Making It a Union Office.

By S. A. W. ...

Neddie, the senior office boy of the Daily Journal, was leaning idly against the gate which bars off from the main thoroughfare of the office the passage way leading to the rooms of the editorial and special writers. The gate was hung to swing both ways, but a concealed catch checked its lavish hospitality and prevented it completing a round trip every time it was opened. A great many persons may recall having wasted valuable time fumbling for the catch when the office boys were elsewhere—which they were a good part of the time. These boys had not been able to agree among themselves as to the precise moment when each should go to dinner, and they had settled the matter by all going at once. Then, as there had been differences among them as to whose duty it was to return first, their noon hour had come to be a sort of caudal-pipe arrangement: one end of it was hung on a hook in the office, and the boys went all over town with the other. Neddie was nominally in charge of his fellows, three in number. His duties were not exactly definable, but he felt it to be his right to issue commands and back them up with such display of force as necessity and a somewhat capricious fancy suggested. He was not, in truth, a boy any longer, but this had escaped his notice. Being larger than they he could make the other boys wince whenever he wished; and they "got even," as opportunity offered, by strategy, cunning and stealth. As Neddie leaned against the editor's gate one of these changes presented itself to "Dump," an office boy who made up for his smallness of his stature by the largeness of his mischief. Sliding noiselessly toward the gate, behind his senior, "Dump" touched the concealed spring, releasing the gate so that Neddie's weight swung it quickly inward. Neddie staggered across the passageway and fell heavily against the door of the "sink room," which too obligingly swung inward, also, and in an instant lay full length upon the slop-py floor. But Neddie was no longer in getting off his feet than he was in getting on them. Dashing out of the sink room, he was just in time to see "Dump" disappearing through the religious editor's doorway at the lower end of the corridor. He started in pursuit, but stopped abruptly, and, with a look of determination on his face, stepped back into the sink room, where he gathered up in both hands a large, coarse sponge, nearly the size of a Hubbard squash, and holding it under the tap he filled all its elastic pores with water. Then he glided swiftly down the corridor to within ten feet of the religious editor's room. The door opened slowly outward about four inches as the youth, poised like an athlete in the act of putting the shot, waited, palpitating for the supreme moment of sweet revenge. The thought flashed across his mind that "Dump" had divined his purpose and was moving cautiously. Just then he saw a hand toy with the knob, indicating, he thought, the doubt and indecision in "Dump's" little brain. Quick as a flash, he perceived that if the heavy, dripping sponge were thrown to hit the edge of the door it might glance inward, but, whether it did or not, there would be plenty of water geysering out of this "Dump" would surely get his share. No sooner thought than acted; the reeking sponge struck the door and dropped like a ball of soft putty, to the floor. The water, violently disgorged from every pore, showered the neighboring wall spitefully, and the individual whose hand was on the knob was left no reason to complain that he had been slighted in the distribution. There was, for a moment, no response to the attack. The hand was not even withdrawn from the knob; but a white cuff, on which large yellow blisters were already rising, was now visible to the astonished Neddie, on whose face a smile of grim satisfaction made way for a look of deep concern. This was a more appropriate expression for the door, swinging slowly open, revealed the bespattered face of the managing editor, Mr. Kline.

Not long before "Dump" felt himself safe enough in his uselessness to volunteer this bit of information to his fellows: "As I size our new man up," said he, "he's as much of a 'cinch' as Old Cole was." In which opinion all concurred with great self-satisfaction. As Mr. Kline stood there in the religious editor's doorway that irreverent remark of the miserable "Dump" came back to Neddie's mind, and came back to shame him. He felt now that he was not being looked at, but locked through; and from that instant he was conscious the new editor was not a "cinch," but a new force, a real power, in the office of the Daily Journal. Neddie shrank from Mr. Kline's steady gaze and it came to him like an inspiration that he had not for a long time been doing justice to the office and to himself. He even wondered what had become of all his earlier fine ambitions. Mr. Kline, having completed his survey, said to him, "You may wait where you are." Then, turning to the religious editor, he resumed the conversation that the wet sponge had soured in upon.

"Yes, sir." "Well, do so, Edward, if you please," said Mr. Kline. "And now, he added, 'tell me what they do.'" "Two are on the reporters' floor, sir," Edward replied, "and one is on this floor with me. We take turns answering the telephone, when we are in, and we get the papers and distribute them among the reporters and editors. As much as possible we carry 'copy' from the writers to the copy readers' room to be edited."

and Post—New, Telegram, or Herald, or Dispatch, would be much better and up to the times. If we could only change—"Never mind that," Mr. Kline interrupted. "We will stick to the old name and give it a new significance, if need be. Just tell us, if you please, why we don't circulate."

PURE BAKING GOLD POWDER. Impure baking powders are responsible for much bad cookery—bad cookery is responsible for much ill health—shun the one—and prevent the other—not a harmful ingredient in "Pure Gold"—a perfectly pure cream of tartar powder. IN TINS ONLY AT ALL GROCERS heets the boys supplied them from the busy reporters within the fire lines. Now and again the day editor's voice was heard calling for "more two-line head stuff," or a "revised score" for the next edition. The pneumatic tubes shot the prepared stories into the composing room, where "Old Grind" and his men worked on and on with almost noiseless swiftness. The presses in the basement seemed to have agreed that they could stand it as long as the fire engines could; nor did they cease their peculiar whir-r-r and muffled kettle drumming until far into the evening. And those indefatigable little merchants in knickerbockers, the newsboys, reaped a harvest.

PURE WATER. In addition to the many modern improvements recently introduced into the O'Keefe Brewery, the latest is a powerful water-filter, erected by the New York Filter Co., having a capacity of two thousand gallons per hour, and rendering the water absolutely pure before being used in their Ales, Porter and Lager.

When it was all done the Daily Journal's busy crew gathered in the big room of the copy readers and compared their paper with all the other papers, edition for edition. "No row" was this trip, one reporter said, after a while, in a tone of rejoicing. "We've got em all at last!" exclaimed another. "Hurrah for the old Journal," cried a third.

Mr. Kline looked on with no less satisfaction. When the justification had become general, he said, with a twinkle in his eye: "Yes, gentlemen, you have made your strongest rival look like a scarfed cuff under a wet sponge—and what I admire about it is you all squeezed the sponge at once!"

Another of Mrs. Caudle's Curtain Lectures

With Apologies to the Rhone of Douglas Jerrold

(WRITTEN FOR THE REGISTER.)

You have been eating onions again. Caudle, you do not know perfectly well that if there is anything I abhor more...

Your vote wouldn't turn the scale? How do you know, Caudle? If you voted as you ought to have done...

But of course you never will do anything to please me. I may talk myself hoarse and get no thanks for it.

One thing is certain, Sunday card will pretty soon have to be given to their which when the Amos get enough money for their lawsuit...

What are you muttering about? What on earth do I want to look up home from Sunday school for? You don't suppose I'm going to have my poor children...

I know what I'll do; I'll take the car the very next Sunday and go and see Maria. I know there will be a dreadful accident, and then when I'm brought home...

It may be only a trifling cold, but neglect it and it will fatten the fangs of your lung, and you will soon be carried to an earthly grave.

The fault of others is easily perceived, but that of oneself is difficult to perceive. A man windows his neighbor's faults like chaff, but his own faults he blows, as a chest hides the false die from a gambler.

"STRANGERS IN THE HOUSE"

The Prince of Wales and the German Ambassador had to vacate Mr. Biggar's Office on Wednesday with an opponent.

Mr. W. H. Lucy in The North American Review tells one of the funniest stories of the late Mr. J. G. Biggar. At one time, much more than of late years, his Royal Highness was a constant visitor to the House of Commons...

For a moment the crowded chamber was hushed in dismayed silence. The Speaker broke it by enquiring whether the honorable member for Cavan pre-acted in his intention of noticing strangers.

On Tuesday morning, June 1st, the friends of Dr. Haasanov, of London, were surprised to hear that he was taken seriously ill, and on the afternoon of the same day the announcement was made that he was dead.

The speaker had no option. He must needs order strangers to be removed from below the Prince of Wales, the German Ambassador who happened to be in the diplomatic gallery, and the crowd of peers, boasting the blood of England, were compelled to scuffle.

Cornwall's New Catholic Hospital.

CORNWALL, June 11.—Any one who knew the Sandfield house of old, and especially if they had seen it in the evil days into which it had fallen of late years, must have been struck with the transformation that has been effected through the efforts of the Ladies of St. Joseph from Kingston who undertook to convert it into a hospital.

The grounds were brilliantly illuminated with electric lights and Chinese lanterns, and here and there were cosy little tables where ice cream and straw berries of superior flavor were dispensed to the crowds.

The formal opening of the hospital will take place next week. On Wednesday evening at 7.30, there will be an illumination in St. Columba's church on hospital week by Father Domyneus, a celebrated preacher, followed by the benediction of the Blessed Sacrament, His Lordship Bishop Macdonell, and a number of persons being present. On Thursday the hall opened up in a most appropriate ceremonial.

Sixth Annual Excursion to St Anne de Beauspre.

The sixth annual excursion over the C. P. R. to St. Anne de Beauspre, 21 miles below Quebec, under the patronage of His Grace, Most Rev. Archbishop Cleary of Kingston, O. T., and direction of Rev. M. J. Stanton, Smith's Falls, Ont., assisted by Rev. T. Diva, Masou, Ont.; Rev. I. P. O'Connor, Stanleyville, Ont.; and Rev. W. McDonogh, Prescott, Ont., will take place on Tuesday, 20th July next.

The doctor was born on the 5th June, 1842, and at the time of his death was approaching his fifty-fifth year. His father, James Haasanov, was a native of county Wexford, Ireland, and came to the country about the year 1825, settling upon a farm shortly after his arrival.

Death of Dr. Haasanov.

The doctor was married in 1875 to Miss Mary Kidd, of Dublin, Ontario, and a family of seven children was born to them—five sons and two daughters. His youngest child, a daughter, is the wife of a medical student at the Bank of Commerce, London. His only student at the College Institute, London, is now at the hospital.

It is only a few months since the premises were tenanted, and having been occupied by several batches of undesirable tenants, the place was little short of a wreck. But when the public were admitted on Monday evening and saw the wards with their clean, white beds, with well-appointed kitchen, the handsome little chapel, and all the provision for the care of the sick and distressed, the general expression was one of delight and satisfaction.

For about eight years he held the position of county medical officer in the County of Cornwall, Ontario. He was a member of the Grand Council of the Catholic Mutual Benefit Association. For about eight years he held the position of county medical officer in the County of Cornwall, Ontario. He was a member of the Grand Council of the Catholic Mutual Benefit Association.

It is with peculiar feelings of sadness that we pen these lines chronicling the death of Dr. Haasanov. For twelve years he was a member of the Grand Council of the Catholic Mutual Benefit Association. For about eight years he held the position of county medical officer in the County of Cornwall, Ontario. He was a member of the Grand Council of the Catholic Mutual Benefit Association.

What a consolation it must be to Dr. Haasanov's family to feel that he has left a precious remnant of his wealth to benefit his adopted home. The doctor was married in 1875 to Miss Mary Kidd, of Dublin, Ontario, and a family of seven children was born to them—five sons and two daughters.

An open case contained the magnificent floral offerings, amongst which were large plaques from the members of the V. R. A floral cross was sent by the officers of the 28th Battalion, Stratford, and the members of the Catholic Mutual Benefit Association sent a pillow.
