Mr. Starr: The Department of Labour told them that it was illegal.

An hon. Member: Why did you not prosecute then?

Mr. Starr: I said that the matter was brought to court by the N.A.M.E., but the situation was so confused that even the court could not make head or tail of it and no action was taken in this regard. From then on the situation built up—

The Chairman: Order. May I suggest to the hon. member that he address the Chair.

Mr. Starr: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, I was trying to refer this whole situation to the members who made the allegations. From then on, Mr. Chairman, the situation built up until it was possible to launch an investigation. As I pointed out yesterday, any initiative on the part of the government to launch an inquiry into the affairs of a union which was affiliated with the Canadian Labour Congress would have aroused the most terrible attack upon the government by all members of the Canadian Labour Congress. From then on the situation built up to the point where an investigation was made. That step was taken with the full co-operation, knowledge, and at the request of the Canadian Labour Congress, and I felt that that was the proper way to proceed.

The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre made references to statements which have been issued in Washington by Mr. Wirtz and Mr. Meany. I think it is important in this situation that we keep a cool head, as suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. However, I also think it is important that we put on record the tremendous interference by United States citizens and the United States government in Canadian affairs. When we were the government we were charged with bad relationships with the United States time and again, simply because we stood up for the sovereignty and the right of Canadians. The situation as it now presents itself today shows that the interference from the other side of the border is far greater than ever it was during the five and a half years we were in government. If you want to compare the present relationship of Canada and the United States with the relationship the United States had with the former government, we would be termed bosom pals during the time we were in office.

[Mr. Starr.]

In Washington the United States labour secretary Willard Wirtz said according to a press report:

> Canada-United States negotiations to establish a private trusteeship over Canadian maritime unions collapsed because the Canadian Labour Congress insisted that the proposed three-man trusteeship be composed of two Canadians and one U.S. citizen.

That, Mr. Chairman, is the reason they collapsed. Can you imagine the nerve of Mr. Jodoin of the Canadian Labour Congress asking for two Canadians on that board.

> Wirtz told a press conference that the A.F.L.-C.I.O. had agreed that the proposed trusteeship be composed of one Canadian and one American with the third party to be named by a Canada-U.S. committee of four officials.

That is a matter that affects Canada and Canadian shipping, and the negotiations collapsed because they did not have their way. This press report continues:

> "But the C.L.C. was insisting that the third party would have to be a Canadian", Wirtz said.

I said yesterday that Mr. Wirtz came here to plant the seed of disruption and not to clean up the situation in Canada. Now the cat is out of the bag. That is why he was here and that is why Reynolds, the under secretary of labour, was here following his visit. At the same time the A.F.L.-C.I.O. president, George Meany, issued a statement bitterly attacking the Norris royal commission which had condemned the leadership of the seafarers' international union in Canada. "The S.I.U. deserves the support of all A.F.L.-C.I.O. affiliates in its fight against the destruction of free trade unionism in the Canadian maritime industry", Meany said in opposing the Canadian government's proposal to establish a government trusteeship over the S.I.U. of Canada.

This was the finest hour, Mr. Chairman, of Mr. Jodoin and the Canadian Labour Congress. But I want to point out that this is the same Mr. Meany who in 1953 kicked Mr. Banks' friend, Thomas Gleason, out of the A.F.L.-C.I.O. and at a convention in Philadelphia called him the associate of hoodlums and gangsters. Now he is backing Banks and Gleason.

I want to submit to the house that the Wirtz and Meany statements bring Canada and Canadians to this realization. First, here is an undisguised challenge to Canadian sovereignty. Second, here are American attempts to discredit this parliament and an outright appeal for defiance of its laws. Third, here is a statement designed for outright warfare along the whole maritime front unless wiser and cooler heads prevail, as the member for Winnipeg North Centre pointed out. Fourth, here is an indictment of this government's indecision and its subservience to Washington.

Mr. Byrne: Who wrote that?

Mr. Starr: I want to point out again that this government has done nothing to cement relationships between Canada and the United States. The Hyannis Port meeting was a nice social affair. Let us get on and pass this resolution.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. MacEachen thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-102, to provide for the placing of the maritime transportation unions of Canada under the management and control of trustees.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the second time? Next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Some hon. Members: Next sitting.

Mr. Pickersgill: Next sitting of the house.

Mr. Speaker: Next sitting of the house.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MEMBERS' TRAVELLING EXPENSES

Mr. Speaker: Before the house adjourns may I ask leave to table an extract from the minutes of a meeting of the commissioners of internal economy held on Thursday, October 3, 1963, with reference to members' travelling expenses.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Will the house leader inform us as to the business for tomorrow?

Mr. Pickersgill: Tomorrow we will start with the second reading of the bill respecting the trusteeship which has just been given first reading. In the event it is completed during the day we will then take the two bills which the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources has been patiently waiting to bring forward since September 30. We will then go on with the resolution stage of the vocational training measure, and if there is any time left during the day we will make a beginning on the estimates of the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. Churchill: If the trusteeship bill does not pass the house tomorrow, is it the intention of the government to ask for a sitting on Saturday to deal with it?

Mr. Pickersgill: As hon. members will have noticed there is a notice in Votes and Proceedings which will come up tomorrow. I intend to confer with my colleagues and also with hon. gentlemen opposite and will endeavour as early as I can tomorrow morning to indicate what the government's intentions are. It might be that one can get an indication from hon. members opposite that the business suggested for tomorrow might be dealt with expeditiously. Certainly the government does not desire to ask hon. members to sit on a Saturday if that can be avoided and the public business done.

It being ten minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRIVILEGE

MR. LAMOUREUX—PARTICIPATION IN VOTES IN HOUSE

[Translation]

Mr. Lucien Lamoureux (Stormont): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. In yesterday's edition of the Ottawa Journal, Mr. Richard Jackson wrote that I did not take part in two votes of the house since September 30.

Anyone who reads Hansard for October 1 will understand quite readily why I abstained from voting at that time, even though I was in the house.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

STATEMENT BY SECRETARY OF STATE RESPECTING EXTENDED SITTINGS

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might be permitted, before you call the motion standing in my name, to say a brief word about the business of the house. It might be that we would not necessarily deal with the motion after I have said this.

I think all hon. members are aware that the motion was put on the order paper because of the difficult situation in which the country finds itself at the present time. The government realizes that it is an inconvenience with as short notice as this to ask hon. members to sit on Saturday, but I would like to be allowed to remind hon. members that we are in a rather difficult position, particularly with respect to supply. Perhaps it is not altogether realized in the house that ten days of this session will have to be taken up—unless they are foregone and there is no suggestion they should be—with supply motions; and in view of the fact that only one department has been disposed of and another not completely disposed of, I do not think, bearing in mind past practice, that we could reasonably anticipate much less than 20 days on estimates, which makes 30 sitting days.

If we are to get this session finished by the end of the year, which I am sure all hon. members would like to do, this is a fact of life, in addition to which there is some difficult and contentious legislation and some legislation that may not be contentious but still is important and deserves to be seriously debated. This is a problem not just for the government; this is a problem for the whole house.

It had been my thought that perhaps the most satisfactory way of dealing with it would be to have a motion adopted which would give us the power to sit on Saturdays whenever it seemed necessary in order to make progress on the estimates, but I am not going to ask the house to do that without proper notice. We have a very important bill before us which the government and all hon. members have indicated they feel should be disposed of, and we have two other matters that are important in the sense that the elections in the Northwest Territories will be governed by them. But I am wondering whether it might be possible to avoid putting this motion at all provided there was some other way by which hon. members thought adequate progress could be made today. Since I have not had the opportunity for the usual consultations I thought I might put the matter to the house and see whether we might be able to resolve it without the necessity of my moving the motion.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, the difficulties that face the house with regard to the organization of business are pretty well known to hon. members, and what the Secretary of State has said with regard to the estimates is quite correct. We have quite a problem to deal with the estimates. In a year when an election is held it is just inevitable that in that calendar year there is a restricted time for estimates. I made a survey last year and compared four election years. That survey showed clearly that the house either has to shorten the period for the study of estimates or not pass the estimates completely at all.

We are now in that position in this calendar year. The house has to make a decision whether we will telescope the time for estimates or whether we will drift on and not pass them all. I am not going to stir up any political discussion as to what was done last year or anything of that nature, but this is the situation that faces the House of Commons in a year in which an election is held.

I suggest that this particular motion stand so that we will have a little time to consult together and propose various plans for the allocation of time during the balance of the calendar year. It may be that we can work out something that will be satisfactory.

In so far as today is concerned, if the debate on the bill which is to be the first item of business to come before us is not prolonged, I presume it would then be possible to go on with the other two bills that have been mentioned. I have not had time to consult with the members of our party, but my own preference would be to sit a bit longer today rather than to sit on Saturday. Second, even if we feel that Saturday sittings are necessary I would prefer that consideration of this matter be postponed and that Saturday sittings, if we have to have them, come later in this calendar year.

In conclusion may I just say that I think it would be agreeable to us to sit longer hours today if necessary, rather than reassembling tomorrow.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, we recognize the problem that faces the house at the present time, and are quite prepared to co-operate in every reasonable effort to get the business of the house through. We know it is absolutely necessary that adequate time be given to the departmental estimates because this gives individual members an opportunity to deal with their respective problems. We have not had an opportunity of discussing this in our party either, but I believe the suggestion that has been made, that we sit tonight even up to ten o'clock if necessary, will be satisfactory; and it might be preferable in the circumstances rather than sitting tomorrow.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think the Secretary of State is to be be commended for his suggestion that we not proceed with his motion at the moment but that we be given time to consider the points he has raised. We are all aware of the problem facing us with respect to getting the estimates through, and I think we would all admit that we have to find some way in which we can do this in the amount of time there is left in the calendar year before another session starts.

I would suggest that the question of whether we sit tonight or tomorrow for the purpose of getting the trusteeship legislation through, as well as the whole question of what to do about our sittings, be discussed through what are sometimes referred to as the usual channels but which seem to have broken down a bit of late. I am suggesting to the Secretary of State that he resume the very commendable practice he carried on in the early part of the session, of calling in the house leaders of the various parties to discuss these matters. I know the problem this raises, but I suggest that common sense dictates that if we are going to deal with the business of the house, a representative of every group in the house, by whatever name it is called, should meet with the Secretary of State to work this out.

I think if we do have such a meeting today we can can come up with some solution to the problem. I urge that nothing be done at this point, but that the representatives of the various groups have a chance to discuss the matter with the members of their parties and that the Secretary of State call a meeting of the party representatives later this day.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the house that as a matter of courtesy, and shall we say fair play, certainly without prejudice to any statement made by me, we do hear this morning from the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire).

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Surely, Mr. Speaker, it is important, in order to speed up the business of the house, to have the opinion of a political party which includes 13 members.

It would be easier to co-ordinate the business if our group of 13 members is consulted than otherwise. As far as we are concerned, we think it is normal that these things be discussed among the parliamentary leaders in order to reach a solution, so that the business of the house be accelerated as much as possible.

From what I understood of the statement made by the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill), he is anxious to see the trusteeship bill pass today or tomorrow and we have no objection to that. On the other hand, as far as Bills C-83 and C-84 are concerned, even if there are agreements between the parliamentary leaders of the various parties, we wish to point out that we would not want to put a blockade on the passing of those bills but that we think we are dealing with very important legislation, particularly the bill respecting the delimitation of the Nunassiaq territory and that we could not accept, at least under the present circumstances, a speedy consideration of that bill in as much as it is lacking in precision and clearness and it does not contain the full information we would like to have. Besides, we just pointed out that fact to the leader of the house and that, without any intention of filibustering. But those questions are very important to us and we want to consider them. Therefore, and as was done in the past, we suggest a meeting between the parliamentary leaders of the various political parties including ours, to discuss the situation of the business of the house at the present time.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to deal first of all with one point raised by the hon. member for Lapointe. Let me say at once that this government has no intention of seeking to put through any piece of legislation without allowing hon. members who want to debate any point of principle to do so. There is no thought whatever of suggesting that if there is any intention of debating the substance of this bill, that will be a condition of anything else; because that is what parliament is for, to debate these matters. There will be no attempt on the part of the government to push this bill through until hon. members are satisfied that they have had their say before the matter is brought to a vote. I am referring to the bill in connection with the territory the name of which, because of my poor knowledge of Eskimo, I cannot pronounce.

As to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, I think it would be satisfactory to the government if we could reach an agreement now that it would be possible at five o'clock to revert to motions to settle this question for the rest of the week. Speaking as house leader and also for the government, we in other words, do not want to be denied the right which we now have to move our motion; but if it could be agreed now that, in the event of our not being able to find any satisfactory solution, we could revert to motions at five o'clock and have freedom to deal with the matter, I think it would be very helpful; and it would save the time of the house if we could have discussions through the usual channels about this matter.

I should like to say at the same time that I appreciate very much indeed the co-operative and understanding way in which this matter has been approached by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre and indeed by all those who have spoken. If we could have this understanding that the house would permit us to revert to motions to adopt whatever procedure may be agreed upon or, in the event of no agreement, that the government may go ahead, should it still feel it is necessary to do so, with the motion, I think this matter could be postponed for the time being.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, we are quite happy to give unanimous consent to the suggestion that the government be permitted to revert to motions at five o'clock and then take up this motion, if necessary. However, I think it would be desirable between now and five o'clock that the Secretary of State consult with representatives of all parties on this side so that we may know what is intended when we reach five o'clock.

Mr. Pickersgill: I shall be glad to arrange an appropriate meeting as soon as I can.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to the suggestion of the Secretary of State?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Then it is agreed.

TRADE

WHEAT—STATEMENT BY MINISTER RESPECTING MARKETING POLICY

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the house will recall that yesterday I endeavoured to make a rather lengthy reply to some questions which were put to me about Canadian-United States wheat marketing policies, and it was suggested that I might instead make the statement today on motions, which I am very happy to do.

I said in the course of my reply to an hon. member that Canada and the United States are competitors in world wheat markets, friendly competitors but very keen competitors. I said that we were each interested in getting as large a share of world markets as we could, and also that we had a very great interest in stability. That is why we are both members of the international wheat agreement, and it is why we have had from time to time consultations about our respective wheat policies. I recalled that when the joint committee on trade and economic affairs was established some years ago a subcommittee was established at the official level just for the purpose of discussing our respective wheat policies, and in particular at that time surplus disposal, which has been carried on in the United States over the years on a very large scale. I also said there were many times when our two governments have not always seen eye to eye, when we have made representations the one to the other.

This is natural and normal, since we remain competitors, even though, like wheat importing and exporting countries generally, we have an interest as members of the international wheat agreement in the stabilization of the world wheat market.

The wheat marketing systems of Canada and the United States are, of course, very different. In Canada the Canadian wheat board is the sole marketing agency for western wheat. The wheat board sells the wheat at home and abroad and distributes the proceeds to the farmers. No one stands between the farmer and the export market.

In the United States, on the other hand, the domestic market price has been above the price of wheat being offered by competitive sellers like Canada, Australia and the Argentine. In order to meet this competition the United States government has had to pay a subsidy fixed from time to time. In addition, as hon. members know, the United States government has moved very large quantities of wheat under the provisions of public law 480.

The Canadian wheat board, being the sole marketing agency for western wheat, determines its selling prices from day to day, and may enter into contracts of any size and for forward delivery. This it did recently for 500,000 tons to mainland China and nearly six million tons of wheat and flour to the Soviet union.

After the conclusion of the Russian contract the board indicated its willingness to enter into forward contracts also with certain of its regular customers, including Japanese buyers. It seems to me this was a sensible and forward looking policy, since the board is desirous of retaining the business and the good will of its regular customers.

The United States administration has taken exception to this policy and has let its views be known to the press, as well as to the Canadian wheat board and to the government. All I can say is that I believe the wheat board has been acting in the long term interests of the western farmer, and in a way designed to promote stability in world wheat markets. If, over the years and recently, it had followed a less far seeing policy, I do not believe those in need of wheat would have turned as they did to Canada in the first instance for such a large portion of their requirements.

I am sure all hon. members on all sides of the house will agree that it is of the utmost importance that the wheat board should take the long view. Even with these large sales Canada will still have a large carryover at the end of the current crop year. We intend to remain competitive, to retain our regular customers and their confidence in our marketing system, and to build new markets.

I trust we shall also continue to have the co-operation of the United States administration in doing what can be done to stabilize world wheat markets.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I hope the house has followed with interest and deep attention the remarks which have been made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. What the hon. gentleman has said about the marketing of grain was accurate and succinct. It was not altogether complete, of course, and the suggestions I am about to make will, I trust, add weight to what has been said.

We have been operating in Canada, through the Canadian wheat board, a type of marketing which I think ranks with the best in any country in the world. Because of lack of knowledge on the part of many people in Canada, some of them in high places, about the way in which the wheat board operates, attacks are occasionally made on the board for which there can be no justifiable foundation.

The matters which are now under discussion were, of course, considered at the time we set the policy in connection with the China wheat agreement. In connection with this long term agreement we held to the view that we could set a fixed price for the period of each contract. This fixed price basis has been followed by the board as a regular policy, without any objection being raised until the present time. The minister was correct when he pointed out that this was the established practice of the wheat board, with the full knowledge of our competitors.

The second point I wish to make is that we have established what I call a rule of law in the sale of grain on world markets. We have set an example to nations which produce surpluses of other types as to the way in which they can bring a rule of law into the marketing of their products. Until the last two or three weeks I was very proud of the co-operation which existed among the leading exporting nations of the world in dealing with their customers, passing information back and forth and maintaining the confidence of each.

During the last two weeks it looked as if we were reaching the breaking point in the confidence that we must have if our Canadian wheat board officials are to divulge all our Canadian information to our competitors as they divulge their information to us. I would hope that the minister, at his level, would bring to the attention of his United States counterpart the fact that we want to maintain this friendly co-operation and rule of law in connection with the handling of grain in the world through this international wheat agreement. We would hope that he would restrain his officials, and if necessary himself, from making statements which are harmful to the interests of one of the countries co-operating in this group. I do not believe we should allow our officials to stand alone on this question. I think if you do it over the telephone you can make it very clear to the secretary of agriculture that these are views which, as Canadians, we all support, and that we support the Canadian wheat board.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I just want to say to the Minister of Trade and Commerce that we would like to support him in his determination to maintain the selling procedures that the Canadian wheat board has followed in the past. I should like to say to him also that we feel it is both right and desirable that the wheat board ditions and terms equally favourable as they gave in the special sales to mainland China and the Soviet union. If these forward pricing arrangements had been carried on in the past, and the minister tells us they had, then we support him in his contention that they should be continued in spite of objection from the United States.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the events of the past few years in relation to the marketing of wheat have fully vindicated the establishment of the Canadian wheat board as the sole marketing agency of wheat and certain coarse grains in this country. The huge surpluses which had been built up would have resulted, under an open market situation, in very depressed prices for the farmers. Now the shortage of wheat in certain areas of the world would have resulted in a very rapid increase in the world price which would have benefited not the farmers who grew the wheat but the speculators on the various wheat exchanges. Therefore the organization of a national wheat marketing policy has been fully vindicated by the present situation, in that the farmer is going to get the full return from whatever wheat is sold and the purchasers of wheat, who are important, are not going to feel that they have been exploited because of an unfortunate famine situation.

This does not mean, of course, that we think the Canadian wheat board should drop its price in order to get orders. It was for this reason I was concerned when the report came from Washington that the Canadian wheat board had dropped its price 6 cents a bushel in order to get a contract with mainland China. However, I believe we have to leave it to the good judgment of the Canadian wheat board to get the best price they can.

I was relieved yesterday when the minister denied the statement which was made by a United States agriculture spokesman to the effect that on September 20 a representative from Canada had assured the United States representative that no more fixed price agreements would be entered into following the agreement with the Soviet union. I am glad the minister has assured the house and the country that such fixed price agreements will be continued, because they are in the interests of the farmer on the one hand, and fully demonstrate to importers of wheat that we are not anxious to allow speculators to take advantage of the unfortunate situation which has made it necessary for them tc import large quantities of wheat.

I think the house generally will support the minister in the position which he has taken, and will let the Canadian wheat board know that we stand behind the policy they have been pursuing.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The house will appreciate, of course, the difficult position in which the Chair is pending the receipt of instructions from the house. However, I suggest to the house that pending those instructions, as a matter of courtesy and without prejudice to those instructions from the house the hon. member for Villeneuve be allowed to comment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your courtesy to me and to our group.

The Canadian wheat board should not try to minimize the value nor to reduce the price of our wheat because, after hearing experts both in Canada and throughout the world assert that Canadian wheat is of a better quality than any other in the world, we consider that we should not in any circumstance speculate on prices or reduce them. We can meet the competition of all other countries.

The action taken this morning by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) is all to the credit of western farmers and is likely to prove the value of our wheat to our farmers as well as the countries interested in buying our wheat and to promote good trade relations, while maintaining as always a high quality of wheat and taking progressive measures for the development of our foreign trade.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of urgency for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In the light of what has happened in the United States and the criticism about the Canadian wheat board's method of selling grain, would the minister consider having the Canadian wheat board and also the board of grain commissioners appear before the standing committee on agriculture as soon as possible?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I gave some assurance to members on the other side that I would be very happy to see the wheat board appear before the agriculture committee as soon as it is ready to hear them.

Sale of Butter Surplus

AGRICULTURE

BUTTER—STATEMENT ON SALE OF SURPLUS STOCKS

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, since I have had many inquiries in connection with the butter situation I thought I should review the situation at this time for the benefit of hon. members.

As one of the supports provided to the dairy industry under the Agricultural Stabilization Act, butter has been supported by an offer to purchase. In 1957 the level of support was increased from 58 cents per pound to 64 cents per pound. Until that time production and consumption of butter in Canada had remained reasonably in balance. In 1958, with the increase in the support level and concurrent anti-fat publicity, the per capita consumption dropped sharply while production continued to rise. By May 1, 1962 the agricultural stabilization board's stocks of butter either as butter or in the form of butter oil had risen to 168 million pounds. Of this over 70 million pounds had been accumulated during the 1961-62 support year.

On May 1, 1962 a consumption incentive program of 12 cents per pound was instituted, and during that year approximately 50 million pounds more butter was moved into domestic disappearance channels than was the case the previous year. Nevertheless, production for the dairy year 1962-63 exceeded consumption by approximately 25 million pounds. At the start of this dairy year certain changes were made in the support program, including a modest incentive to the production of cheddar cheese, a product that finds ready acceptance in the export market. As a consequence of this and the continuation of the 12 cent consumption subsidy it appears that this year for the first time since 1957 supply and demand of dairy products will be approximately in balance.

In order to reduce storage costs and to conserve quality, older stocks of butter from time to time have been converted to butter oil. While Canada to date has refrained from offering surplus butter on the world market at concessional prices, the fact that the current program now would appear to have the surplus problem under control would indicate that it is appropriate to dispose of at least a portion of the holdings of surplus butter and butter oil. Crop conditions throughout parts of Europe and Asia have been unsatisfactory this year, which would indicate an over-all shortage of dairy products. Accordingly after consultation with major dairy exporting countries the government decided to offer for export the agricultural stabilization board's holdings of butter oil.

Early this week word was received that Great Britain needed supplies of butter to meet imminent shortages which could not be covered because of distance, supply conditions and seasonal factors by Great Britain's normal suppliers. Accordingly the British board of trade asked British importers to submit applications for the import, from any source, of 5,000 tons of butter for delivery prior to November 15. The agricultural stabilization board quoted 1961 and 1962 butter at competitive prices to Canadian exporters who had received inquiries from British importers. To date it is understood that approximately one half of the import licences are being issued to cover butter from Canadian sources.

It is not considered to be in the interests of the competitive position of Canadian exporters to release the price at which the agricultural stabilization board has quoted this butter at this time.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to make any lengthy comments on the details of the statement just given to us today because I think an opportunity will occur later in the sittings of the house to deal with it in more detail. However, I would like to make one observation; that I do hope the government has not forsaken the efforts that were under way to try and get the 20 odd butter surplus nations of the world to co-operate in some form of international commodity agreement that would bring some rule of law into the dairy surplus situation, as we did many years ago in looking after wheat.

LABOUR RELATIONS

MARITIME UNIONS TRUSTEESHIP—STATEMENTS BY U.S. OFFICIALS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister in connection with the statements made yesterday by United States secretary of labour Wirtz, which apparently reflect the opinions of the Kennedy administration on the measure before the Canadian parliament to set up a maritime unions trusteeship.

Has the Prime Minister, either on the hot line between Washington and Ottawa or through the ordinary facilities, advised President Kennedy personally of the indignation of Canadians at the unwarranted affront to the parliament of Canada and the people of Canada by the observations of a man holding the responsible post that Mr. Wirtz does, regarding measures before our parliament and while they are being discussed here?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer the right hon. gentleman's statement and question at some length and crave the indulgence of the house for that purpose, but I might say at the beginning that I have not communicated directly with President Kennedy on this particular matter, as the full account of the statements that were made in Washington yesterday were received only this morning. I refer to the statements made by the secretary of labour and the president of the American federation of labour, statements that were carried in yesterday's press reports.

The Minister of Labour and other hon. members of the house have already expressed their deep concern over both the content and the timing of these statements. The concern that I am sure members of the house and Canadians generally have felt about these statements arises in large part from the apparent failure of both the secretary of labour of the United States government and the president of the A.F.L.-C.I.O. to appreciate fully the fact that the dispute on the great lakes is essentially a Canadian dispute, although of course it has international ramifications and could cause international repercussions.

In all the efforts that have been made to develop an effective solution to this problem on a private basis the failure on the part of the United States labour leaders to recognize this basic fact, that this was basically a Canadian dispute, has been a chief stumbling block. For instance, the insistence of the A.F.L.-C.I.O. negotiators that there should be no provision in any private trusteeship arrangement to ensure that the majority of the trustees be Canadian was indeed a major issue on which private negotiations broke down. The government let the Canadian Labour Congress spokesmen know from the beginning of the negotiations that it strongly supported the stand taken by the congress on this matter, and that the government could accept no private arrangement that did not ensure a Canadian majority of trustees. Any other course would have been unthinkable, and it is surprising that the United States government and labour officials did not realize this.

Another basic fact that has not been recognized in the Washington statements is the failure once again on their part to understand that this dispute—and I have already referred to this—centres around the progressive destruction of free trade unionism and the failure of the president of the seafarers international union of Canada to arrest this progressive destruction of democratic unionism. The objective of the government, and I am sure of the parliament of Canada, of the Canadian Labour Congress and of the Canadian people, is to restore free and democratic unionism in the maritime industry in Canada, and complete freedom of shipping on the great lakes. That is the essence of our position and explains the reason that the Canadian parliament is being asked to do what the S.I.U. itself should have done long ago.

I would hope especially that the statement made by Mr. Meany, rightly described by my friend the Minister of Labour as shocking, is not to be interpreted as an invitation to violence on the part of members of unions. The Canadian government and the Canadian people will not, I can assure Mr. Meany if he needs the assurance, be intimidated let alone impressed by any such statements.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: But, Mr. Speaker, I would appeal to all concerned in both the United States and Canada to act in this matter in a responsible way, so that we can bring to an end as quickly as possible the serious difficulties that have persisted for much too long in the Canadian maritime industry.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the statement made by the Prime Minister was a very lengthy one, and understandably so. We in the opposition share the views of the Prime Minister in this regard.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The statement by Mr. Wirtz was made at a time when he must have believed it would have a maximum effect on Canada's parliament. However, I come back, having said what I have said, and agreeing with the references that have been made to Mr. Meany's quite gratuitous and improper observations, to ask the Prime Minister does he intend to let President Kennedy know how Canadians feel about the action of Mr. Wirtz? One might also say, having regard to the earlier statement made by Mr. Wirtz when he butted in on Canadian affairs, that he is getting "wirtz and wirtz".

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, now that we have received the reports of these statements I will not hesitate to let the President of the United States know exactly how the government and parliament feel about the statements made by a member of the United States cabinet and the head of the A.F.L.-C.I.O.

[Later:]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of his earlier statement that he would let President Kennedy know about the government's disapproval of the interference by secretary of labour Wirtz in a Canadian matter, and also because of the rapidly developing crisis in relations between the two countries, is the Prime Minister considering an early meeting with the President to discuss this and other subjects?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is no such immediate meeting in contemplation, but I am glad to be able to state that I have access to the President whenever I wish to speak to him.

LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRESENT POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Labour. I am sure all members of the house and Canadians at large are relieved that there is some new hope of a settlement on the waterfront. Can the Minister of Labour pass on any further information he may have received from Judge Lippe or otherwise that would inform the house as to how the negotiations are developing at the present time?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, members of the house will be pleased to learn that the dispute is showing signs of settlement. A settlement has not been reached, but there are signs of a settlement in the situation. As a result of meetings convened yesterday by Judge Lippe and which lasted until 3.30 this morning the parties came to a meeting of minds.

I understand that the representatives of the longshoremen's union at a meeting to be held at eight o'clock tomorrow morning will seek authority from members of the union in accordance with the understanding reached this morning with the federal mediator. If that proposed meeting of the membership goes through, the federal mediator will then meet with the parties at noon tomorrow. I think we can have at least some hope we are on the road to a settlement, although I have no ironclad guarantee or anything close to it that a settlement will take place.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I want to ask the Minister of Labour this question. He has more inside information, I presume, than most members as to the negotiations that have been going on between the longshoremen's union and the shipping federation. Has a single shred of evidence been produced to show that there is any connection between the longshoremen's union and the S.I.U., or that there is any relationship between the strike which has been going on in the St. Lawrence ports and the fact that this parliament is discussing legislation to set up a trusteeship over the maritime unions?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I have received no evidence whatsoever.

[Later:]

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if he is now in a position to answer the question I asked him the day before yesterday, as to how long ships now in the St. Lawrence will wait there for grain cargoes.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, after the hon. member asked me the question I made some inquiries, and I find that only the ship owners can give this answer. There is no information that I am in a position to give.

Mr. Harkness: Do I understand that the minister was not able to obtain any information from the ship owners in regard to this matter?

Mr. Sharp: The ship owners will have to make their own decision, and they will not even give a forecast as to how long they will remain.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

BRANTFORD, ONT.—DESIGNATION AS DISTRESSED AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. O. W. Weichel (Waterloo North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. I should like to remind the Prime Minister of his recent statement that he would tell the mayor of the city of Guelph what the government's decision is on the question of designated areas in the Grand valley district. Would the Prime Minister kindly inform me of his decision at this time, as promised?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I had a few words with the mayor of Guelph on this matter the other day. I told the mayor then that I hoped to be in a position to communicate with him before the end of the week. On my return to Ottawa I got in touch with the Minister of Industry. We have had some conversations on the matter brought up by the mayor of Guelph, and I still hope to be able to communicate with him before the end of the week.

Mr. Weichel: I believe the promise was made that an answer would be given today. Was it?

TORONTO—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Yesterday the minister, in replying to a question asked by the hon. member for Greenwood, said he wanted to discuss with the Prime Minister the question of the extension of the winter works program in Toronto. I know he has many very difficult matters on his mind, but I wonder whether the minister has yet had an opportunity to discuss this matter with the Prime Minister; and if so, can he give us any indication of the government's intentions in this regard?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could be permitted to answer this question in view of the fact that I had an opportunity yesterday for a short talk with the mayor of Toronto and other municipal officials. I have reported that talk to the Minister of Labour. We are discussing the matter, and I hope the minister or I will be able to make a statement on Monday or Tuesday next. I am afraid I will not be able to do it before then.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

LOCATION OF U.S. NUCLEAR STORAGE IN LABRADOR

[Translation]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lucien Plourde (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Could he tell the house whether or not the American nuclear arms which will be stored in Labrador, will be located on territory that the province of Quebec claims as its own?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the nuclear arms in question will be stored in leased bases in Newfoundland, and I do not believe that either of these leased bases is in territory claimed by the province of Quebec.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF ESTIMATES BY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. In view of the great dissatisfaction which exists and has existed for some time among employees of the postal department, and the great concern of the general public with regard to the efficient operation of that department, will the Postmaster General undertake to arrange for the referral of the Post Office Department estimates to the appropriate committee of the house?

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I cannot answer the hon. member's question because it is inaccurate.

Mr. Howard: What is inaccurate?

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, how can a question be inaccurate?

Mr. Pickersgill: Most of them are.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

OTTAWA-MONTREAL—USE OF BILINGUAL INSIGNIA BY TRAIN CREW

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

During a recent trip between Ottawa and Montreal, aboard a C.N.R. train, I noticed that the conductor and his assistant spoke one language only. Moreover, and at that time there were six members aboard that train, including the hon. members for Iles-de-la-Madeleine and Richmond-Wolfe (Messrs. Sauve and Asselin), I noticed also that the occupational titles of employees, that is conductor and trainman, appear in English only on their caps. Would it be possible to have those titles appear in French also on the caps of C.N.R. employees?

Mr. Habel: On the back of the cap?

Mr. Caouette: At the front of the cap. You are the ones who have it on the back.

[Text]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have travelled the route between Montreal and Ottawa a great many times, and I find that great numbers of the personnel are bilingual. However, I would be very glad to draw the question raised by the hon. member to the attention of the management of the C.N.R.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOUTH AFRICA—SUGGESTED HALT OF ARMS SHIPMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. A press report from Washington announces that the United States government has stopped approving export licences for commercial arms shipments to South Africa as a first step to halting the flow of arms to that country. Is similar action going to be taken by the Canadian government and, if so, how soon will the government put it into effect?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the hon. gentleman for giving me notice of this question. It is a question which at the moment is under consideration by the government. Indeed, it was considered yesterday and will be considered in the early part of next week. As soon as I am in a position to make a statement about the matter I will be glad to do so in the house.

TRADE

NICKEL—REQUEST FOR EXPORT ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. O. J. Godin (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce relative to the Canadian nickel export position, which has affected Falconbridge Mines. Would the minister tell the house whether he foresees any action by himself or the government which would assist this problem?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the Department of Trade and Commerce and other departments of the government are aware of the problem that has arisen at Falconbridge Mines and is studying this matter. I am not in a position to say at the moment what specific action can be taken, but I want to assure the hon. member that the matter is under very careful consideration.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Cote (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. I am not in the habit of bombarding him with questions.

Has the Prime Minister sent or does he intend to send congratulations to his new colleague, Dr. Linus Carl Pauling, who has just won the Nobel Prize for Peace owing to his vigorous action in favour of nuclear disarmament?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this does not seem to me to be a matter that comes within the purview of the government or the house.

[Mr. Douglas.]

MARITIME TRANSPORTATION UNIONS

PROVISION FOR MANAGEMENT AND CONTROL BY TRUSTEES

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-102, to provide for the placing of the maritime transportation unions of Canada under the management and control of trustees.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in moving the second reading of this bill I point out that it is clear to hon. members that the principle of the bill is to place the maritime transportation unions in Canada under the management and control of trustees. The bill is now before hon. members of the house, and my purpose at this stage is to comment on the bill in more detail than was possible at the resolution stage.

Members of the house, in considering the bill, should be reminded that the trusteeship will cover five maritime labour organizations. These organizations are set forth in schedule B on the last page of the bill. The membership of these unions is as follows: first, the Canadian maritime union, consisting of one local with 500 members; second, the seafarers international union of Canada, with two divisions and consisting of 17,400 members; third, the national association of marine engineers of Canada, with seven locals and 150 members; fourth, the Canadian merchant service guild, with two divisions and 2,480 members; and finally the Canadian brotherhood of railway, transport and general workers, consisting of 13 locals with a membership of 2,297 persons.

Members of the house are also aware that each of the five organizations has its own constitution and a number of collective labour agreements. For that reason it is abundantly clear that none of us should be thinking of trusteeship legislation as applying solely to one organization.

I would like to emphasize that the normal principles of free and democratic labour organizations and the normal employer-employee relationship through collective labour agreements are emphasized in the legislation. It should be clear that the trustees are asked in and empowered by the legislation to manage and control each of the maritime unions; but they are also asked to do all things necessary or advisable for the return of the management and control of each of the maritime unions to duly elected and responsible officers of such unions at the earliest date consistent with the national and public interest of Canada.

In making that statement, Mr. Speaker, I want to underline my view that certainly all the locals and all the unions that are placed under this trusteeship are not being placed in the same category as the particular union which gave rise to this legislation. I want to make it clear that the officers of certain unions have agreed to come under this trusteeship willingly in the interests of cleaning up the situation on the great lakes, and their inclusion in this legislation is certainly not intended to imply that the strictures contained in the Norris commission report which apply to the seafarers international union of Canada apply in any way whatsoever to the other unions involved. I think it ought to be made clear that the inclusion has been voluntarily on the part of these unions in the interests of unionism and in the national interest.

The trustees are to carry out this principle of restoring the management and control of the maritime unions to duly elected and responsible officers. The trustees will be empowered to establish advisory councils, to recommend changes in the constitution or bylaws of the unions, to supervise and tender advice to bargaining committees in the negotiating of collective labour agreements, and to carry out the normal management and control of union affairs. The intention of the legislation, and it has been prepared with this intention in mind, is that the trustees will, in so far as it is possible, administer the operations of the unions referred to as nearly as possible in accord with properly and democratically operated labour organizations.

Having said that, it is also clear that the trustees will be asked to undertake a very heavy responsibility, and they will be asked to resolve a very serious and critical situation. For that reason they will have power and authority to deal with any situation that may arise and with which they may be confronted. This power and authority is provided in the legislation. This authority of the trustees is further strengthened by penalty provisions against any obstruction of the trustees or any withholding of documents and information that may be required by them. It is a natural course of events that as well as supervising the employer-employee relationship, the investments of union members in their respective organizations must be protected. This is also provided for in the legislation. Members of the house will have noticed that reference is made to a building corporation, and provision is made for the trustees to exercise management and control of this corporation.

Hon. members will appreciate that it is difficult to know fully what may have transpired within any union since the date of the report of Mr. Justice Norris. For this reason there is provision in the bill for a preserving status. There is provision empowering the trustees to apply for a court order to declare void any transaction entered into on or after the 6th day of July, 1963, pursuant to certain provisions which are spelled out in the legislation. Similar authority is given to the trustees in another part of the bill. In other words it is desirable that a status quo should have prevailed since the receipt of the report of Mr. Justice Norris. In addition, provision is made that an annual report is to be made to the Minister of Labour by the trustees, and that report shall be laid before parliament.

Naturally members of the house will want to examine carefully each detail of the legislation so as to ensure that the purposes of the trustees will be carried out, that the legislation will be effective, and that the trustees will be able to operate effectively. There has been some question about why this legislation continues for a period of five years. Naturally it is hoped that it will not continue for this period of time. I assure hon. members that consideration was given to providing for a shorter period. As hon. members will notice from the legislation, every possible provision is included to permit the removal of any maritime union from the trusteeship at an earlier date. It may be quite possible that all the trustees named in the legislation will have been removed from the trusteeship before December 31, 1968.

Having made that comment, I should like to say that we are undertaking a very serious task. We ought it seems to me, to avoid two extremes. One is to make the period of trusteeship so short that it may encourage a restoration of conditions which prevail at the present time in any of the unions; that it may encourage any person to wait out this trusteeship in an effort to once again wrest control over any union for his own purposes. On the other hand, there is a natural reluctance on the part of members of parliament to give these powers to trustees for a day longer than is absolutely necessary.

I have not a closed mind on this point, and neither has the government. All I am concerned with is that the trusteeship be effective. I hope there will be very careful consideration given to maintaining the effectiveness of the trusteeship, and I would not want it to become ineffective in its purposes through having too short a period available to enable the trusteeship to work properly.

In conclusion, both on second reading of the bill and when we go into committee I will consider any further views on this matter, and I hope it will be possible in committee to reach a meeting of minds on this very important point.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, the debate on this question at the resolution stage was featured by a certain amount of recrimination, but the fact is that almost anyone can share some of the blame for the existence of the situation created by Mr. Banks. Certainly it is easy to point the finger at a former government—I say government, not governments—and at trade union leaders in Canada. There are some very deep questions to be asked about the behaviour of the management of certain companies in all these dealings, and in this sense I do not think anyone can take a great deal of pride in the efforts we are now making to clean up the situation. I do not want to go into recriminations again; I just want to speak for my party and not for anyone else, but I presume that along the way other people will speak as Canadian nationalists with regard to this whole matter.

I have had some dealings with the S.I.U., since it happens to have a branch in my constituency. Members of my party organization belong to the S.I.U., and I have had quite a bit of contact with them. I know that this measure may cause trouble in my own area owing to the fact that the port council, which consists of a number of unions, do associate with the S.I.U., and the longshoremen are likely to take some steps. The repercussions at the local level are obvious to me and other members who have to deal with the S.I.U. Already we have had evidence today of the repercussions at the international level. It seems to me that we need a fundamental unity in our approach to this matter, which I suggest should be an approach based on Canadian nationalism.

When I say that I do not mean that we should contradict any of the arguments put forth by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre about the value of international unionism. I happen to be a member of an international union, and this union to which I belong would be most ineffective in Canada were it not for its international associations. That is a fact. What I mean by the term "Canadian nationalism" is that we should see that the autonomy, not only of the Canadian sections of our unions but also of our legislation, of Canadian law, Canadian control and Canadian rules and regulations pertaining to the freedom of Canadian business, is respected.

It is very apparent to anybody looking at this question that despite what I thought was a certain amount of humour and needling with regard to the Prime Minister meeting President Kennedy on this matter, we have to look at the reality of the United States political associations and at the associations which encircle President Kennedy. If we do that I think we will all see the point that it may be very necessary for the Prime Minister to go directly to Washington, and not to go there cap in hand. I think we have to recognize that the President is surrounded by a very powerful group of people who, in effect, are not within the congressional framework. One of the bases of the Democratic party's power in the United States and that of President Kennedy, is the very close association he has with some trade union leaders. It is obvious that this is why secretary Wirtz has made the statement he has. It is obvious why there has been all the difficulty in the negotiations; that these labour leaders with whom Mr. Hall is associated are very important to the success or to the power of President Kennedy.

To say this is not to stick one's neck into an American situation, but just to recognize a reality. It seems to me that our Prime Minister has to approach the president and the American people from this point of view. If we are to be sacrificed in terms of interference on the basis of President Kennedy keeping a united front in his political support, then we are in terrible trouble in our association with the United States.

One of the factors which was instrumental last winter, when we had another example of the state department's interference in Canadian affairs, was a sort of follow-up which was reflected in our political campaign, a tremendous fear that maybe we might alienate the Americans. Editorials were written across the country expressing great fears about how we must get along with the Americans and saving that our economies are so interrelated that it would be terrible if we lost their confidence in our dealings with them. It has become very much a partisan political issue. I think the Prime Minister has to realize that it has been recognized, and he can be criticized for the fact, that he took the stand that he has a particular personal association or, if you want to put it, comradeship with the chief executive who governs the United States at this time; that is, in contrast with the previous prime minister of this country.

This, it seems to me, underlies the responsibility he faces at this time in his relationship with the Kennedy administration. Let us not make any mistake about it by assuming we can approach this difficulty as between labour union and labour union and the Minister of Labour and the secretary of labour. The Americans do not operate in this way. Everything focuses upon the top. We tend to hide this fact in our organization, but the Americans never do. I think one thing that is necessary in this particular dispute involving Canadian nationals is a direct approach to President Kennedy to make sure that the consequences of this measure will not be destroyed by the kind of United States interference of which we have already seen a suggestion. There will be difficulties enough here in Canada in implementing this trusteeship without having to put up with that. One of the reasons we would hope there is fundamental unity in this house about getting the legislation through is just to let the Prime Minister know that he has absolute support in this regard.

One matter which was not touched on by members speaking on the resolution stage is this; I want to mention it here, and I do so because I have had a close relationship with the S.I.U. hiring hall and with members of the union. The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George referred to an aspect of it last night when he said there is no doubt that at the present time Banks still has control of the membership of the S.I.U. At least that is what I gathered from what he said. This control, I should like to point out, is not only a bureaucratic control which dictatorial methods have enabled him to deepen. It is a control based on a tremendous respect on the part of members of the S.I.U. I had one conversation with them when I was trying to point out to them that an attack with baseball bats on a man in Fort William in his own home was a kind of action that could not be understood. But these men were justifying it. They were saying well, the guy—I will not go into the obscenities which were used—the guy was a bad character. They could not see that this was not an approach which should be used on anyone who came into conflict with Mr. Banks.

I asked them what it was about Banks they liked. They liked him because he was tough. They told me stories about Banks himself moving in with his fists. You must realize that the kind of person who works on the lakes, the man whose work has so little permanence—a situation which in so many cases is actually fostered by Mr. Banks—has the kind of background and education which gives him great respect for the tough guy.

I asked them whether it did not bother them when they heard the details of Banks living in luxury in Montreal and the fact that he had these Cadillacs and mistresses and things like that. Quite the reverse. Many of them seemed to enjoy a vicarious satisfaction that their guy was doing as well as or better than anyone else in the country. One of them put it "I like to think that our man is doing as well as the guy who owns Canada Steamship Lines". These are the kind of people who are members of the S.I.U. and who give Banks his support.

One of the things we must do, and you cannot do this now, but later, ties up with the newspaper which Banks has used for his own purposes. One of the most important things the trustees will have to do is take control of that newspaper and begin, not with any vindictiveness, to use another approach to convince the members that they can develop some kind of democracy within their union.

In this regard there is something else which appears to me to be of importance, particularly as expressed by the hon. member for Cape Breton South; and this is the inability of some people, it seems to me, to recognize the difference between a corporate structure and the trade union structure as it exists. We expect and demand some kind of democracy from the unions, yet it is very difficult for them to retain democracy; and one of the main difficulties is the attitude of the people who control corporate structures. I have had too many senior executives of companies tell me they like to sit down and deal with one man, a tough character, and hammer out a firm agreement with him. I recall, a few years ago, an executive saying "We don't want to fool around with all these crummy locals where you get involved in wildcats. We want to sit down and talk tough with one guy who has responsibility."

This is why Mr. McLagan refers to Banks as the best paid union leader in Canada. This is why he has such a respect among corporate people. We have to realize that the union structure and the corporate structure have very few similarities, and that the manager or leader of a corporate structure does not give a hoot about the democratic situation in a company or a union; he wants to deal with responsible leaders. And of course Banks can offer the head of a corporation, in his union dealings, a bunch of followers who do exactly what he says.

My hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre was quoting the directors of Canada Steamship Lines. I happen to know one of them personally as well as in a business way, Mr. Ambridge, who I understand is a friend of Mr. McLagan. Mr. Ambridge has had excellent relations in his own company in Abitibi. He has gone out of his way, in a sense, to encourage union democracy, and the very fact that he is on the board of directors points up the pressure in a corporate structure when it comes to its attitude toward a democratic union. Here is obviously a case, it seems to me, where the directors of Canada Steamship Lines have ignored the implications of what is involved in dealing in this cosy, face to face situation with a man who has dictatorial control over a union.

I should like to emphasize that this attitude is very much in a way an importation from the American business scene and the American union scene. A few years ago, not long after I was elected, a knock came on my door one evening. I answered it, and there were about 20 men there, workers on the pipe line. They were all raising cain about conditions. I said to them, "Why don't you go to see your union stewards?" "What union stewards? We don't belong to any union." I said "Well, you do belong to a union if you are working for the pipe line contractor," and I was able to prove it to them. They had belonged to a union for about three months and they had been paying to this union, but they did not know it. The union did not get around to setting up any kind of organization for them. The details had been worked out with the union before the contract had been settled. Some hon. members may wonder why some of us are still bitter about Trans-Canada Pipe Lines, and that is one of the reasons.

When I went to speak to the pipe line contractors they put it down, as they said, in cold turkey. They said "Why should we get involved in all the organizational grievances that develop on the site? When the union comes along we sign a contract and let them deal with the matter. We have dealt with these people all through the United States. The union comes in and sets things up and we never have to worry." This, Mr. Speaker, is the businessman's attitude, the executive attitude. This is the explanation for the fact that, aside from the one shipping company, we have had such a disgraceful response throughout this whole matter from the shipping magnates. I believe this fact needs to be emphasized because somehow people seem to believe, largely as a result of anti-union propaganda, that there must be some kind of democracy in a union, but they tend to apply some different principles of morality to business executives. It is the business executive who, in many ways, is so wrong.

One thing about this legislation that is not very clear, and perhaps it cannot be spelled out, is that the trustees cannot be put at arm's length in their dealings with the membership. I know the hiring hall at Fort William, and it is a well kept, clean place which offers social amenities to the seamen. Unless the trustees are able to have the same kind of contact with the men, the same kind of dealings with the membership and with the men who run that kind of set-up, then the chance of insurrection, of wildcat strikes on the basis of one ship, are likely to multiply. This will make the trusteeship a ridiculous thing. For that reason we would like to emphasize that the trusteeship, and the personnel who man it, must be prepared to not be, in a sense, administrators at arm's length. We hope they take the attitude that they have the same responsibility that Hal Banks has had, only with a much different moral and ethical approach to their duties.

Initially they have to start with somewhat the same authority Mr. Banks has when he departs, at least I would hope that would be the case. Then they will have to begin the long job of creating and developing some kind of spirit within these men. I would emphasize again that a reasoned, intellectual or academic argument will not have much appeal for the men who work on the lake boats. Since the crucial point in any labour relationship really revolves around the negotiations in settling a contract, the trustees need to be very much aware that it will be in the negotiation of the new contract, as militant representatives of the men dealing with the company, that they will really have to carry the load. If they do not carry it, then the folk memory amongst men like this and their respect for Hal Banks is going to carry on and, in a sense, destroy the trusteeship.

I would hope, too, that in this whole matter, as the trusteeship moves toward what will be their crisis situation, the negotiation of a new contract, the government will try to insure that at the first sign of irresponsibility on the part of the corporation there will be some kind of face to face discussion between government representatives and these companies. I do not want the suggestion to be turned around and have people say that at the next contract negotiations the companies have to cave in, although I do not know that that would be so bad in the light of the way they caved in to Mr. Banks during the last four or five years.

There is on question upon which I should like to hear from the minister. I can see nothing in the bill that refers specifically to this new procedure the S.I.U. adopted in a belated effort to deal with its reputation, that is the setting up of this ex-naval officer as a one man board to hear grievances. I realize that I cannot refer to the bill specifically at this stage, but I should like to suggest it might be wise to retain this office. I do not know anything about the personality of the man, but one of the things that might be very useful in this period of trusteeship is the continuance of that particular office as it relates to the S.I.U. Perhaps there should even be an expansion of it into a three man board so there may be a possibility for a continuing grievance procedure, particularly in relation to the abuses of the "do not ship" list and things like that. I would carry that into the future in order to give some kind of continuity to the grievance procedure.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, may I say that we are anxious that this bill go through, with the qualifications which were expressed last night as to its timing. We will support the bill and the purposes of the bill. We will support the Prime Minister and the government so long as it shows that it is prepared to make this a very definite issue on which there is no backing down, no caving in, to the kind of pressures we have had revealed already.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, so many of my colleagues in the house, that is learned counsel and some former ministers, have prefaced their speeches with a reference to their long association with the trade union movement that I should like to preface my short interjection by saying that I am also part of the trade union movement. I have been a part of it for a number of years. As a matter of fact this past year, because of the many and varied elections, I have been unable to get back underground to continue my work in the mine. I have certainly been closely associated with unions and realize the feeling of the trade unions when they are told that a Canadian government trusteeship must be imposed upon a section of the labour movement.

While it is true that this procedure appears to be necessary, there seems to be a unanimous feeling that what we are doing is in essence wrong. However, no other alternative seems to be available, and we must impose this trusteeship. Like the hon. member for Timiskaming, I have opposed communists in the trade union movement, that is the political influence of communists and even socialists, and in that connection I have often heard this statement which I thought was attributed to Karl Marx: "The end, after all, justifies the means." I thought this was describing communist philosophy, but just the other day I learned it dated back to a philosopher around the time of the birth of Christ, and it has never been actually established since that the end does justify the means. But somehow or other we have arrived at a situation where, because of the disturbances, rioting and racketeering on the great lakes, this legislation is necessary, and we have to accept the fact that the end in this bill does justify the means.

I know something of the history of Banks and how he came into Canada. As a matter of fact I knew some of the officers of the former Canadian seamen's union, and I understand one or two of them were supposed to be communists or were influenced by Moscow. "Let us rid the unions of communists" became the great battle cry at that time, but now it has been proven there are even worse characters in trade unions than communists. Racketeers of this nature are certainly worse than communists. After all, communism is a political philosophy, while a racketeer operates entirely for his own ends. This should serve to remind us that in what we do today in other fields of organized labour, we cannot be too sure that we will not leave a greater mess—pardon the expression—than the mess we are seeking to clean up.

The hon. member for Port Arthur has suggested that big unions tend to support the government of the United States. I believe all of us feel this is true, but I would draw to his attention that this might also apply in Canada should big unions become the major supporters of any political party. In fact I would warn against either big labour or big business becoming the main supporter of a political party.

I was a bit disturbed yesterday afternoon when the Leader of the Opposition, who after all was the author of the much heralded bill of rights, suggested without apparently a shred of evidence that the officers of the I.L.A. were carrying on the strike on the St. Lawrence in sympathy with Mr. Banks and the S.I.U., and in order to prevent the passage of this bill. This is not guilt by association but rather guilt by coincidence. It just so happens that the members of the I.L.A., after long and protracted negotiations in an attempt to lift themselves out of rather deplorable conditions which have been described by some hon. members of the New Democratic party, found it necessary to resort to strike action. Certainly those conditions which were described are not in tune with the times. It was pointed out that a labourer or stevedore may be called out to work in the morning and then sent home without receiving any pay whatsoever, and certainly time and a half on Saturdays is not out of place in this day and age.

The workers had a justified complaint, and I believe they have gone a long way toward meeting the suggestions of the shipping federation. These men are not of the type described by Mr. Justice Norris. They are not of the type of the Capones, the Hoffas, and that type of racketeer. That description does not apply to them, and I think it was quite improper for the Leader of the Opposition to make that suggestion simply because their strike coincided with efforts to settle the great lakes dispute.

The Prime Minister and the Minister of Labour have expressed their concern about the statements made by Mr. Wirtz and Mr. Meany with respect to the legislation now before this house. In my opinion the best answer we in this house can make to those statements is for each and every one of us to stand up before one o'clock and be counted unanimously in favour of this legislation.

Maritime Transportation Unions

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether it will be possible for the members of the house to stand up and be counted on this legislation before one o'clock, because it was the Minister of Labour himself who suggested, when he introduced the resolution preceding the bill the other day, that there might be those in the house keenly interested in this unprecedented action who would wish to withhold what they had to say until they had the actual legislation in front of them. He also gave the assurance that once the bill was before us we could speak on second reading on matters which we might otherwise have covered on the resolution stage.

I was one of those members who accepted the suggestion and the commitment of the minister, and that is why I am speaking on second reading, having read the bill now before us. I of course have no desire to hold it up, but there are certain matters regarding trade unionism, the record of trade unionism, and parliamentary legislation to deal with internal affairs of the trade union movement that should be discussed in principle.

So far as I am concerned it is rather imperative that I do so, because I have been a member of an international trade union since 1924. From 1924, at which time due to the existing constitution of the union I could not be a full member because I had to come under the apprenticeship clause. Until 1933 I can say I was an active member of that trade union. From 1933 to 1963 I have not been what may be called in the normal sense an active member of a trade union. If I may put it this way, from 1924 to 1933 I was a member of a trade union because of my occupation, and from 1933 to 1963 I have been by profession an elected member of parliamentary bodies, provincial and federal. But I still maintain my interest in the trade union movement. From 1924 to 1933 I was active in a trade union, but from 1933 to 1963 I have acquired a greater experience and understanding of the trade union movement because in that period of time I had the privilege and opportunity of meeting not only the rank and file members but those in the trade union movement holding official positions. I have also been a member of arbitration boards more than once on behalf of trade unions, and have also attended trade union conventions.

I thought it necessary to outline this background to explain why I felt impelled to speak on second reading of the bill. The trade union movement is one of the most marvellous organizations of democracy that the world has ever known. It operates not only in the economic field but recognizes the democracy of parliament. The trade union movement only asks the democracy of parliament, be it the House of Commons or a provincial legislature, for the protection of its inherent democratic rights. Beyond that, however, the trade union movement—I will not say "opposed"—has always been fearful of parliamentary action to interfere with what are basically trade union principles and the internal operations and privileges of the trade union movement.

That is understandable, Mr. Speaker, because if you look at the interference of parliamentary authority as evidenced by certain legislation in British Columbia and Newfoundland you can understand the fear of the trade union movement as to the possibility of their internal rights and privileges being interfered with by law if there happens to be a government or governments which are anti-labour.

With that background I now come to the situation which we in the House of Commons face at the present time. As a member of the trade union movement since 1924, and still paying my dues, I want to say that the situation we now face is not only disturbing to the members of the House of Commons, who I feel do not want to interfere, but is most disturbing to the trade union movement itself. As was pointed out by the federal leader of the New Democratic party and emphasized by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, we face extraordinary legislation because of an extraordinary situation. If there is one thing that the trade union movement does not want and will try to avoid it is parliamentary decision on a trade union matter.

To me as a member of an international trade union since 1924 there is nothing we hate to see more than that, but we in this group are prepared to face up to the issue. In so doing however, we want recognition of why this situation has been brought about, and recognition that the trusteeship must be removed as speedily as possible. Although I was prepared a day ago to go along with the decision of this group, I must say that I did so with a feeling of regret; but after what has been made evident in statements by the government of the United States and by the president of the A.F.L.-C.I.O. I now go along with this legislation enthusiastically, and I hope to explain my reasons a little later.

May I call it one o'clock?

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much that hon. members allowed me some eight minutes this morning to give the background with regard to why I felt it imperative I should speak on second reading of the most important bill now before us. Just prior to the luncheon adjournment I said that after the recess I would explain why until yesterday it was with some reluctance I felt I had to support the bill and why, in view of the developments in the past 24 hours, I now have no reluctance and will support it wholeheartedly.

May I add to some of the statements I made this morning before I give those reasons. Over the years in Canada our trade union movement has had what is known as national unions and international unions. In the past few years particularly reactionary politicians, reactionary editorial writers and a great many employers have been attacking international unions in Canada on the ground that they are controlled outside of Canada. Some years ago there may have been—I say "may have been"—some basis for that argument, but not for many years now.

In my 30 years as an elected member and 39 years as a trade unionist I have come into contact with hundreds of locals throughout Canada and many local, provincial, national and international trade union leaders. I can say without fear of honest contradiction that by far the greater majority of Canadian trade unions are autonomous, so much so that over the past few years international union constitutions have been changed at international conventions to make it clear that Canadian unions of an international nature have complete autonomy, and even some unions that have not done so by international constitutional change have arrived at an understanding that international trade unions in Canada have complete autonomy.

That is why the extraordinary statement made by Mr. Meany less than 24 hours ago is the greatest betrayal of the international trade movement that that movement has known in the history of North America because by his statement, made without knowledge, understanding or authority, he gives support to the lie that the trade union movement in Canada, in which I include myself because I am a member of a union, does not have complete autonomy.

I said before the luncheon adjournment that I would outline why I am giving complete support to the bill. First, we have the situation where an imported United States trade union gangster, racketeer and goon squad leader has brought about a reign of terror, intimidation, beatings, shootings and bombings in one of our major industries, and no responsible trade unionist or member of the House of Commons can allow that to continue. Second, despite all the efforts of the trade union movement and in particular the Canadian Labour Congress over the years they have been unable to resolve the problem on the basis of its being one of internal trade union administration. Third, every effort by the Canadian Labour Congress and the government of Canada to find a solution has been made impossible by certain United States government authorities' interference in consultation, if not in conspiracy, with reactionary trade union leaders, Mr. Meany and Mr. Paul Hall.

And fourth, that the Canadian trade union movement and the parliament of Canada cannot and will not accept outside domination of our jurisdiction and sovereignty, whether it be in the trade union or in the parliamentary field.

Never in my 30 years of parliamentary life and my 39 years of trade union life would I have thought it necessary, Mr. Speaker, to speak in this way; but this is a matter which has to be faced by all men who take on responsibility. As I have said, I have been a member of an international union for 39 years, and with that background I say it must be made clear by this House of Commons, as it has also been made clear by Claude Jodoin and the C.L.C. executive, to the governmental authorities of the United States and such trade union authorities as Mr. Meany and Paul Hall, that they must keep their sticky fingers out of our Canadian business—and I mean sticky fingers. May I say through you, Mr. Speaker—I doubt whether what I say means anything in the United States but I will say it anyway—that Mr. Meany should be told that he has set back the trade union movement in Canada perhaps 20 years by his interference in our trade union affairs, without any knowledge or understanding of them or basis of responsibility. He has played into the hands of our reactionary editorial writers and politicians and has made it more difficult for those of us who know the truth to insist on the autonomy of the Canadian trade union movement.

Others more capable than I at the resolution stage, Mr. Speaker, from the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) to the leaders of parties and others, have pointed out what we in this House of Commons, which is the sovereign body of Canada, are doing today, and perhaps tomorrow and Monday, might bring about serious consequences. That may be so, but I want to say with all the emphasis of which I am capable that if the government of the United States through its labour department, and the reactionary leadership of the A.F.L.-C.I.O. through Mr. Meany, want to challenge the trade union sovereignty of Canada as well as the parliamentary sovereignty of Canada by taking any action in the United States, trade unionwise, continentalwise, nationalwise or parliamentarywise, to deny and to defy our rights, then God help Canada if we do not accept that challenge.

I also say that both the government of the United States and the trade union movement in the United States as expressed by Mr. Meany should realize this, that if they challenge our exports and our ships because we utilize our sovereign power, they may find it hurts them more than it hurts us, because we are the biggest importer of goods from the United States. To the best of my knowledge, for the first time in the history of this country we have had this extraordinary conspiracy by reactionary trade union leaders and labour representatives in the United States trying to interfere—not only trying but succeeding in their attempt to negate the trade union authority of Canada and the sovereignty of our parliament. I want to express the hope that the government will stand firm on the maintenance of our sovereignty and parliamentary system and tradition. I want to pay my heartfelt respects to Mr. Claude Jodoin and the executive of the C.L.C. for insisting on maintaining a position which will solve our own problems in Canada within the trade union movement, without outside influence or domination.

I cannot sit down, Mr. Speaker, without expressing what I think all of us feel in our hearts, and that is the terrific respect we have for the trade unions of Canada which have been found completely innocent by Mr. Justice Norris of any wrongdoing. We have the finest commendation from Mr. Justice Norris of the way they work as trade unionists. Our trade unions of Canada have agreed, much as they dislike it, to come under a trusteeship, the creation of which is unprecedented and is an interference in trade union affairs, if this means peace in our sea ports and on the great lakes. This is a matter which should not be forgotten, sir; it is the one found guilty which refuses, while those found innocent are prepared to go along with the wishes of the people of Canada, as expressed through their elected representatives to the House of Commons.

I do not think I need say more, Mr. Speaker. As I say, I dislike this legislation; we all dislike it; but in view of all the circumstances and the extraordinary situation which has developed in our country, and in view of the challenge to the trade unions and parliament of Canada in the form of domination by a foreign power, we have no other alternative to take, and I hope we will all be unanimous in supporting the bill before us. However, I sincerely hope the government will recognize that they can "sell" this legislation, both psychologically and by public relations, a lot better if they make the one specific change I have referred to, namely, change the limit to two years, which period can be extended if required. I think that that one change will help bring a greater understanding to the people of the country, and particularly to our trade unionists, of the fact that this is only a temporary measure for two years instead of five.

In closing, may I say I appreciate the courtesy of this house in allowing me to speak for this length of time.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I intend to speak only briefly, but after a careful perusal of the terms of the bill I rise to express my opposition to it on the following grounds: first, because in my opinion it is wrong in principle, period. In my opinion it violates the spirit and purpose of the Canadian Bill of Rights. Second, I oppose it because I think it transgresses established trade union principles which have been recognized throughout Canada to date.

I oppose it also because I believe that in order for it to be effective it must have the support of the great majority of the rank and file of the trade union movement in Canada. As a result of discussions I have had, and as a result of correspondence and telegrams I have received, I am convinced that there is massive opposition to this bill among the rank and file of the trade union movement in this country, and that this opposition is growing daily.

I also believe that if this bill is to be effective it must have the support of the United States government. It is apparent from recent statements made by the secretary of labour, Mr. Wirtz, that we cannot expect any co-operation in the administration of this legislation from that direction. I am sure that as Canadians we all resent this attitude on the part of the United States secretary of labour. I am one who resents it very much indeed. Unfortunately, however, we have to face facts, and when it comes to the administration of this legislation it cannot be effective unless we receive the co-operation of the government of the United States. This must be so because of the very nature of the industry involved.

I oppose this measure also because I believe that in order to be effective it must receive the co-operation of the trade union movement in the United States for the very same reason as I have just given, namely the nature of this industry. It all presents a most difficult problem indeed in the absence of this co-operation. It is obvious from the statement yesterday by Mr. Meany that we cannot expect the co-operation of at least the leaders of essential sections of the trade union movement in the United States in the administration of this legislation; yet, as I say this co-operation is essential if the present measure is to be effective. Once again, like the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) I resent this attempt at interference on the part of Mr. Meany and the attitude taken toward this important problem by the head of an important trade union organization in the United States. Nevertheless, once again we have to face the facts and I am sure the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) will admit that this legislation cannot be administered successfully without the co-operation of the United States government and of those sections of the labour movement in the United States which are directly concerned.

Another reason for my opposition to this bill is that it completely overlooks—has cast aside, as it were—the common sense and democratic strength of the trade union movement in Canada. The rank and file of the trade union movement here have never been presented with this challenge—and I admit it is a challenge—in union affairs to correct the situation which has arisen within their own house. It has been demonstrated that this type of situation can be met by trade unions. It has been done on the Pacific coast. Some hon. members may recall the unpleasant Northland incident. They will also note that there has been very little violence, very few difficulties, in the shipping industry on that coast. In fact we have seen little of the violence which was foreshadowed at one time. Why? It is because the trade union movement in Vancouver would not stand for that nonsense. When the S.I.U. threatened violence and undemocratic practices, its leaders had to pull in their horns because of the action of other trade unionists in the city of Vancouver who accepted their responsibility as Canadians. A good example of this is the Northland affair in which the unions united against the S.I.U. At that time there were hints in the press about violence and all the danger surrounding this situation. These forecasts were not realized because a good number of the unions, supported by the rank and file of their membership, kept a constant vigil on the Northland situation by picketing 24 hours a day. These members of trade unions volunteered their services without thought of remuneration in defence of trade union democratic principles and practice established in this country. They were successful in their efforts, and the S.I.U. gangsters, if there were any around at that time, stayed in their holes and did not appear. Thus, a serious situation in Vancouver was corrected because the trade unions met the challenge themselves and dealt with it from within their own ranks. I think the government has lost an opportunity to present this challenge to the trade union movement. I believe we are underestimating the democratic strength of that movement in Canada and its understanding of the working of free institutions, whether in the union movement or here in parliament. I reach this view after conversations I have had with a number of trade unionists—good, honest people who are firm supporters of the trade union movement and who are strongly opposed to this legislation while, at the same time recognizing the responsibility which the trade unions face today to do something about the present situation.

I urge the government to reconsider this legislation and provide an opportunity for the trade unions in this country to mobilize the tremendous reservoir of democratic understanding, ability and native common sense they possess so that they themselves may have an opportunity to correct this situation in defence of democratic trade union principles and our Canadian way of life. Once again, I urge the government to reconsider the passage of this bill. I ask it to trust the working people of Canada to correct this situation, which they will, if given an opportunity.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): I wonder whether, before recognizing the hon. member who is to follow, I might have an opportunity of passing on to hon. members a piece of information which I have received and in which the house might be interested?

Mr. Churchill: The hon. member would have to revert to motions.

Mr. McIlraith: It is very short, Mr. Speaker, and it is germane to the subject.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order that I raised yesterday, and I intend to raise it on every opportunity that is presented to me by the government. It is that when a speaker rises, no matter what side of the house he is on or what position he occupies, he must first be recognized by Your Honour before he is given the opportunity to speak. I would ask Your Honour to consider this before the minister makes his remarks. I will yield the floor to the minister, but I want to see the rules followed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is, of course, readily recognized by the Chair. I am sure the hon. member will recognize that when two or three hon. members rise at the same time a decision has to be made within a few seconds. In this particular instance the Chair proposes to recognize the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacInnis). However, I understood the minister was rising on some question which I wanted to ascertain before making a ruling as to who should be recognized.

Mr. MacInnis: I appreciate that very much, Mr. Speaker, with all courtesy to you. I fully intend to yield the floor, but I want to draw to your attention that before the minister, or whoever it is, can make his remarks he must first receive recognition from Your Honour, and not just rise and suggest that somebody should yield the floor. I am perfectly willing to yield the floor to the minister, but he must first be recognized.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the minister wish to make a statement?

Mr. Churchill: On a point of order—

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I wish to be heard on the point of order raised, before I am interrupted. I had some information that is properly part of this matter. Under the rules this information can properly be given at this time because the subject matter of the statement is directly related to the longshoremen's strike. I thought the house would be interested in it. The statement is very short. If hon. members wish to hear it, all right. If they do not, I am not making any special request. With regard to the remarks of the hon. member who was going to have the floor, I was not claiming a right to make a speech or anything of that sort. I am one who is most meticulous about the rules, and I thought I was being very courteous to all hon. members when I asked whether I could make this statement.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I now appreciate what the minister wants to do, and that is to speak in connection with the bill that is before the house. The minister prefaced his remarks by saying his statement would be very short. In those circumstances my inclination would be to recognize the minister, on the understanding that the hon. member for Cape Breton South, whom I was ready to recognize, is prepared to yield the floor to the minister.

Mr. MacInnis: I have already done that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Churchill: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I have no objection whatever to any statement the minister may wish to make with respect to the longshoremen's strike. But no one has been a greater stickler for the rules than the minister in the past, and all I suggested was that we revert to motions, let the minister make his statement, and the house would give unanimous consent for that purpose. If it relates to the bill itself, that is a different matter, because then he is entitled to speak, the same as any other hon. member.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is so. I understand it is not a statement usually made by reverting to motions, but essentially a contribution to the debate in connection with the bill now before the house.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, the information that I thought would be of interest to hon. members is this. We have today advised Mr. N. R. Crump, chairman and president of Canadian Pacific Railway Company, that the liner Empress of Canada, which had been standing off Quebec harbour, could disembark her passengers this afternoon at the passenger terminal at Wolfe's cove in Quebec harbour. Arrangements for the handling of the ship were worked out with representatives of the international longshoremen's association at Quebec.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, in opening my remarks I would call the attention of the house to the fact that this statement was in no way associated with the bill that is before us. I do not wish to prolong the matter that is before the house. That should bring a cheer. I would, however, ask, as did the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), that every consideration be given to this question before the government pushes it any further. An appeal was made in this house last night by several hon. members that we keep cool heads about this. I thought at the time this perhaps implied that I was rather excited about it. But I would ask each and every hon. member in this house whether they have given every consideration to the repercussions that may develop should Mr. Meany and Mr. Wirtz have their way and if the statements they have made receive the backing of the unions throughout the United States. Have hon. members considered the repercussions; and if so, why the haste?

The hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr Winch), I think it was, made a statement to the effect that Mr. Meany's remarks of last evening have set the trade union movement back 20 years. There must be some doubt in that particular hon. member's mind, because as I see it, if this trusteeship were to be successful it would be a step forward for the trade union movement. I can only see Mr. Meany's statement setting the trade union movement back 20 years if the trusteeship fails. I agree that we should keep cool heads about this and should give every consideration to the repercussions that could develop from a failure of the trusteeship.

It has also been pointed out on several occasions that five unions are going to come under the trusteeship, four of them voluntarily. Knowing something of the workings of trade unions and trade union leaders, I think I can speak with some authority on this question. I referred last night to the trouble within the trade unions these days being that there are too many professionals in them. By professionals I mean men who have reached the top in particular trade unions and who at no time were ever associated with the particular work involved in that union. In other words, they have gone in as professional organizers and have reached the upper echelons of the executives of different unions, and they do not have a complete understanding of the rank and file members under them. It has been said that four unions have voluntarily or willingly agreed to come under this trusteeship. And why not? In the case of these four unions their doing this provides them with the very thing they have been struggling to get for a number of years; that is, rid themselves of Mr. Hal Banks and his union. They have everything to gain and nothing to lose by accepting this voluntarily. It is not for individuals in this house to set themselves up as judges with regard to what the rank and file members of trade unions in this country may think. But I think it is the duty of every hon. member in this house to express his feelings about trade unions and this particular trusteeship.

I would further ask the government to give consideration to the particular spot in which they have placed these trustees. In view of the actions of Mr. Banks and his goons in the last few years I believe these men will be placed in a very precarious position. There is no doubt that Mr. Banks and his goon squads have gone about this country attacking people in their own homes. I think they have even gone so far as to beat up pregnant women. What is to stop them intimidating and possibly doing bodily harm to the trustees who will be appointed by this government? What is to stop Mr. Banks from spreading his goon tactics?

Mr. Douglas: The laws of Canada.

Mr. MacInnis: Apparently the laws of Canada have not been able to deal with Mr. Banks so far. This raises the point that this government should have acted long ago in this matter. Last night, for obvious reasons, I could not refer to the Norris commission report, but I would call the government's attention to the recommendations on page 311 under the heading "Prosecutions". I think if these had been put into effect previously Mr. Banks would today be in the position he should be in, namely behind bars, where he could do no harm to anyone. The deportation of Mr. Banks or dealing with Mr. Banks in any other way than putting him behind bars will not erase the fact that he will be able to operate in the same way that he has operated in the past, from any location to which he may go in the future. If he is deported he can go across to Buffalo, or to some other area, and carry on his goon tactics just as well from that side of the border as he has from this side. There is only one remedy for Mr. Banks, and that is to put him in a place where he can do no harm. I believe that if this government had taken the initiative and acted on the Norris commission report which recommended prosecution of Mr. Banks, rather than adopting the recommendation to set up a trusteeship, it is quite possible that the trade union movement would not have been faced with this trusteeship. I deplore the continued reference to the free trade union movement, in view of the fact that this trusteeship is now going to be imposed.

Why were those recommendations of Mr. Justice Norris not followed out? Why were the prosecutions not instituted? As I have said before, if this trusteeship is set up, and apparently it is going to be, then members of this house will look to the minister for a report on how this trusteeship is working. We will have the minister rising day after day, as ministers do in connection with so many other agencies in this country, and tell us that he is awaiting a report. As soon as he receives it, he will give it to the house. Then, the following week there will be similar questions and a similar answer will be given. The members of this house will be unable to receive answers to questions about this trusteeship and how it is working. If initiative had been taken on the first recommendation and Mr. Banks had been prosecuted, it is quite possible that today the future would hold brighter prospects than it does when we consider the imposition of trusteeship on the trade unions of this country.

Now, a request has been made by the leader of the Canadian Labour Congress that the trusteeship be restricted to the maritime unions. Well, there is nothing wrong with that request. However, let no one say this is not a precedent. We are going to have a hard time making that statement stick. Let any trade union become involved in a dispute in the future, and someone will come to the government and ask for the imposition of a similar trusteeship. Reference can be made to this as a precedent. No amount of talk can get around the fact that you are, for the first time in any English speaking country, imposing trusteeship upon the free trade unions. The precedent will be established, and you can look for trouble in this field in the future. In fact, if such a trusteeship had been in effect a couple of years ago, something could have developed in the Sudbury area where there were charges flung back and forth between two unions in connection with raiding. This is much the same type of situation.

Again, I say hon. members are not too sure about this. The hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) said a few minutes ago that he was in full support of this trusteeship, but he is not too sure that it is going to work. I am not too sure about it, either. I hope I am proven wrong. There is nothing I would hope for more than that this trusteeship would be successful. As I have said, especially following the statements by Mr. Wirtz and Mr. Meany, I cannot believe this is going to prove successful in any way, shape or form. I repeat what I said last night, that in order to make this trusteeship work, full agreement and co-operation between the govenment of the United States and the government of Canada will be required. Without this full co-operation, no trusteeship is going to work.

As I have said, hon. members who support this measure are not too sure that it is going to be successful, but they are willing to support it. I refer to the remarks just made by the hon. member for Vancouver East. He said that the statement by Mr. Meany had set the Canadian labour movement back 20 years. This is only true in part, because I see this as a great forward step if it proves to be successful. If it does not prove to be successful, then the hon. member is correct and this labour movement is set back 20 years. Most hon. members who have supported this trusteeship have, at the same time, expressed doubt that it will ever work. In going along with these other members, I would sincerely ask the government to give consideration to the repercussions that will follow if the trusteeship does not work. The chances of its working now are only 50-50. I think that a concentrated effort should be made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and the President of the United States to assure that, if this trusteeship is necessary, then the necessary protection and service will be given to Canadian ships visiting United States ports.

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words in this debate. During the past few days we have listened to statements to the effect that Mr. Banks is a criminal, yet we find that Mr. Banks is still free in this country. If he is a bandit or a criminal, why in the world are we tolerating that man in our country? The government has decided to introduce legislation to impose trusteeship on the unions. I feel this trusteeship will not settle anything, if our syndicates as well as our workingmen are still at the mercy of some United States union leaders who, in my opinion, may have given orders which would cause Canada trouble in trying to deliver goods that have been sold to other countries in the world. If this is so, then I think it is time the government took strong action against these outsiders, who are trying to tell us in Canada what to do.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we give our support to union members everywhere in Canada, but we are strongly opposed to certain union leaders who, instead of showing some respect for workers, are exploiting them shamelessly, as is the case within the union we are discussing at the present time.

Certain union leaders, as everybody knows, are paid more than the President of the United States and seem to have things pretty much their own way in labour-management relations. It is time we found out whether those individuals are organizing or disorganizing labour.

Our Canadian workers are not revolutionaries, but some union leaders are. The case of Hal Banks shows quite clearly that we must remain continually on the alert in our relations with such people.

Mr. Speaker, the government should take the necessary steps to encourage in every way possible those unions which are essentially Canadian.

We must stop, in labour unions and elsewhere, taking orders from foreigners who know nothing about our needs concerning labour, production, planning and the economy.

I feel the government would be giving substantial assistance to labour unions if it recognized only worthy representatives and essentially Canadian unions which would be contributing to the development of our national economy.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I should bring to the attention of the house that if the minister speaks now he closes the debate.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, first of all I wish to thank hon. members for their remarks and contributions on second reading of the bill. I will not detain the house for any great period of time, except to make a few comments with respect to a number of points made in the debate.

As is evident in the preamble to the bill, and as is evident from the Norris inquiry upon which the bill in a sense is based, the purpose of this action is not to put free trade unions under trusteeship. The purpose of this action is to restore freedom and democratic practices in the principal trade union that will be affected by this trusteeship.

The additional four trade unions which will be under this trusteeship have willingly accepted, without any pressure or coercion, their inclusion within the trusteeship in the interests of cleaning up this situation. Surely the leaders of these four unions realize what free trade unionism means? Surely they understand the established trade union principles that have been mentioned by hon. members? Yet, notwithstanding these considerations they have of their own volition accepted what might be called this sacrifice in the interests of restoring democracy and freedom to the seamen who are presently denied these practices. That is the purpose of the legislation.

It is also a fact that after careful study and soul-searching the executive committee of the Canadian Labour Congress, and later the executive council of the congress, accepted the necessity of this action and agreed to co-operate with the purposes of the trusteeship. Surely these men understand free trade unionism and established free trade union principles, yet they have said that this is a necessary act to be taken.

Hon. gentlemen have expressed reluctance about the action now proposed, but there is no one more reluctant, or has been more reluctant, to undertake this action than I, because it is unprecedented and extraordinary. But it is done because of the extraordinary difficulties that existed and because no effective alternative had been presented. We did search vigorously for an effective alternative, an inter-union arrangement, but I think hon. gentlemen will agree with me that it was right and proper for the government and the Canadian Labour Congress to refuse an inter-union agreement with the arrangements that had been proposed.

We were willing to pay a price for a private arrangement, in the sense that it would depend upon the consent of many elements in the trade union situation whom we would expect to act in good faith. We were willing to assume good faith, and ready to accept an inter-union arrangement; but surely it was wrong to ask that a Canadian problem should not be determined by Canadians in the final analysis. That was the basic ground for this refusal, combined with the fact that there was no clear provision that the trusteeship could act effectively in given situations when the third person and his nationality were undetermined.

No one who contributed to this debate has proposed an alternative to this action. No one has proposed an alternative that would deal with the situation. That is a fact; and when the Norris commission report came out and the trustee recommendation was under consideration we always came back to the question, what is the alternative to a public trusteeship? No alternative has proved possible, and that is why the government is taking this action.

It is a fact that the trustees can deal with the situation in Canada. What happens in the United States is a matter for the United States government and union leaders in the United States, who are themselves committed to the proposition of civil rights for all trade unionists. In this situation we must rely on and expect co-operation in the United States in order that this trusteeship be made fully effective.

Today the Prime Minister made a statement on behalf of the government with respect to statements made yesterday in Washington. I do not intend to add to that statement, except I think it would be wrong to conclude, as did one speaker this afternoon, that the government of the United States will not co-operate in this situation.

The final paragraph of the statement issued by Mr. Wirtz reads as follows:

> It remains a matter of utmost importance that there still be found a way of resolving these difficulties which will result in strengthening the ties of common interest which link Canada and the United States, particularly in our common use of the waters which we both border. I have expressed through formal channels the continuing willingness of the United States government to seek an accord which will meet fully the public as well as the private interests which are involved here.

We must realize that in this situation, and in the event of repercussions in the United States we shall have to rely upon the good faith and co-operation of the United States government and the good faith and co-operation of responsible trade union leaders in that country.

I was especially appreciative, Mr. Speaker, of the comments made by the hon. member for Port Arthur—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Before the minister continues may I ask him a question? As I read Mr. Wirtz' statement the co-operation was apparently to be determined on the basis of whether or not the Canadian parliament proceeds with the appointment of trustees. In view of Mr. Wirtz' antagonism to the setting up of this trustee board, has the minister been in touch with Mr. Wirtz to ascertain whether the United States government, and its department of labour in particular, will co-operate and carry out the fine sentiments expressed in the paragraph just read by the minister, when and if parliament passes this legislation?

Mr. MacEachen: I accept these words of the secretary of labour which I have just read as an expression of the willingness and interest of the United States government in co-operating in this situation. As I say again, we must in this situation rely on the co-operation of the United States government and leaders of trade unions in the United States for situations which develop in that country and which are beyond the reach of Canadian law. There is no doubt about that.

I was appreciative of the comments made by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) who expressed the importance of united support for this particular proposal. I was also appreciative of the comments of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Turner) who reminded us that in taking this action at the present time we must be prepared to support the trusteeship over a period of time and not weaken in our determination, in the event of future difficulties.

Because of the necessity of having, as I think I have, the assurance of the House of Commons, and because I think the House of Commons is the expression of Canadian public opinion I should like on second reading to have the support of Canadian public opinion and the support of all political parties in the House of Commons for this action expressed in a formal vote.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Pickersgill: Would you call for the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those against will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

[Translation]

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Speaker, I was paired. Had I voted, I would have voted for the motion.

[Text]

Mr. Cashin: I was paired. Had I voted I would have voted in favour of second reading.

Bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

Mr. Douglas: I recognize that the preamble to the bill is discussed at the end of the passage of the bill through committee of the whole. However, I want to raise something that is in the preamble, so the minister will have a chance to look at it and prepare any changes, if he wants to make them.

I draw the attention of the committee to the second paragraph of the preamble which reads as follows:

> And whereas the said report ascribes this situation to the fact that the democratic processes within certain maritime transportation unions have been avoided or undermined to the prejudice of the welfare and rights of seamen and the national and public interests of Canada;

I draw attention to the words "maritime transportation unions", which are used in the plural. Now, the report of Mr. Justice Norris made it abundantly clear that the other four unions involved had a clean bill of health; that they were carried on democratically, that their welfare funds were solvent. The minister himself, in closing the debate just a few minutes ago, paid tribute to the other unions. It seems to me that it is a very serious reflection on the other maritime unions to have this attack, which was supposed to be directed against one union, directed against all the unions. When it says "unions", that means two or more, and that means at least one other union in addition to the S.I.U has been guilty of destroying the democratic processes and acting contrary to the public welfare.

I feel this is probably a typographical error or it is sloppy drafting. However, I draw it to the attention of the minister so that when we come to the preamble, which is generally the last thing to pass, he may prepare an amendment to it.

Mr. Gelber: I should like to add a word to the discussion on this very important subject. It is with reluctance that a trusteeship is proposed over trade unions. The rights of labour are an important part of human rights and fundamental freedoms. Free trade unions flourish in a free society. The purpose of the present bill is not to abridge the rights of labour to organize and to be democratically represented, but to ensure that these rights are protected.

I am reminded of a story told by a southern senator of a fellow who clenched his fists and went down the street swinging his arms. He hit a bystander on the nose. The bystander protested, and the fellow said, "I have a right to swing my arms." The bystander said, "Yes, you have a right to swing your arms, but where my nose begins your rights end."

In exercising its authority on the great lakes, Mr. Chairman, a union has been denying many workers human rights and fundamental freedoms. Acts of terror have been rampant. Men have been dragged off ships, assaulted on the streets, harassed, beaten, bullied, crushed into submission. Raids have been conducted on other unions and their machinery of operation brutally appropriated. In all this struggle over a period of years, where have been the forces of law and order? Why have culprits not been apprehended and dealt with by our courts? How could this state of lawlessness proceed without lawful retribution? Certainly, the guilt is even wider than the union which has been indicted in the court of public opinion.

If, in the past, federal authorities performed their duties in maintaining the laws of this country, how could the government have received a letter from a shipping company acknowledging that it had been bullied into an agreement with a union in defiance of the laws of Canada, without action being taken? What about provincial authorities? The administration of justice is a special responsibility of the provincial governments. How could these lawless events have persisted over a period of years while the guardians of the law turned aside from their duties?

This government has been most wise in exhausting the possibilities for a private settlement. An agreed solution that was both strong and effective, such as the Minister of Labour has assured the house he has sought, would be much preferable. The imposition of trusteeship on trade unions, even for a short duration, is not a happy solution. We need the co-operation of the international trade union movement, since our trade unions are generally part of a Canadian-United States structure, and because our ships are sailing in international waters. If we are denied this support, many pitfalls are open. We could be faced with a challenge from sister unions across the border.

It would be helpful to have the support of the United States administration. In addition, there is suspicion of public trusteeship within Canadian trade unions themselves. More especially, for all of these reasons, it has been necessary for the government to seek patiently for a voluntary and effective solution within the trade union movement. And now, if a government trusteeship is to be imposed, it is important, not only that justice be done but, as wise judges have said, that justice appears to be done. The patient search for an effective voluntary agreement was the path of wisdom. The government, in following this statesmanlike course, is to be commended.

The craft trade union movement of Canada, from the days of Samuel Gompers and the knights of labour, is one of continental growth, and leadership has come first from the United States. In addition, the contribution of John L. Lewis and the united mine workers of America in the development of industrial trade unionism leaves the Canadian unions much in their debt. Many important and progressive craft and industrial unions have provided the core of our trade union movement. Their responsibility is a hallmark of our democracy. The present struggle can be an important turning point in trade unionism on this continent. The voice of the Canadian Labour Congress has not prevailed in the councils of the A.F.L.-C.I.O. in matters concerning Canadian labour.

We may now see a polarization of continental unionism, and a more independent Canadian movement. We are witnessing a failure of continental leadership. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has praised the accommodation within the Canadian Labour Congress of national and international unions. I cannot be as sanguine as he that this era will return. It is a surprising thing that the leaders of the A.F.L.-C.I.O. did not go all out to accommodate the Canadian Labour Congress in setting up a private union trusteeship. The leadership of the international movement is strongly opposed to government intervention and the Canadian Labour Congress was available to serve. Thus, they could have their cake and eat it, provided the preservation of the status quo on the great lakes, or something approaching the status quo, was not their aim.

The report of Mr. Justice Norris is not as helpful as it might have been. He has proposed serious procedures, but has not examined them. An analysis by the commissioner of the constitutional and other practical problems facing a government trusteeship was certainly called for. Did Mr. Justice Norris consult the very able counsel of the royal commission in formulating his report?

In this country, we want to see a free, strong, independent trade union movement give effective leadership in the many important areas of industrial and public life, where labour in Canada has shown such responsibility. The surest guarantee of wise government trusteeship is that the trustees should be reluctant to assume their jobs, anxious to complete their work well and effectively, and return the affairs of the unions to their members, where they belong.

Mr. MacInnis: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Gelber: Certainly.

Mr. MacInnis: I do not really know how to put the question, but the hon. member amazed me by coming forward now with criticisms of the Norris commission report which I feel would have been more suitable on the resolution stage.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, this is an extraordinary remedy, but I assume it is directed towards an extraordinary situation. Nevertheless such legislation, no matter what evil it may tend to be directed towards, must be founded on proper constitutional grounds, and this is the point I would now like to make.

I should say to the minister through you, sir, that this is an issue which is raised in the preamble, which has been referred to by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, and it may well be raised at a later point; but as I bring it to the minister's attention at this stage perhaps he can deal with it now or later.

I first call to the attention of the committee the fact that on August 2, as reported at page 2943 of Hansard for that date, this matter was brought up by the Leader of the Opposition who asked whether the government was concerning itself with the introduction of legislation to implement recommendations of the Norris commission.

Dealing with the question of when the legislation would be introduced the Prime Minister said:

> It would be impossible in the circumstances to have this difficult and complicated legislation prepared within a matter of weeks. It may require a strict examination of the constitutionality of the legislation—

—which I thought was a very sensible observation.

In the preamble to the bill I note these words in the first paragraph:

> It was indicated—

—referring back to the report—

> —that within the shipping industry in Canada an emergency situation has developed that endangers navigation and shipping on the St. Lawrence seaway with a consequent threat to the economy of Canada, the international relations of Canada, and peace, order and good government on the St. Lawrence seaway—

It may well be, and the minister may be able to answer this, that because the federal government has in the past occupied the field of labour relations with regard to matters which are under the competent jurisdiction of the federal government, that occupation permits it to proceed with this legislation by itself, and to pass legislation which may, and probably does to some extent, invade the property and civil rights jurisdiction which was allocated to provincial governments. But, I am concerned with the fact that the government may be attempting to break new ground here by using the words "an emergency situation has developed" in a particular sector of the country, and making reference to the "peace, order and good government" in a particular section of the country.

As you are aware, Mr. Chairman, the British North America Act in section 91 does provide that the federal government may, among other things, "make laws for the peace, order and good government of Canada," but I have never understood this to mean that, should an emergency develop in any one part of Canada, the federal government may legislate in matters not otherwise in its legislative competence. I think this has been held in cases which dealt with emergency legislation following world war I. I am not going to refer to the cases, but there are very definite limitations on the extent to which the federal government may legislate under the guise of an emergency. I think this applies also to the right to legislate in respect to the making of laws "for the peace, order and good government of Canada."

I am not offering this in any spirit of mischief, but in passing legislation of this kind we should be assured by the minister, particularly in the light of what was said by the Prime Minister on August 2, of the basis on which this legislation is founded, and if in effect the constitutional authority is either on the ground of the right of the federal government, having dealt with labour legislation in federal matters, to pass this particular act, or whether the use of these words in the first paragraph of the preamble are significant, and the government is attempting to found the legality of this enactment because an emergency situation has developed in one part of the country and there is a desire to pass laws for the "peace, order and good government on the St. Lawrence seaway." If this is the case, then this is a matter which will require some consideration.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to hold up this bill. Hon. members of this group have indicated that we support the principle, but this is the first occasion that we can express our very great objection to the fact that this legislation is discriminatory. It has been said that justice must not only be done but it must also appear to be done.

One thing becomes clear from reading the Norris report and that is that the maritime industry is in trouble not just because one of the trade unions was controlled by a gangster, Banks, but because a big shipping company was willing to work with that union and with Banks. I do not know if the minister has read the whole report, but in one section Mr. Norris quotes Mr. Dunkerley, after counsel for the commission had questioned the other shipping companies about the difficulties they had encountered with prayer meetings which were used to disrupt their orderly operations, and Mr. Dunkerley makes it very clear that Canada Steamship Lines never had prayer meetings.

Mr. Dunkerley also says that any time they had trouble they could get quick results by going to the top, to Banks. Another thing which is evident to anybody who can read and think, is that Mr. Banks never did anything for nothing. If Banks gave a favour to somebody he got a service in return.

I join with other hon. members in expressing the hope that the government will quit its delay and get on with the processing of the report of the special counsel appointed to inquire into the possibilities of bringing prosecutions against Banks and the shipping companies involved.

Now, however, we get a bill to enact the maritime transportation unions trustees act, and after two days of discussion and after at least half a dozen members have spoken about the faults of one particular shipping company, the minister completely ignores those remarks. Does he feel that the shipping companies are free of guilt, or does he feel this is not the place to mention it? Will there be prosecutions and will the shipping act be amended? The committee deserves to know these things. The labour unions of Canada, which on the whole are clean, deserve to know from the minister what he intends to do. Are we going to have in 1963, as we have had so often in the past, prosecutions and a clamping down on trade unions while people in power, with money and influence, get off scot-free? The people of Canada are entitled to an explanation.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Chairman, we have listened to a great deal from all sides of the house, all favourable to this legislation. The house, in a most impressive display of unanimity, has endorsed a far reaching piece of legislation which I am sure is repugnant in principle to very many hon. members. I can recall the chairman of the war labour board in the United States saying the state must be very careful before it displays its own naked power. In a situation like this we are using the powers of the state to achieve a purpose which must be achieved.

I am very proud indeed of the Minister of Labour, the caution with which he has approached this matter and the thoroughness with which he has investigated all the ramifications before action was taken. There are those who felt that the government should have rushed into action before now. There are others, such as the hon. member for Port Arthur, to whom I listened with a great deal of attention, who gave us an insight into the reasons why the parties to this dispute have been led to the positions they have taken.

Nevertheless the public interest is paramount. The time has come when we all recognize that we must take the step of using the power of the state to dispossess a union leader, whom all of us have come to recognize as an evil force in organized labour. We believe in free collective bargaining. We believe in leaving as much as possible to the free determination of unions and management within the framework that has been evolved for the solution of labour disputes.

This is a situation that goes beyond the normal circumstances of collective bargaining. This is a situation in which the unusual and far reaching action of imposing a government trusteeship has been adopted by, as I said, a rare display of unanimity in this chamber.

It would be foolish indeed to think that by simply adopting this legislation we can anticipate that certain results will follow. There is a very great burden upon those chosen as trustees. As was indicated before, the testing point will come when negotiations for a contract reached their final stage. What kind of contract will be worked out? What kind of democratic union will be worked out within the framework of the trusteeship? What will be the conclusion of the trusteeship? How will it terminate? How will we guarantee that at the end of the period of government operation of not only one union but a group of unions we will have evolved a democratic structure which will be welcomed by the same unions within the ranks of Canadian organized labour that have welcomed government action in these circumstances?

This dispute has taken on an international aspect that again is a little repugnant. I cannot add to what has been said so very well by the Prime Minister, the Leader of the Opposition and the spokesmen for the other parties. There is a challenge to our right to govern ourselves as Canadians within Canadian institutions, and we are seeking to assert this right through this measure. We are confident at the same time that the administration of this measure will be in accordance with the principles of democratic collective bargaining, fully respecting the rights of the parties to the dispute. We are under no illusion with regard to the potential dangers of this task but there is no other choice before us.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I think that the committee is entitled to hear my reasons for voting against second reading of the bill and I wish to take this opportunity to put those reasons on record, so there will be no misunderstanding. In order to avoid repetition may I say at the outset that I endorse fully the remarks made by the hon. member for Cape Breton South who voted with me on this side of the house against the measure. The views expressed by him would have been expressed by me had I spoken on second reading.

I too express surprise at the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Labour voting for the measure, since he is a member of the same union that I and the hon. member for Kootenay West, I believe, are, and since that union, the mine-mill union, has expressed the view that this is a problem which the workers themselves should clear up without the imposition of legislation that imposes upon their freedom. When the parliamentary secretary spoke to the thirteenth convention of the mine-mill union in Sudbury last September he singled out the fact, as reported in the latest issue of the Mine-Mill Herald, that mine-mill was the first international union to endorse the principle of Canadian autonomy for its Canadian section. He stated, and here

I quote the Mine-Mill Herald which has the words in quotation marks:

"This is a move I believe others envy particularly at this moment."

I would assume that implicit in those remarks was a reference to the situation on the great lakes which was confronting the government.

The basic reasons for my not finding it possible to support the measure on second reading are these. I believe that the powers given to the government trustees are much too broad, if they are required at all, a matter concerning which I will have a word or two to say in a moment. I believe the legislation is unconstitutional since in my view it interferes with the property and civil rights of citizens and goes beyond the scope of the powers of this parliament. I believe also that the establishment of a board of trustees with the prime purpose ostensibly to shunt Banks out of his position of power is not going to solve the situation at all. I believe, as the hon. member for Cape Breton South said, that this legislation is going to cause more difficulties than the government is already faced with because I believe we are embarking on an international war between the American sections of the maritime unions and the Canadian sections. I think this is particularly so, because as I understand the intention of the government two Canadian trustees and one American will be appointed. The minister shakes his head so I assume this is not the case. I can only proceed on the assumption that there are going to be two American trustees and one Canadian trustee, which makes the situation even worse.

Mr. MacEachen: Three Canadians.

Mr. Nielsen: This simply points up the validity of my fears and those of the hon. member for Cape Breton South, and others who have spoken against the measure, that international strife will develop particularly because of the exclusion of the Americans.

I think that one thing which perhaps might have been done, as suggested by the Leader of the Opposition, was to seek the assurance of Mr. Wirtz that there would be United States co-operation, a question which I do not believe was answered by the Minister of Labour. Apart from his reading a paragraph of the statement made by Mr. Wirtz, he has given us no assurance at all that he has consulted with Mr. Wirtz to obtain from him an unassailable guarantee that co-operation on the part of the United States government and labour leaders will be forthcoming. If he had held such discussions, and this is one of the alternatives which the minister was perhaps seeking, it is quite possible that concurrent legislation could have been passed in the United States that might have effectively accomplished the creation of that situation on the great lakes which is the desire of everyone.

I think there is another solution. Everyone seems to have laid the strife on the great lakes at the doorstep of Harold Chamberlain Banks, and I believe rightly so. Everyone I have heard speak in the house on this measure has said it is most regrettable that this legislation must be passed, and everyone who has spoken has left me with the impression that the reason for the legislation is because of the activities of Banks. I should like to pause for a moment to read into the record the official views of the union to which I belong. This is an editorial from the Mine-Mill Herald dated October 1963, written by Mr. Smith, president of the mine-mill union, who writes most of the editorials. He has this to say in an editorial headed: "Both a tragedy and a farce".

The man who said that when history repeats itself it is a tragedy the first time and a farce the second, must now be scratching his head searching for a new definition when he looks at the situation pertaining to Canadian seamen, the Norris report, the antics of Meany and Jodoin, etc., etc.

Let's get what really happened set down and that is no small chore and requires very considerable mental agility to follow the turns and twists of official government and trade union policy.

First, the Canadian seamen had a union of their own that fought to improve their conditions and that had succeeded quite well. Second, under the guise of "anti-communism" the Canadian government, the American state department and the official heads of the trade union movement on both sides of the international border moved everything at hand to smash that union, the C.S.U., and replace it with the goon squad rule of Harold Chamberlain Banks, strong arm convict from the U.S.A. Do-not-ship lists were set up to break the backs of those still sailing who did not agree with these "tender" ministrations and forever keep them off the water. The U.S. state department was happy, the Canadian government was happy,—

May I just pause here to say that I cannot help but think of the exchange which took place when discussing this measure between the Secretary of State and hon. members on this side. I recall the time the Canadian government allowed the entry of Banks into this country, and when the secretary of state for external affairs—I say this without malice at all—had before him the order in council with the record of this man attached to it, a record as long as your arm, he approved his application and allowed the appeal of Banks that he be allowed to stay in this country. I cannot conceive how a thing like that was allowed to happen. Continuing with this editorial:

The U.S. state department was happy, the Canadian government was happy, the shipping companies were happy, Banks was happy...everybody was happy except the seamen that had lost their union and their jobs.

Maritime Transportation Unions

Now short years later everybody is unhappy again including the Canadian government that brought Banks here and they are threatening to put his union under a government trusteeship.

Claude Jodoin who helped directly to bring Banks into the country now is making noises that international unions should not interfere in the internal affairs of Canadian unions. We suggest mildly that this is a change because obviously Banks was brought here with Jodoin's assistance for precisely that purpose.

I recall reading a press report concerning Mr. Jodoin, who said of Banks that here is a man who is well on the way to making a good Canadian citizen.

We also recall that a major result of these carrying's on by Jodoin & Co. was the wholesale scuttling of the Canadian merchant marine so that all Canadian shipping became by and large dependant on U.S. bottoms.

At any rate this has all the elements of "tragedy" and "farce" and there can be no solution until the seamen and the workers of Canada proclaim and demand their right to clean up the bloody awful mess. The trickster manoeuvering of a Jodoin who piously now proclaims against the "domination" of U.S. international unions at the behest of the Canadian government that wants to put further shackles on the Canadian unions through their trusteeship, makes nothing but a mess.

The struggle for Canadian independence in general and the struggle specifically for Canadian independence in the trade union movement will grow apace in the days ahead.

As the pioneer international trade union organization that established Canadian autonomy and independence we hail every genuine move in this direction and pledge to stand shoulder to shoulder with anyone who supports that struggle.

We call for an all out offensive by the Canadian workers to put a stop to the farces and the tragedies visited upon them by virtue of the foreign domination of our affairs through the international unions. Canadian workers can do quite well without that, as they can do without the puppet-like capers of Jodoin and his international backers.

Mr. Douglas: Does the hon. member agree with the sentiments expressed in that editorial?

Mr. Nielsen: Some of the words used are stronger than words I would use, but I agree with the general principle that affairs of unions should be left to the seamen and the workers themselves to settle. I also agree with the sentiments expressed concerning the Canadian section of the maritime unions being controlled by international unions.

Mr. Orlikow: Would the hon. member permit a question. I should like to ask him whether he thinks Harvey Murphy is a better trade union leader in Canada than Claude Jodoin.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I wonder how well the hon. member knows Harvey Murphy. I know Harvey Murphy and have had many discussions with him. Despite the fact that some very poor opinions may have been held about Harvey Murphy owing to his past activities and circumstances, I feel that Harvey Murphy has been one of the leaders, at least in the north from where I come, in the fight to obtain benefits for the miners in that part of Canada which they would never have received had it not been for Harvey Murphy. I think the parliamentary secretary to the minister will endorse that statement. I heard that a mine manager from Yellowknife once said of Harvey Murphy at a recent meeting that if it had not been for his presence at that meeting the agreement they were discussing would never have been negotiated.

I should like to quote from the last edition of the Mine-Mill Herald which deals with the address the parliamentary secretary made to the thirteenth convention of the union, and I am sure he will welcome this reference.

—Mr. Byrne did take issue with those who attack the union when he said with reference to the "communist" smear against the union "if the political belief of the members of a union, rather than its accomplishments on behalf of its membership, are to be the criteria upon which the right to existence is judged, then there would be many strange and varied statutes drawn up throughout Canada... the former prime minister's civil rights act would be nothing but a mockery."

I agree 100 per cent with the sentiments expressed there by the parliamentary secretary.

Since everyone seems to have at the back of their minds the elimination of Banks as the cancerous growth at the root of all the strife on the great lakes, I was going to advance another possible alternative, which is action along these lines. The preamble to the bill says that the reason for its passage is because we are confronted with a national emergency, owing to the economic havoc being wrought by the lack of peace on the great lakes. If we are, indeed, confronted with a national emergency, is there not some other method of dealing with the situation? Could we not take action along the same lines as the action we might take in dealing with an emergency at a time when this country was actually involved in a war—and, in effect, this is what is taking place on the great lakes now. If I understand the legal position correctly, Banks is a landed immigrant, not a Canadian citizen. Would it not be possible to amend the Citizenship Act by inserting a section providing specifically, if you wish, for the deportation of Banks as an undesirable individual who should not be allowed to remain in Canada? I think it would be possible to do this. True, it would be an extraordinary measure, but then so is the present legislation. It seems to me the government could have amended the Citizenship Act so as to provide that Mr. Banks no longer had the right to remain in Canada. In my view it would be better to have done this than to have brought in this trusteeship measure which will merely result in the nationalization of the trade unions on the great lakes. If the government would exert its efforts to bring to the seamen realization that, once Banks had been removed, they would be responsible for electing new officials—strong men imbued with the democratic spirit of free trade unions—we might have been better off than we are as a result of the introduction of the legislation now proposed.

Everybody has had a crack at the shipping companies. If we intend to nationalize the unions, to impose a trusteeship, to take over, in effect, the assets and property of the unions, including their power to make promissory notes and so on, why do we not nationalize the shipping companies as well?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nielsen: Everybody is blaming the shipping companies for their part in this affair. It has been said that they and Mr. Jodoin, together with the government, were those responsible for bringing Banks into Canada under the guise of anti-communism. If we intend to press an extraordinary measure of this kind on the trade unions, why not impose a similar one on the shipping companies? What assurance have we now that the shipping companies will fall into line with the wishes of the government? From what I have heard of the representations made by Mr. Leitch, there is no assurance of his co-operation. Maybe the minister has received certain assurances. I do not know.

The last thing the government should do, in my opinion, is to usurp the right of a trade union to manage its own affairs. That is what is now being done. I agree, as do all other hon. members, that Banks should go. If there is no method of prosecuting him and putting him in jail, then, surely, the procedure of amending the Citizenship Act, along the lines I have suggested, would provide a means of kicking him out. This course should have been considered, rather than a measure such as we have before us now—legislation which, in effect, takes the power of managing their own affairs away from the seamen and workers who make up these trade unions.

I do not think the government should have considered interfering with the rights and freedom of a trade union. I do not think they should have considered imposing trustees to manage the affairs of a trade union, any more than they should have thought of imposing a trusteeship over the shipping companies. I want to make that clear, in case anyone misunderstood the analogy I made a few moments ago and which some hon. members on my far left applauded. I do not stand for the nationalization of private enterprise, nor do I stand for the nationalization of trade unions, and I am surprised that members of the New Democratic party should have voted for this measure; because that is precisely what they are supporting—the nationalization of a trade union. If their belief in nationalization extends as far as the nationalization of trade unions, I think they have some soul searching to do.

This legislation has yet another objectionable feature. When the government made known its intention to establish a trusteeship over these maritime unions I had a decision to make and I had great difficulty in reaching the decision which I expressed by my vote today. But when the government spoke of establishing a trusteeship at that time, they talked of doing so on a temporary basis. Now we see that the trusteeship has a five year term to it. Granted, there are provisions in the bill which allow for the ending of the trusteeship, and the handing back of the property taken over, at the end of a period shorter than five years. But to be consistent in its thinking, in accordance with its stated intention to impose the trusteeship on a temporary basis only, I think provision should have been made for supervision on the basis of six months or one year, renewable if necessary. It does not seem to me that it is going to take five years to accomplish the objectives the government has in mind.

There are other objectionable features in this bill. For example, there is the provision which allows the trustees appointed by the government to delegate all their powers to one of their number. Who is to say that if they exercise this power they may not choose another Banks? It seems to me this provision is both dangerous and unwise.

Almost two pages of this bill as it appears before us deal with property and civil rights. It seems to me that to allow a trusteeship to take over the assets and property which belong to the members of a trade union is completely unacceptable. It is an action which sets an extremely dangerous precedent and, for these reasons, this is a measure which I cannot in all conscience bring myself to support. I feel the situation should have been handled by dethroning Banks by other means and I have yet to be convinced that this could not be done. One of the aims of the government should have been to explore the possibility to the full of Canadianizing the Canadian portion of this union, before introducing such legislation as we have before us. The management of trade unions must be left to the membership of those unions and it seems to me to be completely wrong in principle to introduce a measure such as this trusteeship proposal which takes away a fundamental right of workers in Canada in any section of the economy to organize themselves into trade unions. This, in my opinion, is the first step toward eroding the functions of trade unionism, a principle in which I believe as being necessary to our Canadian way of life.

I do hope that perhaps some explanation or some comment will be forthcoming from the minister on the solution which I have suggested in connection with the amendment to the Citizenship Act to enable us to deport Mr. Banks, rather than ask for this extraordinary step to be taken.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the problem necessitating this legislation is a generic problem of our Canadian-United States relations. It is one of the results of this nation having been conceived as an entity which would stretch from east to west, while the lines of nature and basic economics envisage a flow from north to south. Its roots are in the same vein which periodically give birth to the outcry about United States capital control of our industry and of our heritage. When the problem relates to economic entities such as trade unions, which in one land are regarded in the perspective of persons geared to the republican form of government while in the other land the same economic entity, the trade union, is geared by those who are brought up in the background of parliamentary government, then the problem of that fundamental contradiction in our Canadian conception becomes more acute.

When Mr. Wirtz and Mr. Meany rail at us, they do so as the products of the republican system of checks and balances, pressure against pressure, which regards overt governmental interference as virtually sacrilegious, while pressures, governmental or otherwise, are the order of the day. When, on the other hand, we recoil from such pressure with righteous and jingoistic indignation, we quite properly do so as the children of a parliamentary democracy, where parliament is supreme and any outside pressure on parliament is an invasion of our most profound and sacred rights. In all areas of such difference, Mr. Chairman, which I suggest will ever recur as economic necessity brings us closer to our neighbours to the south, I think the road to progress will surely be in the non-flashy but reliable car of moderation.

On the one hand, we should develop our ability to think as republicans while they, on the other hand, should develop their ability to think as parliamentarians. I think this is preferable to the lofty and futile high horse. During this twenty sixth parliament, Mr. Chairman, we have heard often and loud the voice of faction, the voice of colloquialism, the voice of provincialism. How still and small and seldom heard has been the voice of Canada. Here we have a great, and I believe, transcendent problem which may well affect all Canada and all Canadians. It is, perhaps, the way of democracy that when the problem is so grave as to affect all of Canada and all Canadians, the debate in this house has been on a higher plane, more loftily and properly conducted in the national interest and in the highest parliamentary tradition, than has been the case with any measure which has been brought before this twenty sixth parliament.

I think I should say also, Mr. Chairman, that the party to which I belong, this house and, yes, the whole nation, is indebted to the minister who has sponsored this bill. In his conduct of this matter he has established for himself an enviable, an unassailable position for efficiency, patience and courtesy in the manner in which he has handled this difficult and trying problem from its inception. It has been recently stated in the press that we in the backbenches of this party have some fault, or had some fault to find with the front-benchers of this party. I can only say that we who sit back here with our posteriors on the edge of the Ottawa river are very proud of the way in which the minister has handled this matter. We have been very pleased to sit behind him. I can only say, Mr. Chairman, it is to be hoped that this house will continue in the manner and spirit which has prevailed in the debate on this measure, so that it may be said of the twenty sixth parliament that it was a bit of a shambles until the debate on the trusteeship bill, but from that time forward matters were handled in the house in the parliamentary manner, and on the highest basis.

Mr. Barnett: According to the clock at which I am looking, Mr. Chairman, we have reached the hour of five o'clock. I have a number of comments that I should like to make upon this measure, in part at least resulting from the remarks which were made a few minutes ago by the hon. member for Yukon. Perhaps the Minister of Labour would like to accept the invitation extended to him by the hon. member and make some reply on certain aspects of the hon. member's remarks. If he does, this may avoid the necessity for some remarks on that aspect. However, it would seem hardly appropriate for me to attempt to make my remarks now, in view of the particular hour at which we have arrived.

I call your attention to the fact it is five o'clock.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

STATEMENT ON HOURS OF SITTING

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Before private bills are called, I think there was an order of the house made earlier that we would revert to motions.

Mr. Winch: That was my understanding, that we would revert to motions.

Mr. Speaker: Yes, the Secretary of State is quite correct.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before I put my motion, I should like to report on the meeting that was held at two o'clock this afternoon, at which it was agreed that I should propose to the house that instead of putting my motion, if there were unanimous consent, the house might agree to sit again this evening from seven o'clock until eleven, unless in the meantime we should complete the bill that was just being considered in committee. It was agreed we should take also the second reading stage only of the two territorial bills, on the clear understanding that when those bills were given second reading they would be sent to the standing committee on mines, forests and waters where they could be considered fully and witnesses could be called on any contentious points. This was in accordance with an understanding that was arrived at at the time the bill was given first reading.

I want to emphasize the fact that there was no commitment made to pass either of these bills, or indeed to pass any of them. The only thing that was understood was we would not sit after those three items were taken up. There was no commitment made by anyone that we would necessarily do these things. I want to make that very clear, but the time would be available. On that understanding, we could have an order of the house, and I would then ask permission to withdraw my motion.

Mr. Churchill: The general idea was that rather than sit on Saturday, which was the purport of the motion, we would sit tonight for a four-hour period. The Secretary of State has reported the discussion that we had with regard to the passage of the bill now in front of us, or with which we were just dealing. We did not say including third reading, did we?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, that would be entirely up to the house.

Mr. Churchill: Then, discussion turned to the two other bills, the Northwest Territories bill and the Nunassiaq bill. As the Secretary of State pointed out we talked in terms of passing second reading, if this happened before eleven o'clock, and referring the bills to the committee he mentioned. But unfortunately a misunderstanding crept in because we did not have all the facts in front of us. I did not myself refer back to the debate on July 8 that pertained to the two bills. I do not know whether the Secretary of State looked back at it, but hon. members have since drawn my attention to the fact that a somewhat different commitment was made on that occasion by the Secretary of State, and which is to be found on page 1968 of Hansard for that date.

Whether or not that is gone ahead with will, I suppose be a matter for some discussion, but if the Secretary of State can clear up that statement of July 8 then perhaps we can go ahead tonight and dispose of the three items of business, but not exactly in the way which he mentions.

However, we are quite glad to sit tonight at seven o'clock and discuss the bill which has recently been under discussion.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I think I can clear up that point. There is no question whatever I did give an undertaking that if on reflection it was asked for—I am not going to read all the language—the government would find some motion to refer a question at issue about these matters to a committee, before taking up second reading.

Hon. members know we cannot refer a government measure to a committee before it gets second reading, so we would just have to refer a subject that was brought up by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) to a committee, and have a discussion on that before we even called the second reading of the bill. But I have suggested no such request was made to me and I have called the bills on several occasions.

I am not seeking to rest on any technicality at all. The government will carry out the undertaking I gave, if there is any insistence upon it in the house, but I believe exactly the same purpose could be accomplished if we would give second reading to the bills and then send them to the committee, because giving second reading to a bill does not commit anybody to any clause in it. The only principle in these two bills that is common to the both of them is that the Northwest Territories as they now exist are going to be divided into two territories, so that anybody who accepts the bill can vote for it on second reading and anybody who wants to vote against it would not be accepting anything on second reading, except that.

The question raised by the hon. member regarding the boundaries is not a principle of the bill but an ancillary and could be considered just as fully in committee after second reading as before; and nobody would be committed to anything more.

It would facilitate progress generally if that would be an acceptable solution. If it is not, then the government will do exactly what I said would be done on the earlier occasion. But as I have not got a motion drafted, and have not got one on the order paper, we could not proceed with the matter this evening. But I hope, in the spirit in which I have made this statement, it will be possible to proceed in this way, and I make it very clear that no one by agreeing to this procedure is agreeing to sacrifice any matter of principle of any kind whatever.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, first may I confirm that the Secretary of State has reported accurately what went on at our meeting at two o'clock this afternoon. May I add that, so far as members of this party are concerned, we are quite prepared to sit this evening at seven o'clock until whichever comes first, eleven o'clock or the completion of the amount of business we discussed at our meeting.

With regard to the issue that has arisen since, I may say my attention has likewise been drawn to what was said on July 8 by the Secretary of State, and I am glad to note he takes the position that if what he offered is insisted upon, then the government will meet that commitment. But, I would like to make a suggestion to my friends on this side, particularly to the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire), who I feel is about to rise. I would like to say to him, as a member of the opposition, that I am sure none of us on this side of the house would lose any rights or opportunities by agreeing to what we discussed at the meeting at two o'clock today.

There is a rule of the house, which the Secretary of State must have put at the back of his mind when he made that statement on July 8, which says every public bill shall be read twice in the house before committal for amendment. In other words these bills themselves could not be put to the committee.

Mr. Pickersgill: Nor did I say they could.

Mr. Knowles: I would suggest to the hon. member for Lapointe that the matter he has in mind could actually be dealt with better if the actual bill were before the committee on mines, forests and waters. I remind him that the people who are interested in it can serve on the committee. I remind him that witnesses can be called, people representing other interests and people representing provinces, and I am sure we would not be giving anything away if we agreed to this procedure.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

I think the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) has an interest in these bills. Nobody is more particular about his rights than the hon. member for Skeena, but he has agreed this procedure would be satisfactory so far as those who are interested in these bills are concerned. The matter which has been discovered since two o'clock today was not in our minds when we met, but I hope it will not alter the decision we made. In any case, we in this party are prepared to sit from seven o'clock until whichever comes first, eleven o'clock or the conclusion of such business as we have agreed upon.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I think that according to the procedures in this house the resolution stage and second reading of bills are occasions and opportunities for us to state our principles, but in this occasion we have passed a resolution stage very quickly. In fact I think it took only five minutes at the end of the day on July 8, and tonight on second reading it will be the same.

But there is another angle to the matter. Bill No. C-84 is not clear at all. There is no precision as to the frontiers of this territory. Before discussion the principles of the bill we would like to know exactly what the frontiers are, and they are not well described in the bill. I have asked for a map of the territory but there are no details on it. I feel that if we pass second reading rapidly the people of Canada, and especially the people of the province of Quebec, will not be aware of the exact meaning of the bill. If the people of the province of Quebec were aware of what is in the bill they would protest in the same way they have protested with regard to other bills. I feel that protestations of the people of Quebec between the time they are made aware of the bill and when we study the principle of the bill will accomplish what I alone could not accomplish. They will force the government to change the bill.

I should like the Secretary of State to consider that angle. I am quite certain that the people of Canada, and especially of the province of Quebec, as well as the members of this house are not aware of what is being done in the bill which has been presented to us. It would be well that before discussing the principle an opportunity should be provided to ask questions in a special committee. Here I refer to what the Secretary of State said on July 8, 1963, as found on page 1968 of Hansard. He said:

> In fact I am quite prepared to commit the government to putting a motion on the order paper for a reference to a suitable standing committee of the house to consider these matters before we proceed with the legislation itself.

There are other places where the Secretary of State committed the government. It is not that I wish to bring about delay. As I understand the matter the urgent bill is No. C-83. I am ready to allow second reading to be given to Bill No. C-83. However, as far as Bill No. C-84 is concerned I submit there are very important points in the bill from the point of view of the province of Quebec. We passed the resolution rapidly, and if we should give second reading to the bill quickly I should not like it because I would feel I had not discharged my duty as a member of the house to see that the people are given the opportunity to be made aware of all the facts before we discuss the principle of the bill.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely no question that I did make a very precise commitment and I intend to carry out that commitment if there is any insistence on the part of any hon. member that I do so. The commitment was to refer a specific matter, namely the frontiers, to the consideration of the committee before we proceed with the bill. If my language is studied it is evident that there is no question I was well aware of the rule that we could not send this bill to a committee before second reading and it cannot be sent to a committee at that point under our rules without at the same time killing the bill.

But if the hon. member or any other hon. member wishes to insist that the matters raised in the debate, that is to say, the question of the frontiers of the territories, should be considered separately first by a committee, I will endeavour to consult with whoever raises objection; the hon. member for Lapointe or anyone else, and try to draft some kind of motion to refer the matter to some suitable committee and bring it forward for debate.

But I think we are all aware of the difficulties of the timetable in the house in this part of the session, and I suggest again very respectfully that nothing will be accomplished by that process that would not be accomplished just as well by having the bill debated. I am not even asking the house to complete the debate tonight but merely asking hon. members to have the debate, study these points on second reading and then send the bill to a committee.

Mr. Gregoire: Would the Secretary of State accept the suggestion, rather than setting an 11 o'clock deadline tonight or whatever time second reading is completed, that we discontinue the debate on second reading of Bill No. C-84 and not adopt second reading tonight, so that we will have an opportunity to study the matter and to consult the experts before we finish the debate on second reading?

Mr. Pickersgill: I have never suggested at any time, of course, that I was going to tell the house when they would pass any bill. If the house wants to spend the whole evening on the trusteeship bill, they can do so. I am asking that we should sit until eleven o'clock but if we pass these three items I am not going to ask the house to do any other business. We will quit earlier.

Mr. Gregoire: Possibly I did not express myself well. Suppose we finish everything else by six o'clock and then we have from seven to eleven to talk on Bill No. C-84. I will not talk for four hours this evening on that bill, but second reading might be given because nobody else wanted to talk on it. I want to see everybody have the opportunity to give their opinions, but if they have done so by ten o'clock I do not want to see the house give second reading to the bill tonight.

Mr. Pickersgill: If it will facilitate the business we will not ask for any vote tonight on the second reading of the Nunassiaq bill. If we can agree on that basis, then I will ask to have the house adjourned when we reach the point where hon. members wish to adjourn the debate on that bill.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, would it not be a solution to proceed with our general suggestion that we meet at seven o'clock? By the time we have passed Bill No. C-102 some considerable time will have elapsed and in the interval we might be able to reach some conclusion as to what we might do with the Northwest Territories bill and the other one; but let us now agree to sit at seven o'clock and go ahead with Bill No. C-102.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the house will sit from 7 p.m. to 11 p.m. this day and that the business be as outlined by the Secretary of State?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Unanimous agreement.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, in view of the decision we have just taken may I ask the Secretary of State if he will give consideration to allowing the page boys the evening off, or as many of them as he feels can be released? They have had a long week, this is Friday night and they are young.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would hope that might be possible. I wonder whether I might explain to the house, in case anyone is wondering, why the government has not suggested that we go on with government business between five and six o'clock. I was partly restrained by some strictures delivered on a previous occasion, but also partly restrained by the fact that the Minister of Labour simply had to be out of the house between now and seven o'clock because of other things that are happening elsewhere. We will go on with private members' business now.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MEMBERS' TRAVELLING EXPENSES

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, while we are still on motions I wonder whether I might have the consent of the house to move, seconded by the Solicitor General (Mr. MacNaught):

That the recommendation of the commissioners of internal economy set out in the extract from the minutes of the meeting of the said commissioners tabled by Mr. Speaker on October 10, 1963, be now concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may now have the permission of the house to withdraw my motion to sit tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give consent to the motion being withdrawn?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and motion (Mr. Pickersgill) withdrawn.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, was attention paid to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) that the younger members of the staff be given the night off?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure the Chair heard the suggestion, and with your usual benevolence I am sure Your Honour will do your best.

Mr. Speaker: The house will now proceed to the consideration of public bills.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING COUNT OF VOTES AT ADVANCE POLLS

Mr. Rodolphe Leduc (Gatineau) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-26, to amend the Canada Elections Act (advance polls).

[Translation]

Mr. Rodolphe Leduc (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to amend the Canada Elections Act in order to prevent a repetition in the next election or in subsequent ones of offences or irregularities such as those committed in the last election in my riding, as well as in other constituencies in Canada.

I know that all members of the house are quite familiar with the Canada Elections Act and are aware that it was amended in 1960 in order to increase the number of advance polls in various electoral districts.

Those advance polls are open on the ninth day and the seventh day prior to the day of the election so that people who expect to be absent from their country or electoral district on election day may have a chance to vote.

I believe that amendment has given many electors the opportunity of exercising their franchise before the date of the election. However, infractions can be committed in those advance polls. I know that, at the last election, in my riding, a deputy returning officer counted the ballots at the end of the first day of voting at the advance polls. Results in one advance poll were made known. I realized then that if the act was not amended, that could have serious effects in certain constituencies, especially when the electors know how the voting went a week or nine days before election day.

If results at some advance polls are revealed prematurely, that can have a great influence on the vote on election day.

That is why I propose this amendment. Besides, the hon. members know that the deputy returning officer is responsible for the ballot box at the advance poll on voting day and keeps it in his possession until the actual voting day. And it is only in the evening of that day, two hours after the closing of the polls, that the deputy returning officer, in the presence of representatives of the various candidates, must open the ballot box of the advance poll.

The present act is not sufficiently strict with regard to offences committed by the deputy returning officer when he is caught doing something illegal, as happened in my riding.

As a matter of fact, the only punishment that can be meted out to him is that he loses one day's salary or his salary for the two days he worked at the poll as deputy returning officer.

Therefore, there is a serious danger, because at a given time one or several deputy returning officers could conspire with various organizers to count the votes in a number of advance polls so as to publish the results before election day.

Under the Canada Elections Act, anyone guilty of divulging prematurely the results of the voting at a poll is liable to a fine ranging from $1 to $500.

In my opinion, our aim would be achieved by this amendment if a deputy returning officer who counts the ballots before election day were liable to the same penalty as any person who publishes the results of the election ahead of time and were fined from $1 to $500.

I sincerely feel that if we pass this bill, we will prevent breaches of the law at advance polls in future elections.

Mr. Jean L. Rochon (Laval): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to support the measure which was presented by our colleague, the hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Leduc). I do not intend to spend too much time on this, but I should like to explain my views on that subject.

My riding is the third largest in Canada; it is outranked only by Scarborough and Mercier. Over 60,000 of my constituents are residents of the northern part of Montreal and another 58,000 live on Jesus island where eight cities and five towns are located.

During the June 1962 election, the chief electoral officer set up 22 advanced polls and many Canadians took advantage of the right they had under the Canada Elections Act, to vote before the official date of the election.

Now, it just happened that in four advanced polls, the returning officer announced the results in favour of one of my opponents with the consequence that, because of the indiscretion committed by the officials, on voting day, the vote was next to nothing in the district where those polls were situated.

I quite understand that, as my colleague for Gatineau has just explained, under the present legislation, a deputy returning officer who commits an indiscretion loses his job and is not entitled to any pay. However, as my hon. friend said, that is not enough and if such a returning officer has to pay a $500 fine just like any person who publishes prematurely the election results, people would think twice before acting and I am convinced that in the case I am concerned with at present, things would have been different.

In a riding such as mine, Mr. Speaker, with more than 118,000 voters, even if the vote is thus switched around a bit, the effects are not as far reaching as they would be in a smaller constituency, as the hon. member for Gatineau pointed out a moment ago, where that could be enough to alter the results completely and bring about a vote which would be the reverse of the opinion the electors would otherwise have expressed.

I am sure all of us in this house, Mr. Speaker, no matter which party we belong to, want truly democratic and honest elections, and I know this bill would be suited to that purpose and would prevent many mistakes being made.

Sometimes, Mr. Speaker, caught in the election turmoil, we ourselves, members of our organization, the returning officer and his assistants, unfortunately cannot prevent some thoughtless campaign officials from doing such things. They do things such as the one I referred to a moment ago, without often suspecting the almost tragic consequences involved.

It rests with us, members of this house, to prevent such situations and, without prejudice, under our oath of office, to legislate so as to assure not only the integrity of the administration, but also that of those who will be called upon later on, as ourselves, to govern the country.

It remains with the hon. members, Mr. Speaker, to protect the public against itself, to protect certain organizers, whatever party they belong to, against the extravagant enthusiasm they show during an election campaign in favour of a candidate of their choice.

The bill of our colleague for Gatineau has been introduced for no other purpose than to assure the honesty of the vote and to give to the people members of their choice. In other words, it is a matter of electing a truly democratic government, fully representative of a common ideal.

Mr. Speaker, these are troubled times in which we live. Let us be on our guard, for tomorrow may be too late. Those who live under a democratic government tend to forget that elsewhere things may be different. Although dictators are clever at painting things a lovely rosy hue, their subjects become tools in the hands of a small group of men, of potentates who, in the name of the nation, use them as mere puppets to satisfy the mad ambitions of vainglorious masters thirsting for power.

That fact is illustrated by the story of the last 20 years. Nazi Germany and fascist Italy dreamt of holding sway over a trembling world and, in fact, succeeded in enslaving whole nations, but they have since paid a bitter price, and drunk to the dregs the cup of humiliation. Hitler committed suicide in his lair in the Bavarian Alps and Mussolini was delivered to public obloquy and hanged, as we know, by his feet.

It will be objected that the situation is not quite so bad. I agree. But in the last five years, even in the last two or three years, the difficulties which have occurred on all sides are different from those of the past.

People luxuriate in liberty and quite properly demand that their rights be respected, placing on our shoulders heavier responsibilities which are quite different from those of the past due to the needs of our times.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, as modest as it is, if we stop and consider it carefully, will remedy many mistakes and particularly many unfortunate abuses of the past.

That is why, on behalf of the voters in my riding, I make it my duty to support this measure introduced by our colleague from Gatineau.

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I will take a few minutes only to express my views about the measure under consideration.

First of all, I want to congratulate the hon. member for Montreal-Laval (Mr. Rochon) for the sincerity with which he supported the bill introduced by the hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Leduc), but I must tell him that I do not share his view about advance polls set up when a general election is held.

Such advance polls are set up to give the greatest number of electors the opportunity to cast their votes before the date set for the election, when they have to be away on voting day.

If my memory is correct, I think those advance polls have been used only in the last two general elections. Previously, those advance polls were open only one day.

During the 1962 and 1963 elections, the polls were open, as the hon. member for Gatineau pointed out, the ninth day and the seventh day before election day.

I feel that this measure was presented to the house following the mistakes that were made across Canada during the last general election, but I think that if you compare the few mistakes made with the number of polls set up for the 1963 election, you realize that the number of deputy returning officers who made such mistakes was negligible and just because a few deputy returning officers made mistakes, I do not feel that we should necessarily amend the act and go back to the years when advance polls were opened just for one day.

Mr. Speaker, I have here the result of the voting in the four last federal elections for my riding. If we consider the number of voters who cast their vote at advance polls, we readily realize that those polls have certainly enabled a great many Canadians to exercise their franchise, compared to previous years.

In 1957, for instance, 11 voters reported to the advance poll in St. Hyacinthe-Bagot, whereas only ten did in 1958. But if we study the results of the 1962 general election, we find that the number has gone up to the extent that 101 voters exercised their franchise, and this, because the advance poll remained open for two days instead of one.

Mr. Speaker, the previous speakers tried to influence our judgment, but I do not think there is much danger of being misled by their contentions.

[Mr. Rochon.]

For instance, the hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Leduc) claimed that the results could be known prematurely under the present procedure. Besides, he mentioned that the scrutiny of the votes cannot be made, by virtue of the act, before two hours after the closing of the polls.

Well, if the object of this bill is to punish those who are bent on transgressing the law, I am afraid that the hon. member's efforts will be in vain.

In my opinion, the important thing is to try and teach people who hold offices in polls to act only according to the law.

In fact, I think that most of the mistakes made are due to ignorance rather than ill will.

In the last election, the result of the voting in an advance poll in my riding was published before the national voting day, and I am convinced that that mistake was not made through ill will.

And how can the rest of voters in the riding be influenced by that, since only five or six voters go to an advance poll?

And even if all votes had been for one candidate or the other, that certainly does not represent the general opinion and would not influence at all the rest of the voters in that constituency to vote in favour of such or such candidate in particular.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that instead of passing the measure now before us, we should, in a general election, give the necessary instructions to those who are entrusted with the duties of deputy returning officers. Briefly, instead of changing the present provisions which enable more voters to use their right to vote, we should rather make allowance for the advantages granted to the voters under the present legislation.

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have but brief comments to make about Bill C-26. I am happy to see that the hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Leduc) has brought in this bill to amend in parts the Canada Elections Act particularly, as far as the advance polls are concerned.

The hon. member for Laval (Mr. Rochon) said a moment ago that such an amendment to the election act might forestall the advent of a totalitarian state in Canada. Personally, I feel that my hon. friend got carried away, and that his words went beyond his thoughts. We must admit that nazism in Germany and the totalitarian regime in Italy were bred by factors much more vital than those we are striving to rectify through this piece of legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I endorse the remarks of the hon. member who sponsored the bill and I wish to quote a case which occurred in my own riding during the 1962 general election.

An advanced poll had been established in the town of Roxton Falls and about 15 persons having the same political views had been allowed to vote. After the closing of the poll, it was learned that the result of the vote had been made public not only in many neighbouring parishes but also in the main centres, especially the town of Granby.

That indiscretion surely influenced the voters. In fact, I received many telephone calls on that matter. I was also informed about it by political organizations. Also, the returning officer in my riding had to make a statement over the radio to the effect that the results were not official.

Therefore, I think it is wise to bring forward such a piece of legislation.

I do not deny that abuses might still take place but if the act is not amended, similar errors might be repeated.

Everyone knows that those who have a thorough knowledge of the Elections Act can take advantage of certain circumstances. It was also said that the errors disclosed were due to ignorance. It might be true in most cases—at least, I trust it is—but I am convinced that as far as I am concerned, what happened in 1962 was certainly not due to ignorance, but was well premeditated because the whole thing had been planned. Fortunately, the damage done in that community could be repaired because the necessary action was taken.

Mr. Speaker, I will not labour the point in order not to hold up the passing of Bill C-26 so that the nation can have a better elections act in the future.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): I just want to make one or two comments on the proposal before the house. It is not that I object to the principle of the bill; I think there is some merit in the proposal itself. But I should like to say a word in defence of the deputy returning officers. No doubt, conditions vary from one riding to another. I do not pretend to know much about electoral procedure in the riding of the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, but we have found that most of the deputy returning officers are sincere people. They are not particularly well schooled in their duties or activities and I think most of the mistakes they make arise, not through malice on their part, but largely through indifference, or ignorance of their duties. In these circumstances I doubt that it is very wise to impose penalties of the type envisaged in this bill.

I presume, of course, that the measure would be referred to the committee on privileges and elections so that it could be studied in greater detail and its terms debated, but I think it would be unwise to pass a blanket provision imposing penalties on these people. Perhaps the penalty should only be imposed if some serious malice can be shown or some intent to influence the decision of the electorate. There should be some safeguard in the bill so that innocent people will not bear this onerous penalty.

There are, of course, many matters in connection with elections which should be dealt with in the privileges and elections committee. Certainly, we should do something about prohibiting the publication of public opinion polls during the course of an election. These have, sometimes, an unusual appeal to the population, and perhaps consideration of this matter might be included. At the same time, something should be done about preventing United States stations from broadcasting eastern results in western Canada before the polls close. This, again, would seem to be an infringement of our rights. These are matters which, perhaps, could be studied by the committee.

I hope the hon. gentleman's bill will be referred to the committee because, as I have indicated, we approve of the general principle. We feel that the abuse the hon. member is trying to correct is one which should be corrected. However, we do not want to see a lot of innocent deputy returning officers penalized for mistakes which they are only making out of a lack of knowledge or, more likely, a lack of instruction from the returning officer. I am not criticizing returning officers. They have too much to do in a short time, and it is not always possible to correctly school the deputy returning officers. All this might be corrected if we could institute a permanent voters list, and permanent deputy returning officers who would be in touch with their polls. Perhaps these are matters that could be gone into by the committee. I thought that someone from our party should indicate that there was merit in the hon. member's suggestion, and the measure should go to committee where it could receive the fair treatment it obviously merits.

Mr. Robert Temple (Hastings South): When I look at the clock, Mr. Speaker, I am reminded that I can only speak briefly in support of this measure. I would point out to the house that, as the law now stands, there is an absolute prohibition against the publication of the results in any newspaper. There is nothing said about whether the newspaper does this with malice or otherwise.

As long as the newspaper publishes the information, then it is liable to a fine or imprisonment. I do not know how you imprison a newspaper, but I suppose you can imprison the executives.

In so far as the deputy returning officers are concerned, they can only be fined or imprisoned under section 97 if it can be shown that they acted in a corrupt manner. This is a very difficult thing, of course, to prove. It is my feeling that there should be teeth put into this elections act so that the deputy returning officer will be liable to an automatic fine and/or imprisonment. Now, this may seem very harsh, Mr. Speaker, but the purpose is to prevent an unscrupulous group getting together in several ridings spread throughout the country. Then, the day preceding the actual election day, they could get as many of their supporters as possible to the advance polls and make arrangements to ensure that the results of four or five of these advance polls are leaked to the public.

I am not suggesting this would be done, but it could be done. If it were done, then we create this band-wagon approach to an election. We know that a good many of our neighbours vote a certain way because their neighbours are voting a certain way. They do not necessarily vote on the merits of the situation, but they jump on the band-wagon. I would urge that teeth be put into the law. I agree with the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott) that when these results are made known in advance by the deputy returning officer, it is generally out of curiosity and there is no malice entailed. However, there is a danger of this happening. I see the hour is late, and I understand the measure is going to be referred to the committee on privileges and elections, so I will conclude my remarks.

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General): I move that the subject matter of this bill be referred to the standing committee on privileges and elections for further consideration.

Motion agreed to.

PROVISION FOR MANAGEMENT AND CONTROL BY TRUSTEES

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-102, to provide for the placing of maritime transportation unions of Canada under the management and control of trustees—Mr. MacEachen—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

The Chairman: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 7 p.m.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, when the proceedings on this bill were suspended at five o'clock I had just risen to my feet and indicated that I wanted to make one or two comments in reference to the remarks made by the hon. member for Yukon, particularly due to the fact that it appeared the Minister of Labour was not showing any inclination to do so at that point.

I can readily understand the reason some of the leadership of the mine-mill union, to which the hon. member for Yukon belongs, shows a tendency to look back in this situation to the days when the C.S.U. was organized on the great lakes. I feel it is quite possible some rather serious errors were made at that time in dealing with the situation that then prevailed, but now we should face up to the realities of the present situation. What may or may not have been done, correctly or incorrectly, in connection with that situation is almost a matter of ancient history and should not be of primary concern now to either members of trade unions in Canada or members of this committee.

The thing I most vividly remember about that situation is my feeling at the time that much of what was done then was done because of certain pressures which were exerted upon the government of Canada and the Canadian trade union movement by those who live in the country to the south of us; and in view of the pride which the hon. member for Yukon indicated in the fact that the union of which he is a member has taken a strong Canadian union position, I find it rather difficult to comprehend his apparent lack of readiness to object to the kind of pressures that are being exerted in the current situation in Canada.

When he spoke earlier on second reading my colleague, the hon. member for Port Arthur, suggested that this really was not the time for us to be indulging in recriminations or reminiscences concerning the past history of the situation which led up to the mess in which we are at present, and I feel that should be the basic point from which we should approach this legislation. I also feel the hon. member for Yukon was putting the gloomiest possible construction upon the things that might happen as a result of the passage of this bill.

I think he would agree that no hon. member who has spoken so far has suggested this is a desirable step, but rather it would appear that what has happened in the past makes it the only possible step we can take. So far as I am concerned I am at once willing to concede I fully expect a great many difficulties will arise consequent upon the passage of the bill. We would be blind to the realities of the situation if we did not recognize that fact but I also feel we have a responsibility, particularly those of us who are reluctantly prepared to agree to the passage of the bill, to watch very carefully over the manner in which it is put into operation. We have a responsibility from time to time, if we consider it justified, to be critical of the manner in which the trusteeship is operated, but we also have a responsibility to do our best to see that it functions successfully.

As I see it, of course, the first requirement has to do with the calibre and experience of the trustees who are chosen. I am sure the Minister of Labour is not unaware of the importance of that matter, and I hope he is going to be able to find people to assume this responsibility who, because of their personality, their character and their knowledge will be able from the start to give proper prestige to this body and will be able to bring the right kind of wisdom to bear.

My prime purpose in trying to catch your eye originally, Mr. Chairman, prior to when the hon. member for the Yukon spoke, was to come back to the matter raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North, namely, what the intentions of the government are, if any, with respect to dealing with the shipping companies referred to in the Norris commission report. I feel that the Minister of Labour, in view of the fact he is piloting this bill, should give us some indication of his thinking in this matter and what the intentions, if any, of the government are in this connection.

I can understand that the Minister of Labour may be somewhat reluctant to do this, and in a sense I would agree it is not primarily his responsibility because, in my view, the particular bill before us has to do with the union aspect of the situation and is of direct interest and concern to him as Minister of Labour. I would assume that any steps which might be taken to correct some of the wrongdoings that have gone on, on the company side of the picture, would not necessarily fall directly under the responsibility of the Minister of Labour, or that any proposals which might be brought before parliament by the government would not necessarily be brought forward in his name.

Actually, I believe the person who should rise in the house during the course of this discussion and make a statement as to the government's intentions is the head of the government, the Prime Minister, because in my opinion this is a matter of the broad policy of the present administration which I think could properly be dealt with by the Prime Minister, either in this debate or outside it. In any event, before clause 1 of the bill carries I hope the Minister of Labour, as the spokesman of the government at this time, will indicate to us in no uncertain terms just what the intentions of the government are in connection with any action that may be proposed, to ensure that the companies involved are going to become respectable, law-abiding Canadian companies.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I opposed a trusteeship, and because a few others who have opposed it have stated their reasons may I say that I certainly do not want to be associated with the reasons advanced by former speakers in this debate. I, too, remember the day of Pat Sullivan and the old Canadian seamen's union. It was felt that the action taken then was in the best interests of the trade union movement, and it is unfortunate that history has not proven this to be correct.

However, the arguments that have been used as a basis for opposing the bill do not necessarily represent my objections. I think I can state my objections fairly simply. First, I have an inherent dislike for trusteeship. I think this is shared by almost every trade unionist in Canada and throughout the world. I am sure this view is shared by most members of parliament and in particular by the Minister of Labour himself. I also think that the dislike is even greater when trusteeship is applied in a legislative way, because it takes away from the workers any rights in the foreseeable future with regard to the operation of their own organization.

I am only guessing and can only guess, but I presume that a man who has been sitting in the gallery today may be one of the trustees. I hope this is true, because I can remember when I was more or less under trusteeship as a member of a union that was under discussion in another sense this afternoon. I can remember this gentleman coming to the mining area. He was highly acceptable to that area and he gave encouragement to the people and helped to establish a democratically based union there. I hope that history may repeat itself and that his success may be as great in this instance. It might be said that there was almost a trusteeship that time, under the congress of that day; but at no time was it ever suggested that this was something to be desired or welcomed, but rather that it was something to be used only because there did not seem to be any other relief. The same problem is repeating itself and making it necessary for intervention from without, in view of the fact that the constitution and machinery available to the workers is not such as to allow them to do something for themselves.

My second reason is a very simple one. I hope very strongly that I am wrong in my views, because if I am not the situation will be chaotic. It is my expectation that the trusteeship will not do what it is intended to do. It would seem that all Canadians have decided that the remedy to clean up the S.I.U. must be the removal of Mr. Banks. This can be accomplished, of course, because of the illegal acts that have been committed in the past, but yet nobody seems to be sure that there will be any legal arrangement made to dispose of Mr. Banks.

I believe the minister has said on a number of occasions that under the circumstances this gentleman cannot be deported. I find this is quite true. A landed immigrant can never be deported unless the country from which he came or to which we wish to deport him is willing to accept him, and under the circumstances this may be very difficult to accomplish. This may be one bad apple we will have a heck of a time giving away. We do not want him and probably nobody else does. I hope I am wrong, but I am wondering whether there is any chance for the trusteeship to accomplish what we hope it will.

As for my third reason, I would point out that this situation has already had one very good result. From this less than desirable situation there has developed a Canadianism that has been sadly lacking in this House of Commons for a long time. We have become more used to separatism and division on our national scene than we have to unity of national purpose. It has even brought many of the members of the House of Commons together in this matter. If this is an accomplishment that has been achieved, everything will not be wasted, if we are able to develop a sense of responsible nationalism in Canada, pointing out to some other people some of the faults that have no doubt existed in the past and honestly paying some tribute to some of the advantages that have accrued to the Canadian people because of the exercise of responsibilities and duties of people outside our own country.

I only wanted to make it very clear that my reasons for opposing this were not necessarily the same as others who have opposed it. I do so, knowing full well that we have no alternative to offer, and I know that an alternative or some solution to the problem must be arrived at. I hope that some of the changes that may make it more acceptable will be introduced by the government during the passage of this legislation. If that is done, this measure will, in my opinion, have more chance of success than it appears to have with its present terms.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Scott: I wonder, Mr. Chairman, if we could have a word of direction and perhaps some indication from the minister of how he intends to handle the passage of the clauses. With regard to various clauses we have submissions to make and proposals to suggest to him. It might be better if the minister would deal with our objections to each clause as we go through the bill, rather than leaving them to the end. Before clause 1 carries, I wonder if we could have some statement as to what the intentions of the government are with respect to the matters raised by the hon. member from Comox-Alberni.

I want to assure the minister that we are not raising this question in a facetious way. We are having great problems explaining this legislation to many of our supporters and explaining to them our support of it. We want, if we can get it, some indication as to whether something is going to be done about the other guilty parties. I realize it is not necessarily within the jurisdiction of the Minister of Labour, but it would be most helpful if, before allowing clause 1 to carry, we could have a statement from the minister or somebody on the government side indicating that the other culprits to the conspiracy, namely the shipping companies, are not going to be permitted to get off scot free in this matter.

We are not suggesting necessarily that they should be placed under trusteeship also. I am not sure that this is practical. But we would like some indication as to what proposals the government may have in mind or what action it intends to take to see that the other parties to this whole conspiracy are also given some attention. I do not want to belabour all the evidence that has gone on the record. Other hon. members on this side of the chamber have read into the record the incontrovertible evidence of the collusion that took place between the S.I.U. and the various shipping companies, collusion in violation of the laws of Canada. Without this collusion much of the trouble could not have happened. We would like at this stage, Mr. Chairman, before clause 1 is carried, to have some indication from the government as to what measures they may have in mind to deal with the other guilty parties to this disgraceful conspiracy against the laws of Canada.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, my comments will be very brief. This whole subject has been given a very excellent debate in this house, and I would just like to stress a few points. This whole situation with which we are faced today seems to be one long retreat from a series of evils. If we go back far enough we find it was the evil of the shipping companies that first led to the communist dominated union on the great lakes. Then to get rid of the evil of this communist domination we brought in the evil of Hal Banks; and when that evil becomes more than we could stomach we bring in the evil of this trusteeship. Let us not forget; it is an evil. I think we all do, or should, recognize this. Surely history has taught us that evils do not correct themselves; somebody must make some move some place along the line to correct them. I think this is something that should remain in the minds of hon. members of this house. We are now faced with two evils, the evil of this legislation that we have to pass to cure a worse evil, and we still have with us—as has been pointed out by many hon. members—the original evil that started it all off, as represented by the shipping companies which have been hand in glove with Hal Banks over the years. Therefore this legislation has the support of the house to cure one particular evil; but let us not forget that there is another one to be corrected. Let us not leave this evil too long on the books.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, I wish to go on the record this evening in connection with my vote this afternoon, to explain to the house my action in voting for a measure which I have considered all my life to be against my convictions. I regret exceedingly that the government of today has been forced into a position, by the inaction of the previous government, that has made such action necessary. The hon. member for Kootenay West, when making some remarks a day or two ago, commented that this proposed piece of legislation would be a black mark across the beautiful canvas that Canada has been painting throughout the years. In my estimation this piece of legislation which has been forced on us by the inaction of the previous regime is a backward step, and one that is to be regretted.

Mr. MacInnis: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member has just cast a reflection on the previous administration, and he said this has been forced upon him. There has been nothing forced upon any member of the house. We had a free vote. He had his choice this afternoon, and he took it. That is not the responsibility of any previous administration.

The Chairman: Order. That is not a question of privilege.

Mr. MacInnis: It is a question of privilege as far as I am concerned.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, in 1834 we had the tremendous case of the Tolpuddle martyrs who were prosecuted by the government of the day because they formed an association of free men in the form of a trade union. I consider it a sorry state of affairs that in 1963, in the Dominion of Canada, we are passing legislation which brings under government trusteeship associations of free men. I wonder how many members of the Canadian House of Commons realize that of the six martyrs of Tolpuddle of 1834, all of whom were transported to Australia by an unjust decree and an unfair government, five, after they left Australia, emigrated to Canada and lie buried in the province of Ontario. Those five Tolpuddle martyrs who suffered grievous injury and wrong because of their beliefs that free men should be allowed to freely associate in a trade union lie in western Ontario, in cemeteries in the vicinity of London, Byron and St. Marys. It is interesting to note that one martyr of Tolpuddle, who lived the longest, to the age of 92, lies buried today in St. Marys, Ontario, in the same cemetery as a former prime minister of the Dominion of Canada.

In justifying my action in supporting this measure brought in by the government that I support, I would point out that when Liberal candidates ran in 1962 and again in 1963, we were assured by our leader that we had tremendous messes to clean up resulting from the inefficiency and indolence of the government that was then on its way out. When I stood for parliament in 1962, I did so knowing that this country was faced with a crisis resulting from the inability of the then government to handle the affairs of the nation. I tell you that the messes facing the present government of the Right Hon. Lester Pearson make the 12 labours of Hercules a mere myth. One of the tasks of Hercules was to clean the Augean stables. The Augeans thought he would refuse because he could not stand the stench of the offal and refuse around the cattle barns of the estates. We Liberal candidates in 1962 knew the refuse and offal that was lying around the cattle barns of the government. We volunteered to clean up the mess.

The Chairman: Order; I am sure the hon. member would agree with me that he is not coming very quickly to consideration of clause 1 of the bill now before the committee. I would ask him, as soon as possible, to relate the remarks he has been making to the subject matter of the bill and particularly to clause 1 thereof.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, I was going to draw an analogy between the fact that Hercules diverted two rivers into the Augean stables to clean up the mess and this action of the government's, on the St. Lawrence seaway, which will clear up the situation which has developed there.

I should like to draw to the attention of the committee, because I have not heard any other speaker refer to it, the fact that on page 298 of the Norris report you will find this sentence which goes to the heart of the entire report. Mr. Justice Norris writes:

> If any one thing was demonstrated on this inquiry, it was how lawlessness (including in the term disregard of the rule of law, of constituted authority, and of contractual obligations) begets lawlessness.

Mr. Justice Norris says that if any one thing was demonstrated in this inquiry it was how lawlessness begets lawlessness. I regret that in the clouds of hysteria surrounding this matter many have intimated that the lawlessness was on the part of one union led by one man. If hon. members would read the Norris report, and I regret exceedingly the large number of members who have not read the Norris report, they would find he attacks the shipping companies as well as the trade union on this matter of lawlessness. At page 298 of the report, Mr. Justice Norris adds this:

> It was at any time within the power of the C.S.L. with all its strength and influence to accomplish much in stabilizing the great lakes situation by taking a positive stand on the side of law and order, but for the sake of a present—at best uneasy—peace and for competitive advantage, it not only did nothing, but gave support to Banks, the lawbreaker. It showed a cynical disregard for its contractual obligations with the N.A.M.E.

Now, the Norris report points out that Canada Steamship Lines is the biggest of the Canadian companies, and its actions were generally followed by the other companies. The C.S.L. was the bellwether of the flock.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North read into the record the other day a list of the directors of the Canada Steamship Lines. The Secretary of State, in reply to a question, has read into the record the names of the directors of Misener steamships. Anyone who is acquainted with business life in Canada knows that these men are the leaders of our business community today. I came into the house at the age of 60, after 40 years in the business world. I would not have anyone think that I consider the members of the Canadian cabinet to be the ablest men of their age and generation. The members of Canadian cabinets have a job to do and most members do it well.

However, there are businessmen in this country who, immediately an election has taken place, begin to size up those people selected for the cabinet. I can assure you that following the elections of 1957 and 1958 the businessmen of this country sized up the members of the cabinet, took their measure and knew exactly how far they could go with whatever endeavour they wished to carry out.

Now, the record concerning the disregard of one of the shipping companies for the law of the land has been brought to our attention, and reference has been made to it in the Norris report on pages 54 and 55. I do not need to read the record again. However, I would point out that not only had the steamship directors a cynical disregard for the Minister of Labour, but even the Canadian brotherhood of railway and transport workers expressed their opinion of the ability of the previous government. On page 14 of the Norris report we find some extracts of the evidence given by Mr. Frederick Nicoll, director of organizing and servicing for the Canadian brotherhood of railway, transport and general workers. Under questioning, Mr. Nicoll was asked what he hoped to accomplish by the boycott that was called on vessels passing through the St. Lawrence seaway and the Welland canal. His reply was as follows:

> We hope to accomplish two things, Mr. Wright. Basically—primarily, rather; one was to force the situation where the Canadian manned ships that were presently being boycotted in the United States would be released from the boycott and we were hopeful that we were going to jockey the Canadian government into taking these steps which had been suggested by ourselves for I don't know how many years, by the Canadian Labour Congress in 1962, that there should be an industrial inquiry commission established to go into the whole sad sorry mess—
> Q. Yes, and in retrospect did you accomplish—not did you accomplish, but were these two objectives accomplished?
> A. As far as we are concerned, yes.

Mr. Nicoll is saying that the Canadian brotherhood of railway and transport workers jockeyed the Canadian government into the position that they desired. Now, a jockey rides an animal and is in control of that animal. He can make him go wherever the jockey wishes him to go. I ask, does this sound like a strong, independent government when an official of a brotherhood stands up and says they were hopeful they would jockey the Canadian government? In answer to a direct question he said they accomplished their purpose.

Now, the steamship lines wrote a letter to Mr. Bernard Wilson, the director of industrial relations, a very enlightening and revealing letter. In the course of the letter to Mr. Wilson, Misener Steamship Lines under date of April 10, 1959, stated that they realized their course of action was against the labour relations act. This letter came to the Department of Labour of the federal government. Along with that letter, Mr. Wilson received a copy of a letter of indemnification granted by the seamen's international union to the Misener Steamship Lines. Mr. Justice Norris made the comment that similar letters were sent to other shipping companies. I say to you that the federal government was notified by letter under date of April 10, 1959, that these steamship companies were breaking the law, and the government did absolutely nothing about it. The letter stated frankly that this course was against the labour relations act.

We on this side of the house have been trying to explain the inaction of the government during the five and a half years it was in power. Many of us thought that friendships with directors of some of the big steamship companies were responsible for the inaction and indolence which characterized the former government, particularly so far as the Department of Labour was concerned. However, I have a good friend of 40 years standing who is a director of a steamship company, and I could not believe that he would stoop to such a practice. And lo and behold, this is what the former minister of labour told us, not only last night between a quarter to ten and ten, but also the day before, as reported on page 3432 of Hansard:

> As I pointed out yesterday, any initiative on the part of the government to launch an inquiry into the affairs of a union which was affiliated with the Canadian Labour Congress would have aroused the most terrible attack upon the government by all members of the Canadian Labour Congress.

I want to repeat that to hon. members for emphasis.

Mr. MacInnis: Do not bother; you do not understand it.

Mr. Cowan: The former minister of labour said:

> —any initiative on the part of the government to launch an inquiry into the affairs of a union which was affiliated with the Canadian Labour Congress would have aroused the most terrible attack upon the government by all members of the Canadian Labour Congress.

But the former minister of labour did not point out that in June, 1959, the Canadian Labour Congress had kicked the S.I.U. out of the Canadian Labour Congress. So that means that from June, 1959, until the government resigned in April of this year, a period of three years and ten months, the S.I.U. was not affiliated with the Canadian Labour Congress; so the reason advanced by the former minister falls to the ground.

If you look at the supplements to the Norris report and at schedule 31 you will find listed there by Mr. Justice Norris examples of intimidation and violence. Nineteen cases of beatings are listed. No action was taken on those 19 cases which Mr. Justice Norris listed as occurring between August 18, 1957, when the former government was in power, and August 20, 1962. I should like to point out that of the 19 cases of beatings only the first two cases occurred when the S.I.U. was an affiliate of the C.L.C. The remaining 17 cases took place after the C.L.C. had rejected the S.I.U. as a member of their organization.

The hon. member for Ontario stated last night that when the record of lawlessness and malpractice on the great lakes had grown sufficiently serious action should then have been taken by this government. I would point out that the record of beatings and harassment and property damage occurred during the tenure of office of the former minister of labour. He had been properly sized up by the businessmen of this country and they knew how far they could push him. They knew how far they could go and they signed illegal contracts. They then notified him that they had signed them, knowing that in his ineptitude no action would be taken against them. As Mr. Justice Norris said in his report, lawlessness begets lawlessness.

This situation has been forced on this government by the inaction of the previous government, and I thank heaven we now have a government in power which is willing to take action. On page 296 of his report Mr. Justice Norris points out, in his conclusions, referring to Banks, that he and his union operated a vacation pay plan unlawfully and contrary to the directions of the minister of labour. Could anything be more plainly stated than that? Now we have a Minister of Labour who is willing to take action and who has notified the ship owners that they are not to send that vacation pay money to the S.I.U. but that it is to be returned directly to the employees. And in addition, the minister has taken action to recover $300,000 from the S.I.U. which money Mr. Justice Norris said was being administered unlawfully. What did the former minister of labour do to clean up that situation?

While I have pointed out the ineptitude of the former government and how it has brought us to the situation where we have to take action by legislating the affairs of unions, a step which is against the convictions and lifetime practices of members of the Liberal party, I should also stress that the inaction of the previous government has put a strain on our relations with the United States government. That is to be regretted. Our relations with the world must be based on friendly relations with the United States. Our relations with the United States are now strained, and this situation is going to take very careful handling. This has been forced on the government by the inaction of the previous government. Last night the former minister pointed out that when he was minister of labour the relations between Canada and the United States were such that we would be called bosom pals. Now he says there is a conflict between us. I say there is no fighting in a cemetery. Where there is no action there is no disagreement. But the moment this government, under our present Prime Minister, steps forward to straighten out the situation we receive protests from the United States, and we are told by members of the opposition that we are causing trouble.

In the course of discussion on this bill we have been told time and time again that Mr. Banks is the darling of the Liberal party; that Mr. Banks was brought into Canada by the Liberal party; that Mr. Banks has been nurtured in this country by the Liberal party, and that he expects to receive the same friendship from this government that he received from the St. Laurent government. I ask, Mr. Chairman, how could we extend any more friendship to this man than was extended by the former government, when you read their record of inaction—lack of police court action against the S.I.U. in connection with their activities throughout the country, all of which is documented by Mr. Justice Norris? The statement has been made several times that Mr. Banks has been granted the status of a landed immigrant; that the previous government, again because of their ineptitude examined the law of the land and found that Mr. Banks could not be deported from this country. When this was challenged and it was pointed out that he could be deported if he violated certain laws of the land, we got that hollow laugh that bespeaks the vacant mind and were told no, he could not be deported. According to a press release which appeared in the Toronto daily Star on Monday, September 23, the former prime minister revealed that his government had had Mr. Banks fully investigated, but concluded that it could not deport him because of an order in council. Yesterday the Secretary of State challenged that statement, pointing out that Mr. Banks can be deported if he at any time violates the law of the land, and that he would be deported if he were to do anything that justified such action.

It is a little difficult to follow the comments of some of the speakers so far. I knew a former member for Broadview very well, and I will long remember a comment made by the late Joe Clark, who was father to Gregory and editor of the Toronto daily Star for about 40 years.

Mr. MacInnis: Would the hon. member permit a question?

[Mr. Cowan.]

Mr. Cowan: After I am through speaking. Mr. Clark referred to the former member for Broadview, Ontario, as being the greatest orator Canada had ever seen because he was entirely unhampered by facts. Well, we have one here in the House of Commons at the present time who is running him a very close second, and when the Secretary of State very properly challenged that hon. gentleman on his statement that Mr. Banks as a landed immigrant could not be deported —and he went to the length of making a press release to that effect—on the very next page of Hansard, page 3404 of the issue for October 10, in the left hand column the hon. member for Prince Albert—and it is to him that I am referring—is reported as saying:

> They gave him the status of a man who was above challenge, so long as thereafter he lived within the law.

That is exactly what we Liberals have been saying. And in the very next sentence the right hon. gentleman goes on to say, entirely unhampered by the facts—"but Banks was above the law". In his first breath he says he was given the status of a man above challenge as long as thereafter he lived within the law—which is correct. And then, in the next sentence he says: "but he was above the law". How is one to believe statements made in this manner? The first statement was accurate. The second was as false as the Secretary of State stated it to be.

I regret exceedingly that this Liberal government has been forced into the position of bringing in legislation such as has been introduced today. We know it had to be done. When we took over we found that in the Department of Finance the interest payments on the national debt had been increased by a million dollars a day. We found that the unemployment insurance fund was bankrupt. We found that the Department of National Health and Welfare was allowing the issuance of dangerous sample drugs to people free of charge. And now, in the Department of Labour, we find a situation which calls for legislation of a kind which many who sit on this side of the house find it onerous to support. But because we volunteered in 1962 and re-enlisted in 1963 in the army to clean up the Augean stables which, according to the Greek myth, stank so much that two rivers were needed to clean them out—because we volunteered to clean up that mess, we mean to do so right now.

Mr. Peters: May I ask the previous speaker a question? A question has been raised as to whether or not Mr. Banks can be deported. I do not think the Secretary of State was correctly interpreted the other day and I should like to ask him whether it is his opinion that Mr. Banks, because of his status as a landed immigrant, can be deported to the United States without the permission of the United States for him to land there.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think it is doubtful that we could deport anyone to any country which was not willing to accept the person deported. We cannot dump human beings into a country which does not want to accept them.

An hon. Member: You did that in Canada.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I might be allowed to answer the question without the intelligent assistance I am receiving. It is well known that under the law of Canada the grounds for deporting a landed immigrant are, as they ought to be, much more stringent than those which apply to someone who is just a visitor. When we give someone a landing in this country we give him a certain status and I think it is fair to say that a man who has been landed as an immigrant can scarcely be deported for anything he has done before the date of his landing. However, anybody can read the Immigration Act as well as I can, and it will be seen that until a person becomes a citizen of this country there are grounds for deportation and, therefore, the statement made by the Leader of the Opposition was not in accordance with the law which he himself helped to make. That was the only point I was seeking to make the other day.

Since I have been asked to answer a question, I should like to add this: the Leader of the Opposition did a lot of loose talking about this matter, but the only offence he mentioned in respect of which Mr. Banks had been convicted was the possession of smuggled cigarettes.

An hon. Member: Thirty thousand.

Mr. Pickersgill: Whether it was thirty thousand or three does not seem to me to make very much difference. Either somebody smuggles them or not. The number of cigarettes does not change the position.

Mr. Churchill: You are speaking of convictions in Canada.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Leader of the Opposition never gave any examples whether in Canada or elsewhere. He talked about the record Banks had and I asked the right hon. gentleman a question which he did not answer. The question I asked him was: was Mr. Banks ever convicted for anything after he was landed as an immigrant. And of course, the Leader of the Opposition, as he always does when asked an awkward question, changed the subject.

Mr. Nielsen: What about the record attached to the order in council?

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, until recently the Leader of the Opposition was head of the government for six years and I do not think that if Mr. Banks had been convicted of anything in the courts the right hon. gentleman would have been reticent in telling us about it. I am not seeking to defend Mr. Banks, but I can only assume the only conviction he had in Canada was for the possession of smuggled cigarettes. All these other things are charges, and for the author of the bill of rights to talk about charges as if they were convictions is for him to appear in a somewhat strange guise.

I am supporting this bill. I am 100 per cent in favour of it. I think the record of Mr. Banks as displayed in the Norris report is reprehensible and that he should not be in charge of this union. I also think that Mr. Banks, like every other human being, is entitled to have the truth told about him and not have statements made about him which cannot be supported by the record. If Mr. Banks is, in fact, guilty of some of the things of which the Norris report indicates he is guilty, and if the previous government in six years never laid a charge in the courts, I say hon. gentlemen opposite were derelict in their duty during all that time, considering the fact that this union is a union on the waterways of this country and that it would therefore have been within the power of the previous government to have laid charges in the courts, and to secure convictions, if such convictions could be secured.

Mr. Nielsen: May I ask the hon. gentleman one question. I have been following this discussion with great interest. As I understood what was said in the course of the debate, the order in council which was signed had a record as long as your arm attached to it. Surely the Secretary of State saw that record. I cannot understand why, in the face of that evidence, the order in council which gave Banks the status which has caused this difficulty was signed in the first place.

Mr. Pickersgill: There has been an awful lot of talk about "a record as long as your arm", and perhaps it is characteristic of the hon. member that he should have used this expression, but I notice he did not tell us anything about that record when he spoke. I think the hon. member will find that those offences were committed over 30 years ago by a young man who had no convictions for more than 20 years, except the conviction for possession of those smuggled cigarettes.

Mr. MacInnis: May I ask a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I could finish answering one question before I am asked another. Whatever judgment the government may have made at that time in this regard, and I have not seen the documents since that time, speaking to the best of my recollection I believe those offences were committed in California in the 1930's, the depression period, by a young man who had no other convictions after that time. That is my recollection; I may be wrong because I have not looked at the record for a very long time.

It is also my recollection that one, and perhaps two of those offences, were offences in the state of California that were not offences in Canada. Again I may be wrong; but whatever they were, the right hon. gentleman and many other hon. members of this house—not including me because I was not in the house at this time—made a change in the Immigration Act in 1952.

Mr. Winkler: A serious change.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, a serious change which I am sure the right hon. gentleman supported, because it was the kind of humanitarian thing he liked to associate himself with. Up until that time it had been the law of Canada that no one could be admitted to the country as an immigrant who had any criminal record. The law was changed to provide that if a man many years previously had a criminal record and if he appeared to be reformed he could, in certain circumstances, be admitted. This parliament made that change in the clear light of day. It was a very deliberate change and was made before I was a member of parliament, and it was in pursuance of that change in the law that the action was taken in 1954.

I have no doubt that, considering what has happened since then, if one had had the advantage of hindsight at that time, Mr. Banks would not have been landed. Maybe it was an error of judgment. That may well be, but I do say that it was in accordance with the law which I had no part in making. It was a decision made by my predecessor before I became the minister, but which, I have said before and I say again, I know he made conscientiously after the most careful examination of all the facts.

Whether it was wise or whether it was not wise is another matter, but anybody who suggests it was made by my predecessor on any other grounds than a conscientious desire to carry out the law made by parliament, does not know my predecessor in that office very well.

Mr. Webb: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, once again we have just had another display by the Secretary of State, who is the house leader, jumping up when a question is asked of some other hon. member and trying to interfere. Perhaps he thinks the other hon. member who was asked the question is incapable of answering it.

The Secretary of State was not even recognized by the Chair, and just got up to make a long political speech. It is time something was done about this, sir. This is something which was brought to the attention of the Chair the other day, and tonight we have the same thing. The question was asked of the hon. member for York-Humber, but evidently the Secretary of State thought him incapable of answering it, so he jumped up and took over.

Mr. Pickersgill: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, I understood—I may be mistaken—that the question was directed to me.

Mr. Webb: It was not.

Mr. Pickersgill: If it was not directed to me then I am very sorry indeed. I apologize most of all to the hon. gentleman to whom the question was directed. It is a well known fact that I am rather deaf in the ear pointed to the questioner, and I had no intention or desire to take part in the debate; but apparently I misunderstood. I thought it was a direct question posed to me, and as I had no desire to duck it I got up and answered it.

After all, sir, I too was elected to this house. It does seem to me that hon. gentlemen on the opposite side who are so touchy when there is any suggestion they should not be allowed to speak as often as they like, should realize even members of the government were elected to this house, and should also have a reasonable degree of freedom of speech in the house.

Mr. Douglas: I want to raise a point of order. Surely this discussion is going far afield from clause 1 of the bill. The government brought us back here tonight because we were told it was most important this legislation should be passed. We have now listened for nearly an hour to an argument regarding whether or not it is the Conservatives or Liberals who are to blame for Mr. Banks and the state of affairs in the shipping industry. Surely we ought to get on with the bill, and surely most of this discussion has been out of order so far as the first clause of the bill is concerned.

Mr. Pickersgill: On the point of order, I quite agree with the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, and I apologize for any part I took in this discussion.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Chairman, I have a question for the previous speaker—not the interjector—and it certainly is not my intention to prolong the debate. I would like to ask the hon. member for York-Humber, was he here this afternoon when the yeas and nays were called, and if so did he support the government?

Mr. Cowan: I stated when I began to speak that I had voted yea on the measure, and I said I wished to speak tonight about the little alacrity with which I supported the bill. I was here and I voted. I was not paired and I did not go behind the curtain.

Mr. Winkler: Utterly ridiculous.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I wonder if we could discuss clause 1 of the bill?

Mr. Churchill: I heard your request, Mr. Chairman, that we should discuss clause 1 of the bill. I also heard the apology of the Secretary of State for his intervention in the debate, and I heard the speech made by the hon. member for York-Humber. But what are we to do now? Are we simply to accept this and let the Liberal party get away with these accusations against the former government? Are we to permit the Secretary of State to make the accusations he made against the leader of this party, in his absence, and then be restricted from replying? That is about what it amounts to.

We were thoroughly co-operative today and anxious to get this measure through the house, but we are being prevented by the type of speech made by the hon. member for York-Humber and the interjection by the Secretary of State, which I think is very regrettable indeed.

I will delay the house only for about two minutes to say that the Secretary of State, in accusing the leader of this party of not putting the facts on the record with regard to Mr. Hal Banks—

Mr. Winch: Delay no more. Let us have a vote.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I also appeal for freedom of speech in this chamber, the same as the Secretary of State, and I insist on my rights.

Mr. Pickersgill: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: I simply refer the committee to Hansard for October 4, page 3216, where the leader of this party referred to the order in council, with the appendix attached to it, which lists the offences or charges under which Mr. Banks laboured in days gone by. He actually read part of the document into the record, and in the Norris report, on pages 104 and 105, something is said about the record of Mr. Hal Banks. For anybody from the Liberal party to suggest that the leader of this party was not putting the facts before the house is quite incorrect, and it is to this that I raise an objection.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I think it is pretty clear we will never get to the end of this discussion as to who was responsible for what in the past. Suppose we get back to where we were about an hour ago and invite the Minister of Labour to answer some of the questions that were put to him about the government's attitude toward the other culprits in the mess that is before us, namely, the shipping companies.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to intervene again in the debate because I thought I had set forth my reasons for voting against the measure quite clearly before the supper recess. However, the answer of the Secretary of State to the question I asked him is so incomplete that in all fairness I think it deserves a little elaboration. I have gone into the matter very carefully. I examined my conscience very carefully before I had the temerity to vote against the measure, and one of the factors that affected my decision was the record of Banks and my complete lack of understanding as to why the order in council was signed in the first place in the face of that record and, second, why he cannot now in the face of his background still be the subject of a special amendment to the Canadian Citizenship Act. I think Banks' record should be discussed a little bit further.

On February 5, 1930, at Long Beach, California, Banks was arrested on four charges of issuing n.s.f. cheques. On March 6, 1930, he pleaded guilty to one charge. On March 27, 1930, he was given a nine-month suspended sentence and placed on probation for three years on condition that restitution was made.

On July 22, 1930, at Los Angeles, California, he was arrested for burglary and was also charged with issuing an n.s.f. cheque. His probation was revoked. On September 17, 1930, he pleaded guilty on the cheque charge. On September 27, 1930, he was sentenced to zero to 14 years in San Quentin penitentiary. The district attorney asked that the burglary charge be dropped although the police knew that Banks had participated with others who had not been caught yet. He cited the sentence already given the accused.

On March 8, 1934, he was released from San Quentin, some three years later. On January 16, 1937, he was arraigned at Long Beach, California, on a charge of murder arising from one Oral Hammer having been kicked to death in a tavern brawl. On March 13, 1937, he was found not guilty of murder or manslaughter. On June 28, 1942, at San Bernardino, California, he was up on a charge of child stealing which was dismissed.

Mr. Pickersgill: Was it not his own child?

Mr. Nielsen: I would not want to be specific because I am not sure of my facts in that particular regard.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is my recollection.

Mr. Nielsen: The information I have been able to gather is that he was arrested on a charge of child stealing and this was dismissed on June 28, 1942. On December 17, 1947, at Richmond, California, he was arrested on a charge of carrying a dangerous weapon and of disturbing the peace. The first charge was dismissed and he was found guilty on the second and was fined $30 or ten days. The fine was paid.

Now we come to that part of his record after he arrived in Canada. I would assume that all of the previous record in concise form must have been attached to the appendix to the order in council. Subsequent to his arrival in Canada, on May 7, 1949, at Montreal he was charged with causing bodily harm by Maurice Pitre. On May 25, 1949, at Montreal he was charged together with three others with carrying sawed-off shotguns and rifles by Frank Miner. On October 18, 1949, the Pitre complaint was dismissed on grounds of insufficient evidence.

Mr. Winkler: Who was the judge?

Mr. Nielsen: The Miner complaint against Banks was dismissed on grounds of lack of evidence but the three others were convicted. Judge Almond heard both cases.

On April 14, 1952, at Montreal Banks was charged under section 217 (3) of the Customs Act in a case involving 36,000 U.S. cigarettes. He pleaded guilty and was fined $200. The fine and costs were paid. I presume in this case the knowledge was in the possession of the Canadian government.

On January 9, 1954, at Montreal he was charged by Byron Ryan with intimidation. The case was dismissed when the complainant failed to show up. On October 10, 1957, at Montreal he was charged by Jacques Savard with defamatory libel and with publishing a libel in company with two others. That would be a criminal charge. The charge against Banks was dismissed but the two others were committed for trial. On October 17, 1957, at Montreal he was charged by Harry Mockeridge with defamatory libel together with two others, again a criminal charge. On December 19, 1957, the charge against Banks was dismissed. Judge Almond held that although Banks had control of the matter published he should be exonerated by reason of ignorance. Again, the two others were committed for trial.

So this is Banks' record as I understand it. In the light of that knowledge I have a complete lack of any understanding—

Mr. Munro: Could I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Nielsen: In just a moment, please. I have a complete lack of understanding as to how in the face of these facts the then minister could have allowed such an individual the status of a landed immigrant, which is right next door to Canadian citizenship.

Mr. Munro: Could I ask the hon. member a question? In the long list that the hon. member has just read how many convictions were there?

Mr. Nielsen: I think I dealt with each charge and the disposition of it. There was only one conviction, that for smuggling cigarettes.

Mr. Munro: In the whole list.

Mr. Nielsen: In Canada.

Mr. Munro: And in the United States how many convictions?

Mr. Nielsen: They are in Hansard now and you can count them, because as I went through the record—

Mr. Munro: This is grossly unfair. There is no purpose in reciting them if the charges were dismissed.

An hon. Member: Defending Banks.

Mr. Munro: Just fairness. That is all.

Mr. Nielsen: Perhaps the hon. member does not wish to hear the answer to his question. As I went through the list I gave the date and the charge and I think I also gave in each case the disposition of the charge. In Canada he was only convicted of the one offence. Nevertheless, there was a long list of charges and I would be astounded to learn that the Canadian government did not know of these charges.

Mr. Winkler: I should like to ask the hon. member a question. I did ask him in the course of his remarks and I believe he indicated that three of these cases were heard by a particular judge. I wonder whether he knows the name of the judge who heard the other charges.

Mr. Nielsen: In those cases where I have named the judge it was Judge Almond, but where I have not indicated the judge on the bench I cannot specify.

Mr. Lloyd: Mr. Chairman, as the house knows, I took my seat in the house for the first time on May 16, and I have listened attentively to many of the assertions and counter-assertions that have been made on various issues. As a backbencher sitting back and listening to the pros and cons of this matter, I think I can honestly and fairly say that all the evidence is in. Let us proceed to apply the remedy.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, we in this house agreed to sit tonight so we could accomplish something definite in regard to the urgent problem that is before us. It seems to me it does not matter whether the past government, or the present government, or a government before that is at fault; we should be dealing with the issue that is before us. Judging from the caustic and uncomplimentary remarks emanating out of the United States today it is apparent that Hal Banks is a hero below the 49th parallel. At least, they seem to think more of him than they do of our present Prime Minister, or the past prime minister, or any of us here in parliament.

Mr. MacInnis: He might make a good leader for you.

Mr. Thompson: It seems to me it would be a sound proposition if we got down to the business of passing this legislation as quickly as possible, then perhaps on Monday morning the government could see whether through deportation or some other means Hal Banks might be sent back to the United States, because at least from what we hear from across the border they ought to be happy to receive him back. But the question is whether we will go ahead with this legislation. We are not sitting this evening to waste our time. Let us get on with it as quickly as possible.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I just have one brief question, which bears on something with which the Minister of Labour is perhaps going to deal, or his colleague the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Am I not correct in assuming that a landed immigrant is still a citizen of the United States?

Mr. Favreau: Of course, Mr. Chairman, he does not lose his previous citizenship and he does not become a Canadian citizen until such time as he has been granted Canadian citizenship. In the present case, as has been explained, in accordance with the act as it stands, five years after having been landed as an immigrant, he has acquired, not Canadian citizenship but what we call Canadian domicile, and from that moment he could be deported only—

An hon. Member: What about Weldon Chan?

Mr. Favreau: —in accordance with the provisions laid down in the act, and the main one is subversive activities. I would say that I was not in parliament during all that time, but I think that in this matter all the responsibility or onus for having either admitted to this country or failed to deport Hal Banks during the five year period after his admission in 1954 rests with both administrations. The two administrations had the same opportunity to act in this regard, and I think we should all take it for granted until the contrary is proven, that during that five year period after which he obtained Canadian domicile, both administrations acted in good faith. If the previous government did not deport him during the two years he was under their jurisdiction, I assume they acted in good faith; and I assume the previous administration also acted in good faith.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, there is nothing in this legislation that has to do with deportation. Surely the committee should not have its time wasted in listening to legal argument. If he could have been deported, then the previous government and the present government were derelict in their duty in not deporting him. But that is a separate question altogether. As a matter of fact I would point out something to my hon. friend who has taken up a great deal of the time of the committee in trying to substantiate his argument that if you deported Hal Banks today you would not get rid of all the trouble, because Paul Hall would send another one of his goons back here in the morning and you would have the same thing all over again. The only way to deal with the S.I.U. is to set up the kind of trusteeship covered by this legislation. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that if we are not going to deal with this legislation now, I for one am prepared to present a motion that the committee rise and report no progress.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, prior to the vote I think there were four other hon. members besides myself who spoke against this legislation.

An hon. Member: Three.

Mr. MacInnis: Three others, rather. I was one of four. Since the vote a number of hon. members from the government side of the house have risen and taken up the time of this committee to alibi themselves for the stand they took. There was the reference of the hon. member for York-Humber about going behind the curtain or something like that, which was uncalled for. He made his decision this afternoon and he has now taken up quite a bit of the time of the committee to alibi his way out of it.

I do not care how anybody votes, but this committee unanimously, including the four who voted against the legislation, put the entire blame for this situation, not on one or other administration but in the lap of Hal Banks. Why since the vote was taken have hon. members from that side of the house risen to alibi themselves out and cast reflections on the previous government? And then they do not expect us to retaliate, by casting reflections on the previous Liberal government. Prior to the vote everybody was unanimous in saying that Hal Banks was at fault. Now they have reached the point where they are asking who is to blame. People on the other side of the house have said that the Conservative government was to blame; people on this side have said that the present and former Liberal administrations were to blame. Then we had the leader of the New Democratic party rising and saying it does not really matter who is to blame. We have placed the blame where it belongs, with Mr. Hal Banks.

I will go along with the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration who said that both administrations were perhaps equally to blame, but I will include also the C.L.C. whose president, Claude Jodoin, made it impossible for any government to move against Hal Banks, because he was one of the citizens, one of the union leaders, who went before the immigration appeal court with this same Hal Banks and said he would make a model citizen. So the blame goes right across the board. Therefore let us have no more of who is at fault, this government or that government; the C.L.C. is also involved.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, every party in the chamber has now had an opportunity to justify itself. Let us come back to the question.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. MacEwan: That is the best speech you ever made, Bob.

Mr. Nielsen: Again, Mr. Chairman, I would not be rising but for the remarks of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, who has accused me of wasting time.

Mr. Gray: That is right.

Mr. Nielsen: The hon. member has spoken on practically every debate in this house, and when one matter is raised about which my own conscience is deeply concerned he said I am wasting the time of the committee. He says the committee is wasting time hearing legal argument; but this question seems important to me. It may not be important to the hon. member. I am wondering whether any alternative is available, before this legislation goes through. One of my questions has been answered. I anticipated that answer and thought it would be as it was, from the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

I hope that when the Minister of Labour rises he will satisfy me as to why the alternative of amending the Citizenship Act was not adopted because, this being the extraordinary measure it is, surely an alternative, just as extraordinary albeit, but not having the necessity of imposing a trusteeship, could have been adopted. Why was not the Citizenship Act amended in such a way as to revoke the status of Hal Banks in Canada, thus making him no longer a landed immigrant and reverting him to his United States citizenship, in which case he could have been deported from this country?

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, at seven o'clock this evening I rose and took up a few minutes of the committee's time to pose a question to the Minister of Labour. I know that on at least two, if not three occasions in the time that has elapsed since he was on the point of rising but yielded the floor in courtesy to other members. I for one would still like to hear the Minister of Labour, before we pass clause 1, give answers that I think he is prepared to give to some of the questions, at least, that have been raised.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, with respect to the alternative that has been proposed as a method of dealing with this situation, I must remind the committee that the house has decided upon the principle of the bill on second reading; that is, to place the maritime transportation unions of Canada under the management and control of trustees. If at the second reading stage there were other alternatives, hon. members were free to place them in the form of amendments and test them in the opinion of the house. The house has now accepted the principle of the bill and is considering it in committee.

Several hon. gentlemen have asked me why there are no provisions in this bill to deal with the shipping companies. Mr. Justice Norris, as hon. gentlemen know, spent about a year studying the matter and preparing a report. I believe he reviewed this situation completely. It is true that he did apply some strictures to the shipping companies, especially the Canada Steamship Lines; but in his recommendations he made no proposals to the Minister of Labour in respect of action to be taken against the shipping companies. He made a proposal that we ought to set up a government trusteeship. I presume he had concluded, on the basis of the evidence, that the root problem in the situation, notwithstanding the evidence of collusion that he found, rested within the S.I.U., and if that root problem were solved the rest of the situation would adjust itself. This is the only conclusion I can draw from this recommendation.

I say further to hon. members of the committee that if parliament approves this measure and if, as we expect, capable and reputable trustees are appointed to administer the trusteeship, they will be able to root out any future collusion that may exist, or conspiracy on the part of the shipping companies. The report of the inquiry was to the Minister of Labour and, in this bill, I am acting upon the recommendations of the commissioner in respect of the maritime transportation unions.

Now, with respect to any further actions that hon. members may feel are necessary or justified in so far as the shipping companies are concerned, that is a matter for the government as a whole. It would be a matter of government policy with which I cannot deal in a committee studying a bill whose principle has been approved by the House of Commons.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the minister this? If the companies who have in the past broken the law and have connived with Banks in flouting the law, were to continue this practice, if they were to refuse to co-operate with the board of trustees and were to work with the racketeering element that the board of trustees hopes to eliminate, has the minister got power in this or any other act to deal with these companies and compel them to co-operate with the board of trustees?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I think that this is a helpful question. Clause 10 of the bill provides for penalties that apply to any person who obstructs or hinders the trustees in carrying out their duties. It would seem to me that if the trustees found that any shipping company was obstructing them in carrying out the purposes of the trusteeship, then sanctions under this section would apply to the shipping companies. This would be my view.

Mr. Douglas: I am not a lawyer, and I welcome the minister's interpretation of clause 10. However, since this act is to provide for trusteeship over trade unions, I am wondering if a company which does not co-operate would be violating the provisions of this measure and would come under clause 10? It would seem doubtful to me.

Mr. Favreau: I would read the clause in this way because "person" includes a corporation. Whenever the bill speaks about hindering the activities or the carrying out of the duties of the trustees, there is no reason in the world why a shipping corporation which is hindering the trustees should not fall under clause 10.

Mr. Nielsen: I regret the fact that the minister failed to deal with or comment upon the suggestion I made concerning the amendment of the Citizenship Act. He knows, or he should know, that if I had wanted to move an amendment on second reading which would have embodied the suggestion I made, it would have been out of order. I cannot recall the house being faced with an amendment on second reading which would have the effect of repealing the measure under consideration.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2—Definitions.

Mr. Peters: In paragraph (d) of clause 2 we find rather extensive powers are being requested. It would seem that a number of things will be picked up by this trusteeship, as happens in most cases where a trusteeship is invoked. The trustee has the right to pick up all the papers and documents, get control of the bank accounts and other journals connected with the operations of the union.

However, in this particular case mention is made of property of any kind, whether real or personal, movable or immovable and including money, rights of any kind and choses in action. There seems to be little that is left out. There have been some suggestions that the R.C.M.P. is ready to conduct the necessary raids to put this provision into action as soon as the bill is passed. This is probably as it should be. However, I am wondering if there are rights that may be taken away under this type of provision. If there were to be an accounting, there would probably have to be a reference to the exchequer court. There is a rumour that certain evidence may be disposed of, and I am wondering if the R.C.M.P. is to be empowered to act under this particular clause.

I think all hon. members will agree that the provision is rather extensive, and there should be some legal terminology applied here so that there will be an accounting of the property.

Mr. Herridge: Before the minister answers, I should like to ask two short questions somewhat related to the question asked by the hon. member for Timiskaming. Why are there two descriptions of property, one under the word "property", and one under the words "property of a maritime union"? Would the minister explain why there are these two descriptions of property in this bill? Also, not being a lawyer, would he explain for my benefit, or illustrate what is meant by "corporeal or incorporeal" property?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, may I be allowed to answer the last question first, with the leave of the Minister of Labour and more particularly of the chairman of the committee. The reason why in paragraph (d) of clause 2 the word "property" is defined is to make sure that, in whoever's hands it be found, the whole concept of property, whenever necessary for the carrying out of the purposes of the unions, is provided for under the act. In paragraph (e) that property which is defined in paragraph (d) may be in the hands of two types of unions, those which are incorporated and which can hold their own personal property—they are provided for in subparagraph (ii) of paragraph (e)—and those unions who are not incorporated and may not hold property themselves, but whose property is in the hands of other persons, in the hands of their administrators. Those are the type of unions provided for in paragraph (e)(ii).

As to the first question put regarding the generality of the definition of the word "property", the hon. member may rest assured that this is a matter which has been the cause of serious concern to, and therefore serious consideration by, the government. We came to the conclusion very sincerely that if there is to be a trusteeship the application of this legislation and the fulfilment of its purpose becomes impossible if the funds and investments of the union are not at the disposal of the trustees.

Second, I think one will agree that if the trustees are not vested with the control of the moneys of these unions the whole purpose of the bill may be defeated by anybody seizing control in a fashion not in conformity with the purposes of this legislation. The question is very serious and I think we all thank the hon. member for raising it. However, he will notice that, for instance in clause 11 (2), the government has shown its intention not to vest the trustees with these moneys just for the purpose of doing so. Because in the case of moneys which are directed to the establishment of a welfare plan for the seamen, the paragraph vesting the trustees with these moneys does not apply if the moneys are administered by trust companies or insurance companies. I think this explains the situation and I hope it answers the question.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I have a question with regard to clause 2 (c), which defines a maritime transportation union and a maritime union, as those terms are used in the bill. I feel there should be some explanation given in this connection, because if one consults schedule B, parts I and II, which schedule is referred to in clause 2(c)(i), it is clear that the trusteeship is to extend to maritime unions not only operating on the great lakes but also on the coasts of Canada. I feel that a good deal of misunderstanding may arise owing to the fact that all the discussion we have had is centred on a situation existing on the great lakes. I think a very natural question not only in the minds of us who sit in this house but in the minds of many people who are members of unions, as well as those who are citizens in other parts of the country, will be why any application of this act should be extended to the west coast or the east coast of Canada. I think the minister should give some explanation at this point why the bill does propose the inclusion of local unions, for example, the C.B.R.T. on the west coast of Canada, under the provisions of the proposed trusteeship.

Mr. MacEachen: I think that if my friend would refer to the recommendations of the Norris report he would find that Mr. Justice Norris pointed out the possibility of the extension of the operations of such combinations along the seaway in Canadian and United States ports, and on the coast of Canada. We attempted in the preparation of this legislation to include all unions in the maritime field so that the trusteeship would have control over the whole situation. The trusteeship might be very ineffective if responsibility was assigned to the trustees for one particular area and difficulties arose elsewhere which frustrated the operation of the trusteeship. That is why the total field is covered.

Mr. Barnett: Then do I take it from the minister's remarks that he would envisage the possibility that Mr. Hal Banks might decide to move his centre of activities to Vancouver and create a similar situation there to that which has prevailed on the great lakes? Is that part of the minister's thinking in this connection?

Mr. MacEachen: I think that is true. I believe this person to which my hon. friend refers has operated already in Vancouver.

Clause agreed to.

Mr. Douglas: Naturally, Mr. Chairman, the minister would not want to name whom he intends to appoint to the board of trustees, but there is one recommendation of Mr. Justice Norris with which I do not agree, and it is an important point. He suggested that the board should be made up of a chairman with wide legal experience, an economist with some knowledge of labour matters, and some person experienced in transportation. I should like to ask the minister whether he cares to suggest the kind of categories from which these people will come. Does he plan to have a lawyer, an economist, or what type of person is he thinking of appointing? If I may re-emphasize what has already been said several times from this side of the house, if one of the functions of this board of trustees is to take these unions one of which has lost democratic control and train it so that once again it can assume democratic control of its own affairs and manage them, this will call for a person with experience in trade union matters. I do not care how good an economist may be, how experienced a person may be in the transportation field, or whether you have a first class legal mind. Unless somebody knows how trade unions work and can lead these people step by step into assuming responsibility, I think the trusteeship is likely to break down because of a lack of understanding and communication between the board of trustees and the unions they are supposed to be supervising. I wonder whether the minister has given any thought to the kind of person he is proposing to appoint.

Mr. MacEachen: I am glad to tell the hon. member what is under consideration or, at least, what I have been thinking about. It has occurred to me it might be helpful to have as chairman of the trustees a person of judicial attitudes, whether he be a judge or whether he be someone who has experience in mediation or arbitration. I agree that it is necessary to have on the trusteeship body a person very knowledgeable in labour matters, preferably someone with personal experience of the conduct of union affairs. With these two considerations in mind we shall attempt to get an effective group of men to discharge this responsibility. I am in full agreement with the suggestion made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam that the trade union aspect ought definitely to be represented.

Mr. MacInnis: Would the minister's answer indicate that the name of the hon. chief justice will be considered, possibly for the chairmanship?

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member obviously is thinking of the kind of highly qualified person I have in mind. But I certainly do not want to start naming names tonight.

Mr. MacInnis: Possibly the minister could indicate whether Mr. Walter Harris has been considered.

Mr. Aiken: There is no doubt, I presume, that the three trustees will all be Canadians?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Chairman, they will be.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 4 agreed to.

On clause 5—Personnel.

Mr. Nielsen: I have one question to ask on clause 5. I see that clause 17 provides for the payment of certain expenses to be paid out of government funds. I wonder if that clause will apply to the payment of personnel who might be appointed under clause 5?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Peters: I was wondering whether the minister expects the trustees to be active in the actual operation of union affairs. In other words, does he contemplate that the trustees will operate from some remote point, or does he expect them to participate actively in the operation of building a new union as a full time job.

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, I take it the trustees must be in full charge of the situation. It would in my view certainly be a full time job for these men. It might be necessary for them to hire other persons to assist them, but I would expect that the trustees would be closely identified with the activities which they intend to control.

Mr. MacRae: I note that the entire cost of the trusteeship is to be borne, as I understand it, by the government of Canada and thus, ultimately, by the taxpayers of this country. Has the minister given any consideration to having a certain amount of the cost of this trusteeship paid by the five unions involved?

Mr. MacEachen: I think it would be reasonable to expect the taxpayers to assume the cost of these proceedings because this is to be a public trusteeship—the trustees are to be appointed by the government pursuant to an act of this parliament. If a private trusteeship had been in effect, and if the prime responsibility rested upon the union movement, I think it would be fair for the unions themselves to have borne the expense, and this is what was in mind in the now lamented private memorandum we had worked on. In this case, however, the trusteeship is public, not private and it seems reasonable to me that we should deal with it as an expense to the taxpayers.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 6 agreed to.

Mr. Barnett: I feel this is one of the more important clauses of the bill since it outlines the responsibilities and duties of the trustees. It tells them, in fact, how they are to operate and what powers they are to receive. With reference to clause 7 (1), the question has arisen in the minds of some of us whether or not, according to this wording, the trustees will be subject to and have to operate within the ordinary terms of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act. I, for one, feel that the legislation as drafted does not make this point clear. It says nothing about it one way or another. It does say specifically in line three that the trustees must act in accordance with the legislation which we now have under consideration, but I am wondering whether any thought has been given to the point which I have raised.

It has occurred to me that if, immediately following the words "this Act" in line three, words to this effect were added—"and subject to the terms of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigations Act" the position would be made entirely clear. At the back of this suggestion is my idea that these trustees should in effect be acting as if they were the duly elected officers of the trade unions involved, and that it should be clearly set out that they would be expected to deal with such matters as negotiations with the companies when the time comes for these negotiations to be carried out. In other words, they would be acting as if they were officers of a trade union dealing with the companies and subject to the normal operation of our labour laws. Has the minister any comment to make on that suggestion?

Mr. MacEachen: It is intended that the trustees should fully observe the normal industrial relations law, and there is nothing in this bill which would supersede the application of the act to which the hon. member has referred. We fully expect that the trustees will operate within that framework.

Mr. Nielsen: With respect to clause 7(5) I see that there is a power of delegation so extensive that it would amount to a complete abnegation, if it were exercised, of the responsibilities of the trustees. Under the subsection the trustees may delegate "any or all of the duties and powers of the trustees to any person appointed by the trustees." As I read this, the trustees could delegate all the powers which this legislation gives them to a single person or to a group of persons. The danger which I see is the possibility of the trustees delegating the whole of the powers to any one individual. I am wondering what is the purpose behind this subclause?

Mr. MacEachen: I think we have to assume the trustees will delegate in accordance with the authority they will have under this bill. It may well be necessary to have this kind of delegation because of the extent of the operations coming under the trusteeship.

The Canadian maritime union has one local with 500 members. The S.I.U. has 17,000 members, with two divisions. The marine engineers have seven locals and the Canadian merchant service guild has two divisions with more than 2,400 members. The C.B.R.T. has 13 locals in various parts of the country, in the east and the west, so that it certainly will be necessary for the trustees to have this power of delegation, and presumably in certain instances this will not present any difficulty. Presumably there are certain unions which will operate normally without delegated powers, and the trustees will not have to probe very deeply into some of these operations where the unions are currently operated democratically.

It seems to me, while these powers are necessary, the possibility of delegation strengthens the capacity, even under trusteeship, for the locals to operate on their own.

Mr. Douglas: I think the hon. member for Yukon has raised a good point. The delegation of powers by the board of trustees to elected officers of a union is perfectly understandable, and I recognize the delegation of powers to another person may be necessary because of the scattered nature of the operations. But this parliament is giving very wide powers to the board. The board in turn is going to have the authority to delegate these very wide powers to some other person, and if that person uses them in an irresponsible manner, then the board of trustees will be in trouble and we will be in trouble.

The kind of persons to whom these powers are delegated is an important matter. I think it comes back again to the whole question of the board of trustees. We have the minister's assurance that it is not going to be a board which meets once a month, and then the members carry on their regular occupations and leave a group of people to whom they delegate authority to discharge their responsibilities. The board must be full time, and must stay on the job. In addition, the people they select to whom they delegate responsibility on both coasts and at various points in Canada, will have to be carefully selected.

When the minister talks about selecting some person who has judicial experience there is something to be said for that, because a person with judicial experience is accepted as being fairly objective and unbiased; but the fact remains, no matter how unbiased he may be we are all creatures of our own environments. Some judges have had most of their training in corporation law, and have spent most of their professional lives acting on behalf of corporations. They have that particular viewpoint; but there are judges—I could name two or three—who have had a good background in dealing with labour matters and who have acted frequently in labour cases, in conciliation and arbitration cases. When the minister is making the appointments I hope he will keep this in mind.

I feel that some person in the judiciary who has had a good association with labour, a good understanding of labour law and the principles involved in operating a union, ought to be selected. If that kind of person is not selected and the board delegates these responsibilities to some person who may have no understanding of trade union procedure, then there will be a complete breakdown in relations between the board and its appointees on the one hand, and the men who work the ships on the other.

Mr. MacEachen: I agree with the comments of the hon. member that it ought to be the objective to select a person—even if that person is a member of the judiciary—with experience in labour matters. We shall make our effort in that direction.

Mr. Baldwin: There is a question I was going to ask under clause 9, but in view of the fact the minister has directed his attention to subsection 5 of clause 7 I may as well ask it now. Is it intended that the exemption from individual liability envisaged under clause 9, so far as the trustees are concerned, will extend to those to whom the trustees have delegated power?

Mr. Favreau: I think the answer to this is that the trustees will not be a body corporate. Were they to constitute a body corporate then they would be placed in the same situation as directors or presidents of a company. It is only out of fairness to the trustees that the clause has been devised that way, and I think it must be read that the trustees, for all practical and legal purposes, will have the same type of responsibility with respect to funds, their application or otherwise, as the directors of a corporation personally would have in the same situation.

Mr. Baldwin: What I wanted to take from that is the fact that that exemption from liability does not extend to people to whom the trustees might delegate authority under subclause 5. I want to know was this the intention, that such exemption from responsibility will not attach to those to whom powers are delegated under clause 7(5)?

Mr. Favreau: I have no authority to speak here, otherwise than in my own name, so far as my opinion of the text is concerned, but it is my clear opinion that this clause relieves only the trustees themselves, and in no way whoever may assume delegated authority from their hands.

Mr. Nielsen: The minister's opinion is very helpful, but I think what my hon. friend and I are interested in is knowing whether it is the intention of the government that those to whom powers are delegated will not receive the same protection as the trustees under clause 9?

Mr. Favreau: I am advised by the Minister of Labour it is the intention that the clause be applied as the hon. member just suggested, so as not to free those exercising delegated power.

Mr. Scott: I want to direct a question to the minister with regard to subclause 2(a). It provides for the establishment of advisory councils of seamen and their representatives and joint advisory councils of seamen and ship owners to advise, and so on. Could we have some explanation as to what the ship owners are going to be doing, and how it is envisaged they will fit into the general pattern of the trusteeship? We are somewhat mystified by it. I wonder whether the minister could elaborate on the role that it is intended the ship owners will play.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend will notice that Mr. Justice Norris did recommend the usefulness of having advisory committees of seamen on the one hand and of ship owners on the other. I think first of all it must be mentioned that the trustees will be free to decide on this point. They are free to appoint them or set them up if necessary. We think there is some value in the trustees having the opportunity to set up advisory committees of seamen on the one hand and to set up as well, if they so desire, a committee of ship management and labour. Surely it is common practice for labour and management to sit down together, and this may be a helpful development in this situation.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, we are quite familiar with the idea of labour-management committees and labour-management co-operation, but it is not the usual thing for the leadership of a trade union to have the authority and responsibility to appoint an advisory council consisting of both its own people and management people. It seems to us that this clause overlooks the fact that what is being appointed by this legislation is a board of trustees to administer the union. In our view these trustees are for the time being the heads of the union organization. Their purpose is to get things cleaned up and to get democratic processes operating again. But it appears to us that there is a suggestion here that there is to be a relationship on the part of these trustees with the management side that is not the usual thing in trade union organizations.

We feel that this same situation occurs in clause 7 (2) (c) where the trustees are given the right to tender advice to bargaining committees of a maritime union. If you couple with that the fact that the trustees may have an advisory council consisting of both labour and management, one wonders what kind of advice these trustees may give to a bargaining committee that is engaged in collective bargaining with management.

Our whole point is that if we accept the principle of trustees to run these unions for whatever period of time this legislation is in effect, they should in effect have the trade union point of view. It should be a clean, democratic, free trade union point of view; but nevertheless it should be the trade union point of view, and it is our feeling that point of view is set aside by the language both in 2 (a) and 2 (c).

For example, what happens if under 2 (c), —and I think 2 (a) and 2 (c) are related,— the committees that are doing the collective bargaining get advice from the trustees based on advice they have got from this joint advisory council, which is advice that suggests that the union seek less than it may be seeking in its collective bargaining? Does this not destroy the normal rights and privileges of a trade union? Should not the whole relationship between the trustees and management be just as much at arm's length so far as management is concerned as it is in the case of ordinary trade union officers?

Mr. Aiken: Before the minister answers I wonder whether I might ask a related question arising out of paragraph (c). To follow one step farther than the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has gone, I would point out that the trustees may delegate the power to enter into a collective bargaining agreement. If such a collective agreement is not effected, do the trustees have the power to call a legal strike under this legislation?

Mr. MacEachen: The answer to the question is yes. May I point out to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that these councils are joint councils and they were made joint councils for the very reason that the hon. member suggests. As I recollect, the Norris commission recommended a separate advisory body of employers or ship owners and we thought that we ought to protect the points made by my hon. friend, namely, that if in the management of a union the point of view of the ship owner was to be received at any stage it should be received in a meeting at which labour men were also represented. So there is that control in so far as the exercise of advice is concerned. It is control by the presence on that council of the seamen or representatives of the seamen.

Mr. Knowles: The minister does not seem to have got our point. What we are setting up here is not a body that has oversight of the relations between labour and management. What we are setting up here is a substitute for the trade union leadership itself. These trustees will take the place of the normal administrators of the trade unions concerned. Does the minister know of any trade union in this country where the officers of the trade union have the right, on their own initiative and authority, to set up a joint advisory council of labour and management, where the officers of the trade union name the representatives from the management side? It seems to us that our point is being missed by the minister.

Mr. Favreau: I think I see the point that the hon. gentleman makes. I take it that the hon. gentleman means that the trustees, as in the case of a trade union itself, ought not to be given the power, which a trade union would not otherwise have, to designate and appoint members for management on any joint advisory body.

Mr. Knowles: Any more than management should name the representatives of the union.

Mr. Favreau: I think the problem might be solved if instead of giving direct power to the trustees to establish advisory boards we gave them the power to promote the establishment of such boards. Then there would be no question of their having the right to appoint members from management or members from the union side. This would permit entire freedom of discussion and would, I think, place the trustees in the same situation as that in which a union would be in a case where a union would seek to convince management to get together with the union to try to form a joint committee. Therefore I would be ready to move an amendment myself, with the concurrence of the minister, who would agree, replacing the word "establish" by the words "promote the establishment of". Would that be agreeable to the hon. gentleman? Then there would be no direct power given to them.

Mr. Knowles: I think the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration has caught our point and I believe the suggested change of wording may meet it, although we may have to look at it closely. The trustees may promote this sort of thing, but they are not given the power to name representatives of management. In other words, what we are trying to avoid here is company unionism in reverse.

Mr. Favreau: Perhaps we could proceed with the other clauses, Mr. Chairman, and come back to this subclause. In the meantime we could work out an amendment.

Mr. MacInnis: On that point, Mr. Chairman, and following up the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, I think what we must ensure is that the trusteeship which is to be set up here is in no way associated with management and should not be associated with management unless they are negotiating or renegotiating a general agreement. We take it for granted that union representation will be available to the trustees, and therefore the trustees will also be associated with management when the union feels they must meet the company to discuss a grievance. Any other association between these trustees and the company should be entirely eliminated. There should be this association during the negotiating or renegotiating of a general agreement, or in the case of a grievance when the union advisers to the trustees see fit to have a meeting with management; otherwise they should be kept entirely separate.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I was interested in the minister's reply to a question, to the effect that the trustees would have the power under this act to call a strike. Could he illustrate to the committee under what possible circumstances the trustees would call a strike after receiving the advice of an advisory council composed of management and labour?

Mr. MacEachen: First of all, of course, the trustees are not obliged to accept any such advice. This clause has no connection whatsover with the collective bargaining situation; it is not intended to apply to any such situation. The trustees, acting as union officers, would be free to call a legal strike, because there is no attempt to restrict them by this particular paragraph (a). I certainly think that if there is any fear on this score, the amendment that will be proposed by my colleague will overcome any difficulty.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I would ask the minister whether I am right in assuming that two kinds of councils are contemplated in paragraph (a). The wording is that the trustees may:

> establish advisory councils of seamen and their representatives—

I assume those councils would be made up entirely of seamen, and their function in the main would be to advise the trustees in matters of negotiation, what wage demands they have and what recommendations they have regarding wages, hours and conditions of labour. Then we are also dealing with a second council, and the wording is:

> —and joint advisory councils of seamen and ship owners—

I imagine they would meet together for the the purposes of administration. Is my interpretation correct; are there two different kinds of council?

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I do not think joint committees get together to do anything in the way of labour-management relations, other than such things as setting up a study of safety, which is a mutually advantageous matter, and industrial promotion, automation in the industry, and other things that go along with that. These two functions in the main, industrial promotion—which would be a labour-management function in the normal sense—and the industrial safety function should perhaps be added in order to get rid of these implications. I do not think you would ever have harmony enough to bring these two groups together for any other purpose, if this were successful. If it were not successful, it would break down and you would have a company union; and this is certainly not the intention.

Therefore it might be wise for the minister to add the two categories which I have suggested, that of safety and industrial promotion in normal labour-management relations in an industry sense, and the industrial safety function. I think there is a role that the trustees could play, as do normal unions and management, in these two fields. But I think it would be very foolish to go any further than these two fields which are not directly related to the grievance procedure, to the negotiation procedure or to normal union-management responsibility.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, may I say that I agree fully with my hon. friend with respect to this particular point.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I am not so sure that the assurance which the minister has given to the committee is accurate. Under clause 7, as I read it, the trustees are given the powers that are listed in subclause 2 to act under the bylaws and constitution as provided in subclause 1. But nowhere in the powers that I see listed in clause 7 is the power given to the trustees to call a strike.

There is a rule of law, which I am sure the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration is aware of, which stipulates that where you enumerate certain classes of power and neglect or overlook, intentionally or otherwise, to enumerate others, those others are excluded. It seems to me there may not be the power in the trustees to call a strike under the provisions of this clause, and it might be a good deal better if it were spelled out in the provisions of the bill that the provisions of this clause in no way abrogate the powers of the trustees to call a legal strike on behalf of the union membership, should circumstances arise where this is desirable.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, there is nothing in this bill that supersedes the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act. Therefore there is nothing in this bill inhibiting the rights that are accorded under the present labour legislation of the country. The trustees have the management and control of the maritime unions, and the clause says they may jointly do all such things as the officers of the union may do under the constitution and bylaws of the union. Surely the constitution and bylaws will direct the trustees as to the way in which they might call a strike?

Mr. Nielsen: That still does not allay my fears, Mr. Chairman, that the rule of law about which I spoke a moment ago would not apply in this case. The minister has mentioned the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act and I think he should read carefully the section that probably assisted him in drawing up subclause 1 of clause 7, which says:

> The management and control of the maritime transportation unions is hereby vested in the trustees who shall, in accordance with this act, manage and control each of the maritime unions—

And so on. To my mind this confines the powers of the trustees to those powers that are set out in subsection 2 of the clause. Nowhere within those powers do I see any power or saving provision which would allow the trustees to call a legal strike, if that were the wish of the membership of the union. I think it would be far better, rather than subjecting the whole matter to future tests, to spell it right out in the powers that are given to the trustees and to preserve, in that fashion, beyond any dispute whatsoever the right of the union membership to strike, should the trustees feel it to be in the best interests of the union.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

Mr. MacEachen: There is no doubt whatever that the trustees will have this right because all this bill attempts to do is to provide for the management and control of the unions, one side of industrial relations. It does not attempt to provide regulations covering employer-employee relationships. These are established under a separate act. This bill simply means that the trustees will be obliged to manage the union in accordance with the provisions in this measure. There is nothing in the bill that prevents their calling a strike. They are empowered to do so under the constitution of the union.

Mr. Nielsen: I am afraid I still cannot accept that argument. What the minister is saying is that because there is nothing in the bill to prevent the calling of a strike the trustees are empowered by law to do so. If that argument were valid, then the powers that are most elaborately set out in the bill concerning financial arrangements and so on, would be unnecessary.

I again suggest to the minister quite strongly that there is doubt about this matter, and rather than subject it to future tests the course of prudence would seem to indicate that the power be included. This would certainly reassure the seamen who are most affected by this legislation. If the power to call a strike were clearly spelled out, there would be no doubt whatever that the trustees would have that power.

Mr. MacInnis: I believe this issue is becoming more and more confused. There are many people who apparently do not understand the circumstances of certain unions. The minister has just agreed to some remarks made by the hon. member for Timiskaming. While I may agree with the purport of what he said, it only adds to the confusion surrounding the duties of these trustees. Reference has been made to the power of the trustees to call a strike. I believe this power is amply covered by the fact that the prime duty of the trustees is to clean up the unions. In doing so, the trustees will act according to the constitution of the union. There is no doubt whatever but that the constitution of the union will provide for strike action.

Since the trustees are to replace the union executive, I think we are only complicating matters further when we speak of such things as industrial management, production and development. These things are usually referred to in cases where management and labour have been working hand in hand and have been agreeing on such things as safety committees or sick committees. These duties are not usually handled by the executive officers of the union, but by the rank and file of the union.

I believe we are only complicating matters further by referring to the duties of these trustees. I believe the trustees' duties should be put in the simplest form possible, namely to clean up these unions. This should be done within the constitution of the unions. Do not saddle the trustees with a lot of nonsense about things that are handled by a local union in the normal routine. There is no doubt that the power to call a strike is written right into the constitution of the union, and to talk about what the duties of the trustees will be only adds to confusion. I think it is imperative that the trustees be put in the position of acting as union executive officers normally act. It is not normal for union executive officers to be running to management with this and that problem. Their duties, so far as management is concerned, should be confined to negotiating general agreements or renegotiating them, or perhaps dealing with a grievance. Other than that, I feel that the duties of the trustees should be confined to union business, and never mind this nonsense about management.

Mr. Peters: I think there is a reasonable difference of opinion in this case. I am sure that the minister must have had some reason for writing in this paragraph (a) of clause 7. There is reference to the establishment of advisory councils of seamen and joint advisory councils of seamen and ship owners to advise the trustees in the carrying out of their duties. I believe you should add that this relates to the field of industrial safety and labour-management co-operation. If this is done, I believe the provision will make some sense.

I think it is a fact that the seamen themselves are going to have safety committees, just as management probably has safety committees. If you are going to have a joint advisory council to bring them together, in my opinion it would only be for the purpose of dealing with things which are legitimately within the field of management-labour co-operation. The hon. member for Cape Breton South made a reference to this. First of all, the federal government has established a safety department and has also established a labour-management department. I would suggest to the minister that he should have one of his colleagues write in a definition of the fields in which they want these advisory councils to act. There should be a reference to these fields of safety and labour-management co-operation which the federal government now supports. These activities could be extended into the maritime field where, I expect, there is very little co-operation between the various agencies involved.

Mr. MacRae: I wish to discuss subclause 4 of clause 7. I take it the discussion is completed on subclause 2(a) or that the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration is drafting an amendment. At any rate, in the interests of getting on with this legislation, I will be as brief as possible.

Subclause 4, if it is stripped of its legal verbiage, would appear to read that the trustees may not increase the salary of any union official and, second, if the union wishes to decrease the salary of any officer of the union, that would not be valid unless the trustees approved of it. I should like to ask the minister why the subclause is in the bill at all. After all, if the trustees have complete authority over the union, why should they be circumscribed in the first place by not being able to raise the salary of any union official; and if they have complete authority, why should the second part of the subclause beginning with the words "and after the commencement of" be there at all?

Mr. MacEachen: The first point is that the effort in the legislation is to provide that the trustees exercise their authority through the existing constitutions, except where otherwise provided. In this particular case the provision is made that the reduction of a salary, cutting it in half or cutting it out altogether, will be prevented in an effort to remove an officer in an indirect way.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, I do not mean to carry on a cross-fire between myself and the hon. member for Timiskaming, but I think I speak with some knowledge of the workings of a labour constitution. I cannot see how you can draw management in when the trusteeship is set up to replace or to displace a union's executive. I feel that there must be the operation of a union executive. I brought up the matter of negotiating or renegotiating contracts or general agreements for the simple reason that this legislation will probably be in force for five years, and unless someone is prepared to tell me that the seamen will be under contract for the next five or six years this is a matter which will come before the trustees. At some time or other in the near future they will have to face the company with a general wage agreement or negotiate further agreements with the company. It is provided in the constitution that the union operate according to that constitution, and I see no reason why all these side issues should be brought in. The constitution of the union itself will provide for their duties. The whole question boils down to the trustees displacing —and that is probably the better word in this case—the union executive; and having done that, they then govern themselves under their own constitution, as the bill so provides.

With regard to the other issue which was raised about committees set up here and there, that is a matter which is handled within the routine of labour locals in any case. A lot of hodgepodge has been piled up which is absolutely unnecessary, but I think it is vital that any reference to a joint committee between the trusteeship and the management must be eliminated. The prime purpose of this legislation is to displace the union executive officers who are not capable or competent or honest or trustworthy enough to operate the unions, and to replace them with a trusteeship. Let us not confuse the issue any further by telling them that they have anything to do, other than follow the union constitution provided for them.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, this discussion on clause 7 has gone on at some length, particularly with reference to subclause (2)(a) dealing with a joint advisory council between the seamen and the ship owners. I have been sitting here with a draft amendment in my hand which expresses my own thoughts on the matter, and I feel that the simplest way to clear the matter up, so that there is no room for any suspicion that it was the intention of parliament that these trustees should act in any other capacity than as agents for the time being of the unions concerned, is to move the following:

That clause 7(2)(a) of the bill be amended by deleting therefrom the words "and joint advisory councils of seamen and ship owners and their representatives".

It seems to me that that would bring the clause into line with its general concept, which, as I understand it, sets out the directions in which we would like to see the trustees move as quickly as possible in the reorganization of the affairs of the union, in keeping with trade union principles and the constitutions and bylaws of the various unions.

I understood from some remarks made earlier by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration that he was prepared to give consideration to drafting some amendment which would change this subclause in the manner we would like to see it changed. I think the draft amendment I have would be the simplest way out of the situation.

The Minister of Labour made one or two references to the recommendations in the Norris report in this connection. I suggest to the minister that he has already indicated some departure, as far as his thinking is concerned, from that of Justice Norris, particularly with respect to the kind of personnel who should form the trustees. Generally, the approach of the minister indicates he is in agreement that it should be clearly understood that the functions of the trustees are to act in a substitutive manner as trade union officers for the time being. As far as I am concerned, in view of all the discussion which has taken place on this clause and the earlier remarks of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, perhaps we should ask that clause 7 stand for the time being and come back to it later when the Minister of Labour or the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration might have some amendment to offer the committee.

Mr. Lloyd: On a point of order, I understood that we agreed to this three quarters of an hour ago; that is, unless I misheard the minister of citizenship when he spoke to this matter. I even noted his use of the words "promote the establishment of"; he suggested that they be substituted, and I heard another hon. member from the hon. member's party say he thought that might be acceptable, that we should go on and let it stand. That is exactly where we are now.

Mr. MacEachen: I am agreeable to standing paragraph (a) and we will come back to it. We can pass clause 7 but come back to paragraph (a) at the end.

Mr. MacInnis: Perhaps the Minister of Labour would allow me to make a suggestion. I feel the clause should read in this way:

That subparagraph (a) of subclause (2) of clause 7 should be amended by deleting in lines 24, 25 and 26 the words "and joint advisory councils of seamen and ship owners and their representatives".

If those words were deleted I think it would meet with the satisfaction of the last speaker. That is exactly what I suggested before.

Mr. Peters: I believe the advisers of the minister had in mind the establishment of something more than would be represented by this provision if we emasculate it. I agree with the suggestion that this be left for the time being until someone has had a chance to look at it, and incorporate what I believe must have been the original intention of establishing a relationship between parts of the industry as a whole, so that joint labour-management relations could be worked out. I think that would be the purpose intended, though maybe the wording was bad in the first place. However, I strongly urge that the provision should not be dropped. This is a forward-looking step and if it is a move to establish joint labour-management consultation in this field we think it is desirable.

Mr. Greene: Bearing in mind the fact that this bill will hit the courts about as quickly as it is passed here, and live its natural life in the courtrooms until the happy day when it is never seen again, it behooves all of us, including the law officers of the crown, to the best of our ability, to make sure that every facet of it will stand up. In particular I have considerable qualms with regard to subclause 5 of clause 7. The law of trusteeship is a provincial right within the constitution and I wonder whether this broad power of delegation given here will stand up in the courts. I should like to hear something from the law officers as to their opinion in this regard. Even assuming the constitutional validity of this bill, is this broad power of delegation within the ambit of the federal authority? In the second place, even it be within the ambit of the federal power to delegate trusteeship to this extent, I fail to see the effect of the words in the subclause "or elected as an officer of the union". The subclause reads:

> In respect of a maritime union the trustees may from time to time delegate in writing any or all of the duties and powers of the trustees to any person appointed by the trustees—

To me, that is the end of it. What is the meaning of the words which follow? If they can delegate these powers to anybody, what is the point of adding the words "or elected as an officer of the union"? I suggest that these words are redundant—that they are redundant words in a statute which will undoubtedly live its full life in the courts.

Finally I would suggest that consideration be given to the opinion expressed by hon. members opposite to the effect that clause 9, to which perhaps I might be allowed to refer for a moment, may not give the indemnity or exemption to delegates of the trustees, even if the power to delegate is lawful. Surely it would be wise to add in clause 9 the words "or the delegates" so that it will read "the individual members of the trustees or their delegates—" and so on.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 7 carry?

Mr. Knowles: Let it carry, all but (2) (a) and let us look at that an hour from now when the minister has an amendment.

The Deputy Chairman: Is that course agreeable to the committee?

Mr. Peters: I notice that in this clause under subclause (3) (d) the trustees are given power to retain and use the seal, if any, of the maritime union. I suppose it would be lawful to do this, but I am wondering whether it would be just. The seal might be used for purposes for which it was never intended, because in some of these cases it actually belongs to international unions. It might be in the custody of one of the locals, but it often remains the property of the international union.

Mr. MacEachen: We intend through this provision to maintain the identity of these unions where they have seals. I think that is the purpose of it.

Mr. Baldwin: I should like to make one suggestion in relation to a point which has already been made by my hon. friend from Yukon. I have the strongest doubts whether the legislation as drafted gives the trustees power to exercise all the functions which the union would have had prior to the enactment of this measure. Clause 7 authorizes the trustees to manage and control in accordance with the legislation we are now considering. It then goes on to say that the purpose is to try to return the unions as soon as possible to the management of their own executive officers. When the minister is considering the amendment to which he referred a few minutes ago, would he also consider adding as part of clause 7 subclause 1 some such words as: "Save as otherwise provided, the trustees will have the same powers, duties and responsibilities as the union did prior to the enactment of this legislation". This would set at rest any doubts there might be in the matter.

Mr. MacEachen: I think the point raised by the hon. member has already been covered. I believe I read it a short time ago. It is covered in paragraph (f) where it says in effect that the trustees may—> —generally do all such things as the officers of the union may do under the constitution and bylaws of the union.

Mr. Baldwin: I read that paragraph, but I think the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration will probably bear me out when I say there is a rule known as ejusdem generis. When you relate subsection 3, which has given the trustees certain financial and business powers, and take these powers from (a) to (e) then you say in (f) "generally to do all such things as the officers of the union may do" you might well be met, when you come to this point, that (f) is a general, all-embracing, catch-all clause dealing with matters already covered in (a) to (e), or along the same general lines.

Mr. Lloyd: While that is being considered, I understand the spirit of this legislation is to have the trustees supplant officers. When the officers have been replaced by trustees there are many things that may be discovered which you cannot delineate in this legislation. Therefore you must draft this legislation in broad permissive powers, and the trustees will be guided by the principle of the law just to put the house in order and return it in a satisfactory state to the union at a future time.

That is why you cannot use such words as "you shall", because it is difficult to delineate.

It was difficult enough for Mr. Justice Norris to delineate after months of evidence, and it would be very wise not to do anything more than leave the trustees with a broad framework of direction in order to discover things which may not even have been discovered by Mr. Justice Norris.

Mr. Nielsen: I am sure the spirit of the legislation is not intended to suspend, during this clean-up operation, the only weapon which workmen have at their disposal to ensure their rights are maintained, namely the right to strike. The suggestion of the hon. member for Peace River is a very good one, and it would remove any doubt that the trustees have power to call a legal strike if the best interests of the union membership were served by that.

Mr. Lloyd: I am sorry to speak again, but under the provisions of this legislation, certainly if all the provisions of labour legislation have been provided by it, then I am quite certain if members of a union took a strike vote and went through the proper procedures there is nothing in this bill to deny reasonably minded trustees from going along with that.

Mr. Douglas: It seems to me the hon. member for Yukon and the hon. member for Peace River have a point which would be worth while for the government to look at, because undoubtedly this legislation will be gone over with a fine tooth comb with a view to challenging it in the courts. Paragraph (f), on which the minister is hanging his whole case is, the last paragraph in clause 3 and it says that in the management and control of a maritime union the trustees may "generally do all such things as the officers of the union may do."

Not being a lawyer it seems to me as a layman the interpretation might be that they can generally do all such things having to do with the management and control of a union, and that they have these wide powers only in so far as the internal management and control of a union are concerned, and not in the broad matter of negotiating with management, calling strikes and so on, and acting for employees under the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act. The government should look at this very carefully.

Mr. MacEachen: We are agreeable to stand subclause 1 and 2(a). We will come back to them again and attempt to cover the points raised and have a form of words which will satisfy the difficulties mentioned.

The Chairman: Is it agreed the clause will carry subject to standing subclause 1 and 2(a)?

[Mr. Lloyd.]

Clause 7 stands.

Clause 8 agreed to.

On clause 9—Non-personal liability of trustees.

Mr. Herridge: This clause states:

> The individual members of the trustees are exempt from personal liability for any act or thing done or omitted by the trustees in good faith in the exercise or purported exercise of a duty or power of the trustees under this act.

Does this mean that the board, as a board, can be sued?

Mr. MacEachen: The answer is yes.

Mr. Douglas: Someone back here has suggested that in clause 9 there be added after the word "trustees" the words "and delegates or those to whom they have delegated powers." Does the minister feel this should be inserted in order to make absolutely sure that those persons to whom the board delegates powers will have the same protection as the trustees themselves?

Mr. Nielsen: I would like to speak in opposition to that view, because while there is justification for providing protection to the trustees, without which it may be very doubtful you would get anybody to act or accept an appointment as a trustee, nevertheless the very fact that you withhold the same protection from a person delegated under the provisions of clause 8 will make that person much more careful in the exercise of the powers delegated to him. The way the clause now stands it provides a good deal of protection for the unions themselves and their membership, because the persons to whom powers are delegated will be subject to suit for malfeasance.

Mr. Douglas: I would assume this does not protect a person from suit for malfeasance. It says here "for any act or thing done or omitted ... in good faith." May I point out that if the hon. member for Yukon says it is going to be difficult to get trustees to act unless they have this protection, it will be equally difficult to get people to act as delegates if they have no protection, and you could completely tie up his trusteeship by filing suits against the persons appointed to act on its behalf.

Mr. Nielsen: I should have used the term nonfeasance, not malfeasance; and in addition may I say there is no impairment in getting people to act as delegates of the trustees. As I understand the clause, the purpose is to give the board power to delegate powers to maritime unions which do not require much supervision by the trustees. If the trustees are prepared to say that a union agrees to accept delegation of a lot of powers which the constitution of the union provides, then surely you should not extend the protective powers under clause 9 to the particular officers of that union to whom those powers are delegated. It seems to me ordinarily they would be liable to suit for their actions, so why should you remove liability from them when the trustees decide to hand their powers back to them?

Mr. Barnett: I wish to deal with the matter that was immediately under discussion. Listening to the discussion it strikes me that there are apt to be in effect two categories of persons who will act as agents for or under the direction of the trustees. One is the group of persons to whom the hon. member for the Yukon has just been referring, people who have been acting as officers or agents of the various unions as they have existed in the past. On the other hand, in clause 5 of the bill it is provided that the trustees may, with the approval of the governor in council, employ such professional, administrative, clerical or other personnel as the trustees may deem necessary. It seems to me that clause 5 envisages that for a time at any rate the trustees are in effect going to have a civil service, and these people would in effect be acting as direct agents of the trustees in the discharge of their duties.

It does appear to me that there is a distinction to be drawn between such persons whom the trustees may appoint as professional advisers or administrators, and the people who at the present time and normally function as officers or agents of the union. I would be inclined to agree with the hon. member for Yukon, that these personnel should not be granted any particular exemption under this legislation from the liability that they ordinarily have. But it does appear to me that professional assistants or clerical assistants whom the trustees may engage, and who according to my understanding would be direct agents of the trustees in the carrying out of their duties, might be considered as rightfully having the same kind of exemption from liability as the trustees themselves, provided they acted in good faith. I would be interested to know whether there is any agreement that there is a distinction to be drawn there.

Mr. Greene: It was my understanding that the minister indicated to us earlier that it was the intent of the government that delegates be exempt under section 9 and, if so, I respectfully submit that should be made clear.

Mr. Nielsen: That is not what he said.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I can understand the concern of all hon. members who have spoken on this point with regard to delegates. I think we must return to the original and basic principle that, after all, these trustees whom the government will ask to perform this kind of public service, thus removing them from the field of their normal activities for a period of two, three, or more years, ought to be given at least the same protection as the directors of what otherwise would be a corporation, and which they would have if they were directors of a real corporation.

When you take the case of a corporation, those to whom the corporation delegates any of its powers and who are employed as agents or employees have a type of responsibility which is personal and different from that of those who are directors. I think the reason for that is that the intention of these delegations is to make the delegates the people who are closer to the actual performance of the acts.

The trustees will have both a directive and a supervisory capacity. Those will be their main functions. They will, of course, have the functions of direct administration to the extent that they choose to use them. But as I say, their delegates will come closer to the actual and physical performance of given acts than the trustees themselves, and I think they must be assimilated and placed in the same situation as a person who receives from a corporation or from the directors of a corporation, whose liability is limited, certain powers and accepts those powers.

I think one will find that in many of these cases the delegates will happen to be certain of the present officers or employees of the unions, who will continue to carry on, for purposes of the trustees, certain of their functions; and I do not believe it is unfair not to give them protection that they do not have at present. In other words, I think if we go back to the basic principle and to the only real reason why this was spelled out in the bill, the reason being that the trusteeship happens not to have a corporate form, then it follows that it is not unfair to leave employees or delegates in the same situation as they would be at present, should they receive from the unions themselves such delegations or such powers as will be given to them by the trustees.

Mr. Douglas: I do not want to labour the point, except to say that what the minister has just said is perfectly true with reference to persons elected or who, as officers of the union, carry out the duties of the board. It is not true, however, of those who are appointed by the board to do a certain job. If the board of trustees sends someone to the east coast to manage the affairs of the union until such time as officers can be elected, and so on, it seems to me that person could be completely hamstrung if, every time he moved, he was put under personal suit for whatever action he was taking on instructions from the board. Once the elected officers have taken over, I quite agree they should have no more protection than they have now. I am thinking of the persons who are appointed in the first instance to carry on at the behest of the board in order to get the unions democratically organized.

Mr. Favreau: Well, whether these delegates be members of the union or not at present, as they will be executives I think that even in their case it would not be unfair not to give them more protection than if they were persons accepting by way of delegation the power or duty to perform something in the name of a corporation somewhere else. They would have a personal responsibility. These delegates will certainly not under this legislation have more responsibility than any ordinary agent who has accepted delegated powers. I do not believe it is really unfair.

Mr. Douglas: The average agent of the average corporation is not trying to clean up a hoodlum empire.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the officers of the crown are obviously confusing the word "delegate" with "employee, servant or agent". They are two different things in law. If a person is appointed as a delegate or nominee of a director of a company he enjoys the same exclusion from liability that the director did. An employee, servant or agent is a different thing. Possibly not now, but shortly, I think the legal agents of the crown should clarify that point, before this section goes through. They are two different things.

On clause 10—Obstructing trustees.

Mr. Herridge: Clause 10 is quite an interesting one to me. It reads:

> Any person who obstructs or hinders the trustees or a person to whom any duty or power of the trustees has been delegated, in the carrying out of a duty or power of the trustees under this act is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction and is liable to a fine not exceeding ten thousand dollars or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years or to both such fine and imprisonment.

In my opinion there is no question that the interpretation of this clause can become largely a matter of opinion. For instance, in the first line it refers to any person who obstructs or hinders the trustees, and so on. Suppose in a particular union the members gathered together at a meeting and urged the trustees to call a strike, or discussed some matter and passed resolutions which were in opposition to certain proposals put forward by the trustees, or took any action to express a collective opinion as the result of the views of certain people being expressed; under those circumstances could the members of a union, or the persons who chaired the meeting or led the meeting, possibly be considered as obstructing or hindering the trustees? I would appreciate the minister's opinion on that.

Mr. MacEachen: It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that in the circumstances to which the hon. member has referred the officers, or the trustees, or the delegates are obliged to behave within the constitutions of the various unions. It seems to me that any activity conducted by members that is within their own bylaws and constitutions cannot be regarded as obstruction of the trustees. That would be my view. It seems to me there are other situations to which this provision would apply; for example, removing or suspending officers. If the trustees attempted to do this and were prevented from so doing, this provision would then apply. This is my view.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I would like to support what has been said by my brother union member, the hon. member for Kootenay West.

Mr. Herridge: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nielsen: It seems to me that the powers given under clause 10 are very wide indeed and they could be abused to the extent my hon. friend has suggested. For example, what about a wildcat strike? This clause would apply in that case, because surely a wildcat strike would be interpreted as hindering the trustees. However good the government's intentions might be, or however good the trustees' intentions might be, nevertheless the power is there and it could be abused to the extent that has been suggested. I think my hon. friend makes a very valid and a very good point.

Mr. MacEachen: The situation to which my hon. friend refers is already covered by the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 11—Property held for a union or the members thereof.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I am curious about subclause 3 of clause 11, which says:

> The trustees may appoint agents or attorneys to administer any property vested in the trustees under subsection (1) or may convey such property to any other person to be held by such person for the benefit of the maritime union or members of a maritime union, as the case may be, for the objects and upon the conditions that are binding on the trustees in respect of that property.

There has been some suggestion that when the trusteeship is ended there may not be as many unions in that trusteeship as there were at the beginning. The word "person" as used in this clause is the legal interpretation of "person", which can mean a company, corporation or other union. This subclause would cause a great deal of difficulty. This has always been a problem between the international and the local; the local is always afraid of losing its hall, or whatever it may be, and its reverting to the person administering the trusteeship and then being turned over to the international. I think that subclause 3 is the place in which this type of protection should be provided. If it is provided, perhaps the minister could assure us on the point; and if it is not, I think we should consider it.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 11 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Peters: I would like to know about this, Mr. Chairman, because we do not want five unions to go under the trusteeship with five complete organizations, and come out with one or two, or three, or perhaps four.

Mr. MacEachen: This provision, Mr. Chairman, is intended to apply particularly to welfare funds.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 12—Delivery of records and property.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I have a very serious observation to make with regard to clause 12. The minister will notice that clause 12 (1) (a), (b) and (c) concerns the property of the union in the way of books, and so on, that must be handed over to the trustees. The important words to which I would draw the attention of the minister are "at the request in writing of the trustees". I go to subclause 3, where the absolute power is given to a judge of the exchequer court, or a judge of a superior or county court, who may, upon ex parte application by the trustees, issue a warrant authorizing the seizure of those records, papers and documents that are mentioned in subclause 1 (a), (b) and (c).

I presume it was the intention of the government that such power as is set forth in subclause 3 with regard to the issuing of a search warrant, in effect authorizing the seizure of such records and other property, should only be exercised after there has been a denial by the person or persons in whose custody these things are of the request in writing of the trustees. It seems to me the legislation is inconsistent on this point because it says in subclause 1 that the documents are required to be handed over after the trustees have made the request in writing, and in subclause 3 it is implicit that one does not have to have any regard whatsoever to a request in writing but can go straight to a judge and get a search warrant and effect a seizure.

My suggestion is that the government should consider making the compliance with subclause 1 a condition precedent to the exercise of the powers in subclause 3. In other words the trustees should only be able to go to a judge for a search warrant after the request in writing has been made, and there has been a failure to comply with the request. Then this provision should apply and they should go to a judge of the Exchequer Court of Canada, or a judge of a superior or county court.

Mr. Favreau: As far as I am concerned, Mr. Chairman, I fully agree with the clause, but it is the type of clause which on its face is always to a lawyer or to a fair minded citizen—

Mr. Baldwin: They are the same thing.

Mr. Favreau: —repugnant in appearance. I think we must look at the spirit of the clause to find the necessary justification for, and the importance of subclause 3 of clause 12. The committee will see that there are two methods by which the trustees may seek the possession of documents or property. Documents and records would be mainly concerned in this case. One method is by making a request in writing. In the case where the trustees feel that the documents will be dealt with in good faith, that there is no danger of their being disposed of within the period of 24 hours of the notice, then the power is given to the trustees themselves, without reference to the courts, to give notice. But we all understand, I think, irritating as it may be, that there will be cases where a genuine fear will exist in the minds of the trustees that a notice to produce documents will probably cause the disappearance of the documents. We have to face these things.

This is why in such a case the law does not allow the trustees to send somebody to seize the documents without notice; but if no notice is given the legislation says—and this provision is for the protection of whoever is concerned—the trustees must go to an exchequer court judge or to any of the other judges mentioned in the clause, who will use his judicial discretion in the issuing of a warrant. For example, if a search warrant is asked for unilaterally, he will question the applicant and upon his responsibility as a judge will decide whether to issue a warrant.

In so far as other types of legislation are concerned, you will find that if orders of this type are necessary in the public interest exactly the same type of device is used, and in most cases, against the will of the party concerned. There is a provision of this type in the Combines Investigation Act under which the director of investigation and research may seek production of documents in cases where he fears that a notice may be the cause of acts contrary to the public interest. He may seek the power, then, to search without notice. These are the types of situation in which this power, distasteful though it is, is essential in the public interest. This is the only reason it has been written in here.

One should look at the distinction between the two types of situations. In the first case there is a request by the trustees themselves; or then they may go and obtain the right to search without notice when the judge is satisfied that there is a good reason to search without notice. If the judge is satisfied, he may issue the order.

Mr. Nielsen: If that is the intention, it should be spelled out in the legislation. The minister speaks of the same type of judicial discretion being exercised on an ex parte application for a search warrant as was exercised in connection with some of these offences which related to Hal Banks. If that is the case, then I suggest we might be in some real difficulty. If it is the intention of the government that a judge can take this action upon being shown that it is necessary in the public interest, then the legislation should say so. As we all know, an ex parte application means an application by one side only. It seems to me that sufficient protection is not granted to the individual's rights under this provision. Under a provision such as this an application could be made, without any notice to the parties concerned, a search warrant granted and the party could leave immediately to conduct a raid, as the hon. member for Timiskaming said.

I think the government should give consideration to amending the provision to this effect, that failure to comply with the request set forth in subclause 1, and then continue with the wording of the subclause as it is. Failing the acceptance by the government of that suggestion, perhaps the minister could consider inserting an amendment which would provide that a judge of the exchequer court would only exercise this extraordinary power if he were given good and sufficient reason for exercising it. The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings suggests that words "upon cause be shown" should be inserted.

Mr. Favreau: I agree completely with the hon. member that cause has to be shown. I believe it would cause some concern amongst the judiciary if we were to write that into this bill, that they are not to grant an order of this type without being shown cause, because that is automatically done. I suggest that it be taken for granted that, if it is found something has to be stated along procedural lines, that will be done in the drafting of the regulations. I would not suggest such a provision be written into the bill because this would be the first statute in which we would find this particular type of declaration. It cannot be automatic, otherwise there is no reason for reference to a judge.

Mr. Nielsen: I have great respect for the minister's knowledge in this area. However, this is an extraordinary piece of legislation and contains sweeping powers. I am sure the minister himself has, on occasion, made an ex parte application where no cause at all had to be shown in order to obtain an extraordinary remedy such as that provided by this subclause.

In so far as similar pieces of legislation are concerned, there are several that I can recall under which a judge has exercised his discretion upon an ex parte application only upon cause being shown as required by the legislation itself. The case can be made even stronger because of the nature of the legislation, and these sweeping powers which are given. We must be very careful that the rights of individuals are not abrogated by injudicious judicial decisions. I do not believe it would hurt the legislation at all or hurt the intention of the government if these words were inserted. I am sure they intended that judicial discretion should be carefully exercised. The minister himself has said that the judge is going to be shown cause before the application is granted, and if it is not going to hurt the legislation then I think those words should be inserted.

Mr. Favreau: I do not want to labour the point. It is true that would not hurt the legislation, but there are so many words we could add in many statutes which would not hurt the legislation but would also, I say respectfully, not add to it. Even if we were to add the words, "upon due cause being shown", this would not prevent any judge from injudiciously exercising his own discretion.

Mr. Baldwin: As I understand the minister, he is saying that subclause 3 would not come into effect except under circumstances where the trustee felt that clause 1 would not be complied with. Am I correct in my assumption?

Mr. Favreau: I said that is the purpose.

Mr. Baldwin: Could you not say simply, instead of using general words, that upon cause being shown a judge may, upon referring to clause 1, find the facts—

Mr. Favreau: I am afraid we are saying the same thing again.

Mr. Peters: I do not want to get into any legal discussion because I do not know anything about it. It seems to me that we should have something written into the legislation to forestall the movement of some of these documents outside the country. If this has already taken place, there should be a provision to force the return of these documents. Is there a legal stipulation we can make that will give the trustees some authority to ask for the return of documents?

I am thinking of a situation in which the S.I.U. decided to return to its international some of the documents that will be needed for the operation of this trusteeship. If all the documents and authorities vested in the union are returned to the international, there will be very little for the trustees to administer. Is there some legal stipulation that could forestall the removal of these documents to the United States or force the return of them?

Clause agreed to.

On clause 13—Voidable transactions.

Mr. Herridge: This clause says that:

(a) any payment of money belonging to, or deposited or held to the credit of or for the benefit of, a maritime union, members of a maritime union, or the building corporation, where inadequate valuable consideration has been given therefor;

—is voidable if done, made or entered into on or after the 6th day of July, 1963. I should like to ask the minister two questions arising out of this wording. Will the trustees collect union dues from the members and, if so, would the trustees have the right to expel members for non-payment of dues?

Mr. MacEachen: The answer to both questions is yes.

Mr. Nielsen: May I ask the minister, how can "valuable consideration" be inadequate?

Mr. Barnett: It has already been pointed out that clause 13 has to do with preventing the alienation of some of the assets of a union. It seems to me there may be some puzzlement, at least to me, why the date July 6, 1963, has been set forth in the legislation as the date after which these transactions are voidable. I feel that discussion of this bill would not be really complete without some explanation in the record at this point.

Mr. MacEachen: Even though this date happens to be my own birthday, the real reason is that it was the date upon which the report was issued.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Before we pass clause 13 I should like to have some explanation of paragraph (d). There is a question in my mind as to why that paragraph has been inserted. It might not have very much merit if some of the collective agreements which these unions have made are not doing any harm to the public or national interest. It seems to me that not every collective agreement and supplemental collective agreement is disadvantageous to the nation. Therefore, could the minister explain to me the general principle of this paragraph?

Mr. MacEachen: There have been cases, especially with the seafarers' international union, where supplemental agreements have been entered into following the main agreement, and this paragraph gives the opportunity to the trustees to take a look at these supplemental agreements.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, from what I have heard this evening it appears that, although these unions have agreed to come under this trusteeship, the legislation seems to be designed to deal with one union, which I firmly believe does require this attention. Nevertheless if there are to be trustees dealing with five unions, then I think this legislation should apply to each and every one of them. After all, I have reason to believe that although our problem is with Mr. Banks and his particular union, many things are going on in other unions which could take a good looking at.

Mr. MacEachen: The answer to that, of course, is that the provisions of this legislation apply to all of the unions listed in the schedules. I used the S.I.U. for purposes of illustration only in this regard.

On clause 14—Recovering proceeds of property.

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, the words appearing on line 31, page 8 of the French version of Bill No. C-102 are exactly the opposite of the English wording. It is not because the text is in English that it is necessarily consistent with the government's intention, but it happens that in this bill, it is the English version which corresponds with the government's and, I think, the house's intentions.

The French version reads as follows:

Lorsqu'une personne a acquis des biens d'un syndicat maritime ou de la Building Corporation par suite d'une opération déclarée nulle en vertu de l'article 13 et a vendu ou aliéné les biens ou une partie de ceux-ci, le montant d'argent ou autre produit qui en découle, qu'il soit ou non de nouveau aliéné, ne doit pas être considérée—

It is obvious that it should read "doit être considéré" as part of the union's property. I would take this opportunity to substitute the word "soit" by the words "ait été".

Consequently, I propose that the 31st line on page 8 of the French version of Bill No. C-102 be deleted and replaced by the following:

ait été ou non de nouveau aliéné, doit être considéré—

In my opinion, if that correction is not made, the two versions will be at variance.

The Deputy Chairman: The committee has heard the terms of the amendment to bring the French text in line with the English text. Shall the amendment carry?

On clause 16—Annual report to parliament.

Mr. MacRae: I should like to ask the Minister of Labour a question in connection with the expression "within three months after the termination of each year". The date July 6 is used in several places in this bill to indicate the date of the implementation of certain parts of the bill. Under clause 23 the bill will come into force on a date to be fixed by proclamation. That is another date. Then third, this is a government agency, and therefore I assume might operate within the fiscal year, which would terminate on March 31—or would it be within the calendar year ending on December 31? My question is prompted by the desire to know when parliament and the people of this country will receive the first report of the trustees.

Mr. MacEachen: I understand that the year referred to here is intended to be the calendar year.

Mr. MacRae: Which will be December 31.

Mr. MacEachen: That is in accordance with the Interpretation Act.

[Mr. Favreau.]

Mr. Peters: Was any consideration given to providing for interim reports on a basis of four months or some such period? That would give the Minister of Labour an opportunity to keep his finger on the situation and to report on it to parliament, which will be watching these developments very closely. This makes provision for a report of the standard type, a general report which will contain the annual financial statement of the building corporation fund and so on. I believe it could very well be of advantage both to the minister and hon. members if reports were forthcoming more frequently.

Mr. MacEachen: I think it would be possible for the minister to ask the trustees for an interim report at any time, if that seemed desirable, and he could then make a statement to the house on the contents. I would be prepared to do that from time to time, if it seemed necessary.

Clause 17 agreed to.

On clause 18—Regulations.

Mr. Nielsen: Before this clause carries I should like in the strongest terms to convey my objection to the inclusion of the powers contained in clause 18 in legislation such as this, which already contains such wide powers.

This clause provides that:

The governor in council may make such orders and regulations as he deems necessary for carrying out the purposes and provisions of this Act.

In effect, the act itself could be completely bypassed by regulations and orders in council made behind closed doors. I can remember in what I might call the fat years, when we were on the other side of the house, the strong objections which were made by the Secretary of State, then sitting on this side, to provisions such as this when they were embodied in legislation presented during that period, amounting to nearly six years. He objected strenuously to granting the powers to make regulations. Every time such a power was provided for in the legislation it was the Secretary of State we heard from most. I recall, in particular, the passage of the Customs Tariff legislation, when he spent a great deal of time telling us that it was an abuse of power to do these things by regulation. I feel just as strongly about this clause 18 as he did on that occasion, and it seems strange to me that, in addition to the sweeping powers already vested in these trustees, the government should still think it necessary to have the power to make orders in council and regulations which, as we all know, do not require the scrutiny and approval of this parliament. It seems to me that the interests of both labour and management would best be served by the deletion of this iniquitous clause.

Mr. Herridge: I wish to support what the hon. member for Yukon has said, particularly in view of the special nature of this bill and the differences of opinion which could arise with respect to a number of these clauses. The debate this evening has shown that there is a conflict of opinion as to the purpose and the effect of certain clauses, and I suggest that consideration be given to striking out this provision or amending it so that any regulations which may be made are strictly within the interpretation of the act, as we have heard it explained to us this evening by the minister speaking on the various clauses.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): If we pass this particular clause we do not need the rest of the bill. This paragraph gives the government the power to do anything it wishes. It reads:

> The governor in council may make such orders and regulations as he deems necessary for carrying out the purposes and provisions of this Act.

There is no need for the bill. All that is needed is that paragraph. We do not even know what it refers to. It does not say what the purposes and provisions are. It simply says, in effect, that the governor in council may do whatever he wishes. It is a bad provision and it should be eliminated.

Mr. Favreau: The government would agree to striking out the words "purposes and", so that it would read: "—for carrying out the provisions of this Act". That is totally objective.

Mr. Nielsen: I think that would accomplish what I have in mind.

Mr. Herridge: Did the minister say he would consider amending that clause?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, by leaving out the words "purposes and".

Mr. Herridge: I am glad to hear that. We appreciate the response to our plea.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if it could be understood that the clause is carried as amended and that the amendment can be written out at the table.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee agree that the words "purposes and" in clause 8 be deleted?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On clause 23—Commencement.

Mr. Clancy: I would suggest an amendment to this clause and it is that this act be made subject to review by the House of Commons on the first supply motion annually.

Mr. Thompson: I would ask the minister why the act will not come into force on the day it receives royal assent instead of coming into force only on the date fixed by proclamation.

Mr. MacEachen: I think there are two main reasons for the inclusion of this particular provision. We want the act to be proclaimed when the trustees have been appointed and when the property is vested in the trusteeship, so that there may be a certain time between all these phases, allowing the trustees to get to work at a particular date.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 24—Expiry.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the views that have been expressed with respect to the expiry date of the bill, and in order to make it abundantly clear that there is no desire on the part of the government to ask for the continuation of this particular trusteeship beyond the necessary time required, we thought it would be useful to include a five year provision in order to discourage persons from waiting out a period of trusteeship in order to return to the control of these unions. That is why this period was suggested.

However, because of the views that have been expressed, it is now agreeable to the government to reduce this to a three year period, and to provide that the trusteeship may continue beyond that period by proclamation, with a provision that members of the house may raise this matter and have the proclamation revoked at their own vote in the house. If they wish to end it, it will end.

Mr. Favreau: I move:

> That Bill C-102 be amended by striking out clause 24 thereof and substituting therefor the following:
> 24(1). This act expires on the 31st day of December 1966 unless before that date this act is extended to a later date which may be fixed by proclamation of the governor in council.
> (2). A proclamation under subsection (1) shall be laid before parliament not later than 15 days after its issue, or if parliament is not then sitting, within the first 15 days next thereafter that parliament is sitting.
> (3). Where a proclamation has been laid before parliament pursuant to subsection (2), a notice of motion in either house signed by 10 members thereof and made in accordance with the rules of that house within 10 days of the date the proclamation was made before parliament, praying that the proclamation be revoked, shall be debated in that house at the first convenient opportunity within the four sitting days next after the day the motion in that house was made.

(4). If both houses of parliament resolve that the proclamation be revoked, it shall cease to have effect and this act shall cease to be in force but without prejudice to the previous operation of this act or anything duly done or suffered thereunder or any offence committed or any punishment incurred.

The last part is essential to retain the validity of whatever would have been done before the expiry of the act.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. Nielsen: I am very happy to see that the minister proposes to amend clause 24 by reducing the five year period. I was hoping he would reduce it to 1964, but having heard the amendment I think that the device of proclamation could be used at the end of one year just as easily as it could at the end of three or two years. I think the period is still too long and I suggest it be further reduced to December 31, 1964.

As the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings has just suggested to me, the act can always be extended by a separate act of parliament, and this amendment is a very complicated way of accomplishing the desired objective of making the extension subject to the review of the House of Commons. All the minister has to do is introduce another bill saying this one will be extended for whatever period the government feels necessary.

Schedules A and B agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: The committee will now revert to clause 7 (1) and (2)(a).

Mr. Favreau: I move:

That Bill C-102 an act to provide for the placing of the maritime transportation unions of Canada under the management and control of trustees be amended:

(a) by striking out paragraph (a) of subsection (2) in clause 7 of the bill and by substituting therefor the following:

"(a) promote the establishment of advisory councils of seamen and their representatives to advise and aid the trustees under this act and promote the establishment of joint advisory councils of seamen and ship owners and their representatives for the purpose of developing good relations between employees and employers, safety in the industry and other labour relations except those ordinarily associated with collective bargaining;"

I might say this covers exactly the point which has been raised to the effect that these joint advisory boards should remain what they are presently in the trades, and not deal with the collective bargaining, and:

(b) by adding immediately after subsection (5) on page 4 of the bill the following new subsection:

6. Nothing in this act shall be construed to restrict any right of a maritime union or the members thereof to bargain collectively and to implement the provisions of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act in any labour dispute.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. Knowles: It seems to me the minister has met the two points that were raised over here, but as I followed his reading of part (a) of the amendment it seemed to me there were a few words left out from what I thought was going to be given. I wonder if I could see it.

Mr. Favreau: I am sorry but we do not have a copy.

Mr. Knowles: I wonder whether the minister did not intend this part to read: "Promote the establishment of advisory councils of seamen and their representatives to advise and aid the trustees in carrying out the duties of the trustees under this act". The minister has left out words that were in the original version, "in carrying out the duties of the trustees." I wonder whether there has not been a stenographic slip somewhere.

Mr. MacInnis: You had better give it to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre so he can redraft it for you.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Favreau: I would agree that this would be an excellent suggestion. Because of the typographical error in typing the text which was discussed previously, the hon. member is absolutely right when he says that the words "in carrying out the duties of the trustees" were omitted.

Mr. Churchill: Is it the same as line 27.

Mr. Knowles: Perhaps the minister would not mind calling it a stenographic error rather than a typographical error. I speak as a member of the international typographical union.

Mr. Favreau: I am sorry. We will correct Hansard. In conformity with what has been said by the hon. member, the words "in carrying out the duties of the trustees" will be added after the words "promote the establishment of advisory councils of seamen and their representatives to advise and aid the trustees."

Mr. Nielsen: Will the minister allow me to express my appreciation for the consideration which the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration have accorded to the suggestions made by myself, the hon. member for Peace River and also the hon. member for Timiskaming whose idea it originally was for the first amendment. We appreciate the co-operation.

Clause as amended agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the preamble carry?

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam raised a point about the preamble. I wondered whether it has been considered.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, maybe we would not need to draft an amendment to meet the hon. member's point. I think it is a good point. The change would bring the preamble in line with the findings of the Norris commission. I think we could have the preamble read, "within a certain maritime union".

Mr. Knowles: Agreed.

Amendment agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the preamble carry?

Mr. Knowles: As amended.

Mr. Pickersgill: As amended.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the preamble as amended carry?

Preamble as amended agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Nowlan: Let the press gallery write something now about parliament at its best. It would be a welcome change.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): When shall the said bill be read a third time? By leave, now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Churchill: Next sitting.

Mr. MacEachen moved the third reading of the bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Peters: On division.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, it is quite contrary to the rules for an amended bill to pass third reading without unanimous consent. I did not give unanimous consent. The house has done very good work tonight. This bill is not coming into force immediately. It still has to go through the other place and I think it is only sensible and reasonable that third reading should be held on Monday.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member was engaged in conversation I think he did not hear the Chair ask for unanimous consent, although it was repeated twice. However, in view of the excellent co-operation there has been we would not wish to take any advantage of the situation. If there is any way in which it could be considered that this which has happened did not happen, I would hope that would be done, and that the house would unanimously agree that the bill did not receive third reading. The hon. gentleman, who has been most co-operative, as all hon. members have, obviously did not hear the Chair when the request for unanimous consent was made, and I hope there will be unanimous consent to forget that the matter was raised.

Mr. Knowles: After that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre might change his mind and give unanimous consent.

Mr. Churchill: I have no intention in the world of holding up the bill. It is not that there would be any debate on third reading on Monday on our part. It is just the method of procedure. I was paying very close attention and I think the Speaker did not hear me when I disagreed. But if it is the will of the house that the bill be given third reading now by unanimous consent I raise no further objection.

Bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I want to express to the whole house, but particularly to the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, my appreciation of the really exceptional co-operation there has been throughout the whole day in dealing with a very controversial and a very difficult measure which I think we all feel, whatever way we may have voted, has involved a very distasteful duty we have had to discharge in this parliament.

Mr. Douglas: I hope it will be recorded that the legislation was passed by the house in spite of frequent obstruction by the Secretary of State.

Mr. Pickersgill: For which I apologize.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, now that we have clearly demonstrated to all concerned that parliament is a very excellent institution in the conduct of democracy, may we have from the Secretary of State the order of business for Monday? I take it that unless there is some unusual emergency, this will be a supply motion.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has anticipated completely what I was going to say. Unless there should be some situation, which I hope will not arise, which would make it necessary for the government to ask the house to do something else, it is the intention of the Minister of Finance to move to go into supply on Monday. I will try on Monday or Tuesday, after consultation with hon. gentlemen opposite, to forecast the business for the rest of the week.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the minister when it is his intention to deal with the report of the committee on privileges and elections, which matter has now been hanging fire for quite a while.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am very glad the hon. gentleman asked that question. I had hoped that my hon. friend from Hull (Mr. Caron) might be able to move concurrence in the report on Monday. I believe there was, however, an understanding that this would not be done until the proceedings of the committee were available in both official languages.

Mr. Nielsen: That is right.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am told there is some difficulty in this connection. Although I believe the translators are working all night, I am not sure that this report will be available for Monday. If it is available, it would be the intention to have it dealt with on Monday. If it is not available until Tuesday, it would be dealt with on Tuesday. The government is very anxious to have this matter resolved as early as possible, as I think the whole house is. If it were possible to accept a version in only one language, or in one language without its being printed in the other, we might be able to abbreviate the situation. I would like to say how much I regret that it is not available right now, but I am afraid these are circumstances that are beyond anyone's control.

It being twenty five minutes after eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, October 14, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF ADDITIONAL ASSISTANCE TO AREAS OF HIGH UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in June of this year I outlined a nine point employment and manpower development program. Under this program provision was made for special measures of federal assistance to designated development areas. The 35 designated development areas under this program were selected on the basis of being areas characterized by continuing high levels of unemployment and slow rates of employment growth.

In addition to qualifying for tax concessions to manufacturing and processing enterprises locating in such areas, there are additional measures designed particularly to stimulate winter employment in these designated areas. These measures include the bringing forward of federal government construction projects for this winter and higher payroll incentive payments under the municipal winter works incentive program.

The aim of the special tax incentive measures and the work of the area development agency of the Department of Industry which apply to the 35 designated development areas is primarily to stimulate year round employment in areas of slow economic growth and chronic high levels of unemployment. The additional measures that were introduced to reduce the level of unemployment in these areas during the coming winter months include a supplementary federal winter construction program and the provision for an additional 10 per cent, or a total of 60 per cent, of payroll costs of municipal winter works.

The purpose of the supplementary government construction program and the higher percentage for municipal works is to help alleviate the problem of high winter unemployment. The designation of areas for purposes of the area development program was not primarily concerned with high winter unemployment, but rather with areas of long term unemployment and slow growth.

As one means of extending the impact of the supplementary federal winter construction program, areas with heavy winter unemployment have been selected to supplement the already designated development areas. In addition, municipalities in these areas of high winter unemployment will receive 60 per cent of payroll costs under the municipal winter works incentive program, as in the case of the designated development areas. To qualify as an area of high winter unemployment, the average ratio of national employment service registrations to estimated paid workers must have been in excess of 25 per cent in the three winter months January, February and March during the years 1961, 1962 and 1963. In all there are 45 such national employment service areas which qualify as areas of high winter unemployment.

With the consent of the house, Mr. Speaker, I should like to have a table of those areas printed in Hansard as part of my statement.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The table referred to above is as follows:]

Newfoundland: Grand Falls, St. John's, *Corner Brook.

Nova Scotia: *Inverness, *Springhill, Yarmouth, *Amherst, Bridgewater, *New Glasgow.

Prince Edward Island: Summerside, Charlottetown.

New Brunswick: Bathurst, *Campbellton, Newcastle, *Woodstock, Edmundston, Moncton.

Quebec: Gaspe, New Richmond, Chandler, *Causapscal, *Matane, Maniwaki, Rimouski, *Mont Laurier, *La Malbaie, Forestville, Sept Iles, Riviere du Loup, Baie Comeau, Thetford Mines, Megantic, St. Georges, Chicoutimi, *Dolbeau, *Jonquiere, *Port Alfred, Roberval, Alma.

Ontario: Sturgeon Falls, Bracebridge.

Manitoba: Dauphin.

British Columbia: Kelowna, Penticton, Vernon.

Fourteen of these 45 areas (those marked *) are also included among the designated development areas.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could say a few words in place of the ex-minister of labour. We are very gratified that at long last there is some precise definition in connection with the assistance programs that were established as an aid not only for winter employment in this country but also for those areas that are underdeveloped.

In so far as the increase in the percentage of labour costs from 50 per cent to 60 per cent is concerned, this is a move in the right direction. Naturally I should like to point out that if we are going to keep the participation of the provinces and municipalities up to a level where they have a real interest in this proposition, a warning should be issued that this percentage must not go too high. The success of these programs depends on consultations with the municipalities and provinces to make sure that their legitimate interests under the constitution are protected.

As I say, municipal assistance programs in the winter months was a good idea. I am glad to see that this government is continuing this aid. In so far as the newly developed areas are concerned, this is a subject which I feel will have to be examined with great care to make certain that the criteria we should apply at all times, namely participation in the discussions and planning at all levels of government, are maintained.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, naturally the house is happy to hear the statement of the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) with regard to the regulations and the benefits granted to areas known as designated areas. There is one point, however, I should like to draw to the house's attention. It is that in the selection of designated areas, the criteria taken into account were not, in my opinion, the most appropriate in the circumstances.

It seems that the selection was restricted to those areas where unemployment has been prevailing in the last eight years. I feel, Mr. Speaker, that those are not necessarily the areas in greatest need, because it is quite possible that districts which have only known unemployment in the last three or four years find themselves in a more difficult situation than others where it has existed for eight years.

Mr. Speaker, there is another factor that is noteworthy. In fact, there does not seem to have been any consultation between the various governments concerned, that is the federal authorities, the provinces and the municipal councils.

Since the government seems determined to continue examination of the situation in other districts so as to give them the benefits provided in the legislation, as soon as they meet established criteria, I strongly suggest that the minister and the government should take that step in co-operation with the provinces and municipalities concerned.

Personally, I know that several towns in the Saguenay region have been recognized while others have not been. Granted, the government cannot recognize every city and area in Canada, but I hope just the same that it will give an answer to those which have asked to be designated as distressed areas so that municipal authorities may find out directly from the minister exactly why their municipalities cannot be recognized.

Mr. Speaker, before closing my remarks, I should like to tell the minister how much we appreciate the assistance given to those regions which will benefit thereby. I am glad for their sake, but I do hope that the government will find, as soon as possible, other means than the one just described to deal with unemployment, because even if the step the government intends to take is designed to help municipalities undertake a greater amount of winter work projects, it will bring about debt increases and impose a heavier burden on municipalities which, for the most part, already have to carry a heavy load and cannot afford to go more deeply into debt.

[Text]

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the policy announced by the Minister of Labour will be of some value to those districts which have been selected as designated development areas. However, I point out that there are many areas in Canada which have not been so designated. I think experience will show that we will have to reduce the criteria which the department has set up. For one thing, the levels of unemployment required are much too high. Second, the data which have been collected have been based on summer employment, which is not necessarily related to what the winter unemployment situation will be. Therefore, while this will be of some help to the districts fortunately designated, it is not going to be of much assistance to many areas which will experience severe unemployment this winter.

I would have hoped that the government would consider—and I still hope they will consider—first the possibility of applying the 60 per cent generally to municipalities under the winter works incentive program; and second, that they would consider restoring the reduction in the period during which the winter works incentive program is applicable. When a few months ago the Minister of Labour, without consulting the provinces or the municipalities, reduced this period, I think he very considerably reduced the benefit of this program and its efficacy in dealing with unemployment. I think the government would do well to examine both the question of raising the percentage for all municipalities and second, the question of the need for restoring the two months, one at the beginning and one at the end, which were taken off the operative period a few months ago.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: With the same reservation I outlined the other day, the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) has the floor.

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, we are happy to see that the government has decided to increase by 10 per cent its share of payroll costs that municipalities have to bear under the winter works program, in order to check unemployment in Canada, especially in underdeveloped areas.

However, let us not fool ourselves, that will certainly not solve all the problems because municipalities, even if they have to assume only 10 per cent of the cost, have a very hard time trying to meet their obligations everywhere in Canada. The employment problem is relatively easy to solve when municipalities have the money or credit needed to pay the workers.

But they must face another problem, the problem of mechanization, of automation and of the purchase of materials for the building of streets and sidewalks in those municipalities.

Now, the minister is aware that these municipalities have difficulties in obtaining the necessary funds. This measure will help them to some extent, but will not settle the problem, I have no doubt about that. Nevertheless, this measure means that the federal government is willing to pay 60 per cent of labour costs in all those municipalities. It is better than nothing, but not much more, and we believe that a better legislation could be brought forward that would stem unemployment once and for all in our country and in our economically weak areas.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Labour based on the statement he made during motions. Is the minister giving consideration to amending or revising the criteria under which designated areas are selected so that several whole provinces would not be excluded from any benefits which may flow from having these areas selected, especially when some of those provinces would have no designated areas are the ones which traditionally have not shared in the economic growth of Canada?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the additional areas that were designated for the purpose of special assistance under winter works, I think include the province of my hon. friend. With respect to the areas previously designated, all I can say is that an effort was made to use the best possible criteria. But as is stated in the statement issued at that time, these designations are subject to annual review, and it will be our purpose in the period ahead to attempt to refine these criteria so that every area which really needs to be designated would be included.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): May I thank my hon. friend for his reply, and ask him whether there are any provinces still remaining which have no designated areas within their borders.

Mr. MacEachen: Actually I did not look at these criteria with a view to including provinces; the areas were looked at with respect to their employment and unemployment record, but I will attempt to examine all the areas included under both programs so as to determine whether any province is left out. It seems to me that if a province is excluded it is an indication that there is some feeling that economic progress has been taking place, relatively, in that province.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

RETIREMENT OF VETERAN MEMBER OF SECURITY STAFF

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I rise, Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege. I admit at once that in doing so I may not be strictly within the rules of order, but I imagine there are many hon. members who will accept what I have to say as a question of privilege.

I believe our security police in the House of Commons are famous throughout the world because they carry out their job of protection without violence, batons or guns. Today James Kealey is retiring from the security staff after having served for 28 years. When he first came to the House of Commons the security staff numbered only 16; now they are more than 70. I believe that we in this House of Commons should honour our security staff and in particular, today, one by the name of Kealey. That is why I am asking, on a question of privilege, that you, Mr. Speaker, will convey to the security staff, our thanks for their services and their courtesy, and that especially you will convey to Mr. Kealey, as one of the original staff, our thanks for the courtesy and understanding with which he has handled the many thousands of people who have visited this building and say to him that in so doing he has conveyed an admirable public relations picture of this House of Commons.

I should like to pay tribute to Mr. Kealey on this day when he is leaving the security staff and, in so doing, convey my thanks to the entire security staff of the House of Commons.

TENDER NO. 36-35477-P, QUEEN'S PRINTER

Question No. 1,126—Mr. Francis:

1. Was a tender No. 36-35477-P, due April 22, 1963, called for offset printing work for the outside establishments of the queen's printer?
2. What tenders were submitted, by what firms, and at what prices?
3. Were all tenders submitted within the required date?
4. When were the tenders opened; were tenderers permitted to be present when tenders were opened, and were the tenderers notified when tenders were to be opened?
5. Who was awarded the tender?
6. Were the unsuccessful tenderers notified that they were unsuccessful and if so, on what occasion, and by what means?
7. Who was awarded the previous year's tender for similar work?

Mr. Drury: 1. No. The tender covered film and platemaking requirements for Ottawa area printing units of the queen's printer for the fiscal year 1963-1964.

2. The tender requested unit prices for the platemaking requirements for the Ottawa area printing units for the fiscal year 1963-64. The schedules in the tender requested quotations for masked negatives, line negatives and half tone negatives, and retouching. The considerations for awarding the contracts, for an over all total not exceeding $20,000, were the lowest bid of the unit prices for the items in the greatest area of requirement (based on purchases for 1962-1963), and the discounts offered for volume purchasing.

On the above basis Addressograph-Multigraph was the lowest bidder in schedule "B"—line negatives 4x6 to 9x11 and 10x15 plate, and awarded the contract.

Bern Engraving was the lowest bidder in schedule "C"—half tone negatives 4x6 to 9x11 and 10x15 plate, and awarded the contract.

After considering the competitive position of these two firms, schedule "B"—line negatives only, 4x6 to 9x11 to accommodate 10x15 plates, and schedule "C"—half tone negatives only, 4x6 to 9x11 to accommodate 10x15 plates were awarded to Bern Engraving. Schedule "A"—masked negatives contract was awarded to Addressograph-Multigraph.

The discounted prices offered by Pilgrim Offset and Capital Photo Engravers were not competitive in the greatest area of requirement.

3. Yes. An error in the specifications was noted on the date before the opening of the tenders. Revised specifications were immediately given to all firms by telephone, and at the same time they were advised that the time limit was extended to April 23, 1963.

4. (a) Tenders were opened at 9:30 a.m., April 24; (b) It is not the practice of the Department of Public Printing and Stationery to invite tenderers to be present at opening of tenders; (c) No.

5. Bern Engraving and Addressograph-Multigraph were each awarded a part of the order, as they were the low tenderers in their respective parts.

6. (a) Yes; (b) Following award of contract; (c) Verbally.

7. Pilgrim Offset.

2. How many bids were submitted?
3. What were the amounts of these bids?
4. Who was the successful tenderer?

Mr. Drury: 1. No. It is the policy of the department to call tenders wherever possible; however, in this case, Steelgas Limited of Calgary, Alberta, on its own initiative and at no cost to the crown, conducted a detailed engineering study of the Fort Churchill heating plants and submitted a proposal for the conversion of the boilers in the three principal heating plants to dual oil/gas fired, construction of LP gas storage and distribution facilities, supply of LP gas, including the maintenance and operation of the system for a 2½ year period. The use of LP gas will result in savings in the cost of the product and in the operation and maintenance of the plants.

[Mr. Drury.]

*MAINTENANCE OF T.C.A. SCHEDULE, MONTREAL-BAGOTVILLE

Question No. 1,181—Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi):

Have representations been made by various groups in the Saguenay area, requesting T.C.A. to maintain its normal flight schedule between Montreal and Bagotville and vice versa after October 26 next and, if so, will these services be maintained after that date?

[Translation]

Mr. Cantin: Representation was received, apparently based on erroneous information. T.C.A.'s schedule effective October 27, 1963, retains twice a day service between Saguenay/Bagotville and Montreal. Although some changes in time and routing have necessarily had to be made, it is considered this provides good service for businessmen between the Saguenay area and Montreal.

*APPLICATION OF SALES TAX ON MACHINERY

Question No. 1,184—Mr. Jones:

1. On what date were the regulations regarding the collection of sales tax on building materials and machinery made available throughout Canada?
2. What steps have been taken to clarify circular ET-92 to remove the application of the tax on remanufactured goods, particularly on automotive supplies?
3. What action has been taken to assure that individual repairs undertaken by custom machine shops were not taxable?

Mr. Garland: 1. The current general regulations regarding the collection of taxes on all taxable goods have been available since April 1961 and distributed to all licensees. Special bulletins have been issued as follows: Building materials—July 9, 1963; Machinery and apparatus—July 9, 1963 and August 19, 1963.

2. The removal of the sales tax on remanufactured goods is not contemplated. Section 30 of the Excise Tax Act imposes the tax on the sale price of all goods produced or manufactured in Canada. There is nothing in the act which states that the tax applies only on goods manufactured or produced exclusively from new materials. Goods produced or manufactured from a combination of new and used materials, or from used materials only, are, therefore, none the less goods for the purpose of the act and the tax applies on the sale price thereof.

3. In respect of the third part of the question, this is covered by sections 4, 5 and 6 of circular ET-92, August 28, 1963. Further revision of these sections, now under consideration, will depend on adequate control being established by custom machine shops to maintain satisfactory identification of ownership of the rebuilt article.

The situation at the moment is that we are awaiting a reply from the government of Israel; their legal departments are now considering the draft document supplied.

ASSISTANCE TO EXPORT MANUFACTURERS

Question No. 1,266—Mr. Bell:

Has any consideration been given to assisting Canadian export manufacturers in a manner similar to the A.I.D. program of the United States and, if so, what are the details?

Answer: Under section 21A of the Export Credits Insurance Act long term Canadian government financing up to 25 years is available in connection with the sale abroad of Canadian capital equipment. The normal interest rate for such financing is 6 per cent. In addition, in the pure aid context, capital equipment and capital projects as well as certain commodities of Canadian origin are supplied to the underdeveloped areas under Canadian grant aid programs, in particular the Colombo plan. In these instances, of course, no repayment or interest is involved.

In contrast aid supplied to the underdeveloped areas by the United States agency for international development (AID) takes the form, in large measure, of long term low interest loans covering the supply of both capital equipment and a variety of commodities. These loans involve maturities of up to 40 years with extensive grace periods during which no repayment of principal is required. Interest rates are nominal or very low.

The essential difference in the facilities available to Canadian and U.S. exporters is that the former are in a position to take advantage of loans running to 25 years and grants to less developed countries while the latter enjoy the advantages provided by longer terms loans at low rates of interest.

LABOUR RELATIONS

TRUSTEESHIP LEGISLATION—DISCUSSION WITH PRESIDENT KENNEDY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the reported difficulties and delays he experienced over the week end in reaching President Kennedy, would the Prime Minister state whether any means are being taken to improve direct communications with the President, and at the same time he might tell the house the results of his talk with the President.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am very grateful to the hon. gentleman for giving me the opportunity to state there were no difficulties nor delays, and that any reports to that effect were based on a complete misrepresentation of the facts of the situation.

Because of that misrepresentation and the publicity given to it perhaps I had better put on the record exactly what happened. Immediately after the debate on this matter on Friday morning, and on Friday afternoon, I instructed that the record of that debate be sent at once to our embassy in Washington for the benefit of the state department and the White House, so that when I talked with the President he would have the record before him. That was done immediately, and at the end of the afternoon I phoned our embassy in Washington and asked them to get in touch with the White House to see if the President had a chance to study that record and if the President would be available to talk to me that evening.

I got a reply immediately that the President would be very glad to talk to me at once, or at any time convenient to me. At that time he was in conference over a dangerous situation developing in access to Berlin, and his office said if I preferred to wait until that meeting was over he would speak to me afterward and he would have the benefit of reading our record. I said I wanted to give him enough time to read the record, and I called him after breakfast on Saturday morning.

Any reports that there were difficulties or delays on this matter are designed merely to stir up this kind of anti-American sniping which is most unfortunate when we already have so many difficulties with the United States.

Mr. Martineau: As a supplementary question, I wonder whether the Prime Minister would answer the second part of my question and state the results of his talk.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I had a talk of 15 to 20 minutes with the President on the telephone and acquainted him, as a supplement to what he had already read, with the feelings of the House of Commons, the government and, I thought, the feelings of the people of Canada with regard to the very serious situation that had developed because of what I considered to be, and what I stated in the house was, an unhelpful intervention by the United States secretary of labour, who himself was with the President when he spoke to me, and with regard to the more than shocking intervention of the president of the A.F.L.-C.I.O.

I called the President's attention to the seriousness of the situation and expressed the hope, and more than a hope, that when the Canadian parliament took action in this matter and government trusteeship was a fact, that decision would be accepted by all concerned in the United States.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): As a supplementary question may I ask the Prime Minister whether he received any assurance from the President that the government of the United States would co-operate with the trusteeship which this parliament has authorized the government to appoint, and whether we would have the United States government's co-operation in seeing that Canadian shipping in American ports would be free from harassment and sabotage?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I am quite sure that the government of the United States will co-operate in this matter, as indeed the President's statement, issued on Saturday, indicated. I cannot give the same assurance with respect to United States labour unions and the leadership of some of those unions.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a related question of the Prime Minister. In this telephone conversation with the President did he discuss at any time this similar situation which is happening in relation to the divulging of information by the United States department of agriculture about our secret exchange of information on wheat sales?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I think I did quite enough at that time to make the feelings of the government and parliament known with regard to the matter I talked to him about, the situation on the great lakes. I did not talk to him about the situation with regard to wheat sales on this occasion, although I did previously.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CHURCHILL, MAN.—REPORTED INTENTION TO WITHDRAW MILITARY PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence, of which I have sent him notice. In view of the persistent and very disturbing rumours which are currently circulating in Churchill, Manitoba, to the effect that all or practically all military personnel will be withdrawn from Fort Churchill during the first half of 1964, can the minister advise the house whether plans of this nature are under consideration?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is true that consideration is being given to withdrawing some of the service personnel from Fort Churchill, but no decision has been taken at the present time. If it should turn out that some of our responsibilities were turned over to other departments of government at some time in the future, I do not think it would effect the number of personnel required to any great extent.

Mr. Simpson: As a supplementary question, could the minister assure the house that if such changes are contemplated ample information will be forthcoming so that those who are affected will know as soon as possible, and so that the people in this northern community will have some way to judge what the economy is going to be for the coming winter and next spring?

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, I would be pleased to give that assurance. We will give the maximum amount of warning in most cases.

REPORTED ASSISTANCE FROM PENTAGON TO REORGANIZE DEPARTMENTAL AFFAIRS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Reports emanating from Washington over the week end quoted the minister as saying that it was his intention to borrow some staff from the Pentagon to assist in reorganizing the military affairs of his department. I wonder whether the minister could tell us whether he was accurately quoted.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I certainly did not see any such report, but I would be very interested to see such a report because I made no such statement.

VAL D'OR, QUE.—POSSIBLE ESTABLISHMENT OF NUCLEAR BASE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence?

About twelve days ago, in answer to a question of mine, we were told that under the Canada-United States agreement on nuclear weapons no new base would be established in Canada. I would like to know now whether it is true that the Minister of National Defence is considering the setting up of a nuclear base at Val d'Or, in the riding of Villeneuve.

[Text]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): That is one of the ones we have been looking at, Mr. Speaker.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS COMMITTEE—REPORT IN BOTH LANGUAGES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, could I ask a question of the Secretary of State? Could the minister inform us when the report of the privileges and elections committee will be submitted to the house for approval, disapproval or revision?

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I think if the hon. member for Lapointe had had time to read what I said on Friday night when the house rose he would have observed that I said that if the proceedings in both official languages could be printed in time for the opening of the sitting today, they would be tabled today. Unfortunately, although the translators were working all night, and although the printers are working very hard, it has not been possible to have this document ready. I am assured that, barring some accident, they will be ready in plenty of time for the opening of the house tomorrow; and if the proceedings are available—as the hon. member knows, the report of the committee is already before the house—I have been advised by my hon. friend from Hull of his intention of moving concurrence in the report.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Secretary of State tell the house whether the report is now ready and printed in one of the two official languages of the country? If so, in which one?

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, as the hon. member knows, the report has been on the table, I think for nearly a week, and has been printed in Votes and Proceedings in both languages. It is not a question of the report but of the proceedings, and I am told that because of the very large demand that is occasioned by proceedings of this kind upon the services of the translators into both languages—because the proceedings were carried on in both languages the translation had to go on both ways—and because of the problems of printing, particularly over a holiday week end when, apart from the House of Commons, people do not normally work, it will not be possible to have them ready until tomorrow.

[Later:]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. A while ago I asked the Secretary of State which of the two reports was not ready, the English or the French one. Now I have here with me the English report of the committee on privileges and elections, while the one in French is not yet ready.

I am under the impression that, for some time now, for the past several months, the French translation or the French edition have always been coming in late.

Last week we had to adjourn our meeting and interrupt the business of the committee on privileges and elections because there were no interpreters or French reporters available.

My question of privilege is this. I find such a situation absolutely abnormal, especially in the Canadian parliament. Now, if we are to have real bilingualism, we must go to the expense of enlarging the personnel as far as translation, reporting and interpretation are concerned. In my view, that question of privilege is a most important one which the Secretary of State should take into consideration immediately to make sure that, in future, those services are adequately staffed.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, the point raised by the hon. gentleman is an important one. When I said that I understood the reports were available in both languages, I think it will be found from an examination of the record that I said my understanding was that they had been printed in Votes and Proceedings when the reports were made to the house. I have not examined the French copy of Votes and Proceedings to see whether in fact these reports were so printed, but if there is any doubt about it I would hope that those two reports could be inserted into today's Votes and Proceedings. I am told that they are printed—

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I may be allowed to complete what I have to say before the hon. gentleman interrupts.

Mr. Gregoire: That is not what I am talking about.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am talking about the two reports made by the committee on privileges and elections of this house which were tabled by my hon. friend from Hull and which, I am now assured by one of my colleagues, was printed in Votes and Proceedings, which is the only official record of the transactions of this house. The fact that the proceedings of the committee are not yet available in both languages is something about which I express regret. I am very sorry about it and every effort is being made to make them available on time. But as far as the reports are concerned, I find that my original statement was correct. The two reports made to this house were printed in both languages in Votes and Proceedings.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I was not talking about the report published in the Votes and Proceedings of the House of Commons, but rather about the verbatim report of the committee's discussions. I think that the Secretary of State should not try to elude the question as he has been doing since the beginning.

I was talking about the report of the committee itself, that is the minutes taken during the discussions, and even if it is not an official publication, it is still a government publication. And I notice that it is always the French publications which are late.

Besides, the question of privilege was to the effect that a large enough personnel should be set up so that there will not always be delays in the French translations or publications of the committees or the House of Commons discussions.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: I suggest that the hon. gentleman is wholly out of order. He is talking about the proceedings of a committee of this house. The matter should be taken up in that committee and the time of this house should not be occupied with it.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CARIBBEAN—INQUIRY AS TO REQUESTS FOR ANTIBIOTICS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the very sympathetic and understanding minister of health and welfare. In view of reports of serious epidemics in the Caribbean countries as a result of the recent disastrous hurricane, would the minister inform the house whether the government has received any request from any of the Caribbean countries to supply antibiotics?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, no such request was received up until 2.30 today, but I shall advise my hon. friend and the house if any such request is received.

CUBA—INCLUSION AMONG COUNTRIES TO RECEIVE AID

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs based on the newspaper reports that appeared yesterday and today of the serious devastation that has taken place on the island of Cuba. I wonder whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs can tell us if the government is considering including Cuba among the other Caribbean countries to which Canada is extending aid.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, a full assessment of the situation is being made, and perhaps later I can reply to that question more specifically.

INQUIRY AS TO STEPS TO CREATE ATLANTIC COMMUNITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. F. Jones (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Prime Minister could let the house know when he expects to be in a position to announce the steps he intends to take to initiate his plan for the creation of an Atlantic community, as advertised during the recent campaign.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the policies of this government with respect to the creation and development of an Atlantic community are not such that an answer to a question like that can be given on orders of the day. When we have a debate on external affairs, which in fact may take place in a few minutes, we can go into this question.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister misunderstood my question. I asked him when he would expect to be in a position to announce the course he intends to follow in this regard. My question was not a contentious one; it was an inquiry as to when he expects to be in a position to announce the course he intends to follow.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, we have been pursuing this matter for a good many years on both sides of the house, and since this government has been in office it has been following that course. But it will be some time before any announcement can be made on the matter.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING MASTER AGENCY PLAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Transport, notice of which I sent to his office. Has the Minister of Transport given any consideration to the strong representations of the railroad telegraphers not to implement the C.N.R.'s master agency plan, which would leave many small communities without the essential service of a station agent, and eventually to railroad abandonment?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have given consideration to the submission made by the organization referred to, however, I do not necessarily agree with the general remarks of the hon. member in the latter part of his question. I have also sent the brief on for consideration by the management of the railway, and it is receiving quite close attention.

OTTAWA—REQUEST FOR TRANSLATION OF FRENCH SIGN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Transport occasioned by the rising interest in bilingualism. I wonder whether the minister would take the step of contacting the management of the Canadian National Railways to see whether the railway company would write an equivalent sign, which now appears in French, in English at its office at Metcalfe and Sparks streets so that everyone can understand.

INCOME TAX

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR SPECIFIC EXEMPTION FOR CHARITABLE DONATIONS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Does the government intend to comply with the request of the St. Jean Baptiste societies of Quebec and other citizens, and grant a 10 per cent deduction for charities, instead of requiring receipts when filing income tax returns?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have no particular knowledge of that matter at this particular moment or that any such intention is in our minds, but I will be glad to look into the question.

LABOUR RELATIONS

GREAT LAKES—COMPLIANCE WITH LAW BY SHIPPING COMPANIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Now that the house has dealt with the legislation setting up a trusteeship over the maritime unions, I would like to know what plans the government has for ensuring that the shipping companies on the great lakes will in future operate as law abiding, respectable Canadian business firms.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is surely not a question that I could be expected to answer on the orders of the day.

Inquiries of the Ministry

WHITE PASS AND YUKON RAILROAD—EFFORTS TO SETTLE STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Has he received any further report from his officials concerning the labour difficulties confronting the White Pass and Yukon route, tying up that part of the railway and the ancillary shipping operation connected with it?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): No, Mr. Speaker.

SUGGESTED PROTECTION OF UNIONS AGAINST MANAGEMENT CHANGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour a question about which I gave him informal notice. It has to do with the brief which was received some months ago from the national legislative committee of the railway brotherhoods regarding a request that the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act should be amended in order to provide that unions during their contract period might have some protection against changes introduced by management. I should like to ask the minister whether he has replied to these representations and, if not, if he would give us an explanation of the delay.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I thank the hon. member for having given me informal notice of this question. There is an important matter of policy involved in this reply. I will check into it further and give the hon. member a full answer later.

POWER

PEACE RIVER—APPLICATION FOR CONSTRUCTION OF DAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Justice whether he can answer the question I asked him the other day in a situation the urgency of which I think is sharpened by the fact that I understand the waters of the Peace river are now being diverted. The people of the country are anxious to know whether the river, which was plied by large ships 50 years ago, is still to be regarded as a navigable water.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was good enough to remind me of this question some time last week. I have the reply to his question here and it is as follows. The advice I have received is to the effect that the works in question are included in the class of works to which the Navigable Waters Protection Act applies. The position has always been taken by the Department of Public Works that the Navigable Waters Protection Act applies to a provincial government or an agency thereof.

Mr. Baldwin: I have a supplementary question to the Minister of Public Works or the Minister of Justice. Is any action being contemplated by the government, in view of what appears to be the failure of the British Columbia government or its agency to observe the terms of this act?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take this question as notice, and I will answer it within the next few days.

QUEBEC—REACTION TO ANNOUNCEMENT RESPECTING NATIONAL GRID

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Can he tell us if the Quebec premier, Mr. Jean Lesage, or his government, has made representations to him or his government against the establishment of a national power grid, as referred to last week by the Minister of Trade and Commerce?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I do not know anything about the announcement, Mr. Speaker, nor do I know anything about any representations received. However, I shall be glad to look into it.

TRANSPORT

FAILURE OF "EMPRESS OF CANADA" TO DOCK AT QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a direct question to the Minister of Transport. On Friday the minister interrupted the proceedings of the house to announce that arrangements had been made with the longshoremen's union for the docking of the Empress of Canada at Quebec and for the disembarkation of her passengers. I wonder whether the minister would care to tell us why this was not carried out, and why it was necessary for the Empress of Canada to go to Halifax.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it was not necessary for the Empress of Canada to go to Halifax. Why it was directed there I do not know.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Later:]

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Transport a question concerning the Empress of Canada. Did the Minister of Transport receive a communication from Mr. Crump asking for a guarantee that the passengers from that boat would be landed safely at the port of disembarkation that was chosen, and did he reply that no such guarantee would be given?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, a request was received from the president of Canadian Pacific Railways for a guarantee, not precisely in the terms indicated by the hon. member. I would want to check the precise terms of that request. It was in a form to which no police force in the world could ever accede. In any event, the usual arrangements were made for the ship to disembark passengers at Wolfe's cove on Friday afternoon. Those arrangements were of a type that are usual in this kind of situation, where the passengers disembark in the ordinary way and bring off what hand luggage they can carry. The other heavy luggage that requires handling by longshoremen is not brought off and passengers are not permitted to embark; that is, new passengers. That was the kind of arrangement made. There were to be five inspectors representing the labour unions involved who were to be permitted on national harbours board property to see that the arrangement was not violated in any way.

[Later:]

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister which arises out of the failure of the Minister of Transport to give an appropriate answer, and it has to do with information received by the Prime Minister concerning the difficulties of disembarking passengers from the Empress of Canada on Wednesday, October 9. The Prime Minister was informed that passengers were prevented from disembarking by a group which swarmed over federal property. He was asked why the right of Canadian citizens to land in Canada was denied by the failure of the federal government to prevent the intimidation of peaceful citizens. I should like to know why the protection required for these Canadian citizens was not provided by the federal government.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Perhaps the best thing to do would be to table the correspondence between myself, the Minister of Transport and the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway on this matter, which I think will give my hon. friend the information he desires.

[Later:]

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, my question to the Prime Minister is very short. He said a few minutes ago that perhaps the correspondence between himself and the president of the C.P.R. should be tabled. Will he assure us that it will be tabled at the earliest possible moment?

Mr. Pearson: I will certainly look into the correspondence. If it is marked personal and confidential by the president I shall have to get his permission to table it, and I will be glad to ask for that permission if it is required.

Mr. Churchill: Well, it is required.

NORTH SYDNEY-NEWFOUNDLAND—INQUIRY AS TO SECOND FERRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Could the minister give an explanation as to why he has not made an announcement regarding the east coast ferry for Newfoundland, in the light of undertakings he had given that such an announcement would be made in September?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I hope to be able to make an announcement on that subject very shortly. It is a matter of regret to me that it was not made in September, but I hope to be able to do it very shortly.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

QUEBEC—REPORTED REFUSAL OF BENEFITS TO WORKER

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Lucien Plourde (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct an urgent question to the Minister of Labour. That question concerns hundreds of people faced with a similar problem. Could the minister tell the house whether he received a letter from Mr. Richard Hachey, 2102 Vauquelin st., Montreal, protesting against the stand of the unemployment insurance commission in Montreal which has denied him the benefits to which he is entitled.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is a question for the order paper.

EXTENSION OF BENEFITS TO WORKERS IN U.S.

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Charles-Eugene Dionne (Kamouraska): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour.

As agreements already exist between the Canadian and American governments for the application of the Unemployment Insurance Act in 47 states, could the minister tell the house what the reasons are for the delay in finding a solution to the problem concerning the sharing of benefits under this same act for Canadians working in the four remaining American states which have not as yet entered into an agreement?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is surely a question for the order paper.

QUEBEC—REPORTED PROTEST RESPECTING UNEQUAL TREATMENT OF PROVINCIAL EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Perron (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Following certain statements made by the premier of a province on a network of television stations, could the Prime Minister inform the house whether the Quebec premier made representations to the government to the effect that the province of Quebec had to refuse a deal that was discriminatory compared to the one made with the other provinces regarding unemployment insurance for provincial civil servants?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have had no such protest.

FISHERIES

APPREHENSION OF SPANISH TRAWLERS OFF NEWFOUNDLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Richard Cashin (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Can the minister inform the house what action, if any, has been taken as a result of the apprehension of two Spanish trawlers within Canadian territorial waters of Trepassey bay in the district of St. John's West?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, in fact on Thursday last the fisheries patrol boat Cape Friel apprehended two Spanish trawlers found fishing for cod and other groundfish inside the territorial waters in Trepassey bay, Newfoundland. The two trawlers were ordered to proceed to St. John's, where they have been detained and where normal charges will be laid and court hearings will take place later on this week.

NORTH PACIFIC TREATY—MEETING OF NEGOTIATORS AND ADVISORY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries concerning the north Pacific treaty. Will the Canadian negotiators meet with their advisory committee before they resume negotiations with Japan and the United States?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, while I am not in a position to give a definite reply to this question, I can advise the hon. member that there will be a meeting in Vancouver in November and the advisory committee will be consulted on that occasion.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CONSIDERATION OF LEGISLATION RESPECTING NEW AGRICULTURE MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of agricultural conditions in eastern Canada, could the Prime Minister tell the house when he intends to submit his resolution concerning the appointment of a minister of agriculture for eastern Canada?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have had this question addressed to me several times, and I know the interest of my hon. friend and other hon. members in this matter. We will proceed with it as soon as it is possible. There are two or three pieces of legislation which certainly have priority over this matter, for obvious reasons, including the income tax resolutions. When they are completed I hope we will be able to go ahead with this legislation.

[Mr. Cashin.]

LEGISLATION TO ESTABLISH INDIAN CLAIMS COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration when he expects to introduce a resolution or bill concerning the Indian claims commission, which he indicated earlier this year would be introduced before the end of the year.

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I can only repeat what I said earlier and what my hon. friend has just referred to, Mr. Speaker, that the bill will definitely be presented before the end of this year. This the government has undertaken to do, and it will be done. I cannot say whether it will be at the end of November or early December. There are still quite a few representations to receive from hon. members and from interested parties, but the hon. member may be sure that the promise which was made will be kept.

Mr. Howard: May I ask a supplementary question which is based on a statement I believe the minister made, namely that representations were still to be received from interested parties, including members. If my understanding is correct, and the government feels that it has to receive representations, did the government solicit any representations, or how does the minister determine that he has to receive them?

Mr. Favreau: I believe that the statements made in this house concerning the ultimate date of the presentation of the bill and other announcements made to Indian representatives constitute a sufficient appeal for representations. No formal appeal has been made, I admit, but I believe those who are sincerely interested, like my hon. friend, will eventually formulate the representations they want to make.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REQUEST FOR FRENCH INSIGNIA ON UNIFORMS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice.

Is it the minister's intention to have sewn on the sleeves of the members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, a French translation of the words "Royal Canadian Mounted Police"?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this as notice and I shall give an answer as soon as possible.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This question, in my opinion, is easy to answer and if both languages are official in this country the answer should be in the affirmative.

TRADE

REQUEST FOR TREATIES IN BOTH LANGUAGES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but, in his absence, I will put it to the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska.

Would the Minister of Trade and Commerce, or his parliamentary secretary, inform the house if, from now on, our trade agreement with foreign countries will be prepared first in the two official languages of Canada, and then in the language of the interested country, because otherwise it is insulting to French speaking Canadians, as is the case with the Canada-Bulgaria agreement which, apparently was written in English and Bulgarian only, according to the minister's statement on October 10 last?

Mr. Jean-Luc Pepin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, may I assure the hon. member for Chicoutimi that I will personally look into this matter.

[Text]

UNITED NATIONS

SOUTH AFRICA—CANADIAN POSITION RESPECTING MULTIRACIAL SOCIETY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the action of Canada last week in voting for the resolution at the United Nations condemning apartheid in South Africa, an action with which we all agree, can the minister say whether Canada is now associating herself with Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Finland and Iceland in trying to find a basis for establishing a multiracial society with equal rights for all, in South Africa?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Canadian delegation at the United Nations is doing everything it can to bring about an improvement in the situation in South Africa in so far as apartheid is concerned. We have been in consultation with a number of delegations toward this end.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

OIL AND GAS LEASES—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON SALE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I should like to ask the minister of northern affairs if he has a statement to make to the house concerning the substantial sale of oil and gas leases held last Friday afternoon. Will he table the details of those sales?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Not today, Mr. Speaker, but I hope to make a statement tomorrow, a very encouraging statement indeed.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

WINNIPEG—TRANSFER OF OVERHAUL AND MAINTENANCE BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, can the Prime Minister tell the house what reply he made to Premier Roblin's telegram, reported in the press over the week end, asking for a public inquiry into matters relating to the proposed transfer of T.C.A. facilities from Winnipeg to Montreal?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I do not believe I received a telegram from Premier Roblin. I received a letter from him last Friday about this matter, and that letter is now under consideration. I hope to be in communication with Premier Roblin about it very shortly.

CONSTRUCTION IN CANADA OF NEW PLANES TO BE ACQUIRED

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport. Since France is to equip its Potez aircraft with turbo-prop engines manufactured by Pratt and Whitney, of Longueuil, will Canada be sporting enough in return to enter an agreement in order that Caravelle aircraft be manufactured in Montreal by Canadair for T.C.A.?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This is surely a question for the order paper.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

CARIBOU AIRCRAFT—INQUIRY AS TO RESTORATION OF CANCELLED U.S. ORDER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of National Defence. I wonder whether the minister could advise the house as to talks he had with his counterpart in the United States regarding the possibility of restoring the order for Caribou planes, which has been cancelled.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I had a brief discussion with the secretary on that subject, and this will be followed up by the visit of my colleague the Minister of Defence Production later this week.

SHIPPING

ATLANTIC AREA—REPORTED DISCONTINUANCE OF NAVIGATION CHAIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Some days ago I directed a question to the Minister of Transport with regard to the discontinuance of the Decca navigation chain on parts of the Atlantic coast. I wonder whether the hon. gentleman is now in a position to reply.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Yes, I am glad to be able to advise the hon. member that the original west Newfoundland chain was a temporary chain installed by a private company for a particular exercise and for demonstration of the system. A large Decca coverage system is now being provided by the government, and this chain has been relocated for marine purposes to provide optimum coverage in the Cabot strait and consists of stations at Port aux Basques, Grindstone island and Antigonish.

Construction is complete and the permanent facility is on test during the monitoring period, which will continue for approximately six to eight weeks and which is required to adjust and confirm that the patterns correspond to those calculated theoretically.

FINANCE

LUMBER—REPRESENTATIONS BY MARITIME BUREAU

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance and ask him what consideration and reply have been given to the representations made by Mr. C. H. Sproule, secretary, on behalf of the maritime lumber bureau in a communication to the minister recently.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I shall be glad to look into that and advise the hon. member.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I wish to address a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. Possibly I should make it a question of privilege. May I say that I was advised only a few days ago by the hon. gentleman's parliamentary secretary that the Minister of Finance had considered the representations and replied to Mr. Sproule in a letter dated September 26. In view of that information the answer I received today from the hon. gentleman was not very enlightening. How are we to get replies to these questions?

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid we have to accept the answer given by the Minister of Finance.

SUPPLY

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

FEED GRAIN FOR EASTERN CANADA AND B.C.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, it is my purpose today during this second supply motion of the present parliament to put in a word or two on behalf of 100,000 Canadian families who exist at what can only be described as a slum level. My intention is to describe what the situation is and then, in a positive, constructive way, to indicate the general direction in which we should move to help these people in their plight.

I therefore move, seconded by my hon. friend from Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent):

> That all the words after "that" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:
> This house regrets the failure of the government to take effective action in regard to eastern agriculture and in particular with respect to feed grain for eastern Canada and for British Columbia so as to provide:
> 1. Stability of Canadian supply and price.
> 2. Opportunity for expansion of eastern production of feed grain.

I think the question period today indicated to the country just where this government sits in relation to the importance of agriculture in the national scheme of things. Since this administration took office on April 22 it has given away a bit of our sovereignty in connection with the defence of our country; it has allowed our sovereignty to be attacked in fiscal policy as well as, more recently, in labour policy; and, in the last two weeks, even in agriculture. Yet when I asked the Prime Minister if he had been in touch with the President on Saturday and raised this important matter of the attacks made on us in respect of the agreement between ourselves and the United States with regard to wheat sales, he said in effect that he was occupied with more important things than the subject of agriculture.

This is not an isolated case. The hon. member for Lake St. John asked the right hon.

gentleman when he intended to bring in the bill concerning the two ministers of agriculture, and his answer was that this would be done when the house had got through other, more important business, or words to that effect. This attitude overlooks the fact that 100,000 farm families in Canada, mostly in eastern Ontario and Quebec and the maritimes, are living at levels which, if they existed in our big cities such as Vancouver, Winnipeg, Toronto or Montreal, would be considered as slums. If these slums existed in our big cities the entire resources of our nation, federal, provincial and municipal as well as private, would be brought to bear so as to eliminate or improve them.

We must face the fact here in Canada that this house, as presently constituted, and the people who report the news from this house do not really care about these 100,000 families. All one has to do is take a look at the press gallery at the present moment. All one has to do is take a look at the government side—

Mr. Pickersgill: Take a look at your own side.

Mr. Hamilton: If we do this we will realize that neither by legislation nor by administrative action is this government doing anything to tell the story of these people or improve their conditions.

My remarks today will be along the theme that any party which hopes to remain the government of this country or to become the government of this country must realize that there is more than just one group of people in the country. Five or six years ago our national strength was being weakened. Because the maritimes were falling behind the national level of living, because the prairies had fallen behind the national level of living, as a result the government changed in 1957.

Now we come to the situation in 1963, with the old government returned and having no apparent awareness that there are anomalies in the living conditions of the Canadian people. I intend to show, Mr. Speaker, that this knowledge is available to the government and they are not doing a thing about it.

First of all, this country cannot remain strong if some segments of the economy or some areas are weakened. As I said a moment ago, that was demonstrated in the 1957 and 1958 campaigns when whole sections of the country which were not traditionally Conservative changed and elected a Conservative government. The same situation is with us today. We made certain efforts to improve the situation, but those efforts are now being abandoned. This country cannot maintain and build up its present position if agriculture goes back to the conditions that existed before 1957.

On the subject of national unity there is a great deal of talk about our cultural and language relationships. This is all good and fine, but we cannot overlook economic relationships. I wish to say very bluntly that unless we realize the structural unity of Canada as a whole, both geographically and by occupation, there cannot be strength in our economy. For example, during the last four years we sold western grain in export markets, and this immediately took the pressure off the livestock and poultry industries. Prices rose to a point where eastern farmers could come in and take up the production that was abandoned by western farmers. As a result farm income in all sections of country has risen in the last three or four years, but not equally.

I intend to put on the record farm income figures to show just what the situation has been in Canada over the last 10 years. I begin with the year 1954 for three very good reasons. This was the end of the construction period in Europe and Asia after the war. This was the end of the Korean war. This was the beginning of competitive markets for agriculture all over the world. I am also going to use realized net income figures, and the reason is simple. Realized net income is what is left after the farmer has subtracted from his gross income his cost of production and depreciation on his buildings and machinery. The result is what is left the farmers' pocket, and that is called realized net income. I am not going to use net income figures because they are purely statistical figures of use only to bookkeepers and accountants and those who keep statistics. They are completely meaningless from the point of view of showing the situation of the farmer. At this time I should like to ask permission of the house to place on Hansard the realized net income figures per farm by regions from 1954 to 1962.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give permission?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent Drouin (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): Mr. Speaker, I object to the tabling of that document, thus getting back at the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) for what he did to me last year.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Is there objection in the house to the tabling of these figures?

Eastern Agricultural Policy Lacking

Mr. Pickersgill: I think, sir, that notwithstanding any precedents we would want to accord this courtesy to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Hamilton: These figures are taken from the dominion bureau of statistics, and when they are examined in Hansard it will be found that realized net farm income in Canada as a whole from 1954 to 1962 was as follows: 1954, $1,899; 1955, $1,852; 1956, $2,162; 1957, $2,161. In that period the average was slightly over $2,000 per year per farm. In 1958 the figure moved up a little to $2,620; in 1959 it was $2,465; in 1960, $2,618; in 1961, $2,799 and in 1962, $2,945. This year it is going ahead at the rate of about 6 per cent. That gives an average across the country of about $2,700 in the last five years, or an increase in the national average from $2,000 in the period 1954 to 1957 to $2,700 in the period 1958 to 1962.

But when you examine the figures for regions you get an altogether different story. Listen to these figures for the maritime region: 1954, $929; 1955, $884; 1956, $1,040; 1957, $1,027; 1958, $1,138; 1959, $1,134; 1960, $1,411. In 1961 the figure dropped to $1,107 and in 1962 it continued downward to $980.

This is my point. If there are any maritime members in the house at the moment I am sure they will agree this indicates that a definite regional policy should be evolved and put forward in the house to help the people in the maritimes meet the problem of declining income.

An hon. Member: Why didn't you?

Mr. Hamilton: I will come to that and deal with it very clearly. There are some members from Quebec in the house, and here are the figures for that province. From 1954 to 1957 the average was around $1,600 a year. In the period from 1958 to 1962 the figure moved up to around $1,800 and in one year went as high as $1,900, but the figure is not moving up at the same rate as the average for Canada.

Ontario is slightly below the average. The figure rose from $2,100 in 1954 to $2,570 in 1962, a gain of approximately $400 per year per farm during that 10 year period.

Years ago the farmers of the prairie region used to have realized net incomes of approximately $3,400 or $3,500. By 1955 that figure had declined to $1,831 per farm. This means that in 1955 realized net income per farm on the prairies was roughly half what it had been a few years before. This is one reason why there was a big change in political allegiance there. With another government in power subsequent to that time farm income on the prairies increased steadily until 1962, when the average was $3,900 per farm or almost double in a period of six or seven years.

In British Columbia the figure in 1954 was $2,033 per farm and by last year it had climbed to $3,400. This is a very nice increase, but in summary my point is this. If you look at the realized net income figures per farm across Canada you will see that the national average is going up. There is a steady growth in British Columbia, and the farmers of the prairie provinces have almost doubled their income in that period. Ontario has had a steady growth, though a little slower than it should be. Quebec has barely increased above a static level. There has been a very small increase per year. In the maritimes, however, the figure has been declining.

I give these figures as a starting point to show how in working out policies you have to look at the income by regions. The prairies were away down in 1955 and 1956 but have now risen to their highest level. So we have an up and down type of income picture. But you cannot take income figures as the sole criterion. What you have to do is examine the amount of investment, and on this score the eastern farmers are being treated unjustly from the point of view of income. Even on this score there is injustice being carried on so far as the income of eastern farmers is concerned.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I want to ask permission to insert a table in Hansard so that it may form part of my speech.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Value of Farm Capital Per Farm in Canada, by Region, 1954 to 1961

Mr. Hamilton: This table, Mr. Speaker, shows that with regard to the question of investment per farm, the prairies had a tremendous investment back in 1954. At that time it was over $20,000 per farm and increased steadily until 1961 when it had risen to $27,000 plus per farm. But, sir, take a look at the maritimes. In 1954 they had investment per farm of $6,720, and by 1961 it had more than doubled to $14,633. In plain terms this simply means that in spite of the tremendous efforts by maritime farmers to increase their investment in order to get increased production income, they have more than doubled their investment in eight years; yet their income, as an aggregate, has continued to decline. In Quebec the figure per farm in 1954 was $11,166, and it increased to $18,606 in 1961. The returns on that investment are not commensurate.

Now, this is my point. In Ontario investment per farm increased from 1954, when it was $18,023, to $28,579 in 1961, and I submit that the income figures I quoted earlier do not increase to the value of the investment that they have put into their farms. I have already given the figures for the prairies. Their investment was big at the start, but it is no longer the largest, because now investment per farm in Ontario is bigger.

In British Columbia investment per farm in 1954 was $17,150, and it has now jumped to $27,626. Here is the evidence that the farmers in the maritimes, Quebec, British Columbia and Ontario are all increasing their capital investment, but there has not been the same measure of increase in their income.

When I speak about Ontario I want to be very clear. I realize that the income advance in good farming counties in Ontario has been just as spectacular as with prairie farms, but in great areas of Ontario, along the Ottawa valley, the clay belt and the western peninsula, farm income is not moving up, and in these counties one can see today that half the farms are abandoned. One can drive right out from Ottawa and see that half the farms are abandoned in these historic counties; and this is even more true on the Quebec side.

Mr. Speaker, there is a third table I would like to give the house which deals with off-farm income, and one has to look at this to get the true picture. Once again I would ask the house to let me place this table in as part of my remarks.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

* Derived from aggregate estimates published in Farm Net Income, 1961. Agriculture division, d.b.s., Ottawa.

† Derived from aggregate estimates published in the 1958 farm survey report No. 1. Agriculture division, d.b.s., Ottawa, Nov. 1962.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Speaker, this table tries to estimate the amount of off-farm income on the basis of a report by the agricultural division of d.b.s., Ottawa, dated 1961, and on estimates published in the 1958 farm survey report of the d.b.s. agricultural division dated November, 1962. I am just going to read the figures rapidly, because the table will be more complete and give the breakdown.

In the maritimes in 1958 the farm family income per farm from sources other than farming—to which you should add the other figure I have quoted—was $1,461. If you recall the figures which I gave previously you will realize this means that the average for the maritimes is roughly $1,000 a year realized net income from farming, and you have to add to that this figure of $1,461. In other words more than half the income of the maritime farmers came from off-farm employment. One cannot live on $1,000 a year and therefore the whole family has to go out and do other work.

In Quebec the figure for off-farm income per family was $1,356 in 1958, and you have to add to that the figure which I quoted for Quebec for 1962 which was $1,880, to get the total income.

In Ontario the average farm family income from off-farm sources was $1,733, and if you add that to the Ontario figure which I gave earlier, you get the very substantial sum of $4,200 or $4,300.

The prairies, of course, do not have these opportunities and the average income per farm from off-farm sources was only $888. In British Columbia, however, this income was exceptional. Apparently they have very good opportunities and the average there was $2,155. The average for Canada as a whole was $1,302 per farm per year.

[Mr. Speaker.]

I put this table on the record, not to emphasize it but to show that if a government is going to draw policy out of these figures it has to know there is a great variation in income. If you put all these three tables together, region by region, it is very clear that the problem areas of Canada are eastern Ontario, Quebec, and the maritime provinces, and it is not right that these people should be doomed to continuing declining income because a government fails to realize that these people are Canadians and need equal treatment with farmers in other parts of Canada.

Mr. Roxburgh: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Hamilton: Yes.

Mr. Roxburgh: I think we all realize these figures. In fact we have known of those figures since 1958 to 1963, and I am just wondering what the hon. gentleman and his government did during that time to raise those figures, and if he has any ideas how to do it?

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Speaker, that very question illustrates my point in such vivid terms that it makes the rest of my speech almost meaningless. Here we have a member of parliament who has been elected by a constituency, who holds forth in his constituency as a man worthy of sitting in this house, and he does not even know what the previous government did over six years. He does not even know that for the first time in Canadian history the government of the day stood up and announced on August 30, 1958, a national agricultural policy for Canada. He does not even know what the points in that agricultural policy are.

Mr. Roxburgh: We know the results.

Mr. Hamilton: Yes, we know the results too. Across Canada, in the farm areas where they read the farm papers, the people showed the results in June, 1962 and April of 1963. They showed where they stood in every province.

I am going to list the points in the national farm policy announced by the then prime minister on August 30, 1958. First there was a policy of accelerated sales, and if any person has not heard about accelerated sales of farm products in the last few months he must be dead and buried. Then as No. 2 there was a flexible support policy to stabilize prices; No. 3, crop insurance to stabilize income; No. 4, a modern system of farm credit; No. 5, a multiple resources use policy; No. 6, an agricultural rehabilitation and development act, which is the ARDA program, and the 7th was a regional program for areas not benefiting completely from the national program.

It is my point here that when we introduced the acreage payments in 1958, that was a regional policy to help western Canada, because at that time farmers there had a very low level of income. In fact farm incomes were just about half what they were a few years before. The other provinces do not go up and down in income as drastically as we do in western Canada. That regional policy was put into effect where it was most needed, and it has shown results. I am suggesting that the income figures I have given show that there has to be a regional policy to help those areas of Canada which need help. I refer to eastern Ontario, Quebec and the maritimes, because the income figures of those areas show trouble.

This is the motion before the house, that we regret the government has not done anything about this problem. We say this house regrets the failure of the government to take effective action in regard to eastern agriculture. This is what the motion of condemnation covers.

What happened? In 1962, as the minister responsible for agriculture I made speeches in this house and all across the country in every province saying that western farm income was beginning to rise and that we had the green light ahead in our sales of grain for export. I said this would bring a rise in livestock prices all across Canada. Therefore I asked the support of western farmers in 1962; I asked them to support my concentrating my attention as minister on the problems of eastern agriculture.

An hon. Member: And you got it.

Mr. Hamilton: Most of those constituencies, 43 out of 48, gave us their support last April. I made the same speech throughout the counties of Ontario; and particularly in western Ontario, if you look at the results in the farm areas, you will see that we gained two seats from the Liberals and a larger percentage of votes.

An hon. Member: Politics.

Mr. Hamilton: Politics, yes, my friend; but the country must know what the farmers think. The only way we can know what they think is through the way they vote. What was my repayment? The Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) is not in his place now, but he stood up at a farm meeting in Prince Edward Island and said to those farmers of Prince Edward Island, "You do not want a western minister of agriculture, do you? This man they have now is from the west. He is no good for the east". At the time he was making that speech in Prince Edward Island Liberal candidates and supporters in the west were saying the minister was going up and down the country asking for a vote of confidence to put in a regional program to help those areas in the east which were falling down in agricultural income. This is national unity, Liberal style.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Winkler: Divide and rule.

Mr. Hamilton: Hon. members have asked, what did the previous Conservative government do? Look at those income figures. Income figures up across Canada as a whole, after they slid down in 1954; income figures in the west up almost double; income figures in Ontario up; up in Quebec. But as I pointed out when quoting these figures, they were down in the maritimes and in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, they were not satisfactory. Hon. members opposite may say, what did the previous government do about this regional difficulty. Let us accept the fact that the farmers realized the government in power from 1957 to 1962 was the first government that had shown a real interest in their problems and had made a concentrated, fundamental attack on their problems. They knew this was just a start, and they showed it when they had an opportunity of showing it in 1962 and 1963.

I have mentioned the national agricultural program which was part of the 1962 campaign. I made our party's position clear, that we asked for support from all parts of Canada to concentrate on a regional program to help eastern agriculture. It was we, the government, bringing this situation to the minds of the people. Listen to this. If we go back and look at the speech from the throne in September, 1962, what do we find in it?

Mr. Pigeon: An empty speech in 1963.

Eastern Agricultural Policy Lacking

Mr. Hamilton: This was 1962.

An hon. Member: That was your own.

Mr. Hamilton: In that speech from the throne we see these words:

> My ministers recognize that livestock is occupying a position of increasing importance in Canadian agriculture. They propose that a program be instituted to ensure the availability of storage facilities and continuity of supplies of feed grain to match the expanding requirements for livestock production, particularly in the areas of British Columbia and eastern Canada where supplies of feed grain are normally deficient.

That was the clearcut declaration of our intention in the speech from the throne in September, 1962. In October, 1962, to show that we realized what was the basic cause of the trouble, we held here in Ottawa the national conference on agricultural education to back up the multi-million dollar program we had in vocational training. We brought in representatives of all the provinces, their agricultural ministers and educational people, to see whether we could not in a co-operative fashion work out an educational program in these rural areas which would get at the basic weaknesses of these low income areas. As I say, this was done in October, 1962, and the hon. member opposite has asked, what did we do. He was much too busy going up and down this country preaching fraud, saying that the country was going downhill economically, when it was not; saying that the pegging of the dollar at 92½ cents would ruin the country and force prices up, when it would not; saying that we had lost the confidence of our friends the Americans. Boy, would he like to make that speech today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hamilton: I have to say it, Mr. Speaker; the election campaign of the Liberal party in 1962 and 1963 was based on fraud.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hamilton: That language is not understood back in the places where I speak occasionally. I tell them that the Liberal party campaign in 1962 and 1963 was based on a lie. They understand that. There was no decline of the economic level of this country: it was going up. The devaluation of the dollar to 92½ cents was the best thing that ever happened to industry and farming alike in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hamilton: And the worst thing that ever happened was the election of the Pearson team. They have made a mess of things, if any government ever made a mess of things. If they had not been so arrogant by saying, as they said in this house when they sat on this side of the chamber, "We have all the answers", the mess they have made of things would perhaps not be so obvious. But they said, "We have all the answers"—father, son and Liberal party.

An hon. Member: There is just a father over there; no son.

Mr. Hamilton: They do not like what I say, Mr. Speaker, because they know in their hearts that no government elected on fraud, no government elected on a lie, is going to stay long in office.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hamilton: They know that their great strongholds of Quebec and Saskatchewan are now slipping. In fact I think they have slipped already in Saskatchewan. Let me tell you what else they did. After that speech from the throne when we outlined our program, we introduced on the order paper of this house an eastern feed grain and assistance bill. They joined with their cohorts from the Social Credit and C.C.F. parties in voting our government out of office, a government that was going to do something for the eastern farmers. They made sure there was no opportunity for our government to do anything constructive from September to February. When they talk about a responsible opposition I would ask them to go back and examine what happened between September and February of last year. What a disgrace on the escutcheon of a once great party.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hamilton: I can tell from the reaction, Mr. Speaker, that my speech is striking home. What does this government do? They knew the facts about the situation in eastern Canada as well as we did; they knew the facts of what I call the very depressed areas. In 1963 we went out and campaigned to be given a chance to put this policy into effect. In 1957 and 1958 we campaigned on a national program for agriculture. We did put it into effect and it helped agriculture. The farmers were grateful, as their votes showed. But we could not be complacent with this program when three quarters of the farmers were doing all right and the other quarter were going downhill. That is why in 1963 we thought the policy about which I have been speaking should be implemented. What did the Liberal party do in 1963? They went into western Canada and told the western farmer, "Do not bother with this man's policy to help eastern Canada; go for $2 per bushel of wheat and $1 for the first 300 bushels for domestic wheat products." They held this out like a great big bribe. What have they done to date? They sit there silent because they know this is one of the tangible lies that was told.

Mr. Beer: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Hamilton: I am just getting in good form, Mr. Speaker, and I shall take questions at the end of my remarks.

This Liberal party went into eastern Canada in 1963 and said: We are giving you a policy in connection with western grain prices that will hurt you, but we are going to give you something that will be the answer to all your problems. We are going to give you two ministers of agriculture. We are even going to make it better, because we are going to take away some of his duties and give them to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Then, we will divide the duties of the Minister of Agriculture in half.

When I talk about very tough conditions down here, the minister sits in his seat and knows what I say is true. He knows that at my instigation, as minister of agriculture, in January of 1963 I asked each of the five eastern provinces, excluding Newfoundland, if they would pick areas in their provinces—they could pick any area they liked—and we would put trained people in there to conduct a very deep survey, a survey in depth as the experts call it. Ontario named five areas. Quebec named ten areas; Prince Edward Island, one area; Nova Scotia, three areas and New Brunswick, three areas. I do not intend to ask the minister to produce that report because a scandal like that is bad enough at any time, even in the secret archives of the department.

I know what that report says because I kept in close contact with the interim report. I know enough, from what has been made public by the department, to give to this House of Commons some of the figures that report contained. First of all, in order to get the background material, I am going to give you a report from the census of Canada, 1961. I am going to ask permission, Mr. Speaker, not to table this document at this time because I am going to use it in my speech. However, at the end of my speech I should like permission to have it printed in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member permission?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

*Source: Census of Canada.
† Excl. Yukon and Northwest Territories.

Mr. Hamilton: The report is the census of 1961, and this table is entitled "commercial farms classified by value of products sold, by provinces." It does not include the Yukon or the Northwest Territories. In Newfoundland 38 per cent of the farms have a gross income from the value of products sold of less than $2,500; in Prince Edward Island, 36 per cent; in Nova Scotia, 39 per cent; in New Brunswick, 20 per cent and in Quebec, 38 per cent. In so far as the rest of Canada is concerned, this income runs from 23 per cent to 27 per cent.

What does this mean? First of all, they do not consider a farm commercial until it earns $1,200. The report indicates that 25 per cent of the farmers across Canada earned less than $1,200 from their farms. This table only deals with those farms that earned above $1,200. Out of those above $1,200 in Quebec and the maritimes, 40 per cent of those so-called commercial farms earned incomes of less than $2,500, out of which the farmer had to pay depreciation, salaries and wages of those people working on the farms, taxes and all the other operating costs. As I say, 40 per cent of the so-called commercial farms in Quebec and the maritimes did not even earn $2,500.

If you consider the figures for those farms earning $10,000 or more, you find that Newfoundland—I do not think I should quote that figure because it is out of proportion to the others—had 20 per cent; 7 per cent in Prince Edward Island; 13 per cent in Nova Scotia; 12 per cent in New Brunswick; 6 per cent in Quebec. This tells you where the weakness is. In Ontario there was 21 per cent over $10,000; Manitoba, 10 per cent; Saskatchewan, 11 per cent; Alberta, 17 per cent and British Columbia, 25 per cent. You will see that, actually, in so far as big farmers are concerned, the prairie provinces have less than Ontario, British Columbia, Nova Scotia, Newfoundland or New Brunswick. When hon. members see these figures on Hansard, I ask them to think about them. They indicate that even when you take the top 75 per cent of farmers of Canada, in the eastern areas, Quebec and the maritimes, 43 per cent of them only earn $2,500 a year or less.

I am quoting now from tables published in a speech delivered at Banff school of fine arts to the Agricultural Institute of Canada convention from June 17 to 20, 1963, by the assistant deputy minister of agriculture. The next table relates to the age and education characteristics by income groups of selected farm families in eastern Canada. This table is contained in the report to which I referred a minute ago. I ask the Minister of Agriculture if he is aware of these figures. These figures show the level of education of the farm operator and his children in Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. They indicate possible policies that should be adopted.

I am still referring to this same farm survey, and the next table I should like to put on the record indicates the training in addition to school grades completed, by income groups. I should like to have permission again, Mr. Speaker, if I may to put this table on the record when I have completed my speech.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[1] Children who had concluded their schooling.

Eastern Agricultural Policy Lacking

Mr. Hamilton: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

I should like to come now to the conclusion to be drawn from this report. Figures are meaningless unless you put them into human relationship, and I am going to try to put these figures into human relationship. I refer to the table covering the 660 farms surveyed last January. Referring to the group receiving $2,500 or under for sales of farm products, we find that 43 per cent of the families in these five provinces had a total income per farm, which includes off-farm income from all members of the family, of $2,800 or less. If I may repeat, 43 per cent of the farmers in Quebec, the maritimes and eastern Ontario have an income of $2,800 including all the income from the school teacher, the husband driving the bus, the children cutting trees in the bush, maple syrup and everything else. When you think of the average number of children involved, this means, in effect, that 10, 12 or 13 Canadians are trying to live on a total income of $2,800 or less on each of these farms.

I maintain that there is a slum condition here. I maintain that the government has not tackled the problem or shown any sign of tackling the problem. Of the 43 per cent of farmers surveyed, whose main interest is farming, according to their own statements, and 53 per cent of their income comes from the farm and 33 per cent from off-farm sources, and 14 per cent from social payments. These are the people about whom I am talking. These conditions exist all across Canada but most important, so far as members are concerned, in eastern Ontario, the clay belt and in Quebec and the maritimes.

Now, I have laboured here in the hope that by putting these figures on the record I could get the house in a mood to consider possible courses of action. If you look at those people not on the commercial farms and try to visualize a farmer making $600 or $700 a year cash off the farm, he has anything from five to ten youngsters ranging in ages from five to six years up to 40 years of age. They are on the farm, and if they leave and go to the cities they will be unemployed. So they do not dare leave the farm, because when they are at home they at least eat. The common joke in certain parts of New Brunswick when I was down there was that "N.B." means "no breakfast" instead of "New Brunswick".

I have seen these farms and been on them. Mr. Speaker, you cannot help them by the ordinary price support legislation, by farm credit or crop insurance, or by selling things abroad, because they have very little to sell. Their fundamental problem is twofold. First of all, they lack an educational base. By "education" I do not mean the formal education of learning to read and write and to add and subtract; I am talking simply about a knowledge of agriculture. Many farmers all across Canada in this category have no knowledge, for example, of what a few dollars worth of fertilizer will do with an acre of land. If you want some figures, in one of these provinces where you now have five to six acres to handle one animal for grazing you can handle over one animal per acre by using fertilizer. Or, to put it another way, $15 worth of fertilizer on an acre of land in a worn-out pasture in eastern Canada will produce $90 to $100 worth more beef. This is the type of legislation about which I am talking. They have never heard of these fertilizers and they certainly do not know of any program by either the federal or provincial governments designed to help them. I can give other examples of the most abysmal ignorance of these farmers concerning the assistance available to them now.

This is not a matter, Mr. Speaker, of being either Conservative or Liberal.

Mr. Beer: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Hamilton: Well, I was hoping to finish this one part. It is not a question of being Conservative or Liberal at all. This is a question of these facts being available to the government. They were available to us and we started to move on them. They are now available to this government, but it has done nothing tangible about it. This question of education is the number one difficulty. You can talk to the premiers of Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Newfoundland or Ontario and they will be understanding about these things. But this is a problem which has to be faced by all Canadians, because there are over 100,000 farm families in Canada living under conditions which are a national disgrace.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, education is the first matter. The second is sociological. If the minister looks at these reports he will find, apart from lack of education and lack of training after they finish school, that these people have one thing in common, whether they live in Ontario, Quebec or the maritimes. They fear banks. They fear government credit. They fear credit, period. There is a sociological problem here which has to be met, and we have to bring some sociological attention to these problems to find out the techniques required. We can get many of these farmers to realize that if the government have done certain things for them it is not a sin to use those things which the government have done for them. These things have to be done to implement educational and sociological programs, and we cannot wait five years.

This condition has been gradually accumulating year after year. I think I made it known probably in the fall of 1961. I tried all through the summer of 1962 to get programs worked out. I finally got a program worked out which I called the eastern feed grain and assistance bill, but although it was introduced in the house we never had time to proceed with it. I am not going to say anything more about it, but I should like to ask what this government has done. This government is going to put in two ministers of agriculture. I do not intend to say anything about that, but I do intend to read to the house what was put out as a press statement on August 22, 1963, by the present government, entitled "Feed grain policy". It says:

Mr. Hays stated that the government will request authority of parliament for a broadened feed grain policy to replace the present policy of freight assistance on western feed grains.

This is the third week we have been back in the house, Mr. Speaker, and there is no sign of anything like that appearing on the order paper.

Second:

The new policy will provide for the payment of accrued storage charges on western feed grain in licensed eastern elevators during the period October 15 to April 15.

Today is October 14, and so far nothing has appeared. Their 60 days of decision so frightened the government that they are paralyzed with fear. They now have one more day in which to move, but there is nothing on the order paper.

Third:

—the Canadian wheat board has decided to institute at once a provisional pricing system for oats and barley moved from the lakehead to eastern elevators.

Without going into the details of what a provisional pricing policy is, I pointed out to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) a week ago last Friday that the provisional pricing policy was not working, and for two good reasons. One was that with this tremendous export demand there is no incentive to move that grain eastwards because the rates for moving it eastwards are better for export purposes than those rates applying to movements of grain for Canadian consumption. Second, the storage rates are better if you store grain for export rather than for domestic use. In spite of that I have not heard of any meeting yet with the board of grain commissioners to discuss this vital fact, and all this information is available. This is the type of thing which was before me last spring.

Now, what about this eastern market? According to this press release, projections of future requirements indicate that 120 million bushels will be required by 1970, and 150 million by 1975. The present average use is about 85 million bushels of western feed grains. We have the largest market in the world for western feed grain in British Columbia and eastern Canada. This figure of 85 million bushels is a rough figure. In 1970, which is only six years away, it will go up to 120 million, and in 1975, which is only about 12 years away, it will go up to 150 million. And those figures are conservative figures, Mr. Speaker. Here we have a possible market of 150 million bushels. What other country in the world takes as much in an average year? And this is a steady market. The action of the government in announcing their intention on August 22 of doing something but doing nothing is reason for all members of all parties in the opposition to stand together and vote no confidence in this government.

Just to show, Mr. Speaker, the practical results of not putting this policy into effect, a week ago Friday I read a wire to the house received from the head of the maritime co-op, Mr. W. D. Dernier. I should like to read the first sentence again.

Following protest sent government on behalf domestic feeders "vigorously protest discrimination by Canadian wheat board not allowing domestic market to purchase any feeding grades wheat except immediate use. Now price advanced five and one eighth cents since Monday representing along with increase in water freight rates hundreds of thousands of dollars extra cost to domestic feeders. Captive domestic market treated unfairly in relation to export sales. If CWB uncertain over available grades for feed some provision for purchase at price levels prevailing early September should have been made.

That wire is a cry for help from the maritimes, the most sorely hit area in Canada. If you look at the costs of eastern agriculture you will find that 25 per cent of all the money spent by eastern farmers is spent on the purchase of feed grain. What we must do is to reduce these costs and increase the farmer's realized net income.

What have this government done about that? They issued a statement saying that they were going to do three things. Two of these things have not been done, as far as we have heard in this house or in the public press. This government stands petrified before the prospect of doing anything. This cry for help from the maritimes can be heard from every feeding area in Quebec. Where do the members of the Social Credit party stand on this issue? Do they intend to stand up and help keep this government in power—a government which allows the prices of feed grain to rise, though they know the Conservative government, when in power, had a policy to deal with this situation? The present government says it will pay storage charges at the elevators if the brokers will take it there. But no one is taking it down, and the prices are rising. The Chinese can go into the offices of the Canadian wheat board in Winnipeg and buy grain for six months for a single price. They can have a stabilized price. The Russians bought over 200 million bushels of wheat and wheat flour at a fixed price for ten and a half months. The Japanese bought wheat for eight months at a fixed price. Even the British bought wheat at a fixed price.

But who is helping the eastern feeders to get grain at a fixed price? Certain hon. members will have the chance to show their constituents tomorrow whether they want these prices to go up and down, or whether they want a stabilized price, such as we were prepared to introduce and in respect of which we had a measure on the order paper last February.

I said also, in the course of the campaign in western Canada, that eastern farmers needed something comparable to the wheat board to look after their interests. Who is looking after the interests of the eastern feeders? Certainly, it is not the brokers in Montreal. Certainly, it is not this government. But the hon. members most affected by this problem must decide for themselves. I turn, for example, to the hon. member for Lake St. John (Mr. Lessard). He comes from a promising agricultural area which could achieve a tremendous increased income if a co-ordinated program for livestock and poultry rearing were introduced there. But there are certain things which must be available as a prerequisite, and among them is a supply of feed grain at a stable price, at a cost which would put the area on terms of competitive equality with the other feeding areas. We had pledged ourselves to achieve this result. I ask hon. members this: is the statement of intention which has been made on the part of this government likely to help the eastern provinces in developing along the lines I have indicated? I suggest it will do the reverse. The policy announced by the present government has done nothing to meet the situation. We suggested that the government should step in and set up an organization to look after the interests of the eastern farmers, in short to do the same for the eastern farmers as the Canadian wheat board does for the farmers of the west. We intended to use the services of a government board in co-operation with private enterprise so as to produce a system which would result in a stable price for grain, a price which would not vary whether one lived in Bruce county, Lake St. John or Sydney. This was our policy. It is still our policy. While hon. gentlemen opposite have been talking, the price has been going up. It has gone up five cents already, and it will go up a lot more. Wait until the ice comes, and hon. members will see what happens to the price.

I have tried to set before this house something of the background of the great need among many of the farmers of eastern Canada—not all these farmers, but the 25 per cent who are in a very degraded position, the 25 per cent whose income from the farm is less than $1,200 or whose income from all sources is less than $2,800. Let us remember that in Quebec and the maritime provinces 43 per cent of the farmers live under these conditions. When we were in power we were grappling with this problem but we were thrown out of office by the big city vote. Now I ask these representatives of the big city voters to consider these people of whom I have been speaking as Canadians—to get off dead centre, to get the ship under way and do something for them.

I wish to conclude by saying that the series of statements I have made about eastern feed grain applies to many other segments of agriculture in eastern Canada. The dairy industry is a subject in itself. The dairy industry is a basic branch of agriculture. This is not a platitude. It is the background of integrated agriculture in Canada. That industry is not in serious trouble as yet, but it is heading that way. Not only does the solution require co-operation between the federal government and the provincial governments, particularly those of Quebec, Ontario and the maritimes, but it requires international co-operation as well. One of my colleagues will be speaking later on the dairy industry. I should like to leave with the minister the thought that the difficulties of that industry might be solved by getting Ontario and Quebec to agree with the federal government on a joint program, after an intensive study of the situation in Europe and the United States, two areas where there have been long-standing surpluses of dairy products. I think there is a type of co-operation which, if it were followed, might produce a solution to our difficulties.

I made a speech on this subject a few weeks ago in which I put forward a series of suggestions as to how this might be done by co-operation between Canada and the United States. I could, of course, go on to deal with this subject at great length but I think I have said enough to convince all

hon. members that a problem does exist and that, regardless of party, an attack must be made on the causes of the present situation. We cannot merely sit back and say that, on the average, farm income is rising. The figure for average income does not give a true picture of what is happening in these areas of eastern Canada. It is true that income is going up very well in some parts of Canada, but I think all hon. members should co-operate during this session of parliament to make sure that any policies which are brought forward are concentrated on the vital problems of eastern agriculture.

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): This is the first opportunity I have had since April 8 to express my views in connection with agriculture. I have listened with a great deal of interest to what the former minister had to say this afternoon. Believe me, I think he is just talking a lot of junk.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Hays: The hon. member has been right across Canada talking, yelling and hollering about the condition of agriculture. I have travelled in something like 32 different countries in the world and I feel that I know a little bit about agriculture. Until three years ago I owned and supervised a farm where 125 cows were milked, and I would challenge the former minister to come out to the central experimental farm with me because he cannot even milk a cow. Nor would he know how deep to put in a drill to sow an acre of wheat. Nor would he be able to plow a straight furrow.

It takes a little more, Mr. Speaker, than just looking at statistics. Statistics are for the losers. You can pump them in here, there and everywhere and I do not think they mean very much if things are pretty good. I believe that in the last six months we have done a great deal more for agriculture than has been done for many years, by the improvement of some of our old programs such as feed grain assistance, which was started in the year 1941, and many other programs that were Liberal policies to begin with, but have had their names changed.

I want to refer to an article in the London Free Press of September 28, 1963, a newspaper that has not always been on our side. It has this to say with regard to farm cash income:

> Farmers' cash income from farming operations reached a record $1,449,700,000 in the first half of 1963, the dominion bureau of statistics estimated today. It was 5.8 per cent above the figure for the first half of 1962.
> The estimate includes income for the cash sale of crops, Canadian wheat board participation payments on the previous year's grain crop, net cash advances on farm stored grains in western Canada and deficiency payments. No allowance was made for production costs incurred by farmers. Biggest factors in the increase were higher sales of wheat, coarse grains, potatoes, poultry products and cattle.
> Increases in cash income were reported in all provinces except Alberta where cash receipts were 1 per cent below the 1962 first half. The Ontario total was $476,431,000, compared with $448,920,000 last year.

With respect to feed grains, we have a feed grain policy which I think will be most acceptable to the eastern farmers. I might say that not long after I was made Minister of Agriculture I attended a meeting with all the ministers of agriculture in Canada. We discussed many of the problems that were plaguing various provinces and Canada as a whole, so far as agriculture was concerned. I agree with the previous speaker that possibly Quebec has a problem. I spent two and a half days with the minister of agriculture of Quebec. We sat down with his officials and our officials and discussed many of their problems. He was quite familiar with the feed grain policy which we proposed and which we hope we can get through parliament soon. He thought it was an excellent program and that it would do a great deal to help them.

I might say that this program will pay grain storage costs. It will also put grain in location. I am happy to report to the house now that we have more grain in stock for eastern feed people than there was last year. I might read some of the figures so that the house will be familiar with the situation. These are figures as to grain stocks in various positions as at the end of September this year and last year. At Fort William-Port Arthur we had last year 5.9 million bushels of oats in stock and we have 13.5 million this year. In barley we had 5.7 million last year and this year we have 10.5 million. In eastern terminal elevators oat stocks were 17 million bushels last year and this year they are 37 million. Barley stocks last year were 19 million and this year they are 38 million.

So you can see we are sitting on top of this problem. We knew we were going to have this problem when the wheat board was able to sell such a big amount of wheat to Russia. We realized we would have to keep these grains on spot. I might also advise that last year feed grains were 81 million bushels and this year they will be up 10 per cent, so this is another increase.

We are taking a good look at the problems of the eastern farmers. You will be interested to know that right across Canada the price of milk is higher than it was a year ago and that the price of cheese is higher than it was a year ago. I want to say a word about the price of cattle. Starting in June of this year our own consumption of beef was 16 per cent higher in the two top grades than it had ever been in Canada's history. This increase must have been caused by a very buoyant economy and full employment. Whenever we had 18,000 head of reds and blues in Canada in previous years we went into the export market. Since June 16 we have been consuming almost 22,000 head of reds and blues per week and we have not gone into the export market yet. In other words, all things being equal, our cattle are a higher price than in the United States and we are eating them.

The hon. member said something about acreage payments. I know there were three acreage payments made and they were $200 a farm. A fat lot of good that is to a farmer in western Canada who has a $50,000 investment. In looking at the matter I can see no sound reason for giving this amount of money, having regard to the amount of good it would do the farmer. The thing that the farmers of the west want is empty bins. We were happy and pleased when we were able to sell wheat to China and we were also happy and pleased when we were able to sell wheat to Russia.

I have farmed in eastern Canada and I have farmed in western Canada, and I know what the problems of the western farmer are. I have lain awake at night wondering how certain problems could be resolved. The most important problem facing farmers today is the high capital cost of machinery. This is the thing that needs to be examined more than any other facet of agriculture. In order to devise something, we are going to need everybody's help. I have discussed the matter with the farmers union and the federation of agriculture. I have discussed it with all the provincial ministers of agriculture. I have discussed it with seven ministers of agriculture in Europe, and said that it seemed to me this was one of the problems we must resolve.

If we are going to have the family farm we must have some sort of rental deal whereby the farmer will be able to rent the machinery he needs when he has good crops. This is the most important thing so far as the farmer is concerned. The cost of machinery is what is killing the family farm. The family farm is a most important way of life and it is most important to the consumers of Canada. You only have to go to Russia and see their system and the terrific problems they are having with production, and you will realize that the family farm is number one in importance.

The second most important thing that the farmers need in Canada today is proper facilities, to be able to finance their farms in order to convert them into proper economic units. The Farm Credit Corporation is very good, but it does not go far enough and the lid should be taken right off. How can you tie down the farmers in western Canada or eastern Canada to $20,000 or $27,000 today when they need $25,000 or $40,000? When I was in Holland they were selling land in the polders to the farmers because they think it will give them the pride of ownership and will help the production of grain and so on. The government of Holland is doing it on a 60 year basis at an interest rate of around 3 per cent so that the land can be handed from one generation to the next. This is one of our big problems.

Our third big problem is crop disasters and taking care of the farmers when they are hailed out, dried out, blown out or frozen out. This is most important, and these are three programs which we must examine carefully. To say that the dairy farmer is not in trouble is not correct. He is in more trouble than any other type of farmer and it will require all our efforts to solve his problem.

In 1958 the previous government raised the price of butter from 58 cents to 64 cents per pound, and now we are subsidizing it at both ends, 12 cents to the consumer and a great deal to the producer. We cannot live with that sort of thing and we must think of some different way to help the dairy farmer.

Our agricultural policy has been put together, spot by spot, ever since 1935. If things went wrong in the maritimes we dumped some money over there, and that was the pattern all across the country. We have to take a long look at our agricultural policy from the Pacific coast to the Atlantic coast.

The previous speaker quoted a lot of statistics but they do not give the true story. The dairy farmer needs help and we must give it to him. The sooner we do it the better, but how can we do it when we waste so much time in this house? The first thing we should do is take a long look at the operation of the dominion government and the way we operate in this house. I have never seen such a waste of time. It is just fantastic. These are the first things we ought to be examining.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, if I might depart from the topic which has been under discussion, I would like to remind the house that today is Thanksgiving day. We all have very much to be thankful for in this great nation, even though we cannot always be thankful for the words spoken in this house. It is well we pause to recognize the fact that we have much to be thankful for in Canada.

Eastern Agricultural Policy Lacking

When I picked up the Montreal Gazette this morning I was much impressed with the leading editorial, and I would like the privilege of putting part of it on the record. It says:

At this time of the year—the season of Thanksgiving—many another country of the world used to look towards Canada as a land blessed beyond other lands.

But it is not so that the world today looks upon Canada. People in other nations are wondering what has happened to Canada, what has gone wrong. It has become a country whose hesitations have fragmented its own parliament. It is a country, despite its prosperity, that keeps questioning its future. It is a country full of quarrels and harshness, frantic boasts and foolish words, a country that struggles and sighs, and wonders and doubts.

What, then, has gone wrong, that a country with so much to be thankful for has none the less taken away the picture of strength and good fortune that it once had abroad, and has replaced it by one of dissatisfaction and fret?

Further along in the editorial it says:

The trouble with Canada today is that it may be slipping into the morbid determination to make the worst of all things; and, having made the worst, to look with dark calm upon the most desperate eventualities. What may be fading away is the constructive spirit, the will to build, the desire to save.

These are good words for us to think of here today.

Never has there been reason for any man to suspend Thanksgiving because the times were hard. Rather, he thanked God, took his courage in both hands, and went forward in faith. True thanksgiving has always been the offering of thanks for the hard task that demanded the best that any man had to give. The pioneer, for all his toil and trouble, was a thankful man.

But this may be the heritage that is in danger: the tradition of giving thanks and taking courage. Because we falter in the courage, we fumble in the thanksgiving.

And so the extreme words beget the extreme response. Doubt finds its echo in an answering doubt. Hardness of heart turns other hearts as hard. The narrow view contracts the corresponding vision. The danger is that we may be making a community of doubt, pooling our hesitations, sharing our want of faith.

On such a day as this the giving of thanks searches out the heart of a country and tests its quality. For true thansksgiving can never be a passive thing. It is not the utterance of a static mind. It is the living worship of God by those who are moving forward, with faith and vision, to the way ahead, hoping for better things.

Out of fullness of vision, courtesy of words, and with the wise admission that even faults have two sides, they are resolved to build and not to destroy, to seek and not to give up the search, to hear and not to close the mind.

Nothing in such a country could be so foolish as despair. No people have had greater opportunities laid out before them. This is as near as any land in history to being the Promised Land, a land to which the old biblical words would apply:

"For the Lord thy God bringeth thee into a good land, a land of brooks of water, of fountains and depths that spring out of the valleys and hills; a land of wheat and barley... a land wherein thou shalt eat bread without scarceness, thou shalt not lack any thing in it; a land whose stones are iron, and out of whose hills thou mayest dig brass."

In such a land, and with such a people, the way must be found to share more fully the great endowment. And the way must be found to share also the inner enrichment that comes through understanding. We have every need and reason to be thankful, for an unhesitating thanksgiving would release creative faith, and make the future worthy of the present.

Mr. Churchill: What were you reading from?

Mr. Thompson: I identified it at the outset. It is today's leading editorial in the Montreal Gazette.

Mr. Speaker, having listened this afternoon to the speech of the former minister of agriculture, and thinking back over the years that have elapsed since 1957-58, we find a strange paradox in our midst. Here is a man condemning a government that has been in office approximately six months for conditions which relate to, as he said, 100,000 families in eastern Canada, in conditions that certainly are not those in which Canadians should be living today. This man is placing the blame upon the new government when actually he, and the government of which he was a member, should have done something about those conditions in the years they were in office.

I do not say that in support of the Liberal government, but the fact remains that the conditions he describes so aptly and ably exist because agricultural policies during the last four or five years were totally inadequate to meet the needs of the eastern farmers. To stand up as he has done today, and try to convince the house that it should throw out this government because of his own failure of action, is something that is just a little bit beyond understanding. Eastern farmers, particularly those in Quebec and the maritimes, would never have turned their backs on the previous government had they been satisfied that its policies were adequate to meet their needs.

So far as the farmers' conditions in eastern Canada are concerned, they are totally inadequate for this day and age, particularly considering the tremendous wealth we have in Canada. What we need, and we need it urgently, is a new agricultural policy which will put these people on their feet, which will provide the markets they need, which will put into their pockets the incomes they must have in a way that will not be mere handouts or subsidies and will allow this basic industry—and it is still the basic industry of Canada—to stand on its own feet. I am convinced that the conditions about which the former minister of agriculture, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton), talked so glibly, might I say, exist simply because the federal government has not done for the farmer that which should have been done. The hon. member spoke about a bill on the order paper and says it was put there to remedy some of these problems. But I would ask, why did he delay putting that bill on the order paper until his government had been defeated. That is what happened.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. gentleman would permit me to ask him a question. Has the hon. gentleman forgotten that he never even put it on the order paper; he only put it on the notice paper.

Mr. Thompson: The fact remains, Mr. Speaker, that it was not until after the hon. member's cabinet was falling apart and his government had been defeated in the house that he began to talk about policies which the government thought were needed and should be put into effect.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Thompson: Today he blames the present government for the fact that these conditions exist. To bring in an amendment such as that which was placed before us today is just a continuation of the kind of political manoeuvring of which this house has had too much. There is no other reason for its being introduced in this form. If the hon. member thinks that we in the Social Credit party and others are going to be fooled into giving our support to this amendment, he is badly mistaken.

We are involved today in a discussion which relates to the expenditure of money that is collected from the taxpayers of Canada. Since the last election we have already had two tax increases from a government which promised to keep taxes down and to balance the budget. The fact of the matter is that in the few months this government has been in power, the debt of Canada has gone onward and upward, as has the spending of the government.

Mr. Churchill: He is attacking you now.

Mr. Thompson: Looking at the supplementary estimates that were given to us the other day, we find that the previous estimates have increased by $74,166,785, making an expected expenditure on the part of the government of $6,864,808,864. No doubt additional supplementary estimates will be brought in before the fiscal year is ended. The hopes of a balanced budget fade very rapidly as the outstanding funded debt rose between March 31 and August 31. The last interim supply gave the government power to borrow more money. Rising interest rates since the war mean that low cost bonds now maturing are being refinanced at higher rates of interest. While we may talk about the favourable balance of trade which is existing at this time, the fact remains that our international indebtedness is something over $19 billion. We, the taxpayers of Canada, are paying more than $570 million in interest charges on our international debt alone. How long can this condition continue?

[Translation]

Mr. Remi Paul (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am listening very carefully to the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson), but I fail to see the relevancy of his remarks to the motion of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton).

It is the first time that agriculture is mentioned since the beginning of this session, and it seems to me that the hon. member should have enough material to stay within the limits of the debate, instead of talking about the new taxes imposed by the government.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to say a word on the point of order. This is the first supply motion that has been moved, and there is no desire on the part of the government to interpret the rules narrowly to prevent freedom of speech in the house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: Since when does the government interpret the rules?

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) for his interpretation of the rules, and I would say to the hon. gentleman who raised the point of order that I am speaking to the subject matter that is before us. I am coming to the fundamental reasons for this situation existing, which neither his government, nor the present government are facing up to. As long as we have these conditions we are not giving a fair deal to the farmers of eastern Canada, or western Canada either. I maintain that we cannot continue to bear the tremendous debt load that we have at the present time. Nearly 14 cents of every tax dollar goes toward paying the interest on our direct debt alone. I am not speaking about the international debt when I say this. This is why our monetary and fiscal policies are floundering today. They are floundering because they are not adjusted to the conditions we face in this world of abundance that is centred in Canada. Something must be done to change this situation in order that our agricultural policy or any governmental policies which relate to fiscal matters can deal with the situation and do the job which should be done.

This is not just the fault of any one party. The Liberals say they aim for a balanced budget. Generous spending makes this impossible. And they know quite well that Canadian citizens are not going to stomach an increasingly higher tax load; certainly they are not going to accept cuts in what we regard as welfare spending. The government which they succeeded was responsible for much of this situation. This is why it is difficult to understand how the former minister of agriculture could have the gall to speak as he spoke in the house this afternoon about these things. One of the biggest blunders ever committed by his government was the refunding of the national debt at a service cost which we are today paying over 60 per cent more than was the case previously.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I think the point taken a few moments ago was well taken, that the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) must limit his remarks to the text and the essence of the amendment now before the house.

Mr. Thompson: I appreciate your advice, Mr. Speaker, but as I said before I am coming to the very basic point in my remarks, which is the position in which we are today. I will bring these remarks to a close as quickly as possible. Members of the New Democratic party say in their declarations that there is nothing wrong in this debt—"we would like to have more of it"—even though the laws of compound interest dictate that the time will come when no nation can hope to have an effective monetary policy. This involves putting off until tomorrow somethink which cannot be solved today. That is why we must have in Canada, if the farmers of Canada are to have a fair deal, the opportunity to use the Bank of Canada to finance the sales of our surplus agricultural production. This would give our farmers the opportunity to sell their products at prices which they must obtain in order to remain in the business of farming, in order to give them the necessary purchasing power to raise their standard of living and correct the conditions which we agree should not exist.

I was in New Zealand a few weeks ago, and I was most impressed to find that in New Zealand they are using the reserve bank of New Zealand, which corresponds to the Bank of Canada, to finance the sale of their surplus dairy products at a cost of 1 per cent. This is the very thing about which we have been talking from this side of the house, and which I think is the key to the solution of the marketing problems of our farmers in Canada. Instead of borrowing money at tremendous interest rates which impose a further burden on the farmer himself we should be using our own credit, our own resources in the Bank of Canada, as is done in New Zealand, to sell our surplus dairy products.

What would happen if we were to do the same thing in Canada? The farmers of eastern Canada, the farmers of the maritimes, would find their basic problems removed. They could go ahead and set up their marketing boards, which we believe are essential, and they could do so with the assurance that they would be able to sell their surplus production. It is for this reason I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that what must be done in connection with this agricultural problem is to introduce some basic fiscal policy which realistically relates to the needs of the day. This would help us get our surplus production out to the people of the world, particularly to our friends who are waiting for it and who need it. We can talk about 100,000 families in Canada living on standards lower than any Canadian family should, yet perhaps three quarters of the world population lives on standards much lower than that.

What we should be able to say to our farmers in Canada, in the east or the west, is this: Produce as much as you can because, as a government, we are going to give you fiscal and financial policies that will permit the sale of every bit of our surplus production. Then Canada would be fulfilling the role that Canada can play, that of helping to defeat the greatest enemy we have in the world, hunger. Hunger should not exist in the world with today's potential for abundance, when we can produce enough for all the people of the world to have a basic standard of living as it relates to food, yes, and shelter and clothing as well.

This is the challenge that is before us. This is the responsibility that rests on the government. I agree that six months is not sufficient time in which to introduce all these changes. However, unless the government gives assurance it will introduce these changes, that it will face these responsibilities, how can the government hope to hold the confidence of the people of Canada? These are the responsibilities you have before you.

In so far as setting up the two price system is concerned, which will permit us to sell our surplus agricultural production, it is of vital importance to understand that inseparable from it are the financial and fiscal policies that today restrict us and that today place limitations upon us, and place so many of our farmers in the position in which they are. The two price system will guarantee the producer at home a fair price for what he can produce and, at the same time, let us sell our surplus production to a world that is starving. Here is the basic flaw in our present system. Here is the thing that must be corrected.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle has spoken about the needs of the eastern farmer. Yes, it is a national disgrace that these farmers are handicapped as they are. I say we are not going to correct their problem, nor are we going to improve the over-all condition of agriculture and trade as it relates to agriculture, unless we face up to the fact that our present financial policies do not permit us to sell. If we adopt proper financial policy we can have the standard of living that all our people should have, not just those in the farming communities.

I am discouraged when I see before us in the house another attempt at political manoeuvring. When the issues at stake are as basic as they are, and when they are as vital as they are to so many people in our country, what we all ought to be doing at this time is pooling our best ideas in order to formulate these policies which this country needs and which the farmers of Canada must have. Instead of doing what we are doing today in the house, we should be sitting together in the agriculture committee working these problems out for the general good of the country.

These are the responsibilities in a minority situation such as that in which we find ourselves. We maintain that this is the responsibility that falls upon all of us. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle thinks he is placing the smaller opposition parties in this house in a very difficult position by moving the amendment he has moved. He has tried to lay the blame for his own mistakes on someone else, and he thinks he has placed us in a very difficult position.

In view of this fact, Mr. Speaker, although it was not our intention to move an amendment to the amendment, I find that it is necessary to do so. I move, therefore:

That the amendment be amended by inserting, following the word "government" at the conclusion of line 1 thereof, the following words, namely:

"in continuing the completely inadequate policies of the immediately previous government", making the amendment, as amended, read as follows: "This house regrets the failure of the government, in continuing the completely inadequate policies of the immediately previous government, to take effective action in regard to eastern agriculture, and in particular with respect to feed grain for eastern Canada and for British Columbia, so as to provide:

1. Stability of Canadian supply and prices.
2. Opportunity for expansion of eastern production of feed grain."

[Mr. Thompson.]

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, may I raise a point of order relating to the amendment that has been moved? I should like to bring to the hon. member's attention the fact that he should read his amendment carefully, because I am convinced that the grammatical construction he has used conveys the opposite meaning to the one conveyed in his speech. If hon. members read it they will find he is condemning the government for failure to continue the policy of the former government.

Mr. Thompson: No, I think it reads all right. I respect the hon. member for Port Arthur's knowledge of grammar, since he is a school teacher, but I am one, as well.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to speak to the point of order raised by the hon. member, if he will permit me. I can only assume that they do not teach grammar as well as they used to do.

Mr. Fisher: Where?

Mr. Pickersgill: In Port Arthur.

Mr. Thompson: I think we will leave the amendment as it is because the government has failed, in that it has not been introducing the new policies that are required and has continued to follow the old, inadequate ones of the previous government.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that we spoke in this house last year many times about, and raised many questions regarding, the plight of the eastern farmer. We pleaded with the government of the day to do something about providing storage facilities in the east so that during the winter season, when the lakes were frozen, the eastern farmers would not have to pay higher prices for their grain than they had to pay when lake shipping brought it in at a cheaper rate. This emphasizes the fact that the whole policy which has underlined our present agricultural approach is not what it should be. It is inadequate and a change must be made. This change cannot be made until we face up to the fiscal problems involved in giving the farmers of Canada a two-price system which will guarantee them a price for the produce they raise and, second, gives them the opportunity to sell in world markets at competitive prices. This is the two-price system. This is the parity approach which must be taken by the Minister of Agriculture if the government is to meet the real problems which we have in agriculture today.

Mr. Herridge: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question? How does he relate his present speech and criticism to his publicly expressed opposition to the selling of grain to the Soviet union?

Mr. Thompson: I am very grateful to the hon. gentleman from Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) for giving me this opportunity to answer that question. My stand in regard to this is no different from what it has been over the last two years. It is simply that we ought to be relating our trade policies to our foreign affairs policies and defence policies so that we are co-ordinating towards a mutual objective. If we are at the same time bringing in fiscal policies which will make this possible, we would be selling our agricultural surplus to our friends.

Mr. Winch: And who are your friends?

Mr. Thompson: We would not, Mr. Speaker, be permitting ourselves to build temporary markets on the misfortunes of other countries in the world, which of necessity do not give to our Canadian farmers the security of markets which they should have.

A gentleman asks: "Who are your friends?". That is not very difficult to answer in today's world, which is so clearly divided as it is. One of the greatest markets we have in the world today is within the commonwealth itself. If the commonwealth can be developed along economic lines its future would be far greater than we ever imagined in this world today. I maintain that what we should do in our world policies is to unite us as friends together, so that we use our surplus agricultural produce to the greatest possible effect for the maintenance of world peace and the stability of our Canadian economy.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, arising from what the hon. member has said, I asked him whether he would be selling to his friends and he did not answer. Will he now tell us to whom he would sell? Whom does he call his friends?

Mr. Thompson: The hungry people of India, the hungry people of Pakistan, Japan, the millions of hungry people in Latin and Central America who are right on our doorstep. I could go on and name a good many more nations who come within that category, but because our financial policies will not permit us to sell to them they go hungry.

Mr. Pigeon: I should like to address a question to the hon. member. Is the hon. member ready to say "Oui" to Mr. Caouette and his friends?

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. member who has just taken his seat a question in connection with his reference to the leadership needed in this country. Does he think the Social Credit party could give this leadership, when the present leader of the party cannot get along with the other 24 members his party once had?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I submit that that question is not perhaps germane to the matter before the house.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, we have waited for some time for the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) to make a speech in this house, and I find it unfortunate that he should make a speech in reply to an amendment moved on this occasion to grant supply. I find it unfortunate because of the fact that we had expected the present minister to outline new policies giving new hope to farmers in all parts of Canada, rather than give the tirade he did. The Minister of Agriculture said during his statement that he would like to challenge someone to milk cows, and I hereby challenge him. I think arrangements could be made at the experimental farm, and anybody who fills a 12-quart pail selected by officials at the farm in the shortest time would be winner. I would be happy to accommodate the minister, even though I have not done any agricultural activity for a long time. I would also be quite happy to help plow some of the fields, if that could be considered too. This may have been an idle challenge, Mr. Speaker, and if it was then I am unhappy about it. If it is not an idle challenge it may produce some interest in agriculture in Ottawa, and allow people to see the experimental farm. If it brought about that result I think it would have accomplished something for some members of parliament.

It is unfortunate that the amendment moved today has been worded in the way it has, for the simple reason that it has produced recriminations, as well as a great deal of harsh language in a political sense, between the two parties. We have heard talk about things the official opposition would have done had they been in office, and because they were not they were not done. The Canadian public, and particularly the agricultural segment of it, a segment which in my opinion has one of the brightest futures of any section of our development, has been waiting for many years for politicians to quit playing around with agriculture and to start doing something for the agriculturists. I am quite happy to admit that the previous government did a number of things for agriculture. Some of them worked, some did not. Some of them were advantageous to the farmer and some were detrimental. I think this government has already done some things for agriculture which have been advantageous, and they may do some more. They will also do some things not in the interest of the Canadian farmer.

Eastern Agricultural Policy Lacking

We have heard a great deal of talk in recent days about sales which have been made. I think the time for politicians to quit playing around with sales of agricultural products arrived a long time ago. The time is long overdue that we cease regarding agricultural sales abroad as plums for one political party or another. Over the years we have developed through the wheat board an agency which has done an excellent job selling our agricultural produce and which has worked within the political confines of the government of the day. It has done an admirable job. The fact that we have sold this wheat is not to the credit of either the Liberal party or the Conservative party. It is to the credit of the wheat board whose organization has been developed over many years. We should all be very satisfied that such a situation exists and that these sales have been made, because otherwise Canadians in many walks of life would have faced an extremely hard winter this year. But we were fortunate in having a large crop and in finding a market for that crop through the Canadian wheat board, with the result that many thousands of dollars which would not otherwise have been available to the industrial workers and the professional people of Canada will flow into the resources of this nation, the result of the efforts of our farmers who produced this wealth at the source.

I believe that agriculture has a bright future. I think it has a bright future despite governments, rather than because of them. We have a terrific potential. Over the years we have been able to increase the production of any agricultural commodity at relatively little cost except for the land and equipment required. How many other nations are able to increase their capacity to produce by 25 per cent in a given agricultural commodity each 15 or 20 years? Yet we find this happening, and I think this does give us a great future.

As to the present agricultural situation it is, in my opinion, a grim one. Each year the average age of our farmers increases by one year. There are few young people entering the industry. This is a position we had better face. We should be making some provision for the future in terms of the people who will be needed to make possible the development of our resources in the agricultural field. As all hon. members know, it costs a great deal of money to enter agriculture today. Even in the east a great deal of capital is required to secure a farm which will provide a decent standard of living, in addition to sufficient income for the repayment of a mortgage. I think an investment in the neighbourhood of $40,000 or $50,000 would probably be required. This might not amount to much in the eyes of farmers in western Canada who talk in terms of 5,000 acres and the equipment necessary to manage large tracts of land, but if I am right in the estimate I have made, and if it costs a young farmer $45,000 to acquire a farm which would provide him with a decent standard of living, I think he would find it a heck of a lot better to put that $45,000 into some other industry.

In these circumstances it is up to us to stop playing petty politics and get down to helping agriculturists of this country to establish a strong industry, an industry which people will be happy to enter. This has not been the situation under either of the former governments. It seems to me we must establish a more effective way of making farm loans. It is all very well for the government to say that the present arrangement is a success. I think it is working far better than did the old farm credit board. The terms are better, and the training of the personnel has been improved. But we all know of many applications which have been turned down because, in order to make his venture financially possible, the applicant would have to supplement his income by wages earned off the farm. This moonlighting has caused great difficulties, not only in the field of farm credit but also in the labour sphere, difficulties which are obviously detrimental to the development of a healthy agricultural economy.

This was mentioned by the mover of the amendment. He said that in many areas it was impossible to get work done on the farms. This very situation affects the young people with whom we should be concerning ourselves. If a worker in a town wants to buy a hundred acres on the edge of a town for the sake of becoming a gentleman farmer in a small way, there is no need to design the whole of our agriculture policy around him. Our main purpose should be to design a policy to assist those who wish to enter upon agricultural production on a full time basis. We should make it possible for all such people to farm without having to seek employment outside.

One of the main reasons for the high cost of farm production today is the cost of farm machinery. I sat on the agriculture committee a few years ago when we considered this whole question. I think we conducted one of the most exhaustive studies which has been made of this subject. The former minister of agriculture cannot take any credit for the operations of the agriculture committee under his jurisdiction, because of his failure to implement any of the reasonable demands which were made by that committee for a reduction of the cost of farm machinery. I should like to mention one or two of the recommendations which we made. One of them had to do with standardization, so that a John Deere tractor could be backed into a Massey Harris implement and tow an International harvester. We wanted the nuts and bolts and other attachments made standard so that this would be possible. We mentioned such things as the removal of cigarette lighters from tractors; such things as having the agricultural implements themselves made more practical and more basic; we referred to the need for having the machines thoroughly tested before they were allowed to reach the agricultural scene. All the members of the committee were united, I think, in the belief that something should be done on behalf of the farmers. But what happened? The cabinet pays no attention to any recommendation which comes from a committee of this house, and in this respect there was no difference between the recommendations which were made by the committee on agriculture or by any other committee, whether set up under the former government or under the present administration. We are doing as much good in the agriculture committee today, despite the fact the committee has not been called, as we were when we sat under the Tories. We are ruled in this country by the cabinet and the representations of backbenchers, particularly in a majority government, do not carry any weight.

The cost of farm machinery is probably one of the major costs of farming in western Canada, and even in eastern Canada the cost of buying machinery to meet the need for automation represents a large part of a farmer's expenditure. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) may not know it, but if a farmer were setting up a dairy farm in eastern Ontario today, milking cows would be a very small part of his job. Fixing the milking machine would be a much more important chore. He would no longer be cleaning the stables with a fork. He would clean them with a very simple but very expensive piece of machinery which would hose them, and still retain the valuable by-product. Every piece of equipment is very expensive, but in this small field of barn cleaners we have not been able to effect an economy.

There are others. We should not go around the country asking the farmers to produce more if we are not willing to sell what is produced. If anybody is to be given credit, I think the former minister of agriculture must be given some credit for at least making a good fight in the export market. It seems to me that we have been able to develop export markets, and I think he deserves some credit in this field because it was his job to make the general public aware of the fact that we need to sell.

Eastern Agricultural Policy Lacking

I used to be shocked by the attitude of a former minister of agriculture who had something to do with the sale of some of our commodities and who used to say: We have the best products and everybody knows it, so if they want to buy them let them come and buy them. In my opinion this is no way to sell our products, because it has been proven that you have to go out and sell them.

We can produce almost any agricultural product in abundance in Canada. The farmer, if he is given a year or two, can increase by 40 per cent his production of anything he is now producing, whether it be milk or any other commodity.

What are we going to do with these products? We have only one dairy product that we can sell without doing any work. We could sell more Canadian cheddar cheese on the export market tomorrow if it were produced, but the agricultural experts of this country will not ask the farmers to produce unpasteurized Canadian cheddar cheese that could be sold in the United Kingdom market. There is a shortage of that product every year. But what do the agricultural experts say? Produce more pasteurized cheddar cheese, a product that cannot be sold to most of our customers.

We could search out markets for most of our commodities. I think it is interesting to note that when the farmers themselves have had the courage to do this they have been able to assist greatly in the marketing of their products. In my area two or three farmers in two communities have set up community sales barns. This is a field that is very familiar to the minister, and maybe he can give some assistance in expanding it. Auction sales are conducted in these community sales barns, and in my area which is 350 to 400 miles from Toronto I find that the price we get is probably not more than two cents below the Toronto stockyard price.

The minister has been talking about feed grains. He ought to think about this, because our cattle are usually not fattened on grain: They are fattened in the pasture. Oh, yes, in the last few weeks we feed them, but we have many sources of feed available for cattle. We can use green fodder, we can use silage, we can use corn. There are many things that can fatten these cattle. If what is suggested is accomplished, then I suggest that the former minister of agriculture had better take a look around eastern Canada because he may find that the advantage the western producer has of having a product for feeding his cattle readily will no longer be an advantage, and there may not be so many people return from western Canada because the situation may change almost overnight.

The same thing has also been accomplished in a small way by the hog producers of Ontario. They have co-operated to sell their products, and have been able to bring about some stability not by asking for government help, not by asking for their share of subsidization, but rather they have been able to accomplish in sales what the government with a subsidy failed to do over a long time.

If anyone will look at what subsidization has cost Canada he will find it is not a small thing. In the annual report for 1962-63 we see that it has amounted to $461 million. This is a sizeable sum of money and a lot of it has gone into butter production. I listened very attentively the other day to the statement the minister made with regard to the consumer subsidy placed on butter in order to sell it. We have tried to give it away. We have tried to store it. We have tried to convert it into oil and we have tried to pay consumers to buy it.

We spent $42 million in the period from April 30, 1962 to March 31, 1963 in this field. What did it do? I am told we are now eating more butter than we ever did before, because it is being used in the soft ice cream field and that a very large percentage of consumer supported butter has gone into hard ice cream. The ice cream in my area is considered about the best in Canada and I know that most of it is produced with the addition of butter under this program.

I suppose it does not matter what you do with the butter. I had a request from a businessman who wanted to buy butter oil for which I do not think there is any reasonable use. He wanted to buy it at seven or eight cents a quart so that he could help the government, pointing out that he would use it in his company to make bath oil. His comment was: "After all, Cleopatra used it, so we see no reason why we cannot buy this stuff at seven or eight cents a quart to make bath oil which the consumer will use, if it is properly perfumed." People talk about what detergents are doing to our sewage systems. I wonder what butter by the gallon draining out of bathtubs would do to the septic tank systems of municipalities throughout the nation?

We have tried everything except selling these products. If the government would take as much interest in selling them as they take credit for every increase that normally comes about by reason of the expansion of population in Canada and the additional consumption arising from increased wealth and a greater gross national product, I think they would be doing something worth while. The people of Canada are looking to parliament for a long term solution of our problems. The only solution put forward to date, and it will have to stand until something better is suggested, is the ARDA program. I see it is almost six o'clock and I just want to mention that if the government think they are going to be able to do the same thing with ARDA that they did with P.F.R.A. in western Canada, and make it into a political patronage machine, they have got another think coming. I would rather see the ARDA program scuttled in eastern Canada than to see it develop into a monster like P.F.R.A. was in western Canada, in terms of the patronage that has gone with it. I think this is a program that could work but it is not going to work if applied in any political way.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, before the supper adjournment I had mentioned the ARDA program. It is the only long term agricultural program introduced in recent years that would appear to many people, and I am one of them, to present a long term solution for the agricultural problems of the nation. I do not want to see this program turned into a patronage machine like so many others have been, including P.F.R.A. and P.F.A.A., both of which have been used by governments in power to spread political propaganda and patronage. ARDA should certainly be operated at a higher level than that.

When it was first outlined ARDA, according to the resources for tomorrow committee, had three main objectives: First, to develop alternative uses for land classified as marginal or of low productivity; second, to develop income and employment opportunities for rural agricultural areas; third, to develop and conserve the water and soil resources of Canada. I do not think any one would disagree with any of these objectives.

The first thing we should do is provide the most effective use for the available land we have, and certainly we do not need to travel far outside of Ottawa to see the abuses to which our land has been subjected. Some 40 or 50 years ago huge timber stands were to be found in the Ottawa valley, but now there are only very limited amounts of cyprus cedars, where at one time the area was richly productive in white pine. This land will never be really productive again. In most cases the top soil covering the rocks is too thin to be of value, but where we run into difficulty is in deciding what to do with this land.

Some people say that the land should be turned over to ARDA for development and let the government reforest it, or let somebody manage and operate it in some other way. Others say they should get advantage of it now. They say, "Let us sell our broken down, worn out land and get a good price from the government for it. If I have voted right and know the right people maybe my farm will be the one someone will buy." This, of course, is the political factor involved in any long term program, but I suggest it should not be the guiding factor.

This may not be true of other provinces, but in Ontario many people have been looking on the ARDA program as a new milk cow from which they can get milk in a very easy stream from the federal government. This is not what I contemplate ARDA to be, and it is not what was contemplated by the resources for tomorrow committee. Here is what that committee said of ARDA in regard to provincial co-operation:

> All of the provinces have agreed in principle to co-operative federal-provincial action under ARDA. It would appear that three things are necessary if it is to function for the greatest benefit:
> 1. That programs be established with adequate consideration for all uses of all renewable resources.
> 2. That planning have the benefit of a national survey of the land and its productive capacities under the guidance of members of various professions (the soil scientist, the economist, the plant and animal scientists, the forester, the engineer). This will require a high degree of co-operation between governments and between several departments of any one government.
> 3. That local and municipal organizations take the maximum possible action initiative; that they participate fully in planning programs and putting them into effect.

I suggest one of the things that should have happened under ARDA is that a national survey should have been taken to establish all the land of a marginal nature, and to discover what renewable resources could be produced from it. Such a survey might have taken a year or two, but it would have provided the blueprint for the program. Such a survey would involve a lot of work and energy, and maybe the Minister of Agriculture has not got the capacity to organize it; but if we continue to look for day to day projects that will bring votes we will never realize the agricultural potential of the nation. To do that a survey such as this is necessary.

There are a great number of projects under consideration right now that do not fit into the program of a national survey. I imagine that sometime in the next five or six years a government will come out with a scheme for such a survey in order to put ARDA on the proper track, where it should have been in the beginning, so that we may know what developments should take place, and in what areas, for the greatest benefit of the nation.

It should not matter whether someone is paid for his farm on the basis of reforestation, or whether the farm should be used for grazing, and so on. A survey would establish what is the best land use. I think this is the prime consideration in the success of the ARDA program. What will become of ARDA remains to be seen. There are many Canadians in the rural economy of this country who are not particularly interested in ARDA, because today the average age of the farmer is over 60 and he is not looking for us to plant trees on his farm. He does not really care what happens to the farm across the road. He wants a decent standard of living today in the profession to which he has devoted his life.

I think this is where governments are involved. The farmer can produce whatever the government suggests. I think this has been admirably shown in what has happened to wheat. Probably this is a very fortunate accident, rather than intention. It really is not the government's fault that there was a crop failure in Russia, or that there has been a famine in China for the past three years. These are facts of nature and these sales really cannot be put to the credit of the Department of Agriculture and its officials. We are very fortunate that these events have taken place, as far as our sales of wheat are concerned. I think it behooves us, even in the field of wheat, to design our program so we will know how much wheat to produce and how much our long term markets will require. I think we also have to establish in Canada a large reserve of wheat against the day when there is a need for this reserve in order to keep alive the people of the world. If I were familiar with the Bible I could probably quote the passage that talks about the planning of storage in the early days in Egypt, when they had the wheat stored in their granaries and were able to give it to those nations surrounding them in order to preserve the very life of those nations. We may find ourselves in that position. It may be necessary to survey the needs of the world in relation to the amount that Canada can produce. It will not really do us much good to change much of the agricultural land that we now have that is in reasonable production, until we know what our potential is and what the needs of the world are. Every year there is going to be a greater market for our agricultural produce. I do not know whether the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) can say the same of his department. I am not sure that we are going to need to produce more cars in Canada, or more textiles, than we produce today. But I am sure that because of the geographical location of Canada we will need a greater production of agricultural products. The only thing our governments have to do is find out how we are going to dispose of this production.

I think the government is to be commended, both this government and the previous one, in what they have been able to do for wheat. We will not go into the question of why they were able to do it. Let us give them full credit for that. But I wonder what we are going to do with some of the other things we are producing. This government and the previous one have shamefully neglected the milk production industry of this nation. They either know nothing about it or they have not done anything about what they do know. The milk producers came to Ottawa several years ago and asked for the right to blend their price. They came to Ottawa later and asked for the right to put a five cent levy on fluid milk producers and for help in subsidizing the sale of cheese. What did the government do? Absolutely nothing. They waited until there was no need for the subsidy and the problem had already reached the position where the industry itself could not agree. Now there is a need for planning in regard to all milk, because farmers producing milk should be given the opportunity of disposing of that commodity at a fair and reasonable price. This has been highly accelerated in parts of Canada, particularly in Ontario, where there are scientific developments in the production of fluid milk and we are producing commodities such as multimilk, and so on, which are cutting into the sales of fluid milk to a great extent. It is true that this is a secondary milk product. It could be put in the class of manufactured milk, but when the end product is reconstituted into whole fluid milk it takes an expert to detect the difference between the two products.

Therefore I suggest that in this field if in no other the government will have to give assistance to the industry. The federal Department of Agriculture should be giving some advice and leadership as to how to solve this particular problem. Why ask the federal government to do it? Mr. Speaker, who is better qualified to assess the needs of the nation than the federal government. What do we find? The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) challenges somebody who may never have been on a dairy farm to milk cows. I ask the house, is that a very high level of debate? I certainly think that Canada is in need of leadership in this field. We have a great need in this area. We will support the Minister of Agriculture in any reasonable agricultural policy, no matter which political party brings it forward; but I think we have the obligation as a federal government to convene immediately the agriculture committee and sit down and decide some of the answers to these problems affecting agriculture. I suggest that this amendment will be a very small thing in eastern Canada, considering that we have many other problems.

I also suggest that the committee sit down and solve some of these problems, and after hours and hours of working on a particular problem the government has an obligation to the committee to at least listen to its recommendations. If the government says it does not want to do anything about them, let them at least have the guts to have the Minister of Agriculture inform parliament that they are going to disagree and are not giving any consideration to the report of the committee. I have been here for four parliaments and have heard my colleagues continually saying, "What a wonderful thing, these committees. Let us concentrate more on committees". I agree with them, but in view of my experience of the past one might as well save one's time going to a committee meeting, because when the report is made, what happens? It is laid on the table, and I defy anybody to tell me what is done with it, except to store it in the archives for our successors to read and be amused by some of our solutions.

Therefore I appeal to the Minister of Agriculture to give some honest consideration to the problems of eastern Canada. We have always helped those in western Canada to solve their problems, and we in eastern Canada are in dire need of assistance today in the agricultural field. The farmers are not going ahead; they are going backwards. One does not see new farmers today; we take all the old farmers to the cemetery. Farms in my part of the country are left neglected, because no one can go into farming as a young person today and make a success of it. I do not think it is a very creditable commentary on the situation in Canada when we have this need, we have the ability and yet do nothing to bring these two things together and try to effect a solution. It may be, as one member of parliament said, "We have the gravel; we have the cement; we have the water. Why haven't we got the sidewalks?" I think in this case it is not necessary that we have these problems. We spend a great deal of money on other things. We have the know-how, but we need advice and direction, and this we are not getting from our Department of Agriculture, to solve or attempt to solve many of these problems that have been with us for some time and are today crying out for a solution.

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

You have recognized a representative of each political party and I am wondering whether it would not be proper to extend this courtesy in the house, in order to enable the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) to express the views of our group.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member realizes that every political party, every group will have the opportunity during these two days to participate in the debate.

The Chair recognizes the Minister without Porfolio (Mr. Tremblay), and, when the time arises, the hon. member for Shefford will be recognized in due time.

Mr. Gregoire: So far, each of the political parties has had one representative recognized. It seems to me that it would be only right to recognize the representative of the Ralliement des creditistes as well, instead of a second member of the party in power—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not have the impression that the Chair has actually recognized a representative of each party. The Chair recognized four members, and is about to recognize a fifth one, the Minister without Portfolio.

Hon. Rene Tremblay (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with sustained interest to the motion brought in by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton). In my opinion, it was quite a performance on his part to succeed in describing so vividly in so short a time the situation of agriculture in eastern Canada.

Such words are not out of place in the mouth of the former Minister of Agriculture whose inaction caused agriculture to deteriorate in the space of a few short years in eastern Canada. Who could have been better chosen than him to stress in the house the lot of eastern farmers whose standard of living is undeniably lower than that of other farmers in Canada?

The first part of his remarks was a normal introduction to the second part of his speech where he tried to prove that the present government did not succeed to improve the conditions of farmers in a few months.

I will come back to that later on but I should like to point out now that the problem facing eastern agriculture is a very concrete one which must be acknowledged before any solution is sought.

Any political measure, either in the field of agriculture or in any other area of public life, must first be based on a precise and accurate appraisal of the situation. First, we all know what the situation of eastern Canadian farmers is in relation to modern progress. We realize that his standard of living places him in an impossible situation compared to the population as a whole. We see various craftsmen, professionals improving their lot, their financial status, but on the other hand, the farmer living on a small farm does not share in this progress. He is aware of this, he is unhappy about it and he has been crying for help for many years.

And it took a party like ours, a government like ours, to understand the grief of the small eastern farmer.

His grief is psychological. He needs to feel that the government is behind him, and that is exactly what the present government wanted to achieve in introducing here a measure to enable one of its members to occupy another agriculture portfolio. That need of the farmer to see his lot improved, to feel he is supported in a growing economy, is based on a certain fact and an important one, the standard of living of the eastern farmer in relation to that of farmers in the country as a whole.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle gave some figures. I will go over them and I think no one will be able to contradict such a clearcut situation.

Whereas in 1962, the farmers' net income in the whole of the maritimes, excluding Quebec, totalled $901, in Quebec, it amounted to $1,659 whereas in the western provinces, in Alberta for instance, a farmer earned $4,052 and in the prairies as a whole, excluding British Columbia, $4,011.

If those figures are compared with those in other groups, one finds that the eastern farmer, in the maritimes, Quebec and Ontario, finds himself in the most unbearable situation. It is because he feels the need to improve his living standard that he looks for solutions.

How could the government settle the problem of an inadequate standard of living for the farmer by comparison with other groups of the society? It can contribute to increase the price of his products and services or to reduce his production cost.

Unfortunately, it seems to me that we were too anxious in the past to solve the problem of insufficient farm income by granting repeated increases in the prices of products without making allowance for the consequences on the market of that steady increase in support prices.

More and more—and this is a policy the present government must apply—the farmer's production cost will have to be reduced. And that reduction shall come through improving the farmer's efficiency on his farm. In fact, it has been said for a long time that the farmer, on his small farm, does not have all the necessary technical knowledge to be efficient and place on the market a product which can be compared to those of the larger farm units.

That is why the federal government, in co-operation with the provinces, feels that it is essential to increase the technical knowledge made available to the farmers. In fact, in the whole eastern part of the country, the experimental farm system will soon be completely reorganized; these farms are precisely designed to make available to the farmer all the latest technical discoveries, the most improved products in order to increase his efficiency and therefore reduce his cost of production.

Besides, the farmer's efficiency will improve through a more rational use of farm machinery. In that respect, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) indicated a few moments ago the concern of the experts in finding methods allowing the small land owner to use in a more efficient and economical way the very costly farm machinery which he also needs, but for which he often cannot afford to pay the monthly instalments.

Production cost could also be cut down by the adoption of a new feed grain policy which would make it possible to breed cattle more economically in eastern Canada. I will have more to say about that later on.

An inadequate standard of living is not the only problem facing many eastern farmers.

A second problem is that of income instability. In fact, not only has the eastern farmer a lower income than other Canadians, but his income changes from year to year so that, at one time, he may get into debt for his farm or for his family and then, later on, he finds himself heavily indebted towards lending companies when he has no money to meet his obligations.

This instability has also a psychological effect on the farmer. Living in a world which requires more and more security and finds it in measures of stabilization enacted by the government, the farmer feels insecure owing to the large fluctuations in his income from one year to the other.

How can we help in reducing these fluctuations of income, this instability in the farmer's income? The experience that our fellow farmers in the west have known will have to be tried differently in many fields of production in eastern Canada. During many conferences on agricultural matters, the provinces have agreed to co-operate with the federal government in the establishment of joint organizations for the marketing in an orderly and stable way of various farm commodities produced on eastern Canada farms.

It would be of no avail for the federal and the provincial governments to pass the buck as far as responsibilities in farm products stabilization are concerned. The time when each could, in its own area, attempt to find a solution to the problem is a thing of the past. More and more, we must find methods of co-operation in the area of farm products stabilization. And the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) did set off that co-operation in a very effective way at the last conference held in Edmonton.

And that co-operation is proceeded with, specially in the east, in order to set up stabilization and price support organizations which will prevent too sharp variations which were so disastrous for our eastern producers in the past.

The third problem facing the eastern farmer is brought about because he feels so destitute in the face of the tremendous resources the economy enjoys in other sectors while he is still at a primitive farming stage and cannot keep pace with the progress all around him.

Would the solution in that field be the isolation of the eastern agriculture in a kind of ivory tower which could bring about some stability except for relations with the rest of the country and even with the rest of the world? I do not think so. Indeed, I think that in the past too much was done to isolate our eastern agriculture from the whole economy of the country and from all international markets.

The benefits of competition must extend to all areas of agriculture, and international markets as well as the whole domestic market must be made increasingly available to those small producers who often find themselves at a loss when faced with the big economic task they have to achieve.

Faced with those three problems, what does the present government have to offer? What achievements has it already got on the credit side and what lead may be expected from it to deal with agricultural problems in the eastern part of the country?

As for the initial step the government has decided to take, there is a resolution on the order paper and the house will soon be called upon to study a measure setting up, within the Department of Agriculture, a double direction.

I do not intend to dwell upon this problem as we shall have the opportunity, while studying the bill, to point out the beneficial consequences that such a double direction will bring about for the eastern producers in general.

The intention expressed here is not to divide but to unite, so as to get a better management of the country's agricultural business. For once, we want the eastern farmer to feel himself bound to all the other farmers, so that, with two men working together, we may see, for the first time in this country, the agricultural field as prosperous as other spheres of our economy.

With regard to the stabilization policy, more particularly in the dairy field, the house has already been informed, Mr. Speaker, of the significant legislation this government introduced when it came into office, in order to get away from the concept of the former administration, which had to grant perpetual increases for milk and butter, and was left with a considerable surplus on its hands. This government has got away from that concept and tried to find among the dairy produce markets those who would absorb considerable quantities.

We easily discovered—because it had been demonstrated in several years of inertia on the part of the former administration—that we had to turn away from butter and go into the considerable market for cheese.

Our stabilization policy, which has been in force since May 1, resulted in a considerable decrease in butter production and more particularly—as was intended—in the increase of cheese production by approximately 16 per cent, without having to face any surplus problem, because all that production has already been sold abroad.

Such a dairy policy precisely illustrates how to approach a solution of our farm problems which would duly consider the future of our national and international markets while getting away from old concepts of politics, which had been applied for a long time to our farmers.

In matters of education or technical training, what positive steps has this government taken up to now to help the eastern farmer improve his knowledge in agricultural matters?

Reorganization of the education on farming subjects has already been decided on, so that a centralization can be developed within each eastern province and so that such knowledge, contrary to what was done in the past, can be disseminated in all farming areas through the setting up of experimental farms which will continually get their material from those research centres. In turn, they will be in a position to supply the farmers with technical and other knowledge they need to raise the level of efficiency of that production.

I said that this government was more interested in the reduction of farm production costs for eastern farmers than in an artificial increase of the price of those products. It is in relation to such a policy that the present Minister of Agriculture announced a new feed grain policy some time ago.

Eastern Agricultural Policy Lacking

All those who have studied the problems of agriculture in the east know that one of the most expensive items for the farmer is the purchase of feed grain for cattle during the long winter months when the harsh weather makes it impossible to use the grazing grounds.

In order to prevent an artificial rise in price for such feed grain during the winter, we have set up some policies designed first to pay the cost of storing the feed during the winter in order not to penalize those who have to keep large stocks of feed and who, consequently, had a tendency to transfer those higher prices during the winter to the eastern farmers.

That policy whereby storage costs are paid was followed by another which has been announced and will be explained in detail within a few days; it is a new policy to help the transportation of feed grain to eastern Canada.

As we know, this policy was the work of a Liberal administration, of a Liberal government; but it had to be renewed in the light of experience and new problems which faced us. It is because of changes in the methods of transport that the new policy concerning payment of freight charges for grain will be carried out.

This policy will consist in paying the basic price, the price of transport by water, to which will be added, as the case may be, the extra transportation costs by train or by truck, for the basic ports as far as the various areas determined for that purpose.

The result will be: first, to standardize within an area the various prices of grain, and second, to allow fair competition between the various means of transport. We hope that these will help to reduce freight costs on the shipping of these grains to eastern Canada. Finally, a third feature of our grain policy is the establishment of deferred payments.

Contrary to the system which existed under the previous administration, those buying grain at the lakehead would only pay the price which will be in force at the time of delivery, so that the middlemen will not have to take unnecessary chances on account of price variation and, as in the past, to reduce the grain stocks available for eastern farmers.

We want to point out that those three measures, which have already been announced, are not just promises for the future. We believe that they will improve tremendously the price level situation and the variation in feed grain prices in the whole eastern part of our country, and will therefore decrease the cost of production for our eastern farmers.

Eastern Agricultural Policy Lacking

Now, many questions have been asked since the beginning of this session, and also a while ago about the ARDA program. It has been asked whether the present government intends to maintain that program which was introduced by the previous government, following numerous studies initiated in the Senate under the previous government, by a very intensive investigation of the use of land in eastern Canada.

We have always thought and we still think that technical measures must be set up for farmers who live in what is called submarginal conditions, that is farmers who perhaps do not have all the technical and economic means to succeed on their farms, either because the land is not fit for farming or because the markets are too far away, or because the environment is not adequate for a certain type of farming.

We must consider converting certain marginal farms to more profitable uses under ARDA. A program such as the one embodied in ARDA can allow us to set up, in particular areas, efficient programs which will benefit the people living there.

Many important studies concerning redevelopment and rehabilitation must be made before government legislation is enacted. That is why the Minister of Agriculture has urged every province in particular to co-operate with him in carrying out research in various parts of eastern and western Canada, in order precisely to discover within those regions in what manner submarginal lands could be put to better use. Those studies are proceeding satisfactorily and as they are completed, the federal government, in co-operation with the province, will be able to set up very effective programs for the reconversion of those lands so as to improve the standard of living in the areas concerned.

The purpose of ARDA and the Agricultural Stabilization Act would not be achieved if we failed to tackle the problem of credit. We realized very soon, as the Minister of Agriculture pointed out this afternoon, that in many cases the amounts made available to eastern farmers by the Farm Credit Corporation were insufficient to permit the proper development of many undertakings that bring in a high income in various areas. Therefore, officials of the Farm Credit Corporation have been asked to conduct a detailed survey, by region and by type of farming, on those basic needs, which the corporation would have been unable to meet in the past, so that we can adjust to those various needs.

The study is still going on and the Minister of Agriculture will soon be able to recommend changes most likely to help eastern farmers to renew their equipment, improve their farms and extend their markets for various agricultural products.

As was often pointed out, too much stress may have been put on milk production in eastern Canada. It was a mistake not to show more interest in cattle breeding in the past, considering the vast markets which were to be found in Toronto, Montreal and the other large centres in eastern Canada. It is because of our awareness of the problem that the Minister of Agriculture has set up within his department a special committee which is to formulate a policy concerning livestock breeding in the eastern part of the country and whose recommendations will be forwarded to the house in due time for the improvement of breeding conditions in eastern Canada.

In our part of the country, farmers are looking for more diversified production while a vast market is being supplied, at least in part, through livestock imports. We should, therefore, establish once and for all a policy to promote development in that important sector of agriculture.

All the steps I have mentioned would not have helped solve the problem of eastern agriculture if the Minister of Agriculture and his officials had failed to realize the importance of setting up and maintaining international markets for our various farm products—those of the west which are doing remarkably well, and those of the east. Demand requires contacts with the United States and various European countries interested in buying certain crops they lack while we have surpluses. It is still partly with such a policy in mind that the Minister of Agriculture has visited various European countries, in order precisely to look into the possibility of co-operating in this field and exporting also our different agricultural products on those markets.

Mr. Speaker, this brief sketch of the problems which existed when this government came to power and the action which we have already taken or which are under consideration for the near future, well indicate that this government has no greater concern than to help efficiently the eastern farmer to solve his problems in order that the stagnation which the hon. member for Qu'Appelle pointed out, when introducing his motion and looking back on his administration, may disappear as quickly as possible in eastern Canada.

Finally, I hope that eastern farmers who in the past have felt neglected and powerless in the face of modern economic phenomena, may at last feel for the first time that a Canadian government, their government, is considering their problems and is finding appropriate solutions. It will thus have contributed to rehabilitate the people who have been so deserving in the past throughout the country and who are only seeking redress. They are asking the state to consider their problems; this is exactly what the present government has done since it came into power and it is exactly what the Minister of Agriculture is doing. I hope that in the very near future, I will be in a position to help him to perform that task and to co-operate with him in the best interests of our eastern farmers.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, my first remarks will be to tell the house that this afternoon, we were very much surprised when we heard a speech from the Minister of Agriculture—and I do not mean the hon. member for Matapedia-Matane (Mr. Tremblay). I would like to refer to an interview the minister had some time ago with one of the most distinguished farm reporters, Mr. David Suderman of the Family Herald. The interview took place on July 4, 1963. I can relate to the house what that reporter had to say in that paper:

[Text]

In my first and, so far, only interview with Mr. Hays, who is rapidly becoming one of the more inaccessible ministers in the new cabinet, he declared that there were two topics he did not want to discuss, the appointment of two ministers and farm policy.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, that is why we were surprised when we heard the Minister of Agriculture make his first speech in this house on a farm matter.

I wish to pay tribute to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) for delivering such a clear and accurate analysis of the precarious situation of eastern farmers.

I had the honour to work in close co-operation with the previous minister of agriculture and I am in a position to assert that he put forward many policies to help farmers in our country. Unfortunately, we were unable to completely carry out the plan we had set out in order to give more help to the farming community and specially to the eastern farmers.

For instance, we brought in important amendments to the Farm Credit Act and let me state here that in a few years only, because of those new amendments to the Farm Credit Corporation, we put more capital at the disposal of Canadian farmers for the improvement of their farms than the farm loan board did during 22 years under that Liberal government about which the hon. member for Matapedia-Matane was so grandiloquent.

Mr. Vincent Drouin (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Pigeon: If the hon. member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes wishes to ask a question when I have completed my remarks, he will have the opportunity to do so, provided he gets permission from his party's whip.

The former minister of agriculture, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, has also to his credit ARDA, which has begun to be applied in co-operation with the provinces. It is the Magana Carta of agriculture, based on experiments made in European countries and also on His Holiness John XXIII's encyclical letter, Mater et Magistra.

In addition, the former minister of agriculture had put on the order paper an important bill concerning the transportation of western grain to eastern Canada, but as soon as a great number of members of the opposition realized that the bill was to help the farmers, the same as other bills, like the one amending the Farm Credit Act and ARDA, they defeated the government.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to pay tribute publicly to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle for presenting this bill, following many weeks of study, in order to provide an increased income for the eastern farmers of our country.

Mr. Speaker, as previously mentioned by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, 100,000 families receive at the present time an inadequate farm income and they appeal to this government to help them out of their financial difficulties. At the present time, there is at the national level an imbalance which puts confederation in jeopardy. When a group of citizens within a country are at a disadvantage, when their incomes are inadequate, the rest of the citizens are also affected and this contributes to widen the gap economically speaking and even to put national unity in jeopardy.

There is a national imbalance since 43 per cent of the eastern farmers live on marginal or submarginal land; moreover, labour, fertilizer and farm machinery now cost more. The problems are many.

The situation in the dairy industry is unstable. Tomorrow an expert in that field, the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent), will deal with that matter in detail.

Mr. Speaker, I do not share the views expressed by the hon. member for Matapedia-Matane. He spoke about a new policy regarding the dairy industry. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the eastern farmers were happier with the payment of 25 cents per hundredweight of milk to be processed than with the government's new policy.

Eastern Agricultural Policy Lacking

We should keep in mind that from 1959 to 1963, the policy launched by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle brought in nearly $50 million to eastern farmers, and when we asked the Minister of Agriculture No. 1 why the government had abolished that policy, he answered: "In order to save $6 million". That is just to show how much he was aware of the eastern farmer's problem.

The government should not forget that there are problems in the dairy and tobacco industries. I know that several hon. members from Ontario realize that there are several million pounds of cigarette tobacco yet unsold, and an over-production of cigarette tobacco in the province of Quebec. We would like to know what the Minister of Agriculture did when he went to Russia, and elsewhere and also whether he found a way to sell a few pounds of tobacco to pay for his journey, which was financed by Canadian taxpayers.

There is also a considerable decrease in apple sales.

We should, moreover, increase our subsidies to federal experimental farms in the east, and more particularly, in the province of Quebec.

I wonder whether the hon. member for Matapedia-Matane knows that all agronomists are leaving the experimental farm of L'Assomption. I would urge the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays), to better working conditions, if possible, so that agronomists and agricultural technicians remain in the federal experimental stations of eastern Canada to carry on their research work, as the farm revenue is so low there.

Mr. Speaker, I notice that the Postmaster General (Mr. Denis), who is not in his seat, is laughing. I am dealing with an important matter and the Postmaster General should be more serious and listen to what I am saying.

When I was parliamentary secretary to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, we wanted, by all possible means, to draw here, in Ottawa, in the federal Department of Agriculture, many French speaking agronomists and agricultural technicians, because, at the present time, there are very few bilingual experts at the Ottawa experimental farm, under the Department of Agriculture, so that French Canadian farmers whose farming income is very low cannot communicate easily with the federal authorities, and cannot be conversant with the federal acts which could help them to increase their income.

I suggest that the Minister of Agriculture should ask graduates of the agricultural school of Laval University to spend two or three days in Ottawa so as to show them how to secure a position in the Department of Agriculture for, if we sincerely want our eastern farmers to benefit, if we want them to have their share of the national revenue, it is essential to improve the channels of communication between the federal Department of Agriculture and eastern farmers.

I strongly urge the hon. member for Matapedia-Matane—I see that he has just left his seat, he is probably not very interested in that problem—I urge him to meet the minister of agriculture of the province of Quebec as soon as possible. A long time ago, I spoke about it myself to the Quebec minister of agriculture, in the hope of bringing about a program of crop insurance beneficial to Quebec farmers, particularly to those among them who specialize in a given type of crop; like our tobacco growers for instance.

Our farmers badly need an insurance of that kind; for them, it is practically a question of life and death. They cannot do without crop insurance. Federal legislation is a great help, as it covers 50 per cent of administration costs, and 20 per cent of the premiums paid.

Mr. Speaker, tobacco producers for cigarettes and cigars have invested considerable sums in their business, in order to see it prosper; however, they do not know whether they will be able to recover their capital. Insecurity is nothing new to them, for they have, only too often, been victimized by frost, rain, drought, and so forth.

I would ask the present Minister of Agriculture to hurry up and get in touch with provincial authorities in order to help the farmers of eastern Canada as soon as possible, because his future assistant or colleague does not seem interested in those problems.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Matapedia-Matane (Mr. Tremblay) made a speech which amounted to a statement of policy. Now, as you know, the hon. member is an economist and some economists remind me of certain psychiatrists. Under the latter's care, the patient often gets worse. And I would not care to see the situation of eastern farmers get worse under an economist like the hon. member for Matapedia-Matane.

As a matter of fact, that is what we are afraid of on this side of the house.

Mr. Speaker, since the hon. member for Matapedia-Matane knew his bill would be brought forward in the house soon and that he would probably be appointed minister of agriculture for eastern Canada, during the summer recess why did he choose to go to Malaysia instead of taking this opportunity to visit farmers of eastern Ontario, Quebec and the maritimes, and experimental farms in those provinces and to knock on the farmers' doors in order to find out all about their problems?

Malaysia is not the place to find out about those particular problems. And newspapermen have taken the minister to task for those very things I am telling him now. In fact, the hon. member for Matapedia-Matane was not being serious. He should have taken advantage of the recess to brush up on farm problems. If he had done so, I am convinced that he would not have made the statement of policy that we heard this evening, when he merely indicated some of the farm problems.

Mr. Speaker, we, on this side of the house, have been aware for a long time of the problems facing the eastern farmer. That is why the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) tackled them and visited the province of Quebec in order to become familiar with them. Following this visit, he had placed on the order paper, a motion providing for an increase in the farmers' income.

Unfortunately, we lost the election and we have not been able to implement that legislation.

Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of Agriculture smiles, we find it difficult not to smile ourselves.

However, for the information of the hon. member for Matapedia-Matane, may I give the results of the survey made by the caisses populaires and the welfare agencies of lower St. Lawrence valley.

The farm situation of the lower St. Lawrence valley, where the hon. member for Matapedia-Matane lives, is typical of that in Abitibi and even in Lake St. John district, except for the lake belt.

The brief divides the population into average farmers, small farmers, day labourers living on old farms, settlers and foresters; the first manage to live on $2,000, but what about the others?

And to show you an example of a family of the lower St. Lawrence valley, of Gaspe peninsula, here is an excerpt from the report:

Here is an example from a case considered by the agency:

Family: 2 adults, 9 children.

Animals: 1 cow, 1 heifer, 1 horse, 30 hens, 2 pigs.

Income (Annual):

Family allowances	$ 648
Unemployment insurance	336
Annual wages	900
Sale of fuel wood	30
Sale of pulp wood	360
Sale of animals	300
Other products	200
Premium	8
Total	$ 2,782

Expenses (monthly)

Food	$ 85
Term	92
Electricity and telephone	6
Clothing	34
Medical care	12
Taxes	7
Car expenses	8
School expenses	4
Miscellaneous	6
Farm expenditures	400
Annual Total	$3,448

In other words, Mr. Speaker, that farm is more than submarginal. It is but an example, but that situation somewhat reflects the farm situation in eastern Canada, and that is why eastern farmers would have liked to see the passage of the bill which was on the order paper when the hon. member for Qu'Appelle was minister of agriculture, for that measure included many advantages.

As a matter of fact, it would have helped the transportation of western grain to eastern Canada and increase the farmers' income.

Mr. Speaker, here are some principles and facts that should be known concerning a mutual assistance policy on feed grain transportation in the east.

1. There should be uniform and balanced prices throughout the east, so that no grain consumer will be at a disadvantage.

2. There should at all times be a sufficient and reliable supply of grain available to all, everywhere throughout the year.

3. There should be sufficient storage facilities available to satisfy the eastern consumer as well as the western producer.

4. It is a well known fact that water transportation is by far the least costly, but unfortunately seasonal, so there should be reasonable decentralization of storage facilities.

5. It is expected that by 1975, grain consumption will again increase by 50 per cent. Let us not forget that in 1960 it already amounted to 400 million bushels, 241 million being produced in the east while the rest came from the west. In general, 35 per cent of the feed grain is purchased by hog and other meat producers and two thirds are produced on the farm.

6. Price fluctuations in different places and at different times represent a great difficulty indeed for producers. An adjustment of these conditions would be an important basic reform.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, there will surely be opposition to these measures in some circles.

It is extremely important that a bill be introduced as soon as possible for the storing of grain and its movement from western to eastern Canada. That would enable the early transformation of a raw material, grain, into finished products on eastern farms.

Eastern Agricultural Policy Lacking

Mr. Speaker, I should like to repeat here what I said recently. According to the Washington bureau of statistics, the United States will have a population of 300 million by 1980 and possibly 350 million by the turn of the century, that is less than 40 years from now. The population of Canada will not be stationary either. Meat consumption goes up as the population increases. As I said earlier, it is always better for a country like Canada to export raw material as fully processed as possible.

Now, when Canada exports a ton of barley, for instance, our economy is richer by approximately $50; in other words, Canada increases its foreign reserves by $50.

On the other hand, if that ton of barley in the raw state, is transformed into pork or beef in the east and the meat is exported, the same ton of barley brings $125 or more and becomes an additional source of income for the eastern farmer, benefiting at the same time to the economy of Canada as a whole.

In addition, if this product is processed in our country, jobs will be provided for the workers at a time when unemployment is a serious problem, and at least $75 per ton will be added to the international monetary fund which is depleted at the present time.

Mr. Speaker, there is no need to deal any longer with the beneficial effects for agriculture in eastern Canada of the legislation introduced by the former minister of agriculture, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, if the house had given him the opportunity to carry it through.

In conclusion, I can think of no better instrument than a measure such as the one we introduced.

First, it would solve the problems of eastern farmers.

Second, it would provide the western producer with a firm market for his feed grain.

Third, that program would have contributed to strengthen the national economy by creating more jobs and permitting the export of a finished product instead of a raw material.

Fourth, that legislation would have contributed to provide for the future, which is the duty of any legislator aware of his responsibilities.

The policy of the present government, since it came into power, has been a failure, including the farm policy. The government has refused to assume its responsibilities.

I have here the 1962 platform of the Liberal party, which is certainly not very different from the 1963 version.

[Mr. Pigeon.]

Here is what we find:

Support of farm income
Improved price support system
Increased consumption of milk products

And a little further on, we read this:

A new Liberal government will initiate a national plan to promote better food habits, including the free distribution of milk in schools.

Mr. Speaker, during the summer recess, the two ministers of agriculture spent almost two months in Europe and Asia instead of approaching provincial authorities in order to arrive at an agreement which would not encroach on provincial autonomy, in connection with the consumption and distribution of milk in schools.

During an interview granted to a well-known newspaperman, the Minister of Agriculture No. 1 stated that he was interested in many things, but that he did not wish to discuss the appointment of two ministers of agriculture and the Canadian agricultural policy.

Mr. Speaker, the policy of the government is a failure and we urge the government to resign and call a general election, in order that, once and for all, the people may return to power a government which will ensure the prosperity of the country.

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the hon. member?

Mr. Deschatelets: Very well, go ahead.

Mr. Pigeon: With pleasure.

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Following the hon. member's statement concerning the legislation which the Conservative government had included in its platform last year and which he just mentioned, can the hon. member tell us why his government waited until it was defeated before introducing this bill last year?

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I feel that the hon. member is not reporting the facts accurately. The bill was put on the order paper of the house and, the next day, the government was defeated.

Moreover, if the hon. member was intelligent, he would have noticed that the bill appeared in the Votes and Proceedings before the government fell.

Mr. G. C. Lachance (Lafontaine): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm tell us how many trips he made while he was parliamentary secretary to the minister of agriculture?

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, as parliamentary secretary to the minister of agriculture, I represented the minister at the O.E.C.D. meeting in Paris, to discuss agricultural problems, for three days—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Does the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency wish to ask a question?

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm said a little earlier that economists reminded him of psychiatrists. Could he tell us where he finds the resemblance?

Mr. Paul: They are both sick.

Mr. Pigeon: The hon. member for Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere has just given the answer.

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member is rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Marcoux: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Even if I am not a psychiatrist, I feel that, in all fairness for those specialists of the medical profession, it is quite improper to say that they are sick people, and I ask the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere to withdraw his remarks.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency that there is no ground for a question of privilege here; I recognize the hon. member for Shefford.

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, we listened with attention to the future minister of agriculture for the east, who spoke after the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) who was also, at a certain time, aspirant to the office of minister of agriculture for the eastern provinces.

It is unfortunate that the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm did not, at the time his party was in office, put forward the fine principles that he outlined tonight. In fact, it occurs to me that, in 1958, the Conservatives were holding exactly 208 seats in the Ottawa parliament. They remained in office for six years and the then minister of agriculture, as well as the aspirant minister, who has just resumed his seat, were not able to carry out any of the famous principles advocated tonight by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

If the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm had achieved only a quarter of what he outlined tonight, surely he would still be in office. In fact, if he is no longer in office, it is because he never could translate his fine words into action at the time he had the power to do it; he never could accomplish anything.

We also listened to the remarks of the future minister of agriculture for eastern Canada and we heard him bewail, and rightly so, the fate of the Quebec farmers.

He stated that the Quebec farmers were in an untenable position. This is true. But he said a little later that the situation was merely psychological. Well, Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Liberal party can find enough psychologists to settle the problem of the eastern farmers, because up to now, when anyone spoke of agriculture in this house, unfortunately, it was always about wheat. In my opinion, Canadian agriculture has much more significance and embodies much more than the simple matter of wheat, though this, we agree, is very important.

For the eastern farmers, we have butter, cheese, milk, millfeed, and feed grain, which has been mentioned in the house for only about a year.

It must be well remembered that last year, in this house, the then hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Dumont) raised an outcry, and I wish to point it out—he was the first to draw the attention of the hon. members to the fact that in eastern Canada, we have not the privilege of being able to buy our feed grain at normal prices.

I have here before me a bill from a co-operative society of ours, that is the agricultural co-operative society of Granby, according to which they bought—it is an example, by the way—wheat for $3.50 per hundred pounds; the bill amounts to $70.10 for 1,700 pounds of different millfeeds. Well, Mr. Speaker, it means that our eastern farmers have to pay about $4.25 per hundred pounds for millfeeds.

The Liberals and the Conservatives have been in power since confederation and the agricultural problems we have to face today have never been and shall never be solved so long as we do not take the proper and required means to correct these problems.

The farmer, in the twentieth century, is someone who has invested much capital and who face altogether many risks. He has invested capital on cattle, that is a living investment which, tomorrow, may be stricken, perhaps killed by some diseases.

Moreover, the farmers have invested much capital in their crops, which crops are subject to frost, wind, in brief to bad weather, or nature's whims and fancies.

After having ventured so much capital on machinery, crops, cattle, rolling stock and on the land itself, the farmer never knows the price he may get for his own production.

Eastern Agricultural Policy Lacking

Presently, the eastern farmer in Canada is especially a slave to the trusts. He receives from them what they are willing to drop into his hat.

The farmers do an important job, they pursue a very hard profession, and they have proved it. They furnish a generous and good quality product in the country, but on the other hand, the more they produce, the more trouble they have to live. Why? Because they cannot solve a problem which is not their responsibility; they cannot solve the economic problem which confronts the farmers in our country.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Matapedia-Matane (Mr. Tremblay), who is said to be the future minister of agriculture in the eastern provinces, made a great statement of principles. He advocated cutting production costs for the eastern farmers. But he did not tell us which means he will use to reduce the prices. He did not say that the eastern farmers may buy wheat in their country at the same prices as the Russians have lately, that is about $1.50 the bushel, which is equivalent to about $2.50 the hundred pounds. Why do the Canadian farmers have to pay about $1 more than the Russians? Because they are presently the subjects and the slaves of the trusts, as I said a few minutes ago.

An election campaign was held last April during which a stable government was advocated. The Liberal party was returned to power. I believe that the people somewhat considered this slogan in returning the Liberal party to office.

Well, Mr. Speaker, a stable government would also mean a stable farm policy, stable prices, for the farmer who, at this time, sees not only the cost of his farm machinery and implements increase from day to day but also the price of meal and feed grain, while the produce he grows and puts on the market, does not increase, in proportion with what he has to buy.

I have here in my hand a copy of a farm paper, La Terre de Chez Nous, of October 2, 1963, which contains a statistical report by Mr. D. E. Grandpre under the title, "La clef des champs" or rather a synthesis of the taxes which farmers have to pay today, as well as the steady increase in taxation in the last few years.

The municipal real estate tax has increased by more than 200 per cent on Ontario farms in the last 13 or 14 years. The total was $13.9 million in 1946, whereas in 1959, the figure had reached $42.3 million. Yet, in the same period, the net farm revenue was far from having risen in the same proportion of 200 per cent, but only increased by 29 per cent.

Which means that between the increased revenue and the increased taxes, there is a difference of exactly 171 per cent.

Those are the figures quoted by the federation of agriculture for that province.

A survey has also been made in the county of Restigouche-Madawaska, in New Brunswick, on the farmers' plight in that district.

If we glance over to our neighbour in eastern Quebec, we find the same conditions. Some 116 farmers who recently took a part in a survey in the county of Madawaska, unanimously stated that taxation is one of our main problems, if not the most important in their area.

The study was conducted by the federal rural economics division. The main results have just been published in the Farm Economist which is put out by that branch.

I think the Minister of Agriculture knows that publication. He should get some information on surveys made in the county, in order to settle those problems.

In the county of Madawaska, like elsewhere, and perhaps more than in other areas, municipal taxes have risen rapidly during the last few years. Around 1960 they represented 10.4 per cent of cash expenses on the 116 farms covered by the survey.

The figures quoted by one of our farmers give a pretty good idea of the additional charges brought about between 1951 and 1960. In that ten year period, the land tax climbed from $1.75 to $6.06 for every hundred dollars of assessment. The farm of the man I am speaking about, was assessed at $6,900; he paid $480 in land taxes in 1960, that's to say $342 more in yearly tax, according to the given assessment.

Well, in his speech, the future minister of agriculture for our eastern regions said not a word about the taxes, which are steadily going up everywhere. They affect the farmers who still managed to retain some of their assets, but who might soon lose them, because today from every quarter people seem to pile taxes upon taxes on their neighbours' property.

We heard this afternoon the speech of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton), the former minister of agriculture. I have here a copy of Le Droit dated November 12, 1962. At that period, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle headed the Department of Agriculture. He was quoted as saying:

The Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Hamilton, stated recently that the milk surplus is getting so large in Canada that strong and positive action will have to be taken to ease the situation.

The minister said that no government wants to force producers to reduce their production, but it is up to the federal government to warn the producers when they should reduce production voluntary or face a cut in support prices.

In other words, the minister of agriculture asked the Canadian farmers to reduce production if they want to enjoy the benefit of support prices for the products concerned. And

I have other recent press clippings concerning the administration of the new Minister of Agriculture. In Le Droit of July 31, 1963, one could read the following headline:

Skimmed milk surplus thrown away.

And again in Le Droit of September 13, 1963:

Our wheat surplus to be sold even at a lost.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I quoted those headlines to point out to the house that the problem facing agriculture today is not one of production but one of distribution. Milk, butter and cheese are needed in every part of the country. Canadians have a great need of a better and more diversified agricultural production.

I have here a press clipping dated September 14, 1963, where it is mentioned that a scheme has been set up in the United States providing stamps for the disposal of agricultural surplus. That scheme is called:

[Text]

The food stamp plan—chiefly sponsored by congresswoman Leonor K. Sullivan (Democrat, Montana) and Senator Hubert H. Humphrey (Democrat, Minnesota)—is proving a success, according to the New York Times. A report it carried sharply refuted past predictions that the program would prove a failure.

"A new 'currency' is finding its way into the cash registers of supermarkets and corner groceries," the Times said—

Under the program, a family certified by a local welfare agency can exchange the amount of money it normally would spend on food for coupons of greater value—

In the year ended last June 30, the Times reported, $31.2 million of food at retail prices was purchased by food stamps. Of this total, $18.6 million was paid by the government. Thus, needy families got $1 worth of food for 40 cents.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, that plan was applied in the United States. At the beginning, it was criticised and people predicted that it would be a failure. Nowadays, it is realized that the plan was a real success. It enabled the United States to dispose of a part of the farm production and I think it would be a good thing for our government, which so often follows the pattern set by the United States, to get the details of that plan in order to apply it here.

Our farm production is still plentiful nowadays. We have people who are in need, and if the government would set up a system of coupons to enable needy families to exchange them for the sums of money they spend each week to purchase food, a family spending $30 each week on food could obtain $45 worth of coupons. That would mean an increase in food expenditures and an increase in the disposal of our stocks. Then we could sell our products on our domestic markets before sending them abroad so that foreign countries might benefit from our abundant production.

Mr. Speaker, I wish that the Minister of Agriculture would be allowed to apply that coupon system. It would certainly help our families with an inadequate income and our farmers would be quite satisfied to sell their production at home.

Mr. Speaker, I call your attention to these suggestions and I wish the Minister of Agriculture would adopt them so that, in a year from now, the farming situation might be changed in Canada and so that the Liberal party would not be in the same position as the Conservative party which was rejected by the people before they could apply their beautiful policies.

I hope that the Minister of Agriculture can put those suggestions into practice as soon as possible, so that our people can benefit from a more adequate farm policy.

Mr. B. S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am indeed pleased to engage in the debate on the subamendment sponsored by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson), and the amendment which was brought to the attention of the house by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton). Following so closely on the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon), I should like to say that he accused my colleague of speaking only in terms of principles. I think that to have principles on your side is a fairly strong supporting argument to your case. Much better to have principles than to have neither principles nor fact on your side.

As the hon. member for Qu'Appelle was speaking this afternoon I endeavoured to interject to ask a question or two, and I should like the opportunity of prefacing my remarks at this time by asking these questions. I am of the opinion the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) said that if we were to apply $15 worth of fertilizer per acre we could increase our production of beef per acre by as much as $90 or $100 an acre. That was my understanding of what he said. First of all, $15 worth of fertilizer would be a heavy application and would not normally be applied in most of the beef producing areas. But if it were to be applied over 100 acres it would mean spending some $1,500 on fertilizer. Assuming a pound of beef is worth 25 cents it would mean one would have to produce approximately $10,000 worth of extra beef per 100 acres to achieve the rate of increase of which the hon. member spoke, and I wish to suggest that before presenting such figures as these to the house the former minister of agriculture should check with someone who has had experience in producing beef cattle, because those figures were outrageous; beef producers do not make that kind of extra money by applying fertilizer. I heard someone interject to the effect that the hon. member for Qu'Appelle meant 15 pounds of fertilizer per acre. That would be just as ridiculous.

The other comment I wish to make on the remarks of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle is this: he suggested that the entire Liberal campaign was fought on a lie and that we said the 92 cent dollar was not good for the farmer. I do not believe any Liberal speaker ever said the 92 cent dollar was not good for the farmer.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Beer: I should like to remind hon. members, however, that the reason we had this 92 cent dollar was no reason for pride as far as Canada is concerned, because this was not a planned thing—it was a situation which came about through lack of confidence. That is why we have a 92 cent dollar. I am not saying it was a bad thing in the end. I am saying that the reason we had it was not a source of encouragement and congratulations.

The other point I have to make concerns feed grain. I would not have been the least surprised if the remarks we heard made this afternoon on this subject had been made by someone other than an hon. member who was formerly minister of agriculture, a man who had held down that important position for a considerable time. At the end of the last parliament he gave notice of a bill which it was intended should come before the house, and I believe he is not in a strong position to criticize a government which came into power on April 8 and which announced a policy on August 22 in respect of which two thirds of the appropriations have already been approved.

Mr. Pickersgill: April 22.

Mr. Beer: I was somewhat surprised at the wording of the motion which accuses the government of failing to take effective action with regard to eastern agriculture and, in particular, with respect to feed grain for eastern Canada. I should like to recall a comment made by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle when he was minister of agriculture. In 1962, he stated in a speech in western Canada that, now the problems of western Canada were resolved, he intended to turn his attention to eastern Canada. Well, if the minister had paid any attention to eastern Canada prior to the election of June, 1962, he would not have been obliged to turn his attention in that direction during the campaign.

It has been suggested that we should have made much more progress with the legislation we have brought before the house. I venture to say that if this government is guilty of any misdemeanor whatsoever, it is that we have tried too hard. The twenty fourth parliament was dissolved on April 19, 1962. The date of the general election was June 18 of the same year and the writs were all returned by July 18. The twenty fifth parliament met on September 27, and from July 18 to September 27 there are 71 days. This, under the former administration, was called a cooling off period. In the twenty sixth parliament the election was held on April 8, 1963; the writs were returned on May 8 and parliament met on May 16, eight days after the writs had been returned. Now, with 67 legislative days having gone by, we have presented much more legislation than was presented, probably, during a much longer period under the previous administration, during the time when we were told to cool off.

The government has been criticized for not taking effective action with regard to eastern agriculture, and particular attention has been drawn to the desirability of having a stable price for supplies of Canadian feed grain, and an opportunity for the expansion of eastern feed grain production. I have already indicated that a feed grain policy was announced on August 22. Implementation of this policy will mean that ample supplies of feed grain are to be placed in terminals in eastern Canada before the closing of navigation, and that assistance would be given to the movement of this grain to eastern terminals. In addition, the government proposes to introduce a forward pricing policy which would take much of the risk out of the movement of grain. Thus, the present government has moved much further along these lines than did the previous administration, which was content to follow the policies which were in force since 1941.

I should like to review some of the problems of eastern agriculture—problems, I may say, of which the present government is fully cognizant. Most of us realize that after the last war there was a tremendous increase in mechanization in the industry. Many farms in Canada were not able to use machinery as it became available, but many others found themselves able to use this equipment and were thus placed at a tremendous production advantage. Those which were not were placed at a corresponding disadvantage. I have been in the county of Bellechasse in Quebec and

I have been in New Brunswick. I believe farmers in such areas as these are at a tremendous disadvantage. When we think of agriculture as a whole, we realize that we are being our own worst enemies, because by the use of machinery we have increased our efficiency to a point where 25 per cent fewer farmers have produced 50 per cent more products. We have reached a situation where production per man hour has increased by 70 per cent. In fact, we have increased our efficiency to the point where we are producing more than we can conveniently sell at satisfactory prices. This is the penalty of over-efficiency. The result, of course, in the government's view is that eastern agriculture has to have some special attention. These many areas that I have mentioned have to be taken into consideration. We have to find new land uses for many of these areas, and some real assistance is going to have to be provided whether under the ARDA program or by some other means.

We believe that probably one of the real causes of the problem in eastern Canada was the tremendous increase in the cost of production at a time when farmers' income remained relatively constant. Our incomes have remained fairly constant since 1945, while our production expenses have increased by approximately 50 per cent. Therefore it does not require much of a businessman to realize that the eastern farmer as a result of this phenomenon is going to be placed at a tremendous disadvantage.

I also want to suggest that probably one of the main reasons we were placed at this great disadvantage lies in the fact that the economic growth of the country had slowed down. We had unemployment and therefore we had to discontinue much of our immigration. As a matter of fact, in 1962 more people left Canada than came to Canada. This is an unfortunate situation.

I suggest to the house that probably what Canada needs more than anything else is a buoyant industrial community and business community which will integrate and employ more people in Canada. There is nothing that the farmer needs more than another 10,000,000 mouths to feed, which would enable us to have more of our markets close to home and make us less dependant on export trade. So, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the criticism that has been levelled against the government is quite unjustified and unfounded. I also suggest that the policies that have been put into effect in the comparatively short time that this government has been in power are worthy of the confidence and support of the entire house.

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent, Ont.): Mr. Speaker, I sincerely believe that all members of the house, whether they represent farming communities and farmers directly or indirectly, are truly interested in the welfare of the Canadian farmer, and truly believe that something must be done to help their lot in the industrial country that we have today. That is why I believe it is unfortunate indeed that we who have waited so long to hear some indication of an agricultural policy from the government had to take the step of moving an amendment to a supply motion in order, by debate, to prod the government, we hoped, into an announcement of a definite agricultural policy.

We were very pleased indeed to see the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) rise in his place this afternoon. We thought that at last we would hear what the government proposed in the way of an agricultural policy to carry this country forward. May I say that I think nearly every member on this side of the house was shocked by the speech we heard from him this afternoon. We were literally shocked to hear a minister of the crown refer to a policy outlined by a former minister, in his sincere desire to appraise and put before the government the problems of agriculture, as a bunch of junk. I believe those were the minister's words.

This seems to me a very ill advised remark to be made by the man who is the head of the Department of Agriculture. We have watched this man since he took office. I have a great deal of admiration for him. We have watched his dynamic personality. We have watched the way that he proposes to meet all problems head on. But when he got up this afternoon and gave that very weak and miserable outline of policy we were, as I said before, shocked. But when you analyse the policy and analyse the man you can understand why he would make such a speech this afternoon. This man is a businessman. This man is a salesman. This man can sell; but when he has nothing to sell the result is exactly what we heard today.

We hoped to hear some enunciation of policy by the parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Beer). I think the hon. member for Peel is sincere in his position and in his desire to help agriculture, but once again we heard no explanation of policy. We heard a political speech such as we might hear on the hustings. It is unfortunate indeed that government speakers would resort to political tirades at a time like this, when farmers all over the country are waiting for some indication of a policy.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, may I point out that in July when the hon. member for Peel, substituting for the minister, was invited by the millers and elevator men of south-western Ontario to speak to them he did develop his theme with a great deal of painstaking effort. But, Mr. Speaker, his theme was not the grain policy of the country. Rather, it was the official opening on the first day of parliament. When these same gentlemen asked the hon. member for Peel what the policy of the government was on grain, he said it had not been formulated yet and when it was formulated it would be announced to the house and to the people.

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Knowles: Is the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre not going to ask what the business will be on Wednesday?

Mr. Pickersgill: The business as prescribed by the rules.

Mr. Knowles: On Wednesday. The minister might listen.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, I think the hon. gentleman knows of my disabilities.

Mr. Knowles: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: I had hoped to discuss the business for Wednesday through the usual channels tomorrow and to indicate it at that time. Since I have been asked, I think the government has pretty well decided that we will ask the house to give second reading to the income tax bill.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, October 15, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE ON PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS—MR. CARON

[Text]

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. J. E. Walker (York Centre): By unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, I move that the second report of the standing committee on privileges and elections presented on Wednesday, October 9, be now concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I take it that consent has been given for the motion to be put and it is therefore before the house for debate. Has unanimous consent been asked for and given, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Unanimous consent was asked for but so far we have only the motion before us, which in my opinion has not as yet been adopted.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I ask the committee not to give unanimous consent today for the reason that there is on the order paper a supply motion with an amendment affecting the interests of agriculture. It seems to me that because of the wording of that amendment we should discuss that matter today on the supply motion and leave this other matter over until another day. Therefore I intend not to give unanimous consent.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, since this report was tabled on October 9 and notice given on two occasions that this motion would be made, the house certainly cannot be said to have been taken by surprise in this matter. As early as last Friday I indicated that if possible on Monday, and if not certainly today, this motion would be made, so there was unquestionably adequate notice given.

Mr. Speaker: It is quite true that verbal notice was given, I believe by the Secretary of State, but written notice is required. Unless there is unanimous consent in the matter I do not think we can proceed. Does the house give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Peters: No.

Mr. Speaker: Inasmuch as unanimous consent is not given we will have to proceed with motions.

UNITED NATIONS

CANADIAN CONTRIBUTIONS TO SPECIAL FUND AND TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the house that when the pledging conference is convened today at United Nations headquarters in New York to enable countries to pledge voluntary contributions to the United Nations special fund and to the United Nations expanded program for technical assistance, Canada will be pledging a substantial increase in its contribution to the special fund.

The government has authorized that we may pledge $5 million for 1964, and this increase over last year's contribution to the fund of $2.35 million in United States funds is evidence of Canada's support for the important pre-investment technical assistance activities of the special fund and for its able and dedicated managing director, Mr. Paul Hoffman. The special fund has attained only 70 per cent of its target of $100 million.

The target of $50 million for the expanded program of technical assistance was reached in 1963, and Canada's pledge to the expanded program for 1964 is being made at the same level as last year.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NEGOTIATIONS FOR PURCHASE OF SUBMARINES FROM UNITED KINGDOM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Could the hon. gentleman tell us whether at the present time there are any officers of the Royal Canadian Navy, or any officials of this government in Great Britain discussing the purchase of submarines for the Royal Canadian Navy?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I cannot say for certain. As far as my knowledge goes the answer to the hon. member's question is in the negative. However, I should have to take the question as notice if a firm answer is wanted.

Mr. Balcer: A supplementary question. Has a contract been signed?

Mr. Hellyer: No, Mr. Speaker.

THETFORD MINES, QUE.—STATUS AS DEFENCE ZONE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Is the city of Thetford Mines, Quebec, considered to be a number one defence zone in Canada?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what a number one defence zone is. If the hon. gentleman will enlighten me perhaps I can answer him.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

SUGGESTED CONSIDERATION BY DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is it the government's intention to call a federal-provincial conference in order to revise the Canadian constitution of 1867, before we celebrate Canada's centennial?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): My colleague the Minister of Justice has already made a statement on that subject with which, I am sure, the hon. member is familiar. There will be a federal-provincial conference in Ottawa in November, and though it has not been called primarily for such a purpose this matter could be raised by any province which desired to do so.

SUGGESTED COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister?

Does the Prime Minister expect to set up a parliamentary committee entrusted with re-shaping or amending the British North America Act, as required?

[Mr. Balcer.]

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is not a question that can be answered on the orders of the day. There is at present no intention on the part of the government, however, to set up that committee.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

ROYAL COMMISSION—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. Could the right hon. gentleman tell us when he expects the report of the royal commission on medicare to be brought down? I believe the last time this question was asked the Prime Minister thought the report would be available in September. I wonder whether he has any later word as to when we might expect it.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I do not think it is likely to brought down for a month or so, but I hope it will be available by the end of November or the beginning of December.

FALCONBRIDGE NICKEL—PROPOSED LAY-OFF OF EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Labour. Have representations been made to the minister by the international union of mine, mill and smelter workers concerning the proposed lay-off of 530 employees at the Falconbridge nickel mines on October 31 next? If so, could he inform the house what action is intended by the government in order to avert this disastrous lay-off?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Along with my colleague the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, and my parliamentary secretary I met a delegation from this area this morning. The representatives presented a brief containing certain proposals which are now under consideration by the government.

[Later:]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. It has to do with the situation at the Falconbridge nickel mine. Would the minister approve the gesture by labour that the men work three weeks out of four and that for the fourth week they be paid unemployment insurance benefits? Is the minister aware of the good faith of the working men, and would he give serious consideration to this matter?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am certainly aware of the good faith and anxiety of the persons I met this morning. This is one proposal that was advanced, and it will be given very careful consideration.

APPLICATION OF SUPPLEMENTARY CONSTRUCTION AND TAX INCENTIVE MEASURES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Labour. My question relates to his announcement yesterday concerning areas of high winter unemployment and the municipal winter works program. Do the newly designated areas—Bracebridge, for example—qualify for the supplementary federal winter construction program and the special tax incentive measures?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): The areas of high winter unemployment are eligible for assistance under the accelerated federal winter construction program together with the additional 10 per cent federal contribution under the winter works program. Both are intended to assist in the provision of employment.

Mr. Aiken: Do the special tax incentives for new industry apply to these areas?

Mr. MacEachen: Not unless those areas have qualified in accordance with the criteria used for the designation of areas of slow growth.

THREATENED STRIKE OF SEAMEN'S UNION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Labour. Is the minister aware of a story appearing in the Montreal Star today to the effect that the S.I.U. is planning a strike of its members as soon as the government appoints trustees under the legislation passed last week? May I ask what plans, if any, the government has made to meet this serious threat?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I had not been made aware of such information at all until I heard it from my hon. friend.

TORONTO—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he is in a position yet to make the statement on the winter works project for the city of Toronto that he indicated on Friday he would make on either Monday or Tuesday.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have a draft letter to the mayor of Toronto which I hope to get off to him this afternoon. If my hon. friend will give me an extra day of grace I will be able to base my statement on that and give it to the house tomorrow.

MANITOBA—EFFORTS TO SETTLE STRIKE OF CARPENTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Joseph Slogan (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry. Would the minister comment on the carpenters' strike in Manitoba as it affects construction at the Whiteshell nuclear research establishment and the Pinawa townsite? Could he indicate whether any official of Atomic Energy Limited or any other member of his staff is taking any part in the negotiations to settle the strike?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, this is a strike by the local carpenters union against one of the contractors employed by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited on the construction of the Whiteshell reactor in Manitoba. This is a dispute between a local contractor and a local union. It falls under the jurisdiction of the provincial government, and it would be inappropriate for me to make any comment.

PUBLIC SERVICE

CHIBOUGAMAU, QUE.—REPORTED RESIDENCE RESTRICTION IN ADVERTISEMENT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State.

On June 26, 1963, I asked the Secretary of State why civil service competitions for the Chibougamau area were restricted to residents of that region and to those of Lake St. John district, thereby excluding the residents of my constituency.

As shown at page 1608 of Hansard, the minister replied that he would call the attention of the civil service commission to this matter.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Well, recently we received two other posters announcing positions open only to residents of the Chibougamau and Lake St. John areas.

Would the minister tell us why residents of my riding are always excluded from those competitions held by the Department of National Defence at Chibougamau?

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I will be glad to make inquiries.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO OTTAWA PROGRAM "NIGHT FINAL"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. D. Clancy (Yorkton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Secretary of State. It has to do with the C.B.C. and the program "Night Final" on CBOT last night. It is in four parts. First, who is Mr. Howard Gray who was interviewed on October 14 on "Night Final", CBOT, Ottawa on the subject of prepaid subscriptions, with the theme that this should be extended beyond Toronto? Second, what are the qualifications that are required from a promoter to have a film sent from Toronto to Ottawa for inclusion in local news?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member put this question on the order paper, please.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I do not have the faintest idea.

REPORTED STATEMENT ON PROGRAM "HORIZON"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Enns (Portage-Neepawa): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State which pertains to the otherwise excellent reputation of the R.C.M.P. My question arises out of a program produced and televised by the C.B.C. on Sunday last entitled "Horizon" and the remark to which I am alluding is this. The commentator made reference to the denial of the right of an accused to be allowed to contact his lawyer or his family at the time of his arrest. I am certain the R.C.M.P. is not guilty of any such malpractice—

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member state his question, please.

Mr. Enns: Would the minister check with the C.B.C. and assure the house that the R.C.M.P. is not guilty of such malpractice?

[Mr. Laprise.]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is a question for the order paper.

FISHERIES

NEWFOUNDLAND—STEPS TO RELIEVE BAIT SHORTAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the unsuccessful efforts of a private company to relieve the squid bait shortage in Newfoundland by trawling, will the minister consider making available a dragger to trawl for squid within the three mile limit off the coast of Newfoundland?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest this is a question for the order paper.

SUGAR

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON INQUIRY INTO PRICE INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Justice I wish to direct a question to the appropriate minister. My question is based on letters I have received from indignant officials and members of various organizations and from infuriated housewives and the consequential inquietude of the member for Kootenay West. In view of the minister's answer to a question asked by the member for Lake St. John on June 13 with respect to the investigation into the increase in the price of sugar, has the minister any information to give the house with respect to government action or intention on this important question?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest this is a question for the order paper.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

LOTBINIERE COUNTY, QUE.—REQUEST FOR IMPROVED SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbiniere): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Postmaster General.

There is, in the county of Lotbiniere, a picturesque municipality called St. Janvier de Joly, whose mayor is Mr. Andre Longchamp and the secretary-treasurer, Mr. Adrien Lambert.

I wish to ask the minister whether he has examined a resolution carried unanimously by the municipal council of St. Janvier de Joly—

Some hon. Members: Order.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put this question on the order paper?

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbiniere): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. Has the minister planned any changes with respect to the mail service in Lotbiniere county and especially in the St. Janvier de Joly municipality?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: That question should be placed on the order paper.

HIGHWAYS

CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES RESPECTING NATIONAL POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): On October 4, Mr. Speaker, I asked the Minister of Public Works about plans for putting into effect the announcement he made on July 17 concerning the calling of a dominion-provincial conference on highway matters. At that time he said no decision had yet been made. I wonder if the minister could indicate to the house whether arrangements have been made for such a conference.

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): I think I have already answered this question by saying that no definite plans have been made. This is a matter of government policy, and in due time I shall inform the house whether anything can be done in respect of this matter.

Mr. Howard: May I ask a supplementary question. Can the minister say whether he has communicated with the various provinces, and if so which ones have not yet answered?

Mr. Deschatelets: The ministers of roads or highways in the various provinces have been communicated with, and we have received all the information available. Now it is up to the government to take the initiative. As I have stated, this is a matter of government policy, and in due time I shall let the house know what is to be done.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

MASTER AGENCY PLAN—ALLOCATION OF BOX CARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. M. Horner (Jasper-Edson): I should like to ask the Minister of Transport a question concerning the implementation of the master agency policy in my riding by the Canadian National Railways. Is the minister aware that there are grain box cars sitting on the sidings of these towns about which the elevator agents are not being informed by the Canadian National? Is he going to take up this matter immediately with the Canadian National in order to have that company follow the laws of Canada in the implementation of this master agency plan?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): As soon as I can get a copy of the transcript of Hansard and I can untangle the statements, I will immediately take up any question that is involved which will help move grain quickly to the seaports and speed up the shipment of grain to our foreign customers.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Would the minister not agree that this implementation of the plan by the Canadian National is a direct violation of the statutes of Canada?

Mr. McIlraith: No, Mr. Speaker.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SUGGESTED INCREASE IN FRENCH REPORTING AND TRANSLATION STAFFS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State.

In view of the fact that again this morning complaints were made before the railways committee that the French version of the report was not available because of the delay in translation, has the Secretary of State taken steps to increase the translating, reporting and printing staff of committee reports, in order to give satisfaction?

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I have brought this situation to the attention of His Honour the Speaker, as Your Honour well knows, and of the commissioners of internal economy. I think it is a very serious situation, and I would welcome from any quarter of the house any suggestions as to any effective means of meeting it, including any recommendations of competent persons who would be willing to accept positions to carry out these important functions that are so necessary to the proper working of this parliament.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Hon. members have a right to get the French version of a report just as quickly as the English version.

We called the attention of the Secretary of State to this matter on several occasions, and every time he asked members of the house and especially members of the opposition to try to find competent people. That reply is somewhat similar to the one which was given by the president of the C.N.R. when he said that he did not have adequate staff for the translation and printing of the French version of reports. Consequently, Mr. Speaker, since I am speaking on a question of privilege—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the Speaker has the floor. The point of the hon. member for Lapointe is in the nature of a complaint: it is not a question of privilege. I understand very well the implications of the complaint and, needless to say, we all sympathize with the point he is making. But there are certain factors which perhaps the Secretary of State in an effort to speed the proceedings of the house and not delay its business, did not explain.

The problem raised by the hon. member for Lapointe has been under consideration for the last two months. It was under active consideration this morning. It is going before the commissioners of internal economy within two days. It is not quite as simple of solution as the hon. member expresses. It requires increases in salaries which would be payable all the way up and down the line, and is a major renovation of the whole system.

I do not want to say anything more at this time, but I would ask hon. members to take my word that it is a very serious problem affecting the efficiency of the house, and it is under the most complete consideration and investigation at the present time.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: May I ask a supplementary question? As leader of the house, does the Secretary of State intend to see to it that the internal economy commission, which is to meet soon, may examine the matter in the light of necessary and complete bilingualism, even if it is necessary to pay the price? Is the Secretary of State ready to pay that price so as secure full bilingualism in the house?

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, if I were to express my personal opinion on this matter I would say that I think in this, as in any other essential service, we should pay what is necessary to get competent service. That is my view, but it is a personal opinion. This is not a matter that is any more my responsibility than it is the responsibility of any other hon. member of the house. This is a matter of the housekeeping of the House of Commons. While I have a certain duty to answer these questions because we cannot question His Honour the Speaker, the matter, as His Honour very properly pointed out, is the responsibility primarily of His Honour the Speaker and the officials of the house.

I am sure that the members of the government in so far as they can will co-operate fully to see that these essential services are provided. If that is going to involve some adjustment in salaries, and if that will cure the problem, in my opinion it should be done.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Prosper Boulanger (Mercier): Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that you will hear me and let me explain my point. I do ask you to be most tolerant because what I have to say might take a few minutes, and I am doing this to help the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) and yourself.

I would, first of all, like to thank you for your co-operation in the various committees, and more particularly the one where I have the pleasure—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Boulanger:—where I have the pleasure and honour to act as chairman, the railways committee. In order to show how some people, and more particularly my colleague, the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire), lack responsibility, I would point out that this morning there were but four members of the Caouette group in our committee. I shall name them: the hon. members for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire), for Quebec East (Mr. Beaule), for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) and for Charlevoix (Mr. Belanger)—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Boulanger: —even with a continuous interpretation service, they did not deem it advisable to attend the committee for more than ten or fifteen minutes.

And then they come to the house to gibe and try to say that bilingualism is not observed in our committees, or elsewhere.

I therefore raise a point of privilege in connection with this lack of responsibility; as a matter of fact, we should not give them more importance than they deserve.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on the point of privilege raised by my hon. friend—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. In as much as the hon. gentleman was mentioned—and in my opinion he should not have been mentioned—if he wishes to correct any misrepresentation that is fine, but I hope it will be very short. I doubt if it is at all necessary for him to speak.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I think there is nothing to try and correct. The question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Boulanger) speaks for itself and the house is in a situation to judge which one lacks responsibility. He has proved it by his few words.

Mr. Speaker, the correction that could be made would perhaps be the following one. This morning we went to the railways committee, we stayed there until eleven o'clock and we had to leave to attend another meeting. That is the only explanation; there is no other.

[Text]

Mr. Churchill: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, would it be in order for me now to recount happenings going on in the defence committee?

WORLD FAIR

INQUIRY AS TO SALARY OF COMMISSIONER

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works and if he cannot reply, I would ask the Prime Minister to do it for him.

On October 2 I asked the Minister of Public Works what salary was going to be paid out to the new general commissioner of the world fair. On October 9 I asked the same question and the minister stated to the house that he would reply in a few days but to date we have not had an answer.

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, to both those questions I answered that the chief commissioner was still with the Department of External Affairs. There is nothing changed.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

Does the Prime Minister intend to remunerate the new general commissioner and could he tell us when his present post with the Department of External Affairs will come to an end?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the commissioner is on leave from the Department of External Affairs. He would have, I understand, a good many weeks of retirement leave in any event, and it would seem unnecessary to pay him a salary as commissioner when he is on the salary list of the Department of External Affairs until that leave expires.

[Translation]

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a further supplementary question? I should like to have the Prime Minister's answer clarified.

Does he consider the world fair's general commissioner as a federal civil servant or as a commissioner who would be free from the present government's control?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: At the moment, Mr. Speaker, he is a civil servant taking on this other assignment as commissioner and giving all his time to it.

PENSIONS

INQUIRY AS TO CONSIDERATION OF LEGISLATION THIS SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the disquieting rumours about the effect of the campaign of the life insurance companies against the Canada pension plan, could the Prime Minister assure the house that legislation to establish the Canada pension plan will definitely be proceeded with at this session?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we intend to proceed with legislation in this matter as soon as possible.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, would it be possible for the Prime Minister to say whether that "as soon as possible" means this session?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, it depends among other things on the hon. gentleman and all hon. members of the house and how long we take over the legislation we are now considering.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

OIL AND GAS LEASES—STATEMENT ON SALE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, has the Minister of Northern Affairs and National

Inquiries of the Ministry

Resources the statement which he promised the house yesterday he would make today respecting the sale of substantial oil and gas leases in northern Canada?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, like my hon. friend I have been trying to get the floor for some time. Yesterday the hon. member for Yukon asked if I would make a statement in respect to the bids under sealed tenders last Thursday for oil and gas locations in the Yukon and Northwest Territories. I am pleased to inform the house that 15 permits, consisting of 752,237 acres, were sold to the highest bidders for a cash bonus consideration of $481,693.15, or an average of 64 cents per acre.

In addition, a number of blocks of permits were offered in return for an undertaking to perform exploratory work. Tenders were received on ten blocks, consisting of 74 permits and 3,854,126 acres, and the highest tenders amounted to a total of $7,919,065.02, or an average of $2.05 per acre.

The area of greatest interest was situated along the Yukon-Northwest Territories boundary, south of Fort McPherson and Arctic Red river in what is generally called the Peel plateau area. The offer by several oil companies to spend, during the first term of the permits, close to $8 million on exploratory work over and above the basic work commitment for the same period of $770,825.20, indicates a strong and continuing interest in northern explorations on the part of the oil industry.

If hon. members agree, I should be pleased to table the detailed results of the sale as part of my remarks.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

TRADE

DISCUSSIONS WITH U.S. RESPECTING WHEAT SALES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can he tell us if his department has received from United States authorities an invitation to send a Canadian representative to Washington to discuss the policy of our two countries with regard to the sale of wheat?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I feel that the hon. member knows very well that the Minister of Trade and Commerce answered that question a few days ago.

INQUIRY AS TO IMPORTS FROM BULGARIA

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce but, in his absence, I will put it to his parliamentary secretary.

Can the parliamentary secretary give the house the list of the main products that Canada can expect to receive following the wheat sale to Bulgaria?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This is a question for the order paper.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—INQUIRY AS TO RENEGOTIATION OF TREATY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs who, in our district, has become known as the second David Thompson because of his recent discovery of the Columbia. In view of the minister's announcement in Washington on September 6 that renegotiation could be recommenced between Canada and the United States on October 4, could the minister inform the house of the reason for the delay, and when these renegotiations are expected to commence?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is clear from my hon. friend's question that we may now regard him as a convert to the Columbia river treaty idea. As one who has examined this project I recognize the value of the support which he intends to give to it.

My hon. friend has already been informed that as a result of the meeting in Washington, working groups were set up for the purpose of examining the factors involved in the vital consideration of the price to be paid for the downstream benefits. One of the conditions which Canada has laid down is that, assuming all other factors to be agreed, Canada will insist on a price for the sale of the downstream benefits which would make this project self liquidating. The two working groups are examining complicated information that is vital to the ascertainment of a fair price. I welcome my hon. friend's support.

Mr. Herridge: As a supplementary question, does the minister not realize that the hon. member for Kootenay West is still opposed to the present treaty, but asked this question because of the intense suspense that many of his constituents have been kept in because of government indecision?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, this government is rapidly removing that suspense.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CUBA—INCLUSION AMONG COUNTRIES TO RECEIVE AID

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet may I take advantage of the occasion to answer a question put to me yesterday by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron). On October 10 the Acting Prime Minister announced that funds had been made available to the Red Cross for the assistance of stricken countries in the Caribbean. This assistance will be made available to Cuba if the examination now being made by the Canadian Red Cross into the regrettable situation in Cuba can be completed.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary question may I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether this will be in addition to the somewhat niggardly $20,000 announced last week for assistance to the Caribbean?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the amounts offered and announced by the Acting Prime Minister may not meet all the obligations as a result of the regrettable devastation in the Caribbean, but my hon. friend will find that his adjective is hardly deserved in the light of the initial contributions made by other countries. Canada is vitally concerned to do all it can to assist the countries that have been stricken.

SUPPLY

The house resumed, from Monday, October 14, consideration of the motion of Mr. Gordon for committee of supply.

FEED GRAIN FOR EASTERN CANADA AND B.C.

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent, Ont.): Mr. Speaker, at the adjournment of the debate last night I was bringing to your attention the fact that during the course of the debate we had three of the main speakers on the government side dealing with the matter before us, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays), the hopeful minister No. 2 and the parliamentary secretary. I regret very much that although we were delving at that time into a question of the gravest importance to agriculture, we are speaking to the house this afternoon with both the Minister of Agriculture and the minister No. 2 absent from the house, so perhaps we will have to direct our remarks to the parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Beer).

We were very distressed indeed, Mr. Speaker, to hear these three speakers from the government side of the house each in turn devoting the major portion of his speech to partisan politics. This can do no less than inject politics into a debate of the type we are now having, and that is unfortunate for this reason. The hon. member for Peel, in his haste to make a point which was a partisan one, committed a serious error, one which I am sure is going to cause him some embarrassment. In criticizing the former minister of agriculture who had preceded him in the debate he took issue with a statement to the effect that an investment of $15 in fertilizer in the eastern provinces would in fact bring back a return of $100 if the fertilizer were applied to pasture lands used as fodder. This return would be brought back to the farmers in the sale of livestock. The hon. member for Peel said, in effect, that the former minister should check with somebody experienced in producing cattle, because these figures were outrageous.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it embarrasses me no end to bring to task the hon. member for Peel, who was a classmate of mine at university, because one of the things he was taught there was that you should never make a statement like that unless you have the facts to back you up. The former minister of agriculture was not drawing these facts out of a hat; he was quoting from the results of experiments conducted by the Department of Agriculture in Nova Scotia. These are the facts which the hon. member for Peel called outrageous. I submit, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Beer: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Danforth: Certainly.

Mr. Beer: I think Hansard will show clearly enough that the hon. member for Qu'Appelle said that an application of $15 worth of fertilizer would return $90 to $100 an acre to the farmer in the form of beef. That is not true.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Speaker, this is just my point. This is the point brought out by the Department of Agriculture. If the hon. member would care to peruse the report he will see for himself that that is exactly the statement which was made. If the hon. member for Peel would spend some time at these various experimental stations and farms I think he would be able to learn the facts as they are in this stricken area of the maritimes.

We also heard from the hon. member for Red Deer, and I must pay tribute to him for remembering in his speech Thanksgiving day. I must say also that he expressed some knowledge of the sorry plight of some of the farmers in eastern Canada. But I must take exception to the rest of his speech, because in my opinion it dealt strictly with partisan politics. He tried to vindicate his stand. Although he criticized the policies of the former government he said that he is going to support to a degree the present government; then he turns round and brings in a subamendment condemning this very practice and indicates to the house that he will, as usual, support the government in any vote against them.

He also made the flat statement, on which I should like to take issue with him, that the former government contributed nothing to the agricultural policies of this country. Mr. Speaker, the name "Hamilton" is a household word on every farm in Canada because of the farm policies initiated by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle and the government he represented. In fact if the name "Hays" is ever known throughout Canada to the same degree I will be one of the first to laud his efforts on behalf of the farmers of Canada.

I am not going to labour the question as to what the government has or has not done. I think the hon. member for Timiskaming was very fair in his statement that the former government contributed something to agriculture but had made some mistakes as well. That is, as I say, a fair statement. He also stated that this present government may also contribute something to agriculture, and may make some mistakes as well. That too is a fair statement. But I should like to point out that from 1957 to 1962, according to the actual figures, the former government increased the average farm remuneration by 25 per cent. This is not a complacent attitude. This represents extra money in the pockets of the farmers.

After accomplishing that, the former minister became aware of the fact that this increase in remuneration was not uniform, that there were still many farmers not receiving a fair share of farm income. Thus policies were found to correct the grievous situation which existed at that time. That is why the former minister of agriculture turned to the problems of eastern Canada. That is why he advocated assistance to the feed lot operators of eastern Canada. That is why he advocated credit for farm storage, so that grain could be put into the eastern provinces and made available to those who needed it. That is why he advocated an average base mean price for grain for all farmers in the eastern provinces.

He was determined to move feed grain into the east in competition with United States grain moving by ship. He was determined to give the farmers in eastern Canada an opportunity to compete with other parts of Canada in the sale of their livestock. It was he who suggested there should be some deficiency payment or acreage payment to encourage production of livestock feed. It was he who advocated that fertilizer should be used to a greater extent in Quebec and eastern Ontario as well as in the maritimes. These were all progressive steps intended to help eastern farmers.

We were happy to support these efforts by the former minister because we in Ontario, as in other parts of Canada, have a surplus of feed grain and, in my opinion, if we could deliver this grain to the maritimes and put them on a better competitive footing we would be most happy to do so.

I should like to deal now with the so-called policy, or lack of policy, put forward by the three hon. members who spoke from the government side of the house. I might say we found their speeches disappointing. I am sure they have done a great deal of investigating into this serious problem which faces agriculture. I am sure there are many on the government side of this house who are as anxious as we are to help the farmers.

Unfortunately it is impossible for us and for the farmers in this country generally to get any formal commitment as to policy from those hon. gentlemen who sit opposite. We heard the Minister of Agriculture tell us yesterday that income had increased and that the gross national income had gone up too. But we, as farmers, seem to be in the same position as other people; the rich appear to be getting richer and the poor to be getting poorer.

The minister told us he had a farm in the east and a farm in the west, that he had a farm of his own and that he milked dairy cattle. This is most interesting. He also told us that he had visited 32 countries and talked with various ministers of agriculture in those places. If he went to those places to learn, to observe, to study and to consult with those people, then he is to be commended. But in the light of events since April 8 the farmers across the nation are beginning to wonder whether he was, perhaps, sent to those countries in accordance with a definite government policy to keep him out of the House of Commons and, indeed, to keep him out of the country.

We heard a speech from the hon. member for Matapedia-Matane. He too made a partisan speech, but his was a little different. One received the impression that he was preaching for a call and trying to justify another bureau in this already topheavy department of government. He suggested that there should be a second minister of agriculture and that there should be a division of authority although, he was careful to add, they would all work together.

This is most interesting because in Quebec, Ontario and the four maritime provinces there are already six departments of agriculture with the federal Department of Agriculture making a seventh. Now the hon. member's solution is to add a further department of agriculture. In passing, it seems to me that if this government was as sincere in its efforts to help farmers in eastern Canada as it professes to be, it could have taken advantage of a grand opportunity to make this clear. Hon. members opposite said they would appoint a minister of agriculture for the east. When they returned to power, with so few members from the west, everyone in Canada would have applauded them, I think, if they had appointed a minister of agriculture for the east at that time to take care of this very situation which they are so worried about today.

I was interested in one of the projects mentioned by the hon. member for Matapedia-Matane. He gave the house a review of studies which are being made in the maritimes, in Quebec and in Ontario, and said the government was looking into ways and means of helping the farmers there. There were many good points among those he outlined, but I had the feeling they were brought up in order to create confidence among the farmers of this nation, to make them feel that the present government was going all out to help them.

One of the points the hon. member made struck me as being strange indeed. He said they had a committee set up—I cannot recall the exact words, but this was the intent—to look into all matters affecting agriculture in the maritimes. How can this statement inspire confidence among the farmers of the maritimes? In April and in the period before that date, they had all the answers. Now, in October, they are looking into the questions.

It is true that in the policy they enunciated before the election hon. members opposite did put forward many points which in my view had a great deal of merit. In fact I should like to see those proposals discussed in the house by members on all sides so that we might decide whether something of a constructive nature could be done to help those farmers of whom we are speaking.

A great many promises and commitments were made. In my own area, for example, we grow a large crop of soybeans. What were we told? Candidates representing the party opposite came into the area and said the farmers were entitled to a floor price of at least $2.40 a bushel for those soybeans. Subsequently they established a policy, though the matter was never debated in the house. What was it? It amounted to $2.16 for soybeans.

Eastern Agricultural Policy Lacking

Let me give the house another example. They said the time had come to introduce a policy for sugar beets. They said that immediately after a government had been formed they would look into this question of sugar beets. Here we are, many months later—the hon. member for Red Deer said six months—and not a word has been said about sugar beets. This is why farmers across the nation are losing confidence. They looked forward to the arrival of these men. These were the men who had the answers. They were to be the salvation of the farmers of Canada. What disillusionment, what a disappointment they suffered.

I should like to discuss some of the promises which were made to the eastern farmers, the people about whom hon. members opposite now worry so much. They said there would be an increase in farm loans. I think there is some merit in this idea, but I should hate to see the program "blow the lid off" as the Minister of Agriculture described it. They blew the lid off the budget and the country has suffered ever since. I think there should be a great deal of study and thought given to this subject. They were going to increase the freight subsidy and put more crops under the deficiency payment program. They promised to increase research, to establish a higher floor price for wheat, to extend greater assistance to sugar beet and soybean producers. They were going to help the farmer. But here is the real gem. This was said by their leader, speaking in Port Arthur on March 8 last:

> Another immediate change would be "changes in the nature of assistance to agriculture, changes without additional burden on our treasury"—

That says no more money in my language—"changes without additional burden on our treasury"— > —and "our farm assistance program will be more effective than the present assistance being given to farmers, but it will not necessarily add to our total expenditures".

Might I point out that a general would love a condition like this where you can charge and retreat, negotiate an armistice and protect both lines at the same time. The farmers are getting tired of these painless potions and pink pills. They want more than verbiage. They do not want to be buried under countless pages of talk, under countless committees looking for ways and means to help them. The farmers know the problems. They know the ills. They know what should be done.

We have in this country one of the finest departments of agriculture in the world. As a matter of fact it is envied by all the world. This department has made advances in agriculture that have amazed the world. This is the department that minister No. 2 is going to divide. Sir, when we hear them talk about dividing and adding to committees we begin to think about that terrible bugaboo of patronage. We have had too much experience with patronage. When I hear them say that they must increase the number of men in the department who can speak French, may I say I have no objection to men of French origin or the French tongue being taken on staff in the Department of Agriculture. But I do insist on one thing, that the main criterion for a man to join the Department of Agriculture not be the language he speaks but his ability. I do not care what his second language is if his first language is a knowledge of agriculture in Canada.

At the beginning of the session the Minister of Agriculture started to answer our questions. He was a new man faced with a large portfolio and sitting in the house for the first time, and he did make mistakes. The house laughed at times but members were laughing with him, not at him. It was refreshing indeed to have a man come in the house and not give the same old pat answers that we receive time and time again. But all at once he started to give us pat answers and to ask that any question of a controversial nature be placed on the order paper. He had had a conference with the front bench opposite, and he had got his orders. He had got the message. It was to be politics and not facts.

Yesterday we heard the minister challenge the former minister to a milking contest or to see who could plow the straightest furrow. This is reducing the efforts of the Minister of Agriculture right down to the level of a theatrical performance. It is not like the Minister of Agriculture to indulge in such things. But when you see what is going on, when you see this minister asked to take over the portfolio and he does not know whether he has the sole responsibility or whether he has to share the responsibility with someone tomorrow; when wheat sales and the Canadian wheat board are taken away from his department and put somewhere else; when he cannot stand up and give policy as it should be given, one can understand that because of his frustration, disillusionment and impatience with the whole matter he is going to be like a boy kicking a tin can when he does not get his own way. This is why he made the kind of speech he did yesterday.

After watching the Minister of Agriculture in the house since April I certainly believe he has true ability, but he has got to be given a chance. Let him lead the Department of Agriculture. Let him develop it. Let him bring before the house for the first time a government policy on agriculture, and let us as the parliament of Canada debate this policy. Let us have a say whether it is good or bad. Let us make suggestions and amendments. Let us all get together to see if we can bring forth a real agricultural policy for Canada. Let us not tie up this man with red tape and partisan politics, as is being done today.

Why was it that the former minister of agriculture could make a name for himself and his government? It was because he was given the responsibility for the Department of Agriculture, and was allowed to discharge it and make decisions.

I think the government should introduce a policy. They owe it to the Canadian people to introduce a policy. They gave a commitment and undertaking to the nation that they would have a government farm policy and would introduce it right here in the House of Commons and in the standing committee on agriculture, if that committee is ever activated. We have been here for months and months and they talk about the problems of agriculture, but they have never activated the committee on agriculture.

Let them bring forward a policy and give us a chance to look at it. Give us a chance to study it. Give us a chance to suggest ways and means by which it might be improved. Then we would be giving the farmers of this country some hope. We would have a program then that would be the envy of the world. We would also be upgrading parliament to the stature to which it is entitled. We hear outside the house that parliament is sick, and sick it is, sir. It is sick because the opposition never have a chance to take any part in suggesting amendments or changes with regard to anything affecting the policies of this nation. We have government by decree, not by parliament.

The same thing applies so far as agriculture is concerned. We want to know what is going on. What does the government intend for agriculture? We have farmers all across the nation with large businesses who are depending on the remuneration from the sale of their crops. We want to know what the plans of the government are to market these crops. We want to know what plans they have for the eastern farmers. We want to know how they are going to activate ARDA. We do not want to be told that there is going to be one committee after another, that this or that matter is being taken into consideration, that due consideration is being given and that when a policy has been formulated it will be announced in the house. This is not good enough.

Surely the time has come that this government should stand on its feet, act like a party, act like Canadians and put before the house a definite Canadian policy on agriculture, so that for the first time we can act like a parliament and represent our constituencies to the degree that we can be proud of the work that we are doing here in Ottawa.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent Drouin (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): Mr. Speaker, I should like, first of all, to congratulate heartily the former minister of agriculture, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) who, through his amendment to the motion that the house go into committee of supply, gave us the opportunity to discuss agriculture.

I should also like to commend him for the fine statement he made regarding the problems of eastern farmers. He proved that he was aware of all their problems. He suggested some extremely interesting solutions and I wish to congratulate him for the improvement he has shown over the last year. As a matter of fact, if he had been as knowledgeable, as competent and as devoted to eastern farmers when he was minister, I can assure you that we would not be facing the same problems today.

What did he do when he was minister of agriculture in the previous Conservative government? On February 6, 1963, he placed on the order paper of the house a resolution prior to the introduction of a bill affecting the farmers, but he presented it at that time when he was sure the bill would never be passed by the house; it was the day after his government had been brought down.

All he wanted to gain with that bill was political capital. He wanted to have something to talk about during his election campaign. But the Canadian voters saw right through him and they turned out of office and for good the worst government that the country had ever known since the years 1930-35.

Mr. Speaker, Social Crediters were blamed for joining us in bringing the government down on the evening of February 5, 1963. But Social Crediters had had enough of the inefficiency of the government of that time, which had become obvious to all Canadians.

They could no longer explain to their electors the attitude they had taken and followed in this chamber until February 5, 1963. And it is not because they wanted an election. We did not want one either because we had had enough of elections. We had barely come out of an extremely tiring election campaign; but we had an objective, that is the welfare of the Canadian people. We wanted to give to the Canadian people the government they had a right to have, a Liberal government, and that is what we did. That is why we led the previous government towards a general election.

What did the Conservatives do for the welfare of the agricultural community during the six years they were in office? They put into effect a policy of grants to win the sympathy of the farmers: grants for feed, butter and cheese. Besides, they bought surpluses. They piled up millions of bushels of grain, millions of pounds of butter, so much that, at a certain time, the former minister of agriculture was afraid.

Mr. Speaker, it is said that fear is the beginning of wisdom, but in the case of the former minister of agriculture, that does not apply. What did the then minister of agriculture do when he saw we had millions of pounds of butter and millions of bushels of grain in storage? He said to the western farmers: we can sell our grain to the Chinese, but unfortunately, we have fears concerning payment. We are afraid Canadian people will not be paid for their grain, so I ask you to endorse the Chinese and to insure, as it were, the credit we are extending to them.

His speech was not greeted by applause and he did not speak about it again.

And what did he say to milk producers? He told them: We have butter and cheese surpluses.

To those he had encouraged to increase their herds, to improve their equipment, he said: Sell your cows, we have too much milk.

Again, he was not warmly received.

On February 5, 1963, the former minister left agriculture in the worst stagnation ever known in Canada; but the following day, on February 6, he knew all the answers. During his election campaign, he said that the Liberals had misled farmers.

But, Mr. Speaker, who wants to mislead the Canadian farmer? The one who passes measures, even unpopular ones, believing sincerely that they are bound to solve problems, by getting at their very root, or the one who leads the farmers to bankruptcy while telling them that everything is fine?

Who wants to deceive Canadian farmers? The present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays), who sells our dairy surpluses and advocates a policy of such a nature as to direct production according to needs, on the domestic market as well as on the export market, or the former minister of agriculture who, by promoting surplus production, by granting subsidies and support prices was leading agriculture to a dead end?

Who is deceiving farmers? The former minister of agriculture or the present minister who is sincerely devoted to our farmers?

Mr. Speaker, I do not entirely approve of the various things done by our present minister; beside, I regret that he has not seen fit to do other things, which to me seemed highly desirable.

I am sorry to see that the legislation for appointing a minister of agriculture for the east has not yet been submitted to the house. The eastern farmers are waiting for the adoption of the bill, as they are impatient to make their voice heard inside the cabinet, an opportunity they have not had for a good many years.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot be pleased, either, with the priority prescribed by the Minister of Agriculture. Like the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, I feel that the top priority problem facing eastern farmers is the supply of feed grain.

Eastern farmers lie at the mercy of a group of speculators who control feed grain and who make millions by a few strokes of the pen. Those people freeze sales to boost prices. They also get a large share of the subsidies which the government has established to help farmers.

Whether a farmer produces milk or crops or whether he is a cattle breeder, he must be able to buy feed grain at a reasonable price.

That is why, in my humble opinion, the distribution of feed grain should be nationalized in eastern Canada and a crown corporation set up to control feed grain shipping, storing and wholesale selling in eastern Canada after firm contracts have been negotiated with the Canadian wheat board.

I quite agree with the hon. member for Qu'Appelle when he says that eastern farmers should have the same advantages as the Chinese, Russians, and Japanese who buy our wheat at a fixed price. However, what did the hon. member do when he was minister of agriculture to provide eastern farmers with the same advantages as the Chinese? What did he do?

The proposed crown corporation should control the shipping of grain and the government should pay the whole cost of the operation. At present, the government pays approximately $18 million in freight assistance for feed grain. If those subsidies were to cover the whole cost of shipping, they would amount to about $40 million a year. I feel that we can afford such an expense, the more so since those subsidies would contribute to the establishment of a uniform wholesale price throughout Canada, so that grain would cost the same in Halifax, Quebec city, lake St. John, Montreal, Three Rivers and Fort William.

An hon. Member: And at Jonquiere.

Mr. Drouin: That body would control warehousing so that it would be carried out in a reasonable way. It is said that warehousing facilities are not adequate in the east, but there is no proof of that, I think that after a serious and scientific inventory of warehousing facilities, we would find enough facilities in the east to store all the grain needed to meet the requirements of eastern farmers.

That body would also control wholesale grain operations and be satisfied with a reasonable profit, only to help meet operation costs and not extravagant profits like the ones made by the people who now control grain marketing in the east. It could work in co-operation with the mills, which are doing an excellent job of processing the feed grain required.

The setting up of such a body would be most beneficial. First of all, our eastern farmers could depend on a steady supply 12 months a year. We could eliminate the blocking caused by speculators at the present time for price increases. Prices would go down and this would help to lower the production costs. Our milk products could face world competition. We could sell our butter, our cheese and our milk powder at reasonable prices on world markets without the government having to subsidize the manufacturing costs to the extent of 50, 60 and even 75 per cent.

I think that the savings made by the government in that way, could completely cover transportation costs of grain to the east. It could also pay for the setting up of a crown corporation to look after that government control.

Our farmers would then be able to take the place they are entitled to on the national consumer's market. We would not need those many million fowl and poultry which were imported from the United States when the former minister of agriculture was responsible for the future of our farming industry. Indeed, we may recall that in a single fiscal year, we brought in more than 20 million birds from the United States, while we had in eastern Canada producers who could have supplied the market. But, because they are paying too much for their feed grain, they are unable to meet the competition of American chickens and turkeys which are dumped on our market.

Our farmers could increase their production of livestock. We have, in the east, the best pastures in Canada. We do not suffer from drought like the western farmers.

We have land unsuitable for cultivation which is declared as less than marginal every time a survey is made. Such land would make excellent pasture for livestock.

We are unable to increase our livestock production precisely because the cost of feed grain is too high in some seasons of the year.

We, in the east, have the two largest Canadian consumers' markets: Toronto and Montreal. Yet, we only supply a very small percentage of livestock to those markets.

It appears that the former government wanted, by this legislation under date of February 6, to settle all its problems. However, we never saw the bill. Has the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent) ever seen this remarkable bill?

I remember a former government minister, the former Conservative minister, member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer), who came to my constituency. He claimed that this bill under date of February 6 was marvellous, that it would settle all the farmers' problems, but when the constituents in Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes asked the hon. member for Three Rivers about the contents of this bill, he did not even know.

The policy announced by the present Minister of Agriculture, as concerns feed grain, is an improvement over the situation we experienced during the former Conservative government. I do not really consider it a solution but it certainly is an improvement.

It is not yet the ideal to which eastern farmers may aspire. Through this legislation, speculators will realize important profits on the shipping of grain. As soon as the navigation season is over, they apply the railway transportation costs, saying: "If grain is needed, it will be necessary to use railway transportation and it will cost $7 or $8 more per ton. We may just as well have it loaded now."

They are business men who are there to make profits. I cannot blame them in any way, but if they could be advantageously replaced by a government agency which would adequately perform the work that may be required of a third party between the Canadian wheat board and eastern farmers, why not?

The policies advocated by the present Minister of Agriculture are valuable but they may help speculators. Once more, speculators may be able to benefit largely from grants meant for farmers.

Should we, for all that, support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) or the subamendment moved by the orthodox Social Credit leader? Besides, the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) himself said in his comments on the remarks made by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle and I refer to Hansard for October 14, 1963, page 3549:

To stand up as he has done today, to try to convince the house—

Eastern Agricultural Policy Lacking

The hon. member for Red Deer is talking about the hon. member for Qu'Appelle.

—that it should throw out this government because of his own failure of action, is something that is just a little beyond understanding. Eastern farmers, particularly those in Quebec and in the maritimes, would never have turned their backs on the previous government had they been satisfied that its policies would be good to meet their needs.

As for myself, I do not feel that the Conservative policies would satisfy the needs of Canadian farmers. That is why, even though I am not entirely happy with the present farm policy of the government, I will tonight vote in support of the Minister of Agriculture who has been in office for only six months and has proved his good intentions. I shall do so in the hope that before long, we shall have a second minister of agriculture who will be the spokesman for eastern farmers within the cabinet.

I am anxious to see what position the hon. member for Qu'Appelle and his supporters will take when this resolution is introduced in the house. I can hardly wait to see what stand he will take. He will then have the opportunity to prove his sincerity and to do something other than play petty politics, which he has done up to now.

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): May I put a question to the hon. member?

Mr. Drouin: Certainly.

Mr. Ricard: If I am not mistaken, at the outset of his remarks, the hon. member seemed to criticize the policy of subsidies put forward by the previous government. Would he give us a list of subsidies to encourage farmers which were abolished by the present Minister of Agriculture?

Mr. Drouin: Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to point out that the policy of subsidies advocated, established and carried out by the former minister of agriculture has led agriculture to stagnation.

I have not entirely laid the blame on the establishment of a particular subsidy and if the hon. member has understood me well, I did not over-praise the present Minister of Agriculture. I simply pointed out as sincerely as possible the present situation of eastern farmers.

Mr. Ricard: That is the reason why you approve the abolishment by the present minister of the 25 cents subsidy per hundred weight of milk; and that is why we no longer hear you, like you did last year, advocate a policy of free distribution of milk in schools throughout Canada.

Mr. Drouin: Our program extends over a four year period. The government has been in power for only six months. If that milk distribution policy is not established in the next four years, then we shall discuss it, but you cannot doubt the intentions of the government right away.

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Yesterday afternoon, I heard the former minister of agriculture claim the rights of the eastern provinces in the field of agriculture.

He blamed the present government for not having taken concrete action, especially as far as feed grains are concerned.

We admit all his statements, but we do not admit so easily those changes of opinion of the two old line parties. They alternately become all-powerful as soon as they sit in opposition.

The member for Qu'Appelle was in office only a few months ago; why did he not settle once and for all the case of the eastern provinces, which he now considers so serious?

Not to play into the hands of the government, which says that the opposition party did nothing I shall say that the previous government took a few steps, showed the way to an over-all agricultural reform. In fact, amendments to federal loans and to ARDA were surely forward steps in helping eastern farmers. It is something, but it is not enough. All this proves that the main failure is the inability of the departments to help eastern farmers by positive reforms.

And all this leads us to the necessity of establishing a department for the east. We hope that the present government will at least get started in that direction.

We Quebecers have been saying all along that our problem will not be settled by outsiders, but by ourselves.

It would be asking too much from western people to make a survey of our lands, our climate, our social and family conditions, in order to outline a policy for us.

To begin with, they would be unable to do it, because the only thing they seem to be familiar with is wheat.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, a member entering this house gets the impression that Canada grows only wheat.

Six months before sowing time we hear about wheat, so as to know whether or not it will be possible to sow, and six months after harvesting, we hear inquiries about when the wheat will be paid for.

It may be that the people from the prairie provinces talk louder or complain more than those in the other provinces, but, seven times out of eight, when agriculture is mentioned, it is always the voice of the wheat that is heard.

It is said that a man makes no noise over a good deal, but I am beginning to think that in agriculture, and especially at the federal level, noise is needed to have deeds.

We in Quebec may be the victims of our own silence.

What happened in the last fifty years?

What has been wrong with Quebec for the last 50 years?

To think that 50 years ago, the eastern provinces were considered the granary of Canada.

When you take a close look at the history of Canadian agriculture, you note that, as long as the minister of agriculture came from an eastern province, farming was prosperous. But as soon as we lost the minister, we lost the rising trend of our farm production.

Take a look at agricultural reports and you will notice with a certain horror that, since 1914, all the ministers of agriculture have come from the prairies. Not a single one, since 1914, was chosen in the eastern provinces.

I submit that this is an unforgivable omission on the part of the governments for the last 50 years.

Even if you are as human as possible, you cannot silence the voice of blood. No wonder the western markets are so promising, and western farming so flourishing.

Laws are made by men. And the latest agricultural legislation was introduced by a majority of western members, which explains why the eastern part of Canada was entirely forgotten.

We are not blaming western farmers for speaking and voting in favour of what is the very mainstay of their existence, but we do blame them for not allowing other provinces to have their say in this house.

You may be sure that neither the various aspects of agriculture in eastern Canada nor the mentality of eastern farmers can be understood by western farmers.

That is why, until we have a department of agriculture for eastern Canada with all the powers to be found in such a department and also in a position to adapt our farm legislation to modern needs, we shall be unable to work efficiently toward the recovery of eastern agriculture.

Take, for instance, the amended federal legislation on loans to farmers.

Do you really believe that it suits the purpose perfectly and meets all our farmer's needs?

How is it then that, out of 1,500 requests from farmers, the Farm Credit Corporation can accept but 150?

And yet the farms are lying there, abandoned up to a proportion of 35 per cent, waiting for farmers to put them back in production.

Eastern Agricultural Policy Lacking

On the other hand, the farmers are still anxious to go back and work those farmlands that were taken away from them through finance plans, because incompetent governments did not have the courage to set interest rates which would prevent those thieves who wear no masks, for they are winked at by present legislation, from taking hold of our farmers' possessions.

It is said that eastern farmers are no longer interested in cultivating land. That is simply because they are disgusted with the way they are being treated.

I have travelled across the rural areas of Quebec, Mr. Speaker. It is one of my weaknesses: I have to see for myself. So I paid visits to farmers and discussed their case with agronomists appointed by the federal government to find out for myself about the opportunities our legislation gives our farmers.

I was amazed, Mr. Speaker, to see that the federal government was paying four agronomists in my constituency to refuse loans to those who were in need of them.

What is more difficult, to amend an act or to move a piece of land into another province?

They are so good here at creating ridiculous circumstances that it becomes impossible for them to revert to a normal situation.

Do you not think that it would be easier to have legislation suited to a province than to mold a province according to the legislation of the country?

And for everything to operate rationally, we must have the assistance of experts in each province where the operation is needed.

In a word, do you believe that western farmers will solve our problems in Quebec?

Will a western minister promote the salvation of Quebec? I, for one, do not believe that in the least.

It would be every bit as illogical to ask a fellow from Lake St. John to go and dictate policies to Alberta.

I heard the Minister of Agriculture when he said that he had contacted the Quebec minister of agriculture and that everything seemed to be all right. The Quebec minister must have answered that he was going to examine the matter. In Quebec, the Liberal party has decided to turn everything over to study groups.

For instance, three years after the passing of ARDA they are still considering the possibility of implementing the program in Quebec.

And—and this beats all—in the province of Quebec, instead of planning the draining of lands which need only a bit of water to be productive, they make the farmers pay, for the little draining that is done, and they retimber the other farms.

Eastern Agricultural Policy Lacking

One has to be good to those poor American lumber companies.

You may be sure that the minister of agriculture of Quebec did not express the opinion of the people in that province.

What Quebec wants is an independent department, and we hope that the present government will not wait till the last minutes of its existence to introduce that bill in the house.

I am very happy about this consideration now being given to increasing the loans to eastern farmers.

I hope that those who were unable to meet the present loan terms, will thus be able to find where to go if they want to recover their heritage in the months to come.

Otherwise, it is useless for the government to pay so many agronomists just to reject our farmers' loan applications.

Our farm industry is not going to be rebuilt by negations or rejections, but by positive action, like sharing good advisers in numbers proportionate to the importance of the various provinces.

And there are many things such an adviser can do, Mr. Speaker. You will realize it if you look up the responsibilities of advisers on page 6 of the report of the Farm Credit Corporation, which says:

> Farm credit advisers are each responsible for a territory, and are to inform the farmers about credit facilities and other services offered by the corporation. They advise farmers about the best way to use their credit, they receive and handle applications for loans, help the applicants and borrowers to draw up plans for their organization, development and administration, of their family farm, in order to put it on a paying basis; they estimate the value of the farms, recommend certain decisions to branch managers regarding loan applications, supervise and administer the loans. The credit adviser by his incessant work in his territory, acts as a liaison officer between the corporation and the public.

An hon. Member: Which year?

Mr. Gauthier: Nineteen sixty two-sixty three.

We have today in Quebec whole areas which could be compared with any land in western Canada if they were drained.

Why did the various successive governments never give anything to Quebec, while they provided all necessary assistance to the prairie provinces?

I still have in my possession a most important document that is part of a series of questions I directed to the Minister of Agriculture so that the people and parliament would be acquainted with the discrimination against the province of Quebec.

For instance, let us consider the question of drainage. In that connection, I asked the Minister of Agriculture the following question:

> How much did the Department of Agriculture pay out for irrigation and conservation of waters in Canada to March 31, 1963? Of that amount, how much was paid out in Quebec?

Here is the reply the minister gave me:

> The expenditures of the Department of Agriculture under the provisions of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act, for irrigation and water conservation projects, amounted to $176,487,000—

And at the end of the reply, we could read:

> No part of that amount was spent in the province of Quebec.

Some hon. Members: Shame. Shame.

An hon. Member: How much for education?

Mr. Gauthier: For education, it is about the same story.

An hon. Member: 4.8 per cent.

Mr. Gauthier: What was being done for the east at that time? Nothing.

Mr. Speaker, the greatest difference between agriculture in the west and agriculture in Quebec can be seen in many areas. I could enumerate many of them, but I will touch on only one point before I close my remarks.

At this stage, I might open the eyes of the minister on a problem he has not even thought about. And if the minister will take the trouble to consider the remedies he could bring to agriculture to revive its lost strength, he is just at the beginning to get surprises. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I am sure that in the west, when they talk about farming a land, they mean that they have to prepare the soil for the seeding, they mean to roll back the forest to make room for wheat. At home, in Quebec, on our modern farms that is not it at all. That marvellous era of conquerors of the primitive soil has disappeared. Today, in Quebec, to return land to farming means fighting an army of financiers who were able by some feat to chase off our best farmers and leave all those large farms empty and barren, like a forest devastated by fire.

In 40 per cent of our farming areas, a deadly silence prevails because animal life is no longer there and man himself, crushed under debt and expelled by usurious moneylenders tolerated by our Canadian legislation, took refuge in the cities, in the shadow of the financiers' skyscrapers which go up at the same rate as the level of our agriculture goes down.

That, gentlemen, is the real problem in Quebec.

When one thinks there are such moneylenders completely foreign to our province who now own 30, and even 40 lots, of our best farms because an irresponsible government allowed the exploitation of the farmer who, not so long ago, was prosperous and the pride of our province but who today joins the line, which is already too long, of those under public assistance in our towns and villages.

Mr. Speaker, you see at once that rehabilitation in Quebec cannot be settled by the Department of Agriculture alone, but by the concerted action of the federal government and the department itself.

Is it possible that, after 300 years or more of existence, and nearly one hundred years after confederation, the federal government has not yet succeeded in determining the interest rate in Canada?

It is unthinkable for the common man, and unexplainable for us legislators in this house, to find that no government, until now, has been able to curb, by determining a limit to the interest paid in our country, the army of thieves which has spread all over Canada.

In all the other fields our legislation is very strict and that is a very good thing in order to maintain law and order.

Even in the case of petty crimes, if the thief is caught, he will be fined or put in jail. That is all right.

But tell us please when will measures be taken against the master thieves? What price did they pay all the former governments to keep quiet and what means do they still use, at the present time, to benefit from complete protection, I was even going to say the blessing, of all governments?

We demand laws. The members of the New Democratic party have presented two bills in this respect. I introduced one myself and it is still at the bottom of some drawer.

When time has come to go to the rescue of our farmers, the bills which would save them stay on the order paper of the house waiting to go and die before the banking and commerce committee, because it seems that those which cross the threshold of a committee room do not leave it any more.

Therefore, to ensure the survival of our farmers, we propose that the house should determine as soon as possible the maximum interest rates a lender may charge, retroactive to ten years ago.

Thus, the federal government would recover many farms without having to spend much, and their former owners even less.

Thieves should be locked up, whether they are small or big, and I would add, all the more so if they are big.

This is further evidence, Mr. Minister, that Quebec has specific problems in agriculture.

Mr. Speaker, before resuming my seat, allow me to say that I feel the sub-amendment proposed by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) is not justified because the people have already rendered their decision on the work done by the previous government when they voted to have it sit on this side of the house.

This subamendment means nothing at all. For us, our last hope lies in the creation of a department of agriculture for the east, through which our farmers will find the necessary protection for their ambitions.

Mr. Jean-Pierre Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Does the hon. member wish to put a question to the member who has just taken his seat?

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, as I did not want to interrupt the hon. member while he was speaking, would he allow me to ask him a question now?

Mr. Gauthier: By all means.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): The hon. member seems to believe that the province of Quebec has been wronged as concerns agriculture. Would he advocate a greater encroachment by the federal government upon a field which comes rather under the jurisdiction of the provincial government?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I am very glad that question was asked because what I find funny in this house is that whenever it is suggested that assistance or support be given, government members never fail to speak of invasion again and again.

If the present government wants to break new ground, instead of invading fields where it has no business to be, let it go where help is requested, provided it is willing to do something and as long as it stays away from education and other fields which belong to the provinces.

When help is requested, which the government gives freely and generously to the other provinces, it should at least come to the assistance of the province of Quebec and hand her as many dollars as the other provinces get, if not more.

Mr. Clement Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since when is land drainage not under federal jurisdiction?

Mr. Gauthier: That is just it, Mr. Speaker, when I mentioned drainage, I was thinking of ARDA. It would be very easy, through ARDA—which does not affect provincial autonomy in the least—to have some drainage done and thereby recover the fat sums of money the government takes away from us each year.

Eastern Agricultural Policy Lacking

Mr. Clement Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, I felt very proud yesterday when the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton), while introducing his motion, asked me to second him, because since the beginning of the present session I have requested time and time again that the question of agriculture in eastern Canada be discussed in this house. But since the government would not give us such an opportunity, we had to bring that motion forward in order to debate that matter of utmost importance.

Fortunately, today, we realize that the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister without Portfolio, as heir apparent to a throne which may still be some distance away in the future of our country—because they do not seem to have cleared up the misunderstanding that exists within the cabinet about the proposed post of associate minister, junior minister or even minister for eastern Canada—are interested in the situation.

We introduced this amendment in order to enable us to discuss agriculture here in the house and also to let eastern farmers know that we are concerned with their problems.

On several occasions I have raised the matter of cost prices for eastern Quebec milk producers, namely those of my area, and all those throughout eastern Canada, eastern Ontario, Quebec and the maritimes, and every time the Minister of Agriculture stated that milk prices were higher this year compared to last year.

Mr. Speaker, the dairy industry is very important in the province of Quebec, and we witnessed, a few days after the swearing in of the Liberal government, a complete disruption through the announcement of a new dairy policy for the only purpose of saving from $6 to $8 million to the Canadian taxpayers.

I am not the one who says so, but it is the Minister of Agriculture himself who did in the house, as reported on page 140 of Hansard. We can also find the statement he made to western journalists and which was published in the Winnipeg Tribune—

[Text]

Here are his words:

> The net result will be a saving to the taxpayer of Canada of $6 million to $8 million.

This was the only reason that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) announced this new policy, and now the farmers of my province, the farmers of eastern Canada, are selling their milk at a lower price than they were paid last year.

[Translation]

The subsidy of 25 cents per 100 pounds on milk shipped to processing plants was abolished, Mr. Speaker. The assistance on the movement of cheese for export to the United Kingdom, or the subsidy on export, has been reduced by 1 cent per pound, or from 4 to 3 cents per pound. And there again, according to the Minister of Agriculture, the main reason for this reduction was to save $260,576 to the Canadian taxpayers. His statement appears on page 571 of Hansard.

The Liberals will claim that they wanted to promote cheese production.

If the Liberal government had been responsible, it would have extended the subsidy of 30 cents per hundred pounds to all the milk used in all cheeses made from whole milk. That is not what happened.

In addition, instead of reducing from 4 to 3 cents the assistance on the movement of cheese for export to the United Kingdom, it should have granted the 4 cent subsidy to all types of cheeses made from whole milk likely to be exported anywhere in the world.

With the domestic and foreign firm markets that we have and the existing potential of the domestic market, we could have expected a genuine policy on cheese.

It would not have been necessary to cause a loss of 10 or even 20 cents per 100 pounds of milk for thousands of milk producers in the province of Quebec and eastern Canada.

I have here, as I had the opportunity of showing the house the other day, some butter and cheese factory pay slips issued to farmers in my constituency who are getting as much as 23 cents per 100 pounds less and this, since the policy of the federal government which came into office last April has been announced.

I see that the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture is taking notes.

[Text]

Until today I thought he was the only one in this department who knew anything about agriculture, but when I read his speech this morning in which he said it was impossible to put $15 worth of fertilizer on one acre of land I know now that he does not know anything about agriculture. The average price of a ton of fertilizer is around $60 and the recommendation of the government of Quebec is between 400 to 600 pounds per acre which means more than $15 per acre.

Mr. Beer: Are you talking about pastures? I was speaking of the application of fertilizer to pastures.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Is the hon. member rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Pigeon: If you want to speak later you can do so.

Mr. Vincent: When I spoke the other day the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Pepin) came back in the house and said that the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska was not right. I said that to make 122½ pounds of butter we need only 100 pounds of butterfat. I said this was true and he said it was not true, that with 100 pounds of butterfat we can make only 121 pounds of butter. He said that in his riding they make only 117 pounds. But now he knows.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Is the hon. member rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Pepin: I have no claim to be an expert in agriculture but the figures I quoted at the time—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): This is not a question of privilege. If the hon. gentleman has said something that the hon. member would like to refute an opportunity will be provided.

Mr. Vincent: He said that these were the figures he got from the experts of the department which told him that with 100 pounds of butterfat only 121 pounds of butter can be made. The day after I showed him the figures from the Department of Agriculture which indicated exactly the same thing I had said in the house, between 122 and 123 pounds, so that means 122½ pounds.

Mr. Pigeon: I think the Minister of Justice wants to say something about agriculture.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Minister of Justice has been concerned with French culture.

Mr. Pigeon: Read his reply about the R.C.M.P.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I think the hon. member who has the floor has the right to continue his speech without being interrupted.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, as long as I will have a few minutes more in view of all these interruptions it will be all right. I raised the question in the House of Commons about the price of milk paid to farmers in my province and every time these people told me what I said was not true. I have here the answer given by the Minister of Agriculture.

We find the answer to that question at page 1246 of Hansard for June 17, 1963:

> Mr. Hays: I should like the house to know that since the new dairy policy has been in effect, the price of milk is up by 10 cents a hundred and 29 cents a hundred, higher than it has been for a number of years.

Please take note of that.

And here is a second answer, by the invisible Minister of Agriculture, found at page 1382 of Hansard for June 20, 1963:

> The price of milk is increasing—

—across Canada.

Even yesterday, the Minister of Agriculture told us:

> You will be interested to know that right across Canada the price of milk is higher than it was a year ago and that the price of cheese is higher than it was a year ago.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have the figures submitted by the Department of Agriculture which show that for the month of August 1963, the price of milk to cheese factories in Quebec was between $2.85 and $2.97 per 100 pounds. Those figures show also that the price of milk to cheese factories in Quebec in August 1962 was from $2.85 to $3.05 per 100 pounds, or 8 cents more per 100 pounds in 1962 than in 1963.

If we look further we see, for instance, that the price of cheese for August 1962 was 32.2 cents per pound, while the price of cheese for August 1963 was 35.3 cents per pound, or an increase—

[Text]

There was an increase in the price of cheese of 3.1 cents per pound and a decrease in the price of milk of 8 cents per 100 pounds. Everybody knows—

If even though I am not a politologist—

[Text]

Everybody knows that we can make from nine pounds to nine and a half pounds of cheese from 100 pounds of milk. There was an increase of 3 cents a pound in the price of cheese and this should have been an increase of between 25 and 30 cents per 100 pounds in the price of milk. This year the subsidy is 5 cents more than it was last year for milk sent to the cheese factory. Instead of receiving this increase of 25 cents to 30 cents on milk sent to the cheese factory, the farmers in the province of Quebec received a decrease. These are the final figures which were given to me by the Department of Agriculture and which have been given to all members of this house.

[Translation]

Now, Mr. Speaker, the same situation exists in the case of milk shipped to powdered milk factories. In August 1962—I take August as an example, but the same applies to May, June or July—the producer who sent his milk to be processed as powdered milk received $2.75 to $3.00 per hundred pounds, while in 1963, he received from $2.80 to $2.95; as can be seen, there is a decrease.

Eastern Agricultural Policy Lacking

[Text]

Now, what was the price of skim milk powder in 1962? It was $8.25 per 100 pounds. In 1963 the price of skim milk powder was $11.50 per 100 pounds. In 1962 there was no subsidy at all on casein, and the price of casein in Montreal was 20 cents a pound. In 1963, so I am informed by the government, there is a subsidy of 10 cents a pound on casein. This subsidy will go to 13 factories in Canada and will amount to $2,200,000. What is the price of casein in Montreal? It has been 21 cents a pound all summer and was 20 cents a pound last year. There has been only an increase of 1 cent a pound in the price and yet these 13 factories, of which 11 are in the province of Quebec, will be receiving a subsidy of $2,200,000. This subsidy does not go back to the farmers of my province. This is one of the reasons we have no confidence in this government, because they are not looking after the farmers of the province but they are looking after the factories in the province.

[Translation]

Now, Mr. Speaker, it has been stated that the Conservative party did nothing to help the eastern farmers. Those statements also originated from the other side.

An hon. Member: Mr. Hamilton said so.

Mr. Vincent: I said the other day when I spoke in the house that the price of milk was 44 cents higher per 100 pounds under the Conservative government in Ottawa. But my statement was challenged. If we consider the fact that the farmers of my constituency ship 150,000 pounds of milk yearly, this means that they received $700 more, thanks to the policies of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle and the previous Conservative government.

Here are the conditions exactly as they existed since 1953, as regards the prices of milk used in the manufacture of cheese, in the province of Quebec:

In 1953, we were in the red, that is I have written the figures in red so as to help me in my comments, from $2.23 to $2.40; in 1954, and for the month of August of each year, from $2.31 to $2.40; in 1955, still in the red, from $2.21 to $2.48; in 1956, in the red, from $2.45 to $2.76; in 1957, it is written in blue, from $2.73 to $3.00—one can see the difference at once—from $2.73 to $3.00; in 1958, from $2.87 to $3.15; in 1959, from $2.80 to $3.16; in 1960, from $2.85 to $3.12; in 1961, from $2.80 to $2.95; in 1962, from $2.85 to $3.05; in 1963—

In 1963, as soon as they come back, it goes from $2.85 to $2.97, a decrease of 8 cents.

The following is a report on the dairy products market established by the markets information section, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, for the province of Quebec. The report shows the prices paid to the producers for grade 1 milk testing 3.5 per cent butter fat.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like the following document to be published in Hansard.

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. Does the house give the hon. member permission to have this table printed in Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

* The price of cheese in August 1962 was as follows: 1st grade cheese, white, Quebec 32.2 cents per lb. subsidy: 25 cents per 100 pounds.

† The price of cheese in August 1963 was as follows: 1st grade cheese, white, Quebec 35.3 cents per lb. subsidy: 30 cents per 100 pounds.

Explanation

From 9 to 9½ pounds of cheese can be made out of a hundred pounds of milk.

An increase of 3 cents per pound in the price of cheese is equal to an increase of 25 to 30 cents a hundred pounds for milk.

The subsidy was 5 cents higher per 100 pounds for milk in 1963.

Mr. Vincent: Now, Mr. Speaker, so I will not have to read that report on the situation of milk powder manufacturing, I would also ask to have it inserted in Hansard.

*Price of skim milk, pulv. grade 1, in August 1962, was $8.25 per cwt.

The price of casein, in August 1962, was 20 cents per pound.

†The price of skim milk, pulv. grade 1, was in August 1963, $11.50 per cwt.

The price of casein, in August 1963, was 21 cents per pound.

Explanation

Thirteen commercial manufacturers of dried casein received a 10 cent per pound subsidy on casein since May 1 last. Eleven of those manufacturers are from Quebec. It is considered by the Department of Agriculture that this subsidy will cost $2.2 million to the federal treasury.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, that is the situation, even if the Minister of Agriculture repeated three times that such was not the case. Those are the figures from his own department and they are in contradiction with the statements by the minister.

The farmers in my province and in eastern Canada may well wonder why the Minister of Agriculture does not want to concern himself with Quebec and eastern Canada problems. Is it the intention to hide behind a smokescreen and say, for instance, that a minister of agriculture for eastern Canada will be appointed.

That is not what the farmers need. First, the farmers need what goes into their pockets, into their pocketbooks and you know exactly what they need. And it is our responsibility as members of parliament to point out the problems to the government, to ask them to find solutions. That is the only thing we are asking them through this motion. If the house will support us, we are prepared to go to the farmers. Besides, I had the opportunity to visit several of them some time ago.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, it is not surprising, as the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture said a while ago.

[Text]

This is the Prime Minister of Canada. He made a speech in Port Hope, Ontario on March 5, 1963. Here is what he said:

> The emphasis on price supports will be shifted from butter to skim milk powder—

I went back to my place and told that to the farmers. They said, "He is fooling. He does not know what he is saying". I said, "Why?", because I knew what he had said. They said, "It is impossible to make skim milk powder without making butter." One day I had a discussion with the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Tremblay). We talk the same language. I told him it was impossible. He said, "Well, we have to increase the production of skim milk powder but we have to decrease the production of butter". I said, "Sir, I am not an economist. It is all right if you sit around a table and discuss it with all the figures. But in practice it is impossible to make skim milk powder without making butter". These are the people who are looking after agriculture in Canada today. This is the reason we have so much trouble right now with the price of milk, and perhaps it is the reason for the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) not wanting to deal with this problem.

[Translation]

A minister stated that for this year, there was a decrease in butter production. I have here the Farm Situation in Canada for July 1963, published by his department. It said:

> That decrease in the production of butter involved some 115 million pounds of milk. Since a realtively small additional quantity of milk was used for cheese manufacturing and for sale as liquid milk, it seems that milk production in May and June was some 100 million pounds below 1962.

That is what he is taking credit for. It is the department of the Minister of Agriculture which said that there were some 100 million pounds of milk less in May and June. And that is also the reason why there was a decrease in butter production.

Now, Mr. Speaker, you know the milk situation, with regard to the price the producer is paid. There are also some other most significant aspects. It has been reported that the Conservative party had done nothing for the eastern farmers. Now, last week, I read a statement by the Quebec minister of agriculture. You know that in Quebec, we have to increase the productivity of our soil. Our soil is acid, which means, for those who are in the know, that the pH is not high enough. Therefore, lime has to be bought. Now that is what the Quebec minister of agriculture said. It is a great pity that our two federal ministers of agriculture are not in the house.

An hon. Member: They will be told.

Mr. Vincent: The federal cabinet would consult the Liberal members? They are no good as far as farming is concerned, with the exception, perhaps, of the hon. member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes (Mr. Drouin), who is one of my good friends and also probably one of the most competent in the agricultural field among those sitting over there, but they do not often ask his advice.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Vincent: Thank you for your applause when I said that the government does not often seek his advice. And, moreover, Mr. Speaker, would I be mistaken—

[Text]

There is not one minister in the house; not one.

Mr. Pigeon: I think they resigned this afternoon.

Mr. Vincent: The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) made such a good speech yesterday that all the ministers resigned today. There is not one in the house.

Well, the minister of agriculture of Quebec said this:

> Our farmers realize more and more the importance of using limestone or lime to neutralize the acidity of their soil to increase its fertility.
> It nevertheless remains concluded the minister, that insufficient lime is used in Quebec; indeed, because of the geological formation of our soil, the practice of liming is normally essential to obtain good crops.

That is a problem which exists in the province of Quebec. And what did the Conservative government do about it? In 1958—in March 1958—the ceiling of the subsidy of $1.50 a ton for lime sold to Canadian farmers, more particularly in the province of Quebec, was lifted by paying the provinces 60 per cent of the cost.

The grants paid by the federal government during the fiscal year 1962-63 amounted to a total of $2,471,280, for Canada of which $2,098,623 was paid to the province of Quebec; this represents for Quebec, of course, a total of 1,121,562 tons of lime. These were the figures on March 31 last, that is a few days before the Liberal party came to power.

What did the Liberals do? The new Liberal administration reduced that amount to $1,205,000 for the current year, that is 1963-64, which resulted into an increased expense of 50 cents per ton for our farmers who buy their lime in the province of Quebec on account of the policy of the new Liberal administration.

And no later than yesterday the Minister without Portfolio stated:

> "We understand the needs of the farmers in the province of Quebec."

As far as farm loans are concerned, we have improved the Farm Credit Act. In fact, I had the privilege of being a member of the advisory committee and, contrary to the statement made earlier by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier), during 1962-63, the Farm Credit Corporation granted an amount of $11,434,700 in the province of Quebec for a total of 804 loans; and this year, thanks to this new legislation introduced by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, $20 million at least of the corporation's funds will help setting up some economic units in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Vincent Drouin (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member allow a question? Does he consider as a substantial improvement the amendment brought in by the Quebec government, providing for a reduction of 50 per cent in the interest charged by the federal government? Does he not feel that it is precisely that measure which brought about a considerable increase in the number of loans in the province of Quebec?

Mr. Vincent: Certainly and I said so last year. In fact, if the hon. member will go to the trouble of reading the speech I made here last year, he will find that the government of the province of Quebec, under a Liberal administration, was no longer able to loan money, because it did not have any, and the provincial authorities were obliged to ask the federal government to pay them a commission in order that the federal government could come to the help of the farmers in the province of Quebec, since the latter could no longer get anything under a Liberal administration.

Mr. Drouin: May I ask the hon. member a question? Is he still talking without any political partisanship?

Mr. Vincent: None whatever.

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Vincent: When I am through speaking.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister without Portfolio said yesterday that it was time to stop passing the buck, that the federal government should stop passing the buck to the provincial government, and that the latter should do the same. The minister feels that a stop must be put to that.

However, when I asked him a question about the price of milk in the province of Quebec, he immediately passed the buck to the provincial authorities, saying that matter came under their jurisdiction. In fact, the reply he gave me then can be found at page 697 of the official report for June 5, 1963.

And yet, the minister said yesterday:

[Text]

We have to stop to throw the ball to the provinces and for the provinces to throw the ball to the federal government, and he said exactly this on June 5, 1963.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) said yesterday that one of the main problems affecting agriculture in eastern Canada concerned the high cost of agricultural implements used by farmers. In that matter, I ask the minister whether the present government has helped the farmer by levying a sales tax of 11 per cent on building materials, which will increase even more the cost of agricultural machines sold to Canadian farmers?

I ask him also whether the present government has reduced the production cost by levying this tax which will soon reach 11 per cent, and which the Canadian farmer will have to pay on cement, and everything he will need to improve his farm buildings as well as his cattle stalls? Is the production cost reduced by the levying of a tax on everything the farmer must use to raise his standard of living, to operate his farm in an economical way?

We must reduce the production cost in the province of Quebec, but the way the present government acts does not permit us to succeed.

Mention has been made yesterday of feed grain. Indeed, the Minister of Agriculture stated that this year, there are in the eastern elevators more grain, more barley, more oats than last year at the same date. Well, can the minister tell us who owns this grain, this barley, these oats that are now in the elevators of eastern Canada?

It is likely that the price of grain will be raised after the closing of navigation, because transportation by ship costs $4.50 per ton while it costs $13 by train.

The hon. member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes (Mr. Drouin) was right in complaining of that attitude of the minister, and I congratulate him for not accepting that new policy which, in my opinion, is entirely unfair.

Perhaps there is an improvement, but I suggest it is not a desirable one, because speculators are still there. They will probably increase the price of grain by $8 per ton instead of offering a regular price to Canadian farmers.

Japan bought from Canada, and the Japanese authorities know exactly how much the grain will cost them for eight months to come. Why not have the same thing in the east?

The bill of the Conservative government about feed grain was aimed at stabilizing the supply in the eastern section of the country, to establish price equalization, even to favour the production of grain in eastern Canada and finally to assure the stability of prices.

To that effect—and the present Minister of Agriculture is aware of that—a survey was made by the staff of the rural economy division of the Department of Agriculture. That survey concerning the problem of feed grain in the eastern part of the country was intended to give a general idea of some of the problems the government had to solve before making such a legislation operative.

Where are we, today, October 15, 1963? Are there interested people who do not want that legislation put on our statute books? Those are questions that farmers we meet ask themselves, and I also put them to the government.

Mr. Speaker, is the answer to all those questions, as the Minister of Agriculture has already stated, that this legislation will enable the federal government to save $6 to $8 million?

Should that be the case, let us remember that the farmers, particularly in Quebec, where 60 per cent of the farms bring in less than $2,400 per year in gross income, cannot afford to accept that kind of policy.

Our farmers are ready and willing to play their part, that is to say:

1. Feed the world with quality products, at minimum prices.

2. Contribute to the economic progress of the nation.

However, the farmers are conscious of the fact that they have a third role to play, especially this year, because in our part of the country the crops were poor. This third role is to earn a decent living.

Mr. Speaker, that is why the Conservatives moved the amendment I had the honour to second.

Eastern Agricultural Policy Lacking

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): May I direct a question to the member for Nicolet-Yamaska?

Mr. Vincent: Yes, certainly.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. gentleman who has just spoken where he collected his information in order to quote such figures, for I myself referred to the 1962-63 report published by the Farm Credit Corporation, in which it was shown that 109 loans were made in Quebec, as appears in the comparative table for the provinces. Do you have the report?—I do not have it, I sent it—

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, the thing is this: the report came to me directly from the Social Credit corporation—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Vincent: I mean the Farm Credit Corporation.

But you may find the answer to your question on page 835 of the official report for June 10, 1963, question No. 287.

Mr. Gauthier: I would like to ask a supplementary question. Can we rely on the report published by the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. Vincent: Yes.

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): I hesitate to interrupt this debate but I must advise hon. members that the time allotted to the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent) has expired.

Mr. Jean-Luc Pepin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask a question but I do not think I have time; but I should like to speak to what is almost a question of privilege.

[Translation]

I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. It is almost a privilege since it concerns the honour of members of the House of Commons and mine particularly. I should like to take exception here to a certain discrimination exerted in this house against those of us who cannot milk a cow. Since the beginning of the discussion, those things have been said over and over again. There are a few of us here in the house who are interested in the problems of agriculture and, for that reason, we want to improve our knowledge in that field. It is a question of honour. And for the information of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon), I repeat it is a question of honour.

[Mr. Vincent.]

Those who have experience in farming should not try to crush us under their superiority every time we rise to speak on agricultural matters.

Mr. Ricard: Go and tell the minister that.

Mr. Pepin: Otherwise, it could be said that the Minister of Transport is not a good minister because he could not run a locomotive or that the minister of immigration is not a good minister because he is not an immigrant. Those comparisons might be a little silly, but I wish to take exception to the attitude of some hon. members who would like to be the only ones to discuss farming problems, and I would also like to challenge some references made about myself by the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent).

Mr. Ricard: Go and ask the minister that.

Mr. Pepin: May I now ask the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska a question? I should like to ask him if he is, like us, in favour of the appointment of a second minister of agriculture who would have as the assignment of rehabilitating agriculture in the east of the country, as supported by the Catholic Farmers' Union and the Quebec Federated Co-operative?

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, before answering that question, I shall also like to ask one, or rather I shall answer by another question. Does the government intend to appoint an associate minister of agriculture, a junior minister of agriculture, or does it plan to set up a Department of Agriculture?

Mr. Caron: A Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Vincent: Because, in spite of all the speeches made to date, and I shall have an opportunity to come back to that, everything is quite confused and the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Pepin) knows that and he agrees.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege, I never gave my approval to what the member for Nicolet-Yamaska stated a moment ago. Obviously, I have great admiration for him and I want to say it again publicly. But he should not put words in my mouth.

Mr. Vincent: On the same point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, may I—

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I must point out to the hon. member that the time allotted to the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska has expired. I should also point out to the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Pepin) that if he proceeds to ask questions of the hon. member who has just spoken the time consumed will be considered his time. I call on the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge).

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While we do enjoy a limited amount of this verbal Quebec tiddledy-winks, we do not want to lose our opportunity to take our places in this debate. I rise to express our support for the subamendment. While I think that most hon. members will agree that the subamendment is clumsily worded, it is without a doubt intended to say that both old line parties have failed to implement policies which would result in a Canada-wide stable and prosperous agricultural economy. However, in the interests of biculturalism I trust that future subamendments introduced by the hon. and learned member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) will indicate a greater respect for the beauty and precision of the English language. I think that anyone reading the subamendment carefully will agree with us that it does require some literary spinal adjustment.

This debate has been infected by the same lack of constructive purpose that has characterized several previous debates this session. For members on the government side of the house and members of the official opposition to continue their pot-calling-the-kettle-black form of debate is to demonstrate a lack of responsibility which will in time undermine confidence in parliament and engender a lack of respect for members of this house. Speaking on behalf of this group I want to reiterate and emphasize the fact that we believe that, under the present circumstances possibly more than ever, it is our responsibility to deal with these matters in a constructive way. The members of this group believe that we should take advantage of this debate to discuss agricultural policies and legislation in relation to changing needs and circumstances, and believe that it is the duty and function of the opposition to advance constructive alternatives to government policies and proposals. That is what the hon. members of this group have tried to do in this debate.

Now, Mr. Speaker, Canadian agricultural policy naturally contains many unusual ramifications and diversifications. It must, in order to meet the needs of farmers from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The size of our country, its geography, varieties of climate, variations in soil and many variations in conditions present problems which can only be met effectively on the basis of members of this house having complete information and the facts with respect to the problems with which they are called upon to deal. These problems can only be met as a result of co-operation between federal and provincial governments, between governments and farmers' organizations and other groups in the community, and the understanding and active participation of large sections of the rural community by way of giving effect to leadership given by government, and the implementation of the policies announced by government.

I have been appalled, Mr. Speaker, in listening to this debate, at the ignorance of the situation we face today, and at the lack of facts and information upon which to base our decisions on these most important questions. Therefore, I suggest that it is one of the first duties of the members of this house to become informed on all the various questions and problems relating to agriculture, such as land use, production, overseas marketing, transportation, research, farm credit, crop insurance and the relationship between agriculture and the rest of our economy. All this offers a wide field for investigation and study on the part of members of this house. I have done some reading on this question. I have always been interested in agriculture, as have other members of this group. In our own agriculture committee we try to have members undertake studies of certain questions of which they have some knowledge from experience. My hon. friend from Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) was brought up on a farm and has had a lot of experience in farming. My hon. friend from Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron) has also demonstrated his knowledge of farming. On one occasion he came to our ranch when I was absent, arriving at a time when there was a certain crisis in the barnyard. I can say, without exaggeration, that he attended to the obstetrical ceremonies required by an ancient cow with dignity, distinction and complete aplomb.

The subject of agriculture and its relationship to government policy generally has, of course, been the subject of considerable study and investigation by persons interested both from a scientific and from a practical point of view. I wish to quote briefly from the November-December, 1960, issue of the Agriculture Institute Review. I think the persons who wrote this article made some excellent observations on the subject of the relationship between agriculture and public policy. The article is entitled "Agricultural Legislation in Relation to Changing Need" and it was written by M. Brownstone and C. Schwartz. They are discussing public policy in its relation to farming, and this is what they have to say:

> At the same time, the analysis points towards the central role which the state must play in solving farm problems in accordance with output and income criteria.

Eastern Agricultural Policy Lacking

Despite the validity of this general proposition, significant advances have been made in specific instances where policies have been based solidly on careful and realistic appraisal. Unfortunately, even these advances may well be handicapped by lack of a comprehensive approach—as was pointed out in the case of resource adjustment via farm credit.

One important disability in the effort to build public policy—

They are talking about agricultural policy.

—is divided jurisdiction and its political manifestations. This aspect of our constitution has provided an historic technique for escaping responsibility and for misplacing responsibility. But this is by no means applied consistently. In farm credit, for instance, we have reasonably full expression of national interest and policy combined with ample opportunity for provincial variations. But the development of marketing policy has been replete with skilful evasive tactics leading to an hiatus every decade. And crop insurance is an excellent example of federal power being used very effectively to minimize federal responsibility and potential embarrassment on the one hand and on the other to virtually coerce the provinces into unwilling acceptance of the more onerous and burdensome aspects of such a program.

The farmer as the focus of all this remains largely exposed to the economic elements. Clearly he has not developed an effective political voice any more than he has welded together a solid farm movement. Undoubtedly Canadian farmers could gain strength if (1) they could and would unify in a policy sense; (2) they would approach their problems with greater realism and understanding of the total economy and its dynamics; (3) make greater use of their own economic organizations, largely in the co-operative form; (4) form an alignment with other groups in our economy whose basic aims are not in fundamental conflict with those of the farmer. In this manner, the farmers can perhaps offset their undoubtedly waning political influence as farm population continues to decline both absolutely and relatively. Of course, as against this we have a little prairie homily which goes something like this: "It's not the size of the barking dog that counts but the size of the dog's barking".

I think there are some interesting comments to be found in that article and I would recommend hon. members to look it up in the library.

In this group we try to make constructive proposals with regard to any of the subjects we are called upon to debate in this house. We recognize the complications and difficulties surrounding agricultural legislation and policy. We do not think it is sufficient to refer continually to the past and to say "You did this" or "You did not do that and so on". We had, in the late James Gardiner, despite all the criticisms which were made of him, a particular champion of prairie agriculture and we had in the former minister of agriculture, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) a man who was thoroughly devoted to the cause of agriculture and who was responsible for having some good legislation placed on the statute books, particularly the ARDA measure, and the Farm Credit Act. I think there is credit due to both sides, and criticism to both sides, as well. However we must look to the future and the solution of these difficulties will require more than just superficial debate. It will require a close study of all the circumstances surrounding the industry in all its aspects from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

I suggest that this need offers a great opportunity for the agriculture committee of this house to function as never before in order to provide a basis for sound agricultural policies. It should undertake a study of these aspects of agriculture about which many members of this house and many people in Canada know very little. I suggest that the occasion presents an opportunity for a committee of the other place to co-operate with the agriculture committee of this house. There should be some planning of this work. I give full credit to the committees of the other place which have undertaken studies of such important subjects as the narcotics problem, the manpower question and the question of land use. Some very useful and constructive work has been done by the committees of the other place which have studied these matters, and I think we should secure the co-operation of the other place in sharing the heavy burden which is imposed by the needs of the moment with respect to understanding the facts relating to agriculture. I suggest that some effort be made to plan this study as between the agriculture committee of this house and the appropriate committee of the other place. A committee should be established and it should call before it senior members of the Department of Agriculture. The first thing to know is the workings of the Department of Agriculture. I have met members of the house who have very little knowledge of how the various branches of the Department of Agriculture work and what their functions are. I think we should get the views of the senior officials on the administrative machinery of today. I believe we should have representatives of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and of the farmers' unions come before the committee to give evidence and express their opinions. We should have representatives of the fruit growers' organization, the poultry association, the beekeepers and all other farm organizations and those interested in and related to agriculture.

I think we should also get the views of the farmers' wives through the rural women's organizations, because in order to understand the problem we must have the views of all those serving agriculture and working in agriculture. I think we should ask representatives to appear from the Agricultural Institute of Canada, an organization composed of graduates in agriculture and allied sciences who are giving considerable study to this question and have throughout the years. I think representatives of the Agricultural Institute of Canada could make a valuable contribution to the information on this very important question.

I also suggest that we should have representatives of the Canadian tree farmers association come before the agriculture committee, and I do so because in Great Britain and in Sweden and other European countries tree farming has always been very closely related to agriculture. I am talking about private tree farming undertaken by farmers and others as a part time occupation. Many aspects of tree farming are under the administration of the agricultural departments in these countries, and their agricultural organizations foster this other aspect of farming.

I suggest that we should call before the committee representatives of the tree farmers of Canada so they can tell their story as to the relationship of private tree farming to the development of the family farm, and give us their advice. I also believe we should call representatives of other groups who wish to give evidence before the committee and who can contribute something to the information and knowledge of the committee. We should also ask representatives of the co-operatives and credit unions to come before the committee and give their views with respect to co-operative marketing, agricultural credit and so on.

I know that this represents a pretty heavy agenda, Mr. Speaker, but in my view this is something that must be undertaken if members of the house are going to pay the close and careful attention to agricultural problems that is demanded of them under present circumstances. I say once again it is not sufficient to charge one another superficially with failing to do this or failing to do that.

I believe it should be the responsibility of this committee to make a report to the house and to make recommendations to the house as a result of exhaustive study of the problem. It would then be the responsibility of the government to give very serious consideration to the recommendations of the committee. I am convinced that we are not going to solve any of the vast and complicated problems that face us today unless in the first instance we get the information and the facts, and then seek co-operation between the federal and provincial governments and the organizations of the people directly concerned as well as the daily participation of those who are directly affected by the legislation that is the result of this study.

I make these few observations in what we consider to be our attempt to present some constructive alternatives to the verbal fireworks that have often dominated this debate. Finally, may I say I am a modest man. I have first mentioned that the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) has had farming experience and the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron) has also had experience in various aspects of farm operations. As an ancient milkmaid I now volunteer as a person well qualified to referee the milking contest between the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) and the hon. member for Timiskaming, to which we are all looking forward.

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, in taking part in the debate on the motion brought forward by the former minister of agriculture, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton), I wish to emphasize the reasoned, practical approach that he took in presenting his motion to the house. He brought to our attention a problem that deserves the consideration of all hon. members. In outlining the problem he brought forward statistics that portray in dramatic detail the fundamental change that has been taking place in our basic economy, in our basic industry, agriculture. This is a process that began a number of years ago, indeed even before the second world war, but it has accelerated within the past few years.

These changes have taken place for several reasons, because of the necessity of mechanization of our farms, because of advances in technology, because of improved land use practices, because of improved cultivation practices and the use of fertilizers, and certainly because of the tremendous competition there is in agriculture and the need to make our agriculture plant as efficient as possible. I do not think there is a group in the Canadian economy that has proceeded at the pace agriculture has in increasing efficiency of production.

But with this growth and with these adjustments have come problems. Contrary to what has been suggested by some hon. members, I do not think there is a panacea. I do not think there is one single solution. I do not think we can deal with these problems by adopting national policies applicable to all parts of Canada in the same manner. The speech of the then prime minister on August 30, 1958, emphasized this point. He emphasized that in reality there were two problems, first of all a national one that had to be dealt with by national policies and then parallel with the national policies must go regional policies to deal with particular situations that arise from time to time. One year there may be a problem in the maritimes. Another year there may be drought on the prairies. Certainly no one can say that national policies can deal with such situations because they are all different, and the methods of farming are different in these areas.

I suggest there are five basic considerations that must be met in the development of an agricultural policy. First of all, it must meet the requirements of the constitution. In other words, does the federal government have authority in that particular field or is it a matter of provincial authority? Is it possible to develop policies that are the joint responsibility of the provincial and federal governments? We have such programs in effect today, and I refer to crop insurance.

Then, will these policies—and we must avoid this at all costs—result in circumscribing the personal freedom of the farmer to make a decision himself? I think this is important, that the power to make decisions remain in the hands of the farmer. Third, are these policies in keeping with the needed adjustments in the farm industry in view of the foreseeable long term trend? Fourth, is the policy flexible enough to permit adjustment and change as the need arises? Fifth, and this is academic but nevertheless important, will it do the job that it is intended to do?

I suggest to you, sir, that if we are to develop policies that are going to meet the needs of this industry it is necessary that these five basic requirements be met. The Minister of Agriculture replied to what I thought was the reasoned approach of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle. I think every member regarded his speech with some consternation and was somewhat appalled at the attitude the minister took. The statistics presented by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, I felt, were undeniable. They were reliable and they pointed out a problem. No one has denied that the problem exists, except the minister himself. Did he seriously attempt to deal with the problem outlined by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle? No, he did not. The minister shrugged it off. This, said he, was a lot of junk. What an attitude to take. I am sure that the farmers of the maritimes, those referred to by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, who are not enjoying the standard of living prevailing in other parts of the country, and who belong to the low income group referred to by the hon. member, are not going to be happy when they find they have a minister who shrugs off their problems and says they do not exist.

Mr. Matheson: He did not say that.

An hon. Member: He did.

Mr. Jorgenson: I ask the hon. member, who frequently becomes very vocal without making too much sense, to refer to the minister's speech. He will see for himself that what I have said is true, unless he has a capacity to read something into that speech that was never put there.

The minister referred to the dominion bureau of statistics figures relating to the first half of 1963. He pointed out that agriculture income during the first half of this year was higher than ever; that it was a record. This is true. I ask him, can the government that now sits over there assume credit for that increase in farm income? I ask them, what policies were implemented when they came to power that would have materially affected the trend that had developed during the early part of the year? What policies have they implemented that would either reverse or accelerate that trend? I am sure if they are honest with themselves they will admit that nothing was done. Certainly, the 60 days of indecision produced nothing that would have affected the trend that was developed by the former minister of agriculture and the former government.

The attitude of the minister, and this was most surprising, was that to be a successful minister of agriculture, you have to milk a cow; you have to know how to put your drill in the ground for seeding and you have to know how to plow a straight furrow. I suggest, sir, that these are not the qualifications that make a good minister of agriculture. Since he is a millionaire farmer, perhaps he has had experience in milking a cow and perhaps he has plowed a furrow. I suggest to him that a more fundamental, a more basic approach to the problems of the farmer referred to by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle would be a little more appropriate at this time.

The minister suggested there were no problems. I noted that, in this respect, his speech was somewhat contradictory in comparison with the speech delivered by the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Tremblay), who was immediately rushed in to salvage something of the wreck that had been created by the reckless driving of the minister. There was an attempt to cover up the damage and get back what had been lost as a result of the incredibly stupid statements of the minister.

The Minister without Portfolio took a different attitude. He suggested that there was a problem, and he went back over the years in trying to develop his theme. I agree with many of the points the minister made in connection with these problems. First of all, the problems must be properly diagnosed, and they will not be properly diagnosed as long as we have the present Minister of Agriculture. The statement of the Minister without Portfolio points out one of the basic difficulties we will have as a result of the attempt to divide the Department of Agriculture. This suggestion will produce some rather devastating results, when you have two ministers with views that are so far apart. One minister takes the attitude there is no help needed, while the other has the attitude that there may be a problem.

May I call it six o'clock?

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Jorgenson: Mr. Speaker, when the house rose at six o'clock I was in the process of outlining the inadequacies and shortcomings of this government. Having barely got started on that topic, I came to the conclusion during the supper hour that to enumerate them all would take too much time. Therefore in the limited time at my disposal, during the next ten minutes I want to go on to a different part of my speech. Some question was raised during the course of this debate as to what we had been doing about the problem that was outlined to the house yesterday in the statement of the former minister of agriculture. If hon. members opposite want to know what has been done, I would invite them to examine the record. Let them examine the farm credit legislation that was introduced into this house by the previous government. Let them examine the amendments that were brought in a few years later to improve that legislation. It is interesting to note, in this connection, the difference of opinion that exists between the present minister and the pseudo minister who would perhaps have held that portfolio had he been able to win a seat. The present minister says "Blow the lid off"; the former member from Assiniboia was complaining, when the amendments were introduced, that we were making loans that were too large. This is an example of the confusion in the minds of hon. members opposite. This is indicative of the confusion that exists in their minds today and has existed for a number of years.

Let them examine the price stabilization legislation that was brought in, and the amounts of money paid out to deserving farmers in all parts of Canada. Let them examine the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act introduced into this house by the former minister in the Conservative government. In connection with this, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister—who is still not in his seat and has not been for most of the day—what is happening in relation to ARDA. What has happened to the research programs that have been undertaken? What has been done in order to push forward the plans that were developed by the previous minister? What is happening to the programs that were started in co-operation with the provinces? We get no answers from the government when they are questioned. The minister has a rather quaint way of replying to questions. When problems are brought to his attention he tells us he is either sitting on them or he is peeking at them from some direction through some peephole somewhere. But no statement of policy has even been made by this government in so far as agriculture is concerned.

We, quite rightly I think, accuse the minister of not carrying out the programs that the Liberal party enunciated in such loud terms during election campaigns. But in the final analysis it is the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) who is responsible. He has tried to slough off the responsibility, weaknesses and ineptitudes of his various ministers, the fiasco of the Gordon budget, the difficulties the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh) got herself into.

Miss LaMarsh: Who, me?

Some hon. Members: Yes, you.

Mr. Jorgenson: These problems concern the Minister of Agriculture and the other members of the government; but in the final analysis it is the Prime Minister who has, in my opinion, shown ineptitude, lack of decisiveness and bumbling inadequacy. What has the Prime Minister done so far as agriculture is concerned? First of all, we have a Minister of Agriculture, who traditionally has been a front bench member of the cabinet, now relegated to the back seats, and practically down to the bottom of the list in seniority. Where have they put his office in the House of Commons? Without a road map and a boy scout you could not even find it. When you do find it, when you do go in to talk over problems with him, he does not want to talk about two subjects—he refuses to talk about them at all—agriculture, and the two ministers of agriculture.

He told us a while ago, and the Prime Minister enunciated this policy during the election campaign, that they were opposed to the payment of acreage payments to western farmers. We could not understand the reason, but the Minister of Agriculture gave us a clue this afternoon when he said that $200 per farmer did not help our 50,000 farmers. Now we get some idea of which side this government is on. The minister went out west and told the farmers to reduce acreage, and in his quaint way he suggested that they should not spend all their money in one store—"Save up your dollars". They had the supreme audacity, after making the wheat sales to Russia and China, to go out west, the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp), to tell the farmers that these sales meant about $2,000 per farmer. In the southeastern corner of Manitoba there was a crop failure this year, and I would like to know how these sales are going to help the farmers of that area. This is an example of the misleading things they have been saying across this country for a number of years.

I suggest to the Prime Minister that he could have resolved his difficulties in so far as the Minister of Agriculture is concerned. He could have assisted himself. There could have been a vacancy created in the constituency of St. Boniface and the former premier of the province of Manitoba, Mr. Campbell, could have been brought in and could have taken his place, and they would not have had to scrape the bottom of the barrel in this way. I see that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) is listening very intently to my remarks. He is obviously impressed with the validity of my indictment against his government and is no doubt contemplating the opportunity that may one day be his to act upon the suggestions I am making at this time.

We have attempted to bring before the house a problem that is very real, a problem that affects every member of the house, and a problem that should receive the attention of the government. It is interesting to note the minister's speech of yesterday and contrast it with the voices of doom we heard during the last election crying out against such things as a stagnating economy and unemployment. The minister, as reported at page 3547 of Hansard of yesterday's date made reference to the high consumption of beef which the Canadian people are enjoying. He was attempting to illustrate our buoyant economy, and using the figures up until the end of June this year he said:

> This increase must have been caused by a very buoyant economy and full employment.

What a far cry that is from those voices of doom which we heard during the course of the election campaign.

The minister made a rather interesting observation in connection with what he considered to be the number one problem in Canada today, namely the high cost of machinery. I ask, what has the government done to bring down the cost of machinery? I have seen no action on the part of the government other than to impose a tax on those who produce the farm machinery, thereby raising the cost of it. Their actions of the past come back to haunt them again on this score.

I urge every hon. member of the house to support the motion put forward by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton). It is an indictment against the bumbling—to use their phrase—fumbling, inept, indecisive, lackadaisical performance of the government, failing in its responsibilities not only to the agriculturists of this country but to Canadians as a whole.

Mr. Speaker: It being 8.15 o'clock it is my duty, pursuant to section 4(d) of standing order 56 to interrupt the proceedings and put the question on any amendment before the house.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS—NORTHERN TRANSPORTATION COMPANY, COMPETITION WITH PRIVATE ENTERPRISE

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I have a grievance this evening, and to put it in a nutshell for hon. members it has to do with the government allowing civil servants to make policy in the North-west Territories instead of merely carrying out policy. This means that the government has abandoned its duty to control and give direction to its servants, with the result that the private enterprise sector of the economy has suffered. I am talking, Mr. Speaker, about Northern Transportation Company, which is a crown corporation answering to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) and which is in direct competition with Yellowknife Transportation Company and Arctic Shipping Company. These two private carriers operate along the Mackenzie river and in the Arctic ocean.

I realize, Mr. Speaker, that some members may not be very interested in this subject. I would be quite willing to allow a couple of minutes for them to take their private conversations outside because I know that if I speak more than five minutes at this volume my voice will collapse. When the Northern Transportation Company was set up, it had a very simple job to do, namely that of, supplying Eldorado Mining and Refining at Great Bear lake. Originally, the supplying of fuel in the Arctic was taken on by that company, despite the fact that Yellowknife Transportation, a private concern, was already there and ready, willing and able to undertake the supply job. Many years back, under a former Liberal government, we saw the first step taken which put into the Arctic a company to compete with private enterprise and which violated the rule we have that the government should only provide these services where private enterprise is unable to carry out the needed functions.

Mr. C. D. Howe, who was a member of the former Liberal government, talked about the Northern Transportation Company in this house on several occasions. He said it was not the purpose of that company to complete with private enterprise. He made it very clear that he would have been most surprised at the suggestion there was competition between Northern Transportation and other companies, and expressed the view that Northern Transportation was merely carrying out its function of supplying government agencies in those places where private enterprise was unable to do so.

The situation today, Mr. Speaker, is that Northern Transportation and the Yellowknife company are competing neck and neck throughout the whole length of the Mackenzie river and the Arctic ocean. As recently as this year, Northern Transportation assumed a new role in the Arctic ocean for the first time. They have gone into the business of carrying bulk oil in competition with Arctic Shipping. I submit that there is a very real grievance on the part of those shareholders in Arctic Shipping who see this trend, and who realize that unless this government stops the civil servants from trying to compete with private enterprise, then the private companies will have to fold up.

I have asked some pertinent questions of the Minister of Trade and Commerce concerning government policy. The most significant answer he gave was to the effect that Northern Transportation Company believed in operating in a businesslike way; that it would continue to improve, repair or replace its equipment as needed. This response to my question about competition indicates the businesslike way in which this company has abandoned its previous role of a crown agency supplying services which were not available, and has developed into an agency competing for every bit of business it can get from private enterprise, just as if it was another private company, and just as if it were answerable to shareholders who wanted to make a profit out of their investment.

I submit that the only reason Northern Transportation Company executives are interested in expanding that business is not to provide further service in the Arctic which cannot be provided by private enterprise, it is not for the good of the government, but is merely a little more empire building by some civil servants who like to feel that they can go to the north. I am sure that any hon. member of this house who has ever been in Canada's Arctic will realize that more than half of the total business of the area is government business, and more than half of the people gainfully employed are working for the government. These civil servants want to take advantage of their position. They want to do some empire building to build up their own name, but they forget that their duty is to the public.

The people for whom I speak are not that worried about government competition, if the government competition were subjected to the same rules and the same regulations as private enterprise. The Northern Transportation Company, in addition to having a natural advantage through its government connections, has stacked the deck. Three years ago the Yellowknife Transportation Company tried to get an L.S.M. ship into Canada. They believed this former wartime vessel could play a very useful role in the transportation of some kinds of goods, and that this ship would enable them to handle their business more efficiently. However, Canadian maritime regulations prohibit the entering into Canada of a vessel more than five years old. This ship was considerably older and the company was refused permission to bring it into the country. The company then built new tugs and new barges at great expense to handle the business as best they could.

The Yellowknife Transportation Company, a private company, was refused permission to bring in the boat, but this spring the Northern Transportation Company, a crown company, brought in the sister ship, another L.S.M., to Vancouver. They started refitting that boat. They knew that the maritime regulations would not permit this, but they sought a government order in council to bypass the maritime commission. I am afraid the minister's answer to me in the house the other day in which he said that the maritime commission would not allow Northern Transportation to further equip the vessel is not quite accurate. It is the vessel itself that comes under maritime regulations. We have the spectacle now of a vessel in Vancouver being re-equipped to do a job in the north, the very thing which our government prohibited private enterprise from doing three years ago. I do not know at the moment how much money the government has wasted on this project. If they are going to make Northern Transportation Company return that vessel, then we have a good grievance against them for wasting this money. Certainly, we have a grievance against the officers of this crown corporation, because not only was private enterprise prevented from doing this same thing three years ago, but the crown corporation, knowing their vessel was three times too old to comply with the maritime regulations, have decided to go ahead and bring it in anyway. They feel that they can get away with what they want.

The answers the minister has given to me in this house and in private conversation, the manner in which the head of the Northern Transportation Company and the deputy minister of Trade and Commerce have acted, indicate that these civil servants either have not told the minister the truth or he is not quite able to understand what they have told him.

It certainly indicates that the Minister of Trade and Commerce fails to understand what is going on in his department. His conversation with me indicates that they do not believe in this extension of competition between the crown and private enterprise, and meanwhile his officials continue on a course of action which can have no other end result but to knock all private competition out of the north and will within the next year knock out one of the two companies operating up there.

I suggest that hon. members on all sides of the house have the same stake in this matter that I have. The mere fact that the two companies which are suffering at the present time operate in the far north does not make any less serious the fundamental objection that I am sure will be taken by everyone in this house, that we have the crown entering actively into business in competition with private enterprise when there is no need for it; and going even further, taking unfair advantage. I hope some other hon. members who are aware of this problem will go a little further in this matter.

Mr. Gene Rheaume (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add my comments to those of the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Nugent), particularly in relation to the massive program of extension and building that this crown corporation, Northern Transportation Company, has entered into in direct competition with a private shipping company in the Canadian northwest. In particular I want to point out the failure of Northern Transportation Company to make use of local people from the north on their freighting operations. There is an extensive labour pool of Eskimo and Indian people along the Mackenzie river and along the Arctic coast now being serviced by Northern Transportation Company. The policy of this crown corporation is in direct contrast to policies followed by the private enterprise operation, Yellowknife Transportation, and Arctic Shipping Company, whose policy it was to hire—and still is—Eskimo and Indian people. In fact these private firms have gone so far as to send Indian and Eskimo people from the Northwest Territories to Vancouver at company expense, where they can be taught the skills necessary to qualify them for river operation. As I say, when Northern Transportation Company embarked upon this program of expansion into the Arctic, they did not use the local labour force that was available.

The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona has already mentioned that Northern Transportation Company expanded after taking over a small operation from the Hudson's Bay Company. Many experts on the north have a great deal to say about the Hudson's Bay Company and its method of operation. But there is one thing no one can take away from the Hudson's Bay Company; they did make extensive use of Eskimo and Indian people in all phases of their operation. This was particularly true in terms of their shipping operations in the Canadian Arctic. However, when Northern Transportation Company began its expanded operations this summer, the company imported hundreds of workers from southern Canada into such Arctic communities as Tuktoyaktuk, where there was already a labour pool of trained Eskimo people who had no other employment opportunities, now the Hudson's Bay Company was not operating shipping services.

I also want to point out the conflict or the apparent paradox between what the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIlraith) tells us in this house in relation to private enterprise in the north, and statements made by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing). In particular I want to refer to an article printed in the northern newspaper entitled News of the North of September 5. I might point out that the editor of this newspaper is an executive officer of the Liberal party of the Canadian north, so we must assume that everything he says is absolutely correct. He describes the visit of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, when he told Yellowknife people:

> Mr. Laing foresaw the gradual withdrawal of the government from economic fields as private industry came into the north.

However, when questioned about this in the house, the minister denied that he had made such a statement. My point is this. On the one hand the Minister of Transport tells us that it will be his policy to allow Northern Transportation Company, with all the power of the public purse behind it, to expand its operations and to compete wherever possible with private firms operating in the north, while one of his colleagues, also enunciating government policy, says in the north that the government will be getting out of direct competition, but later in the house denies that this statement was ever made. This puts the member for the Northwest Territories in a very peculiar position, because one of the recommendations of the Glassco commission was that the operations of the Northern Transportation Company should come under the aegis of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. At that time this recommendation seemed to have some merit, but in view of the apparent inability of these two ministers of the crown to at least get together so that they present a united front—and I use the word "front" very carefully here—and because they cannot give the house the same story, I think the people of the north have some rather serious doubts that the intentions of the present government in relation to northern development are honest.

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, I should like to state a rather serious grievance because it concerns the attitude of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) with regard to his responsibilities towards parliament.

Aware of the seriousness of my remarks and especially of the seriousness of my grievance—

[Text]

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I wish to speak briefly on the same subject.

Mr. Speaker: I was under the impression that the hon. member for St. Mary (Mr. Valade) was speaking on the same subject, but in view of the fact that he is changing the subject I think the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Bigg) has priority.

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Speaker, I will try to be brief, in view of the impasse in which we find ourselves. I am afraid that this question of the Northern Transportation Company is not as simple as the proposition put forward by my hon. friend from Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Nugent) would seem to indicate. I will agree with him that the Northern Transportation Company has had something of a monopoly on transportation into the north; but my understanding of the matter is that when it was put in by the government of that day nobody was keen on transporting into the north at reasonable rates, and it was only by a government supported company, a crown corporation, that anything like adequate transportation was available into the north.

I have also a very, shall we say, personal interest in this matter because the towns of Fort McMurray and Waterways, which have pioneered the north, rely on the Northern Transportation Company to a great extent for employment. With the cutback in the production of uranium at Uranium City these two towns have been seriously hit. It is only fair to say that this crown corporation has been looking for other contracts in order to keep the payroll adequate to support these two towns. My suggestion is that we do not try in any way to cut back the work of Northern Transportation Company, but rather that we take the positive approach of developing the north to such an extent that not only will Northern Transportation Company be occupied, but that the Yellowknife Company and other companies may be required to carry loads to the north and also on the return haul.

This brings up a question closely allied to the same point, in that it is time the government and the civil service looked into the question of co-operating with the provinces in a reassessment of Buffalo park. The Peace river changes into the Slave river just at the southern end of the park, and water transportation will be the life blood for any future development in the far north, and in Buffalo park itself.

I am sure most hon. members on all sides of the house know that our national parks have been set aside as playgrounds for future generations, and that they are not to be interfered with; but I am sure many hon. members are not aware of the situation concerning Buffalo park. However, knowing Buffalo park as I do, and as many people up there do, it is what might be called a big white elephant. We have set aside an area, approximately 14,500 square miles in my own district alone, which will never become a playground because of the distance from centres of population. It is far too large for anything like a game reserve, but it is extremely rich in minerals, gypsum and timber.

This area has never been properly explored because, as hon. members know, mineral exploration and development cannot be carried on in any Canadian national parks. This may be a quite correct policy for Banff, Jasper and other parks, but it should not apply to Buffalo park. It is time the province of Alberta and the dominion government got together and took a new look at the park. If they did, and if development took place, then Northern Transportation and any other private company that wanted to go into the north would have plenty to do. Instead of worrying about cutbacks in Fort McMurray, Waterways, Yellowknife and down the Mackenzie we would have the opportunity to provide jobs even for many of those who live in so-called southern Canada. I wish to thank the hon. member for yielding the floor to me.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Yukon wish to speak on the same subject?

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The problem which confronts the house on the grievance raised by the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Nugent), is indeed not so simple, as the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Bigg) has pointed out. I think the problem has arisen because of the rightly adopted role of the government during world war II of providing transportation facilities in the north, where such facilities were not available and where private enterprise was unable and unwilling to go into the north to provide them.

During world war II uranium was an essential product which had to be manufactured for the benefit of the nation as a whole. Before the accelerated development of the Arctic both for economic and defence purposes, which began during world war II, which has continued ever since, and was most dynamically tackled during the six years of Conservative government, transportation was a problem that required government assistance.

The long term interests of Canada demanded that transportation routes into the north be provided, yet there was not the volume of traffic, nor even the immediate potential of traffic, needed to encourage private capital to supply transportation in the variety and quantity that was necessary. The bush pilots blazed the way in the north, but what was urgently required was road, rail and water transportation for bulk goods. In fact the development of the uranium mines in the north pointed up more than ever before the requirement for immediate acceleration of the expansion of transport for the transportation of bulk goods.

At that time the federal government, and rightly so, realized the deficiency of transportation requirements in the north and its obligations in that regard, and it assisted in the provision of those transportation facilities that did in fact open up large sections of our Arctic, and even of our sub-Arctic, during world war II. I think I need only cite the Alaska highway, and of course the establishment of Eldorado Aviation and Northern Transportation, which are both subsidiaries of Eldorado Mining and Refining Company Limited. But the true role of government, as the minister of northern affairs said so often in the Yukon and in the Northwest Territories during his recent visit, was to encourage the development of private industry. With that sentiment expressed by the minister I agree wholeheartedly.

We should encourage the development of private industry, not only in mines and in farmlands, but also in the transportation field, without continuing costly government aid. This is what is happening here; because I am sure if hon. members will recall to their minds the last annual statement of Eldorado Aviation as well as that of Northern Transportation Company—but more so Eldorado Aviation—they will realize this particular operation is a submarginal one now, particularly since the cutbacks in uranium production that have appeared in recent years.

The transportation arms of both of these subsidiaries of Eldorado Mining and Refining Company Limited were set up specifically to provide transportation for the product of the government established uranium mines in the north, but instead of tax dollars being spent to provide these services, private capital should provide them as soon as the traffic flow becomes sufficient to support a privately-owned transportation network. Then, instead of money going out of the national treasury to provide these services, money will be coming into the national treasury in the form of taxes paid by private companies operating in the Arctic.

This is not an isolated view. It is a view which is supported by Mr. Aubrey Simmons, who was the Liberal member of parliament for the Yukon until 1957, and after his defeat in 1957 became the president of Arctic Shipping Company Limited, which company of course was in direct competition with Northern Transportation Company in carrying supplies to D.E.W. line sites and things of that nature.

This whole matter was questioned in the special committee on research in 1961 when we heard evidence from Mr. Harcourt, president of Yellowknife Transportation, and Mr. Simmons of the Arctic Shipping Company Limited, and I think that Mr. Simmons made a good case. I think he was rather a good, misguided Conservative in this respect because he advocated the gradual withdrawal of Northern Transportation Company from competition with private industry in the north.

As I said before, I think the government has a proper role to play in the north where private industry is either reluctant or unable to provide investment capital to erect the framework of transportation which will meet the needs of the north and the ultimate benefit of the nation. When private industry is not willing, then the government has a responsibility to get in there and do it with the taxpayers' dollar.

Here we have a quite different situation. It was pointed up in 1961 when the special committee on research went into detail on this matter. Mr. Simmons on that occasion, when he presented the brief, had this to say:

> With the growth rate in the Arctic at the present time, I submit the time has now arrived for government to make a phased withdrawal from the field of Arctic transportation to allow private enterprise to take up a share of the burden and participate in the great adventure of development of the Arctic.

So many times in the past I have endorsed the views of Mr. Simmons, and here is yet another occasion when I am compelled to agree with my friend. Here was a man who knew the north and its requirements, and he certainly knew the inroads being made on private investment capital and private enterprise in the north by Northern Transportation Company Limited.

Mr. Simmons went on to say in the brief which he presented to the special committee on research that—> —Arctic Shipping Limited stands ready and willing to assume this responsibility. We are waiting only for the authority that must come from a responsible government source.

Mr. Simmons was not the only one who expressed these sentiments. The same sentiments were expressed by Mr. Harcourt and other officials of Yellowknife Transportation Company Limited, which is the private company operating along the Mackenzie and in the Arctic. They were also held by Mr. Harris, the vice president of Pacific Western Airlines Limited and other officials of that air line. This is not a singular problem relating to Northern Transportation Company Limited; it also involves the other subsidiary of Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited, namely the Eldorado Aviation Company Limited. Here is a company with a DC-4, a DC-3, and a Sikorsky 55, which they had to trade in for two other helicopters because they made a mistake in purchasing this Sikorsky. It was to be used for searching for uranium, and then the demand fell off. Here are these people, in face of a declining demand in their own operations, enlarging their own air force. It seems to me that the taxpayers' dollar is being wasted on an operation like this when there are innumerable private charter companies operating throughout the north and when there is a recognized air line company, such as Pacific Western Airlines Limited, who went on record in the special committee on research in 1961 as saying that they would provide the same service now being provided by the Eldorado Aviation Company Limited, the subsidiary of Eldorado Mining and Refining Company Limited, and at less cost per ton mile. The same guarantee was given by Yellowknife Transportation Company Limited, a company which, all credit due to it, has formed itself and grown, albeit slowly because of the competition offered by this crown corporation, Northern Transportation Company Limited, and grown in spite of a government-sponsored program to limit the development of private investment in the north.

As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, I think the government has a responsibility in the north to provide transportation facilities when none is available from private sources. But it seems to me that when private enterprise reaches the stage where it is ready to take over and maintain services which were not there when the government entered the field, it is then time for government gradually to withdraw. I say this because it is repugnant, to my point of view, for a government openly to be competing with investment capital, particularly in the north where this capital is so important, a fact about which the minister of northern affairs left no doubt during his recent visits to the Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

There are several possibilities here which may meet the grievance raised by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona. One concerns the question as to what we will do with the assets of Northern Transportation Company Limited and Eldorado Aviation Limited if these companies are subject to a phased withdrawal. Again, in the committee in 1961 we had offers flatly made by the witnesses who appeared before that committee on behalf of Yellowknife Transportation and Pacific Western Airlines, that they would take over the assets of both crown companies if given half a chance. And not only that, but they went further and said by way of compromise that they would operate in conjunction with the crown-owned subsidiaries of Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited. I recall quite distinctly that Pacific Western Airlines made the offer to the committee that they would be only too happy to collaborate with Yellowknife Transportation Limited in providing a co-ordinated water-air service which would be not only equal to, but better than the co-ordinated service now operated by these two crown corporations.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that in order to understand the problem it is necessary to understand the Mackenzie river transportation complex. At the time the board of transport commissioners extended their jurisdiction to the Mackenzie river system in, I believe it was, 1946 there were just four companies in the area. These companies were the Mackenzie River Transport Company, which was a division of the Hudson's Bay Company at that time and which very recently has been taken over by Northern Transportation Company Limited at the request of Mackenzie River Transport. Then there was Northern Transportation Company Limited, the company about which we are talking in this grievance raised by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona. Then there was Yellowknife Transportation Limited, which operated only within the Northwest Territories. And lastly, there was MacInnis Products Limited, which was primarily a fishing company which had a licence to transport goods within a specified area in the Mackenzie district from Fort Smith to Great Slave lake points only.

Without going in detail into the background of these four transportation companies, I think we can leave it at this, that Northern Transportation Company Limited was originally formed by Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited to service and supply their property on Great Bear lake. Eldorado was taken over by the dominion government and became a wholly-owned crown company. Northern Transportation Company Limited, in turn, became a wholly-owned subsidiary of the crown company. The original fleet of Northern Transportation Company Limited consisted of $140,000 worth of wooden tugs and barges. The statement recently put out by Northern Transportation indicates a rather phenomenal growth so far as these fixed assets are concerned. In 1940 Eldorado Mining and Refining shut down and Northern Transportation went into active competition as a common carrier over the entire Mackenzie river system. In 1942 Eldorado Mining and Refining reopened as a uranium producer and modern steel tugs and barges replaced the wooden vessels which had been in use. The capital expenditures of this crown company now exceed $12 million. This growth in the face of struggling private enterprise, which in the end is going to be the force which will establish efficient communication in the north, is I think beyond excuse. I would recommend to the minister of northern affairs, who I see is listening to this discussion with great interest and attention, that he very carefully consider the evidence adduced at the hearings in 1961 of the mines, forests, and waters committee. I think he will conclude, as I did, that the time for gradual government withdrawal in the field of water transportation in the Northwest Territories has arrived.

Northern Transportation Company

Much could be said about empire building within crown corporations. I do not intend to accuse the Eldorado Mining and Refining Company Limited of empire building because, as I have said, there was an essential service to be performed in the north in a field in which private industry either could not or would not come forward. The government acted most properly in coming to the rescue, as it should, to provide this essential service.

The time has come when we can say that Yellowknife Transportation Company can not only supply an efficient operation to provide a service equal to that now being provided by the Northern Transportation Company, but that it is capable of providing a still better service; and it seems to me to be wrong in principle that a transportation company which was established to carry ore from a mine which was set up during the war in the national interest should be allowed, after this consideration of national interest has disappeared, to expand its operation in open competition with every other water transport concern in the Arctic.

Not only that, but Northern Transportation Company is receiving preferred treatment. In all the negotiations for the D.E.W. line the only consultations which were had were carried out with Northern Transportation Company. No bids were called from private enterprise. The United States government said it needed to move so many millions of tons of material to the D.E.W. line stations. It inquired what carriers were operating and was informed that the carrier was Northern Transportation Company. Nothing was said about other carriers in the area and the result was that the whole of the operation was given to Northern Transportation. It seems to me wrong in principle that such a state of affairs should be allowed to exist. I believe the government would save money by calling for open tenders. I recall very well, in the evidence given in 1961, the operators of the private transportation company saying they could compete and transport the freight at a price less than that being charged by Northern Transportation Company.

I found it surprising that in the face of this evidence the Minister of Trade and Commerce could say the other day that the operations of the company in the north would be not only continued, but expanded, at a time when we have a struggling company in the north which is trying to provide a service supported by private investment capital. This is an instance of the government eroding the foundations of something which the minister himself in his visits to the north praised so highly and declared we should encourage, namely the development of private capital investment. I think the government should take a hard second look at the need for the continued existence of Northern Transportation Company and of Eldorado Aviation. The latter concern is in an even worse position than is Northern Transportation in this regard, because there is a vibrant air industry in the north backed up by years of growth from the days of bush pilots to the present time. The circumstances here are different from those which apply to water transport.

I am glad to see the minister of northern affairs (Mr. Laing) in his place tonight during discussion of this grievance. I urge him to take a hard look at the minutes of the special committee on research in 1961 and do all he can to convince his hard-shelled colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp), to have a change of heart. I know that the real interests of the minister are in the north. At least, if he is to remain where he is he has to convey that impression. This is one area more than in any other in which the hon. gentleman can reassure northerners of the sincerity of his belief in the principle he so often enunciated during his visit to the north last summer, namely that the northern part of this country must attract investment capital. This will not be done unless government gets out of fields which private investment capital is ready, willing and able to enter. One of these fields is transportation.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Carleton): I do not intend to detain the house for very long, but in view of the remarks which have been made by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Nugent), the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Bigg) and the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Rheaume), it is clear that this is not a partisan matter. The question of policy involved is one which faced the former government as well as the present one.

I wish to say a word on the question of principle involved in defining the role of a public corporation in the development of natural resources, when there is evidence of a responsible interest being taken by a private corporation in the same field. This is not the first time this matter has been raised in this chamber and I am sure it will not be the last. I am convinced the government will take into account the fact that it is the policy of Canada to give a responsible and important role to private enterprise in the field of resource development.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): It is my good fortune to be in the house tonight at a time when the Minister of Trade and Commerce is not here because, had he been present, he would no doubt have made a reply to the objections raised by hon. members with respect to the type of transportation provided in the Northwest Territories.

I think this has been a good debate. We are dealing here with the lifeline of the Northwest Territories. In a pioneer country—and this is a pioneer country—transportation comes first, and we are dealing in this instance with the jugular vein of transportation in the territories, namely transportation along the Mackenzie river. I think there is a certain principle to be adopted with respect to the use of public moneys as against private moneys, and I think this principle is held by my own party as well as by the party of the hon. members who have spoken here tonight. I would like to think that public money will be used only to provide a necessary service when private money is either unable or unwilling to provide that service. In such cases it is justifiable to make the required service available out of public money.

I believe the history of the company under discussion will show that it was built up to serve a need which was not met by private enterprise. Now the situation is changing, and the population is growing. However, the Northwest Territories is still a deficit area. They are a very heavy deficit area. I think the people of Canada should know that for every dollar the Northwest Territories are providing in revenue today, other parts of Canada are providing $12. That is a situation we want to reverse. It is one we do not like and we have to make certain definite plans for the future that will overcome it.

I think that the first requirement in a pioneer country is to have reasonable transportation. If it cannot be supplied by private capital then it will have to be supplied by public capital. I think there is an element of subsidization. Certainly there is an advance of funds in respect of the railway now being built from Grimshaw to Hay River and Pine Point. I am going to suggest to the house that in a very few years it will be one of the most advantageous railways in Canada because it is serving the Mackenzie and also serving the great Pine Point mine.

The private companies that have grown up there are rendering excellent service. I think they are expanding. I saw the other day that the private company proposes to put on a vessel to take tourist passengers down the Mackenzie. I predict it will be booked full from the first day it operates because there could be no more interesting holiday trip than a return trip on the Mackenzie river. The equipment of the private company is improving all the time. The service to the customers is better. I believe there have been some reductions in rates, although they have not been large, and this is a high rate area for a variety of causes.

In the Northwest Territories we want to develop as many mines, as many oil wells, as many industries as we possibly can so that the territories will become self-sufficient. We want to try to bring the costs of doing business in the Northwest Territories and also in the Yukon territory as close as we possibly can to the costs of doing business and the cost of labour and everything else in the area of southern Canada. Otherwise the mining properties and other properties in the north would be highgraded, only the best would be taken out, and when we finally came to develop the country it would seem to me we would have to develop it on a general subsidization plan. But if we can bring the cost of doing business in the Northwest Territories approximately to the level of that in southern Canada we will develop the country as it properly should be.

I think we are making very good progress in recent years. As I said before, the Northwest Territories are a deficit area. The people who live there should not be ashamed of that. When the Northwest Territories were fronting not many years ago the luxuriant provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan of today, there were not very many dollars around in those days in the region that now comprises Alberta and Saskatchewan. So we should not be ashamed of putting social capital into this region. I am quite certain we will retrieve that social capital only by encouraging private investment capital to go in there. We can do so in no other way. Otherwise we shall have a permanent situation of putting funds in there, and that is something which the taxpayers of southern Canada do not want any more than the people who live in the Northwest Territories.

In my view it is a question of balancing out our situation at the present time. What all transportation companies require, it seems to me, is the same thing that the head of an American railroad once said railways require. He said that they require to see to it that the longest possible distance exists between the locomotive and the caboose. I think that applies to every transportation company. What we need to do is not to divide the pie between the private company and the public company but rather to increase the size of the pie.

I was in the Northwest Territories not long ago and visited Hay River. I am quite certain that hon. members who have spoken tonight will confirm that they have had a very good year on the Mackenzie river. In spite of the terrific damage to Hay River early in May, shipping out of Hay River up the Mackenzie has increased by 50 per cent over last year. The two companies, one private and the other public, have shared the business fairly well and the fact that they are in competition has probably had the effect of keeping costs down somewhat to some of the consumers.

I am sure the house would not want to see a wholly owned public or national company without private competition. I know that the people to whom shipments are made up there would not want to see that situation, and at this particular juncture the fact that Northern Transportation is operating there with public funds probably has an effect upon the rates charged by the private company.

I am concerned that the private company does not lose money, and I do not think they are losing money. With the increase in the amount of shipping on that great river, which I predict is going to be phenomenal in the next few years, I think that the private company will have the opportunity of making headway, and as a policy I would suggest that as time goes on those of us who believe in incentive and the prize should do our very best to encourage the investment of increasing amounts of private capital in the Northwest Territories. That is what I want. I think that is a prerequisite to the health and welfare of that area.

This can apply to those particular investments and activities in which the national government now takes a part. In other words, I think that as quickly as is in the public interest we should move toward a policy that will increase private investment in that area. In my view the debate tonight has been productive of considerable good. As the minister responsible for the Northwest Territories and for the Yukon I, of course, like to see them discussed in the House of Commons. I do say to hon. members that in the immediate years ahead, particularly on the western side of the north, spectacular and very great things are going to happen. We have problems. Social capital has to be put in there. The sooner we can retrieve it the better for all of us and it can be retrieved only by private risk capital being invested in that region.

Mr. Nielsen: Would the minister permit one question? In view of his sentiments concerning the encouragement of private investment capital in the north, sentiments with which I agree 100 per cent, will he undertake to consult with his colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp), with a view to calling for tenders for government freight, including D.E.W. line freight which is not now going to public tender, in order to obtain competitive bids on the part of the private operator along the Mackenzie and the government supported operation, Northern Transportation Company? If the government did that I believe they would find that the competition would bring about a lowering in the per ton rates along the Mackenzie basin, and along the Arctic coast as well.

Mr. Laing: The hon. member has asked me a question. He would not want me to get into an argument with my colleague who is not here tonight. I do not know what he said the other day but I do not believe he indicated he was a national expansionist, as was attributed to him tonight. I think he proposed to keep Northern Transportation Company in good repair.

Mr. Nielsen: And improve it.

Mr. Laing: Of course. Improvement is necessary. Otherwise you soon slip back, when you have a bunch of steel barges; and if I were in charge of that department I would want to keep the barges improved too.

Mr. Nielsen: It was the public tender policy I was concerned about.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, since the discussion is on the Northwest Territories and since the period provided for hon. members' grievances is drawing to its close, I should like to make a few remarks even if they do not specifically concern the matter discussed before. In fact,

I think we should recall the words spoken by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Chapdelaine) during the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne when he said that parliamentary procedure should be amended.

[Text]

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I had a word to add on the subject that has been under discussion. I realize there are other hon. members who have grievances to bring before the house. I merely want to underscore what the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) has said with reference to northern development. The reason I have risen to add this brief word at this time is that it seems to be a strange phenomena—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to speak on the same matter?

Mr. Marcoux: I said I wanted to speak on the matter of the Northwest Territories, but I do not intend to repeat what was said by the minister, the other hon. members, or what the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale), the previous minister of northern affairs and national resources, wishes to say.

I wish to discuss the Northwest Territories since that is the grievance raised at the present time and I wish, in passing, to make a little comment on parliamentary procedure which allows us to state pleasant things in this house, to make very interesting and instructive dissertations in this house and, in so doing, to lose a lot of time since we are not allowed to embark on another matter.

I do not wish to prevent the hon. member for Brandon-Souris from saying a few words. I just want to remind the government that, as a supporter of provincial autonomy, for Quebec as well as for the other provinces, I am of the opinion that the whole matter relating to the Northwest Territories and also the establishment of the new territory of Nunassiaq should only be settled after an agreement has been reached with the provinces.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. With all due respect for the hon. member who has the floor, I submit that the grievance stated related to a specific point concerning public and private transportation in the Northwest Territories. Therefore, one cannot discuss things in general concerning the Northwest Territories and relate them to the province of Quebec, because then we would be dealing with another subject while there are other members who wish to speak on the matter at hand.

In my view, the hon. member who has the floor is out of order, and another member has already expressed his intention of speaking on the matter.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I must say that I believe the point is well taken by the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue. Unless the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency can restrict himself to the subject in hand, under the rules I must give the floor to the hon. member for Brandon-Souris.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for your ruling and I give the floor to the hon. member for Brandon-Souris.

I only want to point out to the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue that transportation is a matter that comes also under the jurisdiction of the provinces, because there is a provincial board of transport. When transportation is discussed, it is quite a general subject, and I think one cannot be blamed for looking after the interests of his province as much as those of the others.

And now I give the floor to the hon. member.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, the last remarks made by the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency are completely out of order.

I rose on a point of order simply to make sure that the regular procedure is followed. It is not that we are not interested in the matter raised by the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency; on the contrary, I admit that it is a very important matter, but, in my opinion, it is not the right time to discuss it.

[Text]

Mr. Dinsdale: I intended to speak for only one minute, and that seems to be about all the time we have left before reaching ten o'clock. It seems to be the lot of hon. members who, from time to time, have responsibility for northern affairs to be captured by the spell of the north. This certainly has been demonstrated by the words of the minister here tonight. I suggest to him, and I think this would be well borne out by the debates we have had in this house over the past few years, that there is a need to interpret this attitude towards the peculiar problems of northern development to all the members of treasury benches. From time to time, this theme is developed in the House of Commons and it seems to me that there are those in governments, and I am not being partisan when I say this, who fail to appreciate the special problem of northern development which has been outlined by members who have spoken with reference to this subject of transportation in the north.

It does require the constant vigilance of the responsible minister to ensure that all the members of a government are aware that private enterprise must be nurtured and cultivated in every way possible. If it were possible in government organization, I would suggest that the minister of northern affairs, the minister especially responsible for northern development, should have under his wing in a more direct manner than he does at the moment, the responsibility for transportation problems in the north. Only he has the opportunity of familiarizing himself with this huge area of Canada which is bright with promise, and yet is still largely an unknown quantity in terms of its future potential. If there is one contribution I could make to this discussion tonight by way of concluding it at this hour of ten, it is to urge upon the minister that he urge upon his colleagues in the cabinet, the program and the policy that he has so clearly enunciated tonight.

Mr. Speaker: It being ten o'clock, it is my duty, pursuant to section 4 of standing order 56, to interrupt these proceedings and put forthwith the question now before the house.

Motion (Mr. Gordon) agreed to, and the house went into committee, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

The estimates of the following departments were first taken up and entered for consideration:

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES

1. Departmental administration, $461,000.

DEPARTMENT OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES

1. Departmental administration including federal share of the expenses of the secretariat for the resource ministers council, $1,018,600.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: May I ask the house leader if the business for tomorrow is the same as he announced last night?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, it is intended to go ahead tomorrow with the income tax bill and, if possible, to continue it until it has been completed.

It being two minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, October 16, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Ottawa, October 15, 1963.

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Robert Taschereau, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, the 15th of October, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving the royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,
A. G. Cherrier,
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT FOR MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, on motions I should like to ask the unanimous consent of the house in order that the report of the committee on privileges and elections be considered this very day.

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Although perhaps this procedure is slightly irregular, I think we should deal with the suggestion made by the hon. gentleman. I may say I have consulted my hon. friend from Hull, and if there was unanimous consent, and if there seemed to be a reasonable disposition on the part of the house to dispose of this matter today—this is, after all, a short day—the government would be disposed to agree to proceeding on the basis of unanimous consent. However, the matter rests with the house.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent?

Mr. Gerard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I find myself constrained to prevent unanimous consent from being given to a discussion of the Caouette group's claims, and that for two reasons. First, because Wednesdays, Thursdays and Fridays are usually devoted to government business, while Mondays and Tuesdays are normally reserved for matters brought up by the opposition.

Then the leader of the "Ralliement des créditistes" stated in Quebec city, last Sunday, that his group was giving parliament only three days to recognize the thirteen Creditistes members. On that occasion, he also stated: we will find the means, through independence, to have the existence of French Canadians recognized—

Mr. L. P. Antoine Belanger (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Is this a point of order?

Mr. Belanger: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

I do not think the hon. member for Sherbrooke has the right to raise a discussion at this stage. He is only entitled to say whether or not he is giving his consent. If he does not wish to have us deal with the motion today, then he is simply opposed to the unanimous consent of the house and we do not have to know about anything else.

Mr. Speaker: I think you are right.

Mr. Chapdelaine: Mr. Speaker, I believe I may explain why I do not give my consent—

Mr. Belanger: You have no right to.

Mr. Chapdelaine: —to a debate on the motion today.

Mr. Belanger: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has no such right.

Mr. Speaker: This is not the time to submit arguments, but simply to find out whether or not there is unanimous consent.

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. When the hon. member for Sherbrooke refers to the Caouette group in the house, he is grossly mistaken. For his information, we are Social Crediters sitting in the House of Commons.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, since I am the one who asked—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, now that the barkers of the Liberal party have finished—

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Gregoire: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Since I am the one who asked for the unanimous consent of the house, I must say that the very ones who object are those who are trying to stick with us, when we want to get rid of them as soon as possible.

[Text]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It seems obvious that unless unanimous consent is given I am obliged to proceed with the orders of the day in accordance with the rules.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Am I under a misconception? Does the house give unanimous consent or not?

Some hon. Members: No.

[Translation]

Mr. Chapdelaine: Mr. Speaker, I am against giving consent. I wanted to state my reasons, but I was prevented from doing so.

CLASSIFICATION OF PRINT SUPPLIERS, P.P. AND S.

Question No. 1,022—Mr. Fisher:

1. Does the Glassco commission report, volume 2, page 305, paragraph 2, regarding the Department of Public Printing and Stationery, report that "classification of printers based on the quality of printing jobs previously undertaken is inadequate and, therefore, contracts for prestige or specialized work may be let to printers without the necessary capacity or equipment" and, if so, which classification of suppliers results in contracts being let to printers without the necessary capacity and equipment (a) the classification on which the print buyer bases his selection of tenderers or (b) the classification on which the chief purchasing agent may alter the selected tenderers or (c) the classification of those other than in the purchasing and stores branch who have the authority to alter the print buyer's selection of tenderers?

2. Does the print buyer maintain records of print suppliers pertaining to (a) to equipment capacity (b) are suppliers with insufficient capacity and equipment classified or known from printing jobs previously undertaken (c) do government departments inform the print buyer of poor quality printing bought by the purchasing division?

3. Are any purchasing records pertaining to (a) printers' equipment and capacity (b) classification of printers from printing jobs previously undertaken (c) classification of any suppliers whatsoever maintained in any office of the Department of Public Printing and Stationery other than purchasing and stores branch and, if so (d) in what office (e) for how long and (f) what are the various divisions of the classifications?

Mr. Drury: 1. Yes. Since the Glassco commission report gave no specific detail as to which printing jobs were referred to under this section, it was not possible to comment upon which classification of suppliers might have been responsible for the allocation of work to printers considered to be "without the necessary capacity or equipment".

2. (a) Yes; (b) yes; (c) yes.

3. (a) Yes; (b) no; (c) yes; (d) the office of the queen's printer; (e) two years; (f) e.g., engravers, typesetters, carbon interleaved forms manufacturers, printers by size of equipment, calling cards manufacturers.

INDICATION OF PRICE ADVANTAGE ON RETAIL PACKAGES

Question No. 1,088—Mr. Orlikow:

Is the government considering legislation or regulations to prohibit the printing on packages of information stating or implying that the product is being offered for sale at a price lower than the customary retail price or that a price advantage is being accorded to the purchaser because of the size or quantity of the package (but this does not apply to the ultimate retailer)?

Mr. Pickersgill: None beyond that now in effect.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT RESPECTING PRE-SENTENCE REPORTS

Is the government considering amending the Criminal Code along the lines recommended in the Fauteux report so as to provide that (a) where a convicted person is between the ages of 16 and 21 years or where a maximum term of imprisonment of two years or more may be imposed, no offender should be sentenced to any term of imprisonment without consideration by the court of a pre-sentence report (b) no sentence involving corporal punishment should be imposed upon any offender without prior consideration of a pre-sentence report concerning the physical and mental condition of the offender (c) no sentence of corporal punishment should be executed until full inquiry has been made by the remission service and the responsible authority has ordered that there will be no interference with it?

Mr. Chevrier: As to (a) and (b) the desirability of such amendments is being studied in the Department of Justice in connection with the continuing criminal law amendment program. As to (c), while no amendment has been made to this effect, the national parole board is expressly empowered, upon application, to revoke or suspend any sentence of whipping and as a matter of practice, any such sentence is suspended by the board pending such investigation.

PAROLE BOARD—FUNCTIONS OF CHAIRMAN AND DIRECTOR

Question No. 1,169—Mr. Orlikow:

Is the government considering separating the functions of the chairman of the parole board and director of the parole service so that these two be administered by two separate people rather than one person as is now the case?

Mr. Chevrier: The answer is no, because the functions of the chairman of the parole board and the director of the parole service are administered by two separate people. This is in accordance with the organization proposed by the Fauteux report which quotes as follows:

"The chairman of the board should be the chief administrative officer for the purposes of all the operations of the board. The day to day administration of the parole service should be the responsibility of an executive director who should be responsible to the chairman of the board. It would be the responsibility of the executive director to see to the proper investigation of cases and the preparation of material in relation to them for consideration by the board and also the supervision of parolees."

Has the government received any representations for the improvement of the airport at Dawson city in the Yukon Territory and, if so, from whom were such representations received, and what action is intended by the government in respect thereto?

Mr. McIlraith: No representations have been received for improvement to the Dawson city airport since those received from the Dawson city chamber of commerce in March, 1961. These representations requested that the runway be lengthened to provide for the increased traffic anticipated for the 1962 gold rush festival. An economic study was subsequently made which did not support the expenditure of federal funds at that time for that purpose, and Mr. Nielsen, M.P., was advised by the Minister of Transport on July 31, 1961, that a case could not be made for this work.

Question No. 1,236—Mr. Nielsen:

Mr. Martin (Essex East): 1. Informal consultations have been held between officials of certain departments of this government and the appropriate departments of the government of the United States with a view to obtaining such preliminary information as is available with regard to this project, which is still in the research stage. Some correspondence has been directed by departments of this government to the United States authorities with the same objective.

Question No. 1,264—Mr. Ricard:

1. Did the government purchase four farms located on the Grand Rang Saint-Francois at St. Pie de Bagot for $83,000 in 1962 as the site for a medium-security penitentiary?

Mr. Macdonald: 1. Yes.

2. The uprising at St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary convinced us that it is more urgent to build a special detention unit and a maximum security penitentiary than the proposed institution for juvenile delinquents. Therefore, the construction program was slightly changed.

To facilitate access to those two institutions of St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary, it was found necessary to build on the north shore of the St. Lawrence and steps have been taken in that connection.

The properties at St. Pie de Bagot will be kept by the penitentiary service for future use.

Mr. Beer: The government has undertaken to contribute 25 per cent of the capital cost of establishing a veterinary college in western Canada, to a maximum of $625,000, the location of the college to be decided by the western provinces. The decision of the western provinces has been to locate the college in Saskatoon at the University of Saskatchewan. QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

APPOINTMENTS BY ORDER IN COUNCIL

Question No. 1,141—Mr. Matheson:

What public offices were filled or public appointments made by orders in council dated between February 5 and April 22, 1963?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

ACCEPTANCE OF FISHERIES COMMISSION RECOMMENDATION RESPECTING HALIBUT

Motion No. 62—Mr. Barnett:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of the cabinet minute or other official document which authorized the Secretary of State for External Affairs to notify the executive director, the international north Pacific fisheries commission, by telegram under date of May 10, 1963, that the commission's recommendations for the removal of the halibut stocks in the eastern Bering sea and the herring stocks west of the Queen Charlotte islands from the annex to the convention had been accepted by the government of Canada.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The government, as my hon. friend knows, approved the three recommendations of the international north Pacific fisheries commission concerning the removal of halibut stock in the eastern Bering sea and herring stock west of the Queen Charlotte islands from the annex of the north Pacific fisheries convention. This decision was communicated to the executive director of the commission on May 10. Action was taken on the authority of this cabinet decision and no other official documents exist.

With regard to the production of the actual cabinet minute, as my hon. friend I am sure well knows, it is a well established rule in Canadian parliamentary practice that the texts of cabinet minutes are not made public.

I regret, therefore, I cannot agree to the motion, and I ask my hon. friend to be good enough to withdraw it.

Mr. Barnett: I would not quarrel with the general principle enunciated by the minister in respect of cabinet minutes, but it does seem to me there are some particular circumstances surrounding the situation which the minister has outlined in connection with this matter. It is apparent from what he has said that there are no other official documents in connection with the action taken by the government.

It seems to me there are some special circumstances attached to this kind of situation. I should like to ask, therefore, following the good example of the present minister in the previous parliament, to have this motion transferred to a place on the order paper where it would become a debatable motion.

Mr. Speaker: Under standing order 47, it is so transferred.

COLUMBIA RIVER TREATY

Motion No. 93—Mr. Herridge:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence and telegrams exchanged between the Prime Minister or any member of the government and any private citizen in Canada with respect to the Columbia river treaty since January 1, 1963.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the government is very anxious to give the hon. member all the information possible in respect of this matter. The motion as it is now worded, however, is of such a far ranging character it would be very difficult indeed to meet it. I wonder if the hon. gentleman would allow the motion to stand so that I may have a word with him to see if it can be reworded or some arrangement made to enable him to get all the information he requires.

Mr. Herridge: I am quite willing to agree to the suggestion of the Prime Minister. I am a most co-operative individual.

Motion stands.

ARMED FORCES—TESTS FOR APPLICANTS FOR COMMISSIONS

Motion No. 94—Mr. Olson:

On the order:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all tests given to persons applying for a commission in the armed forces and more specifically those tests of a general nature that are used to evaluate personality characteristics, and intelligence levels.

Mr. Hellyer: I wonder would the hon. gentleman agree to have this stand until I have a chance to discuss it with him.

Mr. Olson: Yes.

Order stands.

COMPLAINT BY H. W. HICKS AGAINST SUN LIFE ASSURANCE CO.

Motion No. 95—Mr. Thompson:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence and telegrams exchanged between the superintendent of insurance and Mr. H. W. Hicks, presently of 32 Queen's road, Horley, Surrey, England, relating to a complaint of the said H. W. Hicks against Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I would ask permission to have this motion withdrawn from the order paper. It was through some error that it appeared today because I did receive the information that was pertinent to this, and had intended that it should be withdrawn before it appeared on today's order paper.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING ARDA, SASKATCHEWAN

Motion No. 96—Mr. Southam:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all telegrams, correspondence, reports, briefs and memoranda, and any subsequent replies thereto between the federal government and any of its departments and the province of Saskatchewan concerning ARDA since April 22, 1963.

Mr. Beer: Mr. Speaker, this motion is quite acceptable subject to the consent of the province of Saskatchewan being obtained to table the correspondence, reports and other documents requested.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is agreed to, subject to the reservation expressed by the minister.

Motion agreed to.

Motions for Papers

CORRESPONDENCE WITH U.S. RESPECTING UNION TRUSTEESHIP

Motion No. 98—Mr. Martineau:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all telegrams, correspondence, communications and other documents and replies thereto between the government of the United States of America, or any of its departments, and the government of Canada, or any of its departments, concerning the great lakes shipping situation and the proposed trusteeship of Canadian maritime unions since the 6th of July 1963.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I say with regard to this motion that to table all the confidential papers requested by the hon. gentleman would be both a departure from normal diplomatic usage and not in the public interest. As developments in this situation occur I am sure my colleague the Minister of Labour will continue to keep the house fully informed as he has done in the past.

Mr. Speaker: I think it is important to put the motion first. Mr. Martineau, seconded by Mr. Winkler proposes:

That a humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all telegrams, correspondence, communications and other documents and replies thereto between the government of the United States of America, or any of its departments, and the government of Canada, or any of its departments, concerning the great lakes shipping situation and the proposed trusteeship of Canadian maritime unions since the 6th of July 1963.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the remarks made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs I would like to point out that the subject matter of this motion is not of a classified nature; and second, that naturally I would accept reservations such as if permission were to be obtained from the United States government for the production of such documents.

Mr. Speaker: Is the motion accepted subject to those reservations?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, Mr. Speaker. I have indicated that this would be contrary to practice and it is not regarded as in the public interest by both governments concerned.

Mr. Nesbitt: Why did you publish it then?

Mr. Martineau: I stand by my motion.

Mr. Speaker: Under the rules I must put the motion unless hon. members desire debate, in which case it is transferred.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I desire to move that it be transferred.

Mr. Speaker: It is so transferred.

[Mr. Speaker.]

LISTS OF CONSULTANTS FOR CABINET MINISTERS

Motion No. 99—Mr. Orlikow:

That an order of the house do issue for a list of consultants prepared in the office of the Postmaster General for the guidance of cabinet ministers and copies of all correspondence between ministers of the crown and the consultants in each riding.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder could I raise a question of privilege with respect to this motion. I think Your Honour on reading it will see that the language of the motion is so obscure that it would not be possible for anyone reading the motion by itself—which is all that is before the house—to discern what the hon. gentleman was driving at. I have consulted the Postmaster General, who tells me that in his office no document of any description was prepared for the guidance of his colleagues, and therefore there could be no such document even if the motion were put.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: I suggest in addition that if Your Honour would look at page 258 of May's fourteenth edition it would be apparent that the only kind of documents for which motions can properly appear on the order paper are papers and correspondence of a public and official character sought from government departments.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: Whatever this purported document—this document that does not exist—might be, it obviously is not a document of a public or official character.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am sure we would like to hear from the Postmaster General himself that he has not prepared such a list. He does not usually sit so quietly and taciturnly, and we would like to hear from him. The fact that it is a list makes it public, if it actually exists.

Mr. Speaker: Is there any other hon. member who would like to speak to this motion?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State should know whether he has received such a list for his guidance, but I never sent out any list for the guidance of the Secretary of State or any other minister. It does not exist. Therefore I do not think we should answer in regard to something that does not exist.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that we have—

Mr. Denis: Like anybody else, Mr. Speaker, I can have in my own office a list of my relatives, friends—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I challenge any member in this house to say that he has not a list in his own office for Christmas cards and other purposes.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Denis: I challenge any member of parliament who does not know about the defeated candidates—

An hon. Member: Here it is.

Mr. Denis: —and the Conservatives must have a long list of them.

Mr. Mandziuk: What about your list in 1958?

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the minister whether it is possible to get on the list if one is not a relative?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Are there any other hon. members who wish to help the Chair in this respect?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the other day when I put a similar motion the Secretary of State said he had no such list. I immediately took his word and withdrew my motion. But it has taken so long for the two ministers to say, or try to say, that there is no such list that I think we ought to discuss this matter further. I would therefore like to have this motion transferred for debate. I wish it were true that the house and the country could feel that this government had discontinued the practice of patronage that existed in the past.

Mr. Winkler: But that is not so.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Secretary of State has raised a question of privilege which in my opinion is not a question of privilege. In anticipation of some advice from the house I took the trouble to prepare a few notes, and I think it might be useful if I put them on the record, with regard to the production of papers.

The general principle concerning the character of papers which may be asked for is set out in May's sixteenth edition, page 270, where it is stated:

> Parliament is invested with the power of ordering all documents to be laid before it, which are necessary for its information.

Bourinot's fourth edition, at page 246, states in part as follows:

> On the other hand, it is the constitutional right of either house to ask for such information as it can directly obtain by its own order from any department or officer of the government.

Obviously it is impossible for the Chair to scan every notice of motion for papers in an effort to determine whether or not such papers actually exist or whether the papers are in the nature of confidential documents. Indeed there is no rule which states that confidential documents may not be asked for, and in some instances what are ordinarily considered to be confidential documents are tabled. At page 273 of May's sixteenth edition it is stated:

> However ample the power of each house to enforce the production of papers may be a sufficient cause must be shown for the exercise of that power; and if considerations of public policy can be urged against a motion for papers, it is either withdrawn, or otherwise dealt with according to the judgment of the house.

Therefore it seems that the duty of the Chair in regard to motions for papers is to decide whether or not a motion is in order from a procedural point of view, and I am of the opinion that this motion is in order from this point of view. In this regard I would like to quote from a statement by Mr. Speaker Beaudoin which is found at page 3014 of Hansard, April 3, 1957. It reads as follows:

> The motion that has been placed on the order paper is in order, and that is why I have put it to the house. It is opposed and when it is opposed, according to standing order 47 it must be transferred for debate if desired. This has not been asked for, but it has been asked that the minister should say briefly why he is opposed to the motion. At this moment, therefore, the only duty I have is to put the question to the house and let the house pass judgment on it.

In the same regard, at page 1036 of Hansard, July 11, 1958, Mr. Speaker Michener is reported as having used the following words:

> Order. This motion is not debatable. It is a motion for an order of the house to issue in respect of certain papers. It is not debatable, and the only course is to accept or reject the motion. I am advised by the Clerk that that is the method of disposing of such a motion as this. I ask, then, whether it is the pleasure of the house to adopt the same motion.

As will be seen in Hansard of February 15, 1960, page 1055, Mr. Speaker Michener held the view that his responsibility was to see that the motion was before the house in the proper form, but that the house had to decide by its vote whether or not the document was to be produced, and that it would be improper for the Speaker to substitute his decision for that of the house.

On February 27, 1961, as will be found at page 2442 of Hansard, Mr. Speaker Michener also stated that it was for the house to determine whether such a motion for the production of papers should be withdrawn or whether it should be passed.

Basing my action on those precedents, and on standing order 47, I propose to put the motion and allow the house to make a decision in regard to the production of the papers unless such a motion is either withdrawn, allowed to stand or transferred for debate.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, in view of what you have said the government is quite prepared to accept the motion and allow it to pass.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has asked that the motion be transferred for debate. He has the right to do that. This is in conflict with the suggestion of the Secretary of State, and I would ask the hon. member to state his desire.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would be quite happy if the motion were allowed to pass.

Motion agreed to.

SECOND TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

Motion No. 100—Mr. Howard:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence, telegrams or other documents exchanged between the government and any agency or branch thereof and any other government, organization or person since January 1, 1962, dealing with the proposal that another or second trans-Canada highway be built.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, this motion can be accepted subject to the usual reservations with regard to personal and confidential documents, and the prior consent of the provincial governments concerned.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is accepted, subject to the reservations as expressed by the minister.

Motion agreed to.

PRINCE RUPERT, B.C., GRAIN ELEVATOR

Motion No. 101—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all reports received by the government or any agency or branch thereof dealing with the grain elevator at Prince Rupert, B.C., since January 1, 1959.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether this motion could stand in the absence of the minister, and also No. 102?

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member agree? Stand.

Motion stands.

TOBACCO ADVERTISING ON RADIO AND TELEVISION

Motion No. 103—Mr. Knowles:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the Winnipeg school division No. 1 and the Minister of National Health and Welfare, dated since April 22, 1963, concerning the subject of tobacco advertising on radio and television.

Motion agreed to.

[Mr. Speaker.]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONVERSATIONS OR COMMUNICATIONS WITH U.S. PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether, in view of the various difficulties which have arisen between the United States and Canada, he has given any consideration to inviting President Kennedy to Ottawa?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then, Mr. Speaker, may I ask whether there have been any further attempts at conversations with the President since Sunday with regard to the difficulties about which the Prime Minister spoke at that time; and have there been any letters or communications received from the President showing the attitude or setting out the view of the United States toward the matters in respect of which the Prime Minister offered objection?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations between members of the two governments, but no further consultations between myself and the President in this matter since last Saturday morning.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Have any communications been received from the President or anyone on his behalf setting out his side of the picture?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker.

CUBA—REACTION TO CANADIAN OFFER OF AID

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs?

In view of the telegram that the Cuban Red Cross recently sent to the American Red Cross, calling it hypocritical in its offer of aid following hurricane Flora, can the minister tell us what kind of reception the Canadian offer got in Cuba?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I did not understand the question very well, but I shall try to answer tomorrow or Monday next.

[Later:]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I revert to the question put to me by the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac (Mr. Latulippe)?

In reply to his question, I may say that there was no reaction at all from the Cuban government.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BELANGER—REFERENCE TO REMARK IN DEBATE

[Translation]

Mr. L. P. Antoine Belanger (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a question of privilege about a statement made yesterday by the hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Boulanger) who is also chairman of the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

After mentioning my name, in the course of his remarks, as reported on page 3578 of Hansard for October 15, 1963, the hon. member said:

> Even with a continuous interpretation service, they did not deem it advisable to attend the committee for more than ten or fifteen minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out to the hon. member for Mercier that I arrived at the committee meeting at ten o'clock and left at 11.30 to attend a meeting of another committee. In my opinion, I was there more than 15 minutes.

The second part of my point of privilege concerns the following remarks made by the hon. member for Mercier:

> I therefore raise a point of privilege in connection with this lack of responsibility—

Mr. Speaker, I feel that the most responsible is certainly not the hon. member for Mercier who does not seem to know that there are 90 minutes in an hour and a half and not only 15 minutes.

Mr. Gregoire: He should resign as chairman of that committee.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I do not like to lecture the house, but I doubt very much whether that is a question of privilege.

Mr. Gregoire: He should resign as chairman of the committee.

Mr. Speaker: It is more in the nature of a complaint.

LABOUR RELATIONS

NORRIS COMMISSION—REPORT OF SPECIAL COUNSEL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Justice. Has he received the report from the special counsel who were appointed by the government to investigate the possibility of legal charges arising out of the Norris report and, if so, has the government arrived at a decision in this regard?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Yes, Mr. Speaker. As I have already indicated, I have received a preliminary report which we are still studying, and the result will emerge in due course.

WHITE PASS AND YUKON RAILROAD—EFFORTS TO SETTLE STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I have a question for the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that labour difficulties continue to shut down the operations of the White Pass and Yukon route in the Yukon and the operation of their motor vessel, the Rogers, and the growing economic difficulties this is causing, can he state whether he is taking any action to have his officials assist in negotiating a settlement of these labour problems?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add to the report I made to my hon. friend some days ago on this matter.

[Later:]

Mr. Nielsen: I have a question related to the one I asked the Minister of Labour a moment ago and which I shall direct to the minister of northern affairs. In view of the fact that the railroad is not running into the Yukon territory, can he say whether the offer of Governor Egan or his officials to keep the Haines road open this winter will be accepted by the government?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): As my hon. friend knows, all these matters are under discussion.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE ON PROCEDURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he will consider introducing fairly soon the motion on the order paper dealing with the setting up of a parliamentary committee to review the procedures of this house in order to bring about a more businesslike transaction of public affairs. I know the Secretary of State has already indicated that the government would be prepared to do so if he could get some guarantee that there would be no debate. My question to the Prime Minister is, would he be prepared to consult either through the house leader or with the leaders of the various parties to see whether we cannot get agreement, if not to having no debate then to having some limited period of debate, so the committee could be set up and we could bring about a more efficient dispatch of the affairs of this House of Commons?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I agree entirely with the hon. gentleman that the setting up of this committee for the purpose which he has mentioned is highly desirable. I hope that as a result of the kind of consultation he has suggested difficulties in the way of setting the committee up with a minimum of debate can be overcome and the committee set up this week.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): So that there is no misunderstanding as far as the opposition are concerned, we would welcome any action in this regard; however, not without debate. We want to place before the house our views so as to be helpful to the committee. There is just one matter I might mention, in connection with voting procedure. I think consideration might well be given to a practice which would save a great deal of time.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If we were able to follow the system in the United Kingdom of going into—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am trying to expedite the business. I said that we could arrive at a point where we would save a great deal of time voting by going into our respective lobbies. That is one suggestion which would save time, time which today is unnecessarily wasted. Anything which can be done in that connection would certainly receive our support now.

Mr. Pearson: The right hon. gentleman apparently agrees to the setting up of this committee. I would hope that it could be set up at once, that debate could take place in the committee, and then the committee could report back to the house and the house could debate the report of the committee.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

INQUIRY AS TO PURCHASE OF CARAVELLE PLANES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Guy Rouleau (Dollard): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is the minister in a position to make a statement on the acquisition by Trans-Canada Air Lines of a new aircraft type in light of the reported statement by the Quebec minister of national resources regarding the Caravelle?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have received no report or recommendation from Trans-Canada Air Lines on this subject, and until such report or recommendation is received the matter cannot be considered by government.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO SURVEY RESPECTING BILINGUALISM

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State.

Following the promise he made in the house in the last days of July that a survey would be made on biculturalism in all departments of the federal government, can the Secretary of State indicate the progress of that survey and tell us whether he has a preliminary report to give us in relation to that survey?

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I have been advised by the civil service commission that the document to which the hon. gentleman referred on August 1, I think it was, a document which would be submitted both to the royal commission and to this house, is in course of preparation at the present time. I have also indicated to the civil service commission that any preliminary information which could be made available to the house would be most welcome, and I am very hopeful that they will be able to give us some information before very long.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Secretary of State tell the house whether information requests have been sent to all members of the federal civil service, and whether the replies to those information requests are now in the hands of the civil service commission?

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: That is a question I would have to put to the chairman of the commission. I shall be glad to do so and give an answer as soon as possible.

ESTABLISHMENT OF OFFICE OF QUEEN'S PUBLISHER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question related to a speech made yesterday by the man who may be associate minister of agriculture, on the matter of the queen's printer and the queen's publisher. Can the Minister of Industry explain the fact that the speech as reported indicated that there now is the office of queen's publisher, yet today I received answers to a number of questions which suggest that the office has not yet been created?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the question is correct. I have not seen the report to which the hon. member makes reference, but if in fact it was reported that there was an office of queen's publisher that report is incorrect.

RESOURCES

PROPOSED POOLING BY U.S. AND CANADA—PRICE FOR COLUMBIA RIVER POWER

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and ask him whether his attention has been drawn to the statement made yesterday by the secretary of the interior of the United States to the effect, as I understand it, that consideration is being given to the creation of a gigantic pool of resources. Has there been any discussion between the governments of Canada and the United States in this regard? Furthermore, what progress has been made in relation to the United States market price for Canadian electric power to be generated as a result of the prospective Columbia river development, to which Mr. Udall also made reference?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Leader of the Opposition may recall that in the communique following the meeting between the President of the United States and the Prime Minister of Canada reference was made to the desirability of studying co-operation in the rational use of the resources of this continent. Also, a short time ago when my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce was in Washington, progress was made in discussions between the two governments concerning the undertaking of joint studies to determine to what extent an exchange of energy resources would be beneficial. At the recent ministerial meeting in Washington between Canadian and United States ministers this subject was discussed in a general way.

With regard to what the U.S. secretary of the interior had to say about the Columbia river development, I can only comment that if what he said was correctly reported, then he fully expects that a satisfactory price will be paid for the purchase of the downstream benefits. This will indeed be welcome news. One of the essential conditions of the Canadian position, supported, of course, by the owners of the resource, British Columbia, is that the price paid for these benefits must be commensurate with the value of the transaction and the interests of Canada.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thank the hon. gentleman for his answer, and I would ask him if he was referring to the communique issued after the meeting on May 11 between the President and the Prime Minister, which was supposed to herald the arrival of a new heaven and a new earth in Canadian-American relations?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I was referring to that communique, which is one that marked a most constructive and important exchange between the heads of two countries which are dedicated to the mutual interests of their peoples and the cause of peace in the world.

TRANSPORT

PROPOSED TUNNEL BETWEEN QUEBEC CITY AND LEVIS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, my question is intended for the Minister of Public Works.

Has he received some representations concerning the construction of a tunnel between Quebec city and Levis? If so, what action has the department taken in connection with this request?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This, surely, is a question for the order paper.

TRADE

LEAKAGE BY U.S. OF CONFIDENTIAL INFORMATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I should like to return to a subject which I have raised several times previously in the house. In the absence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister.

In view of the continued leakage of confidential information from the Canadian wheat board to the United States public by officials of the United States government, would the Prime Minister consider asking the Minister of Trade and Commerce to accept the suggestion I made last week that a telephone call, or some form of protest, be made to the hon. gentleman's counterpart in the United States so as to prevent if possible this continued harmful leakage of confidential information —information which was only supplied after a solemn agreement between the two countries that it would not be disclosed?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will be glad to take this matter up with the Minister of Trade and Commerce, though I am confident that he has already been in touch with his counterpart in Washington on this matter.

AGRICULTURE

ABSENCE OF MINISTERS DURING DEBATE AND VOTES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. I apologize for not having given him notice, but the matter cropped up just before I came into the house. My question is based on the interest and concern shown by some well known people in Canada with regard to agricultural policy.

I ask the Prime Minister whether, in the spirit of fair play, he can inform the house as to the nature of the business which the Minister of Agriculture and his alter ego, the expectant Minister without Portfolio, considered so much more important than the debate and the votes on agricultural policy that they found it necessary to be absent for such a considerable time during the debate yesterday.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The Minister of Agriculture and his associate, having taken part in this debate on agriculture, left the house to attend engagements previously undertaken for the Minister of Agriculture with farmers of Canada in the west. They got in touch with the grass roots while the hon. member remained in the house.

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Provencher): I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Can he explain why, for a period of approximately one and a half hours yesterday afternoon in the course of that debate, there was not one single minister in this house?

Mr. Pearson: That statement is incorrect. Therefore I do not have to explain it.

[Later:]

Mr. L. E. Cardiff (Huron): I should like to make this statement: yesterday, from five minutes to five until twenty minutes after five there were no ministers in this house. I should like somebody to get up and deny that.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I shall do so immediately. I was in the house myself.

[Mr. Hamilton.]

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Pickersgill: I looked at the clock as I went out. It was two minutes to five, and at that time the Minister of Justice, the Minister of Public Works and the Postmaster General were all in the house.

Mr. MacInnis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am quite able to hear when an hon. member speaks to a point of order, but there is such a thing as allowing a minister to complete his statement. I am sure that 30 seconds more and a little courtesy would be very much appreciated. The question period is turning into a debate, particularly on this issue, and it seems to me that the word of a minister should be accepted, especially in these circumstances.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacInnis: On the point of order—

An hon. Member: Louder.

Another hon. Member: They are trying to howl you down. That is the way they do it.

Another hon. Member: How about courtesy now?

Mr. Knowles: Order.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, I am not aware of anything in the rules of the house that distinguishes a backbencher from a cabinet minister, and if the house is going to maintain the order you wish I say, as I said before, that no speaker, minister or not, is entitled to rise in his place and have the advantage of saying something in the house without first receiving recognition from you. Box scores are becoming very popular these days, and I am keeping one on the Secretary of State. It would surprise you very much, Mr. Speaker, to find how often he is getting away with rising to speak without recognition.

[Later:]

Mr. Clement Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State.

Could the minister tell us whether himself or one of his colleagues were in the house when I said yesterday in French and in English, as reported on page 3596 of Hansard:

> There is not one minister in the house; not one.

I said that yesterday in French and in English in the course of my speech.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: I apologize to the hon. gentleman, but I was not paying attention to his speech.

Mr. Vincent: I rise on a question of privilege, sir. When I spoke yesterday I said at that time there was not a minister in the house. What I said was true. The Secretary of State has no right to say I was wrong when I said yesterday no ministers were in the house when I was speaking.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the statement made by the last speaker is entirely inaccurate. I was in the house at my place during a large part of the time the hon. member was delivering his speech.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): On this same matter, Mr. Speaker—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: The hon. member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes (Mr. Drouin) confirmed this fact in the official report.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure all hon. members will agree we have discussed this question sufficiently. The hon. member for Elgin.

Mr. J. A. McBain (Elgin): I had a question for the Minister of Agriculture which I was going to direct to the Prime Minister. However, because of the lateness of the hour and the short sitting day, and in view of the fact the minister will be back tomorrow, I will hold my question until then.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF WINTER WORKS PERIOD

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, my question is intended for the Minister of Labour.

I have received many letters and resolutions from municipalities protesting against the decision of the government to shorten the period for winter works and as the north-western area of Quebec has a very cold climate in addition to being recognized as a depressed area, would the minister reconsider the possibility of setting the winter works period as before, namely from October 15 to May 30, 1964?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest this is a question for the order paper.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with respect to the question of the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise) which you had put on the order paper. He was asking that the winter works period start on October 15. But yesterday was October 15. Therefore, I feel that this question is urgent and that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets) should have the opportunity to state his position on that issue.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: May I point out to the hon. member that it is, I hope, a well established custom, within reason, that when the Speaker decides that in his view a question should go on the order paper, that ends the matter. In particular reply to the point the hon. member has raised, may I say that the same question has been asked once or twice before, I think, and the Minister of Public Works is certainly aware of the urgency of the matter. I am sure that allowing the hon. member to state his question at length, as he did, will impress it even more on the Minister of Public Works.

DAUPHIN, MAN.—BENEFITS FROM INCLUSION AS DESIGNATED AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour in relation to the recently announced designated areas, and with particular reference to Dauphin, the sole area in Manitoba which has been classed as a designated area. Can the minister say whether any benefits which may accrue under this legislation will apply to the municipal district of Dauphin or to the district which normally comes within the administration of the Dauphin branch of the unemployment insurance commission?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to answer that question in detail if it is placed on the order paper.

Mr. Simpson: A supplementary question on the same subject to the Minister of Industry. On October 3 in answer to a question of mine in relation to designated areas the minister stated that the department would consider holding consultations with the Indian affairs branch in relation to setting up certain Indian reserves as designated areas. Can the minister say whether any such consultations have taken place yet?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, the consultations are not complete.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HEALTH AND WELFARE

INQUIRY AS TO COMMITTEE ON USE OF TOBACCO

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. When does the minister intend to set up the committee to look into the harmful effects of tobacco as claimed by the hon. lady?

[Text]

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): As has happened more than once in the past, the hon. member is mistaken in his facts. There was never any suggestion that a committee of this house should study smoking. There is, however, to be a national conference on this subject, the date of which has been announced. Representatives of all bodies likely to be interested have been invited. A number of briefs have already been received from those invited and they are being circulated now. I think the date is November 25-27 inclusive.

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—REQUEST FOR INCREASED PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbiniere): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

In view of the pressing needs of a great number of Canadian families and in view of the fact that the party in office always goes ahead in the matter of social legislation, I should like the Minister of National Health and Welfare to tell the house whether she intends to amend the family allowances system in order to bring in supplementary benefits, to be paid to the beneficiaries of those allowances.

Mr. Gregoire: That is what we have been asking for all along.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This is a question for the order paper.

UNITED NATIONS

SUPPORT FOR BAN ON NUCLEAR WEAPONS IN SPACE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs which I at least think is of some importance to Canada as well as to the whole world. Has the minister any comment to make in respect of the announcement that the Soviet union and the United States government have agreed to support a United Nations resolution to ban nuclear weapons from space?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think we will all agree that this is an important matter and the hon. gentleman need not apologize for putting the question. The proposal now embodied in a resolution presented by the United States, and which according to reports, Mr. Gromyko says will be supported by the Soviet union, provides for the banning of nuclear weapons in outer space. This is a proposal that will be welcomed by Canada and will be welcomed, I am sure, by all countries at the United Nations. It is a proposal that was put forward earlier in the 18 power disarmament conference at Geneva. I hope we may conclude from this further agreement that we have an additional indication of the extent of the detente between east and west at the present time.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

EDMONTON MUNICIPAL AIRPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State. In view of the fact that the municipal elections in Edmonton are over, perhaps it would now be possible to comply with the order of the house, No. 55, for the production of papers which was passed on July 24.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad to make an inquiry and let the hon. gentleman know at the first opportunity.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Megantic.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, would the Secretary of State be prepared to table in the house a list of the various questions—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Knowles: I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —that have been—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, a number of times the hon. member for Cape Breton South has raised the question of people speaking only when they are recognized. You, sir, recognized the hon. member for Megantic. Why is he not allowed to speak? Why does the Leader of the Opposition get in after an hon. member has been recognized?

An hon. Member: Where is the box score?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I thought you recognized me. You looked in my general direction.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, these people in the government do not want me to speak any more.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I bow immediately to the point of order. I thought you recognized me. I am very sorry that I stood up, but I was continuing along the line of the question that had been asked.

Mr. Speaker: I think we have had enough points of order for the next few minutes. The hon. member for Megantic.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe I am entitled to raise a point of order as much as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. Many times in the house, out of sheer courtesy, members of the official opposition have given up their place to the leader of the New Democratic party and I think the Social Credit party should do the same thing in the case of the leader of the official opposition.

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member for St. Mary wants that courtesy I think he should at least ask for it.

[Later:]

Mr. Diefenbaker: When I was interrupted on a point of order I was asking the Secretary of State if he would give consideration to tabling a list of questions which had been made orders for returns and which had not yet been brought down.

Mr. Pickersgill: I shall be glad not only to table a list of those questions that have been made orders for returns which have not been complied with as yet, but the orders of the house as well, so there will be a complete picture of those things that have not yet been done.

INDUSTRY

THETFORD MINES—REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF ASBESTOS PROCESSING PLANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry. On Monday the Minister of Labour gave a report concerning regions in which unemployment was most felt. In view of the fact that Thetford Mines is one of these regions, and in view of the fact this region has the world's largest asbestos deposit, will the minister consider the possibility of establishing asbestos industries in this region so that we can turn the raw material into finished products at home and, in so doing, decrease unemployment in that area?

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member put that question on the order paper?

REPORTED INTENTION TO ABOLISH CANADIAN COMMERCIAL CORPORATION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Industry a question?

Could the minister inform the house whether he intends to eliminate the Canadian Commercial Corporation, a crown corporation, by making it part and parcel of the Department of Industry?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

[Text]

NOVA SCOTIA—ESTABLISHMENT OF HEAVY WATER PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I have a question for the Prime Minister. On September 30 I posed a question to him concerning the location of a heavy water plant in Nova Scotia. He very kindly replied that urgent consideration was being given to this very important question and a decision would be announced shortly. I wonder if the right hon. gentleman is now in a position to enlighten us further on this rather urgent matter?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I am not in a position to announce a decision at the moment. I hope to be able to do so very shortly.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REQUEST FOR REFERENCE OF ESTIMATES TO COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): In view of the interesting revelations earlier by the Secretary of State and the Postmaster General, I wonder if I could ask the Postmaster General if he would agree to referring the estimates of his department to the appropriate standing committee?

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that such a question should not go to a special committee on estimates. If the hon. member will be good enough to remind me when my estimates are under consideration, I shall be glad to answer every question he may ask.

Mr. Howard: I wonder if the minister would mind if I reminded him every day of this request to refer the estimates of his department to a committee, so that we could get at the facts?

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

Can the Postmaster General assure the house that there are only members of the house on that special list of people?

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I would even add that the name of the hon. member for Lapointe appears on the list.

Mr. Gregoire: I am pleased to hear that my name appears on the list, but, at the same time, I should like to be consulted sometimes.

[Text]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

RELINQUISHING PRIVATE MEMBERS' HOUR

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Before the orders of the day are called, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I had consultations yesterday with representatives of hon. gentlemen opposite and there seemed to be a disposition at that time, in view of the important debate now coming up and the desire to let as many members as possible participate today, to forgo the private members' time today. If that was the sense of the discussion, perhaps it could be settled now so that we would know how to proceed.

Mr. Churchill: We agree.

Mr. Douglas: This group is agreeable.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: We agree, Mr. Speaker.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I take it that rarely have we had such unanimity.

INCOME TAX ACT

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill C-95, to amend the Income Tax Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, like other acts to amend the Income Tax Act, this bill is rather long and complex. It is based upon the very detailed resolution that was approved by the house on July 23.

[Mr. Denis.]

It does not contain anything new, other than a very few refinements of a technical nature, which I shall point out when we come to the discussion of the bill clause by clause; and it does not include anything of a contentious nature that was not debated fully in July. The proposed amendments follow the order of the original act, but taken as a whole, with one or two exceptions, they fall into three main categories.

First there are amendments to close loopholes in the act. Second, there are amendments to provide incentives to industries which are intended to raise the level of production and employment in certain areas of slower growth. Third, there are changes in non-resident withholding taxes designed to reduce the cost of borrowing abroad, and to provide incentives to the foreign owners of Canadian subsidiaries to take in Canadian partners in the years to come.

The exceptions that do not fall into any of these three categories include a proposal which will require corporations to pay their taxes over a period that is more comparable to the payment time table for individuals than at present, and a clause to deal with taxations of estates in bankruptcy. I shall go into these items fully when we come to the respective clauses in the bill.

First I should like to say something about the proposals contained in the first of the three categories mentioned, that is, those that are designed to close tax loopholes. The public, including the business public, tends to lose respect for any tax administration when advantage can be taken freely of obvious loopholes in the law. When the royal commission on taxation submits its report it may be desirable to make extensive changes in the taxing statutes. In the meantime it seems desirable to stop some clear opportunities for tax avoidance, and I should like to mention four examples of what it is intended to do about them.

First it is proposed to discourage the widespread practice of gaining a tax advantage through the operation of lease-option arrangements. Under the present law, taxpayers who have entered into lease-option agreements are allowed to deduct from their taxable income capital cost allowances which sometimes greatly exceed both the amount of the annual rentals and the actual cost of the properties concerned. The joint tax committee of the Canadian Bar Association and the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants has advocated for some time that action should be taken to prevent this.

The second example that I would like to mention is the one that at present provides an opportunity, under the act, for companies which incur losses in one year to carry them forward and apply them against profits earned during subsequent years.

As a result of this, a practice has developed of trafficking in the shares of companies whose businesses have been discontinued, but which technically have certain tax loss carry forward entitlements. For example, a man with a profitable business may purchase the shares of one of these companies and transfer his prosperous business to it, and having done so he can apply the losses incurred previously, and often in a quite different class of business, against the taxable income of his own business. I suggest that surely this was never the intention of parliament when the original proposal was incorporated in the act, and that this practice should be stopped.

The third and rather glaring example of a tax loophole—and one that has been much talked about—is known as dividend stripping. In the normal course when a company pays a dividend to its shareholders who are individuals, the dividend is taxable in the hands of the recipients. However, in the case of closely held companies it is possible for the shareholders, through a series of transactions often involving the incorporation of one or more new companies, to withdraw the surplus of the original company without payment of any tax. This also is a widespread practice which should be stopped.

A fourth example of ways in which taxes can be avoided or reduced arises because of the lower rate applicable to the first $35,000 of taxable corporate income. A practice has developed of dividing a business enterprise between a number of associated companies, each one of which individually obtains the benefit of the lower rate of taxation.

Mr. Speaker, I do not criticize those who have taken advantage of these loopholes in the past, nor those officials who are responsible for administering the law in its present form. However, I do suggest that when loopholes of this kind are brought to our attention it is the responsibility of parliament to deal with them, and in doing so I do not suggest that any of the necessary amendments should be made retroactive in their effect.

In two cases, that is, in connection with dividend stripping and with associated companies it is proposed that the minister be given some discretion, subject however to the right of appeal either to the tax appeal board or the Exchequer Court. No one likes giving ministers discretion in these matters, and least of all, if I may say so, the minister who is responsible for administering the act; but we have not been able to find any alternative solution pending completion of the studies being undertaken by the royal commission on taxation.

Following receipt of the report of that commission I would hope that the limited ministerial discretion now recommended could be dispensed with, and I may say that in conversation with the chairman of the royal commission I have said that, if it is possible for him to let us have a report on this particular subject, ahead of his main report, it would be very useful to the administration.

The second category of amendments to which I referred earlier provides incentives for increased production and increased employment in certain designated areas which, for one reason or another, have not enjoyed as rapid a rate of growth as others. It is proposed that new manufacturing or processing enterprises located in designated areas of slower growth be exempted from income tax for three years, if any such new enterprise begins commercial operations within 24 months of the date of enactment of this bill.

Such enterprises will be entitled to write off new machinery and equipment in as little as two years, and new buildings over a period of five years; and they may defer this write-off rental after the expiry of the three year tax exempt period. These are very substantial incentives. It is hoped that they will induce new businesses to locate in areas which for some years have lagged behind the rest of Canada in their development and in employment opportunities. Considerable success has been achieved in other countries by offering inducements to companies to locate in areas of slow growth. I could mention quite a number of them, but I am hoping that the hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett), who has made a study of the subject, will have something to say about it in the course of the debate. I am sure she will be able to do so much more ably than I could.

The third category of amendments to which I referred earlier has to do with the proposed changes in the rates of withholding taxes. There seems to be general agreement on this. We must give priority in all our economic policies to measures that will bring our international transactions on current account into better balance; and, as has been stated on other occasions, the government is determined to do just that. As I say, I think most people in this house and the public generally will agree with this objective. However some people do not accept, or do not accept fully, some of its implications; they seem to think it is a mistake to make any changes in established ways of doing business. But surely, Mr. Speaker, there is no excuse for Canadians any longer to refuse to face the situation with which we are confronted. We simply must reduce our vulnerability to fluctuations in the international flows of capital. We cannot count on continuing to borrow abroad to pay our bills. We simply must bring our international transactions more nearly into balance. This really means that somehow or other we must secure a larger share of the North American market for our products.

As everybody knows, we have a surplus on current account with the rest of the world, and if we are to bring our international accounts into balance we must look to the North American market as the place for increased exports. If we are to do this, we must strive, among other things, to increase our exports of certain manufactured goods. We all know this is not going to be easy. We know that some 60 per cent of Canadian manufacturing is controlled by people who reside outside our borders, and we know that the corresponding percentages of absentee ownership for mining and refining are higher, and that for the petroleum industry it is higher still. We know also that a much higher proportion of our industry is controlled by non-residents of our country than is the case in any other country in the world.

A number of countries impose restrictions of one kind or another upon foreign participation in resident corporations and upon inflows of foreign capital. These include such countries as Sweden, Japan, India, Mexico, Britain to some extent, Switzerland and France. I think everyone will agree that in Canada we have gained a great deal from the parent-Canadian subsidiary company relationships that are so prevalent. This has meant access to new developments, to management know-how and to research facilities. But these parent-subsidiary relationships are a source of real difficulty when it comes to our objective of increasing exports, or even to reducing imports, especially of manufactured goods. This is particularly true in some cases where the Canadian subsidiary is wholly owned by a single foreign company. Often the managers of such subsidiaries have no real authority. The important decisions are made by the parent company. Understandably, the top officials of the parent company set their sights on increasing the volume of business and the profits of the total enterprise. It would be unreasonable to expect them to give the special requirements of the Canadian economy undue priority. It would be unreasonable to expect officials of a parent company, for example, to encourage their Canadian subsidiary to compete with its parent in the parent company's home markets or in other countries in which the parent company is interested, unless there were clear price and profit advantages in so doing.

It is significant, I think, that people who are connected with partially owned Canadian subsidiaries generally consider that having minority shareholding interests is a good thing for Canada. The managers of these companies usually have more autonomy, and apart from that they must keep in mind the best interests of all their shareholders and not just the largest one. In such cases the Canadian partially owned subsidiary is more likely to be allowed to do things that are in the best interests of our country. This is not always true, but I think it is a reasonably valid generalization.

In the budget speech I outlined the views of the government on how harmonious relations with foreign investors can best be preserved. Amongst other things, I referred to the desirability of foreign investors selling minority interests in their enterprises to Canadians and electing a number of independent Canadian directors to represent these interests. I pointed out, of course, that not even a 25 per cent interest in most new or existing enterprises is something that could be realized overnight. It is an objective to be worked towards over a period of years; and when I say that, I mean quite a long period of years.

There was nothing very new in the code of desirable behaviour that I suggested. The same sort of thing has been said by successive governments. But the ever increasing upward trend in foreign ownership of Canadian companies continues. I suggest to hon. members in all seriousness that the time has come when something more than words is needed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gordon: To this end the bill includes some incentives and some gentle pressures to broaden the base of ownership of Canadian companies gradually and moderately over a period of years. I have suggested already that I believe this would be helpful in achieving the objective of increasing exports or to some extent replacing imports through Canadian production, and thus reducing the current account deficit in our international transactions.

It has been rightly stated that Canadians are not in a position to purchase a quarter interest in all the Canadian subsidiary companies of all foreign corporations, even if they wished to do so. The necessary capital is not available, that is true; but no one has suggested that such a move would or should take place overnight or that in practice the owners of all Canadian subsidiaries would be willing to make some of their shares available. What has been suggested is merely that it would be a good thing if over a period of years there was a greater opportunity for some kind of partnership in the direction of companies that conduct their business in this country, and in this way more autonomy for local management.

There is nothing very harsh or punitive in the measures now suggested. To begin with, it is proposed to exempt certain institutions—pension funds are an example—from the non-resident withholding tax on interest payments in connection with new issues of securities. I should have made it clear that I refer to certain institutions outside Canada. The reason for this, of course, is that if these institutions, such as foreign pension plans, can buy our bonds without paying a tax to the Canadian treasury, they are more likely to do so. This will broaden the market for Canadian bonds, and it will also reduce the cost of borrowing by Canadians, when this becomes possible once again, and help to keep interest rates down.

Mr. Douglas: Will this apply only to bonds or will it also apply to equity securities?

Mr. Gordon: I am only talking about bonds. I am talking about broadening the market and reducing the cost of borrowing, when this becomes possible once again, and also borrowing abroad once again. Because as all hon. members know, until the legislation dealing with the U.S. interest equalization tax is passed by both houses in Washington there is a virtual shutoff of all borrowing by Canadians in the New York market.

The non-resident withholding taxes on dividends would be reduced from 15 per cent to 10 per cent where foreign parent companies make it possible for Canadians to acquire a small minority interest. The withholding taxes on dividends payable by companies which, for one reason or another, do not wish to do this will be increased from 15 to 20 per cent, but this increase will not go into effect until 1965. I suggest to hon. members that to do less than this by way of incentive or by way of a mild push would surely mean that we did not take this matter seriously. If we mean business Canada must gradually take whatever steps are necessary, even if such steps are not popular in all circles, to regain a greater measure of control over her own economic affairs, including the policy decisions of Canadian corporations. If we do not do this, Canadians may well wake up some day, and perhaps sooner than they think, and find that they have lost control not only of their economic destiny but of their political destiny as well.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on this bill before it goes to committee and is discussed clause by clause. I would remind the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) that just about one year ago when he sat on this side of the house, namely on November 15, 1962, he then said, as reported at page 1654 of Hansard:

> A complete revision of the Income Tax Act is overdue, and I think most hon. members of this house would agree. I hate to think that it is going to be postponed for several years pending the report of the proposed royal commission on taxation.

Then the minister went on to express his regrets at the illness of Mr. Carter, the chairman of the commission. The minister then continued:

> However, if the government knows what its objectives are, may I suggest that it should not be difficult for a small group of lawyers and chartered accountants who are familiar with taxation matters to draft a new act in a relatively short time without waiting for the report of the royal commission.

The minister now sits on the other side of the house. He has had the opportunity now to do just what he suggested, but he has brought forward very little except certain amendments to the Income Tax Act, the same as was done last year. He has also said, as he said then, that the Income Tax Act is too complex, too complicated; that it is difficult to understand and there are too many loopholes in it. I could not agree more with him in this respect. As a layman, as a businessman, I find the Income Tax Act and its amendments passed from year to year becoming more complex and difficult for the layman to understand. And here we are, going along the same way, adding more amendments to the act and making it more complicated as time goes on. However, I compliment the minister on closing up some of the loopholes he mentioned, and I think a government is just as responsible as the person who takes advantage of these loopholes, for not having closed them up before they were taken advantage of.

I should like to address my remarks to one section of the act in particular, namely section 16. This is mentioned in the remarks of the minister in the paragraph headed "incentives to industries". As I understand it, the government proposes to give certain substantial concessions to a company which creates a new industry in a designated area. These concessions are threefold. First, these industries will be given a three-year tax holiday from income tax. Second, they will be given a 50 per cent write-off on new machinery which can be completed over a period of two years. Third, they can have a 20 per cent write-off on new equipment and this can be completed over a five year period. I say that these are very substantial incentives, so much so that they have caused great interest and aroused a great discriminatory feeling in the particular area of the country from which I come, southwestern Ontario.

My criticisms on clause 16 are these, and I will try to bring them to the attention of the house without referring to the specific wording of the bill or the clause concerned. This, no doubt, will be done by other speakers in the committee stage. My first criticism would be that this clause is discriminatory. It is discriminatory in its effect because this government did not give sufficient study or attention to working out this incentive program before it was introduced. They did not realize the consequences and the implications of giving this incentive to one particular area in a heavily industrialized region.

When previously discussing the subject in this chamber, I cited the example of a father who had four of his children in a room and who gave to one of them a ten dollar bill while giving the others nothing. Of course, he would have a family row on his hands. This is exactly what the present government has done with regard to this great industrial community. Out of all the cities in this area, they give to one city, the city of Brantford, this particular concession without making it available to the other cities adjacent to it. We have in that area, as a result, a great family row among cities which were members of a very happy family living and working together. We were competitive. There was keen competition among us to get new industries. Then the government asks this house to pass legislation making it possible to grant a concession of this importance to one city and not to another. I say it is absurd for taxpayers to be asked to provide funds to make possible a concession amounting to more than $400,000 for new industry to establish in Brantford, or any other particular city in that area, rather than in, say, Guelph, or some other community.

Mr. Winkler: May I ask the hon. member a question? Is it true that while this area, Brantford, was being designated, certain industries in Brantford advertised in other neighbouring communities such as Kitchener for skilled labour?

Mr. Hales: That is precisely true. I understand that was the case in the city of Kitchener. I know that in Galt, only 15 miles from Brantford, one industrialist has intimated that after applying for help in the Brantford area papers not one person from that area came to apply for a position in a city only 15 miles away.

If this legislation is not discriminatory, why have so many resolutions on the subject been sent to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) and the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) by organizations in Waterloo, Kitchener, Guelph, Galt and other places in this area? Why did a delegation composed of mayors, reeves and other men elected by the people visit Ottawa recently? Why did they come here to put their case before the Minister of Industry, who, I may say, refused to make any changes or concessions with respect to this legislation?

Let us see what the labour council of the city which I have the honour to represent had to say on the subject, as reported in the Mercury of October 11:

> If the federal government's policy is going to be one of offering large subsidies to industry to locate in adjacent municipalities, we have no alternative but to disband our (industrial) commission and rely on a depressed area status.

So in my opinion this is discriminatory legislation of the worst kind. We are given a definition of what constitutes new industry. What is a new industry, under this definition? Well, if I am a manufacturer making a chair in any one of these cities and I put three rungs in it, instead of two, the chair becomes a new product. I have a new industry. I might be running a concern called the dominion chair company of Guelph. All I need to do is move from Guelph, set up in Brantford and call my business the dominion chair company of Brantford. I put up a new factory there, introduce new machinery and become eligible for concessions which amount to as much as $400,000, the amount received in one particular case by an industry which was established in our community and which moved to Brantford in order to take advantage of these substantial benefits.

I know what is probably being said by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the house. They are saying to themselves: he is talking this way just because the shoe pinches. That is not the case at all. I am objecting because, as I say, this legislation is discriminatory. It might be acceptable if it applied to distant places in remote areas where help was needed. I would go along with that, and I am sure other members of the opposition would go along with it, too.

My second ground for criticizing this measure is based on the method used to select the designated areas. The criteria which are used are not fair because they cover the last eight years. It appears that a national employment service area qualifies as a designated area, provided it has been classified by the Department of Labour as a labour surplus area for half or more of the summer months, May to October, during the past eight years and has experienced an employment increase of less than half of the national average over the same period. There are certain other alternatives set out in various subparagraphs. Statistics are all very well in some cases, but they must have a direct application to the situation we are facing. With regard to the case I have brought to the attention of the house, the case of the city of Brantford, I draw the attention of hon. members to the following which appeared in the Kitchener-Waterloo Record of October 11. Here it is, a full page, with the heading: " 'Distressed' Brantford Blushing But Grateful". There is a picture of park benches with only two people sitting on them. There is another picture of the employment service office—an office with not a soul in it except the officials. There is a picture of the main street of Brantford crowded with people shopping. It gives anything but the appearance of a distressed area. Then the text goes on to say this—and I cite the following in order to show that one cannot depend upon statistics alone:

> The city has long leaned heavily on its main industry—farm machinery. And in the past, the two giants, Massey-Ferguson and Cockshutt, have produced at full speed in fall and winter for the ripe spring market. But in summer, they have laid off hundreds.

This is a specific case. There are also, in that area, workers in the tobacco fields who enter the district to help in the planting and harvesting of the crop. Many of these people are transients, but after the tobacco season is finished they remain in the area over the winter. I bring these examples to the government's attention to show that you must use more than statistics in picking out designated or distressed areas.

My third criticism is that this is a very contradictory piece of legislation. Why? We have the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) sitting across from us, who has just said he is going to bring in amendments to the Income Tax Act so that fewer and fewer United States subsidiaries will locate in Canada. He is going to tax them so they will not come into this country, or something like that. This is what the legislation means in laymen's language. He is not going to encourage them to come in here. Now we have his partner, the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury), to whom he is talking at this minute, saying to this United States firm which had decided to locate in Guelph: You go over to Brantford which is a designated area, and we will give you $400,000 on a silver platter. The ministers' actions are contradictory and they are at cross purposes with one another. This seems to be the type of legislative policies we have had ever since the new government came into office, with one minister working against another. Solidarity of the cabinet means nothing any more. Here is a concrete example that they are working at cross purposes.

My fourth criticism is that this legislation overrides municipal and provincial autonomy. The mayor of the city of Brantford did not even know his city was a designated area until this firm went over there and bought a piece of property on which to locate. That was the first he knew about it. Ottawa says to Brantford: You are a designated area, and they had nothing whatever to say about it. This is Liberal central control policy.

Mr. Rynard: Bureaucracy.

Mr. Hales: Yes. Bureaucracy is the word. Provincial autonomy has been overridden; the Minister of Industry himself has said so. In speaking to the mayor of the city of Guelph he admitted they were overriding the Ontario law which permits no financial concessions to industry. The business of one city outbidding another city for industries got so bad that the province of Ontario said it had to stop and legislation was passed to that effect. It provided that city A could not offer freedom from land tax for five years, and in competition with city A city B could not offer ten years freedom from land tax. This situation was taken care of by the department of municipal affairs in Ontario. Yet the federal government has overlooked this legislation, overridden provincial autonomy and has gone ahead and named Brantford as a designated area.

The psychological effect is very bad. No community likes to be singled out as a slow growing or depressed area. What community wants to be called a depressed area? What community wants to be called a slow growth area? Most municipalities want to stand on their own feet, go it alone and work to develop industrial areas and attract industries in a good, clearcut way, as has been the case in the past.

My fifth criticism is that industrialists are discontented. They dislike having to compete with a new firm that is given concessions and is enticing staff away from them and undercutting prices. The situation is getting to be very bad in Brantford. The controversy has been propelled into the spotlight and new industries are making their contacts with the city through agents, because they do not want to be caught in the glare of publicity.

I hope the Minister of Finance will reconsider this amendment to the Income Tax Act. I summarize my criticisms. First, it is discriminatory. Second, the method of selecting or designating areas is not a sound one. Third, it is contradictory. Fourth, it overrides municipal and provincial autonomy. Fifth, it is very ill conceived and industrialists are not happy about it.

I present these reasons to the house why the amendment should be withdrawn completely. I know that when the Liberals were in opposition they hounded and urged us to introduce tax incentives to increase production and employment. Our government proceeded to lower the rate of tax on profits resulting from increased sales. This was an incentive, but we left it to industry to do it themselves. We did not interfere with municipal or provincial autonomy.

In the particular case to which I have been referring a wealthy United States firm came into my community. They were a well-to-do firm and did not need concessions. They are not poor by any means. In fact, perhaps the situation might be elaborated on in this way by using a Biblical expression: "To him that hath shall be given and to him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath". This is a case in point.

For these reasons, and many others which I am sure will be brought before the house before this amendment is passed, I would urge the minister to withdraw the whole section dealing with the proposed tax bonuses to new manufacturing and processing businesses in designated areas, until the matter has been given more careful study. I would beg the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Industry to do this.

Ask the chamber of commerce of Canada what they think about it. Ask the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. Ask the association of mayors and reeves. Ask the experts in the field what they think about this type of legislation. If the minister will approach the people who are close to the problem and if he wants a concrete example I would extend to him a first hand invitation to come to the community I have the honour to represent and learn what the people there are saying and thinking. Only last week end I was visiting the store of the man who ran against me as the Liberal candidate in the 1958 election. He said to me, "Alf, keep up the fight; you are on the right track and they are wrong". While visiting the fair the other day many of my good Liberal friends said, "You are on the right track and they are wrong; keep up the fight". So I say to the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Industry: Give this discriminatory piece of legislation further and more careful consideration.

[Mr. Hales.]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, in taking part this afternoon in this debate on proposed amendments to the Income Tax Act, I have in mind certain suggestions which I shall be happy to offer to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon). But, before I do so, I should like to point out how the general public and I myself feel about those proposed amendments.

If I am not mistaken, the main intention of the minister, in proposing the amendments, is to enable us to gradually become masters of our own economy. He said himself that the tax changes would help primarily to improve our unfavourable trade balance.

Obviously, there are many ways of achieving that objective. The one we are discussing now, that is the levying of taxes or simply tax exemptions in other areas, is certainly a method which can be used.

We have been told again and again for a long time that no other country's economy is under stronger foreign domination than that of Canada. Such an honour is not too enviable and we should all strive to correct that situation.

The interest Americans have shown for over a century in the expansion of the Canadian economy was certainly not inspired by any concern over the welfare of the Canadian people. Their concern was first to make profits and second, to take over resources which they could easily control and which could provide them, in the years to come, with the raw materials they need for their vast industries.

The fact that the Canadian economy is largely dominated by American interests exerts a tremendous influence on our country's development. As the minister pointed out, when decisions are taken at the management level of those enterprises, in a country other than our own, it is obvious that the concern is not for the human and economic factors involved and which will be affected by the decisions reached. Those people consider the interests of their country in the first place and consequently, the interests of Canada are relegated to the background.

It is therefore urgent, Mr. Chairman, that we take the necessary steps to regain our economic independence.

I pointed out recently that the economic control, the labour control as well as the military and political control, to which we are now subjected, have created lately many problems which are not yet completely solved.

I think that the present government has shown some indications which may lead us to expect that some action will be taken. Enough idle talk, it is time for action.

Mr. Speaker, the budget which was presented to us by the Minister of Finance on June 13 last, showed that he was ready for action, and we were sorry that, at a certain time, he had to back down and even withdraw one of the measures he had advocated, in other words, that he cancelled the tax he intended to impose on the sale of Canadian shares abroad. In my opinion, it was a commendable move, because just a few days after the withdrawal of that tax, we saw that Americans were taking advantage in a hurry of the opportunity which was given to them.

Mr. Speaker, I think that, in future, we shall have to seek further measures in order to promote the development of our industries by Canadians. It is obvious that the most essential measure will probably be the provision of capital, which is clearly inadequate at this time, so that we may take over in some areas which are not ours at present. It is not a matter of depriving those who have investments in Canada. That would not be fair, but we are entitled to buy back our properties and I think that the government should introduce legislation in order to supply the funds that we now need so urgently.

Let the government take the necessary steps so that we may develop our own industry and resources.

From what he said earlier, it seems that the minister's intentions are good and I hope that he will continue to take steps which will bring results.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the minister to give earnest consideration to some of the suggestions that he seemed interested in but that he dares not accept for fear of being considered a joker. In my opinion, the jokers are actually those who, in the past, as well as now, have let our country be developed by foreigners instead of Canadians, letting them benefit, on our behalf, from the natural resources which are so plentiful in our country.

Mr. Speaker, there are certainly anomalies in the Income Tax Act and I am of the opinion that everything is much too complicated in the taxation field.

I know that the minister expects very much from the report that will be submitted to him soon by the royal commission on taxation.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder now which measure we should pass in order to keep the control of our Canadian industries and prevent the heads of American industries from taking over Canadian industries established in our country.

I especially think of the special case of Canadian Oil which, I think, was taken over last year by Shell of America.

Considering the procedure followed at that time, I wonder whether we shall have to amend the Companies Act, under which it is permissible to increase the number of shares and offer them in exchange for other shares held by other companies.

I suggest that this procedure is a camouflaged theft, since the heads of those companies get the right to print share certificates of their company—which are very cheap—and to offer them later to holders of other companies they want to control.

Following the increase in the number of shares of their companies, and considering that they keep a sufficient number of them to retain control of the company, the heads of those companies thereby obtain control of firms without paying anything, for all practical purposes.

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, that procedure which we have seen in the past must cease if we really want Canadian industries to stay in the hands of Canadians, because otherwise we shall lie at the mercy of the great industrial and financial empires of our neighbours to the south which can use that procedure at any time.

As a matter of fact, Americans have recently taken over one of our Canadian banks, namely the Canadian Mercantile Bank, thus gaining control of another Canadian bank.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that if we want to prevent our institutions from being taken over by Americans, we shall have to take drastic measures which will probably cause a reaction and even bring about retaliatory action on the part of Americans. I think that, at this time, we Canadians should avoid any partisanship and all work together. Nineteen million Canadians will have to co-operate and strongly endorse the government which will take the necessary steps to regain control of our economy. This is a vital question.

I feel that we cannot postpone indefinitely the moment when such action must be taken because, at any time, we shall have to cope with a violent reaction from the foreign interests which will find themselves evicted from the strong positions they now hold and will lose the profits that they greatly appreciate. Other countries have taken that position before us. It is unfortunate that we should have to take such action against a friendly country, but if it is really friendly, it should understand that control of our economy must be given back to us, along with our political and military control.

Mr. Speaker, before concluding, I wish to mention a point which I particularly have at heart.

The Minister of Finance stated earlier, that he was amending the Income Tax Act, in order to remove the so-called "loopholes".

In this connection, I wish to make a suggestion. I admit that it is a rather delicate question to discuss, especially for me, since I come from the province of Quebec. I am referring to the section of the Income Tax Act which provides for a deduction of up to 10 per cent for charitable donations on presentation of official receipts and appropriate evidence.

Mr. Speaker, that is a touchy subject at present in the province of Quebec and I know that there may have been abuses on that point but I am sure that there have been similar abuses, not only among the French-Canadian population of the province of Quebec but in every part of Canada.

I cannot accept that the whole population of my province should be accused of dishonesty because a few people have been using this provision to get a tax rebate. I deny such an accusation, and so that it may not be made again in the future, I urge the minister to have that provision repealed in order that there may no longer be any tax deduction for charitable donations. Now, here is what I would suggest in return: That the tax rate on the $3,000 of taxable income be lowered from 17 to 12 per cent, so as to eliminate all these shenanigans, all that paper work and all those investigators who go about the country and cost the treasury a lot of money.

I see the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Garland) and I ask him to give all his attention to my proposal. As a matter of fact, I think that he did receive a letter I wrote him to this effect. The act lends itself to abuse and, if you think that this legislation is not all it should be, what are you waiting for to change it? I cannot tolerate those continual insinuations to the effect that the people of Quebec are dishonest.

Mr. Speaker, there are hundreds, if not thousands of individuals in the province of Quebec who have made out their income tax returns for 1962 and who are still waiting for the overpaid tax to be reimbursed.

That legislation authorizes deductions of 10 per cent of the taxable income, with suitable evidence of course. Now, if the given proof justifies a certain deduction, why should there be such a delay?

I wonder if it would not be possible to hire other people to conduct other investigations so as to give satisfaction to our fellow citizens.

We are now at the end of October and you will have to pay interest on those amounts you are withholding. That business should be settled once and for all.

[Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John).]

Mr. Speaker, I ask the minister, as well as his colleague, to see to it that this section of the act be withdrawn, since it lends itself to abuse. He should accept my suggestion; it would help to simplify an act which is already so complex and confused.

To finish my remarks, let me, strike another note, Mr. Speaker. Our group advocated certain amendments. We made many suggestions and, personally, I consider that with the present taxation system, it is always the consumer who has to pay. It is no good trying to find out who is finally going to pay the tax collected here and there. In the end, it is always the consumer. Why multiply those taxes endlessly?

I therefore ask that the cost of production of the goods sold in this country and the total of taxes levied be indicated. I also ask that taxes be charged on the finished product rather than on all phases of production. That would enable our producers to face competition on foreign markets without risking to be accused of dumping. That would put the Canadian industry in a better position to face foreign competition.

Finally, I think that we could greatly simplify that Income Tax Act because the consumer is always the one who has to pay the bill. Those taxes are levied precisely in order to provide for the payment of the services for which we cannot pay individually and which we are required of the government.

We accept to do our share so that those services may be provided for the majority. So, it is normal that we should accept to pay that premium, if I may call it that, so that the government can keep on providing those services.

This proposal we just put forward today is certainly not the ideal thing, far from it, but it tends to alleviate the taxpayers' burden. I am not a taxation expert and I suppose that those experts could find other alternatives; but, on the other hand, when we depend only on experts, the result is that we get exceedingly complicated situations. I think that this document prepared by experts could be used as conclusive evidence.

[Text]

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, what we are dealing with this afternoon is, I suppose, the somewhat battered remnant of the budget that was presented to us many months ago. I would like for a moment to point out that in the modern world of government administration a budget is something far more than merely the housekeeping accounts of our national government. It is a piece of mechanism by which a government decides, in the first place, just how the national income is going to be distributed. It is a piece of mechanism by which a government can to a great extent determine just how much its revenues shall increase and how much its expenditures can increase, or vice versa.

I have been rather struck with some of the measures in this bill. I was at the time they were introduced in resolution form by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) and on that occasion I suggested that perhaps the budgetary mechanism was not being used in the best interests of the Canadian people. I think we should remember that this budgetary mechanism is the same wherever it operates; it is the piece of mechanism not only by which the Minister of Finance of Canada protects the interests of a number of quite well padded corporations but it is the same sort of mechanism by which his opposite numbers in different parts of the world achieve different purposes. I suppose you might say it is the piece of mechanism by which Mao Tse-tung rather ruthlessly turns Chinese peasants into industrial workers. In the present instance we have in this bill a number of provisions that are going to increase the holdings of rather privileged sections of our society. I say this having regard to statistics that I am sure the minister has seen, which indicate that those sections of our society are doing very well now.

We have, for instance, the report of the dominion bureau of statistics with regard to gross business savings. Really these are rather astonishing figures when we consider them in connection with the proposals of our Minister of Finance. There was a total increase in gross business savings of rather more than $400 million between the years 1961 and 1962. This was made up of an increase of $200 million in undistributed corporation profits and a similar amount, multiplied by ten, with regard to depreciation allowances, which rose from $4,539 million in 1961 to $4,755 million in 1962.

I suggest, sir, that in the face of these figures the government and the Minister of Finance could have done much more toward dealing with the other problems that he has been presenting to us. In the main the two problems—and his attempts to grapple with them, I may say, have my heartiest sympathy and support—are the question of foreign ownership and the question of reversing the rather disastrous centripetal force that has been dragging all our industry, all our production into only a few industrial centres. We face the problem of encouraging development in the designated areas and making some attempt to control the increasing foreign ownership of our resources and our industry.

As I say, Mr. Speaker, I have great sympathy, as I am sure practically every member of this house must have, with the minister when he tells us, quite rightly, that this is a very serious problem which may have results much more quickly than many of us understand and realize with regard to our political independence, as well as our economic independence. I think this is something that all Canadians should be recognizing today. We should be recognizing that we have actually only two courses to follow. We can attempt to do it along the lines that the minister has pointed out—and I am going to deal with the methods he has outlined, which I think are ineffective—or allow ourselves to be submerged in the economy and the political life of our great neighbour to the south. If we decide we are going to do the latter, the sensible thing for us to do would be to start negotiations to that end right now. If we are going to allow ourselves to be absorbed, let us take some positive action to be absorbed on our own terms. I think that idea is repugnant to most Canadians, but it is not sufficient merely to feel it is repugnant; you have to do something positive about it.

What the minister is suggesting in this bill is, I think, really a rather naïvely optimistic course of action. I refer to the suggestion that with great effort and, according to him this afternoon, the lapse, of considerable time, we might achieve a 25 per cent ownership in industries that are now foreign owned. As I say, I think it is naïvely optimistic in a day and age when it is notorious that even the majority stockholders in corporations have little or no say in their direction to imagine that a minority group of 25 per cent could have any really effective control over corporation policies. It is naïve and optimistic in the extreme.

I would suggest that this suggestion has come about because of the government's preoccupation with some of the disappearing myths of economics from which we are still suffering; the idea that we must rely on private enterprise for all these changes which we wish to make. This not only produces an ineffective solution, but one that even if we achieve it today, tomorrow we might lose it; because if we are going to replace private American ownership—we might as well place the name right now on the record, because we all know to whom we are referring when we speak of foreign ownership—with private Canadian ownership, what guarantee have we that next week or next month or six months from now our Canadian 25 per cent ownership is not going to succumb to an attractive offer from the corporation directors of the company in which they hold their shares.

I would suggest that rather than do that, the minister would be better advised to lay plans for making a modest public investment, possibly even less than 25 per cent, in these industries in which it becomes possible to do so. He should take a leaf out of the book of the French planners, who have planned in a rather careful and rather conservative manner but who nevertheless have adopted a policy by legislation of ensuring that a designated director assumes his seat on the board of directors of every corporation in which the public authority invests funds in France. The steel industry in France, for instance, has about 30 per cent of its stock held by the public authority.

In addition to that, the public authority designates a director to take part in the deliberations of the board of directors of that corporation. If you wish to make a minority stockholding effective on the board of directors you have to ensure, in the first place, that it is going to be permanently there, and in the second place that it will have a powerful voice on the board of directors.

I suggest that the director designated by the government of Canada would have a very important voice in any company decision. I also submit that the same argument must also be used with regard to this vexed question of encouraging development in the designated areas. In the first place, I think that some of the provisions are open to very severe criticism in that they appear to leave the door open for very substantial raids on the public treasury, by means of this tax exemption, by corporations—and I see nothing in the act which seems to prohibit this—which are well established in other parts of the country setting up a wholly-owned subsidiary corporation, moving into one of these designated areas and taking advantage of these tax exemption provisions. It may be I am wrong and that I have read the bill wrongly, but I have not seen any provision there which would prevent that sort of operation. When we consider that the vast bulk of productive enterprise in Canada today is carried on by very large, powerful and wealthy corporations, I think this is a very real danger which faces the minister's attempts to encourage development in these designated areas.

These are the main criticisms I make of the minister's bill; but in addition I feel that the whole tax structure should really be reorganized and that it should be reorganized from an entirely different point of view from that which seems to be held by the government and by the minister. It should be considered part of the duty of a modern government and a modern minister of finance to use the budget and taxation, the fiscal structure of the country, in a redistribution of income throughout the community. After all, that is the modern trend in society all over the world. It has been the means by which we have progressed. It has only been the rapid and quite drastic redistribution of income in North America which has enabled the North American economies to develop as they have. One of the pioneers, of course, in that field was a gentleman who would have repelled most vigorously any idea that that really had been his purpose, the late Henry Ford, who staggered and dismayed his fellow industrialists by suggesting that it was possible to pay $5 a day for industrial workers. When he did so he laid the groundwork for this redistribution of income upon which modern industry is now based; and I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the minister is missing an opportunity when he persists in increasing the benefits to be derived by wealthy corporations from our fiscal structure, and does nothing, or practically nothing, to advance this process of income redistribution upon which economic prosperity so largely depends.

Somebody mentioned this afternoon that the minister's attempt to deal with foreign ownership by means of his 30 per cent takeover tax had had to be abandoned, and then the Americans had moved into that field. I am sure the minister does not have that rather naïve interpretation of the events which happened. I should like to speak for a moment on this, because it is one of the great problems facing us today.

The minister has pointed out that, due to the present position of the interest equalization tax, the legislation governing which is still undecided before the U.S. congress, there has been a virtual drying up of all investment coming into Canada, or at least a very severe diminution of it. The anxiety at the time the tax was announced to get special concessions from the United States indicated the minister's realization of the very precarious position in which the Canadian economy finds itself today. It is a precarious state of affairs because we have allowed ourselves to get into the position of depending upon a continual inflow of capital to balance our payments problem. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that there is something much more important which will have to be done than merely trying to keep United States investment out, or to diminish it, and to keep United States imports out if we are to tackle this whole problem which was indicated to us when President Kennedy announced the tax. It was in fact nothing less than an indication from the United States authorities that they are no longer able to do what they have been doing since 1945, and that is in large measure to finance the exchange transactions of the world. It has been accomplished at the cost of enormous and growing deficits in the United States, which in turn have caused a weakening of the dollar, which again in turn has caused the run on gold which so alarmed the United States authorities.

My great fear is that Canada—although I must say I have seen no indication that the minister is moving in this direction—and other countries in the world may be tempted to seek a solution to this problem by unilateral action in order to preserve their own currency, and solve their own balance of payments problem unilaterally by a belt-tightening process. Unfortunately there are some very powerful and influential voices in Canada at the present time urging our Minister of Finance to pursue that policy. I hope he is going to turn a very deaf ear to those voices and is not going to put Canada in the position of taking part in what could only be a chain reaction of depression, such as took place some 30 years ago with the collapse of the pound sterling, when the world faced the same situation, and was under the same pressures and difficulties as are faced by the U.S. dollar today. Not that I am suggesting that the United States dollar is in any danger whatever of collapsing in the way the pound sterling did because, of course, the United States economy is still the wealthiest and most productive in the world. But the United States has given us and the other 21 nations in the world to whom the proposed legislation will apply notice that they can no longer shoulder this burden, and I hope the Canadian government will at least encourage, and perhaps take the lead in pressing for an international solution to this problem, an international solution which is required not merely to prevent the developed countries from plunging into a wave of depression, but also to make effective any development of the undeveloped areas of the world, or to provide any effective means of closing the gap which now is widening between the "have not" nations and "have" nations.

I think that these are the problems facing one minister. I hope he is going to resist the pressures which will be brought to bear on him to balance our budget, to tighten our belts to protect the Canadian dollar by the time-honoured method of balancing the budget and that he realizes that the world has now reached the stage where we have to co-operate with an international field and develop international mechanisms to deal with the economic problems of each of our national economies.

I feel that this bill before us this evening takes very little cognizance of the difficulties which lie before us. I do not think we are going to be able to solve the problem of foreign ownership by the type of proposal brought forward by the minister. I think it is a much more far reaching problem which is going to require much more fundamental reorganization of our own economy. I would plead with the Minister of Finance and his colleagues that they do not fall into the stance adopted last night by one of our Conservative colleagues in the house, who launched such doughty blows for free enterprise that he wanted us to hand over Northern Transportation to private enterprise. I hope they will realize that so far from that being a sensible or rational procedure, the very reverse is required today—a great stepping up of public investment both independently and in conjunction with private investment. If we are to solve these problems of foreign ownership and the necessity of developing the designated areas, I trust the minister and his colleagues will bear that in mind and will not cast too many sidelong glances toward the gods of free enterprise, which are disappearing in the mists today, but leave their sacrifices before the new gods of collectivism which are beginning to emerge in the minds of intelligent and able people.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, when one reads the bill, one cannot but find it somewhat complicated. In fact, paragraph (a) of section 1 is exactly 12 lines long, without any semicolon. I shall read that paragraph and I challenge anybody to tell me that he understands what it is all about, after hearing that reading.

I see the Postmaster General (Mr. Denis), who understands French very well, and I shall read that paragraph to him. Then I shall ask him whether he has understood what it means.

> The value of board, lodging and other benefits of any kind whatsoever (except the benefit he derives from his employer's contributions to or under a registered pension fund or plan, group sickness or accident insurance plan, medical services plan, supplementary unemployment benefit plan, deferred profit sharing plan or group term life insurance policy) received or enjoyed by him in the year in respect of, in the course of, or by virtue of the office or employment; and—

If the Postmaster General understands what it means, Mr. Speaker, he is smarter than we are.

I can well understand that when an ordinary citizen has to file his income tax return he is faced with all the difficulties found in that legislation.

At page 17, subsection 3ba, you can read:

> In its application to any corporation described in paragraph (ea) of subsection (3b), paragraph (f) of subsection (3b) shall be read and construed as though—

Complications, Mr. Speaker, to such an extent that one is at a loss to understand and—

Mr. Caouette: The minister himself does not understand too well.

Mr. Gregoire: —that the minister himself, as the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) just said, does not understand too well, although in private life he is an accountant and one of the best in Canada.

But, Mr. Speaker, what will be the result of such a complex bill? Our Canadian businessmen will have to spend part of their profits to hire some staff, an accountant, secretaries, and occasionally interpreters, even linguists and professors of literature to try and understand, draw up budgets, and do some accounting and bookkeeping, as a result of all those complicated laws adopted by the federal government.

I know businessmen who told me that almost half of their profits went to pay experts to decipher the Income Tax Act and file their returns. And if there is the smallest mistake, the inspectors do not understand that the blame lies with the minister who had this complex legislation adopted. The officials are also to blame, because they do not know themselves how to interpret the law in most cases; but they levy fines and penalties on the poor taxpayers who cannot understand the Act, because it is too complicated.

Mr. Caouette: It is terrorism.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I submit that the minister—I recall talking about it here before, when the minister agreed to our request—should make an effort and try to trim down this whole tax legislation in order to make it more understandable for all Canadians, not only the ordinary taxpayers, but also those who pay large amounts in taxes, such as the companies, big or small, because it is legislation which is expensive to carry out since it requires too many people to fill out the tax returns.

If you try to read this legislation, you find it so difficult sometimes that some businessmen get discouraged, which I can understand, in preparing their annual returns.

Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would urge the minister to simplify the act in order to make its contents clear to taxpayers, so that the businessman will not always be the victim of the official who, in most cases, is stone-hearted. Equipped with all the powers and privileges, he breaks into the businessman's office, carrying away all the papers with him. I see that the Minister of Finance is nodding. In fact, these officials may even arrive with trucks, empty safes and desks, and carry everything with them. If the person objects, the Royal Mounted Police come 12 hours later with a warrant and take everything.

But if the act was simplified, if taxpayers were allowed to understand it better, if it was applied with more sense and heart, then Canadian citizens would be in a better situation. Today they not only pay but they have to put up with a lot of trouble.

By trying over and over again to make out what this is all about, Mr. Speaker, I finally succeeded in understanding certain points.

There is one in particular which I was able to make out. Indeed, the minister, at one point, quoted section 28 amending section 139 to make it section 139a (1):

> For the purpose of this act, a corporation has a degree of Canadian ownership and control in a taxation year if throughout the 60 day period immediately preceding that year (or if the corporation did not have a preceding taxation year, throughout the 60 day period commencing on the first day of the year).

And it continues:

> (a) the corporation complied with the following conditions:
> (i) the corporation was resident in Canada,
> (ii) either
> (A) not less than 25 per cent of the issued shares of the corporation having full voting rights were owned by one or more individuals resident in Canada—

Then, the minister stated that, more or less, he was satisfied that a corporation is controlled and owned by Canadians if 25 per cent of the issued shares are owned by Canadians. It does not take much to satisfy him, because 25 per cent of the shares are owned by Canadians while 75 per cent are owned by non-residents. And the minister claims that those corporations would be controlled by Canadians.

If we keep on accepting that corporations can get special privileges while 75 per cent of their shares are owned by foreigners, or foreign corporations, we should not be surprised to see foreigners monopolizing 75 per cent of the shares of Canadian corporations in order to enjoy special privileges.

I submit that if we want to grant some rights or privileges to those corporations, it must be to corporations in which at least 51 per cent of the shares, not 25 per cent, are owned by Canadian interests, so that the policies may be decided on here, in Canada.

This is what I read in a newspaper today:

> Washington proposes to Ottawa the establishment of a vast natural resources pool.

Canada has natural resources such as iron, oil, etc. It would seem that the Americans would like to set up a pool of our natural resources to get as much as they can from our own resources. Who would thereby benefit?

If this bill is adopted and if we stipulate that only 25 per cent of the shares of Canadian companies are to be held by our nationals, who would benefit from such a pool of our natural resources?

Mr. Speaker, I say that it is the United States or American financiers who would again profit from such a scheme.

In the financial columns of the same newspaper, the Quebec premier is reported as saying:

> Canadian capital is not sufficient, said Mr. Lesage, if we are to fulfil our dreams. Foreign capital will be required to carry out the projects which Quebec's future justifies.

There would seem to be some contradiction between the statement of the Quebec premier and the proposal made by the federal Minister of Finance who is trying to repatriate our industries. One of them says: "Let us regain control of our economy" while the other states that we must attract foreign capital. There does not seem to be any common ground for agreement between them, since the Minister of Finance would like to see Canadians take over the control of their industry, even if the proportion is to be only 25 per cent, while the Quebec premier claims that our dreams cannot be fulfilled nor our projects carried out if we do not get financial assistance from outside, because there is not enough capital here to develop our country.

We must welcome foreign capital in order to achieve our goals. Investments are needed.

If, instead of exerting so much effort to find foreign capital, the Minister of Finance would try to create capital in Canada, which is something we are in a position to do, then Canadians could develop themselves, for the benefit of Canadians, the natural resources available in our own country.

We have all the resources, the manpower and the skills required. Yesterday, the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) told us to find some competent people. We claim that such people exist; we know that there are competent people able to develop our natural resources. But what do we need then? Only the financial means to develop our natural resources.

I fail to understand why a supposedly intelligent group, such as the present cabinet with so many economists, is unable to find a solution where mere figures or scraps of paper will no longer impede the development of our Canadian resources.

I wonder why the Minister of Finance, who is a good accountant, has not yet realized that, by means of a monetary and financial system, it is possible to develop the natural resources of our country without always having to beg from foreigners a few scraps of paper that are needed to put people to work in our country for the development of our resources.

This is completely incomprehensible. How is it that the required capital is not available in our country?

Here is what Malraux says:

> Andre Malraux makes a summary of his mission.
> My predominating impression about Quebec? Hope.
> What struck me about your achievements? Their intentions.

Hope for the future. Intentions.

Intentions are good. There is hope of seeing them come true. But why is it not done? Why are our intentions not brought into being? Precisely because, in Canada, we are somewhat limited in our plans for lack of funds. When we need money, we are forced to go and beg abroad, outside of our own borders.

That problem has been raised several times in the house already. We have tried to explain our ideas understood in various ways. To us the matter appears simple. The Minister of Finance listens to us but, so far, he has not done a thing.

We find it strange that, whenever the government tries to do something, for instance to increase old age pensions, it always has the same idea in mind, that is to increase taxes. That is a step it promises to avoid prior to the election but, once the election is over, it does the opposite.

And now I shall deal quickly with another point. Reference has been made to receipts for charitable donations. I agree with what was said a while ago, to the effect that an abnormal situation is developing in this field. I get letters from my electors and other people who say: "We have sent receipts duly signed by the parish priest and, without telling us why, an income tax inspector has taken it upon himself to reduce the amount of money coming to us."

If only the inspector would go and see the taxpayer and explain to him the reason for this reduction; but no, the amount of the refund is reduced without consultation with anyone.

The small taxpayer has two alternatives: either accept the situation—and he is squashed once more—or start procedures to get his due, which will entail expenses.

When the Department of National Revenue cuts down the charitable donation receipts, the taxpayer should not have to pay the costs of the proceedings.

The department acts in a dictatorial way when it cuts down the refund and makes the taxpayer bear the costs of the proof. It is contrary to the law, in Canada. The Minister of National Revenue acts in a way which is contrary to the provisions of the Civil Code of the province of Quebec, and contrary to the law in Canada. While our law is based on the principle that the onus of proof lies with the prosecutor, it lies upon the taxpayer in the case of income tax, and this contrary to the provisions of Canadian law.

The result of this is that the small taxpayer is satisfied with staying home and grumbling against the Department of National Revenue and the government.

Why not change the procedure. When the department receives an income tax return, why not accept it as it is? It is true that some taxpayers try to cheat, but then the onus of proving the cheating or error should lie with the Department of National Revenue. The department should not make an arbitrary decision by itself, saying to the small taxpayer: "If you are not satisfied, take proceedings, even if this is costly."

The Department of National Revenue forces too many Canadians to suffer injustice and keep quiet, because they do not have the means to defend themselves. As far as charity receipts are concerned, I am of the opinion that the stand of the department is unfair. I suggest the inspectors of the federal government have really been trained to act as dictators and give as much trouble as possible to our Canadian citizens. That situation should change, and we take advantage of this opportunity to request an amendment to the Income Tax Act.

I should like to speak again of a certain argument which is very important to us and which we mentioned often. I will deal quickly with it because there is not much time left; it is the ultimatum of the premier of Quebec. That ultimatum was delivered April 5 last, that is six months ago. There are only six months left until April 5, 1964.

The Quebec premier has delivered an ultimatum to the federal government, whatever may be the party in power after the general election of April 8, demanding that the federal government give back to the province of Quebec, as a first step and before April 5, 1964, 25 per cent of personal income taxes, 25 per cent of corporation taxes and 100 per cent of succession duties. On coming back here after the election, we asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) if they were aware of the ultimatum.

What was their reaction? We were told: "No, we never heard about it". And a few days later, after having received some newspaper clippings with the following headlines:

The ultimatum of the province of Quebec—

They admitted that there was an ultimatum. Today, the government knows there is an ultimatum and it is aware that this ultimatum ends on April 5 next.

There is a lot of talk about saving confederation. If we wish to save it, let us begin by abiding by it, by respecting the two great races forming Canada and at the same time by respecting one another.

I read in the same newspaper:

Lamontagne is confident that Canada will survive its centennial.

This is the President of the Privy Council, the member for Outremont-St. Jean (Mr. Lamontagne), talking.

If we wish to ensure the survival of confederation, we must begin by respecting it, which implies the enforcement of the British North America Act which gives direct taxes such as corporation taxes and succession duties to the provinces.

Those fields of taxation belong to the provinces, and the federal government has now but six months to satisfy the terms and conditions given in this ultimatum which has our support, as a first step, for our struggle will come to an end only if and when we get back 100 per cent of our revenue sources.

Should this government be unwilling to face the present situation, to have regard for the spirit as well as for the letter of confederation, then, we shall have the right to say—and I will be the first one to do so, I say it once more—we shall have the right to say that our confederation will suffer a break and will perhaps be unable to celebrate its centennial. I, for one, will not hesitate to say so.

If the intention is to give back to the provinces what belongs to them in the first place, that is the sources of revenues to which they are entitled, I, for one, will have increased confidence in confederation. But if the situation does not change shortly, then, I will say that confederation is a situation where the central government tries to deprive the provincial governments in an attempt to appropriate all fields such as education, health, hospitalization plans, etc.

If the intention is not to carry out the undertakings given in the British North America Act, I will not hesitate in stating that. I shall say that confederation did not attain its goal and that it is a colossal failure.

However, we hope that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) will assume his responsibilities and will revamp his system so as to restitute to the provinces the income tax, the corporations profits tax and the succession duties.

Mr. Malraux is right when he says:

What strikes me most in the province of Quebec is their intentions.

We have intentions in the province of Quebec, we have faith in French Canadian people, we intend to develop our province, our ethnic group. We are confident because we know that we are able to do it; we have faith in our own people, and we are able to help develop the country as a whole.

But if they start by not abiding by the commitments of the past, those resulting from the confederation, if they start by taking away from us the means to develop ourselves, how can we carry out those intentions?

What prevails at this time in the province of Quebec is a feeling of hope. We hope to find our own way towards development, within the frame of our own culture, to which we are deeply attached, and without betrayal of our French Canadian personality. We intend to develop our province, our ethnical group. If we are deprived of the necessary means towards that end, we shall have to take whatever measures are available.

I have perhaps deviated somewhat from the subject of the Income Tax Act, but not too much, really, because what we want is that the power of taxation be given back to the province of Quebec, as well as to all the other provinces.

Mr. Speaker, those are the few remarks I wanted to make to clarify all those complicated things, like our monetary system, which nobody understands in Canada, and also, in order to simplify the Income Tax Act, so that the minister might, by resorting to efficient means and not to 25 per cent measures, succeed in Canadianizing our industries, our manufactures and our natural resources, by taking the necessary steps to give a positive answer to the ultimatum delivered not by a political party, but by the whole people of Quebec, and which will expire on April 8 next.

[Text]

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Hales) made some observations in relation to designated areas. In particular, he suggested that the scheme which had been introduced for designating areas was discriminatory. In the dictionary sense of the word, this is quite true. The scheme and the criteria are designed to be discriminatory, to pick out the less fortunate, the more unfavoured areas, and to provide measures of assistance for them over and above what the Canadian economy provides for Canada as a whole. In this sense, it is discriminatory and it is deliberately discriminatory.

An endeavour has been made through the criteria to select those areas which have been the least favoured in terms of a chronic high level of unemployment and stagnation, in terms of economic growth, and to provide advantages to those areas which will enable them, to some extent, to offset the disadvantages and to share to a greater degree in our national growth, in our national prosperity, than has been the case in the past. The hon. member mentioned that Brantford, particularly the N.E.S. area, should not be allowed to continue to be designated and draw these advantages. He suggested that the people of Brantford did not like their area being described as a designated area. I can assure him that I have heard from the mayor of Brantford. Although he is unable to speak for the whole of the N.E.S. area, the mayor of Brantford is highly appreciative of the fact that Brantford is in the national employment service designated area.

Perhaps some citizens of more fortunate communities would prefer not to see these advantages go to the more unfortunate sister communities, and I suppose this is understandable. I do not suggest this is a reason for the federal government giving way and yielding to those who suggest that we should not exercise our responsibility by providing what measures of assistance we can to relieve the chronic high level of unemployment and assist in accelerating the economic growth of less favoured areas.

I should like, Mr. Speaker, to provide a few figures in respect of this particular question. I may say that of the 35 areas designated in respect of high level unemployment in the summer months, not one has registered anything except satisfaction at the plan. The community of Guelph and its contiguous areas are the only ones from whom representations have been received protesting the plan. As Minister of Industry, I have received a vast number of representations urging that additional communities should be included, and in particular the communities represented by the speaker. However, they do accept the fact it is necessary to qualify under the criteria and consequently they do not press.

The criteria which have been criticized provide as follows: That an N.E.S. area will qualify for designation, and consequently assistance which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) has outlined, if it has suffered from a high level of chronic unemployment and a lack of economic growth. This, in concrete terms, means that during the six summer months from May to October an area must have been in the labour surplus category for over 50 per cent of those months during the past eight years. Further, that over the past eight years it must have recorded a rate of growth less than half the national average.

I will compare two cities, Brantford and Guelph, during this eight year period. During the 48 summer months in the past eight years, 1955-62, Brantford was in a labour surplus condition for 87 per cent of those months. During the same period of 48 months Guelph was in a labour surplus condition for only 21 per cent of those months.

During the same eight years the rate of employment growth in Brantford was 2 per cent; that is, 2 per cent over the whole eight years. During the same period Guelph experienced a growth in employment of 19.7 per cent, almost ten times as great.

A second criterion is related to communities which, while they may have been relatively well off over the long haul, have experienced a sudden decrease in industrial activity. In this case a criterion has been established for looking at only a three year period, and in order to qualify under the three year period a N.E.S. area must have been for 18 summer months of that period in a surplus labour condition for 50 per cent of those months.

In the last three years, 1959-62, Brantford was in a labour surplus condition in 89 per cent of the summer months, and Guelph was in a labour surplus condition in only 39 per cent of those same 18 months. In the same three years the growth of employment in Brantford, on a minus or negative growth basis, showed minus 7.4 per cent, while in the same three years the growth of employment in Guelph was plus 2.4 per cent.

Taking it year by year in those three years, employment changes in Brantford in 1959-60 compared with the previous year were minus 7 per cent; 1960-61, minus 6.1 per cent, and in 1961-62 a plus of 1.2 per cent. I say this to indicate that in the last year there was some slight improvement in the Brantford employment picture. However in the same period in Guelph the growth of employment was 4.7 per cent, about four times as great.

Mr. Weichel: May I ask the minister a question. He is talking about Brantford being a depressed area, but why should it be, when recently two firms had advertisements in the Kitchener-Waterloo Record asking for labour help?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I would draw the attention of the house to the fact that the use of the term "depressed area" was not employed by me. Brantford is not a depressed area.

Mr. Webb: Well, distressed.

Mr. Drury: Nor is it distressed. There is a rate of high unemployment and slow economic growth, and I suggest the reason employers in Brantford have been advertising outside of Brantford for help probably lies in the fact that the shortage of skilled artisans throughout Canada is well known and recognized. If we have high unemployment it is unemployment of those who are unskilled.

In many categories of industrial employment there is a labour shortage in Canada today, and part of the problem we face as a country is to convert those who are unskilled into those possessed of skills. While in Brantford today there is a great surplus of manpower unemployment there is no surplus—indeed I suspect there is a shortage—in certain skilled categories.

Mr. Nesbitt: May I ask the minister a question. Is he not aware that in the city of Brantford there are rather peculiar or exceptional circumstances which have created this statistical unemployment picture during the last two years, and when I say statistical I mean in comparison to its neighbouring communities? I refer of course to the relocation of the Massey-Ferguson Company and the Cockshutt Company. It is perhaps worthy to note that Brantford over the years has been largely dependant on the farm machinery business, and because of the relocation and rebuilding of these big plants this has probably created a very decided aberration in these unemployment figures.

Mr. Drury: I do not accept the suggestion that because there have been plants closed in Brantford as a consequence of relocation of industry, and as a consequence of this a lot of people were unemployed, that this created an aberration in the unemployment figures.

Mr. Nesbitt: They are building a $15 million plant in Brantford now. That is the reason.

Mr. Drury: I might point out to the hon. member that during the current summer, while this multimillion dollar plant was being built, there were probably more people employed in the construction force than would be employed when the plant comes into operation. The figures I have given to the house related to the current summer months while this high level, or allegedly high level of construction activity has been going on in Brantford. When these buildings are completed those in the construction trades engaged in building the plants will be laid off. They will be replaced by the people operating these plants, but there will still be the same number displaced in the unemployment roles as those now engaged in the construction industry and who will be laid off when building is completed.

Mr. Nesbitt: May I suggest to the minister that these construction people are not from Brantford but from other cities.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to hon. members that in view of the letter we have received from the other place we should stay for a few minutes more. I have been informed that the messenger is on his way.

Mr. Weichel: May I ask the minister another question. If you have Brantford as a distressed area instead of a depressed area, do you not feel all the cities in that community are going to suffer in regard to new industries?

Mr. Drury: I did not quite get the question. Do I feel that because Brantford has been designated, then other sections of that community will suffer—is that the question?

Mr. Weichel: Yes, the other cities in the community, Kitchener, Waterloo, Preston and Guelph. I am sure they will suffer by not being able to secure more industries.

Mr. Drury: There is no question that Brantford is going to have a temporary advantage. After all, one of the purposes of the legislation is to confer an advantage on an area which for some reason or another has suffered over past years. The intention is to provide additional assistance to relieve high level chronic unemployment. It will have an advantage, but I do not feel for a second, nor do I think the hon. member does, that this advantage is going to be such that all industry coming to Canada is going to locate in Brantford and, as a consequence, all other cities in Canada might as well shut up shop.

Mr. Weichel: I do not expect that at all.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

ROYAL ASSENT

PRIVILEGE

MR. WINKLER—PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENT REFERRED TO BY POSTMASTER GENERAL

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which concerns all hon. members of this house and, of course, the whole country. Yesterday a motion for the production of papers was on the order paper, motion No. 99, and there was an extended discussion with regard to the existence of a certain document. In the course of that discussion it was stated by the Postmaster General that this document did not exist. These words are to be found in Hansard at page 3626. A little earlier the Secretary of State also stated that the document did not exist. This was in accord with discussions which took place during consultation between the Secretary of State and the Post Office Department.

For the benefit of the house and the country, I have such a document before me now. As a matter of fact it is a copy of the document in question the production of which was requested under the terms of motion No. 99. If the house so desires I am prepared to table it, and that would end the discussion.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I am advised that this is not a public document. It belongs to a private member; and if a private member is to produce a document of this nature—I have not seen the document but I assume it is of the nature indicated—the consent of the private member concerned would be required.

Mr. Winkler: If may say a further word, the main point at this juncture is not whether the list which I have is authentic, though I believe it to be so. It is that the Secretary of State misled the house yesterday when he said this particular document did not exist. Also, if the words of the Secretary of State were clear, and I believe they were, then of course the Postmaster General had misled the Secretary of State as he misled the entire house.

As I have already indicated, I believe this document to be authentic. It is as set out in the notice of motion for the production of papers, and I would therefore ask leave of the house, by unanimous consent, since that has been requested of me, to table this document.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the hon. gentleman has raised a question of privilege, and if he wishes to depart from the rules of the house in this matter he ought to make a motion founded upon the question of privilege which Your Honour could then take into consideration. Perhaps the hon. member for Laurier can speak on this with more authority than I can, but I have no recollection of any private member on either side of the house ever being permitted or even being given leave to lay a document on the table of the house.

While I must say that I personally would not have the slightest objection to this particular document being laid on the table, it seems to me there is a very important principle involved—

An hon. Member: There certainly is.

Mr. Pickersgill: —because otherwise we might spend a great deal of the time of the house in having members lay all sorts of papers on the table. Therefore it seems to me that if the hon. gentleman feels he has a question of privilege, he should found a motion upon it which could be considered in the proper way by the house.

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me there are two points here. I should like to suggest to the hon. member who raised the question of privilege that this matter was transferred for debate, and it might be raised at that time.

An hon. Member: It was not.

Mr. Speaker: On the other hand, the basic point is that if a member rises on a question of privilege and wishes action taken, his question of privilege should be followed through with a motion on which the house may reach a conclusion.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, accordingly I move by unanimous consent, seconded by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell), that this document be now tabled.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, may I make a suggestion to Your Honour in this matter. If the record of yesterday's proceedings is referred to it will be seen that the motion for papers was accepted. I suggest to Your Honour with all due deference that the question of privilege which has been raised be taken under advisement by you and that Your Honour reserve your decision as to the admissibility of the question of privilege and also the matter of the tabling of the document so that an unfortunate precedent may not be set with regard to this matter.

Mr. Speaker: I wish to thank the hon. member for Edmonton West for his sage counsel and advice, and if I may take that advice I should like to take the matter under consideration.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, before the matter is dropped I suggest the hon. member might identify the document by reading the frontispiece or identifying it in some other manner. May I also point out that according to the rules of the house, if a member refers to a document in his possession he is required to table it. If the hon. member tabled it I think that would automatically end the matter.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, if I may have your consent I would identify the document by reading as follows: "List of members of the House of Commons and consultants; letters for Postmaster General's signature; names on the attached list are underlined where person concerned is to be addressed by his first or last name; if not underlined, salutation is to be 'Dear Mr.' ".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have advised the house that I will take the matter under consideration, and I think that we should leave it there.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

STATEMENT OF RETURNS TABLED AND OUTSTANDING

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I should like to table a list of the returns to orders of the House of Commons which have been made up to yesterday. Perhaps I might be permitted to say that the list was not prepared exactly as I had thought it was going to be. It contains the whole of the 131 orders of the house that had been made up to and including yesterday, and shows that there are 37 of them still outstanding.

Perhaps I might be permitted to add also that the order requested by the hon. member for Edmonton West was tabled today.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MOTION TO EXTEND HOURS OF SITTING

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State) moved:

That commencing on Thursday, October 17, 1963, and on every Thursday and Friday thereafter until the end of the current session, the hours of sitting on these days shall be:
Thursdays:
2.30 p.m. to 6 p.m., and from 7 p.m. to 10.30 p.m.
Fridays:
11 a.m. to 1 p.m., 2.30 p.m. to 6 p.m., and from 7 p.m. to 10.30 p.m. and, in relation thereto, the provisions of standing order 6 shall be suspended; and

That on Wednesday, October 23, 1963, and on every Wednesday thereafter until the end of the current session, the hours from 5 to 6 p.m. in such sittings shall be used for government business and, in relation thereto, the provisions of standing order 15(3) concerning private members' business shall be suspended.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that either yesterday or today it might have been possible, by agreement, to have the suggestions made in the motion now before the house accepted. I have been advised that, although the suggestions put forward in this motion are based upon the usual consultations that are held in these matters, and although I was advised that these suggestions would be acceptable to all parts of the house except the official opposition, they are not acceptable to the official opposition.

The advice I received was that the official opposition—I would be glad to be corrected at once if I am misrepresenting the situation in any way, because I have no desire to do that—would prefer a different arrangement which would involve the house meeting at 2 p.m. instead of 2.30 p.m. every sitting day and reassembling at 7 p.m. on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays, and there would be no sitting on Friday evening.

I am very hopeful that this matter can be settled in as non-controversial a way as possible. Since there has been no reference to Wednesday, and since the suggestion with regard to Wednesday, if I remember correctly, came originally from the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, I assume the suggestions with regard to Wednesday are agreeable to all parts of the house.

I feel I owe the house and the opposition an explanation of the reason the government does not feel this alternative proposal would be acceptable. It is the feeling of the government that any attempt to meet at 2 instead of 2.30 would occasion delays in getting on with the business of the house which some of us feel, sir, are too great even when we meet at 2.30. It would mean that these hours of additional time would be given to something other than the purpose of the government in making these suggestions at all, that is in gaining additional time for dealing with government business.

Of course to meet at seven o'clock on Mondays and Tuesdays for the next four weeks would be totally useless for that purpose. The only result would be that an extra hour on each of those days, that is to say eight extra hours, would be taken up with these supply motions. While the government has no desire in any way to abbreviate the time now provided for them, it would not at all serve the only purpose the government had in mind in making any suggestion of extending the hours, which was primarily to give additional time for the consideration of the estimates. Under the rules these hours for that purpose would be totally useless.

Therefore the effect of the suggestion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre would be to gain a few minutes in the early part of each day—how many it is hard to say—and one other hour, whereas our suggestion as put forward in the motion would provide six additional hours of useful time for the consideration of the public business.

Mr. Lambert: What about Tuesdays, is not that public business?

Mr. Pickersgill: No. As the hon. member, who at one time was presiding officer of this house and for whose opinions we have the greatest respect, must realize, it is the right of the representatives of the people to expose their grievances before they agree to do the public business. The government has no desire to abbreviate that time for the exposure of grievances, but that time is not devoted to the public business. Certainly it is devoted to public affairs, but not to the public business in the sense of the business a government has to put before the house.

Last Friday the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre indicated, when I made the suggestion and which I am grateful to the house for accepting, that he was acutely conscious of the problem that is faced by the government and the house in dealing with the estimates. As a matter of fact I thought he expressed the problem very much better than I did in his exposure of it, and I have no quarrel with anything he said at that time.

I think I also ought to point out to hon. members and to you, sir, that if the house is disposed to accept the motion that I am now proposing it would be the intention of the government, unless some unforeseen or exceptional circumstances should arise, to take the time on Thursday and Friday evenings from now until the end of the session for estimates; and it would be the intention, until we had dealt with the principal departments of government, to take a new department on each day so there would be an opportunity to have every department exposed to hon. members, in order that they could express their views about the policies of the government and bring up any points with respect to it.

It would also be the intention of the government to fix the days on which departments would be take nsufficiently far in advance so that hon. members would know what was coming and would therefore be in a position to deal in an orderly way, without surprise, with these various departments.

Until November 12 what I have suggested would mean, if it is accepted by the house, that on Mondays and Tuesdays we would spend our time on supply motions, and up until that time we would take every Thursday and Friday evening for the consideration of estimates. All that would leave to the government for the consideration of its legislative program—which hon. members who look at the order paper can see is quite extensive—would be the brief time on Wednesdays and a somewhat longer time than usual on Thursdays, although there would not be much difference because of the extra hour on Wednesdays, and of course a little longer time on Fridays, because on Friday we sit in the morning. Hon. members would know those three days would be devoted normally to legislation, and the two evenings would be devoted to the estimates.

The only alternative that the government thinks is feasible, if the house is to do the business we were elected to do and sent here to do, is to have Saturday sittings. The government would rather not have them—much rather—and I think the house would rather not have them. It did seem to us—and I think this was the view of all those who discussed this matter through the usual channels—that if we could have available these extra five hours of sitting, which is after all not a great deal of additional time—and I have several interesting observations by the Leader of the Opposition when he was on this side of the house, on that particular point—and they were made available in the way I suggest, it would not put any undue burden on any hon. member. It would, moreover, have this great advantage; that we would not have to resort to morning sittings, which are very difficult for hon. members who are trying conscientiously to serve on committees, and are very difficult also for the government because, as hon. gentlemen on the front benches opposite will know the government does require some time to give consideration to the matters it is going to bring before the house if the business of the house is to be carried on in an orderly way.

It is because we do not believe we could conscientiously go on and hope to dispatch the business required to be dispatched before the end of this session, and end it in this calendar year, that I am reluctantly putting this motion forward without the unanimous consent which I had hoped, and indeed rather expected, would be forthcoming when the discussions took place among the representatives of the other groups. I think it will be no secret in any part of the house that in fact I did make some modification in the proposal I was then making, in order to meet the suggestions put forward and in an attempt to accommodate the opposition. I simply state that as a fact. I had hoped that by proceeding in the most conciliatory manner possible we could have a real understanding about this question and not take up a lot of the time of the house in discussing how and when we would do the business that it is our duty to do.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, it would be rather unfortunate if the time of the house were taken up in a lengthy debate on a problem such as this, but this is the type of thing that perhaps happens when pressure is put on a house unnecessarily. Despite the problems that face this parliament, we nevertheless must recognize the fact that on both sides of this house we now have more people who have had experience of government than was the case for 22 years. This parliament, in so far as the Liberal party and the Conservative party are concerned, is in a better position to settle problems such as the sitting hours of the house because on both sides we know the responsibilities of an opposition and the responsibilities that weigh upon a government. So there is no better time than this year, by consultation and agreement, to settle the method of conducting the affairs of this parliament.

I think it is rather unfortunate that the house leader has presented us with the motion for debate today without further consultation, and without amendment to that motion. In discharging our responsibilities as an opposition we recognize the fact, and have often stated, that we think the hours of sitting of the House of Commons should be extended. I have been of that opinion for many years. There we have agreement; we are in favour of extending the hours.

Then we come down to deciding how the hours should be extended. In this particular instance we have an alternative suggestion to make which I relayed to the house leader's office yesterday noon. I understand the objections to morning sittings. We found out from our experience on the government side that morning sittings are not the best by any means. Every hon. member realizes that with House of Commons committee work going on, morning sittings are awkward, so we agree with the house leader that morning sittings might be ruled out at the present time.

The house leader suggested that our proposal for meeting at two o'clock in the afternoon rather than 2.30 would not materially add to the conduct of the business of this house. With that I disagree. Meeting at two o'clock rather than 2.30 would add half an hour per day to our sittings, and that half hour would be used just as effectively as the half hour from 2.30 to 3, or, as it used to be in days gone by, from 3 to 3.30. So I do not see the value of his argument with regard to ruling out two o'clock as the time for assembly of this house.

The house leader bases a great deal of his argument on the fact that we still have before us four supply motions. He says that it is the government's intention to take these four supply motions during the next four weeks. This strikes me as quite unnecessary. There are nine weeks still available between now and the last week before Christmas, and supply motions are normally spread out and not crowded together one after the other. May I point out to the house leader that on some occasions in this house not all of the supply motions have been used. It has occurred on more than one occasion as the session has drawn to its close that the opposition has not made use of a supply motion. That is a consideration which might be before us in this particular parliament. I think it would be very unwise indeed to crowd in four supply motions in the next four weeks, rather than to get on with government legislation and spread out the supply motions over the next nine weeks. Four in a row would be, in my opinion, extremely bad.

The house leader is concerned at the passing of the estimates for this year. I pointed out the other day that in an election year, the calendar year in which an election occurs, the house should very properly telescope the time for consideration of estimates. That was done in the election year of 1953 and also in the election year of 1949. It was not done in the election year of 1957 or the election year of 1962. But that is where the opposition plays its part, and I was making the very co-operative suggestion that this year, an election year, the time spent on estimates might very well be shortened; and it lies within the hands of the opposition to do that very thing.

I had hoped that the house leader would have come half way with me on that. An opposition realizes its position when it makes an offer of that sort, and in the interests of the proper conduct of business I think this should be considered by oppositions which have a responsibility to this parliament just the same as the people on the government side. Then again the official opposition party, in its turn, should be considering that it will form the government of the future, and parliament then continues by a proper method. So there is a responsibility on an official opposition which is not enjoyed perhaps by other groups on the opposition side of the house.

I am not entering into the controversy with regard to how estimates were dealt with in the calendar year 1957 and the calendar year 1962, which makes a full story in itself. But I am suggesting that for this year, an election year, as responsible people we might make some arrangement which will fit into the problem facing the house leader, and at the same time discharge our duty to the country. I think estimates should not be brushed to one side, as some people infer from the suggestion put before us, because there are people here who will argue that the primary duty of parliament when it assembles is to deal with supply, to conduct the business of the country; that the secondary duty—or if you do not want to put it as secondary it is certainly on the same level—is to concern itself with legislative matters. But there are many legislative items on the order paper which are simply amendments to acts now on the statute books, and it would be difficult to argue that some of those items are of the same pressing urgency as the passing of supply for the conduct of the business of this country. So estimates should not be just brushed to one side; they should be brought forward and dealt with, and dealt with quickly. There are people here who will argue effectively that the estimates for each year should be brought forward much more rapidly than they have been during the last ten years.

Now, Mr. Speaker, unless the house leader is prepared to let his motion stand and continue further consultations among the parties of this house, I will be obliged to move an amendment to this motion. I wait for a response from the house leader. If he is willing to let this stand and consult again with the various parties I will not move an amendment, and this debate might be terminated within 30 seconds.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the hon. gentleman would not mind indicating the kind of amendment he has in mind. I could not be expected to reach a conclusion without knowing what I was talking about.

Mr. Churchill: I am prepared to indicate that our suggestion will add not just five hours to the sitting hours, but five and a half. It will increase the weekly sittings from 25½ hours to 31, and it means adding half an hour each day at the opening of the house—that is to say, coming in here at two o'clock instead of 2.30 Monday through Friday —and shortening the dinner hour and coming back into the house at seven o'clock on Monday, Tuesday and Thursday. There are three hours there, so you have an addition of five and a half hours to the time that we engage in this house.

Then may I also point out that those of us who have been here a number of years know perfectly well that when we approach the end of a session the house generally agrees without formal motion to sit the extra hours which are required in the last two weeks, whether it is Wednesday night or Friday night or a Saturday. I am opposed to Saturday sittings as early as this in a session. We tried that out one year and it was a failure. But I am not opposed, and I do not think the members of the Conservative party are opposed, to sitting say on two Saturdays some time in December if that is necessary to pass some of the unfinished business. But all this can be arranged as the business of the house progresses. If it is not agreeable to the house leader to consult on this matter, I would therefore move that—

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the hon. gentleman should have an answer to his question before he puts the motion, and I am afraid the answer must be the answer I have already given; namely, that the government does not regard the half hour each day as being effectively half an hour, particularly as on Mondays and Tuesdays we would not be dealing with government business. The hour on Mondays and Tuesdays for the next four weeks, so long as we have supply motions, will not facilitate what we have in mind. Therefore I think the hon. gentleman should put his amendment.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Under the amendment which has been suggested a total of three and a half hours would be available to the government and a total of three hours would be of benefit to the opposition. In the light of the way this house is divided, surely the Secretary of State would agree that all the matters discussed in this house constitute public business. I would point out too that the opposition is, in a sense, under the gun, because there are to be four supply motions in a row, a situation which is altogether unprecedented. The hon. gentleman may shake his head, but I repeat that it is unprecedented to arrange our business in this way. I would hope, therefore, that the Secretary of State would see fit to accept the suggestion made by my hon. friend.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the hon. gentleman might as well put his motion.

Extension of Hours of Sitting

Mr. Churchill: Then, to place the question formally before the house, I move, seconded by my hon. friend from Ontario:

That the motion be amended by striking out all the words after "that" and by substituting therefor the following:

The hours of sitting shall be as follows:
Monday, 2 p.m. to 6 p.m. and 7 p.m. to 10 p.m.
Tuesday, 2 p.m. to 6 p.m. and 7 p.m. to 10 p.m.
Wednesday, 2 p.m. to 6 p.m.
Thursday, 2 p.m. to 6 p.m. and 7 p.m. to 10 p.m.
Friday, 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. and 2 p.m. to 6 p.m.
And that in relation thereto the provision of standing order No. 6 shall be suspended.

Then I include the balance of the motion pertaining to the private members' hour on Wednesday.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, we in this group have already intimated our intention to co-operate in the adoption of hours of sitting outlined in the motion.

An hon. Member: Naturally.

Mr. Patterson: Yes, naturally, because we have learned a few things even though members of the official opposition have not. We have indicated our readiness to co-operate because we are convinced that if this house is to discharge its responsibilities to the people of Canada there has to be some way of expediting the progress of business. We felt the suggestions which were made were such as to help us in the discharge of those responsibilities. We are prepared to carry through the commitment we made when the representatives of the parties met together.

A number of suggestions have since been made as to how the motion might be modified so as to make it more acceptable to everyone. Reference has been made to the four supply motions which it is proposed shall be discussed week by week. Opposition has been expressed to this arrangement because, it is stated, the motions are being crowded together when they ought to be spread out. However, I am sure every member who was here at the time realizes that last year they were spread out so far that we never did get to them. I am sure we do not want a repetition of what took place on the last occasion as far as the estimates are concerned.

The house leader of the official opposition party intimated that he and his colleagues had learned something while they were in office, that they did not believe morning sessions were beneficial. There are other things which perhaps they should have learned in that connection. But we are convinced that one of the important tasks before us is to get the business of the nation taken care of and the estimates passed, after due consideration, in order that we shall not find ourselves being asked to vote interim supply month by month until practically the whole year's estimates have been dealt with in this way.

Therefore we are prepared to support any action which would help us to accomplish the business before us.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I think we as members of the House of Commons ought to be concerned about the public image which we are projecting on the Canadian scene. I believe that in the eyes of the Canadian public we are making a ludicrous spectacle of parliament. Everyone knows the heavy agenda which still faces the House of Commons. Most of the departmental estimates have still to be dealt with and, in addition, there are vital pieces of legislation on the order paper. There are debates which ought to take place on public policies and public programs. In spite of all this we have spent at least half of the time since we reassembled on September 30 in carrying on a partisan wrangle as to whether it is the Liberals or Conservatives who are most responsible for the mess we are in. I submit that the people of Canada do not care how we got into the mess. They want to know how we are going to get out of it.

We in this party conceive it to be the duty of the opposition to scrutinize spending, to deal with the estimates, to examine legislation critically, and to offer alternative policies, and to do all this as expeditiously as possible. We do not deem it to be the function of the opposition to carry on a program of obstruction which would grind parliament to a halt so that the government is reduced to a state of impotence; for if the government is reduced to a state of impotence it reflects not only upon the government but upon parliament itself.

An hon. Member: A good speech to have made last year.

Mr. Douglas: Members of the Conservative party refer to last year, and I am prepared to agree that there was a program of obstruction carried on last year. I submit that this is precisely what is bedeviling the present session of parliament; the official opposition has spent most of its time fighting last year's battles instead of dealing with the problems which confront us today.

We in the New Democratic party are suggesting three things which we think might be done to expedite the business of this house. The first is that we pass the motion which has been presented by the Secretary of State.

The amendment which has been offered by the member for Winnipeg South Centre suggests an increase of five and a half hours a week in our sittings, three hours of which will be used up in debating supply motions. This will do nothing to provide additional time for the transaction of government business. All it will do will be to enable a longer period of debate on motions of no confidence. We do not think the amendment will meet the siutation which confronts the house. It might be that modifications could be arrived at by agreement. However, I understand the house leaders have met and have done their very best to resolve the matter, without success; and as in my view the government's proposal is not unreasonable I think the house should accept it.

The second proposal this party wishes to place before the house is that we should give some consideration, for this session only, to dispensing with two of the supply motions. There are four remaining, and if the Leader of the Opposition is correctly reported in the press he has said he intends to move no confidence amendments to all four of these supply motions. This means that two days out of every week for the next four weeks will be spent debating these no confidence motions. Forty per cent of the time will go in debating no confidence motions.

In a normal session of parliament I certainly would fight very hard for the retention of the maximum amount of time the opposition is allowed to move motions of no confidence and to censure the government where they think that is necessary, but with the tremendous program before the house now and all the things we have to do in the very limited period of time remaining we would be prepared to forgo two of these supply motion debates. If there is not general agreement on that, could we agree to limiting the debate on each supply motion to one day, having one or two speakers from each of the major parties and one from each of the smaller parties and confining the debate on these supply motions to one day each? This would give us another four days which could be devoted to public business.

I noticed that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre objected to the idea of calling four supply motions one right after the other, yet at the same time he is crying for the estimates to be discussed. He cannot have it both ways, and I think the sooner the departments are opened up, the sooner we get a chance to express our opinions on these various departmental estimates and to ask the government questions, the better it will be.

The third suggestion I wish to make is one I indicated yesterday. I should like to see us agree to proceed with the motion now on the order paper to set up the parliamentary committee to review the procedures of the house, and do so either without debate or with agreement among the parties to restrict the debate to one or two speakers from each party. I think it is imperative that this committee be set up with the least possible delay.

One reason we are in difficulty in this parliament, as we were in the last one, is the fact that we are operating under procedures which were established to meet the pace of the Victorian era and not to cope with the tremendous volume of business confronting us in this modern age. When I first entered the House of Commons government expenditures were a little over $500 million. Today they are twelve times that amount. There are a great many more departments and a great many more programs than there were then, and we are going to have to revise the procedures of the house if we are going to carry on public business with efficiency and dispatch.

Therefore we suggest these three things; that we accept the motion, pass it and get down to business; that the house leaders or, if necessary, the party leaders consider cutting down the remaining supply motions to two for this session only, or restricting the debate to one day if that can be arranged; and that we set up the parliamentary committee to review the procedures of the house, either without debate or with a very limited period of debate.

I am convinced that if we do these three things we can carry on the public business of Canada with efficiency and dispatch. What is equally important, we can convey to the people of Canada the impression, which they do not now have, that we are serious about making parliamentary government effective and efficient.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: With the usual reservations, I recognize the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire).

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to accept the suggestions made by the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) to extend the hours of sitting so that we can at least accomplish something in the house.

I shall not labour the point because I think that just about everything has been said on the matter. But I would have another suggestion to make to the Secretary of State.

I note that we are asked to give up the Wednesday hour which is usually reserved for notices of motions and public bills, that is bills brought before the house by hon. members. We see no objection to giving up another hour each week to expedite the business of the house, but we should like that hour to be taken on another day than Wednesday because that is the day for consideration of private bills. For instance, there is the bill concerning the Allstate which was first discussed on a Thursday, then brought back on a Wednesday and taken up once again on another Wednesday, to be finally postponed until the end of the session. And when, at the end of the session, we come back to that Allstate bill and the one concerning the Pharmacy Board of Canada, there will be another hour completely lost.

I would therefore ask the Secretary of State to consider the possibility of cutting out the hour for private bills rather than the one for public bills.

If the Secretary of State is prepared to accept that suggestion, we would be ready to co-operate and to accept the extension of the hours of sitting so that we can pass the legislation now before the house. It is not that we care to pass that income tax legislation, for we would rather not have it on the order paper and we would prefer another legislation. But so that we can go on with the ordinary business, we are prepared to accept the motion to extend the hours of sitting.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I can make a snap judgment on this request, but I would be glad to discuss it in the usual way; and if there was general agreement that some other day than Wednesday would be preferable to the house, it would not matter very much to the government. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre did make the suggestion because Wednesday is a very short day, and it really means that by the time we have dealt with questions and motions for papers there is very little time for anything else. From the government's point of view it really is the most convenient day, but I do not rule out the possibility of its being exchanged for some other day if all hon. members would prefer it.

Mr. Knowles: Is not that point a very simple one to take care of? The order of priority as between Tuesday and Wednesday could be switched by agreement, and the point could be readily met.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure the point could be met in one way or another.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I think the suggestion made by the house leader of the official opposition that this debate be adjourned showed considerable merit as I listened to subsequent speakers. It is obvious that everyone in the house is ready to co-operate by accepting longer hours, but the question of what those hours should be has not been settled. From what has been said it would seem that the problem is one that can be worked out through consultation.

I should like to point out to the house something no one else has commented on, the fact that the longest hours are at the tail end of the week. It seems to me that if we expect to get a lot of work done, the best time to do that work is when we are fresh after a rest on the week end. Logically Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday would be the best time. No other day has as many working hours as are now proposed for Friday. If I have a chance to go home on a week end, which I have not as yet, I should like to be able to leave at noon on Friday so I can get home by Friday night. If these hours are adopted I must miss a full day's sitting to do so.

I suggest that the house seriously consider adjourning this debate and try once more to work out hours that are agreeable to all parties. There is nothing so sacred about the rules that we cannot change the days for government business. The situation in respect of the supply motions could be discussed. I should like to see these suggestions discussed, bearing in mind the fact that the most important point is already agreed upon, namely that we would all like to sit longer hours. Why can we not work out a sensible agreement? I do not think this one is sensible.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on the amendment to the main motion. All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Churchill: On division.

Amendment (Mr. Churchill) negatived, on division.

Mr. Speaker: The question now is on the main motion. Shall the motion carry?

Mr. Churchill: On division.

Motion agreed to on division.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull) moved:

That the second report of the standing committee on privileges and elections, presented to this house on Wednesday, October 9, 1963, be now concurred in.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of the New Democratic party to register our opposition to the motion for concurrence in the second report of the standing committee on privileges and elections.

There are three things which I wish to make very clear at the outset of my remarks. First, I wish to make it clear that at the conclusion of my remarks I shall move an amendment. My amendment will be in the form that is provided in connection with committee reports. The gist of it will be that the house should instruct the committee to reconsider the matter and make another recommendation proposing that the members of groups on this side of the house, other than those in the official opposition, be seated in the house according to the numerical strength of the groups to which they belong. I shall develop that proposal later, but I just wish to make it clear that that is the position we in this party take.

The second point I wish to make clear, although I am sure it must already be very obvious, is that we in the New Democratic party have nothing whatever to gain by our opposition to the motion for concurrence. We have nothing whatever to gain by the terms of the amendment I shall move. The committee's report recommends that our party be moved up in this house to a position alongside the official opposition. I say, therefore, we have nothing to gain. As a matter of fact, if as a result of our debating this motion it were, in the end, to be defeated, we would have something to lose. It must be clear, therefore, that we are taking the stand we do on the basis of principle.

The third thing I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, is that our stand has nothing to do with whether we like or dislike any member or any group of members in this house. This does not matter one iota. I confess that having sat alongside the members of the Social Credit group, speaking of them in their totality, I have come to feel, if I may be so presumptuous as to say so, that a member like the hon. member for Lake St. John (Mr. Lessard) is the type of member we like to have in this house. He is making a good contribution. I do not stop there. I like the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Girouard). I like the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Ouellet).

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: I must say at the same time, Mr. Speaker, that I do not like the tactics of the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette). I do not like the threats he has made to the House of Commons and to parliament. There are times when I do not like the tactics of the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire). I do enjoy the way he moves out in front when he speaks, and sometimes I think that with a little push he would be over on the other side of the house. I do not need to go over the whole list of these members to indicate those I like or dislike. The point I am making is that our decision has nothing to do with whether we like or dislike individual members, whether we like or dislike a particular group. There are members in this house who do not like me.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: They think I am a nuisance in the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: I gather that there is fairly general support for that proposition. However, the fact is that I was elected. I am here, and I have my rights. The 13 members who now say that they are supporters of the hon. member for Villeneuve were elected as members of the House of Commons. They were elected just as clearly as was the hon. member for Algoma East (Mr. Pearson) or the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) or any of the other hon. members who are here. They have their rights. We must consider a matter such as that which is now before us, not on the basis of what we think about members or what we think about parties, but on the basis of what is the correct thing for us to do.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the question which has arisen results from the fact that a group of members who, when the house met in May, were united, has fallen into two sections or two units. As a result, before we came back on September 30, a request was made to Your Honour by each of these groups to be recognized and seated as a group. This matter, at Your Honour's suggestion, was referred to the standing committee on privileges and elections.

In my submission the only issue that faced us, the only issue that was really before the standing committee on privileges and elections, was the question of the seating arrangements in this House of Commons. I think the standing committee has gone completely off base by going into the area of making a decision as to what parties are to be recognized in this house, and what party or parties are not to be recognized. In totalitarian states the governments, the majorities, decide what parties are official and what parties are not official, but in no free democracy has any parliamentary majority or government the say as to what party is official and what party is to be recognized.

The aspect which strikes me as offensive about the report, concurrence in which has been moved, is that it seems to imply that the New Democratic party is to be recognized as such, and that the Social Credit party is to be recognized as such. In the case of these two groups we wish that recognition; but then the report says that the other 13 hon. members, who say they wish to be known by a certain name and to be recognized as such, are not to be given the same treatment and consideration as is given to other groups in the house. They are referred to in the report not by any name they themselves have chosen but as a group of members under the leadership of the hon. member for Villeneuve, and although they are referred to as a collection in that way, they are treated as second class in that the report says that the question of their privileges should be studied by an officer of the House of Commons, who in turn should report to Your Honour.

I think there is a lot that is wrong with that fourth part of the report, and even if the house does not accept the amendment I propose I hope it will delete that fourth part. The two main things wrong with it are that it refers to an officer of the house a matter that, if it is to be decided at all, should be decided by Your Honour, and second that it makes a distinction between groups in the House of Commons. It says two of the smaller parties in the house have a right to certain recognition and a right to the names they chose, but the third smaller party in the house is in a second class position.

I stress the point that we do not like it when we hear of countries in other parts of the world where a government declares a certain party is not to be allowed or is not official. We have not liked it in the history of the past when in some countries certain parties have been eliminated from the state altogether. We are not doing that. No one is denying the right of these 13 members to be in the house. They cannot be denied that right under our free democratic system; but to take a step in that direction, when a majority of the committee or a majority of the house makes a decision, when it puts it on the record of the house that first one party is official and has its place, that another party is official and has its place in the house, but that a third group does not have the same rights and that its privileges must be referred to someone for study, I submit that in principle this is dangerous, and that it establishes a precedent that could come back to haunt us in the days that lie ahead.

In our Hansard every Wednesday we have a list appended thereto of the members of the House of Commons, and at the end of each line is the party designation that a member chooses. The names are there, and it has never been submitted to a vote of the house as to whether members have the right to have their party designation as they wish it. Why, we even have one member of the cabinet, and we understand it is a Liberal government that is in power, whose party designation in every Wednesday's Hansard differs from that of all others on that side of the house. He is the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Has it ever been submitted to a decision of the house whether he can call himself Liberal-Labour rather than Liberal?

The fact is that across the years each party in the house has changed its name at one time or another. That goes for all of us.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: Yes; read the Parliamentary Guide. You will find there was a day when the Liberal party was known as the Laurier Liberals and at times they were the Liberal Progressives. The Conservatives were Liberal Conservatives, Progressive Conservatives and National Conservatives. We all have had our different names but, Mr. Speaker, no party has ever had to get approval by parliament of its name or its status.

We come here as individual members elected to represent our constituencies. I recall the debate which we had on a bill introduced by the former member for Wetaskiwin, Mr. Thomas, calling for the party names to be put on the ballots at election time, and the suggestion was that it be done merely for identification purposes. Some of us supported that bill but the overwhelming majority, the Liberals and the Conservatives, opposed it, using mainly the argument that men and women get elected not as candidates of a party but as members who on being elected represent the whole of a constituency, and that when they came to parliament they should be free to exercise their judgment as to where they sit and what they support. The question of what hon. members do is left to the individual hon. member.

I assert that it will be a sorry day if, by a majority vote of this house, we say certain parties are official and that one party is not official and is not to be recognized. The Liberal party has never been voted on by the House of Commons, either as to its name or as to its status as a party. This has never been done for the Conservative party either. The Conservative party never had to submit its constitution to parliament and never had to prove that its leader was properly elected. We never had to do that in the days of the C.C.F., nor have we had to do so as New Democrats.

We do not want a motion passed that parliament recognizes us. We do not need the recognition of a majority of the house. That could be given one day and taken away the next. We are a free party in a free country, in a country that emphasizes the principles of political democracy, and we will take a wrong step if we approve what is in the motion before the house at this time.

I stress the point that this has nothing to do with what advantage we gain from it. We have nothing to gain by opposing this motion. It has nothing to do with which members of which group in the Social Credit aggregation that we favour. We think the basic principle, of whether or not a majority decides that a party is official or not official, is a very serious matter.

I know that some will say there are various precedents from the past to look at it in this respect. I myself pointed out on September 30, when I first raised the point of privilege, that in 1935 and 1940 the C.C.F. groups in those parliaments were seated ahead of the Social Credit groups of those days, despite the fact that Social Credit had more members in each of those parliaments. I indicated on the basis of that precedent that I had contended in 1962 that it should be followed in our case at that time. That was refused. The house accepted the decision of Mr. Speaker Michener, confirmed by Mr. Speaker Lambert, that the numerical strength was the point that counted.

If I may review the previous instances, it is true that there are at least three instances when parties smaller in size sat higher than larger parties. There were the two cases I have just now referred to, when the C.C.F. party sat ahead of the Social Crediters. The other interesting case in history was in the 1921-25 parliament, when the Conservatives had fewer members than the Progressives and yet were the official opposition.

In all three of these cases, where smaller groups sat ahead of the larger groups, there was no contesting of the matter. In no case did the larger group contest the right of the smaller group. In the 1921 case the larger group did not want the position of official opposition, but in all cases where a larger group has asserted its right to be seated ahead of the smaller group it has been accepted, as happened in 1962 and 1963 when the Social Crediters were seated ahead of us. However, I repeat that in 1962 we established the principle that numerical strength is what counts.

I would say we were making a mistake if we were to change that principle and go back to the other one, back to the principle of history or what have you; but what this report does is even worse. This report is based on both principles. It seats the New Democratic party first among three smaller parties because it has the larger number, because we have 17 members and the other groups have 13 and 11 respectively; but having started with that principle it changes in midstream and seats 11 members ahead of 13 members, on the argument that the 11 members presented themselves to the electorate as a party in the election of 1963, and on the contention that the others did not do so.

I ask hon. members, where in the elections act is there anything that says parties present themselves to the people as such? I ask hon. members, where in the Senate and House of Commons Act, or in the British North America Act, or in Beauchesne or standing orders is there anything to support the contention that there is some point on the basis upon which people are presented to the electorate at election times? We come here as individuals. We come here free to move about. In most parliaments an individual here or there changes from one party to another. There have been changes of government. For example, in the 1926 parliament a government was defeated and another party moved over and formed the government. There were changes during the first world war. Parliament is not confined to the situation that obtains on any day; it consists of individual members of parliament who have the right to use their best judgment as to whom they should support and whom they should oppose.

It seems to me, therefore, that on principle there is no question about what we should do; that is, stick with the question of numerical strength which was accepted in the last parliament and in this one, and which has always been accepted whenever a larger group contended that it should be seated above a smaller group. Mr. Speaker, there are some—

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I interrupt for just a moment. I have the greatest difficulty in hearing the hon. member up here, and I wonder whether hon. members could carry on their conversations outside rather than inside the chamber.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, some hon. members and some people have asked questions about this in the newspapers. They are wondering about the $4,000 that was provided for in the bill of last July for leaders of parties, other than the official opposition, having 12 or more recognized members in the house. This section of that act has been quoted by some people as defining a party. I do not think it does anything of the kind. It merely gives a definition with respect to the person who shall receive this extra $4,000.

I think it is rather unfortunate that this should confuse the issue. But I would like to point out that any suggestion now being made that a person cannot receive that extra allowance unless he presented himself to the electorate at election time as the leader of a group going to come into the house raises the question of what happened in the parliament of 1940 to 1945. Dr. Manion was the leader of the Conservative party in that election. He lost his seat. When the party came into the house it chose Hon. R. B. Hanson to be its house leader. He was not chosen at a party convention; he had not presented himself to the electorate as the leader of the official opposition. He was chosen by his group in the house as their leader, and he drew the salary of the leader of the official opposition. In 1942 he resigned from that position and the Conservative group in the house—and some of them are still here—chose the late Gordon Graydon to be their house leader. Having been elected by the majority of his group in the house, the largest group on the opposition side, he drew his salary as leader of the official opposition.

I suggest that to argue now that because the hon. member for Villeneuve was not the leader of the party at election time he therefore cannot be so considered is really trying to twist the statute to make it read the way one wants it to read. Maybe there are legal arguments as to why he is not entitled to the $4,000, but surely that is a matter for the courts to decide. We have passed a statute. We do not interpret our own statutes; I do not think that is up to us at all. I think, if I may say so, that is one point I was able to make before the committee on privileges and elections. It was agreed there that we had nothing to decide about that matter. I only mention it because it has come into the argument. But I suggest the point that should be considered is the position that obtained in the 1940 to 1945 parliament.

As I have already said, although some may wonder why I am stressing the point, we have nothing to gain by pressing this amendment, because the report if adopted moves us up next to the official opposition and if my amendment carries, so far as we are concerned there will be the same result. Therefore we are not grinding our own axe; we have nothing to gain. Neither are we defending the principles of those who follow the hon. member for Villeneuve because of any sympathy for their policies. We do not believe in them; everybody knows that. I have already indicated any likes or dislikes I might personally have, but I think it is that sort of thing we have to put aside.

[Mr. Knowles.]

I address my appeal particularly to the members on the Liberal side of the house and I ask them to face up to the position they find themselves in because of this motion. Here is a division of opinion between the 11 members of the Social Credit party, whose recognized leader is the hon. member for Red Deer, and the 13 members of the Ralliement des Creditistes, whose leader is the hon. member for Villeneuve. Here is a division between them as to which group should be seated closer to the Speaker, the 11 or the 13. One group will vote for itself, the other group will vote for itself. It is how the Liberals vote that will determine the issue. It does not matter how the Conservatives and New Democratic party vote; we cannot affect the issue; we will be outnumbered by the Liberals and either Social Credit group. Whether we vote one way or the other, it is the Liberal vote that will determine the outcome of this issue.

This means that in this House of Commons —as was the case in the committee on privileges and elections—the Liberal party will be making the decision as to which of these two parties comes ahead of the other.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: If a decision is made that 11 take priority over 13, it will be the Liberals who make the decision; it will be the Liberals who will have to defend it; it will be the Liberals who will have to give the country the rationalization for that decision. It will take on the appearance of the Liberals having wanted it a certain way and therefore just finding the arguments or reasons to do it. So I urge very strongly, Mr. Speaker, that the house consider the seriousness of this question. It is not just this group of members, because they may all be out after the next election.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: Some of us might even hope they are defeated at the next election, but this kind of treatment will not defeat them. This kind of treatment, if given to their representatives in this house, will make them heroes, will make them martyrs back where they come from and might cause them to come back here in larger numbers after the next election than they have now.

Apart from that, I contend that the crucial thing we are dealing with today is whether in our kind of parliamentary democracy, in our kind of free society, it lies with any government or any majority of the House of Commons to make a decision which says that certain parties are official and a certain group which wishes to be known as a party is not official.

We went into all the history and the story of the Granby convention in the committee on privileges and elections. We went back into the origins of the Ralliement des creditistes and the origins of the Social Credit party, but I think this is irrelevant. Here we have a simple situation. We have three smaller parties, 17, 13 and 11 in numbers, each of which is claiming a position according to its numerical strength; and any attempt to alter that numerical strength is, I suggest, pushing things around the way one wants them for some unexplained, undeclared reason.

As the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam said a short time ago on another matter, this would not be good for parliament as a whole. We need to be concerned about the image parliament is projecting to the country at this time. I do not think it would improve the image we are projecting if parliament by its majority decided that 11 was more than 13, and that the 13 are not to have the privileges accorded to the others. This would not be good for the reputation of parliament.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin):

That the second report of the committee on privileges and elections be not now concurred in but that it be referred back to the said committee with instruction to amend it so as to recommend that members of the opposition who belong to groups other than the official opposition be seated in the House of Commons according to the numerical strength of their respective groups.

Mr. Speaker, you will notice that that amendment says nothing at all about recognition of groups. We do not need to be recognized by a vote of the House of Commons, any more than do the Liberals or Conservatives. Neither does the Social Credit party nor the Ralliement des creditistes. The amendment deals with the only thing which, in my view, we have the right to deal with, which is a procedural arrangement—the arrangement of the seating of members of this House of Commons. I think this amendment avoids the pitfall which is in the main motion, and I earnestly hope the house will give serious consideration to it.

I know that in the standing committee on privileges and elections when I moved a similar amendment it was defeated overwhelmingly. The only people voting for it were the members of the New Democratic party and the representative of the Ralliement des creditistes; the others voted the other way. But in the meantime this matter has been discussed in the public press. There have been editorials on it, and I think even some members of the committee have had second thoughts. I hope we will avoid taking a step which just seems to be doing what certain people want to be done, and that we will accept the principle we accepted in 1962 and again this year, which is that members are seated as far as their parties are concerned according to their party's numerical strength. Let us stay with this principle that we are here as members of parliament representing our constituencies. Nobody has the right to say whether or not our parties are official. Party affiliation is the right of each individual member. If the Liberals wish to be Liberals, let them be Liberals. If the Conservatives wish to be Conservatives, let them have that status. We are the New Democratic party, and there are 11 members who wish to be known as the Social Credit party, and that is their right. There are 13 members who wish to be known as the Ralliement des creditistes, and I suggest that all we have to do, all we have the right to do, is to decide the seating order. That is the purpose of the amendment I have moved, and which I ask the house to support.

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe I have to represent the views of the official Social Credit party before the house in these few remarks. Even if I tried to make believe that I have nothing to gain by supporting the second report of the committee on privileges and elections people would not believe me as easily as they would the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). But I believe that in concluding his remarks, he said that his action was not motivated by thoughts as noble as those which could motivate the stand I took or will take, for he simply told us that he does want the group led by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) to be recognized, because he is afraid that they may be re-elected at the next election, should they not be recognized now.

This is not our attitude. Our attitude is based on facts and legality.

When the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre talks for instance of the status of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Benidickson), I believe that he forgets to replace the facts within the time context.

The Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys was elected under a Liberal-Labour ticket, not under a Ralliement des creditistes ticket, and that is why he has a right to use the epithet "Liberal-Labour". But such is not the case of the supporters of the hon. member for Villeneuve, for they have not been elected under Ralliement des creditistes ticket.

In this whole situation, we must replace the facts within their time context. We believe that the followers of the hon. member for Villeneuve cannot be recognized as a party because they were not elected as such; they were elected under a National Social Credit ticket. Now, after the election, they decided to withdraw from the Social Credit party, and in my opinion, they must be recognized as independents.

But I believe we could show our good will by accepting the report from the committee on privileges and elections, and particularly clause 4 of that report which states that the question of the privileges to be enjoyed by the group under the leadership of the hon. member for Villeneuve be referred to the parliamentary counsel of the House of Commons for study and report to the Speaker.

I think that is being remarkably generous toward the 12 hon. members who are following the hon. member for Villeneuve, because never was so much importance given to independents who, at a certain moment, cease to be so independent by grouping themselves under a leader.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the house can take a decision on the amendment proposed by the member for Winnipeg North Centre who, as a matter of fact, said he was not satisfied with the representations his party made before the committee on privileges and elections. Indeed, he felt so unsatisfied that now he would like to have his own point of view recognized by the house.

I feel that is not a normal procedure because, when the committee met, he had a chance to express his opinion, which was rejected through a vote, and now he would like to refer the decision back to the committee. But the committee's meetings are over and the matter has been held up long enough already.

In order to be able in the light of past events to appreciate on its true merit the action taken by the 13 members by leaving the national Social Credit party, it is imperative to recall the facts which resulted in this split.

Last June, at the meeting of the national executive of the Social Credit party, the executive had tried to abolish the position of Social Credit co-leader without referring the matter to the national convention of the Social Credit party.

At that time, I objected in all sincerity to such an action being taken, even by the national executive of the party, because it had no right to amend the constitution without consulting the national convention. I decided then to support the Social Credit co-leader who is now the leader of the Ralliement des creditistes.

However, Mr. Speaker, the step taken by the national council filled the deputy leader with a spirit of revenge which was obvious at the Granby convention when he decided to do himself justice and even to abolish the position—

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Chapdelaine) is no different from any of us. In my opinion, he is out of order when he casts suspicion on the intentions of the hon. member for Villeneuve.

Mr. Chapdelaine: I do not doubt the intentions; I am merely stating facts.

What occurred was bound to happen. The leader of the Ralliement des creditistes—

Mr. Belanger: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Chapdelaine: —who then obtained a—

Mr. Belanger: In my opinion, the hon. member for Sherbrooke should restrict his remarks to the matter now under discussion. The reason why we separated and chose a new leader is no business of the house at all and has nothing to do with the decision to be made.

The matter to be settled is whether we are entitled to be recognized as third or fourth party and not why we chose a new leader. Since this matter is one of internal administration within a political party, I suggest that you ask the hon. member to confine himself to the question under discussion.

Mr. Chapdelaine: Mr. Speaker, I stated at the outset that I wanted to throw as much light as possible on the matter in order to dispel any doubts this house might still entertain. That is precisely what I am doing at the moment, and it leads me to examine the rights of this group. The status of the 13 members who abandoned the national Social Credit party is exactly along the line I have taken to enlighten the house.

Mr. Speaker, during the Granby convention, when the decision to separate was taken, it seems to me that the intentions of the national party were stated clearly and unequivocally in a press release which reads as follows:

[Text]

Released by Martin Kelin, national president of the Social Credit Association of Canada.

It is apparent from the speeches and resolutions at the Granby convention of Le Ralliement des Creditistes as led by Mr. Real Caouette that Le Ralliement no longer desires affiliation with the Social Credit Association of Canada. This is underlined by the fact that they have rejected the duly elected leader, Mr. Robert Thompson, who was confirmed in his capacity as leader by the national executive less than two months ago. In addition to this Le Ralliement has never seen fit to pay their affiliation fee as demanded by the constitution of the Social Credit Association, as other provinces have done.

The association, recognizing their desire not to be affiliated with the Social Credit movement in Canada, accepts the wish to resign of Mr. Caouette and his followers.

The Social Credit Association of Canada believes that there are farsighted, sound thinking people in the province of Quebec who would like to be linked with the association across Canada. We invite these people to seek affiliation with us, along with the Quebec M.P.'s who have indicated their support of Mr. Thompson as leader, and the principles for which he stands.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, thus we see quite clearly that the decision taken by the 13 members, along with the member for Villeneuve, was at that time accepted by the national party as a decision not affecting in any way the status of the Social Credit party. That is precisely the understanding given by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) who, during the sittings of the committee on privileges and elections, stated at first that a new party had been formed, while, a few moments later, he said that it was still the same party which remained within the framework of the greater Social Credit party, the Ralliement des creditistes.

And to corroborate these assertions, let me quote a number of statements made by the hon. member for Lapointe during the sittings of the committee on privileges and elections. They show up to what point, when the decision was taken, it was the intention of the Ralliement des creditistes to leave the national party, and how that idea was without foundation and rather vague as to their right to come to such a decision.

Let us take note of the statements made by Mr. Caouette, especially the letter which Mr. Gregoire sent you on September 9, and which reads as follows:

I hereby wish to inform you that the Social Credit party has chosen a new leader, Mr. Real Caouette, member for the riding of Villeneuve.

While in the letter sent to you on September 30 it is written that the annual convention held at Granby had reached that decision with 1,500 delegates taking part in the proceedings, here it is said that it is not the convention of the Social Credit party but the creation of a new party.

Now, Mr. Speaker, how shall we see through all that confusion, when the leader of the Ralliement des creditistes himself admits, in his letter, that he wants to set up a future party and that, in the next election, he will have candidates in all the provinces of this country, in order that his party may be recognized as a national party. He admits it himself since he now has members only in the province of Quebec. Moreover, he claims just the same that his party is a national party.

Mr. Speaker, allow me to refer to page 56 of the report of the committee on privileges and elections, to Mr. Gregoire's statements—

Mr. Gregoire: You could at least say: the member for Lapointe.

Mr. Chapdelaine: —to the effect that they had not dropped out of the national Social Credit party, but that we, the members of the national Social Credit, had withdrawn from their party. I quote:

If they have decided to withdraw, this indicates a second distinct group. I have also mentioned this in the following paragraph: "We wish to point out also that, as Mr. Real Caouette is the leader of the larger group..." This implies two distinct groups.

As for knowing whether this is a new party or an old party, I can tell you that the Ralliement des creditistes was registered in superior court at Montreal early in June 1958 and that it is only at a later date that it became a member of the Canadian national association.

Let us look now, Mr. Speaker, at this precious document, which bears number 110PS. It reads:

I, the undersigned, Gilbert Rondeau, accountant, domiciled and residing at St. Cesaire, Rouville county, province of Quebec, declare the following:

(1) I have my home and residence in St. Cesaire, Rouville county, St. Hyacinthe District, province of Quebec;

(2) I am an accountant;

(3) I am of age and married to Monique Viens, my first wife, who is also of age and is still living;

(4) I am married under the separate maintenance system by virtue of a marriage contract passed before Mr. Maurice Cloutier, notary public, practising in St. Ours, county of Richelieu, and now practising in Sorel, district of Richelieu, the said marriage contract having been passed some two days prior to the day of my wedding, which took place on August 16, 1952;

(5) I intend to do business alone in Montreal, said district, as well as in the province of Quebec, under the name and style of "Ralliement des créditistes":

Mr. Speaker, I should like to call the attention of the house to the words "in the province of Quebec".

I continue:

(6) The business operations will consist in buying and selling Social Credit leaflets, booklets and newspapers as well as all other means or media of publicity;

(7) My main place of business or headquarters will be in Pont-Viau, county of Laval, Montreal district, at 482 Cousineau St.

(8) I do business alone under that name.

This, Mr. Speaker, is what we learn from the hon. member for Lapointe's evidence to the effect that the Ralliement des creditistes is a party founded since 1958, with exactly the same legal standing in Canada as the national Social Credit party.

Before going any further in this, I wish—

Mr. Robert Beaule (Quebec East): May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Chapdelaine: When I have completed my remarks.

Mr. Speaker, before pursuing this line, I should like to call the attention of the house to the official constitution of the national Social Credit party. And I was saying a minute ago, this constitution can be changed only when a national convention is held. Now, as the hon. member for Lapointe alleged in his testimony that the Granby convention was a national convention, I wish to quote some articles from our constitution concerning notification of a national convention.

A national convention shall be held every four years or more often, as may be decided by the national council.

The convention shall meet at a time and a place determined by the national council, but a three months' notice, announcing the date and place, shall be given to affiliated organizations and to members in general where there is no provincial organization.

Mr. Speaker, this procedure was not followed, since nobody from the other provinces was invited to the said Granby convention, in order that the said convention might become a national convention, and even Social Credit members living in provinces other than Quebec were not invited.

Consequently, the national convention in Granby had no authority whatever to change the status of the national leader of the Social Credit party, which leader, as is so well prescribed in our regulations and constitution, must be chosen only at a national convention.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to quote other excerpts from the testimony of the member for Lapointe, and this to prove how much he could contradict himself in such a short time. At a certain moment, the hon. member for Lapointe said:

The group, Ralliement des creditistes, having chosen a new leader, it is a fraction of Social Credit which withdrew from the main group.

And this, after having said in his testimony that we had withdrawn and not they.

Whom should we believe, in the circumstance? How is it possible to believe the statements of the hon. member for Lapointe, who never stops contradicting himself each time he is confronted with the facts.

On the other hand, the hon. member for Lapointe duly recognizes Mr. Thompson as the leader of the Social Credit party. In order to justify his stand he stated:

Mr. Thompson came only once to the province of Quebec to speak about the deepening of the Matapedia river.

And as I said earlier, he did not come to my riding during the last election campaign, nor did he go to any other riding of the province of Quebec, except to start off the campaign, and all along our campaign we referred to Real Caouette as leader of the Ralliement des creditistes and deputy leader of the national party.

[Mr. Beaule.]

A little further on, the hon. member for Lapointe admits that the Social Credit campaign during the last election was on a national basis and that candidates campaigned under the heading of the Social Credit national party and not under that of the Ralliement des creditistes, in order to get elected.

Most important, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that if the members belonging to the group of the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) think that they can, after an election where they were elected under one name, change that name, I think that would be misrepresentation before the electorate.

In fact, if we reduce the argument ad absurdum, we could say that, in 1958, if the party in power, the Conservative party, had decided to divide into two groups after the election, that is 140 members in power and 68 in the official opposition, we would have had an intolerable situation where the Conservative party would have acted at the same time as the party in power and as the official opposition.

Moreover, if the communists, against all probability, infiltrated into various political parties and succeeded in having a sufficient number of members elected under the name of various parties, and then, immediately after the election, declared themselves as communists and decided to set up a party with enough membership to make up the party in power, we would have a ridiculous situation where we would find ourselves, the day after a general election, living in a communist country without having voted for the communist party.

Mr. Speaker, I admit that this argument is made ad absurdum but I must say that those absurd things could happen if, today, we recognize the group under the hon. member for Villeneuve as a party officially recognized in the house and enjoying the same privileges as any recognized party in the house.

Mr. Speaker, to illustrate the feelings of the members belonging to the group of the hon. member for Villeneuve, and more particularly the feelings of the hon. member for Lapointe concerning that question, and to show how lightly the hon. member for Lapointe dealt with that matter in the evidence he gave before the committee of privileges and elections, I should like to quote a question put to him by the hon. member for Montreal-St. Lawrence-St. George. Here it is:

Mr. Turner: When the delegates were selected for that convention, they had not been selected to elect a new leader or to form a new party?

Mr. Gregoire: Not necessarily, no—

Mr. Turner: At that convention were there any delegates from outside the limits of the province of Quebec?

Mr. Gregoire: There were some delegates from Ontario and New Brunswick but they had no right to vote.

And a little further the hon. member for Lapointe stated:

In all sincerity and in all honesty, I could not say whether they were invited or not, I think so, but I cannot give any assurance. Mr. Leboe who is here could say whether they had been invited. In any case, we had a quorum.

And the evidence given by the hon. member for Lapointe follows along the same line, while he was trying to justify the stand taken by the members of the group led by the hon. member for Villeneuve. After talking about the number of members elected in Alberta under the national Social Credit ticket the same as in British Columbia and Quebec, and in view of the fact that the number of federal members elected in the western provinces was much too small from a national standpoint, the hon. member for Lapointe concludes:

Therefore, Real Caouette is a leader and Robert Thompson is not, and that is why we are taking the necessary decisions.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that is how parties are created after a general election, and they want recognition as a party elected by the people on a different ticket.

Mr. Speaker, during the proceedings of the committee on privileges and elections, some members from the Conservative, Liberal and New Democratic parties raised objections to the effect that the Social Credit party should not be recognized as having priority over the group of the hon. member for Villeneuve.

At this stage, I would like to comment on some of those objections.

The hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Francis) stated the following:

It is up to the Speaker and the officers of the house to settle them as they usually do. In view of the Speaker's clear statement to the committee, I cannot agree with that. Consequently, I move that we adopt the first proposal amended as suggested.

In my opinion, sir, if their position had been clearly set out, we would not be faced with this problem today. However, our main concern now is to clear up that matter and, later on, we—or rather the officers of the house—will be able to determine the privileges to which they are entitled. If we have this debate today, it is because their status is not clear.

Mr. Speaker, I am of the opinion that the core of that problem lies in the fact that those members have not been elected under the label they would like to have recognized today and that they must simply wait until the next general election to be elected under the Ralliement des creditistes ticket. Once they have gone to the people squarely, I think there will not be any problem as to the recognition of the privileges to which they are entitled, the same as any hon. member of this house.

They are not being denied privileges as individuals, but as a group that has not been elected under the ticket it now claims.

We submit, Mr. Speaker, that this is false representation to the electors. If the people had known before the election that those members were to follow such a course of action, they would probably not have been elected.

Mr. Speaker, nothing in the Social Credit program would have led one to expect a split in our ranks at a given moment, and that, following that split, we would have to recognize a group under the leadership of the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) and another under the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson). If the electors had known that, I am sure the vote would have been different.

If we recognize now the stand taken by the hon. member for Villeneuve and his followers, we will not be doing justice to the electors who voted for the principles we advocated. Had they known that there was a rift in our party, they probably would not have voted for Social Credit members in the province of Quebec.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I do not intend to follow the hon. gentleman in the arguments he has presented to the house concerning the internecine strife between a group of members who have divided themselves into two groups. This is a matter for them, and not for the House of Commons. I agree that the stand taken by the house on this matter should have been submitted to a committee for the fullest consideration. This committee met under the chairmanship of the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron). I have read the evidence taken and the discussions that took place in the committee. I feel that further evidence should have been taken, for when one reads the two volumes he can only conclude that the subject was dealt with more by failure to face the issues than by actually facing them.

I point out that, in so far as the recommendations that are made are concerned, there are several that I do not believe parliament can accept if it has any regard for the heritage of parliament and its traditions, as well as the respect which parliament must have if it is to function properly. In so far as recommendation No. 1 is concerned, that the New Democratic party occupy seats next to the official opposition on the left side of the Speaker, I think there will be general agreement in that regard.

The next recommendation is that the members of the Social Credit party occupy the seats next to the New Democratic party on the left side of the Speaker. I find it difficult to understand how, in the face of the evidence, the committee could have arrived at that conclusion, for it denies every principle that we have accepted in parliament. In so far as the party led by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) is concerned, I strongly disagree with many of the views expressed by that leader. Frankness demands that I say that I disagree with them. However, this is a democracy and the words of Voltaire were never more applicable than they are here. He said, "I disapprove of what you say but will defend to the death your right to say it." I apply those words of Voltaire to the situation today, and say to the hon. member for Villeneuve that I accept the principle inherent in that declaration, provided that what is spoken is not treasonable, treacherous or in any way inimical to the state. In other words, I accept that principle so long as what is said is within the law.

No parliament can exist unless each member has the freedom, under the law, to say what he believes. We go farther than that. There is no one in the galleries of this House of Commons, either the public galleries or the press gallery; that is the tradition of parliament. It goes back to the days of Charles I when the battle was being fought for the freedom of parliament and of parliamentarians to say what they wished. Neither the Governor General nor his representatives can sit in the gallery. The reason is a simple one. If they were there, there may be exercised by them some control over the freedom of the members to speak as they wish.

I say again that I dislike some of the declarations that have been made by those in this house led by the hon. member for Villeneuve. However, we do not choose members of parliament on the basis of a common agreement to say the same thing in parliament. If we all speak alike, then democracy dies. On the other hand, when I think of some of the attacks made on the hon. member for Villeneuve, I feel that the house should be reminded there was a time when he enjoyed political respectability. He was a Liberal candidate in the general election of 1956, and made a very good run at that time. This, however, is background material.

Why has this controversy arisen? Well, the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) was chosen as the leader. As one follows him through the peregrinations of debate in this house, one might almost conclude he was sitting on the other side of the house. Indeed, I was in his constituency the other day and there were widespread rumours of the possibility of a change in that regard not being too far distant. However, that is beside the point. These are things we have to consider.

What is a political party? In summarizing the situation when you brought this matter before parliament, Mr. Speaker, you referred to the definition made by that tribune of democracy, Edmund Burke. None of us can understand parliament unless we know history. There is no more interesting reading, interesting to Canada because of its significance to this nation, than the debate in the British parliament beginning on February 25, 1791 on the Quebec amendment bill. Some of those who took part were Burke, Charles James Fox and Sheridan. It was in that debate, when Canadian constitutional development was discussed for the first time, that the great schism took place between Burke and Fox. Friends they had been; enemies they became that day, and they never spoke again.

It was in that debate that Burke gave his definition of a party. I am not quoting him at the moment, but in essence a party is constituted when members decide for reasons that seem good to them to band together in support of or in opposition to certain principles.

Someone has said that names mean little, and reference was made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) to 1940. If you look at the red book of that year you will find the Conservative party was elected under the name of the national party, the national government party. The hon. member has told the house something of the changes that took place. Changes also took place within his own party. In 1940, when I came in here as a member, that party's leader was Mr. Woodsworth. Then he ceased to be the leader and another leader took his place in the person of Mr. Coldwell. It is not a question of who is leader.

The determination as to whether there is a party is one that is dependant on a number of members uniting in support of a group of principles. That being so, then the method by which the party is formed is of no consequence to parliament. If they want to fight among themselves as to whether the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) or the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette)—sitting together there in amity—should be leader, then that is a matter for themselves.

Parliament simply determines one question as to how these parties shall be seated, and this house is confronted with a situation where one group is a self-declared party supporting certain principles and opposing certain others. The other group is smaller now, but still contends it represents the party that embraced all of them a few short months ago.

It is very interesting to think of the ecclesiastical divisions that have taken place throughout the ages. Hon. members may recall the famous case in Scotland, the Wee Free's, in the latter part of the nineteenth century, where a small group broke away from the greater church and contended that they themselves represented the tenets, traditions and abiding principles of their church. I think the courts held that a group can break away and themselves be actual, true exponents of the true religion. Which of these two groups has the true political religion I do not know. It is not for parliament to determine what is orthodoxy and what is heresy in Social Credit.

The assertion that a party cannot be formed unless it has gone through the firing line of an election campaign is certainly not borne out by the experience of history. Members have been elected in one party and have gone over to another, and it would be none of our concern in parliament if the hon. member for Red Deer and those associated with him crossed the floor. Those changes are not the questions to be determined by parliament.

The assertion that a party cannot be recognized unless it has fought an election and fielded a certain number of candidates would create a condition of affairs wherein members would be bound into forced allegiance until such time as they were able to go before the electorate, and to accept the recommendations of the committee in this regard would be a travesty on parliament.

How can this house say to the fewer, "Your position shall be a senior one in the house"? That is what they are asking, and it would make a mockery of parliament. We would be placing parliament in the position of saying to any group, however small, "If you can command the support of the majority of the House of Commons your position shall be senior to any other party." If we accept this principle then the official opposition, with 96 members, might very well be removed from its present position. In actuality it would not be, but if this theory were accepted, and if the government had a large majority, it could determine that the opposition should sit in the far end of the chamber, whatever its numbers.

To accept the report in its present form would be, as I said a moment ago, a travesty on parliament. A political party is self-created, self-constituted, until such time as its members are removed by the electorate from the political scene.

I do not think we would have had this difficulty if it had not been for the amendment to the House of Commons act that was passed a few months ago. Section 42 of that act now says:

> There shall be paid to each member of the House of Commons, other than the Prime Minister or the member occupying the recognized position of Leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons, who is the leader of a party that has a recognized membership of twelve or more persons in the House of Commons, an allowance at the rate of $4,000 per annum in addition to the sessional allowance payable to such member.

It must be disheartening to some to lose the position that qualified them for this, not by the effluxion of time or action of the electorate but rather by action of the members themselves.

Therefore in so far as the fourth part of the recommendation is concerned, that the question of the privileges to be enjoyed by a group be referred to the parliamentary counsel of the House of Commons for study and report to the Speaker, it flies in the face of our jurisprudence. Is parliament to say what the law is? Is a parliamentary counsel to say? This is a matter for interpretation.

It can be submitted simply to the courts, and it should be submitted to the courts. On the one hand you have the hon. member for Red Deer, now with 11 members, and the hon. member for Villeneuve with more than 12 members. This question should not be submitted to parliamentary counsel to interpret the law. To me it is very clear. I am not giving any interpretation of the law, but I say that if the $4,000 was not dangling before their eyes—

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —or its disappearance—if that were not a matter of consideration we would not have had this dispute. Of that I feel certain; of that I am convinced. Therefore I say that in so far as paragraph 4 is concerned, it should have no place whatever in the recommendations of the committee. Before I listened to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) I thought we should just send this matter back to the committee for reconsideration. However, to do that would be regarded as simply failing to discharge our responsibility because, responsibility in this matter must finally rest here. All the committee can do is listen to the evidence and recommend. Without going into further detail, I think the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre should be further amended.

Much has been said today about maintaining the dignity and tradition of parliament. All of us have a responsibility in that connection. The Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and the Leader of the Opposition have particular responsibilities in that connection. I read in the newspapers that long debates are taking place, that the discussions are becoming more and more bitter. My reply is that parliament is a place where strong men and women have strong ideas and express themselves. When I read in the press of the wastefulness of parliamentary time, I suggest that those who write that way go back to the days of Borden and Laurier: Laurier, that leader whose name conjures up the respect and regard that in the retrospect of history places him above party; and Sir Robert Borden, a man who loved parliament. I would ask those who write that way to read the debates of 1910 and 1911: parliament sitting night and day for weeks on end; Sir Wilfrid Laurier, annoyed, angered and aroused as a result of what he thought was unfair; Sir Robert Borden followed a different course. When he got annoyed, he went to bed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have sometimes found that worth while too. But read those debates. They also tell you about the great old days. I ask those who write these things about parliament to read those debates. I have read them in the last few days because I was beginning to wonder whether parliament was sinking to a level that had never been seen before. They spoke about the good old days too. In 1911 Sir Wilfrid spoke about the grand old days of 1896 to 1900; Sir Robert Borden spoke of the days of 1904 and 1908. They spoke about those parliaments just as we speak about previous parliaments. I have been here long enough to look back to 1940. Quite a few hon. members of that parliament are still here. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) and others were here at that time.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Postmaster General (Mr. Denis).

Mr. Diefenbaker: You know, Mr. Speaker, the best debates we ever had were on Friday nights. I think the motion made today may lead to very good debates. It was on Friday nights, when we were unencumbered by some members who found it necessary to be elsewhere, that parliament was really at its best. We used to have some great debates. I look back to those days and in a reminiscent mood, with nostalgic memories of the past, I say that those were great days in the House of Commons. They are no different today. The level of debate is just as high, or higher, today as it was then, although each generation looks back at the previous one and says how much better it used to be. Parliament spent, not hours but days and days, night and day, debating amendment after amendment. In those days, too, the press reported to a degree that does not exist today. About a week ago I was sent a number of newspapers of 1911 and 1912. They contain pages of reports on parliament. What everybody said was mentioned in some particular. Things have changed. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam said today, "Well, have they changed for the better?"

I want to say this to those who criticize parliament, that the members today discharge their responsibilities as effectively and as efficiently as they ever did. This does not mean that changes in the rules must not be made. We have tried over and over again to bring about changes. When you are sitting over there in the government benches you say, "I wonder what those chaps in the opposition are up to" when they ask for these things; and when they endeavour to bring something forward, we know with certainty there must be some reason. All of us want to make parliament more effective; but we will not make parliament more effective by going about this country and speaking in disparaging tones about it. Mind you, Mr. Speaker, when the indemnity was raised to $18,000 it was said this would bring better members into parliament. I wonder which hon. member is prepared to admit that anybody could take his place.

Mr. Pickersgill: We would have to leave that to the voters.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I did not hear the hon. member.

Mr. Pickersgill: I just said that we would have to leave that to the voters.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The statement made at that time was, "All you have to do is raise the indemnity and you will have better members of parliament". I do not see anyone on either side of the house standing up and saying he could be supplanted by somebody better. We do not raise the standard of parliament by disparaging members or the actions of parliament. Each one of us has a responsibility. The Prime Minister and I have higher responsibilities than anyone else. That is why, when I look at these recommendations I say that to accept them would be to emasculate parliament. I do not believe in three, four or five opposition parties. I think the $4,000 a year has provided an invitation to a proliferation of parties.

Therefore, desiring to do what I can to bring about a better parliament, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

That the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) be amended by adding thereto, immediately after the word "groups", the following:

"and that clause 4 of the report of the committee to the House of Commons be deleted".

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock p.m. the house will now proceed to consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills, notices of motions (papers), and public bills. As there is no business listed on today's order paper for private bills, the house will proceed to the consideration of notices of motions (papers) and public bills.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, the matter now before the house has been the subject of discussion for nearly three weeks and it seems to me fairly important that it ought to be cleaned up as quickly as possible. I suggest that if there is unanimous consent we dispense with private members' hour and proceed with the debate, and get it to a conclusion as quickly as possible.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) and the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) have both agreed to forgo their rights for today. I should like to say on behalf of the government that their position will be assured, and that the government is asking to have these motions stood so that the hon. members will not suffer any disability.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It being the unanimous wish of the house, it is agreed that we proceed with the motion before the house.

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Brant-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, I was indeed pleased to hear the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), in speaking to this motion, refer to the great customs and traditions of the mother of parliaments at Westminster. At the same time I was somewhat surprised when he then said that it was a heresy to propose a seating arrangement such as that set out in the committee's report. I would, with all respect, invite the right hon. gentleman's attention to the seating arrangements in the British house of commons in November of 1922. After the election on that occasion the labour party was returned with 138 members and the liberal party, under the Right Hon. Herbert Henry Asquith, could only show up with 60 members. That parliament, the great mother of parliaments with all its customs and traditions, accepted a seating arrangement whereby the liberal party under Mr. Asquith with only 60 seats was given the front bench of the official opposition and Ramsay Macdonald's 138 members accepted a secondary position.

Therefore, with great respect, sir, I say that the seating arrangement proposed in this report can be justified and sanctioned not only by practice in the halls of Westminster but also in this house. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) alluded to the Liberal party, and may I say to him that hon. members on this side of the house will vote on this matter as freely, as fairly and as dispassionately as any group in this house.

I would invite the attention of this house to the fact that Mr. Speaker posed the question to this house, which is to be found at page 3007 of Hansard:

Have we a new party according to this new definition...? To my mind this is a question for the house to decide.

A reading of the report makes it abundantly clear that the committee felt there was not a new party, but that there was a new group in the house; and that can be justified on the evidence. This difficult problem was made somewhat less difficult because the Speaker, as mentioned by the Leader of the Opposition, had provided us with a definition of the word "party" as follows:

"Party"... is a body of men united for promoting the national interest on some particular principle in which they are all agreed.

It is my humble opinion that it was not the duty of the committee to disentangle and to isolate all the internal differences between the two factions warring within the bosom of the Social Credit party. We have to determine on broad general principles the differences in the political complexions of these two groups.

May I direct your attention, Mr. Speaker, first of all to a letter sent by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), which is as follows:

Following the annual convention of the Ralliement des creditistes in Granby, Quebec, on August 31 and September 1, 1963, it is my duty to inform you that our political group will hereafter sit as a separate group in the House of Commons.

And that is precisely the finding of the committee, that it was a separate group and not a new political party.

But may I say that there is more cogent and compelling evidence than even that. May I again draw the attention of the house to the evidence given by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire). This is what he said in reply to a question by the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue, as set out in the committee report of the evidence:

Mr. Gregoire: The national Social Credit party is our party, so the answer is yes.

We are therefore confronted with this dilemma. We have one group claiming that they are the Social Credit party, and we have another group claiming that they are the Social Credit party. It is not a matter of difference in political conviction, because the group under the leadership of the hon. member for Villeneuve still say that they are pledged to the same political conviction as when they were elected. It is really a matter of difference in leadership. So the situation arises that there are two groups both pledging themselves to the same political conviction, the one under the leadership of the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson), and the "Johnnie-come-latelies", if I may use that expression, under the leadership of the hon. member for Villeneuve. I submit that on the strength of this evidence the committee was left with no alternative but to say that there was another group in this house.

May I again go back to the mother of parliaments of November, 1922. In the election held at that time there were two groups of the liberal party, that under the Right Hon. H. H. Asquith and that under the leadership of Mr. David Lloyd George. That parliament held that there was a national liberal party and a liberal group under the leadership of David Lloyd George, and so I would reaffirm and reiterate that the findings of this committee have been sanctioned and justified by tradition and custom both here and elsewhere.

Having answered that question, Mr. Speaker, the committee next turned its attention to the question of the seating arrangements. Let me say to this house, Mr. Speaker, that no one in that committee closed his mind to the question of numerical strength. I would point out that in 1935 there were 17 members in this house representing the Social Credit party, and 14 sitting as C.C.F. members, the predecessors of the New Democratic party. It is my understanding, although I am subject to correction on this, that the house then accepted a seating arrangement whereby the 14 C.C.F. members were given priority over the 17 Social Credit members, and that arrangement was acquiesced in by the right hon. gentleman who now leads the official opposition.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to interrupt—I have been following the hon. gentleman very carefully and with interest—but I was not in the house at that time.

Mr. Pennell: As one who has great respect for the Leader of Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), I apologize.

The seating arrangements at that time were justified on the broad, general ground of seniority: First, that the C.C.F. party had come into this house earlier than the Social Credit party; next, that its membership was drawn from a larger number of provinces and, finally, that the services of the individual members had extended over a great number of years. It is my humble contention that those same arguments can be applied with equal force to the seating arrangements in this chamber today. To assume for one moment that the majority in the committee recommended moving the New Democratic party next to the official opposition solely on the grounds of the numerical strength of that party would not be accurate. We justified this recommendation on other grounds. I ask hon. members to note that the disparity in numbers is extremely small—17 as against 13, and 11. It may be that had the difference in numbers been greater we would not have given weight to other considerations, but on this occasion we justified placing the New Democratic party next to the official opposition because they were senior to the other minority groups, because its representatives here were drawn from three provinces and because the services of its individual members have extended over many years.

Let me point out that of the members led by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), apart from the hon. member himself, none can claim to have served in more than two parliaments. At least three or four can claim that distinction in the party led by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson). In addition, the hon. member for Red Deer can claim members from the provinces of British Columbia, Alberta and Quebec. On the other hand, the members united under the leadership of the hon. member for Villeneuve—and I do not say this in a disparaging manner—are limited to representing the province of Quebec. Let me further point out that the group united under the leadership of the hon. member for Red Deer came into this house under his leadership. They accepted it and the situation was acquiesced in by all members.

I repeat, the difference in the number of members is small, only 13 as against 11. Moreover, we have no assurance that this disparity will remain the same. Thus I say that although this report may not be without its imperfections, and few reports are, whatever those imperfections may be this recommendation can be justified on grounds of logic, common sense, tradition and custom.

Finally, may I turn to the question of the privileges enjoyed by the group under the leadership of the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette). If any hon. member thinks that this report, or its acceptance, constitutes an attempt to prejudice the rights of any minority group in this house, let him disabuse himself of that idea at once. It is my understanding, as a new and humble member, that the rights and privileges enjoyed here, whether by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), by the Leader of the Opposition or by an ordinary backbencher all flow from the Speaker's chair following the course of custom and tradition. It is my respectful submission that the same rights and privileges should flow to all minority groups in this house and that they should not be catalogued or made the subject of an inventory by any of the groups represented here. After all, why should their rights and privileges be different from those extended to any members of the house down through the years?

Before concluding what I have to say I should like to deal with the other point which was raised by the Leader of the Opposition when he referred to the indemnity of $4,000 payable under the House of Commons Act and Senate Act. In my respectful opinion this does not raise a question as to the privileges enjoyed by members of this house. This is why the committee was prompted in its decision to refer this particular matter to parliamentary counsel, in order that advice might be given to the Speaker; we considered this was not a matter to be dealt with by the committee.

I had, personally, hoped that this question might be dealt with without regard to party distinction, but despite the fact that I am a new member I have already learned that to expect such a thing to happen would be a triumph of hope over experience.

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, the question we are discussing this afternoon would have really required only a few minutes of attention and thinking, perhaps, to arrive at a decision.

I submit that if the members of the house, on the government side as well as on the opposition side, know their arithmetic well enough to tell whether 12 or 13 is more than 11, none could say really that we have to ask any political party permission to be recognized as members of parliament elected by our constituents.

I highly appreciate the remarks that were made a little while ago, by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), as well as the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker).

As for the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand (Mr. Pennell), who tried to make us understand there had been recognized seniority in the house around 1945, I know that among the group of 23 Social Credit members who sit presently in the house, I was the only member sitting from 1946 to 1949. If there is seniority somewhere, I am of the opinion that we have it in our movement. But that is not the point.

The committee on privileges and elections mentions a special question to be considered, and it is this: Are we going to recognize a new party which developed during this parliament, since the election?

That is the only point on which we have to make a decision and report to the Speaker in order that the dispute be settled. There is the point, the whole question referred to the committee on privileges and elections.

As for the committee, its report is completely off the beam. It says that members of the New Democratic party should come after those of the Conservative party, that members of the Thompson group should come after members of the New Democratic party, and lastly the Ralliement des creditistes group.

It makes no mention of the question: "Are we going to recognize a new party which developed during this parliament and since the election?"

The members of this house are aware that the Ralliement des creditistes was born in 1958, on June 4, and that, ever since, I have taken the responsibility of leader of the movement in the province of Quebec.

A while ago we heard the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Chapdelaine) say that the movement was elected under false pretences. I say to him, the hon. member for Sherbrooke, and to all those who think the same way today, that if it were not for the Ralliement des creditistes, none of them would sit in this house now.

As the hon. member for Lake St. John (Mr. Lessard)—whose absence I regret—mentioned, and the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Côté) would agree, they were chosen as candidates of the Ralliement des creditistes. Here is his letter dated September 12, 1963, when he wrote:

"I accepted to be candidate for the Ralliement des creditistes in Lake St. John—"

He did write: "Ralliement des creditistes", and not the Social Credit association.

The movement affiliated to the Social Credit Association of Canada, that is the Social Credit, never existed, no more than there is a Social Credit party in Canada. What existed in Quebec before the reorganization of the association was not the Social Credit party, keep that in mind, but the Ralliement des creditistes of the province of Quebec. The Ralliement existed before. It all started with the Ralliement des creditistes in the province of Quebec; and without the contribution of the Ralliement des creditistes my hon. English speaking friends from Alberta would probably not be here today.

Mr. Speaker, why not ask those people from Alberta or Quebec who are followers of the hon. member for Red Deer whether they hold membership cards issued by the national association? Such a thing does not even exist. Why not ask them? They say that we have been elected under false pretences. Ask them what kind of membership card they have in their pocket. Those cards identify them as active members of the Ralliement des creditistes du Quebec. They don't have any card from the national association.

Mr. Speaker, on page 21 of the report of the committee on privileges and elections I see that the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Girouard) introduced a suggestion or a motion. Here is what he said:

> And at this time I wish to point out that I am only acting on the invitation of the Speaker. My motion is as follows:
> That a group of members which did not form a party at the time of the last general election cannot be recognized as a party before facing the electorate as such.

The member for Labelle should tell us, whether when he became a candidate in the riding of Labelle, he asked permission from the hon. member for Red Deer or from the hon. member for Villeneuve. Further, what organization in his riding had him elected? Was it the Ralliement des creditistes of Labelle county or the national organization of the Canadian Social Credit party?

If you want other evidence, Mr. Speaker, I can supply you with loads of it to establish the existence of the true Social Credit in this Parliament in Ottawa. It is due to the effort of the Ralliement du credit social and the Social Crediters in the province of Quebec that this party is represented in this house. I have the evidence right here.

Let us see what the popular vote was at the last election—

An hon. Member: It has gone down.

Mr. Caouette: Gone down? Open your ears and your eyes and listen to this: The popular vote increased by 56,000 in the province of Quebec, on April 8, 1963, compared with June 18, 1962. I do not want to rub it in, but I only want to set the record straight.

In Quebec, le Ralliement des creditistes obtained a total of 571,333 votes. I challenge the member for Red Deer to come and tell us the percentage of votes he obtained for Quebec.

Let us look at the province of Nova Scotia where the national organization was operating. Three hundred and sixty seven votes were given to the Social Credit party in the whole province of Nova Scotia.

In New Brunswick, out of a total of 232,000 votes, 20,194 were for the Social Credit candidates.

In Quebec out of a total of 2,096,000 votes, over 29 per cent or 571,000 were cast in favour of the Social Credit party.

In the province of Ontario, where the national organization worked their hands raw and spent their funds to convince the Ontario voters of the value of the Social Credit doctrine, out of 2,721,984 votes, the Social Credit got only 55,758 votes.

In Manitoba, 27,796 votes out of 386,000.

In Saskatchewan, out of 405,720 electors, the total of Social Credit votes for the national association—and mind you the president of the national association lives in Saskatchewan —a vice president or a treasurer, a Mr. Daryl Rumble, took exactly the startling total of 566 votes in the riding of Assiniboia, in the southern part of Saskatchewan. Total for Saskatchewan: 14,819 votes.

In Alberta, a province where there has been a provincial Social Credit administration in power for 30 years, out of a total of 468,000 votes, the Social Crediters won 125,642 votes. The percentage is less than what we took in Quebec.

In British Columbia, out of a total of 578,000 electors, the Social Crediters took 82,000 votes, and that, with a Social Credit provincial administration in power for the last 13 years. The Progressive Conservatives, the Liberals and even the N.D.P. were ahead of the Social Credit national association.

To sum up, out of a total of seven million electors in Canada, we took 571,000 votes in Quebec against 327,000 votes for the national organization in the other provinces.

Mr. Speaker, those are facts and statistics quoted here to show to what degree they are trying today to minimize those who gave a new lease on life to a political movement.

It is not the concern of the House of Commons to decide whether such a movement should exist or not.

I know very well that if I asked the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis) what he thinks of our movement, he would wish for its disappearance tomorrow morning, but I would say the same thing about the Liberals. If I had the power to make them disappear, let me tell you that they would vanish real fast.

Mr. Pigeon: Leave that to us.

Mr. Caouette: Now, Mr. Speaker, in the editorials published since that situation came about, emphasis is put on two letters, one of my colleagues, the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire), and my own personal letter to the Speaker of the house. There is no contradiction between those two letters. The Ralliement des creditistes is not a new invention; it was and still is in existence.

As the Leader of the Opposition so aptly said a while ago, it is not for the house to decide whether 12 hon. members will stick together or not. That is for the hon. members concerned to decide. If you polled the 23 Social Crediters elected as Social Crediters at the last election, there would be 13 in favour of the Ralliement des creditistes and 11 in favour of the national organization. We have a majority. All we are asking for is that you recognize this situation.

We took a vote at Granby. The hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Chapdelaine) was not even there. If he had been there, it would have meant one more vote, that is five or six votes, I think, for his group, but nevertheless there were 13 in our group. Then, that is a majority in favour of the Ralliement des creditistes.

The other day, the hon. member for Red Deer, because we were trying to win recognition—that was our right—accused us of blackmailing the Queen. That was not our intention. Our intention was to get recognized. That was our intention. It was not to delay the business of the house.

I heard the member for Red Deer state that it was terrorism or tyranny by the minority, that we were imposing tyranny on parliament. Isn't it what his group has been trying to do for three weeks here, in the House of Commons? You see people going behind the drapes and in low voices trying to conspire with the Liberals so that the Ralliement des creditistes will not be recognized in the house. You are aware that this is going on. Those are facts.

Mr. Dupuis: This is not true.

Mr. Caouette: We are informed by telephone that the decision has already been made, but that it has to be submitted to parliament before it is made public, a decision to the effect that we will be put in fifth place in the House of Commons. What do you say about that? We have been informed accordingly, and my word—

Mr. Choquette: That is better than nothing; at the next parliament you will not even exist.

Mr. Caouette: This is my friend, the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette) speaking; he will learn that after next parliament, because he is sure not to come back here and he knows that very well.

Mr. Pigeon: He is seldom here.

Mr. Caouette: Besides, he is never here. It is by accident that he happens to be here today.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member for Villeneuve has just made an essentially false assertion, which is very typical of him.

I was present in this house more often than the member for Villeneuve and, for his guidance, may I be permitted to say that I have no lesson to take from him concerning my attendance or my absence here, and I ask him to withdraw his remarks for they are inaccurate. Moreover, should you refuse to agree to my request that he withdraw I invite him to come any time to my Lotbiniere constituency to take part in a public debate on the hustings, an invitation which he has refused in the past.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I accept the invitation of my good friend from Lotbiniere. Besides, I shall be in his constituency next Saturday and he may then come to meet me, if he wishes, at a supper organized at St. Croix de Lotbiniere. He will be welcome.

As regards the lessons I do not have to give him, I would not wish to give him lessons, since, in any school, there are students who understand nothing, and the hon. member for Lotbiniere could be one of those.

Mr. Speaker, since the debate started on the recognition or non-recognition of our group as a separate group or as a distinct party in the house, we read the editorials in several Canadian newspapers.

These are not editorials written by Social Crediters, for these people are even proud to say they are not Social Crediters, but they recognize to the elected members of the Ralliement, advocating the Social Credit policy in this house, the right to express themselves and to enjoy the privileges enjoyed by any political party.

Mr. Speaker, some members who rose before me declared a while ago, that we dissociated ourselves from Social Credit. There now. Let us be sensible. We did not dissociate ourselves from Social Credit, since the real representatives of the Social Credit philosophy in this house are the members of the Ralliement des creditistes, who are from the province of Quebec at this time.

Do you want an example? I have before me a report that was prepared by the hon. member for Red Deer, and distributed to the national executive of the Social Credit Association of Canada, in which he declares, among other things:

> If we could develop such a policy of vision and action, we would open the door to a throng of members who are at present shying away because of our name "Social Credit".

Once more he is suggesting that we should change the name of Social Credit.

> We should exert pressure on the Ralliement des creditistes du Quebec so that they seriously consider campaigning in the provincial election.

We never had any such intention.

Without trying to show the advantage or disadvantage of the critical political situation in Quebec, this decision would allow for a development of the political philosophy in that province—

As if we had no political doctrine, as if Quebec had no political philosophy.

This would limit the scope of Quebec nationalism to the provincial organization.

Mr. Speaker, I am asking the hon. members to try to understand the meaning of those words, and I hope the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Marcoux) will also understand that meaning.

And I continue:

The provincial organization would be represented within the national Social Credit party. At present, the whole load of the problems in Quebec—

Please take note of this, Mr. Speaker:

The whole load of the problems in Quebec is directly related to the national party which gives the public both in Quebec and outside the impression that the Social Credit is only a Quebec party in the federal parliament. Which is certainly of a nature to weaken and unbalance the true national image of the party.

What national picture? In 1958, we did not have a single candidate in Quebec. Furthermore, all Social Credit members of the House of Commons were soundly beaten and sent back to their respective counties.

As a matter of fact, it was not until 1962 following an expensive television campaign started in 1958, that the movement began to make itself felt in the province of Quebec, and the hon. member for Red Deer knows how we worked in Quebec. The French Canadians in our province know it too, even those who have now left the ranks of the Ralliement des creditistes.

Mr. Speaker, on October 7, 1963, the newspaper Le Devoir said:

One may or may not like Mr. Caouette. But there is a brutal fact which cannot be dismissed. That man, duly elected by the people, is now leading a distinct group of members of the house. Will it be for long? Nobody knows. But that is the situation at present.

Mr. Speaker, as for the length of time, we will look after that ourselves. And the article goes on:

In the name of fairness and common sense—

Mr. Speaker, Le Devoir is not a Social Credit newspaper, it seems to me.

Also, I hope that the hon. member for Mercier will understand what I am about to read, for there must be some common sense and a bit of fairness in him.

And I continue reading:

In the name of fairness and common sense, Mr. Caouette's group must be recognized and its leader must enjoy the privileges to which party leaders are entitled in parliament. If, as a result, Mr. Thompson has to be deprived of the additional $4,000 allowance voted last year—

[Mr. Caouette.]

Mr. Prosper Boulanger (Mercier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The hon. member for Villeneuve has asked me to listen to him but he reads so fast that we cannot understand a word. I shall ask him to start over again and to read a little slower.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I shall meet the hon. member at the Club Maisonneuve in Montreal at a future meeting.

I proceed:

If, therefore, Mr. Thompson has to be deprived of the additional $4,000 allowance voted last year—

About this, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition said a moment ago: If you were to put the $4,000 in front of both, they would probably unite and get along together.

Mr. Speaker, I think that it is mean to connect this matter with that of the $4,000. In fact, I did not wait for my parliamentary allowance to do the job that I have done in Quebec, and even if we do not share the same political views, I think that the members on both sides of the house will admit that, without any parliamentary allowance, I have still discussed political questions in Quebec as well as in the rest of Canada. Everybody must admit it and I did this without consideration for the $4,000 or $18,000 a year.

I proceed with the report:

The split decided by Mr. Caouette, establishes clearly in the minds of the people the actual position of the party called Social Credit. Parliament does not have to pass judgment but to accept the fact.

The demands of the Caouette group are justified and legitimate. But that in itself would not be reason enough to impose upon the whole country consequences more far reaching than the temporary and partial discrimination suffered by the members concerned.

The Ottawa Journal, which is certainly not a Social Credit paper—it may be Liberal or Conservative, I do not know—had this to say:

[Text]

The Fewer the Higher?

The Commons shouldn't get too legal or too fancy in deciding when or what is a party. The circumstances of a party's birth are not, in our view, as important as its voting strength in the Commons. If the Commons is to determine the importance and therefore position of a group or party by other than its voting strength the door is left wide open to all manner of weird decisions in the future. A good Commons should be sensitive and susceptible to trends and changes, to floor crossings and tides. If the Commons somehow finds reasons to assert that the large piece of the old Social Credit party is in fact the smallest then not just the people of Quebec with separatist leanings but folk all over Canada with no leaning whatever are going to come to the conclusion the Commons is silly.

[Translation]

And still about the matter now before us, the newspaper Toronto daily Star of October 8 said:

[Text]

Recognize the creditistes.

Now that the Ralliement des creditistes has withdrawn its attempt to blockade public business at Ottawa, and the parliamentary crisis is over for the moment, the people of Canada are bound to wonder what the fight was all about.

The Ralliement is composed of those members of parliament who followed Real Caouette in the recent split in the Social Credit party. It resorted to its filibuster when its demand for recognition as a separate party—which among other things would entitle Mr. Caouette to an extra $4,000 indemnity as a party leader—was not immediately granted but was referred to the committee on privileges and elections.

Without attempting to excuse this high handed action by the creditistes, we find it hard to understand why the government delayed giving them the recognition they sought—

Mr. Pickersgill: Nothing to do with the government.

Mr. Caouette: If the government had given orders to its supporters sitting on that committee the result would have been different. The Secretary of State knows better than that.

—and made such a song-and-dance about the whole affair.

The law defining political parties in the House of Commons was clarified by an amendment to the Senate and House of Commons Act which was passed last summer. This amendment provides as follows:

There shall be paid to each member of the House of Commons... who is the leader of a party that has a recognized membership of 12 or more persons in the House of Commons an allowance at the rate of $4,000 per annum each, in addition to the sessional allowances payable to such members—

The committee on privileges and elections has illogically decided to recognize the Caouette group as a party while putting it behind Mr. Thompson's 11-member remnant in order of precedence. This invites another filibuster. The Commons as a whole should give the creditistes what they are numerically entitled to—recognition as the third-ranking opposition party.

[Translation]

And this, Mr. Speaker, from the Montreal Star of October 10:

[Text]

On the other hand though not recognizing the split for one purpose, it accepts it for another; the committee elevates the new Democratic party to No. 3 place—above the split Social Crediters... In any event, it was Mr. Caouette in Quebec who delivered the goods at the polls, not once but twice. Without the Creditistes, the parliamentary Social Credit party would have amounted to nothing but a tiny handful. When the split came, the Creditistes themselves split, but Mr. Caouette still has a larger parliamentary following than Mr. Thompson. Mr. Thompson may still be the "national" leader but he doesn't lead much.

More will be heard of this dispute, for the unruly temper of the House of Commons is likely to become worse before it gets better.

[Translation]

I only wish to point out that it is neither our intention to cause trouble in the house nor to play politics. All we are asking is this: since we are 13, recognize us as such and let us be seated as a group of 13 in parliament.

Call us the Ralliement des creditistes party, or the Social Credit party, this makes no difference to us. We are members of parliament and surely out-and-out Social Crediters.

As far as the Social Credit is concerned, it has never existed legally or otherwise. It is the Social Credit Association of Canada which exists and is headed by the hon. member for Red Deer, it is true, and there is the Ralliement des creditistes.

When we met together in Ottawa, the Ralliement des creditistes did not join the national association. We offered to co-operate; we held out our hand, nothing else.

I think it is a matter of association, that is all. When someone is unhappy about something, the answer is simply to separate. That is what the Ralliement des creditistes did and we are not sorry. We had the right to do so.

When one joins a movement and has definite opinions and when another group takes another view of things, regarding, for instance, our formal statement against nuclear weapons, while the leader of the Social Credit Association of Canada stated that we should accept defensive nuclear weapons, then, we do not go any further.

There was also the matter of the labour code. The Social Credit program was in favour of removing the obligation for a union to require the signature of every member. Besides, this suggestion was not well received even in the west. At all events, their program on matters of labour legislation came into conflict with the interest of the province of Quebec. This created difficulties in Quebec.

You will tell me that I was troublesome in western Canada. Not much. Each time I was invited, in Alberta and in Saskatchewan, in Morinville, Alberta, for example, I spoke before seven persons. And it was not better in Estevan. I was not invited to attend large meetings, I was not very popular with certain western Crediters.

On the other hand, in the province of Quebec, it was the opposite, and the hon. member for Lotbiniere knows it. There we have people who know how to organize things. And it was not the Social Credit Association of Canada which did the work but the Ralliement des creditistes. This is our organization. I am asking that justice be done, I am not asking for preferential treatment, but justice. We do not wish to block passage of legislation by filibustering but to co-operate in the best interests of the nation.

In this connection, we support the legislation no matter whether it is proposed by the Liberals, the Conservatives or the N.D.P.; if the legislation is profitable to Canada, we are in favour of it.

We are accused of resorting to filibustering tactics. Who is using such tactics? We have been sitting since September 30 and today is October 17. And we are still discussing after 17 days whether the member for Villeneuve and the member for Red Deer are going to continue sitting together. And some find it funny. They are sitting together. Whose fault is it? Is it mine? Is it his? No, the people who refuse to take their responsibilities are to blame.

Therefore, take your responsibilities, reach a decision, so the matter will be settled. We only hear about amendments or the referral of the matter to the committee for further study. Are we still going to meddle with this and vie with one another for two or three weeks? And to what avail? Someone should assume the responsibility.

It is said that the government is not responsible. The committee says it is not responsible and it refers the question to the house.

Do you want a majority? There are five groups in the house: three favour the recognition and two groups, the Liberal party and the Social Credit association group, are against it. Why? Because the hon. member for Red Deer has promised to support unconditionally the Liberals until the next election.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Caouette: Listen—

[Text]

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Red Deer is rising on a question of privilege, and I would ask the hon. member to address the Chair from his seat.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for not being in my proper seat but I have not wanted to be deafened by the shouting next to me. I suggest that the least any hon. member of the house could do is speak the truth, and not make statements which he knows are not right, and with which he is merely trying to distort the record.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I take note of the statement made by the hon. member for Red Deer. However, as you know, that statement which was reported as having been made in Red Deer, Alberta, was circulated in Vancouver and elsewhere, indeed from coast to coast. All of us have read it in the newspapers. At any rate, I accept his assurance that he will not support the Liberal party in the future.

An hon. Member: There will be an election.

Mr. Caouette: Someone says that there will be an election. I know that that prospect fills some members with fear, not in our group but in others. Set your minds at rest, I am not afraid of an election. I never am. Not only have I been beaten seven times but I was elected three times without the help of the Liberals. The only time I ran as a Liberal I was miserably beaten.

Mr. Speaker, this is what Mr. Clement Brown who is not a Liberal but a Conservative—in fact a former Conservative candidate—had to say in another newspaper, Montreal Matin, on October 10:

> Personally I have not the least bit of sympathy for Mr. Caouette or the Ralliement des creditistes.

Quite nice, is it not.

> —or for the Ralliement des creditistes. Their demagogy fouls up the air.

Listen to this. I wonder whether he is in the press gallery at the moment. Yes, he is.

> Their demagogy fouls up the air in parliament.

That is why I say that instead of sending nuclear weapons to Val d'Or we should provide members of the press gallery with gas masks so that the parliamentary correspondents may breathe more easily.

> —but it is up to the people to judge them on their merits rather than their colleagues who are, in fact, their opponents.

Everybody would find it strange if I had to decide upon your political status in this house. But that is precisely what you are about to do concerning 12 of my colleagues and myself. Is that democracy? If so, I wonder what is the meaning of democracy.

The Leader of the Opposition is as clear on that point as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). In the Montreal Matin of October 10, one could read:

> Bill C-91 recognizes only one criterion, that is the number of members. It is the Liberal party which thought that one up concerning third parties in spite of a long tradition that, in parliament, opposition is indivisible.

The presence or otherwise of a member in the house depends on his constituents, not on his party nor on his leader. If, at the next election, my services are no longer required, you know what the electors will do, and the same thing goes for every riding.

If we are 12 or 13, or two more than the other group and besides that we have the majority as far as years are concerned and also the majority by popular vote, why wait to come to a decision?

Now, because Bill C-91 favours their "bosom enemy", why do the Liberals discriminate against Mr. Caouette and the Ralliement?

Why? In the final analysis, it is the responsibility of the Liberals to settle the matter, and I directly appeal to the Prime Minister himself when, in a few moments there will be a vote and when he will be the first to vote, and I appeal to all hon. members—I shall not kneel to ask forgiveness because there is no forgiveness to ask for—I ask all hon. members of the house to be logical—not conciliating, for this is not a matter of conciliation but a matter of logic, democracy and fair play.

There are 13 of us and 11 of them; besides, our group has existed since 1958 and we have run under the label of the Ralliement des Creditistes.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Caouette: The candidates' party does not appear on the ballot-paper; but the candidates have all been chosen, without exception, at a convention of the Quebec Ralliement des Creditistes, and for the guidance of the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Marcoux), I shall say that the same can be said about him. Moreover, the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency did not even know the hon. member for Red Deer when he ran as a member of the Ralliement des Creditistes.

Mr. Marcoux: The hon. member for Red Deer was not even the leader.

Mr. Caouette: He was not even the leader.

He followed the hon. member for Villeneuve and ran under the Ralliement des Creditistes ticket. It is the Ralliement des Creditistes which made possible the election of the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency, of the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Girouard), of the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Chapdelaine) and of all the Quebec Social Crediters.

Mr. J. A. Habel (Cochrane): Would the hon. member allow me a question? It will not be a long one.

Mr. Caouette: Yes. You can make it as long as you wish.

Mr. Habel: Is it not a fact that the hon. member for Villeneuve recognized the hon. member for Red Deer as his leader at a Social Credit convention?

Mr. Caouette: Well, Mr. Speaker, the convention that was held in Ottawa was not held for the purpose of the assimilation of one group but for the purpose of an understanding between both elements, and that is the reason why the title of assistant to the national leader was chosen.

All that was made abundantly clear to the public, and I stated at the convention that it was a matter of having the French speaking group represented in the national Social Credit movement.

Those are the facts. When we left Ottawa we said: two leaders representing both elements in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, among other papers, I could quote Le Devoir:

As we are speaking of Mr. Stanley Knowles, we might as well exhaust the subject. It is common knowledge that the member for Winnipeg North Centre is one of our leading experts on parliamentary procedure.

I take my hat off to him on that point.

Mr. Knowles also has the well-earned reputation of being a straightforward man, and one of the most responsible members of the parliament of Canada.

An hon. Member: A real flirtation.

Mr. Caouette: No flirtation at all; just cold facts.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to have to interrupt the hon. member, but his time is up.

An hon. Member: Go on.

Another hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member may continue with the unanimous consent of the house.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Caouette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am grateful to my hon. friends for their courtesy.

These qualities give a special value to the attitude of Mr. Knowles in the Caouettistes case in the House of Commons. Mr. Knowles voted against the majority which, in the committee on privileges, denied to Mr. Caouette's group the position to which it is entitled by right.

Mr. Knowles had no trouble refuting the specious arguments brought up by the Liberal majority, supported by Mr. Thompson, to justify the unfair treatment inflicted on Mr. Caouette and his group. The well-known fact that the member for Winnipeg North Centre has absolutely no sympathy for the ideas of Mr. Caouette and his friends only serves to add weight to Mr. Knowles' opinion.

I might add that I recognize the frankness of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and I can assure him of the same courtesy on my part as regards his doctrine which I do not share.

Mr. Speaker, I shall close my remarks by asking everybody, all the members of this house and especially the Liberals—for the matter is in their hands, that, we are finding out; the matter is in your hands—I ask you, as an elected representative—we do not want a precedent to be created—in the name of the people, I ask you, as an elected representative, to consider seriously what you are about to do, because the step about to be taken today concerns one of the most fundamental matters of principle of democracy, one which might rise again in a few years.

We are asking that justice be done, we are asking to be recognized for what we are and not otherwise. We are 13. Grant us the same privileges as to any other group in the house.

In the name of democracy, I hope that you will recognize this matter of principle which is so highly considered in Canada.

Mr. Gerard Girouard (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, may I remind you that it is six o'clock?

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if every hon. member of the house recalls that we meet again at seven o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 7 p.m.

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Girouard (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I regret that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is not in the house at the present time, because, I would have liked to thank him for his kindness as he seems to hold me in high esteem.

Besides, I would have liked to convey to him the expression of my feelings and tell him that I consider him as a great parliamentarian and a man of outstanding merit.

I would have asked him also where the amendment he has moved will lead us, and how this amendment can improve the situation.

I would also have taken the opportunity to tell him how I admire a man like him who, in the name of high principles, traditions and established precedents, maintained in 1962 that the New Democratic party should have precedence over the Social Credit party, while this year, in the name of the same high principles, the same traditions, he claims that it is the number of members which should be taken into consideration in this house. I would have liked to commend him for his logic.

I would have also congratulated him for having told us he had acted without any personal interest at the sittings of the committee on privileges and elections.

Personally, if I had been a member of the New Democratic party, I admit that with my human weakness I might have said: let both parties be recognized, so that a reconciliation will become impossible and that I shall be always assured to keep the third place in the house.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the amendment introduced by the hon. member would be to defer to the committee on privileges and elections the consideration of the matter now before us, that is to determine whether the group under the leadership of the hon. member for Villeneuve should be recognized as a party in this house.

Mr. Speaker, in the face of this amendment, we have to ask ourselves why should we refer this report to the committee on privileges and elections. And if we did so, what would happen?

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has admitted himself that such was the motion he had introduced in the committee on privileges and elections. In addition, he admitted that he was putting forward the same arguments which he had put forth before the committee on privileges and elections and that his amendment had been defeated.

Consequently, I would have liked to ask him what results does he expect if we returned to the committee on privileges and elections with the same problem and the same amendment. I would also ask him what they would have done faced with such a situation.

Mr. Speaker, in order to imagine what would happen should the report be referred back to the committee on privileges and elections, let us think about the position of our various parties during the committee's sittings, while the report was being discussed. Once again, I congratulate the members of the New Democratic party, who without any personal interest at stake and I believe on that point the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre asked us to accept their suggestion, and to admit that, within these precincts, numerical preference should be granted.

On the other hand, what was the Conservative stand in the committee on privileges and elections? Once more, with strength and courage, with foresight and quite unanimously, the members of the Conservative party rose and exclaimed: Let us dump all this into the Speaker's lap.

We might also ask ourselves whether those Conservatives would be just as brave and proud if we were now in the privileges and elections committee. Would they still say:

"Let us dump all this in the Speaker's lap; the government will be held responsible and we will be able to play politics."

Mr. Speaker, what would be the attitude of government members if the report were to be referred to the privileges and elections committee for consideration? They are the only ones I cannot congratulate because if they had wanted to follow suit, they could easily have said: "Let us recognize all groups and we will be acclaimed as the saviours of the people. Let us consider only the political aspect of the question."

Mr. Speaker, I must criticize government members because, as you can see, instead of doing that they stupidly decided to act fairly and equitably, to follow the voice of their conscience and to settle the problem as fairly as possible.

And what would their position be if the suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was accepted?

Of course the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre spoke to us about the press. He stated that the press seemed to exert some pressure to the effect that the group of the hon. member for Villeneuve should be recognized.

We have even heard a great friend of newspapermen, and of the Canadian Press, that is the member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette). He told us: but listen, the press wants us to be recognized.

However, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member for Villeneuve would have felt able, this afternoon, to repeat to newspapermen what he said during the whole election campaign: tell me who pays you; I shall tell you whom you serve, and nothing else.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. When the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Girouard) credits me with the words: "Tell me who pays you, I shall tell you whom you serve", he has no right at all to imply anything about me, and if he will ask himself this question, he will probably find the answer.

Mr. Girouard: Mr. Speaker, I will not put the question of privilege, because the one who inflicted the slight is not worth the trouble.

Mr. Caouette: It was much better than that before the election.

Mr. Girouard: Mr. Speaker, let us go on with the matter that concerns us.

I think that the columnists of certain papers, and the commentators of certain political parties in the house just forgot one thing. The motion submitted to the committee on privileges and elections did not want to deprive anybody, no member of this house, of the rights and privileges they had before. The group which have now decided to follow the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) always had their seats in the house, and always had the opportunity of sitting here and enjoying the privilege of free speech.

The other day, I heard the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire), tell us: "The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson), has been pulling my coat long enough to make me sit down"; I might say, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Red Deer, with all his diplomacy and parliamentary poise, has endured the politicking of the hon. member for Lapointe long enough. I shall say in a few moments what I mean by that. I shall state later on what I wanted to say when I was speaking of poor Quebec and of the poor French Canadians.

What the newspapermen also forgot, when they spoke about those privileges, was to mention that hon. members who followed the representative of Villeneuve always had the right to speak in parliamentary committees. They also forgot something else: that those gentlemen, when they followed the hon. member for Red Deer, also had the right to go and represent Canada abroad, which the hon. member for Lapointe has been doing for the party two or three weeks in New York without being authorized by his party.

Now what does the hon. member for Lapointe want? The hon. member for Lapointe and his group are not clamouring for the privilege of free speech, because they always had it. They are not demanding the privilege of sitting in the house, because they always had it too. So what do they want?

The hon. member for Lapointe wants more than that. He and his group want all the privileges of a national party, organized on a national scale, which nominated candidates in the election under a national party label, and was elected.

When I hear the hon. member for Villeneuve state that the Ralliement des creditistes has been in existence since 1959, and that the national Social Credit association is not a party, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. member for Villeneuve the following question: If, since 1959, the hon. member for Villeneuve was leader of a party, the Ralliement des creditistes, what was he doing at the 1961 convention? Did he go there as the would-be leader of another party or of the Social Credit party?

As to the suave and admirable Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), we shall have to say something about him. The admirable and suave Leader of the Opposition has had great fun watching what is happening in the house. He enjoyed seeing the hon. member for Villeneuve and the hon. member for Red Deer sitting next to each other although they no longer belong to the same party.

I also would like to point out to the suave and admirable Leader of the Opposition that, when the hon. members for Red Deer and Villeneuve are sitting beside each other, they know who is their friend and who is their enemy.

I do not envy the position of the official Leader of the Opposition who, in his case, is sitting among 94 members who might want to chop him any minute.

The Leader of the Opposition is amused to see that there is some distress within our ranks and that a small party is torn by internal dissension. The Leader of the Opposition is making fun of the difficulties in our party and that helps him to hide is own troubles. Before a point of privilege is raised, I would like to explain what I mean. I simply want to say that when one's party is having trouble, it is much preferable to clean one's own house before butting one's nose into the neighbour's house.

The member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) moved an important amendment, and the Leader of the Opposition said: "Beware, hon. members on the treasury benches, because you hold the balance of power, and if you vote on the motion, you will be the ones to take the responsibility."

I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the opposition should be frightened, that its leader should tell the government to take its responsibilities when his own party, for the six years they were in office, refused to take any.

If, today, the government is told: "Beware, do not take your responsibilities", one is simply asking the party in office to do exactly like the people rejected not so long ago on April 8 last.

Mr. Ricard: Give us another turn at bat and you will see.

Mr. Girouard: Mr. Speaker, I was just coming to the most important point. It will serve as a reply to that: "Give us another turn at bat and you will see."

We heard, this afternoon, the member for Villeneuve talking of a bargain with the Liberals. It is funny, Mr. Speaker, to hear the words bargain, compromise, sell-out, in the mouth of the member for Villeneuve, while the members for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) and for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau), were calling me a "traitor". This word, in their mouths, had a familiar sound.

I am wondering, Mr. Speaker, whether the death of a man well known among us, Senator Drouin, gives the member for Villeneuve leave to talk of compromise, of bargains with the Liberals, of agreement—

[Mr. Girouard.]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege.

An hon. Member: Scratch and it will hurt.

Mr. Caouette: No, it does not hurt. I believe that Senator Drouin who died recently deserves our praise.

This is my point of privilege: When the hon. member for Labelle starts making innuendoes—I believe that the remarks he has just made are ill-advised—and, in my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Labelle should be asked to withdraw his remarks immediately, because I have not had anything to do with things like that and I never said that he had sold out to the Liberals. I never said that this afternoon.

Therefore, I ask the hon. member for Labelle to be at least honest and if he really feels he is intelligent, he should withdraw.

Mr. Girouard: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member for Villeneuve will tell me the words I should withdraw, it will be a pleasure for me to comply.

Mr. Caouette: The hon. member for Labelle talked about a compromise with Senator Drouin and he also claimed that I had said the hon. member, or some hon. members or the others like him had sold out to the Liberal party. I never said that.

Mr. Girouard: Mr. Speaker, if those are the two terms the hon. member for Villeneuve would like me to withdraw, I will do it gracefully.

Now, we are getting to the crux of the matter. For the last week, or 15 days or maybe the last three weeks, if you read all the papers or listen to the radio or watch television, you have heard the hon. members for Lapointe and Villeneuve talking about the poor French Canadians who have not been recognized in the house. I even heard the hon. member for Lapointe state: "If there had been only one English speaking member in our group, we would have been recognized."

Mr. Speaker, when I see the Caouettists play on nationalism or even racism on a mere question of privileges in this house—privileges they already enjoy, by the way—I must say: "Poor French Canadians".

When it was profitable to talk in Quebec about the union of electors, about the white berets, there was talk about the union of electors and about white berets. When it was profitable, in the province of Quebec, to talk about Social Credit, there was talk about Social Credit. When it was profitable, in the province of Quebec, to talk about the Ralliement des creditistes, there was talk about the Ralliement des creditistes. When it was profitable to talk about nationalism, there was talk about nationalism. And today, it seems more profitable to talk about separatism and there is talk about separatism. I will even go further, Mr. Speaker. If it seems profitable to go along with socialism, then they join with the "Ban the bombs" group and they organize a big demonstration. If, some day, it becomes more profitable to talk about communism, then I say: "Poor Quebec, poor French Canada."

Today, Mr. Speaker, the government certainly has to take some responsibilities, and so has the House of Commons. But I wish to say this: Decisions are always hard to take, and if the German democracy had taken its responsibilities in time, we would have avoided two world wars.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Lapointe jumps on his horse and starts talking about bilingualism and about the poor French Canadians. I should like to remind the house that no longer than a week ago, in the committee of privileges and elections, we witnessed a comedy. Here it is:

Mr. Chairman: Will you excuse me, Mr. Gregoire? Is there a translator here?
Mr. Robichaud (translator and interpreter): I am here.
Mr. Gregoire: I will translate.

After that, you will see the hon. member for Lapointe come into this house and say: Give us interpreters, the two nations must be put on the same footing.

I know that the two nations must be put on the same footing, and I myself want it, but I forbid any French Canadian to use undeserved titles to satisfy his political ambitions.

Mr. Speaker, let me quote from page 69 of the report of the committee on privileges and elections:

Notwithstanding the resolution passed on October 3 to the effect that English- and French-speaking reporters attend all regular meetings of the committee, it is now moved that we proceed for the time being without a French-speaking reporter.
Mr. Leboe: I so move, Mr. Chairman.

At that time, I asked the hon. member for Lapointe, in order to avoid any point of order, if he had any objection, so that the matter would not be raised later through the newspapers and the radio. Here is the answer of the hon. member for Lapointe:

The member for Labelle knows full well that if I have any objections to make I will make them, and if I do not make them, then...

Then, it is pressing, Mr. Speaker, to be recognized as a party. They do not care about bilingualism. What is urgent is not bilingualism, but to be recognized as a party. Then, they return in the province of Quebec and in my constituency, and they say: The poor French Canadians are ill-treated in Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker, I think the time has come to put an end to the situation. Moreover, I wish to state that the people who were present in the committee had convictions, and the proof is that several came and told me—and I pass on these remarks to the hon. member for Villeneuve, for whom I have nevertheless a certain admiration—that, had it not been for the cowardliness of the member for Lapointe —and I am in a position to prove it—the Caouette group would have had more chance to be considered.

I can assure you that had Voltaire been present, he would have come out of his grave upon hearing the statements of the hon. member for Lapointe.

An hon. Member: Henri Bourassa would not have done that.

Mr. Girouard: Someone mentioned Henri Bourassa. Well, I am going to speak about him. At the time when he was the Liberal member for Labelle, seeing that the Liberal party did not meet his own aspirations, he simply withdrew. He withdrew without claiming anything, without any privilege. And he fought till the end of his days for the French Canadian fact. That was Henri Bourassa.

When the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency decided there were certain things he could not accept in the Social Credit party, he withdrew as an Independent and asked no other privilege than to sit as a member in the house; and he obtained it.

Before concluding my remarks, may I be permitted to come back to the argument I put forward in the committee. Today I put the same question to the house. If a member of the Social Credit had withdrawn and claimed the privileges of a national party, it would have been a mockery. If only two members had withdrawn asking the house for privileges, once again, they would have been the laughing-stock of the house. If only three or four had withdrawn, then again, they would have been open to ridicule. Tell me, then, what is the difference if there are 13 members involved today in this matter? Does the number alter the situation?

May I recall a remark of the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Ouellet): "Mr. Girouard, I am glad that we are only 11 in the party because there is no room then for a betrayer."

Mr. Speaker, I agree that this is a matter for the party in power to decide. Well, here is what I say to the party in power: assume the responsibility. Time has come for Canada to have a government which accepts its responsibilities. Of course, the legislation may not be the best but, at least, we shall have a government which knows how to accept its responsibilities. Some people in the house will be dissatisfied with the decision taken whatever it may be. Whatever the solution is arrived at by the party in power, some will still be unhappy, since you cannot please everyone.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to conclude on this note in saying that, nowadays, if some members go around the province of Quebec trying to lead the Quebec French Canadians to believe that they have nobody in the house to support them I contend, as a Quebec French Canadian, that there are still some French Canadians in the house and that it is not with contention that someday we shall achieve unity between our two great nations but rather with kindness and charity.

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, as an independent member, I would like to express some independent ideas on the problem now before us, but I want, more particularly, to rise above every personal consideration and every political advantage from which a group in this house might benefit.

We are told that this is an important question, but I am not ready to admit that statement, only that it is a matter of consequence, which means that the decision taken today, or tomorrow, or in six months from now, will have repercussions in any future debate which might take place in the house if it had to face an identical issue.

We know that British procedure is based on a great number of precedents. This precedent, which might or might not be created here, will have extraordinary consequences in the future.

But I would like, here, to tell the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that I have as much admiration for him as all the others, and in this all hon. members in this house will support me, even if he said that some considered him a nuisance. As far as I am concerned, I do not think so. For, even if it might sometimes be said that our business has been to a certain extent delayed by his remarks, we recognize his integrity and ability.

Yet, I think that today—and, after all, he might make a mistake even after several years of parliamentary experience—he voiced somewhat dangerous implications in the house, when he suggested that the fact of not recognizing that new group would jeopardize democratic rights, and that it was an impingement on free speech.

Such a thing has never been considered.

The matter which the committee and the house have to decide, is not so much to know whether or not there should be deprivation of the right of speech, but to see whether the new party which has, as we know now, been formed following the last election is to be recognized or not.

As you realize, my argument is entirely above the parties or the persons concerned. This is a question of principle. And I would even say that if the division had decided that the group we still recognized as the Social Credit would include 15 members and the other group, nine members, there would be no more reason to recognize the new group than there is today. It is merely a question of parliamentary procedure, which is not written in the laws, which is written nowhere, but which has built up gradually through precedents over the years.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) stressed out the admiration he had for Sir Wilfrid Laurier and I suppose he has the same consideration for the right hon. Mr. King. And Mr. King himself said —I shall not quote his remarks word for word not to take too much of the time of the house—that he would not contribute in the house to the establishment of new parties because this would lead to anarchy.

As for democracy, it is something that is built up at the constituency level by the voters. We are elected by democratic procedure. And in the House of Commons, we must follow the regulations even if they are coercive.

I remember last year, when I was whip of the party, and I would meet with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre; in order to decide about the number of speakers that would take part in a debate, after consultation, we would agree on three Conservatives, two Liberals, one member of the New Democratic party and one Crediter. But, afterwards, if there was a change, nobody clamoured that his rights were flouted or that he had been deprived of his democratic rights. All followed or stuck to what had been agreed upon or set up in advance.

I should like to draw to the hon. members' attention the fact that the suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is very clever, most misleading—I do not mean like the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), especially, but most misleading.

The point is not to determine the privileges of the present members, but the privileges of a recognized group. It is known that there are privileges and concessions which are granted out of courtesy and not out of respect for democracy. The legislation which set them up is nothing other than precedents.

It is said that the government must take its responsibilities. That is another way of changing the subject. Those who have to take responsibilities are the members of parliament. Legislation is passed by parliament and not by the government. When the Conservatives had 208 members in the house, it was not the Conservative party or the government which passed the legislation, but parliament.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre suggested that parties are not mentioned anywhere in the election procedure. I imagine that this did not happen only in my own riding. But the hon. member is so well informed.

However, when I reported to the returning officer in my constituency, I had to state the name of the group for which I was running. I could have written Conservative, Liberal, N.D.P. or Social Credit. I would have to go and see the returning officer to see the form I filled out to indicate under what label I was running. I was running for the Social Credit party.

I must also say that the posters we affixed as long as we were allowed to do so, also had the name of the Social Credit party printed on them.

It does not follow that because a group with a provincial name joined a national group for the purpose of an election, should not be recognized as a national party. Nobody ever challenged this. It is for us to decide whether it is in the public interest and in the interest of the country's future to recognize any new party which has never been through a general election, not even a by-election.

In this connection, I shall recall the words of Mackenzie King who said following a by-election where one more member had been elected to parliament: "It is not because a candidate won a by-election that he should be recognized as a group." There is no reason for that. Precedents can be set and can become law as far as our procedure is concerned. If we make a decision that alters the meaning and the spirit of the previously established procedure, we shall create a precedent that others will put forward.

The Leader of the Opposition referred earlier to Mr. Manion who was elected to parliament, became party leader and was replaced by Mr. Hanson while still sitting in the house. This simply proves that the party had chosen a new leader, it does not prove that the new party leader was recognized or that this new member of parliament or this new leader had formed a new party.

Now, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre proceeded with his logical demonstration and he finally put the blame on the Liberals, whether the Liberals were to accept the committee's recommendations or not, while in the remainder of his speech he tried to prove that we were not members of a party, but rather individuals elected as such. I do not see why the responsibility should be taken from a party to be shifted upon a member, and then taken from a member to be thrown again upon a party.

I think the hon. member forgot what he had said previously in his speech when he came to that pathetic appeal, when he pleaded the cause of the Ralliement des creditistes.

Then, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to speak at too great length on the subject. As a French Canadian from the province of Quebec, I merely wanted to prove that regardless of parties, regardless of the motion, it is possible to calmly debate a subject of such importance which will be of such consequence.

I wish to associate myself with the words of the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Girouard) and say that I believe that I am a first class Canadian, a first class French Canadian. I also believe that I am a first class representative of the province of Quebec and I intend to work for the province of Quebec as much as for the remainder of the country, because I consider that I am part of a whole and that I am also part of another whole as far as the province of Quebec is concerned.

I wish everyone to know and especially that it appear in Hansard that it is not because we are logical with ourselves that we should be considered as traitors, or as abdicators or as renegades or as those who give up their own nationality to gather around racists. No.

The arguments which I put forth, because I am alone, and I think it is the first time that I have the honour of speaking on behalf of my party, are merely intended to bring back the debate on a logical basis.

And what will happen in the province of Quebec where newspapermen still wish to grant recognition to the Ralliement des creditistes not in a spirit of justice, but to be in a better position to demolish them? Even if these people try to put forward some arguments in favour of the recognition of a fourth party, in my opinion, we should not care, because there will certainly be some consequences, in one way or another, in all constituencies and even outside Quebec.

Consequently, let us assume our responsibilities and let us limit ourselves to the consideration of the present problem and not of another completely different one. We should not be afraid. The members of the government side and those of the official opposition should make their own decisions and vote freely. In my opinion, nothing can stand in the way of such a position, if we really want to settle this problem in a democratic way.

Mr. Speaker, before closing, I wish to deal with another matter.

This afternoon, reference was made to the years 1891, 1910 and 1911. May I recall to the house that at that time there were no microphones or loud-speakers and I wonder if the members would readily give up the microphones and the loud-speakers, simply because at the time of Laurier, Manion and others, they were in existence. Certainly, this does not allow us to say that, inasmuch as in the past certain parliamentary procedures were accepted, it follows that they must be accepted today.

Now, I will point out that those remarks were completely out of order, because it was a discussion on parliamentary procedure of that time instead of a debate on the matter now before us.

Mr. Speaker, I ask every member to take his responsibilities, to analyse the problem in its proper perspective and to answer the question asked by Mr. Speaker, that is, to submit that problem to the committee on privileges and elections.

Mr. Gerard Perron (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I would not want the house to get the impression that, if I make a speech now, it is apparently to protect the hon. member who, a while ago, refused to accept the challenge contained in the question of privilege raised by our leader, the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette). However, before going into the heart of the matter, I have a few comments to make, following which I hope we shall be able to resume the discussion while putting aside all political partisanship.

Some of our friends opposite seemed to attach a lot of importance to tradition and brought out the historical argument that we should not forget that the step the house was about to take was of the utmost importance for the future.

Mr. Speaker, in the early part of the present session, time and time again, we offered suggestions for the revision of our parliamentary procedure, and I think we all agree that such a revision is necessary.

I also believe that perhaps we should stop considering only tradition when the time has come to defend a cause. It seems to me we should turn our eyes toward the future. And I say to my hon. friends opposite as well as to those on this side of the house that the political future of our country should be regarded not as something to be taken for granted but as something to be looked after now.

The fact is that, in accord with democratic procedure, the Canadian people send representatives to this house at the national election. At that time, only the names of the candidates appear on the ballots; no mention is made of party allegiance.

And if we cast a glance at the future of our country, I feel we must cease giving so much importance to this tradition or to this two-party system. The existence of a political group such as the New Democratic party or the Creditistes should be recognized as an actual fact.

After all, whether we be Liberal, Conservative, Social Crediters or members of the New Democratic party, are we not the elected representatives of the Canadian people in this house?

By the way, it is probably with such a vision of the future that on the 28th of June last, Bill No. C-91 was introduced, tending to the recognition as a group in this house of a party of 12 members in the House of Commons under the direction of a leader recognized as such by them.

Mr. Speaker, one seems to be bound by tradition when one finds it suitable, otherwise one does not think of it any more.

The hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Marcoux) said earlier in his remarks that we should uphold tradition. But, at the end of his speech, he is not interested in it any longer.

He gave as an example simultaneous interpretation and asked hon. members whether they would prefer to go back to the old days and have the interpretation system abolished. Yet, he himself had suggested a little earlier that we go back. I wonder, then, whether he was not contradicting himself.

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should just like to point out to the hon. member for Beauce that I was not referring to the system of simultaneous interpretation but to loud-speakers and microphones.

Mr. Perron: As for the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Girouard) he did nothing but whine. I could not quite make out what he wanted to say.

Since he has good friends on this side of the house, I was wondering whether he was not turning his back on those who were his friends until lately.

The hon. member for Labelle should remember that he represents the riding that sent Henri Bourassa to the House of Commons.

Moreover, not so long ago, that constituency was represented by an independent who was a member of a fairly nationalist group.

Mr. Speaker, hon. members should not imagine that nationalism is the only thing we think about. On the contrary, we think as Canadians. And to refute an argument that was raised this afternoon to the effect that our group consists only of members from the province of Quebec, I would ask: Is the province of Quebec not part of confederation? Is the province of Quebec not part of the Canadian nation?

As members of the federal parliament, we have a right to speak for the people, to be respected and to account for our mandate to our constituents.

Mr. Speaker, by means of arguments which I would call absurd, the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Chapdelaine) has tried to illustrate the nonsense of the situation with which we are faced today. But I wonder what would be the issue if he and all the supporters of the hon. member for Red Deer who were elected with the help of the Ralliement des creditistes went before the electorate.

Mr. Speaker, anyone wishing to know anything about the Ralliement des creditistes only has to refer to the records of the returning officer for each riding or those of the chief electoral officer and he will see all the receipts for expenses made during the general election of June 18, 1962, and that of April 8, 1963. Official receipts, signed by an officer of the Ralliement des creditistes will be also found, accounting for all election expenses incurred in any county in the province of Quebec.

Besides, a simple check with television stations will show what programs were reserved and paid for by the Ralliement des creditistes.

Therefore, we are compelled to admit that we have been elected in our respective counties, under the name of candidates or members of the Ralliement des creditistes, even if the name of a party did not appear on each ballot.

To say that we act in bad faith and under false pretences is wrong. In fact, in my county I am known as the member of the Ralliement des creditistes, during election time as well as afterwards.

I feel it is my duty—as it is the duty of any member in this house—to be a true representative of the people, and to make their wishes heard from one end of the country to the other.

Mr. Speaker, it has even been said that we are separatists. We are simply striving to defend the rights of Canadians, of all Canadians, and we are known as Canadians throughout the country.

Mr. Speaker, it is indeed very strange that after some speeches we have heard here, the press has followed suit, and spoken of a split in our party. A year ago everybody seemed to be waiting just for that. People were wondering who would come first, the member for Villeneuve, with his 26 followers from the province of Quebec, or the member for Red Deer and his three members from the west?

Everybody was hoping for a split. When it became obvious that we were taking a firm stand, because we could see eye to eye on certain points of organization, or on a few basic tenets, people started to lament and seem to listen more willingly to the whining we heard a moment ago, to the effect that we are divided.

If we are divided, I feel that in view of the principles of democracy, it does not belong to political opponents or to those who are sitting on the house committee and who act as witnesses and judges to make decision.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that we are answerable to our constituents. Thus, I believe that we should forget all partisan politics and consider the political action taken as far as legality is concerned. Then, let us restrict our discussion to legality under Bill C-91 which was passed on July 26 last and which, for the first time in Canada, defines what a parliamentary group is entitled to in the House of Commons, that is a group comprising 12 persons is entitled to have a leader recognized by parliament.

If we want to base our judgment on that, I believe that we will very soon find a solution, while it will be the opposite if we start entertaining all sorts of considerations and if we consider traditions.

In addition to legality, let us also examine the issue in terms of the future. It is good to examine the past, but we must also face the future.

As I said at the beginning, if the two-party system is a thing of the past, I still believe that we should look to the future so as to find ways to establish a political continuity in this house. If the continuity in the house is to be ensured according to standards of democracy, I believe that it is time for us to recognize the rights and privileges of other parties in the house, as defined by Bill C-91.

The two-party system has prevailed here since 1867, this I will grant. Through the operation of that system, the ball was tossed back and forth and the parties were charging each other with all sorts of things, and the same charges were picked up by the official opposition when it was its turn to act in that capacity, and when it had a chance to get back into office, it was the target for the charges levelled at them by the party which had moved across the floor to make up the official opposition.

Six months ago, charges were simply displaced by a change in the seating arrangement in the house.

The two-party policy has come to an end in Canada. Let us now look at the political future of this country from another angle. The parliamentary policy of the house is not unknown to the community.

Last autumn, when the session started on September 27, 1962, all political groups advocated a revision of the rules dealing with parliamentary procedure. Let us therefore recognize the groups representing the voice of the people in this house: those groups are certainly entitled to a better future, that of a party or group which can vote, or if it wants to do so, impede the progress of public business in the house.

Parliamentary procedure to be approved today should be considered in this light. We are living in the twentieth century. Different ideologies are abroad in the world.

Let us admit in this house the voice of the people who have the right to be heard through their representatives, in order to attain a continuity of economic and parliamentary thinking in Canada. We should try to reach this aim and proceed with a full revision of our standing orders.

I therefore ask for a recognition based on justice and legal order, as defined in Bill C-91, which was approved by hon. members.

On that basis let us give relief to those who ask for justice, and let us stop talking about a thousand and one things except the problem which is now pointing towards the future and has to be considered carefully tonight, before taking the step which will definitely ratify the recognition of a group in this house, even if at this time that group is only represented by 13 members from the province of Quebec.

If we wish to keep the province of Quebec within the frame of confederation, Mr. Speaker, I think we should all unite more than ever and look towards the future in the hope of securing a revision of the rules and regulations of the house which would recognize the wishes of the people through the instrumentation of the various groups in the House of Commons. Whatever their position, these groups deserve and demand recognition. They base their claims upon Bill No. C-91, under the terms of which they demand justice based upon logic.

Mr. John N. Turner (St. Lawrence-St. George): Mr. Speaker, we address ourselves on this side of the house to the motion before the house arising out of the report of the committee, not in the emotional terms in which, quite understandably, those who are parties to the dispute have spoken, but as members of a jury that was constituted by the Speaker of this house to decide a question which was perhaps without precedent in the modern annals of parliament, either here or at Westminster.

Mr. Gregoire: Come to the point.

Mr. Turner: I will get down to that, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member for Lapointe will contain himself for a moment, I will analyse just what the question was. Since he has been holding himself in reverse—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Turner: —in reserve, and perhaps in reverse. Perhaps we will have an opportunity of hearing from him at a later date.

An hon. Member: A later date?

Mr. Turner: Perhaps even this evening. In any event, the committee decided in the terms referred to it by the Speaker. Perhaps I might just for a moment refer to those terms. Referring to Hansard for September 30, the Speaker in posing the questions which the committee had to consider said this, as reported at page 3007:

> Have we a new party according to this new definition and, if so, has this party been recognized by the house? To my mind this is a question for the house to decide.

Then at page 3008 he says this:

> It is my duty, I believe, to bring to the attention of the house the novel character of the situation now before it, and more particularly the payment of allowances and the effect on the organization of parliament and parties and of the work of this house that naturally must be reflected by the emergence from time to time of new groups that invite the house to accord them the status of parties.

He goes on to say this:

> Profound constitutional questions arise; for example, can a group of members which did not exist as a party at the time of the election of a parliament be recognized as a party before it has submitted itself to the electorate?

That was the question referred by the Chair to the committee and to this house to decide. It is not merely a question of seating, if I might say so with the greatest respect to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles); it is not merely a question of the physical arrangements of this house. If I might eliminate two issues at the outset from the crucial question before the house, I would say this. First of all the question of who gets the $4,000 payable to a leader of a party having at least 12 members, under the recent amendment to the Senate and House of Commons Act, is not a question that could properly be decided by either the committee or this house, and I think on that point all members of the committee were in agreement. In other words, this is a public statute; this is a statute that has to be followed by the comptroller of the treasury, and the comptroller of the treasury may of course refer the matter to the Deputy Minister of Justice. In any event, the matter of the $4,000 additional allowance is not a question before the committee or the house at this time.

As for the seating, the physical arrangements in the house, this goes merely to the physical arrangements and it is not and should not be interrelated with the question of status or privileges to be conceded, or allowed, or granted to a new group in this house. The committee's report as submitted to the house does not decide whether the privileges of the house—that is to say, the privileges with regard to debate, orders of the day, or motions—are to be given to a new group. It merely recognizes that as a physical fact there is an independent group, independent of the existing Social Credit party, and for that reason it would be better for the good order of the house to seat them separately. It does not prejudge the case of whether the 13 members who left the Social Credit party proper are independents, or are necessarily a new group for the purpose of recognition by the house.

The main issue still before the committee and this house is, shall this new group of 13 independents, or 13 followers of the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) be recognized as eligible for the privileges of the house? Within that context let us examine just what the committee did. First of all, it decided the seating arrangement as between the three smaller groups—the New Democratic party, the Social Credit party and the Ralliement des creditistes, or followers of the hon. member for Villeneuve. The committee had a straight choice. It could have chosen to seat those three groups either in order of numerical preference, or in order of seniority or historical precedence. The committee chose to report to this house that they be seated in order of historical precedence.

Mr. Nielsen: "Hysterical precedence".

Mr. Turner: Well, there is something to be said for what the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) says; but after all we are acting as a jury and not necessarily as parties to the dispute.

On the question whether the committee should have chosen numerical preference or historical precedence, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre recognized before the committee itself that, whichever way the committee decided, this would be an arbitrary decision and equally supported by precedent. As reported on page 28 of the transcript of the committee's evidence he said:

> As I say, this committee, and in turn the House of Commons when it receives our report, have these two types of precedents, one, that history and seniority of groups, which was followed in 1935 and in 1940, is the proper precedent, and two, numerical strength of the groups, as was followed in 1962 and 1963, is the precedent to be followed. The committee can decide either way.

In other words, there is nothing sacrosanct about either the way the committee reported to the house or, with the greatest respect, about the way the amendment is phrased.

Mr. Knowles: The committee decided both ways.

Mr. Turner: If I may address myself to the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, the committee did not, with respect, decide both ways. It gave historical precedence, first of all, to the oldest of the three groups recognized in the house. Again, if I may use the words of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, as he is reported on page 27 of the evidence:

> Our party was the oldest party and the members were the oldest members—

So therefore, even in the situation which arose in 1940 the C.C.F. party was the older party.

Mr. Gregoire: Would the hon. member permit a question? How does he judge which has seniority?

Mr. Turner: The hon. member for Lapointe asks me how we judge seniority, or historical precedence. I think that history speaks for itself. The N.D.P. party, or the C.C.F. party as it once was, is the oldest party of the group, in terms of recognition in this house; the Social Credit party is the second oldest and the Ralliement des creditistes is a new phenomenon. I think it is quite consistent with the facts that this report was based on historical precedence. In this regard I refer to no better authority than the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, as reported at page 27 of the committee's evidence.

Mr. Knowles: Would the hon. member permit a question? Does he mean by what he is saying that the New Democratic party should have been seated above the Social Credit party at the beginning of this parliament?

Mr. Turner: I might say in answer to that question that the hon. member himself said in the committee that it is an arbitrary decision, but either is a defensible one. Each is as justifiable as the other. If my hon. friend for Winnipeg North Centre is introducing an amendment based on numerical preference, I say that the committee in its majority judgment decided that the fairer way to do this, in the circumstances of the situation, a situation where we have a recent breakaway group, was to choose historical precedence or seniority before this house as a legitimate, fair and reasonable way of seating the three groups in question.

It is quite understandable, Mr. Speaker, why the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre takes such a flexible position, because for him and his party it is "Heads I win, tails you lose", either on historical precedence or numerical preference, in the light of this situation. With the whole range of facts before this house neither he nor his party could lose.

In other words, there has been no breach of principle as alleged by the parties opposite. The committee was entitled in its good judgment, after reviewing all the facts, to choose either of two sets of precedents before the house, and as a matter of fact it chose the precedent having the longest validity in this House of Commons and indeed in the house at Westminster.

There is some danger in following the amendment suggested and moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. If we were to rely on numerical strength only, with the present strength of adhesion of the two groups to the dispute, namely Social Credit and Ralliement des creditistes, we do not know whether we would be playing a game of musical chairs, because we do not know how long the adhesive tape would hold.

Mr. Caouette: Why don't you do some counting?

Mr. Turner: The hon. member for Villeneuve says "do some counting". They are 13, which reminds me of a pack of cards—four suits, 52 cards in all. Perhaps the present alignment is just as solid as a pack of cards.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, is the hon. member saying that we are not 13, or that he is going to decide how many we are in our group?

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, the house has not decided whether this 13 is a group of 13 independents, or whether it is a new group, and the only reason I mentioned the number 13 was that it reminded me of a suit in a deck of cards, with the same type of solidarity.

[Translation]

Mr. Plourde: Would the hon. member allow me a question?

[Text]

Mr. Turner: No, Mr. Speaker, rather than answer any more questions I would rather go on and develop my argument; if there is time left I will answer any questions at the end.

Let us now leave the question of seating as decided by the committee. I submit that the decision was made within the principle of historical precedence in this house, and is fully justifiable and defensible on that ground. On the question of the privileges and status which should or should not be accorded to the 13 members following the hon. member for Villeneuve, this depends on whether this house is going to recognize this new group for the purpose of according it the privileges of this house. It is not merely a question of fact. It is not a question of whether there are 13 members or whether they profess loyalty to the hon. member for Villeneuve. Neither is it a question whether it is a new group. The question is: Is this group such that this house should at this moment give recognition to it for the purposes of the procedure of this House of Commons? It is not, as I say, just a question of fact; it is a question of recognition by this house.

Mr. Gregoire: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, I would prefer—

Mr. Gregoire: It is just a simple question.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, in all fairness I think I have been generous already in diluting my time for the benefit of questioners. If there is any time left later on I will be glad to submit to the interrogation of the hon. member for Lapointe.

Now, Mr. Speaker, looking at this question of recognition for the purposes of the procedure of this house, this has serious implications. This is why the question was worthy of being submitted to parliamentary counsel for the advice and guidance of Your Honour. Why do I say it has serious implications? First of all, there is the danger that recognition of these 13 members as a new group would contribute to the eventual fragmentation of this house. Many commentators in newspapers have said: Give them their way; recognize them, and get on with the business of the house. But the committee feared that to do so would be to open the door to the kind of splintering of parliament which destroyed the parliament of France under the third and fourth republics.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Turner: I hear groans from the smaller parties. But that is a type of special pleading. We are thinking, now, in terms of upholding the traditions which make for the responsible working of parliament. If the committee and the house were to give recognition to a group which has not received recognition by the electorate as being a group we would, I believe, be creating a precedent which would have dire results. There is nothing in the traditions, precedents or conventions of this house which demands that you, Mr. Speaker, should recognize the formation of new political parties or groups, or that you should accept breakaways from political parties already in existence during the life of a current parliament. Only the people can create a party; and until the people have recognized, in an election, the existence of this new grouping I think it is within the rights of the committee and of the house to refuse to grant recognition.

Mr. Winkler: Would the hon. member permit a brief question?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has been generous in replying to questions but he is entitled to make his argument in silence, I think.

Mr. Turner: I am flattered that I have provoked a question from the chief whip of the official opposition, but perhaps it can be allowed to wait until later.

The second reason which was certainly in the minds of the committee, or of those on this side who voted in favour of the committee's report, was that the nature of the new group was not sufficiently clear. It was not certain, on the basis of the evidence given by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) whether we were dealing with a new party or an old party under new leadership, or—

Mr. Gregoire: On a question of privilege; everything which was said in front of the committee on privileges and elections is written here. If the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George wishes to quote what was said, well and good. I wish to draw attention, in front of the hon. member, to what appears on page—

Mr. Speaker: An opportunity will be given to the hon. member for Lapointe to speak later on. There is no question of privilege. The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George has the floor.

Mr. Turner: I have the actual words here and the hon. member will have a chance to make his own case in due course. However, I think that after a fair reading of the replies the hon. member gave to questions which I and others put to him in the committee it will be apparent that it is not clear what position the new grouping was taking, nor was it clear from the documentation we had whether we were dealing with a national party or a provincial party. In these circumstances the committee did not feel a case had been properly made out by the new grouping under the leadership of the hon. member for Villeneuve.

The third question the committee considered, when it made the recommendation it did, was whether a group of members splitting off from an old party could receive recognition before the people themselves, from whom all power flows, had recognized the new grouping. This was of such importance that the committee decided to defer the question to parliamentary counsel. The evidence in this respect was clear. The group under the leadership of the hon. member for Villeneuve had not fought an election as a separate group. The election was fought under the leadership of the hon. member for Red Deer. There was no national convention launching a new party. These were the facts which were presented to the committee. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said in the committee that the people should decide and, within those limits, I agree. Before the committee or before this house can decide whether there is a new party, the people must decide.

Mr. Caouette: On a question of privilege. When the hon. member says we were not elected under the label "Ralliement des creditistes", he is wrong. We had conventions which were absolutely legal, and we were elected following those conventions.

Mr. Turner: Obviously, I have not the time in which to reply to all the interventions which, somehow, I am provoking from the other side. I ask all hon. members to read the evidence which was presented in the committee and to draw their own conclusions.

The Leader of the Opposition had something to say about this question this afternoon. He said, first of all, that the committee refused to face the issue. Let me say, in answer to that, that the committee did reach a decision, despite the fact that the party which the right hon. gentleman leads wanted to avoid the issue. I could quote from page 82 of the transcript of evidence before the committee. The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) had this to say:

> All I can see is internal strife within a political party and as such it is something which this committee should not meddle with and indeed, I doubt whether it has the power to do so.

In other words, the position taken by the Conservative party was that the matter should be sent back to the Speaker, with no action being taken whatsoever. The Leader of the Opposition quoted the famous maxim of Voltaire when he said: I do not agree with a word that you say, but I will defend to the death your right to say it. The answer to this, with the greatest respect, is that there is here no infringement of the right to speak of any member of parliament. The right of individual members to speak is untrammelled and unfettered. It is as great as it has always been. In any case it would take more than the rules of the House of Commons to silence either the hon. member for Villeneuve or the hon. member for Lapointe. The only restriction which is involved in the committee's decision is that the right to recognize certain hon. members as a group is, for the moment, limited. The learned Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) referred to the precedent of a member of a major party crossing the floor to another major party as a precedent for recognition of this kind. With the greatest respect, that has no validity whatsoever in regard to the present argument, because one party is already recognized, as is the other. The question here is: Is a party to have recognition; not whether we are to recognize a switch from one recognized party to another recognized party.

The question before the house is, should we give in to a new grouping just because we are threatened with filibusters, just because the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) threatens that he may pull his party out of confederation. I do not think so. If they are responsible members of the house I believe they will accept with good grace the decision of the majority of the house, within the traditions and privileges of the house.

Mr. Caouette: Which majority?

[Translation]

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, members of the Ralliement des creditistes claimed to be the voice of French Canada. With all due respect, I must tell them that they do not have a monopoly in that respect, because seven of their colleagues have chosen to follow the member for Red Deer.

Besides, our group has about 40 French speaking members who represent the basic common sense of the province of Quebec. Even the Conservatives have good members from Quebec, even though I must say they do not deserve them.

Consequently, I feel the Ralliement des creditistes has no monopoly in this respect.

[Text]

May I just say this in conclusion. As put so ably by the hon. member for Brant-Haldiman (Mr. Pennell), the committee's decision is open to these questions in the House of Commons this evening. Is it against the traditions of the house in Ottawa or Westminster? I think the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand proved conclusively that it is not. We have reached a decision with regard to seniority as to seating that is well within the precedents of the House of Commons. Is it discrimination against the province of Quebec? There is no discrimination whatsoever. Surely any decision made within the traditions of the House of Commons cannot be labelled discrimination against a recently constituted group.

In summary may I say that, within the realm of common sense and based on the evidence and facts presented to the committee, the committee in its best judgment tried to evaluate the matter within the limits of the traditions and the conventions of the House of Commons, and therefore I would urge members of the house to accept the report of the committee.

Mr. Speaker: I think it is obvious that the member who has just spoken made a very stimulating speech because there are at least five members who want to question him. I will not take them in order of precedence but rather I will take the member closest to the Chair first, the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am wondering whether the house is in committee or whether we are carrying on an orderly debate here.

Mr. Martineau: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, you have allowed the question and it is up to the hon. member if he wants to answer it. Would the hon. member accept a question?

Mr. Turner: Surely.

Mr. Martineau: I just want to know whether the hon. member was speaking on behalf of the government and on behalf of his party when he stated his position?

Mr. Turner: In answer to that, may I say the hon. member knows full well that I was a member of the committee. He also knows full well that I voted in favour of the majority report of that committee. I have spoken justifying the reasonableness and good sense of that report.

Mr. Winkler: I should like to ask the hon. member a question arising out of his remarks this evening. Does he really believe that his party has any regard for members of the House of Commons other than those of his own party? As he developed his remarks I must admit I became confused. I did not know whether he wanted to become a Thompsonite or a Caouetteist.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, I have been asked whether as a member of the Liberal party I have respect for other members of the House of Commons. In answer may I say I have so much respect for the members of the House of Commons that I want the traditions of the house preserved.

Mr. Winkler: You did not show it tonight.

[Translation]

Mr. Lucien Plourde (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Turner) a question, because I cannot follow his argument.

We, of the official Social Credit party, claim to have kept the Social Credit label.

There are 13 of us. I do not see how they can claim seniority since the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) was elected in 1946 and did sit in the house from 1946 to 1949. They base their claim to seniority on the fact that the Thompson group had only three members elected in 1957.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, when I made that reference to the matter of group seniority, I expressed the opinion that in that sense, the new group under the leadership of the hon. member for Villeneuve was a holiday product.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George? Does he know of any previous occasion in the history of the Canadian parliament when the status of a political party in the House of Commons was determined by a vote of the majority of the members? If not, does he not think it would be wise to stick with the tradition of parties speaking for themselves, and the house confining itself to seating arrangements?

Mr. Turner: I would say in answer to that question that the house was charged by the Speaker with arriving at a decision. The type of decision may have been without precedent in the house, but we had to rely on what precedents there were in arriving at a decision for the benefit of the Speaker, and to the best of our judgment we came within the precedents that were available to us.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question. I think the hon. member still has time and would not mind another question. Does this not put the majority of the members of the house in the position of deciding, for the first time in our history, that certain parties are recognized as official and another one is not? Does that not put the majority in the position of deciding between first class and second class parties?

Mr. Turner: Surely the house is master of its own rules and if from time to time, short of unanimity, matters have to be decided by a majority decision under those rules, then I feel that is the way it has to be. Surely many precedents have been set by majority decision when a matter has been decided by way of an appeal from a ruling of the Speaker.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Lloyd: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do think the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George has submitted to quite a series of questions. After all this is a debate on a motion, not a debate in committee. If he wishes to answer questions, that is up to him, but I do think we are pressing the issue rather far.

Mr. Gregoire: I should like to ask the hon. member—

Mr. Lloyd: A question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, if I may have your attention. There has been a great deal said about privilege from a relatively narrow part of Canada. I should like the questions to end, so some thoughts might perhaps be expressed from the maritime provinces, if you so permit.

Mr. Speaker: Is there any hon. member in the house who wishes to speak now?

Mr. Richard Cashin (St. John's West): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Earlier in the day it was my intention to enter this debate and say a few words. However, after listening to the fine speeches delivered by my two colleagues, the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Turner) and the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand (Mr. Pennell), I decided there was nothing left for me to say.

Some hon. Members: Hurrah.

Mr. Cashin: Fortunately, Mr. Speaker, such is not the case. This afternoon the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre proceeded to give his hit parade list of certain members he liked. He also seemed to question whether or not he was liked by the other members. I should like to assure him that I think he is not really a bad guy. This seemed to bother him, and he seemed to feel he no longer belonged or was wanted. I would not want him to have this feeling because, after all, it is a dangerous thing when people begin to wonder whether they are really wanted. None of us would want anything to happen to our good friend from Winnipeg North Centre.

The hon. member said he was making his stand on principle. I do not know that he had to say this. However, when he did say it, two questions crossed my mind. First, was this something new and, second, did he imply that those who did not agree with him were not motivated by principle? Well, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the doing of things on the basis of principle or in the right way is not the sole prerogative of any one group or any one individual. I feel strongly, on the basis of principle, that the decision taken by this committee was the right one. As I tried to understand the feeling of the people on this subject, judging from the mail I received it seemed to me that there was a body of opinion that seemed to say: Recognize this group; give them what they want for the sake of peace. This seems to me to be a very poor reason for doing something in a particular fashion.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, in his questioning of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, was begging the question. Had the decision been to seat the group under the leadership of the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) ahead of the group under the leadership of the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson), then the argument could have been made just as easily from the same quarter of this house that that was the wrong decision. As was pointed out, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre himself said in the committee that there were two courses of action. As I was looking for some leadership on this problem, I was listening to him closely. He seemed to indicate that we could decide either way. If there was a good basis for making the decision either way, what then is an individual member of the committee or of parliament to do? How are you going to vote if there are two courses of action, both of which are based on precedents? How do you arrive at the right decision? We have to decide which is the better precedent. Perhaps other hon. members in the house will disagree with my view, but surely the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre will not deny me the right to express it, and I say that I fear what has happened in this regrettable situation may have some disastrous effect on future parliaments. It seems to me that the decision made now should be made with some thought as to its effect on subsequent parliaments.

Accordingly, there seems to me to be a difference. I can see a genuine distinction which perhaps others cannot see. I see a distinction in respect of a group that has candidates in every part of this country who are elected to the house under a common banner, under a common leadership, who come into this house and sit as a group elected by voters who knew they would sit as a group, and who knew they would have this man as leader. I think there is a difference between this situation and this new phenomena in which parties or groups within the House of Commons break into small groups. I think there is a distinction here. I think the precedent of recognizing the senior parties was a wise one. Accordingly, I should like to see the house adopt this report.

Before I conclude, I should like to say this. I suppose there will continue to be those who rise and say: We do this on principle. This practice seems to have been going on for the 90-odd years of confederation, and if confederation lasts another 90 years it will continue. However, let us not forget that two men can do directly opposing things and actually believe that they are motivated by principle. Let us not get to the stage where members of parliament seem to be insinuating that they alone act on the basis of principle. I think this is a dangerous state of mind and a dangerous thing for the country.

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbiniere): Mr. Speaker, in all objectivity and serenity, I should like to explain the reasons why, in my view, the "Caouetteist" group should not be recognized as an official party in the house.

Mr. Gregoire: Have you decided that all by yourself?

Mr. Choquette: Yes, I can understand very well why the hon. members for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) and Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) are desperate at this point—they feel that the Socred circus is coming to an end.

Mr. Gregoire: You should know all about the circus. You had one going in Lotbiniere.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, the main reasons why I think that group should not be recognized are the following: our ears are still buzzing with the voluble speeches by the hon. member for Villeneuve when he spoke on television to the auditors in the province of Quebec and it should be noted that I do not want to launch an abusive and violent speech against the hon. member for Villeneuve. I see in him a French speaking Quebec member of everlasting courage and dauntless energy. He often impresses us but, in my opinion, not enough to be entitled to bear the title of leader of a party in the house. When he campaigned in 1962 and 1963, he never stopped saying that Social Credit would come to power in Canada. Consequently, he wanted to give to his group, to his party, not a provincial dimension but really a national dimension.

An hon. Member: He was mistaken.

Mr. Choquette: And the member for Villeneuve, as well as his followers, have always asserted, it was thanks to a Social Credit administration if the province of Alberta had no debt whatsoever. He proclaimed that British Columbia had a marvellous administration. He said that the Canadian population was impressed by those Social Credit administrations. He advocated a Social Credit government to direct Canada's fortunes. Consequently, he intended to sit here in the house as a member of a national party. There was never any mention of the provincial Ralliement des creditistes.

This is an important point which must be pointed out. I claim that the 571,333 electors, to repeat the figure quoted by the member for Villeneuve, who placed their trust in Social Credit in the province of Quebec, did so in the hope that this party could form a national government. But today, the population of Quebec knows that Social Credit could never form a national government, for Social Crediters are no longer trusted by the population and another election would prove it. In fact they will all be defeated in the next election.

Mr. Caouette: Are the Liberals so much stronger in Quebec now?

Mr. Gregoire: Call an election.

Mr. Choquette: We are ready any time.

Mr. Caouette: Enough of this idle talk. Call an election.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, to give you a small sample of what would happen if an election were held, the standard bearer of the hon. members for Villeneuve and Lapointe, in Lotbiniere, lost his deposit in the last election and the Social Credit candidates will do the same in the next one.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, I would beg you to please ask the hon. member to stick to the question now before us because, at the present time, he is just playing petty politics. It is not a matter of politics, it is a matter of justice.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is accusing me of playing petty politics. Looking at him makes me want to try and play big politics.

I had sincerely decided to remain as calm and serene as necessary during my speech, but I see that my opponents are so hot-tempered, because they can anticipate that their end is close at hand, and they lead us against our will into a violent debate.

Another reason I should like to bring up to explain why I am against the party led by the member for Villeneuve being recognized officially in this house is that, in the province of Quebec, there exists a particular psychological context. The hon. member for Villeneuve is attempting now—and in this I shall agree with part of the argument raised by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Girouard) and the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Turner)—to be recognized as the sole defender of Quebec interests in this house.

The hon. member for Villeneuve cannot succeed in doing it, because during a meeting in Quebec East constituency he stated before 500 people—

Mr. Gregoire: 1,500 people.

Mr. Choquette: This exaggeration is so typical of the member for Lapointe—he cried out with all his might that, if the problem of his group is not solved, he will withdraw from confederation. Now, I maintain that a member saying such things is a bad Canadian.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of privilege. I never said in Quebec or elsewhere what the hon. member for Lotbiniere just mentioned. I never said in Quebec or elsewhere that we would secede from confederation. I never made any statement to the effect that I was a separatist.

On the contrary, I have always expressed the opinion that confederation could survive providing that the two major groups in the country show understanding and mutual agreement. Nothing else.

Mr. Choquette: There again, this statement from the member for Villeneuve is a clear indication of his character. He never admits what he said and, when he does, it is because he does not realize it.

Mr. Speaker, I will never forget that during the last electoral campaign, while the hon. member for Villeneuve claimed that he had never promised a national dividend, we just had to refer to Hansard—I could not tell the page number from memory—to notice that he had, in fact, promised it.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. What the hon. member for Lotbiniere just suggested is wrong again. He is going far afield and I would suggest to him to revert to the matter under consideration.

Mr. Gregoire: And to be just a little more serious, Mr. Speaker, nothing else.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, I must apologize for having departed from the matter under discussion. But allow me to point out that the hon. member for Villeneuve is to blame because he can never stick to a point himself.

Mr. Dupuis: Nor to a party.

Mr. Choquette: As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, the problem to be solved is simply one of internal strife within a political party.

In his speech, this afternoon, the hon. member for Villeneuve stated: "Do us justice, it is your responsibility to settle our case, it is not our fault if we have to assume the responsibilities of the house".

We are not responsible for the split in his party or his difference with his leader the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson). I ask the hon. member for Villeneuve to be fair and recognize that his ill will is to blame here.

You have noted that he will never admit that someone else may be right. I have mentioned two points that everyone has been hearing across Canada.

Mr. Caouette: That is not true.

Mr. Choquette: Then, the second reason for not granting official recognition to that group is that it is a matter of internal strife and it lies with them and not with the house to settle it.

Mr. Gregoire: May I ask a very simple question?

Mr. Choquette: I shall finish my remarks, Mr. Speaker, because if the hon. member for Lapointe gets permission to put a question, he will follow with a supplementary question and there will be no end to that.

Mr. Gregoire: Only one.

Mr. Choquette: Then it is all right.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, here is my question. Since I admit that the suggestion of the hon. member for Lotbiniere is reasonable, when he says that we should settle this matter ourselves, would he agree that only Social Credit members should vote on the motion respecting the adoption of the committee's report? Would he agree to that?

Mr. Choquette: The house, to whom a problem has been submitted, is asked to authorize a political party to settle the problem. This is undemocratic and there is danger, as was pointed out by our good friends, that the Caouetteist movement being recognized, we will have within one or two months, a Gregorian group. And we should not forget, Mr. Speaker, that the dies irae is a Gregorian hymn.

And for the guidance of our friends who do not understand the argumentation that I submitted to the house, I will explain it to them.

To begin with, as it is an internal division, I am of the opinion that the Crediters of Canada have only one alternative. All they have to do is to convene a national convention and choose, for one year or six months, a leader who will be replaced six months later. But let them not annoy the House of Commons with that. We have been discussing this question for a whole day and it will probably be on the order of the day tomorrow.

Mr. Fisher: Go on.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, what can we make of his new connivance between the members of the New Democratic party and the Caouetteists? I cannot understand this new "flirt" between two new political parties who have always held opposite theories in politics.

[Text]

Mr. Fisher: You have had but four national conventions since confederation.

Mr. Choquette: I would recall to the hon. member for Port Arthur certain statements he has made which were not too favourable to Quebec. I cannot understand, Mr. Speaker, the great friendship that exists today between him and the hon. member for Villeneuve.

[Translation]

Mr. Belanger: Would the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, I will allow the question.

[Text]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. May I suggest to hon. members that it is very difficult for the Chair and for other hon. members to follow the speech now being made by the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette) because there has been a cross-fire and a cross-exchange of conversation between hon. members who do not have the floor. Perhaps it would be conducive to good order in the house if we allowed the hon. member who has the floor to complete his remarks.

[Translation]

Mr. Belanger: Mr. Speaker, I asked the hon. member whether I could direct a question to him and he has granted his permission.

I want to ask him why the Liberal federation of Quebec decided to separate from the national federation of the Liberal party.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, how do you want to proceed if there is no decorum? The Caouettist obstructionists always make a noise and it is impossible to talk.

I shall answer the question of my hon. friend from Charlevoix very simply.

The Liberal federation of Quebec never separated, and in my opinion, the point raised by the hon. member enables us to make a very precise analogy.

Within the Liberal party, there is the national federation and the Quebec Liberal federation. As a Liberal, I belong to the Quebec Liberal federation and, as a member of parliament, to the national organization.

Consequently, the Ralliement des creditistes may well be a provincial group, but all Social Credit members of parliament must accept the leadership of the hon. member for Red Deer. If there are any nationalist feelings within your party, it is up to you to settle the problem.

Mr. Speaker, there is one last point I should like to make. Since the hon. member for Villeneuve and his friends claim to be the mouthpiece of the province of Quebec and the champions of French Canada, I consider it a point of honour for government members from Quebec to speak as strongly as possible against giving official recognition to that group. Indeed, I feel that the prestige of our province and of French Canadians would be badly impaired if the province of Quebec were identified with the hon. member for Villeneuve and his followers.

One just has to remember the wild statements made by the hon. member. I have nothing personal against him. As I said a while ago, I have great admiration for his courage and fearlessness. However, since he makes statements like "In Ottawa, you have to fight against Indians," we would not want him acknowledged as the voice of the province of Quebec and have him say things which will have repercussions throughout Canada.

The member for Villeneuve once confessed his admiration for the nazi and fascist leaders, and he sorely regrets it today. Here again, if the rest of Canada believes that the hon. member is defending the interests of the province of Quebec, his unfortunate statements which are heard from coast to coast are harmful to us.

And that is yet another reason why the government should not recognize his group.

Before resuming my seat, I wish to point out to the house that there is no party which might better protect the interests of Quebec and of the French fact in Canada than the party in power. There could not be any prime minister who would, better than the present Prime Minister, and in a more understanding spirit, create that harmony that we need so badly at the moment. We are undergoing an ideological revolution of sorts, and we must get the better of it, if we want to see the 1967 celebrations take place in an atmosphere of harmony and mutual good will.

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

I find that since this debate started, some members have been dealing with all kinds of questions that are irrelevant to the matter under discussion.

In my opinion, it would be essential that the Prime Minister himself make a statement on the subject.

We have heard members from both sides of the house, but I feel that for the guidance of all members—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must remind the hon. member—

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I am coming to the question of privilege.

Some time ago, the whip of the Liberal party asked me—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I ask the hon. member to state his question of privilege as soon as possible. I must tell him that up to now, there does not seem to be any question of privilege, and I ask him to come to the point.

Mr. Gregoire: Very well, Mr. Speaker.

The whip of the Liberal party asked us to keep on talking until the Prime Minister got here. Therefore, we would like the Prime Minister to make a statement, and I feel that it is imperative in the circumstances.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Obviously, there was no question of privilege.

The hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, none of the members of this party who took part in the deliberations of the standing committee on privileges and elections has yet spoken, and since the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Turner) has complimented me, in a way, by bringing my remarks into this debate I think perhaps I should say a word or two on this question. I believe I should express the opinion first—and it is my own opinion—that I think this whole reference to the standing committee on privileges and elections was engineered by the government. They abdicated their responsibility when they should have made a decision.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nielsen: It was their responsibility to make the decision to square away the seating arrangements in the house. Had it not been on such short notice I have grave doubts—

Mr. Macaluso: On a point of order. Would the hon. gentleman allow a question.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Macaluso: Then on a point of order, the hon. member for Yukon was in the house when the right hon. Leader of the Opposition voted to refer this matter to the committee.

Mr. Nielsen: I realize that we voted that way in the house and I was one of those who voted for the reference; but as the motion was put on at short notice, as all hon. members know, I think we would be a silly parliament indeed if we did not look back once in a while and realize that we had done something wrong. But I know that people on that side of the house very seldom get that kind of feeling. None the less, I feel that the whole reference was engineered by the government in an effort to abdicate the responsibility which they clearly had, just as this recommendation by the standing committee on privileges and elections was engineered by the Liberal members who sat on that committee, and the official Social Credit party members who follow the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson). Anyone who sat on that committee could not have failed to see the close collaboration between the hon. member who proposed that motion and the Liberal engineers, if I may call them that, on the committee.

Perhaps I have a happy compromise to suggest to the house here, with my tongue in my cheek. There seem to be 11 hon. members following the hon. member for Red Deer and 12 following the hon. member for Villeneuve. I believe one of them is away somewhere; but perhaps the hon. member for Red Deer could borrow for a moment one of the supporters of the hon. member for Villeneuve and then each could draw the $4,000 as provided by the act. Or, in view of the close collaboration which exists between the Liberal members of the house in return for some of the favours that the hon. member for Red Deer has been offering them, they might offer the hon. member for Red Deer one of their Liberal supporters so that he can qualify.

But, Mr. Speaker, in considering the recommendations of the committee in a serious manner it seems to me that all these arguments about fragmentation are irrelevant. The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Turner) really surprised me, because it seemed to me that what he was advocating was that we should set a precedent in this house by completely eliminating any possibility of the growth of new political parties in this country by excluding them from the house. It seems to me that this is a very undemocratic position to take.

Mr. Turner: On a point of order; I realize that the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) is very sensitive about that subject.

Mr. Nielsen: I did not hear that point of order.

Mr. Monteith: There was no point of order.

Mr. Nielsen: He referred to a national party or a provincial party, but it seems to me to make no difference. It does not make any difference at all whether the members of a political party come from one province or two provinces, or even the ten provinces and two territories that now exist in this country. It seems to me that a party is a party for all that, and it is surely not the responsibility of this house or of the standing committee on privileges and elections—and this is the stand I took in the committee—to decide when a party is a party. I go along wholeheartedly with the suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) when he says that these matters must be decided on the basis of sheer numbers, and it does not make any difference whether you have a majority of one or a majority of 100. I understood the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to say that it was a question of precedence. If the principle is one of majority, it does not matter whether the majority is one, 50 or 150.

The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George made reference to the remarks I made in committee, as reported at page 82 of the proceedings of the committee. He quoted me where I am reported as saying:

> All I can see is internal strife within a political party and as such it is something which this committee should not meddle with, and indeed I doubt whether it has the power to do so.

I still have those convictions. It seems to me that the mess has been created within the Social Credit party itself, and the more we talk about it the more it is pointed up that we in this house should not be concerned with the internal strife of that party. For us to say that the faction which has broken off from the national Social Credit party is or is not a party goes beyond the bounds of our responsibilities.

It seems to me that that is what the committee has recommended, that on the one hand there is a political party and on the other hand that there is not. The wording has been carefully worked out and the recommendation is as follows: First, that the New Democratic party be seated next to the official opposition, and so on, second, that the Social Credit party be seated next to the New Democratic party and, third, that the group under the leadership of the hon. member for Villeneuve be seated to the left of the Social Credit party. Surely this Liberal engineered recommendation made with the assistance of the hon. member for Red Deer, presupposes the decision which they themselves have said they could not make, namely that there is a political party existent in what is left of the Social Credit party. Yet they do not put that same status on the group that follows the hon. member for Villeneuve.

Mr. Leboe: That statement is not true.

Mr. Nielsen: What statement is not true?

Mr. Leboe: That it was engineered by the Social Credit party.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, it seemed to me there were some furtive whispers going on between the members of the committee, and at one stage I noticed one hon. member was very carefully counting the vote to see whether or not there were sufficient members there to carry the vote on this particular motion.

The reference as I understood it from Your Honour, as reported on page 3007 of Hansard, was:

> Have we a new party according to this new definition and, if so, has this party been recognized by the house? To my mind this is a question for the house to decide.

If I had had time to reflect on Your Honour's remarks at that time I would have said, with great respect, that that is not a question for this house to decide at all but a question for the government to decide; and if they had not abdicated their responsibility in this regard they would have made that decision.

We have just listened to three successive Liberal members speaking on this measure. So far only the Leader of the Opposition and myself have spoken on behalf of this party, and I felt obliged to because I was a member of the standing committee and also because of the remarks made by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George. It seems a little strange—perhaps the shoe is a little tight over there—that so many loud protests are coming from that side of the house. As one of my colleagues behind the curtain said a moment ago, it seems they are riding rather a fast horse over there.

An hon. Member: Who is the jockey?

Mr. Nielsen: I do not know who is the jockey; perhaps it is the hon. member for Red Deer. I agree 100 per cent with the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre when he said that the responsibility in the end will rest with the government benches, with the Liberal members of the House of Commons, because they were the majority of the committee. They are the majority of this house. We all know that they will vote in support of this recommendation; but I would be very happy to see some exercise of free opinion on that side of the house and a free vote had on the matter. Then I dare say that the recommendation would not be adopted and the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre would be accepted. But I, like another hon. member who spoke previously, have very little hope of seeing that happen, particularly on that side of the house.

Mr. Francis: Would the hon. member permit a question? Did I understand him to suggest that there would be a free vote on this side of the house?

Mr. Nielsen: It would, indeed, be refreshing to see a free vote on that side of the house, and I would suggest it.

In a final reply to the reference which the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, for whom I have a high regard, made to me tonight, I should like to refer him to the same page, that is, page 82 of the minutes of proceedings of the committee. Here I am reported as answering a question put to me by one of his Liberal colleagues. The minutes read:

> Mr. Brewin: Does Mr. Nielsen intend to put this motion on his own behalf or on behalf of his group?

"group" meaning the Conservative party.

> Mr. Nielsen: I might take refuge in the point of order raised by Mr. Moreau, who objected to members of this committee standing as witnesses. The motion is mine.

Just as the remarks I was making at that time were mine and just as the remarks I am making tonight are mine, I should like to put on record the motion which I did suggest to the committee. I was only able to give notice of the motion because the committee recommended otherwise, and it would have been useless to carry it further. This was the recommendation as is to be found on page 82 of the minutes:

> It being apparent that the reference of the house to this committee is one concerning the internal differences between at least two factions within the Social Credit party these differences should be resolved by the Social Credit party, and when resolved the Speaker informed since he has the responsibility of seating arrangements in the house, and that the matter of the $4,000 leader's indemnity be determined by the proper authority.

It seems to me that this is the recommendation which the committee should have brought down.

This brings me to the question of the $4,000 which is to be paid, as Bill C-91 put it, to each member of the House of Commons who is a leader of a party which has a recognized membership of 12 or more persons in the House of Commons. When this part of the motion was put in the committee, I said, as is reported at page 84 of the minutes:

> I would like to speak on a point of order. I am in doubt as to whether or not we can make proposals to the house on the matter of the $4,000, this being one of the privileges.

I know that the final recommendation made to the house by the committee contains nothing which refers specifically to the $4,000; but a number of articles in the press have indicated that one of the privileges to which the fourth part of the recommendation referred was this self same $4,000 and I believe a good many members of the house share this view. I know I do. This is the whole point of the amendment which the Leader of the Opposition has made to the amendment made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. We feel this clause should be deleted because we do not think the committee had the right to refer this question to parliamentary counsel. It is not his responsibility. It is only fair to say, I think, that the first mention I heard of this matter in committee came from the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, not from the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. He said this was a question to be determined by the treasury on the advice of the Department of Justice. I believe we will experience some difficulty in interpreting this particular section of Bill C-91 in which the words appear "which has a recognized membership of 12 or more persons". What does "recognized" mean? Does it mean recognition by this house? Does it mean recognition by the electorate? Does it mean recognition by those who support the group leader? Does it mean recognition individually or does it mean recognition collectively? It seems to me these words are fraught with difficulty, and this constitutes another example of the inept drafting which seems to characterize the legislation which this government is producing. I feel the amendment proposed by my right hon. friend would deal with that situation, because if the question of privileges, including the $4,000, were left to interpretation by the proper authorities, then undoubtedly those who were charged with these matters would recognize their responsibilities and discharge them. I do not think that as a committee or as the House of Commons we should be interpreting the legislation we pass.

Having made these observations, I feel the debate should now be brought to a close as quickly as possible in order that we might get on with the business we were sent here to do, as the leader of the New Democratic party has so often, in his holier-than-thou attitude, advised us to do. It seems to me the members of that particular group took a great deal of the time of the house in speaking on this subject, and without intending any offence to the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas), may I say it occurs to me that his vision is often obscured by his halo slipping over his eyes.

Mr. Pigeon: On a point of order; I think members on this side, as well as the house generally, would appreciate very much hearing the point of view of the Prime Minister on this important question.

Mr. Pearson: Hardly a point of order.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): The question before the house at this moment is an amendment to an amendment which calls for the complete deletion of clause 4 of the report from the standing committee on privileges and elections. Clause 4 recommends that the question of the privileges to be enjoyed by the group under the leadership of the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) be referred to parliamentary counsel of the House of Commons for study and report to the Speaker. If I understand the terms of reference correctly, when this house referred the whole matter to the committee it was precisely because Your Honour needed some guidance in dealing with the demand for privileges which was made by the hon. member for Villeneuve following a convention in Granby. Therefore, if this section is deleted from the recommendations which have been submitted by the committee, the terms of reference will not have been complied with. In other words, the question of privileges is not answered at all in any of the other three recommendations which are made. They deal with some physical changes in the house, it is true—the seating of the various parties—but they say nothing about the privileges which have been demanded.

This debate has ranged fairly wide so far. Attempts have been made to bring up precedents for the guidance, first of the committee, and now of the house. I believe that if we have listened carefully to all the precedents which have been cited we can only reach one conclusion, namely that there is no precedent for the situation we are now facing. It is therefore up to the house to create a precedent and reach a decision to deal with a wholly novel situation. There have been attempts to draw parallels between the present situation and something else which happened, but I do not think there is any direct relationship between the problem we are now facing and anything which has happened in the past.

Some of the arrangements that have been made in the house with respect to seating and also recognition have been referred to by hon. members, particularly the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), and in every case the arrangements both for seating and for recognition have been based first of all on policies, patterns and labels that were presented to the electorate in the immediately preceding election. Surely, Mr. Speaker, we as members of the House of Commons have a responsibility to organize ourselves and conduct the business of the house in line with something that has been presented to the electors, whether it has been put down in writing or not. As far as I am concerned that is paramount in the situation. Several members have mentioned that even in the committee situations were referred to and the same persons who recited them said it was possible to draw more than one conclusion from them.

I do not intend to go over a lot of the ground that other hon. members have covered. I do think, though, that if members of the house are going to be faced with a vote to decide whether or not there is another party in the house and whether all the privileges and rights which are extended to a party are to be granted, we should be cognizant of some of the facts. The hon. member for Villeneuve delved rather deeply into this matter. He is welcome to his opinion, but I should like to place on the record another opinion with regard to some of the things that took place even before the last two elections, so that members will be completely familiar with the organization of the national Social Credit party. The constitution of the Social Credit party provides as follows with regard to membership:

> Every provincial Social Credit organization or league that applies for affiliation and is accepted by the association shall, upon payment of the prescribed fees, be granted membership in the association, providing there will be only one recognized in any province.

It is quite true that the Ralliement des creditistes was a provincial organization and was accepted into the national organization, and it was the only one from the province of Quebec. In article 3 the constitution provides:

> A national convention shall be held every four years, or more often as the national council shall decide.

I should like to draw to the attention of the house that the national council of the Social Credit party of Canada had a meeting in Ottawa in July of this year. I should also like to draw the attention of hon. members to the fact that all of the members of the Ralliement des creditistes who were present at the 1961 convention subscribed to these articles of the constitution.

The national council held a meeting in July, and I happen to know that representations were made to the national council by certain members of the Ralliement des creditistes demanding a national convention immediately. The national council in their wisdom decided for many reasons that they would not call a national convention at once. The fact is, of course, that the council is made up of all the Social Credit organizations across Canada and like all democratic institutions a majority vote rules the decisions made by that council.

I should also like to refer to various clauses in the constitution dealing with how a national convention shall be set up. The first provision is that there shall be five representatives from each affiliated Social Credit organization or league. This would give each province having a Social Credit organization five voting delegates at a convention, and this is what the Ralliement des creditistes would have if they attended. Second, there shall be five representatives in good standing from each federal constituency in Canada. I should like to point out that there was an opportunity for each one of the 75 constituencies in Quebec to have five delegates from the Ralliement des creditistes at the convention. They had the opportunity to be there in 1961.

An hon. Member: Not in 1961.

Mr. Olson: I do not know what the make-up of the delegates to that convention was or whether there was a full slate from Quebec or Ontario. I know there was not from Alberta, simply because of the high cost of travel in order for them to come to Ottawa. But there might have been a full slate from Quebec. As a matter of fact, the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) tells me there was a full slate of delegates from all of the constituencies in Quebec. The convention proceeded with its business and made these provisions with respect to officers, as found in the constitution.

> The officers of the association shall be: (a) A national leader who shall be responsible for the formation and interpretation of policy—

And so on.

> (b) A deputy leader—

This is pretty good.

> —who shall assist the national leader.

The point I want to make is that all of these provisions in the constitution were accepted by a national Social Credit party convention, and there was full opportunity for the Ralliement des creditistes to have full representation there. As the hon. member for Lapointe has said, they were there.

Mr. Fisher: It is none of our business.

Mr. Olson: It may not be any of our business, but I think it is the business of parliament to understand what the interpretation of a party shall be. This is the question before us.

Mr. Fisher: Let us interpret the Liberal party.

Mr. Olson: All of this was done in accordance with democratic procedures, and I believe that a similar though not identical arrangement is used by all of the national political parties. I do not know whether there is a national Liberal party or whether it is a federation of provincial parties, although I have been told it is a federation of 10 provincial Liberal parties. Maybe that is not true; but that is the way the Social Credit organization is set up.

Members of the New Democratic party are making noises on my left but I believe they are also organized on the same basis. I know, for example, that the party that is supposed to belong to them in Saskatchewan does not even have the same name. They call themselves C.C.F.-N.D.P. I was out there over the week end and I heard that for purposes of the next provincial election they are going to drop the N.D.P. part of their name. So, Mr. Speaker, whether or not the name of the Social Credit organization in Quebec was the Social Credit league of Quebec, like the Social Credit league of Ontario or Manitoba or New Brunswick, this practice is not confined to the Social Credit party. Other parties have different names.

Another point was mentioned during the debate. In Hansard on Wednesdays the names of the members are given, and their party affiliation. Somebody has mentioned that there is a member in the cabinet who I believe calls himself Liberal-Labour. So they too have different names. But the point is that if he is Liberal-Labour I think he presented himself to the electorate as such. There is no argument about the fact that the Ralliement des creditistes had full opportunity to participate in the national convention. They subscribed to the constitution. They took part in the balloting for the leader.

It is rather interesting to note that the hon. member for Villeneuve, who now claims to be leader of the Social Credit party, also ran for the national leadership of the Social Credit party. This balloting was conducted after the constitution had been accepted. It is rather interesting to note also that there were three candidates for the position of national leader of the Social Credit party. The constitution requires that before any one candidate can be named leader, he must receive 50 per cent plus 1 of the ballots. When the ballots were counted, there was sufficient support for the hon. member for Red Deer to elect him on the first ballot.

An hon. Member: Did they see the ballots?

Mr. Olson: An hon. member has said they never saw the ballots. I want him to know that the hon. member for Villeneuve appointed scrutineers who watched the counting of the ballots and who concurred in the returns.

We come to the point of discussing what is a national party, who should be recognized, who should be granted privileges, and so on. I should like the members of this house to know that there was absolutely no situation here that was not subscribed to by the Ralliement. Since then they have had a convention. They have decided to dissociate themselves from the national party. Now that they have dissociated themselves from the national party, when they subscribed to its rules, policy and so on, the question is raised now, do they become a national party? It might be of interest also to members when they come to vote on this matter to know that there are seven members of the Ralliement des Creditistes who do not subscribe to this separation. The hon. member for Villeneuve referred to some statistics in connection with the last election. I am not sure what his purpose was. Perhaps it has something to do with the total popular vote.

I should like to say, in connection with these statistics, that he was apparently trying to take unto himself all of the popular vote that was accorded to all of the men who ran as Social Credit candidates in Quebec. I should like to say that he will have to separate the votes for at least seven of those constituencies from his calculation. There have been points raised from time to time during the debate that the adoption of the committee's report will be a violation of the freedom of the members of this house. I completely disagree with that. The question before us, and what is being demanded now by the hon. member for Villeneuve, is not that the rights and privileges of members be maintained, but that he be given some rights and privileges in addition to those normally accorded to members of this house. Certainly, no one is trying to take away any of the rights or privileges of an ordinary member of this house.

In so far as clause 4 of the report is concerned, it does not completely satisfy the terms of reference handed to the committee. It seems to me that we should very soon in this parliament attempt to define a party or define a group that will be recognized in the house. The late prime minister Mackenzie King back in 1944 said that there was only the government and the opposition, and that any further recognition by the government and the Speaker is a matter of courtesy. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that this courtesy should be granted on the basis of what was presented to the electors, and there should be nothing beyond that.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to the question raised by some members as to whether or not the Ralliement des creditistes is a national party or a provincial party. I did not hear the hon. members say whether or not this federal house should recognize a provincial party or whether recognition should be confined to national parties. Certainly, up to the time of the convention in Granby in August all the evidence points conclusively to the fact that the Ralliement des creditistes was definitely a provincial party. They were affiliated with the national Social Credit party as the Quebec wing of the national Social Credit party.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, there is one question I should like to ask the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order. That question has been asked once or twice before and I think it is out of order.

Mr. Pigeon: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think it is the privilege of any hon. member to ask the Prime Minister a question if he consents.

Mr. Habel: Yap, yap. We have no orders to take from you.

Mr. Pigeon: I ask the Prime Minister if he will consent to a question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think it is proper to do something indirectly which is not allowed directly. The hon. member for Lapointe.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Habel: We have no orders to take from you.

Mr. Pigeon: May I ask this question of the Prime Minister, and if he consents, I think it is my right.

Mr. Pickersgill: If I may speak to the point of order, I may say the hon. gentleman has spoken several times in this debate already and I do not think he should be recognized again.

Mr. Pigeon: Closure. I rise on a point of order. I never said a word in this debate and the house leader is absolutely wrong. This is not the first time he has been wrong.

Mr. Habel: What a weight that will carry.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I return to a problem that has faced us previously. I do not know of anything in the rules which gives any one member of this house privileges that are not accorded to other members. I call Your Honour's attention to the fact that the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) rose in his place and addressed the Chair in a way to indicate the manner in which the Chair should conduct the affairs of this house. It was nothing more or less than a direction from the Secretary of State as to the conduct of this house.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, several things have been said in this discussion. I shall not delay things by answering the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Girouard), who incidentally mentioned the hon. member for Lapointe. As a matter of fact, I think it would be hardly worth the trouble because he will be judged by his own words.

In fact, when he tried to avail himself of this discussion to attack the leader of the official opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), I saw that the latter had adopted the best possible attitude, that is, an attitude of scorn for words without any significance. I think I shall follow in his footsteps, because I am used to hearing the hon. member for Labelle who, as everyone knows, has tried to behave like the frog which wanted to become as big as an ox.

Mr. Speaker, whatever is said and done, we have, today, seen political parties setting themselves up as the judges of another party. This had never happened before in the Canadian House of Commons. The Liberals have taken advantage of existing circumstances to have a picnic at the expense of one political party, and even of two.

Today, we witnessed quite an extraordinary show, given by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Turner) and the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Girouard), who acted as witnesses, inquirers and judges with regard to the problems of another political party, which was none of their business. I would have liked, Mr. Speaker, to hear the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) on the subject.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the leader of the official opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), made some speeches which, I think were objective, and they analysed the situation.

On the other hand, we had some replies by backbenchers on the government side, but no member of the cabinet dared do so—and that is the right term for it, I think—not even the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill), who usually is quick to rise when problems like these are discussed, nor the Prime Minister, nor any other minister. That is the more significant as they realize that they are today acting as they have no right to act when they allow some parties to be the judges of the members of another party.

I therefore would like to pursue the argument of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, who dared to tell us that it was his business to judge our own business. He might introduce a motion to outlaw the Conservative party in this house, and then, having a majority with the benevolent support of some hon. members on this side of the house, the Liberal party might control this country's destiny, without the fear of an election for the next four years.

In my opinion, this constitutes word for word the argument of the member for St. Lawrence-St. George.

I heard him making speeches, but I never heard him express such fallacies as he did tonight. The member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette) also spoke tonight, even if he had absolutely nothing to say, and in fact he said nothing. The best way to answer him would be to do as did a speaker, who, after hearing a speech, was satisfied to open his mouth, make gestures for two minutes without uttering a single sentence, after which he said he had answered the speech point by point. I would be tempted to do the same thing to answer the member for Lotbiniere.

Mr. Speaker, the member for Villeneuve quoted this afternoon a letter from the member for Lake St. John (Mr. Lessard), who is a member of the Thompson group, in which the member for Lake St. John was saying on September 12, 1963: "I am a candidate belonging to the Ralliement des creditistes." I have here another letter from the same member, dated September 12, 1963, admitting he had been chosen as candidate for the Ralliement des creditistes. I have also another letter from the member, dated September 12, 1963, and I apologize to the leader of the official opposition, but this illustrates very well the situation at the present time. The member for Lake St. John then declared: Unless the Conservatives change their leader and unless they activate their political credit and add a greater dynamism, the Canadian electors will have no other alternative than to elect the Liberal party. Let us assume that it would be about the same thing that we, ourselves, could have felt within our movement.

How can you be a judge in such cases? And, Mr. Speaker, they invoke an argument which will not hold water. They say that to be recognized, you should go through an election. Let us suppose that the leader of the Liberal party turns insane tomorrow morning, does that mean that the Liberal party, deprived of its leader, would not have been recognized before passing the test of a general election? This argument is as stupid as yours.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Oh, no.

Mr. Gregoire: The argument is the same—

Some hon. Members: Oh, no.

Mr. Gregoire: —a fallacy. It is not necessary to have submitted to a general election. Look at your own case, each and everyone of you, when you go through an election, when an elector goes to a poll and takes a ballot, what appears on it? The name, and that is all. There is no indication of the political party. So, the situation here in this house is that members are elected for themselves, not for a political party. And all parties realize that.

When Mr. Hazen Argue decided to cross over to the other side, did you tell him: No, sir, we cannot accept you?

And then the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Marcoux) decided to go over to the other side. Why did he have the right to do that? Because it was Mr. Guy Marcoux who had been elected member for Quebec-Montmorency. And it was not because he belonged to any party, since no party was even mentioned on the ballots.

And there is something else to be considered. Since when have we seen the larger group of a political party split away from the smaller group? Usually, it is the larger group that represents the party and the one numerically smaller is the one that separates.

Here is what I said in the committee on privileges and elections:

> During a caucus, the members of the Social Credit party have decided, due to the critical situation, that the election of a new leader was imperative.
> We have decided, by a majority vote, to choose a new leader. We have a new leader, a new whip. We wish to make changes in the house, to replace Mr. Thompson by Mr. Caouette and have our whip occupy the regular seat of the whip.
> We shall also submit to the Speaker of the house a redistribution of the offices and desks in the house including the new arrangement.

Thirteen voted for the motion; the majority made its choice.

Mr. Gerard Girouard (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member for Lapointe is reading the minutes of the committee which said:

> During a caucus—

But the text actually said:

> During a regular meeting of the caucus—

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, all the problems have now been settled thanks to that most intelligent interruption by the hon. member for Labelle.

Here is a party where 13 members decide to change their leader, that is a majority of the 23 members. And since 10 of them were not satisfied with the decision of the majority, they withdrew. And now the Liberal party would come here and say that we do not have the right to act that way.

According to what right could the Liberal party tell us that the majority in our party cannot decide for itself? Under what rule? I say this and I repeat it.

I note that the Prime Minister is much more serious than these young backbenchers. In fact, he would never have stated what the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George said tonight. He would never dare make such statements. In fact, he quickly left the house, which means that he does not approve of such statements.

Mr. Speaker, let us not forget one thing. We live in a democracy. And to try to tell us what should happen within our own party would amount to dictatorship.

I see that the Secretary of State is nodding in disagreement. But if the Secretary of State, during a caucus, decided on a certain thing, with the support of certain Liberal members, could the members of the opposition, since we are more numerous, tell him: "We do not want you to act that way." Then, the Secretary of State could answer: "That happened during a caucus, mind your own business."

Well, we tell you: "What we want to do within our party does not concern you."

An hon. Member: Settle that at a national convention.

Mr. Gregoire: And even if it does not concern the Liberal party, one thing remains—

Mr. Prosper Boulanger (Mercier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wish to call your attention to section 28 which reads as follows:

> Every member desiring to speak is to rise in his place—

Well, I wish to point out that the hon. member for Lapointe is now standing at the Sergeant-at-Arms' desk or close to it and he is not in his place. Furthermore, he is not addressing himself to you, but to everyone.

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, as far as the point of order is concerned, it is true that section 28 reads:

> Every member desiring to speak is to rise in his place—

That is exactly what the hon. member for Lapointe has done. But the rule does not stipulate that the member must remain glued in his place as the hon. member for Mercier usually is.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I believe that at this time, it is obvious that I have risen from my seat. Everybody must recognize that as was pointed out by the member for Villeneuve, the member for Mercier also has his place.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I do not want to unduly interrupt the hon. member but in connection with the point of order which was raised by the hon. member for Mercier, it is true that standing order 28 states that an hon. member should rise in his place but it does not stipulate that he must remain in his place.

On the other hand, standing order No. 12 stipulates that the Speaker shall maintain order and decorum and in his estimation, it is contrary to decorum in this house that a member should stand too far from his seat.

Mr. Gregoire: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Text]

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask the hon. member for Lapointe a question, for information. Would he give the house the date and the hour of the caucus to which he referred when he said that by a majority vote they decided to change the leader, and who was invited to this caucus?

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, the caucus was held in Granby, and everyone was invited. Nothing can be done for those who could not come.

Mr. Speaker, what amazes me most is to find that in the end there is only one group of dissidents. The Conservatives and the members of the New Democratic party are not opposed to our forming a recognized group, a recognized political party in this house but coming after another group known as the Thompsonists. Why? I do not know. And I am wondering why 11 members would object when we say that the motion in the committee on privileges and elections was introduced by the hon. member for Labelle and seconded by the member for Cariboo? Why do 11 members object to the fact that others be recognized in the house?

And I will go one step further. Why, in spite of the logic and common sense of the argument put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), are pretexts heard from the other side of the house?

We are wondering whether there is not an agreement or collusion. And what does that mean? I will tell you. This means that two political parties in this house have agreed to try to deprive another party of its rights and then this is simply co-operation between them. One will do the favour of refusing to recognize a political party and what will the other give in return? I am therefore asking which group is representing its constituents, the one who has sacrificed certain principles to strike a bargain or those—

Mr. Gerard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. This afternoon, I was asked to comply with the standing orders when I was making unconfirmed but sensible remarks. Now I would like the member for Lapointe to abide by the rules because he is imagining things and letting his emotional imagination get the best of him.

Therefore, I suggest that he be called to order and that he talk about things which he knows. If he can only talk about things which he does not know, then he should keep quiet.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, very little imagination is required to understand the situation, and I am sure that there are quite a few on all sides of the house who understand it.

I only made an assumption about what could happen. So much the better if that does not exist, but we can ask ourselves why the Liberal party acts as it does at present.

In the case of one political party, we are going to decide by the number and in the case of the others, by seniority. Then, the Liberal party is going to decide which is the older, the group led by the member for Red Deer or that of the member for Villeneuve.

Which is the older? From 1958 to 1962, there was not one Social Credit member in the house. We were all elected in 1962. Therefore, seniority goes back to 1962 and the number should decide, if not the member for Villeneuve is the oldest of the 23 Social Crediters, since he was elected in 1946; therefore, he has seniority.

Mr. Speaker, on top of all that, they are trying to make us believe that we would not have been elected under the ticket of the Ralliement des creditistes. Indeed, we have been elected as members of that group. I gave evidence to that effect before the privileges and elections committee. The point is that the old political parties have always been elected because of their campaign funds. Who contributed? Mr. So-and-so, in trust. That is how they got elected.

As for us, how did our bills get paid, Mr. Speaker? Since the treasurer of our riding is in the gallery at present, I have no hesitation to say that they were paid by treasurer so-and-so or chairman so-and-so on behalf of the Ralliement des creditistes. That fact can be checked out. The national party organization never paid a single penny in our ridings or in our province. Never. We are the ones who paid for our election.

When I hear Social Crediters who were elected with the assistance of the Ralliement des creditistes claim that they are the ones who helped us, it is my duty to deny it. Mr. Speaker, I am sure they will think otherwise at the next election when it will no longer be possible for them to vote along the lines indicated by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Chapdelaine: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member for Lapointe allow me a question?

Mr. Gregoire: Certainly.

Mr. Chapdelaine: When he says that Social Crediters were elected because they were helped by the Ralliement des creditistes, is he inferring that if they were elected it is because they were members of the Ralliement des creditistes?

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I would at least say that that was often the case. I would not say in all cases, because some of them owe their defeat to the fact that they think along the same lines as the hon. member for Sherbrooke. Some were defeated, because they could be defeated although they were chosen at a convention of the Ralliement des creditistes. The T.V. shows he was on, at Sherbrooke and elsewhere, including the last one, were paid by the Ralliement des creditistes.

An hon. Member: The Ralliement des creditistes du Quebec.

Mr. Gregoire: Yes, indeed, the Ralliement des creditistes du Quebec.

Mr. Prosper Boulanger (Mercier): Mr. Speaker, I raise a point of order with regard to standing order 12. The hon. member for Lapointe is still going around the house, with a prompter practically at his side—his leader, the hon. member for Villeneuve—and answering questions right and left without addressing himself to the Speaker. I would ask that he observe the proprieties a little more.

An hon. Member: He is addressing himself to the Speaker.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I—

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Speaker, is my point of order well taken?

Mr. Caouette: Sit down.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not think that there is any point of order.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, after all that has happened today, after seeing democracy flouted so many times, we must now submit to this. Democracy has its price and we have to put up with the sounding-boxes that we hear sometimes in the house. I think that the hon. member for Mercier is a typical example of a loud drum but that he does not have a sound judgment.

An hon. Member: He gives a hollow sound.

Mr. Boulanger: You could have found something better than that.

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbiniere): I raise a point of order. There is a limit. We should observe some proprieties in the house. The words used by the hon. member for Villeneuve, I mean the hon. member for Lapointe —anyway, it is the same thing—

An hon. Member: Of anyone.

Mr. Choquette: —are absolutely unparliamentary. A few minutes ago, the hon. member for Lapointe said: "If the leader of the Liberal party becomes insane—" and now he calls "This is a stupid argument" and now he calls my colleague a drum. Let us have some decorum.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I respectfully submit that this series of coarse terms is unworthy and completely against the standing orders of the house in addition to being inconsistent with the atmosphere which should prevail here.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I hope that the member for Lotbiniere takes his own words into consideration, when he speaks of the decorum which should prevail here.

I think that if there were not so many interruptions from the members opposite, there would be more decorum in the house.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding, I will only add one thing. We are a group of 13 members from the province of Quebec. We are not imploring without cause. We believe that we are entitled to recognition.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that in the past—the Minister of Finance who is here knows it—I have shown fair play when necessary. I played above-board with the Liberal party as well as the other parties. I always tried to be frank with all the other members of this house and played fair when necessary.

On a particular occasion, the Minister of Finance remembers, I rose on a question of privilege. At least, at that time, I deemed advisable to use fair play with him, which I did.

I think that the Liberal members have now to decide on something more serious and important than what the committee has presented. They have to decide on a problem much more serious than that. They must decide on a principle, that is whether it is true that other members can decide for another party. I submit that point to the conscience of all hon. members of the house.

And the responsibility will fall on the shoulders of the one who will rise first on the side of the Liberal party to vote—the Prime Minister of Canada who holds a rather high position. It is he who will vote first. With him rests the responsibility to support what is being done today, namely deny its rights and privileges to a group. The responsibility will be theirs. The way they all vote will be recorded in Hansard. The people will be able to judge them. Let them think carefully, in order to realize whether what they are plotting today is really honest. Let them wonder whether what they are plotting today is just.

Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested a while ago that we are trying to monopolize the defence of the rights of French Canadians. No, such is not the case. If the hon. member for Dollard (Mr. Rouleau) were here tonight, and the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis) knows it, he could say that we do not endeavour to monopolize that right. We even had a meeting last year with them—and they know how it had been prepared—a meeting which was attended by all hon. members from the province of Quebec, to try and claim some rights of the French Canadians.

We did not try to monopolize this right at that time. No, we wanted to share with all our colleagues of the House of Commons the right to uphold the rights of French Canadians in the house and, in Ottawa, when the opportunity presented itself. The member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville knows that very well.

We are not trying to make it a fight for nationalism or for separatism. We do not want to transform this problem into a fight to separate French Canadians from English Canadians. I myself did not want that.

When the time came for the reappointment of Mr. Gordon as president of the Canadian National Railways, I never tried to make political capital by stirring up one race against the other, I never tried to do that.

Only when questions are asked as to why 13 French Canadian members cannot be recognized in the house when, on the other hand, seven members of the New Democratic party were recognized here in 1958, we say to ourselves: why not us?

Ask yourselves those questions. I would not want to stir up a conflict, but better be careful. This time, we shall not be the ones to start the ball rolling, it will probably be the party which will decide not to recognize 13 French Canadian members in the House of Commons. We shall not be the ones to stir up that conflict, no, but it may be those who will vote to deny us our rights and privileges in this house.

Mr. Speaker, a striking example occurred the other day when an attempt was made to deny the hon. member for Villeneuve the right to speak as leader of a group of 13 on the nuclear arms question. This will happen again. Then, there are serious problems to face in all that.

I ask the ministers here to think it over carefully before coming to a decision which could have rather serious consequences for democracy and for the rights of parliament. I know that the French Canadians are touchy where the rights of parliament are concerned and they cannot accept that the rights and privileges of a whole group should go unrecognized in the House of Commons.

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to waste the time of the house on a discussion of the problem, as I feel that we have deviated rather drastically from the amendment and amendment to the amendment to the motion moved by the chairman of the committee on privileges and elections.

I must state, however, that I was under the impression we were attending a Social Credit convention or a public debate between Liberals and Social Crediters.

I am still thinking about the suggestion the leader of the house (Mr. Pickersgill) made this afternoon, in order to stretch the hours of sitting of this house. It seems to me that we should have acted more consistently, and spontaneously curtailed our verbosity, our partisanship. We should have restricted ourselves to a discussion on the merits of the amendment and of the amendment to the amendment submitted to the house.

I heard the remarks of the member for Lapointe and I regret that he did not use the word divorce once. He spoke of the separation of the Caouette group from the Thompson group. I should have liked him to use the word divorce because then the Ralliement would have relinquished all ties and responsibility with the Thompson group.

Mr. Speaker, as a lawyer, you know that even after a separation, there are still ties and responsibilities. Such is not the case after a divorce.

Mr. Speaker, I just wished to say a few words to express my regret, as a French Canadian representative of the province of Quebec, for having attended a discussion that did not deal at all with the value, the logic or the merit of the resolution or of the amendment to it, but that has particularly succeeded in discrediting the representatives of the province of Quebec with our approach of the matter in a spirit of partisanship which is far from being academic.

The decision which the house must make will decide whether the Caouette group has precedence or not over the Thompson group.

I am sorry to have to remind the house, as a representative of the province of Quebec, of the irresponsibility with which the Liberal members and certain representatives of the Social Credit party have joined in the discussion, thereby belittling in the eyes of the citizens of other provinces the sense of responsibility of the Quebec electorate.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the speeches will be over soon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Valade: I hear the Liberals applauding and that after having said a lot of nonsense and stupidities. The remarks of certain members of the Social Credit were surely not better than those of some Liberal members.

Since the beginning, the discussions seemed to hinge on two decisions. First of all, we have to decide whether there is really division between the two groups. Then, it must be established whether parliament has the power to decide in favour of a group instead of another, I ask the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) whether he could not take a few minutes to state his opinion and settle the question.

I particularly ask the house to limit interruptions and to put the question before the house; it is the most democratic way to solve the problem.

Therefore, I ask the house to vote and I hope that the group, which perhaps may not be satisfied with the decision, will consider that parliament represents democratic authority in this country, and I hope that this minority will abide by the parliament's decision, this democratic institution that we wish to preserve for a long time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the house leader, will the business for tomorrow be the same as today?

Mr. Pickersgill: Tomorrow, sir, I assume that we will proceed with the business that is uncompleted now, on motions, although of course that is not the government's business but rather the business of the house. Once that is completed and we have reached the orders of the day it is my intention to propose the motion to set up the committee on procedure, on which the Prime Minister intends to speak briefly.

Mr. Monteith: Are you going to have today's orders of the day tomorrow?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think that would be a very wise thing to attempt.

Then as soon as that debate is concluded, if there is any additional time during the day we will go on with the income tax measure, and in conformity with the announcement I made earlier today, tomorrow evening we will take the estimates of the Department of Public Works, commencing at seven o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: It being after 10.30 p.m. this house stands adjourned until eleven o'clock tomorrow morning.

It being ten minutes before eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, October 18, 1963

The house met at 11 a.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HOWARD—BRIEFS TO ROYAL COMMISSION ON BICULTURALISM

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. My question of privilege involves the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism. May I preface my question by quoting from the order in council establishing the commission as follows:

> —to inquire into and report upon the existing state of bilingualism and biculturalism in Canada and to recommend what steps should be taken to develop the Canadian confederation on the basis of an equal partnership between the two founding races—

This is the important part.

> —taking into account the contribution made by the other ethnic groups to the cultural enrichment of Canada—

And so on. I have just received this morning a document from the royal commission. It is a memorandum regarding the procedure to be followed in hearings before the commission. On page 2, under the heading of "nature of briefs", part (e) reads as follows:

> Briefs must be written in either French or English, or in the two languages, according to the preference of the persons who submit them.

It is my contention that it is not possible to take into account the contribution made by the other ethnic groups to the cultural enrichment of Canada by so restricting the language in which briefs must be written for presentation to the commission. Accordingly, founded on my question of privilege I move:

> That this house declares, notwithstanding anything to the contrary, that briefs to the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism may be written and presented in any language.

My motion is seconded by the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott).

Mr. Speaker: May I ask if there is any hon. member who would like to speak to this question of privilege before I try to give a decision. If not, then I may say that questions of privilege are extremely important matters. The Speaker has to be convinced that there is a prima facie case. This is one of the elements. In the present circumstances I do not believe there is a prima facie case for a question of privilege. It is rather in the nature of a complaint. Having had an opportunity of studying this motion I find that it does not take on the character of a substantive motion. I regretfully must come to the conclusion that in my opinion there is no question of privilege.

Motion agreed to.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

MISCELLANEOUS PRIVATE BILLS

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River) presented the first report of the standing committee on public accounts and moved that the report be concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SUGGESTED CHANGE IN ORDER OF BUSINESS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a suggestion. Having regard to the course of the debate yesterday I should think that we would not have too much hope of getting through with the motions that will be before the house. There are a number of questions of importance to the Canadian people which I feel should be asked. I am wondering whether the house would give consideration to going into orders of the day, and then returning to motions on the conclusion of orders of the day. Today is Friday and we are trying to co-operate in every way, but it will be impossible to get answers to questions unless this is done.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I would like to endorse that suggestion. There are a number of very vital matters that have come up on which the government might want to make statements, and about which hon. members will certainly want some information. There would be some merit in having orders of the day now, and later reverting to motions.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that while the right hon. gentleman's proposal is an understandable one, and in a sense a very reasonable one, I should have thought that perhaps the debate we were having yesterday would be concluded very shortly, because I would think everything that could be said for or against the report of the committee has been said.

We have had one vote, and if we could have the other two votes this morning we could dispose of it. Perhaps we could go on until lunch time and see what developments take place, and then if there is no possibility of finishing this debate today perhaps we could go on to orders of the day after the luncheon recess.

Mr. Speaker: If there is not unanimous consent I am obliged by the rules of the house to follow those rules.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Caron for concurrence in the second report of the standing committee on privileges and elections, and on the amendment thereto of Mr. Knowles.

Some hon. Members: Question.

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about the amendment under discussion at the present time. I realize that nothing I might say will change much for at this stage questions are pretty well settled. I say this openly and publicly, because it reflects my firm belief, and probably that of the public as well.

Mr. Speaker, before coming to the heart of the matter and speaking to the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), I wish to say that I apologize for my fellow French Canadians who, yesterday, have shown to the nation what stuff they are made of.

Actually, Mr. Speaker, I feel that yesterday you got in this house a fair sample of the political views of some French Canadians.

This day will remain forever in the annals of parliament as a typically bitter fight between French Canadians which simply made me sick.

I think we could blame the Speaker for not having put a stop with a firm hand to this brotherly slaughter, because he allowed some members to stray completely from the subject.

But, on the other hand, I think that the Speaker deserves to be thanked, because he wanted to give us a sample of what some of our fellow French Canadians can do and say. I shall never forget it as long as I live.

Mr. Speaker, I disagree with the conclusions of the committee on privileges and elections because its members have not dealt with the case in point. You should be mindful of the fact that the committee was asked simply to reach a decision as to the recognition of the party. Yet, sidetracking the issue completely, the committee set themselves to the task of determining the order of precedence of the various opposition parties in this house, which was precisely the task assigned to the Speaker, following the conclusions reached in the committee's report on the recognition of the different opposition parties.

And as a final conclusion to its work, the committee is asking counsel to settle the one and only question on which the committee was supposed to make a decision.

Mr. Speaker, I suspect the members of the committee on privileges and elections were badly informed. And to substantiate that impression, I submit that the most important piece of evidence in the matter was almost intentionally put aside. I refer to the statement signed by the 12 members who are giving their support to the new leader in this house, the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), and repudiating the former one, the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson).

Great efforts were made at all the meetings of the committee to produce a letter from our present leader in the house, the hon. member for Villeneuve, in which he was just stating the results of the various steps taken by the 13 members since the Granby convention.

The hon. member for Lapointe, the only representative of our party on the committee—whereas the party of the hon. member for Red Deer had two representatives, although it has fewer members than our group—did try to produce that essential proof, but he had great difficulty—in fact he was nearly prevented from giving evidence by the committee chairman himself—to say anything about it.

We suspect that everything was done so that the situation would not be clarified before the committee. That is why it is our duty to say to the house what really happened, so that all those present may still believe in the rights of the members in this chamber and judge the matter impartially.

Mr. Speaker, I read with great attention the minutes of proceedings and the evidence given to the committee on privileges and elections. I did not attend regularly the proceedings of the committee, except for five or six minutes at a time. When I saw the absurdity of these proceedings, I left in a hurry.

There are some good points, some less good and some bad in these reports of the committee on privileges and elections. After sifting all its verbosity, and leaving out all the unnecessary words and evidence, there remain three facts that may serve my argumentation.

I want to speak of the basic argumentation held by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I shall use also the evidence, given by the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Leboe), to refute the proposal made by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Girouard) in conjunction with the Liberal members.

All day yesterday there was mention of the legal rights of the parties. Some petty French Canadians even cried in the house that it was our duty not to grant the rights and privileges our group is entitled to because that was against the law. Well, let those people show us beyond any doubt that legally third parties do not exist in the British parliamentary procedure. The whole matter is definitely based on that point.

Mr. Speaker, if one reads carefully the statements and information, especially the one presented by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, as well as the other statements, one realizes how ridiculous is that petty political fight, which I shall denounce throughout the province.

They say that as a group we are not entitled to our privileges. Well, Mr. Speaker, if that is not filibustering or the worst kind of muzzling ever seen in this parliament, I wonder what it is.

What did the hon. member for Labelle say, he who claims to be the champion of the rights and laws of parliament? On page 24 of the same report he is quoted as saying:

> As Mr. Girouard said, there are in the constitution, in the British North America Act, or in law no precedents anywhere which lay down criteria, standards, definitions and conditions as regards parties.

When the hon. member for Labelle claims that there is nothing to determine that and then pretends to defend the law and legal principles here, I wonder on what kind of an argument he can base such an idiotic statement as the one he made to the committee.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre goes on:

> Parties are national organizations formed by Canadian citizens. They do not exist in the House of Commons. They exist in the House of Commons as members of parliament, as groups.

And not as a party. Such is the law. Those who try to evade the law do so to play politics. But to promote justice, one must comply with the law and this is the last point I wish to make today.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre continues:

> I suggest that the most dangerous thing we could do would be for the House of Commons by a majority vote to decide that parties A, B and C are official parties in Canada and parties D, E and F are not.

That is just what you did, and what you are doing now; you want another party to decide what only your party has the right to determine.

And the member for Winnipeg North Centre says:

> No need for me to quote historical examples for that kind of thing.

Then, he pursues his argument by saying, as you may see on that same page 24 of the report:

> The group supporting Mr. Caouette is actually asking the House of Commons to take a decision as to who of the two is the party leader.

Please note that in the request of the hon. member for Villeneuve, the latter addresses himself to Mr. Speaker, advising him of the fact that we are a group, and asking him to be so kind as to recognize us, which is the object of his letter.

And the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre adds:

> In internal matters—
> If the Conservative party asked the House of Commons to decide who is the leader, Mr. Diefenbaker or Mr. X, or if the Liberals or ourselves asked such question, we would be told that it is none of our business—
> The internal business of Social Credit has been explained to us. It is not up to us to take any decision in this matter. It is not for us to decide whether a federal Canadian party is official or not.

It seems to me that we have here a rather clear interpretation of the law, so that each hon. member may intelligently and, more particularly, legally decide for himself.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre also said:

> We have to decide, on the evidence, how many groups or members there are in the house and then, having made a decision on that, we will have to decide on the recommendations to be made to the Speaker concerning the precedence of each group and the seating arrangement.
> Although there are no citations supporting the contention that parties exist in the House of Commons on any official basis, there are a couple of citations that support the fact that we are various groups. I have here a citation from Beauchesne which, I hope, Mr. Beauchesne will let me read in one of the official languages of the country.
> In section 20, page 17 of Beauchesne, fourth edition, there is a judgment which was made a long time ago, and in order to tell the whole story I had better read it. He says:
> The members who do not support the government and do not belong to the opposition party should all be considered as Independents.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that it is the very crux of the matter. A thorough examination of the rules and regulations allow one to realize that, actually, there are only in this house two official groups which can really be called parties, that is to say the party in office and the official opposition. The other so-called parties are merely groups which are reconized through the courtesies of parliament. That is how we should really interpret our rules and regulations.

It is all very well to fool around with the term "party", but actually, one may only speak of a third party by extending the courtesies of this house to the second, third and fourth opposition groups. It is a question of courtesy, and nothing more.

That is why the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) added:

When I first came to the House of Commons, Mr. King used to quote this often and he was very reluctant to grant to the C.C.F. and Social Credit parties of that day the courtesies which he granted them later on. Even Mr. Beauchesne had to admit certain facts... I think... we have to decide... but, let us not commit the folly of deciding by a majority vote of the members, which are official parties and which are not.

In regard to what constitutes a party, I believe, in view of the interpretation of the English law, that there is no use for the three minor groups, on this side, to use the word party as a legal word; it is extended to them only as a matter of courtesy.

This is the reason why I was saying a while ago that the main argument that could be raised is that if the Liberal party, if all the Liberal members, had stopped playing politics in order to treat this situation strictly from a legal point of view I really believe that they would not have been so hasty in reaching a decision.

Mr. Speaker, the second point to which I would like to draw the attention of the house is a statement by the member for Cariboo (Mr. Leboe). The hon. member upheld the theory in regard to the protection of the electorate. The member for Cariboo said, as shown on page 34 of the same committee report:

[Text]

I think we here must protect our electorate in regard to anything we have before us.

[Translation]

A little further he added:

[Text]

The rights and privileges of the electorate must be protected.

[Translation]

If we want to protect the rights and privileges of the electorate I wonder whether we should not start by protecting the rights and privileges of those whom this same electorate has chosen. My electors voted for Social Credit, through the Ralliement du Credit social. I owe it to myself to respect the views of my electors. I am convinced that my electors would never have forgiven me, after I was elected under the label of the Raillie-ment du Credit social or the Social Credit, if I had associated with the Liberals in the house in order to form a compact entity.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to quote part of the resolution submitted by a Liberal member; that resolution does not stand up once it is explained, but I should like to quote a brief passage of what was said by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Turner). He stated, as found on page 36 of the same report:

Mr. Chairman, I will follow the example of Mr. Drouin, if I might, who said that we are acting here as a jury.

That is quite an interesting little passage because the committee claims for itself the role of a jury.

If you wish, Mr. Speaker, let us find out together how a committee can be officially considered to be a court of inquiry when it does not carry its assignment further. If it is to be a jury, as suggested by Mr. Drouin, first of all it should have at least the basic attribute of a tribunal made up of a jury and a presiding officer. All members of the jury should meet certain essential conditions such as integrity and the absence of any family or political ties with the accused.

Above all, the jury should not be at the same time prosecutor and judge. I am asking myself whether this committee, this little tribunal, is not fundamentally wrong? I still wonder whether the majority of members of this committee do not have preconceived ideas, whether they have not prejudged the case? Why have they strayed from the right road throughout the whole inquiry and then, out of breath, decided to pass the burden to somebody else?

I believe that those who have voted for us in that committee were those whose sole purpose was to unearth truth, so that justice might prevail. And I thank them from the bottom of my heart for, though few details were available to them, they have succeeded in unearthing the truth.

Are you led into that frantic dance of lost pains by your national conscience or by fear of the electorate?

Who is acting most ridiculously in this hullabaloo? Well, take a good look at yourselves, gentlemen. You are merely the shadow of yourselves and the people who elected you to represent them here will never forgive you your political dictatorship.

If we consider the political status—

Mr. Loiselle: What a fine written speech.

Mr. Gauthier: I can write my speeches but you do not seem to be able to, since you have not spoken yet.

If we consider the political status of our opponents in that committee, we note that when the question was put, all the Liberals—please note that, Mr. Speaker—all the Liberals, plus two Thompson supporters, denied the right of representation and consequently the right of speech to the hon. member for Villeneuve's party.

An hon. Member: How come you are speaking at this moment?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I am asked why we are speaking.

An hon. Member: You have been speaking for two days.

Mr. Gauthier: I am speaking as an individual but what we are demanding is the right of speech for our group. I know that some Liberals have not yet been able to make that distinction, which goes to prove that there are still in this house people with narrow views because of partisanship.

Mr. Speaker, I forgive the first Thompson supporter, the hon. member for Cariboo. I realize that being born an English speaking person and being a member of the other group which all along tried to overwhelm the hon. member for Villeneuve, he drew the normal conclusion from his yearnings.

But when I see the hon. member for Lebel—

Mr. Girouard: Labelle.

Mr. Gauthier: The hon. member for Labelle, a man for whom I worked myself, I am greatly disappointed to see that he has stooped so low; I cannot understand him. When I see that alleged French Canadian, conscious or not of organized injustice and even voluntarily taking part in that anti-French Canadian dispute all I can logically feel towards him is aversion.

The hon. member for Lebel—

Mr. Girouard: Labelle.

Mr. Gauthier: The hon. member for Labelle takes exception to the name the Ralliement des creditistes, even though he knows that his argument is unfounded and untrue. Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that the hon. member for Labelle knows beyond any doubt that his argumentation is false and that he is playing upon words, because Bill C-91 does not impose any condition upon house leaders of the various groups.

Why then—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted to make a comment at this stage, I should like to call your attention to the fact that the hon. member for Roberval has claimed that we wanted to restrict his right to speak. Now, he has been talking for more than 30 minutes, and I am of the opinion that the house would be willing to grant him all the time needed to pursue his remarks.

Mr. Gerard Girouard (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I did not think it was worth while but, since the hon. member still has a few minutes left, I would ask him to withdraw the words "the hon. member knows beyond any doubt that his argumentation is false". I feel that is overdoing it.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to withdraw them, since I just thought he knew it.

Mr. Speaker, I thank my good friend the Minister of Public Works—

An hon. Member: Friend?

Mr. Gauthier: Yes, my good friend. Have I any enemies in this house?

Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister, but I should like him to know that it is as one of its members that I am granted by this house the right to speak, and that is something I never denied.

As members of parliament, we have our liberty, and I have said it a while ago to your friends. However, how can you establish that difference; it is our liberty and our rights as a group that we want. Can you rise to that level?

Mr. Speaker, I understand that the group of the Ralliement des creditistes is certainly superior to a group of 11, and I have heard the younger members of the group saying that they only claimed their rights; but they were never denied their rights; they have their rights as a group. But why do those men whom we started in politics and are now trying to beat us refuse to grant us our rights? And the hon. member for Labelle is the first one to do so.

Mr. Chapdelaine: I went to Roberval.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I hear the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Chapdelaine) saying that he was campaigning in my riding. Let me say no more, since everybody knows the respect I have for him. Besides, it is better that I say nothing, and he knows it.

Some hon. Members: You had better not talk about that.

Mr. Gauthier: Yes, it is better, in order to protect him. In fact, I even protect my enemies.

Mr. Speaker, why does the committee refuse to recognize the group of the hon. member for Villeneuve and impose conditions to them? I see only one reason, and that is that the hon. member for Lebel—

Mr. Girouard: Labelle.

Mr. Gauthier: It is that the hon. member for Labelle is a member of a group that is willing to make every concession to the Liberals, provided the present government refuses the right to speak to the only French Canadian group legally representing the French Canadian voters in this house. It is disgusting, but that is what that group has given evidence of, by systematically uniting with the others to muzzle us.

Mr. Speaker, I ask of all those who consider the small trips which were granted to our fellow citizens, I am of the opinion that this is too high a price for a few moments of glory.

Mr. Speaker, I ask of all those who consider justice above their partisanship to have a human thought.

You, former creditistes, have always been told that in the Social Credit party, principles should rank higher than people. The first of those principles is that a true creditiste holds that his very first responsibility is to the people who have elected him.

Believe me, Mr. Speaker, I have nothing against—

An hon. Member: It is the Ralliement.

Mr. Gauthier: Yes, it is the Ralliement not Social Credit that got you elected, and that is what we have been trying to have you understand, but it seems that as far as the hon. member for Labelle is concerned, that is impossible.

Mr. Speaker, I do not bear any grudge against the hon. member for Red Deer. He is an excellent man, a nice guy as we say back home. In fact, he is such a nice guy that he gives himself and ourselves to everyone.

I have to reprove seriously my fellow citizens. We have been fighting for the recognition of the French fact for months. Looking at certain French Canadian jokers who take pleasure in knocking their brothers because they were bold enough to demand their right to speak, I am sometimes ashamed of my race.

Mr. Speaker, we have been lowered to that level by politickers who have always used us. And to think that they are ready to revise our constitution. What a bunch of jokers. They should go and hide elsewhere to perpetrate their contemptible actions. They should no longer profane this house by their servility. As a French Canadian fellow citizen I say to them: return to your water-carrying chores. It is not with people of their kind that we will have a bilingual country, a constitution which will guarantee the rights of the two great races, and that we will succeed in shaping a strong Canada based on two great cultures.

And, in order to be fair to everybody, I now want to commend not only those who voted, but those who had the courage not to vote in order to prevent one of their French Canadian fellow citizens from speaking in this house. I commend them for having had this courage as I shall blame those who had the cheek, under the pretext of an inexisting law, to deprive a group of fellow citizens of their right of speech in the house.

It would certainly be of interest to the house to know what the committee could not know.

We are a political party—and when I say political party, I always mean it in a legal sense, and not the way other opposing parties see it: a political party by courtesy—because we were elected as Social Credit members through the Ralliement des creditistes, which is a provincial organization interested in federal politics. As a matter of fact, this is the case for each of the provinces, and the Alberta and British Columbia groups are no exception, because their members were also elected by their respective provincial organizations. To the contrary of other parties, with us, it is the provincial organizations which see to the election of their members. Each provincial organization is autonomous. That is why those younger Social Crediters who say that they have been elected through the Ralliement des creditistes are completely mistaken.

In short our federal party is a national party comprising all provincial organizations, as it has always been maintained throughout Canada with regard to the two ethnical groups.

It is somewhat difficult for members of the old parties who have experienced only the melting pot to understand. Someone will say: but there was a split. Well, that, again, is true. It happened after a legally convened meeting at the Granby convention, on the unanimous recommendation of nearly 1,500 delegates, when we had 19 members from Quebec who had been elected through the Ralliement des creditistes. I want to stress that the reasons for our acting in this way are connected with the administration of our party, and I do not care to discuss those reasons here, as some hon. members did yesterday. Those reasons are, as I say, of an internal nature. We acted legally and that is why we are asking Mr. Speaker to do what he has to do when there is a majority vote.

We found, to our regret, that we had to depose our former parliamentary leader, and I repeat "former parliamentary leader" because our opponents are always playing on the words "national leader" and "parliamentary leader". We had to depose our parliamentary leader in order to replace him by a new one, the hon. member for Villeneuve.

Please note that I do not question the right of the hon. member for Red Deer to affiliate himself with another party, but when he makes commitments on behalf of the whole party, then I cannot go along with him. And I say to him, in a quite friendly spirit, as I say to those French Canadians whose confidence and respect he has kept: Stop that game, stop trying to usurp other people's property. After all, it is our group, the group from Quebec, which has created the present Social Credit movement.

We say: "Go on, but leave us our clothes." You see, we do not ask much, leave us our rights as a group.

You have more to do to find someone to your own image and likeness. Why not cross to the other side of the house; go back to your Liberal brothers. The chance of survival for your group is on the other side, although it will cause some small inconvenience to those who will accept you, because some are so much tinted in blue that they will stand out a little.

We feel no bitterness against anyone and we want only one thing: that each member enjoy fully his rights and privileges as concerns his group.

You recognized the rights of the group of 11 and you refuse the same rights to a group of 13, therefore a majority group.

All responsible papers shout fallacy and injustice. Throughout its history, Canada has never witnessed such a gag being imposed on a group of French Canadians in this parliament by a Liberal government. For us, we shall never—and please pay attention to those words—we shall never dare deprive another group of its rights to speak in this house.

Through the doubtful doings of the committee, under cover, to hide the truth to which several still sincere members of that committee were entitled, a purely political purpose was achieved, that of killing a potential political enemy. In fact, for the old parties, the member for Red Deer represents no danger at all, but the member for Villeneuve is a man to beat. I doubt that the Liberals have been deceived, and that, you know it very well. The battle is fought for that sole purpose.

I claim that this ridiculous situation has lasted too long already, as shown by your behaviour in the house. We might think this is a perfect Babel.

One day you vote for one thing, the other day, you vote precisely for the contrary. In this house, a strong majority vote imposes a gag on us, so as to stop us from speaking, to deny our political party the right to its privileges, and, two days later, in this same house, remorsefully, a unanimous vote restores to us the rights which had been so arbitrarily taken away. Through partisanship, you vote for a blatant injustice. But the next day, fearing public opinion, which shows its disgust in all the newspapers, as well as over the radio and on television, you are forced to back down.

They give the impression that Canada suffers from paralysis.

It is not by shouting at the top of their voice "I am a French Canadian, I am of French Canadian descent", that they will be useful to their race but rather by working in close co-operation with their brothers.

It is not by using the whip on their brothers that they will become great Canadians. It is rather by taking all the means at their disposal to defend them, in spite of their faults and whatever their party.

It is not over the dead body of their brother, knocked down without pity, that they will be able to proclaim themselves the champions of French Canada, but rather by fighting unswervingly and legally beside him until victory is achieved.

As far as we are concerned—and the people are with us—we admire all Canadians of both ethnical groups who have built this Canada of ours, so long as both groups hold themselves upright, with their heads high.

I despise servility in anybody.

All possible weapons have been used in the past few months. The latest one is the famous English formula: Take your time. I have always seen in that formula a lethal weapon against the aspirations of French Canadians, both in the federal parliament and throughout Canada. In French, we have another formula: Le temps vient à bout de tout—confederation of 1867 is a striking example of that.

Indeed, if you take a close look, what is left of the rights which were guaranteed to us by the constitution? There remains so little that we are wondering whether it would not be better to write an entirely new constitution. The "take your time" formula has worn away everything.

Mr. Speaker, we are a group of 13 French Canadians who were duly elected as Social Credit members, it should not be forgotten, by supporters of the Ralliement des creditistes.

Go throughout Quebec and people who are the least bit sincere will tell you that that is the honest truth.

Consequently, our election is just as good as that of the 11 followers of the hon. member for Red Deer. We are in greater number and we have seniority over them through our leader, the hon. member for Villeneuve.

We demand the same rights and privileges as members of other parties in the house.

We do not recognize the present committee's authority to determine whether or not we form a party, whether we are black or white.

We ask you, Mr. Speaker, to use the authority of your office to recognize us as such. I do not believe that any Speaker has ever required that someone be born again in order to be recognized in this house. This new procedure only exists under the present government.

I shall publicly accuse the Liberals of denying freedom of speech to those entitled to it under the constitution. I shall accuse them of playing petty politics by interfering with matters of no concern to them if they do not correct our situation right away.

We ask for the last time the support of all our French Canadian fellow citizens, regardless of their political party, as well as the co-operation of every sincere and fair English speaking member.

This matter is much more far reaching than you think. This is no laughing matter, Mr. Speaker. This might be the first step towards national understanding, just as it might be the last step towards final disunity.

The province of Quebec and all French speaking Canadians follow closely what is going on in this parliament where, for the first time perhaps in our history, such a large group of French Canadians decide to speak out in this house, the heart of the nation, to insist on their rights that would not even be denied to coloured people.

With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, I say that this is our own business and not that of other parties. If we, a group of French Canadians, have decided to change our parliamentary leader, it was also our right. We are the founders of this party which had not one member left since the wash-out in the west.

For the reasons I have just stated and many more still, of which the committee should have been aware before submitting the report now before the house, we were forced to depose our previous leader. I rightly say that we have deposed him by means of a majority vote. I do not think that at that point we had to seek the advice of all parties in the house. We chose a new parliamentary leader and I do not believe that any member in this house had anything to say in the matter.

What prompted us to take such action? After taking the vote. Bear in mind that it was after taking the vote, and this is what the committee did not understand. After taking the vote to change our leader, we decided to choose a new name.

We informed the Speaker of our new situation, so that he may indicate to the house our present status.

I am even quite surprised that the Speaker did not think that he should assume his responsibilities. It is obvious that he should have assumed them because, the matter having been referred to the committee, the latter shows by its report that it was quite unqualified to render a decision and proves by referring the whole matter to the internal economy commissioners.

Are you not of the opinion, Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, that you should have referred the matter to that committee yourself? In so doing, you would have avoided all that petty politics which only gives a further opportunity to the older parties to sharpen their swords.

You can surely see that the responsibility for the loss of time does not lie with us—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gauthier: —but rather with those who refused to assume their responsibilities and also with those who did not mind their own business.

I am telling you all this, Mr. Speaker, without any preconceived idea, but rather to confront you with the facts which are so often altered by some politicians. This way, I hope that with the help of the legal counsel, you will be able, Mr. Speaker, to redress the immeasurable wrong caused to this party by treating it fairly and granting it the protection of the law.

I agree that one may value his party, Mr. Speaker, but to let partisanship create such an illegal situation is above all reasonable thinking.

We recognize, once again, to all the parties in the house the right to exist and that is why we simply request reciprocal consideration. Who can accuse us of demanding too much when we claim that right?

Mr. Speaker, we hold no grudge against our colleagues who have followed the hon. member for Red Deer. We will not even banish them, since they will be judged by the voters. But we are accusing them of joining those who refuse to acknowledge the rights and privileges of French Canadians, who deprive them of their right to speak, the right to organize and group themselves, in short the right to speak in the name of that group to other French Canadians.

It is solely on that point that I blame my fellow countrymen and I ask all French speaking people in Canada to judge them in the proper light.

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, further to some remarks I made yesterday, I should like to say a few words in answer to certain assertions that were made yesterday by a few hon. members, especially by those seated to my right.

The Liberal party thought it wise yesterday, as the hon. member for Lapointe pointed out, to call on their own backbenchers to deal with the problem relating to Social Crediters. At no time has a government or a political party assumed such an uncompromising, such an arrogant attitude toward a group of members duly elected by the voters of their respective counties.

Mr. Speaker, I have often heard the Liberals assert strongly throughout the country their deep respect for the individual rights of Canadians, and their attachment to freedom and security. Today, it is the same Liberals who refuse to recognize the rights of a group of 13 members. They admit in private that we are right. They go even further as was shown by those who spoke yesterday, including the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Turner). They are convinced that we are right to demand official recognition of our group in the house.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I believe in what I said last night.

Mr. Caouette: He sticks to his beliefs outside but I say that he defends them here only as a matter of form because we have discussed the matter together.

Mr. Speaker, in support of my claim that those people are arrogant and that they have two attitudes, one within and one without parliament, I should like to quote an extract of the report submitted by the standing committee on privileges and elections under the chairmanship of the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron). On page 76, the hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett) is reported as saying:

> I might go on with my other point, and then I will be glad to answer questions, because I think that the two points are related. My second point is that, in my mind, at any rate, and I think in the minds of many other people, the group under Mr. Caouette is very well organized. It is not simply a group of independents. They have their own leader, their own whip and their own house leader, I suppose. They have become a very well organized group.

The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George was present.

> The group under Mr. Caouette is a very well organized group.

I thank her for that consideration. It is well organized in the house and especially well organized outside the house.

> It is not simply a group of independents. They have their own leader, their own whip and their own house leader, I suppose. They have become a very well organized group.

This was before the vote yesterday.

> They should be allowed...certain rights and privileges in the House of Commons as a fairly numerous and organized group. I would argue, for example, whether or not they should be invited to speak on the usual round of speeches, time consuming though this is, in the address in reply and so on. I do not think that, in this case, there are any rules for us to go on.

A little further on, she states:

> I think that to be realistic, practical and fair we should treat the members of parliament under Mr. Caouette's leadership as an organized group and they should therefore be allowed to speak in turn and to enjoy certain other privileges in the house.

Those are the words of the hon. member for Northumberland in the committee on privileges and elections, but once the hon. lady was in the house yesterday, she voted against that assertion, that decision. Such is the prevailing mentality at the present time.

[Text]

Miss Pauline Jewett (Northumberland): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, it is quite true that I said that, and I believe still that it is an organized group. However, we are now discussing the amendment, which is the seating problem. The hon. member has not referred—and this is my question of privilege—to what I said also in committee on the matter of seating. I then enunciated the theory that many of us have adhered to, namely that his group was a breakaway group and should sit at the bottom of the table, I think the phrase was.

We are now discussing the seating order, and this is the matter raised by the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, not the question which is now being raised. I should like it brought to the attention of the house that further on in those same remarks I said that I thought the organized group then under the leadership of the hon. member for Villeneuve should sit in fourth place on the other side of the house.

Mr. Caouette: May I thank the charming lady, the hon. member for Northumberland, for the statement she has just made. I agree that in her statement before the committee she said that she wanted us to sit at the end of the house, but at the same time—and I now go on in French again—she said:

[Translation]

In case any doubt should remain, I am personally in favour of deleting section 4 from Mr. Girouard's proposal and keeping the first three sections, while dealing today with a separate amendment pertaining to a question of privilege.

That is what we voted on last night—precisely on the subamendment requesting the withdrawal of part 4.

An hon. Member: The amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) was accepted.

Mr. Caouette: No, the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was not put to a vote. And, by the way, since the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron) is rising to take part in the debate, I will say that if the committee came up with such a decision, it is precisely because the hon. member for Hull, who was the chairman of that committee treated the movement I represent in the house with exceptional arrogance.

[Text]

Miss Jewett: Mr. Speaker, if I may again raise a point of privilege, it seems to me that this is a misrepresentation and that we should have the record quite straight. The subamendment introduced yesterday by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre—

Some hon. Members: No.

Miss Jewett: I am sorry; the subamendment introduced yesterday—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. This is obviously not a question of privilege. This is argument, and the hon. member will have the opportunity to speak in the course of the debate. She cannot present an argument at this time.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

As I said yesterday, the committee's terms of reference were not to decide where we should sit but rather whether our group of 13 members should be recognized as such or not. That is all the committee had to do. Well, they decided to have some fun, to hold a trial. The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Girouard) and the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Leboe) were asked by the committee to run down the group to which I belong and which I lead in this house. It was said that the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) had been invited. That is correct, but as an observer, and he was denied the right to vote. He was allowed to speak but he was deprived of his right to vote.

Mr. Speaker, we have—

Mr. Jean Chretien (St. Maurice-Lafleche): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member for Villeneuve has just said that the member for Lapointe did not have the right to vote in the committee. That is wrong. Recorded votes were taken and he was given the right to vote in the committee.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but, in my opinion, there is no question of privilege.

I suggest that the hon. member for Villeneuve be allowed to proceed.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, to continue my remarks, I maintained yesterday that the press in general, in Canada, is wondering why such unfairness is shown one group in the house. We are not denied the right to speak; but on an official or important statement by the government, is it not true that I was denied an opportunity to speak here, supposedly because our group was not recognized. We even asked that the question be put to the house on that occasion and the Liberal members voted against my being allowed to speak in this house. Two days later, out of courtesy, the member for Lapointe and myself were allowed to speak. What was the reason for this change of attitude? I do not know. One thing is certain, and the hon. members opposite know it, the electors in our ridings, not only mine, but the Canadian electors are shocked to see the flippant way in which a group of 13 creditistes of the province of Quebec are treated in this house.

I will quote the Montreal Star, which is not a creditiste newspaper, but one which favours the existence of only two parties in Canada. This is what the Montreal Star of October 10 had to say:

[Text]

The privileges committee of the House of Commons has probably settled nothing by its decision about parliamentary seating of the splinter parties. On the one hand they have declared that because the Social Credit split took place between elections, it should not be recognized. Mr. Thompson's group therefore remains the official parliamentary Social Credit party even though it contains fewer members than the creditiste wing. On the other hand, though not recognizing the split for one purpose, it accepts it for another: the committee elevates the New Democratic party to No. 3 place, above the split Social Crediters.

Where is justice in that?

It is impossible not to wonder what would have been decided if the split had been in either the Liberal or Conservative party, and on a much bigger scale. Let us suppose, for instance, that the Conservatives had split up, with Mr. Diefenbaker leading 40 members while Mr. Harkness led a group of 50. Who would then be Leader of the Opposition? Would the committee have decided that, because the split took place between elections, Mr. Diefenbaker got the nod?

Much of the argument about the credentials and reality of a political party in which the committee indulged was probably beside the point. Mr. Thompson became national leader of the Social Credit party at a time when the party's hope ran high that it would elect members all over Canada. In the event, it was Mr. Caouette in Quebec who delivered the goods at the polls, not once but twice. Without the creditistes, the parliamentary Social Credit party would have amounted to nothing but a tiny handful.

[Translation]

And a little further:

[Text]

More will be heard of this dispute, for the unruly temper of the House of Commons is likely to become worse before it gets better. This newspaper does not like Social Credit theory.

[Translation]

He does not like Social Credit. But such is not the case for my hon. friend from Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey), who likes it.

[Text]

In so far as Mr. Thompson and Mr. Caouette believe and advocate this theory, we don't like either of them. If they fall out, it weakens the Social Credit case in the country, which is all to the good.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: At least, no one would contend that it is a creditiste newspaper.

[Text]

But so long as Mr. Caouette has a faithful parliamentary following bigger than that of Mr. Thompson, Mr. Caouette is entitled to believe that he has been ill done by in the committee on privileges.

[Translation]

That is an article which appeared in the Montreal Star. There is also a Toronto newspaper, the Telegram, which is not a supporter of the Social Credit doctrine, as the Liberals know very well. It keeps describing me as a demagogue everywhere, in Toronto and across Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Caouette: The hon. member for St. Maurice-Lafleche (Mr. Chretien) might, at least, be serious. I understand that the hon. member is most intelligent, but at this time he is like a two-year old child. Mr. Speaker, let him not behave like this in his riding, because he would certainly never come back here. Mr. Speaker, the Toronto Telegram, says this:

[Text]

It is fun to bait and thwart a demagogue like Real Caouette; no doubt the Liberals and Conservatives in parliament are enjoying it immensely. But it is a stupid game dangerous to parliament and the nation, when the demagogue has a good case.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I do not admit being a demagogue, but I admit I have a good case.

[Text]

Mr. Caouette has a good case for the recognition of his creditistes as a parliamentary party. Indeed, the Liberals and Conservatives appear to be violating the spirit if not the letter of a law passed only last July, which implies that a group with 12 members or more is entitled to party status in parliament. Mr. Caouette has 12 followers, and with him they form a party as distinct from the others as anyone could wish. But the government, backed by the official opposition, goes on according precedence to Robert Thompson and his 10 Social Crediters.

This does not accurately state the situation, but this article was written on October 9. We do appreciate the support we received yesterday from both the other opposition parties in this house.

An hon. Member: They may change it.

Mr. Caouette: The hon. member for Medicine Hat may join our group in the house, so there may be a change. The article goes on to say:

This injustice gives Mr. Caouette a grievance which rural Quebec will easily understand.

Not only rural Quebec but urban Quebec also.

To the inflamed eye of a French Canadian nationalist, the sight of the non-French majority denying full rights to this group of Quebec M.P.'s may well look like another example of "Anglo-Saxon arrogance".

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, those are not my words; they are the words of the Toronto Telegram.

[Text]

Are the Liberals and Conservatives trying to create a French Canadian martyr at this time of strain between the founding peoples of our country? If not, they will cut short their foolish vendetta against Mr. Caouette and give him his deserved recognition immediately.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we are not trying to foster an internal struggle between French and English Canadians. As Canadians, we are trying to get the recognition to which we are entitled. When I hear the Liberals talk over and over again of their respect for liberty, the human rights, the Canadian bill of rights—

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, does the hon. member for Villeneuve permit me a question?

Mr. Caouette: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pigeon: A moment ago, the hon. member quoted a newspaper report saying that the Conservatives were in agreement with the government, that they were not for the recognition of his group. Well, in my opinion, this article is altogether wrong, because we believe in democratic freedoms; in other words, we do not want to act towards the opposition as they did behind the iron curtain.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm for drawing my attention to a fact which began to exist only yesterday.

As I said a moment ago, the writer of the report in question was probably not aware at the time of the Conservatives' attitude. Today, we can say quite frankly that the Conservatives have certainly given evidence of respect for democratic principles, which is much more than what the government did yesterday.

[Text]

Mr. Knowles: They changed their minds since the committee met.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I was saying a moment ago that the Liberals were boasting throughout the country of their attachment for democratic principles. In this connection, I would like to give you an example.

We have been accused of washing our dirty linen in public. If it had been possible to wash it among ourselves, in the Social Credit family, we would have done it.

In other words, we are accused of changing our stand. Well, what are the facts? Yesterday, I mentioned a letter sent by the member for Red Deer to the national executive of the Social Credit association. In the second paragraph, page 6, we can read this:

> Consideration should be given to changing the name of the national party.

Mr. Speaker, who is changing the name or wants to change the name? We, or the other organization?

I continue my quotation:

> In order to attain our purpose we shall probably have to find new means, without changing however our basic tenets. In that way, the public at large might find our purpose more acceptable.

Mr. Chapdelaine: Nothing has been changed yet.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I hear the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Chapdelaine) exclaim: "nothing has been changed yet". He at least has changed in the last few weeks, and we shall put things straight in his own county, with his constituents.

An hon. Member: A painful reception, indeed.

Mr. Caouette: The operation will not be in the least mysterious.

I quote:

> In order to attain our purpose, we shall probably have to find new means, without changing however our basic tenets. In that way, the public at large might find our purpose more acceptable. These affiliations of provincial associations of Social Crediters would show quite clearly that we are broadening our outlook, without sacrificing any of our basic principles. In so doing, we would obtain many new members, who might feel embarrassed today by the mere mention of the words "Social Credit" and by the false interpretation they were given of our financial program.

Mr. Speaker, we are able to support—

[Text]

Mr. Macdonald: On a point of order, I believe it would be in accordance with the rules of the house if the hon. member were to file or table the letter from which he was reading.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe I am required to make public all the contents of this letter. I wish to use a letter that was addressed to me and quote some excerpts. However, for the guidance of my hon. friend, if he wants to read the whole letter, he may come and see me anytime, today or next week, and I shall be happy to show him the whole letter.

Mr. Speaker, I also wish to draw attention to the fact that during the 1961 convention, when Mr. Manning, the premier of Alberta, was present, I was told by Mr. Manning, and the member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) was present, that the movement would never accept a Catholic French Canadian as leader. Mr. Speaker, at that time, we could not fall into step.

In fact, I may say that neither the Liberals nor the Conservatives would have uttered such words as regards a Catholic French Canadian. For their consideration, I bow to the Liberals, since they had, as head of their party and of the Canadian government, Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the right hon. Mr. St. Laurent, who were both Catholics. They were not chosen particularly because they were French Canadians. No. But because they were Canadians. No consideration was given to the religious aspect, were they Catholics, Protestants or something else. People simply looked to see if they were true Canadians.

Consequently, such discrimination on the part of the premier of Alberta could not be tolerated. I believe that the Liberals, French Canadians as well as English Canadians, would not have tolerated such a situation in their ranks. On the other hand, the Conservatives would not have tolerated it either.

We could no longer stand such a situation within the framework of Social Credit in Canada.

An hon. Member: Nevertheless, you campaigned twice.

Mr. Caouette: Not under his direction, and this for your information.

Mr. Speaker, I now wish to quote an article published in the newspaper Le Devoir, on October 12, 1963. I believe it is recognized that this is not a Social Credit newspaper, for in it have appeared numerous articles against the theory of Social Credit and against our organization. However, here is what it said:

Real Caouette is defending himself against an unfair treatment.

Whatever may have been the mistakes of the Caouette partisans, they are today perfectly justifiable to protest against the unfair treatment they are receiving.

When the Social Credit group, divided, came back to parliament on September 30, the Speaker, Mr. Alan Macnaughton, omitted, as was appropriate, to decide on the respective status of the Thompson faction and of the Caouette faction. He asked for instructions from the house, which referred the matter for consideration to one of its committees. That committee on privileges and elections was to determine the seating arrangement of the parties in the house and to define the status of the Ralliement des creditistes, the name taken by the 12 members faithful to Mr. Caouette.

The committee had only sat once when Mr. Caouette's followers, in order to speed up their party's recognition, decided to paralyse the business of the house. The move was premature, to say the least, and this they realized themselves two days later. Monday, they agreed to put an end to their obstruction, provided the committee would speed up its proceedings and reach a decision, which was done the following day. But for reasons which are hard to explain, the committee decided, 14 votes against 8, to grant precedence in the house to the Thompson group, which is smaller by two members than the Caouette group, and not to give recognition to the Ralliement des creditistes, because they had not withstood the test of a general election. Conservatives, N.D.P. members and the Caouette group opposed that decision, but Liberals and the Thompson group were in sufficient numbers in the committee to have it passed.

Since when do the members of parliament not have the right to interpret their mandate in the way they see fit after an election? Let the voters reject them at the next election if they are not satisfied—

Mr. Habel: That will be their lot after the next election.

Mr. Caouette:

Those are questions to which the committee did not seek an answer, the precedents being as scarce one way or the other. But we remember recent days when the Liberals had less scruples: when Mr. Hazen Argue or Mr. Ross Thatcher crossed the floor to join them or even when Mr. Marcoux quit the Social Credit at the beginning of the session.

Besides being unexplainable, the decision is quite unfair, since it deprives Mr. Caouette, although he leads a more representative group than Mr. Thompson of the right of speech on several occasions and of the right of representation on parliamentary committees. Therefore, the Caouettists are now justified to stand in self-defence and, if need be, to hold up the business of the house in order to obtain justice.

Some hon. Members: That is true.

Mr. Caouette:

It is to be hoped that the house will support them and repeal the committee's decision when the report is considered next week.

That report was by J. P. Fournier, of the newspaper Le Devoir.

Mr. Speaker, what we are asking for is absolutely legitimate. We will be blamed and held responsible again for the public business delays in the federal parliament—

An hon. Member: That is true.

Mr. Caouette: —when the whole fault is with the government in power, the Liberal government, since September 30.

I am saying and I am convinced that the whole thing was hatched and worked out underhand even before the committee made its report to the House of Commons.

Mr. Girouard: Remember Senator Drouin.

Mr. Caouette: I hear the hon. member for Labelle mention Senator Drouin. The hon. member is dishonest, because he has no right to talk here about things that do not and did not exist.

Mr. Speaker, I said yesterday and I repeat that the hon. member for Labelle would not be sitting in the House of Commons, had it not been for the Ralliement des creditistes of the province of Quebec which chose him as its candidate and had him elected in the April 8 election.

Mr. Habel: His Majesty Hitler.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I hear the hon. member of Cochrane (Mr. Habel) say: "His Majesty Hitler". His brain seems to have frozen in that northern Moosonee area on James bay, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Habel: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the hon. member for Villeneuve a question.

Mr. Caouette: Do ask your question by any means, if you can formulate one.

Mr. Habel: He who only mentions the remote area of Moosonee, he himself—

Mr. Caouette: What is your question?

Mr. Habel: Mr. Speaker, this is my question. Did you not run a Social Credit candidate in that remote spot you mentioned, and was he not soundly beaten, as I hope you will be in the next election?

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, you just heard the sort of question the hon. member for Cochrane can ask.

Mr. Habel: Would you answer my question?

Mr. Caouette: Grasp all its portent.

That question is no question at all.

Your question should rather be asked of the national organization. Mr. Speaker, if the question of the hon. member for Cochrane were intelligent, I would answer it. But I might, nevertheless, answer my excellent friend that the Liberal candidate in my own county lost his deposit. It is true that in the riding of the hon. member, the Social Credit candidate lost his deposit, but he was not my candidate. I have no candidate.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member can make all the interjections he wants; that is all the brainwork he is able to do in the house.

The newspaper Le Droit in Ottawa—

Mr. Boulanger: I suppose that you have a monopoly of brain?

Mr. Caouette: No, I have no monopoly of brain, but I like to give credit to those who have brains. But when somebody else has risen in the house, one should keep silent and let him talk.

Mr. Speaker, the paper Le Droit of October 10 last, said, in an article signed by Mr. Maurice Huot:

> A single paper, i.e. the Toronto daily Star, settled the discussion with the firmness of those who never have heard the word "doubt". In its October 8 edition, the paper wants the creditistes to be recognized under the act which defines political parties in the House of Commons and which was recently clarified by an amendment duly passed by the House of Commons and the Senate.
> That amendment provides an additional sum of $4,000 for the leader of each separate group. As Mr. Caouette heads a group of 13 members, whereas Mr. Thompson only has 11, it seems rather clear to the Toronto daily Star that there should be no useless shenanigans and that Mr. Caouette's group ought to be recognized.

There are several hon. members in the house who have some doubts with regard to that additional $4,000 indemnity, which, according to them, caused the division between the Thompson faction and ours.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I say here, before all assembled members—in order to show that the additional indemnity of $4,000 has nothing to do in this matter—that I am ready to leave this amount at your disposal, to be distributed to charitable works in Canada. It is as simple as that. There is no question at all in this dispute of this additional indemnity.

Mr. Habel: And the hon. member for Villeneuve will continue to collect funds.

Mr. Girouard: May I ask the hon. member for Villeneuve if he would mind to add the $8,000 against which he voted to this amount of $4,000, and also donate it for some charitable purpose, which would make a tidy little sum of $12,000?

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, as far as the additional $8,000 are concerned, the hon. member for Labelle may sleep in peace, I know how to use it. In the past, I unfortunately did use similar amounts, not only of $8,000, but much higher than that, to have some people elected like the hon. member for Labelle, for instance, which I deeply regret.

Those people—and the hon. member for Labelle will not contradict me, as he came to see me, in the house, every two or three days to ask me how he could become a convinced candidate of the Social Credit in the federal election. I supported him, and asked the members of his organization in his constituency, who did not want to support him, to accept him anyway as candidate at the forthcoming election.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Caouette: Do not say oh. The member for Labelle is well aware of that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would suggest to the hon. member for Villeneuve that he return to the subject he was dealing with in the early part of his speech.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, here is the point—

Mr. Boulanger: That's it, go ahead and tell him.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I can hear my learned friend opposite, and that reminds me of the little Chicago of 1946-48, whose job it was to always interrupt those who had the floor. It is a contest to find out who can utter the greatest nonsense. Those characters are holding such a competition to prevent members of the house from speaking.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I say that we are of our times and we wish to take a stand, in this chamber, for the small nations of the world, and that in the name of democracy and the rights of man, the right of all people, as well as all groups and individuals, to be free.

What do we say about Russia, for instance, which does not recognize the existence of small parties? We do not want communism. We do not want a Cuban-type organization. We do not want Castroism in Canada. Are not the Liberals acting toward us now exactly like that good man Khrushchev is doing in Russia and Castro is doing in Cuba? So much so that last night I told newspapermen: "I think it is becoming more and more obvious: red is as red in Moscow as it is in Ottawa and red is as red in Ottawa as it is in Moscow." That is the situation we find ourselves in when we are subjected to a kind of treatment like the one we now have to put up with in the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker, I notice that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer), the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) and the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) are in the house at present. I regret the absence of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) but I urge the federal leaders to remember the present position of their party and to stop telling hon. members, through their whip, how they should vote.

Let there be a free vote in the house to determine whether or not we care for democratic principles and whether or not in Canada men have the right to associate and to look after their own affairs. Let us recognize today man's right to form a party and be acknowledged as such. By doing that, the Liberals would be better accepted in Canada and all hon. members would have the respect of the Canadian electorate but, above everything else, they would command the respect of democracies throughout the world.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready to vote on the amendment to the main motion?

[Text]

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): If no hon. member, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Brewin: If no other member intends to address the house, Mr. Speaker, then I will forgo my right to do so.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: At least two hon. members, the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden) and the hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Côté), have indicated by rising that they wish to speak.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Rosthern is rising, indicating that he wants to speak.

Mr. Brewin: If that is so, I should like to exercise my privilege by speaking for approximately two minutes. I was a member of the committee on privileges and elections. I had no intention of speaking in this debate. My views were fully and, if I say so, admirably expressed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. However, I do desire now to take two or three minutes of the time of this house in making an appeal. Mind you, and I know there can be other views, in my view the report of the committee was politically unwise, logically indefensible and quite inconsistent with the best traditions of parliament and the rights of individual members.

However, Mr. Speaker, it would appear to me that the members of the Liberal party, with admirable unanimity, have made up their minds and no amount of eloquence, no amount of argument, is likely to change their minds. We have had eloquence galore. We have had arguments ad nauseum on this subject from both sides of the house. I am not in collusion with the Secretary of State, but as an individual and quite unofficial member of this house, for the sake of the country, for the sake of parliament, I urge that we get on with this matter and deal with the serious business that is facing this country. I heard only a few minutes ago that the S.I.U. I imagine in defiance of the expressed will of parliament, is out on strike. If that is correct, then this is the sort of problem crucial to this country with which we ought to be dealing. We have heard enough; for God's sake let's vote.

Mr. Pickersgill: Unless someone rises to take part in the debate, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me you have no option but to put the motion.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: No, Mr. Speaker, certain members of the Social Credit want to speak on the main motion.

[Mr. Brewin.]

I am sorry that this burns up the Liberal party, but we have decided to continue burning it up a little more.

Mr. Pickersgill: In this house surely each member must speak for himself.

It being 34 minutes after one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that a communication has been received which is as follows:

Ottawa, October 18, 1963

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Robert Taschereau, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, the 18th of October, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,
Esmond Butler,
Secretary to the Governor General.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SUGGESTED CHANGE IN ORDER OF BUSINESS

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I was asked at the opening of the session this morning by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition and the leader of the New Democratic party whether it would not be desirable to interrupt the debate which had been going on in order that certain questions on matters of urgency could be addressed to the government. I said, as you will recall, Mr. Speaker, that perhaps we could proceed and see what happened during the morning.

We have dealt with a subamendment and an amendment, and if the hon. gentleman who has the floor could give the house the assurance, provided he is in a position to do so and other hon. members do not object, that his will be the last statement on the matter and we can proceed then to the vote on the main motion, then I think we should do that and go ahead with orders of the day right after that. I wonder whether the hon. gentleman could give us that assurance.

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I think we would accept the proposition of the Leader of the Opposition to proceed with questions on orders of the day because we feel it is our duty to do so; but in order to try to solve the problem before us we have prepared an amendment to the main motion which we desire to bring forward this afternoon with a view to solving the problem. Therefore we will agree to having the question period now and then returning to motions.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the hon. member agrees to taking questions now and then wishes to go back to the debate in which we have been engaged. It was my proposal that we should suspend this particular debate, go on with orders of the day, proceed this afternoon as indicated last night and then return to the matter we are debating at the earliest possible date.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the hon. member for Lapointe has stated that he intends to move a further amendment, which apparently will result in further discussion, I wonder whether the Prime Minister would agree now to proceed to the orders of the day so that an opportunity would be provided to ask necessary questions at this time. It seems clear to me that on the basis of what has been stated by the hon. member for Lapointe the Prime Minister's hopes for the conclusion in a short time of the discussion on the seating arrangements are more sanguine than the facts warrant.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, that is agreeable, but we are also anxious to proceed with certain urgent business; not that the business we are talking about is not urgent, but I am thinking of the setting up today, as we indicated we would try to do, of the committee on procedure so it could get to work next week. We are all aware now of the importance of procedure. Therefore if the debate on this other matter drags on indefinitely we will have to reconsider the situation at that time.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to proceed to orders of the day?

Mr. Gregoire: Under the provision that we go back to motions after questions on orders of the day.

LABOUR RELATIONS

TRUSTEESHIP LEGISLATION—THREATENED MARCH ON OTTAWA BY S.I.U.

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he can bring the house up to date on any communications between the government and the President and secretary of labour of the United States in connection with the trusteeship legislation. Also, is the government aware of the fact, as I suggested when I spoke in the house on October 1, that if this legislation is proceeded with there is danger of a mass walkout of the S.I.U. workers? Furthermore, is the government aware of the threats made by the S.I.U., both in Montreal and Vancouver, to march on Ottawa by way of protest which, of course, will mean the holding up of shipping in those two ports?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I hope I will be able to deal with all the right hon. gentleman's questions, which are very important and of immediate urgency. The first question he asked, perhaps not the first but the one I have in my mind at the moment, was whether the government was aware of the danger that might be caused by the putting into effect of the government trusteeship legislation in view of the possibility of certain unions, or one union and the members of that union, taking exception to that legislation and attempting to destroy its effect. The government is very much aware of that danger, Mr. Speaker, and has been for some time. The danger would have been even greater if we had acted precipitously last July before we had attempted to bring about a private trusteeship.

The right hon. gentleman also asked whether I was aware of the development that had been reported today, namely a possible march on Ottawa by members of the S.I.U., and the action reported by their leaders in calling the seamen away from work and holding up shipping in that way. I have seen these reports, which must arouse not only great interest but great concern on the part of all members of the house and indeed of the country as a whole. The call to strike, if that is the right expression, and if it is not a strike it is a threatened strike, seems to have been issued in a bulletin called "Instruction Bulletin No. 1." I received this bulletin just before lunch. It is issued to members of the seamen's union by what is referred to as the seamen's rights committee of the seafarers international union of Canada. The instructions seem to be based on the assumption that the trusteeship law is in effect.

This, Mr. Speaker, of course is not the case. The law has passed all the stages of discussion in this house and has been approved by the Senate. It has not yet received royal assent, though I expect it will receive royal assent this afternoon. It will then not be in effect until it is proclaimed by the government. Although the law is not yet in effect, the government certainly does not intend to defer action in this regard because of the pressure that might be exerted on it, or attempted, by a strike or the threat of a strike. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, under certain circumstances that pressure would have the opposite effect.

I think the action called for by these instructions contained in bulletin No. 1 issued by this committee is especially to be condemned at this particular time when negotiations for a private settlement, and one that would be satisfactory to the Canadian government and the Canadian Labour Congress, have been resumed. They were resumed last Saturday and they give hope—I can certainly go that far—of an early and successful conclusion. To have this action taken by the union concerned when so much progress has been made in these resumed negotiations for a private settlement which would be satisfactory to both sides of the line and to the labour union organizations concerned, I think is a deplorable development. Certainly this kind of threat does not in any way facilitate these negotiations.

We are in touch with the United States at the government level, and I understand the union organizations are in touch with each other. I do not need to tell the house how difficult and delicate these negotiations are. I do not want to say anything at this time which would interfere in any way with a very early and successful conclusion.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like to ask a further question. In these discussions that are taking place, I take it at government level, is the United States insisting that on this trustee board there shall be United States labour representation? Is that the condition upon which the question will be determined as to whether or not a private arrangement can be concluded?

I should like also to ask the Prime Minister, since he has gone into quite a bit of detail, does he think that having legislation passed by both houses of parliament and negotiations thereafter has a weakening effect on the authority of parliament to pass this legislation? There still has to be royal assent given, but when royal assent is given does the government intend to proclaim the legislation, or simply to use it as a means of pressure to gain a trusteeship settlement that apparently is being considered at the moment?

Mr. Pearson: I think it would be very unwise for me to make public now the terms of the negotiations that are being conducted. I can give the right hon. gentleman the assurance that in any trusteeship arrangement that would be acceptable to this government, and I am sure to the people of this country, the determining voice in any board of trustees would have to be Canadian. There is no doubt about that.

I want to assure the right hon. gentleman we are proceeding in the normal way with our legislation. I understand that royal assent will be given to it this afternoon. If within the next day or two or over the week end there is an assurance of a satisfactory private trusteeship, the act will not be proclaimed until that assurance is removed. However, we are not going to suspend the operation of this act for long during these negotiations. I hope we will reach a successful conclusion within the next day or two. If that is possible, and I think it is possible, then surely it would be a great mistake to proclaim this act tomorrow.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I ask one more question. Is the determination of the personnel on this trustee board to be made at the direction of the United States?

An hon. Member: Stop that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I suggest to the hon. member that he read the editorial in the Financial Post today to see whether there is some justification for what I am saying. Is the government of the United States pressing for a trustee board that will have United States representatives on it for the determination of a Canadian question?

Mr. Pearson: The Canadian Labour Congress has been primarily concerned with the negotiations on the membership of the trustee board. The labour congress, as indeed the government of Canada, will make absolutely certain that the interests of Canada in connection with that board, in membership and everything, will be overriding.

An hon. Member: That is no answer.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Labour. Will the Minister of Labour confirm or deny Washington press reports to the effect that he has been in communication with the secretary of labour of the United States, Mr. Wirtz; and were those telephone conversations initiated by the secretary of labour of the United States or by himself?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): First of all I am not obliged, as is abundantly clear under the rules of the house, to confirm or deny any press report.

Mr. Starr: As a supplementary question, were these conversations that have been going on between the minister and the secretary of labour initiated by the secretary of labour of the United States or by himself?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the conversations that I have been conducting with the secretary of labour have gone on for a long period of time, and I just cannot recall now who put in the first telephone call.

Mr. Starr: We realize they have been going on for a long time, but new conversations have been initiated since the trusteeship bill was introduced in the House of Commons. Those are the ones to which I am referring.

Mr. MacEachen: Well, Mr. Speaker, the fact is that the conversations which I have had with the secretary of labour of the United States have been continuous conversations. They have not been broken off at such a point that there are several stages or chapters. This is not the case at all.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the matter that is concerning the house most acutely is the possibility of the seamen walking off the ships and preventing the transshipment of wheat at this very critical stage before freeze up. I would like to ask the Prime Minister what steps the government is taking now in anticipation of this happening, and what the government intends to do if there is a stoppage of shipping on the great lakes?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, every possible step that can be taken is being taken to prevent this happening.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Labour whether he intends to meet with Mr. Wirtz, Mr. Meany and Mr. Jodoin before proclaiming the trusteeship act.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, there are no plans on my part to meet with either or any of the three gentlemen mentioned.

Mr. Balcer: As a supplementary question, has the minister received any request from the S.I.U. to have an interview here in Ottawa with representatives of that union before the trusteeship act is proclaimed?

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker, I have received no such request.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister, concerning the negotiations for a private trusteeship to which he alluded a moment ago, are the negotiations going on now or have they been concluded?

Mr. Pearson: The negotiations are going on now, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Since the Prime Minister indicated that in the event of a private trusteeship being set up, Canada's interests would be overriding, does the minister not feel that his place should be with the negotiators in order that Canada's interests will be overriding? Further, as the government has a vital interest in this, is it not logical that he himself should be present at the negotiations?

Mr. Churchill: Who is doing the negotiating?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the comments of the Prime Minister can be interpreted to mean that as of this moment there are a group of men, composing a negotiating team, actually in session. That interpretation cannot be drawn from the Prime Minister's statement.

Mr. MacInnis: As a supplementary question, would the Prime Minister indicate to the house just what "negotiations going on at this time" does mean? The Prime Minister has indicated to the house that the negotiations are going on at present. I would like an interpretation of what "at present" means?

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member realizes that if the Prime Minister does not care to answer he is not obliged to do so under our rules.

Mr. Churchill: As a supplementary question to the Prime Minister, is the house to accept now the interpretation given by the Minister of Labour of the answer which the Prime Minister gave me a few moments ago? Will the Prime Minister confirm or deny that the Minister of Labour's interpretation is correct?

Mr. Pearson: How silly can you get?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, could I ascertain from the Prime Minister whether he has been in communication, on the telephone or otherwise, with the President of the United States during the last few days with reference to this matter?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, negotiations are going on at all levels.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That does not answer the question.

Mr. Chevrier: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Has he received the consent of the President of the United States to the plan that the government has in mind for the settlement of this matter?

Mr. Pearson: That question, of course, Mr. Speaker, is asked in the kind of offensive manner which indicates that a reply is not expected.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, is the fact that a reply is not given indicative of the fact that the hon. gentleman is waiting for the consent of the President of the United States?

Mr. Chevrier: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: Order.

Mr. Churchill: Jack Kennedy and Jack Pickersgill.

MONTREAL—THREATENED STRIKE BY HARBOUR BOARD POLICE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Labour what new steps are intended by his department to avoid a strike by the national harbour board police in Montreal; or is he going to wait until he has had an interview with Mr. Wirtz before making any decision in this case?

Mr. Pigeon: Or President Kennedy.

NORRIS COMMISSION—REPORT OF SPECIAL COUNSEL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Justice which I have asked previously, and which I think one other hon. member has inquired about since then. What progress has been made in the study of the special report made by the special counsel appointed by the Minister of Justice, regarding the Norris commission findings?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman knows, that question has been asked almost every other day—

Mr. Churchill: Let us have an answer.

Mr. Chevrier: —since I have received the preliminary report, and all I can say at this time is that the report is still under study.

Mr. Starr: Since the Minister of Justice has referred to this as a preliminary report, does he expect other reports to be presented by the special counsel in respect to this matter?

Mr. Chevrier: It may very well be that another report will be forthcoming after this one has been under study by the legal officers of the department and the two counsel who have been appointed.

Mr. Starr: In view of the interest of every hon. member of the house in what could be done in this area, would the Minister of Justice consider tabling the preliminary report?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, this is a preliminary report for the information of the minister, and I do not think it has been the practice to table such reports under these circumstances.

WHITE PASS AND YUKON RAILROAD—EFFORTS TO SETTLE STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have an urgent question for the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that railroad and shipping operations of the White Pass and Yukon route have now been tied up for 14 days, can the minister indicate whether he or his officials or anybody else in the government is going to do anything to assist in alleviating this situation?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I can only advise my hon. friend that I have nothing to add to what I told him several days ago in this connection.

[Later:]

Mr. Nielsen: I wish to direct a question to the minister of northern affairs. It is related to the question I asked the Minister of Labour. I do so for two reasons to which I have already referred, namely the possibility of a rail and shipping tie-up, and the impending closing of the Haines cut-off in the next two or three weeks. Can the minister say whether he has decided to accept the offer of the Alaska authorities to keep the Haines road open?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): All these questions are under intense study.

AIRPORTS

CHURCHILL—TRANSFER OF OPERATION FROM R.C.A.F.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister advise the house whether the Department of Transport is planning, or has made arrangements, to take over the operation of the airport at Churchill, Manitoba, from the Royal Canadian Air Force?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will take that question as notice.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

CONSIDERATION OF ESTABLISHMENT OF PERMANENT SECRETARIAT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Could the Prime Minister inform the house whether there will definitely be discussions relating to the establishment of a permanent secretariat or secretarial organization for federal-provincial affairs, at the forthcoming November meeting with the provincial premiers?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. This is not a matter of immediate urgency, but it was announced previously that this would be one of the subjects to be discussed.

PENSIONS

INQUIRY AS TO CONSIDERATION OF LEGISLATION THIS SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the statement by Premier Robarts that Ontario will proceed with its portable pension plan if the Canada pension plan is shelved or delayed, and in view of the further statement that persons have been appointed to confer with the federal government on merging these two plans, would the Prime Minister take the opportunity provided by this question to give the house the assurance that the Canada pension plan will be proceeded with at this session of parliament?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated that the Canada pension plan will be proceeded with as soon as possible.

Mr. Knowles: As a supplementary question, is the Prime Minister aware of the fact that that answer has been interpreted as meaning the plan is to be put off until a later session? Can he not give a definite answer with respect to this session?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I am not responsible for other people's interpretations.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): As a supplementary question, is the Prime Minister aware that it is the premier of Ontario who apparently interprets the Prime Minister's statement as meaning the Canada pension plan will not be proceeded with at this current session, and that if it is not proceeded with at this current session it is the intention of the Ontario government to proceed with its own pension plan? Surely in the light of this understanding by the premier of Ontario some clarification is necessary.

Mr. Pearson: I have not seen the statement, but I will be glad to look into it. However, any interpretation of that kind that the plan will not be proceeded with at this session would certainly be premature.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cape Breton South on a supplementary question.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, the opportunity to ask a supplementary question has sort of slid by. However, I would ask the Prime Minister this question. In answer to the question of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre he said he is not responsible for the interpretation which other people put on remarks. Does this include the answer I received a short while ago from the Minister of Labour?

An hon. Member: No answers today.

BROADCASTING

INQUIRY AS TO REAPPOINTMENTS TO BOARD OF GOVERNORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Secretary of State a question arising out of a certain discussion in public with regard to the broadcasting industry, and the report of the three men suggesting that the broadcasting industry needed to be stabilized for a period. I would ask the Secretary of State whether the government has given any indication to the members of the board of broadcast governors, whose terms of appointment are almost up—they will be within a very short time—that they shall be reappointed, in the interests of stability?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, no indication of any kind has been given.

TRADE

WHEAT—LEAKAGE OF INFORMATION AFFECTING SALE TO JAPAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to direct to the Minister of Trade and Commerce but in his absence I would like to direct it to the acting minister. Does not the minister consider the recent leak of confidential data in the United States relating to wheat board sales of wheat has resulted in the cancellation of a proposed second sale of wheat to Japan, as reported in several daily papers in Canada and the United States during the past several days?

Mr. Jean-Luc Pepin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, with respect to a second sale of wheat to Japan, we have been advised by the Canadian wheat board that there has not been a second sale to Japan, neither was one contemplated.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EFFORTS TO REVIVE TRADE BETWEEN ATLANTIC PROVINCES AND CARIBBEAN AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. When he was speaking at Milford Station prior to the April 8 election he called for a revival of the West Indian trade between the Atlantic provinces and the Caribbean.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Crouse: If hon. gentlemen opposite will be patient, I am coming to the question. Would the Prime Minister tell the house what efforts he has made toward bringing about a revival of this trade between the Atlantic provinces and the Caribbean, and would he also tell the house whether he would use his good offices to help establish a direct air service between the Atlantic provinces and the Caribbean?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to do this on a suitable occasion, but orders of the day is not a suitable occasion.

WHEAT—REPORTED THREAT OF U.S. COUNTER MEASURES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister about a matter concerning the integrity and self-respect of every Canadian. Has the Prime Minister's attention been drawn to the threat made by United States officials regarding our export wheat sales to the effect that strong counter measures against Canada may be taken in 1964? What is the government's attitude toward this interference in Canadian affairs, and Canadian wheat sales in particular?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know to what the hon. gentleman is referring, unless it was the statement reported in the press of some unnamed official in the department of agriculture in Washington who talked about possible counter measures in 1964. I do not think that kind of statement by an unnamed official in the U.S. department of agriculture bears the interpretation my hon. friend has given to it.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Speaker, they were officials of the United States department of agriculture.

[Mr. Pepin.]

BULGARIA—REQUEST THAT AGREEMENT BE IN BOTH LANGUAGES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Luc Pepin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, on October 14 last, the hon. member for Chicoutimi asked a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce in connection with the use of French during negotiations with Bulgaria.

I made an inquiry in this connection and this is what I found out.

Mr. Speaker, it was the Bulgarian delegation itself which asked that English be used during the negotiations preceding the signature of a trade agreement with Bulgaria. These negotiations were therefore held in English, except during talks between the Minister of Trade and Commerce himself and the principal Bulgarian delegate when the services of an unofficial but comparatively qualified interpreter, namely the parliamentary secretary, were used at certain moments only.

The final document itself was drawn up in English only and this on the request of the Bulgarian delegate, because since Bulgaria has no diplomatic mission in Ottawa it did not have its own translation facilities.

If the Bulgarian delegation had chosen French, the original documents would have been drawn up in that language.

The documents dealing with the agreement will be tabled in both languages as usual.

INDUSTRY

USE OF CANADIAN STATISTICAL INFORMATION BY FOREIGN INVESTORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry. I am sorry that I have not been able to give him notice, but it has just been brought to my attention, as usual. In view of the statement made by T. C. Higginson, president of the engineering institute of Canada, in Vancouver yesterday that government agencies, including the dominion bureau of statistics, are giving away important statistical information that helps foreign investors take over Canadian industries, would he consider looking into this charge and letting the house know what substance there is in it?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce to have this question looked into and, if there is any substance in the charge, to make a report to the house.

AUTOMOBILES—PLANS TO INCREASE CANADIAN SHARE IN GROWTH

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry. In view of the present abnormal practice in Washington of allowing secrets to leak out, would the minister take this house into his confidence and review the plans by which he intends to secure for Canada a larger share of the anticipated growth of the North American automobile industry so that we may learn of those plans from him rather than from the United States newspapers?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): As soon as a plan has been worked out and has been approved by the government, the house will be the first to know about it.

Mr. Starr: Is the minister saying that he went to the United States and revealed to them a plan which had not been worked out or approved by the government?

Mr. Drury: I just indicated that the plan had not yet been worked out, and that is correct. It was, therefore, not possible to reveal in the United States a complete plan.

Mr. Starr: What were you talking about, then?

REPORTED INTENTION TO ESTABLISH PEUGEOT PLANT IN ONTARIO

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Perron (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I would have a supplementary question for the Minister of Industry. Could he tell the house whether his plans in connection with the automobile industry also take into account a statement published in the Montreal Matin of October 17, 1963, where it is claimed that a subsidiary of the Peugeot industries would prefer to establish a plant in Ontario rather than in Quebec provided the federal government would grant it a preferential treatment if they established in Ontario rather than in Quebec.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I will take this question as notice and I will answer it tomorrow.

Mr. Gregoire: The house is not sitting tomorrow.

Mr. Drury: Monday, then.

HOUSING

REGULATIONS RESPECTING BONUS ON WINTER CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Clement Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, my question is intended for the Minister of Labour and it is a very urgent question of concern to all builders of my area and of Canada.

It is about the incentive program to promote home building during the winter. Why is a person who builds a six unit home between December 1 and March 31 denied the $500 bonus, when a $2,000 bonus is awarded to the one who builds a four unit home during the same period?

[Text]

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I suggest this is a question for the order paper.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

QUEBEC—ADMINISTRATION OF ESKIMO AFFAIRS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources?

Could the minister tell the house whether he intends to get at the truth of certain press reports to the effect that some officials of his department are putting pressure on Eskimos of northern Quebec or are blackmailing them so that they will refuse and protest against the wish of the province of Quebec to take over the management of their affairs?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I believe this question, if not asked in precisely that form, has been referred to previously. May I suggest it is a question for the order paper in any event.

Mr. Pigeon: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I do not think a question of this kind has been asked in this house in the past. I think it is an urgent question, for the good reputation of the civil service and the department conducted by the minister.

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that it be put on the order paper.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the rules of the house, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

Is it true that the officials of his department are exerting pressure on the Eskimo population of new Quebec as I stated a moment ago in my previous question?

[Text]

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am rather happy that the hon. member has reworded his question which you earlier disallowed, because if it had gone unanswered there would have been a pall upon the officers of my department.

For some two years the province of Quebec has been sending its officials into nouveau Quebec to conduct the development of resources there, administer police affairs and so on, and in that period our officials have enjoyed a very fine degree of co-operation with them. As a matter of fact their officials have been invited to get in contact with ours to discuss affairs. We have rented several houses to the department of les richesses naturelles of the province of Quebec, and relations have been the very finest.

Therefore I can attach no measure of truth to this rumour at all. I know it is not so. Our officials there are under instructions to work as closely as possible with the officers of the province of Quebec who are now coming into the area.

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN QUOTAS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce on business, and in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture, might I ask the Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce whether he would communicate with the wheat board in order to ascertain whether it is possible to increase the two bushel and three bushel quota per specified acre both in Saskatchewan and Manitoba, which is so much less this year in both provinces than it was a year ago?

Hon. Rene Tremblay (Minister without Portfolio): I will take this question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Speaker.]

IMMIGRATION

REFUSAL BY U.S. TO ADMIT CHINESE CANADIAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister, of which I have sent him notice. Is the government aware of the case of Mr. Wayson S. Choy, a Canadian born citizen who was refused admission to the United States on the ground that half his ancestry was Chinese; and will the government make representations to the government of the United States that such discrimination is inconsistent with the universal declaration of human rights, and offensive to Canadians?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to my hon. friend for having given me notice of this question and also for having given me a little time to do the research which was required to get the information. I am answering him at some length because I know there are some questions of principle involved in his question. This matter was brought to my attention by Mr. Choy and others, and in view of the interest that it has aroused in the house and in other parts of Canada I would like to explain it.

At the outset I should like to make it very clear that as for Canadian law and policy, the present government, like its predecessor, is firmly opposed in principle and in practice to racial discrimination. Mr. Choy may rest assured that as far as Canadian law and policy are concerned, his Canadian citizenship is the same as that of every other Canadian born citizen.

With respect to the United States law relating to immigrant visas—and this is the matter immediately under discussion—it has since 1924, with some exceptions, been based on a national origins system. There are quotas, however, based on country of birth for most countries of the world. A separate—and this is the exception—and very small quota, based on ancestry and not place of birth, was provided for persons whose ancestry lies in what that law calls the "Asia-Pacific triangle". If persons born in Canada and Latin America fall within the rules relating to ancestry in the Asia-Pacific triangle, they come under this particular quota.

The result of this law in Mr. Choy's case was that when he applied to the United States consul for an immigrant visa in order to work in the United States, he was told that his application could be considered only under the Chinese quota, which is filled for several years ahead. Mr. Choy considered that the effect of the United States law is to discriminate on racial grounds, in the matter of immigration visas, against him and a particular category of Canadian born citizens.

While it may not be appropriate, Mr. Speaker, for the Canadian government to make official and formal representations to the United States government against the racial origins features of United States domestic immigration law, this does not mean that the Canadian government favours the inclusion of racial origin provisions in the immigration laws of the United States or any other country. These provisions, however, are not directed against Canada. A prospective immigrant of Chinese ancestry would find himself up against the Asia-Pacific quota provisions regardless of what country he was born in.

An additional reason, Mr. Speaker, for not making formal representations to the United States government is the fact that on July 23 of this year President Kennedy sent a message to congress proposing important changes in the quota system. He described the national origins system as "an anachronism, for it discriminates among applicants for admission into the United States on the basis of accident of birth". He specifically proposed the repeal of the Asia-Pacific ancestry formula, which is the part of the law that affects Mr. Choy. The President's proposals are now being considered in congress.

Mr. Brewin: A supplementary question. Does the Prime Minister not feel that it might aid the President if the view of the Canadian government on this matter, which I suggest is more than just a domestic matter, were conveyed formally, rather than unofficially, to the United States government?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the views of the Canadian government as I have expressed them in the House of Commons will certainly be brought to the attention of the United States government.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

QUEBEC—MEASURES TO RELIEVE UNEMPLOYMENT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Could the minister tell us what steps the government intends to take to provide work for the 250,000 unemployed we have at present in Canada?

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Forty per cent of whom are in the province of Quebec.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that that is a question for the order paper.

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: As I have said before, where there is no urgency to a question and the question is referred to the order paper I do not see how there can be a supplementary question to such question.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, you have stated that this is a matter for the order paper, but you will remember that last year the hon. member for Essex East in particular asked such questions once if not twice a day.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I believe you mentioned that a question has to be in order to receive a direct answer from the minister; that it should be urgent, and should also indicate a solution to the problem. I submit that the question put by the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot is in order, because the papers this morning reveal that 40 per cent of the unemployed in this country are in the province of Quebec. If that is not an urgent problem I would ask Your Honour to tell me what is. The Minister of Labour should tell the people of Quebec and the government of Quebec what he intends to do in order to alleviate the unemployment situation in that province.

Mr. Ricard: This question apparently has no urgency for the government.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Perron (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Labour. He seemed earlier to consider as not urgent the fact that there are 40,000 unemployed in the province of Quebec.

Following the statement made by Lieutenant-General Stevens before the defence committee where he suggested that compulsory military service in Canada would constitute an excellent way of checking unemployment, does the minister consider this solution suitable for present needs in order to solve the unemployment problem in Canada?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I do think this is a question for the order paper.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour? Since the number of unemployed has reached 40 per cent in the province of Quebec, does the minister feel there is an emergency there and that his department should deal with it immediately?

Does the minister think this situation is urgent? That is a very simple question.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member must realize that we have dealt with this question many times. The whole subject of unemployment is, of course, very serious and urgent, but it does not conform to the rules of the house under the heading of urgency. If the hon. member will consult Beauchesne and other authorities I am sure he will find that is so. Is the house ready to proceed with its business?

Mr. Valade: The minister is afraid to answer.

TORONTO—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he is now ready to make the statement that he was going to make on Wednesday about the extension of the winter works program for the city of Toronto.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped to make this statement yesterday, but as my hon. friend knows there was not much opportunity for statements on orders of the day yesterday. But I am glad to reply to him now.

As the Minister of Labour stated in this house on June 10, the municipal winter works incentive program for 1963-64 will operate from November 1, 1963 to April 30, 1964, inclusive. It has been found that under the seven and one half month period during which the program was in effect in recent years, many municipalities commenced their projects in the fall, discontinued work during the real winter months, and resumed construction in the spring. This, of course, defeated the purpose of the program to a considerable extent. The objective, as hon. members know, is to have municipalities carry their projects through the winter months when seasonal unemployment is at its highest.

The effective period of the program already announced for next winter covers six months of the year, which should permit municipalities to do some preliminary work in the fall and carry projects through to completion during the month of April.

A number of representations have been received regarding the effective period of the program for the coming winter, but it is not the intention to extend the period of the program beyond the six months, November 1 to April 30.

Mr. Scott: A supplementary question. Has the Prime Minister received a request from the mayor of the city of Toronto to meet with him and the board of control to discuss this matter?

Mr. Pearson: To my knowledge I have received no such request, though I have read in the papers that such a request is coming. If it does, I shall be glad to meet with them.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he thinks this change will increase winter employment.

Mr. Pearson: That is the intention of the change which was recommended to the government by officials who have had experience in the past of this program.

FALCONBRIDGE NICKEL—PROPOSED LAY-OFF OF EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have an urgent question for the Minister of Labour in view of today being the announced date for the lay-off of 530 workers at Falconbridge nickel mines. Can the minister say whether he intends to take any action on the brief submitted to him and to others of his colleagues by the representatives of the international union of mine, mill and smelter workers?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend will be aware that the suggested remedy for this lay-off as proposed by the delegation depends primarily on action to be taken by the company involved, in co-operation with the union. We have assured the delegation that within a decision of that kind the government will co-operate, and the unemployment insurance commission will be in a position to co-operate as well.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR WHITE PAPER OR STATEMENT ON DEFENCE POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. I should like to ask the minister whether he will publish his proposed white paper on defence immediately, or alternatively give the house a full statement of his defence policy, rather than provide leaks to the press of bits and pieces of the policy such as appeared in the Globe and Mail and Gazette yesterday.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to compliment the press on their interest in keeping abreast of defence matters; I think this is very worth while, and that they should be commended for so doing. Second, as I have already announced, it is my hope that we can present a white paper to the House of Commons some time early in the new year before the next year's estimates, those for 1964-65, are considered. In the meantime we are still working on our long range plans and no decisions have been taken in that regard.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question. The minister has not answered the question. May I ask him specifically to comment on the statement contained in yesterday's Globe and Mail that the government plans to switch half the Royal Canadian Air Force strike force of low level jet bombers in Europe to a non-nuclear role. This is an important statement. Is it an official statement of government policy? If it is not, is the minister prepared either to affirm or deny it?

Mr. Hellyer: It is not an official statement of government policy, Mr. Speaker. If it had been it would have been made in the house. So far as the problem itself is concerned, it it not new. Many statements have been made about the problem posed to the Royal Canadian Air Force by the fact that they are not allowed to have special ammunition storage at the two French bases. Obviously this is one of the matters we must consider, but no decision has as yet been taken. When a decision is taken it will be announced in the House of Commons in the normal course.

Mr. Douglas: Is the minister saying that this is not an accurate statement? That is what I am asking.

Mr. Hellyer: I have just said that no decision has been made.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I have a question which is supplementary to the one which was supplementary to mine. I should like to ask the Prime Minister if the reported cutback in nuclear weapons for the R.C.A.F. in Europe is to take place immediately and, if so, when does he expect that Canada will be entirely divested of nuclear weapons in accordance with his commitment to negotiate out of the nuclear field?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have no comment on that reported statement. I have not even seen the statement.

CAMP GAGETOWN—PURCHASES OF PETROLEUM PRODUCTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Has the minister had any complaints about the practice of the army at Camp Gagetown buying petroleum products from Irving Oil Company Limited, which is owned jointly by Mr. K. C. Irving and Standard Oil Company of California, while a sister company in that area owned by the same people, Irving Refining Limited, is undergoing a legal strike by the oil, chemical and atomic workers union? Would the minister look into the matter to ensure that the army is not participating in strike-breaking?

Mr. Speaker: This is a question for the order paper.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I have had no complaints that I know of. I will look into the matter.

QUEBEC—REPORTED CLOSING OF CERTAIN RADAR STATIONS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Could the minister confirm the announcement made to the press by the member for Lotbiniere to the effect that several radar stations, including the one at St. Sylvestre, in the riding of Lotbiniere, will soon be closed down.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Surely this is a question for the order paper.

Mr. Balcer: On a point of order, a similar question was asked by the hon. member for Lotbiniere and it was answered by the minister.

Mr. Pickersgill: Why should it be asked again?

Mr. Balcer: The hon. member for Lotbiniere gave a different story in his own riding from what was told him in the house by the Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has asked his question, but I cannot force an answer.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TELEVISION

REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING ADVERTISING OF BEER

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Has the minister received protest letters from individuals or groups, following the decision of the board of broadcast governors permitting more publicity for beer on television, and increasing the maximum time of an announcement from 12 to 60 seconds?

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I was asked to see a delegation. Unfortunately my duties here prevented me from doing so, but I have seen the representations. Should the hon. member be anxious to get any further information I would be glad to get him anything I can if he would put his question on the order paper.

POWER

QUEBEC—REACTION TO ANNOUNCEMENT RESPECTING NATIONAL GRID

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, in view of the absence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, I will address my question to his parliamentary secretary. Has the minister received official protests from the government of the province of Quebec or the department of natural resources in Quebec in connection with the establishment of a national power grid?

Mr. Jean-Luc Pepin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will consider this question as notice.

[Text]

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

INQUIRY AS TO STEPS TO PREVENT ROBBERIES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the venerable Postmaster General. Could the minister tell the house whether he is aware of the $40,000 robbery which occurred yesterday and whether, by any chance, the name of the culprit would be on the list of privileged persons?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the robbery, but it is certainly not the member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm who did it because he was here yesterday.

Mr. Pigeon: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister inform the house of the steps that are being considered by his officials or himself to prevent those robberies which are getting to be more numerous since the present government took over?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, it was under the Conservatives that robberies were numerous. Now, robberies are due to the shipping of money from the banks. Consequently, we have taken up the matter with bank representatives to find a solution.

[Text]

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Can I ask the Postmaster General if he knows who is responsible for the theft of his carefully guarded list of consultants?

Mr. Knowles: That was an inside job.

WORLD FAIR

REPORTED RECOMMENDATION THAT PROJECT BE ABANDONED

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Does he have any comments to make on an article published in Maclean's stating that the Prime Minister's advisers recommended giving up the idea of a world fair in Montreal? The article appeared on page 17 of the October 5, 1963 issue of that magazine.

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I have no comment to make.

[Translation]

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question. Have the Prime Minister's counsels advised him to give up the idea of a world fair?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker.

TRANSPORT

POSSIBLE DIVERSION OF GRAIN HANDLING FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport and ask him if the railways or other grain handling facilities have begun to divert supplies or cease loading in view of the possibility of a strike tying up the seaway again.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): As far as I know none of the grain handling facilities have stopped work for the reason mentioned. There may be difficulties on one or two of the ships, but I am not aware that they are grain ships.

RESOURCES

PROPOSED POOLING BY U.S. AND CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Would the Prime Minister comment on certain statements by Mr. Udall which are receiving a great deal of publicity with reference to the pooling of Canadian and United States resources?

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. MacInnis: Would the Prime Minister comment on those statements?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, not on the orders of the day. The policy of the government with regard to this matter was made known to the house some weeks ago by the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. MacInnis: A supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: I would prefer that the hon. member pose a question rather than a supplementary, because I do not think a supplementary question could be founded on that answer.

Mr. MacInnis: Very well. I will direct a question to the Prime Minister. Does the right hon. gentleman not realize that this could be one of the most urgent and important questions before the government today, inasmuch as Mr. Udall on behalf of the United States is now proposing that Canada should pool its vast resources with those of the United States, which are depleted and not expected to last very long?

Mr. Pearson: I think I realize what is involved as well as the hon. gentleman does.

Mr. MacInnis: Then isn't it about time there was a statement on the subject?

COMBINES

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON TIED SALES BY SERVICE STATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): I gave notice of my intention to address the following question to the Minister of Justice. When can we expect some action from the interdepartmental committee studying the recommendations of the restrictive trade practices commission concerning the practice of tied sales imposed upon service stations by oil companies?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the hon member for notice of his question. The answer is that I am informed the committee does not expect to finish its work until about the end of this year.

PUBLIC WORKS

BEAUCEVILLE, QUE.—ARCHITECT FOR POST OFFICE BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Perron (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Postmaster General, to whom I have given notice.

My question relates to the one bearing number 620, which appeared on the order paper and which has been answered.

What person or persons have been consulted for the choice of the architect responsible for the building of the Beauceville post office in the county of Beauce?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This is a question for the order paper. Is the house ready to go on with its business?

[Translation]

Mr. Perron: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Two days ago I sent notice of my question to the Postmaster General.

[Text]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, before the house goes back to the debate that was interrupted by unanimous consent, I should like to be sure there is an understanding in all parts of the house that if that debate should be concluded, we would then proceed to the orders of the day without a second question period.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The house will now resume the debate on the motion of the hon. member for Hull for concurrence in the second report of the standing committee on privileges and elections.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Caron for concurrence in the second report of the standing committee.

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to have today the opportunity to express my views, as well as those of the population of the riding of Compton-Frontenac which I am proud to represent in this house, on the proceedings or rather the dilly-dallying of the committee on privileges and elections with regard to the final recognition in this chamber of the Ralliement des creditistes of the province of Quebec and of its leader, Mr. Real Caouette.

I will not make direct accusations against the members of the committee entrusted with the study of that matter.

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In my opinion it is clearly established that a member does not have the right to read a speech in the house. I can see the hon. member is holding his speech with both hands and is reading one line after the other. Since that cannot be taken for lengthy notes, I ask that the rules be applied.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, you are the one who has been appointed to maintain order and discipline in this house and not the hon. member who just stood up to talk through his hat.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: In so far as the point that has been raised is concerned, Mr. Speaker, there seems to be a disposition on the other side of the house to deny to members on this side of the house the right to raise points of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would suggest to Your Honour that even the members elected to support the government were also elected by the people of Canada, and that they should enjoy the same rights of freedom of speech in this house as members on the other side do. This business of taking exception constantly to any point of order raised from this side of the house is an infringement of the right of free speech of the elected members of parliament, and there should be equality given to both sides of the house in this matter.

[Mr. Speaker.]

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, right now the Secretary of State reminds us of a man who can see himself sinking.

If we refer to yesterday's Hansard, we find that the Liberals spent the whole evening raising points of order to interrupt those who were speaking on this side of the house. The Secretary of State rises on a question of privilege at the very moment the Liberals are attempting to deprive other members of their own rights and privileges. That is mere hypocrisy meant to conceal the facts of the matter.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: I cannot allow that to pass—

Mr. Speaker: Would the Secretary of State please resume his seat? I think we have had enough discussion of this point. The hon. member was just beginning his speech, and obviously he wanted to refresh his memory. I suggest he continue.

Mr. Ricard: I should like to speak to the point of order. I cannot allow the observations made a while ago by the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) to pass without comment. He addressed himself to the opposition. If Your Honour has noticed, we have made no objection whatever, and I should like to point that out for the record.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am rising on a question of privilege. I said exception had been taken, I did not take any exception to any hon. member raising a point of order. I was defending an hon. member's right to raise a point of order. However, the hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Langlois) took exception to the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron) raising a point of order, and I say that was an infringement of the hon. member's freedom of speech. On four or five occasions in this house the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacInnis) and other members of the official opposition have taken exception to my rising in my place and raising points of order. I have raised very few compared with the number that were raised by our predecessors on this side of the house, as the record will show. I have tried to exercise the utmost constraint and tolerance in the position I have taken.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: It seems to me that attacks of the character that have been made are insufferable, and should not be allowed to continue. Merely because there are certain members who do not seem—

Mr. Langlois: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am speaking to a question of privilege, and surely I am going to be heard to the end of my question of privilege without interruption.

I do not think anyone could peruse my record in the ten years I have been in the house and find any occasion when I have ever sought to restrict the rights, under the rules, of any hon. member to speak. But I think I am entitled to permission to speak under the rules, in the same way as any other hon. member, without having constant interruptions and constant exception taken. I suggest, sir, that we observe the rules in this house, and when an hon. member raises a point of order we allow the Chair to decide whether or not there is a point of order, and not call into question the hon. member's right to raise it.

Mr. Pigeon: That will hurt you.

Mr. MacInnis: The Secretary of State has seen fit to draw the attention of the Chair to the fact that, on a number of occasions recently, I have raised points of order in respect of the Secretary of State. Once again I would call the attention of the Chair to the fact that he raised this particular point of order and then changed it to a question of privilege. He did so without recognition of the Chair. I should like also to call attention to the fact that a few moments ago, when the question period was finished, the Secretary of State rose without the consent of the Chair in order to tell what he thought was a funny joke. On that occasion Your Honour saw fit to ask him to return to his seat. The Chair has asked the Secretary of State once today to resume his seat, and only a few days ago on a similar point of order he was requested to return to his seat.

Now he has raised a point of order which he has changed to a question of privilege. Again, I state that no one in this house has violated Your Honour's rulings as often as the Secretary of State.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps this is the time to give a short explanation of how I believe the Chair should act. It is this: Under our system of government and under the rules of the house, we recognize first of all the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), then the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), who has a very official position under our system; then members of the cabinet; then members of the front bench and I should, of course, include there the leaders of the various parties; then, from there we do the best we can.

Now, it is true that the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) carries that title, but he is also the house leader and of necessity must be on his feet more frequently than most members. He has to conduct the business of the house. He is responsible for a great deal of its planning. I am not aware, at least not consciously aware, of any time when he has broken any rule that I have tried to establish in this house. Every time he rose, and he must rise very frequently, I thought in order to save the time of the house I did not have to call, "The Hon. Secretary of State". I always catch his eye or he waits his turn. Hon. members will appreciate that custom dictates that the front benches are considered first, and are given an opportunity to speak first. Then, we gradually work back.

I think if that is understood hon. members, no matter where they sit, will realize they all are given a reasonable opportunity. In so far as I am concerned, I am elected by all of the members and not by a government, a party or a group. So far as I am concerned, all members are equal and have the same rights.

Mr. MacInnis: On that point, is this why the Chair—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. MacInnis: Is this why the Chair—

Mr. Speaker: Kindly repeat your question; I cannot hear.

Mr. MacInnis: I assume, Mr. Speaker, that is recognition. Would the Chair indicate to the house why the Secretary of State last week was told to resume his seat when the Speaker agreed with me, and the remarks are recorded in Hansard, that the Secretary of State had been giving the Chair trouble.

In respect to the recognition of front benchers, the Leader of the Opposition and leaders of other parties, I would once again refer to the fact that nowhere in the rule book do I find that a backbencher is relegated to any inferior position in the house.

We of course recognize the necessity of ministers having the right to rise on these occasions, but not without recognition. The same applies to the leader of my own party, the Leader of the Opposition, and to the leader of any other party. Again I say that nowhere in the rule book do I find a backbencher is relegated to an inferior position. We all arrived in the house through the same means, by being elected by our constituents, and the Secretary of State is not mentioned for any preference in the rule book.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, I could give the same answer that was given before, in this house, by the hon. member who spoke before me, when he was accused of reading his speech. He answered that he would much rather read his speech than speak without notes and lose the thread of his thoughts. That is, Mr. Speaker, what was once said in this house by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne). In my opinion, if you grant permission to the President of the Privy Council to read his speech in the house I think that, as a private member, I should benefit from the same leniency.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The member for Compton-Frontenac just admitted that he is reading his speech. He has even said that he had the same right as any other member, to do so. According to the rules of the house he does not have any such right. I understand that a member may have extensive notes but he has no right to read a prepared speech, likely written by someone else.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. If the hon. member for Hull wishes to say that somebody else prepared the speech of the hon. member, he should say so and not make innuendoes. And if he is unable to prove his case, he will be told he is dishonest and makes untruthful innuendoes.

Mr. Caron: It was prepared by Gilles Gregoire.

Mr. Gregoire: I protest, and if the hon. member for Hull maintains that, he lies.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I suggest to the hon. members to allow the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac to resume his speech. I recognize with the hon. member for Hull that standing orders require that speeches be not read in the house. On the other hand, one has to admit that since the beginning of the session, several members on both sides of the house, of all parties or groups in the house, have, on different occasions, read their speeches.

Representations have been made in that respect and the Chair reminded each member that standing orders must be followed. However, in the present circumstances, in the discussion of this measure, I would suggest to the hon. member not to forget that rule and to abide by it; but if he has notes before him, he may use them to refresh his memory, instead of just reading them.

Mr. Caron: I do respect your opinion, Mr. Speaker, but when you prevented other members from reading their speeches, these members pretended they were reading extensive notes, whereas, the hon. member states he is entitled to read his speech because other members have done it before. Consequently, he puts himself in the class of those who have no right to read their speeches.

Mr. Gregoire: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wish the hon. member for Hull had adhered to the rule as chairman of the committee on privileges and elections.

Mr. Caron: I shall not allow the hon. member to say anything about the committee on privileges and elections. If I prevented the hon. member from speaking, it was to give other members a chance. He wanted to have the floor all the time, and I did not allow it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I ask the hon. member for Hull and the hon. member for Lapointe to co-operate so that we may at least give the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac a chance to get started.

I admit that, judging from the way he started his speech, he seemed about to read a text. But now he has not the floor and did not have the opportunity of continuing his remarks. It may be that, when making his speech, he will observe standing orders, and be satisfied with consulting his notes.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, just for your information, if I said that others had read out their speeches, it was simply to give an example. Others read their speeches long before I did. I just wished to give an instance, but I never said that I wanted to read my speech—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would prefer the discussion to end at this point. I have given my ruling in this matter, and I would ask the hon. member to go on with his speech.

Mr. Latulippe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just read the Canada Elections Act, in the Revised Statutes of Canada, chapter 23, and I could not but carefully revise my own status as member of parliament.

Having fulfilled all the conditions required of the candidates, having been elected twice as member of the House of Commons of Canada for my constituency, I represent here people who have made their choice, taken a definite step and delegated to me powers of representation which they alone may revoke.

I was elected member for Compton-Frontenac after having run as candidate for the creditiste party of the Ralliement des creditistes of the province of Quebec, which recognizes as its leader the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), a fact which was confirmed at a party convention held in Granby.

Delegates from my riding were present at that convention. They were there to represent the opinion of the people of my constituency, and failure to recognize this as an actual fact would be tantamount to betraying the confidence placed in me.

There is no provision which prohibits members of parliament from forming a political party between elections. The interpretation of their mandate is left to their discretion and only the voters can disapprove of the decisions made by a member at the next election.

Apart from being incomprehensible, the decision made by the committee on privileges and elections is unfair not only to our group by denying us, in the person of our chosen leader, the right of representation on several levels, but also to the thousands of voters whom we represent here.

That is why, as member for the constituency of Compton-Frontenac, as representative of the people who elected the member of their choice to Ottawa, I am asking for the immediate recognition of our group, as well as the recognition of our leader as party leader in this house, with all the privileges implied, and also our recognition as third opposition group, since our group is larger than the one headed by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson).

Another basic question connected with the recognition of our group is the fact that we represent almost exclusively some French Canadian citizens of the province of Quebec and it is a slight to the ethnic character of those citizens to refuse to give it complete and total representation in this house.

If the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne) is really convinced that Canada will survive to its centennial, he should take immediately the necessary steps. He should insist that the French Canadian people who chose some representatives may be heard through their representatives, with all the rights and privileges which are due to them.

If the efforts which are made in the field of bilingualism and biculturalism can be judged on the basis of the representation which is denied us, then they will only become the shameful cover-up of a grand constitutional mockery.

Let us do away with red tape and let us have action. The patience of a people also has its limits and, as a representative of a large portion of French Canadian people, I can assure the house that the time has now come for decisions and that compromise would only pave the way for the burial of a confederation of which we would have been the grave-diggers. The very fate of that confederation, gentlemen, today lies in your hands.

Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate and to thank the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) and all those members who contributed to this debate and who treated us with fairness.

I wish to thank all those who showed some fairness and who made it a point to insist that we be recognized.

The Leader of the Opposition explained the situation and he gave us recognition. He declared to the Canadian people that he was ready to fight to the bitter end to ensure in this house the recognition of the rights and prerogatives of the French Canadians and of the English speaking Canadians, in a word of the whole Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker, we are not fighting only for the French Canadians but also for the unhyphenated Canadians. We have a right to be recognized in this house.

We are contributing to the passage of legislation. We have been elected as any other member in this house and we are entitled to claim our rights. This is what we are doing now. We are asking for our due rights and prerogatives with all the strength we can muster.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that it was within your province to do us justice. I am of the opinion that the committee on privileges and elections which was created to examine the rights of a political party had no business asking on our behalf the rights we have been asking for ourselves. And I say that it is our duty, that it is the duty of the members of our party to ask for their due, to take their rightful place in this house.

We want security, yes. But in addition to that security, we also want freedom. We are free from any political affiliation. We have been elected directly by the people and we are directly responsible to the electors of our ridings and to those of the province of Quebec.

Once again I thank all those who have helped us to establish if such a political party had the right to sit or not or to occupy such and such a place in the house.

The matter was first put to the Chair, who decided to refer it to a committee, and the members of the said committee rendered a verdict that is unacceptable.

Consequently, we resort to other solutions.

I also wish to draw the attention of the house to some remarks made by the Leader of the Opposition. In fact, as reported on page 3672 of Hansard for October 17, 1963, he stated:

> The determination as to whether there is a party is one that is dependant on a number of members uniting in support of a group of principles. That being so, then the method by which the party is formed is of no consequence to parliament. If they want to fight among themselves as to whether the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) or the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette)—sitting together there in amity—should be leader, then that is a matter for themselves.

Consequently, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Shefford

(Mr. Rondeau), that the following words be added to clause 3:

The house recognizes that according to the most elementary principles of decency it is not up to the other political parties to decide which one of the two Social Credit groups constitutes the Social Credit party, and would leave it to the Social Credit members themselves to decide on this question by a majority vote taken among the 23 Social Credit members.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I have glanced quickly at the amendment that the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac has just proposed, and in my opinion it tends to amend the report of the committee rather than the motion now before the house.

And on that matter, I suggest that the hon. member refer to the second paragraph of citation 323 of Beauchesne, fourth edition, which reads as follows:

[Text]

A report from a committee cannot be amended by the house, but it must be referred back to the committee.

[Translation]

That is, a report from a committee cannot be amended by the house but it must be referred back to the committee.

Consequently, I must declare that the amendment of the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac is against the rules.

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker—

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to take part in the debate and I do not intend to do more now than just say a very few words. I would like to draw hon. members' attention to the report to which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) took exception, and particularly to three parts of it:

1. That the New Democratic party occupy the seats next to the official opposition on the left side of the Speaker.

2. That the members of the Social Credit party occupy the seats next to the New Democratic party on the left side of the Speaker.

3. That the members of the group—

And I emphasize that word:

—under the leadership of Mr. Caouette occupy the seats on the left of the Social Credit party.

As I have nothing in particular to say about the fourth part of the report I will not even read it.

I think we have lost sight of the fact that all this report does is to recommend that certain provisions—

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I should like to know whether the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) is now speaking on the question whether or not the amendment is in order, because we want to speak on this point and make the necessary change to put the amendment in order according to the regulations.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Surely the hon. member understands that the Chair has already made a ruling and that once a decision is taken no further discussion is allowed.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: I am exercising my rights —and I believe I have the floor—to speak on the motion made by the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron), and I was recognized by the Chair. I am now in the course of making my speech, which will be very brief.

It seems to me we ought to realize just what we are being asked to decide. We are being asked to decide, if we accept this report, that the New Democratic party will be moved up to the benches occupied by the Social Credit party at the beginning of this session of parliament; that next to them will be put the Social Credit party under the leadership of the man who was recognized as its leader when this house was constituted after the election. We are also being asked to recognize that a new group be seated next to them. I will not attempt to describe this group by name because, as I understand the proceedings of the committee, two versions of its name were given by two different members of the group; the leader gave one name and the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) gave another name. Surely, if the two of them could not agree between themselves it was not up to the committee to decide which name to give them.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. An explanation has already been supplied before the privileges and elections committee concerning the interpretation to be given to both letters. We are convinced that there is no contradiction between them.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, this is my question of privilege—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Fine.

Mr. Gregoire: If hon. members wish to quote some of our letters, we would like them to do it in the spirit in which the letters were written and not otherwise. My question of privilege is that the record should be set straight.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. This is not a question of privilege but a debate. An hon. member may raise such an argument but it does not truly constitute a question of privilege.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: The only point I was seeking to make was that the committee recognized that there was a group in this house—it said so in its first words—under the leadership of the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), and it recommended that that group—it was described as a group and as having a leader—should be given a certain seating in the house. That is all we are being asked to do.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has said that the numerical principle should be applied to the seating of groups. Other hon. members have said that the historical principle, which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre admitted on many occasions he had argued in favour of, and as recently as last year, should be applied. I believe that any hon. member can conscientiously take either view. I happen to take the view that the historical principle should be applied. I think it should have been applied in the last parliament and I think it should have been applied in this parliament, as it was applied in the parliaments of 1935 and 1940 and up until the departure made in 1962. But I do not deny to any other hon. member equal freedom to take the opposite point of view if he prefers to take it.

For my part, I think that if we are going to have recognition of a number of groups in the house some principle has to be applied, and I think the principle of seniority, which had worked in this house ever since 1921 up until 1962, at which time it was regrettably departed from, is a very good principle to apply. I do not think the good faith of anyone who argues for it should be questioned, any more than the good faith of anyone who thinks the numbers principle should be applied.

I think we should get back to sanity in this matter and realize that these are both valid principles, and that one applied from 1921 until 1962, a period of over 40 years, during which time we had more than two parties in every house, and since 1935, except for the parliament of 1958, we had four parties. I think in the parliament of 1935 in the C.C.F. there were eight members, one of whom seceded, leaving only seven, and either 15 or 17, I forget which, in the Social Credit party. That was in 1935. Yet the C.C.F. had seniority over the other group as I remember when I first came to view this parliament. That was the principle applied up until 1962. It was not the principle applied in the last parliament and it was not the principle at the beginning of this parliament; and I think that was too bad. But the committee has seen fit to recommend that we go back to that principle. I think it is a good principle. The principle we are following now obviously does not work, which is why we have this problem. This numbers game, if I may put it that way, has obviously not worked.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, it is also apparent to me that the hour is 20 minutes past four; that under the rules we have to go to private members' business at five o'clock; and that I gave an undertaking to the house, when I made the motion yesterday to extend the hours, that hon. members would know that on Friday evenings the house would be asked to take estimates, and the estimates prescribed for today are the estimates of the Department of Public Works. It is quite evident that the house is not yet ready to make a decision on this question and that it is not going to be possible in the very limited time left to us today to reach a conclusion. I believe it would be to the benefit of all of us to reflect, and reflect seriously, on this question, over the week end, and on the appearance we are giving to parliament by our debate on the matter; and for that reason I move, seconded by the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. McIlraith):

That the debate do now adjourn.

Mr. Gregoire: Closure.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is not closure at all.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Those in favour please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Pickersgill) which was agreed to on the following division:

HOUSE OF COMMONS

APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER GREATER DISPATCH OF BUSINESS

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (for the Secretary of State) moved:

That a select committee be appointed to consider with Mr. Speaker the procedures and organization of this house, for the purpose of suggesting any changes that would assure the more expeditious dispatch of public business and would strengthen parliament and make it more effective; that the committee have power to send for persons and papers; that it report from time to time its findings and recommendations to the house; and that it consist, in addition to Mr. Speaker, of 14 members to be designated at a later date.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the house having decided to suspend for the time being the debate on the matter which has been before it for so many hours, this gives me the opportunity and the honour of moving a motion which stands in the name of the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill), the importance and urgency of which has been attested to by the leaders of other parties in this house.

This resolution, in itself, and in its substance, is not important unless it were rejected. The importance of it is that it makes possible the establishment of a committee which could be one of the most important committees that has been set up by this house for a long time. It makes possible the establishment of this committee at a time when we are very conscious of the need to change our rules and procedures to make possible the more effective dispatch of the business of this house. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that all hon. members of the house are interested in achieving that objective, subject of course to the preservation of the rights and privileges of individual members and the legitimate traditions of the house.

This committee will examine how to make parliament operate more effectively to deal with the many, and complicated, and new matters which now customarily come before parliament. The Leader of the Opposition in his intervention yesterday answered certain critics of parliamentary procedure and parliamentary activities, and I agree with him that some of this criticism of the institution of parliament has been unreasonable. Some of it has not taken into account, not only the practices and customs of the past but the real difficulties of the present, in adjusting our parliamentary procedures to the many new and complicated problems that arise.

We hear a great deal of criticism on all sides, both inside and outside the house, of the manners and the methods of parliament; but as the right hon. gentleman did the other day, it is well to recall history on this matter so that we may retain that sense of perspective and proportion which is useful in considering matters of this kind. Even in the mother of parliaments—and I think this was referred to the other day—there have been many examples of filibustering, obstruction and even violent scenes.

One does not have to go too far back, to the days of the Irish nationalists, when the business of the house was held up day after day and when scenes were so wild as to make our scenes, when we have them in the House of Commons, seem pretty mild by comparison. Those of us who have studied and are interested in British parliamentary history are reminded how Mr. Disraeli once felt comforted because there was between himself and the other party the clerk's table, which he referred to as that substantial piece of furniture. We have not needed that in this house, at least in my memory.

Distant pastures and distant parliaments in time and in space always look greener and better. It is similar in this House of Commons, yet anyone with a knowledge of parliamentary history—and the right hon. gentleman referred to this yesterday—and looks back even 50 years ago, will be reminded about the violence of debate at that time, the total obstruction day after day of measures brought in for approval, and of constant challenges. There were the same charges of time wasting which take place even today.

A sense of perspective is good and useful; but that does not mean that we have not very serious problems before the house in the organization and operation of parliamentary business and parliamentary procedures. Furthermore there is a very great difference between now and 50 years ago in the house, a difference which arises out of the nature and the scope of our activities today.

We have infinitely more to do today than they had 50 years ago, and our sessions are now almost continuous throughout the year. It was not so many generations ago when the problem of a prime minister and government of the day was finding enough legislation to keep parliament in session at least two months. There are more decisions to be made now, and these decisions involve more continuous responsibility on parliament, on the opposition and the government, than was the case some years ago.

Therefore the need for efficient procedures and the effective discharge of business with a minimum of delay is much greater now than it was in the days about which I have been talking, and the penalty today for inefficiency is much greater than it used to be in those days. In addition the danger to the public welfare, if we do not order our proceedings effectively, is much greater than it used to be. Perhaps that is the reason that public opinion is much less tolerant than it was 50 years ago of the foibles and weaknesses of parliament, and of the House of Commons in particular.

The consequences of our inaction or wrong action today are very immediate and direct, and far greater on our people because of the greater impact of what we do, due to the necessarily increased intervention of parliament and the government in the life and affairs of average people.

This has been recognized during the last 10 or 15 years, particularly in the House of Commons, and we have made progress in those areas in improving our procedures. We have gone some distance in the last few years in limiting debate, in limiting the time that can be used for the budget debate and for the address in reply to the speech from the throne. We have cut out a good many of the frills, and this has meant an improvement. These changes were made by agreement among all parties, and were mostly made through a committee set up by the house. I might add that in the deliberations of that committee party considerations did not loom as large as they sometimes do in the house. But, Mr. Speaker, there is a great deal more to be done. It seems to me we have just touched the surface in the changes required to make our deliberative assembly more effective.

We have to make some more fundamental changes than have been possible in the past, and it is essential at the same time to maintain the traditions and customs of the house, and the rights of individual members, particularly of individual members in the opposition. I think we can reconcile these two things and I hope this committee will be in a position to make recommendations to that end.

One of the things to which I hope the committee will give active consideration, is how we can make the committees system of the house operate more effectively. This is something we have all talked about in recent years, and the right hon. gentleman had very important plans to that effect from 1957 onwards. I know an effort was made, but I am sure he will agree it was not as successful as he would have hoped. This is no reflection on the attempt that was made; but surely it is now important to treat this problem as one of the most serious problems of parliament—the more effective discharge of work through committees in a way that will give the committees authority and power to make decisions, and when the decisions are referred to the House of Commons we will not have to go through the same debate over and over again that has taken place in the committees.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it five o'clock?

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business, namely public bills and private bills.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

PROVISION OF MINIMUM RATE OF WAGES FOR EMPLOYEES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-28, to provide for minimum wages for employees in federal works, undertakings, and businesses.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to provide for legislation in the federal labour field which is supported by all the parties in this House of Commons. The proposal is that we should have federal legislation providing for a minimum wage. As hon. members are aware, labour matters come partly under provincial jurisdiction and partly under federal jurisdiction, and therefore this bill would provide for a minimum wage only with respect to those employees who come under federal labour jurisdiction. The proposal in my bill is that a minimum wage at the federal level be set at $1.25 an hour. The bill, of course, makes it clear that it would not affect the rate of wages of any employees who already enjoy a higher rate of wages; but if this bill passed and became law it would provide that no one under federal labour jurisdiction could be employed at a rate of less than $1.25 an hour.

Mr. Speaker, minimum wage legislation in the various provinces of Canada is by no means uniform. It varies from province to province as to the extent of its coverage; it varies from province to province, and from area to area within some provinces, as to the amount that is set as a minimum wage. We feel that the time has come to do two things by legislation of this kind; first of all to provide a minimum wage at the federal level, and second to give a lead to the provinces. It should be stated quite clearly that in the provincial labour field the provinces are autonomous, but it is the view of some of us that if in this area we had good legislation in the federal labour field, it would give a lead to the provinces to make their legislation better than it now is.

The kinds of improvements that are needed in the provinces are such as would extend the coverage to all workers, both male and female, in all areas of our provinces, and also raise the amount of the minimum wage. However, it is not our function here to deal with provincial legislation. I mention those improvements in connection with my suggestion that one of the purposes of federal legislation in this field is to give a lead to the provinces as well.

I said in my opening words that the purpose of this bill is to provide legislation in our federal statute books which is supported by all the parties in this House of Commons. I need not name them all; that list, of course, is growing these days. But I wish to refer in particular to the party that is now in power, the Liberal party. It supports minimum wage legislation, as it supports other legislation in the labour field. In the last parliament, when the Liberals sat in opposition, they readily supported all the labour bills that some of us brought forth. In this parliament they sit on the government side and so they sing a slightly different tune.

An hon. Member: No, we don't.

Mr. Knowles: An hon. member over there says "We don't". I would refer hon. members on that side of the house to the debate, for example that is recorded in Hansard of May 30. They will find that what I have said is correct. They argue, of course, that they still believe in those things in which they believed when they supported our bills when sitting on the opposition side of the house, but that what they want is the opportunity to bring these things in themselves. I do not deny them that opportunity; I only wish they would avail themselves of the opportunity, now they are on the government side of the house.

On May 30 of this year when we were debating another bill of mine in the labour field, Bill No. C-2, which provided for statutory holidays with pay, when I pointed out to Liberal members that they had supported this bill in the previous parliament and were now talking it out, the answer was that it was their intention as Liberals to bring in a national labour code, a comprehensive measure that would include all these things. So I was asked to be patient and to wait until later in the session, when a national labour code would be brought in and the Liberals would provide a charter for labour in terms of statutory holidays with pay, adequate annual vacations, minimum wages, maximum hours of work, and all the things that can be part of a national labour code. I was asked to wait, Mr. Speaker. That was on May 30.

Four and a half months have gone by since then. If the Liberals want to think of it in terms of a number of days, that is 135 days, more than twice the number of days the Liberals needed to get things rolling. But not one suggestion has come from the other side of the house that there is in sight a national labour code or any of the elements of such a labour code which the Liberals promised when they were in opposition, when they were on the hustings and even since they came into this house as the government of Canada. Therefore it seems to me that once again we have to call upon the government of the day and its supporters to take the position, now that they are in power, that they took when they were in opposition. If they then believed in things like this, in a national minimum wage of at least $1.25 an hour, I suggest they should show their support for such a proposal when it is brought before them at this time.

We have had an interesting experience with private members' resolutions and bills in this session. At first they were treated according to the pattern of former years; they were all talked out. Then there seemed to be a little revolution amongst some of the backbenchers on the Liberal side. They did not like having to talk out bills that last year they supported, and as a result of that a bit of a reform took place. Some measures, instead of being talked out, were debated for an hour and then their subject matter was sent to whatever was the appropriate committee. While that is not as satisfactory as passing a piece of legislation and sending a bill itself to a committee, it certainly is better than treating an important piece of legislation to the talking out process.

I hope that today hon. members will not again ask us to wait for this national labour code, since we have already waited four and a half months, since the hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Gray) and the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Labour, the hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Byrne), promised us that these things were coming. I hope that instead they will do either one of two things, support this bill on second reading, whereupon it would be referred to the committee on industrial relations for study as to its detail, or at least give it that better-than-talking-out procedure, that of having its subject matter referred to that same committee, the committee on industrial relations.

I say again, Mr. Speaker, that there is no need in this house, made up of the various parties that are here, to argue the merits of a minimum wage bill; that we ought to have this kind of legislation; that we ought to have it at the federal level, and that the rate of wages in any minimum wage bill should be not less than $1.25 an hour. I suggest that since we all agree to this proposition we give this measure that is now before us the best treatment that it can be given in the time at our disposal. If the house, as I think it should, sees fit to agree to second reading, I give the undertaking that I would not then try to move it into committee of the whole, but I would move that it be referred to the committee on industrial relations for study clause by clause, in all its detail.

If that is not possible, I hope at least that the bill will not be talked out but rather that the subject matter will be sent to that same committee. There, along with other bills which have been referred, it can be studied, so that we can make some progress toward getting the national labour code which the Liberals promised in the election campaign, which they promised on the floor of this house, but any sight of which we have yet to see. Because we all believe in the principle of this bill, I suggest that it should receive the support of the house in this private members' hour.

[Translation]

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great deal of pleasure and attention to the comments just made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) concerning Bill C-28, which is meant to provide minimum wages of $1.25 per hour throughout the country.

No doubt that the bill is of some value and deserved to be introduced to prepare public opinion.

It must be borne in mind, however, that our country is quite large and that, from one ocean to the other, interests are many and varied.

The situation in Newfoundland may not be compared with that in Vancouver. The two areas are so different. The climate is different and so are working conditions. That is why it is rather difficult to set certain working conditions to be uniformly applied to all the various parts of the country.

However, I believe that a minimum must necessarily be established. In fact, I think that we must pay particular attention to the condition of the workers in the whole country.

But to say that it must be, everywhere in the country $1.25 an hour, would be to impose a limitation on the salary in some places where it is already above $1.25 an hour and in fact to increase it tremendously in some other places where it is very low, as, for example, where it is only $1 an hour.

It would be difficult, therefore to accept, on a total and permanent basis, the purpose of the bill introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. We know that the object of the bill which he presents to the house is much too serious to be considered lightly. By that I do not mean that the sponsor of the bill did not consider it in detail. He probably did so extensively. The number of sections in the bill shows it. It is easy to see that he worked seriously at it.

But I wonder if all the members have had time to study it carefully, in view of the amount of work they have been called upon to do since the beginning of the session. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has just suggested that it be referred to a committee to be considered in detail.

On the other hand, I know that at the present time the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) is studying a labour code. And, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre put it so well, such a study cannot be made hastily; the problems the government has faced since then have been such that we had to put it aside in order to consider more urgent matters.

We recently had before us a resolution and a bill to provide for the placing of the maritime transportation unions of Canada under the management and control of trustees, and every member studied them extensively and every one freely expressed his opinion in the house, so that we are aware of their opinion on that matter.

Since the beginning of the session, we had before us legislative measures requiring the continuous and constant attention of the house. This is the reason why we did not have time to study properly the labour code. But I know that the Minister of Labour is now dealing with a complete consolidation of all acts on labour and their relation with the federal field. This is likely to encourage the provinces to adopt a similar labour code.

For instance, I know that in the province of Quebec only, there is a great difference between wages paid in Hull, in Montreal, in Quebec and in the Gaspe peninsula, because of different conditions prevailing in each of these areas.

The various governments of the province of Quebec, at all times, have often been blamed for not paying their workmen enough. That is due to the fact that the province should have been divided into areas where salaries could be different and according to the cost of living in each area. I often claimed that when I was a member of the Quebec legislature in 1935-36 and in 1939-45; I always contended that dividing the province into areas would have enabled us to establish salaries according to the circumstances and labour conditions prevailing in each of those areas. But they never paid much attention to me. Today generally salaries are being increased. The federal government did not wait for us to do so, and a complete study is now under way; I do not know how far it will go, but I hope that it will be in the right direction.

The same conditions prevail in the province of Ontario, in the prairie provinces, in the maritimes, and also in the province of British Columbia.

The various parts of Canada are altogether different. The cost of living index is not the same everywhere. We have to consider the index for each part of the country.

I say that it would be a monumental mistake to pass this bill right now and provide for minimum wage of $1.25 throughout Canada, as it would result in a reduction in many localities where salaries are higher and an increase where they are sufficient.

That is why I suggest that this matter should be examined more sensibly and more thoroughly. At any rate, I feel that during the hour we have at our disposal, it would be impossible to examine this bill in a way that would enable us to understand it. I think it would be wise to wait until the Minister of Labour has prepared and submitted to us his labour code. Then, if hon. members are not satisfied with his resolution on the labour code, they could criticize it to their heart's content, and even oppose it, and we shall be in a position to give them the proper answers at that time. We will at least have had the chance to study a comprehensive scheme applicable throughout the country and taking into account different circumstances in any part of the country, an organization which could guide us in some way to attain a certain end. That is why I suggest that the bill introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is ill-timed. It has perhaps been prepared in a hurry. The hon. member may have studied it, but we do not feel that we have had enough time to read it, examine it and understand it fully.

For those reasons, I believe we should vote it down. On the other hand, I know that some hon. members on this side of the house do not share my views, and I realize also that other members, on the other side of the house do not share them either. I also believe that this matter is bound to be very actively discussed. That is why I do not want to take too much time, because I would like other hon. members to have a chance to express their views.

I therefore say to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that I do not wish to accept his bill today, because I think it is premature and that it was too hastily introduced. I think he should give the Minister of Labour a chance to produce his labour code, and then, he may criticize it and perhaps submit certain things provided in this legislation, in the form of amendments. Then, we may all agree and accept it or reject it.

That is what I am asking today, and I hope that those who will rise after me will probably share my views.

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I shall not delay hon. members too long, but I would like to make a few remarks in connection with the legislation now before us.

First of all, may I commend the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) for renewing, in each session, his attempts to move a similar bill. This proves his interest for the working class. It is certainly in a spirit of fairness that he wants to see the workers' salaries under federal jurisdiction, generally increased to $1.25 an hour.

Nowadays, Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that a salary of $1.25 is certainly not excessive. I should also tell the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron), who preceded me, that I do not quite understand how he can maintain that this bill would, in certain places, bring existing salaries down to $1.25 an hour. I think that the legislation before us covers the case, when it provides that the lowest salary rate should be $1.25. This means, of course, that any salary higher than $1.25, may stay at that higher level.

I cannot agree with the remarks of my hon. friend for Hull (Mr. Caron). In previous years, he has been greatly concerned with improving the workers' lot and he should therefore be congratulated; but I believe that to postpone such a bill from one session to another is only to delude ourselves.

There is also the question of labour unions which should not be forgotten, and this is why, even if I support the allegations of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) to the effect that it is commendable to increase as much as possible salaries of workers and employees coming under the federal government, I still believe that we should not ignore the influence and authority of labour unions in such a matter.

For all these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I believe that it would be profitable to study this bill in the house, as I am convinced that it would be useful to hear the opinions of members before forming an opinion that would really be in the best interest of the workers.

I do not wish to prevent other members from speaking on this bill and this is why I maintain that we should grant it our fullest consideration, because it is of great interest for the working class in our society.

[Text]

Mr. Richard Cashin (St. John's West): I, too, would like to take this opportunity of making a few comments on the subject matter of the bill now before the house. As has been stated, this is not a new bill. This is not the first time a measure of this kind has been before the house. Certainly, it is my opinion that comprehensive legislation in this field is overdue in Canada. This becomes obvious when one considers the practices followed in some of the other more highly developed countries of the world.

As hon. members know, I do not speak for the government, nor could I be expected to do so, but I feel confident that this question is under study and that it will not be very long before we see brought forward the type of comprehensive legislation which is so badly needed in this field. As to the bill now before us dealing with minimum wages, I believe it concerns itself with only one aspect of a much wider problem; it seems to me that it would be best to deal with this whole subject comprehensively and at one time. Although there is one act on the statute books of this country pertaining to this subject, the federal government is in fact behind the provinces in the enactment of legislation such as we have before us now.

I am sure there is nothing new which any of us can say in support of a bill of this sort. I believe there are many who feel this situation should have been taken care of earlier by the government many years ago, and we hope it will be taken care of in the near future.

Mr. MacInnis: Would the hon. member permit a question? He has told us that this is only part of a wider problem. Would he indicate what else in his opinion should be tied in with the proposal before us?

Mr. Cashin: I am glad the hon. member for Cape Breton South has asked me that question. I am sorry if he has had any difficulty in following my remarks. The other subjects I thought should be dealt with include hours of work and holidays with pay. These are related to the question before the house.

Mr. MacInnis: Would the hon. member permit a further question? Would he put his notes aside and enlighten the house as to his knowledge of the particular subject before us. It is against the rules to present an argument from a prepared text.

Mr. Cashin: The hon. member for Cape Breton South has sat here for longer than I have and I am always glad to learn, if possible, from a member with longer experience. It is true I have some notes before me, but it has never been my practice in the house to read from a prepared text, nor am I doing so now. The hon. member for Cape Breton South may himself have to resort to a practice of that sort and therefore he presumes I am doing so. That is not the case.

One of the advantages of legislation along the lines suggested would be the placing of additional purchasing power in the hands of those who belong to the lower income groups. This would be a most admirable result. There are, perhaps, those who feel that a minimum wage of $1.25 across Canada might bring about inequities, inasmuch as it is difficult to ascertain whether the effect of $1.25 in one area is the same as in another area. There are some who, for this reason, might prefer to see a lower figure established. They might think, for instance, that $1.10 would be a better figure. I do not agree. We have to arrive at some figure, and I think the figure of $1.25 is a good one. Of course, I have no way of knowing accurately the extra cost which would be involved in making it $1.25 as opposed to $1.10, but from a source which I believe can be regarded as reasonably reliable I learn that if the figure of $1.10 were adopted, some 20,000 to 23,000 people employed in crown corporations and the like would be affected, and that the extra cost involved would be of the order of $6 million. On the other hand, if $1.25 were the figure adopted a far broader group of crown employees would be affected and the extra money involved would be about $17 million. There is a good deal of difference between those two figures. Nevertheless, I think that since legislation of this sort is overdue it would be unwise to set the figure at less than $1.25 an hour. As I said, one of the reasons that a minimum wage of $1.25 an hour would be a benefit to the country is that it would give additional purchasing power to those in the lower income group. There would also be the advantage of equality of income standards throughout Canada.

There is one problem, however, that we have to face and to which the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron) has already made some reference. There are areas in Canada where $1.25 an hour certainly means more than it does in other areas. I think this is known to all members and is really an obvious fact. What is really needed, I suppose, is an extensive study, and perhaps the perennial suggestion of $1.25 an hour that has been made in recent years could be approached in this way. There may be some refinements that could be made and possibly in certain areas the figure could be higher than $1.25 an hour. Perhaps some allowances might be made. I would not want to say whether this is a wise or unwise practice. We know that in some provinces there is a difference between the urban rate and the rural rate. I can certainly see the reasoning behind this, but as far as I am concerned the answers are not all in on that question. I am not sure that is a wise course of action.

I thought I had the reference in my notes but when I make notes I unfortunately do not always include all those things I should like to; so in this case I must apologize to the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacInnis). I will not be referring to my notes but rather to my memory. If my memory is correct, there are some provinces that do not have a difference between the urban and rural rates, and I think there is something to be said for that. Perhaps a distinction could be made along other lines than the area. Perhaps it could be made on the basis of the type of work in which people are engaged.

I think that these considerations, and the fact that there is much more that could be said on this subject lead us to the conclusion that, while we agree this matter really should have been dealt with a long time ago, we cannot accept the bill without further study. It may be that if the present and previous governments had been as progressive in their legislation as some people would have liked them to be, this problem would have been settled some years ago. As I said at the outset, while I cannot speak for the government I am quite confident that those things that were promised in this regard by Liberal candidates prior to the election will be carried out, and I hope very soon.

Mr. Knowles: Everything else is being sidetracked.

Mr. Cashin: It is very easy for hon. members who belong to groups who have never had the responsibility of governing the country and are very unlikely ever to have that responsibility, to make such remarks continually. In fact, one might say it is good politics for them to make such remarks, and I believe people generally realize this, when they do say these things. Every day they say: Why is this not being done today? If all the things were done in one day that some people would like to see done I am afraid we would have to have more than a 24-hour day, and also a very great change in the way things have gone up to now.

As I said, people generally realize that when members of these groups say these things they are really saying them for political advantage. After all, since they are small groups it is quite likely that in many cases they despair that the public will understand them because people generally usually listen to these remarks and simply chuckle a little.

Mr. Knowles: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Cashin: I certainly will.

Mr. Knowles: Since he has referred to politics I wonder whether he would not agree it would be good politics for the government to bring in the measures that it has promised to bring in?

Mr. Cashin: I am very glad the hon. member asked me that question. I think it would be good policy. What is for the good of the country usually is good politics. I feel that what we are discussing now will be done and that the matter is under study. As we all know, in the last few months the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) has had a test of his mettle such as few, if any, members of the house have ever had. It is very easy to be wise when you do not have that kind of responsibility, but I wonder what course of action would have been taken by some other member.

We are all aware of the great pressures that have been placed upon the Minister of Labour in various ways to do this or that, and I think the consensus is that he has handled himself in a most admirable way. My knowledge of the Minister of Labour goes back long before my entrance into public life a year ago, and I am quite confident that with a man of his calibre in this portfolio and with the co-operation of all of us, labour legislation will be brought before the house during his term of office unexcelled by any in the history of the country. I say this, so great is my faith in this minister. I am always a little amused by those who make certain remarks, the responsibility of which I sometimes question; but I think we should understand that they are made by those who will seldom, if ever, have the opportunity to govern, which in my view is a very good thing.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, the bill brought before us by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) may not be exactly the same as some that have been presented to previous parliaments but I think it is similar.

Mr. Knowles: It has been before parliament for six or seven years.

Mr. Olson: It is a matter of interest that the member who introduced the bill pleaded with the government to take the same attitude toward it now as they did when they were in the opposition. I am sure the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre knows better than to expect that kind of attitude.

It was also very interesting to note the remarks of the hon. member who spoke just before me in an attempt to excuse the change of attitude as being a part of political life which the public would forgive, and therefore he did not consider it to be a very serious thing that they should have supported such legislation while they were in opposition and during the election campaign, and have now changed their attitude completely when they are the government.

I should like to suggest that the house should refer the bill to the committee on industrial relations. The committee has not met since I returned to parliament in 1962 and perhaps this would be something it could consider, particularly if the members of the government party are in fact serious when they say they would like to see some such legislation passed. Certainly it would be useful to them to study the provisions in this bill in order to assist them in drawing up the labour code they have promised.

I believe there are 19 sections in the bill before us. As I look through them I see there is provision for a minimum wage of $1.25 per hour and in addition there are sections providing that there is to be no deduction from the $1.25 per hour for such things as special wearing apparel, special tools, and so on. There is also a provision, I am glad to learn, relating to board and lodging, and so on, if this is supplied by the employer. So, if you add all these things up the minimum wage that would result, that is, the total remuneration actually paid to the employee, would be substantially more than the $1.25 per hour.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think there should be some additional study of this measure. I am not completely familiar with the working conditions in all parts of Canada, nor am I completely familiar with those industries that supply wearing apparel, tools and so on, for which deductions would not be allowed from the $1.25 under the provisions of this bill. Another provision that should have been in this bill, perhaps even in the preamble, is that this $1.25 is a minimum only and should not be considered as a fair wage. There has been a minimum wage law in the province of Alberta for a number of years, but it is made abundantly clear that it is not considered to be a fair wage or a proper wage; it is simply a minimum. I think this should be made clear also in any federal statute which attempts to set a minimum, that it should not be considered as a fair wage.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I would support the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) in his plea to have the bill sent to the committee on industrial relations, or some other committee for study.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I rise in support of this bill, Mr. Speaker. It was not my intention to do so, but because of the way, the lighthearted way in which the very wealthy hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Cashin)—

Miss LaMarsh: Cheap, cheap.

Mr. MacInnis: —read his remarks from a pyramid he built up on his desk, I think it is only fair I should make a few remarks on this bill introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I am quite sure the hon. member introduced it with no intention of establishing this as a fair wage, but only as a minimum wage, and a step in the right direction. The hon. member for St. John's West has a lot to learn. I think he could have learned quite a bit about the minimum wage laws of this country if he had been in Nova Scotia during the last provincial election campaign.

The matter of this minimum wage law came to my attention very forcibly since the start of the Louisburg project. The men there started out at $1.05, and I think at the moment they have reached $1.19 per hour. I do not consider this to be anywhere near a fair wage. Certainly, the establishment of $1.25 as a minimum would be a step in the right direction. I realize, however, that the previous government had a responsibility in connection with this subject, as did governments before that time. As the hon. member stated, if this matter had been looked after when it should have been, this question would not be before the house now. I would point out to the hon. member that his party has had considerable opportunity to deal with it. I would remind the members on the government side of the house also that during the campaign in Nova Scotia, Liberal candidates took it upon themselves to state that the wage rate of $1.19 per hour at Louisburg was established by the previous government of John Diefenbaker, that it was his responsibility. All I can say to them today is, if this was his responsibility, as they put it, they have had an opportunity to correct a situation that needs correcting, according to their own words.

I realize that there is very little time left, so I should like to say to the wealthy young man and his colleagues—

Miss LaMarsh: Cheap, cheap.

Mr. MacInnis: —that they should put their vote where their mouth is. I could learn from the hon. lady, too.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) always begins his speech on these matters by condemning the government of the day for not having acted expeditiously on a matter which he believes is of great importance. There is no question but that this bill is one of very great importance. There is a large number of people affected. The hon. member should also take into consideration, the fact that since the government came into office we have been criticized for moving too quickly on measures that have been projected from the time of our political campaign.

At the same time, the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen), as has been pointed out, has been under some pressure in order to try to bring about a settlement of the great lakes dispute, that is the dispute between the S.I.U. and rival unions. Then, we have had the strike of the longshoremen. In fact, I think it could be said that since the minister was sworn in, he has not had a day off from work, with the exception of the odd Sunday, for instance.

Mr. MacInnis: Nor has the hon. member for Cape Breton South.

Mr. Byrne: Would the hon. member like to make another speech?

Mr. MacInnis: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Benidickson: He will consider it at the end of his remarks.

Mr. MacInnis: Perhaps I had better yield the floor to the minister.

In his remarks just now the hon. member referred to the fact the Minister of Labour had worked very hard since he took office, and had not had a day off. This has nothing to do with the bill, but I would remind him that he is not quite accurate, and I can prove it.

Mr. Habel: You are getting as bad as Caouette.

Mr. MacInnis: Oh, shut up, Joe.

Mr. Byrne: The hon. member, as usual, is completely out of order, as he has been a number of times since this session began. He asks a question, then makes speeches and then becomes abusive of hon. members. I think the hon. member should contain himself and try to show at least some semblance of good manners in the house.

There is no question but that this legislation the Liberals have been proposing is a matter for consideration by the Minister of Labour. I am sure there is no argument there. We have said that we intend to take measures that will provide at least a minimum standard and that will have effect throughout Canada. Now, this question is not going to be resolved merely by having a debate in the House of Commons for an hour or two. It has been pointed out—

Mr. Knowles: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Byrne: Yes.

Mr. Knowles: Does he recall who it was for the Liberal party who spoke on this bill last year and urged its adoption?

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Knowles: If he does not, I can tell him. It was the present Minister of Labour.

Mr. Byrne: Surely the hon. member does not say that the introduction of this bill does not mean that there cannot be measures that are equally suitable or even better. The adoption of this bill would not mean the end-all of improving working and economic conditions of people throughout Canada. The measures we have introduced with respect to Atlantic provinces development will, in my opinion, have a much greater effect on the economy of those areas than a minimum wage.

It is my hope that when these measures go into effect and developments flow from the Department of Industry, the Atlantic development board, and the legislation which provides loans to municipalities, a $1.25 per hour wage will be considered a truly miserly amount.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, if the hon. member who now has the floor addressed himself to the bill before the house instead of dealing with other legislation, some of which has not been considered by the house, we would make a lot more progress.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the hon. member reading his speeches quite often and I have found, even when doing that, he frequently departs from the actual debate before the house. What I am speaking about has a direct relationship to the question of a $1.25 hourly wage.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Speaker, I do not understand what the hon. gentleman is talking about. I have not been making any speech in the house today. I have not got any notes before me. I have not got a pile of stuff like the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Cashin) had before him when he read word for word.

Mr. Cashin: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I did not read word for word. The pile of words before me includes a lot of words spoken by the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden), because it is Hansard for part of the session.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Cashin: Would the parliamentary secretary permit a question?

Mr. Byrne: Yes.

Mr. Cashin: Does he not think the reason the Minister of Labour, last year when he was a private member in opposition, wanted a private members' bill passed which dealt with this subject, was because he did not have confidence the government of that day would do it, and we now have confidence that the government of this day will do it?

Mr. Byrne: I believe the hon. member's interpretation of the situation can be accepted. I would not want to be perhaps quite so dogmatic. I believe that in time the Conservative party might have moved toward such legislation but I am sure it would not necessarily have been quite so progressive. No doubt they would have introduced something providing for a much lesser amount.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major Alfred Fortier, Assistant Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, it is the desire of the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General that this honourable house attend him immediately in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house, went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bill:

An Act to Provide for the Placing of the Maritime Transportation Unions of Canada Under the Management and Control of Trustees.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before Your Honour calls it six o'clock I wonder if I might just say a word about the business of the house. I take it, from the statement made last night, that there was agreement that the debate that was in progress at five o'clock would be adjourned and we would go into supply tonight to take the estimates of the Department of Public Works. On that understanding, it might be convenient for the Speaker to leave the chair and the house to go into committee so we would be in committee at seven o'clock, or perhaps 7.10 when hon. members come back.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, it is agreed that we are going into committee tonight to discuss the estimates of the Department of Public Works. The matter of whether Mr. Speaker leaves the chair is, I would suggest, one for Your Honour's own decision, for your own convenience.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps before you do actually leave the chair, sir, in whatever circumstances, I might say that should the estimates of the Department of Public Works be concluded there are a few items outstanding from the Department of Transport. The Minister of Transport (Mr. McIlraith) has indicated that, rather than have us adjourn because of having no business to deal with, he would be quite prepared to answer questions on the items outstanding from the estimates of his department.

Mr. Lambert: May I say, Mr. Speaker, that the Secretary of State is most optimistic.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 7 p.m.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply, vote No. 1, Department of Public Works.

General administration including a grant of $2,000 to the Canadian good roads association, $10,695,000.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I think it would be in order for the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets) to give us a brief outline of the policy of his department.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Chairman, since the items submitted to the hon. members were prepared under the previous administration, over a year ago, I don't think it is necessary for me to give you a long explanation.

However, we have slightly changed those estimates and to enable the house to get a better understanding of the various projects and amounts you are called upon to approve, I intend to give you some essential explanations and I will do it alternatively in French and in English.

[Text]

As you know, Mr. Chairman, the items under the heading of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation must be excluded as they now fall under the jurisdiction of the Minister of National Revenue. As for the items concerning the national capital commission, I shall deal with them separately after the items of the Department of Public Works are completed. You will recall that when these items were tabled by the Minister of Finance in May 1963 he also announced that we would be reviewing these estimates to ensure that the amounts were realistic and that they would reflect as accurately as possible what the department could actually carry out this fiscal year.

[Translation]

When revising the estimates prepared in September and October 1962, we found that some projects could not be undertaken because of local difficulties such as the selection of the site, or because of changes in the plans or because of new needs that occurred since 1962. Some projects represent a reduction in the original amount but on the other hand this reconsideration of projects indicated that in some other cases an additional amount had to be provided for to ensure completion of the work.

[Text]

The net effect of this is that of the total amount indicated in the main estimates for public works for 1963-64, to wit $166 million, a sum of $7,391,195 will not be required and appropriate amendments will be introduced when the individual items are called. On the other hand, additional amounts were required for new programs or projects which could be undertaken within the fiscal year. These additional items will be found listed in the supplementary estimates of the public works department and amount to $12.8 million.

[Translation]

In a word, I would now ask you to approve a total of $172.3 million, and there is an amount of $6.3 million provided for by the previous administration. For the items we are preparing for the year 1964-65 I expect a more important increase. I will then take that opportunity to submit to the hon. member my idea of the part that the Department of Public Works must play in the national economy. At that time I will have visited the major part of the main projects under construction in the country and I hope that the next estimates that are submitted to the house will reflect the progressive emphasis I intend to give that department which can do so much to develop strategic areas in our various provinces.

[Text]

I know hon. members will appreciate these facts and that I can count on their fullest co-operation in considering these estimates. I will endeavour to provide answers to any questions they may have. However, I would propose that I deal with them after all members concerned have completed their observations.

[Translation]

Before I resume my seat, may I express to the entire staff of the department my admiration and my appreciation for the dedication they have shown since last April and I wish to tell them how gratifying it is to work with servants of the country who have such a fine comprehension of the importance of their responsibilities.

When I leave that office, maybe in some 20 years, I hope that the department will enjoy as much prestige as it did when I took over.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, my first remarks will be to offer my best wishes to the new incumbent of the public works portfolio. And I could not offer him better wishes than to follow in the steps of his predecessor. I think it will be the best way for him to build up for himself an enviable reputation, to be a man of whom it can be said that he has rendered services to his country.

The Hon. Davie Fulton who left the federal field to go into the provincial political arena was an excellent minister and I know that all members of the house agree to that and miss him a lot. We, on this side of the house, wish him the best of luck in his new political career.

Mr. Chairman, the minister gave us a concise statement of the various changes made within the Department of Public Works and indicated his intention to recommend some others in the future.

Besides, we deeply regretted that when the new administration took office the Department of Public Works was handicapped in matters concerning the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. We think it would have been more logical to have the business of that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation administered by the public works department rather than by the national revenue department.

Did the government try to curtail the importance of that department since the incumbent was from Quebec or did the government consider the minister incapable of managing the business of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation?

Mr. Habel: Small politics.

Mr. Pigeon: In the course of my remarks, I do not intend to go into details.

I only want to make a broad review, but I would like later to ask a few questions concerning certain secondary items.

There have been many changes since the minister was named to the Department of Public Works. His first act was to have an office installed in Montreal, at the expense of the Department of Public Works. We would like to know, on this side of the house, what was the cost of this installation, since it is a precedent, and we would also like to know the reasons why the minister, who is almost continually busy in Ottawa, had this office installed.

We would be happy to know who acts for him while he is absent from Montreal. Who are the persons assigned to that office? I was told there are four persons. We would like to know about their salaries, their wages and the part they play, for we find it strange, on this side of the house, that the minister should have in Montreal such a large staff and an office in the public works department building. We would not wish it to be a den for patronage. We wish the minister would give us explanations on that question.

May I remind the minister that one of his first acts as Minister of Public Works was to attend in Montreal, on June 3, 1963, the opening of tenders for work to be carried out at the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary.

We should also like to have some information in that connection. Would the minister tell us whether he will continue to open tenders himself and whether it is the usual practice for a minister of the crown to do that?

According to the Montreal newspapers, after the opening of the tenders, the minister communicated directly with Argo Construction to give them the news and to ask them if they were interested in getting the contract. Mr. Chairman, we find such a behaviour very odd on the part of a minister of the crown.

Supply—Public Works

As I said a while ago, the minister opened an office in Montreal. I have no hesitation to say publicly here that the officials of the Department of Public Works in Montreal cannot act freely, according to their conscience and their oath of allegiance. The representatives of the minister in Montreal do not allow any employee there to take his responsibilities and to do his duty. They interfere constantly, keep watch over the departmental officials and thwart their efforts. The employees work under tension all the time and we should like the minister to give us some explanation in that respect.

Mr. Chairman, I feel it is unusual for people from the minister's office, in other words proteges of the minister, to try to impede officials of the Department of Public Works in the accomplishment of their duties.

It is true that at the beginning of his remarks, the minister paid a tribute to the employees of this department stating that he was ready to co-operate with them. But if the minister wishes really to be logical with himself, he will begin by closing his Montreal office, he will ask his representatives to refrain from putting pressure on the employees of the Department of Public Works and let them take their decisions and carry out their work.

We, on this side of the house, wish to do without either good or bad patronage, as was the practice up to 1957. I warn the minister that we will be on the watch and I will take this opportunity to remind the house of the kind of patronage which always existed under the Liberal regime before 1957.

Mr. Chairman, I have in hand a photostat letter written by an official of the Department of Publics Works in Montreal which I wish to put on the official record. It reads as follows:

Department of Public Works
150 West St. Paul St.,
Montreal, Que.

April 9, 1954.

CIRCULAR LETTER TO CARETAKERS

(Ville-Marie) RE:—Tenders "copy"

Gentlemen:—

When caretakers and foremen are asked to forward to this office competitive tenders for various works, the following procedure should be followed:

1. When the names of the tenderers are not given by our office, they will have to be obtained from the member, when he is from the area, from his authorized representative or from the local patronage committee—

Mr. Chairman, I draw the attention of the house to the words "local patronage committee".

—the names of a least two competent contractors (three names would be preferable).

2. Give separately to each tenderer the plans, specifications or description of the work and the forms for tender.

[Mr. Pigeon.]

3. Ask them to forward their signed tenders directly to the district architect, 150 W. St. Paul street, Montreal, under sealed cover marked, tender for... (work to be carried out, for instance: outside paint job, public building in St. Martin) so that it will reach destination before the set time and date.

When a price is to be submitted by only one supplier or contractor, ask the latter to forward his signed tender directly to the same address.

Follow those instructions and observe the strictest secrecy about the names of the various tenderers, the prices submitted by each and the procedure to be followed.

Yours truly,

CONFIDENTIAL

(R. Martineau)
Acting district architect

Certified copy, February 10/59. Caretaker

Mr. Chairman, I must tell the house that I have crossed out the superintendent's name, for were I asked to table the letter, I would not want that person to become the victim of retaliatory measures. But this document is a certified copy of the original.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member whether the letter he has just read was written in 1954?

Mr. Pigeon: That is correct, Mr. Chairman. But we are well aware of the type of politics the government is engaged in.

The Postmaster General has a list of privileged people. One knows full well what friends are on that list, and what kind of patronage was prevalent in 1954. I have just submitted to the house an authentic proof, which cannot be refuted.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, will the hon. member allow a question?

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I have a deep respect for the hon. member for Hull—

Mr. Caron: Could the hon. member tell us how things were run between 1957 and 1963?

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I am glad the hon. member asked that question for he is doing me a favour. Actually I have here a photostat of the circular letter sent to the building superintendents in 1958, when we were in office.

Here is the document:

Circular-58-4F

Department of Public Works
1643 DeLorimier

Montreal Jan. 2, 1958

Memo to all building superintendents

Would you kindly fill in the enclosed questionnaire, and write the name and address of the contractors, subcontractors and suppliers of your district and surroundings, who might be interested in dealing with the department.

Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the house to the fact that it does not ask for two or three names nor does it say that one should apply to the patronage committee.

I read on:

All these contractors, subcontractors or suppliers must reside within a 15 mile radius of your community and must include any person or company upon which you could depend to carry out various works in the building under your care, or who would be available in case of emergency. Everyone without exception must be listed.

Please take good note, Mr. Chairman, "everyone, without exception must be listed".

Further on:

In the future, when you have been authorized to carry out some works in the building under your care, it will be extremely important that you establish a revolving system so that contractor, subcontractors and suppliers all get a fair share of the money spent.

The enclosed list must be returned to me without delay.

R. J. Grenier,
District director.

There is the difference, Mr. Chairman. The caretakers are simply asked—

Mr. Deschatelets: Would the hon. member allow me to ask him a very simple question?

Mr. Pigeon: Yes.

Mr. Deschatelets: You did say, did you not, that you had crossed off the signature or the name of the caretaker on the other letter?

Mr. Pigeon: Yes, Mr. Chairman, but I can table the document. In fact, I put my seat at stake if the document is false, that is the first document I read.

There is the difference between the two governments. It is simple. You just have to read the two letters, as I did.

In the first letter, written under a government to which the minister belonged, and I know that he will certainly not fail his friends—

Mr. Caron: That was in 1954?

Mr. Pigeon: Does the hon. member wish to repudiate the past record of his party, when he was one of its members?

Mr. Caron: Years come and go, but things change.

Mr. Pigeon: They did not change very much, Mr. Chairman, if one may judge by the list of favourites of the Postmaster General (Mr. Denis). Moreover, we know that there are other lists—

Mr. Caron: They have not been produced.

Mr. Pigeon: No, but they will be.

Mr. Chairman, you have a letter from the former government of which the hon. member for Hull and the present Minister of Public Works were members. It is a circular letter sent out to have the names of two or three tenderers, for patronage purposes, who were to call at the local patronage committee. Moreover, the letter was marked "confidential", which means that it was to be kept secret.

On the other hand, when we were in office, we sent a letter to superintendents of buildings, letting them know that they were completely free to act as they saw fit, according to their conscience and in keeping with the oath they had taken.

There is the difference. That is why I am informing the Minister of Public Works that we shall keep our eyes open and maintain a constant watch.

Newspapers having reported that the minister had had an office built in Montreal, in which four representatives persecute, so to speak, and watch continuously the officials of the Department of Public Works in Montreal, who cannot make an inspection or give instructions without everything being censured by those favorites of the Minister of Public Works, we cannot but ask that this system be abolished.

I know that the Minister of Public Works is not the only one to blame. His party is responsible for that situation. I have been told that the Minister of Public Works was always taking orders from the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier), the number one minister in charge of patronage, the good patronage.

Mr. Chairman, I say that the same thing goes for the Postmaster General, who is not the only one to blame, and his list of favourites that the whip of the official opposition (Mr. Winkler) has produced.

Mr. Chairman, we want to co-operate with the minister, but we ask him to act according to democratic principles. Our forefathers, English as well as French speaking, fought to keep a close watch on the money spent by the state. We do not want that money to be used for political corruption, and that is why we will always be on the look out.

Mr. Chairman, the minister's statement was very short.

Mr. Deschatelets: Will the hon. member allow me to ask him a question? Can he tell the house if he has now come back to the year 1963?

Mr. Pigeon: Yes, Mr. Chairman, we are in 1963, and I wonder why the minister asks me this question. I know he does not like to be reminded of the past. I realize that the past is somewhat the mirror of the future, but the Minister of Public Works should not take pattern for the future on the past.

But I think that the Minister of Justice very often consults the past to see what should be done in the future. He tries to practise a sort of—

Mr. Habel: Mr. Chairman, does the hon. member permit me a question?

Mr. Pigeon: By all means.

Mr. Habel: May I suggest to the hon. member that it might be dangerous to go too far backwards, because one could then talk about Duplessis' patronage, for whom the hon. member once worked, and call attention to the commissions paid for the purchase of paint, etc.—

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I shall answer the question, but I think that suggestion made by the hon. member for Cochrane is completely out of order, since it concerns what is said to have happened in the province of Quebec. If the hon. member wants to deal with provincial politics, let him resign.

Mr. Chairman, as long as I comply with the rules of the house, the hon. member cannot prevent me from saying what I think, according to my conscience, because as far as we who sit on this side of the house are concerned our conscience is clear.

Mr. Chairman, the type of letter sent by the Department of Public Works in 1954 is a scandal which we do not want to be repeated. And I insist on telling to the minister that we shall do our duty, that we shall scrutinize and watch his actions. I know that the minister is a fine man, but we do not want him to be too much influenced by the hon. member for Laurier.

We, on this side of the house, are willing to co-operate fully with the minister so long as he will provide us with the information we request. I feel that the people must be fully informed about the estimates and that the opposition must scrutinize them.

We want to get the list of suppliers of furniture to the department since the minister was appointed to that office.

We also want to know whether tenders have been called and whether they were public tenders, and, in every case, the names of the tenderers and the amounts involved.

We want to know too if tenders have been called for heating fuel intended for public buildings throughout Canada.

We want to know the names of the tenderers, if possible, by provinces. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that we have a right to get such information.

When the Minister of Public Works was in the opposition, I remember that he rose in the house with such a sad face that you would have thought he had been crying, and in a sobbing voice he said that unemployment was such a dreadful thing. It is true. If the present government had let us proceed with our work, we would have found a solution much more easily than the Liberal administration is doing at the present time.

Do you know, Mr. Chairman, what the minister has done. This minister who was crying reminded me of those Buddhist monks who burn themselves up, as you probably know. He was weeping over the unemployed. But do you know what he has done? The first thing he did was to open an office in Montreal.

The second one was to cancel many projects included in the estimates which we had drawn up.

At the present time, unemployment is crucial in Canada. Forty per cent of the unemployed are in the province of Quebec. There are also unemployed people in all the other provinces of the country.

Do you know, Mr. Chairman, that it is as a result of an answer given to a question put on the order paper that I learned about the cancellation of works for a value of $2.45 million for this year by the Minister of Public Works. Why, Mr. Chairman, at a time where the government knows that it is faced with a crucial unemployment problem, a serious problem threatening the economic foundations of the country, why has the minister cancelled $2.45 million of works in the country?

I have the list in hand. For example, in Nova Scotia, almost $400,000 of public works were cancelled. In the province of Quebec, almost $315,000 of works and as much in Ontario. I could give you a detailed list. I would like the minister to explain why these works have been cancelled, while they appeared in the main estimates.

We would also like to know, if these works have been considered as being reasonable by qualified officials of the Department of Public Works why the minister has left them out and whether the minister intends in the near future to carry out these building projects, in order that we may know whether the minister or the officials of the department are inconsequential. But I have more confidence, Mr. Chairman, in the distinguished officials of the Department of Public Works who are logical and qualified employees—the architects, engineers and others who have proved themselves.

I naturally have all due respect for lawyers, Mr. Chairman but to my mind the minister was not qualified to determine whether or not $2 million worth of public works could be cancelled in a country afflicted with crucial unemployment.

I am coming back to that. The minister's eyes were full of tears, Mr. Chairman. But today the minister cancels important works in our provinces, at the very moment when unemployment has reached a crucial peak.

I would like now, Mr. Chairman, to give the house a concrete instance which refers to the county I have the honour of representing here. I am thinking about the tenders which were called for the purchase, in the municipality of Rawdon, of a lot to build a post office. The old one was housed in the municipal building.

The mayor and the municipal authorities got in touch with me to inform me that they needed space and they asked for the construction of a post office. Everything was according to the requirements set up by the Postmaster General and the Minister of Public Works, as far as revenue was concerned.

Then, at the request of the municipal authorities, I made some inquiries. The post office was not for your humble servant. The land was bought, the tenders were called and the lowest bidder was a person from Rawdon.

At that point there was a change of government. The present Minister of Public Works was appointed. He got patronage rolling and this was related to the first move, very likely to favour one of his friends in Montreal. He sent a notice to the contractor who had been awarded the contract and had already started construction, telling him to send his bill, so he could be paid.

The work was stopped, while it was known that the contractor was qualified and that he had been duly approved by the Department of Public Works. I had to beg the minister so that construction could go on. Several days later, he ordered the contractor to carry on with the work of that post office.

I know, Mr. Chairman that this case, which affected me and struck me, has certainly been a shock also to other members of this house.

We should like the Department of Public Works or rather the Minister of Public Works, because I do not want to say anything against the department since the employees of that department do a good job as long as there is no interference from the minister.

We would like all the ridings in the country to be treated the same way, whatever their political allegiance. If the minister wants to do that, he has only to follow the example set by his predecessor, the Hon. Davie Fulton, who was deeply missed by all members of the house and the employees of his department when he left.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, the minister must not forget the election promises made by his leader and his party during the last election campaign. In every city or town he visited, the Prime Minister promised something, either the construction of a public building or a wharf. You know, he reminded me a little of the Larousse dictionary: "He sowed broadcast". He made promises.

I read in La Presse on February 27, 1963:

> Mr. Pearson promises again a deep water harbour to Riviere du Loup.
> The political party which, once in power, will give Riviere du Loup suitable harbour facilities—

Mr. Pearson made promises and I know that he did so in all the provinces of Canada and in the maritimes; now, the minister comes before the house and asks for $172.3 million. He adds only $6.3 million.

I am convinced that those $6.3 million will not take care of all the election promises made by the leader himself. In view of the fact that the minister asks for $6.3 million in supplementary estimates, why did he cut $2,045,000? There is something illogical in this.

We would like also to know what the minister thinks of the famous tax on building materials. I admit that this tax does not fall directly under the Department of Public Works, but I believe that it has direct consequences since it contributes to increase the cost of building materials and, accordingly, has an effect on the construction of buildings by private enterprise in our country. Let me also call to the attention of the minister that the architects and the engineers of the Department of Public Works very often give evidence of bad taste in their building plans. Changes should be made along that line. In other words, attention should be drawn to designing a style proper to each place. If a post office is built in the Laurentians, it should have a special design which would be different from a city post office.

I also ask the Minister of Public Works to set up air conditioning systems in all large public buildings where there are none at the present time. I would give as an example the building where the unemployment insurance and post office employees in Joliette work. It is a beautiful building but it is not equipped with air conditioning; during the summer, for security reasons, they are prohibited from opening the windows to eliminate the risks of thefts. I must admit that no theft has as yet been committed since the hon. member for St. Denis (Mr. Denis) has been in office.

We should like the minister to give some comfort to government employees and instal air conditioning systems in all major federal buildings. Now that the minister himself has an air conditioned office, as well as all the high officials of the government, why the civil servants of the country—

The Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Deschatelets: I think that the house agrees that the hon. member may continue.

Mr. Pigeon: It is customary to allow the official spokesman of the opposition to present all his views.

The Chairman: Unanimous consent would be required to allow the hon. member to continue.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I request from the minister to have air conditioning systems installed in major offices of the country and also that that policy be applied to the erection of new buildings.

As far as the world exhibition of 1967 is concerned, I wish to ask the minister who is responsible for it? Is it the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier), or the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) who expressed doubts about the economic aspect of the proposed site on the St. Lawrence, or is it the Minister of Public Works? I have here a newspaper report entitled:

The trustee-minister placed under trusteeship.

And I read the article.

Mr. Caron: From what newspaper do you quote?

Mr. Pigeon: I am not ashamed to quote it, it is an article by Mr. Clement Brown, published by the newspaper Montreal-Matin. At the same time, I dare him to prove that it is false. Would the hon. member allow me to read the article?

As soon as the Pearson cabinet was sworn in, on April 22, the Prime Minister announced that public works minister Jean Paul Deschatelets would look after the 1967 world exhibition and that he would answer for the commission before parliament. At the time, everybody thought that the same minister would be responsible for the world exhibition.

As the weeks go by, Mr. Deschatelets seems to have less and less authority in that respect. Announcements concerning the world exhibition are made either by Prime Minister Pearson—which may be normal—or by Justice Minister Chevrier —which is much more unusual—

Consequently, in the interests of the Canadian people we would like to know if the world exhibition comes under the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. Caron: Was the author of the article not a Conservative candidate at the last election?

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I should like to point out that the fact that a Canadian was a candidate at an election, whether it is under the Social Credit, the N.D.P., the Liberal or the Conservative ticket, is no indication that the man is dishonest.

[The Chairman.]

Mr. Caron: I did not say that. You are the one who said it.

Mr. Pigeon: To continue with my remarks, Mr. Chairman, I should like to point out that the present government jeopardized the world exhibition every time it delayed that project.

In postponing the choice of a final site for the exhibition the present government wanted to blackmail the authorities of the city of Montreal. One of the commissioners, who is a good friend of the minister, and whose name I will not divulge, told me and others that the government was responsible for the delays and that it had endangered the future of the world exhibition to be held in Montreal. The minister did not want the exhibition to be held on St. Helen's and Notre Dame islands. He is quite aware of the article I have in mind and, since then, he has promised that the world exhibition would be held in the eastern part of the metropolis.

Mr. Teillet: Could we know whom you are speaking of?

Mr. Pigeon: I have the article here.

Mr. Teillet: You said that you would not mention the name of a certain party.

Mr. Pigeon: I said that the world exhibition commissioner had told me the delays concerning the final acceptance—

Mr. Teillet: Then, it is anonymous?

Mr. Pigeon: —had jeopardized the 1967 world exhibition. Besides, Mr. Chairman, I have here La Presse of March 20, 1963.

May I be allowed to point out that during the last election, the minister, who would have been trustee of the world exhibition, as we might say, in the case of a trusteeship, as is evidenced in a letter published in the Montreal newspapers, and mentioned by La Presse and I quote:

The 1967 World Exhibition in Montreal East.

Enclosed you will find copy of a letter which I have addressed to the Chief Commissioner of the 1967 world exhibition, Mr. Paul Bienvenu, as regards the site of the world exhibition.

I did that at the request of various businessmen's associations of the east end of Montreal.—Jean Paul Deschatelets, member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont.

Dear Mr. Bienvenu,

I am writing to you as a citizen of the Montreal east end about the decision that will be reached these next few days as to the site of the 1967 world exhibition.

Many representations have been made concerning the advantages offered by the eastern part of Montreal, the main ones being as follows:

First, a site ready to be developed.

Second, a very cheap site.

Third, a very easily accessible site.

Fourth, a site located in the heart of French Canada.

I hope the east end of Montreal will be recognized as the logical site for the world exhibition and rest assured that this will meet with the opinion of all the experts who have studied the advantages of the various locations which have been submitted to you until now.—Jean Paul Deschatelets, M.P.

Also, Mr. Chairman, there was a question asked on the orders of the day of December 12, 1962, concerning the world exhibition and its site in the Montreal east end, as shown in Hansard at page 2578, and I quote:

1. Has the associate minister of national defence received briefs from the Montreal east businessmen's association and the municipal council of Ville de Repentigny suggesting Maisonneuve park or some other location in Montreal east, as the site of the 1967 world fair to be held in Montreal?

2. Has the attention of the minister been drawn to the fact that there is in Montreal east an 800-acre piece of land available as a site for the world fair?

3. Before a decision is taken in this connection, will public bodies, such as the businessmen's association and the municipal council of Ville de Repentigny, be consulted?

That was meant to show you, Mr. Chairman, that we are not too surprised that the government took some time before accepting St. Helen's island and Notre Dame island as the site of the world exhibition, which location was the choice of the authorities of the city of Montreal.

I should also like to underline, Mr. Chairman, the excellent work done by Mr. Paul Bienvenu who, faced with situation which he described as untenable, could not carry on. I offer my best wishes to the new commissioner, Mr. Pierre Dupuy.

May I congratulate publicly here, in this house, the mayor of Montreal for the excellent work he has performed and for his contribution to the success of the exhibition. I am convinced that the mayor of Montreal keeps working towards the success of this exhibition.

Mr. Chairman, may I also pay a tribute to a man who was the first person in Canada to advocate that the world exhibition be held in Montreal in 1967, and I am referring to the late Senator Mark Drouin. He has gained our gratitude and everybody knows this outstanding personality asserted himself for the manner in which he interpreted Canada. I say: Hats off for the work he performed in connection with the Montreal world exhibition of 1967.

Mr. Chairman, after an inexcusable delay, Ottawa, by dint of pressure from all sides, and of complaints on the part of the Canadian public, gives its assent to the St. Helen's island site.

The federal government also forced the authorities of the city of Montreal to pay the sum of $2,500,000 for part of an ice control project.

Mr. Chairman, I have here an article published in the Montreal paper La Presse on Thursday, July 4, 1963, entitled:

Montreal attributes all difficulties concerning the world exhibition to Ottawa.

The city of Montreal availed itself yesterday of the new delay brought about by next Saturday's "summit conference", to stiffen its attitude toward the federal authorities and, finally, to blame "the people in Ottawa" as being solely responsible for the delays in determining the 1967 world exhibition site.

Mr. Chairman, I realize that those are things of the past, that they belong to history today, but I merely wanted to recall in the beginning, that the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont, who is now the Minister of Public Works and responsible for the world fair, had some rather painful experiences.

Indeed, this government has known the same difficulties, for any legislation introduced in the house was only passed with great effort. Mr. Chairman, it is not surprising that the Minister of Public Works had to face those difficulties, considering the position of his government.

Mr. Chairman, I am saying all this as spokesman for the official opposition in matters pertaining to the Department of Labour estimates, and I can hear a minister of the crown, the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Teillet), who is forever passing remarks. I shall therefore ask you, once for all, to invite him to leave the house if he persists in interrupting me. On the other hand, if he wants to ask me any question, let him rise to do so and I shall be pleased to answer him.

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Chairman, I intended to ask some questions, but it would have been very difficult. Anyway, I was tired of just hearing him read from newspaper cuttings.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, it might well be said that this government has not been able to rule in peacetime. The president of the world exhibition, as well as one of the commissioners, have resigned. And so has Mr. Claude Robillard. We shall be happy to hear from the minister who is going to replace them. Days and weeks are passing and nobody has been replaced yet. I think this could very well jeopardize the world exhibition planning.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the hon. member knows that, hardly two weeks ago, the mayor of Montreal stated that the Hon. Mr. Dupuy would probably be the only competent man to fill this post.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. Mr. Dupuy is the only competent person, I would ask the government to give him immediately the status of commissioner general of the world exhibition, so that he could get out of the civil service. I think that as an ambassador he was under the federal cabinet.

Mr. Caron: When he was in France.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, if Mr. Dupuy comes under the jurisdiction of the federal cabinet, I believe that the situation is abnormal because we must give the commissioner general every possible latitude. And we would not want him to be under any influence of the federal government.

Mr. Chairman, I know that Mr. Dupuy enjoys great prestige and that he is a very valuable man. I am also assured that in co-operation with the proper authorities he will ensure the proper operation of the world exhibition. However, we would not want him to be put in an untenable situation.

For these reasons, and following the questions of the hon. member for St. Mary (Mr. Valade) we would like to know when the government will grant him official status as commissioner general for the exhibition in order that he may cease to be subservient to the federal cabinet.

Mr. Chairman, the Prime Minister of Canada knew on July 8 last that Mr. Bienvenu was to resign. Why was there a delay? Why have they waited so long before appointing a successor? I believe that this delay harmed the world fair project.

Mr. Chairman, as I said already, Mr. Dupuy is a competent man and if the government wants to rely on him entirely he will be able to make a success of the exhibition.

Many organizations such as the Jaycees in the district of Montreal expressed a desire that the mayor of Montreal be appointed as commissioner general.

For one, as soon as Mr. Bienvenu resigned, I knew that many citizens of Montreal and the surrounding area declared that in their opinion the mayor of Montreal was highly competent to be at the helm of the exhibition project. Now, when does the government intend to amend the act.

An hon. Member: He is reading a newspaper.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I hear another remark by the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Does he have something to say?

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Chairman, a while ago, through sheer courtesy, the house allowed the hon. member to extend his time. But what is he doing? He is only reading newspapers. That is what I had to say.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I have here some paper clippings and some texts I wrote myself. Besides, the spokesman of the official opposition was always allowed to make his remarks as he pleased, provided he was not out of order.

Mr. Teillet: Just the same, it must make sense.

Mr. Pigeon: I warn the minister—

[Text]

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I have no desire to be discourteous to the hon. member who has the floor, but it does seem to me it would be fair to point out that there are other members of the committee who would like to participate in the discussion this evening. In view of the fact that we are in committee I wonder, on the point of order, whether the hon. member would be willing to bring to a conclusion the particular phase of the remarks with which he is now dealing and perhaps participate later in the debate with some of the other matters with which he might wish to deal.

Mr. Pigeon: I agree, Mr. Chairman. I will speak for only a few minutes and I will continue later with the other items. I will do that with pleasure.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, as far as the world fair is concerned, I shall have an opportunity to come back to that and the minister might indicate when we can discuss that matter, since there is absolutely nothing in the estimates.

We want the fair to be a success. We want it to get a complete autonomy and we want to see the fair commissioners absolutely free. In other words, we do not want the chosen theme "Man and his World" to become "Liberals and their World" because of patronage.

I wish to warn the trustee minister, under trusteeship, because lately, a committee of the Canada Council was set up for the exhibition and I understand that following certain pressures, the presidency was entrusted to the treasurer of the Liberal party, Senator Gelinas.

And with this, Mr. Chairman, I bring my remarks to a close.

[Text]

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, I wish to express my thanks to some hon. members who have yielded the floor to me because of some personal reasons which oblige me to leave early tonight. I wish to extend my gratitude to these hon. members.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets) introduces tonight the estimates of his department and among those estimates, the one I consider the most important of course, the item concerning the Montreal world fair.

As a member from the Montreal area, I must point out certain developments which took place after the election, by accident, of a Liberal government on April 8 last.

As soon as he took over, the Minister of Public Works immediately compromised the potential success, the possible success of the world fair. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call to the attention of the house the fact that the 1967 world fair, which is to be held in Montreal, is one of the most splendid undertakings carried out by the Conservatives during their administration in Ottawa. We owe this to the drive of a government which foresaw that Canada would regain its international position if it could persuade the Paris international bureau of exhibitions that the 1967 world fair should take place in Montreal.

Without minimizing the credit which is due to the mayor of Montreal and to the chairman of the executive council, Mr. Lucien Saulnier, I deem it necessary to point out that from the very beginning the Conservatives were the ones who advocated the idea of a world fair first in Canada, and later on in Montreal.

Close on the heels of the last general election, a palpable uneasiness made itself felt within the World Exhibition Corporation, which should be free from political pressure and from the interference of the new government. Unfortunately, it has not been so. I would not want to see my hon. friends opposite claim that the few remarks I am making tonight concerning political pressures are false.

In order to try to place the problem in a context quite favourable to our friends of the government, I should like simply to quote a few words from an article published in MacLean's magazine of October 5, 1963, at page 17. This magazine's reporter stated in a feature article on the world fair:

[Text]

The first commissioner general of the fair and his deputy have resigned because of bickering and power-plays by government.

[Translation]

If that is not, Mr. Chairman, a formal charge about undue political pressure exerted by the new Liberal government, within that company, then I ask the minister to refute publicly this assertion, and in particular to prove that there has been no pressure because I am able to establish that there has been some pressure exerted by some Liberal organizers who have become today senior officials and executive assistants to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne).

Mr. Chairman, it is unfortunate that besides the political pressure which is exerted, we have the misrepresentations and the evasive answers from the Minister of Public Works and the Prime Minister himself.

I shall say later that the Prime Minister lied deliberately to the house when he gave an answer based on false information from—

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege.

[Text]

Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege, the hon. member for St. Mary just said that both the Prime Minister and myself had lied or had given some facts which were not accurate, and that we knew they were not accurate. I do not think that this should go on the record unchallenged. I should think that the hon. member for St. Mary should be asked to withdraw these unfortunate and untrue assertions.

[Translation]

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, I said clearly—and I think the Minister of Public Works heard me quite well—that the Prime Minister had lied to the house or had misinformed the house, because he did not know the facts. I prefer to think that the Minister of Public Works and the Prime Minister did not lie to the house but rather misinformed its members, probably because they were not aware of the facts that were made public later on.

To prove what I have just said, I would like to recall to the Minister of Public Works the letter of resignation—

[Text]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am sure the hon. member for St. Mary would not want anything on the record which would be offensive to him or to any member of this house. Perhaps he might be willing to withdraw what he said, or rephrase it.

Mr. Valade: Well, Mr. Chairman, I specified that either the Prime Minister lied or that he gave an answer which was not in accordance with the facts, and I prefer to think that it was the latter. But I did not accuse either one of them.

The Deputy Chairman: I think the hon. member should withdraw the word "lied". It is a most unparliamentary word.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. gentlemen in power think that I am hurting their feelings when I say that the Prime Minister has lied, then I did not make that statement; it is for them to believe that. I just put the dilemma to the government—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member will realize that it is not a question of the feelings of any member of the committee. It is a question of using language which is not permitted in the chamber.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, I yield to your demands because I want to be more courteous to the present government than they have been since the session started. I want to say that the Prime Minister may not have lied, but the facts reveal that we did not get the true information when we asked questions of the government on the very issue of the resignation of both the commissioner general and the deputy commissioner. I want to point out to hon. gentlemen that when Mr. Bienvenu resigned his function it was acknowledged that things were not going so well. On July 19 I asked the Prime Minister if either Mr. Carsley or Mr. Bienvenu were asked to resign, or whether they had informed the government of their intention to resign. On that occasion both the Minister of Public Works and the Prime Minister answered that all was well under the roof of the World Fair Corporation, that no such thing was true and that this statement did not conform with the truth. When Mr. Bienvenu made public his letters of resignation, it was found that the first letter sent to the Prime Minister was dated July 12, 1963, which was six days before the Prime Minister answered in this house that he was not aware that either Mr. Bienvenu or Mr. Carsley were resigning.

That is on the record, and I am sure the Minister of Public Works cannot deny something which has been printed in the papers and to which he can refer. It is to this I was referring when I said the Prime Minister did not give an answer to the question I asked on July 13, 1963.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, I intend to continue showing that it is unfortunate that the government, as soon as it took office, started to interfere in the business of the World Fair Corporation, using it as a field for political patronage.

By the time the debate on the estimates of the Minister of Public Works is over, I shall be able to give other details.

But to illustrate that there are indications of political pressures, I should like to draw the attention of the Minister of Public Works to a letter sent by the mayor of Montreal, Mr. Jean Drapeau, on July 2, 1963, to the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson, Prime Minister of Canada.

I do not intend to read this letter in full, because it is rather long, but I want to point out to the house that certain indiscretions have been committed by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Public Works, which were a threat to the success of the world fair.

Those indiscretions were made in regard to the chief organizer of the Liberal party in the province of Quebec, during the last federal election.

I refer to the letter dated July 2, 1963, from which I quote a few paragraphs:

> Back in Montreal, we met nobody and we had no telephone conversations with newspaper reporters or anybody else about our meeting and the subject of our conversations.
> Besides we were very surprised, Mr. Saulnier and myself, to learn when we arrived at your residence—

Here he meant the residence of the Prime Minister—

> —that a telephone call was awaiting Mr. Saulnier. Later on we found that it was a call from Mr. Brady who had been informed of our visit by someone from your office or the office of Mr. Deschatelets. At any rate, Mr. Saulnier did not call Mr. Brady back and we returned to Montreal without getting in touch with anyone in Ottawa.

Well then, Mr. Chairman, I would ask the Minister of Public Works to tell us who Mr. Brady is. What was a political organizer like Mr. Brady doing at a confidential meeting between the Prime Minister, the mayor of Montreal and the chairman of the executive council?

That is what leads me to believe that by exerting uncalled for pressure, the Liberal party tried to turn the world fair into a political plum, into a source of patronage, instead of carrying it out as a national endeavour designed to stimulate the interest of foreign countries in Canada.

Later on, that is September 4, 1963, I sent a telegram to the Prime Minister.

In view of the facts I have just mentioned, I felt there was sufficient reason for the house to go into committee or for setting up a special commission of inquiry to determine the true motives behind the resignations of Mr. Bienvenu, the commissioner general, and of Mr. Carsley, his deputy.

If the minister, indeed, if the government has nothing to hide I would hope that a parliamentary committee would be set up to find out the truth, even if the committee had to sit behind closed doors.

Mr. Chairman, I should not want to limit myself only to the uncertainty which was created by the hesitation, the beating about the bush, the delays, the retreat, in short, the carelessness shown by the Minister of Public Works with respect to the world fair since the election of the government, last April 8.

I wish to put on official record the fact that the Liberals have accused the former government of wavering. Now, allow me to mention that within a month, the Conservative party had chosen the present site of the world fair and had officially accepted it, while the present government took five months to accept definitely and officially the site of St. Helen's island which had been recommended by the former government.

Well, Mr. Chairman, not only should we consider those matters, but also if we are aware of our responsibilities, we should make suggestions to the Minister of Public Works, in order to ensure the success of this world fair.

I would like the minister to consider immediately the possibility of building, in co-operation with the city of Montreal, some access roads to Notre Dame island. I would also like the minister to visit the premises and realize that it would be necessary to widen, in co-operation with the authorities of the province of Quebec, the roadway of Jacques Cartier bridge, and this in the near future.

I would like the Minister of Public Works to consider immediately the building of a throughway around the city of Montreal in order to speed up the flow of traffic to the site of the world fair in Montreal.

I also feel that Canada should decide in the near future what type of pavilion it intends to build and that after the exhibition, this pavilion should be used as a museum of Canadian history, as a hospital or as a cancer research centre.

After all the promises the Prime Minister made during the last two election campaigns, the Minister of Public Works should convince him to give the country a Canadian flag which could wave over this Canadian pavilion at the world fair.

In my opinion, the Minister of Public Works should offer favourable conditions to private enterprise for the building of hotels or facilities to accommodate the many tourists who, I hope, will come to Canada for this event.

There were many other matters I wanted to discuss and I would have liked the Minister of Public Works to explain in his statement how he intends to ease unemployment in the province of Quebec where unemployment affects about 40 per cent of the labour force.

When the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont was in the opposition, I remember that he has accused the Union Nationale government of being responsible for the unemployment situation, because, as he then suggested, the Union Nationale had refused to participate in joint programs. Well, let the hon. minister continue saying the same thing now.

Only recently, Mr. Rene Levesque and Mr. Jean Lesage served the present government with an ultimatum demanding its withdrawal from the joint plans. I therefore would ask him to retain the same position, the same opinion. I want to ask him whether, in future, he intends to abolish the joint plans or if he intends to intensify such plans so as to ensure to the province of Quebec the full employment his government, his political party, promised at each federal election.

Mr. Caron: It is coming.

Mr. Valade: It is not coming as fast as that. It will not come as fast as that if you continue delaying the business of the house by uselessly interrupting the one who is speaking, without contributing nothing constructive.

I think the minister might give us some explanations since he was so voluble when he was in the opposition. But now that he has crossed the aisle he keeps silent.

Does he approve the policies of Mr. Lesage who in the 1960 election promised that if he was elected he would consider unemployment as a provincial matter. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) and the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets) denied that Mr. Lesage said that if he were elected he would consider unemployment as a provincial responsibility. Furthermore we have had an acute unemployment situation in the province of Quebec since the coming to office of the Liberal party both in Ottawa and in Quebec.

Mr. Minister, please refrain from giving evasive answers to the members of parliament. We would like to have answers in order to inform the people and in order to know what you have done since you came to office, failing which we will be forced to say that you did nothing.

The truth squad of the Minister of National Health and Welfare could play the same tricks it did in the last election campaign and tell us how far she would go to help the government solve the unemployment problem in Canada and more particularly in Quebec because unemployment is a major problem which should be immediately examined and considered by the government.

Mr. Caron: No, because we have done something.

Mr. Valade: I would like the minister to tell us how he wants to remedy the unemployment situation in co-operation with his Liberal friends of the province of Quebec who had him elected.

I am sorry, because I only wanted to speak five minutes, but I want to answer my hon. friend.

In La Presse of June 21, 1960, and May 21, 1960, we could read the following:

Marked drop of unemployment, more particularly in the province of Quebec.

This was before the Liberal party came into power in the province of Quebec. Please note:

Marked drop of unemployment, more particularly in the province of Quebec.

And now, I shall quote another item which a responsible paper printed this morning:

40 per cent of Canadians unemployed are living in the province of Quebec.

What about all those election promises?

Mr. Caron: What paper are you quoting?

Mr. Valade: I can tell you. It is not La Reforme. I would not mind my friend using this paper to make a speech—

Mr. Caron: We only want to know the name of the paper.

Mr. Valade: It is Montreal-Matin, but I can also give you La Presse, if you wish, or Le Devoir, and I hope this will satisfy you.

Quebec has 33 per cent of this country's unemployed.

That was in Le Devoir of October 18.

Does the hon. member work hand in hand with the premier of the province of Quebec, who was elected because he promised to put an end to unemployment? I represent a riding where the majority of voters are working people. I meet those people and they tell me about their idleness. I know hundreds of voters in my riding who have been discharged by the Liberal government of Quebec as soon as it took over.

Unemployment cannot be fought with party politics.

But no thought was given to Quebec's unemployed.

Mr. Chairman, since the Liberal party has been in office in the province of Quebec, four times as many licences for the sale of liquor have been issued. However, no one bothered to look after the unemployed.

The Chairman: Order. I think the hon. member will recognize that he has wandered quite a bit from the first item now before us by making a review of the political situation in his province.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, I must admit that the comments of our hon. friends opposite did sidetrack me a little.

Mr. Chairman, I was asking the Minister of Public Works what steps he intends to take to reduce unemployment.

I know that some parties made suggestions, but I also know—and that is the important point—that the Liberal party made some too. And that is the purpose of my contribution, to ask the Minister of Public Works to describe to us the program he intends to apply in order that this winter we do not have to suffer from that plague of unemployment, which will increase if the government does nothing. We are interested in that problem, as we used to be when we were in office. And if some members doubt that my statements are correct, I shall quote figures to prove them.

Mr. Chairman, I say to the Minister of Public Works that it is his duty to take immediate steps to reassure the population of the province of Quebec, especially the unemployed, whose number reaches 40 per cent of the total for Canada, and who hope that the Liberal government will take steps to stem unemployment and secure full employment.

Mr. Chairman, I have many more remarks to make, but I shall conclude with some suggestions for the minister. I do not know if it is necessary, but it seems to me that without suggestions, the Liberal government does not work as it should. Here are some of the suggestions I want to make to the minister.

To begin with, the minister will have to intensify right away urban renewal in Montreal. The slums must be demolished and replaced by salubrious houses. Too many people live in slums, in houses that are falling to pieces, and I think that the Minister of Public Works should consult with his colleagues from the cabinet in order that immediate measures may be taken to improve that situation. In doing so, he would help alleviate unemployment.

I say again to him that he will have to promote urban renewal in the city of Montreal.

The minister should also undertake immediately the construction of access roads to the site of the world fair.

Moreover, the Minister of Public Works should tell us whether he intends to recommend to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) the removal of that odious 4 per cent tax on building materials, which will be increased to 11 per cent this winter, so that the contractors and taxpayers who would like to do so may build houses this winter, thus increasing employment during that bad season.

Mr. Chairman, I am waiting for the minister's answers. I have many other suggestions to make but I will keep them for later.

Mr. Chairman, of the 21 ridings in the city of Montreal, that of St. Mary is the only one represented by a Conservative member. During the last election campaign, the electors of the city of Montreal were the victims of propaganda published by some partisan newspapers. Personally, I was logical with my electors, and they in turn were quite logical with me, so that we might not be all victims of that propaganda. I am amazed to note that out of the 21 members from Montreal, there is only one to rise in the house and ask, for the city of Montreal, the metropolis of Canada, the carrying out of important works. The present government should do something for the metropolis of Canada just as we did when we were in power.

Mr. Leboe: Mr. Chairman, I shall not detain the committee very long because there are others who would like to speak this evening and I have not as much to say as the speakers who preceded me. As you know, Mr. Chairman, I will be leaving in a day or two and I will not return to the house for three weeks, so there will be silence from this quarter. I should like to move from the past into the future for a moment.

I have a peculiar problem which I should like to present to the minister, and it is related to the paving of the Alaska highway. I realize, of course, that this highway comes under the jurisdiction of the Department of National Defence at the moment. However, I should like to ask the minister to do some more transferring and get the Alaska highway transferred to his department. I quite understand that as long as the Department of National Defence has jurisdiction, the paving of the highway is something in which they would not be interested. I can assure the minister, however, that the paving of that highway is something in which not only the people of that particular part of the country are interested but many other people as well, including the minister of northern affairs. He is especially interested, and has been most energetic in trying to get something done along that line.

I would appreciate it very much if some negotiations could be conducted with a view to having the Alaska highway paved and reconstructed. I understand that British Columbia is prepared to pay one third of the cost of this project in the British Columbia section, which certainly would be a great help to the federal Department of Public Works, if that department should assume jurisdiction over this highway.

Then, I should like to interest the Minister of Public Works in considering proposals which have been put forward on a number of occasions during election campaigns by both the Liberal and Conservative parties, that is a trans-Canada highway system. In my view this is an important step. I like to qualify this request by saying that if the federal government ceases to take the lion's share of the tax revenues and thus allow the provincial governments to embark upon a greater highway program, then I would drop my request immediately. Under the circumstances, since I am convinced the federal government is taking the lion's share of the tax revenue, I believe some responsibility does devolve upon the department.

There is one other thing I should like to mention, and again the minister of northern affairs is involved. I have a feeling that most people who use the trans-Canada highway or other trunk highways over which the federal government might have jurisdiction could be given a right of way when they pass through national parks. I believe that the amount of money that is involved in collecting this $2 from individuals who pass through these parks would provide a right of way through the park. Then, people who are not interested in stopping in the national parks and who are using a through, trans-continental highway, could travel unimpeded through these parks. I have been told by trucking firms that it is very much easier to enter the United States at Coutts or Sweet Grass and come out at Sault Ste. Marie, than it is to go through one of the national parks. I do not think this should be the case. I feel the time has come when serious consideration should be given to eliminating what I believe is an absolute nuisance for travellers on our highways.

I have just one or two little reminders left which, as the hon. member for Kootenay West would say, are very urgent matters for the people in my constituency. I should like to remind the minister to provide post office facilities at Fort Nelson and Taylor.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Cariboo and I are departing to attend the commonwealth parliamentary conference. He did not take the time I expected he would in discussing the estimates for the Department of Public Works. The fact he mentioned such matters as the Alaska highway and the removal of the charges for travel on the trans-Canada highway through federal parks, indicates how widespread the subject matters are that can be discussed at this time. One could contrast his remarks with the fairly lengthy observations to which we listened on the subject of the Montreal world fair. In so far as the Montreal world fair is concerned, I certainly wish it well. I was one of the members who spoke in support of the bill which established the Canadian corporation. However, I am not disposed at this time to enter into any detailed discussion such as was undertaken by those who spoke from the Conservative benches. Perhaps later in this discussion one of my colleagues may have something to say about it.

I should like to support the suggestion made by the hon. member for Cariboo that consideration be given to the elimination of this charge for travelling on the trans-Canada highway through national parks. I know a great many people who are interested in the new through route between Calgary and Vancouver, and who are not planning to visit the park, do find this charge a bit of an imposition. In fact, we have created a toll road over part of the trans-Canada highway as a result of this arrangement in respect of our national parks.

At the outset of my remarks, I should like to say that, in some ways, I have enjoyed the approach which has been taken in the house by our new Minister of Public Works. I cannot say that I shall do my best to see he occupies that post for the next 20 years, as he indicated he might wish to do. Certainly during the time he does occupy that post, I shall do my best as a member who has a considerable interest in the activities of his department to assist him in the proper discharge of his duties. At this particular stage in our discussion, perhaps it would not be amiss if the work done in this department by the person who occupied the post of deputy minister for quite a number of years was mentioned. Those of us who had dealings over a period of time with Major General Young appreciate some of the efforts he made for us in attempting to streamline and modernize the federal Department of Public Works. I felt that that contribution of his should not go unnoted in this discussion.

While I applaud the minister for being fairly forthright in answering questions put to him across the floor, I must admit I was somewhat disappointed that in his opening statement he did not outline in more detail his concept of the role his department should be playing on the Canadian scene. He indicated that a year from now, if he is still occupying that portfolio, he will have more to say than he said tonight. This brought home to me very obviously that the famous 60 days of decision had not reached into the operations of the Department of Public Works, and perhaps in view of what happened in connection with one or two other ministers who were in the forefront during those 60 days, the minister may have been wise not to emphasize that type of role. Nevertheless I think it would have been useful to have had some statement from him regarding his department's activities in the future.

He did mention that we could anticipate some increase in the estimates for his department next year; but if his idea of a heavy increase does not extend much further than the suggestions he made tonight when he was outlining the additions to and deletions from the program of his department, then his concept of the role of his department leaves a great deal to be desired.

I notice, in the most recent annual report of the department, that for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1962, which of course was transmitted to us under the signature of the Hon. E. Davie Fulton, a former minister, it shows the 1961-62 program of expenditures was somewhat smaller than that of the preceding year. The figures were $174,256,000 in 1961-62 as compared with $190,842,000 for the fiscal year 1960-61. Compared with the figures which the minister gave tonight, and taking into account his deletions and additions, I make the figure for this year $172,-300,000, an increase of $6.3 million over last year; and considering that our population is growing year by year, this leaves us a number of millions of dollars behind the expenditure for the fiscal year 1960-61.

This suggests that the government has not as yet given any indication that it is doing something about the former Conservative so-called austerity program in the field of operations of the Department of Public Works. This is a serious lack in the policies of the government, and should be remedied.

I feel the concept of a federal department of public works should be something more than what is referred to in the last annual report, which as I said was issued under the Conservative regime, as "a construction agency for the federal government." In my view, and I think I can say in the view of the New Democratic party, this department should be an economic instrument, something which will be an active agency spearheading the economic growth of Canada; something that will act in concert with the general level of industrial and other economic activity to ensure that Canada continues to move forward at a steady pace from year to year, and on a scale commensurate with taking up the slack which exists today, and has existed over a number of years, in the field of employment. That is the sort of concept which was completely lacking in anything the minister said tonight when introducing these estimates.

I hope that between now and this time next year he will give some consideration to spearheading that kind of role for his department. If he wants to remain Minister of Public Works for the next 20 years I can think of no better way in which he might achieve that objective than to put his department in the forefront of activities of the federal government, instead of allowing it to continue as it has been, as a sort of caretaker, back door operation. In that way it could initiate projects which I and a lot of my constituents feel it should tackle.

I can only assume that the situation which was so evident in my constituency as a result of the so-called austerity program, was something which appeared all across Canada. Even in the operations of the harbours and rivers engineering branch of the department, projects in British Columbia were slashed to a point beyond all recognition; and I would point out that even before this slashing took place there was a crying need for the early construction of many projects and the provision of many public services up and down the coastal area of British Columbia.

I shall not outline them all tonight as the minister has been getting letters from me giving the details. However I mention them for two reasons. The first is that even within the present very limited concept of the operations of the department, the government has not taken any step to restore the level of public works to what it was in 1960-61. Second, because the government has not done this, it clearly indicates that the minister is not proposing an active, dynamic role for the functioning of his department which, on the one hand, will provide the kind of public services and facilities that the people of Canada need, and on the other hand and correlated with it, operate in our economy as something to create a balance between needs and employment. By operating in that way it could bring an end to the scourge of unemployment, to which hon. members have made reference, but without providing any practical suggestions for achieving it.

Having read this last annual report put out under the signature of the Hon. E. Davie Fulton, it struck me as rather strange that those who spoke on behalf of the Conservative party carried on at such length, talking about programs of slum clearance and other projects which had not been undertaken. I am quite willing to concede that the new minister has not had time to initiate projects along those lines which, according to the hon. members who have spoken, were not undertaken in their constituencies during the previous regime. But I had hoped the minister would have given us some indication tonight that he had plans to put an end to the state of affairs which does exist, and on this I agree with other hon. members.

The hon. member for Cariboo mentioned the trans-Canada highway. There are one or two matters I would like to deal with in that connection and one or two questions I would like to raise with the minister. I wish to refer briefly, Mr. Chairman, to the last annual trans-Canada highway report. Apparently it came out a little later than the report of the department, because it bears the name of the present Minister of Public Works. On page 2 of the report I find these words:

> In 1960 it was again apparent that the completion of the highway would not be possible in some provinces during the construction period provided for in the existing agreements. A third amendment of the act in May, 1960 extended the construction period to December 31, 1963, and increased the aggregate amount that may be contributed by Canada to $400 million.

As I understand it, that is the position of the Trans-Canada Highway Act at the present time; in other words, the termination of the trans-Canada highway agreement will soon be reached, namely on December 31 of the current year. Yet on the next page of the report I find some detail as to the state of the trans-Canada highway at the time the report was prepared. It says:

> Considerable construction still remains to be done in the province of Newfoundland. There appears to be little possibility of construction being completed on the entire Newfoundland mileage before the end of the construction period provided for in the present agreements.

That is, by December 31 of this year:

> The province of Quebec has made an auspicious start on the construction of its section of the highway. Continuation of the work on a large scale during the 1962 and 1963 construction seasons will insure the completion of a high percentage of the highway mileage during these years. It is, however, unlikely that the construction of the entire mileage across the province can be completed before the termination date of the agreement.
> The province of Ontario is continuing with the work of reconstructing substandard sections of the highway. Although it appears unlikely that all substandard sections will be upgraded before December 31, 1963, there will be a continuous paved highway across the province by that date.

Those of us who have been in the house over a period of time realize that the Trans-Canada Highway Act expiry date has been extended on more than one occasion; that the original program of completion of the first trans-Canada highway by 1956 fell by the board long ago. But I think the statements in this report do call for some clear indication from the government as to whether before the end of this year we will have some legislation brought before parliament to again extend the period of the trans-Canada highway agreements, or whether these statements have been superseded by more recent developments and the trans-Canada highway will in fact be completed before the end of this year.

I think all of us agree that the construction of the first trans-Canada highway was a most important and valuable undertaking in this country. I think it is one of the things which will in future years, and more and more as the years go on, tend to assist the Canadian people from one end of this country to another to get to know one another better. I think perhaps no single construction project may in the long run tend to diminish some of the tensions that exist at the present time within the Canadian confederation more than the increasing use that will be made of this trans-Canada highway by travel-conscious Canadians. Therefore I would hope there is no question that this project will be continued to completion and that the necessary action will be taken by the government to achieve this end.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, perhaps my hon. friend would permit me to make an observation at this point. In the supplementary estimates D, vote 178d—which vote is being added to the present estimates of my department—the hon. member will see that we are asking the house to extend the termination date of the Trans-Canada Highway Act from December 31, 1963, to December 31, 1967.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I understand the minister to say that there is an item of increased money in a supplementary estimate. Does that mean the construction program is to be accelerated so that the highway will be physically completed by that vote? Does he mean that the extension of this agreement can be achieved by the voting of an item in the estimates rather than by the introduction of an amending bill?

Mr. Deschatelets: If my hon. friend would permit me to say this, Mr. Chairman, the effect of voting item 178d—

Mr. Barnett: One dollar.

Mr. Deschatelets: —will be to amend the Trans-Canada Highway Act, which would terminate on December 31, 1963.

Mr. Lambert: It is a standard procedure; a $1 open door.

Mr. Barnett: I thank the minister for his explanation, but I find it a little puzzling that an act can be amended by the simple expediency of a vote in the estimates. However, that is the kind of question which, if it is to be discussed any further, I would prefer to have dealt with by my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre. It seems to me, offhand, to be a rather peculiar approach, and I do not think it was the one taken previously when I was in the house and the termination date was extended.

[Mr. Barnett.]

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, I have given the hon. member this information in order that he may be aware of the fact that we want to extend the Trans-Canada Highway Act beyond December 31, 1963. As I understood his remarks, the hon. member was inquiring as to what we were doing about this matter. I would suggest that when we reach this item we can discuss the way it will be done.

Mr. Lambert: The hon. member will be away.

Mr. Barnett: I wish to thank the minister for giving the committee, and myself in particular, this information at this time, Mr. Chairman, because I thought it was a matter that should be clarified and, in my view, the sooner the better. I am certainly happy the minister has indicated that the intention of the government is to make the necessary extension and provide the necessary financing required for the completion of the highway, because this enables me to go on to some other remarks that I wish to make.

I feel that the time has come when both this house and the minister should be looking beyond the completion of the first trans-Canada highway. I do hope that before the discussion of these estimates is concluded there can be an opportunity for some fairly full discussion of this whole matter. I should merely like to state briefly at this time that I feel the completion of the trans-Canada highway should be the beginning of a much broader concept of highway development in Canada. I should also like to say that I feel the program of highway development should be increasingly geared to the concept of a national transport policy which would include, in the consideration of the planning involved, our railway system, our air lines system and our coastal and inland water transportation system, so that the planning and development done would produce unified and co-ordinated transportation facilities for the use of the Canadian people as individuals and for commercial purposes. I recall that a number of years ago, under the administration of the previous Liberal government, action was taken in this house to relinquish federal jurisdiction over interprovincial trucking, I felt at that time, and I still feel, that that was a retrograde step as far as the development of an adequate transportation system and policy in Canada is concerned. I feel it was probably done at that time because the government of the day had not thought out the implication of highway building as a national need in the context of the current situation. I hope that we can push forward to the point where the resources of the whole nation will be behind the development of a proper national highways program. I think that is certainly one of the areas of activity in which the people who live in the great country to the south of us have given us an example of what can be done. Within the limits of our smaller population and developed resources I think that Canada should long since have followed in the footsteps of that sort of program in a much more adequate way than we have in the undertaking of the single trans-Canada highway program.

I could relate this situation with respect to a highway policy to some of the things I have run into in the course of my travels in the coastal areas of British Columbia. One of the things in which I think the federal government has failed, be it a Liberal or Conservative administration, is in what in common parlance today is called doing a selling job of the highway program. I think this is because there has been this lack of a concept of a real national transportation policy which would have a unifying effect on the Canadian nation. The result of it, certainly in British Columbia, has been that, to put it bluntly, nearly all the credit for the building of the trans-Canada highway has been taken by the provincial administration. That situation may or may not prevail in other provinces to a greater or lesser degree, but we happen to have a minister of highways in British Columbia who is pretty fond of blowing his own horn and giving the impression that he is the only one in the whole country who knows anything about building highways. Because of the lack of understanding among the Canadian people, through lack of initiative by the Canadian government, of a national highway program, it has been possible for a great deal of misrepresentation of the situation to take place.

I think that nowhere has this been more evident than in the northern part of Vancouver island, where there has been a crying need for highway development for a number of years. I find there has been created there quite successfully and skilfully, the impression that the reason there is no highway through to the north end of Vancouver island is because the federal government decided that it would not build a trans-Canada highway to Cape Scott which is the northern tip of the island. I have had to waste a lot of my time trying to explain to people that basically the route of the trans-Canada highway was selected by the provincial authorities, and that it was the government of British Columbia which decided that the trans-Canada highway should run on Vancouver island from Nanaimo south to the city of Victoria. But that does not mean that there is no need for federal participation in a highway program, and this is one of the areas where a broad national policy could very well come into play.

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry but I must interrupt the hon. member as his time has expired.

Mr. Barnett: I have only a few remarks to make and, if you recall, Mr. Chairman, my remarks have not been continuous.

The Chairman: Has the hon. member unanimous consent to carry on?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Barnett: I was just about to say that the coastal area of British Columbia is one of the parts of Canada where the broader concept of a highway building program—and because it is a sea coast area, in conjunction with other means of transport—could very well come into play. I know that this same crying need exists in other parts of the country as well. I have listened to a lot of discussion about the need for the Yellowhead route through from Edmonton to the city of Prince Rupert, which is in the constitutency of my hon. friend from Skeena. One could go on, I am sure, and enumerate situations right across the country where it would be in the national interest that we develop this broader national highway concept.

There is only one other matter I wish to raise at this point. I should like some clarification from the minister before the estimates are concluded as to what the thinking of the present government is in respect to the establishment of federal buildings. I know that during the years I was out of the house a program was initiated to build federal buildings for the use of the Post Office Department in many of the smaller communities, where such had not been the case in previous years. I should like to know whether it is the intention of the present minister and his government to continue with that policy. I suppose that in most constituencies in Canada, outside of the large urban areas, this is quite an important question. I know of one or two communities in my constituency, such as Port Hardy for example, where there is urgent need of better postal facilities, and where the department has previously acquired property which is not presently, or as far as I know, within the plans of the department for use for the erection of such a building. I think it is important that this matter should be clearly stated as a matter of policy on the part of the present government, in view of the fact that in this particular area there was undoubtedly a change of policy by the former Conservative government in relation to the policy pursued by the previous Liberal administration.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I will conclude my remarks at this stage of the discussion.

Mr. Cashin: The Department of Public Works is, of course, familiar with the district of St. John's West, and the district of St. John's West with the Department of Public Works. I did not think I could let this opportunity pass without making a few comments, while the estimates of the department were before us, because this particular department has a great role to play not only in the district of St. John's West but in all of Newfoundland.

The previous speaker suggested that the federal government had perhaps not done a good selling job vis-à-vis the credit involved in the construction of the trans-Canada highway. I might say that until a few months ago this was an academic question in Newfoundland because the federal government was paying 50 per cent of the cost, and while this arrangement existed it would be some time before Newfoundland would ever enjoy this highway. We are pleased to note that the new government has taken action in this direction and we hope that in the near future the trans-Canada highway will be completed.

However, the role of this department as far as Newfoundland is concerned, and as far as St. John's West is concerned, means more than the building of the trans-Canada highway. I thought there was a good deal of merit in some of the suggestions made by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni regarding the attitude, or philosophy, or approach he would like to see taken by the Department of Public Works. I would like to take this opportunity of saying that over the past year I have had considerable contact with the department and its officials both in St. John's and in Ottawa and from my encounters with them, I am pleased to say, it seems clear that they do have these things at heart. Although at times we might disagree about some of the things they may be doing, all in all the relationship has been satisfactory.

I think it would be wrong at this time to enter upon a debate on this issue, but we take note of the fact that the estimates before the committee, those compiled by the previous administration, were, unfortunately, affected by the austerity program. Hon. members from British Columbia recalled that their province suffered as a result of that program and the same is true, I suppose, of all ten provinces. It is certainly true of Newfoundland.

The Department of Public Works has a role to play in the economic growth of the province I am happy to represent. Decisions to undertake harbour improvements such as the building of wharves or breakwaters in fishing communities undoubtedly add to the wealth of those communities and make it easier for the fishermen to fish. Over the past 14 years a number of noteworthy improvements have been made. We were encouraged by the remarks the minister made in opening this discussion. What is of great importance to us is that in future estimates a larger amount of money should be made available for such projects as I have mentioned. Expenditure of this sort could be justified on many grounds.

I might say that in the district of St. John's West, which is, in fact, two thirds an urban riding, there are 61 or 62 communities. I tried to total them up before rising to speak. There are 61 or 62 harbours in the district. The population in some of these places is small but it is clear that here we find the basic economy of Newfoundland, because these people must make their living from the sea. A problem has arisen, inasmuch as in some of these smaller communities extensive harbour improvements or other public works are required at a cost which it is difficult to justify on purely economic grounds. Some effort has been made in the past—and I hope it may continue—to centralize these projects, that is to say, to provide facilities in one community which would be of benefit to neighbouring communities. Certainly, a great many people have advocated such an approach, and it is a laudable approach; but considerable difficulty is involved because when people have made their homes for generations in these smaller communities there are important sociological aspects to be considered, quite apart from the financial burdens on individuals who must go further before they can begin their work. My own impression is that efforts on the part of the government to proceed with centralized projects of this kind would meet with small progress.

The situation in Newfoundland is unique in many respects, particularly since our people are scattered along 6,000 miles of coast line in some thousand or more communities. They have settled in these communities and made a living there with varying degrees of success. One might say on seeing some of these communities: Why don't they move somewhere else? But when you enter the community and see the lives the people lead you would perhaps be reluctant to change them. Sometimes, in these smaller communities where there are fewer facilities than in many of the larger ports, the people are more successful in the fishing. The fact that there may be only 50 fishermen does not particularly bother them. These people who engage in the fishing industry expect the government to pay some attention to their problems.

We have heard a great deal of discussion about the world fair in Montreal. It is difficult for people who want $10,000 or $12,000 to build a wharf which would be of immense value to them to read, with equanimity, that $18 million was voted for this, and $22 million for that. We may put forward all the economic arguments in the world, but in the last analysis, it is difficult to explain. But I do hope that the minister and the department are aware of this and I feel confident that they are. As I say, I am not debating the merits or demerits now, because this type of austerity program is over. However, I thought it was necessary to draw to the attention of the house and the minister—perhaps it did not need to be drawn to the minister's attention—the fact that this did set back the development of Newfoundland considerably, because it is only economically possible for the Department of Public Works to carry out two, three or four listed projects in a given area or along a good portion of the coast in one year. When we have had a year or two years in which the normal amount of spending on these smaller public works projects has been cut it sets back the economy, and at this time, with the renewed interest in the fisheries and with the interest of the Minister of Fisheries in the development of a national fishery policy, the Department of Public Works has a very important role to play in the development of the fishery in Newfoundland.

In essence I suppose what the situation really boils down to is that what is needed is a considerable increase in spending. There are those, of course, in the house who object for some reason or other and who feel that at this time we cannot spend too much on works of this type. However, I come back to the point raised by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, that if we can look at these expenditures as economic investments in the community and in the province they can be justified. From my contacts with the officials of the department and the minister, I know they are very much aware of the situation. In my view the important need is that the government as a whole and the members of the House of Commons, who must vote on the estimates of this department, should be aware of the great role that this department can play, and that all of us realize that this sort of spending can help, particularly in ridings such as those represented by the two members from British Columbia who have spoken, and the ridings of Newfoundland where there are Canadians making their living in small communities. It is an investment in those people and in those communities because it can help them to improve their lot.

We can talk too much about centralization, because what kind of a country would Canada be if everybody lived in a city with approximately 100,000 people? We would all start to look alike, talk alike and walk alike and I think it would be a very boring country. One of the tremendous attractions of Canada is that it is a big country with many little communities scattered throughout the land, and while this may cause many problems for us I think we must recognize that if we develop these rural communities they will respond. Indeed, one of the responses may well be that some of those living in exceptionally small communities may realize that by going to a little larger community they may be able to improve their lot in life. If we show our willingness to develop I think they will cooperate with us. A thought has just occurred to me, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cashin: I should say that a new thought has occurred to me, and it is one that required a little prompting before it did occur. I wish to note the fact that, now that we are discussing the nation's business, and now that I am trying to make clear the case of Newfoundland, there is not one member of the creditistes group present in the house to show any interest in my problems and the problems of the many people in the small communities of Newfoundland. I will certainly convey that fact to my friends in Newfoundland.

We have our problems too and they are many and varied. We are patient and we listen to other people's problems, and I hope we are not inflicting ourselves on you too much if as new Canadians we bring our problems forward. There are those who are not in the Social Credit group, under the leadership of the hon. member for Villeneuve, who are not interested in the problems of Newfoundland. There are others in other groups in the house who have made remarks indicating that they have little knowledge of our problems and do not really care. We know these things; but in life that has to be our lot one way or another, and we are prepared to cope with it.

As I say, I feel there must be an increase in the estimates of this department because in my view the economic effects thereof are sufficient justification. In my own district there are four or five major harbour developments that are necessary. I know the department is very much aware of them and I hope that in the next few years these particularly important projects will be undertaken. I believe the net result will be a general improvement.

There are two particular votes that will come up later about which I should like to comment in passing, the dredging vote and the miscellaneous vote. In my opinion both of these votes should be increased because I find there is some difficulty from time to time in being able to get all the dredging done I should like to see done in the riding of St. John's West. The lack of this dredging causes great inconvenience to many of the fishermen in these small rural communities.

I have already drawn it to the attention of the minister but I should like to reiterate that if we increase the miscellaneous vote many of these small jobs that are not listed items could be performed and great progress could be made. I think it is unfortunate we had to have an austerity program because it hurt my district as it did many others.

Mr. Deschatelets: It is over now.

Mr. Cashin: The minister says it is over now. This is good news for St. John's West and Newfoundland generally.

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Chairman, I welcome the opportunity of putting a few questions and thoughts before the Minister of Public Works in relation to the highway development program.

An hon. Member: Louder.

Mr. Kindt: Are you hearing me over there, or was that a facetious remark? If so, I shall be glad to accommodate you.

An hon. Member: Be careful, we will not sell your wheat.

Mr. Kindt: We are not talking about wheat; we are talking about highways. The hon. member's facetious remark about wheat will be dealt with in due course when the estimates having to do with wheat and the Department of Agriculture are before the house.

To return to the subject of highways and highway development, a subject dear to my heart and to the hearts of the people I represent, we in the Crowsnest pass and that area extending from Medicine Hat through Pincher Creek, Cowley, Blairmore, Hillcrest, Coleman, Fernie and Nelson to Vancouver have been asking that No. 3 highway be made an alternate trans-Canada highway to No. 1. I am glad to see that the hon. member for Kootenay East is prepared to support me.

He represents the constituency to the west of me, and if there is one thing that the people are saying to him and also to me it is that the time is long past that the parliament of Canada should co-operate with the provinces to make highway No. 3 an alternate trans-Canada highway. I hope the Minister of Public Works is listening to me, because I am wondering why in the estimates now before us there is a $10 million cut in the highway appropriation to the provinces. I should like to ask the minister if, as a result of this $10 million cut, he was forced to forgo any consideration of a contribution towards making this No. 3 highway an alternative route to No. 1. What we need in southern Alberta and southern British Columbia is an all-weather highway, one which can be travelled in any month of the year without fear of being blocked by snowfalls or ice conditions. The only western route on which one can be sure of that is the one which I have described, branching off through Medicine Hat and going west through the Crowsnest pass.

Many years ago the people of the Crowsnest pass area felt that the No. 1 highway should go through the Crowsnest pass, through Nelson and on to Vancouver. However, vested interests in Calgary and Banff were successful in having the present route established. We have no quarrel with that. However, we do say that the alternative southern route should be established. I should like the Minister of Public Works, who is responsible for highways, to go out and visit the area. I shall be glad at any time to take him over that route, and I am sure the hon. member for Kootenay East would join with me. We would give him a first hand glimpse of that part of the country and give him an idea of the merit of my suggestion at this time.

This road has been black-topped most of the way by the provincial departments of highways. However, in order to bring the road up to federal standards, and in order to take care of the tourist traffic in that area, other work would be necessary. The tourist traffic is important to the people of that area, so it is important that an all-weather road be established for travellers who wish to go from the prairie provinces to Vancouver during the winter or any time of year, on business or for pleasure.

If I might finish my original thought, I should like the Minister of Public Works to visit that area. I know that he is new at his job and he cannot be expected to know everything about every corner of the country. Has the minister ever been to the west to familiarize himself with the conditions that exist there? He is nodding his head, indicating that he has. I shall, therefore, expect action from him to make this No. 3 highway an alternate route for the people of that area. The chamber of commerce of the Crowsnest pass area has been able recently to obtain from the provincial government a promise to develop a provincial park in the area which has the greatest tourist attractions of any part of Canada. There is the Frank Slide, and beautiful scenery including Crowsnest mountain, and many other attractions in that area.

I notice that there has been $10 million cut from the appropriation and I am wondering if this government wants to curtail these important developments, or are they in financial difficulties and trying to balance their budget by making these cuts? I contend that this is no time to be giving consideration to reduction when such important matters for employment as the development of our highway system are being considered. A cut of $10 million at this time is quite unreasonable.

In closing, I want to say that the second largest industry in the Dominion of Canada is the tourist industry. We should like the Minister of Public Works to give earnest consideration to highway No. 3. When he is travelling in the west with us, I should like him to look at another proposed road from this route which goes through Red Rock canyon in Waterton Lakes park to Coleman in Crowsnest pass. A certain amount of work has been done on this route, but it has not been completed. We should like to have the minister come out and familiarize himself with this project. Above all, we shall look for action just as soon as possible and hope that construction will begin next summer.

Mr. Nasserden: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman. A few minutes ago the hon. member for St. John's West was belabouring the committee because some members were absent tonight. He said they were not giving attention to the problems of Newfoundland. Yet, no sooner had he finished speaking than he left the chamber and he has remained absent since.

Mr. Hahn: I am just going to take two or three minutes of the committee's time to lay before it a rather personal feeling, a rather personal belief. Before I came to this parliament I was engaged in the business of constructing buildings. I have, therefore, some knowledge of the cost of structures. In pursuing that business, I built a number of buildings, some of which were of magnificent design and were inexpensive in costs, while others were very costly buildings but were atrocious. In travelling across the country, I have seen a number of public buildings of fine design. I have seen also some public buildings that are atrocious.

I understand that there are expenditures which are not covered by these estimates, but are located elsewhere in the estimates, which are devoted to trying to foster good design in all types of art. It seems to me that in the Department of Public Works we have an opportunity to couple together the business of providing accommodation with the ideal of leaving behind examples of good design. It seems to me that this is not only an opportunity for the department, but more than that, I consider it an obligation of the department. The structures we build today are going to be here long after many of us have gone. This will not happen accidentally. It will only happen if there is a conscious awareness on the part of the minister and his department that they have a dual responsibility.

I should like, therefore, to take this opportunity to urge the minister to impress upon his department the fact that when they create a structure they are creating more than just accommodation for people or a place to work. They are creating structures that are going to influence the environments in which they are located. I think the opportunity and obligation is there to make that influence a good one. I hope the minister and the department will be aware of this, will stress it, and so will leave in our communities structures for the people that come after us that are worthy examples of the best of our age.

Mr. Francis: Like the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, I will be absent from the house for some time and I would like to make one or two remarks tonight about some items that appear in the estimates of the Department of Public Works. I would remind the committee that the house does review the estimates of the national capital commission as part of the estimates of the Department of Public Works, and I am particularly anxious to make one or two comments on the program of capital development.

On page 466 of the estimates the accounting of the loans for the development of the national capital region is given, and there is a substantial improvement in the vote here. In particular this represents a program of development of the Le Breton flats area as part of a complex of government structures and over-all planning.

I also call the attention of the committee to the program for the acquisition of the green belt, which was initiated some years ago. It is being continued and I hope it will be completed soon. The officials responsible for the development of these programs have operated very closely in co-operation with the respective municipal authorities in the different municipalities involved, and I think there has been very little criticism of the over-all programs. A great deal is being done here that the national capital and those who take part in the life of the national capital can justifiably praise.

The program of development of the green belt is a long term one, and I hope that within the next year it will be possible to complete, or substantially complete, the acquisition of a number of properties where there have been difficulties in arriving at agreement. The over-all program is one that is much to be commended.

I would also like to refer to the vote for development of the national capital area. This shows an increase of something in excess of $3 million in the building program, and in many cases this has been long overdue. Those who visit our national capital and look at temporary structures that were erected, in some cases over 20 years ago, recognize this is a program which has to be accelerated. In spite of the difficult circumstances of the present budget a great deal is being done in this connection.

One matter about which I, as a local representative, am very pleased, is the approach which the minister himself has shown in the development of a number of major projects in the area. For example I am thinking of the general assurances which the city of Ottawa recently received from the government. I am also thinking of the proposed Heron road-Base Line road bridge, which is very necessary for the complete development of the complex of government buildings at Confederation heights. This is one project which is of very great importance to the area which I represent, and it is a project which should have been resolved long before now. I give full marks to the minister for facing the problem squarely and making forthright recommendations which give the municipal authorities a basis on which to proceed. I might add that the package is much bigger than that, and includes the Smyth road bridge and some assistance for the overpass structure.

The minister has provided some general outline of policy which the municipal authorities can count on in future years in planning an orderly development of their municipal public works as part of a national capital program. This is a great step forward, and on behalf of a number of people who have been associated with these matters, I wish to express their thanks for the appreciation, sympathy and understanding which the minister has shown in these projects. I know the municipal authorities concerned will recognize a considerable improvement in the situation over that which prevailed previously.

[Mr. Francis.]

Mr. Cashin: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. It has been brought to my attention that some hon. member commented on my absence from the chamber. I was on the phone talking to a friend of mine in Quebec and he assured me that, although there were no members of the group under the leadership of the hon. member for Villeneuve showing an interest in the province of Newfoundland, that did not mean there were many Quebecers who were not interested in my province's problems. That explains my brief absence from the chamber.

Mr. Lambert: In my opening remarks may I say that the minister will be immeasurably assisted in his duties this year in having recently been fortunate in the appointment of his new deputy minister, who worked with me for a brief period when I was with the Department of Veterans Affairs. Having said that, I now come to deal with the estimates under discussion.

The usual aim of the debate on the estimates of the Department of Public Works is to encourage the minister to spend more money. That may be correct, provided it is directed towards the provision of useful projects within the constituencies represented by hon. members, and also on a general basis; but I do think there comes a time when we must assess the whole question of the provision of public buildings to see if we are not getting to the point where we are establishing a series of monuments of bricks and mortar to the memory of a series of successive ministers.

I feel that for the size of our nation, and with the expansion which has taken place in the post-war years, we have reached a point in the provision of government capital structures that will be sufficient for our needs for many years to come. It is true there is a great deal of replacement, particularly in some of the smaller towns and villages, where postal facilities and other types of smaller buildings must be renewed or enlarged. However, when it comes to the question of great, large buildings, we find that from one end of the country to the other there is a decreasing need for the provision of these great monuments, particularly at a cost to the crown.

I have been wondering just how intense a study has been made of lease-backs by the crown, where buildings are put up by interested individuals to the specifications of the crown or the principal tenants, and then leased back over a period of years. I wonder whether this would not be a less expensive way of providing the crown in Canada with its necessary public buildings. I am not speaking of hospitals, but of offices.

I think there might be introduced a degree of flexibility into our system of property holdings. This degree of flexibility does not exist at present. I am sure some study has been made of it but I would be interested to knew if a really intensive study has been made and what has been the result. This could apply to other government departments that own buildings. While I am dealing with the question of large government buildings, Mr. Chairman, I would bring this matter to the attention of the minister. I am not aware of the immediate policy of his department with regard to the provision of really modern buildings with proper facilities, including air conditioning, but this is a point that deserves serious consideration. Some people may say air conditioning is a frill, but I say to you, Mr. Chairman, and through you to the minister, that in a city such as Ottawa, which in the summer time has a climatic condition that very often leads heads of departments to dismiss their staffs early in the day, or where staffs are only operating at 65 per cent or 75 per cent efficiency, to ignore this question of installing air conditioning in government buildings is cheese-paring. It is more than cheese-paring: it is a wrong policy not to provide this facility. These buildings should be provided with general air conditioning.

It is true that the minister is bound by certain treasury regulations in this regard, but surely he can bring his influence to bear on this problem and do something about it. If other ministers in the chamber also hear these words I would ask them to also consider this matter. It is all very well for the minister, who may introduce air conditioning into his office, in the office of his deputy minister and down to a certain level; but the ordinary working staff should be given equal consideration in this respect. We have in this city temporary buildings that will continue to be occupied for another 10 or 15 years, and they are actually hells in which to work during the summertime. These temporary buildings are costly to maintain. In wintertime they are inefficiently heated. There is no means of controlling the climatic conditions which prevail in this city. I am sure that in the long run we would obtain a much greater return per employee in the way of more efficient work and less absenteeism as a result of sickness if facilities were provided which would to some extent offset the climatic conditions which prevail here.

Frankly, Mr. Chairman, it has been beyond my comprehension that we have continued with this sort of prehistoric policy for so many years. We know that commercial firms in cities such as Ottawa, Montreal and Toronto instal either a complete air conditioning system or modified air conditioning in their buildings. Why do they do it? They do it because they realize it is not just a question of personal comfort but it brings a greater return in work efficiency on the part of their employees. This is not the first time I have spoken about this matter. Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, one of the reasons I have not much hair on the top of my head is that I have been butting it against a blank wall in this regard. But I will come back to this plea time and time again. I will leave the matter there, Mr. Chairman.

I would refer to another matter about which I have spoken a number of times and which was instituted a couple of years ago. I would like the minister to give us an estimate of how it has worked out. I refer to the requirement of time and material payment bonds on major contracts. There have been many unhappy experiences in this regard, particularly in the Department of Transport —I will not deal with the particular instance —and if there had been time and material payment bonds not only would we have had a faster completion of jobs but a great many subcontractors and suppliers, who in some cases went into bankruptcy because of incompletion of a contract or because of improper operation on the part of the prime contractor, would have been paid.

A great deal has been said about a second trans-Canada route. Some people advocate one route, others advocate another. We would like to know from the minister what progress has been made with respect to the conference that he indicated he was convening, or trying to convene, with the various ministers of highways of the provinces with regard to a national highways system. Whether it be known by the name of confederation routes or whether the highways be primarily north and south routes, it seems to me we must evolve a national highway policy as part of a national transportation policy. This will take a great deal of negotiation and I know the banks and certain people will bristle when I say this, but I am of the opinion that this is one of the problems we must not only face, but solve, before we can achieve ultimate development in this country.

I have another matter to which I would draw the attention of the minister. I ask him whether he has available the information that his colleagues the Minister of Labour, and the Secretary of State, and himself, were asked to provide last July when the house was asked to pass supplementary estimates "C" under which an item of the Department of Finance, No. 50b, was to be increased by some $7 million. This item concerned projects that were on the shelf and were to be accelerated. They were small projects which would assist in providing employment in the winter. The minister should now have the information on this question. If these projects are not well on the way or on the point of starting, they will not be of any use in this program.

The last matter to which I wish to refer, Mr. Chairman, in these brief opening remarks is the question of the national war memorial on Nepean point. I ask the minister to give us the reasons for there having been a reversal of the twice announced decision within the last year with regard to this question. There may be some technical reason which the minister may be able to advance to explain this. I do not think his colleague the Minister of Veterans Affairs would have been a willing party to such a decision. I am not going to advert to any division of cabinet in this regard, but knowing something of the background of this project, and having participated last February in a renewal of the decision that had been reached by the administration formed by my hon. friends opposite in 1956, I believe, or thereabouts, that this was going to be done, I would ask why there has been this reversal. I am not necessarily quarrelling with the decision and saying it is wrong, but I want to know why it was changed. Perhaps the minister will be able to furnish us with an answer. I can promise his colleague the Minister of Veterans Affairs that, should he appear before the committee on veterans affairs, we will obtain complete details in this regard. Mr. Chairman, I would hope the various suggestions put forward by hon. members on this first item of the estimates of the minister's department will be given serious consideration. We will deal with other questions when we obtain complete answers from the minister.

I do not think the Minister of Public Works should operate some sort of great big pork barrel, and in all seriousness I would warn him against even the minor type of patronage, which always has a habit of being found out.

I had forgotten to ask one question which always bothered me, and that is the formula by which the minister's staff, in consultation with post office officials, determine the size of a new post office. This formula seems to have antiquity as its main characteristic, and it is my own personal experience that, no sooner does one get a post office built according to this formula in a town which has a normal, healthy growth, than within two years we are belabouring the minister to have an expansion because the walls are just not made of rubber and we need far more space than was initially provided, and I think at far too great a cost. With those remarks, Mr. Chairman, I will call it a day on this item.

Mr. Munro: Might I ask the hon. gentleman a question. Did he express these fine sentiments about the Department of Public Works when they built what I understand was a $14 million trade school in the Edmonton area? This was under the previous administration.

Mr. Lambert: If you will learn the facts you will understand that this school was built by the province of Alberta as a result of a decision by the province of Alberta to implement part of its program. The federal government had nothing to do with it, except the provision under its program of 75 per cent of a program that applied to every other part of the country. When it comes down to it, if the hon. gentleman wishes to know other things—

Mr. Munro: The hon. member has answered my question.

Mr. Lambert: —about the constituency of Edmonton West, may I also say that almost a like amount was spent by the public within separate school boards in that constituency to provide vocational training, with the result that the constituency of Edmonton West benefited from the extension of educational facilities to the tune of almost $13 million.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, not belonging to either the Liberal or Conservative party, naturally I cannot become engaged in a conversation about pork barrels or patronage.

Mr. Lambert: You do not live in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Howard: No, and I do not live in Alberta either. Thank God I am not attached to the Conservative party, as is my hon. friend from Edmonton West.

I listened with interest to the initial remarks of the Minister of Public Works, as I am sure other members of the committee did, but I regret very much that the approach he has taken is one of: Give me the money to spend this year; next year I will tell you what the policy is. It is regrettable that a new government, one which sat in opposition for some four to five years, and repented during those years for what had happened in its term of office prior thereto, is not able during the period they are in government again to come up with a simple declaratory policy with respect to the manner in which the public works department will fit within the economy of the country and the structure of government. But perhaps all we have to do—because this is the statement of the minister—is to wait until next year to see whether or not he is able to come up with a policy with respect to the action and attitude of the public works department which differs in any way from that which has been in existence for some years now.

During the time the minister was a private member he and I, at the other end of this chamber, sat with just a few seats between us. We became friends of sorts, and I was sure that that friendship would carry over, inasmuch as he is now a minister, and that it might have some bearing on public works projects in the riding of Skeena which might be borderline projects, whether they would be instituted in one year or the next.

An hon. Member: What about the pork barrel?

Mr. Howard: I do not want to get into the pork barrel; I just want the minister to get into British Columbia and to concern himself with northern British Columbia. Perhaps friendship of a personal nature should not be the basis on which projects of public works should be considered; in any event it has no validity in the relationship now, because the minister, as an interjection to his comrade in arms from St. John's West, said that austerity was over. We need have no worries anyway, because apparently the minister now has a bottomless barrel from which to draw sheafs of money to engage in public works projects all over the nation.

Mr. Fisher: And in Newfoundland.

Mr. Howard: Yes, and in Newfoundland, there is no question about that.

I should like to relate to the minister some of the things which need to be done in northern British Columbia. To be a little parochial about it, I should like the minister to come out to that part of the country and spend some time there seeing the country, meeting the people, and seeing at first hand the situations which exist. Because as the old Chinese expression goes, one look is worth a thousand reports any day. The minister's predecessor visited the riding, but that visit coincided with an election which took place. I should like the minister to come when there is no election in the offing so that there is not any doubt as to why he is there. But in case the minister does not get the chance to come out—

Mr. Deschatelets: I will do that.

Mr. Howard: The minister says he will go, and I certainly appreciate it because I should like to be his chauffeur by car, by boat, by airplane, or by dog sled if necessary to get him into the various parts of the constituency so that he can see just what exists there. I have written a number of letters to the minister and his predecessor, Mr. Chairman, about this wonderful part of the country, northern British Columbia. What I should like to do, inasmuch as the minister has now agreed to visit us, is to place on record some of the things in the coastal area at which I should like him to look seriously, from the point of view of my doing some initial work on them, so that when he does come he can see these projects in process of being built.

I should like to start him off in the community of Stewart, which is at the moment a relatively small community of a few hundreds of population. It is, or will be, the southern terminus of the so-called Stewart-Cassiar road being financed partially by another department of the federal government under the so-called roads to resources program. Even though the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources said in Prince Rupert a few weeks ago that he was not going to put any more money into the Stewart-Cassiar road, if he has not already changed his mind I am sure he will on reflection. In any event, Stewart is going to be the southern terminus of that highway, and will be the most northern deep sea shipping port for the entire 400 to 500 miles of British Columbia, which is presently bounded by the Alaska Panhandle international channel.

Mr. Laing: I know the hon. member would not wish to misquote me. What I said in Prince Rupert was that under the roads to resources program the entire $7.5 million of federal funds allocated to British Columbia had been apportioned to the Stewart-Cassiar road. I recall the minister of mines told me that the $7.5 million had all been spent. This was a ten year agreement, and the money has been spent in four or five years. The hon. member asked me about further funds. I did not say we would not spend any more money on this road. I said the money allocated had been entirely spent, according to the minister of mines of British Columbia.

Mr. Howard: One thing which the minister of northern affairs should realize is that this was not a ten year agreement; it was a five year agreement. The agreement was to spend $3 million a year divided equally between the federal and provincial governments for a period of five years. That is the situation with respect to the agreement. In any event it is immaterial at this juncture. I am sure the minister, upon reflection, will realize the necessity of renegotiating the agreement or of putting up additional federal money for this particular road, so that it can be completed, and the entire north country opened up.

Stewart, inasmuch as it will be the shipping port of this area of British Columbia once the road is built, needs serious attention on the part of the Department of Public Works with a view to the provision of adequate shipping, storage, wharf and docking facilities at the head of the Portland canal. I should like to ask the minister to consider seriously developing this port to the point where there is adequate shipping to serve the needs of this part of the country to the north of Stewart.

Next, is the Indian village of Kincolith at the mouth of the Nass river. It is true there is some responsibility involved here on the part of the Indian affairs branch. This village requires both adequate dock facilities for the steamer when it calls and some sort of roadway or board walk as far up the river as the steamer cannot get into the village. We have had some correspondence with the minister's predecessor about this from time to time. I should like him to reopen the file and take another look at this request.

At the community of Port Simpson, south from there, the department built floats a few years ago but there has been a campaign to get a breakwater built there. I understand there are plans on foot to construct such a breakwater, and if that is so the people of Port Simpson will be thankful. I hope the breakwater when it is built will be an adequate one.

Further south, running into the harbour of Prince Rupert, some dredging was done by the department a few years ago across what is known as the Metlakatla bar. We had a great deal of trouble convincing the department that it should undertake the dredging of this channel. Finally, the work was done, but the channel is silting up. What is required, I think, is redredging and the provision of a concrete structure of some sort under water to make sure there is continuous channel which does not silt up because of the tide and the wind.

There is another community along the coast, small in population, but situated in a very beautiful place. The people there are of the pioneer type deserving of more concern than has been shown them by the department in years past. I refer to the community of Oona River. It is true this would be a costly item but I suggest the department should construct a suitable harbour on the south of the river and develop a breakwater there. I should like the department to reopen its file on this matter, too, since I consider it an important one.

Mr. Munro: Just about $50 million now.

Mr. Howard: The minister told us he had a bottomless barrel from which he could get all sorts of money.

Mr. Munro: Not a pork barrel. The hon. member said he did not believe in a pork barrel when he began his remarks.

Mr. Howard: The minister did not say it was a pork barrel. It is a money barrel, and I am interested in getting some money out of it to look after these much needed improvements.

There is the Indian village of Hartley Bay, an isolated place some distance from the settled community of Prince Rupert. There is a breakwater of sorts there consisting of some floating logs which are anchored and which are supposed to break up the swell and waves when a storm breaks. This community is wide open to Hecate strait and, in fact, to the whole Pacific ocean in a southeast gale, and the people who live there have a hard time trying to protect their boats. I should like the minister to look at this situation from the point of view of dredging out in the bay and establishing a suitable breakwater, so that the people of this village can get adequate protection for their fishing boats during storms, particularly in the fall and spring months.

In the Indian village of Kitamaat there is also a need to establish a breakwater. I might add that these communities are populated primarily by people engaged in the fishing industry. The problem is to find protection for the fishing boats which have to be tied up. Kitamaat is at the head of a long channel, the Douglas channel, and directly in the path of any southeast gale. There is a great need to build, at or near this village, a breakwater to protect the fishing boats of those who live in this community.

Just across the bay is the smelter city of Kitimat which was established a few years ago. Unfortunately it is almost entirely under the control of the Aluminum Company of Canada. I suggest that what the federal government must do is establish a government dock there and an assembly wharf so that Kitimat can be turned into a deep sea shipping port, perhaps a lumber assembly wharf. Some steps must be taken to serve the public need in that area; it should not be left under the control of one concern as it is now.

In the municipality of the village of Terrace, a federal building was put up a few years ago. The situation here is identical with that mentioned by the hon. member for Edmonton West a few minutes ago. The building was too small from the day it was built and an extension is badly needed. Terrace is one of the fastest growing communities in the whole north country. The population is expanding by leaps and bounds. The facilities provided by the federal building are just not adequate to serve even the existing population. I think an intensive study must be made both of this and other work which should be undertaken there.

In Prince Rupert, in 1926, a grain elevator was built, designed with the possibility of duplication through the addition of facilities equal to those originally provided. The need for elevator space exists today even more than it did then. We are in the midst of making huge grain exports. Therefore we should take advantage of the government elevator at Prince Rupert. I understand that to double the capacity of the elevator at Prince Rupert the cost would be somewhere in the neighbourhood of $1.25 a bushel of storage capacity, which would bring the total cost to $1,500,000 or $2 million. This project is necessary and we would like to see it undertaken.

In the few minutes at my disposal perhaps I can vicariously take the minister to the jewel of the north Pacific coast, the Queen Charlotte islands. Here too we have people who primarily follow the fishing industry, who have quite a large investment in fishing boats and who need breakwaters, wharves and floats adequate to serve their requirements and to protect their investment. In the area between Queen Charlotte city and the Skidegate thousands and thousands of dollars have been invested by the people in fishing boats, and in the whole area there is not a breakwater of any sort behind which they can shelter in case of a storm. Boats have been lost regularly year after year. I know that the minister's department, before he came to office and even recently, has undertaken studies and surveys of the situation. It may be a costly project. It may be that the bottom in the inlet is not suitable for rock breakwaters. It may be it is just a lot of muck and ooze with no really solid bottom to it, but I am sure that somewhere in that area a suitable bottom and a sufficient amount of rock can be found to build a breakwater to protect the investment in fishing boats of the people who live there.

Queen Charlotte city is the site of the only hospital on the Queen Charlotte islands. It is also the site of the R.C.M.P. detachment and people use it as a communications centre and for everything else. There are no adequate wharf facilities there. There are no adequate aeroplane float facilities and there certainly is no breakwater of any sort to protect boats. I think what is required is something more than the investigations that have been undertaken in the past.

There is also the matter of redredging Skidegate narrows which were dredged seven, eight or ten years ago. I know this project is under study by the department because I have had correspondence with the minister about it. But the study needs to be intensified because this is a most necessary public project requiring to be carried out on the Queen Charlotte islands.

The small community of Port Clements is where the road serving the MacMillan and Bloedel Powell River camp at Juskatla begins. There is a need to rebuild the wharf and the shed at the end of the wharf at Port Clements. This project has been under study by the department for three or four years but so far nothing has been done. This is a small item in the millions of dollars the minister has at his disposal and in the millions of dollars that are spent by the public works officials, but it is most necessary and vitally important to the people who live in that area and who are served by that particular wharf and shed.

Up at Masset we would like the minister to put some money into redredging what is known locally as the Delkatla slough. This was dredged a few years ago but unfortunately, because of the manner in which it was dredged, the wind has blown some of the sand back into the basin. There is also a tidewater slough behind it and every time the tide runs out it brings down silt and muck and deposits it in the Delkatla basin. We would like to have that redredged. The provincial government is at present building a causeway there. I do not know whether the Department of Public Works is participating in that project but I think it certainly should from the point of view of assuring that the basin will not resilt every time the tide runs out of the slough, and so that there will be some guarantee that when it is dredged it will stay that way.

A few years ago we were able to get the department to do some dredging at a place called Wiah point or Seven Mile point. This is the site of the Prince Rupert fisherman's co-operative fishing camp. It is a small place but it is almost the only haven along the whole north coast of the Queen Charlotte islands where these people troll for salmon. I am thankful and the fishermen are thankful for the dredging that has been done, but there are often strong northeaster winds and it is necessary to have a rock breakwater on a reef that runs out just above Wiah point.

We would like this project to be undertaken as well.

I know that there are only a few minutes left until 10.30. I have some other thoughts to express with regard to federal buildings generally within the riding, and the trans-Canada highway. I know that members generally do not like to start on a subject and after two or three minutes have to interrupt themselves and resume on another day. I do not like to do so either. If it is agreeable to the committee perhaps I could call it 10.30 now, or I could spend the next couple of minutes talking about the necessity of a second trans-Canada highway from Prince George to Prince Rupert.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that we call it 10.30?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Could I ask the acting house leader what the business will be for next week in so far as he can go?

Mr. McIlraith: On the first two days of the week we will have a supply motion. Presumably the motion having to do with concurrence in the report on the standing committee on privileges and elections will be dealt with very quickly on Monday, I hope. I am sorry that I cannot go beyond Tuesday.

At 10.30 p.m. the house adjourned, without question put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, October 21, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HERRIDGE—CONTRADICTION OF STATEMENT MADE IN HOUSE

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question which affects a fundamental privilege of this house and its members. This privilege is the absolute right of a member to make a statement in the house and not to have its truth impeached or questioned in any place outside the house. I refer to Beauchesne, fourth edition, citation 117, which reads as follows:

(1) The privilege of freedom of speech enjoyed by members of parliament is in truth the privilege of their constituents.

(2) Freedom of speech is declared by the Bill of Rights in the following terms: "That the freedom of speech and debates or proceedings in parliament ought not to be impeached or questioned in any court or place out of parliament."

On October 16, 1963, I asked the following question of the Prime Minister, as reported at page 3632 of Hansard:

I ask the Prime Minister whether, in the spirit of fair play, he can inform the house as to the nature of the business which the Minister of Agriculture and his alter ego, the expectant Minister without Portfolio, considered so much more important than the debate and the votes on agricultural policy that they found it necessary to be absent for such a considerable time during the debate yesterday.

The Prime Minister replied as follows:

The Minister of Agriculture and his associate, having taken part in this debate on agriculture, left the house to attend engagements previously undertaken for the Minister of Agriculture with farmers of Canada in the west. They got in touch with the grass roots while the hon. member remained in the house.

On Thursday, October 17, 1963 a newspaper, the Oakville daily Journal Record, impeached the answer of the Prime Minister in the following words:

The daily Journal Record learned late today that agriculture minister Harry Hays was working an auction in Kingston when absent from parliament on Tuesday.

Prices of up to $1,000 were realized at the cattle sale conducted by Hays Farms Limited, formerly owned by Hays and now operated by his brother, Tom, of Oakville.

Hays auctioned at the second annual sale for Eastern Breeders Incorporated. A total of $25,135 changed hands.

He has earned up to $50,000 a year from auctioneering.

On Friday, October 18, 1963 the same newspaper repeated its impeachment in an editorial entitled "Hays was at Auction—His Place was in Ottawa". The concluding paragraph of this editorial reads as follows:

Meantime, we suggest again, if Harry Hays is to continue as Minister of Agriculture he keep to government business and keep out of the bull ring. Where public duty and public confidence is concerned, there should be no compromise.

I accepted, and I continue to accept, the truth of the Prime Minister's statement to me as a statement of fact, that is until it is proven or confessed to be untrue.

TRADE

BULGARIA—TABLING OF AGREEMENT AND LETTERS

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I beg leave, Mr. Speaker, to table two copies in English and in French of the trade agreement between the People's Republic of Bulgaria and Canada, signed at Ottawa on October 8, 1963, together with certain other letters signed at the same time and relating to that agreement.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

The house resumed from Friday, October 18, consideration of the motion of Mr. Caron for concurrence in the second report of the standing committee on privileges and elections.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take more than a very few minutes—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: —because I hope there is a general disposition in the house to settle this question and get on with the other business of the country. I think, however, since I who was not a member of the committee have spoken very briefly, I should say what it seems to me we are being asked to decide.

It seems to me that in the course of the debate so far three points have arisen, one of which is quite irrelevant to the report made by the committee, and that is the question of the allowance for a leader. I believe the Leader of the Opposition was quite correct when he said that the law was made by parliament and that if there was any interpretation to be made of it, it would have to be made by the courts. I do not think the committee was seeking in any way to discuss that question at all, and I see no reason that I or anyone else should discuss it. I accept without qualification the statement made by the hon. member for Villeneuve that that was not a consideration at all in this matter, and that it should not be so regarded. Therefore I do not propose to say anything more about it.

The other two questions which it seems to me are involved in the report before the house are first, the order of seating of the various groups in this house who are not supporters of either my right hon. friend the Prime Minister or the Leader of the Opposition—

Mr. Hales: The right honourable.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Leader of the Opposition, the right hon. gentleman, the right hon. member for Prince Albert, the former prime minister; and I may say, sir, I would be the last person in the house to deny to the right hon. gentleman any title or honour which he has earned through his long service in public life.

The question of the order of seating is one that is dealt with in the report, and the other question that seems to have arisen, and perhaps deserves to have a word or two said about it, is the question of recognition of certain members as a group or a party. I confess I am not subtle enough to be able to tell the difference between a group and a party. In my view, since parliament does not know the words, since our law does not know either of the words, and since they have no official connotation in any way, it does not matter which one is used.

I remember the days when the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam and most of those who now support him used to refer to their party as a movement and resented very much having it called a party. I always thought that was a kind of sanctimonious distinction without a difference, and I think the same is true of this question of groups and parties. I think if any four or five of us in the house are gathered together under one leader we can call ourselves a group or a party, and it is nobody else's business what we call ourselves in a free country, so long as we do not try to pass ourselves off as somebody else.

Now, sir, there are two possible ways in which this question could have been resolved, and the committee considered both of them. One was what I would call the historic, traditional and chronological method; that is to say, to look at the groups that are in the house and see which one had been around the longest and which had representation in parliament the longest and give it a priority, and then the one that had been next longest, and so on.

That has been followed. I have looked at some of the precedents, and it was followed invariably, as I said on Friday, from 1921 to 1962—

Some hon. Members: Oh, no.

Mr. Pickersgill: —without any exception. The other method was what I referred to perhaps a little disrespectfully as the numbers game, the numerical basis. That was never followed at all before 1962. Personally I think what was done in 1962 was a regrettable departure from precedent; but it was done, and that precedent was again accepted at the beginning of this parliament. These two proposals were considered by the committee. The committee recommended following one of them. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre introduced a motion into the house suggesting that the committee should be instructed to follow the other one, and the house decided by a majority not to follow that other course.

Having made that decision, it seems to me that alternative has been refused by the house itself. Therefore it could hardly be reopened in this session. If we were being pedantic—although I do not think anyone wants to be very pedantic about it—I would suggest the reason we are in this difficulty is precisely because we were following the numerical principle. If we had not been following the numerical principle, if we had stuck to the historical, traditional principle, no problem would have arisen at this particular time. Also there is this danger, if we should try to insist upon the numerical principle, that one can never tell when five of the sheep who now follow the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam might stray away.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: If that happened we would have to have the musical chairs all over again, and it seems to me parliament has something more important to do than that. That problem would not have arisen if we had stuck to the historical, traditional or chronological principle. Therefore it seems to me there is every ground for supporting that principle. So far as the question of the recognition of groups is concerned—

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question? Would he tell us what position his party took when this matter was under discussion at the beginning of the twenty fifth parliament and again at the beginning of this parliament?

Mr. Pickersgill: None, sir.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: This is a matter for the house. I think my right hon. friend the Prime Minister and I took no position on this matter whatsoever, and I do not think anyone was authorized to speak for the Liberal party on this kind of matter. But we have taken the view, as we have on this occasion too, sir, that every—

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I could answer one question first. We have in this matter taken the view, as we have throughout, that the constitution of the house is the business of the house and it is not for the government to tell the house how it should be constituted. That is the position we have taken.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I am trying to speak in a consecutive way, and also briefly. If the hon. member's question is not answered when I have concluded, I will be glad to answer it. On the question of whether there is recognition of groups or parties—and, as I say, I cannot see the difference—on reading the report we see that it says "the members of the group under the leadership of Mr. Caouette". It seems to me this is a clear recognition of the fact that there is a group in this house under the leadership of the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette); that is recognized in the report itself.

The report also recognizes that apart from the supporters of the right hon. gentleman opposite there are two other groups in the house, and I think that is evident; we can all see that with our own eyes.

An hon. Member: Read paragraph 4.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will read paragraph 4. It says:

> That the question of the privileges to be enjoyed by the group under the leadership of Mr. Real Caouette be referred to the parliamentary counsel of the House of Commons for study and report to the Speaker.

I think the committee felt they had no useful advice to offer to Your Honour on this subject, and they probably felt—I am just surmising what they probably felt—that Your Honour and the house might get some advice from the parliamentary counsel. But it does seem to me that in a way this fourth part of the report has been superseded by the action which Your Honour has already taken. Your Honour has already recognized on one or two occasions, as a courtesy, the hon. member for Villeneuve.

Mr. Olson: On a point of order, each time Your Honour has given this recognition you have stated clearly that it should not be considered as a precedent.

Mr. Martineau: Every time Your Honour did recognize the group you said it was pending the report of the committee. What the Secretary of State is now arguing runs against his case.

Mr. Pickersgill: If I had been able to finish my sentence I think both hon. gentlemen would have been satisfied with what I was saying. I was about to say that Your Honour recognized the hon. member for Villeneuve as a courtesy pending any decision by the house. But I would point out that this is the only way in which hon. gentlemen on the other side of the house, apart from the Leader of the Opposition, who is an officer of the house, are ever given recognition. A certain recognition is given to ministers, especially to the Prime Minister as the real leader of the house. Apart from that, recognition is given as a courtesy, and solely as a courtesy. I do not see how it could be anything else unless we were fundamentally to alter the character of our parliament, which is divided into two sides with a government and an opposition. However, this recognition by courtesy has been given since 1921, and I think it is far too late to change the practice now. It does seem to me, Your Honour, that whether you seek the advice of parliamentary counsel or not, this is a matter which you will decide yourself in your own good time.

It seems to me that the committee has given further advice on two points; first, that there are, in addition to the official opposition, three discernible groups or parties in the house. The committee has recommended that these be seated in a certain order, and that order is based on the historical principle. Second, the committee has recognized, in paragraph 3 of its report, that those hon. members who follow the hon. member for Villeneuve are, in their own words, members of a group.

That is all this motion is about. That is all we are asked to decide. It is true there could be a great deal of argument about the order, but surely that argument was really settled when the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was defeated the other day, the motion proposing an alternative order.

There is no doubt whatever that when this parliament was constituted last May a group or party was recognized under the leadership of the hon. member for Red Deer. There is a group in this house, obviously discernible, which supports the hon. member for Red Deer, so there can be no question that there is such a group. It seems to me, as the hon. member for Villeneuve has said and as, I believe, the hon. member for Lapointe also said the other day, that it is not for the Liberal party or the Conservative party or the New Democratic party to decide a question affecting the internal workings of the Social Credit party or its internal divisions or anything else. That is their business. It is not our business. I agree completely with that view.

Mr. Fisher: Sophist.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am speaking in the house, and the hon. member for Port Arthur can write it down. I am speaking for myself as one member of this house when I say that I do not think that is anybody's business except the members of that party. How they describe themselves is their business and not ours, but the order in which they sit has been made by the house a responsibility of the house. All we are being asked to decide is that, apart from the official opposition, there are three groups, and that they sit in a certain order. The only alternative order which has been suggested has been rejected by the house, so I respectfully suggest that it would be a wonderful idea now if we could have a vote, agree with the committee's report, and get on with the business of the country.

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, following the example set by the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill), I shall be very brief. However, I have a few comments to make on his motion.

In the first place I must say that I was a member of the committee on privileges and elections to which the matter was referred. As the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) knows quite well, I do not agree completely with his ideas, especially regarding monetary reform. I also entertain some doubts as to whether the group led by the hon. member for Villeneuve is actually a party in the traditional sense of the word.

I tried to set forth the difficulties which might crop up if the committee were to decide that the group headed by the hon. member for Villeneuve did constitute a political party.

As for me, I do not feel that the committee should be called upon to decide whether or not this is the case. However, this problem has been brought before the committee and the house. It must be recognized that the Ralliement des creditistes has actually broken off from the national Social Credit party. That is the first point. It must be recognized from the evidence in the house, that the group headed by the hon. member for Villeneuve is the larger one and that, on the other hand, having well established structures it has a right to be heard as a group. In addition, it seems to me that it is entitled to the privileges usually granted to a group.

That group is, after all, a physical entity, and must be assigned a specific seating space in the house. When the famous French poet Lamartine was elected deputy, he proclaimed he would like to be seated right under the ceiling. Unfortunately, that would not do in this house. That political group has a right to a material space in the house; it must be given a place.

That being said, it would seem to me that the only applicable criterion, which is both logical and consistent, is the numerical one. The hon. member for Villeneuve, and several other hon. members, have rightly pointed out that 13 is a larger number than 11. I feel there is no other principle which could guide the house in arriving at a fair and logical solution.

The Secretary of State has brought forth the argument of historical precedent. Even from this point of view I think that he is inconsistent in his argument. Indeed the principle of historical precedents has been abandoned for a number of years and is only taken up when there is a question of seating a group in the house, to determine its importance numerically. Moreover, if there is a question of seniority it should be kept in mind that the hon. member for Villeneuve, for whom I certainly hold no brief, was nevertheless, a member of this house from 1946 to 1949, and, as a matter of fact, for the riding of Pontiac which I am now representing. It is therefore clear that, in the Social Credit group, the hon. member for Villeneuve enjoys seniority.

For all those reasons I think that the house should not accept to concur in the report presented by the committee on privileges and elections, but that the house should rather refer the matter again to the committee for a new recommendation.

Moreover, it seems to me that the Secretary of State, who used to speak for freedom of speech, resorted to tactics which strangely resembled closure when, at about 4.20 last Friday, he moved the adjournment.

I hope that today he will not resort again to dilatory methods contrary to standing orders and to parliamentary tradition.

As the government, through his spokesmen the Secretary of State, as well as the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Turner), very clearly stated its stand in the matter, it should now assume its responsibilities without passing them on to others, and put an end to this controversy, once and for all.

[Text]

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. It is one which I think is of the utmost importance, namely that the House of Commons should not be made into a complete farce. At this moment we are, according to the precedence of orders, discussing a motion having to do with the seating and recognition of members in the House of Commons. In view of the fact that the economy of Canada might be brought to a standstill at any time, and that we are facing a most important issue affecting the entire country arising out of the trusteeship legislation and the shipping of Canada being brought to a halt, I would ask that we do not make a farce of the parliament of Canada at this time by discussing seating or the recognition of groups in the House of Commons.

I ask the Prime Minister or the house leader whether the necessary motion cannot now be moved so the House of Commons can discuss immediately the question of the trusteeship legislation, our shipping and what has taken place. Surely the economy of Canada is of more importance than the seating of members in this house or the recognition of groups. I ask the Prime Minister to take the necessary action now.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Winch: Do you require a motion, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member wishes a decision on the question of privilege he will have to end with a motion asking the house to decide one thing or the other.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, I would move that the present debate be adjourned and that we proceed to orders of the day.

Mr. Speaker: Naturally I have listened to the hon. member with the greatest of interest. The points raised are certainly most important but under the rules of the house I have to be satisfied that first there is a question of urgency and, second, that there is a basic question of privilege. I cannot come to that decision on the presentation made by the hon. member, and unless there is unanimous consent on the part of the house I must recognize the hon. member for Red Deer who stood up just before the hon. member spoke.

Mr. Winch: I ask for the unanimous consent of the house to proceed with other matters that are of the utmost importance to the economy of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: I should advise the hon. member for Vancouver East that he has the right to move an amendment that the motion be put now and that the house do proceed to orders of the day, but I do not see a question of privilege.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on the question raised, surely nothing would be lost and much might be gained if we could dispose now of this matter which we have been debating for some days, and the best way to dispose of it is to vote. If the vote cannot be taken now, perhaps we could agree to have the vote taken within the next hour. I still think it would be desirable to get this matter disposed of as quickly as possible and then go on with the orders of the day and the business of the country.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Red Deer wish the floor? He stood up twice.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, if the house is ready for the question I will refrain from speaking, but if there is going to be a debate—

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a suggestion to the Secretary of State. He has referred to some good points in the report, but there are others we cannot accept. It is not our intention to delay the business of the house, but on the other hand we would not like the house to commit an injustice. I should like to ask the Secretary of State if he would be agreeable to our presenting our amendment and then adjourning the debate for 24 hours to permit all members of the house to think about it. We could then take the vote on the amendment tomorrow and see the result.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, if such a proposition were to be entertained it would seem to me, because of what the Prime Minister has said, that we would have to have an undertaking that there would be a vote on the amendment and a vote immediately thereafter on the main motion if the amendment was not carried. Otherwise we would have gained nothing; we would have just postponed the matter further. Unless it could be agreed unanimously that an amendment could be considered and that the amendment and the main motion would be voted on tomorrow, it would seem to me that we would not gain anything.

Mr. Gregoire: We are trying to find a solution to the problem, and we are suggesting an amendment. If it is not agreed to by the house, maybe we can then try to find another solution together with the Secretary of State. Some ideas have been raised today by the Secretary of State that might be discussed. For example, the Secretary of State talked about seniority. Who decides which party has seniority? He talked about groups and parties. In our minds there is a lot to this matter.

For example, since last Friday a member of the Liberal party spoke on the C.B.C. program "Les Affaires de l'Etat", a free program for the political parties in Ottawa. We do not have any of these free political programs on the French network of the C.B.C.; they are only for political parties. If we are only a group we will not have access to these programs. There are many other points to be considered with regard to the difference between a group and a party. There is, for example, the question of membership on the standing and special committees of the house. Will a group be allowed to have members on these committees?

These are problems which have to be faced before we take a vote on the main motion. That is why we would like to present our amendment and then discuss the seriousness of the problem with the Secretary of State. He might call a meeting of all the house leaders to discuss the problem and we could find a solution. On the other hand, if the Secretary of State wants to impose his own solution on us without any discussion, we cannot accept that. We have heard the leader of the official opposition say that, although he does not like what the hon. member for Villeneuve is saying, he is nevertheless ready to fight unto death so that he can say it. We have the help of a great political party in Canada. We would have the help also of the New Democratic party, and we need it because we do not have very much experience in this house.

We are ready to fight, therefore, if they want to impose their decision. If they want to discuss a solution, then we are ready to discuss it to avoid delaying the business of this house. It is for this reason we are asking the Secretary of State if he wants to adjourn the debate and discuss the problem. We are ready to do that. If he wants to impose a solution, we are not ready to accept it.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the hon. gentleman should—

An hon. Member: How many times can you speak?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am merely getting up because the hon. gentleman did make a proposition. I think the hon. member would be well advised to move an amendment and proceed in the ordinary way with the debate. The government is not seeking to impose any solution of this problem. As I have pointed out, all we are doing is debating the report of the committee. Let us go on with the debate on the report of that committee, and settle it.

Mr. Rheal Caouette (Villeneuve): I should like to ask the Secretary of State a question. Has the minister received any instructions from the legal officers of the House of Commons concerning the recognition of the Ralliement des creditistes in relation to the privileges that are given to the other political parties? Can the Secretary of State assure us that we will receive the same consideration as any political party in this House of Commons.

Mr. Pickersgill: This is not my business. It would be very improper for me or any other member except yourself, sir, to give such an assurance. We elected Your Honour to be the guardian of the rights, prerogatives and privileges of all hon. members, and for a member of the government to usurp that position or for anyone to suggest that a member of the government ought to usurp that position, I think shows a lack of understanding of parliament.

Mr. Gregoire: Is the Secretary of State now suggesting that this problem be referred back to the Speaker for decision? Is that the suggestion of the Secretary of State?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, my suggestion is that we continue the debate in the ordinary way under the rules of the house.

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that the house now continue the debate on the motion? Is there any other hon. member who would like to speak?

Some hon. Members: Question, question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Quebec West.

[Translation]

Mr. Lucien Plourde (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, when the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) says that there is no difference between a party and a group, I would answer him that there is, and a quite considerable one. In the report of the standing committee on privileges and elections, he states, in volume 3, that the group under the leadership of the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) should be seated on the left of the Social Credit party. Therefore, the group of the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) is recognized as a party. The New Democratic party, is recognized—the word party is mentioned—but when it comes to us, we are registered as a mere group.

Now, if the Secretary of State states that in this case there is no difference either, I want to state that when the motion is put and carried, they will find that there is a difference. But before we are accused of delaying the business of the house we certainly shall express our views and warn the government that it is taking a dangerous course and that, before long, it might come to regret its action.

Mr. Speaker, as I am interested in the motion now before the house, I think it is my duty to expound what I think might enlighten hon. members.

I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that when I was elected on April 8 last, for the second time, the electors of my county recognized that I was, first of all, a member of the Social Credit—and I still am—but the candidate chosen by the Ralliement des creditistes, and it was in that capacity that those electors financed my campaign.

Later on, you were informed at the Granby convention that we were not satisfied with our parliamentary leader and that we had decided to change him. At that time we agreed to choose a new parliamentary leader. Our present leader, our parliamentary leader, the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) was chosen at a caucus. We saw in him qualities of dynamism and courage, and we wanted our whole country to benefit from that vitality.

The greater part of hon. members recognized that the division was justified. That is why I am asking the house to recognize our group according to our number. I shall come back to this matter in a while, in order fully to explain to hon. members that when we take tradition as a basis, the number is to be considered first.

If the question is of no interest to the members of other parties, they should let the group I represent in the house decide, and when the question is put we shall see where the true majority is and also which is the true Social Credit party.

If the house has decided that 12 members having a leader constitute a party, I wonder why it should delay the recognition of our group which comprises 13 members. Under Bill C-91, any group of at least 12 members will be officially recognized as a party in the house. As we have 13 members, we are therefore a party. The group of only 11 members cannot be called a party under Bill C-91.

To find the true definition of a party, one can consult the Quillet dictionary which says:

—of the union of several persons having the same interests or holding the same views against others who have opposite interests or views.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, we have in this house some interests with which all other parties disagree. Once again, this proves that we really form a party, and consequently, the definition of the Quillet dictionary applies.

We recognize also that the hon. member for Villeneuve has great merit. He gained the confidence of the people when, single handed, he had 26 members elected in 1962 and 20 in 1963. Without the fighting spirit of our leader, whose great qualities we recognize and which nobody can deny, I am convinced that the eleven members of the western group would not have been elected. Despite the stubborn fight conducted against the hon. member for Villeneuve, he succeeded in having 20 members elected last April, as you all know, and got 29 per cent of the votes, which is the second highest percentage in the province of Quebec. This is significant.

If this result scares the party in office and causes it to hesitate to recognize us as a fourth group in the opposition, it means that they will have to face our group after the next election, because the Ralliement des creditistes is the most dynamic group, and that, they know well. I therefore ask the government to reconsider their decision before they plunge into this, because it will have implications all across the nation.

I think that the New Democratic party, with 17 members, must sit right next to the official opposition party in this house. As far as we are concerned, we should sit on the left of the N.D.P. and as for the others they should sit in the corner, which seems logical since there are only 11 of them.

If one considers the votes taken lately, Mr. Speaker, one wonders whether there will be 11 of them very long, because they are divided into one, two or three groups, for 11 members. So, I wonder whether that pact will hold very long.

Since the reconvening of the session, you can see that we always stand united and that we know where we are going.

If there were an election tomorrow morning, if the people gave a solid vote for a new party, whatever its membership, could you, in two months from now, together with the new parties, count enough members to make up 140?

Do not forget that, because you are only a small group in the house. So, ask yourselves whether what you are doing is proper. But no, you do not ask yourselves that question. But the people want a new party, they want the party in power to hold a majority, and that is precisely decided by the number of members.

If, after the last general election, the Liberals had been unable to assume office, they would have said: "Listen, we have 129 members whereas the Conservatives have only 94. It is unfair." As far as I am concerned, their complaints would have been justified because it is always the largest group which should have precedence.

In my opinion, you may live to regret this. I feel that we should do the same thing now that we did after the election of last April 8. It is only logical that the largest party should govern. However, it is obvious, here, that makeshift arrangements are being made.

Last year, with 30 members, we came before the New Democratic party which had only 17 members. We had precedence over them and we found that logical.

This year, the contrary is being done in the house, and I feel that such action is unfair to us.

In my opinion, the house should consider the question more seriously instead of contradicting itself as it has done in the past few days. Its actions contradict its statement.

I hope that the public which follows what is happening in parliament will not be deceived by the decision which the government has undertaken to have approved without further explanation. We know what the result would be, the same as last week.

The house wants to know if the Ralliement des creditistes constitutes a new party in this house. Well, we are not a new party, we still follow the Social Credit doctrine; we have only changed our leader in parliament. I claim that the majority voice is that of the largest number of members in a democratic party like ours or in a house where freedom of speech and freedom of action are recognized. Speaking of freedom of speech, if we are placed in fourth position, we will make our presence felt here, we will speak out and we will criticize you for this action every time we have the opportunity to do so.

You want to make us your scapegoats and give us the last place in the opposition. Do not forget that besides being a political group, we are a true political party as it is clearly recognized in the report of the privileges and elections committee.

If the word "party" is applied to the Social Credit party headed by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson), or the New Democratic party, or to the Conservatives or the Liberals, I maintain that we are here as representatives of the Ralliement des creditistes and, therefore, constitute an officially recognized party. The dictionary proves us right as well as Bill C-91 for that matter. We are only asking you to be fair, and not only in our own interests; indeed, we do not want a precedent to be thus created which we may have cause to regret later on. Some are here for this session only, but the younger ones among us, who can hope to spend many years in this chamber, do not want to deplore later an act that parliament is ready to approve today.

Another illogical situation is the alleged seniority of the group directed by the hon. member for Red Deer, the oldest group, the group which, it is said, professes the true Social Credit theory, whereas it is known that the hon. member for Villeneuve sat in the house from 1946 to 1949. It is therefore the hon. member for Villeneuve who would deserve that seniority and not the three other Social Credit members who belong to the group you wish to recognize and who were elected for the first time in 1957.

Consequently, I do not understand that position. They talk of seniority and then, looking at the senior members, they find there are three in one group and one in the other; now, as one group has three, that one is the real group.

Where is the seriousness, where is the logic of that reasoning? If we really desire to be fair and to be recognized as such throughout the country, I suggest to the house it is solely the number of members which should be the first consideration. As we are 13, we say that the true Social Credit group is the group of 13, and that until the next election.

That the group still bears the name of Social Credit, we agree and we are not ready to deny it; we shall keep the name. It is understood that we do not form a new group, we only have a new house leader; it is the same theory, and the proof is that ever since we came here, we have been sharing the same ideas as the other group, even though you do not want to admit our monetary theory.

I believe that if the party in office were to make a decision today, in view of the state of mind now prevailing, it would be shameful to see it proceed towards a precipice. As you have already done twice, at the time of your decisions on the 11 per cent tax and the legislation concerning old age pensions, this time again, you are running towards catastrophe.

I wish the people had trust in parliament for its passing proper legislation.

I wish I had heard not only the parliamentary secretary, who was far from being convincing that time, but also the Prime Minister, to see what he thinks about the situation.

The other day, I noticed he did not commit himself first, on the occasion of the vote, and I congratulate him. The hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) had said the first one to vote would take a great responsibility. It is therefore another one who assumed that responsibility.

Up to now we have heard backbenchers who did not really take this matter seriously. They sought to divert the attention of the house from the real problem and from the decision to be made. But we simply want our rights. No one can deny that we are not within our rights in trying to get what we are asking for.

We do not want to interfere with the business of the house and we would rather legislate and work for the people, but it is the respect for our rights that we are dealing with at this time. We sit now in the house and should a precedent be established, others in the years ahead would be placed in an unfortunate situation. We want the matter to be settled at once, even if it takes three or four days, we want it settled definitely so that we may arrive at a fair decision.

If tomorrow morning the leader of a party were to pass away, he would have to be replaced by another one, and the party would not lose its identity but the party leader would simply change. That is exactly what makes the difference.

In my opinion, the committee on privileges and elections spent too much time looking for considerations outside parliament. What has the national association got to do with that? It is members elected to the house who must reach their decisions. I think it is the word of the elected members which must count in the house and not considerations from outside.

At this time, it is useless to rack one's brains and look for difficulties where there are none in order to determine where is the real group. The national association has nothing to do with that. In my opinion, we have wasted enough time considering in this problem side issues which should have been disregarded altogether.

I should like to mention to the house all the admiration I have for my parliamentary leader, the hon. member for Villeneuve who offered last Friday the amount of his additional allowance of $4,000 to the down-and-out people in Canada. That proves again to the house that there has been no quibbling over that $4,000, but rather over the principle we wish to defend and that we do not want to see violated by others.

And when it is realized that, owing to internal difficulties in a group, it is virtually impossible to attain a preset goal, then one simply quits. But we did not, we took a vote and the majority decided that the ideal which our group was pursuing was actually the one which we must reach.

I intend to move an amendment in the hope that it will be taken into consideration and that it will not be brushed aside too lightly. Things must not be rushed. It is much better to spend one or two extra hours today and reach a decision which parliament will not have cause to regret.

Everybody talks about democracy and about freedom. I would rather have spoken last Friday, as I could have waxed more eloquent after hearing various speeches on the same topic. But the Secretary of State prevented me from doing so at the time.

That is why I come back to this matter today, is to make hon. members realize our position, because I find that after two days outside parliament, opinions have not changed.

I simply ask the hon. members on the government side, before they vote, to think twice about the lack of fairness and of understanding they would show with regard to a group in this house, if they were to take a decision too quickly.

We simply ask to be recognized as a group of 13 in this house, and we want a place as such.

Consequently, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

> That the report of the committee on privileges and elections be sent back to that committee with the recommendation from the house that the following words be added to paragraph 2:
> "The house recognizes that the most elementary decency demands that it should not be up to other political parties to decide which of the two Social Credit groups is the Social Credit party, and proposes to leave it to the Social Credit members themselves to decide that point by a majority vote among the 23 Social Credit members."

Mr. Speaker, if the house would entertain that amendment, it could be said that it had acted in a truly democratic way, and one would see where democracy is to be found and what sensible results really are.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I will only say a few words, because our group do not wish to postpone any longer the division on the main question.

We are aware of what is going on and I want to protest vigorously against the decision of the committee on privileges and elections, which asserts that 13 members make a smaller group than 11. Actually, I feel that the public, who have a better sense of arithmetic than the members of the Liberal party, as well as the supporters of the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson), will soon realize their tremendous mistake, as well as the wrong which is being perpetrated in the name of a wholly arbitrary decision. Following the committee's recommendations, we have been relegated to the last ranks among the political parties in this house.

I appreciate the statement of the Secretary of State at the opening of today's sitting, when he said that a group and a party were one and the same thing.

What we want is that the legal advisers of the House of Commons establish whether we are entitled, in this house, to the privileges everybody else is enjoying. Then you might recognize us, Mr. Speaker; I am firmly persuaded that it would warm the cockles of your heart to be allowed to recognize a group of men, of members of parliament lawfully elected, and seated in one of the corners of the house.

Mr. Speaker, we too are desirous to speed up the business of the house, because there are important problems to be settled without delay. Actually, outsiders have come to Ottawa, where they are meeting today with government representatives, and the leaders of the various parties. They hope their problems will be examined as soon as possible, and given a constructive solution.

For these reasons, we shall not prevent any longer the house from dividing on the motion, in order that it might proceed with its business forthwith.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF APPOINTMENT OF NEW COMMISSIONER

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to announce that the government has with regret accepted the resignation of Commissioner C. W. Harvison of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to take effect on October 31, 1963. Commissioner Harvison first submitted his resignation in April of this year at the termination of 35 years of service. At the request of the government he agreed to retain his post as commissioner for a further period but has now requested to be allowed to retire as of the end of October.

Commissioner Harvison joined the Royal North-West Mounted Police in 1919 and is the last serving officer who began his service in the force when it bore that historic name. Both in the ranks and as a commissioned officer he has not only participated in but has made a distinguished contribution to the development of the R.C.M.P. from a frontier police force into one of the finest modern law enforcement agencies of any country in the world.

On behalf of all members of the house and of the people of Canada may I express our sincere appreciation of Commissioner Harvison's long years of outstanding service to the country and to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. He has good reason to be proud of his record, just as we can all take pride in the force he has served.

I should also like to announce that the governor in council has appointed Deputy Commissioner G. B. McClellan to succeed Commissioner Harvison, with effect from November 1, 1963. Deputy Commissioner McClellan was born in Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan, in 1908, was educated at the Royal Military College at Kingston, Ontario, and joined the R.C.M.P. in 1932. Commissioned in 1939, Deputy Commissioner McClellan has served in all fields of federal law enforcement and national security and has held increasingly responsible positions in which he contributed much to the growth and development of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Appointed deputy commissioner in 1959, he was responsible for the administration of the force until 1960 when he became deputy commissioner, operations, responsible to the commissioner for all phases of policing, security and investigational work of the force as the senior deputy commissioner, and second in command.

I am certain that Deputy Commissioner McClellan will carry out the heavy responsibilities of his new post in a manner in keeping with the fine traditions of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Export of Arms

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOUTH AFRICA—PORTUGAL—STATEMENT ON EXPORT OF ARMS FROM CANADA

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a statement about the policy of the government on the export of arms to South Africa, which the Prime Minister observed on Friday, October 11, was under consideration at that time by the government. I will also deal with the policy with regard to the export of arms to Portugal.

It has for several years been the policy of the Canadian government not to permit the shipment of arms to South Africa which might be used against the non-white population for the enforcement of the policy of apartheid. On August 7, 1963, the security council passed a resolution recommending that all states should cease the sale and shipment of arms, ammunition and military vehicles to South Africa. Taking into account the security council's recommendation and wishing further to express our disapproval of South Africa's apartheid policies, the government has decided that it will not authorize the acceptance of any new orders from South Africa for items of military equipment, nor permit the shipment of such equipment to South Africa.

Before August 7, 1963, the Canadian government had authorized the sale to South Africa of certain aircraft, communications equipment and air navigation equipment manufactured in Canada which were judged to be without relevance to the enforcement of the policy of apartheid. While keeping the situation under constant review, for the present the government will allow the shipment to South Africa only of maintenance spares for equipment supplied before August 7, 1963 and, subject to examination in each case, of certain aircraft piston engines and maintenance spares for such engines.

The government has also reviewed its policy with regard to the export of arms to Portugal. As I informed the house on June 25 this year, Canada has not made any contributions of Canadian military assistance to Portugal since November, 1960. With respect to the sale of arms and military equipment on a commercial basis, it has been the policy of the Canadian government since 1960 not to permit the export to Portugal or the territories under Portuguese administration of any arms or equipment which, in our judgment, would be used for military purposes in the Portuguese overseas territories. The government proposes to continue this policy.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the statement made by the minister is one of interest. It deals with a very difficult and trying problem. In its announcement the government has followed the course followed by the government of which I had the honour to be prime minister. I recognize the difficulties in the way.

So far as South Africa is concerned, we took the stand, and were greatly criticized for having done so, that while nations may practice in their hearts the luxury of discrimination, no nation within the commonwealth could have as its cornerstone a policy of discrimination as its only policy in dealing with those of a coloured race. As long as such a course was followed I contended, and the last year and a half has certainly borne out the stand I took, that within the commonwealth, with five out of six belonging to a coloured race, no nation could possibly accept membership believing, as does the present administration in South Africa, that a person belonging to a coloured race is not entitled to equality within the country.

In so far as Portugal is concerned, Portugal is the oldest ally of Great Britain. She has been a true ally throughout the years, as South Africa had been a true and co-operative friend in the commonwealth. It is difficult for a government to take a stand on this question and make the determination that has again been made. I think it is the only one consistent with the situation prevailing in the world today. I can only say that, difficult as the problem is, the government of the day having followed the path of the government of yesterday, which was criticized, we give our support to the stand taken.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): I do not want to belabour the point, Mr. Speaker, but I should like to express the suggestion that we lend our whole-hearted support to the statement the Secretary of State for External Affairs has just given to us. As one who perhaps understands well the situation because of years of experience in the continent about which we are talking, I am convinced that it is the responsibility of freedom loving people of Canada, with a parliamentary system of government, pledged to the preservation of the rights of individuals, regardless of race, colour or creed to give leadership whenever possible on problems such as this. I think the government has taken the correct stand in following the policies laid down by the previous government in regard to this most difficult problem.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, about ten days ago I asked the Prime Minister what action the government intended to take with reference to stopping the shipment of arms to South Africa. I am very glad that the statement has been made today by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I think the government is to be congratulated for this somewhat belated decision to stop the shipment of arms to both South Africa and Portugal. I do not believe that under world conditions as they are today, Canada or the Canadian people would want arms shipped to South Africa which might be used to enforce apartheid and to carry on policies of racial discrimination. Nor do I think the Canadian people will support armaments being sent to Portugal in order to maintain the last relics of colonialism in that part of Africa.

I am very glad the government has taken the step which it has. I hope it will carefully watch the matter of aircraft because I am not sure I can agree with the minister when he says aircraft cannot be used to maintain apartheid policies. If there is civil disobedience in South Africa, certainly military aircraft would become very important weapons. I hope the government will watch carefully the question of airplanes and airplane parts going to South Africa. I am sure the statement which has been made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs will be welcomed by Canadians generally as proof that we are doing more than paying lip service in our opposition to colonialism and racial discrimination.

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, we wholeheartedly subscribe to the stand taken by the government as outlined by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is a move forward in the recognition of human rights in a part of the world in which recognition is needed and help is needed. My only wish is that the same recognition would be given in this House of Commons, since we are not in South Africa.

BANKING AND COMMERCE

CONCURRENCE IN NINTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Edmund Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Speaker, I would request unanimous consent to revert to presenting reports by standing and special committees, for the purpose of presenting a report.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Asselin presented the ninth report of the standing committee on banking and commerce, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, the following questions are being answered today: 999, 1,023, 1,197, 1,216, 1,228, 1,248, 1,257, 1,268, 1,272, 1,291, 1,295, 1,297, 1,301, 1,308, 1,309, 1,310, 1,311, 1,320, 1,321, 1,322, 1,323, 1,324, 1,326, 1,331, 1,343, 1,351, 1,352, 1,354, 1,362, 1,366, 1,368, 1,379, 1,401 and 1,413.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS TO CANADIANS WORKING IN MAINE

Question No. 999—Mr. Berger:

1. On what date were the latest Canadian-American interviews held or correspondence exchanged pertaining to the subject of Canadian forestry employees working in the state of Maine and unable to draw unemployment insurance?
2. Who were the participating parties?
3. On that occasion was any progress made?

Mr. MacEachen: 1, 2 and 3. In view of the intense interest held by members from the areas of eastern Quebec and New Brunswick, it is felt that a complete statement should be made concerning the efforts to conclude a reciprocal agreement between the state of Maine and the unemployment insurance commission of Canada with respect to unemployment insurance.

The steps taken over the past year may be summarized as follows:

Discussions were held in Quebec city on 22 May, 1962, between the members of the Maine employment security commission, representatives of the U.S. bureau of employment security, representatives of importers for the American pulpwood association, and the members of the unemployment insurance commission of Canada.

While satisfactory progress appeared to have been made at this meeting, it was agreed at its conclusion that the members of the two commissions—Maine and the unemployment insurance commission—should meet again in October 1962.

On 22 and 23 August, 1962, the director of unemployment insurance and the chief of claims operations, both of the unemployment insurance commission of Canada, met with their counterparts from Maine to discuss administrative problems associated with any agreement that might be reached. These discussions were entirely satisfactory.

On October 19, 1962, the chairman of the Maine employment security commission wrote the chairman of the unemployment insurance commission of Canada stating that the question of a reciprocal agreement had been referred by the Maine commission to their advisory council and asking for a postponement of the proposed October meeting. The chairman of the unemployment insurance commission agreed.

In mid-December 1962, the chairman of the unemployment insurance commission of Canada telephoned his Maine counterpart regarding the postponed meeting and in reply received a letter dated December 17, 1962, from the Maine chairman to the effect that the advisory council would not be considering the matter of this agreement until its meeting on January 15, 1963, after which he would be pleased to arrange the meeting between the two commissions.

On January 17, 1963, the chairman of the Maine employment security commission again wrote the chairman of the unemployment insurance commission of Canada saying that the Maine advisory council had referred the question of this agreement to a special committee; that he would keep the unemployment insurance commission of Canada posted on further reports, and that he hoped for a meeting of the two commissions in the not too distant future to continue discussions.

On March 1, 1963, the chairman of the unemployment insurance commission of Canada enquired of the Maine commission as to the action taken by the advisory council and was informed that it (the council) was still gathering data pertinent to its deliberations.

On July 24, 1963, the chairman of the Maine employment security commission informed the chairman of the unemployment insurance commission that their commission had met with the advisory council and were now in process of making arrangements for a further discussion on the matter before a final decision is made. He further advised that he had hopes that the answer would be given to the unemployment insurance commission by September 1, 1963.

On August 1, 1963, the chairman of the unemployment insurance commission acknowledged the letter from the chairman of the Maine employment security commission expressing the hope that it will be possible to come to an agreement.

On August 20, 1963, the chairman of the Maine employment security commission wrote to the chairman of the unemployment insurance commission to report that due to unexpected difficulty in scheduling the meeting with the pulp and paper committee it appeared that the earliest date for the meeting would be the middle of September and that a decision on the state of Maine-Canada reciprocal agreement would be communicated not later than October 1, 1963.

On September 25, 1963 discussions were held in Augusta, Maine regarding an agreement between the state of Maine and the unemployment insurance commission of Canada with respect to unemployment insurance. At the same time a meeting was held with the members of the employment security commission for the state of Maine. It is hoped that as a result of these further discussions a satisfactory conclusion can be reached.

GLASSCO REPORT RESPECTING QUEEN'S PUBLISHER

Question No. 1,023—Mr. Fisher:

4. If the program of federal financial assistance with respect to the classifications of roads enumerated above is not being continued by the government, is any substitute plan or plans being contemplated and, if so, what is the nature and extent of the same?

Mr. Laing: The answer to this question extends over three closely typed pages, and I was wondering if I could have unanimous consent to have it printed in Hansard?

Mr. Speaker: Is unanimous consent given?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The answer referred to is as follows:]

1. There has been no change in the program of federal government financial participation with respect to the construction and/or maintenance of—

(i) roads; (ii) access roads; (iii) recreation roads; (iv) tote trails; (v) winter roads or trails.

2. The following projects in the Yukon are being undertaken during the current year. The federal government pays 100 per cent of the costs unless otherwise indicated. (See Appendix A for detailed costs).

(a) Reconstruction of Whitehorse-Keno highway (trunk highway); (b) reconstruction of Stewart Crossing-Dawson road (secondary trunk highway); (c) reconstruction of boundary road (secondary trunk highway); (d) construction of the Watson lake-Ross river road (area development road); (e) reconstruction of a portion of the Canol road (area development road); (f) construction of the Nahanni range road (area development road); (g) contribution of two-thirds the cost of the Canada tungsten road (mine access road); (h) other small road projects including engineering surveys.

Total estimated federal expenditures on roads—$2,500,000.

The federal government also contributes toward the cost of maintenance of development roads and trunk highways in the Yukon in accordance with the federal-territorial financial agreement. Expenditures in the current year are expected to amount to approximately $633,000.

The tote trail program has been maintained at its former level and $50,000 is available to provide assistance in this regard. In addition the considerable expenditures made by the federal government towards the upkeep and reconstruction of the northwest highways system should be mentioned. It is estimated that expenditures attributable to the Yukon portion of the system for the current year will be in the order of $6,000,000.

3. The contribution to maintenance costs and the tote trail assistance program are included in the federal-territorial financial agreement and therefore continue each year. None of the road construction projects already commenced will be curtailed. The construction of new roads of various classifications is undertaken in accordance with the requirements of each region of the Yukon. The funds spent each year for this purpose vary accordingly.

4. The road requirements of the Yukon are under constant study and plans for the future will be expanded as the needs increase. No changes in the methods of financing roads in the Yukon are contemplated at this time.

Question No. 1,257—Mr. Crouse:

It should be pointed out, however, that the addition of swordfish as an item in service ration scales will not of itself result in a large and continuing demand for the item. 2. Is there any difference in the tariffs on dental materials used in the mouth as against those used outside the mouth?

3. Specifically what tariffs are imposed on alginate impression materials and prophylaxis brushes and rubber cups manufactured in the United States?

Mr. Garland: 1. Dental instruments of any material designed for surgical operative use, orthodontic appliances and parts thereof for the correction of malocclusions, dental operating lights, dental X-ray machines, X-ray film, X-ray developing tanks, dental instrument sterilizers, unmounted artificial teeth, are admissible free of duty under all tariffs.

Dental chairs, dental units, electric dental engines and dental cuspidors are admissible free of duty when imported under the British preferential tariff or the most favoured nation tariff. These articles are dutiable at 35 per cent ad valorem under the general tariff.

Other dental equipment and supplies are subject to the provisions of the customs tariff according to their classification.

2. Dental materials are liable to the same rates of duty whether used in or out of the mouth.

3. Alginate impression compound is dutiable at 20 per cent ad valorem, when imported from the United States. Prophylaxis brushes and rubber polishing cups for dental hand pieces are admissible free of duty under all tariffs.

WRECK OF "TRITONICA"

Question No. 1,331—Mr. Grafftey:

1. Has the Department of Transport ordered the agents and/or owners of M. V. Tritonica to remove or destroy the said ship under the provisions of the Navigable Waters Protection Act and, has the department considered the effect upon navigation and upon possible claims in law against the Tritonica if she is destroyed by dynamite?

2. How wide is the ship channel at the point where the Tritonica is resting?

3. How far from the centre of the channel is the wreck of the Tritonica?

4. What action, if any, has the department taken to see that security is put up by the ship and/or her owners, for possible claims on behalf of consorts, ascendants, descendants, cargo, etc?

Mr. McIlraith: 1. (a) Yes; (b) no.

2. 1.9 nautical miles.

3. Approximately 300 feet.

4. No duty is imposed on the Department of Transport under the Canada Shipping Act in respect of claims against a ship and/or her owners following a shipping casualty, for death, injury or damage to cargo.

The wreck is located in a very dangerous position for coastal vessels many of which cannot get through in the winter against the tide even with icebreaker assistance. They are carried about by ice and currents waiting for favourable tide. The wreck, which cannot be marked by a lighted buoy in the winter months, is a serious hazard to these vessels so much so that the owners of the wreck have been required to remove the upper works this fall.

FOREIGN OWNERSHIP OF PRIVATE TELEVISION STATIONS

Question No. 1,351—Mr. Fisher:

Has the B.B.G. received any information that the ownership situation of the private television stations at Vancouver, Windsor, and Halifax, has undergone any changes in the past two years, including share transfers or sales to foreign persons or corporations and, if so, what are the details of such changes, including the percentage of Canadian ownership at present, in each of these operations?

Answer: The board has received information that the ownerships in the licensees of stations CHAN-TV Vancouver, CKLW-TV Windsor and CJCH-TV Halifax have undergone changes. This information came in the form of applications for the transfer of shares in the licensee companies referred to the board by the Minister of Transport under the provisions of section 103 of the general radio regulations, part II. As the licensee companies involved are private companies and are not, therefore, required to make public the details of their share ownership, the board does not announce publicly all the details of applications for the transfer of shares in these companies, except where a change of ownership or control of the licensee company is involved. One such application by station CHAN-TV, Vancouver, has been received by the board in the past two years. This application involved the transfer of 4,987 shares of stock all owned by Canadians, being transferred to other Canadian citizens, which resulted in a potentially different alliance of shareholders who could exercise control of the licensee. This application was recommended for approval by the board following a public hearing in June, 1963. The percentage of Canadian ownership in the three stations is as follows: CHAN-TV, Vancouver, 75 per cent; CKLW-TV, Windsor, 0 per cent; CJCH-TV, Halifax, 75 per cent.

PERSONNEL OF TELEVISION STATION CKLW-T.V., WINDSOR, ONT.

Question No. 1,352—Mr. Fisher:

1. Has the B.B.G. in hand any information on the citizenship of the sales director, T.V. sales manager, promotion manager, program manager, news director, sales manager (radio), and sales director T.V. of the Canadian television station CKLW, Windsor?

2. Has the B.B.G. in hand any information on the citizenship of the following talent roster of CKLW-T.V. Windsor: Messrs. J. Booth, L. Sands, T. David, W. Kenerdy, T. Clay, J. Van, J. Schafer, T. Lindsay, J. Gentile, J. La Lane, G. Hunter, L. Leslie, R. Wise and Mrs. Nancy Thomas?

3. Has the B.B.G. any information in hand which would indicate that Mr. E. Metcalf, sales director of CKLW-T.V. is an American, an employee of R.K.O., and effectively in control of the whole operation?

4. Has the B.B.G. made any recent analysis of the CKLW-T.V. situation, or given any warnings regarding American ownership or control to R.K.O.?

Answer: 1. No. The board does not have any such information.

2. No.

3. No.

4. The last analysis of the ownership of CKLW-T.V. was made by the board in March, 1963. The board has not given any warnings to R.K.O. regarding American ownership or control of the station.

Answer: Yes.

(a) First discussions on the script took place on October 31, 1961. Financial authority to proceed with the production was received from the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources on June 28, 1962.

(b) First release prints are expected by the end of December, 1963. Large scale distribution will start soon after April 1, 1964.

*SQUID BAIT, NEWFOUNDLAND

Question No. 1,356—Mr. Tucker:

1. Has the Minister of Fisheries any information concerning the availability of squid for bait purposes in Newfoundland and of the efforts of a private company in trawling for squid?

2. Will the government give immediate consideration to making available a dragger to trawl for squid within the three mile limit off Newfoundland?

Answer: 1. The Newfoundland bait service has procured approximately 500,000 pounds of squid which, with purchases from private firms and continuing catches, should meet winter requirements. Private firms are believed to have adequate supplies. Efforts to catch squid by trawling have not proven satisfactory.

2. Consideration is being given to further experiments along these lines.

REPORT OF COMMISSION ON PUBLICATIONS

Question No. 1,362—Mr. Mather:

1. What action has been taken respecting implementation of the royal commission report on publications?

2. Is any action contemplated by the government on this report during the present year?

Mr. Pearson: 1. The matter has been and is still under active consideration.

2. An announcement of government policy will be made in the near future.

TECHNICAL AND ECONOMIC AID PROGRAMS

Question No. 1,368—Mr. Brewin:

What are the amounts of the increases or decreases, in each case, in respect to various programs of technical or economic aid (a) given, or (b) announced, by the government of Canada since April 8, 1963?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There have been no decreases since April 8, 1963 in the levels of Canadian aid programs. Increases which have been announced, but not yet come into effect, are:

(a) As announced by the government in August, part I countries (i.e., the more developed members) of the international development association, including Canada, have agreed, subject to necessary legislative action, to make available to the association new resources aggregating $750 million to enable the association after its first five year period of operation, to continue to finance on easy terms worth while development projects in developing countries. The payments would be made to I.D.A. in three annual instalments of $250 million each, the first instalment being due in November, 1965. Subject to enactment of the necessary legislation, the Canadian contribution would amount to $41,700,000 (U.S.), or more than $14 million (Canadian) per year.

(b) The Minister of Trade and Commerce in a statement on July 24 announced the government's intention to ask parliament to provide for a program for the supply of wheat and wheat flour to international aid agencies, including the world food program, and to developing countries which are not now commercial markets or where commercial exports are limited by capacity to pay. The minister said the intention was to increase on a progressive basis the amount of Canadian food aid in appropriate relationship to the total of our assistance activities, and that the total allocation for this purpose might rise to a level of around $40 million per annum over the course of the next few years.

(c) I announced in the House of Commons on October 15, subject to appropriation of funds by parliament, an increase in Canada's pledge to the United Nations special fund to $5 million (Canadian) for 1964 from the 1963 level of $2.35 million (U.S.).

IMPORTS FROM BULGARIA

Question No. 1,401—Mr. Ricard:

What are the main products that will be imported from Bulgaria as a result of the recent wheat sale by Canada to that country?

Answer: The recently concluded Canada-Bulgaria trade agreement provides for an exchange of most favoured nation treatment between the two countries and a commitment by Bulgaria to purchase minimum quantities of Canadian wheat. In addition, it was agreed that trade offices may be opened both in Canada and Bulgaria for purposes of market exploration and trade promotion.

No discussions were held concerning specific commodities which the Bulgarian trade enterprises will offer to Canadian importers for sale in the Canadian market.

PAYMENT OF MEMBERS' TELEPHONE AND TELEGRAPH ACCOUNTS

Question No. 1,413—Mr. Caouette:

1. When is it expected that the government will issue directions for the payment, pursuant to Bill C-91, assented to August 2, 1963 of members' telephone and telegraph accounts?

2. What proportion of such accounts will be paid out of public funds?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1. It is not the government but the House of Commons which has the authority to prescribe payment of accounts of members of the House of Commons pursuant to recommendations of the commissioners of internal economy. No recommendation regarding telephone and telegraph accounts has been made thus far.

2. Answered by 1.

2. By whom were these estimates prepared?
3. If the answer to 2 is not a Canadian authority, has any Canadian authority prepared similar estimates independently?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The reply to this question is lengthy, and I wonder if the house would agree to making it an order for return, to be tabled herewith.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

LABOUR RELATIONS

GREAT LAKES—CONVERSATIONS WITH U.S. PRESIDENT—PROCLAMATION OF TRUSTEESHIP LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister, and ask him first whether in the last eight days he has been in communication with the President of the United States, either by letter or telephone, regarding the shipping difficulties on the great lakes; also whether the act respecting trusteeship has been proclaimed and, if so, the names of the trustees?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, so far as the first question is concerned the answer is yes. I have been in touch with the President of the United States on this matter.

So far as the latter part of the question is concerned, the act has not yet been proclaimed. It will be proclaimed without delay, and the names of the three trustees announced.

Mr. Diefenbaker: When is it expected these three trustees will be appointed?

Mr. Pearson: Well, Mr. Speaker, until last Saturday it was still hoped, and there was reason for hope, that a private trusteeship satisfactory to Canada and the Canadian Labour Congress particularly might have been reached, in which case the government would not have had the responsibility, under the agreement which was being proposed, for appointing more than one of the three trustees. That possibility was removed during the weekend, Mr. Speaker, by the action taken by the S.I.U. Therefore we have since that time, since yesterday, been getting in touch with three gentlemen who we think will be very good trustees, and as soon as we hear from them we will announce it to the house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will they be Canadians?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, they will be Canadians.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is what we have been asking for.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, in view of the great concern which is being felt in many quarters about the interference with or the stoppage of the ships engaged in the shipment of wheat, may I ask the Prime Minister whether any consideration has been given to the proposal or suggestion made by the premier of Saskatchewan that the government might give consideration to establishing a government controller of shipping to meet the present emergency situation?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I hope that the situation tomorrow will not require that kind of solution.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): As a supplementary question, in view of the allegations contained in the telegram sent by the Minister of Labour to Mr. Banks that the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act has been violated, could the Prime Minister say whether the government is considering any sanctions?

Mr. Pearson: That matter is under consideration and will have to be viewed in the light of what happens tomorrow.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. What other alternative arrangements are being made to ship greater amounts of wheat to the loading ports on the St. Lawrence through the increased use of our railroads?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we are using the winter ports to full capacity now, and I do not understand the implication in the hon. gentleman's question.

Mr. Thompson: Then perhaps I might ask a supplementary question. How many Canadian railroad cars are presently being detained in the United States, and what arrangements are being made to have these returned to Canada in order that they might be used in this emergency?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, the two railway companies are doing everything possible to move the grain to the maximum of their capacity, and there has been no falling down in that respect.

Mr. Woolliams: My supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Red Deer.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, my question was not answered. It was, how many Canadian railroad cars are being detained in the United States and what action is being taken to have them returned to Canada, so they can be used in this emergency?

Mr. McIlraith: There is always an exchange of cars between the two countries. I can find out the precise figure in the United States at the moment and bring it to the attention of the house, but this is a question that I could hardly be expected to answer without notice.

Mr. Woolliams: As a supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice and ask him whether he has received a letter from Mr. Hal Banks contending that the public trusteeship legislation is in violation of the bill of rights; and, if he has received such a letter, has he any comment to make on this contention?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I received a letter this morning from Mr. Hal Banks in connection with the matter which my hon. friend has alluded to, and I must say in reply that the trusteeship bill was examined in accordance with the statute by the deputy minister, as required by the act, and he has affixed his certificate thereto. Likewise, I have considered the measure, and in my opinion this legislation is not inconsistent with the bill of rights.

Mr. Nielsen: As a supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: I believe the hon. member for Bow River was first, and then the hon. member for Villeneuve.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My supplementary question should be directed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I wonder could he tell the house how many bushels of wheat have been delivered to Canadian ports under contract between the Canadian wheat board and the U.S.S.R., at the present time?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I may say, Mr. Speaker, I am not in possession of these figures. If the hon. gentleman would give me notice I can get the information for him.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Eric Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of the statements made by the Minister of Labour branding as clearly illegal, the action of the seamen in the S.I.U. visiting parliament hill today, is it the intention of the government to do anything about the so-called classification of illegality which the minister has placed on the visit of the S.I.U. seamen?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I have already had a question on that subject and said the matter was under consideration.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. Did the Prime Minister or the Minister of Labour see Mr. Hal Banks when he was here with his group of people today and, if so, what reply did Mr. Banks make to the instruction which the Minister of Labour issued that the S.I.U. members must return to work?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I have not seen Mr. Hal Banks today. Whether the Minister of Labour has or not, I am not sure. He is not in the house at the moment.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Is the Department of Justice investigating whether Canadian shipping companies acted in collusion with the officers of the S.I.U. in the illegal walkout now taking place, in that they took no action to point out to their men that their actions were contrary to their collective agreement and the provisions of the Canada Shipping Act, and that they could be penalized for such action by dismissal, or in some other way? If so, if the department is looking at this, will it take steps to penalize the officers of the shipping companies as well as the officers of the S.I.U.?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, it is a fact that under the law there are sanctions which deal with men leaving their ships, but my understanding of the law is that the responsibility for laying charges or dealing with the matter lies with either of the parties under the agreement, and not with the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Douglas: What the hon. member was trying to ascertain, and I do not think the minister has answered it, is whether the minister is looking into the possibility—and there is some suggestion of more than a possibility—of collusion between some of the shipping companies and the men, whereby the men were granted permission to leave the ships on the very flimsy pretext that they were going to get legal advice and, if so, will action be taken with regard to this kind of action?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I have no evidence to that effect at the moment, but I could ask the officers of the department whether there is any. Of course, even if there was, I must again bring to the attention of the hon. gentleman that there are a number of sections in the statutes providing for sanctions thereunder.

Mr. Douglas: Could I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister received any protest from the shipping companies about the men walking off the ships? Surely the minister does not think it is enough for the Minister of Labour to send the men a wire saying that the walk-off is illegal, and then wash his hands of the affair and say it is up to the shipping companies to prosecute them, when the shipping companies themselves are part of this collusion.

Mr. Chevrier: I have received no protests, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport further to that asked by the hon. member for Red Deer, who complained of the shortage of box cars. Will the minister, in his investigation of this matter, also look at the statement of a senior C.P.R. official which appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail last Friday, which has just been verified, and says that it is useless or illogical to bring in any more trainloads of grain because of a shortage of vessels?

Mr. McIlraith: I will look into the matter, Mr. Speaker.

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—INQUIRY INTO LONGSHOREMEN'S PENSION FUND

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, could the Prime Minister say whether or not a commission of inquiry has been set up with a view to looking into the pension fund of the I.L.A.?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, but I think I should consult the Minister of Labour to make sure that I give the right reply to that question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Has the Montreal local of the I.L.A. advised the government that, unless this commission is set up at once, it will consider the strike settlement as null and void?

Mr. Pearson: Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, but I will be glad to look into it.

NORRIS COMMISSION—REPORT OF SPECIAL COUNSEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice whether he could inform the house when the house might expect the report of the special counsel, and when possible action might be taken with regard to prosecutions arising from the evidence before the Norris commission?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I was asked that question on Friday, and I am afraid I cannot add anything more to what I said at that time.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): In view of the absence of the Minister of Labour, who must be holding consultations with a number of delegations, I shall direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. A few weeks ago I asked a question with respect to the winter house building incentive program, namely, could the government change the date of November 30 to that of October 30 for the beginning of operations?

Has the government come to a decision, since our area is considered as economically under-developed and the weather there is particularly severe?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I dealt with this question on Friday last and I have nothing to add to what I said at that time. If my hon. friend will look at Hansard for that day he will see the reply.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED CONTRIBUTION TO UNIVERSITY SERVICE OVERSEAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Webster (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that Canadian university service overseas is making a positive contribution to world peace on behalf of this nation, and in view of the fact that only $132,000 has been raised to meet a budget of $180,000 to keep 130 volunteers overseas untill the end of 1963, does the minister not think that financial assistance from the federal treasury would be justified at this time?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member kindly put that question on the order paper.

SUGAR

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON INQUIRY INTO PRICE INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has the government noted the continuing fluctuations in sugar prices and, if so, what is the government doing about it?

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, as the house is well aware, there have been many developments in the sugar market that have raised world sugar prices, including a typhoon and other developments of a different character. The observation we have made of the course of sugar prices is that Canadian prices have simply followed world prices. There has been no extraordinary development that seems to require any other explanation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not so sure about that.

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR INCREASED CASH ADVANCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Due to the slowness in increasing quotas and the resulting hardship caused to farmers in northern Saskatchewan, would the Prime Minister let us know how soon the government will bring forward amendments to the cash advances legislation to increase advances to farmers?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I am not in a position to answer that question at the moment, Mr. Speaker. I will look into it.

Mr. Woolliams: Where is the Minister of Agriculture?

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN QUOTAS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether he has any information to give the house on a matter I raised in his absence on Friday. It was as to whether the wheat board has given consideration to an early increase in the two and three bushel quotas now existing, particularly in Saskatchewan and Manitoba, which are far below the corresponding quotas of a year ago.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): May I say to the right hon. gentleman that the quotas are a little lower now than they were a year ago, because at the beginning of the previous season there were only 200 million bushels in storage in country elevators while on August 1 of this year there were 370 million bushels. So there was more space in the elevators last year than there is this year. Because of the large crop we had stocks on hand at the beginning of this year amounting to over 100 million bushels in excess of those on hand a year ago, and that is why quotas are opening up more slowly. I am hopeful that if our shipping difficulties are overcome quotas will open up rapidly in the future and reach much higher levels.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Would the minister look into reports I have received to the effect that cars are virtually not available at many points in northern Saskatchewan?

Mr. Speaker: May I point out to hon. members that it is now ten minutes to five and that if we are to begin consideration of the supply motion at all we have only ten minutes in which to do so.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not often rise to make an objection, but this is not the first time Your Honour has felt it necessary to draw attention to the time when questions are being asked. It has happened two or three times before.

I often restrain myself from asking questions, but I must say with the greatest of deference to Your Honour that I see no reason under the rules for you to issue these injunctions.

TRADE

RUSSIA—POSSIBLE MARKET FOR EDIBLE OIL AND OIL SEEDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, now that the Minister of Trade and Commerce has returned from his European trade mission, would he inform the house whether the reports coming from Russia are true, that besides wheat Soviet farm failures have also hit oil seed crops, and that therefore there is also a shortage of edible oils? In view of this, would the minister now direct his officials to ascertain whether it is possible to establish in Russia a market for Canadian edible oil and edible oil seeds?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will be very happy to have my officials look into this matter. When I was in Europe, while I was not in the Soviet union I had an opportunity of speaking to several people who are very well informed on developments in the Soviet union, and the general view that I formed from what they said was that there were certain developments within the organization of agriculture in the Soviet union that would lead one to believe that some of their problems are not only of a temporary character. I do not know how far this may extend to oil seeds, but it does seem to affect the whole field of cereals.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT RESPECTING FORTHCOMING TARIFF NEGOTIATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce based on a statement attributed to the deputy minister that the Kennedy round of tariff cutting may have to be delayed because preparations are not proceeding smoothly. In view of widespread interest in this matter, would the minister make a statement to the house as soon as possible as to the status of these preparations, so that we may know whether reports of delay are accurate?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes, I think it might be useful if I were to take an early opportunity of doing what the hon. member suggests. My officials and I have been in consultation, in various parts of the world, with various ministers. Others of my staff are back from Geneva. They have given me a preliminary report, and I think it might be useful if, in the near future, I were to set before the house the state of these negotiations. I know there are many industrialists in this country who have to be thinking about the advice they may be giving the government in connection with the next round of tariff negotiations, and I should like to give them as much help as possible.

GRAIN SHIPMENTS THROUGH PORT OF CHURCHILL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Would the minister look into the desirability of making a report to the house on the most recent and very disturbing situation which has prevailed with regard to grain shipments through the port of Churchill, keeping in mind the fact that, despite the fact that insurance coverage on vessels into and out of Churchill expired only yesterday, reliable sources report that due to a lack of shipping orders only one grain vessel has been loaded in the last ten days, and this under ideal weather conditions at this very efficient port?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to look into this. May I say to the house that the total shipments for this year did, as I suggested they might, establish a new record for the port of Churchill.

AGRICULTURE

PROVISION OF FEED GRAIN FOR EASTERN FARMERS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the future minister of agriculture for eastern Canada, the Minister without Portfolio. Could he tell the house whether the government intends to set up in the near future a feed grain agency for eastern Canada, along the lines of the brief submitted to members of the house last Friday by the Catholic Farmers' Union and the Quebec Federated Co-operative?

Hon. Rene Tremblay (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I was very pleased to welcome last week, with the Minister of Agriculture, a delegation from the Catholic Farmers' Union of the province of Quebec. The suggestions made have been taken into serious consideration and the cabinet will soon decide on a policy which will then be announced in the house.

[Text]

PARTICIPATION BY MINISTER IN CATTLE AUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address my question to the Prime Minister of Canada. Did the Minister of Agriculture inform the Prime Minister that he would participate in a cattle auction at Kingston on Tuesday last, October 15?

Mr. Pickersgill: Is that an urgent question?

Mr. Pearson: Put it on the order paper.

CONFLICTING STATEMENTS RESPECTING PLANTING OF WHEAT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce? In the address which the hon. gentleman delivered to the Saskatchewan farmers union on September 23 as reported in the Union Farmer he made an observation that it would be in the interest of western producers to devote less of their land to wheat than in the recent past. I should like to ask the minister if he can reconcile this advice with the statement made in Edmonton by the Minister of Agriculture on October 17, that there was an unlimited market for wheat grown by the Canadian farmer. I think the farmers would appreciate some direction as to what constitutes government policy; is it as enunciated by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, or by the Minister of Agriculture?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): When I spoke on the subject I discussed the question of whether it would be necessary, looking ahead for some time—I was not talking about the need today, as the hon. member will see from reading the text of my remarks—to devote 27 million acres to wheat, which was the amount seeded this year, in order to supply the demand. I said in the course of my remarks that looking ahead for some years—and I did in fact project as far as 1980—one could see a large and growing demand for feed grains. In these circumstances it did seem to me that farmers, in planning for the future, might consider whether they would get more out of their land by continuing to devote as much to wheat as they did, or whether they should not consider diverting some to feed grains. That is the position I took and it is, I find, exactly the same position as was taken by the Manitoba minister of agriculture, Mr. Hutton, when he spoke in Winnipeg at the beginning of this month. He set out the same considerations.

These are the considerations one ought to bear in mind in the future, but, of course, before any advice is given to parliament the government will be considering the whole question in the light of the information which is available as we approach seeding time. I have been in Europe, and the impression I got was that the demand for wheat will continue at a fairly high level during the coming crop year. I hope that is right. If this should prove to be the case, information of this kind will be given to the farmers and to the farm organizations who will be able to make their decisions as to what to seed in the light of all the conditions and in the light of the best information we are able to place before them at the time.

Mr. Douglas: I thank the minister for his statement, and I am not quarrelling with what he has said; but has he passed on that information to his colleague the Minister of Agriculture, whose statement is wholly at variance with that just made by the hon. gentleman?

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REPORTED DISMISSAL OF VETERAN'S WIFE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Postmaster General. Is it government policy to dismiss from employment the wife of a young veteran, herself a veteran with five children, in a purely political move?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think the hon. member's question is in order.

Mr. Webb: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, this young woman received notice last Friday that her services would be terminated on November 4. With her ability and personality she increased the revenue of this small post office by $2,100 in one year, and she has now been notified that she is being dismissed.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Pigeon: The bill of rights.

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would like to put his question on the order paper he will receive a proper answer.

Mr. Webb: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker; I wrote to the Postmaster General, but to no avail.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pigeon: Patronage.

PRIVILEGE

MR. NIELSEN—INCOMPLETE ANSWER TO QUESTION ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. My question of privilege is raised now because this seems to be an opportune point at which to do it. I have put several questions on the order paper, as Your Honour will probably have noticed, and have received answers to about half of them. As I understand it, the placing of questions on the order paper is for two purposes; one is to save the time of the house in asking them as verbal questions on orders of the day, and the other is to obtain information that is public information and not classified as privileged.

The answers to questions so far from the government have been very sketchy indeed.

As one example I might quote to Your Honour the answer to my question 1,272 today. The second part of that question was:

> Have the plans and specifications of the project been completed and, if so, when is it intended to call for public tenders on the job?

The answer to that is "No". This is typical of a good many of the answers that have been given. Together with the hon. member for Hastings-Frontenac (Mr. Webb) I would ask, what is the point of asking questions unless there is going to be some effort made on the part of ministers of the crown to give more complete answers?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps I should be permitted to say a word on the point of order, or question of privilege, whichever it is the hon. gentleman has raised.

Mr. Nielsen: Privilege.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would draw attention to the fact that the order paper shows, as anyone can see, that well over 1,100 questions have already been answered in this parliament, which must be something of a record. I might say also that the hon. gentleman's example of a question was an exceptionally poor one, because he was not asking about something that had been done, but about something that might or might not be done in the future. It seems to me there is a rule of the house that hypothetical questions should not be asked or answered.

Mr. Nielsen: On the question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the first part of that question was:

> Does the government intend to proceed with the construction of a minimum security penal institution in the Yukon territory and, if so, where is the intended location of such institution?

The answer given to that part was complete and I am satisfied with it. But the second part of the question was:

> Have the plans and specifications of the project been completed and, if so, when is it intended to call for public tenders on the job?

The answer given was "No". The answer to the third part of the question was:

> It is anticipated that construction will begin in 1964, for completion in 1965.

This is an example of the incomplete answers we are getting. The Secretary of State is certainly no expert in the construction of questions. He knows, as any minister of the crown knows, what the questions mean. My questions are carefully thought out. I could ask them on the orders of the day and waste a good deal of the time of the house, just as the Secretary of State used to do during the last session; but I am trying to co-operate, as is the hon. member for Hastings-Frontenac. Yet all we get is evasion and equivocation.

Mr. Pickersgill: It would, I think, be too much to expect that I should not have a word to say in reply. The hon. member said he could waste the time of the house by asking questions. Surely if his questions are a waste of the time of the house they should not be asked on orders of the day, and they should not be put on the order paper either.

I may say I have here the total number of questions asked on orders of the day during the last session and in the first 70 days of this session. I find that in the session 1962-63, there were 1,705 questions asked on orders of the day. In the first 70 days of this session, the number is 2,941. So, if there is any question of wasting time, hon. members can draw their own conclusions. I have the statistics by parties, too, should anyone be interested in having them.

Mr. MacInnis: I was about to rise on a point of order and draw Your Honour's attention to the fact that the Secretary of State was in no way referring to the question of privilege raised by my hon. friend from Yukon. While I am on my feet I would once again respectfully remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the Secretary of State has risen seven times without having been recognized by the Chair.

Mr. Nielsen: I should like to say, on my question of privilege, that I am trying to co-operate with the government by putting my questions on the order paper in order to obtain information to which I feel this house and my constituents are entitled. I believe hon. members who sit on this side are entitled to do this, and the least we can expect is some kind of co-operation from the government and answers to our questions which are reasonably complete.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

DELAY IN RECEIPT OF FRENCH "HANSARD" AND COMMITTEE REPORTS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State and concerns the request he made to the members of the house to help him in working out the problem of the delays in the French edition of the committee reports.

Is the Secretary of State aware that for some time now the working hours have been reduced by one hour and a half every day for the staff looking after the French debates reports at the printing bureau, that is the employees work from 11.30 p.m. until 7.30 a.m. instead of 10.30 to 8 o'clock and that, in order to save an hour and a half overtime?

Further, is the Secretary of State aware that overtime was authorized for the preparation of English Hansard and English committee reports, while there was a formal objection made as regards the French Hansard and the French committee report?

Is the Secretary of State aware that every time texts are to be printed, formal orders were given at the printing bureau that the English debates and committee reports should constantly and continually have priority over the printing of French debates and French committee reports?

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am, of course, not aware of any of these situations, but as one of the commissioners of internal economy I will be glad to ask my fellow commissioners, with Your Honour, to look into it.

UNITED NATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO MOTION CENSURING EUROPEAN COLONIALISM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Nicholas Mandziuk (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Prime Minister. We have read with interest, and I would say approval, the speech of the Secretary of State for External Affairs made to the United Nations on October 18 condemning the South African regime for its policies of apartheid.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Mandziuk: I am coming to it, gentlemen. Does the Prime Minister or his Secretary of State for External Affairs plan in the near future to move a motion of censure against colonialism as practised in Europe?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, discrimination should be condemned wherever it appears. Violation of human rights and freedoms should be condemned wherever it appears, especially, if I may say so, with respect to countries which have once known freedom and lost it.

Mr. Mandziuk: A supplementary question. Does the Prime Minister recall, at a meeting in Toronto on March 5, 1963, promising to the ethnic press that he would do just that, in competition with the right hon. gentleman who is now Leader of the Opposition?

Mr. Pearson: Although this is not a question for orders of the day, the hon. gentleman has misinterpreted what I said at that meeting. I would be glad to show him a transcript of my remarks.

Mr. Mandziuk: I have it right here.

Mr. Pearson: The right hon. gentleman and his leader made the specific statement that a resolution would be introduced to this effect. At the meeting in question I expressed the feeling that perhaps a resolution would not be the best way of going about it, because a resolution advocating this kind of liberation —which was defeated—would do more harm than good.

Mr. Mandziuk: On a question of privilege, may I read an extract as reported by the Canadian Press.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member should state his question as quickly as he can.

Mr. Mandziuk: On a point of privilege, the right hon. gentleman as much as told me that I had misinterpreted him, and I want to put on record the exact expression quoted by the Canadian Press. It is only two sentences.

Mr. Pearson: If the hon. gentleman is going to put on the record a paragraph of or an excerpt from my statement, surely I will have the right to put the whole statement on the record so far as it relates to this matter. If, Mr. Speaker, you are going to allow this to be done as a matter of privilege, a matter which should be discussed in debate, then I would expect the same right, as a question of privilege, to put on the record what I said in this regard as well as what the right hon. gentleman said. He has been mentioned by the hon. member. We can go on indefinitely doing this.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, for some reason the Prime Minister took it upon himself to say what I had said and what he had said. All the hon. gentleman wants to do, in view of that gratuitous explanation given by the Prime Minister, is to place before the house the actual facts.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, on that point, the right hon. gentleman should listen more carefully to the statements of his followers. The hon. member for Marquette mentioned him in connection with the statement. He mentioned the statement which he had made and compared it favourably to one I was supposed to have made. That is why I brought the right hon. gentleman into it.

[Mr. Pearson.]

FINANCE

TOBACCO—REPORTED PROMISE TO REDUCE TAXES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. Is it the intention of the government to reduce taxes on tobacco, as the Prime Minister promised in Joliette in the last election?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WITHDRAWAL OF QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, on June 3 the house passed a question of mine, No. 12, as an order for return. I have received a request from the Minister of Public Works that, because of certain limitations in connection with it, I consent to withdrawing this question. I do not quite know how this should be done, but I will withdraw the question, and I assume that this will wipe out the request for the order for return. In case anyone who follows Hansard is interested in information, I should like to put on record that I have been supplied with what I wanted from the question.

[Later:]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State) moved:

That the order of the house dated June 3, 1963, for a return to question No. 12 be discharged.

That was the matter brought up by the hon. member for Port Arthur today and it seemed to secure the general acceptance of the house.

Motion agreed to and order discharged.

POWER

QUEBEC—REACTION TO ANNOUNCEMENT RESPECTING NATIONAL GRID

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. I wonder if the Prime Minister has now checked up on the statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce regarding the establishment of a national power grid, of which the Prime Minister stated he knew nothing in the house last Monday. Has he now received representations from Mr. Lesage in this regard?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not yet had an opportunity to check this matter with the minister, but I will do so as soon as possible.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack A. Irvine (London): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. Will he inform the house whether the minister of education is participating in another election today, or is he away on departmental business?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, under our constitution there cannot be a minister of education in this house.

Mr. Irvine: I am sorry; I meant the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Pearson: The Minister of Agriculture is away on official business, as he always is when he is away from the house.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO REPORTED NEW ROLE FOR AIR FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. I asked him a question last week about certain newspaper reports in regard to the new role of the R.C.A.F., and the minister said that these reports were not official. May I ask the minister now if these reports emanated from his executive assistant, Group Captain Lee?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Certainly not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock p.m.—

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, before you see the clock, since it would be an injustice to the opposition, and since a supply motion is to be called, I wonder whether you could just not see the clock and have orders of the day called so we can proceed with the supply motion.

Mr. Speaker: I try to accommodate as many people as possible, but I would call the attention of the house to standing order 15, subsection 4:

> When a debate on a motion "that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair" for the house to go into committee of supply is in progress at five o'clock p.m. on either a Monday or a Tuesday, the order for private members' business on that day shall be suspended.

Mr. Pickersgill: What I was asking, perhaps by way of unnecessary circumlocution, was that there might be unanimous consent that the house proceed with the supply motion.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SUPPLY

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

LABOUR RELATIONS—ALLEGED FAILURE TO DEAL ADEQUATELY WITH DISRUPTION OF GREAT LAKES SHIPPING

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this is a traditional opportunity that is provided in the House of Commons for the bringing before the house of such matters as are of importance and deserve the consideration of the house. It is historic, it is traditional and it assures a privilege that is part and parcel of parliamentary government. It enables the house to give consideration to those matters which, in the opinion of its membership, have not been dealt with in a proper or expeditious manner. Furthermore, it enables the house, where amendments are moved, to judge the government of the day on the basis of any amendment or subamendment that may be put forward.

I know that the question of confidence is one that is being discussed today in all parts of our country and even beyond. Everywhere, not only in Canada but abroad, reference is being made to the loss of confidence not only on the part of people within our own country but beyond. Indeed, in strange places arguments are being advanced that one would not have thought possible a few months ago.

I remember so well that over the years the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) used to read with becoming modesty the editorial comment in the London Economist. That fine periodical was regarded as the voice of wisdom itself. It was quoted and requoted. I have before me the issue of the London Economist of October 19, 1963, which contains an article entitled "Ottawa's Low Ebb". It reads in part as follows:

> Canada is always ripe for an argument and usually for a wrong diagnosis. Scarcely recognizable as the same place of five months ago, Ottawa gives the impression today of a rudderless mess.

I am only going to quote a few brief references. The article goes on to say:

> The phrase "sixty days of decision", coined for the Pearson government, was bound to blow up in the sloganmakers' faces.

The article continues:

> The tragic thing is that so much of the promise of intelligent liberalism has been lost so quickly.

The ardent new frontiersmen of six months ago now admit that one more mistake, a single inadvertence, must bring the government down.

This is from an international magazine that was accepted as the gospel whenever it was critical of the former government, and it was invariably produced as a witness in support of the arguments that were then used by the Liberal party. The article goes on to refer to "the depths of insecurity and indignity that Mr. Pearson's government has so quickly plumbed after all its brave noises in April".

I recommend this article to the various ministers sitting opposite. I know they will be anxious to read it. It is interesting. It talks about the situation and says:

It began six months ago with brave ideas of running Canada on a logical, centralist economic policy—with development planning, federal pensions and municipal loans—and seemed then prepared to take on a decisive struggle for federal as against provincial power. It has taken no longer than this for the provinces to see these federal pretensions off, and with no need for a struggle after Ottawa's display of political weakness.

I look at these master men opposite and I read in the Economist these words: "Display of political weakness". The article continues:

Thick planks of Liberal policy have been shattered and the effectiveness of central government in Canada, under whatever party, has been dealt a severe blow.

The rest of it is equally good reading.

Mr. Pickersgill: Gloom and doom.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I think of the change. I think of a year and a half ago when these people opposite talked about anti-Americanism and how they were going to bring about a new day. Here is what the communique said that was issued on the 11th of May, 1963 following the meeting between President Kennedy and the Prime Minister. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister said the other day that any time he wanted to call the President on the phone he could do so. Any one of us could do that. The other side of the question is that the president does not always answer. But this was not so when they met at Hyannis Port. The honeymoon is over, but they are still speaking to one another. What did the communique say?

It was agreed that both governments should always deal in a positive and co-operative manner with developments affecting their international trade and payments.

I am not going into that because I know that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) will be able to give the house some information in that regard.

Wise co-operation across the border can enhance rather than diminish the sovereignty of each country by making it stronger and more prosperous than before.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

The Prime Minister has agreed.

On the great waters that separate and unite the two countries—the St. Lawrence river and the great lakes—it is essential that those who own and sail ships should be free to go about their lawful business without impediment or harassment.

Page Mr. Wirtz. Bring in Mr. Meany.

The Prime Minister and the President shared a common concern at the consequences that could result from industrial strife on this central waterway.

Then, come these immortal words:

The Prime Minister and the president stressed the importance of each country showing regard for the views of the other where attitudes differ. For this purpose they are arranging for more freqeunt consultation at all levels in order that the intentions of each government may be fully appreciated by the other and misunderstanding avoided.

I am not going to go into those six misunderstandings upon which they are in complete disagreement. Then, the communique continues:

The Prime Minister and the President look forward to a period of particularly active and productive co-operation between the two countries.

What kind of co-operation has there been? What have these masterminds been able to achieve? Well, on this occasion I am going to deal with the labour situation. I begin by referring to an editorial in the Financial Post which has never been regarded as being entirely prejudiced in our favour. The editorial in the Financial Post of October 19, 1963 is entitled, "Kennedy to Meany to Hall to Banks." It reads in part as follows:

President Kennedy wants to be re-elected next year but Canadians don't like being a punching bag in his political warm-up.

Then, it says this:

But more and more the habit of pushing other people around is growing...in Washington.

I ask you to read this editorial. I am not going to read it in detail unless someone insists on having his curiosity satisfied. It says:

Take the latest example of outrageous interference—the American pressure against the Canadian government—over the labour union war on the great lakes. Belatedly, the Canadian government stepped into this mess—

This is not the same mess as was referred to in the account of the Economist; that was a mess covering everything. This is just the labour mess.

—the trustee scheme is about to be implemented. But the spectacle of the White House and the U.S. secretary of labour and whole weighty machinery of the U.S. government being gassed up to tell the Canadian government what it can and cannot do about a Canadian problem is, to say the least, unpleasant.

Now, sir, this is a most amazing change of viewpoint. A year ago, six months ago, they said I was anti-American simply because I said Canadian policy would be determined in Canada by Canadians. This statement was ridiculed over there. I am not going to quote unless I am asked to do so, but the quotations will be complete if I am. Then, it goes on to say:

> Here is the cast of characters and here is the play. Kennedy needs the labour union vote in his presidential contest next year. That means he needs the unqualified support of George Meany, the powerful head of the A.F.L.-C.I.O. To protect his hide, Meany needs all the friends he can keep and so he will do anything to please Paul Hall, the very powerful international boss of the seafarers' union.
> Paul Hall, in turn, very much needs the support of Hal Banks—and the money Banks gets out of his Canadian union members.
> So when the U.S. secretary of labour solemnly makes an official pilgrimage to Ottawa—

—and nobody can recall that happening before.

> —and when he makes public declarations telling the Canadian government what to do, he is merely doing a chore for Kennedy who wants to do a favour for George Meany, who needs Hall, who needs the notorious Hal Banks.
> From Mr. Kennedy's point of view, Canada is quite unimportant. It would, in most respects, be a lot simpler for the White House and the U.S. government if we didn't exist at all as a separate country.

Then, on October 19 there is another article in this periodical which condemned us for being anti-American because we dared to say to the United States: "We will co-operate with you; we are together facing the problem of maintaining freedom. We have done our part all over the world, but we are going to determine our policies on the basis of Canadian needs." On October 19, 1963, the Financial Post has an article captioned "White House now think Canada is just a nuisance." How has this come about? One has only needed to follow the action taken by this government in connection with the labour dispute on the great lakes to realize how uncertain has been the attitude of this government, how desirous of taking the easy course. I expected that today the Prime Minister would be announcing some action. However, we received the same reply: Tomorrow, just wait until tomorrow. When we asked him today, what are you going to do, he replies: Tomorrow. John Macdonald used to have that name, old man tomorrow.

When I asked the Prime Minister a question concerning the international longshoremen, he said he had no information. However, the telegram was sent to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets) at 12.11 a.m. A summary of the telegram is this: The International Longshoremen's Union says that if the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) does not set up immediately a commission of inquiry into the pension fund, they will consider the strike settlement null and void. I point out that was the main issue of the strike, and an inquiry was promised by Judge Lippe. I asked the Prime Minister about that very serious matter and he said he had no information but would look it up. This telegram was sent to the government on Friday, at twelve noon, at a time when there is a challenge in all Canadian ports, at least most of them, to shipping.

Mr. Deschatelets: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The right hon. gentleman just said that a few days ago a telegram was sent to me.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I did not mention the minister.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, you did.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I beg your pardon; it was the Minister of Labour. I thank the hon. gentleman because that was just a slip. I was going to deal with him a little later, and I suppose public works came to my mind. There is a minister from the city of Montreal. I wonder whether or not he knew about the telegram? The Prime Minister, the head of the government, did not. There is the possibility of the settlement of the strike being broken, but the Prime Minister knew nothing about it. Today he says: "Tomorrow you will get the information."

I am not going to deal with anything other than this labour situation, because it reveals the inherent weakness of the government, diplomatic postponement, promises of action, and looking for the easy way. I repeat what I have said before, that if the government had acted early in August, and it had the support of parliament, many of today's difficulties would have been avoided. But what did the Prime Minister or his colleagues in the cabinet say?—and it must be remembered that he is the one responsible for them. They said, "We cannot do it; it is very difficult legislation." Well, we have read the trustee legislation and there is nothing very difficult in the wording or drafting of it.

If you follow the record of this government that used to tell us what it would do and how decisive it would be, you can only conclude that on the labour situation, dangerous to the economic position of our country, its record has been a syllabus of pusillanimous pussy-footing for the last several months. The members of the government have dallied on and on; they have postponed; they have been timid, but their timidity masqueraded as diplomatic definance. It has been an amazing picture.

The government decided it would ask the President of the United States for some help.

It would be interesting, Mr. Speaker, if we had a blow by blow description of that conversation. I am speaking about the one between the Prime Minister and the President, after the President waited several hours overnight before he would take the phone. The Prime Minister said, "I can call him at any time—"

Mr. Pearson: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I have already stated that is a false statement. Perhaps the right hon. gentleman will accept that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that is not a question of privilege.

Mr. Chevrier: It is.

Mr. Pearson: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, when the right hon. gentleman, who has been prime minister of this country, makes a statement which has been branded as false, then the right hon. gentleman should accept that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This is not a question of privilege. This is an old game.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry, but I did not hear the point which was sought to be made by the right hon. Prime Minister, so it was a little difficult for me to determine if there was a question of privilege. I could rule on that if I heard the point.

Mr. Pearson: Very well, Mr. Speaker, I will make it quite clear what the question of privilege is. The right hon. gentleman has made a statement which I have already designated in the house as false, and which was accepted as such by the house. Now the right hon. gentleman is reiterating that statement today. He has no right to do that, and surely he knows it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that is an old game, to call it privilege. There is no privilege in that. I am giving the interpretation as to what happened. I asked him whether he called the President and he answered that he tried to get him on Friday evening. The President was not answering, even though the Prime Minister had said he could call the President at any time.

Mr. Pearson: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, that statement happens to be false and I ask the right hon. gentleman to accept my denial. Surely a man who has been prime minister of this country is not going to continue to repeat falsehoods in this house.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Speaking of falsity, I remember this same man who is Prime Minister today; I remember all the things he uttered both before and during the election campaign. He is the one who speaks about falsity, but the record is clear as can be when it comes to falsity. He is giving me a lecture today, but may I point out to him that the other day in this house he said, "How cheap can you get"?

He would lecture us on the proprieties. I only wish I had a copy of some of his speech on September 18, 1962, when he spoke language that the leader of any party should not use. Yet he tries to parade as one who is just so nice. When you listen to him on the radio you would think that there but for—you know what Churchill said about Sir Stafford Cripps.

I repeat what I have said, and it cannot be denied factually. I know it touches his finer sensibilities because after all, Mr. Speaker, you remember this magnificent document, the extracts from the joint communique to which I have just referred. You have just to look over this period of five or six months to understand why he feels annoyed.

They were going to co-operate together. Then this government plastered the United States with a 30 per cent sales tax on shares purchased externally, but it had to back down. Then members of the government went over to the United States and they were going to bring about a reduction in the amount of automobile parts imported by Canada from the United States. That was part of their policy, but again they backed down. I have read the statement which the minister made the day before yesterday, and it is quite different from what he said previously.

Then there is the labour question, and also the cancellation of an order by the United States department of defence for Canadian aircraft. All this happened in this period of a new heaven and a new earth that were going to be brought about by the change of government.

Sir, there is no help from the United States in this labour difficulty, because Mr. Kennedy needs votes. I heard that on the radio from the United States within the last few hours, and over the week end there was a meeting of labour men in western Ontario who concluded they could expect very little co-operative support from the United States in controlling this situation on the great lakes because the A.F.L.-C.I.O. is a body whose support is needed by the President of the United States.

The record has been one of worsening relations from the very beginning of the government's tenure of office. The ministers have been theorizing as to what they were going to do economically and otherwise. We have had political cackle masquerading as economic wisdom, and having to be withdrawn. That has been the record all the way along.

It is natural that, with all this running back and forth by the government, the Washington administration should think anything they would do would be acceptable. Well, what has taken place? I know how the backbenchers in the Liberal party think about it. They had a caucus the other day and I am told the private members wanted a larger voice in the government.

An hon. Member: They might do better.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well it could not be made any worse.

The record in this labour situation has been frightful. Today when we asked questions, and knowing there was going to be a supply motion, the answers given us were, "We will give you full information tomorrow." Wait until tomorrow has been the promise all the way since last August. The government tried everything and finally brought the trusteeship legislation before parliament. Parliament did not hold it up. It approved the legislation almost unanimously, only four members having disagreement with some matter or other and not giving it support. The legislation was passed; but now there is further delay and the excuse has been that the government was wishing for some system to be arranged whereby the legislation, distasteful as it is, would not have to be brought into effect. Well, Mr. Meany has given his views on the whole situation. In his release he condemns what has been done in Canada. He says:

> A subsequent one-man commission of inquiry appointed by the Canadian government became the vehicle for a vitriolic and vengeful attack upon the S.I.U. of Canada and its leadership.

Then he says:

> In an effort to avert such legislation and to reach an acceptable solution, there have been exchanges between the A.F.L.-C.I.O., the Canadian Labour Congress, the United States secretary of labour and the Canadian ministry of labour. We have co-operated fully—

He is speaking of his organization:

> —in an effort to reach agreement on a proposal whereby a voluntary joint A.F.L.-C.I.O. and C.L.C. trusteeship would be established over the seafarers international union of Canada. Such a trusteeship would have full and complete authority over the officers and operations of the union and would function with the complete support of the A.F.L.-C.I.O. and its international affiliate, the S.I.U. of North America.

Then he says:

> These discussions failed because of disagreement on two basic issues:
> The first was composition of the trusteeship. The A.F.L.-C.I.O. was prepared to accept a two-man trusteeship, one person to be designated by the A.F.L.-C.I.O. and one by the C.L.C., with the provision that in the event of any disagreement between them, the issue would be referred to a four-man committee composed of the president of the A.F.L.-C.I.O., the president of the Canadian Labour Congress the United States secretary of labour and the Canadian ministry of labour.

We could not get this information in this house. We have to get it from Mr. Meany in a report to his representatives across the United States. Then he goes on to say this:

> The Canadian Labour Congress would not agree to this proposal. They insisted that the joint trustees turn directly to a third party in the event of a disagreement and that this third party must be a Canadian national.

Then he goes on and condemns this plan in general, and finally concludes by saying:

> The A.F.L.-C.I.O. is just as opposed to the goverment control of unions in Canada as in Honduras or Peru or any other place on earth.

They played around with these people, and while they played our economy was in danger of being throttled. They secured a tremendous order from the U.S.S.R. It was very obvious when I listened to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) today, when he spoke of the advice he had given two months ago to the western farmers, that he had no idea that Russia was going to be in the market for wheat. They came over here and entered into an agreement, and I think they surprised the government by their offer to purchase.

We now face a very serious situation. We ask, "What are you going to do about it?" We receive the same answer as we received in July and August. There is always an excuse; some other thing is going to be done. They got parliament to put through the legislation and then decided they would play around with it and take the easy course.

Mr. Woolliams: The politically expedient course.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That has been the course throughout. Today we face a serious, a dangerous situation. I say immediately that our attitude in this opposition throughout has been not to take political advantage of the government in this difficult matter.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We voted for the legislation. How much further could we go? We supported the legislation, recognizing at the same time the fact that it was legislation of a kind that should only be very temporary and that the only reason for bringing it in was the fact that there was no other course open. The Conservative party, as Her Majesty's loyal opposition, has in the past two or three months on this particular matter, and on other matters too—but I am speaking about labour now—done nothing to take partisan advantage of the government's action. I was glad today to have the assurance that at last they have come to a realization that this board should be Canadian. That is what we were asking for.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They did not think that a few weeks ago, or even a few days ago. We in Her Majesty's loyal opposition will at all times support the government in any action that upholds the sovereignty of parliament and the independence of Canada against outside interference. That is the stand we took. For two years we were criticized and ridiculed by those who now occupy the treasury benches. They said, "Isn't the situation terrible? We will bring about"—and I repeat this because it was the picture put before the Canadian people—"that new heaven and that new earth". Relations with the United States were going to be the epitome of perfection. It has been a most sorry, sorry record. They were going to bring about an Atlantic union—that was the first thing they were going to do—and the New York Times says they have adopted a protectionism that will set back the Atlantic union for years to come.

These were the people who were going to co-operate and who said we were so wrong in daring to say that Canada would determine its own policies. Sir, dawdling accompanied by tranquilizing statements has been the record of this government for the last three months on this question. Their attitude has been to play around, postpone and hope that something will come up. We tried to warn them in August. Do you remember what the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) said? He said that the mere announcement of the legislation to provide a trusteeship would, he hoped, bring about peace on the great lakes. There was two months delay, giving the opposition to the government's policy time to organize. What would you expect, when the government of Canada had announced that if there was anything of a tyrannical nature on the great lakes parliament would be recalled? A Canadian ship was dynamited. Nothing was done about it. Nero fiddled while Rome burned. This government fiddled, hoping for an easy solution. They showed weakness, uncertainty.

An hon. Member: Fumbling and bungling.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They used to talk about bungling. I give you exhibit No. 1 in the person of the Prime Minister. They called in American officials. Mr. Wirtz came here.

Mr. Pearson: Gloom and doom.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He tried to put pressure on Canada. I asked the Prime Minister about this, and he said, "Oh, no; the statement he made was not that". This was the first statement Wirtz made. They always took the easy way out. What was the result of all this? The result was that in the United States it was taken for granted that this was a government that could be pushed around with impunity and ease. They were pushed easily. Meany and Paul Hall were met with trepidation and timidity. You cannot blame them across the line for not taking Canada seriously. Had there been a 30-minute display of firmness at the beginning, an unmistakeable determination to act, all this would have been avoided. After all, in facing up to Hal Banks, diplomatic give and take is not one of the elements he understands as being evidence of strength.

Now what have we got? We have the promise from the Prime Minister: Wait until tomorrow. We have a situation today bordering on anarchy in Canada. Political considerations have no place here when there is anywhere in this nation a desire to supplant parliamentary legislation, right, and order on the part of any group within this country of ours. The Globe and Mail said this morning that the government had been trying to find the easy way out. It has not worked out very well. Tomorrow we shall learn what is what. It has been the same all the way along the line. Hon. gentlemen opposite have wrecked our relations with the provinces. The pension plan is now shelved. There was the budget fiasco; the auto parts which were going to be produced here in Canada. In all these things, the government has not acted. Many bulletins go out telling us what it is hoped to accomplish. What has taken place has imperilled our wheat shipments—shipments which will mean so much to the economy and to the balance of payments situation. What this government has done has caused lasting damage to our relations, economically, with the United States. I call as my witness the Canadian-American committee; and it is interesting to note that Donald Gordon was one of the signatories to a report in which it is pointed out that damage has been done to our relations by the action taken.

How has the government acted today? I was not one of those who had a visitation today. Somebody told me there was a sign carried by someone representing Prince Albert. Well, the only relationship Prince Albert has had with the maritime scene is that the last naval battle fought in North America was fought 25 miles outside Prince Albert. Apart from that, we have no relation with what is going on in the shipping world, except in so far as the economy is directly affected. What did the Minister of Labour do? He made a statement today. It must have been produced in a great hurry because it does not contain all the decorations which are usual in such statements. It is just a simple, mimeographed record. I shall say this to the minister: I think he has tried very hard to do the very best. I do not agree with the course he has followed, but he is one who has given answers when we have asked questions of him, and that is something. He was away today, otherwise the Prime Minister would not have been answering questions and given us this indefinite answer, "tomorrow".

What was said? The federal government on October 20 ordered the seafarers international union to call off its walkout. Listen to this, for direct language:

> You and the officials of your union must be aware of the fact that the directives issued in instruction bulletin No. 1 by the seaman's rights committee contravened the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act through taking illegal strike action during the term of agreement.
> The government of Canada demands that you and other members of the executive board obey the law of Canada and direct all members of your union to return immediately to their ships and to resume work.

I do not know what their answer to that would be, but I do know they have had experience in the last few months.

The Minister of Justice had two outstanding lawyers look into the question of what prosecutions could take place. Mr. Justice Norris said this person should be prosecuted—referring to Banks—and the lawyers have been taking months to determine whether there could be any prosecution. First, there was a preliminary report on the subject. We asked for its production and I cannot argue with hon. gentlemen opposite when they say the document is not producible. But it shows the weakness, the temporizing, of this government. Mr. Justice Norris said grave offences had been committed by Banks. Mr. Justice Norris is a judge of wide experience at the bar. But no action was taken. Why? I do not intend to repeat the close relationship, the filial regard shown between the Liberal party and Mr. Banks. But Mr. Banks has not been prosecuted, unless, tomorrow, we are told so after this motion has been dealt with.

The minister was asked: "What are you going to do?" I am reading from the article in the Globe and Mail by Bernard Dufresne:

> Asked what would happen if Mr. Banks does not order his membership to return to work, Mr. MacEachen said with a short chuckle: "We'll have to wait and see. There are a number of sanctions that may be taken by the companies and the government."

This is the kind of decisiveness we have had—chuckles and postponements. Today, the Prime Minister says: Wait until tomorrow. This must have put the fear of retribution into the hearts of all those who have read it today. They gathered here on parliament hill. A Canadian citizen has a right to bring his views to the attention of parliament. This right has existed as far back as 1623 or 1624—the right of petition. They gathered here, and the minister made a statement. It reads as follows:

> You have been told that the new trusteeship law will harm you, your jobs and your unions. This is a false statement. Unions often establish their own trusteeships. It was hoped this could be done in the present situation. When this proved impossible, government action had to be taken.

It goes on to mention the powers of the trustees and what rights the unions have. Then it says:

> The members of the maritime transportation unions are asked to co-operate fully with the trustees in carrying out their responsibilities.

Tomorrow's sun never yet rose or set on any human being. Tomorrow, there is to be action, the Prime Minister said. Think of all the tomorrows that have gone by since July 25. This has been a history of indecision, confusion and uncertainty. On August 2, as reported at page 2943 of Hansard, the Prime Minister said:

> It would be impossible in the circumstances to have this difficult and complicated legislation prepared within a matter of weeks. It may require a strict examination of the constitutionality of the legislation, and it might mean getting in touch with the provincial governments concerned—

An examination of that bill reveals little of those elements of complexity or consultative difficulty which were referred to. A little further on he said:

> I hope very much that the indication that this legislation is being prepared and will be made effective will hold the situation during the summer.

Well, "tomorrow" came with the dynamiting of the Howard L. Shaw, a Canadian ship.

At the same page in Hansard I asked the Prime Minister, regarding this report which was released on July 18:

> —would the Prime Minister give consideration to bringing before the house before the adjournment the legislation to which reference was made yesterday...Otherwise there may well be an invitation to further lawlessness and disorder and a tie-up of shipping—

But no; the reply was that the next day the house would adjourn and we would come back if there was any trouble.

On September 30 the Minister of Labour said, as reported at page 3026 of Hansard:

> —I think I should tell the house in all fairness that I have some faint hope that if we get a break in the next short time we may be in a different position in several days, but at the moment the decision is to proceed at the earliest possible opportunity, having given the necessary notice, with the trusteeship legislation.

Again that tortuous uncertainty, that postponement, that waffling; that is what it has been all the way along throughout the entire course. Today I thought we would get an answer. On October 3 the Minister of Labour said, as reported at page 3150 of Hansard:

> I can assure the hon. member that our purpose in this situation is to establish an effective alternative if possible.

Negotiations were going on. Do you think, Mr. Speaker, that all these peregrinations back and forth were calculated to impress the United States with the government's intention and determination to go ahead with the Norris recommendations? They brought Mr. Reynolds to Canada, as the Minister of Labour said, as a result of a request made to the secretary of labour in the United States. Mr. Wirtz came to Canada on September 11 to express his opposition, and Mr. Reynolds gave his views later on. It is just impossible to understand what has taken place. I suppose that only history will reveal everything that took place.

Under all the circumstances, therefore, I think it is clear that I intend to move an amendment—not wait until tomorrow, although welcoming, as we do at last, an attitude of action on the part of this government, rather than one of putting off, waffling, postponing, and using the phone, even though not answered. It is today when we are in parliament. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr):

> That all the words after "that" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:
> "This government, because of its confusion, inconsistency and pusillanimous dawdling and delays in taking effective action has encouraged chaos approaching anarchy to develop on the great lakes, the seaway, and in several Canadian ports, thereby causing disruption in shipping and the placing in jeopardy of essential trade in general, and in particular contracts for delivery of wheat to foreign countries."

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the right hon. gentleman for adding a little light hearted relief at the end of what has been a very difficult, trying and worrying afternoon. It is very good of him to move the kind of amendment which gives us the chance to relax a little bit. I want to congratulate him on finding some new words for the amendment. Our favourite words use to be "fumbling and bumbling". The right hon. gentleman hit upon a new phrase, I think new in the history of parliament—"pusillanimous dawdling". I am grateful to him for, as I said, giving us a little comic relief at the end of a difficult time.

The right hon. gentleman certainly covered the waterfront this afternoon. He told us at one stage, Mr. Speaker, of his interesting discourse, that he was going to deal with labour matters, but he got on to Russia, to Hyannis Port and to the last election. He covered every kind of activity he could think of which, in his view, might reflect on what has been done. But of all the amusing things he said, the most amusing was when he put solemnly on the record the statement that political considerations have no place in this serious situation with which we are dealing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, this afternoon in moving his non-confidence motion, which has already been put on the record with its interesting adjectives, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) told us he was going to deal with the labour situation, which is admittedly now difficult in some aspects and could, I admit, become dangerous. In view of the nature of the situation which we face I think we might have expected from him a careful, objective analysis of that situation but, as hon. members who were here will recall, we got a violent, partisan harangue most of which, if I may use the expression, was partisan claptrap. It was another illustration of the right hon. gentleman's determination to direct the opposition by innuendo, insult and invective.

Mr. Churchill: That is claptrap.

Mr. Pearson: It included much of the language of wild exaggeration. We were told that the country was on the verge of anarchy. We on this side were accused—I suppose I should apologize for repeating the phrase—of pusillanimous dawdling. I want to congratulate the right hon. gentleman's research staff on having dug that one up. We were accused of pusillanimous dawdling, Mr. Speaker, by the greatest dawdler of them all.

The successful effort to restore communications with our neighbour, the United States, which had been completely broken by the end of the last regime, was sneered at. I recall that the joint defence committee had not met for a very long time under the previous administration, that the trade and economic committee had practically ceased to function, and that the heads of government in the two countries had not communicated with each other. The right hon. gentleman seems unable to conceal his chagrin that all this has now changed.

He is very worried because of my alleged difficulties in getting the President of the United States on the telephone. This really seems to disturb him. I have had no such difficulties, but the right hon. gentleman will recall that in the last month of his regime the line was completely out of order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is not a fact.

Mr. Pearson: I suppose we really ought to be charitable to him in his reaction of envy and chagrin at the changed situation in regard to communications.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: I am glad the right hon. gentleman has retained his sense of humour.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He just looks across the way.

Mr. Pearson: It is, of course, very important to have this direct communication between the heads of two governments whose relations are so important to each other, and must continue to be on the best possible footing. Not only is it important, it should be normal for this kind of communication to be in existence. It is only an abnormal situation when communications are broken and are non-existent. It is deplorable when that happens in the relations between our two governments and our two countries, and even more deplorable when a senior member of his party has to descend to the depths that have been descended to in putting a forged communication on the record in order to stir up trouble between our two countries. We are going to have enough difficulty in the days and weeks and months ahead in solving the problems that face our two countries without adding to that difficulty by that kind of tactic.

This afternoon the right hon. gentleman indulged in what I can only refer to as a kind of gloating and mocking accusation of loss of confidence in Canada abroad, in the United States and other countries. He quoted in support of that accusation from the Economist. He is quite right that I used to quote the Economist in reverse against his government, and the same man who wrote those articles in the Economist in those days wrote the article from which he quoted this afternoon. I admit that this man takes just about as jaundiced a view of this government as he took of the previous one—not quite as jaundiced but almost as jaundiced.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Who is the writer?

Mr. Pearson: If the right hon. gentleman takes satisfaction from this particular correspondent's article I am happy to let him get all the satisfaction he can out of it. Of course, if we wanted to indulge in this game of quotation and cross-quotation it would be quite simple to find articles on the other side. During the dinner recess I happened to pick up the Financial Times. The staff correspondent in Ottawa of the Financial Times, a journalist of experience and repute, had this to say in his article this week:

> U.S.-Canada relations are a long way from being on the rocks. On the contrary, newspaper scare headlines only underscore the fact that the two countries are making real efforts to come to terms on matters of genuine concern to both. And they are having some success.

That is from the current edition of the Financial Times.

Mr. Fisher: What about the Financial Post?

Mr. Pearson: I am unable to hear all these interventions from that corner, but after tomorrow those members will be a little closer to me and I will be able to deal with them. I cannot help but add that on this question of loss of confidence in Canada abroad the right hon. gentleman who spoke this afternoon speaks with the authority of personal experience. There is no doubt, of course, that since this government took office it has made mistakes. Unlike the right hon. gentleman and his regime, we do not claim infallibility or omniscience.

An hon. Member: You had all the answers.

Mr. Pearson: But if everything is as bad as the right hon. gentleman indicated it was this afternoon, and if the people of the country feel as he indicated they do feel, that it is so bad, why does the right hon. gentleman not work harder to bring about a situation where he will be able to appeal to the country and get a verdict? Why is he so very careful on every division in this house to make sure there are enough of his members outside that we cannot be defeated?

Mr. Nielsen: How about your own members?

Mr. Pearson: Indeed, if our members stay out of the house, that proves exactly what I have been suggesting to the right hon. gentleman, that we are worried, that we are anxious to stay in office to do our job, and if we stay out of the house it then gives the hon. gentleman a better chance to defeat us. This means he has to keep even more of his members out of the house to avoid that unhappy situation, from his point of view.

If, Mr. Speaker, as the right hon. gentleman so passionately claims, the only fault of his government in the field of foreign affairs and Canadian-United States relations was standing up for Canada, if that was their only fault, standing up for Canada, as any government would stand up for Canada, why was it that his own cabinet collapsed over that very issue and some of his senior colleagues deserted him? If I were the right hon. gentleman, I would be very careful not to revive these unhappy memories of a collapsing cabinet caused, in large part, by relations which had been allowed to deteriorate between Canada and the United States, especially in the field of defence.

This afternoon, the right hon. gentleman said he was going to talk about the labour situation. He discussed the labour situation in international terms and its international implications, especially those bearing on our relations with the United States, in a way designed to stir up the maximum of animosity with our neighbours, and with a minimum of reasoned argument. Let us have a look at the position both in respect of what this government has tried to do—

An hon. Member: What about the United States?

Mr. Chevrier: Why don't you let him speak?

Mr. Pearson: —and in respect of what the right hon. gentleman said he would have done if he had had the responsibility of office. The Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) will deal with this matter in greater detail, if he has the opportunity tomorrow; but I should like to make one or two comments about it because it is indeed a serious situation and serious charges have been levelled at the government about the way in which they dealt with it. The burden of the right hon. gentleman's argument is that the government should have acted last session, towards the end of July or the beginning of August; that they should have acted at once, without delay, in a matter of hours or at the most days, to put into effect a public trusteeship which would have taken over certain Canadian maritime unions and brought them under government trusteeship; in other words, that this government should have intervened at once, without seeking any alternative course, to bring the five unions under government trusteeship.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They were all willing but one, were they not?

Mr. Pearson: They were all willing but one. The egg was 95 per cent fresh.

Then, the right hon. gentleman sneered at the argument put forward by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) and others that a certain time was required to make sure that the legislation as drafted would stand up in the courts; would be perfectly sound from every point of view, and especially from a constitutional point of view. If the right hon. gentleman thinks, as he professes to think, that the drafting of this legislation was a simple matter which could have been worked out in a day or two, he does not know anything about its complexity. I wish very much he could submit this question to a committee, have the officials of the Department of Justice brought before this committee where they could be examined on the difficulties in drafting this kind of legislation, on the difficulties in making sure that what we put before this parliament would not conflict with provincial jurisdiction in the field of property and civil rights.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we had also to relate this particular legislation to my hon. friend's pet piece of legislation, the bill of rights. Also a great many union contracts had to be examined very carefully to make sure that the trusteeship set up, if it had to be set up by the government, would have sufficient power to do the thing that had to be done, that is clean up the situation in this union as it was disclosed in the Norris report and in accordance with certain Norris recommendations. Quite rightly, therefore, we took the necessary time to make sure that the legislation was sound.

While this legislation was being drafted, and it took a few weeks to get this done in the right way, we then proceeded to see if there were some satisfactory alternative to the government having to take this power and establish, what I think most hon. members will consider to be, an undesirable precedent. The right hon. gentleman would not have done that. He would not have sought any other alternative. He would have plunged right in with government trusteeship, irrespective of the wishes of everybody, including the Canadian Labour Congress. While the legislation was being drafted, indeed while the legislation was going through the house, the government had established through the Minister of Labour, whose work I think in this matter is to be commended, the closest possible co-operation with the Canadian Labour Congress and maintained that co-operation right up until this moment. This co-operation would have been abandoned by the right hon. gentleman if he had his way, because he would have rushed in at once, without any delay, into government trusteeship, irrespective of the wishes of the Canadian Labour Congress.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Pearson: Of course.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Did not the C.L.C. and Mr. Jodoin say, immediately the Norris report came down, that while he, as was everybody, was anxious to avoid trusteeship, he would give his co-operation and support to it?

Mr. Pearson: Of course, he did; and Mr. Jodoin said while he was not anxious for trusteeship he would work with the government to try to find an alternative to the trusteeship. The right hon. gentleman would have given him no such opportunity, if he had been in office.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Nonsense.

Mr. Pearson: He would have insisted on public trusteeship at once. Never mind the necessity for care, but rush in. He would have said: Never mind whether there could be a better alternative than public trusteeship; let the government charge ahead and take over these labour unions. Never mind whether there is any hope of agreeing on a private solution with the approval of the Canadian Labour Congress, but rush ahead. Never mind what the consequences are in Canada, and never mind the consequences in relation to the United States.

Well, Mr. Speaker, this government rejected that course and we are glad that we did. We worked with the Canadian Labour Congress, we encouraged them and supported them in every way we could in getting in touch with the A.F.L.-C.I.O. in the United States.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Did you get in touch with Mr. Wirtz?

Mr. Pearson: The hon. gentleman has made a great play about the fact we on this side of the line, through the C.L.C., and indeed through the government, got in touch with the A.F.L.-C.I.O. and the government of the United States in respect of a matter which was basically Canadian, but which had very important and dangerous international implications.

The right hon. gentleman does not mind that. He would rush ahead—"damn the torpedoes"—straight ahead with legislation. We thought it was better to see if we could work out through negotiations between the Canadian Labour Congress and the A.F.L.-C.I.O., with the support of the United States government and the Canadian government, a private trusteeship which would be satisfactory from the Canadian viewpoint and which would make unnecessary government intervention in this matter.

From the very beginning the Canadian Labour Congress and the Canadian government insisted that no such private trusteeship would be satisfactory unless two out of the three trustees were Canadians. The right hon. gentleman made great play with the fact that for the first time this afternoon he learned that in a public trusteeship we were going to have three Canadians. This was a remarkable discovery on his part, that a Canadian government public trusteeship was to have three Canadians.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, there never was any question in anybody's mind that in a public trusteeship the three trustees would have to be Canadians; but in a private trusteeship, if it were to be effective for maintaining and securing peace on the great lakes on the American side, in our view it was not too high a price to pay for that through an agreement which would make it possible, to have one of the three trustees a United States citizen. If, as a result of that kind of trusteeship with that kind of membership, the A.F.L.-C.I.O. could give us an assurance that Canadian ships, manned by Canadian seamen under this kind of trusteeship arrangement, would not be interfered with on the great lakes and in American ports, surely that was not too high a price to pay for that kind of agreed arrangement between the two labour organizations of the two countries.

That is what we tried to bring about, and in all these negotiations the Canadian Labour Congress was clear, and we were clear, that two of the three trustees had to be Canadians. In the first stages that was one of the reasons that the negotiations broke down.

Another condition we laid down from the beginning was that a private trusteeship must have sufficient authority to clean up the S.I.U. in Canada. There could be no question about that. It must have sufficient authority to do the job that was required to be done whether by a government trusteeship or a private trusteeship, in accordance with certain recommendations of the Norris report.

The negotiations became very difficult. They became almost impossible when the head of the A.F.L.-C.I.O., Mr. Meany, made what has been described by many hon. members inside the house, and outside the house, as a shocking statement which represented complete ignorance of Canadian affairs and a shocking intervention in Canadian affairs. If it were done entirely through ignorance perhaps he is not as open to condemnation as if it were done by calculation, but in any event it was a mischievous intervention which made it extremely difficult to make any progress.

Mr. Wirtz, the secretary of labour, who had been working hard and conscientiously to bring about a kind of meeting of minds with his opposite number, the Minister of Labour, so that a private trusteeship would be agreeable to both countries, then made what I described as an unhelpful intervention—and it certainly was—but it was not designed to be harmful or deliberately mischievous. In any event, the negotiations were on the point of breaking down on this issue of membership after the intervention of Mr. Meany, which in a sense was an incitement to disobey any trusteeship. So, in those circumstances I thought it might be useful if I got in touch with the President of the United States and asked for his intervention, to see if we could get negotiations restored on the only basis where there was possibility of success, namely that there should be a clear understanding about the composition of a private trusteeship and about its authority and powers.

This afternoon the right hon. gentleman said the president was not helpful in this matter. I would say that we got a great deal more help from the President of the United States in this matter than we got from the right hon. gentleman who, day after day, kept demanding details of the negotiations while negotiations were going on, knowing perfectly well that if you give the details of your negotiation in the middle of negotiations you have much less chance of coming to a successful agreement. But that did not deter the right hon. gentleman from trying to probe for details such as, "How many times did you phone the president; how quickly did he answer the phone"? And the right hon. gentleman got so upset over the allegation that somehow or other President Kennedy did not answer the phone quickly enough that it moved him to national indignation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They tell me the Prime Minister was awfully annoyed, too, when he did not answer.

Mr. Pearson: As a result of President Kennedy's intervention and my talk with him, the negotiations were resumed. They were resumed in good faith by the Canadian Labour Congress, and with the support and the approval of the government. They were resumed in the hope that we could—even at that late time when the bill had passed the House of Commons, was going to the Senate and would shortly be given royal assent—work out a private trusteeship before the legislation was proclaimed, a private trusteeship which would clean up the conditions exposed by the Norris report in the S.I.U. of Canada, a branch of an international union, something which gave the international headquarters in the United States some standing on the matter; and second, an arrangement which would receive the formal support of the A.F.L.-C.I.O. and which would ensure that Canadian shipping in United States lake ports would not be interfered with or harassed.

While these resumed negotiations were proceeding and encouraging progress was being made, Mr. Hal Banks ordered from their ships members of his union, and organized the march on Ottawa which took place today. The first act, Mr. Speaker, was illegal, and the second—notwithstanding what the right hon. gentleman said about it this afternoon as a vindication of the historic rights of the citizen to petition his member of parliament—I believe was an effort to bring unjustifiable pressure on the government with respect to legislation which had passed through this house and the Senate, and had received the royal assent.

In the face of this illegal action the Canadian Labour Congress decided yesterday that it was useless, and indeed from their point of view improper, to continue negotiations. The government understands and supports the position which they took.

We have done everything we can on this side to make unnecessary a public trusteeship over Canadian unions through legislation. We had hoped, Mr. Speaker, that this could have been avoided by satisfactory private arrangements. The illegal action taken by Mr. Hal Banks and the S.I.U., and the refusal of the S.I.U. international in the United States to do anything to prevent this—as they could have done because they knew what was happening—leaves the government with no alternative but to proceed without delay to proclaim the act putting the public trusteeship into effect, and this is what we propose to do.

Some hon. Members: When?

Mr. Pearson: We propose to do this far more quickly than was the case with my hon. friends opposite, when they took any action in respect of any situation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: We must show that Canada, and free and responsible trade unionism in Canada, is bigger than Mr. Banks—

Mr. Woolliams: When?

Mr. Pearson: —and that a Canadian government is not going to be intimidated by the illegal action and pressure of one who has destroyed democratic government in his own union. This morning, Mr. Speaker—the prime minister is going to be very disappointed about this—I rang up the White House again and I got through—

Mr. Diefenbaker: The prime minister is going to be disappointed?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to make the right hon. gentleman feel a little better. As long as he pursues the kind of tactics that he pursued this afternoon, in the face of a dangerous national situation, he is going to be over on that side for a long, long, long time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, no.

Mr. Pearson: Therefore I think it is only fair once in a while to remind him that he was once prime minister. I telephoned the President this morning—he had the secretary of labour with him at the White House—and told him that the illegal and, as I thought it was, provocative action that was going on in Ottawa at the moment I was telephoning made it quite impossible for the Canadian Labour Congress to continue in negotiation with the A.F.L.-C.I.O. about a private trusteeship. I added that I thought this was particularly unfortunate because those negotiations had been so close to agreement.

I told the president we were distressed by recent developments but that we must support the position, and we would support the position, taken by the Canadian Labour Congress. They could not be expected to discuss matters in the face of this kind of pressure, and therefore the government had no alternative now but to proclaim its legislation putting a public trusteeship into effect.

Mr. Woolliams: When?

Mr. Pearson: I told the president that it was of the greatest possible importance now, more important than anything else facing us at this moment—

Mr. Woolliams: What did the president say?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether my hon. friend, who has nothing to do but interrupt in this house and who has made quite a reputation for himself as a stupid interrupter, would be good enough to keep quiet.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: Intelligent heckling is to be welcomed, but asinine assertions are to be condemned.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is this a testimony on your part?

Mr. Woolliams: I still ask, what did the President say?

Mr. Pearson: I told the President that it was of the greatest possible importance now to persuade the United States A.F.L.-C.I.O. to accept the legislation that was being passed in Canada, in respect of its impact on the United States side of the line, and prevent violence on the United States side of the great lakes against Canadian ships once this legislation is in effect. Otherwise we would be in for serious trouble, which I am sure nobody on either side of the line wants, except a few ill-meaning people who would like to stir up trouble.

The objective of the government is to have the public trusteeship end—and I told the president this—as quickly as possible, and the reorganized and cleaned up union returned to the officers chosen by the workers themselves. But I said this would be difficult and would certainly be delayed if the wrong reaction occurred in A.F.L.-C.I.O. circles and showed itself in harassment of Canadian ships at United States lake ports. So I urged Mr. Kennedy to do what he could to prevent this happening. The President told me, I would tell the right hon. gentleman who has been so unhelpful in this matter in his contribution to good neighbourliness, that he will do what he can.

An hon. Member: Did he promise?

Mr. Pearson: He said he will do what he can to prevent this kind of—

Mr. Woolliams: What did he say?

Mr. Pearson: —reaction; and if he does, I am sure the right hon. gentleman will be very disappointed indeed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the right hon. gentleman answer as to what the President said?

Mr. Woolliams: That's right, what did the President say?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, they are so passionately interested in the details of this conversation that I will tell them what the President said. He said he regretted the necessity for this action, but he understood the necessity and he would do all he could to avoid any impact which would cause trouble between our two countries. It is too bad that the right hon. gentleman should be so disappointed by this kind of response from the President.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We are all glad he answered the 'phone this time.

Mr. Pearson: We have had a demonstration today in Ottawa. I believe that a good many of those who were here have some misunderstanding about the nature of the legislation and the effect it will have on trade unions in Canada. We as members of parliament have done what we can on this side, in the interviews we have had with the delegates of the demonstration, to correct some of the misunderstandings and remove some of the misapprehension that is obviously in the minds of certain of the members of the S.I.U. who came to Ottawa.

They have been told by their leadership that the new trusteeship law will harm them, harm their jobs and harm their union. That is a false statement. The new law will protect seamen and their unions by seeking to ensure that union affairs are conducted honestly and decently. Seamen are protected under the new law from any high handed action which interferes with their democratic rights either from within or from outside their unions. The trustees to be named under the legislation are required, (1) to protect the funds and property of the unions from being misused; (2) to recommend changes in the constitutions and bylaws of the unions, which will ensure democratic control of the unions by their members, and no such changes can be made without the approval of the members; (3) the trustees are required to establish advisory committees of seamen and, where necessary, bargaining committees. They are required to establish means whereby union members may manage their affairs efficiently and democratically. Members of the unions concerned have nothing to fear from the trusteeship imposed under this legislation.

The act has been passed by parliament and has been given the royal assent. When it is proclaimed and in effect, it will have the constructive purpose of cleaning up a particular union, and in due course and as soon as possible return the unions to their members. I am sure the trustees will serve the best interests of the members and their unions and that the members, the seamen, will have every opportunity to be heard. Any just grievance will be considered by the trustees. Under the legislation the unions will not lose their rights to bargain or to strike. Surely this should at least help to remove some of the misunderstanding and misapprehension that has been caused by the information given to members by officers of the union. It should even, I hope, remove some of the wilder misunderstanding existing across the line in some union circles as to what we are doing in Canada about a Canadian union. If that misunderstanding can be removed, then I believe this trusteeship legislation will be acceptable to all union members in Canada —all union members—and it will help to restore peace on the great lakes.

I would have preferred, as I think most of those in this house would have preferred, to have had a private arrangement. That was impossible. Therefore we have proceeded with our legislation. We believe that in the way we have produced this legislation, in the effort we have made to find a suitable alternative, and the way we have worked from beginning to end with the Canadian Labour Congress, we have followed the right course as a responsible government.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, now that the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) have berated each other and covered a good deal of territory in their respective speeches, I should like to draw the attention of the house for a few minutes to the amendment itself.

This amendment which the Leader of the Opposition has moved criticizes the government for its dawdling and delay in taking effective action as a result of which, it says, there has been disruption of shipping and the placing in jeopardy of the trade of this country, in particular of deliveries of wheat to foreign ports. I should like to begin by saying that members in all parts of the house are naturally concerned that nothing should happen which would interrupt the promised deliveries of wheat to countries which are Canadian customers. This concern is not felt by the Conservative party alone. It is felt, I think, by members in all parties. As a matter of fact, shipping has not yet been hurt. I shall have something to say about what the future holds a little later in my observations. But, so far, this temporary stoppage has not affected wheat shipments or trade in general as the amendment suggests.

What interested me most in the speech made by the Leader of the Opposition was that though he berated the government for its failure to act, I could find nothing in his remarks which indicated what he wanted them to do. Day after day I have listened to members of the official opposition calling upon the government to do something without saying specifically what it was they wanted the government to do. This is a very happy position to take because then, no matter what they do, they are able to criticize. The Leader of the Opposition is critical because the government has not acted promptly to implement the recommendations of the Norris report. But I need hardly remind the house that the situation on the great lakes did not spring up over night. This has been a most unfortunate and lamentable situation which has existed over a period of years. The S.I.U. were put out of the Canadian Labour Congress, if I remember correctly, as far back as 1959; and in May of 1962 the president of the C.L.C. wrote to the present

Leader of the Opposition, who was then prime minister, setting out in detail certain acts of intimidation, violence and lawlessness and urging that immediate steps should be taken to rectify the situation. Weeks passed and nothing was done. It was only when the Canadian labour movement tied up the St. Lawrence seaway that a commissioner was finally appointed in July, 1962. So, when the Leader of the Opposition calls for action, I for one, would be interested to know what specific action he has in mind. Certainly, there was no very specific action taken in those years from 1959 to 1962.

Let me say a word about the delay which has occurred with respect to appointing a board of public trustees to take over the maritime shipping unions. I think the government was justified in taking time to do two very important things. The first was to explore the possibility of setting up a private trusteeship. I am sure no member of this house, particularly those who have a great respect for free trade unions, wants to see a government trusteeship imposed on any union or group of unions. It seems to me the government was justified in taking whatever time was necessary, within reason, to explore the possibility of a private trusteeship in which trade union leaders responsible to the labour movement in Canada would be charged with trying to rectify the situation on the great lakes.

There was another advantage attached to the setting up of a private trusteeship, if it could have been arranged, namely that it might have secured the co-operation of the United States labour organization, the A.F.L.-C.I.O. This is important because everyone knows that much of our trade on the great lakes is in the United States ports, and if Canadian ships are to be handled expeditiously great value must be attached to having the full co-operation of the United States labour movement. My feeling has been that the government should have explored with the Canadian and United States labour movements the possibility of a private trusteeship which would have brought the five maritime unions under its control and sought to settle the difficulties which have disturbed the shipping industry for the past four years. I think there is some evidence that the government has been doing just that. That is the first thing they needed to do, and I cannot blame them for taking time to do it.

The second thing they needed time to do was to look very carefully for the right kind of men to serve on the board of trustees. Merely setting up a board of trustees will not effectively deal with this problem. What will count is the way in which the board operates —whether it shows intelligence, firmness and sympathy in dealing with these unions. This trusteeship could be a farce and a failure if the right kind of men are not vested with the great authority which parliament has given. If the government needed some time to canvass the situation in order to get the right kind of men for this job, I, for one, am prepared to see that they get the necessary time. I wish to urge, once again, that those appointed to this board will include at least one, and perhaps two men with a wide experience of the trade union movement—men who are not involved in this dispute, but men who know how to lead unions back into a democratic way of doing business, so that they can emerge from this trusteeship strong, democratic and effective.

Having said that I am not prepared to criticize the government because it was seeking an alternative course of a private trusteeship, and because it has taken some time to canvass the situation and get the right kind of personnel for the board of trustees, let me say that I think the test of the government's courage and decisiveness will now lie in what they do in the next day or two. If this withdrawal of men from the ships over the last 48 hours were to continue it could pose a very serious problem for the shipment of goods, and particularly for the shipment of wheat. This is one of the things upon which our economy is depending for a large amount of money to help balance our international payments.

It was perfectly clear from the statement which was made yesterday by Mr. Claude Jodoin, the president of the Canadian Labour Congress, that all attempts at setting up a private trusteeship had failed. I need not go into the details of why they failed; certainly the S.I.U. in calling the men off the ships in my opinion made it much more difficult to proceed with a private trusteeship. A private trusteeship established in the face of intimidation and threats would have been a private trusteeship that would be weakened from the very beginning of its operations. I can quite understand why the Canadian labour movement came to the conclusion that in this situation, with an illegal strike and an illegal walk-off confronting them, they could not see any way in which a private trusteeship could operate successfully. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I think one is safe in assuming that all efforts to establish a private trusteeship have failed.

It seems to me that it is now for the government to act promptly and decisively. I think the government has no choice now but to proclaim the legislation and to set up the public trusteeship just as expeditiously as possible. Indeed, I would go one step further.

If the walk-out of the seamen continues, or if there is any evidence that the companies are seeking to embarrass the trusteeship, then the government may have to take further steps. It is rather significant that in the last two or three days men have been able to walk off ships in some instances with the consent of the company, which under the Canada Shipping Act they are required to get from the master of the ship. This leads me to wonder whether or not there is collusion in this instance with the shipping companies, whether or not they too are seeking to intimidate the government and parliament. They may also enter into arrangements which would intimidate the board of trustees. I think the government has to give serious consideration to doing what was done, if I remember correctly, in 1946 when a government controller of shipping was set up. Because unless the board of trustees can get the wholehearted co-operation of the companies as well as the trade unions, then the board of trustees cannot possibly hope to operate with any great degree of success.

I think the government has to deal promptly and aggressively in this matter. Let us just see what has happened in the last 48 hours. The Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) informed the S.I.U. by telegram, according to the press, that this walk-off from the ships constituted an illegal strike, and ordered the men to go back to work. Yet when the member for Winnipeg North asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) this afternoon what he proposed to do about it, he said that if these men have broken the law the responsibility lies with the shipping companies to deal with them. This is not decisive action. For the Minister of Labour to say that this strike is illegal and that the men must go back to work, and for the Minister of Justice to wash his hands of it and say that this is not his responsibility, but that it is up to the shipping companies to act if the seamen have broken their collective agreements and violated the Canada Shipping Act, does not indicate the kind of decisiveness which is going to be needed in the next few days if the trusteeship is going to operate successfully.

I feel that the government should proclaim the legislation. I believe they should set up the board of trustees just as quickly as they can find the right personnel. One of the first things which must be done is to get the necessary information to the members of these unions, and particularly to the S.I.U., making it clear what are the purposes of the trusteeship. I was glad the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) indicated in his remarks some of the things the board of trustees would do. Many of the men who were out in front of the parliament buildings today are genuinely concerned. They have not been given the facts of the case. Some of them fear that they will lose their jobs when the trusteeship comes in. It should be made clear to them by the trustees and the government that they will have job security; that there will be no interference with seniority. One of the functions of a board of trustees will be to go into the company records and establish seniority for these men. These men are afraid that there will not be proper collective bargaining; that the trusteeship will be able to sit down and negotiate any collective bargaining agreement it likes and the men will have to live with it, and that consequently their wages, fringe benefits and their standard of living will be reduced. What the Prime Minister said tonight needs to be emphasized, not just in a speech in the House of Commons but in material sent out to the individual members, namely that these men will still have the right to bargain collectively through their own selected negotiating committees; that they will still have the right to strike legally, provided they comply with the laws of the country; that they will lose none of the rights of a democratic trade union but that, on the contrary, the purpose of the trusteeship is to restore to them the democracy which, in at least one instance, has been taken away from them.

I should like to say to the government that we in the New Democratic party have supported the legislation for setting up a government trusteeship. But I also want to warn the government that we will expect them to make it clear to the trustees that the basic rights of the workers of these five labour unions must be safeguarded and protected. We will consider it one of our tasks in this house to ask questions and raise issues whenever we think this trusteeship is not conducting the affairs of these unions in a democratic and proper manner. The one thing these men do not want is the substitution of one dictatorship for another. What they want, and what I believe they will accept, is a trusteeship designed to act in their best interests, one which will restore to them at the earliest possible date the full democratic rights which every free trade union in a free nation has the right to enjoy.

Neither this house nor the government, Mr. Speaker, need think that by appointing a board of trustees the whole problem will be settled. The government and the board of trustees will have to get the co-operation and confidence of the men. This is my first plea, that everything be done to work with them and to make it clear to them that this trusteeship is not something which is being imposed upon them, but that it is something being done to enable them to develop a democratic union and to improve their living conditions.

The other place where the government will have a great responsibility is in endeavouring to secure the co-operation of the government of the United States, which I hope in turn can secure the co-operation of the United States labour movement, to see to it that Canadian ships in United States ports will be free from harassment and sabotage. This is one of the things that a private trusteeship might have had great difficulty in doing, but at government level the government should be able to exercise all its powers of persuasiveness and representation on the American government, so that Canadian ships manned by whatever seamen and by whatever union can get proper access to American ports, and the rights that they should have in those ports.

May I sum up by saying I do not share the view that the government has dawdled in the matter of dealing with the Norris report. I think that up until now they have taken the wise course of examining and exploring every alternative in the hope that it might not be necessary to take this very radical and far reaching step. But I urge the government now, when all hope of a private trusteeship is gone, not to hesitate any longer but to act decisively and, above all, to act humanely in the interests of the workers concerned.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, we have before the house this evening an amendment which, among other things, contains some tongue twisters, such as "pusillanimous dawdling", the effect of which is to accuse the government of creating a situation which has placed in jeopardy the essential trade of the country. In his opening remarks the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) referred to some of the wording of the amendment as being humorous. On the basis of looking back over the record I think that one could take that viewpoint, if the situation facing the government and parliament today were not so serious.

If there ever was a time when there was need for full support of the government by parliament, it is now. I was extremely proud of the near unanimity of the vote on the trusteeship bill a few days ago. I believe this is an indication to Canadians and those south of the border that there is an almost unanimous determination by parliament to support the government in the action they have taken.

The first question that comes to mind, of course, when considering the amendment is whether supporting the amendment would clean up the mess we now have in the shipping industry. The answer, of course, is no. In my opinion the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) should be commending the government, rather than condemning them, for resisting pressure from the United States. All through the discussions that have taken place in the house there have been continual gibes against the government by the Leader of the Opposition for not standing up to the United States labour unions, their secretary of labour and so on. But now that we have reached the point where the government have gone ahead with their plans to do what they think will clean up the mess, surely if any hon. member should commend them it is the Leader of the Opposition.

I should like to refer to schedule No. 31 of the schedules to the Norris report on the disruption of shipping on the great lakes. That schedule sets out in some detail examples of intimidation and violence based on the evidence given before the commission. It is rather interesting to note that out of a total of 75 incidents referred to in the schedule, 67 of them took place between June, 1957 and April, 1963 when the right hon. gentleman who now leads the opposition had the full power of government to enforce the law. If you go over these cases you will see there was no effort made to enforce the law. What could be more in accord with pusillanimous dawdling than to turn and look the other way when these things were going on, and to allow them to take place? As Mr. Justice Norris said only 12 days after the hearings started, "Without at this time deciding who is responsible for these attacks, these cowardly attacks, it is very difficult for me to understand how in this state of our so-called civilization things of this sort could happen in Canada."

Whether or not the S.I.U. and its executive officers are responsible, these attacks did take place when the right hon. gentleman's government was in office.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): When did knowledge of the facts become evident?

Mr. Olson: The fact is that these things took place all during the years when the right hon. gentleman and his government were responsible for enforcing the law.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Tell us when the evidence became clear.

Mr. Olson: I think it is the responsibility of the government to enforce the law every day.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Surely with proper evidence.

Mr. Olson: I might also say that the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) cannot be entirely excused for delaying in acting on the evidence in the Norris report.

Mr. Smith: Did you get permission to say that?

Mr. Olson: I cannot hear all these interjections, Mr. Speaker. The situation that is facing us today is serious. May I say in closing that if all the charges in the amendment are true of the present government, they were even more true of the government led by the right hon. gentleman who moved the amendment. Like the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas), I too wish to point out in his speech today and all the other speeches he has made on this matter the Leader of the Opposition has never suggested any other alternative action that could have been taken, or could be taken now. I think it is time, therefore, for resolute determination by parliament to support the Minister of Labour in his attempt to do what appears to be the only thing we can do to resolve this problem.

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, when you read the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), you wonder, with good reason, if his parliamentary advisers did their work well. I wonder, in view of the chaos and strife that prevail on the great lakes at the present time, if it is in order—even though the parliamentary procedure allows it—to move an amendment written in such terms?

In my opinion that amendment is not at all in the interest of those who are waiting for us to take action, because all of us without exception in this house have declared ourselves in favor of a settlement by the private companies which deal with the interested unions.

Everyone would have preferred to see the matter settled directly by the employers and the unions in the great lakes area, and if we waited until the last moment, it is because the government was forced to intervene at the request of all members in the house and various Canadian unions.

As a matter of fact, what does the amendment say? I quote:

[Text]

This government, because of its confusion, inconsistency and pusillanimous dawdling and delays in taking effective action has encouraged chaos approaching anarchy to develop on the great lakes, the seaway, and in several Canadian ports, thereby causing disruption in shipping and the placing in jeopardy of essential trade in general, and in particular contracts for delivery of wheat to foreign countries.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we sincerely believe that the present situation did not arise only yesterday or a couple of weeks ago. The trouble already existed between unions and employers and even between the unions themselves on the great lakes. This situation existed when the Conservatives were in office and even before. I find it hard to understand today that such an amendment which blames the government for taking action according to a request to that effect made by the different parties of the house and the unions themselves, should be entertained. I am neither Liberal nor Conservative, but, in my opinion, under the circumstances, we must show some intelligence, and in this case, we have no alternative but to yield to evidence and support the government.

The government waited till the last moment to take action, hoping that the matter would be settled between employers and labour or between the unions themselves.

A dispute arose between American and Canadian unions. Street fights broke out in some towns near the great lakes between members of Canadian and American unions.

However, there is a point on which I insist strongly: the government should see by all possible and conceivable means, that our Canadian unions are subject to no interference from federal and provincial governments in the disputes between employers and employees.

It is not within the province of the government to take the place of the employers, or of the employees or of the unions. The government is merely authorized to ensure good relations between these various groups of our society.

We, of the Social Credit, honestly believe that in this dispute the government is acting the way it should, and in my opinion, the amendment moved by the opposition is neither timely nor wise, and our group will certainly not support it, for this very serious conflict prevailing on the great lakes must be settled in the nearest possible future.

[Text]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Tonight, Mr. Speaker, I shall follow the example of some of the previous speakers and try to be as brief as possible. The amendment charges the government with inconsistency, delays and lack of policy. I think that such an amendment is well founded, and for proof of that one only needs to scan the record of the present administration since it took office. I know that when the much vaunted 60 days of action turned out to be a somewhat less brilliant success than anticipated, some people said that might be understandable. After all, a government must be given time. They have to adapt themselves. They have to acquire the managerial skills. Give them time, and they will prove themselves.

Well, they have had the time. They have had their 60 days and they have had at least 60 days of grace. The recent recess should have been a period of sober second thoughts for the government. Many people thought the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and members of his cabinet would develop those imaginative policies about which the Prime Minister spoke so fluently during his last days in opposition, and during the election campaign, out of which would emerge sound government policies. The Liberal party convinced the people of Canada that they were the only ones who could provide sound government for this country. After those 60 days, Mr. Speaker, and after all that followed those 60 days, I defy the Prime Minister, any member of his cabinet or any member sitting over there to say truthfully that the end result of the new administration has not been a profound disappointment for them. This government has been proven, across the length and breadth of this country, to be amateurish and it has done wrong in practically every field of endeavour into which it has ventured.

I might be accused of speaking in generalities, so it may be a good thing for me to get down to specifics, and one of these specifics is precisely the subject of this amendment. The amendment deals with Canadian-American relations and, Mr. Speaker, if there were any field in which the Canadian people sincerely believed that, by handing over the reins of government to the present Prime Minister and administration, there would be an improvement, it was in that field.

A few months ago the Prime Minister said that during the tenure of office of the previous administration relations between Canada and the United States had been permitted to deteriorate. That is what he said; and he played a leading part last February in bringing about the fall of the previous government. He participated in a debate in this house on February 5, 1963, and as recorded at page 3454 of Hansard for that date he said:

> We want to get back to those days when Canada was so respected, because she did make her own policy.

What has happened since then? The Canadian government is not making its own policy now. It is not making its own international policy in spheres which involve the United States government, and we all know the interference that we have had from that quarter. It is admitted by everyone. For example, the Prime Minister himself said that the interference of Mr. Meany was shocking, but much more grave to my mind was the interference of secretary of labour Wirtz, which the Prime Minister has branded in perhaps the understatement of the year as being less than helpful.

Well, Mr. Speaker, under this weak, hesitant government we do not make our own policies these days. We are not respected because we are not making our own policies. Last February the Prime Minister said that if he assumed office Canada would make her own policies in co-operation and friendship with her allies, but we know the results today. Not only do we not make our own policies with our neighbours, but the government cannot even make up its mind and cannot evolve constructive and definite policies. I defy anyone sitting on the government benches to point out any government in recent times which has backed down more often than the present government from its announced measures both in the budget, in resolutions and in proposed legislation.

Indeed, in modern times there has never been a weaker government in Canada, and one has to go back to the weak Liberal government of Alexander Mackenzie in 1873, almost a century ago, to find a parallel. We all know what happened to that Mackenzie government and how long it took the Liberal party to regain power.

Mr. Speaker, I had intended to be brief but the subject matter flows so abundantly, the examples are so numerous and the mistakes so fantastic that I can hardly pass up this opportunity to review them. I shall deal with but a few and, if I may so express myself, I am only scratching the surface. The Prime Minister laughs, but I would point out that according to a story carried by the Canadian Press and reported in the Ottawa Journal of October 11, 1963, it is stated:

> Canada-U.S. ties strained in 1963. Not-so-friendly neighbours.

Does the Prime Minister really think that this is a laughing matter—a laughing matter for this House of Commons or a laughing matter for the Canadian people? This article is substantiated by a large number of cases in point, all of them uncontroverted, and it refers to the unthinkable, almost incredible blunders of the Minister of Finance in the course of his budget legislation. There was the take-over securities tax from which the government sheepishly withdrew. Was that an example of the sound, constructive leadership which we were led to expect?

An hon. Member: Tell us about the dollar.

Mr. Martineau: Yes, the dollar is another example. Never has a party so blatantly deceived the Canadian people as in this matter of the Canadian dollar. Deny it if you will.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sure my learned and hon. friend will admit that he is going beyond the scope of the amendment now before the house.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, I brought up the subject of the dollar because it was raised in a question by an hon. member opposite. Second, I believe it is very pertinent to this debate, because the debate deals with Canada-American relations, and the rate of our dollar in relation to the American dollar is very pertinent to those relations. However, I shall go on to another subject, because I understand how little government members want to hear about the dollar.

I was referring to articles such as the one I mentioned a moment ago, articles which are being published in periodicals all over the country, articles such as the one in the Economist to which the Leader of the Opposition referred this afternoon. They all show how much the government has lost its touch. How far away in the dim and vague past is the subtle hand of the great diplomat who now occupies the elevated position of Prime Minister of Canada. Where is the astute diplomat now?

An hon. Member: Right here.

Mr. Martineau: Only a few days ago there was another article in the Ottawa Journal on U.S.-Canada relations, written by I. Norman Smith, and headed "Stuntsmanship is not Statesmanship." I hope the Prime Minister and the members of his government have read that article, and that they realize how publicity stunts have recently led to a deterioration of these relations. Perhaps he will take the advice proffered in that article to go back to the ordinary fields of consultation between foreign experts and diplomats of both countries, and thus restore that free, easy and friendly relationship that should exist between Canada and our great neighbour to the south. That is what we in Canada want, but unfortunately that is not what we have received from the government.

In this matter of trusteeship legislation a lot of weakness has been displayed by the government. First we had a report by Mr. Justice Norris that revealed the shocking conditions existing on the great lakes, disruption of shipping, gangsterism, and all the excesses that are brought about by violence and disdain for the law. That was clear enough. Mr. Speaker, that report was brought in. The situation was defined as being urgent, but the government decided to wait. When it received the report, it acted as if it had received a baby from someone else, and it was a most embarrassing thing. It was a package which they did not want to touch.

An hon. Member: Don't you like babies?

Mr. Martineau: I like babies, but I also like a government that acts with a bit of decisiveness. The conduct of the government and the whole course of its decisions pertaining to this trusteeship legislation has displayed once again its lack of policy, its lack of decisiveness. The other opposition parties may think the government has acted in the right way.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martineau: I admit that before placing Canadian unions under trusteeship every other avenue had to be explored. But I think too much time was spent—and I charge the government with this failure—not in sound negotiation, but simply in wishful thinking, in the hope that something would turn up. That something has not turned up and we have had these delays. First there was the delay in receiving the report, second in deciding to do anything about the report, third in implementing the legislation, and now in proclaiming the legislation. Then we had today's demonstration which, according to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), was illegal because it was a walkout which in fact constituted a strike, and a strike that could not be justified under the seamen's contracts and under existing law; and the Prime Minister said the very fact of the march upon Ottawa was a way of exerting undue pressure on the government. The Prime Minister knows and the government know—or they should—that this walkout, coupled with the strike of the longshoremen that caused costly and very serious delays in the delivery of grain shipments to Russia and other countries, is placing our economy in jeopardy; yet they have done nothing up to this time.

The Prime Minister was asked today whether any sanctions would be taken against the union boss and members of the union for their illegal action, for their violation of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act, and he said he will consider that matter. This is as far as they have progressed in this regard. Despite what the other opposition parties may say, is it not logical, is it not almost imperative that the opposition raise this question by proposing the motion of non-confidence which it has proposed? We must do this because it is our role to make the government realize it has mishandled this issue very badly and has completely mishandled the very important, vital question of our relationship with the United States. Our only purpose in bringing this motion forward is to expose that indecision and inconsistency, and to express the hope that some action will be taken and that now the act will be proclaimed.

The Prime Minister said it would be proclaimed tomorrow. I hope it is proclaimed tomorrow. I hope, also, that the trustees will be appointed tomorrow; that the government will not allow unbearable pressure to be exerted upon it in regard to the proclamation and the execution of the provisions of the legislation and the appointment of the trustees. If the past record is any indication, I am afraid there will be further delay and there might also be more backtracking. Having regard to all these circumstances, to the sorry, disappointing performance of the government in every field, particularly in the very vital field of Canada-United States relations, to its hesitancy in permitting a very serious situation in the disruption of shipping to continue and to be aggravated, I think the government can no longer enjoy the confidence of this house. Those at the far end of this side of the house who on past occasions, when embarrassing questions have been raised, have abstained from voting, should support this motion. Surely, also, the Social Credit party, be it one group or another—those who say they are in favour of free enterprise, of democratic rights and all the rest—should also be the first to support this motion, because I know it is supported by the facts and by a large body of public opinion across this land.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. J. C. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, if it is the wish of the house that the question be now considered, I am prepared not to speak on the matter.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner) wants to speak.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I believe Your Honour recognized the hon. member for Hamilton East (Mr. Munro).

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, it does seem to be necessary to prolong the debate on the motion put by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker). I would think that to every reasonable, thinking member of this house the putting of a motion of this kind amply points out the utter futility that must be rampant in the opposition benches. It points out two prominent phenomena, to my mind, after listening to the Leader of the Opposition. First, it does seem strange that this non-confidence motion is based on a criticism of the government's handling of the labour strike and the S.I.U. It seems so strange because very influential and diverse components in our society—and I might say, opposing components in our society—such as the labour movement on the one hand and certainly the business interests on the other hand, seem to unanimously approve the government's action in this regard. Therefore it seems strange that on an issue such as this, where the government is to a great degree obtaining support from all walks of life and even from opposing groups in regard to this issue, it should be this issue upon which the opposition desires to bring down the government. To my way of thinking it indicates just how desperate is the opposition to find an issue at this stage. It certainly points out what a fantastic waste of time there is in this parliament when we have sunk to the level of debating frivolous issues such as this.

Another trend which became apparent during the speech of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) was that he was prepared to bring this government down on the basis of the restrained and moderate action it has taken as far as the labour situation is concerned. We have endeavoured, not only in the course of this trusteeship legislation but throughout the longshoremen's strike, to work out a voluntary rather than an imposed solution. This, to my way of thinking, is the antithesis of bureaucratic, arrogant action. Yet, apparently, the right hon. gentleman would prefer to bring down this government because it did not impose a public trusteeship by bureaucratic action months ago, before giving the individuals and the authorities concerned an opportunity to work the matter out. He considered, apparently, that the government should have moved in immediately. Had they done so, we can almost hear the screams of protest about bureaucracy. This situation makes it clear, in my opinion, how ridiculous is a motion such as we now find before us. It is not difficult in these circumstances to understand the lack of enthusiasm on the part of the right hon. gentleman's followers today. We all recognize what a fearful waste of time this lack of confidence motion really is. Indeed, it makes a mockery of the procedures of this house.

Today we heard the leader of the New Democratic party speak out in support of the action which has been taken by the government. The members of the N.D.P. hold themselves out as being the friends of labour, and they say they support the measured and restrained action this government has taken. I should like to read, from an article which appeared in the Globe and Mail less than a week ago. It is from an editorial which appeared in the issue of October 16 under the heading "Strong Performance":

> When negotiation for a private trusteeship of Canadian maritime transport unions broke down last week, labour minister Allan J. MacEachen and the Canadian Labour Congress were subjected to outspoken and unreasonable criticism by United States labor secretary Willard Wirtz and Mr. George Meany, president of the American Federation of Labour-Congress of Industrial Organizations.
> Legislation to establish government trusteeship over the unions moved irrevocably through the House of Commons despite the U.S. criticism.
> A strike by the international longshoremen's association crippled four St. Lawrence river ports and threatened to wreck the Canada-Russia grain deal. A mediator appointed by Mr. MacEachen moved into the picture and settled a strike that could have led to compulsory arbitration or more drastic federal government action.

Let us see how clearly the next paragraph is at variance with what the Leader of the Opposition had to say:

> Mr. MacEachen, a 41-year-old former professor of economics, held a steady course under the strongest pressure of his political career. The I.L.A. settlement promises three years of peace. The trusteeship legislation shows strength of purpose to clean up the tangled waterfront mess according to the letter and spirit of the report by Mr. Justice T. G. Norris, who defined the problem and suggested the solution.
> Members of Prime Minister Lester Pearson's cabinet have not always performed well under political fire. In a portfolio that needs a man with the confidence of the labour movement and the strength to deal with labour fearlessly, Mr. MacEachen's record so far gives reason for optimism for the future.

There we have an editorial dealing with the government's record and calling attention to this aspect as one of the brightest places in that record. Against such a background it becomes nonsense for the Leader of the Opposition to waste the time of this house by bringing in a want of confidence motion of the kind now before us, when there is ample evidence, from what has appeared in the press, and from what has been said by the leader of the New Democratic party, that the action taken by the government on this issue was restrained, and all that could be expected. So the exercise we see today seems a futile one.

Another reflection which occurred to me while I listened to the speech of the Leader of the Opposition was this: here is a man who for years has set himself up as a champion of the rights of the individual. Yet he inferred at the time of the longshoremen's strike last week that he wanted the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) to move in and impose compulsory arbitration before giving the parties themselves an opportunity to reach an agreed solution. As it turned out—probably to the disappointment of the Leader of the Opposition—the strike was settled without there being bureaucratic governmental intervention of the kind which the right hon. gentleman is supposed to detest so much. This speech comes from the man who is the author of the bill of rights. It is strange that a man responsible for a bill guaranteeing the rights of individuals should advocate compulsory arbitration before the parties concerned could work out a solution. This type of thinking was in evidence not only with regard to the longshoremen's strike but also to this trusteeship legislation. He would have had a solution imposed months ago before the parties had had a chance to settle the problem on a private basis. Should this be the attitude of a man who champions the rights of individuals? The bill of rights talks about freedom of association. Well, we have only to consider the longshoremen's strike last week. Here was a legal strike. The men started months ago going through all the conciliation processes available to them, until the time came then they had the legal right to strike. Before they had been out for two days the Leader of the Opposition wanted this government to move in and impose compulsory arbitration.

On this basis, we see how contradictory and frivolous was the speech made this afternoon by the Leader of the Opposition. I suggest the attitude of his followers amply indicates that there is no sincerity behind this particular want of confidence motion and I hope it will be disposed of as quickly as possible.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, we seem to be in a position where we are being lectured for bringing in an amendment to a supply motion. I understood that it was the leader of the house who proclaimed what the business would be. I thought it was he who laid down that there would be a supply motion every week, from now on, until they were all through.

We in the opposition are merely taking advantage of an opportunity which is rightfully ours. In doing so we have chosen to discuss a situation which is of the utmost importance to the economy of Canada today. We are taking advantage of this occasion to show the people of Canada why this particular situation has arisen, and who are responsible for this meaningless bungling or mishandling of the shipping problem on the great lakes. This is our rightful duty. It is our purpose. The hon. member for Hamilton East (Mr. Munro) can call it a frivolous issue if he likes. The Prime Minister can sit in his place and laugh about the problem facing Canada today, if he feels it is a laughing matter. The hon. member from Hamilton can call any issue affecting the economy of the country from coast to coast a frivolous issue, if he pleases. That may be his duty here; I do not know. However, I feel that as a representative of western Canada and of all Canada I should point out that corrective measures were not taken when they should have been taken to ensure the movement of exports from this country.

I should like to point out to the house that the great lakes shipping season will soon be drawing to a close. Is this bill going to be proclaimed at Christmas time when the issue is no longer of paramount importance owing to the freeze-up of the great lakes? We go along with the leader of the New Democratic party who commends the constructive purposes of the legislation. But why was the legislation necessary in the first place? We were told at the end of July that the legislation was ready to be brought in. But two months went by. Personally, I thought that two months would be all right, that perhaps it needed two months to get the various unions together and to a point where they could agree that the problem should be solved. But because of continued interference from across the line we got nowhere. I do not say that maliciously. We in western Canada are very fond of our neighbours to the south, but it is obvious that in recent months United States-Canadian relationships have not been too friendly. One has to look only at the headline of the Financial Post of October 19, 1963, to see the heading: "White House now thinks Canada is just a nuisance". Perhaps the Prime Minister called the President two or three times too often. Why should he have to call him at all? We are dealing with a Canadian matter of concern to our economy and exports. Some people laugh and call it a frivolous issue. Our wheat exports are tied up owing to meaningless bungling on the part of this government.

This whole issue should have been solved. It is all very well for the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) to tell us to pick up the Norris report and look at table 31 for the evidence. The evidence is certainly there. The report was tabled not too long ago; we now want action. Why has not the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) laid some charges on the evidence adduced before the Norris commission? He has been asked several times about this, and prompted and prodded by questions in the house, but no action has been forthcoming. The government waited till the eleventh hour, until the dispute was irreconcilable. There is a headline in today's Globe and Mail which says: "S.I.U. ordered by Ottawa to halt the walk out at once". Anyone with any experience in handling men or experience in public relations or diplomacy would admit that handling people is perhaps the finest test of diplomacy. We know what a great diplomat the Prime Minister is held out to be, but the government brings in legislation which orders the S.I.U. to do things. You cannot order a group of men, Mr. Speaker, to do something and expect to receive their co-operation. You cannot order a group of men to go back to work.

The government had two months, from August to October, to get these groups together. But what did they do? They listened to Mr. Meany and Mr. Wirtz of the United States. They contacted the President several times. They dealt with Mr. Jodoin. But at no time are we told that they made actual efforts to get the five unions concerned together so that agreement could be reached. I do not know much about labour unions or labour matters—

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): It is always nice to know that someone is listening to you, Mr. Speaker—but I can say that two years ago the non-ops on the railroads were threatening to strike, and the government of that day brought in legislation, but before doing so made sure the union heads would agree to abide by it.

What are we told about the legislation recently passed? We are now waiting for it to be proclaimed. But according to the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) the worst is yet to come. Not too long ago in the house he made that statement. This should all have been taken care of before now. The farmers of western Canada do not think this is a frivolous matter when their livelihood is at stake and the export of their prime product is held up. According to a late issue of the Union Farmer, a paper put out by the farmers' union of Saskatchewan, a call is made for more judicial settlement of this strike. That is a surprising thing to see in a Saskatchewan farmers' union paper, but the people are fed up and want the matter resolved. But it should not be handled in the meaningless bungling way of ordering people to go back to work. That is the worst thing which could be done with the S.I.U. men in their present frame of mind.

We have heard a lot of talk about voluntary trusteeship and the consultations had with Mr. Jodoin. Surprisingly enough we have not heard about the five other labour unions being consulted. Mr. Jodoin said the other day that a voluntary trusteeship is impossible now. The Prime Minister comes into the house today and tells us it is impossible; he accepts Mr. Jodoin's statement. Whether it is correct or not I do not know, but I do feel that there has been a great deal of meaningless bungling with regard to the handling of this whole issue. May I call it ten o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, before you call it ten o'clock I wonder if I could have the unanimous consent of the house to revert to motions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Has the Secretary of State unanimous consent to revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REFERENCE OF DEPARTMENTAL ESTIMATES TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State) moved:

That the items listed in the main and supplementary estimates for 1963-64 relating to the Department of Veterans Affairs presented to this house at the present session be withdrawn from the committee of supply and referred to the standing committee on veterans affairs, saving always the powers of the committee of supply in relation to the voting of public moneys.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: May I ask the house leader what the business is for tomorrow and Wednesday?

Mr. Pickersgill: Tomorrow we will go on with this debate. Should the debate end before ten o'clock we would like to finish the vocational training resolution if we could. If that were finished we would go on with the debate on the Income Tax Act. The Income Tax Act would be the business for Wednesday also and from then on until it was completed except, of course, for Thursday and Friday evenings when, by understanding, we are to take estimates.

It being three minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, October 22, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. SPEAKER—STATEMENT ON QUESTION RAISED BY MEMBER FOR GREY-BRUCE

Mr. Speaker: On October 17, in the course of proceedings, the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler) rising on a question of privilege stated in part as follows:

Yesterday—

That was Wednesday, October 16.

—a motion for the production of papers was on the order paper, motion No. 99, and there was an extended discussion with regard to the existence of a certain document. In the course of that discussion it was stated by the Postmaster General that this document did not exist. These words are to be found in Hansard at page 3626. A little earlier the Secretary of State also stated that the document did not exist. This was in accord with discussions which took place during consultation between the Secretary of State and the Post Office Department.

For the benefit of the house and the country, I have such a document before me now. As a matter of fact it is a copy of the document in question the production of which was requested under the terms of motion No. 99. If the house so desires I am prepared to table it, and that would end the discussion.

Later the hon. gentleman went on to say:

If I may say a further word, the main point at this juncture is not whether the list which I have is authentic, though I believe it to be so. It is that the Secretary of State misled the house yesterday when he said this particular document did not exist. Also, if the words of the Secretary of State were clear, and I believe they were, then of course the Postmaster General had misled the Secretary of State as he misled the entire house.

As the hon. gentleman implied, there were two points involved in this question. If the house will permit, I would like to deal first with the question of whether a private member may table a document. Citation 209, Beauchesne's fourth edition, states in part:

Papers are laid before the house in pursuance of
(1) Provisions of an act of parliament;
(2) An order of the house;
(3) An address to the crown;
(4) The command of the crown;
(5) Standing orders of the house.

According to this citation no member can table a document, as in the present circumstances, unless there is some authority for such action. I think the hon. gentleman from Grey-Bruce tacitly admitted this fact when he asked for unanimous consent to table the document.

The second point raised by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce is that the hon. Postmaster General as well as the Secretary of State misled the house when they stated that such a document did not exist. I must say that after looking over the record the difficulty would appear to be a difference of opinion. On the one hand it is asserted that no such document had been prepared and does not exist, while on the other hand the hon. member for Grey-Bruce has a document which he contends is a copy thereof. In other words there is a dispute as to facts.

In this regard I would like to refer to citation 113, Beauchesne's fourth edition, where it is stated in part as follows:

—a dispute arising between two members, as to allegations of facts, does not fulfil the conditions of parliamentary privilege.

Therefore in my opinion a prima facie breach of privilege does not arise in this instance.

CARRIAGE BY AIR ACT

AMENDMENTS TO CONFORM TO PROTOCOL TO WARSAW CONVENTION

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport) moved the first reading of Bill No. S-37 (from the Senate), to amend the Carriage by Air Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

HAINES ROAD—ANNOUNCEMENT OF MAINTENANCE DURING WINTER

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether before the orders of the day are called I might have the permission of the house to revert to motions just to make a brief announcement. On a number of occasions questions have been raised in the house with regard to the Haines road, and for this reason I should now like to make a short statement on this subject.

The government has today decided not to close the Haines road this winter, subject of course to satisfactory negotiations in respect of the technical requirements necessary to effect such a policy. Keeping open the road during the winter months will be in the nature of a trial for one year to determine the feasibility of maintaining this road on a year round basis. The project will involve the co-operation not only of several government departments, including the Departments of Northern Affairs, Public Works and National Defence, but it will also require negotiation with the government of the United States.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, may I just reply very briefly. I thank the minister for his announcement and for the decision which has been made to keep the Haines road open. His announcement will be welcomed most heartily by the people in the Yukon, I am sure, by the people in Alaska, and in fact all up and down the Pacific northwest coast where there is now, as he knows, a very successful ferry system in operation.

I hope the experiment leads to a decision by the department to keep the road open on a permanent basis. I am sure the minister and his colleagues in the government will find that it will be economically feasible and will introduce an economic viability in that part of the country and in Alaska which does not now exist.

I thank the minister very much for his consideration, also the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the minister of northern affairs I would like to direct my question to the Minister of National Defence in connection with a statement he made this morning, the last sentence of which points out that the prospect of keeping the Haines road cut-off open will require the co-operation of Departments of Northern Affairs, Public Works, National Defence, and also of the government of the United States. As the minister knows, the United States portion of the road is maintained during the winter, so that only the Canadian portion is involved here.

I have several times asked the minister of northern affairs this same question. Has the government decided to accept the offer of the Alaska authorities to keep the Canadian section of the road open with United States personnel and equipment, with the state of Alaska back-billing the Canadian authorities for this service?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think what is implied in that last sentence is the question of the terms and conditions under which some arrangement could be worked out with the state of Alaska.

[Mr. Hellyer.]

Mr. Nielsen: May I ask a supplementary question. Have the terms and conditions finally been worked out?

Mr. Hellyer: Not yet, Mr. Speaker.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

OFFICIAL NAME OF NEW GROUP IN HOUSE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): On a question of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like Your Honour to inform the house by what nomenclature we should refer to the new group sitting at the far left of the chamber when we wish to refer to them in debate in the house.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the reply should come from the hon. member for Villeneuve, but I believe it was agreed upon this morning. If I may express it in my poor French, it is Ralliement Creditiste or Social Credit Rally.

REQUEST FOR YEAR ROUND EMPLOYMENT OF MEMBERS' SECRETARIES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. P. Antoine Belanger (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Secretary of State?

Is the Secretary of State in a position to inform the house whether the working conditions of members' secretaries will be improved, and whether changes are being considered so that they may remain the year round in the members' service?

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I will have a look at the question when it appears in Hansard and see what I can say in reply.

UNITED NATIONS

CANADIAN VOTE ON ADMISSION OF COMMUNIST CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I should like to ask the minister why the Canadian delegation voted yesterday against the admission of mainland China to the United Nations.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the draft resolution which was introduced this year was sponsored by Albania and not, as usual, by the Soviet union. While the Soviet union and India, which have at various times in the past taken the lead in trying to secure a change in Chinese representation, promised to vote in favour of the draft resolution and indeed did so, it is notable that they did not sponsor the resolution this year.

The draft resolution which was presented provided for two things, the seating of representatives from communist China and the expulsion of representatives from the nationalist Chinese government. As Canadian representatives have said in recent years, the Canadian government is ready to consider carefully any proposal to settle equitably the question of Chinese representation; but an equitable solution, among other factors, must preserve for the people of Formosa the right to self determination. This year's resolution did not make such provision; therefore the Canadian delegation could not and did not support it. I believe the vote demonstrated that the majority of the United Nations member states shared the point of view of the government of Canada.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question. Could I ask the minister why the Canadian delegation did not move an amendment providing for the seating of mainland China and also for representation in the United Nations for Formosa?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the answer must be clear to my hon. friend. The reason the delegation did not is that it did not receive instructions accordingly from the government of Canada.

Mr. Douglas: Could I ask why the secretary of state was so derelict in his duty?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure my hon. friend does not mean that. My hon. friend knows that in this particular instance the Secretary of State for External Affairs was not derelict in his duty.

COMMONWEALTH SEAT ON SECURITY COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he can advise the house what is the position regarding a commonwealth seat on the security council. There has been some question raised in this regard, and it would be most important that the commonwealth have representation on the security council.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman gave me notice of his intention to ask this question yesterday. It is the desire of the government to see that there should be an expansion of the security council to take into account the needs of the newer members, and an expansion of the other councils of the United Nations as well.

It would be regrettable if, in the redistribution that followed such an expansion, the commonwealth were not given a seat. This would be unfortunate not only from the point of view of the commonwealth as such but from the point of view of the newer African and Asian members of the commonwealth. As yet there has been no decision on the matter, but my hon. friend may be assured that it is being pursued diligently.

[Later:]

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question related to the one asked by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition a few moments ago. It concerns the commonwealth seat on the security council. Having regard to the reply given by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, could he tell us whether the Canadian delegation is doing its best to protect the commonwealth seat, in view of the great pressures to remove some of the present incumbents on the security council, before the council is itself expanded? I refer to the pressure to remove perhaps one of the Latin American delegations, one of the eastern European delegations and perhaps the commonwealth one.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, sir.

LABOUR RELATIONS

GREAT LAKES—PROPOSED MEETING BETWEEN MINISTER AND HAL BANKS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the request by Mr. Banks for a meeting with the Minister of Labour, and the minister's reply to the effect that such a meeting could be arranged if the S.I.U. crews went back to work, could the minister give us an inkling of what are the possibilities of such a meeting and what actually is the purpose of such a meeting?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I intend later in the day to take part in the debate now before the house, and I will be glad to go into some detail with respect to the conversation which I had with Mr. Banks.

Mr. Starr: A supplementary question. In view of the reluctance of S.I.U. crews to get back to work, and as a result the tie-up of operations on the lakes, is the government planning to do anything, or is a time limit being set for this walkout after which the government would do something, to make sure that operations on the great lakes will be resumed?

Mr. MacEachen: I will also deal with that point, Mr. Speaker.

TRUSTEESHIP LEGISLATION—CO-OPERATION OF U.S. GOVERNMENT AND UNIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister, but in his absence I will direct it to the deputy prime minister. Can he assure the house that United States A.F.L.-C.I.O. trade unions and the United States government will co-operate in ensuring that this public trusteeship, which I hope will be proclaimed soon, will be enforced in the United States so as to restore shipping on the great lakes?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I understand the rules of the house the government is responsible for actions under its own jurisdiction. Unfortunately, I cannot answer a question dealing with another jurisdiction.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): A supplementary question. Has the Prime Minister of this country, who is in close collaboration with the President of the United States, received an assurance that the law of the land will be enforced regarding shipping on the great lakes?

Mr. Chevrier: The Prime Minister of this country made it quite clear yesterday what are his intentions with reference to the trusteeship, and I have nothing to add to what he said.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I was going to ask the Minister of Labour a question, but he has already stated that a reply will be given later in the debate today so I will not ask the question.

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—INQUIRY INTO LONGSHOREMEN'S PENSION FUND

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour?

In view of the rumours going around to the effect that the longshoremen could resume their strike should the government not carry out the requests and recommendations of Judge Lafleur regarding a royal commission of inquiry into the administration of the Shipping Federation of Canada, could the minister tell us whether he intends to carry out the recommendations of Judge Lafleur so that a resuming of the strike by the longshoremen may be averted?

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): The mediator, Judge Lippe, apparently included in his proposals to the parties the institution of an inquiry by the federal Department of Labour. We had not received the report from Judge Lippe, and until we had done so it was obviously impossible for us to take such action. We have now received the report, and a commission of inquiry has been appointed.

Mr. Valade: Will the minister consider setting up a royal commission of inquiry—

Some hon. Members: He has done so.

Mr. Valade: —into this pension scheme as was expected by the federation?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, the government has taken action. The only way in which this could be done under the labour laws was to appoint a commissioner to inquire into the matter, and this has been done.

Mr. Balcer: Would the minister tell us the name of the commissioner?

Mr. MacEachen: I understand that Judge Lippe has accepted this further responsibility.

TRADE

WHEAT—POSSIBLE TRANSFER TO U.S. OF PART OF RUSSIAN CONTRACT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce regarding press reports from Washington to the effect that Russian trade negotiations going on there indicate that it is possible that part of the Canadian wheat contract with the Soviet union may be transferred to United States buyers as a result of the failure of Canadian deliveries of wheat. Is the minister in a position to assure the house that delivery of wheat under the contract with the U.S.S.R. is being maintained without interruption, and that no part of the Canadian contract is going to be transferred to the United States?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, in the contract between the U.S.S.R. and the Canadian wheat board there is, of course, the ordinary strike provision, but other than that there are no provisions under which any part of the contract would not be delivered.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is the minister's view in this regard? Is there any ground for this report from Washington to the effect that there is a possibility, if not a strong one, that a portion of this contract will be detoured to the United States?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I know of no such possibility or doubts. The Canadian wheat board has every intention of fulfilling this contract, and as far as we know the U.S.S.R. has every intention of fulfilling its side of the bargain.

[Later:]

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Yesterday I asked the minister a question in reference to the quantity of grain delivered under the contract between the Canadian wheat board and the U.S.S.R. What quantity has actually and physically been delivered from Canadian ports under that contract?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, following this request yesterday I spoke to the Canadian wheat board, who have informed me that according to the board of grain commissioners, which publishes the figures monthly, the total amount shipped up to the end of September was 5,100,000 bushels; that is, from Canada to the U.S.S.R. It would be possible, of course, for the Canadian wheat board to give detailed figures, I suppose up to a couple of days ago, but the wheat board does not think it would be in its interests as a marketing agency to give figures as recent as that. It prefers, therefore—and I hope the hon. gentleman will agree—to follow the usual practice of publishing them when they are released by the board of grain commissioners.

SUGAR

ACTION TAKEN WITH RESPECT TO RISING PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce on behalf of the housewives of Canada. In view of the announcement by the sugar refineries of an increase in the price of sugar of $1.10 per hundred, would the minister inform the house what action the government intends to take to prevent this continued milking of the Canadian consumer by the sugar monopolies?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I gave an answer to a similar question yesterday regarding recent trends in sugar prices, and I do not think there is much I can add to what I said yesterday. Prices in Canada are following those in international markets. The question of what action might be taken seems to me to relate, as far as the powers of this government are concerned, to possible action under the Combines Investigation Act, about which my colleague the Minister of Justice might like to say a word.

[Later:]

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce, related to that asked earlier by the hon. member for Kootenay West about the sugar price situation. Will the government give consideration to calling a conference of the Canadian sugar refining companies with a view to encouraging a voluntary stabilization of the prices?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I shall give consideration to the hon. gentleman's suggestion, but I do not really think such a conference would produce very much by way of useful results, and I would not wish any such impression to be created.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice?

My question is related to that put by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Prittie) to the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Can the minister tell us if he is considering the possibility of setting up an investigation to find out if the sugar dealers in Canada have conspired together to make the price of sugar fluctuate so wildly? Such action would reassure the Canadian housewives and their husbands, of course.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I already answered a similar question asked by the same member last June 13, I think.

I fail to see what I could add except this. As the hon. member knows already, the prices of sugar are determined, to a large extent, by international conditions on which Canada has no control. On the other hand, the director of research of the Combines Investigation Act administration has some jurisdiction in the matter, and he is following the situation closely at the present time.

[Text]

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether it is correct that sugar grown in Canada has also been increased in price just as though it were being imported from outside this country. Has his restrictive trade practices branch investigated this matter to see whether this is in contravention of the combines investigation legislation?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend knows, the director of the restrictive trade practices branch of the department is keeping this whole situation under active surveillance. All I can say in answer to the question is that should any aspect of this situation give the director reason to believe that an offence against the act has been committed, he will take the action that the statute requires.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary question I would ask the minister whether in so far as western Canadian beet sugar is concerned, which is refined at Winnipeg and Lethbridge, the people in western Canada are being penalized by having to pay the world sugar price, plus freight charges, as if the sugar was shipped from Montreal, when in fact it is coming from one or other of those two refineries.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I think I would have to take this question as notice. I will try and give a reply tomorrow.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

CONSTRUCTION IN CANADA OF NEW PLANES TO BE ACQUIRED

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport.

In view of the economic importance of the possible purchase of aircraft for Canada through Trans-Canada Airlines, is the minister making the necessary representations to the crown corporation so that they select the aircraft that will provide employment to the largest possible number of Canadians?

[Text]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): As I have indicated on other occasions, this question of employment for Canadians will be considered when a decision is taken concerning what aircraft, if any, are to be bought.

[Translation]

Mr. Lessard: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

In view of the fact that the decision concerning the purchase of those aircraft will apparently be made today or tomorrow, does not the minister consider those pressures and representations to be very urgent?

[Text]

Mr. McIlraith: No, Mr. Speaker. The decision will not be made today or tomorrow. I anticipate it will be some considerable time before a decision is made.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

BRANTFORD, ONT.—DESIGNATION AS DISTRESSED AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry. In view of the report in the Globe and Mail today that the city of Brantford went over the top and was the first city in Canada to reach its objective in the 1963 community chest campaign, would the minister reconsider his decision to leave Brantford on the list of depressed areas in Canada?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): I am sure we all congratulate the city of Brantford on being so generous in the philanthropic field. However, I cannot quite see what relationship this has to the rate of economic growth.

AGRICULTURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Athabasca): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Will the minister inform the house whether or not he participated in a cattle auction at Kingston on Tuesday, October 15?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): I shall be glad to answer that question, because there seems to be some concern about my activities and commitments outside the house. Last Tuesday I left Ottawa at 11 o'clock and flew down to Kingston in a plane which I paid for. I sold about 50 head of cattle for 50 dairy breeders in Ontario who contribute to a sale each year advertising their artificial insemination unit.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hays: This is a field of science which some of the hon. members here do not seem to know about.

I might say that there were about 700 or 800 farmers present at this sale, and they represent the best breeders we have in eastern Ontario. I promised them over a year ago that I would conduct this sale for them. I have always lived up to my commitments, and will continue to do so. I might say, too, that it was an excellent sale and was productive of the highest returns of any sale that has been held in eastern Ontario. The breeders were very pleased. I returned to the house at half past four and on three different occasions tried to get up to speak, but I was not permitted to do so. No other member from this side of the house was allowed to speak until the vote at a quarter after eight. The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm was doing a lot of talking, but there was not much to listen to.

Before I sit down I should like to inform the house that I am going to conduct some more sales. I should like the house to know about this because I am committed to them.

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): I rise on a point of order. The minister was asked a simple question, and a yes or no answer could have been given.

Mr. Speaker: The minister was just about to conclude.

Mr. Hays: Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I conducted another sale which is called the "all-Canadian sale", and in which Senator Harry Willis had an outstanding animal, as did Dr. Rynard. These cattle usually come from all over Canada and there were people at the sale from the Argentine, Italy and West Germany. They come from all over the world to buy these cattle. I should like hon. members to know that we have the finest Holstein cattle in the world. I had the opportunity of selling these cattle before I became a member, and I am not going to stop now.

Mr. Bigg: I should like to ask a supplementary question, though I hesitate to do so even though it is relevant to this subject. Will the Minister of Agriculture say whether the statement made by the Prime Minister as recorded in Hansard for October 16, 1963, page 3632 is correct:

> The Minister of Agriculture and his associate, having taken part in this debate on agriculture, left the house to attend engagements previously undertaken for the Minister of Agriculture with farmers of Canada in the west.

Mr. Hays: I should like to answer that. I was at the grass roots in the morning, and I was in western Canada that evening at nine o'clock.

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): I should like to ask the Prime Minister or the minister acting in his absence a question. In view of the editorial in yesterday's Globe and Mail—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Kindt: —is the Prime Minister giving consideration to the appointment of not an eastern or western but a third minister of agriculture, to sit in the House of Commons when agricultural matters are being discussed?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): This question was answered by the Prime Minister, to the effect that there is legislation on the order paper and in due course it will be considered by the house.

Mr. Kindt: May I ask a supplementary question. I mentioned a third minister of agriculture to sit in the house. The question is unanswered.

[Later:]

Mr. Clement Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement made a few minutes ago by the Minister of Agriculture I wish to rise on a question of personal privilege and put on the record the exact facts. Last Tuesday I spoke from twenty minutes to five until twenty minutes after five.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Vincent: The Minister of Agriculture came into the house at the end of my remarks and not at 4.30.

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Secretary of State has risen on a point of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: My point of order, Mr. Speaker, is that there does not appear to be anything that has happened in the last few minutes which would occasion or give any excuse for the raising of a question of privilege about something that took place several days ago in this house, and there is a rule of the house—
