was below the world market price, I simply do not know what is meant by the question. The Canadian wheat board fixes its sale price from day to day and that is the price, and it sells at that price to all buyers on that day.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. What the report implies is not just that the price to China was 6 cents below the world price but that it was dropped 6 cents below what the board had previously been asking in order to coincide with the agreement. I wonder if the minister would give us some information on that claim.

Mr. Sharp: I think it is well known to all hon. members, Mr. Speaker, that when the sale was made to China the wheat board did reduce its price, and that remained its price until there was a change.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is there any justifiable reason why the Minister of Trade and Commerce cannot divulge this information to the House of Commons, in view of the fact that the Department of Trade and Commerce and the wheat board have already divulged this information to the general public?

Mr. Sharp: The wheat board never divulges information about its sales contracts.

Mr. Korchinski: Everybody knows except us.

Mr. Sharp: The information that was divulged the other day about sales to Japan was not divulged by the wheat board. No announcement was made. I agree with the hon. member for Qu'Appelle that this was a leak.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether it is true that the United States has threatened to launch a trade war against Canada because of Canada's wheat selling practices. Also, perhaps he will clear up the matter if he could tell the house whether or not there have been any previous agreements such as the forward pricing arrangements contained in the recent wheat deal with Japan?

Mr. Sharp: As to the first question, the hon. member knows as much as I do. I have heard no suggestion that there is going to be any trade war between Canada and the United States, and I very much doubt it. As to the second question, whether there have been any other forward sales such as those reported, the answer is yes.

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Provencher): I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can he advise the house whether the contracts signed with China and Russia contain provision for price during the duration of those contracts, or whether there would be negotiation as to quantities and prices during the period?

Mr. Sharp: I have explained those transactions on a number of occasions, but in order to refresh the memory of the hon. gentleman, when the contract was entered into by the wheat board for the sale of wheat to mainland China the agreement was for three years. At that time I announced that of the quantity, covered by the agreement, which was a substantial quantity, 500,000 tons had been the subject of a contract on which the price was fixed. In the case of the Soviet union the contract called for delivery within the present crop year and the price was fixed.

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): I, too, have a supplementary question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The hon. gentleman made a statement that the wheat board sold at a fixed price. May I ask him if there is more than one fixed price per day for the wheat board?

Mr. Sharp: My understanding is that the board fixes its price each day and does not vary it during the day. I do not wish to say this is invariably the practice, but it is the practice as I have known it.

Mr. Korchinski: Is there any occasion on which the Department of Trade and Commerce or the wheat board have ever entered into an agreement where there has been a fixed price arrangement for the future?

Mr. Speaker: That is a question for the order paper.

Mr. Douglas: The minister did not reply to the second part of my question. I regret that I was not able to give him notice of my intention to ask it, but the second part of my question was this. On September 20 did representatives of the Canadian government give to representatives of the United States an assurance that following the wheat agreement with the Soviet union no further fixed price agreements would be entered into by Canada?

Mr. Sharp: The answer to that question is no.

[Mr. Sharp.]

[Later:]

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce has been asked over and over again. However, I should like to know if the minister has taken steps to absolve the Canadian wheat board from the accusations of price fixing, and thus protect and encourage the Canadian wheat board?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I think all hon. members know that Canada and the United States are competitors in the wheat markets of the world. They are friendly competitors; nevertheless they are very keen competitors. Each of us is anxious to maintain our business and to get new business. Each of us, I believe, is also very anxious to see some stability in world markets. This is one of the reasons that we are both members of the international wheat agreement, whose purpose is to stabilize world wheat markets. It is under the auspices of the international wheat agreement, and otherwise, that we carry on consultations from time to time with the United States.

Hon. members will recall, for example, that when a joint committee on trade and economic affairs was established many years ago, a committee was established at that time for the very purpose of consulting with one another about wheat policies in order to stabilize the wheat markets of the world. I have no hesitation in saying that this is the purpose of the Canadian government as well as of the Canadian wheat board.

Now, there have been times when our two governments have not seen eye to eye on our respective policies.

Mr. H. F. Jones (Saskatoon): May I raise a point of order. I think a suggestion was made earlier that if this matter was going to be discussed it should be done by reverting to motions so the different parties might have an opportunity to present their views.

Mr. Speaker: I am inclined to think the explanation is a bit lengthy; nevertheless there have been a series of questions which tend toward a long answer.

Mr. Jones: I wonder if the house would give permission to revert to motions? This is a very important matter.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Jones: Despite the "no's" from the Liberal side, I understand the minister has a statement prepared on this subject and would be delighted to give it. We asked him about this yesterday, and it is vital to know about the breakdown in the exchange of information between Canada and the United States. I think the minister is prepared to make a statement, and it is vital in view of the fact a protest has been lodged by the United States government with the Canadian government.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I speak to the point of order, which is an important one. However, it does seem to me it is not very reasonable for hon. members to read long statements which purport to be questions, and then when a serious matter is raised as a question, a minister, who was not reading but simply giving an answer, is prevented by procedural difficulties from making his reply. I suggest we get on with the business of the house.

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Saskatoon.

Mr. Jones: In view of the lateness of the hour I will forgo my question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce with regard to the Canada-United States wheat information hassle. I shall wait until the hon. gentleman makes his statement.

Mr. Sharp: When other hon. members asked questions of that sort I thought the best way of answering them would be along those lines; that was why I made the statement I did.

BULGARIA—REQUEST THAT AGREEMENT BE IN BOTH LANGUAGES

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Cote (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

In view of the fact that Mr. Boudinov, Bulgaria's trade minister, wanted to negotiate in French for the purchase of wheat, was the agreement signed with Bulgaria written in the two official languages of Canada, that is in both French and English?

[Text]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, may I say to my hon. friend that even though I am rather inadequate in the language I carried on negotiations in French with Mr. Boudinov. As to the document, this was placed before me in the customary way by the Department of External Affairs, and I assume it was acceptable to both sides.

[Translation]

Mr. Cote: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I asked the hon. minister if the agreement itself was drawn up in French.

[Text]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, these negotiations were in the hands of my officials, and so far as I know they carried them on in a language that was acceptable to both sides. I am really in no position to answer the question. The document was before me in Bulgarian and in English.

NATIONAL PARKS

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—APPOINTMENT OF SUPERINTENDENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): I do not have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. My question is addressed to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, and I regret not having been able to give him notice of it. Having learned that yet another acting superintendent has been appointed for the Prince Edward Island national park, I should like to ask the minister whether he plans to revert to the practice of his predecessor and appoint a full time year round superintendent for this park which, as the hon. gentleman's departmental statistics indicate—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Macquarrie: —has the second largest attendance figure—

Mr. Speaker: This is a question for the order paper.

LOTTERIES

NEW BRUNSWICK—DRAWING OF NAMES OF HUNTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): I have a question which I should like to address to the Minister of Justice. Inasmuch as the Moncton Daily Times of Saturday last contains an eight column heading, a three column illustration and a front page box relating the 1,075 names of would-be moose hunters which were drawn by a minister of the crown from a huge barrel containing 15,459 tickets, would the hon. gentleman advise the house when the attorney general of New Brunswick granted the minister of lands and forests of New Brunswick the right to conduct this fourth annual lottery in contravention of section 179 of the Criminal Code?

Mr. Speaker: That is a question for the order paper.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED MEETING BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND U.S. PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister a question.

Inquiries of the Ministry

In view of the reports from Washington to the effect that the present differences between Canada and the United States on our wheat sales and our putting the shipping unions under trusteeship might very well result in a crisis between the two countries, can the Acting Prime Minister tell us whether a meeting of the Prime Minister and Mr. Kennedy has been planned for the near future?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall be happy to bring this question to the attention of the Prime Minister. Meanwhile, I say that the government, through the Minister of Labour and other ministers interested in the question, are spending most of their time seeing to it that such a situation as the hon. member mentioned does not arise.

Mr. Martineau: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Have the efforts just mentioned by the Acting Prime Minister met with success?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I think that, under the present circumstances of the labour dispute, the answer is yes.

[Text]

ITALY—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON DAM COLLAPSE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, but in his absence maybe the Acting Prime Minister would answer it or take it as notice. It arises out of a report in the Globe and Mail this morning regarding the collapse of the Vaiont dam in Italy. As I represent a riding with a large number of Italian-Canadian citizens, I wonder whether the minister can make a statement as to the welfare and safety of the people affected by this disaster. I am sure that many other Canadians would also be interested.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, while the hon. member did not give me notice of his question I understand that he did refer it to the Department of External Affairs as did also, I must advise the house, the hon. member for Hamilton West. The answer is that I have, of course, seen in the newspapers the report of the collapse of the Vaiont dam yesterday and a message of sympathy is being sent by the Canadian government to the Italian prime minister. We have made inquiries from our embassy in Rome and expect to hear shortly as to the extent of the disaster and the welfare of any Canadians in the area.

[Mr. Martineau.]

ETHIOPIA—PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre-Andre Boutin (Dorchester): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister.

Following the recent visit of the Emperor of Ethiopia to Canada, could the minister inform the house if diplomatic relations will be established between the two countries, to comply with a wish expressed by the emperor himself?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I had talks with the Emperor of Ethiopia and the question of diplomatic relations between our two countries did not come up. The Prime Minister also had talks with him but I am not aware of the matters they discussed. I believe the Prime Minister would be able to answer that question and I suggest that it be put to him when he comes back.

[Text]

APPOINTMENT OF NEW AMBASSADOR TO FRANCE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Lucien Plourde (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

When does he think he will be able to inform the house of the appointment of a new Canadian ambassador to France, to replace Mr. Pierre Dupuy?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Dupuy is at this time the ambassador to France. He is on retirement. When a replacement to Mr. Dupuy is decided on, an announcement will be made.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

TORONTO—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour if he is now able to answer the question I asked him on Monday, namely whether the urgent representations of the board of control and mayor of the city of Toronto that the winter works program should be extended have been dealt with by him or by the government.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the hon. member because I promised I would have an answer for him earlier. I wanted to have a conversation about this matter with the Prime Minister, and it has not been possible to do that in the detail I should like. Just as soon as that is done I will be able to give the hon. member an answer.

CONCESSIONS TO FOREIGN COMPANIES MOVING INTO DESIGNATED AREAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Industry. Would a foreign owned company receive the same concessions as a Canadian owned company moving into a designated area?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): The answer to that, Mr. Speaker, is yes.

Mr. Noble: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would this not be contradictory of government policy as designated in the budget?

Mr. Drury: The answer to that, Mr. Speaker, is no.

STORMS

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister.

A few minutes ago the minister announced that financial assistance was being given to certain areas recently devastated by a hurricane. Could the minister tell us why he was unable to do the same thing when numerous victims in Abitibi needed help last June?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as regards the question raised by the hon. member I believe our position to be quite clear. It has been explained in this house time and again, both by the Prime Minister and myself.

When a municipality or a region finds itself in a difficult situation, it must first ask for help from the provincial authorities and, if those authorities are not able to assist those who are suffering, they refer the request to the federal authorities. I do not know of any situation where the federal government, in such circumstances, has refused to act.

[Text]

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

HAINES ROAD—INQUIRY AS TO MAINTENANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources when the house may expect an announcement from him with respect to the study and report thereon as to the possibility of keeping the so-called Haines cut-off open on a year round basis?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, not only the Haines road is involved in the studies being made. As I indicated to the house recently, the report has not yet been received. When it is received I would hope that we could make some announcement in respect of general transportation requirements in that territory.

Mr. Howard: A supplementary question. Is the minister aware of the urgency involved in this matter because of the pending closure of the Haines road at the end of this month for the coming winter season?

Mr. Laing: I am aware that there is a deadline, which I think is October 31.

NORTHERN TRANSPORTATION COMPANY—COMPETITION WITH PRIVATE ENTERPRISE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gene Rheaume (Northwest Territories): My question is addressed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and arises out of a statement he made yesterday on orders of the day to the effect that it will be government policy to allow crown corporations to engage in direct competition with private industry in shipping in the Northwest Territories. My question is this. Is the minister aware that the minister of northern affairs recently made a statement to the effect that it is government policy that the government withdraw from direct competition in the Northwest Territories?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): If I may intercede at this point, Mr. Speaker, I want to deny categorically that I made the statement which the hon. member attributes to me. I was in the Northwest Territories and so was he. I said repeatedly that I thought the future of the Northwest Territories rested in the encouragement into that area of more private capital and private enterprise. I did not make the statement that he says I made.

[Later:]

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I raised this matter yesterday and the hon. gentleman gave me a good answer. Perhaps he could give me further details as to equipment. Is the Northern Transportation Company going to be in a position to put the L.S.M. into use?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The maritime commission refused Northern Transportation permission to use the L.S.M., so they have not purchased the equipment.

TRANSPORT

CONSIDERATION OF REPRESENTATIONS BY ASSOCIATION OF TRUCKERS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Transport.

Has the minister or the officials of his department replied to the statements made by the spokesman of the Trucking Association of Canada, Mr. Chapman, who accused, on October 8 last, the federal government of ignoring the trucking industry in Canada by granting increased subsidies to the railroads?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This question, I am sorry to say, is out of order.

OTTAWA-TIMMINS—REPORTED DIFFICULTY IN OBTAINING RESERVATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport which could possibly help him solve one of the problems presented to him a few minutes ago regarding the railway layoffs. Would he investigate the apparent complete breakdown in transportation between Ottawa and Timmins which makes it impossible for one to get a reservation, either by T.C.A. or C.N.R., even when requested two days in advance; and having investigated, would he see if something could be done to correct this deplorable situation?

Mr. Speaker: Could the question be put on the order paper?

POWER

PEACE RIVER—APPLICATION FOR CONSTRUCTION OF DAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, on July 2 last the Minister of Justice, in response to a question from me, said that his officials were looking into the matter of whether the work proceeding on the Peace river dam under the authority of the British Columbia government or an agency thereof was in contravention of the Navigable Waters Protection Act. Can the minister now say whether he has received an opinion from counsel on this question?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I did get a reply for my hon. friend. I had it before me in the house on a number of occasions. I am sorry I have not got it with me now but I will have it tomorrow.

PENSIONS

REQUEST FOR ACTUARIAL REPORT ON REVISED PLAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has the minister seen a copy of the October bulletin issued by William M. Mercer Limited, a private firm of consulting actuaries, in which reference is made to the report of the chief government actuary on the Canada pension plan as being comprehensive, highly competent and expert? Can she assure the house that when the revised Canada pension plan is brought before us she will obtain another actuarial report from the chief actuary?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, did the hon. member say another actuarial report?

Mr. Knowles: Will the minister obtain another report from the chief government actuary to fit the revised plan that she will bring down, in view of this reference to the expertness of the report we have already had?

Miss LaMarsh: It is already in process of preparation, Mr. Speaker.

BROADCASTING

ALLEGED REFUSAL TO FOLLOW RECOMMENDATIONS OF BOARD

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Why does the government reverse all of the B.B.G.'s decisions concerning the granting of licences to radio and television stations?

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I do not believe, sir, the statement is correct, but if the hon. gentleman wishes to put a question on the order paper I will endeavour to satisfy his curiosity.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING MATANE-STE. ANNE DES MONTS LINE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister without Portfolio. Could the minister tell the house whether he intends to insist with the government on the construction of a branch line between Matane and Ste. Anne des Monts, as requested by the chamber of commerce of Gaspe North?

Hon. Rene Tremblay (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the government is considering the matter and when a decision is reached it will be announced in the house.

[Text]

MONCTON, N.B.—INQUIRY AS TO REPORTED LAY-OFFS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask what action the Minister of Transport proposes to take to avoid the lay-off of Canadian National employees in the stores department at Moncton, New Brunswick, which is scheduled to occur tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: That is a question for the order paper.

Mr. Fairweather: If I may speak to the question of order, the lay-offs will take place tomorrow. Surely that is urgent.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): May I say a word on the question of order, Mr. Speaker. May I remind you that under the former government when questions of this nature were proposed it was always stated by the then Speaker that questions having to do with Canadian National Railways, particularly with reference to unemployment or employment, should be put on the order paper.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I am sure that is not quite correct.

Mr. Chevrier: Well, I know.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Minister of Justice, with his record with the Canadian National and in view of the expectation that he would accept the presidency, surely must think this is a matter of importance.

Mr. Chevrier: I must indicate my appreciation to the right hon. gentleman for such personal remarks; none the less the ruling which was made on those occasions was as I have stated.

Mr. Fairweather: Since the question of order has not been settled and the lay-offs are scheduled for October 11, this is now October 10, surely I am entitled to an announcement about the action the minister proposes to take.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The day before yesterday the hon. member for Westmorland brought this matter to my attention and brought me certain telegrams he had received. I received also some telegrams from the local unions, so I immediately sent a telegram to the management of Canadian National Railways asking for full information on the subject. I will give an answer to the hon. member when I receive it.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REPORTED CANCELLATION OF LEAVE FOR R.C.M.P. AND ARMY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): May I ask a question of the Acting Prime Minister. Is it true that all leave for the R.C.M.P. and the Canadian army in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario has been cancelled as of today?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): If that is so I am certainly not aware of it. I spoke to the chief commissioner less than an hour ago, and I have no indication of that at all.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. My question arises from a newspaper report concerning a move to separate the Quebec provincial Liberal organization from the federal party.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: Order.

Mr. Aiken: I want to ask the minister seriously whether this is one of the reasons for her hesitancy in forecasting the future of the Canada pension plan?

Mr. Speaker: This question is obviously out of order.

Inquiries of the Ministry

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO COMMITTEE ON PROCEDURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State. In view of the problems we have had in the last parliament and again during this session, does the minister anticipate setting up the committee on rules and procedures in the immediate future?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has indicated, and I think I have also indicated to the house on several occasions, that the government would like very much to get this committee set up if it could be done with reasonable expedition without interfering with other more urgent business. But, sir, I question whether there is much point in considering the changing of the rules if there is not going to be some observance of the rules we now have.

INQUIRY AS TO CALLING OF AGRICULTURE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can the right hon. gentleman tell us whether the agriculture committee will be convened this session and, if possible, when?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The committee will convene this session whenever the chairman of that committee is in a position to call it. It will meet, I assume.

PENITENTIARIES

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL—ASSAULT OF INMATE BY GUARDS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister, that is to say to the Minister of Justice. Could the minister tell the house whether the officers of his department have initiated an investigation about the attack on Alvin Gunn, an inmate at St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary? Does the minister intend to make a statement in the house on that matter?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This is a question for the order paper.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Grafftey: Wait a minute—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Shefford.

Mr. Grafftey: On a point of order, this question involves an attack on an inmate of St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary by guards at the penitentiary. It is a very important question. I merely asked the minister whether his department is making an investigation and whether he has the intention of making a statement in the House of Commons. It involves a great and urgent question of human dignity which the house would like to be seized of.

Mr. Speaker: There is no doubt about the importance of the question, but the attack is over and has been over for some days.

Mr. Grafftey: On a further point of order—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Grafftey: This reaction from the house in general—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, this reaction from the house in general—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Later:]

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice a question. What response, administratively, has he made, if any, to the strictures and criticisms expressed by a judge in a Montreal court about the beatings that took place at St. Vincent de Paul prison?

Mr. Pugh: That question must be out of order.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): If I am allowed to answer the question, Mr. Speaker, I would say that the moment I saw the report in the press of the evidence, I asked the commissioner of penitentiaries to make an immediate investigation. That has been done, and I expect a report in due course.

Mr. Balcer: Why didn't you say that a moment ago?

Mr. Chevrier: I did not get an opportunity. The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi walked out.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Minister of Justice if this evidence of beatings was uncovered in the first investigation of the St. Vincent de Paul episode?

Mr. Chevrier: My information is that it was not, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that it would follow as a logical consequence that the last two questions should have been put on the order paper. I refused a question from the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey). I do not think we should pursue that question any further.

[Later:]

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): I wish to raise a point of order, and it has to do with what happened in the house today. With all due deference I believe an apology is owed to the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi.

Mr. Speaker: Apart from any other consideration, it so happens that the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi is an intimate personal friend of mine, and I do not think he took any personal offence at all. The question was obviously one for the order paper. There was no particular urgency about it, in that the attack mentioned had already taken place; one cannot recall an attack which is over. The details were details of a sort which the minister could not be expected to recall on the spur of the moment, and for these reasons I suggested that the question be placed on the order paper.

Then the issue seemed to enter a period of argument, and in order to save the time of the house and to prevent argument about the rulings or suggestions made by the Chair I indicated that the matter was over. I do not think there is much more to add than that. I am sure the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi who, as I have already said, is a personal friend of mine, did not take any personal offence. Certainly none was meant.

Mr. Nasserden: I would agree with much of what you have said, Mr. Speaker, but I also think that what took place after the hon. member had left the chamber leaves something to be desired as far as his privileges in the house are concerned. If it was right for him to be cut off, then the other hon. member should have been cut off, too, and prevented from giving the answer he gave. The Minister of Justice answered the question which the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi had asked after someone else asked the question.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: We are getting into a debate and I am sure none of us want to do that. But if the hon. member will check his Hansard he will find I said that in view of the fact that the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi had been refused permission to press his question, questioning on that subject should stop, and it was stopped. In my opinion those answers should not have been made by the Minister of Justice or anyone else, and the other questions should not have been asked. But it is not always possible to control proceedings on the spur of the moment.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

POSSIBILITY OF DISEASE BEING CARRIED BY PIGEONS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Following a report from New York concerning the extermination of five million pigeons, have municipal authorities in Ottawa and Toronto requested the services of experts from her department to study the possible dangers of contamination in those cities by pigeons suspected of spreading mortal diseases?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I have the greatest difficulty in hearing some of these questions, and I wonder could we have a little more attention to this serious matter.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I submit that I was not referring to any hon. member.

[Text]

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask you to ask those people on the other side of the house to be quiet while other hon. members are speaking.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, may I respectfully draw Your Honour's attention to the fact that we have been on questions for a full hour now—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Pickersgill: —and I hope I may be heard by the other side of the house. We have been on questions for a full hour here today—

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): On a point of order—

Mr. Pickersgill: —when a very extraordinary and urgent piece of legislation—

Mr. MacInnis: On a point of order—

Mr. Pickersgill: —which has been demanded for weeks by the opposition—

Mr. MacInnis: On a point of order—

Mr. Pickersgill: —is before the house for consideration.

Mr. MacInnis: On a point of order—

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Pickersgill: I am speaking on a point of order, sir. I am simply drawing this matter respectfully to Your Honour's attention, and through Your Honour to the attention of the house.

Mr. MacInnis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, is it not customary in the house when hon. members rise to address the Chair that they only have the privilege of doing so when they are recognized by the Chair? I would draw your attention to the fact that the Secretary of State continually gets on his feet, and without getting recognition from the Chair he continues to speak first.

Mr. Chevrier: He was on his feet first.

Mr. MacInnis: It is time order was applied to that side of the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think I was recognized by the Chair.

Mr. Speaker: I am inclined to admit that on occasion I have difficulties with the Secretary of State.

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

REPORTED LACK OF CO-ORDINATION WITH LOCAL AUTHORITIES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Public Works a question. Would he have some comments to make on the statement of the mayor of Ottawa, Miss Whitton, to the effect that there is an obvious lack of co-ordination between the management of the national capital commission and the Ottawa civic authorities?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I read that statement and I may say that the mayor of Ottawa is free to express her own opinions, specially concerning any organization which has to deal with the city of Ottawa.

As far as I am concerned, I take this opportunity to say that the chairman and the members of the national capital commission perform a remarkable job.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Will the city of Ottawa and the other municipalities located in the national capital region be represented on the committee which will consider the Parkin report recommendations?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher).

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, the minister was going to give an answer.

[Mr. MacInnis.]

[Translation]

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, I will take the question as notice and answer it in a few days.

[Text]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CONSIDERATION FOR STAFF DURING WEEK END SITTINGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State. In view of the fact that the house is going to sit on Thanksgiving day, and in view of the fact that it looks as though we might have to sit on Saturday—and maybe Sunday as well and thus make it a long week end—to get some business done, can the minister say whether consideration will be given to making arrangements so that all the staff of the House of Commons does not have to be here all the hours that we may be sitting?

If perchance we are sitting on both Saturday and Monday, and another holiday later on, perhaps there could be some dividing up so the members of our staff get some of these days off even though we are here.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I am sure His Honour the Speaker and the officials of the house make every endeavour on all such occasions to do the best they can in the circumstances. The hon. gentleman has now brought the matter to their attention, and I have complete confidence that the views he has expressed will be their views.

Mr. Knowles: I hope the Speaker does not have any trouble with the Secretary of State on this matter.

Mr. Pickersgill: He will have none.

INDUSTRY

NOVA SCOTIA—ESTABLISHMENT OF HEAVY WATER PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Can the Minister of Labour indicate to the house if there is likely to be any early announcement on government policy which would permit the Nova Scotia government to finance and build a heavy water plant, possibly within the hon. gentleman's constituency?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): If the Nova Scotia government is entirely responsible for this matter, as the hon. member suggests, why does he direct his question to the Minister of Labour of this government?

Mr. MacInnis: The hon. member for Cape Breton South did not suggest that the Nova Scotia government was fully responsible for it. He said the government of Nova Scotia was prepared to build and finance such a plant. The only requirement from the federal government—and the minister is aware of this—is a statement as to whether Atomic Energy of Canada will buy the product, and he himself has stated publicly he is pushing to have this installation in his own constituency.

MARITIME TRANSPORTATION UNIONS

PROVISION FOR MANAGEMENT AND CONTROL BY TRUSTEES

The house resumed from Wednesday, October 9, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. MacEachen—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the placing of the maritime transportation unions of Canada under the management and control of trustees; to provide for the establishment of the board of trustees of the maritime transportation unions consisting of a chairman and two other members; to provide for the payment of their remuneration and expenses and to authorize the employment and remuneration of such personnel as may be necessary for the carrying out of the duties and powers of the trustees under the said measure.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, in the few minutes which I had yesterday I said that the labour movement in Canada for historical reasons was opposed in principle to the idea of government intervention in the internal business of labour unions; but because of the record of violence and intimidation the executive council of the Canadian Labour Congress, having amongst its members the top officers of Canadian unions both national and international, met this week in Ottawa and reluctantly approved the proposal of the government of Canada to impose a trusteeship on the maritime unions, and particularly on the S.I.U.

It did so because in the opinion of the labour movement the S.I.U. is not a legitimate trade union. The labour movement in Canada is proud of the fact that in nearly every case the unions in Canada are democratic. They are being conducted honestly. They are keeping their members informed about what goes on and getting approval from their members of decisions which are made. The salaries paid to union officers are set by union conventions. Expenses for union business are carefully audited. In the history of the Canadian labour movement there has been little evidence of misuse of funds. Most of the unions in Canada, like the ladies garment workers, the steel workers, the packing house workers, have pioneered, in regular and frequent reports to their membership, the giving of full financial reports.

If we look at the report of Justice Norris we see how differently the affairs of the seafarers international union were conducted. Justice Norris reports that in the course of four years, namely from 1959 to 1962, Mr. Banks had expenses of over $80,000 for which he provided vouchers for just over $8,000. In that period of time Mr. Banks increased the salary paid himself and other top officials of the union without getting the approval of the membership and without reporting it to the members. No legitimate trade union in Canada or the United States would permit such activity and no legitimate trade union leader would be a partner to that. Mr. Justice Norris reports that thousands of dollars of union funds were spent on a lavish apartment for the personal use of Mr. Banks. He also reports that union funds were used for air travel for friends or relatives of Mr. Banks who had nothing to do with the business of the union.

This is not the way for any legitimate trade unionist to act, Mr. Chairman, and it is not surprising therefore that the labour movement has agreed to trusteeship. Mr. Banks was able to keep control of the union by the use of the "do not ship" list, and later by the "report of charges" cards. Thousands of workers were prevented by this method from working, although the whole system was declared illegal by the courts. But the workers knew that if they were put on this list they would lose completely their opportunity to work. Under those circumstances they had no alternative but to take orders from Mr. Banks and his henchmen.

Justice Norris has documented the use of violence and intimidation by the S.I.U. under the direction of Mr. Banks. In schedule 31 of the Norris report there are listed the acts of violence and intimidation, and hon. members ought to read this to see how people were beaten, how others were subjected to telephone harassment. There was the ransacking of offices, damage to property, firing with guns on ships and stoning of vessels. The power of Mr. Banks over the whole industry can be seen very clearly from a letter which a Captain Watson wrote to Mr. Banks and which I want to read into the record. It is to be found at page 208 of the report. It is dated October 7, 1954, and is addressed to Mr. Hal Banks, president, S.I.U., Montreal.

Dear Mr. Banks,

In regards to a letter I wrote about two months ago to the newspaper in Owen Sound, Ontario.

In this letter I made some disparaging remarks about you for which I now tender my sincere and humble apologies.

The main body of the letter I copied from a Toronto newspaper, but have since come to the conclusion that the write up in the newspaper was an attempt to attack the union, through its leaders, and I was sucked in as probably some others were.

However I was foolish enough to go into print with my opinions and must now offer my apology, this along with my avowal to refrain from any comments about you or anybody else is all I can offer to you in the way of reparation.

My job and my family's welfare depend now entirely on your mercy.

I hope you will accept my apology and in your benevolence allow me to keep my job so I can keep my family.

If there is anything I can do to square this with you I will most earnestly do so.

Yours very sincerely

J. M. Watson
S.S. George Hindman.

I want to point out that this letter was written on the stationery of the Hindman Transportation Company Limited. Following that letter Justice Norris says, according to page 208 of the report:

Howard Hindman, the president of the company, was cross-examined by commission counsel, and he admitted that as a result of a telephone call from Banks, Captain George Hindman, then head of the company, "suggested" that Watson write the letter. Howard Hindman admitted that Watson "must have been in a frantic state when he wrote a letter like that".

In other words, so great is the power of Mr. Banks that the president of a shipping company with which Mr. Banks does business permits the captain of a ship to write this kind of abject letter. It is no wonder that Mr. Banks felt that he could do virtually anything in this country. Justice Norris has given a very short and descriptive impression of Mr. Banks which I think should be put on the record. He says, as reported at page 249:

Banks is capable, decisive, egocentric, intolerant and ruthless. He is of the stuff of the Capones and the Hoffas of whom the dictators throughout history, from the earliest times to the totalitarians, Hitler and Stalin, are prototypes. He is a bully, cruel, dishonest, greedy, power hungry, contemptuous of the law. In his mouth, the use of the word "democracy" is sheer blasphemy. For him the "big lie" and the failure to remember are ever-ready weapons and shields.

Well, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Banks is not by any stretch of the imagination representative of the real labour leaders of this country. It is being suggested by some newspapers and commentators that somehow labour is responsible for Mr. Banks, that all labour should be tarred with the same brush. It is forgotten by many people that it was the C.L.C. which expelled Mr. Banks and the S.I.U. from the ranks of organized labour; that it was the C.L.C. which forced the former government to act on the cancer by closing the seaway. It was the C.L.C. which asked the government to take whatever steps were necessary to clear up the mess. It was the C.L.C. which urged Justice Norris to bring forward any recommendations necessary to clear up the situation. The C.L.C. has also accepted his report, even though it is in principle opposed to trusteeship. But, Mr. Chairman, no gangster can get power and keep power unless the people he works with co-operate. Labour has acted on its own in so far as it could by expelling the S.I.U. from the labour movement. Mr. Justice Norris has made proposals with respect to controlling the unions in the industry and we are now being asked to act upon them. But despite the fact that Mr. Justice Norris has some very scathing things to say about the companies in the industry, we have not yet had any suggestion by the government that steps will be taken to apply the same kind of sanctions against the companies as will be applied against the unions concerned.

I think it should be of interest to the public to know something about the industry, and particularly about the largest company in the industry which Mr. Justice Norris has blamed for being responsible for the difficulties to a great extent, and for permitting Mr. Banks to continue as he did. I want to put on the record the names of some of the distinguished, shall I call them, directors of Canada Steamship Lines Limited. This information can be found in the directory of directors issued by the Financial Post. The president is T. R. McLagan and the vice president is H. A. Cresswell. The directors are D. W. Ambridge, G. C. Bateman, Hon. T. A. Crerar, J. H. Davey, A. O. Dufresne, Sir Philip Dunn, D. S. Holbrook, W. H. Howard, J. A. Mathewson, Gordon McMillan, K. A. Powell, R. W. Milner, H. A. Cresswell and T. R. McLagan.

Let us look at these people, because they are not only directors of Canada Steamship Lines. Mr. McLagan, besides being president and general manager of Canada Steamship Lines, is a director and member of the executive committee of the Algoma Steel Corporation, a director of Abitibi Power and Paper Company, British Petroleum Canada Limited, Canadair Limited, the Foundation Company of Quebec Limited and the Royal Bank of Canada.

Mr. Cresswell, besides being a director of Canada Steamship Lines, is vice president and director of Century Coal Company Limited and a director of Reliance Insurance Company. Mr. Ambridge, besides being a director of Canada Steamship Lines, is president of Abitibi Power and Paper Company Limited and a director of Canadian Petrofina Limited, the Montreal Trust Company and the Royal Bank of Canada. Hon. T. A. Crerar, besides being a senator and a director of Canada Steamship Lines, is chairman of the advisory committee of the Eastern Trust Company and a director of the Great West Life Assurance Company. Mr. Dufresne is a director of Noranda Mines Limited and of Gaspe Copper Mines Limited. Mr. Holbrook is president and chairman of the Algoma Steel Corporation and a director of the Royal Bank of Canada.

I could go on and on, Mr. Chairman, but it is obvious that these people between them constitute a veritable who's who of Canadian business. I suggest they have some responsibility, and I want to put on the record some of the activities of the top officials who work for them, because their role in this sordid story is really an infamous one. Mr. Dunkerley, the personnel manager of Canada Steamship Lines in charge of labour relations, is in my opinion a disgrace to legitimate business. He ignored the law. He conspired with Mr. Banks.

For members who may question my characterization of him, let me read from the report presented by Mr. Justice Norris. I quote from page 54:

> In February of 1959, Dunkerley, personnel manager of the C.S.L. in charge of labour relations, advised Greaves that the C.S.L. had signed a collective agreement with the S.I.U. licensed division in spite of the fact that that company had a collective bargaining agreement with N.A.M.E. Greaves testified that when he pointed out to Dunkerley that the action of the C.S.L. in signing an agreement with the S.I.U. was illegal, Dunkerley said:
>
> "Did you read the statement I made a couple of days ago before our management associations? There are no teeth in the labour laws. Have a look at the act. First of all you have to go to the minister and get permission to prosecute. That will take you a couple of months. We will kick it around in the courts here for a year and if necessary we will take it to the Supreme Court of Canada. This will take about two years."
>
> Greaves swore that Dunkerley told him that there would be merely a fine if the company was found guilty.
> "We have assurance from Mr. Banks of indemnification. By this time you will be out of business if you do not get your dues coming in, you know that. That is the way of life."

I suggest this is conspiracy. Some time ago I put a question on the order paper asking whether the government was considering the prosecution of the officials of the company concerned. It may be that the directors whom I have mentioned did not bother with the day to day operations of the company and did not know the kind of operation Mr. Dunkerley was conducting, but surely they knew about it after the Norris report came out. But still there is no action against Mr. Dunkerley. I presume that if he comes to Ottawa he will be a welcome guest at the Rideau club, along with all the other members of the establishment who are welcome there.

It is a sad state of affairs when you look at the principles on which businessmen are basing their operations. What about the business ethics of Canada Steamship Lines? Let us turn to the Norris report again. On pages 142 and 143 there is a fantastic story by Mr. Banks in which he claims that Canada Steamship Lines, this great organization directed by some of the greatest and wealthiest businessmen in the country, had a plan to transfer their whole Canadian operations from Canada to Bermuda. Why? So they could get out of paying the legitimate income taxes which they would have to pay in this country.

Mr. Banks has been called a lot of things and he may have been lying on this occasion, but it is significant that Canada Steamship Lines did not take occasion, as I am sure they would have if Mr. Banks had been lying or exaggerating, to ask for the right to appear before Mr. Justice Norris to deny the story which Mr. Banks put on the record. Therefore I have to assume that this is an honest statement and that this is what their intentions were. The fact that they did not go through with it is a separate matter, but these are the kind of people who are running one of the biggest companies in an important Canadian industry.

Banks has been expelled from the labour movement but Mr. Dunkerley remains as a top official of Canada Steamship Lines. Mr. Banks' union is being put under trusteeship, or will be as soon as the legislation proposed is passed by parliament, I assume. I hope that one of the first steps the trustees will take will be to see that Mr. Banks is fired as head of the S.I.U. and that he no longer has any position or influence in the Canadian branch of the S.I.U.

What about Canada Steamship Lines? What about Mr. Dunkerley? No action has yet been proposed. To some of us, Mr. Chairman, it looks like we have one law for labour misdeeds and another law for management misdeeds, in fact, no law for management misdeeds, which makes it even worse. If we can devise a law to put the union under trusteeship, surely the very competent lawyers and other technical people in the Department of Labour and Department of Justice could devise amendments to laws such as the Canada Shipping Act, so that companies and their officers who break Canadian laws will be penalized.

But nothing has been suggested, Mr. Chairman. I for one wonder why. I think the Minister of Labour should give us the reasons why there has been no suggestion of any move on the part of the government to punish companies, which are just as guilty of offences against the Canadian people and against the law as are Mr. Banks and the S.I.U.

But, Mr. Chairman, we need not have waited until 1963 to act in this matter. We have heard a great deal from the former prime minister and the former minister of labour about the friendship of Mr. Banks for the Liberal party. I believe that has been and can be documented. However, it is not my intention to add to that criticism. The members of the Liberal government will have to answer for that themselves. The former government had an opportunity to act in this connection.

In 1959, Mr. Bernard Wilson, the director of industrial relations, Department of Labour, received a letter from Mr. Misener of Scott Misener Steamships Limited. I believe this letter has already been read into the record on several occasions. In this letter Mr. Misener informed Mr. Wilson that, despite an agreement which his company had with another union which had been certified, his company proposed to ignore the certification and signed an agreement with Mr. Banks' union. Along with that letter, there was a copy of a letter from Mr. Banks guaranteeing the company's indemnification if they were sued for damages.

Now, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Wilson's reputation is well known in the Canadian labour movement. I cannot believe for one moment that Mr. Wilson did not consider that a violation of the Canada labour relations act was a serious offence. I cannot believe for a moment that Mr. Wilson did not report this case to the former minister of labour or that the former minister of labour did not report the matter to the then prime minister. We have to ask ourselves, therefore, why the former government did not prosecute the company and the S.I.U. at that time. Had they done that, Mr. Chairman, in all likelihood, we would not be faced with the problems with which we are now faced. We have a right to ask what pressures were brought upon the former government, and by whom. We can only speculate on this, although there are some rather interesting rumors in this connection.

It is certain, too, that the procrastination of the former government, as well as the failure of the Liberal government to deport Mr. Banks when they had not only the right but the obligation to do so, has cost us dearly and has contributed to the condition on the great lakes. We need to take action to clean up this unholy mess. While we are taking action we need to make certain that all the guilty people are punished, whether they are the so-called labour leaders like Mr. Banks, or business leaders, whether they be Mr. McLagan, Mr. Dunkerley, Senator Crerar or anybody else. No matter who they are, what their power or influence, all of them should be brought to justice.

I should like to conclude by saying that we in this group are, in principle, opposed to government interference with the free labour movement. We do not like, we deplore, the necessity for this legislation. We deplore the idea of trusteeship. We think that five years is too long. However, we are prepared to accept this legislation. We are prepared to support this legislation. We are prepared to go back to our people, to the labour movement with whom we have a close connection, and to explain the necessity for this. But, Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the Minister of Labour and to the Minister of Justice that it would be a lot easier to explain if we could tell the labour movement at the same time that the people on the other side who are just as guilty, but who may have a little more influence, will also be punished.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, in so far as the allegations that were made in the penultimate paragraph of the hon. gentleman's speech, they will be answered by the hon. member for Ontario who will show conclusively that the action taken by the former government went as far as it could go under the circumstances, and in no way was dictated by any other consideration than that the law be administered equally and fairly. He will deal with that phase.

I rise, however, this afternoon to add something to the stand that was taken on behalf of the official opposition by the former minister of labour. I begin by pointing out the fact that while parliament is in session we have been endeavouring for a number of days to secure a declaration of policy from the government relative to the longshoremen's strike which, as I stated the other day, is connected very directly with the lack of action by the government to bring about trusteeship in the latter part of July. While we have waited for a declaration of policy in this regard, the Canadian Club in the city of Toronto received information that has been denied consistently to parliament.

I said a moment ago that I was going to deal with one or two phases of this matter which, as yet, have not received the attention of the house. Hon. members in all parties are agreed that this type of extraordinary legislation ought not to be passed except when the circumstances deny any other available course of action in the national interest. Ever since the Norris commission made its report, there has been a continuing series of disorders on the great lakes. The Norris report was clear and unequivocal. I say this, that what is taking place at this very moment on the St. Lawrence river is directly attributable to, or indirectly the result of the failure of this government to act on the Norris report when it should have acted, that is, before the adjournment of this house in the month of August.

Mr. MacEachen: May I ask the right hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will take questions at the end of my remarks. I am going to give in some degree of particularity—

Mr. MacEachen: This is not the kind of co-operation I gave yesterday to my hon. friend.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —the indications of the government's failure to act in this connection, in not bringing in legislation for the appointment of trustees. I repeat this has in considerable measure, if not altogether, contributed to the situation that now confronts us.

Mr. MacEachen: You have no evidence for that statement.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. gentleman can deny it. I am going to refer to the arrival of a distinguished United States labour representative by the name of Gleason, the head of a union organization. I am going to refer to the degree to which throughout the years he and Mr. Banks have co-operated in illegal action, in intimidation, in international blackmail. Now, we find ourselves, as a result of the failure of the government to act, in a very dangerous situation economically in this nation.

There has been, as I said a moment ago, a long record of association between the longshoremen's union and the S.I.U. Today we face a situation on the St. Lawrence which, in my opinion, would be nonexistent if the government had acted as it should have, instead of adopting the attitude of indolence that has characterized it throughout the problem.

Nobody opposed the trusteeship, and in this connection I shall refer to the attitude of the great labour leaders of our country. They certainly did not welcome it as something they would like to have as a regular course of action; but recognizing and realizing something had to be done, and that the recommendation made by Mr. Justice Norris met the demands of the moment and the needs of the preservation of free international and national trade union rights, they admitted there was no other course available.

But what happened? The government played around with the problem as it has played around with others. The great labour leaders in Canada were prepared to accept this trusteeship, but the government stalled. Members of the government had briefings from Mr. Wirtz, Mr. Reynolds, Mr. Hall and Mr. Meany.

Mr. MacEachen: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, the right hon. gentleman has said that the government had briefings from Mr. Paul Hall. That is quite incorrect.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the hon. gentleman answer me in debate and not by interruptions of that kind? There is no privilege in that at all. So far as the minister is concerned I think he has tried, but somebody has tied his hands from action. The Secretary of State was one of those who had solicitude for Banks only a few years ago, and it is surprising the solicitude has continued.

Mr. Pickersgill: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, the right hon. gentleman has presumed to make a statement about me which is a downright falsehood, and which I deny categorically. I have never had the faintest solicitude for Mr. Banks at any time whatever. I have never had any association with him, and have never seen him and never spoken to him in my life.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Solicitude does not demand personal acquaintanceship. Let me point out this fact—

Mr. Pickersgill: How about your friend, Mr. Nixon?

Mr. Diefenbaker: On July 8, 1954, six or seven days after the hon. gentleman became minister of immigration, the order in council was passed to which I made reference the other day, and which gave to Mr. Banks the halo of governmental approval and denied us ever being able to deport this man who should have been deported.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege, the right hon. gentleman is a lawyer and surely he knows the statement he has made is not true. Any person can be deported who is not a citizen of this country if there are grounds for deportation, but the whole point is that in six years the right hon. gentleman never took any trouble to find any grounds for deportation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I do not mind questions of privilege, but that type of interruption indicates that the hon. gentleman is trying to break the rules. I simply point out that if what he says is true, then Justice Norris did not know what he was talking about because Justice Norris says that once the order in council was passed, deportation procedures were past.

Mr. Pickersgill: Read the law.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, and the law was changed a few days before the hon. gentleman became the minister.

Mr. Pickersgill: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is not privilege now.

Mr. Pickersgill: —the statement of the right hon. gentleman is false. The law was changed when he was a member of parliament and I was not. The Immigration Act was changed before I ever entered the house, and the right hon. gentleman participated in the change.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

The Chairman: Order. I submit there is no real question of privilege here, and I would suggest the Leader of the Opposition be given an opportunity to continue his speech.

Mr. Pickersgill: If he would stick to the truth.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Before the hon. gentleman became a member of parliament he was the eminence who controlled. We recall the control he had, and he utilized the change of the law that took place in June, before he took office, to join with the other ministers on July 8 in placing Mr. Banks above any possibility of deportation. I know how his feelings are hurt, I can realize that. But that is what they did; and Mr. Justice Norris says from that moment on this man Banks enjoyed an unchallengeable position and could not be deported.

Mr. Pickersgill: That statement is not true.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, one thinks of the cuckoo in June when those interruptions are made. I point out that Banks had an unchallengeable position and no denial can take place. Regarding the order in council, they hid Banks' record, and hid his conviction for being in possession of smuggled goods. They gave him the status of a man who was above challenge, so long as thereafter he lived within the law. Over and over again we had this looked into, to see whether after that order in council—and following the change in the law which took place in June 1952, a measure introduced as I recall by Mr. Harris—there were any means whereby we could do anything to Banks; but he was above the law.

Mr. Pickersgill: So long as he remained within the law.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He enjoyed an unchallengeable position, and now we have the delay, postponement, procrastination, indecision and confusion that have been the position of the government since the month of July. Why was there this delay? It was because the government had an irresistible urge to seek a way out. It did not want to act.

The government could not blame our great trade union leaders. Mr. Jodoin, president of the Canadian Labour Congress, came out publicly in favour of the trusteeship. Mr. Smith of the Canadian brotherhood of railway and transportation workers supported it. No single voice of Canadian labour opposed it. All realized there was no other way of breaking the hold and the power of Banks.

The other day the minister said he was waiting because he believed in clean, democratic trade unionism. So do we. Does the minister say that clean, democratic trade unionism is unknown to Mr. Jodoin, Mr. Dodge, Mr. Smith and the other leaders who agreed to accept the trusteeship? However the government did not act. It had to see all these various people.

Mr. Jodoin, to his credit, remained firm. He did not welcome this kind of legislation but he realized the need for action being taken. Canadian labour refused to accept any kind of a cooked up deal that would have left Harold Chamberlain Banks in command of the Canadian seamen on great lakes. I say if Canadian labour leaders never do any more than they did on this occasion in connection with this matter, in standing firm in the interests of Canadians, they will do well for those they represent. But the government stalled, and I repeat what I said the other day, even though it has been denied, that what is happening today in Montreal is in fact in keeping with what one would expect would take place, if there is any co-operation as between Mr. Gleason and Mr. Banks. Mr. Gleason has just arrived in Montreal. What is he there for? He comes over from the United States. Has he been working in the past with Mr. Banks? Is the past past, and does he no longer work with him? The hon. gentleman who preceded me read from the record. I intend to do so also. On page 276 we read this:

> The position of the M.T.D. and particularly of its international division has been dealt with. It is well to consider now the other organizations which are supporting the activities of Banks, the S.I.U. and the M.T.D., in the harassment of upper lakes vessels and in the interference with international and interprovincial trade.
> The president of the teamsters is James R. Hoffa.

Then he says on page 277:

> The president of this association—

Mr. Justice Norris is referring to the international longshoremen's association:

> —is William V. Bradley; its general organizer is Thomas Gleason. These two have been closely associated with Banks.

Now I want to quote what Mr. Meany said about Mr. Gleason. He is the man behind the man behind the strike on the St. Lawrence. Mr. Justice Norris says on page 278:

> On November 19, 1953, a statement was issued by George Meany at the conclusion of a meeting of the board of trustees supervising the new international longshoremen's association:
>
> "The racketeers who are trying to perpetuate their control of the port of New York failed in their attempt yesterday to camouflage their 'front' organization with a new look".

Then he goes on to say:

"He exposed"—

This is referring to Bradley:

—"the true nature of his supporters when he credited his election"—

That is, the election of the new president:

—"to the work of Thomas Gleason, a local union official who was cited in testimony before the New York state crime investigating committee for consorting with gangsters and accepting gratuities from stevedoring and steamship company officials.

"The actions at Philadelphia add up to one inescapable conclusion—the mob is still in complete control of the old I.L.A."

Then Mr. Justice Norris goes on to say:

> It is to be noted what Mr. Meany said about Bradley and Gleason in this statement—the same Bradley and Gleason who now control the affairs of the I.L.A. and at the present time are assisting Banks in his lawless acts.

It was back in June or July when Mr. Justice Norris wrote this, that this man Gleason, who is now in Montreal, the head of the I.L.A., had assisted Banks in his lawless acts. Then he goes on to say:

> The violence and excesses which existed in the operations of the I.L.A. under Bradley and Gleason and in the operations of the teamsters under Hoffa, are of a pattern with the acts of lawlessness which have occurred during Banks' regime and in connection with the dispute with Upper Lakes.
> Bradley and Gleason of the I.L.A. and Hoffa's teamsters are the people who have, with the S.I.U. of North America, been assisting Banks to maintain absolute power on the great lakes.

There is the record. This is the man, Gleason, who now comes into our midst. This is the man who is going to see what can be done. Again I come back to what I have said on previous occasions, that what is happening in Montreal has a direct connection with Banks and his opposition to a trusteeship and the maintenance of law and order in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I go on to say this. The judge dealt with Banks, Gleason and Hoffa. What a triumvirate of lawlessness got together there. Hoffa, Gleason and Banks are together, dominating Canada, challenging parliament. The other day one of them said, "If the minister tells us to go back to work, we will not go. If parliament tells us to go back to work, we will go back but we will not work". What anarchy is this that they would perpetrate upon the Canadian people? Who are these demi-gods? Then Mr. Justice Norris concluded in this way:

> The fact that these are the elements that are actively working together today as a federation, but lacking only the formalities of organization, in an effort to maintain a one-man lawless rule over shipping on the great lakes, is a threat to our democracy of the gravest kind.

There you have it. Here we have the I.L.A., with Gleason arriving in Montreal to see what he can do. The I.L.A. and Gleason are united with Banks, according to Mr. Justice Norris. No wonder men like Mr. Jodoin and other outstanding labour leaders have said that this action of appointing a trusteeship, while it is not something they would accept with alacrity, is something that must be accepted in the interests of the nation as a whole. I simply wanted to place this on the record because this triumvirate have been together before. I ask the committee to look at the Montreal Star of November 20, 1960. It is very interesting that on the left of the picture you have Thomas Gleason with Hal Banks having his arm around him in affectionate embrace.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You begin to see the connection. Canada's economy is challenged by this type of person, Gleason and those associated with him; a man who has been guilty of lawlessness, in association with gangsters and in co-operation with Banks. That is why the problem that faces the government has been one of great difficulty. I repeat what I said earlier, that if the government had acted and given parliament the opportunity to appoint the trusteeship in early August before we adjourned, these things that are happening now, the challenge to the economy of the country, which denies people the right to travel here and there on the St. Lawrence, would not have taken place. Just imagine: this is 1963, and the Canadian weekly newspapers association people returning, together with the others who are with them, cannot get off a ship; they are imprisoned there by the lawlessness of the Gleasons who in the past have been the company and the associates of the Banks.

There you see the whole picture—Banks fighting against a trusteeship which will dethrone him from his arrogant position today of dominating above the law those that come under his control, and his friend Gleason arriving in Montreal to see what can be done. When Gleason was asked what he came for, he stated as follows, as reported in today's Globe and Mail:

> Thomas Gleason, president of the international longshoremen's association, flew here from New York to have a look at the situation and to confer with the strikers.

While the government delayed and refused to face the situation, the tremendous volume of opposition to action set the scene for the mobilization of the Gleasons and those associated with them in an endeavour to defy parliament and the Canadian people.

I did not hear this broadcast last evening but I am informed that it took place. President Asselin of the international longshoremen in Montreal told a C.B.C. reporter that his union was friendly to the seafarers' international union. This was in answer to a direct question, whether the longshoremen's strike was being undertaken to bring pressure on the government to counter the imposition of the trusteeship. The reply he gave was, as I have said, that his union was very friendly to the S.I.U.

A moment ago I mentioned some of the operations of these people. In 1949, through 1950 and 1951, Banks coerced various great lakes companies to sign contracts. He did so by blocking United States ports such as Detroit against Canadian vessels importing newsprint or iron ore. He was able to do so by enlisting the support of the international longshoremen's association whose members, together with those of other waterfront unions in United States ports, would refuse to cross picket lines established by the S.I.U.

I think we are unanimous in support of the legislation which this government has introduced. I want to thank the minister for the explanation he gave in detail before this measure was presented. He mentioned a period of five years. I think that period could well be reduced to two years. But the principle, as I say, we support. We are in condemnation of the government for their failure to act courageously in July and August. We condemn them for following, as they did, a course of waiting, hoping, anticipating—doing everything but face the situation until circumstances took over and they were forced to act.

Mr. Regan: Having had a long and close association with trade unions, I am anxious to express my views on certain aspects of this matter. First, let me say I was startled to hear the remarks made by the Leader of the Opposition. I thought there was a flavour of Alice in Wonderland attached to them. I could hardly believe my ears when the right hon. gentleman who headed the previous administration had the unmitigated gall to criticize my hon. friend the Minister of Labour for not having acted more promptly in this matter, when the whole problem of strife on the great lakes arose solely as a result of the prolonged procrastination of the former administration.

A similar degree of procrastination has not been seen before. Though the situation on the great lakes was deteriorating steadily, nothing was done about it by the previous administration. I should have thought the Leader of the Opposition would have slouched low in his seat during the course of this debate and have taken no part in it at all. The hon. member for Red Deer suggested that the former administration had turned a blind eye toward the growing strife on the great lakes in 1961 and 1962. I suggest they turned two blind eyes toward this problem. How much, I ask the committee, did the power of Mr. Banks grow during the six years when the former administration was in power? How far did the tentacles of this octopus spread during all the years when the previous administration sat back and did nothing? Let me go further and say, as regards the feeble effort made by the right hon. gentleman this afternoon to find some connection between the strike presently under way in Montreal and the great lakes situation involving the S.I.U., that never since the miracle of the loaves and fishes has so much been made out of so little. We have the international president of a union which is holding a legal strike in Montreal visiting the city where this serious strike is under way. Out of this act alone, the Leader of the Opposition would conclude that there was a deep and dark conspiracy involving the tie-in of the two strikes. Certainly, this is a defence mechanism of the worst type, set up in order to avoid the blame which lies naturally on the shoulders of the former administration for allowing Banks and his power to grow and grow while they sat and sat and did nothing.

It is my intention to support this legislation establishing a public trusteeship over the maritime unions, but I did not reach such a conclusion as quickly as did some members of the official opposition. As a matter of fact, I did not reach it with the alacrity of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam who, as early as July, urged that the government press ahead with trusteeship legislation and advised it not to consider any alternative remedies.

So alien is the prospect of a government trusteeship over trade unions, in my philosophy of labour and concept of democracy, that I could not bring myself to support this legislation until all possibility of an effective alternative remedy had vanished. Even now, I support it, not with a glad heart, but with the knowledge that this incursion into the freedom of association of workers in our country and into their freedom to manage their own affairs must be reluctantly accepted in order to protect the greater and more basic rights of those workers and, indeed, of all citizens, in order that they may carry on their lawful activities without intimidation, violence and corruption permeating those activities.

I sincerely hope that no province in Canada will consider this action by the federal parliament as a precedent to be followed in the future. I hope this parliament itself will not consider the action we now propose as a precedent except in a most serious situation such as we face at this time. My reservations concerning this legislation were heightened by a conviction that the trusteeship legislation proposed is not a cure-all and, indeed, that it may wholly fail to rectify the evils that exist. Nevertheless, with the proper support of parliament, the public and the seamen, it may succeed, provided a wise choice of trustees is made and, therefore, it must be attempted.

I would in part agree with the sentiments expressed by the hon. member for Red Deer who suggested that our federal labour laws need to be overhauled. Though I am sure I would disagree with some of the specific changes the hon. member might wish to make, it must be recognized that the growth of lawlessness and tyranny within the ranks of the S.I.U. was only possible because of the inadequacies of our labour laws. We must remove the inadequacies which allow such a situation to develop by bringing in new legislation, but legislation which still assures the independence and freedom of our trade associations.

Our outdated labour legislation recognizes no difference between industrial plant type operations and far reaching transportation activities. The hon. member for Red Deer, in speaking on this legislation, was extremely critical of the closed shop as a weapon by which the S.I.U. were able to impose their wholly unreasonable control on the livelihoods of so many sailors. I gather from the context of his remarks that he feels the closed shop should be outlawed. I would agree with the hon. member that there might be some merit in substituting a union shop arrangement for a closed shop for certain sea-going commercial activities, because this would remove the power of assignment from the S.I.U. union bosses and enable the company to determine what seamen they would employ subject, of course, to seniority provisions on recall and the provision that new employees would be required to join the union within a specified time. But the danger of generalization of the type indulged in by the hon. member, and further evidence of the need for legislation with varying provisions for different types of industrial activities is found in the fact that the closed shop has worked very satisfactorily in the construction industry, and it is indeed hard to conceive how the interests of the workers in that industry could be properly protected without closed shop provisions. I would hope that as soon as this trusteeship is firmly established the government would consider the legislation that is necessary to prevent the development of a similar situation in the emergence of another Hal Banks in some other union. I hope that the government will in time consider the possibility of other legislation, such as an examination of pension and welfare funds by a committee of the labour relations board, and review the amount of initiation fees and dues paid to the unions to determine whether they are realistic or for the purposes of keeping people out. I think that the whole role of the labour relations board should be reviewed, at all times keeping in mind that the independence of the trade unions must be protected.

While we in Canada admire much about our great neighbour to the south, I for one have anything but admiration for the lawless type of gangsterism within certain trade unions in that nation, and the seeming inability of the United States administration and courts to curtail such trends. We in Canada must here and now show that we have the legislative courage and the administrative ability to guarantee the workers of our nation that trade unions shall be operated for the benefit of the members and not for the enrichment of unprincipled, dictatorial leaders. If we are successful in re-establishing democratic trade unionism on the great lakes, then we shall have conclusively demonstrated to any other prospective gangster union czar that Canada is not fertile soil for this type of activity.

I note from the newspaper reports that the action of this parliament in establishing a trusteeship will not be accepted in good grace by United States labour leaders, and there are reports that the continuation of the export of this whole national matter may be marked by further harassment of Canadian shipping in U.S. ports. I sincerely hope that this will not be the case. Unfortunately, some United States union leaders seem more concerned with retaining membership in their operations than in distinguishing right from wrong. I would say, as a private member, for the benefit of these leaders, that continued interference in this wholly Canadian matter by United States union interests after parliament has acted would be most unwise. I feel that private members on all sides of this house, with the support of public opinion would, in these circumstances, press for a greater degree of autonomy for the Canadian branches of U.S.-based international unions, and I suggest there is a good possibility that legislation could follow. While United States unions financed and greatly speeded the organization of Canadian workers in the early years, the Canadian trade union movement has now reached a maturity sufficient to allow it to stand on its own feet, and if United States unions are to interfere in our disputes and continue to refuse to recognize our national existence as an independent state, then they may find that they are providing the catalyst for the early development of a wholly independent Canadian trade union movement.

Some officials of the United States government have been critical of our government's announced intention to proceed with this legislation. However, they make no realistic or constructive suggestion as to how they would handle a similar situation. Having observed their inability to curtail the Hoffas, one can only conclude that they are hardly experts in dealing with such situations. I feel, however, that the United States has a legitimate interest in this dispute, as the St. Lawrence seaway is an international commission and much great lakes shipping takes place between our two countries. So I am not sure that the United States government can be criticized, as it was by one speaker, for expressing its views on our proposed legislation, although I am not at all sure that they would willingly accept our criticism of lawlessness in their unions, which is of concern in this country because of international trade union affiliation.

Every praise should be given to the Minister of Labour for the manner in which he has dealt with this perplexing problem. Every praise should be given to him because he has exhausted every more palatable choice before introducing this trusteeship legislation. He acted in a forthright manner in all his dealings with those concerned, and I suggest he discharged the duties of the Minister of Labour in an outstanding manner at a time of unprecedented labour problems.

I should like, Mr. Chairman, to say a word or two on the question of the five-year term. The length of time of the appointment of the trusteeship has been criticized to some degree. I too would hope that there would be no necessity for this trusteeship to last a full five years; but I suggest that it is better that the trusteeship be set for the longer period of time, with every hope and expectation that it will be possible to dissolve the trusteeship before that time. Far better to do that than to have to get a further extension, should the situation not improve in a short period. I think the five-year term is an unduly long time, but I think it was set as an outside limit with every hope and expectation that the trusteeship will be concluded long before that time.

I should like to associate myself with the remarks of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam as regards the personnel to make up the trustees. I think they should be chosen with great care. I think they should be men who have had a thorough knowledge both of management and of labour. If we follow this trusteeship with legislation making our unions less attractive prey for gangster elements, then a great service will have been done the nation.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could ask a question of the last speaker. Did the hon. member put the same energy and excitement into the Nova Scotia election as he did into his speech—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Bell: —and would he have expected the same result—

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Regan: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Would the hon. member please resume his seat. It being five o'clock it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock p.m. the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I wonder whether I might request unanimous consent to ask the committee which has been sitting to carry on with the resolution which was before it, and to suspend private members' hour for today.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Medicine Hat has requested that the five o'clock rule be suspended and that the debate which was taking place before five o'clock be continued. To do that would require the unanimous consent of the house. Does the house give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): We readily agree to the putting aside of private members' business, in order to carry on with the present debate, but we cannot miss this opportunity to assert, once again, that our debates would be more in order if all the rights and privileges of the members of the house were duly recognized.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent or not?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Peters: Before unanimous consent is given I should like to point out that we have been doing this on a number of occasions and while I do not intend to object today I think that the reasons put forward on some occasions for waiving and disregarding the rights of private members are not sufficient. I think that in the future great caution should be exercised in asking for this consideration.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. member and I am sure the point was listened to with great interest. It is a very good point. Does the house give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

MARITIME TRANSPORTATION UNIONS

PROVISION FOR MANAGEMENT AND CONTROL BY TRUSTEES

The house resumed consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. MacEachen—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the placing of the maritime transportation unions of Canada under the management and control of trustees; to provide for the establishment of the board of trustees of the maritime transportation unions consisting of a chairman and two other members; to provide for the payment of their remuneration and expenses and to authorize the employment and remuneration of such personnel as may be necessary for the carrying out of the duties and powers of the trustees under the said measure.

Mr. Regan: Mr. Chairman, I believe I had the floor to answer a question at five o'clock. I had been asked a question and I had not answered it.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

The Chairman: Order. It is my understanding that the hon. member had relinquished the floor and it was after he had relinquished the floor that I called it five o'clock. Would the hon. member kindly resume his seat. I appreciate that he would like to reply to the question that was posed to him by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert. The Chair did not think that the question was pertinent and I do not think it should be replied to.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I should like to support the need for government action, extraordinary action to deal with an extraordinary situation. The problem of the Canadian seamen manning the ships on the great lakes has had public attention focused on it many times during the past 20 years. I think the sorry situation we have to deal with today is one that could have been avoided. However, I suppose it is easy to be wise in retrospect.

I do not intend, Mr. Chairman, to review all of the rivalry between the various seamen's unions because this rivalry, this raiding and what may even be termed war between the various seamen's unions, has been spelled out rather well in the Norris report. Furthermore, it has been discussed by many members preceding me in the debate.

I believe that setting up a trusteeship is one of the first essential steps that will be necessary to deal with a situation that has been festering for all these years. But, Mr. Chairman, I am also convinced that unless the government and particularly the Department of Justice are prepared to enforce the law of the land, even this trusteeship will fail in its desired objective. Had there been reasonably strict enforcement of the law of the land, those laws that give protection to life, liberty and freedom of individuals as Canadian citizens, whether they be engaged in the maritime shipping industry or any other occupation, the situation we have to deal with now would not have developed.

The Minister of Labour, in his opening remarks when introducing the resolution, stated that the government waited; that is to say, they delayed bringing in this bill to give an opportunity for some kind of interunion arrangement, which might have been a solution preferable to action by parliament providing for a public trusteeship. We may be able to agree that some delay was justified for that purpose, but I cannot agree that any delay is justified in enforcing those laws that are necessary to protect all Canadian citizens from intimidation and beatings or which are designed to preserve human dignity.

I should like to ask the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Justice for an explanation why the law enforcement officers of this country have not been ordered to take appropriate action when there is official testimony contained in the Norris report that Canadian citizens have been attacked, have been beaten and have been intimidated repeatedly. I could refer to a lot of documents, statements in the press and statements by various labour unions that have drawn to the attention of the government and the law enforcement agencies that this has been going on. We have repeatedly asked the Minister of Justice what he is prepared to do about it, but even as late as this afternoon he told us he is still studying an interim report which he has.

From the issue of Maclean's magazine of May 18 last I should like to quote the following:

A man who wants to sail on a Canadian lakeship faces more than the domination Banks exerts through ROC cards and other weapons within his own union. He faces the chance, if the joins the Canadian Maritime Union, the only other union that is now open to him, of getting his head beaten in. Witness after witness at the Norris commission testified about terrible beatings. One of them appeared on the stand in August still wearing a cast from a beating suffered in April. At least one appeared still woozy. Some of them had been beaten by as as many as seven men. Some had been struck by baseball bats. One had been nearly killed on his own front lawn. The victims included women.

As Norris himself said after only 12 days of testimony: "Without at all at this time deciding who is responsible for these attacks, these cowardly attacks, it is very difficult for me to understand how in this state of our so-called civilization things of this sort could happen in Canada. We have heard, day after day, witnesses coming here and telling us of these most cowardly attacks. That is why I referred to them as a pack of jackals."

The magazine article continues:

In all the 107 days of hearings, no one ever proved that the beatings were inflicted by the S.I.U. Certainly Banks, the central figure, was never even accused of being directly involved.

This is the most important sentence, Mr. Chairman.

Yet all the victims of the beatings had one thing in common: they opposed the S.I.U.

I do not want to take the time now but I should like to refer hon. members, if they have not already read it, to the evidence contained in the schedules that were submitted by Mr. Justice Norris. Schedule 31 gives details of the beatings, and the interesting thing is that in the right hand column of the schedule which indicates the action taken, if any, there is very little indication that the law enforcement officers tried to protect these people from these attacks, nor did they try to apprehend the people who were doing the attacking. So, Mr. Chairman, as I have said before, I think that the enforcement of the law, whether or not we set up a trusteeship, is by far the most important aspect. I believe that the main reason this situation has deteriorated to the point it has today is the lack of law enforcement. I want to emphasize that law enforcement to protect Canadian citizens against this kind of treatment is not confined to seamen's unions or to the difficulties connected with labour unions. It is, rather, a universal right of all citizens, whether they be part of the labour union movement or not.

Indeed, the right of a citizen to protection from this kind of lawlessness by the full strength of the law enforcement agencies is spelled out in some Canadian statutes. I refer, for example, to the bill of rights, which is an act of this parliament. We all know, Mr. Chairman, it was one of the favourite pieces of legislation of the right hon. Leader of the Opposition when he was prime minister. I should like to quote from this statute:

It is hereby recognized and declared that in Canada there have existed and shall continue to exist without discrimination by reason of race, national origin, colour, religion or sex, the following human rights and fundamental freedoms, namely,—

I am not going to refer to all of them, but I should like to refer to two that are applicable to this situation. Paragraph (b) reads as follows:

(b) The right of the individual to equality before the law and the protection of the law;

Paragraph (e) reads as follows:

(e) Freedom of assembly and association;

Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me it is obvious that there has been flagrant and open violation of these laws. What is more, Mr. Chairman, there is an international law to which Canada has subscribed and which also guarantees protection of our citizens. I refer, for example, to article 23 of the United Nations charter which reads as follows:

Everyone has the right to work, to free choice of employment, to just and favourable conditions of work, and to protection against unemployment.

Article 20 reads:

Everyone has the right to freedom of peaceful assembly and association.

The next sentence reads:

No one may be compelled to belong to an association.

I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that all of this lawlessness that has taken place under that tyrant, and the organization that he heads, has been a violation of these laws, international laws and national laws, to which the Canadian government is committed. If there is a problem as to whether it is up to the provinces to enforce these laws, then we must recognize that new laws must be written and, furthermore, that perhaps there needs to be a redefinition of responsibility. Unless and until the government is prepared to enforce the laws that protect citizens against intimidation, no matter what provisions are written into this trusteeship legislation it will fail to remove the tyranny and lawlessness from the waterfront and on the great lakes.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, the introduction of this precedent-making resolution is, in my opinion, a dark brushstroke on the canvas of Canadian parliamentary history. This resolution can be correctly described as a chickens-coming-home-to-roost resolution, in view of our knowledge of the past. This is a sad story and a sordid passage in Canadian labour history, and is the result of most unfortunate co-operation some years ago between the government, the shipping companies and certain labour leaders to destroy a Canadian union, an independent Canadian union, by bringing into Canada Harold Chamberlain Banks.

The government of the day condoned great irregularities when it permitted Harold Banks to remain in Canada with knowledge that, on the application form he completed, certain questions included in the usual form given to immigrants were omitted. The labour leaders involved undertook to provide this unusual co-operation, without the knowledge or consent of the rank and file of the labour movement in Canada. I am sure they regret that on this occasion.

In view of the fact, Mr. Chairman, that my attitude towards this resolution is somewhat different from that of the majority of my colleagues I must explain that in our party all questions of importance are discussed in caucus and decided by majority vote. However, we have a long-standing practice that if a member cannot conscientiously accept the decision of the majority, he has the right and freedom to express his views in the house and in the country. It is a tradition and practice of the party to which I belong that has been demonstrated on numerous occasions. No doubt many will remember that the late and greatly respected J. S. Woodsworth voted against the decision of the national council in respect of the second world war. His decision was respected. Later, when Mr. M. J. Coldwell was national and parliamentary leader, he opposed the decision of the national convention and the national council, as well as the caucus, by voting for German rearmament on conscientious grounds. I trust, Mr. Chairman, it will be clearly understood that the views I express on this issue and on this resolution are my personal views.

However, I have evidence, and I am quite confident, that they are supported by thousands of trade unionists in Canada. I have evidence also that they are supported by persons who are concerned about other aspects of this question. I must say that all of us are concerned. This matter has caused a great deal of concern to the members of the group to which I belong. Their decision was not lightly made and members of this group have made their decision according to their best judgment.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in view of the history-making aspect of this question and the need for the widest understanding of the issues involved, I propose to give a brief historical outline of the developments culminating in this unfortunate situation which caused the government to introduce this legislation. Let me emphasize, first of all, that the seeds of the present crisis were sown as far back as 1944. At that time the most important maritime union in Canada was the Canadian seaman's union. It was an affiliate of the trades and labour congress of Canada. The S.I.U. had a small membership on the Pacific coast at that time. The American Federation of Labour, at its 1944 convention, gave jurisdiction over seamen and fishermen to the S.I.U. and brought influence to bear on the C.L.C. to discontinue recognition of the C.S.U. This lead to a serious division within the C.L.C. to which you will notice Mr. Justice Norris refers in his report.

At the same time the C.S.U. retained its jurisdiction. In 1946, the C.S.U. initiated a strike on lake shipping, mostly concerning the hours of work issue. The shipping industry was still under wartime control but, with the exception of two companies, it accepted the union's demands. During this period of government control, agreements were reached between the union and the shipping companies which provided for a government conducted vote on union certification. The union received an overwhelming vote of confidence from the employees and entered into agreements with the companies concerned, and here is the commencement of the breakdown of proper trade union relations and responsibilities, in Canada.

Regardless of these agreements which were signed by the union, Colonial Steamships Limited and Canadian steamship lines refused to honour their contracts and entered into agreements with a union formed by Mr. Pat Sullivan, known as the Canadian lakes seamen's union.

As a consequence of the refusal of these two companies there was an inquiry instituted. An industrial inquiry commission was established, and reported at length on this unusual situation and this first instance of these companies failing to recognize contracts and assume their responsibilities. I quote briefly from the report of that commission:

> —the failure to negotiate, the substitution of a new union and the assertion by the company—

—that is, Canadian steamships limited—

> —of the right to refuse to negotiate because of its objection to alleged political opinions, are contrary to accepted practices and the law as it has heretofore been followed. We feel, too, that in the result injustice has been done to the rank and file of the Canadian seamen's union.

Anyone who has read Mr. Justice Norris' report will note at one place he makes reference to a similar sort of situation. This is when violence developed between the C.S.U. and the C.L.S.U. in the summer of 1948. Shortly afterwards, Mr. Pat Sullivan was dropped as president of the C.L.S.U. and the union was quickly merged with the S.I.U.

Maritime Transportation Unions

In the early spring of 1949 representatives of the shipping companies and prominent trade union officials requested Mr. Harry Lundeberg of the United States, international president of the S.I.U., to provide a leader for the S.I.U. in Canada. They went to the United States for a leader, and here is the second reason for these difficulties. Mr. Justice Norris' report clearly outlines Mr. Banks' history in Canada since his arrival.

The final destruction of the independent Canadian seamen's union was as a result of action by the Canada labour relations board in 1959 which revoked the union's certification with one company because, as the board stated, "being communist dominated it was no longer a trade union". This is where the board got on very sticky ground.

Strangely enough, in 1959 the Canada labour relations board, the same board, rejected the claim that communist affiliation or domination was a sound reason for decertification of an otherwise properly operated union. The fact of the matter is that the government, the companies and the union leaders concerned wished to get rid of the C.S.U. and replace it with the seafarers' international union, and the result of their success can be found in the pages of Mr. Justice Norris' report.

First of all, they wished to obey the wishes of the S.I.U. to give these seamen to the United States union's jurisdiction, and second, some of them used the pretext that some of the leadership were communists. Let me say without any hesitation that any man in public life whose chief stock in trade is anti-communism, and with little else behind it, will support any form of dictatorship when he gets in a corner.

As I have said, the result of their success can be found in the pages of Mr. Justice Norris' report and also in the disappearance of Canadian ships from the high seas. There is no doubt a relationship between these two incidents.

Before proceeding further I wish to give full credit to the officers and members of two exceptions, must share some responsibility for developing the hysteria and political smokescreen that surrounded the activities of Mr. Banks in Canada. The only daily paper I know of that opposed Banks irregular importation was the Victoria Colonist, and the only other papers I know of that editorially attacked Banks for his day to day activities were the Globe and Mail and the Toronto Telegram. These last two were promptly sued for libel, and Banks was able to collect $3,000 damages as a result of a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada because his so-called good character had been somewhat tarnished.

All this was going on while the government smiled benignly and the police stood by inactive. At one period I had 25 seamen, most of them fellows who had served during the second world war in the Canadian merchant fleet and the Royal Canadian Navy, in my office to protest against the frightening state of affairs which existed, but they could not get a hearing in those days. One could hardly get a hearing in this house, and certainly the press did nothing to inform the public of this unfortunate state of affairs. At that time the newspapers in general lauded Mr. Banks' version of democracy at work, and as I say, so far as I can remember there were only these few papers which took a stand.

Before proceeding I want to deal with an interesting editorial entitled "Newshawks Goofed on Banks Scandal" which appeared in the July 18 issue of the Northern Daily News published in Kirkland Lake, Ontario.

An hon. Member: What year?

Mr. Herridge: This year. It states:

> Mr. Justice Norris' stern indictment of the seafarers' international union regime on the great lakes marks a long overdue judgment.
>
> In fact it has been overdue since the day S.I.U. boss Hal Banks first stepped across the border with his thugs to take over control of jobs on Canadian ships.
>
> At this point one can be permitted a little sardonic laughter at the virtuous tone being adopted by Canadian authorities and newspapers as they hasten to step in line behind the Norris report of skullduggery on the lakes.
>
> Because authorities, police and particularly the country's newspapers, stood solidly behind the importation of Banks to this country and hurrahed almost to a man while his goon squads beat up legitimate Canadian seamen and forced them off the nation's ships—
>
> So what's the story now?
>
> Excluding great lakes vessels, instead of 100 ships there were at last count, two deep sea freighters under Canadian registry. The trained seamen are long since dispersed and forgotten, including the ones who risked death to transport supplies and fuel across the wartime Atlantic.
> Can't blame Banks for all this, but it's a coincidence.

Before proceeding further I wish to give full credit to the officers and members of the Canadian brotherhood of railway transport and general workers and the national association of marine engineers, and of other unions, as a valiant band of trade unionists fighting under most difficult circumstances to restore democracy in the operation of maritime unions. These men deserve a great deal of credit. They did not get much encouragement to start with, and we all owe them a debt of gratitude. Because of their courage and persistence they were mainly responsible for the Norris inquiry, with its shocking revelations of the rotten fruits that have ripened from the seeds that were sown in 1949. There is where the trouble started. Without a doubt, Mr. Chairman, there is a growing demand among trade unionists for more autonomy and control of their own affairs. I can tell that from mixing up with trade unionists. When I want to find out what labour is thinking, I meet with the rank and file. I am only a simple old backwoodsman, but I go around and speak to these people; I address them at their meetings. They always receive me cordially, especially when I tell them that I have never enjoyed the net income of a village plumber, or something of that sort. Therefore they realize we have a great deal in common. These are the people I talk to. I talked to the unions in my constituency about this matter when I went home. I have addressed them about this. I addressed them, in fact, with one Scottish labour M.P. just before I came to Ottawa. He was actually horrified at the suggestion of a trusteeship over Canadian trade unions. But then they have a different situation over there; Britain is a unitary state and they have not experienced these international problems, and gangsterism. Anyway, Mr. Chairman, without a doubt there is a growing demand among Canadian trade unionists for more autonomy and control of their own affairs. While promoting the spirit of fraternity with all democratic labour organizations, they wish to be master in their own house.

I want to illustrate this development, and I rejoice in it. I have had a hand in it. In my constituency the workers in the Castlegar pulp mill became members of the paper workers union something over three years ago. They decided at the end of the contract, at the end of two years, that they were not getting satisfactory service, so they had a vote. With the exception of three or four employees, some hundreds of men voted to join the Canadian section of the international union of pulp and sulphite workers. What was the result of that? They were acceptable to the C.L.C. at that time. The international president of the pulp and sulphite workers union was compelled by Mr. George Meany to return a charter issued to the workers in the Celgar Corporation which, as I said before, had been accepted by the C.L.C. Mr. Meany ordered that the papermakers had jurisdiction over this plant and said that this matter had been decided in Washington. As a result today, I am proud to say, they have local No. 1 of a Canadian pulp and sulphite union and three or four other pulp mills in British Columbia have followed their example.

In the very near future they are about to form the national union of Canadian pulp and sulphite workers. I give that as an illustration of this outcropping of a desire for more autonomy. Mind you, they want fraternity, co-operation and things of that sort. This sort of action on the part of leaders in the United States only promotes and develops the desire for autonomy.

I wish to bring to the committee's attention another document which I have here in my hand. It is an agreement drafted, but not signed as yet, between the B.C. hydro authority and an organization known as the Columbia Hydro Contractors Limited. This draft agreement is intended to cover all the workers who will be employed in the erection of dams, the construction of generating facilities and transmission facilities on the Columbia river, should that development go ahead. This draft agreement is not the result of a consultation with Canadian citizens. This agreement, covering years of work that may be undertaken by Canadian workers, was drafted as the result of a meeting between the officials of the British Columbia hydro authority and Mr. Keenan, an A.F. of L. official of the building trades section in Washington. You have no idea what a storm this is creating among some of our Canadian trade unionists. This draft agreement establishes conditions under which Canadian workers will obtain employment on government projects on the Columbia before a man is ever hired on the job or work is commenced.

An hon. Member: How is this relevant?

Mr. Herridge: You will find out as I go along. I am also informed—I got this from a well known Canadian trade unionist—that all senior Canadian trade union officials who wish to function as members of executive boards of international unions—that is, the international executive in the United States —have to sign United States Taft-Hartley affidavits. I obtained that information from an official; I have no personal knowledge of it.

Surely the issue of Canadian sovereign rights and the sovereignty of the Canadian parliament was offended when a Canadian minister had to go to Washington to deal primarily and firstly with this question, and when Mr. Claude Jodoin, president of the C.L.C., travelling to Washington on the same mission was met with what amounted almost to abuse from certain United States union leaders.

Everyone knows my attitude to Mr. Banks. We have never been a bit chummy throughout the years. I have never been a guest in his house. He has never taken any moving pictures of me either, to my knowledge. But he has had literature distributed around my riding because of my statements about him in the house. He had one of his men go up to my constituency and spend two weeks going to people all over the place, to little stores, Legion branches, trade union headquarters, and so on. This literature was distributed everywhere with the headline, "Kootenay West mortified by C.C.F. M.P." and then it went on to tell about all the untruths I had told in the house about his violence, ruthlessness and so on. Who has been proven correct, Mr. Banks or the member for Kootenay West? Hon. members can understand that we are not exactly in love with one another, so they must not think that any of my reservations with respect to this legislation are a result of any affection for Mr. Banks or any of his ilk.

I fully appreciate the deep concern of all hon. members of this house in their efforts to find a solution of this unfortunate and unusual situation. However, I must say that I cannot agree with the principle of this resolution for several reasons. I have given this a lot of thought. I am a chap who is inclined to listen to what other people say. I was brought up in a very democratic home where there was a tremendous respect for the rights of the individual. My old father used to defend the revolutionaries, the members of the I.W.W., when they came to speak in our district. Men came whom people wanted to toss in the lake, and that sort of thing. On one occasion a meeting was to be addressed by a Mr. Stirling. He was going to speak on the coming social revolution. He was a member of the legislature later. The meeting was to be held in a small village. The board of trade arranged for a group of first world war veterans in 1919 to go down to the boat to throw him into the lake. He could have gone on, but if he got off he was to be thrown into the lake. My father rushed down to the wharf. He went down there with his whiskers drooping down, like the characters you see on the stage on occasion. He went up to these men and broke up the gathering. He said, "This country has been established on British democratic principles and under British democratic institutions, and this man has the right to talk all the bloody rot he wishes provided he is not rude to Her Majesty and does not abuse the law of the land".

I have tried to live in that way ever since. That is why I get into trouble at times. I go to meetings that I should not go to and I address other forbidden meetings. I do this in the Hyde park tradition which gives every man an opportunity to say what he thinks as long as he remains within the law. This background and belief causes me to give this legislation a great deal of thought. I respect the views of those who do not agree with me. I am sure there is no one who is happy about this situation. But I cannot agree with the principle of this resolution which proposes to establish a trusteeship over the unions for five years without there being any mention of the companies concerned. I agree with what our leader had to say about that. Why establish a trusteeship over the unions without bringing the companies, which have been guilty in many respects under the same jurisdiction and control? I know it is possible, since shipping comes under the jurisdiction of the national government, for the government to draft legislation which would provide for some supervision over these steamship companies.

Second, I am of the opinion that the legislation contemplated will provoke and increase international incidents both at government level and at international union level. I was interested in the speech made by the hon. member for Halifax. I wish to congratulate him; I thought he made an excellent contribution to this debate. He had some doubts about the wisdom of the course we are following. He said the legislation might fail. I am of the opinion that it will bring about serious complications on the international scene.

My third reason for objecting to this legislation is that a large section of the rank and file of the organized labour movement in Canada is opposed to it. I do think the truth should have been given to these people far earlier; there should have been an opportunity for a further discussion on this whole situation. Fourth, I oppose this measure on the ground that it completely overlooks and underestimates the democratic strength and understanding of the Canadian labour movement and its ability to mobilize the support of the rank and file. I think this is a great opportunity for labour to act, first, in defence of Canadian sovereign rights, second, in the defence of democratic principles and institutions and, third, in the development of the complete control of Canadian unions by Canadians for Canadians, operated in the Canadian way.

I have given this subject some thought. It is not easy for me to differ from my colleagues, because I am a sensitive soul. But I do urge the government, as did the leader of our party, to give consideration to the reduction of the period of trusteeship and to incorporate in this legislation provision for the supervision of the companies directly concerned. With this brief outline of my views, I will conclude. It is my intention to outline some alternative proposals on the second reading of the bill.

Mr. Belanger: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take much of the time of the committee to discuss the resolution before us. However, I am interested in it for two reasons: first because I am a member of the house, and second, because I had the opportunity for several years of my life to hold positions in labour movements, that is I was president of labour locals for a number of years. So I am well aware of the justification for labour unions.

I know that labour unions were born because of a great need, the need for workers to protect themselves against employers who went too far and were unfair to them in many ways. Hence it was employers who compelled the workers to unite in order to obtain together what they could not obtain separately. That was a very good reason to set up unions.

It was also the best means for workers to defend themselves, but on one condition: once established, those unions should be free, have their autonomy and the most complete freedom for workers to use their rights and establish their own rules, provided of course the rules are in accordance with the law of the land.

That is why I have always been and still am in favour of a very great freedom for unions.

Obviously, it is a privilege of democracies that people be their own rulers, that workers and professional people control their own business, and together try to find the best ways to achieve the highest possible degree of welfare.

But liberty and freedom do not mean licence. There are limits to these words. If I understand them correctly, they mean the right to choose as long as the use of a right does not interfere with the liberty of others. That is exactly what is going on now in the seamen's unions whose actions, with their possible disastrous effects we are now discussing. What I mean is that those people, at a certain time, acted somewhat like employers did in the past.

Workers have been forced to unite against employers because of injustice committed by the latter, but this freedom to unite does not now give workers the right to be unjust toward the rest of society outside their unions.

That is why I am not far from approving the measure introduced now by the government, precisely because I am against the abuse of freedom which has been committed, if I may say so, in such a glaring way by the presidents of the seamen's unions, especially the S.I.U.

The situation which we have to deplore at the present time has not developed overnight, but gradually, due to several causes, and I think one of them rests on the fact that we have for too long been allowing our unions to Americanize.

I realize that at the beginning, it was quite difficult for Canadian unions to organize and to administer themselves, but now that we have become an adult nation, I think it is high time that workers, if they want to be the masters of the situation in their own country and not be forced to obey orders coming from outside the country, should unite and realize that our unions must not be international unions any more, but Canadian unions. And that is only one reason among thousands of others.

That we are right in our contention, and we deplore it at the present time, is quite obvious in the seafarers' unions. And it is not a unique case in Canada.

There are other fields where the same situation is brewing. The government should not wait until it is too late before acting, otherwise we shall be faced with the same situation in railway unions.

There again, those unions are under American control.

The same thing exists in the field of entertainment. I should like to read part of a letter from one of my constituents dealing precisely with this matter:

> I am not too familiar with labour matters, but there is a field that I know comparatively well, that is show business, more particularly variety entertainment. I can assure you, sir, that in the last ten years or so, French-Canadian artists had to pay over one quarter million dollars, that is about $25,000 a year, to a foreign organization called "The American Guild of Variety Artists" (AGVA), which has its headquarters in New York and a branch in Montreal.

The Chairman: May I ask the hon. member how and to what extent he can relate his remarks to the resolution now under discussion?

Mr. Beaule: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Charlevoix raised a point, namely the control of Canadian unions by outside people.

Mr. Belanger: The relation between the point I am trying to make and the resolution now before the house is that disturbances are going on at present in another Montreal union which is entirely under the control of Americans. I wish to prove that it is not the only organization where such a situation exists.

Now, those $250,000 sent to New York were paid by French-Canadian artists who performed in French, in the province of Quebec, such as Jean Duceppe, Doris Lussier, Denise Filiatrault, Michel Louvain, etc. That organization with an office in Montreal has no legal recognition as required under the law.

Mr. Paul: Mr. Chairman, may I be allowed to remind you of standing order 59 which states that a member must keep his remarks relevant to the issue under discussion.

I submit that the hon. member for Charlevoix, when he starts making a speech on international unions, does not comply with that standing order. He is talking about radio and T.V. artists.

Mr. Lachance: In my opinion, the members of this committee must not create problems.

We are at present considering a specific situation. The hon. member for Charlevoix should limit his remarks to the resolution and not deal with a problem in a latent state.

The Chairman: Further to the remarks of both hon. members, I should like to remind the hon. member for Charlevoix of the second paragraph of standing order 59 which reads as follows:

> Speeches in committee of the whole house must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under discussion.

In other words, the contribution to the debate must be strictly relevant to the resolution or item under consideration.

Since his attempted analogy is over, he should revert to the subject under discussion and keep his remarks strictly relevant.

Mr. Belanger: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I find it most unfortunate that some members who are citizens not only of the city of Montreal but of the province of Quebec, dislike the mere mention of the dangers which threaten our province at the present time or of any suggestions to prevent trouble.

Mr. Paul: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. It is not a question of determining whether hon. members like or dislike what may be happening in another field. The important point is to do constructive work and that is why both the hon. member for Jeanne-Mance (Mr. Lachance) and I rose on a point of order.

The Chairman: Order. I feel the question has been settled and the hon. member for Charlevoix may continue with his speech.

Mr. Belanger: Mr. Chairman, I was just trying to point out what is wrong with unions at present. I was saying that the government should try to convince our union members not by force but by every possible means of persuasion, to organize themselves on their own, so that they may understand that they are citizens of an adult country which can look after its own affairs without any foreign assistance, contrary to what is happening now within the seamen's union. In fact, if the latter had been under Canadian leadership, we would probably not have to deplore the unfortunate situation we have at present.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favour of what the government proposes to do by this resolution, but I am afraid of the aftermath precisely because I advocate the freedom of unions, as I said at the outset.

Of course, the precedent that the government is going to create should not be used as an excuse to interfere in every labour dispute. In fact, this legislation should remain in force no longer than necessary.

Mr. Beaule: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words about this legislation, but I would not want to be blamed for delaying its passing.

The resolution under consideration is one that I am reluctant to support because the right of association is a sacred one, and the workers have the right to join a union which is the best way to present their claims through collective bargaining.

The selection of a union is a personal right. Workers are entitled to choose the union which will assure them the best working conditions, that is marginal benefits and a decent salary.

In the case in hand, that is to say the case of the S.I.U., the government was obliged to step in, after the investigation of Mr. Justice Norris had shed light on certain unsavoury facts.

Mr. Chairman, may I call it six o'clock?

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaule: As I was saying, Mr. Chairman, when I pointed out that it was six o'clock, in the present case, that of the S.I.U. the government is compelled to act on account of the abuses disclosed by the Norris investigation.

Hal Banks came to Canada for the sole purpose, in co-operation with some shipping companies, of violating and breaking existent collective agreements as well as using any available means to destroy other unions and thus consolidate his own position.

We also know that there were some irregularities in connection with hiring, pension funds, etc. The Norris report clearly indicates that the situation will not be settled on the great lakes as long as Banks remains at the head of the S.I.U.

It is with reluctance that we must resort to legislation. But, all the same, this legislation is a little better than the lawlessness prevailing at present.

I hope that the minister will give us an idea of the people he intends to appoint to this board. He shall have to act very carefully, because one of its members will necessarily have to mix with workers in order to find the best way of helping them to regain control of their union.

If the trusteeship is administered properly, it will ensure the future of the labour movement, but if the reverse happens because of bad appointments, the future of the S.I.U. will remain very doubtful.

One has only to read the Norris report about the strife on the great lakes to realize that labour legislation is in an alarming situation.

I know that all those conflicts between unions should open our eyes wider and lead us to ask ourselves if the time has not come for the government to set up a commission of inquiry on union activities in Canada and especially those of American unions in our country. That does not mean that unions are not good, but some union leaders should be put in their place.

Such a commission would enable the government and especially the Department of Labour to tackle the job of providing the labour movement with a federal code, a code which should be prepared with the co-operation of the unions, the provinces and representatives of industry, so that we may not be faced again with a situation such as the one which forced the government to put the S.I.U. under trusteeship.

I know that when we come to problems involving the workers and union activities in particular, we must take all the necessary precautions to avoid disputes between governments and trade unions. But if, for a number of years, the government had not accepted the abuses of some union leaders and if it had taken a stand, with positive action defining clearly its role towards the unions, we would not have today to take compulsory measures against union members. We have no choice. We must take the necessary means to ensure peace and security on the great lakes.

However, a government trusteeship has some good points: first, it will be useful to get rid of Banks and his gang; then it will promote a closer watch on collective bargaining, thereby ensuring that the union members regain control over their unions.

I support this legislation because it will allow Canadians to regain control of their business; but this does not mean that by passing that legislation all problems will be solved.

I hope nevertheless that all this will be a lesson to the government and, as I said earlier, the setting up of a commission of inquiry on union activities in Canada and especially those of American unions in our country would permit us to get a labour code in order to give Canadian workers the security and justice to which they are entitled.

[Text]

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I think it is most unfortunate that Canada has reached the state where it is going to have to impose compulsory trusteeship on a number of unions. I believe this is not only a reflection on the Canada labour relations board and the other agencies set up to project the workers and to allow them free association in the great union movement but there has also been a complete failure of the legal procedures available to the average citizen to correct things that have nothing whatsoever to do with unionism. I think this is a very sad state of affairs, particularly when today we hear compulsory arbitration and trusteeship being referred to by some members and being given somewhat the same kind of support.

There is no need to go into the history of Banks. I called him a gangster many years ago in this house. I know he has a number of henchmen who are completely dependant upon him and who have made it possible for him to maintain his position. I do not know, and I am not even going to hazard a guess, whether a trusteeship will correct this situation or will not, but I think it is generally understood that throughout the world the free trade union movement is destroyed initially by the implementation of trusteeship and compulsory abitration. I mention them both because it would appear that if any difficulty should arise in the labour movement in the near future one or the other is going to be recommended by every reactionary employer in the country. I hasten to add that I do not think this will happen with the present Minister of Labour, nor would it have with the previous minister of labour. I think these two gentlemen have done a very good job in administering the operation of the acts which are their responsibility. I think it is very foolish for the Canadian public to be given the impression that they did not do all that was within their power to solve the problem as they saw it. I feel that this is all they have to do, and that they have done it.

There are improvements that must be made in our laws in order to make the settlement of many of these problems easier. This may mean that we shall have to take a look at some of the things that have caused this matter to reach the stage it has. One of these things is the hiring hall, Mr. Chairman. If you were to eliminate the hiring hall you would probably eliminate a great many of the problems facing this particular union, as well as other unions that are in almost the same category.

This afternoon the house was made aware of the fact that there is a union in the process of negotiating a contract in the Columbia river area in connection with the building of a dam that we have not considered yet. I do not believe anyone is in a position of knowing who the principals are going to be in connection with that construction. I believe, therefore, this whole problem is being repeated there and also must be faced. I do not believe the way to face it is the establishment of a trusteeship, because this will be a crutch on which the people in the labour movement, management and many others will lean, especially if we make it a popular and acceptable thing. Many totalitarian countries throughout the world have used similar methods to destroy the free trade union movement. I think most rank and file trade union members are violently opposed to trusteeship in any form. Certainly, they must be opposed to legislative trusteeship because, for many of them, this eliminates any democratic rights they may have.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what was the real reason for the recommendation of Mr. Justice Norris to take over five unions rather than one? I ask this question. Would it not have been better if this one union were to be taken over? This would still allow the workers along the seaway and the great lakes to join another union of their choice in that field. Nothing wrong was found in connection with these unions, and yet they have been asked to go into trusteeship voluntarily, along with the union in which we are trying to correct the problem. I ask, is this being fair to the membership of these unions? Most of them have had no opportunity of deciding for themselves whether or not they want to accept voluntary trusteeship. Is this the price the labour movement in general is going to have to pay for the next four or five years to get peace on the great lakes? Has justice reached the stage where Banks cannot be removed in any other way than the application of a trusteeship?

I have had something to do with unions in the past, and have had something to do with communist dominated unions. We found that in those unions you had two or three communists, or a half dozen at the outside, per 100 members, and yet they were able, in many cases, to dominate the union. When the other 95 out of 100 members decided to stand on their two feet and fight back, then usually what we are trying to accomplish here was accomplished by the working people themselves. It is for this reason I say the labour relations act itself must be overhauled. Obviously, this type of machinery is not available to the workers on the great lakes, and particularly those who have been made captives by the S.I.U. We are all aware of the abuses that have been made of certain procedures, such as the hiring halls, "do not ship" lists, the accumulation of vast sums of money through the operation of pension plans, and vacations with pay plans, which have been improperly administered. I wonder if there are not many other forms of assistance that could be given in this field without the imposition of trusteeship?

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have heard of the fact that the S.I.U. is a bad union. In my opinion, a bad union really does not exist because it has bad leadership alone. It is bad because it has bad leadership in conjunction with bad management. Unless a deal could have been worked out between Mr. Banks and the personnel agents of Canada Steamship Lines, no deal would have been made. Because these two people were evil in character, the deal they made was bad. However, I believe it is obvious to everyone that there was another deal made by a union on the great lakes in which the company cooperated with the union in making this type of arrangement, but it was not bad because of the people that were involved. I suggest that if we had the legal machinery, we would have been able to ask for a report from Mr. Robinette and Mr. Martineau, which would have indicated in all probability a course of action for the solution of this problem by due process of law.

Many people have spoken on this subject. There have been some good speakers from all parts of the house. However, I do not believe I stand alone in opposing trusteeship. I believe most people who have had anything to do with unions know that trusteeship is highly undesirable if it is put into effect in any way, shape or form, but probably the worst form is through the introduction of legislation. Trusteeship by government takes away the rights of the workers. Often a union has to be put under trusteeship because of the inability of the membership to look after their affairs, but when somebody else does this the situation becomes even worse. Has the committee really considered what this trusteeship is going to accomplish? Have they really considered what the results of this are going to be? Anyone supporting this legislation who thinks it is going to be an immediate success should really consider all the implications.

I have no objection to the Canadian Labour Congress going to some of the officials of the United States government and requesting assistance, because certainly the United States government has come up against this problem that we are facing. The United States government has tried everything possible to dispose of Mr. Hoffa, but every time they do something to him they make him that much stronger. I wonder if we have really considered this matter? I presume the trusteeship legislation will go through because there appears to be no alternative. I am not in a position, Mr. Chairman, to offer any alternative. However, I believe the committee would be well advised to seriously consider the possibility of an alternative. I would think that the house would have been very wise to call the industrial relations committee of this house together to try to find some solution. Other countries have found solutions for this type of problem. I believe many of the members have failed to look towards tomorrow to see what the results of this action are going to be.

I am not saying that a government trusteeship imposed on unions will mean the repeal of the Rush-Bagot treaty, but I am just asking the committee to remember what happened when a Canadian ship was sent down into Chicago to ascertain what the climate would be. That ship has now limped back into Canadian territory and another one has been dispatched in its stead. I only hope we do not have to send down a front line frigate to protect the second ship. It may be a good experiment, but I do not see why this shipping company should keep a ship at Chicago when there are many cargoes to be obtained in other areas. This will be in the history of Canadian shipping when the government sets up a marine corps.

Have hon. members really thought about it? I know the labour movement in the United States is very much opposed to what is happening here as is, in the main, the Canadian labour movement. If the two movements are as strongly opposed to it as they appear to be, then this is not going to be an end to the strike on the great lakes. It will only be the beginning.

We should consider the problem fully, because the international free trade union movement stretches across the world, and we have to consider the possibility of a boycott when we endeavour to get rid of five or six people by means of trusteeship. We may even have to apply martial law in order to get rid of them; but no matter what the circumstances, we may have to face the problem of delay to Canadian ships operated by government imposed trusteeship.

Have we really thought of all the alternatives? I am not suggesting I know them all, but I do know this is not a solution that is acceptable to many trade unionists throughout Canada. Indeed it is not generally acceptable to trade unionists throughout the world. Although the minister is to be congratulated on all the avenues he has explored so far, I do believe trusteeship is not the answer.

We will get the Canadian trade union movement into a very difficult predicament by proposing legislative trusteeship. I am not familiar with the full situation in Montreal today regarding the longshoremen's strike, but the union involved is a responsible one. It has gone through due process of law. It has asked the federal government for mediation, and this has been provided in the person of a judge. However, I am shocked to see that already hon. members have stood up in this house and talked about compulsory arbitration for this union because it is causing some discomfort in parts of Canada. This is true, and looking at the over-all picture it may have many ramifications; but hon. members should consider the position of the longshoremen who have negotiated through the normal channels of law, who have asked for mediation, and who now find that the general public and many members of parliament are crying for their scalps before they, the workers, have concluded the mediation process.

It would be less than reasonable if the longshoremen did not pick a time to negotiate when the shipping season was at its height. I see nothing wrong in what has happened to date in that situation, but because of gangsterism and the low character of many of those in high places in the S.I.U., the general public is inclined to lump many labour problems into the one basket.

I am not prepared to support compulsory trusteeship. I would certainly be the first to admit something has to be done about this particular problem. Its existence has been known for several years, and for a long time we have been saying Hal Banks was a gangster and should be deported or eliminated from the Canadian labour movement. We should ask ourselves why, through due process of law, in a democratic country and in a democratic manner in the operations of a democratic trade union movement we have not been able, in a judicial manner, to clean up this unholy mess which has brought us to the sad state of affairs we face tonight.

[Translation]

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Chairman, in taking part in this discussion tonight, I am most conscious of the difficulties and problems parliament is facing at the present time in connection with the establishment of a trusteeship for the maritime unions on the great lakes.

Since I am a worker myself and since I have contributed to the establishment of a union, some may think that in contributing to this debate I may be biased; but, Mr. Chairman, we are undertaking today the consideration of a resolution which, in my opinion, has no precedent in the labour history of Canada.

This proposal of the government to establish a trusteeship over the various maritime and stevedores unions on the great lakes and along the St. Lawrence raises many points of principle which we should study with the utmost care.

This legislation for the establishment of a trusteeship is, I am sure, a precedent and that is why we must try to find as clearly as possible the reasons why the government was led to introduce this measure so that, in future years, we may not have to rely on the government or any trusteeship legislation to settle problems which should be settled within the ranks of the labour unions.

This decision results from the unions helplessness in solving a serious problem in the administration of the union concerned as shown by the royal commission appointed in July 1962.

This investigation proved beyond any reasonable doubt that the allegations of the Canadian Labour Congress to the effect that terror and gangsterism have ruled over these unions, among which the seafarers' union, and that the government had therefore an obligation to intervene, first to safeguard the economic interests of Canada and its good name abroad. Second—and this is not the least important reason—to preserve also the rights of the workers and to free them from a reign of terror which kept them in an atmosphere of continuous fear, while their dues were put to dishonest use.

I think the situation we are now facing shows clearly the degree of vigilance the workers must exercise in watching over their interest so they will not be tricked.

Having been exploited for a long time by heartless employers and enterprises, they united and had to fight relentlessly, and it is only after tremendous sacrifices that they were recognized and respected. But nowadays, they have to face other enemies who have infiltrated their ranks so as to take advantage of the structures and the strength they built and use them for their own illegitimate purposes.

It will be said that loss of control over their union by members is due to the fact that those unions have become too big, too powerful, too complex in their administration and that there, as elsewhere, centralization has prevented the members from retaining contact with their leaders and the management.

I admit that this is one of the causes of the troubles we are now going through. But why do we need those powerful and centralized unions if not to fight against large industrial trusts?

A few decades ago, we had small employers but the situation has changed and, nowadays, we have colossal industrial empires grouping the best administrative brains, assisted by almost every banking and financial system in this country, and even outside.

Mr. Chairman, giants must be opposed by giants and so the conflict resulting from their confrontation inevitably jeopardizes the very basis of our economy and the society in which we live.

Yesterday, I heard the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) suggest that the government refer to a parliamentary committee the problem of amending the country's labour legislation which allowed a situation like that of the great lakes seafarers to develop. I wholeheartedly support this proposal, but I would add that it is just as urgent to review also the legislation providing for the incorporation of companies and the setting up of industrial empires and trusts, in order to eliminate the serious abuses it allows.

Let us consider the part played by the Canada Steamship Lines as mentioned by Mr. Justice Norris in his report.

If we are permitted to judge Mr. Hal Banks severely, I think we must come to the conclusion that those who co-operated with him in that company must also be judged.

They claim that they were forced to act that way, but I am not so sure. If that is the case, they had means available to make the situation known and to ask that an investigation be made.

And what about the part played by the government in this matter? Is it not the government that amended the citizenship and immigration legislation, especially to allow the permanent admission of Hal Banks to Canada?

What about Mr. Jodoin, president of the C.L.C., who strongly endorsed the application of Mr. Banks? However, he admitted having made a mistake, and since he too is a giant in a certain sense, he rightly said that he makes enormous mistakes.

What part was played by American interests in this matter?

The present situation shows, more than ever, the urgent need for all our country's organizations to become autonomous.

Dominated by American unions, dominated by American industries, dominated by American policies, dominated by American defence, the situation is almost hopeless.

And those who listened to the news tonight, heard that the American secretary of labour, as well as president Meany, today declared themselves violently opposed to the setting up of the present trusteeship by the Canadian government. They especially blamed the president of the Canadian Labour Congress, Mr. Jodoin, and accused him of being the first responsible for this legislation which will soon be put into effect.

Mr. Chairman, I think that we have here further convincing evidence of American interference in a field which belongs to us alone. And I urge the government to reply and request the Americans to stay in their own field, because if we are faced today with that problem, it originated with them. Indeed, if they had opposed in time the lawlessness which prevailed in some American labour organizations, that gangsterism would not have been imported into Canada.

Mr. Chairman, the government intends to impose upon the unions concerned a trusteeship of no longer than five years. I hope it will not take that long to settle the problem.

Three people will be entrusted with the delicate and serious task. I am happy to see that four or five of the unions in question have already accepted the trusteeship. That undoubtedly proves that the legislation under consideration has already been endorsed by those who are mainly concerned and we must proceed not only with haste but with extreme care.

Yesterday, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) made a statement which I found rather strange, coming as it did from the leader of a party which advocates strong government control over our national economy.

In fact, as reported on page 3380 of the English version of Hansard for October 9, 1963, he said:

> Naturally public trusteeship is unpalatable.

Mr. Chairman, these words sound wrong coming from the leader of the New Democratic party. The same words were repeated this afternoon, this time by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), who opposed rather strongly, while making important reserves, the establishment of this trusteeship. He stated that he would accept it as a makeshift.

Mr. Chairman, circumstances may, at a given time, force or justify the government to take action concerning a labour movement. In such a case, I believe we ought to accept that measure on a temporary basis.

Now, if the followers of a certain socialistic philosophy claim that the government has the power, the greatest capacity, the only authority and competency to administer the economy and the industry of this country, they should, I believe, also recognize to that government the right to put some order into the affairs of certain labour unions, if the members have lost control.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that we ought to call the attention of the general public to this point, so as not to stir up the workers who could see in such a measure some kind of infringement on their liberty. In fact, should anyone conclude that the enactment of this legislation is tantamount to a loss of freedom, then I believe that freedom no longer exists.

When there is disorder, dishonesty, and no longer any possibility for an organization to amend itself, then in my opinion, it is our duty not to criticize the government but to second it, to make to that government suggestions concerning the legislation presently introduced.

The government was very reluctant to take such a step and to some extent I believe it was right, since this state of affairs is altogether unusual. We all hope that one of the results of such trusteeship—and I particularly stress this point—will be to give our unions a true Canadian make-up so that they may be administered by Canadians.

Mr. Chairman, there is also the fact that the contributions of our Canadian workers are being exported to a foreign country through certain labour unions. If we are faced with those problems, it is not only the workers who are to blame; we should also try to find the origin and the cause of those problems.

The powerful Canadian unions, which are now controlled by Americans, came to Canada from the United States at the time when American industries first became established in our country. I think that this was done in order to interfere with a policy followed at a certain time by some American companies which, by setting up branches in various countries, tried to prevent the development of labour unions.

In this connection, I remember a case in particular. If my memory is correct, it concerns the Singer company which manufactures sewing machines and which in order to check the development of the labour movement and deny its right and fair demands has built plants throughout the world, plants which it used to rotate its production from one country to another. Thus, as soon as unions became strong enough in a country, by rotating its production, the company has been in a position to check the labour movement.

Nevertheless, it seems that Providence has avenged the workers since that company by its dealings has forgotten its original purpose and has since been outstripped by its competitors.

Canadian workers are powerful because we have strong industries.

If, by means of a trusteeship, we want to eliminate some serious faults that we find in the labour unions in Canada, we as well as the government itself will probably have to see to it that American companies become themselves Canadian companies, so that the government does not have to suffer the same indignity its ministers suffered recently when they had to deal with some American officials. In fact, five ministers of the Canadian government, supposedly independent and sovereign, had to meet some American officials and ask them permission to increase the production of automotive parts in Canada; and what did they get? A firm refusal, a definite no.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Chairman, that fully illustrates the seriousness of the problem with which we are faced now. It does not concern only workers' unions; it has become a general cancer which affects our industry and the whole of our economy.

I feel that the present legislation may be a partial solution. I hope it will open the eyes of the parties concerned and that the latter will not wait until the public authorities are forced to impose solutions before they take action.

American owners of industries situated in Canada will have to realize that they are working against our democratic regime by their present behavior. Canada cannot keep on being a satellite of the United States and all of us must stress this fact.

It is quite out of the question for us to quarrel with the Americans in this connection. But I think that if they respect the autonomy of some South American, Caribbean, African and European nations, they should first of all respect the autonomy of their main ally and next door neighbour, Canada.

I believe that if Canada and the United States get together to iron out those problems which are not only Canadian problems but international problems, we can, not under any coercion, but in a great spirit of justice, resolve the difficulties facing the nation at the present time.

I should also like to emphasize that the French fact is practically ignored by American unions in Canada. I wish to point out that particular aspect in order to show that the problem is very complex. I trust that when control over Canadian unions reverts to Canada now that the English speaking Canadians increasingly realize the advantages of recognizing both cultures in Canada, our Canadian unions, from Vancouver to Halifax, in their negotiations and in their relations with the French Canadian group, will manage to display comprehension and especially justice for that group. This, Mr. Chairman, is not a plea for sympathy but simply an appeal to reason and to common sense.

I also wish to call the attention of the house to another problem which I think is closely related to the one now under consideration, that is the strike which has been going on for several days in seaports along the St. Lawrence seaway in the province of Quebec. This is of particular concern to us in Quebec. I heard that we might have to impose compulsory arbitration. That would amount to an act of despair.

I am of the opinion, Mr. Chairman, that if we were to review all legislation concerning unions and collective bargaining, we would find that to be the source of the problems facing the government in its relations with labour.

It is rather important to note that, each year, in the province of Quebec alone, thousands of collective agreements are signed for which workers did not have to go on strike. To my mind, that shows that workers recognize they have more to gain by negotiating objectively and by respecting the rights and privileges of each and every one than by going on strike indiscriminately. It is also an indication, Mr. Chairman, that legislation now in force in the province of Quebec is better suited than the one now to be found in the federal statutes to solve that problem.

We find that the federal government's area of operation in the field of labour is not very large—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret I must interrupt the hon. member for Lake St. John; the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Chairman, I rise tonight because I am a little suspicious of the unanimity—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I called on the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George. The hon. member for Cape Breton South will be next.

Mr. MacInnis: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman; at roughly 4.30 this afternoon I approached the Chair and arranged to speak on this particular resolution. Following that I was called to the defence committee in order to establish a quorum, and that can be easily verified. Upon returning after the supper recess I find that one of two things has happened in this house. Either the government has given official recognition to both wings of the Social Credit party or it is discriminating. When I arrived back in the house a Social Credit member was speaking. Then a New Democratic party member spoke, followed again by another Social Crediter. I say that one of two things has happened this evening; either the government has given recognition to both wings of this party, or the discrimination that went on this afternoon is continuing this evening.

The Deputy Chairman: If the hon. member for Cape Breton South feels that the Chair has been unfair to him, then I apologize. The order of debate I had when I came into the chamber was that the hon. member for Quebec East would speak, followed by the hon. member for Timiskaming, and then I had no one until the hon. member for Lake St. John asked if he could speak next. That made three members to my left. I have now recognized the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George on my right.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Chairman, in order to save a little time I would be willing to relinquish the floor.

The Deputy Chairman: I shall be very pleased to recognize the hon. member for Cape Breton South next.

Mr. MacInnis: On a question of privilege, it is not a question of when I can say something, because there has been so much repetition in the discussion of this resolution that I do not suppose that I would be able to say much without repeating a lot of what has been said. But what I do want to say to the Chair is this: Am I now being told that the arrangement I made at the table this afternoon about four or four thirty is not noted at the table, and you are now informing me that I did not make those arrangements?

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

The Deputy Chairman: No, I am not informing the hon. gentleman that those arrangements were not made. I am informing him of the order in which I have seen the speakers, according to the information given here.

Mr. MacInnis: You had better get back and check your list.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Chairman, in pursuance with your order I will continue my speech although I was willing to yield. However, if the hon. member opposite can contain his patience, I will try not to be too repetitious and we can wait for his originality in about ten minutes.

Mr. MacInnis: I also spend week ends here too.

Mr. Turner: I was speaking about the happy unanimity of the house in connection with this resolution, and I hope that the accident of two members rising at the same time has been forgiven. However, there has been a certain blindness arising from this unanimity, I suggest, and perhaps the committee. as the hon. member for Timiskaming suggested, has not looked carefully enough into the future consequences of this trusteeship. I say that for this reason. The Minister of Labour has exercised, through his versatility and courage, every virtue he could be expected to exercise in this role. He has explored every opportunity. He has probed the basis of a possible private trusteeship. He has tried to negotiate with every possible party to the dispute, and only as a last alternative is he presenting to the house legislation to create a public trusteeship which, repugnant though it may be, has met with the support of every party and every group in this house. So we have a resolution with public opinion behind it. The committee is unanimously behind it, and in the days which follow I think the minister will be entitled to call on the support of the house to implement this trusteeship if it runs into heavy weather, as I believe it is bound to do.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, two reasons why the public trusteeship will encounter difficult times. The first is that a public trusteeship cannot work unless it has the support of the members of the union or unions over which the trusteeship is imposed. I think no better example of that can be cited than the history of the monitorship over the teamsters union in the United States where, in terms of the ultimate vote, Mr. Hoffa retained the support, and the overwhelming support of the union. No matter how the vote was garnered he retained the ultimate support of the union, and against that support of the union the monitorship appointed by the courts was powerless. In decision after decision they were forced to yield power, control and jurisdiction over the teamsters back again to Mr. Hoffa. I come from Montreal and have had some experience of the waterfront there. Not being as innocent perhaps as some members, I have met Mr. Banks and dealt with him across the table.

An hon. Member: Oh, his picked friend.

Mr. Turner: No, I was not invited to those flashy evenings that Mr. Banks seems to sponsor, but I can tell you I have met him over the cold varnish of the bargaining table.

Mr. Nielsen: Or under the table.

Mr. Turner: What I want to suggest is that so far as I can gather, and this opinion is shared by many who have experience on the waterfront in Montreal, Mr. Banks still has considerable support among the rank and file of his own union because, whatever else may be said, under his leadership the average worker, the average stevedore, the average seaman, has enjoyed an improved standard of living which has blinded him to the lack of democracy in his own union. Because of the subtle propaganda and the subtle yellow journalism used by Mr. Banks and S.I.U., the average member of that union conceives of a trusteeship as something evil that is to be imposed on him.

I suggest to the house that the remedy of a public trusteeship will be difficult and can be rendered impotent unless the real cancer, Mr. Banks, is operated on. Unless he is removed by legal process from the direction of that union, unless he is removed from the country, the trusteeship cannot be as effective as I am sure every member of the house wants it to be.

The second point I wish to bring to the attention of hon. members is that this public trusteeship, because of the negotiations that have preceded it, is going to prompt a certain tension on the lakes between the American and the Canadian authorities. It already has. The statement tonight by Mr. George Meany will, I am sure, prompt every Canadian union member, every Canadian worker, to wonder whether or not at last he should not have control over his own affairs. If this public trusteeship is the result of anything, it is due primarily to the lack of co-operation of the trade union movement in the United States to help to implement on the Canadian side of the border a private trusteeship such as was sought by the Minister of Labour and those who were negotiating on his behalf. So because of the nature of commerce on the great lakes, which is international, we do have a problem of tension on the lakes that this public trusteeship will not solve, but may provoke.

I say this to you, Mr. Chairman, because of the difficulties of a trusteeship over the membership and because these men are not yet convinced of the necessity for it, and because a trusteeship is inherently repugnant to the average workingman just as it is repugnant to most of us. In addition, because it is going to breed tension between the United States and Canada, it will be a difficult piece of legislation to implement.

I would call upon all members of the house to support this legislation with the same unanimity tomorrow with which they support it tonight, because I think we are convinced tonight that the trusteeship proposed in this resolution is the only remaining alternative. It is not the best type of solution we would want but it is the only reasonable alternative. Surely, Mr. Chairman, memories will hark back to the reasons that have been advanced by all parties tonight so that, when the trusteeship is at the stage where it must be implemented, the government and the minister will have the same unanimous support from the House of Commons that they have received this evening.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, to begin with I indicated when I was putting forward a point of order before that it would be very difficult to be original and I do not suppose I will be. However, the last speaker has given me the opportunity to say that I have at least one thing to say that is original. There is not the unanimous support about which he speaks, and I think that is original enough to take care of his statement about being original.

The government under the sponsorship of the Minister of Labour has brought forward the resolution preceding the legislation for one purpose, to clear up the situation on the lakes. It is designed to bring in a trusteeship which is to be given authority to expel the union bosses, and those members of the union executive who may be closely enough associated with Mr. Banks that they should go with him. To me, Mr. Chairman, this is the long way, this is the expensive way to deal with this matter. I cannot understand why the government has not resorted to deportation, or whatever you want to call it, from this country of Mr. Harold Banks. Recalling what the Secretary of State said this afternoon, namely that it could be done directly, I cannot understand why the government does not have the courage to get rid of Mr. Banks, just as they had the courage to bring him in here to do exactly what he is doing today—fight other unions. He was brought in for that purpose and he is now being put out of office for the same reason; so why not put him out of the country?

I fully agree with the recommendation of a trusteeship in the Norris commission report. For reasons of my own I cannot refer to the Norris commission report this evening, but if my memory serves me right there is another recommendation on page 311 of that report. Some questions have been asked the Minister of Justice in the house as recently as this afternoon involving one approach which, if followed through, would provide us with the answer, I think, to the trouble brought on us by Mr. Banks. It would not be a matter of deporting him, because I believe what Mr. Justice Norris had to say in that regard.

The deportation of Hal Banks is not going to solve this problem in any way, shape or form. However, if the prosecutions that the Norris commission report also recommends were followed through and if the courts in Quebec and Ontario were to press these matters, it is quite possible that Mr. Banks might wind up where he belongs—behind bars—where he would do nobody any harm.

It is very interesting to me to listen to the speeches from different parts of the house, especially from the far left. This evening one member speaking on behalf of the New Democratic party continually said that that party had referred to Mr. Banks as a gangster. I can stand here and say that I used the word "gangster" with regard to Mr. Banks in the house some years ago and, as I recall, only one member of that party, the hon. member for Kootenay West, consistently spoke against Mr. Banks. I do not recall any others. In fact, when I was condemning Mr. Banks and the type of union he was running I myself was condemned for doing so on many occasions.

I have taken a stand where necessary against union leaders, and this does not apply only to the S.I.U. It strikes me as very strange that some members should get up and complain about something the previous government did not do. I would remind each and every one of them that when the former minister of labour and the former government were called upon by the Canadian Labour Congress, the former government set up the Norris commission. But can you imagine what would have happened if that government had tried to move in and impose a trusteeship at that time upon unions that were having their problems within the Canadian Labour Congress or, if not within the congress, then among themselves? They were trying to settle something among themselves. Can you imagine what repercussions there would have been if any government had stepped in at a time like that and tried to impose any kind of legislation on them?

An hon. Member: All they had to do was enforce the law.

Mr. Regan: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. MacInnis: Yes, in about 20 minutes. It is a well known fact that when members of this house were criticizing the activities of Mr. Banks a few years ago, none other than Claude Jodoin, the president of the Canadian Labour Congress, came to his defence in the courts and said that he would make a valuable citizen. I have reason to believe that today the same Mr. Jodoin would like to back away from the position he has taken. I say this strictly on my own and I could be entirely wrong. However, I have reason to believe that the Canadian Labour Congress regrets this hasty action. I believe that the union men can see far enough ahead, and in this I agree with the last speaker, to realize that ridding the S.I.U. of Mr. Banks is not going to help the situation. I think it will be a case of going from the frying pan into the fire, as has been indicated by the last press release by the United States. We can look forward to a lot of trouble in United States ports.

Now, this whole situation developed, first of all, because two unions could not get along. They fought for the right to represent the seamen on the lakes. Then, from there we step up into another category, and we find that the Canadian Labour Congress cannot reach an agreement with the A.F.L.-C.I.O. Then, we have one more step, Mr. Chairman, and that is the step to government. We find that the Canadian government cannot reach an agreement with the United States government. I believe that the two governments should get together. Everyone in the house has said this is a responsibility of government, and the government should do this or that. I believe it is now the responsibility of both governments to get together and assure one another that if this trusteeship legislation is put into effect, Canadian ships will receive proper service and proper protection while they are in United States ports and vice versa. I believe this is the responsibility of the two governments.

I do not believe there has been a speaker, at least from the opposition parties, who has not said that he feels this is a government responsibility. Many of them have said it was a responsibility of the former government. Nevertheless, it is still the responsibility of this government. They talk about trusteeship. The Canadian people gave them a trusteeship to run this country, and yet the government is now asking some individual citizens to take upon themselves the responsibility of the trusteeship. I say set it up within your own cabinet; show some leadership.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacInnis: You can laugh; go ahead and laugh. You laughed this afternoon, but you are not going to laugh me off the floor of this house. I say it is the responsibility of this government to get together with the United States government in order to ensure that Canadian ships will get proper protection and service while in United States ports. Only then is a trusteeship of any kind going to work. I do say to the government that there is no reason this trusteeship cannot be set up within parliament itself, from within the government ranks. This would be the best way for the government to keep an eye on what is happening. If this is not done, questions will be asked in the house from time to time about what the trustees are doing in relation to cleaning up the union, and ministers will be saying, "I expect a report on that in a few days, and I will advise the house later." This will go on for weeks and months. As the leader of the N.D.P. said, the government proposes a five-year term in order to get this union cleaned up. The same hon. member said that this was almost like giving the trustees an absolute dictatorship.

Now, if you cut the period back from five years to two years or even one year, that same description applies. Why does this government feel duty bound to put the responsibility on three private citizens if this legislation goes through? It is the government's responsibility. The first step in connection with that responsibility is on the road to Washington. They are the great friends of the United States. They are the ones who were going to bring this country back to its proper level in international affairs. Let them go down to Washington now and reach an agreement with Mr. Wirtz, if they are duty bound to put in this trusteeship, so that Canadians will receive the proper protection. I think this is properly the first step to take. Before the government imposes any responsibility on others, let them get their own business done.

One thing that surprised me was that everybody talked about a solution. When I was listening to the different speakers and heard everyone say he was against trusteeship but would have to support it, I was surprised no one thought of another solution. This is all nonsense. As long as there are any blameless members of the S.I.U., they should not suffer for the sins of Hal Banks and his executive officers. The last speaker referred to Mr. Banks getting the support of his union. He said, don't you realize how this support is gathered in from all around the country? As I said a number of years ago, I know the gangsters. I am not standing up in this house to take credit for what somebody else did. Again, I refer to the fact that while we were doing this there were individuals who were clearly criticizing us. At the same time, as I say, Mr. Claude Jodoin of the Canadian Labour Congress was standing up on behalf of Mr. Banks before the immigration committee. Then, too, a former C.C.F. member in this house championed Mr. Banks' cause as legal counsel. This was done by a member of that party which is closely associated with the Canadian Labour Congress.

I have belonged to unions for many years. I have union support. I can get down there and understand the feelings of the union men as well as anybody else in the house. I tell you this, gentlemen, the trouble with our labour unions and labour congresses in this country is that there are too many professional men, and the union membership does not have a chance to voice its opinions. They have, in Mr. Banks, a professional. He is a professional import. There are many other professionals in unions throughout this country. These are the same professionals who, years ago, stood hand in hand with the same Mr. Banks whose scalp they are now after.

Let us return to that solution I mentioned and which I was surprised was not suggested by the N.D.P. They have said they are against the trusteeship, but they have to go along with the government in principle. However, I fully agree with the leader of the N.D.P. when he said that there was another party equally to blame in this affair. What about the steamship lines, the executives of these companies? They are just as responsible for this situation today as the union men. Is the government just going to slap their wrists for being naughty and, at the same time, condemn the unions and the union men who may have been blameless? Why does the government not go after Mr. Banks? You do not have to impose a trusteeship on every man in the country to accomplish that. I refer again to the words of the Secretary of State when he said it could be done directly. Why does the government not go after these steamship companies and slap them around, as I hope they will do with Mr. Banks?

Let me return now to this solution that I was surprised no one mentioned. This is where the N.D.P. surprised me. Apparently this plank is missing from their platform now. I thought they were going to make the suggestion that since we were taking over the unions under trusteeship, they would advocate that the steamship lines should be nationalized along with the unions. This was another way they could once again have got back at the shipping companies for their part in the fiasco which is taking place today.

When hon. members opposite talk about unanimous support I do not intend at any time to stand here and allow a speaker, especially in another part of the house, to speak for the whole house, particularly when I have no intention of supporting something that is going to be imposed on the labouring man, and something which is being imposed upon him because of a gangster dominated union. I say to the government, deal with the problem directly rather than through this long and expensive route to reach the same end.

I could be wrong, but I am quite sure I heard the Secretary of State say this afternoon that it could be done directly. If so, let the government have the courage to do it. Let the members of the government pack their bags, go down to Washington, and ensure that we get the protection we need.

Mr. Regan: Will the hon. member permit my question now?

Mr. MacInnis: Yes.

Mr. Regan: Inasmuch as the hon. member was very original in his speech, and if it is so simple to get rid of Banks, why did the former administration bother to appoint the Norris commission? Why did it not just get rid of Banks?

Mr. MacInnis: I covered that very simply in my opening remarks. I said that at that time the unions themselves were struggling for power on the lakes, and no government could move into such a situation.

Mr. Regan: Oh.

Mr. MacInnis: You say "oh." I will tell you why it was not done. The government acted when it got the request from the Canadian Labour Congress to set up a commission to look into this matter. It acted immediately upon getting that request. Now, I did not say it was a simple matter. I referred to the remarks of the Secretary of State who said it could be done directly.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, it was not my intention to take part in this debate, and my intervention at this point will be brief. Although I feel very strongly about some of the things to which I shall refer, I shall keep quite cool. In fact I think that is something we are going to have to do in this field of labour relations, particularly in the labour relations between this country and the United States in the months and years that lie ahead.

I shall not repeat the elements of our position that have been expressed so effectively by the leader of this group, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, and later by the hon. member for Winnipeg North. There is no question but that we stand, as does the trade union movement of this country, against the principle of government trusteeships over free trade unions.

Surely it is clear, however, that what we are faced with now is not the problem of dealing with a free trade union but the problem of dealing with a gangster outfit in a situation where there is no alternative but to bring in the force of law. In so far as, for a limited period of time, a trusteeship is being imposed upon four other unions, which have been declared by Mr. Justice Norris to have a clean bill of health, let it be quite clear that those unions have indicated their willingness to have this trusteeship placed on them, in order that the mess on the great lakes might be cleared up.

However, as has already been said by others of this group, the one feature in this legislation that we feel should be changed—and which we hope will be changed before it goes through all its stages—is the provision for the trusteeship to last for five years.

We feel that this job can, and must be done, in a much shorter period, and it would be far better to have the legislation provide for the trusteeship to last for two years or three years at the most. If the government would like to amend the bill by providing that at the end of that period it could be extended by resolution of both houses of parliament, rather than going through all the stages of the bill again, perhaps that would be appropriate and might be considered. However, apart from making that point, I do not wish to repeat what has been said by those who have already spoken for this group.

Rather, I felt that from this corner of the house something should be said tonight to express our regret at the two statements which have come out of Washington today, the statement of Mr. George Meany, president of the A.F.L.-C.I.O., and the statement of secretary of labour Wirtz. As a matter of fact Mr. Jodoin, president of the Canadian Labour Congress, has already issued a statement in reply to what these two gentlemen have said, and I am in complete agreement with what Mr. Jodoin has said.

So far as Mr. Meany's comments are concerned, I go along with Mr. Jodoin's generosity to Mr. Meany in suggesting that he must not have all the facts in his possession and must not know what is going on in Canada, or he could not possibly come to the defence of Hal Banks and his S.I.U. as though he were defending a free union.

When Mr. Meany complains about the C.L.C. going along with government action to deal with a matter of this kind, it is a bit strange that coincidental with his press release there is a release by secretary of labour Wirtz that suggests there is almost an understanding, if not something stronger, between Mr. Meany and the United States department of labour. I find this inconsistent with the position he has taken with regard to the decision made by the Canadian Labour Congress.

I also agree with Mr. Jodoin in his remarks about what secretary of labour Wirtz has done by way of releasing information about the private negotiations that went on, the negotiations that did not succeed. Surely it is the height of indiscretion for a cabinet minister in another country to reveal afterwards what some of those private negotiations were. In all probability he has not told the whole of the story. In all probability there are other aspects of that story that should be told by the C.L.C.; but when this sort of thing goes on it does no good.

As a trade unionist I object very strongly to the statements made today by Mr. Meany and Mr. Wirtz. I know that the officers of the C.L.C. and the executive council of that congress will deal with their counterparts in the United States through the usual channels, to try to get back to a reasonable understanding of these matters; but I call upon the government of Canada, through its usual channels, to take up with Mr. Wirtz his indiscretion in saying the things he has today. These two gentlemen should not be interfering in this Canadian problem. They should be spoken to, Mr. Meany by the Canadian Labour Congress and Mr. Wirtz by the government of this country.

May I make it clear, Mr. Chairman, that the statements made by Mr. Meany and Mr. Wirtz will not in any way change the views of the members of the executive council of the Canadian Labour Congress who, to my knowledge, have wrestled with this problem over many weeks and many years. In fact, Mr. Chairman, I might note that there are people in this chamber who have been denying they ever met Hal Banks, and there are others who have told of their associations with him. I am one of those who has met Hal Banks. I know the kind of person he is. I met him when I was a vice president and a member of the executive council of the Canadian Labour Congress. I am one member on the floor of this house who has voted against Hal Banks. I was a member of the executive council of the Canadian Labour Congress which, after having him before us, after hearing the evidence, expelled him not only from the Canadian Labour Congress but from the house of free labour in Canada. That was done by an executive council of 21 members in 1959, and that executive council today is still a body of 21 members. I ask hon. members to realize that of those 21—I am checking in my memory as I go over the names of them; I know them quite well —not more than four, and I think only three, are members of distinctively Canadian unions. The other 17 or 18 are members of international unions; some of them are high ranking officers in those international unions.

If there is anything to the supposed influence of the United States connection, surely it would reflect itself in the attitudes of these members of the executive council of the Canadian Labour Congress. But no. Despite the fact that they are members of international unions; despite the fact that many of them are high ranking officers in international unions, with their international presidents being Americans, they approach this question from the standpoint of Canadian interests, from the standpoint of the interests of free trade unionism in this country. They have taken their stand as to what should be done to clean up this situation. I know them very well. They are not going to be deflected from the stand they have taken; they are not going to change their decision because of the statements that have been issued today from Washington by Mr. Meany and Mr. Wirtz.

I said I wanted to keep cool about this. I feel pretty strongly about it, because what Mr. Meany has done is not in the best traditions of North American international trade unionism. I was at the founding convention of the Canadian Labour Congress in Toronto in 1956. I was a delegate to it from the Winnipeg local of an international union. I remember Mr. Meany being at that convention. I remember his speech to that convention in which he welcomed wholeheartedly the setting up of a Canadian national labour centre that had within its ranks the great majority of the trade unionists of Canada. He asserted that at that point any residual remains of United States control over aspects of the Canadian trade union movement were to be turned over to the new Canadian Labour Congress. There was established at that point something that was an advance over what had existed in previous years, namely a recognition of equality of the two centres, the A.F.L.-C.I.O. in Washington and the Canadian Labour Congress here in Ottawa.

When Mr. Meany made that statement in 1956, in my view he was speaking in the best traditions of North American international trade unionism. In my view this has to exist. We have to get back to it. I stand here tonight, not shouting at Mr. Meany, not complaining, not condemning him, but pleading with him from my place in this Canadian

House of Commons to leave the solution of this problem to the Canadian trade union movement, to the national unions in Canada and to the Canadian sections of the international trade unions in this country, which have worked well through the years, which will continue to work well.

The sort of thing that has now happened must be straightened out. As I see it, it can be done. The Canadian Labour Congress will, I am sure, play its part in straightening this matter out with Mr. Meany. But the Canadian government has also got to straighten out with Mr. Wirtz what he has done in disclosing the partial information he has released today.

I have already said that I am a member of an international union, the international typographical union, and I have been an officer of the Canadian Labour Congress. I was its executive vice president for four years. I know a little bit about the operations of the trade union movement from the viewpoint of its national centre. Those of us who have been at that level know that Canadian trade unionism has a place for, and needs within its ranks, both kinds of unions, some that are distinctively national and some with their international connections. I recognize that it is very popular today, particularly in the light of the kind of things that are happening, to say, "Let us break all these connections and run everything here in this country". Well, Mr. Chairman, I suggest that if our good relations on the North American continent in other fields are to be upheld—in business, commerce, art, culture, industry and all the rest of it—it is not possible for us to live in complete isolation north of the 49th parallel. We must have our relationships of one kind and another. When you are dealing with huge industries like steel or auto and many others I could name, it just does not make sense to say that our workers in Canada must deal with United States employers through their branch plants in Canada in isolation from their fellow workers south of the line. I think there is a place for both kinds of trade unionism in Canada, national and international. This is part and parcel of the constitution of the Canadian Labour Congress. The C.L.C. was set up on that basis. This has produced strains. There is hardly ever a meeting of the executive council of the Canadian Labour Congress, and there is never a convention of that body, that does not have strains with which to contend in these situations. But it was set up on that basis and it is on that basis that in my view it has to be continued. But it will continue and it will succeed in so far as the international unions are concerned only if the international conventions deal only with matters of policy that are common to the workers in both countries. By the same token, there must be left to the workers in the separate countries complete control of their own affairs.

This is the way the members of the international unions in this country—and please remember that about 65 per cent or 70 per cent of the organized workers in Canada are members of international unions—want it to be, because of the strength it gives to them. But they also know it will work in the long run only, in so far as Canadian affairs are concerned, if these affairs are left to our workers here in Canada. It is on that basis that I am satisfied the executive council of the Canadian Labour Congress made the decision that it made some weeks ago to accept trusteeship as the only alternative. Yet despite the fact that it made the decision some weeks ago, it has wrestled with the proposition; it has tried to find an alternative; it has listened to the suggestions of those who have asked them to consider various alternatives. But they came up with the final decision, in the light of the mess on the lakes, in the light of the gangsterism of Banks, that there is no alternative but to accept this trusteeship, voluntarily accepted by four of the maritime transportation unions but necessarily imposed on the one of which Banks is the head.

Having accepted that, they will give the government their support in seeing that this trusteeship is administered effectively, and they will look, as the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George said, for support not only from the government but from all parties in the house, the majority of whom at any rate are in favour of the step that is being taken tonight. So I say that I welcome the idea that there should be more Canadian autonomy over Canadian affairs. This should be true in all aspects of our life, economic, industrial, intellectual, educational, cultural and all the rest. We must have it.

An hon. Member: And military.

Mr. Knowles: Somebody says military; and defence as well. Yes, add those areas also because they are areas in which we have to live. We cannot separate ourselves completely and our relationship must be maintained. It must be maintained in all of these fields,—but I am speaking particularly of the trade union field. If we are going to have international unions and they are to succeed, there has to be mutual respect on both sides. Claude Jodoin and his fellow officers of the executive council of the Canadian Labour Congress must not interfere in policies or problems which are distinctly American. George Meany must not interfere in problems which are definitely Canadian. This is a Canadian problem. It is a sordid one and we have to deal with it. I think the members of the Canadian Labour Congress and its executive council should be commended for the way they have wrestled with it and for the courageous decisions they have taken in connection with this matter.

I shall not bother to answer some of the charges which have been made in this house tonight and on other occasions against certain of the individuals concerned. Remarks have been made as to the position which Claude Jodoin took a couple of years ago. It was said that a couple of years ago he was defending Hal Banks. I myself was a member of the council four years ago when Claude Jodoin and the others expelled Hal Banks from the congress. As I say, I am not here to answer those allegations. They are answered by the facts. I believe those concerned are to be commended for having accepted this trusteeship, though only because it is absolutely necessary. I am asking tonight for two things. The first is that the government should cut down this five year provision, making it two or three years at the most. If the government wishes, let them make it possible to continue the trusteeship by resolution of both houses. Let it not go on and on automatically. Let us provide that as soon as the mess is cleared up it will be done away with. The situation which has arisen because of these statements from Washington is a serious one. I am fully confident that the officers of the C.L.C. will deal with their counterparts in Washington. I call on this government to deal with its counterpart in Washington, particularly with the issue raised by secretary of labour Wirtz.

Another thing I have to say is this. I regret that so many hon. members have sought to find a relationship between what is happening with regard to the imposition of this trusteeship and the strike on the St. Lawrence by the international longshoremen. I deplore the demands being made on the government for "big stick" action, demands which render no help in the settlement of that dispute. The thing that ought to be said—and this would really help the situation—is that there is not going to be compulsory arbitration. This is the place where a clear statement of that kind ought to be made. The workers are engaged, now, in a legal strike. It is up to the parties concerned to reach a settlement. The government has done its part by providing mediation, and the companies should know that they cannot, simply by dragging their feet, cause a situation where compulsory arbitration will be brought in, simply because of some of the things which have been said by the Leader of the Opposition.

There are five or six outstanding issues. One involves the payment of time and a half for work done on Saturdays. Any employer in this year 1963 who refuses to grant time and a half for work on Saturdays is, surely, in an untenable position. Another thing the workers are demanding—or, at least, they were the last time I was informed—is pay for at least four hours of work when they are called in to work and there is nothing for them to do. This happens under present conditions on the St. Lawrence. Men are called to work at eight in the morning, but if when they get there there is no work for them to do they are sent home without a nickel of pay. The question of the wage rate has been more or less settled, and the men have given their executive officials power to deal with details of the kind I have mentioned. I suggest that what the companies and the shipping federation of Canada need to know is that this parliament believes in its own legislation—that it believes in free collective bargaining, and that parties to a dispute who have gone through the due processes of the law have the right to continue efforts to reach a settlement through mediation without threats of "the big stick" being used. The government, it is true, has not tried to wield a big stick, but the Leader of the Opposition has certainly suggested that it should. This is precisely what should not be done.

The imposition of a trusteeship on a gangster union, agreed to, because it is necessary, by four other unions which have a clean bill of health is a different thing from suggesting that a big stick should be used on a union which has complied with all the processes of the law and which is engaged in a legal strike, according to the Minister of Labour himself. Let us keep these two things separate. Let us go along with the Canadian Labour Congress. Let us cut down the period of time during which it is proposed the trusteeship should continue. Let us do all we can, with cool heads and understanding, to have the best possible relations we can with the United States in the trade union field, as in all others, for this is our only hope on this North American continent.

Mr. Clancy: I should like to ask the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre a question. Have the president of the Canadian Labour Congress and his senior officials agreed, on their own initiative, or have they been invited by the government, to play as active a part in the current longshoremen's strike as they did two years ago when the railway unions were negotiating new contracts? I should like to point out to the hon. member that all the unions mentioned are, of course, members of the Canadian Labour Congress.

Mr. Knowles: I had the great privilege of being an officer of the Canadian Labour Congress for four years but I am not an officer now and I do not know what goes on between the government and that body. For this reason, I do not know the answer to the hon. member's question. Even if I did, it would not be proper for me to give an answer.

Mr. Starr: It had not been my intention to speak twice in the debate on this resolution. It was our intention that only three members of my party should speak on this occasion and we had hoped that the resolution would have passed through this house last evening.

However, that has not happened. Other hon. members have taken part in the debate on the resolution and in the course of the discussions certain allegations have been made, particularly by the hon. member for Greenwood and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, which oblige me to say a few brief words in respect to them. I hope the committee will allow me to complete my remarks, even if they go a few minutes beyond ten o'clock, so that we may be able to pass the resolution this evening. In any case it is necessary that I make some comments in respect to these allegations.

The hon. member for Kootenay West said this afternoon, if I heard him rightly, that there were certain people in this house who thought at one time that Mr. Banks was a good character. I think a number of these people must have been in the former Liberal government, because they thought so highly of Mr. Banks at that time that they sent him to Geneva, to the I.L.O. conference, to represent the Canadian labour movement.

Mr. MacEachen: May I ask the hon. member a question? Is it not a fact that the representatives sent by workers organizations to the I.L.O. are nominated by workers' organizations, in the same way as employers' representatives are nominated by employers' organizations, and that such nominations are usually accepted by any government?

Mr. Starr: The Minister of Labour has answered his own question. Nominations are sent to the government and the minister of labour approves them. If he did not approve, then that representative would not represent labour. But in this instance the government thought enough of Mr. Banks that they felt that they should approve him as the right type to represent labour in Canada.

The allegation has been made that the government of the day and myself as minister did not perform our duties, and we have been charged with inaction with respect to the signing of two agreements, the agreements with the N.A.M.E. and the S.I.U. I do not mind the charge directed at me personally. After all, I have been in the political arena for some time and during my 11 years in this chamber, of which I am very proud, I have had many allegations made against me. When one is in politics he certainly learns how to take that sort of thing. But I do resent the allegations made against Mr. Bernard Wilson, the industrial relations officer, who is a very capable, sincere and experienced man in the labour department. The labour department is very fortunate to have him in their service; let me say that. He has been visited with the same charge as the government.

Anyone who is familiar with the whole history of the involved affairs of the N.A.M.E. and the S.I.U. knows the terrific confusion which developed because of successive officers of the N.A.M.E. who joined with Mr. Banks, until such time as they broke with him. The whole history of this matter is outlined in the report of Justice Norris, commencing at page 51. The fourth paragraph at page 51 says:

> From the evidence, it appears that in 1954 and 1955 Banks seduced the executive of the great lakes and eastern district of the N.A.M.E.—

Then the whole story of this confusion unfolds itself. All the time this was happening the S.I.U. was an affiliate of the Canadian Labour Congress.

This question was brought before the courts. Action was instituted by the N.A.M.E. in self-protection, but even the courts found it difficult to sort out the status of the N.A.M.E. During this time the Department of Labour and the Canada labour relations board took the position time and time again that the N.A.M.E. was a legally certified bargaining agent for the Canadian labour relations board, and I am sure hon. members know that the Canada labour relations board found that the S.I.U. had gained control of the marine engineers by fraud. Mr. Norris refers to this on page 51, and on, in his report.

As far as my own responsibilities are concerned, I took all possible steps under these conditions to see that the marine engineers were protected. When a strike occurred over this situation I ordered Banks by telegram to get his men to resume work. I said in that telegram that if he wanted to represent the marine engineers he should make a proper application to the Canada labour relations board. Banks did this and several of the applications which he made to that board were rejected as fraud, as I have said. All this time I might point out that he was affiliated with the Canadian Labour Congress. Because of his raiding of the N.A.M.E. he and his union were thrown out of the Canadian Labour Congress. He was putting the ship owners, by threats and otherwise—

Mr. Douglas: That is no reason to break the law.
