Editorial Item.

The Provincial Legislature of Manitoba meets on the 5th prox.

Nine new members were introduced to the Ontario Legislature at its meeting, of whom eight are supporters of the Government, and only one, Mr Meredith, of London, a supporter of M. C. Cameron's Opposition.

The Pacific Railway Company occupies a considerable share of public attention. Satisfactory arrangements between the proposed Company and the Government are said to be in progress, but details have not yet transpired.

We find this item of the latest news progress, but details have not yet transpired.

We find this item of the latest news in our talented contemporary, the New York World: "The Newfoundland Parliament is in favour of withdrawing from the Canadian Confederacy, but the loyal agricultural party insists that it is impossible to secede with any such plant in that climate." Our readers will fail to admire the wit of the writer in their sheer amazement at his ignorace.

The frequent absence of Mr. Cameron from the house is attributed to his feeling the lack of his recognition as leader of the Opposition. The fact that he did not accompany the members of the Legislature to Brantford, and that Mr. H. S. Macdonald occupied the most prominent position among the Opposition members, tends to confirm the opinion that the lesdership has not been conferred upon Mr. Cameron.

At the meeting of the Dominion Board of Trade on Friday, topics of pre-eminent public interest came under discussion. Of these the principal were the desirability of renewing the Reciprocity Treaty with the United States and the best route for the Canadian Pacific Railway.

BLUNDERING AS USUAL.—The Elora Times must not attribute to us words Times must not attribute to us words we never penned. In speaking of Mr. Chadwick's appointment as Junior Judge of this County, it says that we impugned his notives and questioned his integrity. We did no such thing, and the Times in justice to us must withdraw the assertion. As to Mr. Chadwick's motives or personal character we said nothing derogatory because we believe there is nothing to any against either. We confined our remarks entirely to the question of his fitness for the office, and the influences exercised to secure question of his fitness for the office, and the influences exercised to secure it to him. But there are many like the Times who suppose that because one is compelled on public grounds to condemn an appointment, he attacks the private character of the person so appointed. We trust our contemporary will mark the difference in future.

Also, to provide for the establishment of a training school for idiotic and imbedie children.

Attorney-dieneral Mowat-moved that a Committee be appointed to prepare an address to be presented to His Excellency upon his arrival in this country, and his appointment as Governor-General; said committee to be composed of Attenney-General; said committee to be composed of Attenney-General, which was sure that no words that he could employ would go beyond the feeling that was entertained in the Bouse and country towards His Excellency.

Mr. M. C. Cameron seconded the mo-

Mouse and country towards His Excellency.

Alt. M. C. Cameron seconded the motion, which was carried unanimously.

flon. Mr. Crooks moved that the House resolve itself into a Committee of supply.

Mr. Wood (Victoria) brought up a discussion in reference to increasing the salaries of the Government employees, after which Hon. Mr. Crooks said the estimates were for two months, to the first of March. They were merely to cover the expense of the Civil Service for that period.

Mr. Fergusen ventilated the old story about Mr. Wood and the note he got from Mr. Blake, containing the words "speak now." The charge was that Mr. Wood, while a member of Sandfield Maedonsld's Government, had received this note from Mr. Blake, that Mr. Ferguson had fished the note out of the spittoon. Mr. Ferguson, however, repudiated the original theft. It is true, as he was reminded the receiver is as bad as the thief, but it seems that Mr. Ferguson, although he admits he was the "receiver," still declares he was not the "thief." Mr. M. C. Cameron confessed it was he who appropriated the note on it was he who appropriated the note on which "Speak now" was written. He admitted that his first statement, or the inference he sought to establish, was false. He acknowledged that the note in question was not written before, but three days after, Mr. Wood's resignation. And, justifying the use he made of the note or scrap of paper, Mr. Cameron argued that, no matter how vile, how dastardly, how eriminal, how dishonourable, how immortal, might-lee—the—mans—used in—obtaining it, so long as the vidence itself between the it is hawful and proper to use it. Mr. Concean saw the paper sent across the House (he, or some one on its behalf, eat-hed its final destination; it was immediately afterwards in his keep-the House; he, or some one on its behalf, catched is final destination; it was insuediately afterwards in his keeping, and used by him for a party purpose in assailing the character of his fortner-colleague. This disgraceful exposure celled forth most vigorous eastingation from Mr. Wood and other speakers, and before the subject was dropped the Opposition were heartily aslaumed of it and their leader.

The adjourned debate on Mr. Rykert's motion respecting timber limits was then resumed, when the motion was carried.

The prevailing popular discentent has reached Wales, where a gigantic strike is imminent. The London correspondent of New York Tribune, gives some particulars of this demonstration, in which some 70,000 colliers are concerned. The greation interest of Great Britain would suffer from such a strike; but is seems that previous to the threat of the workmen the iron trade was in a highly prosperous condition.

A curious love tale, accident, incident r whatever else you choose to term it

A curious love tale, accident, incident, incident, happened on the second concession of Huron one day last week. It appears that a young girl named Faust was engaged to be married to a young gentleman whose name we have not learned, and on being told that he had left the country and gone to the States, she dropped into a state of insensibility, from which she has not yet but partially recovered. The doctors have but little hope of her entire recovery.

GEORGE JEFFREY.

The Foster Brother:

The Orpnan of the Wreck.

The Orpnan of the Wreck.

This happy event took place on a brightly glorious day in June, when the beauty of Glenfask was at its fullest —when Nature smiled its gayest smile and wore its richest robe—and when, as it seemed, earth and sky held jubilee in honour of the union of two hearts so tried and so twae. Elags waved overywhere, flowery wreaths festooned the walks, and music sounded from various parts of the valley. A large tent was erected on the lawn in front of the mansion and here a feast was prepared for the tenants, under the presidentship of Matthew Greigson, who did the honours of the occasion with a beaming countenance which attested the fulness of his joy. The ceremony was performed quietly enough at Mossgrove, and when it was over, and the youthful pair had received the "congratulations of those present, they entered the gaily-decorated carriage which waited at the door to convey them to Ardgowan—Harry and Carolline accompanying them.

At the south gate, which was the principal entrance to the avenus, a band of younger and stronger men connected with the estate and the neighbouring village was collected, ready to unyoke the horses and draw the carriage in triumph up to the mansion.

And thus, surrounded by happy faces, willage was collected, ready to unyoke the horses and draw the carriage in triumph up to the mansion.

And thus, surrounded by happy faces, sparkling eyes, and joyous laughter, and amid deafening huzzas, the procession advanced up the avenue, under the flowery wreaths and shining decorations. On the terrace another large crowd awaited their coming and, as they emerged from under the trees, they passed beneath a triumphal arch, which had been there erected; and as the carriage moved slowly through, some one hidden among the foliage above sent down a shower of flowers, covering the occupants of the carriage with beauty and fragrance. Tremendous shouts now rent the air as the throng opened on either side and made a road to the great entrance, where another gorgeous wreath had been erected, under which George led his bride with a proud and happy heart, and they disappeared within the portals as a small cannon stationed on the terrace fired a loud salute.

The rest of the day was passed in mirth and festivity, and when in the mellow evening they passed through the open window from the terrace into the dinning-room. Carolline flung her arms round George's neck, and whispered—

"Now, my dear brother, I want you to look at my present—you have not seen it yet."

"Your present, Carry; and what is yet."

"Your present, Carry; and what is that?" asked George, as he fondly kissed her.
"It is in this room," she replied.
"Look round and you will be sure to dis-

With a happy smile animating his face, (feorge looked over the room in all directions, watched by Harry and Lilias who knew the secret. For a time he saw nothing which he could set down as a present from Caroline; but all at once his eye was arrested in its wandering, and a thrill of emotion filled his heart as he saw suspended on the wall Kenneth Bruce's memorable painting, the picture of the wreck. His feelings overcame him at the sight; and, with a sob, he caught Carry to his heart, and thanked her for the invaluable gift.

"I knew you would prize it," she murmured.

"I knew you would prize it," she murmured.

"You could have given me nothing that I could have prized like it," he answered. "Its presence there will be a constant remembrance of the sad and happy past, and of those sainted ones who gave the Orphan of the Wreck a refuge in their hearts of love.

"I erchance even now," whispered. Caroline, "they are looking from their blessed abode on the happiness which this day has consummated."

It was a solemn yet pleasing thought, and under the deep religious feeling of the moment they simultaneously and without a word knelt down in front of the picture, and silently lifted up their hearts in grateful adoration of that Divire Father who had blessed them so abundantly and crowned them with loving kindness and tender mercy.

I remain yours respectfully, Mas.Hirwell, Emouth St.
