The playing was resumed at ten o'clock on Thursday in the great match between the men's singles, 18 holes, which resulted as follows:

St. John won by three holes, tying their opponent's score of the day before.

In the early part of the afternoon the mixed foursomes were played, Charlottetown winning by one hole.

An interesting feature of the tournament was the driving, approaching and putting competitions later in the afternoon. All the ladies and gentlemen participated, and the contest was watched by a very large number of spectators. The ladies' driving competition resulted in a tie between Miss E. A. Smith and Miss Hazzard, which being the case, the driving for the victory for the St. John lady.

The victory is a noteworthy one, played as it was on the Victoria grounds, and against their best players, including the winner of the Ottawa tournament.

The St. Johns started in the third inning with a rather small crowd. The playing at times was anything but good.

Two singles, three errors, base on balls and a pass ball were responsible for the visitors making three runs in the second inning. This finished them, and for the home team innings only two men got as far as the second base.

The St. Johns started in the third inning with four runs. Two two baggers, a single, a scratch hit and two errors, being responsible for the fifth three hits and an error netted two more for St. John.

Two errors, a wild pitch, a single and a runner hit gave them three more runs in the sixth inning. Three singles and an error scored the home team two more runs, making their total 11. D. McBeath substituted Burns in the box for the visitors in the seventh inning.

Case pitched good ball. He was found safe six times and struck out eleven.

Larry faltered a trifle, Stone moved past him. These two men have three players above them, but they have not played regularly.

The American League now has six men who have made more than one hundred hits, Chase of New York, and Hemphill of St. Louis, are still pasting the hide to uncoupled parts of the field.

Hemphill leads the league in stolen bases and is tied with Keeler in run getting.

Wagner, Pittsburg's heavy hitting short stop, is the first National League batsman to make 100 safe drives, Hans made a century during last week, and as a result he retains the batting lead of the league, although two players who have taken part in comparatively few games, have higher percentages.

Wagner is also second to Frank Chance, of Chicago, in run getting and base stealing. Leever leads the pitchers in games won and Lush excels for the Phillies.

NORTH END CHURCH LEAGUE.

Last evening on the Shamrock grounds the St. Luke's again added another game to their credit by defeating the Success team by a score of 5 to 7. Alchorn pitched good ball for St. Luke's, while Barnes of the Success team retired in favor of Watson, who finished the game in good style. The game lasted four innings and was watched by a large crowd. The game by innings:

TENNIS

N. S. TOURNAMENT.

The annual tournament of the Nova Scotia Tennis Association will commence on August 6th next. It will be remembered that G. H. F. Plummer, representing the Sydney club, won the provincial championship last year, but it is unlikely that he will defend his title this season. It is hoped, however, that C. H. Ross and H. H. Jost will represent the local club at the meet and in that case the chances are that not only will the singles title be retained, but that the doubles championship will be annexed also. Mr. Ross, who was Mr. Plummer's partner last season, was called home before the completion of the tournament, owing to bereavement in his family, and had to default his games in the singles, as well as in the doubles. Mr. Jost was out of the games altogether last year on account of an injured knee, but is now completely recovered, and with a few practices will be back to his old form.

The local handicap tournaments will begin on the club grounds on Saturday. The events will consist of ladies' singles and doubles, men's singles and doubles and mixed doubles. Entries for these events close Thursday night, and it is hoped that before that time a large number of entries will be received. The events will, doubtless, prove very interesting, as the handicap committee are well acquainted with the form of the various players, and will arrange the handicaps accordingly.

BOSTON, July 27.—Two matches in singles and three in doubles were played in the Longwood tennis tournament today and the expected happened in each contest.

The survivors in the doubles, H. H. Hackett and F. B. Alexander of New York, will meet W. J. Clothier of Philadelphia and W. A. Larned of Summit, N. J., for the eastern championship tomorrow. The former pair won a year ago at Longwood.

In the singles tournament for the Longwood cup W. J. Clothier and Karl H. Behr of New Haven, are left to fight for the honor of challenging W. A. Larned, the present holder of the cup. This match will be played Monday evening owing to Clothier's engagement with the doubles tomorrow, while the challenge match will be played Tuesday.

YACHTING

MOTOR RACE TODAY.

It was expected that there would be two motor boat races at the fall regatta, but the class of boats of thirty feet water line and over did not fill. The entries received for the other class of under thirty feet are as follows:

Racing No. Name. Owner.

1	Corona.....	F. H. J. Ruel.
2	Secunda (launch).....	H. Thomson.
3	Trump.....	Fred. C. Jones.
4	Unknown.....	Geo. McArthur.
5	Hobo.....	Walter W. Leonard.
6	Dart.....	Fred. A. Jones.
7	Idler.....	S. L. Emerson.
8	Marconi.....	J. J. Everett Walters.

In addition to the international races of the road the following special races will be observed:

1 Boats must allow at least six (6) feet of clear water between the bows and the stern (whether in same class or not).

2 A boat in the lead shall not change its course to prevent a boat astern from passing, or so as to compel a boat astern to come within the six-foot limit.

3 When approaching a mark a leading boat must keep outside the side of the mark, and give an overhauled boat room to turn the mark provided the overhauled boat has established an overtake.

Each boat must carry a metal plate, at least twelve inches long and eight inches wide, painted white, with the racing number in black on it, at the top of a flagstaff in such a way that the plate stands fore and aft.

A racing number will be allotted to each boat entering, and the plate corresponding may be obtained from the rear-commander at cost.

The course is as follows:

Starting off club wharf, thence through the northeast channel to a buoy in the centre of the Kennebecasis of Sandy Point, thence to a buoy in the mouth of the Millisick chops, thence to Millisickville by the western channel, leaving all buoys and Indian Island on the port hand; the starting line will be crossed again, and the same course sailed over the second time, leaving all buoys and Indian Island on the port hand, and finishing off the club wharf.

The start will be as for sail yachts in Regulation X, as amended May, 1905. Fifteen minutes before the time of starting the following flags of the club signal code shall be hoisted as a preparatory flag for the yachts of each successive race:

S. of code for first race.

Y. of code for second race.

Five minutes before the start the preparatory flag shall be lowered, and the yachts shall be amenable to the rules.

At the expiration of five minutes exactly the blue peter shall be hoisted and a gun fired as a signal to start.

Guns and signals will be given from old club-house verandah.

All conditions of the sailing regulations of the R. Y. C. of the north of the rules of the road must be strictly adhered to.

Officers of the day: S. P. Gerow and F. S. Heens.

BEN F. IN GUIDELINE MILE.

A report of matinee races at New Glasgow recently says:

The reporter must not forget to offer his meed of praise to Ben F., who went a mile in nearly 2:30 all by his own self without a driver or bridle. He hugged the pole all the way round. At the start he got away with the wrong foot foremost and he had to run quite a little bit, but he caught as soon as he could and then he sailed along head up, tall swinging and wasn't in a hurry! but he did not break. At the finish of the mile he stopped of his own accord at a post from the bell, turned round to get leave to dismount, and then he bolted for the man waiting with the blanket. Wise old horse!

WHITE SLAVE TRAFFIC IN AUSTRIAN CAPITAL

Police Charged With Affording Protection to the Dens of Infamy.

VIENNA, July 28.—The sensational revelations of the illustrious Wiener Extrablatt regarding the corruption in the Vienna police are creating great interest. The story is almost incredible, but the newspaper declares that it is prepared to prove its statements. The Extrablatt has made allegations regarding certain alleged disreputable establishments, and the terrible treatment which white girl slaves have to undergo until they submit to every infamy.

The mother who informed the Extrablatt, and thus raised the outcry, was able to see her daughter, but only in the presence of several other persons. In these circumstances the girl dared not complain; but a few days later she secured the services of a new servant, who gave a letter to the mother.

The mother complained, but without avail, and the assertion is that the police protect such places.

LONG SKIRTS BARRED BY CITY FATHERS

Municipal Authorities of Silesian Town Try to Regulate the Fashions.

BERLIN, July 28.—The campaign against trailing skirts, begun some weeks ago by the Nordhause town council, is being bravely continued by the municipal authorities at several Silesian summer resorts.

The local commissioners responsible for the administration of affairs at Salsbrunn issued a public appeal to lady visitors at this favorite health resort to abstain from wearing long skirts, or, if wearing long dresses, to prevent them trailing on the ground.

This appeal being disregarded, the local commissioners have now passed by-laws inflicting penalties for the wearing of trailing skirts.

The local commissioners at Warmbrunn, also in Silesia, have followed precisely the same course. Having issued an appeal which produced no effect on female offenders, they have now issued municipal decrees prohibiting trailing skirts, and introducing heavy penalties as punishment for obstinate transgressors.

JEWS RETURN TO LAND OF PROMISE

Large Influx Into Palestine, Where Many Colonies Are Now Projected.

CONSTANTINOPLE, July 28.—The influx of Jews into Palestine during the last few months has been remarkable.

Some weeks ago about 5000 Jewish immigrants from Russia and the Balkan States landed at Jaffa. They will settle in the plains of Sharon, round the towns of Ramleh and Lydda, and in other Jewish colonies along the sea coast.

A few days ago some Jewish financiers made a trip to the region east of the Jordan, in the direction of Karak. They saw the land and were highly satisfied with its fertility and the nature of the soil. They are willing to colonize the district, but are rather suspicious of the neighboring Bedouin tribes, who are averse to any permanent settlement being effected in their midst.

The Jews are in communication with the government on the subject, and should the latter give them sufficient guarantees of protection against the raids of their neighbors the sale of large tracts will soon be completed.

It is a noteworthy fact that some of the most fertile districts of Palestine are possessed by colonists. The Jews are repossessing the land by degrees, and should this quick rate of possession continue, the whole country will in a few years belong entirely to them.

CHINESE AND ZULUS UNITE AGAINST WHITES

Kier Hardie's Letter Is Causing Grave
Trouble in Africa.

JOHANNESBURG, July 28.—Despite the government's restrictions, the contents of Kier Hardie's extraordinary pro-Zulu letter in which he said that he hoped the time would come when the blacks would be able to defend themselves against the whites are known to hundreds of educated Kafirs, and are being rapidly disseminated throughout the Transvaal.

The result is not only to encourage the rebels in the field, but to inflame the spirit of discontent throughout the land.

The news of the murder and mutilation of Mr. Veal by Meintjies men has had a most demoralizing effect on Johannesburg a most beyond endurance.

The women residing in the suburbs are devoting the afternoons to revolver practice.

One report has it that a combination of black and yellow is forming, the Chinese who have been working in the mines and the native Zulus.

FAMILY STRUCK DEAF BY LIGHTNING BOLT.

Immense Havoc Created by Violent Thunder
Storm in Austria and Bohemia.

VIENNA, July 28.—The most violent thunderstorm that has occurred for several years has swept over the country. Many lives have been lost and incalculable damage done to property.

Throughout last week the heat had been tropical, but the temperature in Vienna fell thirty degrees last night. Great damage was done in Bohemia. A bridal procession returning from the church at Klattau was struck by lightning and the bride, Josephine Janit, was killed on the spot. Her husband was paralyzed. Four other persons in the same town were killed during the storm.

All the crops in the neighborhood of Ash and Rudweis were destroyed by the hail or which produced no effect on female offenders, they have now issued municipal decrees prohibiting trailing skirts, and introducing heavy penalties as punishment for obstinate transgressors.

ROYAL BABE ON SHOW IN SERVANTS' HALL.

Grandson of the German Emperor Exhibited to Domestic in the Palace.

BERLIN, July 28.—It is stated now that the Kaiser will celebrate the birth of his first grandson by granting an amnesty to prisoners on a liberal scale.

Meanwhile the birth of a prospective heir to the throne has been made the occasion of many marks of royal favor.

The crown prince presented $250 to each of the Potsdam Guard artillerymen who participated in firing the salute in honor of the birth of his son. He also took the infant and showed him to the servants in the palace.

When Princess Victoria Louise heard that she had become an aunt, she said the event must be duly celebrated, and disappeared with a basket into the cellars of the palace, and returned with several bottles of champagne, which she distributed among the servants, so that they might drink the health of her new nephew. She also wrote a wreath of roses which she took to the Marmor Palace, and sent them in with her congratulations to the Crown Princess.

The empress made a gift of money to the men who formed the guard at the Marmor Palace on the day the child was born.

DEMOLITION MENAGES

FAMED EIFFEL TOWER

PARIS, July 28.—The advisability of pulling down the Eiffel Tower, one of the landmarks of Paris, when it becomes the property of the city, will shortly be discussed by the Municipal Council.

There is much division of opinion among Councilors on the subject. Some think the tower should be kept for scientific purposes, and suggest that it should be leased to the company which has exploited it since 1889.

The company would no doubt be willing for, on the whole, it has made a handsome profit. In 1889 it netted $1,200,000 from the fees of sightseers, but the receipts waned till they were only $60,000 in 1892. During the 1900 exhibition they jumped up to $400,000, and last year they fell to $240,000 again.

Scrupulous Fitting Marks the Latest Petticoats

MAKING petticoats isn't, by any means, the simple thing it was even so short a time as a year ago, for although the tendency toward careful fitting about the hips was already marked, the casing and drawstring were in evidence upon nine out of ten petticoats.

The loveliest of all those that came over the water this summer have been fitted as scrupulously as a dress skirt is—even more so, some of them, for they are made to serve in place of slips, and unless the foundation, which includes petticoats as rigidly as it does corsets, fits without a wrinkle, it is utterly impossible to get any "set" at all to the dress itself.

Not only the petticoats of silk (although they are stunning, those of Pompadour silk especially), but lingerie petticoats are made on these fitted lines—all the harder to do, in that they must be made with an eye to frequent doing up, in which there is so much danger of their being stretched into awkward lines.

But fitted they must be and finished with the fattest sort of belts, or with no belt at all, the top showing varying lengths of it. Unless there is a lace dust ruffle—quite an elaborate one—this latter treatment is much the better. Tucks play a less important part in petticoat making than they have for a long while, being kept, for the most part, to the vertical ones, which provide excuse for more fulness, even in flounces of a circular cut.

Notes of the Fashions

IN BOLD contrast to the blind work are the sets which have lace set into the heavy part of the embroidery—a great iris, for example, or a butterfly—embroidered about the edges heavily, but the lines inside cut away for Valenciennes lace of an appropriate design to be inset. In the case of a butterfly, the embroidery appears again here and there upon the wide-spread lace wings, making dots where the wonderful glowing "eyes" appear in an occasional gorgeous variety of butterfly.

More and more matching of sets is done; chemises and corset cover, drawers and both long and short petticoats are embroidered in the same design.

Some stunning sets, as beautiful as those in which handwork is the chief feature, but as different from them as day is from night, are made without a particle of embroidery, odd combinations of laces, insertions and edgings, and perhaps several sizes of medallions, making the design. And the finer machine-made embroideries have wonderful possibilities in them, the Japanese work especially.

In machine work, by the way, come stunning allovers and insertions and edgings of embroidery, with the lace set into the design in a most effective way.

Corset covers made of wide edging have narrow double-edged insertion made into shoulder straps; ribbon-shoulder straps are anything but good.

For evening wear—notwithstanding runners to the contrary—flowered ribbons still hold their own, though scarcely in as great demand as plain moires, satin taffetas or mossaline ribbon in all the right shades.

Braids trim almost all the new bathing suits—a few trimmed with the wide, flat braids which have been so good all spring for suits and dresses alike, but most of them with narrow soutache braid of the color of the foundation, or white, occasionally sequin on white, or white on sequin, by way of getting a dash of color (and of individuality) upon the suit. But it must be sparingly applied.

Empire Styles Dominate Negligee Ideas

EMPIRE influences still dominate negligee ideas, and with good reason, for nothing else quite lends itself to loose and at the same time artistic lines. And, as Empire ideas as applied to dressing sacques seem to consist mostly of deep yokes, it follows that the trimming of the yoke, or, even more particularly, of the line where the yoke and the rest of the sacque join, is the important point to consider. Sometimes this trimming is simply a band of embroidery heading, through which velvet ribbon—black, usually, in obedience to some unwritten rule—is run to tie in a long, droopy bow in front. Occasionally the yoke is of flowered or embroidered material, the lower part of the sacque plain, or the plain part used for the yoke. As often a yoke may be trimmed with sparse dots alternating with eyelets and joined to the plain jacque proper by embroidery heading—not the tiny sort in use upon blouses and baby clothes alike, but a quarter to half an inch wide.

A pretty treatment is indicated in the upper figure in the sketch. These the lower part is felled in to the yoke by means of tucks, the lace defining it in a simplified wall-of-Troy pattern. A significant feature of many of the Empire styles is that the skirt, or lower part, of sacque or robe seems to demand trimming, tucks sometimes being the only trimming used, two or three big ones oftener than bands of little ones, as often rows of lace or embroidery set about the hem or dispensing with it entirely. Sleeves are various! Elbow sleeves they are, almost without exception, but both with those that boast cuffs and those that flow out to fall into graceful lines at their own sweet will, there are as many styles made manifest as there are in dress styles. On an occasional sacque the sleeves are nothing more than short puffs with deep ruffles, the edge of the ruffle barely coming to the turn of the elbow; but, as a rule, the sleeve is cut elbow length, irrespective of the length of the ruffle. The methods of sash tying vary, as well as the length of the ends. For formal, very dressy occasions these reach almost to the hem of the gown, others are three-quarter length.

faced with a narrow bias band. In either case, flat buttons and loops—those fascinating but elusive French loops—fasten them. Blind embroidery is gaining ground for their trimming, just as it is for the trimming, and the making, of dresses. And Valenciennes lace—the round-mesh German kind—is better than ever. A new treatment of the flounce is shown in the sketch—medallions of embroidery, outlined by lace insertion, separating the groups of tucks which give the flounce more spring. The medallions are the only touch of embroidery used upon the skirt. Lace under the deep flounces of embroidery grows more popular upon the finer sort of skirts all the while, either made to follow the scallops at every turn, or set in a straight line, the scallops

They had a good time in England, but on their return to Germany Count Erasmus' father and other members of the family decided that, if they could not obtain the annulment of the marriage, the count must be disinherited, and that the millions to which he was entitled must go to his next nearest of kin.

ST. JOHN STAR, SATURDAY, JULY 28, 1906.

AT THE DUKE'S CALL TO ARMS - By Honore Wilkie.

Alex marched down the narrow pier with the other seven. He was not thinking much of the race at that moment, nor of the problem nearest him, that of setting the shell in the water without eliciting from the coxswain a solemn, though mercifully unobtrusive, curse. Instead he looked at the banks, that for a mile up and down the river, were gay with people, beds with summer frocks and umbrellas. And then a sense of his alienation, returned with such force that his eyes, dimmed with homesickness, saw the river in a blur. Suddenly he didn't care about winning the race. He didn't belong to these people.

"Careful, Two, careful!" growled the coxswain, as Alex stumbled in getting to his place. But Alex did not heed the growl. Instead, a tiny little lad was listening with tense face to the words of the man who was saying: "Remember, you go not as an individual to a college, but as a nation that would learn of a victor of one." "Remember what we expect of you!"

"Lumber up, lumber up! Wake up, Two! That's an eye you have in your hand, not a fork!" Alex shook his head as if to scatter the fog from his brain, scolded his feet firmly, and glanced about him. The Redell college shell was already in the middle of the stream, the white jets of the crew gleaming in the sun. The Houghton shell glided away from the pier; there was sudden hand clapping and the Houghton yell from the banks, then the red of Alex's jersey gleamed opposite the white of Redell's Two, in mid-stream.

There was a commotion as row-boats and launches were claved wildly towards the shore under sharp admonitions from the coaches' launch, which puffed insistently up and down the course. There was a hoarse, fierce cry from the coxswain, something about "remember—free stroke—keep cool—!" a sudden shout: "Are you ready?" absolute silence from the shore save for the puffing of the launches, while Alex felt his nerves twitching as they did when he sat in forced quiet before the camera lens; then a pistol shot, and automatically he bent his broad back with the broad back of the man before him. The great Houghton-Redell race was on.

It was easy at first, that long, slow forward bend, the quick, fierce recovery that had made the Houghton stroke famous. At first Alex saw nothing but the bright red sweater before him. Now forward with the slide, how back with the oar, the coxswain's voice was darkening. Then he was conscious of the roaring on the banks, the dull, rhythmic yell of Redell, the dull, rhythmic yell of Houghton. But all detail of sound or color was lost in the confusion of the Houghton yell. And the coxswain, ugly commands of the coxswain.

"Shake it up! Follows shake it up!" "Shake it up! Follows shake it up!" For the Lord's sake this is no picnic. Get into the game! Again the stroke quickened. Alex felt the sweat roll from his hair into his eyes. His back muscles ached a pound. Still that gleaming two kept to its place in the corner of his eye.

The half-mile flag and the turn. Now it was work and work! Alex tightened his oar hold. Curved that light two that hung to his vision like a leech. He'd pull away from it if he had to pull the entire crew alone. Stroke! Stroke! Stroke! Stroke! Gads, that was hard. The sweating had stopped. Suddenly he was dry and parched and gagging with fever. "Gads, this is hard!" his brain repeated over and over. "This is hard!" The mahogany neck before him still gleamed with moisture. Alex's heart was pounding so that he could scarcely hear the yells from the banks. He could feel the blood swell up through his neck arteries to join the roaring flood in his head. "Gads, this is hard," he repeated. His fingers were trembling a little now. The sun was hot as a casting furnace. The three-quarter flag and the stroke quickened again!

And reviewing the race. Alex was an unusual and striking figure in his perfectly cut outing togs. Well over six feet, erect as an Indian, slender, sinewy—this alone would have caused the craning of heads as he moved through a throng. But there was more; it was the perfect, classic head, crowned with wavy brown hair, and something of hauteur, and something of address in the beautiful young features that set him apart from his fellows. Alex was making slow progress, for at every step he was stayed by the throng of the crowd, to have his hand shaken madly, to be praised and adored, until at last, laughing and flushed, he reached the president's launch, where tea was being served.

HOW THE PLOT RAINED OUT - By Elliott Balestier.

Carlton stood before the two-story block that bore with becoming modesty the title of "Walton's Palace Hotel," and gloomily contemplated "the West." He had read of it, he had even written about it, with a lurid "local color" gray, but it was not until he stood lonely and disgusted before that Walton's "booby emporium" that he realized the stage, that he had fully appreciated the true "conviction" is to be obtained only by experience, and not by hemiplagiarized descriptions.

"Oh, as for me, my brother Jack has as ranch a few miles away. I come up here every month to the bank to get my money. I've been with Jack nearly four years. Now answer my questions." "It's simple to do so," he answered, smiling. "I 'dropped' more on his directly from New York. I am here for the benefit of my purse, indirectly, and I've been all these years not a hundred feet from Broadway. Is that satisfactory?"

"Thank you," he said coldly. "I don't know," answered Carlton speculatively. "It might be done. Take things just as they are at the present moment, for instance. Two unarmed individuals inside, an elderly tourist, his wife and daughter, a slender shirt-waist, a drummer, a nondescript person with a large belly, on top. At the next stop—Cutler's, I believe—two new passengers—a tall, dark man, with steely gray eyes, of course, and his companion, evidently an invalid. They take seats outside, the tall man by the driver. At a lonely place where road is crossed by a little brook—say Sander's Gully, just beyond—"

"One was tall and dark," she said hesitatingly, "and the other seemed to be an invalid." "Carlton looked up suddenly. "Carlton looked at her in amazement. "Well," he began, and as her manner dimmed upon him, he lay back and laughed unrestrainedly. "My dear Elsie," he said, "I'm not sure that I can't think of a case where I can cultivate such an imagination as yours by force."

"I don't care," she answered faintly. "They are exactly as you described. It is a curious coincidence, if nothing more." "Just that," said Carlton, and the subject dropped. "For the next half hour they talked of old times and old friends, but somehow Elsie could not forget the two men on the box. It is probable that a woman's intuition is often more trustworthy than a man's reason."

Another Fruitless Search Made for Pirates' Buried Loot
English Expedition Foiled in Attempt to Unravel Secret Disclosed by a Dying Man — Searched Every Foot of Ground for Traces of Hidden Treasure.

GIBRALTAR, July 27.—The yacht Alkaida, commanded by her owner, Captain Gage, has just returned from a treasure hunt in the island of Alboran, in the Mediterranean, opposite Melilla. The search arose from a statement made to T. C. McMichael, of Brighton, by an old army man, who had a secret entrusted to him when he was a boy to the effect that treasure worth $5,000,000 was buried by pirates on the island in 1822. Nothing, however, was found.

Captain Gage and Mr. McMichael were accompanied by Colonel Lewis, Captain English, R. N.; Captain Campbell, R. A.; the Hon. Ailster Campbell, J. E. Brown and E. S. Hopkins.

ACCOUNT OF THE EXPEDITION.
The following account of the expedition is supplied by a reporter who accompanied it: "On June 19 the schooner Alkaida, R. Y. S. 140 tons, owned by Captain Gage, sailed from Plymouth for Gibraltar. "The object of the expedition was a treasure hunt, and the information we depended on was, briefly, this: "A few years ago a friend who owned a house property in Yorkshire had to press one of his tenants for rent. "This tenant, a retired army captain who was getting on in years, told the proprietor that, in his soldiering days he had a private named Robinson as servant, and that in return for some kindness Robinson had told him that when quite a lad he had gone to sea and had served as cabin boy in a merchant ship called the Young Constellation. He soon found out that the ship was a pirate, and was carrying on its nefarious business off the coast of Jamaica.

THE PIRATES' FLIGHT.
"In 1832, he said, British men-of-war were on the lookout for the Young Constellation, and being laden with jewels and gold to the value of fully a million pounds, the captain decided to leave the West Indies and made a course for the Mediterranean. "They were chased by two British frigates, but, being favored with fair winds and fortunate fog, they passed safely through the Straits of Gibraltar. "Here the pirate captain lost his bearings. He had no knowledge of the coast, before long they were in sight of a small island, which they found to be uninhabited and waterless. "They packed their treasure in two great copper boilers and landed them at the southeastern corner of the island. It took ten men to get the treasure on shore, and they buried it close to the landing place eight or nine feet deep, and then sailed away to the nearest port to get water, provisions and charts. "Later on," said Robinson, "they came in with two unarmed merchant vessels, which they could not resist robbing and scuttling. "They were caught rehanding, and every one except Robinson was hanged at the yardarm. Robinson was now the only living person who knew of the treasure, and he kept the secret until he confided in his master. "The captain was forgiven his debt in exchange for the secret of the buried million.

TREASURE SYNDICATE.
"The proprietor was an old man, and not in robust health, so he wanted to realize the fortune that lay hidden in the island of Alboran, 140 miles from Gibraltar, until his son was grown up. "After the usual negotiations with a city firm a small syndicate was formed and an expedition planned. "Captain Gage fitted up his yacht and undertook to convey the syndicate from Gibraltar to Alboran and back and to assist in the search. "We tried every conceivable place to find soil or sand deep enough to bury treasure in, and nowhere could we find a spot. The soil was not more than three feet thick, and then we came on solid rock. For three days we dug a cut through sand and hoaps, and probed with pointed iron rods, but all to no purpose, and on July 2 a gale sprang up and we had to sail away, but not before every member of the expedition was satisfied that there was no treasure in Alboran."

REFUSED PERMISSION TO EXPLORE THIBET

CALCUTTA, July 28.—The authorities say that the reason Dr. Sven Hedin, the Scandinavian explorer, has been refused permission to visit Thibet was that it had been decided for reasons of policy that no British subjects were to be allowed to explore Thibet, and what was refused to British subjects could not be conceded to foreigners.

The Government thought that Thibet should continue in that state of isolation, the maintenance of which was constituted by Mr. Broderick in 1904. This decision in no way affected access to the trade routes sketched by the Lhasa Convention.

that the administration had as yet proved itself reactionary, urging that it should be given a chance to justify itself. M. Ramischwill, a Socialist deputy from the Caucasus, in a rage denounced M. Naboukoff and his friends as traitors who had sold the cause of immediate severance of all relations with the Constitutional Democratic party. Others interposed and prevented an open rupture, but the meeting broke up without a decision. Further co-operation between the two factions is improbable.

Representatives of the two Polish socialistic organizations, the Polish Socialists and the Jewish Bund or Zionist Socialists, arrived here today to participate in the revolutionary conference. The manifesto of the nation, the army and navy and the co-sacks, will be signed by these representatives as well as by the regular Russian organization.

Rev. Dr. J. C. Jaynes, of Newton Centre, Mass., passed through the city yesterday afternoon en route home from his summer habitat at Malpeque, P. E. I., but will return in a few days.

Dr. Jaynes is one of New England's most scholarly and prominent Unitarians, an enthusiastic resident of Canada during the three months his church is closed.

Shortly before proceeding to Malpeque he returned from an extended tour of Europe, particularly those countries bordering on the Mediterranean. He was accompanied by his wife and daughter.

"But for real solid comfort, soothing, quiet and exhilarating air give me the Maritime provinces of Canada every time," said the doctor in tones that indicated firm conviction.

Of former St. John Unitarian pastors Dr. Jaynes spoke familiarly. He characterized the late Rev. Jos. Green as a hearty, whole-souled and benevolent man, greatly endeared to the denomination. Rev. Stanley Hunter is now preaching in Melrose, Mass. Dr. Jaynes spoke familiarly of the conditions of the church's affairs in St. John, the visitor was not in a position to state, though was sorry to know Unitarianism is not just now in a very flourishing condition here.

Across the border, however, it is forging rapidly onward, and Dr. Jaynes' own congregation is erecting a new sanctuary at a cost of $150,000.

Dr. Jaynes thinks he may locate in the vicinity of St. John another year, as his friend, Rev. Dr. Lindsay Parker, of Brooklyn, whose summer home is on the Kennebec, has long since been endeavoring to persuade him to make a shift. One thing that almost induces him to take this advice is the excellent yachting waters of the St. John, for, like Dr. Parker, Dr. Jaynes is a lover of the white-winged sport, though not more so than his daughter, who handles his yacht at Malpeque quite cleverly.

101. A Story of France in the days of Louis XV., and how the work of a traitor was foiled by the energy of Madame Pompadour.

"She has captured the King," the young man remarked in his gloomiest tones. "She will now coerce the Queen. Her ambition is to be mistress of the robes and thus to rule all Versailles. The mere suggestion of such an outrage on precedent and etiquette made the ladies speechless with horror. A bourgeois mistress of the robes! It was unthinkable—blasphemous. As if her majesty in dressing could take even the simplest garment except from the hands of a princess of the blood or of a duchess. "You forget, Madame," the Chevalier remarked drily, "that the King's will is law. Le Roi gouverne par lui-meme." They were the words of Louis XIV. today they can still be read on the motto of Le Roi Soleil in the centre of the superb ceiling of that Galerie des Glaces at Versailles which enshrines for all generations the imperial ambitions of the king who made it. Arrogant words, but true. The antechamber became gradually deserted. The Chevalier stood at the window watching the gathering gloom. His dejection was not acting. His boyish face was almost tragic in its gravity. Presently he rose and began pace up and down, wrestling with his thoughts, until he became suddenly aware that Denise had re-entered and was looking at him in questioning silence. "Mademoiselle," he advanced to meet her. "I have no comfort for you. Before long I shall be bidding you adieu forever." Her eyes invited an explanation, but she said nothing. "I speak seriously," he proceeded. "You and your friends, Mademoiselle, are aware that I am with you heart and soul in the desire to overthrow this woman who will ruin us all. I have been in the past, you know, to do some service to the cause by bringing you information that I learned as his majesty's confidential secretary. At your request I have to the best of my power abstained from speaking publicly to be of your party, for his majesty is suspicious and jealous. But I fear from today my services must end." "Why?" the single word revealed both anxiety and sympathy. "His majesty has signified that for the present he will conduct his private correspondence by himself. It is the first step. The next will be that his majesty no longer needs my services in any capacity, that I am free," he laughed with gentle bitterness, "to leave Versailles. Yes, Mademoiselle, I am free," he laughed with gentle bitterness, "to leave Versailles. Yes, Mademoiselle, I am free, I can no longer help your cause." "That—that woman—" Denise began. "Certainly, this is her doing. I stood between her and such secrets as his majesty was pleased to entrust to me, secrets not known to ministers and to the court. So long as I was private secretary that woman was not the king's mistress. But when I am finally dismissed she will rule the king's body and soul." "Oh, cannot it be stopped?" "No, Marquise, I am not as his grace of Pontchartrain a great noble, majesty made me, his majesty can unmake me tomorrow." "This is dreadful," Denise murmured. "Without your help, your information, your private influence, your private influence, your private influence, we shall be beaten, humiliated, ruined. You have been a true friend to our cause, Chevalier." The young man bowed. "I have done my best," he said with unmistakable sincerity. "That Madame de Pompadour should triumph cuts me to the heart. But when I am obliged to leave Versailles her victory will be my only grief." "Denise looked up at him. His tone had completely altered. "I shall leave you, Mademoiselle," he said simply, "and I love you. All this is the truth, the bare truth. You are a great noble, I am only the Chevalier de St. Amant, a parvenu tolerated by the court merely because he is useful to them. It is presumption in me to dare to love you. But even a parvenu's heart can love. This—this is sacred to me—because not your beauty, nor your ability, nor your wealth, but your womanhood that is the greatest gift of God to you has taught me what you are—has taught me that your service can be all that a man could desire." "Monsieur—" Denise began, but the words failed her. "I had hoped that some day I might, perhaps, even dare to do more—to ask for your love in return. But that is impossible—impossible." "Is it?" Denise asked in a low voice, almost as if she were talking to herself. "Yes, Marquise, because you love another." She looked up half angrily, half inquiringly. "No," she answered as she was still silent. "I do not." St. Amant resumed his pacing up and down. "Mademoiselle," he said presently, "are you aware how the King's will is law in this present course?" Denise turned eagerly towards him. "Madame de Pompadour," he added very slowly, "is only a woman, but she has an ally, the Vicomte de Nerac, the ablest, most trusted man in Versailles. He is ambitious; he loves the Marquise de Heay Sejour—hear me out, please. Take the Vicomte de Nerac from Madame de Pompadour, make him her enemy, not her friend, and—" "You believe that?" she interrupted. "Unfortunately it cannot be done," he replied with decision. "Andre de Nerac has chosen his party and he will not be turned aside. Therefore the only other course is to ruin him. Publish to the world that he is Madame's spy, that he has the key of Madame's secret passage in his pocket, publish what I have told you and you compel me to keep a secret, and you can ruin me? It is for you, Marquise, to say." Denise drew a deep breath. Something like terror shone in her eyes. "I have information," continued the Chevalier quietly, "that if made known to the King would ruin the Vicomte tonight. Am I to use it or not? It is for you, Marquise, to say." Denise's lips parted. Her hand unconsciously crept to her throat. "What sort of information?" she asked in a dry whisper. "That, Mademoiselle, must be my secret. But I did not just when I say that you can ruin Madame de Pompadour today, but you will almost certainly ruin the Vicomte de Nerac at the same time. Am I to keep silent or to reveal the whole truth to the Comte d'Arveson and the President of the Council of Ministers?" Denise stood pale and trembling. Her eyes looked on her questioner with a dumb pitilessness cruel to behold. "You have answered me, Marquise," he replied after an agonizing pause. "I shall hold my tongue, and forgive me, I beg, that I have been so merciful. But love is merciless and blind." He took her hand. "If you doubt that a parvenu can love you better far than he loves himself, think of my silence. When I am driven from Versailles do not forget that I refused to speak the truth of one who regards me as his enemy, at your bidding. Adieu!" In the doorway he paused to look back. For a moment he wavered. Denise had stumbled to a chair and was crying softly. "Soft!" he muttered, throwing up his head. "Soft!" and humming a reckless catch he strode down the gallery. CHAPTER XVIII. After he had left Denise the Chevalier walked for some time in the empty gallery up and down, up and down, striving to master the strong emotion within. But when at last he made his way into the gardens he was once more the jaunty dare-devil cynic whose fine blue eyes had made many a court beauty feel that even the veteran Vicomte de Nerac had lessons to learn in the art of coquetry. By the same Fountain of Neptune where he had met Denise the Chevalier now found a woman waiting, as indeed he expected. Yet, greeting scarcely passed between them. "You were right," he began with bitter brevity, "and you have had your way." The woman pondered on the reply. "Yes," she said presently. "I know I was right. She loves him. And you?" she added, with a swift touch of anxiety. "I shall finish what I have begun," he answered with calm determination. "It will cost me my life, perhaps, but his tone was savagely robed. "I am very right. She loves him. And you?" she asked, "why not give it all up? It is becoming too dangerous." "Dangerous? Of course. But it is too late to draw back, and I will keep my oath now—now," he repeated, lingering on the word, "if I perish tomorrow." He put his hand gently on her shoulder and looked into her eyes. "You, you some day will come to believe that revenge is better than love." "At least we have no choice," she answered with a cruel little laugh. "Don't don't," the Chevalier whispered, in a sudden tenderness. "What does it matter for me? but you—you I can't bear it for you." "It is fate," she said very quietly, "your fate and mine." With his arm about her she stood in silence for no small while. They were both thinking their own thoughts, and they were not pleasant. "Are you quite sure he loves her?" the Chevalier asked. "I shall know for certain before many days," she answered, "although a woman feels sure now." Andre looked as they had met, without greeting, but had the Chevalier followed her he would have seen that the woman went in the direction of "The Cock with the Spurs of Gold." It was probably because he already knew this that he returned to the palace. All this time Denise had sat crushed and sad, alone in the antechamber. Nor did she know that Andre had stood some minutes in the doorway looking at her, had twice stepped forward to speak, had twice restrained himself, and finally had left her to her tears and her silence. But the one person whom he did not desire to meet found him out by accident at that moment. "Welcome," the Comtesse des Forges called softly, "will you do me a favor?" Andre smiled with skilful hypocrisy. The Comtesse was looking her best, and her heavy-lidded eyes were bright with admiration and an exquisite suggestion of self-surrender. "A favor," she repeated, "which is also a secret. You will promise not to betray me." Andre took her hand to his lips for answer. The jewel on the lady's breast gently rose and fell, exclaiming tenderly the coy trembling of her fingers. It was not the first time these two had played with passion, needless of the future, but Andre swiftly recognized that this evening it would not be play, pastime, or pleasure. But the one person whom he did not desire to meet found him out by accident at that moment. Andre still held her hand; the devotion in his face was intended to conceal his thoughts. For the crisis that he feared had come. This petition to the King from the Court was also an ultimatum to himself from his friends. "It will be useless," he said gently, "the petition." "No—no! You can succeed with the King—you Andre," she pleaded with a thrill of genuine passion, "do it to please me. You know I can be grateful." "I cannot," he replied, controlling himself, "not even to please you, Gabrielle." "You desert your friends and me—me!" she asked, a menace creeping into her languorous voice. "Andre, it is impossible, surely impossible." "I cannot present the petition," he answered. "Fear, anger, swept the passion out of her eyes. "You are afraid!" she demanded, with biting scorn. "Yes, I am afraid," he assented, and if the Comtesse had not lost her self-control she must have detected the delicate irony in his grave bow. "Ah!" she stepped back. "Ah! If Denise had asked you, you would have consented." "No," he corrected with a freezing pride, "I would not permit the Marquise de Heay Sejour even to make the request." The answer surprised and delighted her. "Yes, I am afraid," he assented, and if the Comtesse had not lost her self-control she must have detected the delicate irony in his grave bow. In the police court yesterday Mary Spellman was fined twenty dollars or two months in jail for assaulting Mrs. Wilkes on White street and for general bad conduct was given an additional six months in jail without a fine.

Many times children are scolded by the teacher for failure to correctly read the lesson on the blackboard across the room, when in reality the child's vision is to blame. Consult D. Boyaner, Optician, 38 Dock street.

Hon. H. A. McKeown yesterday filed at the City Hall claims of John C. Arthur and Joseph E. Arthur, who own property along the water extension pipe line. John A. Arthur claims $2,000 damages, and Joseph E. Arthur $1,500.

The police registered two important reports in the central station book last night, viz., "a dead cat is lying on Carman street," and "a dangerous hole is in the Dock street sidewalk." There are other sidewalks in the city that are not the best in the world.

Rev. Mr. McMaster, who has accepted the pastorate of German street Baptist church, will arrive in the city on Thursday and will preach his first sermon as pastor of the church on Sunday. He will attend the conference meeting of the conference on Friday night at which it is expected there will be a large attendance.

The concert to be held on Tuesday evening next in the school room of the main street Baptist church, by the Pine street male quartette promises to be of great interest. The quartette assisted at the services in German street church last Sunday and their singing was greatly enjoyed.

No doubt you have already benefited by the great increase in business at the Union Clothing Store, 24-28 Charlotte street, old Y. M. C. A. building. Take special advantage of the sale today and get all you want. This great sale ends Tuesday next, July 31. Don't miss a day.

A few weeks ago A. H. Willis and J. T. Russell of this city started in business as the New Brunswick Cigar Co. They are located at 597 Main street. As yet they are only making Pine and Anna Bins, two five cent smokes, but they intend shortly to manufacture a number of other cigars. The superintendent of this is the only strictly union ship in the maritime provinces.

Harry Kelly, chief wine clerk in the Dufferin Hotel, left tonight on the steamer Calvin Austin for Boston, where he is to take a position in the Crawford Hotel. Last evening a number of his friends gathered at the Dufferin, and through Aid. McGoldrick presented Mr. Kelly with a gold watch and chain and locket.

There is a feeling among the local milk dealers that the price of milk should be raised one cent per quart in view of the recent regulations imposed by the Board of Health authorities. There rules mean in many cases increased expenditure for the milk dealer. For instance one says the dairy and stable shall not be beneath the same roof; another that all cans from the country must be thoroughly cleaned before being sent back.

SAYS HE WAS ASSAULTED BY POLICE OFFICER.

Peter LeClair, a Longshoreman, Lays Information Against Sergt. Campbell—Case Comes up Monday.

A case that will undoubtedly attract a large audience at the police court has been set down for Monday morning at 9:30 o'clock, when Police Sergt. Campbell will be asked what he has to say to assaulting Peter LeClair, a longshoreman.

LeClair called at the court early this morning and said he wished to lay an information against Sergeant Campbell. He said that he had been at work on a steamer and having finished his work sought employment at the I. C. R. pier with a number of other men.

The steamer was to be loaded by Stevedore McDermott and some longshoremen had commenced work, but others were needed. The police officer came along and ordered those waiting for work to clear off the wharf, he then caught hold of LeClair by the waist and pushed him along. This is what the longshoreman says was an assault and in addition to this he was probably prevented from getting work on the steamer, for after he was moved by the policeman some of those with him were given employment.

LeClair informed the court that he could bring a dozen or more witnesses to prove what he says is true.

GERMAIN STREET BAPTIST CHURCH.

The pulpit of the German street Baptist church will be occupied tomorrow (Sunday) by the Rev. Merritt L. Greese, B. A., of Providence, R. I., the talented young preacher who so ably preached in that church last Sunday.

Mr. Greese's voice is deep, full and pleasing, and he is a forceful speaker. The Pine street male quartette of Lewiston, Me., whose fine singing was enjoyed by the large congregations last Sunday, will again assist the choir of the German street Baptist church at both services tomorrow. The new pastor of the church, Rev. W. W. McMaster, is expected to arrive in the city on Thursday next, and will commence his pastorate on the following Sunday, August 5th.

ALONE AT HOME; FATHER DRUNK.

Samuel Baxter Arrested on South Wharf Last Night.

Wanted to Fight Any Man in St. John—Challenge Accepted by Policeman Belyea Who Ran Him In.

Samuel Baxter drank so much liquor last evening that he caused him to dance about the South Wharf and declare to the crowd who were witnessing his actions "that he could lick any man in St. John." There was one citizen who heard the challenge. This was Policeman Belyea, who was soon elinched with Baxter and the latter went to the ground. Acting Detective Caples happened on the scene and Baxter was handcuffed and locked up.

In court this morning Magistrate Ritchie told Baxter that he was liable to a fine of $3 or two months jail for drunkenness and $30 or ten months for resisting the police, but at present as Baxter was not yet separated from his last night's jag he was remanded to jail to get sober. Baxter informed the court that he was a widower and if he went to jail there was no person to look after his little 10 year old daughter, who was alone at home.

The magistrate asked who looked after her when the father was drunk and in the lockup last night, and Baxter said there was no person to look after her.

Before going into jail Baxter asked that he be allowed to send some money to his little girl to purchase some food. This was granted and the prisoner got a lecture on the evil results of drinking rum that he will not forget in a hurry.

HARVARD PROFESSOR MAKING SURVEYS HERE.

Removed That Inglewood Company May Establish New Pulp Mill Near Musquash.

Prof. Corey, of Harvard, assisted by a number of his students have been making a survey of the water and lands belonging to the Inglewood Pulp Company, near and around Musquash. It has been currently reported that these operations are being carried on as the result of the intention of the Inglewood Pulp Company intending to start a large new pulp mill on one of the rivers near Musquash. Geo. McAvity, one of the directors said, however, that such a proposition has not yet been given thought off, but the object of the survey is to find the water pressure of the different streams and also to know exactly the amount of burned timber and also the green timber which his company have standing in that part of the country.

NEW STEAM YACHT FOR KENNEBECASIS FLEET.

The R. K. Y. C. has received another valuable addition to its fleet in the shape of a very beautiful steam yacht, the property of S. P. Gerow.

The new yacht arrived in port from New York last evening after quite a rough trip, but apparently none the worse of wear. The boat is 44 feet over all with a ten foot beam and four foot seven inch draught. She is fitted throughout in excellent shape. The woodwork is solid mahogany. The after deck is a very pleasant little deck with an awning overhead and a seating capacity for about fifteen. Then comes the after saloon, which is fitted up in up-to-date style, after which comes the forward saloon and the galley. There are a number of lockers and a modern lavatory.

Mr. Gerow was being warmly congratulated this morning on having secured such a fine craft.

MOTOR BOAT RACES.

In addition to the motor boat race entries in the sporting page of this issue two more boats have since been entered viz., Yea-Yea, by E. N. Harrington, and the Dot, by J. Fraser Gregory. Members of the sailing committee are requested to be at the club house at 2:30 o'clock to discuss matters in connection with the race.
