What I am saying to the Hon. Member is simply this. What I am looking for is to convince people that we should have the determination and will to look for creative wording. This is a constitutional document. Whether we like it or not, his view and mine of just what sovereignty is becomes academic. If we have a concept of sovereignty in this constitutional document, the courts are going to interpret it. Sovereignty in a legal sense is quite a different proposition from that of the Hon. Member with respect to self-government within Confederation.

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Madam Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) on his fine speech. I think all Members agree that he spoke with the sensitivity we have come to expect from the Minister of Justice.

In his motion, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) asked the Government to assume a leadership role on this issue. That is somewhat surprising for those of us who have participated in the Thirty-Third Parliament, because I think most fair-minded individuals would acknowledge that the Government has taken a very strong leadership role in this area ever since it was elected in September, 1984. In any case, I would like the Minister to comment on the level of effort he has put into this issue and, in doing so, comment on whether it is true that he himself has chaired a number of ministerial meetings with aboriginal leaders since last fall?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, I have spent a very considerable amount of my time as Minister of Justice on this important issue. Shortly after I was given the opportunity to serve in this portfolio, I was asked to chair the meeting of representatives of the aboriginal peoples and the provinces at the ministerial level. We moved ahead and obtained the participation of the AFN. That group came back into the process and I was very grateful because it was a positive act. We then moved on and had a number of ministerial meetings, I think four in all. We have had a host of meetings of officials. In these meetings we have shown leadership in terms of enunciating, on a rolling draft basis, the proposition that could be considered by all the participants. We have tried to assist in many ways, financially and otherwise, aboriginal peoples to deal with matters related to the constitutional process. We funded the AFN's examination of treaty rights. Each of the aboriginal associations were given moneys with which to pursue their research into constitutional amendment.

I met bilaterally with all of the groups. The Prime Minister has given me a special responsibility for the Métis people of Canada which I take very seriously. I have met with representatives of those people on an ongoing basis. I think that we have an obligation in this country to recognize that there are legitimate hopes and aspirations. For a long period of time aboriginal peoples have not had the same opportunities to share in the kind of life which many Canadians have had. The Government is trying its level best to understand and to react positively and sensitively to aboriginal peoples to give them a plateau upon which they can build, become self-sufficient, and reflect their very rich cultural traditions.

I hope the meeting will be successful and determine to have an amendment. I ask all Members of Parliament to use whatever influence they have on the participants of this meeting to ensure that we go forward in partnership to a successful meeting.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Madam Speaker, I would like to express my appreciation to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) for presenting this motion which our Party fully supports. Indeed, it is very similar to a motion presented a little over a week ago by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry).

The motion is:

> That this House affirms its support for the aboriginal peoples of Canada in their endeavour to have recognized in the Constitution their inherent right to self-government—

The motion calls upon the Government to assume a leadership role "and specifically directs the Government of Canada to abandon its insistence that the right to self-government be contingent upon negotiated agreements".

In debating this we should begin with the recognition of the need of aboriginal peoples to have control over their own lives, communities and futures. It should have become abundantly clear to every Canadian and North American that the aboriginal people of North America do not want to be absorbed into the general population. They want to retain their special identity as individual peoples. They have all paid a very high price to maintain their identity as a people. They have paid the price of poverty, inadequate housing, exaggerated rates of unemployment, poor health, inadequate education and loss of their traditional economic base in their attempts to hold on to their identity as a people.

It is important to realize that these negative features which are so large in the lives of so many aboriginal peoples are not an essential part of aboriginal life and should not be associated with aboriginal peoples at all. I believe they result from two groups of factors which must be considered in combination. We have no real control over one of these groups of factors, but do have control over and responsibility for the second group.

The negative features of aboriginal life associated with poverty and loss of traditional base must, in some sense, be attributed to four centuries of economic and technological change. This change has affected all peoples on the face of this globe, but it has particularly affected them. It has swamped their traditional economy and technology. The second constellation of factors which is important here is the failure of successive governments; British, American and Canadian, to protect the rights of aboriginal peoples even when they have recognized those rights.

Those rights were recognized as long as two centuries ago. In the Royal Proclamation of 1763, King George III provided that Indian nations were not to be molested or disturbed on their traditional lands. In 1787 in the United States the Northwest Ordinance gave the same kind of protection to Indians there. Article III of that ordinance says:

> The outmost good faith shall always be observed towards the Indians; their lands and property shall never be taken from them without their consent; and in their property, rights, and liberty they never shall be invaded or disturbed, unless in just and lawful wars authorized by Congress; but laws founded in justice and humanity shall, from time to time, be made, for preventing wrongs being done to them, and for preserving peace and friendship with them.

Even where there was recognition of these rights, there was not a protection of these rights flowing from that recognition. This failure to protect the rights of aboriginal peoples combined with the economic and technological changes led to the complete over-running of their lands and the swamping of their traditional economies. As an example we can consider what happened in the 19th century to the Indian peoples on the Canadian and American prairies when the railways were built and the buffalo were destroyed. The effects of the coming of settlers varied from place to place but, in the worst instances, people were reduced to being paupers in their own land and they had to depend on government handouts—the seeds of socialism!.

In 1881 Helen Hunt Jackson, as part of the ongoing celebrations of the American centennial of the 1776 revolution, published her epoch-making book, Century of Dishonour. This book detailed the dishonourable way in which the American Government had treated American Indian people. That was 100 years ago. Today that dishonour continues to afflict both Canadian and American Indians. It continues to stain the peoples of both the United States and Canada.

In Canada there has been a deliberate and systematic attempt to subvert and supplant traditional Indian leadership. For example, the Protestant missionary, William Duncan, who in many ways was one of the greatest of the missionaries, went to Metlakatla, British Columbia, in the late 19th century. He had a view that in that so-called model village of Metlakatla there were to be no chiefs but Duncan. Potlatch laws were introduced to attempt to destroy the traditional religion as well as the whole system of government, exchange of property, validation of title and everything else. The potlatch was made illegal by the Canadian Government. In their zeal some missionaries burned potlatch items; rattles and masks. Other missionaries with a little better eye for commercial value collected some of these items and shipped them off to museums. Indian people are still trying to get some of these items back. We had an Indian Act passed which stated that Indian people had to have permission to go to Indian dances or to rodeos. It was an Indian Act which, in the 1920s, made it illegal for Indian people to collect funds for organizations which were advocating aboriginal land claims. There was unworkable racist and sexist legislation in the Indian Act regarding band membership and Indian status. There was discrimination against Indian women. Two years ago with Bill C-31 we attempted to correct some of the worst of those abuses but it is very hard to correct history in this way. The federal Government has had a trust responsibility for managing Indian properties which has been carried out in an abominable way. Indian lands have been sold or leased at far below market value.

We cannot be responsible for the kind of economic and technological changes which have affected Indian peoples over the last four centuries. However, we are collectively responsible for the second group of factors, including the failure of governments and of Canadian and American peoples to recognize the rights of aboriginal people. Over the last few years we have seen a growth in recognition of aboriginal rights. There has been a growth in understanding of aboriginal rights among aboriginal peoples themselves, and that is most significant. We have seen that growth among federal politicians. In the short time I have been in this House, I have seen a development in all Parties in terms of recognition of what aboriginal rights mean. We have seen a growth on the part of the Canadian population as a whole and now we have polls which indicate a majority of Canadians want to see aboriginal self-government.

The modern recognition of aboriginal rights owes a great deal to two events in our time. First, there was the 1969 White Paper which was basically an assimilationist document. At first blush, it was accepted by all Parties in the House of Commons. It followed a series of consultations which had taken place with Indian people and Indian leaders all across Canada. At those consultations the Indian peoples stated their demands to have their historic rights recognized, their hunting and fishing rights, their land claims and their treaty rights. However, the White Paper ignored these demands.

Perhaps the best statement of the way in which the Government ignored those demands came from former Prime Minister Trudeau when he spoke on August 8, 1969, in a very celebrated speech in Vancouver. Mr. Trudeau said that the Government had two choices, either retaining the traditional conventional way of administering to Indians "by adding bricks of discrimination around the ghetto in which they live", or by moving towards eliminating all special status and having Indian people the same as everyone else. He said:

> We will recognize treaty rights—we will recognize forms of contract which have been made with the Indian people by the Crown. And we will try to bring justice in that area. And this will mean that perhaps the treaties shouldn't go on forever.
> It's inconceivable, I think, that in a given society, one section of the society have a treaty with the the other section of the society. We must all be equal under the laws and we must not sign treaties amongst ourselves and many of these treaties indeed would have less and less significance in the future anyhow.

With regard to the question of aboriginal rights he said:

Our answer is no. We can't recognize aboriginal rights because no society can be built on historical "might-have-beens".

The Indian people across Canada did not accept the White Paper. They did not accept the assimilationists' philosophy and began to organize. There was a great awakening of the Indian people all across Canada. People from the Nisga'a, the Cree, the Mohawks, the Micmacs, discovered that they had a great deal in common and began to build a truly Canadian Indian movement which would fight for them. They awakened to a new understanding of their rights, to a new pride in their culture and to a new determination to regain basic control over their lives.

The second event is very closely related. The refusal of the Government to acknowledge aboriginal claims led the Nisga'a Indians on the Nass River in northern British Columbia to take their historic land claim to the Supreme Court. More than any other aboriginal nation in Canada, the Nisga'a had fought for recognition of aboriginal title. It was a fight that went back to the days of Queen Victoria. They have never given up that struggle and they are still struggling. Taking their claim to the Supreme Court resulted in a split decision. Former Prime Minister Trudeau in 1973 said: "Perhaps there is more to aboriginal rights than we thought". I think it is to his credit that, having denied the very concept of aboriginal rights, when the Supreme Court came down with this split decision he recognized there was something there and he was prepared to move on it. As a result a land claims policy was set up. It is a policy which has not worked very well so far for the aboriginal people, but it has at least made people aware of aboriginal rights and that growing acceptance has been indicated by the polls.

In 1980, 1981 and 1982, when former Prime Minister Trudeau was working on patriating the Canadian Constitution, one group of people who took that whole patriation process very seriously was the aboriginal peoples of Canada. They fought very hard to have recognition of their aboriginal rights included in that Constitution. After a hard fight it was included. It was then taken out but it was put back in in a weakened form. When they put back, in a weakened form, recognition of existing aboriginal treaty rights, they were given the promise of First Ministers' Conferences which would further define those rights. A lot of hope was attached to these First Ministers' Conferences, but so far they have been exercises in high frustration. There has been a lot of grandstanding and posturing, but where are the results which affect the average life of the Indian person living on a reserve, a Métis person living in one of their settlements or an Inuit person living in an Inuit village in the Northwest Territories?

The process which was set out in those First Ministers' Conferences has continually been frustrated on the one hand by the intransigence of some provinces, particularly in the past by Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. Unfortunately, the Province of Ontario seems to be joining the ranks of that intransigence for the current round. Second, that process has been frustrated by a failure of the federal Government to give the kind of leadership which is needed to rally the Canadian people around this whole issue.

Perhaps that failure of leadership is exemplified by the statement made in the March 11 debate by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight). He said:

There has not been a proposal put forward in the meetings that has not been supported by the federal Government when it came to trying to bring consensus from all sides of the table.

We recognize that the Government would like to have a consensus. We recognize that the Government has good intentions. However, basically what it is doing, and what the Minister said it was doing, was following. When other governments presented proposals, the federal Government would say: "Let us see who supports that. Who is willing to go along with this?" Where did the federal Government stand in providing the kind of leadership which was necessary to create a total Canadian consensus around this issue which would result in action?

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) in his speech pointed out the view that recognition of inherent rights leaves the Government open to lawsuits. A right is a right. We are talking here about a right of the aboriginal peoples which was never surrendered. Before the coming of non-Indians and non-aboriginal peoples to North America, these people had the right to govern themselves. Historically, they did govern themselves. They have never surrendered that right. Therefore that right is still intact.

Why does the Government take the position which says in effect: "We are prepared to give this to you as a privilege, only if you are prepared to accept that you do not have a right to it"? The people have a right—they insist on that right. They will not bargain it away for the few chips that the Government thinks it can give to them as a privilege.

Our Party wants the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to show the type of leadership that Prime Minister Trudeau showed in his great project of patriating the Constitution, for example, or the type of leadership that the present Prime Minister is evidently now prepared to give in his own pet project to sell free trade to the Canadian people. Why does he not give that type of leadership to the question of entrenching the rights of aboriginal people to self-government?

I urge the Government to catch a vision of what self-government can do for Canada, as well as for the aboriginal people. Instead of a grudging concession to the needs of aboriginal people, why not take a positive step which the Government can see as doing something for all of Canada so that to be Indian, Métis or Inuit will no longer be synonymous with poverty or with being off in the margins of Canadian life but, instead, at the centre of Canadian life. In this way they will be a part of Canadian life, something about which everyone can be proud, rather than perpetuating the system that was typified by the phrase "a century of dishonour". Let us instead have a century of pride and dignity for our aboriginal peoples.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, I would first like to thank the Hon. Member for a very thoughtful speech. It was another demonstration of his continuing interest in this area. Before asking my question I want to say at the outset that I share the same concerns, as does the Government, with respect to the history of injustice to aboriginal peoples in our country.

Having said that, I want to make a very important correction to the interpretation the Hon. Member gives to my remarks. I want to reiterate the fact that nowhere have I said, or what I have said could be interpreted to mean, that I think that the aboriginal peoples of Canada should be restricted, denied or refused access to the courts. Indeed, in response to the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) I tried to make the point that what I am trying to do is to assist the aboriginal peoples in some of the suggestions being put forward to give them even more compellable legal remedies in the event that the negotiation process is not successful.

So that I can be clear in my own mind I ask the Hon. Member if he would not agree with the proposition that I have been putting forward, that is, it is far more preferable to have a process under which there is a negotiated political agreement which is constitutionalized than it is to have a document which simply states that the courts will decide what constitutes self-government. Does the Hon. Member not agree with the proposition that under the present circumstances, in terms of their excellence and in terms of their membership, knowledge and so on, the courts are simply not the appropriate forum within which self-government should be determined and that the Canadian way would be to have a system or process which involves negotiation between the aboriginal peoples and the Governments of our country?

Mr. Manly: Madam Speaker, certainly all parties in this matter, especially the aboriginal peoples, would like to see a negotiated approach to this question. They know how difficult it is to move through the courts. There has already been too great a need for aboriginal peoples to go to the courts. There are a number of court cases pending now in British Columbia because the whole system of land claims is moving so terribly slow. What I am saying is that we cannot use the desire for a negotiated settlement to deny to the aboriginal peoples the right that they have inherited to self-government. It is incumbent upon us to recognize that that is a right that has always existed. It is a right that has never been extinguished. We must recognize that that should be the basis for negotiation. If we recognize it as a basis for negotiation, I do not think it will lead to increased appeals to the courts. If we are not prepared to recognize that basic right, then I think there are a number of aboriginal groups which will indeed go to the courts because they believe that they have a very good legal case and they will want to test it in the courts.

Mr. Penner: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) if he agrees that what the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) has just proposed, that is, an either/or situation, is not at all fair to the concept of having an inherent right entrenched in the Constitution. In his question the Minister left the impression with the House that we had to go one way or the other, either we fight it out in the courts, if it is believed that there is a freestanding inherent right in the Constitution, or we move to negotiated settlements. In fact, what has been proposed by the Assembly of First Nations, which has been supported by other aboriginal leaders, and what has been proposed by Nova Scotia, incorporates both. It is not a case of either/or. Nova Scotia sets the right out, as the Hon. Member wants and as the motion we are debating today wants, and then goes on to say that the scope of the right shall be set out through negotiated agreements. Will the Hon. Member not agree that the Minister is not being fair in stating the two approaches by making it an either/or proposition?

Mr. Manly: Madam Speaker, absolutely. As I said earlier, I do not think that the aboriginal people generally want to have to rely upon the courts. They are looking for this recognition. Following that recognition they are looking for a negotiated settlement. They realize that there has to be give and take on both sides. But with respect to the basic fundamental question of justice, they have a right which they are not prepared to negotiate away. They believe that it is a right which they have inherited from their ancestors. It is something which they have to be able to pass on to their children. It is not something which is negotiable.

Mr. Tupper: Madam Speaker, I wish to compliment my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly), on his thoughtful presentation this afternoon and on the sincerity with which he presented his case before us. Something I have been interested in for quite some time as we move toward self-government and in the resolution of the land claims aspect for our native peoples is the ownership of the subsurface rights in the lands that are in question. If we look at our Constitution relative to this matter we will see that these subsurface rights are inherently owned by the provinces. Will the Hon. Member clarify for us the position of his Party with respect to this issue of whether subsurface rights, that is, mineral, hydrocarbon and water rights, are in fact contingent with surface rights?

Mr. Manly: Madam Speaker, the people who signed the historic treaties in Alberta understood at that time that they were signing a treaty for the use of the land, a treaty that extended to the depth of a plow furrow. They were not signing away the land itself.

If we are looking at the question of aboriginal self-government then we have to take seriously the need of aboriginal people for a proper economic base. This is why one of the agenda items has to be the whole question of resource sharing. Again, this is something that has to be decided upon by negotiation. There are reserves in western Canada where the aboriginal peoples have subsurface rights. There are others where they do not have those rights. It is important that they have a right to share in the resources of their historic lands.

• (1510)

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Madam Speaker, I wish to begin by commending the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) for proposing this motion. I think it clearly demonstrates, along with other of his actions, the strong leadership position he is taking with respect to the recognition and the elaboration of aboriginal rights in Canada.

Not only has the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition proposed this motion today, he was the only leader of any national Party who spoke to the aboriginal peoples' rally on Parliament Hill recently. He also issued a strong statement which was read at the summit of the aboriginal leaders held in Toronto just a few weeks ago.

I also want to thank all Hon. Members for their interest in this debate. I am pleased that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) was able to be here for part of the debate. I thank the Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) for his contribution. I look forward to the words from an ally and strong supporter in this area, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand).

Very recently I had the opportunity to appear on a television program. Unlike many, this was a live program on the subject of aboriginal self-government. Before the interview began, the young interviewer coached me a little. She said: "You are a politician and we only have 12 minutes. Could your answers to my questions be brief?" I assured her that they would be, but she made me promise again. She said: "Please be brief". When the interview began, her first question was: "What is really meant by aboriginal self-government?" I said: "Emancipation". She blinked her eyes and asked me to elaborate. The elaboration is simply that the aboriginal people of Canada are seeking emancipation through our Constitution.

First, they are seeking emancipation from the Indian Act, which is a totalitarian Act of this House. It controls and regulates every aspect of an Indian person's life. No other citizens of this country would allow themselves to be dominated by an Act of Parliament such as the Indian Act dominates Indian people.

Second, Indian people are seeking emancipation from the overbearing, constant direction, superintending, and overseeing of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Again, there is no Department of Government that controls every aspect of the lives of other Canadians the way this Department controls Indian and Inuit communities in Canada.

Third, aboriginal people are seeking emancipation from a dominant society, which, as my hon. friend from Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands pointed out, continually seeks to assimilate these people and make them like us in the belief that somehow our industrial commercial system is the one we should all follow in order to be considered a success.

The Special Committee on Indian Self-Government was an all-parliamentary committee. The recommendations of that committee were unanimous in every case. When that special committee set out to do its work, we first had to steep ourselves in some little-known history of this country. It is not a history that is usually taught in the elementary or secondary schools, or even universities of Canada. However, if a person were to go to a college like the Saskatchewan Federated Indian College, that person would get quite a different kind of education regarding the early history of this country.

When the Europeans arrived in North America to explore and later to settle, what they encountered were various tribes and nations. That terminology comes directly from the Royal Proclamation of 1763. They saw different cultures, and economies in existence, and people speaking different languages. This was not a vast empty land; there was activity going on. People were interrelating and they were recognized by the British explorers and the British colonists as being tribes and nations. A government-to-government relationship was established in order for there to be accommodation and agreements. That was the modus operandi established by the Royal Proclamation. While it is a colonial document and we do not want to make too much of it, it has been recognized in our Constitution as being an important document on which to proceed.

The debate about negotiating and reaching agreement is not one that is being questioned. That is the way to proceed. What is being questioned is whether we begin with the right and then proceed to the negotiations and the agreements, or do we say that there are only rights if agreements can be negotiated? If we do it that way, I ask the House: Where will be what I call the constitutional imperative to begin those negotiations? If we do not have a constitutional imperative, once again we must rely on good will and co-operation.

I know that there is a lot of co-operation and good will in Canada, but I also know that there is a very bad history in this country of not negotiating in good faith and of not honouring agreements once they are made. A constitutional recognition of an inherent right seeks to change the direction we have been following for such a long time.

We must go back a long way in our history to see when this direction began to change. Early British policy did recognize sovereign self-determining nations. However, it was not long before that began to change and there entered a system of domination, of paternalism, and eventually assimilation, about which a whole history could be carefully documented and described for Hon. Members.

The Department of Indian and Northern Affairs has very often been the instrument or manifestation for this kind of control. For example, it is under the Indian Act, which the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development administers, that the band council form of government was set up. According to the wisdom of the Parliament and Government of the day, these were the only kinds of government aboriginal peoples could have.

However, we know what those Governments were. They were agents of the Government. They were not self-governing bodies, making decisions for their people and being answerable or responsible for their people. They were agents of the Government in Ottawa. Regulations, directives and guidelines issued from Ottawa were carried out by those band councils as if they were somehow Indian agents. That is what we are seeking to change when we introduce the concept of self-government.

Recently in The Globe and Mail, a columnist whom one might not expect to be a spokesman for self-government nevertheless wrote a piece which I thought was very appropriate to the theme of self-government. I am referring to Richard Needham. He wrote as follows:

> The desire to heckle and hassle and harass other people, to possess and control and manipulate them, to change them into something different from what they are—this desire is surely one of the oldest in history. It's born right into us.
> What we must learn, and painfully, is to let go, to let the other person live according to his or her own pattern.

That is what self-government for aboriginal people is about. It is about letting go.

When our special committee was in Yukon we heard very telling testimony from a small band. My hon. friend will remember the Mayo Band. They had a truly remarkable brief which contained a reference to a short piece written by Leo Tolstoy in 1886. I do not know how they discovered it. I never ran across it before, but it was submitted as part of their brief. Quoting Leo Tolstoy, it said very simply: "I sit on a man's back, choking him and making him carry me, and yet assure myself and others that I am sorry for him and wish to lighten his load by all possible means, except by getting off his back". That is what self-government is all about.

There are a lot of well-meaning people in the Department of Indian Affairs and in Canada who want to do good things for Indian people. However, there is the suspicion that really what we want to do is to make them like us, to deny their culture, to deny their way of life, and to deny their right to make decisions, manage, control and direct their own affairs. It is a foolish and academic debate to talk about whether or not this represents sovereignty.

We all know that we live in a very interdependent world and that sovereignty nowadays is always hedged in by all sorts of provisions, agreements, and conditions. The aboriginal people of Canada are quite prepared to accept that. They want to negotiate so that they can fit into, not pull out of, our Canadian Confederation.

We should listen, for example, to John Amagoalik, Co-chairman of the Inuit Committee on National Issues. Recently before our standing committee he said:

> The vision of aboriginal self-government is one that sees aboriginal peoples maintaining their own distinctiveness by running as many of their own affairs as is practical in a modern, culturally diverse and interdependent federal state. In my view, this is a vision that can be shared by most of the political leaders taking part in the upcoming conference.

What could be more reasonable than that? I want Hon. Members to know that in this whole issue—and let us call it a public policy issue because that makes it so respectable—there is another aspect which is rather disturbing. The Department of Indian Affairs, after having wandered around in a political desert for decades, has now discovered a new raison d'être. It has discovered something which gives it a brand new lease on life, and it is called self-government. It has embraced the policy of self-government like someone who is meeting a long lost love. However, if we look at it carefully—and we have done this in the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development; we cross-examined the department officials when they appeared before us—we discover that they are not promoting self-government at all. They are using the language, the terminology, and the phraseology, but they continue to deny the substance.

The Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands and the Hon. Member for Notre Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East will remember that when the special committee was sitting we anticipated that this would happen. We made it very clear in our report that we could not look to the Department of Indian Affairs to be the leader in bringing about aboriginal self-government in Canada. I quote just a small part of that reference in the report itself. It reads:

> The past history of the federal-Indian relationship has left a legacy of distrust and suspicion that would seriously impair the capacity of the Department of Indian Affairs . . . to act as the federal instrument for developing a new relationship.

We said that that Department should get off the stage. We proposed that it have five years to get off the stage. It is still around. It is still manipulating, controlling, regulating, and dominating, only it has a brand new set of words by which to do that.

I should like to give an example to help Hon. Members understand how it works, because it is a little subtle. I take my example from education. A policy exists which is called Indian control of Indian education. What could be more reasonable than that? Almost anybody could accept it as being a fair and acceptable proposition.

However, there are two approaches to it. First, to the First Nations, local control of education is an area of their jurisdiction based on treaty and aboriginal rights which falls under the purview of self-government. Indian First Nations understand control to be the establishment of philosophies, goals, and objectives, and the administration and management of educational systems which reflect fundamental attitudes and values of Indian and aboriginal culture and tradition. Of course it does. What Hon. Member would debate, argue, or take exception to that? None of us, because it is what controlling education is about.

How does the Department of Indian Affairs interpret Indian control of Indian education? The Department has interpreted it to mean the administration of funds for certain aspects of education managed under federal guidelines and regulations. That is quite different. The implications of that may escape many. However, if they are seeking to control their own educational system, which is a way of enhancing their culture and giving it new life, that difference takes on a very great magnitude.

Recently I had the opportunity to go to Queen's University in Kingston which has an Institute on Intergovernmental Affairs. It sponsored a day-long workshop on aboriginal self-government called "The Search for Accommodation". As I participated in the workshop, it crossed my mind that one of the problems of those of us in Canada who are non-native Canadians is that we have not fully understood or appreciated the magnitude of the accommodation which has already been made for our patterns of settlement and development. For example, the question about natural resources posed to my hon. friend fits clearly into that category. We have not comprehended the magnitude of the accommodation which has been made for us. However, as we move toward the First Ministers' Conference at the end of next week, we have the opportunity to reciprocate and respond to that accommodation.

We can do it by putting into our Constitution a recognition of a right, which was never relinquished or given up; a right which could easily be accommodated in our federal system; a right which would give aboriginal people of the country a new meaning, a new sense of their own destiny, and a new control over their future which heretofore they have not had.

The special committee agreed unanimously that there must be in the Constitution a recognition of the inherent and inalienable right of Indian people and aboriginal people to be self-governing.

We cannot put that right in the Constitution and immediately hedge it in on every side, limit it, and confine it. However, that is the proposal which is being put forward by the federal Government at the present time. Even the Province of Nova Scotia, in its participation, has seen the folly of this. All aboriginal leaders find it to be unacceptable.

For example, the federal proposal indicates that the right to Indian self-government exists, but that it can only be recognized in accord with or subject to negotiated agreements. Madam Speaker, you know all about your rights and Canadians know all about their rights under our Charter. Would any of us allow our rights to be contingent rights? Would we say that our rights of conscience, religion, association, and assembly, those fundamental and democratic rights, are contingent rights and that they only exist if we can negotiate agreements with Governments, and that only once we have negotiated those agreements we have those rights?

The argument that if we have a free-standing and inherent right of aboriginal self-government in the Constitution, the courts will be plugged with aboriginal people seeking a definition, seeking substance, and seeking an order to impose self-government, is a false fear. I suggest, further, that it is a big lie. Aboriginal people do not want to go the court route. They want to negotiate self-government, jurisdiction, financial agreements, and resource sharing. If they had wanted to go to the courts, they would have gone a long time ago under Section 35. It is a powerful section. They could have had all kinds of settlements out of Section 35. Only in British Columbia has that route been followed because the province refused to negotiate with aboriginal people there.

If we succeed next week in having a constitutional amendment that recognizes aboriginal self-government, we do not need to worry about people rushing headlong to the courts. But if we fail next week, there will be no other recourse. What our leaders fear most, namely, court action after court action, will take place because we will have failed at the First Ministers' Conference on aboriginal rights related to self-government.

[Translation]

Mr. St. Julien: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) is a staunch defender of Canada's aboriginal people and I commend him for his dedication.

Earlier this week I sent a telegram to Quebec Premier Bourassa to urge him to be in Ottawa next March 26 and 27. When it comes to defending the interests of Quebec and aboriginal people, I think that Mr. Bourassa is an outstanding negotiator. Quebec's aboriginal people need him personally at this conference.

Quebec seems to be content with standing on the station platform and watching the train go by as last minute preparations are being made for the constitutional negotiations on aboriginal issues. Native leaders in Quebec and the rest of Canada are very concerned and disappointed that Mr. Bourassa should take such an attitude. Native people seek to have their political power within the federation enshrined in Canada's Constitution. Why stay away from this conference? More than anybody else, Quebecers are dutybound to speak up for the first inhabitants of Canada.

That was a preamble, Madam Speaker, and now here is my question. The greatness of a nation is measured in terms of respect for its minorities. Quebec Government officials must confirm their Amerindian and Inuit policy under which they should actively participate in the constitutional conference and attempt to convince the reluctant provinces that Quebec native people do have legitimate claims. Would the Hon. Member tell me whether the Leader of the Liberal Opposition has done whatever may me required to convince the Quebec Liberal Premier to attend the conference? And, as you see it, what are the repercussions of Mr. Bourassa's absence at the conference?

[English]

Mr. Penner: First, Madam Speaker, let me say that the Hon. Member for Abitibi (Mr. St. Julien) has been far too generous in describing me as a defender of the aboriginal people. The aboriginal people do not need any defenders. Their own leaders are perfectly capable of doing that. My role simply is to work with legislators and Governments in the development of public policy and with non-native Canadians. The Hon. Member has been too generous. I like it, but it is not fair to the aboriginal leaders.

The Member's question about the participation of Premier Bourassa was asked by the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner). I thought it was a relevant and fair question. It is important that Quebec be there. Most important of all would be for Quebec to be a signatory to the Constitution and a full participant at all times. I, for one, hope that this will happen in the near future. Even though it has not happened yet, there is an important reason for Quebec to be at the conference table. As my hon. friend knows, there is aboriginal self-government now in effect in the Province of Quebec. The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine Est will perhaps describe that later in his comments. I simply repeat what the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition said that, yes, the Premier of Quebec should be there. Quebec has much to contribute and without Quebec it will be a lesser conference than it could otherwise be.

Mr. Allmand: Madam Speaker, why does the Hon. Member think there is so much hesitancy on the part of provincial Governments in Canada and of the federal Government to accept completely the proposal for aboriginal self-government when after more than 100 years of governing them through the Indian Act and the Department of Indian Affairs we have made such a complete mess of things? For example, in a 1980 report it was pointed out that the life expectancy of Indian people was 10 years less than non-Indian people, that the infant mortality rate was 60 per cent higher than the national rate for all Canadians, that the unemployment rate ranged from 50 per cent to 90 per cent, that income was two-thirds of the national average, and that in 1977, less than 40 per cent of the Indian people had running water, sewage disposal or indoor plumbing and 19 per cent had two or more families in their homes.

Mr. McDermid: Who was the Minister during that time?

Mr. Allmand: With that kind of mess after 100 years of Government by many political Parties—

Miss MacDonald: You are absolutely right.

Mr. Allmand: What I am reading is from a report published in 1980, and I think it reflects on all of us.

Mr. McDermid: Especially former Ministers.

Mr. Allmand: No, it reflects on all Parties. I do not say this in a partisan way. I hope the Hon. Member does not understand me to say that. I am saying that on behalf of Liberals, Conservative and NDP Governments, and I meant to say it that way.

Miss MacDonald: I agree.

Mr. Allmand: If that is the case, why is there a hesitancy not to agree to Indian self-government with that kind of record?

Mr. Penner: Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member asks an extremely difficult question. We want to get now at the issue of motivation. What is it that motivates people either to block something or to do something? For what it is worth, and I can certainly be challenged on this by any Hon. Member and his or her answer would be as good as mine, I believe there exists among political leaders in Canada a fear of the consequences of sharing, on the one hand sharing wealth, and on the other hand, and probably more important, sharing power. It is an unknown. Entering into an unknown area can be very threatening, very challenging and very destabilizing.

I would simply say that, having been associated with aboriginal leaders for a very long period of time, I would think the quote, going back to the 1930s of Franklin Delano Roosevelt, would be appropriate, that really there is nothing to fear but fear itself. There is no fear in negotiating these agreements, Madam Speaker. What we require at this First Ministers' Conference and what we will all be watching for is whether those people who have been elected as Premiers of provinces and our own Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) have the kind of vision that Mr. Amagoalik referred to and which my friend, the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands mentioned. A need for vision is what is required to get over this obstacle of fear, of moving into what for many Governments in Canada will be a new area. I would encourage them to make a leap over that gap of fear and move into this new realm. It is very promising for our Confederation. The whole world is watching us expecting that we can get some answers for the indigenous people.

Ms. Mitchell: Madam Speaker, I could not help but think back to the time when we were all involved in the constitutional negotiations in one way or another and, as the Hon. Member was speaking so eloquently, I thought of two other areas of rights that were being negotiated at the same time, both of which came out quite differently. Can the Member explain to me and others why the difference? First, regarding the equality rights for women, there was no question that these were not contingent rights. Rights were established first and, after being clearly established, various programs are still being negotiated.

Second, with regard to linguistic rights, the right to two official languages was established clearly first, and then programs were established afterwards. There were fears attached, certainly to loss of jobs, in both areas. Why in the case of the aboriginal rights to self-government was this not accepted as a basic right and why has it been left to the amending formula? It seems so different. We are dividing things up that should be basic human rights.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner). May I remind him that there is very little time left.

• (1540)

Mr. Penner: Madam Speaker, all I can say to the Hon. Member is thank you. In future speeches on the subject, I am going to incorporate those two aspects. Neither linguistic rights nor women's rights are in any way contingent. She is perfectly correct that the definition and elaboration of those rights followed. Why aboriginal rights should be different still puzzles many of us. We heard the answer from the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn), and it was not a very good or complete answer. He said that somehow they are going to rush off to the courts. I have not seen a great deal of court action in the two areas mentioned by the Hon. Member. There has been some, but usually court action follows when there is an unwillingness to negotiate, when negotiations get bogged down. I think the courts could play a useful role in getting the parties to bargain in good faith, but not to describe the content of those negotiations.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate.

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak on a very important question. Aboriginal peoples' rights are not a new issue in Canada. Indeed, it was an arduous and, some would argue, long overdue accomplishment to include them in the Constitution Act, 1982. But as of then, our Constitution recognized and affirmed existing aboriginal rights without defining them. However, it went on to establish a means to do that. It provided in Section 37 for a future constitutional process on aboriginal matters, which has become known as the "Section 37 process". Section 37 included the following provisions: A First Ministers' Conference was to be convened within one year—Section 37(1); the conference agenda would include the definition and identification of aboriginal rights, to be included in the Constitution and, representatives of aboriginal peoples would participate in discussions on agenda items affecting them—Section 37(2); elected representatives of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories Governments were to be invited to participate in discussing agenda items affecting those regions—Section 37(3).

It is also important to note that, from the outset, there were different interpretations of the purpose of the Section 37 process. The aboriginal associations viewed the process as one in which their rights would be clarified and affirmed rather than given or restored. Many Governments on the other hand viewed the Section 37 process as a means of identifying and protecting aboriginal rights which would be recognized in the future.

The March 1983 First Ministers' Conference was preceded by extensive consultations among the provinces, the Territories and the aboriginal representatives. It resulted in an accord signed by the federal Government and all the provinces except Quebec. As participants in the process, aboriginal representatives and leaders of the territorial Governments also signed the accord. The 1983 accord called for a resolution containing the following amendments to the Constitution which were ultimately proclaimed in June, 1984, after being endorsed by the House of Commons, the Senate and nine provincial legislatures. These provisions were: The protection of "treaty rights" in the Constitution was extended to include rights arising from land claims settlements; aboriginal and treaty rights recognized and affirmed in the Constitution were made to apply equally to male and female persons; the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was required to convene two further conferences of First Ministers each having in its agenda "constitutional matters that directly affect the aboriginal peoples of Canada"; the conferences were to take place no later than April 17, of 1985 and 1987 respectively; and no amendment to Sections 25 and 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982, or Section 91(24) of the Constitution Act, 1867, could be made without first discussing the proposed amendment at a First Ministers' Conference to which aboriginal representatives must be invited as participants.

The accord also gave formal recognition to the agenda for future conferences and provided that future conferences must address the items that could not be discussed in the time available. The agenda was a list of "constitutional matters" identified for ongoing review in the Section 37 process and included: Charter of Rights of the aboriginal peoples; amending formula revisions; self-government; amendments to Part III; and ongoing process. The accord also provided that there should be a subsequent First Ministers' Conference by March of 1984, and established a mandatory and continuing preparatory process to be undertaken by Ministers and aboriginal representatives. Specifically, it required that a multilateral ministerial level meeting had to be convened at least annually by the Government of Canada in preparation for the required First Ministers' Conferences. The Section 37 process was intended to be one whereby the rights of the aboriginal peoples would be identified and defined so that they could be included in the Constitution. The 1983 accord was intended to give practical effect and commitment to that intention.

The difficulties inherent in this process emerged early on. The rights to be so identified and defined fell into the broad category of "existing aboriginal and treaty rights" referred to in Section 35. It was not surprising that there were quite divergent and varied interpretations of the nature and scope of these rights. Mutually agreeable definitions eluded the parties, yet, for Governments in particular, a clear definition of these rights was essential if the process of constitution-building between Governments and the aboriginal peoples was to remain one of practical political discussion rather than one of the judicial interpretation. Eventually self-government emerged from the ministerial level preparatory process leading up to the 1984 First Ministers' Conference as the pivotal issue, although the items dealing with equality rights and Section 35 issues were also explored intensively.

At the 1984 First Ministers' Conference, it was evident that the aboriginal representatives considered self-government to be the only acceptable means by which all of their other aspirations could be dealt with. There emerged, from their statements and positions, a firm perception that the right to "self-government" would clear away the major impediments to a better life for aboriginal peoples. Various participants at the First Ministers' Conference proposed a range of options to deal with the self-government issue, from the constitutional recognition and entrenchment of an inherent and unqualified right to aboriginal self-government to recognition of the right only after its full definition. It was out of this range of options that the challenge emerged to find a workable consensus. For its part, the federal Government presented a draft resolution to the conference which was aimed at a constitutional amendment of a non-justifiable nature which would commit Governments to the establishment of institutions of aboriginal self-government.

The conference failed to resolve any issues. The aboriginal representatives sought immediate entrenchment of self-government as a right. A majority of the provinces refused to consider the entrenchment of an undefined right that they considered could have unknown consequences and that might eventually have to be interpreted by the courts.

When this Government assumed office, in the fall of 1984, our position on aboriginal self-government was already on the record and we moved immediately to place it high on the national agenda. Since assuming office we have worked diligently in our efforts to reach consensus on constitutional change for our aboriginal peoples. An intense preparatory process was undertaken leading to the 1985 First Ministers' Conference. Four ministerial meetings and four meetings of officials were held. It was clear to us that the wide diversity of aboriginal communities, coupled with the concerns of provinces about a general undefined right of self-government, called for a flexible process that could be tailored to reflect individual community aspirations while providing for substantive participation by the provinces.

Accordingly, in December, 1984, among Governments and aboriginal leaders at a ministerial meeting, the federal Minister of Justice made a proposal which became the core of the federal proposal tabled at the 1985 First Ministers' Conference. Under this proposal the rights of the aboriginal peoples to self-government which were set out in agreements negotiated between Governments and the aboriginal peoples concerned would have received constitutional protection.

The proposal contemplated that these rights would not be justiciable in the absence of negotiated agreements but would receive constitutional protection, along with a possible list of elements to be negotiated, such as the nature of institutions and powers and jurisdiction. Under the proposal, each level of government would negotiate within its own authority under the Constitution and any resulting agreements with representatives of aboriginal communities and groups which would have had the same constitutional status and protection as land claims agreements.

In the federal Government's view, many different forms of government would be possible under this proposal and were indeed necessary. It had become clear that in most cases the appropriate unit of self-government would be the community or band, and this fact itself would likely lead to great diversity. Some communities, especially those that are very small, would wish to join with others in a regional, tribal treaty or other group. This, too, would be possible as long as all communities involved consent. Some forms of government would be based on aboriginal membership, some would not. Under its proposal the federal Government indicated a willingness to consider a wide range of possibilities in working with aboriginal peoples and other Governments.

At the meeting in December many Governments argued that the parties should be working on practical issues that would benefit the aboriginal peoples. The federal Government agreed with that but believed that a constitutional amendment recognizing self-government subject to definition through negotiations would lead to a measured approach and pave the way to practical community level discussions.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) convened a First Ministers' Conference in April, 1985. The focus of the meeting was on aboriginal self-government and on a specific federal proposal for a constitutional amendment and accompanying political accord. The Prime Minister expressed the Government's view that "it is through self-government that a people can maintain the sense of pride and self-worth which is necessary for productive and happy lives".

He also stated that "constitutional protection for the principle of self-government is an over-riding objective because it is the constitutional manifestation of a relationship, an unbreakable social contract between aboriginal peoples and their Government.

There were moments in the course of the conference when agreement appeared close and, although such agreement was ultimately not achieved, an unprecedented level of consensus was reached. Seven provinces appeared ready to support a modification of the federal draft proposed by Saskatchewan if a majority of the aboriginal associations at the table agreed. Two did not.

The Assembly of First Nations stated that it could accept nothing less than recognition of an inherent and unqualified right to self-government. The Inuit Committee on National Issues withheld its approval because of its concern about provinces having a mandatory role in the negotiation and constitutional protection of self-government agreements.

A subsequent ministerial meeting in June, 1985, was not successful in achieving agreement on an amendment. For its part the federal Government stated that despite the failure to achieve consensus on a constitutional amendment it intended to proceed, within its existing authorities, with community level negotiations aimed at providing concrete examples of self-government in practice.

Since June, 1985, four multilateral meetings have been held at the Minister's level and seven at the officials' level with bilateral discussions with participants continuing throughout. During the first year, June, 1985, to June, 1986, the federal Government had two main goals. The first was to re-establish a positive climate for the discussions and negotiations. The second goal in this period was to ensure a full hearing and thorough discussion of all perspectives on the full range of constitutional issues with a view to ensuring greater understanding of, if not agreement on, the positions of the participants.

This process resulted in considerable clarification and detailing of positions and rationales and led all participants to conclude that self-government continued to be the focal issue for the 1987 First Ministers' Conference. The challenge has continued to bridge the range of views which still exist on this issue.

The aboriginal associations continue to argue for recognition of an immediately enforceable right to aboriginal self-government. Some provinces are still not prepared to accept recognition of a right which is not free and fully defined. The federal Government has listened to the concern of the aboriginal associations and has reflected this in its proposals. We have attempted to meet the concerns of provinces by proposing an amendment which leaves the task of defining the right, in practical terms, to a political process rather than to the courts.

I would like to take a moment to review the Liberal record. Very briefly, what does the record show? For example, what was the Liberal Government's response to the parliamentary Special Committee on Indian Self-Government? Its response was Bill C-52, a legislative approach to accommodating self-government through delegated powers. Bill C-52 provided:

> An Indian nation may not seek recognition unless:
> The Indian nation meets the criteria established by regulation for eligibility for recognition.

Was this the recognition of an inherent right? No. In fact, the federal Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development indicated clearly in his response to the parliamentary report:

> The Government, therefore, is prepared to acknowledge that effective movement toward self-government will require substantial restructuring of the current relationship between Indian people and the Government of Canada. Changes are clearly needed. However, it is important for us to recognize that any change in the relationship will affect not only the federal Government and Indian people but also provincial governments and others.
> Because the effect of changes in the relationship are likely to be wide-ranging, long-lasting and profound, they cannot be undertaken lightly. Each step toward self-government must be carefully considered through joint consultation to ensure that progress is steady and sure.
> The Government recognizes, as the committee has, that self-government can be furthered through non-constitutional as well as constitutional means. Indeed, if the principle of self-government were constitutionally entrenched tomorrow, the challenge of making self-government an effective and vital reality would remain. Effective government, as the Prime Minister said at the First Ministers Conference on the Constitution in March, 1983, will first be judged by how it impacts upon the daily lives of its constituents.

Does this, Madam Speaker, sound like a policy in support of a right immediately enforceable in the courts? It does not. It speaks of a Government treading very carefully into new territory. Subsequently, at the 1984 First Ministers' Conference the then Liberal Prime Minister put his proposal on the table. Did it call for an inherent right? No, Madam Speaker, it did not.

The approach underlying that proposal was a pragmatic approach to negotiating self-government agreements. Let me give you some examples of the Government's position. The then Prime Minister, speaking of the 1984 First Ministers' Conference, said:

> I reject full independence or absolute sovereignty as a basis for aboriginal peoples relationship with any Government within our federation.

Mr. Trudeau went on to make his Government's position crystal clear. He said:

> Interpretation of our Constitution and its application in various situations could be left to the courts. That will always be open to us in any event.
> My own judgment, however, is that we should be looking at concepts and formulations which lead to political rather than legal solutions.

What does the present Government record show? We have gone far beyond the debate on whether aboriginal peoples should have a right to self-government and, unlike the Liberals, we have taken pains to make sure that we do not leave the provinces behind. Constitutional change is not a federal prerogative. It is a collaborative effort.

What we are discussing now, and have been for years, is not whether the right exists but how it should be exercised. In this, Governments seem to be clear. Any aboriginal Government must sit within the Canadian Confederation. Indeed, it was the Liberal Prime Minister who said:

> Aboriginal governments, in whatever form or model, will have to fit into the constitutional system. It should fit smoothly, comfortably and effectively. The complexity of jurisdictional issues is at once obvious and formidable. It can only be addressed through careful negotiations, based on full and frank expression of aims and needs and a determination to get a set of intergovernmental relationships that will work well for the benefit of all concerned.

Governments today continue to share that view and, as representatives of all Canadians, it is the elected politicians' responsibility to ensure a smooth transition from the status quo to new constitutional arrangements with aboriginal peoples. Whether the aboriginal peoples' right to self-government is already contained in Section 35 as an inherent right will ultimately be a question for the courts. Whatever the courts decide, the exercise of self-government rights would have to be negotiated. To do otherwise would result in legal and institutional chaos for which we would all be responsible. I cannot believe that this is the intention of any Government or aboriginal representative around the constitutional table. This Government's record clearly shows that whatever the nature or source of aboriginal peoples' right to self-government, we are prepared to negotiate with them on how those rights could be exercised.

Mr. Manly: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member who just spoke for his comments on another aspect of self-government, namely, the Cree-Naskapi Act which incorporates the self-government of the Cree-Naskapi people. Under Section 158 of the federal legislation, there is a requirement for the federal commission to look at it. The report, which was brought in a short time ago, stated:

> —the federal Government has failed in particular to respect the formal financial agreements for the implementation of the Act, and has thus placed the implementation of the Act in jeopardy.

The Government of Canada has decided to repudiate the report of the Cree-Naskapi Commission which was set up in accordance with the provisions of the Act. I wonder if the Hon. Member could say what that repudiation of the commission's report—which details the federal Government's failure to live up to financial commitments—indicates about the Government's total attitude towards aboriginal self-government?

Mr. MacDougall: Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member at this time is well aware, because it was discussed earlier this week in the House in questions to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight), that that subject is now before the courts and it is improper at this time to pass any judgment on it.

Mr. Hicks: Mr. Speaker, may I first congratulate the Hon. Member on his very genuine interest and his great depth in matters of the aboriginal peoples of Canada? I know they are extremely well represented by his hard work on the standing committee. Reference has been made on several occasions today to the negotiated process and litigation which would result in solutions imposed by the courts. I wonder if the Hon. Member would clarify for the House his feelings as to which of these methods would be best for aboriginal peoples? Does the Hon. Member feel that litigation would improve in any way the relationship between Canada's aboriginal peoples and Canadians? I might add that this is a relationship which all Canadians are working hard to build.

Mr. MacDougall: Madam Speaker, I would like to begin by saying I certainly thank the Hon. Member for his comments. Not only today, but for five years as a Member representing a riding in northern Ontario, I have had great concern for our aboriginal Canadians and I want to ensure we do address their concerns on an ongoing basis. As my colleague knows, this year, last year and the year before, the standing committee has always tried to take the view of working with our aboriginal Canadians to make certain we address their concerns. This morning I had a meeting with representatives of the Ontario Chiefs. I always feel the best approach is to be able to sit down and negotiate. I think this is the approach our Government and our Prime Minister has taken since we came into office in 1984. We feel it is much better to be able to sit down and negotiate. As we well realize today, the dollars it would take to be put into the court system are much better spent in regards to enhancing and helping the native people of Canada, whether in regard to health care and education or in helping them to achieve self-government. I think negotiations are what we have to continue. We know there are 17 different groups with which we have to negotiate. That is the way we have operated until today, and we will continue to do so.

Mr. Tupper: Madam Speaker, I want to compliment my colleague, the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall), on his presentation this afternoon. My colleague represents a very valuable but difficult constituency in northern Ontario. He represents a community which makes a substantive contribution to our mining industry. The Hon. Member also has a very substantive component of our native community. I was particularly pleased this afternoon to recognize his understanding and appreciation of the problem which not only confronts his native people in Timiskaming but native people all across Canada. I particularly compliment him on his analysis of the alternatives of self-government which could be made available to the native people. I think that clearly demonstrates the breadth and depth of the Hon. Member's understanding and awareness, not only of the problem but of the solutions.

As I was listening to the Hon. Member's presentation about those alternatives, I was reminded about some of the poll results which have come to my attention recently. More than 60 per cent of all Canadians favour negotiations involving the federal and provincial Governments to implement self-government arrangements for aboriginal peoples. At the same time, similar polls indicate that nearly 80 per cent of Canadians favour a constitutional amendment, recognizing the right of aboriginal peoples to self-government. This polling indicates very strongly where Canadians stand on this issue. I would like to ask the Hon. Member how these findings relate to the position of this Government and his own position on this matter.

Mr. MacDougall: Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Nepean—Carleton (Mr. Tupper) for his comments. I do come from the northern part of Canada and we do rely on the resource base industry as vital. I should mention that in one area of the mining sector, about which I know my colleague is very interested, we have been able to work with a mining company to enable the native people of the area to train for aspects within the mining sector. It just shows how both groups can work together in order to come out with an enhanced program which allows employment for the native people of that region.

One other area I should mention is the way that co-operation and working together means so much to all our native people. In the Moosonee area we were able to put in a cable system which is going to be owned and operated by native people. This shows me their dedication and how they are able to take that step forward. What we are really dealing with here is giving native people the ability to operate at all levels of government and to sit down and come out with an enhanced program that will enable a system of self-government. This is something which we all want to see happen. It is something which 17 individual groups have to work toward.

I am pleased with the way our Prime Minister and our Minister of Justice have been able to work in co-operation with the provinces and the native groups to enhance what I believe will be a very successful two-day conference next week.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Madam Speaker, on March 26 and 27 of next week the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Premiers and representatives of the aboriginal peoples of Canada will meet in Ottawa to consider the constitutional entrenchment of aboriginal self-government. I say the "constitutional entrenchment of aboriginal self-government". This means, not to create the right to self-government, but to recognize a right that has existed inherently for centuries. I said that the Prime Minister and the provincial Premiers will come together with representatives of the aboriginal peoples to do this. However, I am saddened to say that one of those provincial Premiers may not be present. I refer to the Premier of Quebec. At this time, as a Quebecer, I plead with my Premier, Mr. Bourassa, to change his view on this subject and to attend this important conference.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: As was pointed out earlier in the debate, when the James Bay situation arose a few years ago and the Bourassa Government was developing electricity in the James Bay region of northern Quebec, it was obliged, as a result of a court decision, to negotiate with the Cree and Inuit of northern Quebec. Once they started to negotiate, they began to learn a few things, as all of us have done over the years, and an agreement was finally reached. At that time, the Province was fortunate to have with it a man who is still in the Government, the present Minister of Energy for the Province of Quebec, and who represents Mont-Royal and who at one time was the Deputy Minister of Indian Affairs here in Ottawa. He is a man of great experience with Indian and Inuit peoples. I am sure that with Mr. Bourassa he can make a positive contribution at the conference and help the federal Government and other provincial Governments to come to an agreement on these important matters.

This is the fourth such conference held for this purpose. The first two were under Liberal Governments in 1983 and 1984. The third was under the present Conservative Government in 1985. These conferences took place as a result of Section 37 of the Constitution Act, 1982, which states:

> A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada within one year after this Part comes into force.
> The conference convened—shall have included in its agenda an item respecting constitutional matters that directly affect the aboriginal peoples of Canada, including the identification and definition of the rights of those peoples to be included in the Constitution of Canada, and the Prime Minister of Canada shall invite representatives of those peoples to participate in the discussions on that item.

As I have said, we have already had three of these conferences, and the one coming up will be the fourth. This is the last one that is provided for in the constitutional provisions. The section which obliged the calling of a conference to deal with these matters was inserted in the Constitution because several years before the new Constitution of 1982 the aboriginal peoples of the country, through their organizations, had campaigned long and hard to have their aboriginal rights recognized by Governments in Canada at all levels, as well as to have them recognized in the Constitution.

When the Constitution Act, 1982 was passed by the provinces and the federal Government, a complete agreement had not been reached with respect to aboriginal rights. Some agreement had been reached. It was agreed to put into the Constitution an obligation to sit down with aboriginal leaders and to complete the job. That is what we are still trying to do.

Some progress was made in the Constitution of 1982. After a great deal of lobbying and a great deal of bargaining the aboriginal organizations were able to have inserted in the Constitution Section 35 which states:

> The existing aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada are hereby recognized and affirmed.

Many aboriginal leaders believe that the section includes all aboriginal rights, even though it is in general terms, including the right to self-government. However, they want it more specifically defined. That is why at this conference next week the Government will be discussing with them the possibility of specifically entrenching in the Constitution the aboriginal right of native or aboriginal self-government.

Just after the new Constitution was adopted, the Government of the day set up a special committee on Indian self-government to look into all aspects of Indian self-government, but the principle could apply as well to aboriginal self-government. The committee was set up in December of 1982 under the chairmanship of the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) who spoke earlier today. I had the honour to sit on that committee, as did the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly), the present Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle), and a few other Members who are still in the House. I might say that when we started the exercise, there were several of us on the committee who not only did not understand what was meant by Indian self-government but who were not ready to accept it. After a year of hearings and of intense work on the subject we came out at the end with a unanimous report. The committee was made up of Liberals, Conservatives and NDP Members. The committee recommended that the federal Government establish a new relationship with Indian First Nations and that an essential element of this relationship be the recognition of Indian self-government.

The second recommendation was that the right of Indian peoples to self-government be explicitly stated and entrenched in the Constitution of Canada. It was stated in the report that the surest way to achieve permanent and fundamental change in the relationship between Indian peoples and the federal Government is by means of a constitutional amendment. Further, we recommended that the Indian First Nation Governments form a distinct order of government in Canada with their jurisdictions defined.

It is very clearly and precisely set out in the report. It is that recommendation of the Committee on Indian Self-Government which is still before Parliament, the Government of Canada and the provincial Governments, since it has not yet been accomplished.

Many Canadians ask what aboriginal rights are and how one defines them. Aboriginal rights are all those rights that the aboriginal peoples on this continent had before the Europeans came here in the 15th and 16th centuries. Their aboriginal rights were everything that dealt with their way of life, including language, culture, religion, and self-government. If these rights were never given up and never bargained away, they still possess them.

During the Second World War the Government of Nazi Germany overran certain parts of Europe. If it continued to occupy The Netherlands, Belgium, Poland, France and so on, we would not recognize that the occupation of that territory by the Nazi Government would have terminated the rights of those people who live in those countries. By the same principle of justice, we can never recognize that the rights of aboriginal people were terminated simply because the Europeans came to this country and occupied it for some 200 years. The aboriginal peoples never gave up certain rights, they simply disappeared because we occupied land that they previously had. It would be contrary to the principles we hold and for which we fought a war. A right that has never been relinquished still exists.

Let us consider who holds these aboriginal rights in Canada. There are over 300,000 status Indians in Canada and over 700,000 non-status and Métis people. Many non-status Indians are becoming status Indians as a result of new legislation. There are more than 50,000 Inuit living in Canada's North. Aboriginal rights affect one million out of 25 million people in Canada. Those one million people make up about 500 communities or nations.

If self-government is one of the aboriginal rights, what does self-government encompass? The report of the Special Committee on Indian Self-Government set out in great detail what Indian self-government would encompass and how it would be implemented. I recommend that report. Although it was published four years ago we can still learn a great deal from it.

The best way to describe Indian self-government is to refer Members of Parliament to the example in northern Quebec where the Grand Council of the Cree and the Inuit form two separate regional aboriginal Governments. I was the Minister responsible for introducing and passing the legislation with respect to those two aboriginal Governments. While the structure and the provisions for those types of self-government are not perfect and much more could be done, they are an outstanding example of a type of aboriginal self-government in Canada. The Cree Regional Government in the north of Quebec includes some eight communities of Cree. It has a system of government whereby they run their own education system, health and welfare system, economic development programs, local government, and justice system. As a result of the agreement that was passed by this Parliament and the National Assembly in Quebec, they are taking greater control over the operations of government from the provincial and federal Governments. It is an outstanding example of Indian self-government.

Today the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) criticized the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) for stating in the resolution before the House that aboriginal self-government was an inherent right that had not be extinguished. He said that he was surprised by that position of the Leader of the Opposition because in 1983 or 1984, the Liberal Government of the day had not gone that far. That might be correct.

When I first came to this Parliament, very few Members of Parliament from any Party recognized aboriginal rights let alone self-government. That recognition has increased significantly over the years because we have been educated on the subject by aboriginal people and their organizations. I admit that if it was not indifference, I had great suspicion and doubt with respect to aboriginal rights and Indian self-government. However, the more I was informed and educated on the subject as a Member of Parliament, the more I recognized the justice in their argument.

Similarly, I believe that the process which members on the Special Committee for Indian Self-Government followed in studying the matter for over a year led us to an improved position at its conclusion. We need not apologize if the Liberal Party has a better position today than it did in 1983. It certainly has a better position than it did in 1965 when I first came here and there was no position at all. In fact, many Parties had no position on aboriginal rights. I must say to the Minister of Justice that I respect his good faith in this matter, and if his position is improved I will certainly not criticize him but simply suggest he is going through the same process as we all are in recognizing a right we should have recognized long ago.

I believe the Hon. Member who spoke before me would readily admit that the position of the Conservative Party today is much better than their position and that of the Liberal Party a number of years ago. We would regret seeing any slippage in the progress that has already been made. It is the opinion of many aboriginal organizations that there has been some backtracking in the federal Government's position. That is not my statement as an opposition Member, but the opinion of many aboriginal organizations.

The constitutional entrenchment of aboriginal self-government is necessary because it would prevail over all other federal and provincial laws. If there is any contradiction between an ordinary federal law or a provincial law, the Constitution would prevail. Its entrenchment is also important because no succeeding Government could change that provision recognizing aboriginal self-government without a constitutional amendment. If aboriginal self-government were simply recognized in an ordinary piece of legislation, it could be changed by an amendment in the House of Commons by a political Party with a great majority. That cannot be done if it is entrenched in the Constitution.

Next week, in order to achieve that entrenchment, we will require the consent of the federal Government and of seven provinces representing 50 per cent of the Canadian population. I hope the provincial Governments and their officials, the Ministers of the federal Government, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will recognize some of the points raised in the debate today and move forward with it.

As long as we have the Indian Act and as long as we have the Department of Indian Affairs, we have a system of colonialism. There is no other way to describe it. We may not have recognized that for a long time. However, now we are sensitive and we know that it is a system of colonialism. It is a law which non-Indians passed many years ago to deal, as my colleagues said, with every aspect of the lives of aboriginal people. It is also a system of paternalism. It says that we know what is best for these other people and we will run it through the Department of Indian Affairs and the Indian Act.

As I said earlier, it is strange that we should hold to that view, because over the 100 years or so that the Indian Act has been in effect and the Department of Indian Affairs has operated, there has certainly been no improvement in the position of our aboriginal people. The levels of poverty, sickness, and illiteracy have become much worse rather than better.

Surely they can do it better themselves than we can. Any people can run their lives better than another people a long distance away. People cannot live with justice and dignity without self-government.

I know my colleague referred to the Leo Tolstoy quotation used in Mayo, Yukon by Indian people before the Special Committee on Indian Self-Government. It ended up by saying that we must get off the backs of these people who we have been trying to govern for 100 years and let them do it themselves. Hopefully that will be done next week.

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker, I listened with great interest to the speech of my hon. friend. The comments I want to make will be delivered in a non-partisan way, and I know that he will understand that.

I know his genuine interest, being a former Minister, and that he has maintained it over the years. In his remarks he said that the Cree-Naskapi Act is "what we have in mind for self-government". To whom was he referring when he said that phrase? Is he not in fact dictating to our native peoples what we have in mind for Indian self-government as opposed to what they have in mind for Indian self-government?

I will ask two questions if I might, Madam Speaker. I am a little concerned about the Hon. Member's closing comments when he said that Indian or native people are far worse off today than they were in years gone by.

In my experience I do not find that to be so. I agree entirely with his remarks about the Department of Indian Affairs and the method of handling problems over the years. If one's hindsight were 20-20, one would see that it has been disastrous. I agree with him whole-heartedly.

However, I think he is being somewhat an alarmist in saying that health on the reserves is worse. I know we still have monumental problems on a number of reserves, but I also know, for example, that we have some 7,000 native peoples in universities now, whereas a very few short years ago we only had 100 or 200. There has been some improvement, albeit not as much as any of us as Canadians would like to see. It is not a record of which we can be proud, that is for sure. The Hon. Member may wish to comment on my two questions.

Mr. Allmand: Madam Speaker, in respect of the Hon. Member's first question, if I stated it as it was put by him, I certainly apologize. I did not mean to refer to the Cree Regional Government in northern Quebec as an absolute model for everyone else. I was simply saying that it was an example, for Canadians who are not familiar with Indian self-government, of the type of thing that has been put into place.

Some people are very vague about Indian self-government. Unfortunately, or perhaps fortunately, a great percentage of Canadians who live in cities have never been to Indian communities. When we talk about Indian self-government, they really do not know what we are talking about.

I used that regional Government in northern Quebec as an example. When I said "we", I did not use it in the possessive sense; I was speaking extemporaneously. Perhaps I sometimes do not use the exact word, but it is an example of regional Government run by Indian people. I would not say for one minute that it should be the model accepted by other Indian people in Canada. They have their own particularities, cultures, and so on. They may want to do it in a completely different way. However, to non-Indians in Canada we can say that it is something that is being done. They are running their justice, educational, and health systems, and it is working. Things are improving.

Turning to the second point raised by the Hon. Member, he may be quite correct in that there are individual Indians and Inuit today who are doing very well. There are certain communities, bands, or nations that are doing very well. However, as an entire people, as aboriginal nations, before contact or at the time of contact, when Europeans first came to this country they were self-sufficient, strong nations or communities.

Since that time and under the Indian Act and the Department of Indian Affairs, they have been subject to a terrible shock treatment by the overwhelming number of Europeans who came to this continent. We took away their best lands in many cases. We took away their rights. We did not respect many of their ways of doing things.

As nations I think they are worse off today than they were then, even though, as the Hon. Member pointed out, there may be 7,000 individuals in universities and so on.

I do not suggest for a minute that the Hon. Member was making the following comparison. However, we often hear from the South African Government, when it is attacked for its apartheid policies, that we must compare the blacks in South Africa who have better educational systems and health care with the people in neighbouring countries. Sometimes that is true, but they do not have the right to govern their own affairs. They do not have the right to make their own mistakes. They do not have the dignity and justice of being in complete control of their own destiny. The fact that some of them in South Africa may have better educational and health care systems never compensates for the lack of the other freedoms. I guess that is what is important to people who are struggling for self-government in Canada and in many other places in the world.

Mr. Manly: Madam Speaker, when the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) spoke he said that the position of the Government was to recognize the right to aboriginal self-government as a contingent right rather than an inherent right. He said that to recognize it as an inherent right would open the way to all kinds of court actions, which I think all of us wish to avoid; we wish to see some kind of negotiated settlement.

Not being a lawyer myself, I would really like to have a second opinion on it. Would the Hon. Member who is the lawyer give us his opinion whether or not the recognition of an inherent right would lead to a great number of court cases?

Mr. Allmand: I do not think so, Madam Speaker. I do not see how the recognition of Indian self-government as an inherent right, or aboriginal self-government as an inherent right of the aboriginal people, will lead to more litigation. If anything, it will lead to more negotiation. We have had and have now too much litigation between Indians and provincial and federal Governments. We have cases in the courts all over the place. We have some even now. I have a press release today where the Cree of Quebec, to whom I have just referred, are taking legal action against the federal Government, and I think the Quebec Government as well, because there have been certain breakdowns in that agreement between them and these Governments. I personally believe the Member's colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell), pointed out very well that when we entrenched language rights, equality rights and women's' rights in the Constitution we did not spell them out in detail. We recognized these things in general terms. That was important. We are asking that the same thing be done with aboriginal self-government, and I think it will lead to negotiation, not to a lot of litigation.

Mr. Hicks: Madam Speaker, during the Hon. Member's comments he alluded to an inherent right. He made reference also to remarks by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) who earlier today made reference to an inherent right. To see if we are all on the same wavelength, would the Hon. Member attempt to define an inherent right for us?

Mr. Allmand: Madam Speaker, by that I mean, and I believe the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and the aboriginal people themselves mean, that they existed as nations with languages, culture et cetera on this continent before the Europeans ever came. They had their own economies and institutions. Among those institutions were systems of self-government. We know they differ from one nation to another. The Iroquois, who are close to me, had one system of the long house which was different from those of the Objibway and the Cree. The Prairie Indians had other ways of doing things, but they had self-government and systems of self-government which they possessed as nations. Since they possessed them, we feel that this is a right they had that cannot be taken away.

I have tried to give an example of the fact that we fought in the Second World War because we did not believe that the Nazi Government of Germany had the right to overrun other countries and impose the Nazi way of living or government. Those countries, whether Belgium, Holland, France or Poland, have the inherent right to govern themselves in their own way as they had done for generations and generations and had the right to change it in their own way as they wished. That is what I mean and what others mean is an inherent right to Indian self-government.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Madam Speaker, I think we have had a very positive debate in the House this afternoon on a most important issue to Canada and to our original Canadians, the aboriginal peoples. As the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine Est (Mr. Allmand), the former Minister of Indian Affairs, said, the Indian people were in this country many years before the Europeans came along. There are many different Indian nations from one part of Canada to the other.

I want to say a few words this afternoon as someone who represents many Prairie Indian people. My riding has eight different Indian reserves. There are many Indian reserves in Saskatchewan and there are many urban Indian people in my province as well. We must never forget that the Indian people were the first people of Canada. We often talk of two founding peoples or two founding nations, but the Indian people were the pre-founding nations, if you want to use that term, of Canada. There were many nations, languages and cultures from one part of what we know is Canada today to the other part of this great country. I believe very strongly, and our Party passed a resolution in 1973, that Indian self-government, Indian rights, must be enshrined in a positive way in the Constitution of Canada. I want to support as strongly as possible that position on behalf of my constituents and our Party in this debate today. That argument was put forth very forcefully and positively by the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly). It is also important that those rights be enshrined in such a way as to protect the traditions of the Indian people across Canada.

I want to quote one passage from a book entitled Pathways to Self-Determination--The Canadian Indian and the Canadian State. This book is edited by Leroy Little Bear, Meenno Boldt and Anthony Long. In talking about the Indian people we read:

> They do not want merely a European-western model of Government that is run by Indians; rather, they want an Indian Government that operates in accordance with traditional principles and customs, one that rests on a spiritual base and emphasizes group, not individual, rights. They want a Government that will restore the relationship with the natural environment rather than trying to assimilate them into a dominant society.

It is a way of life that Indians should have the right to have enshrined in the Constitution of Canada. We will do whatever we can in this House in our Party, and I am sure other Parties will as well make sure that that happens very shortly. The constitutional conference comes next week, and I call upon the Premiers of every province to co-operate fully in recognizing the rights of the Indian people of Canada.

I do admit, for reasons I have already mentioned but also because I think we have treated Indian people in a very disgraceful way as a Canadian society over the past 100 years of our history, that Indian people have been discriminated against in very overt ways, economically, scholastically and in almost any way you can possibly think of.

Let me outline a few things and perhaps personalize it to my own province. I have eight Indian reserves in my riding, the Coté Reserve, the Keeseekoose Reserve, the Key Reserve, the Fishing Lake Reserve, the Peepeekisis Reserve, the Okanese Reserve, the Little Black Bear Reserve and the Starblanket Reserve. As I travel around these reserves I see a tremendous amount of poverty and a large number of children who do not get proper education and who are going hungry, I see a lot of young people dying, I see violence, crime, alcohol and drug use. As I travel into the City of Regina where many Indian people live, I see the same kind of thing. Many young people do not have jobs, are tied to alcohol, drugs and prostitution. They are involved in breaking and entering because they do not have opportunities and are leading a pretty listless life. We are to blame as a white society for not giving these people the proper opportunities from one generation to the other.

Let us look at some of the facts of being an Indian in Canada to understand why the problems are so grave. For example, let us consider child welfare. The proportion of Indian children in care has risen five times the national average. Five times more Indian children are in care than the national average. In education, one in five Indian children graduates from high school, or 20 per cent. The national average is 75 per cent. On income, the average income of Indian people is one-half to two-thirds of the national average. Unemployment averages 35 per cent of the working age population of native people, compared with about 9 per cent or 10 per cent for the country as a whole. In some areas it goes as high or higher than 90 per cent. In my own riding there are some reserves where 75 per cent to 80 per cent of the people are unemployed and on welfare. They have nothing to do. On some other reserves, of course, in my riding the unemployment rate is much lower than that.

A meaningful statistic for me is that of housing. Nearly 19 per cent of on-reserve Indian homes have two or more families living in them. Most of those homes are very small. Indian families are on average a lot larger than the average non-Indian family. In many cases you have 10 or more people living in a very small house. That is not conducive to proper rest for children who attend school and so on. Back in 1977, only 10 years ago, fewer than 40 per cent of Indian homes had running water and sewage disposal. At that time, over 90 per cent of Canadian homes had indoor plumbing. If you look at violent crime, the violent death rate is three times higher for native people than the national average. Infant mortality, for infants up to four weeks of age, is 60 per cent higher than the national average. Life expectancy among Indian people is much lower. If, for example, an Indian infant survives its first year, it can expect to live 10 years less than a non-Indian. Putting it the other way around, the Canadian average is 10 years longer than the Indian average. The average length of life for an Indian woman is 66 years. For an non-Indian women it is 76 to 77 years. There is a tremendous difference in life expectancy. Hospital admissions for Indian people are more than double that of the non-Indian population.

I have given you just a few of the statistics covering the tremendous hardships faced by Indian people. We as a society must do whatever we can to try to right these wrongs. I realize that history has left us with many wrongs. This has happened over generation after generation after generation. We are not going to snap our fingers and write those wrongs in a single day, single year or single decade. However, I remind the House that a journey of a thousand miles begins with a single step. I hope that next week this Parliament will see the First Ministers come back from their conference with a positive decision to enshrine in the Constitution self-government for the Indian people of this country. If that happens, we will be taking another step towards the completion of that journey of a thousand miles.

I do not want to go on very much longer. I have mentioned the disgraceful treatment of Indian people over generations. I mentioned the economic situation of Indian people across this country, including my province and my riding. In addition to enshrining self-government for Indian people, we must make sure that we give them the tools with which to do the work, in other words, money for economic development. When they have that, I hope we devise a system where decisions can be made by Indian people themselves so they have local control over projects in their communities and on their reserves. That is very important.

I remember an experience in my own riding on the Coté Indian reserve. When I was first elected in 1968, over 90 per cent of the people there were unemployed and on welfare. The crime rate was one of the highest in Saskatchewan. There was a very high rate of violent crime, drug abuse and alcoholism. After a few years, probably about 1970 or 1971, a newer and younger chief was elected. His name was Tony Coté. He believed, with some of the newer councillors on that reserve, that there should be more self-government and more of an effort of Indian people to look after their own lives and destiny. He campaigned to that effect. After a while that reserve became one of two in the province to get the chance to administer its own welfare. It made its own decisions. After a while it had an Indian policeman. It started to drive its own school buses, opened up its own laundromat, grocery stores and service station. It ran these places itself and put a few people to work.

I worked on many of these projects with them. I remember one project in particular. It was called the Coté fence post project. They would manufacture fence posts. Saskatchewan has a lot of ranches and farms in need of fence posts. Nothing was more logical than having such a project on this reserve near Kamsack, which is near the forest area of Saskatchewan. The province is not all flat; it has forests as well. They sent many of their men into the forests, cut the trees, brought them back, cut them into fence posts, treated them, stored them and sold them. That provided jobs for Indian people on that reserve. I also remember being involved in helping them set up a band farm. I remember Albert Coté, one of the elders on the reserve, who ran that farm. He gave leadership in having Indians run the farm themselves rather than renting the land out to white farmers. That provided more jobs for Indian people. I remember the arenas and community centres which were built so that young people had a place to go for recreational activities on the reserve rather than going five or six miles to the Town of Kamsack and hanging around poolrooms, getting beer from the pub and getting drunk in a back alley or somewhere else.

Those were positive contributions made at that time by a council and chief who wanted to take their destiny into their own hands. I think they were able to do that in this case without a great deal of help from white society, the Government of Canada, or the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Of course the officials in that Department in most cases co-operated as much as they could within the parameters and restrictions they faced.

I believe we can do a lot of things if we trust people to look after themselves and make the decisions affecting their own lives. I know that they, like us, will make mistakes. Look at the mistakes made by white politicians and white Governments of all three political Parties across this country. There is not a single political Party which has not made mistakes, suffered scandals, or had embarrassing things happen to them. Of course Indian people will make mistakes. You only learn by doing something for yourself.

I do not think there are any greater experts in this country than those living in a community with the right to make the decisions affecting that community itself. It is the worker in a plant who knows how to run the plant and make a product. It is an Indian on a reserve who knows what to do on the reserve. It is the farmer on the land who knows how to farm the land. This country must move more and more towards decentralization of the economy. Local people must have control over the local economy and the kind of jobs they want to produce. That is the direction in which we have to go. If we do this, I really believe we will have a much better society.

In conclusion I want to say that it is very important that we respect the treaty signed between the Indian nations and the Queen's representative many years ago. I remember in my riding once again, on the Keeseekoose Indian reserve, talking to a former chief. He told me a short time before he died how important it was for white politicians never to forget the treaties we signed with the Indian nations many years ago. We must never forget how important they are to Indian people and their future.

I see you are about to rise, Madam Speaker. I just want to say one more thing. This has been a good debate. I hope this positive attitude will be carried into the constitutional conference next week. We should remember, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) should remember, and the Premiers should remember, that in the long run a society and country is judged on how it treats minorities. In the final analysis, when history is written, there can be no better way of judging Canada than by how we treat our aboriginal people.

GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS

PRESENTATION OF SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing 96(2) I have the honour to present the second report of the Standing Committee on Government Operations, in both official languages.

The report addresses itself to concerns regarding Canada Post's future plans for small rural post offices. The committee is of a strong view that Canada Post will not solve its fiscal problems by closing rural post offices or changing rural postal service.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Holtmann: Canada Post should look elsewhere for savings in its operating budget. No closures of rural post offices or change in postal service should be undertaken without meaningful consultation or consent of the community affected.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Holtmann: The local Member of Parliament must have the option of being an integral part of the consultation process and must be informed immediately of any closures or changes in rural post office services.

The committee intends to continue to exercise its mandate under Standing Order 96(2) to review and to report to the House from time to time on the operational plans of Canada Post.

A government response is requested under Standing 99(2).

On behalf of the committee I wish to express my appreciation for the co-operation of the Minister responsible for Canada Post who met with the committee. I also wish to acknowledge the contribution of the witnesses who appeared before it.

I also take this opportunity to thank the representatives of all three Parties for their efforts in drafting this unanimous report in the true spirit of parliamentary reform.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PETITIONS

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions which I would like to present today. The first deals with the amendments to the Patent Act. The petitioners from my riding of Winnipeg North Centre point out that the changes in the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. The petition concludes by calling upon the Government to withdraw the legislation that is before the House.

OPPOSITION TO CANADA POST CORPORATE PLAN

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the second petition I have to present has to do with postal service. The petition points out that the federal Government's proposal to seek financial self-sufficiency by 1988 for Canada Post Corporation will result in cut-backs and deterioration in service of the Post Office at the expense of the Canadian consumer. The petition states that the proposed measures have already resulted in the closure of many rural post offices and the cancellation of rural routes. The petitioners protest the postal rate increases and call upon the Government and Canada Post to pursue revenue-generating services such as electronic mail and parcel delivery to obtain financial self-sufficiency.

NATIONAL DEFENCE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-252, an Act to amend the National Defence Act (death penalty).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to sponsor today a Bill which is entitled "An Act to amend the National Defence Act". The purpose of the Bill is to amend the National Defence Act in order to remove all references to the death penalty for offences committed under the Act. A sentence of life imprisonment would replace all references to the death penalty.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, in 1976 this Parliament abolished the death penalty as far as the Criminal Code of Canada was concerned. The death penalty continues to exist in the National Defence Act and, as I indicated, the purpose of this Bill is to make the National Defence Act consistent with the Criminal Code of Canada. Capital punishment is wrong, whether it is in the Criminal Code of Canada or in the National Defence Act. Capital punishment is morally wrong whether it is done by hanging or by firing squad under the provisions of the National Defence Act.

Capital punishment is the mark of an indecent, uncivilized and immoral society. I regret very much that the Government is embarking upon a very divisive and emotionally charged debate on the issue of capital punishment with regard to the Criminal Code of Canada.

In closing I wish to indicate that the last time an individual was executed under the provisions of the National Defence Act was in 1945 during the Second World War. In the First World War 26 Canadian soldiers were executed by a firing squad for breaches of the provisions of the National Defence Act. This Bill will eliminate that possibility in future.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

POINT OF ORDER

METHOD OF PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I gave notice of a point of order on Friday which I wish to pursue now. I did not feel it was appropriate to pursue it on Friday since it was a Liberal opposition day. This point of order specifically deals with the practice of the New Democratic Party during this session with respect to petitions. Petitions are being certified by the Clerk of Petitions and then formally presented in the House of Commons some weeks or months later as part of a deliberate practice on the part of the New Democratic Party.

I point out, Mr. Speaker, that on Tuesday, March 17, 1987, I requested the data of certification of a petition being submitted by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis). He replied that the petition in question had been certified on October 1, 1986. That would be some five months earlier. On March 19, I asked the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) as to the date of the certification of a petition presented on March 19. It was certified on January 6 of this year. Both of these petitions, I might add, were with respect to the Patent Act changes.

If the Chair were to review Petition No. 332-1271, the Chair would find it was approved on June 12, 1986, and presented on March 9, 1987. If the Chair were to review Petition No. 332-1276, presented by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) with respect to the Patent Act, the Chair would find it was approved on November 7, 1986, and presented on March 10, 1987.

This practice is continuing. In fact, on Friday, March 20, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) presented three petitions. The petitioners were supposed to be very concerned about the Patent Act changes. Those three petitions were certified by the Clerk of Petitions on November 26, 1986, four months earlier, and then presented last Friday. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that members of the New Democratic Party are bringing the House into disrepute by this abuse of one of the fundamental principles of our democratic system for blatant political purposes.

Citation 666 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, states:

> The right of petitioning the Crown and Parliament for redress of grievances is acknowledged as a fundamental principle of the constitution and has been exercised without interruption since 1867.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that by certifying petitions and holding them for formal presentation in the House on a daily basis, the New Democratic Party seeks to create the impression that there is a continuing ground swell of public opinion with respect to a certain issue which is continuing for a long period of time. I submit this is an abuse of a long-standing parliamentary tradition. This abuse denies Canadians who have petitioned the Crown and Parliament for redress of their grievances speedy access to that redress. It brings Parliament into disrepute. It unfairly creates the impression of a long-standing issue and denies the Government of the day the right to reply promptly either to the petition or to the individuals who signed the petition.

You will know from the former occupation you and I both share, Mr. Speaker, that there is an expression that justice delayed is justice denied. Canadians who petition the Crown and Government have every right to expect that the Crown will receive their petitions quickly if they entrust them to a Member of Parliament and that the Crown will take the petitions into account. If a Member of Parliament has a petition certified and then delays the presentation of that petition for political purposes, that hearing and redress are unfairly delayed.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that Members of Parliament have a responsibility to present petitions as soon as possible after certification. If they cannot do it in person, there is a practice in the rules of procedure whereby the petition can be filed with the Table and have the same force and effect. I suggest that this practice brings Parliament into disrepute. The distortion of the petition process brings this entire Chamber and its Members into disrepute.

I have no difficulty whatsoever with the formal presentation of petitions. That is part of our tradition and should continue. However, Canadians who signed these petitions trust their Members of Parliament to present them promptly. If they are delayed for political purposes, then I suggest that Canadians are going to view the petition process with great skepticism. I suggest that petitions are a legitimate gauge of public opinion if they are fairly worded and presented promptly. While the delay in the presentation of a petition does not diminish how the signatories feel about the issue, if they are delayed in order to create the impression of a long-standing grievance, then that distorts the situation.

Your Honour will also know that under Standing Order 106(8) the Government is required to reply to a petition within 45 days. Today I tabled some 83 replies of the Government. We have respected that deadline. We have also gone further and in some cases written to individual petitioners.

I have here for examination, if Your Honour cares to review it, a letter which is being sent to all petitioners in the case of the Patent Act by the Hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), in which he states very fully the Government's case in respect of changes to the Patent Act.

While I would not suggest that the petitions are being tampered with, I would suggest that there are examples of letters in reply which read as follows: "I never corresponded with anybody on this subject and I have no interest in the matter"; "I suspect that somebody has wrongly used my name for political purposes"; "The reason for my mystification is that I have never corresponded with the Prime Minister on this or any other subject"; and "I have never written to you concerning the hassle over generic drugs, nor have I signed any petition". I do not want to pursue that aspect of this point of order any further. I just raise the question.

The second abuse of the petition process is that Members of Parliament from the New Democratic Party are misleading Parliament when they present petitions certified by other members in a deliberate attempt to create the impression that an issue has widespread concern.

On Friday, March 20, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) distributed petitions to his colleagues in the NDP for presentation in the House. The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom), the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), and the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) participated in this charade. All those petitions—and I have them here—were certified by the Hon. Member for Spadina on Thursday, March 19. On Friday, the Hon. Member came into the House and distributed them to his colleagues for presentation. All the addresses on those petitions were from Metropolitan Toronto and area.

By having these petitions presented by Members from Saskatchewan and British Columbia, the Hon. Member for Spadina sought to have Parliament believe that Canadians in different parts of the country were petitioning Parliament for redress. If that is not deliberately misleading the House, it comes as close to deliberately misleading the House as anything in my experience.

Mr. Speaker: I heard very carefully the words of the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, which were "if that is not deliberately misleading the House", it comes very close to it. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary is also as close to getting out of order as he can be. I will take account of the very careful wording he used, but I would ask that he be extremely careful as he continues his remarks.

Mr. Lewis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I take your admonition.

As I said earlier, we have no difficulty with the legitimate presentation of petitions. However, I would point out that in the month of February an hour and a half of the time of the House was spent on the presentation of petitions. Since the opening of this Parliament on October 1, almost seven hours of House time have been given to this procedure. The Hon. House Leader of the New Democratic Party can hardly complain about the lack of time for debate when we find that it is being wasted in this manner.

I suggest that the delaying of the presentation of petitions in order to pretend that a long-standing issue exists is a cheap political trick. It is a complete fabrication and a charade. It is an attempt to mislead the House and the Canadian public.

I further suggest that the practice of distributing petitions to other MPs by the member who certified them, in order to pretend that there is an issue of widespread concern, is also a cheap political trick, a complete fabrication and charade, and an attempt to mislead the House and the Canadian public.

The holier than thou New Democratic Party will stop at nothing for partisan political purposes. The rights of petitioners mean nothing to them. The rights of Parliament mean nothing to them. The reputation of their fellow Members of Parliament who present petitions are completely disregarded. I call upon the Chair to examine this practice and to stop what I consider to be a complete abuse of the House.

I suggest the Chair rule that in the future petitions must be presented in a timely fashion by the Member of Parliament who certified them. In the alternative, I suggest that Your Honour might want the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure to review the matter to safeguard the rights of petitioners to timely presentation of their petitions to the Crown and Parliament, rather than subject them to cheap partisan political tactics by members of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, in summing up, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader said that since October 1 members of all three Parties have used a total of seven hours to present petitions. He has made it sound like they have taken a large amount of time. If the Government were so concerned about the amount of time it needs for government business, it could have called the House back in September. Seven hours over as many months is not a large proportion of time. I do not think the Parliamentary Secretary has a legitimate point in that area.

Opposition Members have complaints with regard to the Government, and I should like to refer to one example. Sometimes we wait a very long time to get answers from the Parliamentary Secretary to questions we have placed on the Order Paper. Yet, we have avoided the tactic of getting up every day and asking when a question will be answered. We have not wasted House time on that. It is a legitimate right of opposition Members to rise and ask when the Parliamentary Secretary will finally answer a particular question.

With regard to the substance of the matter raised by the Parliamentary Secretary, and in that he mentioned that I have risen on a number of occasions, in my particular case one of my petitions was certified in January and it took me approximately two months to present it. He should also realize that I have had from a very small population riding over a thousand people who have written on this particular item. They do not come on one piece of paper. They come in on pieces of paper with two or three names or five or ten names.

This means that it was not a petition which I circulated on November 1 and brought into the House on November 6. In truth, people are still writing in to me, signing petitions, and expressing their grievances with regard to the Government. If we used the Gallup polls, I would suspect that there is an increasing dissatisfaction with the Government over the passage of time. People who used to vote Conservative and are concerned about issues are people who are now supporting us and writing to us.

I understand the Government's concern that we do not present petitions right away. It is a legitimate concern of the Government. However, I think our petitioners would want us to make as effective a use of the presentation of petitions as possible. The people who sign petitions would understand if—and today I could have done so on behalf of Churchill, Pikwitonei, Flin Flon, and The Pas, Manitoba—I rose a week or two later, or perhaps even later, to present petitions on behalf of people in some of those same communities and in other communities expressing their particular grievance with the Government.

In the case of the patent drug legislation, over 1,200 people from my riding alone have signed petitions. They did so on November 6, December 15 and in January. Obviously some people are still signing petitions today and I will continue to present them in the House. This issue is still before the House. Legislation will soon be studied at report stage and then we will have third reading. It is an active issue and an issue on which we have a right to present petitions.

The other matter raised by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) has to do with the habit, practised by some members, of circulating petitions.

If a petition is received by one member, he or she takes on the responsibility of having it certified but may ask another Member to present it in the House. I have taken part in that process, Mr. Speaker, and I consider that honourable. I have taken petitions that do not come from my riding but come from New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, places where we do not have New Democratic Members of Parliament at present—

Mr. Lewis: Spadina?

Mr. Murphy: I have had them certified. I believe people send petitions to the New Democratic Party wanting their petitions raised in the House of Commons. It matters not to them whether it is the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), Brant (Mr. Blackburn), Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) or Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) that presents the petition. The petitions were not sent to me as an individual but to our caucus and people expect a member of our caucus to present them.

I have looked at Beauchesne and our Standing Orders since the Parliamentary Secretary indicated his concern on this issue, and I thank him for giving notice of it. I see nothing in the rules to say that the same Member who received a petition, often from people in other ridings, must have it certified and that he or she must present it in the House. It may seem cleaner or more efficient, but if I receive a petition, as I used the example before, from people in New Brunswick and I have received it because it came into my office as caucus whip, I do not feel it is my obligation to present that petition in the House. I will, however, get it certified so that it is ready to be presented and I will make sure it is given to the Clerk of Petitions. It may be appropriate when the time comes for some other Member to present the petition, perhaps someone who has been in the locale in the last little while or perhaps someone whose critic area is more directly concerned with the topic being presented.

It seems to me the Government is concerned that we are making this a political issue, that by holding off petitions and not presenting them all on the date they are certified, by presenting them over a number of days or in the case of having a number of petitions presented on the same day by a number of people, that this is political. God help us, Mr. Speaker, if we are ever political in the House of Commons. How dreadful it would be if we tried to make a Government Bill into a political issue that would not be within the rules of the House of Commons. God help us, Mr. Speaker, if we have the situation with the Government not liking a petition and harassing us day after day in one fashion or another. We had the spectre last fall of the Government House Leader (Mr. Mazankowski) wanting to see our petitions before we presented them. He found that they were in the proper form and we were allowed to continue presenting them.

In the last couple of weeks the Parliamentary Secretary to the House Leader saw the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) pass a petition to the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly). The Parliamentary Secretary rose and said that that was not fair, that the petition obviously belonged to the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap. Unfortunately for the Parliamentary Secretary someone had asked the Member from Kamloops—Shuswap to give the petition to the Member for Comox—Powell River because the petitioners were from the riding of Comox—Powell River. This again was part of a pattern of harassment by the Government. To be fair to the Parliamentary Secretary, he did apologize on that occasion.

I do not think the point of order that has been raised today is legitimate. It may be something that concerns the Government in its political role. But if we have had only seven hours taken up by petitions since October, some of which have been presented by Government Members and some by Liberal Members, I would say that some Government Members are not doing their jobs. Lots of people would like members to present petitions. Obviously we are not spending very much time in the House with legitimate complaints, beefs and concerns of people who live in Government ridings.

With respect, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that this is a serious issue. The Government is in a situation to know when petitions are certified. The Government is in the position, as the Parliamentary Secretary has said, of responding on an individual basis to petitions. The Government may not like our political agenda, but we do not like the Government's either.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, on listening to the point of order raised by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) and to the reply by the spokesman for the New Democratic Party, I was at first tempted to allow this matter to pass by as just another indication of the ongoing battle between the Conservatives and New Democrats for third place. However, after reflecting somewhat on the arguments presented, I think there is a point here about which comment has to be made.

It is a matter of concern that the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council finds it necessary on a day when there is an Opposition motion before the House to raise this point of order and to ask the Speaker to take it seriously. The Parliamentary Secretary said that you should rule that petitions can only be presented to this House immediately by those who have received them and who have had them certified. I invite you to look at the rules of order of this House, Mr. Speaker, Standing Order 106(3) which reads:

> A petition to the House may be presented by a Member at any time during the sitting of the House by filing the same with the Clerk of the House.

I draw your attention to some of the words "may be presented by a member at any time during the sitting of the House". Also, if you look at Standing Order 106(4), it reads:

> Any Member desiring to present a petition, in his or her place in the House, may do so on "Presenting Petitions" during the ordinary daily routine of business.

Nowhere in the very precise language used by the Standing Order does it say that a petition has to be presented to this House as soon as it is received by a Member. Nowhere does it say that the member who presents the petition has to be the one who receives it in the first instance. I think it is quite clear, Mr. Speaker, that you do not have the authority to make a ruling which clashes with the clear words of the Standing Orders of this House.

Some months ago when members attempted to present to the House all the petitions they had received on a subject on the same day, Government spokesmen got to their feet and raised a point of order saying that this was of questionable validity because it unduly ate up the time of the House that otherwise would be available for Government business and other proceedings. Today, however, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader is saying that there is something wrong if instead of trying to present all your petitions on the same day you do a few at a time so as to take up less time on any particular day.

Just what is the Government after? I hate to suggest this, but I wonder if the Government is not trying to choke off an elementary right of Canadians and an elementary right of opposition Parties on their behalf to petition Government through Parliament. Why else would the Deputy House Leader raise this rather strange point of order which flies in the face of the clear language of the Standing Orders and also flies in the face of the position taken by the Government months ago when members attempted to present petitions to the House as soon as they were received, no matter how much time it took on any particular day? The Hon. Member cannot have it both ways. I say that Hon. Members do not have to do this, but if the Deputy House Leader wants members to present petitions as soon as they receive them, the Government cannot complain about the time being taken up on any particular day when time is being used for that purpose.

The Deputy House Leader for the Government is saying that somehow or other, people who present petitions to the House through Members of Parliament are aggrieved if those petitions are not presented very soon after they are signed and sent here. Quite apart from the fact that the Standing Orders do not require that this approach be taken, if there is any complaint about when a petition is presented, it is a complaint of the person or persons signing the petition, not of the Government to whom that petition is addressed. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader certainly has no mandate to raise this point allegedly on behalf of those presenting petitions. As I have said, the complaint, if there is any complaint, is solely that of those who have signed the petition.

It might be argued that the rules also indicate that members can simply table petitions and file them with the Clerk, but that is an option to be used at the discretion of the member who wishes to present the petition. It is not something that can be imposed upon any member by the Government. To suggest that, is a total distortion of what the rules say and a total distortion of the right of petitioning Parliament. It is certainly a total distortion of the role of Government and Opposition in a democratic Parliament.

I have said before that since members of the present Government came into office they have through various means attempted to operate as if this were some type of one-Party state. That was not the case after the election and it is not the case now. Certainly this is confirmed every day by public opinion polls. It is not proper for the Government to try to tell members that, rather than using their own judgment or the judgment of those signing petitions about presenting petitions in open sessions of the House, they must instead file them with the Clerk. That is the choice primarily of the Member of Parliament who wishes to present the petition.

The Parliamentary Secretary has complained that since last fall seven hours have allegedly been used for presenting petitions. As has been pointed out, this is not a lot of time compared to the total number of sitting hours since then. But what concerns me is that he implied that using this time to present petitions is somehow wasting the time of the House. Yet, at the beginning of his remarks, he was ready to admit that one of the most fundamental rights of people in Canada is the right to petition the Government through Parliament about their concerns. It cannot be both a waste of time and a fundamental right to be exercised according to our rules.

I conclude by saying that not only do the rules clearly permit what the Hon. Member is complaining of, but also that if you accept as well founded the point of order of the Hon. Member, Mr. Speaker, the result will be to choke off the rights of Canadians to petition the Government and the rights of opposition Members to speak on behalf of people who wish to petition the Government.

Why is the member who is speaking on behalf of the Government so sensitive about this issue at this time? One can only conclude that government Members fear the voices of the Canadian people. They want to choke off the voices of ordinary Canadians. We in the Official Opposition do not intend to let them do that. We want to make sure that those voices can be heard through petitions and through Members of Parliament until the time comes when the voices of Canadians are heard during an election and this thoroughly bad Government is thrown out of office.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add a few comments because the matter is of some interest to me. As Hon. Members are aware, I am one of those members who present a considerable number of petitions in this House, petitions that are often taken up by people in my riding. I will not name the various subjects they deal with, but I think a look at the record will show that I have presented petitions on many occasions.

Mr. Speaker, to find a statement on the right of petitioning, we must refer to Parliamentary Rules and Forms, Beauchesne's 5th edition.

The right of petitioning the Crown and Parliament for redress of grievances is acknowledged as a fundamental principle of the constitution and has been exercised without interruption since 1867.

I am referring to Citation 666, on page 209. In fact, while my colleagues were speaking, I read a little further and something caught my eye. There are a number of details concerning who may present a petition and how one is to proceed. After discussing remonstrances, signatures and the substance of the petition, Beauchesne raises a question that deals precisely with the point raised by the Hon. Member, namely that if we have a petition prepared in the riding and we present it in the House, is there any provision in the Standing Orders that obliges us to do so with celerity, in other words, as soon as possible, and is it mandatory that petitions taken up in our ridings for any number of reasons be presented by the member for the riding in which they were taken up?

Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise two points which I think are of some interest and I will start with Citation 689 on page 212 in Beauchesne's, appearing under the title:

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

689. As the Speaker does not take part in debates, and may be called to give decisions on the regularity of petitions, he does not present petitions to the House. When asked by his constituents to do so, he must avail himself of the services of another Member—

There is a reference to Bourinot, page 231, and May, page 817. And reading further:

690. A member may petition the House but his petition should be presented by another Member—

In other words, I may be included among the petitioners, but in that case another Member has to present the petition for me.

This deals with the objection raised by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council, namely that the Standing Orders, and I am referring to Standing Order 106(4), do not indicate it must be the same member. I may be another member, and all the NDP Members have to do, if they are accused of "packing in" petitions will be to sign the petitions and say: I am not qualified because I signed the petition so would you present the petition for me.

[English]

Except for very clear dispositions adopted on February 24, 1986, to get rid of a lot of grey areas, there is nothing in the Standing Orders to state that a member is limited to presenting only petitions that he has gathered or, for that matter, petitions that he has had certified. I have taken perhaps 35 or 40 petitions to the Clerk of Petitions on one morning. It was physically impossible for her to certify all those petitions that day because there were a great many others to be certified. I was patient and waited for her to call back. When the petitions came in we tabled them as fast as we could. However, it was sometimes impossible for me to table all the petitions on the same day because of some difficulty in getting them certified, and at other times because of their great number.

What happens when a member is absent? Is the Parliamentary Secretary telling us that when a petition is presented as certified this day, it must be presented, in his words, immediately or in a timely fashion? Does that mean they have to be tabled that day? I think that would be difficult for some members who have things to do other than be sitting in this House. They have committee work or they may be outside the House doing other parliamentary work. It would be kind of difficult to demand that members table the petition on the day it was certified.

The Government must now present a reply to the petition within 45 days, and that is good. However, the Government's argument concerning time is superfluous and possibly not very timely because the Government wastes more time than anyone else in telling us very little about its legislation. As a matter of fact, many Canadians anticipate government legislation and present their petitions to us before the legislation is brought in. This happens even to government Members. On the list of petitions answered today by the Government there is one from a government Member. He could have received that petition from his constituents or from others within his sphere of interest. It does happen that groups of people, not necessarily from one riding, petition Parliament, as is their right. For example, God knows, we have presented several petitions here from senior citizens and they were not always from the riding of Ottawa—Vanier. They may have been from Ottawa Centre, Ottawa—Carleton, or anywhere else. The argument that a member must table a petition in a timely fashion is fine as long as we accept that the Member is not obligated to table only petitions from his riding. Mind you, the person tabling the petition must sign it. I do not think it would be proper for a Member of this House to table a petition signed by another member. That is wrong. If you asked me to table a petition in your name, Mr. Speaker, I would sign it but it would be constituents of yours who want to petition the House over a grievance in an attempt to rectify a situation about which they feel strongly.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I have listened very carefully to what was said by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) and the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), and of course to the intervention by the Parliamentary Secretary.

[English]

I think there is one essential issue emerging from the exchange, that perhaps there is some concern that when a citizen signs a petition he perhaps ought to know how much time elapses from the time he signed the petition to the time it is presented in the House. That presentation triggers the obligation on the part of the Government to reply within 45 days. That is a matter which the Chair will consider.

I will look with some care at the documentation and procedure and I may be able to make some comment which is helpful at a later time. Certainly the right to present petitions is an undoubted right of a free people. It is our constitutional tradition. I did not take anything said today, intentionally anyway, to be a suggestion that that right ought to be infringed. The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier pointed out that there is an obligation upon the Chair to ask another Hon. Member to present petitions presented to me. I should advise Hon. Members that I do receive petitions regularly and I have to ask the indulgence of other Hon. Members to present them.

I think the essential thing coming out of this debate is that people who sign petitions have a fair certainty that the Government is responding with due diligence as soon as possible after the petition is received. Perhaps the Chair can assist Hon. Members by examining the response the Government makes in its reply to petitions within 45 days of the petition coming to the attention of the House, as it is obligated to do.

For Hon. Members who may not be as fully aware of past practices, and also for the benefit of the public who is watching and listening, it should be pointed out that the obligation on the Government to reply to petitions within 45 days is part of parliamentary reform. While there certainly was an ancient and undoubted right to present petitions, there was no corresponding obligation on the part of the Government to respond to them.

I find that the interventions are of interest. I can assure all Hon. Members that the Chair will be diligent at all times to ensure that any Canadian who presents a petition to this Chamber will have every opportunity to have it responded to by the Government. I will consider some of the paperwork and address the question of whether or not a citizen may be under the apprehension that the Government is not replying rapidly enough to a petition which may have been signed many weeks or months previously. I think that is probably a matter that can properly be discussed.

I thank all Hon. Members, including the Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member for Windsor West, the Hon. Member for Churchill, and of course the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—WESTERN CANADA ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT STRATEGY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville) moved:

That this House condemns the government for its lack of a long term economic development strategy for Western Canada that would, among other things,

(1) address the severe hardships being faced by the agricultural sector, especially as it relates to depressed grain prices, which have devastated the farm community;

(2) deal effectively with the problems of the forest industry and in particular, the need to conserve and manage the forest resource for future generations;

(3) come to terms with the need for realistic and pragmatic policies to revive the energy sector, whose decline has created such hardships for average Albertans;

(4) commit the government to pursuing policies that would assist in the economic diversification of the economy and the growth of secondary manufacturing;

and that the lack of such commitments by the government to Western Canada will result in a continuation of the unacceptably high levels of unemployment and economic hardship suffered by the people of Western Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a motion to the House today on the economic problems of western Canada. I do so because those problems are now very serious and I think the House must spend some time addressing itself to the western Canadian case. There are very, very serious western economic problems. There are very serious problems in terms of manufacturing and agriculture and in the energy and forestry sectors. All of those problems have led and will continue to lead, unless there is some change, to very high regional unemployment throughout western Canada.

Two and one-half years ago in September, 1984, when the Conservative Government was elected in Canada, there was a great wave of optimism and hope throughout the West. Finally, for the first time in many years, the political Parties which had been supported by a large number of western Canadians was in power in Ottawa with a large number of western MPs and a large number of important cabinet Ministers, such as the Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). Western Canadians had hopes and were optimistic that there would be fundamental changes in the country. Two and one-half years later those hopes have been dashed, the optimism has turned to pessimism, the hopes have turned to despair, and the excitement that people, particularly farmers, felt two and one-half years ago has turned to fear. Even more important, many western Canadians feel betrayed, they believe that the Party they had voted for and members they had supported for many decades have let them down.

I noticed a headline in The Globe and Mail this morning which summarizes this. It reads: PC support in Edmonton crumbles, poll finds, NDP, Liberals, Tories equally popular". The results were 24 for the Liberals, 24 for the NDP, and 23 for the Conservative Party putting it third in the City of Edmonton. I do not make that as a partisan comment, Madam Speaker, but only to show you how many people in western Canada feel frustrated and betrayed by the federal Government.

All we need do is look around in the west to see why people are not happy with the way things are going. Wherever you look you find high unemployment. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) speaks of the fantastic increase in the number of jobs in Canada and how great are the economic policies of the Government. He speaks of renewal and all these great and wonderful things, but that is not the case in western Canada.

In fact, from January, 1986, to January, 1987, only 5,000 of the 137,000 jobs created in Canada were created outside of Ontario. I am glad that the economy of southern Ontario is doing well, but there is a real problem of unemployment in northern Ontario, Quebec, the Atlantic Provinces and western Canada.

In my part of the country the situation is now much worse than it was in the 1970s or in the early 1980s. In February the unemployment rate in British Columbia was 13.4 per cent, in Alberta it was 10.9 per cent, in Saskatchewan it was 7.2 per cent, and in Manitoba it was 6.7 per cent.

Those figures tell only part of the story. Looking at regional unemployment rates in Canada we see that many parts of the west have unemployment rates which are exceptionally high. In the Kamloops, British Columbia, area the unemployment rate is 19.1 per cent; in the Kimberley-Cranbrook area it is 17.4 per cent; in the City of Edmonton and area it is 12.8 per cent; in the City of Vancouver it is 14.2 per cent, in northern Saskatchewan it is over 10 per cent; in the City of Saskatoon it is 10.4 per cent; in the City of Winnipeg it is about 7.8 per cent; and in Dauphin and northern Manitoba it is about 9.3 per cent. Therefore, in many parts of western Canada there are extremely high unemployment rates. That, Madam Speaker, is not good enough.

What has that done to western Canadians? What has that done to hospital boards, municipalities, and school boards? When I go to my riding every couple of weeks I see nothing but concern and despair about the future economy of western Canada. I find that all four western provinces are having serious economic problems. Deficits are being run up. Provincial governments are being forced to increase the taxes of the citizens of the provinces. In my Province of Saskatchewan the matching grants of two municipalities have been frozen for two years. There will be increases in the mill rates in municipal taxes. The costs of school boards and hospitals will be passed on to local municipalities.

A new Budget was recently brought down in British Columbia with major tax increases for British Columbians. There is a tremendous deficit in Alberta for the first time in many years. A new Budget was brought in there with major increases in taxation for Albertans. There are economic problems in terms of a deficit in Manitoba and massive economic problems in terms of a deficit in Saskatchewan.

I would like to spend a minute speaking about my own province because that is the one I know best. I would like to draw to the attention of the House something which I think is scandalous in a province of only one million people, that is, that we have a deficit in our province this year of $1.2 billion. A province with one million people has a deficit of $1.2 billion. I have a chart which shows that in 1983 the deficit was $227 million, in 1984 it was $331 million, in 1985 it was $395 million, in 1986 it was $584 million, and in 1987 the deficit in Saskatchewan is $1.2 billion. All throughout the 1940s, 1950s, 1960s and 1970s Saskatchewan had a surplus and a balanced Budget, almost all the time. Under the governments of Tommy Douglas, Woodroffe Lloyd, Ross Thatcher and Allan Blakeney we did not have deficits in Saskatchewan. Although it is not entirely the fault of Grant Devine, we now have a deficit for which future generations will have to pay. It is massive, indeed.

I would like to refer to one or two sentences from an article in the business section of the Leader Post which talks about the massive deficit back home. It states that this deficit is three times larger than predicted by the Minister of Finance in his last Budget. That shows the severity of the problem facing western Canadians. The article goes on to state that it marks the fifth time in as many years the Progressive Conservative Government has missed its deficit target. This time the deficit has taken a quantum leap into the stratosphere. That is from the business pages of the Regina Leader Post of Friday, March 6.

We have very serious economic problems right across western Canada. I will speak about the farm economy and the energy economy later. I think we are all quite aware of what are some of those problems. My colleague, the Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) will be speaking about forestry this afternoon.

What is the Government's record with regard to western Canada? In the last Budget we saw the continuation of a cut of $3 billion a year from regional economic development spending in Canada. I noticed a Canadian Press article in the Toronto Sun this morning which said that the industry Minister has given strong indications that major changes including cut-backs are coming in the way the federal Government dispenses regional assistance. I would like the Minister to tell us in the House today what his plans are for regional development. This sends fear through the hearts of western Canadians who are already suffering from previous cut-backs and problems in the world economy which affect resources, agriculture, and other economic problems of western Canada.

Another problem is the insensitive way in which the Government is treating some western issues. I need only remind the House of the controversy in Manitoba over the CF-18 contract which was not awarded to the City of Winnipeg.

With regard to agriculture, the Government speaks of the $1 billion for grain farmers. I want to remind the House that even with the $1 billion our farmers get a lot less than the American and European farmers because of support prices in those countries. The farmers need more assistance as well if they are going to survive in western Canada.

The history of western Canada shows that there have been many grievances about the way the country has developed. One of those grievances concerns western Canada as a source of raw materials which are shipped to central Canada and other parts of the world with very little processing and development. The transportation system has discriminated against development in western Canada. These grievances and others have existed for many years, but people thought they might be very positively addressed after September, 1984.

In the past, federal Governments have been insensitive to the problems of western Canada. The Liberal Party was almost decimated in western Canada for some 20 years because of its insensitivity to the problems of the West. We have seen the development of the CCF and the NDP, the Social Credit Party and other parties in the west because of the failure of federal governments to address western Canadian problems. That failure continues today.

One of my concerns is that once again in western Canada there are some signals that certain people are turning, in frustration, to western separatist groups like Western Canada Concept and the Confederation of Regions Party. One need only look at the riding of Lisgar in southern Manitoba and areas like that to see what I mean. I do not want to exaggerate that sentiment, but only want to point out that if we do not address some legitimate concerns soon more and more western Canadians will be extremely frustrated with the system.

I want to suggest a number of steps that we should be taking. The most important long-term step is to create a western economic development strategy that will have as its objective the diversification of the economy of western Canada. There have been many half-hearted attempts in the past to address that particular issue. I remember well the minority Parliament between 1972 and 1974 when Prime Minister Trudeau held a conference in Calgary called "WEOC", the Western Economic Opportunities Conference. There was great optimism again that a federal government, because of a minority Parliament, would perhaps listen to western Canada and do something substantive. In July, 1984, Mr. Trudeau was elected with a majority government and suddenly the priorities of western Canada were once again put on the back burner.

A few years later the Western Development Fund was announced. Once again there was a great deal of fanfare about this fund, but it never got off the ground and did nothing to help diversify the economy of western Canada. Although the Deputy Prime Minister has not announced this publicly, he has established with his colleagues a group in the City of Winnipeg to look at diversifying the economy of western Canada. This group was called the Western Initiatives Office in Winnipeg.

Mr. Mazankowski: Why don't you check your sources?

Mr. Nystrom: It is a group of people who are supposed to be looking at problems in western Canada. Perhaps he could tell us more about it.

Mr. Mazankowski: Why don't you stick to the facts?

Mr. Nystrom: I have spoken to the people involved in the group, so I know of what I speak.

There should be a western economic development strategy. I know the Minister agrees with me in principle. Such a strategy should be based on three points. First, it should be based on diversifying western Canada and building on the resource base and the agricultural base that already exist. I believe we can all agree that we have tremendous resources throughout the west, including great oil and gas resources in British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Alberta. Saskatchewan has immense potash reserves which represent about 30 per cent of the potash reserves in the world. There are tremendous forest resources throughout the Province of British Columbia and elsewhere in western Canada, and there are other resources in Manitoba and throughout the west. We need an economic strategy that will build on that particular foundation throughout western Canada and diversify the economy so there are jobs for western Canadians.

Second, we must build on agriculture in the west because of its great importance to our economy and the supply of food to the entire world.

Third, we need a change in transportation policy so that transportation will assist the western Canadian population rather than hinder it as it has done for so many years.

In addition to a western economic development strategy, I believe we must quickly take action to do more for agriculture if we want to save the family farm across the west. Let me put a couple of statistics on the record. We have heard about the real possibility of a drop in the initial price of wheat by some 20 per cent, after a drop in the price of wheat last year of about 19 per cent. If that happens, the price of wheat in this country for top quality grain will be some $2.83 a bushel. When one takes transportation to the Lakehead or the West Coast into account, top quality grains will produce some $2.37 a bushel. Let us compare that with the American farmer who receives $6.10 Canadian a bushel and the European farmer who receives $7 Canadian a bushel. How long can a farmer stay on the land at $2.37 a bushel in this country when the American farmer receives $6.10 and the European farmer receives $7? That is not good enough.

I have a study by the Saskatchewan Department of Agriculture which gives a breakdown of the cost of producing grain on a per acre basis. Again, the Department is talking about the impossibility of being able to even meet production costs in western Canada. The Saskatchewan Department of Agriculture says the farmer would have to produce an average of 58 bushels per acre of the top quality grain just to break even in the production of that grain, let alone meet the living costs of farmers and their families across western Canada today. When it comes to barley, it will be necessary to produce 135 bushels per acre if there is a drop of some 20 per cent in the price of barley, which everyone is predicting. Such production figures for the Prairies are absolutely unrealistic and impossible to meet. There are extremely serious problems in the grain economy, I suggest more serious than anything we saw in the 1930s. Farmers are receiving prices as low as $2.37 a bushel for the top quality grain and the price drops considerably for grades two, three, four and lower.

There are a number of ways to address the situation. First, we know that a major part of the problem is external because we export most of our grain. The Government must continue to fight for an international grains agreement so that there is a pricing formula between the five major exporting and consuming nations of the world that is based on production costs of farmers around the world and the ability of consuming nations to pay.

Second, in the short term, we need another deficiency payment for western Canadian grain farmers. Even to guarantee last year's prices, we probably need a minimum of $2 billion for western Canadian grain farmers. It is incumbent on the House to come to the assistance of the farmers of the Prairies when they have a problem that is beyond their control, namely, the price wars and subsidy wars between the Americans and the European Economic Community. I believe we will have to give greater consideration to the necessity of providing a much greater deficiency payment than was provided last year.

We need a parity pricing system in which a farmer receives his cost of production and a decent profit for his products. We should be producing generic farm chemicals at cost in this country so that farmers can have chemicals at cost. The high price of fertilizer must be reduced in Canada to give farmers additional help.

Let me deal with energy. Our Party believes that there should be a floor price in energy so that there is a minimum price below which it will not be allowed to fall.

An Hon. Member: Who is going to pay?

Mr. Nystrom: The Canadian consumer would pay the price. There would be a two-price system like there is with wheat today. The consumer is protected when there are excessively high world oil prices and a floor price so that workers maintain their jobs and petroleum industries are protected when the price falls to an artifically low level. That is our Party's policy, which I think would be a great asset to western Canada.

I ask the House to develop some leadership and a vision for a western economic program that will make western Canada a very strong partner in Confederation. If we have strong partners in Confederation we will have a strong Canada. That will be good, not just for the West, but good for Ontario, Quebec, Atlantic and northern Canada as well.

Some Hon. Members: Hear hear!

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. Does he think that a western diversification package should have in it a 2 per cent payroll tax such as is in place in the Province of Manitoba? Does he think that a diversification package should have in it a 2 per cent tax on the capitalization of any company doing business in the Province of Manitoba, a measure his Party just introduced in Manitoba? Does he think it should have succession duties?

I remind the Hon. Member that the Province of Saskatchewan and East Germany were the only two states in the world that experienced a decline in population between the years 1945 and about 1965, a time at which the Hon. Member's Party was in office in that province.

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, I can see my hon. friend from Edmonton is very sensitive to the feeling in his city where the Conservative Party is now running third, and rightfully so.

The Hon. Member asked me about succession duties. Saskatchewan was one of the first provinces in Canada to make an exemption for farmers in terms of capital gains when they sold their farms. I know that my friend from Vegreville knows that. That measure was brought in during the days of Allan Blakeney when he was the Premier of our province. The reason for such a measure is that farmers do not have pension plans. When they sell their farms they have to use the capital gains they receive to get them over their retirement years. I certainly support that.

As I said before, our Party also supports the exemption on capital gains for farmers and fishermen which is being proposed today. I do not think that that is a very controversial issue.

In terms of the taxes in Manitoba, it is up to the Premier and the Legislature of Manitoba to decide what they will do about those particular taxes. As I said, the main item for me in terms of western diversification is that we build a resourcing and processing industry in western Canada based on agriculture and based on our natural resources. We also need changes in transportation so that we do not have discrimination against western Canada in terms of freight rates, like we have had up until now.

I warn the House once again. If we do not do something concrete for the farmers in western Canada we will have many more thousands of them leave the land. They expect something to be done. They see things being done for other sectors in the country and they expect more help and more assistance as well.

Mr. Hovdebo: Madam Speaker, I ask the Hon. Member to enlarge on the suggestion he made that an energy program must be developed, a program which will allow the provinces to increase their takes from the energy in their provinces and also increase the number of people who can work in the energy sector.

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, in terms of energy I think all one has to do is look at the Government of Allan Blakeney in Saskatchewan in the 1970s to see the type of royalties that were imposed on the large multinational companies and to see how the people of Saskatchewan benefited from a resource that is theirs. The potash and the oil that is in the ground should not be for the benefit of only big multinational but for the people of Saskatchewan, the people of Alberta and the people of Canada. I think that is very important.

When our Party was in power in Saskatchewan we collected a great many revenues from gas and oil, from uranium and other natural resources. That is one of the reasons there was not a deficit during the Blakeney years in Saskatchewan. It is only because of the fiscal irresponsibility of Grant Devine in terms of mismanaging resources and not taxing the resource companies in that province high enough that there is a deficit higher than it should be. Of course, some of it is caused by falling world oil prices and falling grain prices. But part of it is because the Government is not taxing some of the multinational companies at a high enough rate.

The other point I want to mention is that it is important to have some public ownership of these industries. In Saskatchewan we have SaskOil, a company that has been maintained by the Progressive Conservative Government. We also have the Potash Corporation of Saskatchewan which is publicly owned. When the Minister of Finance was in a previous job in Toronto he helped to obtain some of the funding needed to establish the Potash Corporation in Saskatchewan. I think those matters are very important. They are measures which are being kept in place by the present Conservative Government of Saskatchewan because it realizes that the people of our province are very much attracted to the idea of some public ownership in the resource industry.

What we also need is a change in transportation policy so that we will have a freight rate structure in western Canada that does not discriminate against processing and manufacturing in the Prairies in favour of other parts of Canada.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Madam Speaker, I certainly have no difficulty in agreeing with the objectives to which the Hon. Member refers. However, I am puzzled by some of the policies adopted by the Hon. Member's colleagues in the Province of Manitoba. When the Hon. Member speaks of diversification, which is a historic objective in western Canada, and the development of some sort of manufacturing component greater than what exists now, would he not agree that the regrettable increase in the payroll tax announced last week in the Province of Manitoba will negate the growth of such diversification and make it more difficult for the manufacturing sector to expand and for jobs to be created, something which the Hon. Member seeks in western Canada?

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, in terms of the payroll tax in Manitoba, perhaps later on today one of my Manitoba colleagues who will speak will talk about this subject and provide more details with respect to it. I do not have all the details. I also wish to caution the Hon. Member for Brandon—Souris (Mr. Clark) that it is sometimes very misleading to look at certain taxes in isolation. He should look at the over-all tax burden on corporations in Manitoba and on Manitobans to see whether or not there is a fair taxation system in place. I suspect that in Manitoba there is a fair taxation system.

In terms of jobs in western Canada, I notice that Manitoba is number one in terms of having the lowest unemployment rate, by far. So something must be working in Manitoba. There has been more diversification in the province, which I think is largely because of the leadership of Premier Pawley. We do not see the same type of leadership being exhibited by Premier Getty, Premier Devine or Premier Vander Zalm. In the provinces of those Premiers the unemployment rates are much higher. Manitoba does not have the same type of resource base as the other three western provinces. I think the province has done exceptionally well.

If the Hon. Member would look at the taxation base in general he would find that it is more fair than what is in place in the other three western provinces which are governed by Conservative Governments. If the Hon. Member wants to look at something that was unfair in terms of jobs in the Province of Manitoba, then he should look at the issue of the CF-18 contract. I am interested to know what the Hon. Member thinks about the federal Government's decision on the CF-18 issue.

Mr. Mazankowski: What is your policy?

Mr. Nystrom: These are important issues in western Canada. Perhaps when the Deputy Prime Minister speaks he will give us some ideas with respect to the solution of the Conservative Party.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has introduced the question of the CF-18 contract. In the account of the New Democratic Party convention which was held in Montreal I missed reading about how it resolved this issue. I missed reading about how the Manitoba Government brought this to the attention of the convention in Montreal. I wonder if the Hon. Member could fill me in with respect to what I obviously missed in the newspaper.

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, the burden of government is that you have to make some tough decisions. One of the reasons the Conservative Party is so unpopular in western Canada, and why there has been a revival of popularity for both opposition Parties, is because of the CF-18 issue. Here is a Government which tendered for a contract and Bristol and Canadair bid on it. Bristol, in Manitoba, came in with a lower bid, as well as a scientifically and technically superior bid. Despite that, the Government gave the contract to Canadair.

Mr. Mazankowski: Are you opposed to that?

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, if I could just make my point in the final one minute of questions and comments. If the decision had already been made to give the contract to Canadair, and there are arguments for an aerospace industry in Montreal, then why go through the fuss of holding a tendering process in the first place? That is the important issue. All the Government did in this case was mislead western Canadians, and Canadians in general. If one's mind has been made up ahead of time, then why go through the farce of a tendering process, if no one is planning to listen to the results? That is one of the major reasons the Government is seen by western Canadians as a Government that has betrayed them. I know that members of the Conservative Party in Manitoba feel exactly the same way that I do about this issue.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am just delighted to have a chance to speak on the supply motion debate today because it really builds on the motion we put before the House last Wednesday. On that day we saw Her Majesty's Government and back-benchers stand up and vote against our motion which called on the Government to make a commitment with regard to the agriculture situation in western Canada. We called upon the Government at that time to ensure that the returns for grain produced this coming year will be at least as good as they were in 1986-87, to maintain the freeze on freight rates in a new crop year, to take action to reduce farm input costs through the reduction in chemical prices, such as generic chemicals, and generally deal with the farm debt crisis. I would like to go into that in some detail today. All 125 government back-benchers voted against our motion and I am sure the constituents in western Canada would be very concerned if they realized that their Members of Parliament had voted against those things.

The motion before us today deals not only with agriculture, which is one of our primary industries, but with the forest industry, the energy sector and economic diversification. I am glad the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) is in the House today. I hope he will join in the debate. I know he is feeling extremely uncomfortable these days and we only have to read the report in The Globe and Mail on March 21 to find out why. The Premier of Alberta, the Deputy Prime Minister's home province, has indicated he plans a separation of the Alberta Conservative Party from its federal counterpart if the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) does not come up with help soon for the province's ailing economy. The report in The Globe and Mail states:

> In the strongest language he has used yet in a continuing fight with Ottawa over the oil-industry aid, Mr. Getty said: "Our provincial party might have to separate in some way from an over-all federal party." In an interview, Mr. Getty emphasized his impatience with the federal Government's refusal to help. "I'm stressing to them time is running out. We're (being hurt) too badly and they don't seem to appreciate it. They must respond in some way. It has to be this year I'd say before summer."

If the Deputy Prime Minister, who lives very close to Edmonton, were to read The Globe and Mail report this morning, March 23, he would see that in several ridings of Edmonton the Tories are running in third place. This is after literally decades of a first-place position. Obviously the Government is not responding to the demands as proposed in the motion before the House today dealing with agriculture, energy, rural diversification in Alberta and the other western provinces, as well as the forestry sector.

Nothing typifies the quandary and concern of Premier Getty of Alberta more than the Syncrude project. Back in the late or mid-1970s, the Syncrude project was foundering even though it was sponsored by several large oil companies. The Liberal federal Government at the time came in with a pretty extensive investment of, I believe, some $200 million to get that project going. Last November we received a presentation from the Syncrude people which called upon the federal Government to provide a guarantee agreement of assistance from the federal Government, I believe in the order of $175 million. It was not actual cash. It was not even a loan guarantee. It was simply a guarantee agreement that if the world price of oil fell below $15 a barrel, and it is currently running at $18 or $19 a barrel, the federal Government would provide a loan guarantee at that time. It was unbelievable that the federal Government, which is concerned with energy issues, would not have provided that guarantee agreement. I thought it was really chintzy.

The Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields), who is a Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse), announced it was his responsibility that the Government had not provided that guarantee agreement. It was simply unbelievable that the Parliamentary Secretary should take the rap for a Government which has the Deputy Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) all from Alberta. It is unbelievable that he should be the goat and say he had not really impressed upon the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources the importance of this project. How could those other three members of the federal Cabinet from Alberta sit there and let that project be turned down? The Premier was furious—and he had every right to be so—that the Government would not even provide that guarantee agreement. Of course, the Alberta Government in the end provided the guarantee itself.

That was a signal to people in Alberta, and when our western caucus visited Alberta, during the mid-term break in February, we were told the story that the federal Government had no interest. It was not a case of the cash so much, or that the project would not go ahead, because the Alberta Government went ahead and provided the guarantee, it was the signal that the federal Government was not really committed to the diversification that tar sands programs provide. We are not only talking about the $350 million to expand the capacity by about 20,000 barrels a day, from, I believe it is 125,000 barrels or 130,000 barrels a day to 150,000 barrels a day. The Alberta Government had already put in another $85 million for a doubling of the capacity of Syncrude. That project, provided that world prices do come back, will get underway about 1989 or 1990.

Here we have the federal Government refusing to provide for the interim expansion of the Syncrude projects by some 20,000 barrels a day, which is very important in itself, but also it was going to nix the doubling of capacity, and the provincial Government has had to provide some $85 million to carry out that study. We are talking about a massive expansion which is going to be hobbled because of the federal Government's lack of commitment to the long-term strategy. I think the upgrading of tar sands plants and heavy oil plants should go ahead. That is very important in the Deputy Prime Minister's riding in terms of jobs. But instead of the cabinet Ministers, the Deputy Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs or even the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who comes from Calgary and has a great stake and interest in the whole energy field, taking the blame for the Government's decision to say no to the oil patch and no to Alberta, the Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member for Athabasca, says it is all his fault, that he did not impress upon the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources its full importance.

In Edmonton today the Tories are running third in the latest opinion polls because they are not prepared to make such a commitment. When our western caucus held hearings in Edmonton, Alberta in mid-February, a second aspect of the Tory energy policy was tremendously rapped by groups such as the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada. I am referring to their decision not to provide assistance under an earned depletion allowance. The Independent Petroleum Association of Canada pointed out before our task force hearings in Edmonton that the Government should have provided in the Budget—and there was nothing to speak of in the Budget; it was really an economic statement—for an earned depletion allowance. In that event we could have seen, for a net cost of some $60 million, a gross allowance of $350 million. It would have been a tax expenditure, but much of it would have been recovered in income taxes and in a reduction in unemployment insurance benefits and welfare costs. We could also have seen an extra 2,000 oil wells being drilled in Alberta and in the western sedimentary basin this summer, as well as the creation of 20,000 jobs. Can we imagine the creation of 20,000 jobs for a net cost of $60 million to the federal Government? It is simply incredible that a Government concerned and interested about unemployment would have turned down such a proposal, not only put to it by IPAC but by CPA and the association representing small drillers.

This week a group representing small drillers was in my office and said that the situation would be absolutely devastating if it continued. As IPAC said in its presentation, it is expected that investment this year will be some $3 billion. Let us compare that with $5.3 billion last year and with $9.5 billion in 1985. The number of oil wells drilled this year in Alberta and in the western sedimentary basin will drop from the 12,564 in 1985 to less than 5,400.

With the simple provision of an earned depletion allowance, the number of wells being drilled would increase to 7,000 this year. Investment would increase to over $4 billion and the cash flow would be $6.6 billion. The loss of reserves would also be held to 48 per cent. Under the present regime, the regime the Government is adopting for the coming year, as indicated in the Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), only 34 per cent of those reserves will be replaced.

What did the Government promise in the last election? It promised jobs, jobs, jobs. The then Minister of Energy glibly talked about hundreds of thousands of jobs. It was never possible to pin her down to whether it would be 100,000, 200,000, or 300,000 jobs. However, what have we seen? We have seen thousands of people being put out of work and no commitment in the Budget to provide jobs in the coming year.

A whole new regime has been put before us by the new Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, compared with what the Government promised in the last election. Self-sufficiency was an important aspect, but the new Minister said that self-sufficiency was not a realistic goal at this time. He also indicated last fall that job creation was not an important factor in the energy policy and that no questions would be asked if small Canadian companies in trouble were bought out by large U.S. multinational oil companies. The situation is extremely serious in the oil industry, and the motion before the House calls for attention to this situation as well as to agriculture.

I want to talk about the situation in agriculture. At present the circumstances are the most devastating and most uncertain we have seen certainly since the 1930s. About two and a half weeks ago we learned that the price of grain would be about 20 per cent less than it was last year. When that was reported at the Canadian Federation of Agriculture meeting in Hull, Quebec, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) was present and said that he did not know anything about it. It was amazing that the Canadian Wheat Board would have indicated that to members of the advisory committee and to the public, but that the Minister did not know anything about the 20 per cent reduction in initial prices of grains. It was cleared up that afternoon because the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) met with farmers from the Ontario Federation of Agriculture and indicated clearly that the Canadian Wheat Board was calling for a 20 per cent reduction in initial prices.

Let us put it into perspective. This indicates a reduction from $130 per tonne for No. 1 wheat in the current crop year to $110 or perhaps even $105 per tonne. The real prices for No. 2 and No. 3 feed grains would be much lower.

In my motion last week we called upon the Government to provide at least the same returns as those of last year. Taking into account that perhaps the initial price would be 20 per cent less, we called upon the Government to provide returns, along with stabilization or efficiency payments, of at least $130 per tonne. What the Minister had to say last week in that debate was very interesting. He quoted his statement of March 5 when he met with grain producers and refused to give a commitment. He quoted as if farmers were saying that they did not want to know what support would be provided. He spent all his time talking about resource neutral payments and so on, but he gave no commitment on what financial assistance would be provided.

Last Friday I had a chance to meet with a number of wheat producers in Manitoba. I told them that the Minister said in the debate last week that the Government would spare no effort. I asked them what would happen if they went to their banks and said that the Minister had given them a commitment that he would spare no effort in providing assistance. One farmer said that if he went to his banker and said that the Minister would spare no effort and gave him 65 cents, his banker would give him a cup of coffee but not a production loan based upon the Minister's comment.

The Minister went into great contortions about how farmers want to base their plantings on market signals and such. In a press release on March 13, the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board said that things did not look very promising this year for price, that he thought we would see most farmers planting, and that it would have to be an individual decision by each farmer. It is blatantly obvious that it must be an individual decision, but we do not know what is the initial price or what will be the financial support.

In the same press report Jack Penner, President of the Keystone Agricultural Producers said, "There is an awful lot of discussion out there whether or not farmers should even seed a crop. We are facing a situation worse than the 1930s if we do not address this. Why should producers go out and seed if they are going to only lose money? Wise has told farmers the decision on the federal aid is not likely before seeding".

We can see that the Government is giving no commitment to the farm sector; no commitment to the energy sector. Obviously it is making no commitment at all to western agriculture or to the western energy sector. It is about time for the Government to come clean and make a clear-cut commitment.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Are there any questions or comments? If not, we shall resume debate. The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski).

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to debate this very important motion and I appreciate the tenor with which the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) introduced it. I welcome the opportunity for a number of reasons. First, it gives us an opportunity to outline what has been done, what is in the process of being done, what must be done and what will be done in the future. For starters, recognizing that the debate has centred around agriculture to a great extent, I thought the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville might be interested in the following quotation from a representative of the Alberta Wheat Pool which appeared in The Winnipeg Free Press on Thursday, December 18, 1986. Under the heading "Pool Praises PM" we find:

> The Alberta Wheat Pool has praised the Government of Prime Minister Brian Mulroney for its handling of problems in the agriculture industry.
> Spokesman Bruno Friesen said yesterday agriculture is facing some of its toughest times ever and Ottawa has been quick to respond.
> "It's really quite an extraordinary hard time in agriculture right now and we feel that so far the present Government has responded well".

What better vote of confidence could one have than that, Madam Speaker, having regard to the fact that the pools have traditionally not been noted for exposing any political allegiance to either Party? That is rather significant and we welcome it, as I am sure the Hon. Member does too.

Mr. Nystrom: What date was that?

Mr. Mazankowski: December 18, 1986, page 59.

We recognize, as do all Hon. Members, the very difficult circumstances the west is undergoing with the collapse in commodity prices in agriculture, forestry, mining and energy. Unfortunately, we have heard very little from either the Liberal spokesman or the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville concerning solutions. The Member for Yorkton—Melville outlined in a general way what he considered to be a reasonable approach toward economic diversification, the principles upon which I agree.

In brief, we have to remember that we are faced with worldwide oversupply, fierce international competition, export subsidy wars and protectionist measures around the globe, all of which combined have imposed serious pressure on the resource- based industry of western Canada. Commodity prices have fallen. Western Canada has not enjoyed the same robust economic activity experienced in other parts of Canada, particularly in Ontario. Many of these problems first emerged during the previous recession when, combined with the 1981-82 interest rate spiral, Canadian farmers found themselves in very serious difficulty. That also had a major bearing upon the resource-based industry in western Canada which was in the process of expanding and building. It too got lodged into some very high interest rates.

I am somewhat surprised, and I have a tremendous amount of respect for the Hon. Member from Yorkton—Melville, that his leader, given the importance of this issue, would not have introduced the motion. Is he so preoccupied with gaining political support in Quebec that he finds it a little awkward to support the initiatives and concerns of western Canada?

I noted that the Hon. Member touched on the CF-18 issue. In The Winnipeg Free Press for March 20, 1987, a journalist by the name of Fred Cleverley made the point that the CF-18 issue did not cause much of a discussion at the annual meeting of the New Democratic Party in Montreal. He asked:

> Why would Howard Pawley say one thing in Manitoba and another in Montreal? Has he been persuaded that the theft of the CF-18 maintenance contract is less an outrage to Manitoba than he first stated? Would an NDP federal Government act differently from the Liberals and the Conservatives in matters affecting Quebec?
> On the contract, the premier's message differs, depending on where he is. New Democrats can count. The figures are Quebec 75, Manitoba 14.

The upshot, Madam Speaker, is that a couple of resolutions were introduced condemning the awarding of the CF-18 contract to Canadair, but neither saw the light of day. While New Democrats are critical of the CF-18 contract, they do not clearly state a position. Certainly that is part of the challenge of being a national Party. What we are seeing now, I suppose, is a certain maturing of the New Democratic Party. It is now looking for support in the Province of Quebec.

The Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) on a number of occasions has tried to raise the profile of agriculture and its difficulties. He has been proposing in Question Period that we should have guaranteed grain prices equal to this year's prices. We are not satisfied with the prices being paid to Canadian farmers today. Certainly we must do better. We have cushioned the difficult problem farmers face through deficiency payments, the reduction of input costs and by the removal of fuel taxes. Interest rates have come down.

As well, we have been tackling this issue on the international front. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), the Minister of State for the Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) have been working very closely with farmers both here in Canada and in the international community. Progress is being made, Madam Speaker. But when the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party suggests that the federal Government should force the Canadian Wheat Board to establish artificially high prices, on reflection, I think Hon. Members across the way should consider what they are proposing. They are really proposing a policy of obstruction and interference in the affairs of the Canadian Wheat Board. The Canadian Wheat Board Act is pretty specific. It says this in terms of establishing initial prices:

> The Board shall—

Not may.

> —with the approval of the Governor-in-Council, determine and fix the amounts to which producers are entitled per tonne according to grade and the certificates issued pursuant to this Part—

It does not say that the Governor-in-Council shall with the approval of the Board. It says "The Board shall with the approval of the Governor-in-Council". That is a very important difference. I am surprised that the New Democratic Party would engage in this vicious attack upon the principles and the orderly marketing concept of the Canadian Wheat Board.

Mr. Althouse: We are not.

Mr. Mazankowski: The New Democrats say they are not but by implication they are. They should stop it right now.

May I call it one o'clock, Madam Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I would like to advise the Deputy Prime Minister that when we resume debate he will have 12 minutes remaining.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

POSTAL RATES INCREASE—CONSEQUENCES FOR SMALL AND MEDIUM-SIZED BUSINESSES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Last week, Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government approved a first class letter 2-cent postage increase.

I quote the Canada Post press release:

> Most additional revenues will come from higher rates on market competing commercial services. Only 30 per cent of Canada Post revenues originate from basic rate letters, the remaining 70 per cent being accounted for by its commercial sector clients.

Mr. Speaker, these 150,000 small and medium-sized businesses operate in Canada and are Canada Post service main users. This is a vital and essential postal service, and such businesses are again hard hit by the Canadian Government.

Ever since the Progressive Conservatives came into office, Mr. Speaker, they have never advocated a small business policy nor any program to boost the expansion of this very important sector which creates most new jobs in this country. Once again faced with higher postal rates, small business will end up paying for this $122 million increase.

GRAIN OVER-PRODUCTION—CALL FOR CONVERSION TO ETHANOL

Mr. Elliott Hardey (Kent): Mr. Speaker, no one disputes that a global over-production brought about by government subsidy programs has resulted in the low grain prices which are devastating Canadian grain and oil-seed producers. Even though the Canadian Government has shown a commitment to see farmers through this crisis, every effort must be made to provide a long-term solution to global over-production of grain.

One answer is becoming more and more obvious. We could put surplus grain directly into our gasoline tanks in the form of ethanol alcohol blended with gasoline. As well as consuming excess grain, it would improve the environment because clean burning alcohol can successfully replace lead as an octane enhancer.

U.S.-Vice President George Bush has initiated a thrust of increasing the use of ethanol in U.S. gas blends by 2.5 billion gallons. This would consume an additional one billion bushels of surplus corn over what is already in ethanol production. If Canada followed that lead and in turn helped convince other grain producing nations to do the same, we would provide the solution to the woes of the Canadian grain farmer at the least cost to the taxpayer.

NATIONAL SUGAR POLICY

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the federal Government has been playing with the future of western Canadian sugar beet producers by delaying yet again a decision on a national sugar policy. In 1985, in return for $2.9 million from Manitoba to the province's producers, the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board who has been charged with developing sugar policy said in a telegram that "the federal Government—will not require any further financial participation beyond the 1985 crop". Then, without consultation, he and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) unilaterally announced a tripartite stabilization plan requiring the provinces to pay one-third of the premiums and to be liable for one-half of the deficit.

Neither the producers nor the provinces have asked for such a plan. What they wanted was a clear national sugar and sweetener policy that would provide long-term viability. What they have is continued delay and lack of direction.

REVENUE CANADA

INVESTMENT TAX CREDIT AUDIT—VALUATION OF TRADED-IN AGRICULTURAL EQUIPMENT

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, Revenue Canada is going as far back as 1983 to review the tax returns of hundreds of Canadian farmers who, in good faith, utilized the business investment tax credit on purchases of new farm machinery. When making a deal most farmers are interested only in the cash difference between the new item and the trade-in. They do not care how the paperwork is done. It is the cash difference that matters.

In cases where the dealer has exceeded the list or manufacturer's suggested retail price, there may be abuse and few would argue with that. However, the normal trade plus cash deal where the list price is not exceeded ought not to be the topic of a departmental witch-hunt. Yet it appears that Revenue Canada is questioning the valuation of equipment traded in ordinary, every-day, bona fide, arm's-length transactions, and substituting instead its own opinions. I suggest that in doing so Revenue Canada is treading on very thin ice. I urge the Minister to instruct his officials to cease and desist from this arbitrary and dangerous departure from practices in the market-place and from previous policy.

ACID RAIN—NEED FOR UNITED STATES PROGRAM

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) would praise President Reagan for promising this year to do something next year to keep a promise he made last year on acid rain. Now is the time for the Prime Minister to speak frankly and to say that what Canadians want from the United States Government is a program designed to cut acid rain by a certain date, by a certain percentage, and in a manner that is meaningful to Canada.

Washington showed political will when it got Mexico to cut acid rain damaging the U.S. That political will must be generated again with respect to Canada which is downwind from U.S. emissions. The summit is less than two weeks away. We urge the Prime Minister to get off his knees and stand up for Canada.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—POSITION OF LIBERAL PARTY

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, I urge the Government of Canada to continue aggressively pressing ahead with its efforts to effect a trade agreement with the U.S. Atlantic Canada, one of Canada's disadvantaged regions, stands to gain jobs from a trade agreement. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has made his determination to improve economic opportunities for Atlantic Canadians well known. In last week's debate the importance of a trade agreement was well expressed by the Prime Minister.

However, the Liberal Leader is against a trade agreement which will bring jobs to Atlantic Canada. He wants the Canadian economy to remain controlled by Bay Street. He says a trade agreement is not important as an instrument for solving the problems of regional underdevelopment. In that respect he cannot even get the support of his Party or caucus. The Hon. Member for Saint Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston), the Liberal critic on external affairs, does not agree. Just last week he wrote his fellow Liberal Members of Parliament arguing that the Prime Minister was right, a trade agreement will mean jobs for Atlantic Canadians and western Canadians. That says it all.

Neither does former Liberal cabinet Minister Donald Macdonald agree with the Liberal Leader. Nor does the current President of the Liberal Party of Canada, Mr. Robert, agree with his Leader. These—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, the Hon. Member's time has expired.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

USE OF FORMER CANADIAN MILITARY AIRCRAFT BY TURKISH AIR FORCE

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, last year the Government assured me that giving CF-104 fighter aircraft to Turkey would not affect the delicate political situation in the eastern Mediterranean. However, on March 5 Canadian Press reported that 100 Kurdish rebels were killed by Turkish F-104s on bombing raids into neighbouring Iraq. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) could not answer my questions about this incident in committee that day. He later sent a letter which said, "It is impossible to confirm whether or not former Canadian aircraft were used by the Turkish Air Force". The Turkish Government would say only that the F-104s were not used in a way which would violate the transfer agreement. That is not good enough.

Those fighter planes would not be in Turkey if it was not for the help of the Conservative Government. Canada has a responsibility to see that those planes are not used for air strikes into neighbouring states. I call on the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to investigate the incident and report to this House. Canadians must be assured that we are not contributing to violence and instability in the Middle East.

NATIONAL PAROLE BOARD

CALL FOR REVIEW OF PROCEDURES

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, something is drastically wrong with our National Parole Board and the entire parole system. Recent Parole Board decisions have cast serious doubts on its ability to protect Canadians. In the past month two very dangerous individuals were released. It was only after a public outcry that their paroles were revoked.

The latest Parole Board mistake was the release of an individual who was sentenced to nine years for the attempted murder of a Toronto police officer. During sentencing the judge called the act "deliberate, clearly motivated, callous and cold-blooded". Yet the Parole Board released him after he had served only three and a half years. Have these people lost all sense of justice? The Parole Board is in place to protect innocent Canadians, not side with criminals. Individuals who commit severe acts must pay, otherwise our entire justice system will become a joke.

I call on the Government to initiate a thorough review of the criteria and procedures used by the NPB in order that justice be served.

LEADERSHIP EVALUATION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): On several occasions, Mr. Speaker, I told the House that as a result of its inaction the Conservative Government sows discontent in all levels of society. The latest examples have to do with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the official languages, the linguistic training programs, and the various Public Service dismantling projects.

As reported by the media, inaptitude at its worst can be seen in the fact that discontent now reaches into Government ranks. The Conservative caucus is divided. This morning we learned that certain members had made unpleasant remarks. Ministers publicly say that members are minor chronic complainers. Newspaper reports indicate that the series of ministerial resignations might be followed by more resignations by members. Next in line to go after the Member for Terrebonne (Mr. Toupin) might be the Member for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead (Mr. Gérin), the Member for Richelieu (Mr. Plamondon), or the Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin). They too know as we do that this Government is unable to provide leadership, and they have lost faith in this Government. They want to exercise their democratic rights as members and representatives of the people, but Ministers tell them to shut up, that they are nothing but minor chronic complainers. It takes a minor boss to know a minor chronic complainer!

ETHNIC AFFAIRS

GREEK COMMUNITY—MESSAGE TO POLITICIANS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, this past weekend Metro Toronto's more than 100,000 Canadians of Greek origin celebrated the 166th anniversary of Greek independence with a magnificent banquet and a huge parade along Danforth Avenue. At the banquet on Saturday night Professor Steve Triantis of the University of Toronto delivered a message for all politicians to heed. He said:

> Governments in Canada have underestimated and treated with affront the intelligence and power of the so-called ethnic communities, two-fifths of the population of this country. We shall demand full and equal participation in the political, social, cultural and economic life of this country. We have indications that the federal Government has realized the problem and is taking steps to correct it. We shall be looking for action in particular with regards to appointments to boards and agencies.
> The leaders of all political parties should be advised that no ethnic group in Canada holds a monopoly of excellence in brains and education and that political parties that wish to find any excuse for being a charmed circle of the select, rubbing shoulders with each other and taking care of each other, will remain parties of the few.

RIGHT TO SELF-GOVERNMENT

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that Quebec Premier Robert Bourassa has decided not to attend the meetings of First Ministers and Native People to establish aboriginal rights.

The former Premier of Quebec, Mr. Lévesque, attended those meetings, despite the fact that the Constitution did not recognize the special character and needs of Quebec.

Mr. Lévesque recognized his responsibility for 35,000 Indians, 6,000 Inuit and a large number of Métis in his province.

The native peoples want what the people of Quebec want: to be masters of their own fate. Mr. Bourassa should recognize their needs and his responsibility.

ACID RAIN

CREATION OF SULPHURIC ACID AT ROUYN-NORANDA

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the Ottawa-Quebec agreement on acid rain signed in Montreal last Friday is of course a major event for this country, but even more so for Rouyn-Noranda and the Abitibi-Témiscamingue area.

On March 20, this Government signed an agreement with the Government of Quebec and Noranda Mines to help build a sulphuric acid plant in Rouyn-Noranda at an estimated cost of $125 million, a plant that will help Noranda Mines to reduce its SO2 emissions by 50 per cent.

The economic impact will also be quite considerable. Within the next three years 265 jobs will be created, and 55 permanent jobs by 1990.

Mr. Speaker, this is a great victory for the people of my area, because it is the culmination of plans that have been in the works for quite some time. I am proud of the way the Government has discharged its responsibilities in a project that is aimed at improving the quality of life of my fellow citizens.

POLITICAL PARTIES

POSITION OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY IN ALBERTA

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative Party is in a panic. The situation is so bad that in the Province of Alberta the P.C. Leader thinks one of the ways of getting out of their problem is separating from the federal Party. Further exacerbating the anxiety of the Conservatives is the new poll which shows that the people of Edmonton are split across all three party lines. That means that for the first time in a very long time the Liberal Party has a chance of winning seats in Edmonton. The reason for that is that we have been working very closely with the Liberal caucus in Alberta, the finest of the three caucuses there.

With regard to a situation like C-14, who has been speaking for the people of Alberta? Has the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) spoken out and said that he will not allow services to be taken out of the health care plan in Alberta? No, he has sat back and taken a hands-off position as universal accessibility to medicare for the people of Alberta continues to be threatened.

We in the Liberal Opposition here will be fighting. We will be working closely with our colleagues in the provincial Legislature. We will not only roll back Bill C-14, we will ensure that such an assault on medicare occurs in no other province in the country.

ACID RAIN—NEW NORANDA PLANT TO REDUCE SULPHUR DIOXIDE EMISSIONS

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, our Government realizes the serious threat of acid rain but it is also committed to assisting the industry in its move to correct this international problem. An example of this commitment was seen Friday with the announcement of a $125 million agreement with Noranda at the Rouyn-Noranda copper smelter. The announced new plant is designed to remove 96 per cent of sulphur dioxide contained in the production gases from the smelter's reactor.

The $41.6 million loan by the federal Government will go a long way to help the company meet the goal of 50 per cent reduction in sulphur dioxide emissions by 1990. Just as important though, this agreement provides stability to the future of the industry and the assurance of 6,000 jobs within this region.

This latest announcement is very good news for the people of northern Ontario and Quebec. It is a fine example of how the Government is meeting the challenge of reducing acid rain emissions while strengthening the industry.

Oral Questions

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

SOVEREIGNTY

THE ARCTIC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. We know that the Prime Minister and the Government have caved in on fish, energy, foreign investment, drug prices and softwood lumber. Last week they backtracked on acid rain. Is this week's cave-in the Canadian Arctic?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the cave-in in the Canadian Arctic occurred years before, under a Liberal Government. This Progressive Conservative Government has acted to assert Canada's control and sovereignty over the Arctic.

There were false news reports emanating from a story by Mr. Peter Newman. Those reports were corrected by some conscientious journalists and correct reports appeared in The Ottawa Citizen and The Toronto Star last night. The CBC ran false reports again this morning. I am not sure why the CBC would choose to run those false reports.

UNITED STATES RECOGNITION OF CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, will the Secretary of State for External Affairs confirm that the Canadian Government is not negotiating our sovereignty over the Canadian Arctic? Will he confirm that the price for having the Americans recognize our waters as Canadian waters in our Arctic, not international waters, the price for American recognition of that sovereignty is not an agreement from the Americans not to respect it?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition became a little twisted in the expression of his second question. Perhaps he was trying to get unanimity in his whole Party by being confusing as to what he was saying. Here are the facts.

In September, 1985, when we announced the dramatic action to assert Canada's sovereignty over our north, I also indicated that we would be entering into discussions with the United States to see if there was some way we could have an arrangement that would serve their legitimate security interests and respect our sovereignty. Those discussions have been going on since that time and are continuing. I want to make the point that if there is a failure in those discussions, or if we are not satisfied that Canadian sovereignty will be respected, we are prepared to defend our claims to our north before the International Court of Justice, as the former Liberal Government was afraid to do.

[Translation]

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Minister invariably seeks to rewrite Canada's history, but I suggest that Canadians will not be fooled.

REQUEST THAT TEXT OF AGREEMENT BE SUBMITTED TO HOUSE OR TO A COMMITTEE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister guarantee that, before making any kind of Arctic sovereignty agreement with the United States, he will table in the House the text of the agreement so that the House or a committee of the House can make a thorough study to assure Canadians that our waters, our sovereignty, and the full extent of Canadian nationhood in the Great North are protected?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. the Leader of the Opposition is unaware of the issues which are already before the House committee.

There have been conversations. My officials have given evidence concerning conversations with the Americans. But as usual, if an agreement is acceptable to us, I intend to consult not only with Members of the House of Commons but also, for instance, with the leaders of the Yukon and Northwest Territories Governments. I am already involved in serious consultations with the Government leaders of the two great North Territories with respect to the controversy which Americans call the 1002 question.

NORTHWEST PASSAGE—CONSTRUCTION OF CANADIAN ICE-BREAKER

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, you will recall at the time of the so-called Arctic ice-breaker contract award that the Secretary of State for External Affairs said it was an assertion of Canadian sovereignty over the Northwest Passage. It now appears that this may be part of a deal to prevent American ships access to the Passage. Can the Minister allay our fears in this regard and confirm that the construction of this ice-breaker was never discussed with the United States administration?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the construction of the ice-breaker was a Canadian decision—let me say that it was a Progressive Conservative decision since, for years, the Liberal Government refused to face the need to assert our sovereignty in our North.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): If the Hon. Member is asking me if we received or sought permission from the United States to build our ice-breaker—

Ms. Copps: Did you discuss it with them?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —to defend our sovereignty, no, we did not. That is a Liberal habit, one of several which we got rid of.

CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY—AMERICANS' ATTITUDE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, he cleverly managed to evade the issue. We have also been advised that affirming our sovereignty over the Northwest passage now depends on the goodwill of President Reagan during his visit in April. Doesn't the Secretary of State, as such, and as a Canadian, find it somewhat insulting that the President should want to negotiate sovereignty over our passage during the Summit?

[English]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, just to be very clear about a point the Hon. Member for Hamilton West shouted from her seat with respect to whether or not I discussed the matter with the United States—

Ms. Copps: You've got the wrong riding.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Hamilton East. I told the Americans what we were doing. I did not ask their permission but I told them we were building an ice-breaker to establish our sovereignty in our north.

[Translation]

There is no connection between the decision to build a Canadian ice-breaker to protect our sovereignty and Mr. Reagan's visit. Our sovereignty is not negotiable. What we have said is that if necessary, the Canadian Government is prepared to go before the International Court of Justice to defend its position. The Liberal Party was not. They were afraid to put the Canadian position and Canadian sovereignty before the International Court of Justice. As far as we are concerned, the age of fear has come to an end.

CANADA-UNITED STATES DISCUSSIONS

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, will the Secretary of State for External Affairs quite explicitly assure the House that in the negotiations he is having with the United States there are not any discussions or negotiations on the question of Canadian sovereignty, that that is accepted and that the United States has not in fact and will not in fact be given full and free access to Canadian Arctic waters?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I have just said in the House, we have declared our sovereignty over the north, as former Governments declined to do. As I indicated in my statement in the House in September of 1985, we are discussing with the United States the possibility of some arrangement that would respect our sovereignty and meet its legitimate security interests. As I said in September of 1985 and as I said again a moment ago in response to the question of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, if we do not secure an agreement respecting our sovereignty, that is satisfactory to Canada, then those discussions will stop and we will be prepared to defend our sovereignty before the International Court of Justice, as the previous Liberal Government was afraid to do.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Some threat. They don't even recognize it.

NATURE OF DISCUSSIONS

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, what I would like the Minister to reassure us about in this matter is that the kind of discussions taking place do not in fact include full and free access to Canadian Arctic waters, a free passage, by the United States. We simply want the assurance that in no way do those discussions include that possibility.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I presume what the Hon. Member is asking is whether or not, as a result of the discussions, that the United States—I trust she would have the same interest in Soviet passage—that other countries would not be able to pass through our sovereign waters without our permission or agreement. That is the purpose of the negotiations.

SECRET AGREEMENT QUERY

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Well, Mr. Speaker, the Minister still has not answered our question. I wonder, therefore, if he will assure us that there will be no secretly negotiated agreement sprung on the Canadian people at the time of the March 5 and March 6 meeting between President Reagan and the Prime Minister? Can we have the assurance that some secretly negotiated agreement will not be sprung on the Canadian public at that time?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the date is April, not March. However, the assurance is categoric. There will be no secret agreement sprung upon anybody. I take very seriously, if I may say so, the obligation on these matters with respect to the North, to be involved in very close consultation with the leaders of northern Governments as well as others. I am involved now in discussions regarding Canada's position, a joint position supported by the territorial Governments, with respect to the 1002 issue in Alaska.

I am hopeful we might be able to get agreement soon from the two territorial Governments to proceed with the ratification of a treaty which has been initialled with respect to the movement of northern caribou across the border between Alaska and Yukon Territory. It is the practice of this Government, which has asserted northern sovereignty, to consult extensively with all those Canadians who are interested.

AIR TRANSPORT

TRANSPORTATION OF PLUTONIUM THROUGH CANADIAN AIRSPACE—UNITED STATES-JAPAN AGREEMENT

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. An agreement has been signed, but not ratified, between the United States and Japan concerning the transport of nuclear fuel using Canadian airspace. There are grave concerns about whether a container safe enough to transport these large amounts of plutonium which are being contemplated can ever be built.

In light of those concerns, will the Secretary of State for External Affairs ensure that both those countries know before they ratify that agreement that Canadians and the Government of Canada do not want our airspace to be used for the transport of nuclear fuel?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman might have noticed from the newspaper story he obviously read this morning that it is a draft agreement not ratified by either country. In any event, transportation of radioactive material by air is subject to an international convention as well as to Canadian legislation. It is subject to the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act and regulations thereunder to the Atomic Energy Control Act and regulations thereunder and to Annex 18 of the Convention on International Civil Aviation, so we would have several options if such overflights were proposed. First, we can request that pre-notification be given and that approval be received prior to an overflight, or we can deny an overflight by filing a state difference with ICAO. In either case, of course, we would insist on stringent requirements for packaging and adequate inspection and that everything be observed which is necessary for the transportation of radioactive materials. The hon. gentleman can rest assured that these are all matters which will be insisted upon.

Mr. Frith: I am sure Canadians will insist that their airspace not be used to transport nuclear fuel.

TRANSPORTATION OF DANGEROUS GOODS ACT—AIR SPACE—CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Is the Government prepared to make the requisite changes in the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act to ensure that our air space will not be used for the transportation of dangerous materials?

• (1430)

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I thought I had explained the situation. Obviously the hon. gentleman was not listening to me; he was reading over his supplementary question.

Mr. Frith: Obviously you did not hear my question.

Mr. Crosbie: We already have an adequate legislative framework, and we also have the international convention under which we can act in the manner I indicated. We have several options. In addition, the Secretary of State for External Affairs will be as vigilant as ever in ensuring that we receive pre-notification and that our views in the matter are known by the countries involved.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT TAKE ACTION THROUGH ICAO

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs, and it is on the plutonium matter. As the Minister is aware, the U.S.-Japan proposal to endanger Canadian airspace for the routing of 1,000 pounds of plutonium per month is an exercise designed to cut transportation costs, which in turn risks the safety of Canadians. Would the Minister assure the House that Canadian airspace will not be violated by any flying Chernobyls and file a stop order under Article 35, paragraph (b), of the 1944 Chicago Convention of ICAO? The step is quite in order, as I confirmed less than an hour ago with Dr. Michael Milde, Director of the Legal Bureau at ICAO.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport has set out the facts, but the Hon. Member asks for an affirmation. Canadian airspace will not be violated.

ENVIRONMENTAL IMPACT ISSUE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. I would like him to answer whether or not Article 35, paragraph (b), will be used in that stop order. Since the plutonium spillover in Greenland in the 1960s cost over $500 million to clean up, the Palmares, Spain, plutonium clean-up cost over $300 million, and even the Cosmos 954 clean-up cost $10 million, will the Minister request as a bare minimum that an environmental impact statement be prepared and put on file before the Japan-U.S. agreement goes through to ratification?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the hon. gentleman finally pointed out at the end of his question that this is an agreement not yet even ratified. Therefore, much of the alarm he is now expressing is certainly premature, to say the best. I have already outlined that under the international convention in question we have several options including denying overflights by filing a state difference with ICAO. We can request, by filing with ICAO, that pre-notification be given and that approval be received prior to such overflights. If and when the agreement is ever ratified, and if and when there is ever a suggestion that there be such an overflight of Canada with such a cargo, we would ensure that these steps are taken, as the Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs has already stated.

ACID RAIN

IMPACT OF ESTABLISHMENT OF SULPHURIC ACID PLANT AT ROUYN-NORANDA

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment.

Following the historic agreement on acid rain signed with Quebec last Friday in Montreal, I would like to ask the Minister what impact building a sulphuric acid plant in Rouyn-Noranda will have on the objectives being pursued by Quebec and Canada in terms of reducing air pollution?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the plant mentioned by the Hon. Member for Témiscamingue is of great importance for the environment. In fact, the federal Government is contributing one third of the cost of financing the project, in other words, nearly $42 million. The plant will make it possible for Noranda Mines to reduce its sulphuric acid emissions by 50 per cent by 1990.

This proves the Government of Canada is prepared to put up funds toward meeting its commitment to reduce acid rain.

The Hon. Member is to be commended for his co-operation. I appreciate this very much.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE DISCUSSIONS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Fisheries said in a November 24, 1986, press release: "We are under no legal obligation to give the French any fish in Canadian waters". Despite no legal obligation, talks will start tomorrow morning, Tuesday morning, with the French Government, in Ottawa, to figure out how much fish to give away to the French for the four-year period from 1988 to 1991. Since the Prime Minister said that no fish would be given to the French unless Newfoundland agrees and Newfoundland has said "no", and since the Minister of Transport has said "not one fish, not one tail, not one head, not one fillet", what is northern cod doing on the agenda of the talks with the French Government which start Tuesday morning in Ottawa? We are being gutted again by the Government.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has already been gutted head on according to his question. He partially quoted the Minister of Fisheries. On November 26 the Minister of Fisheries said:

> We have told the French that under the 1972 treaty we have no obligation to provide them with any fish—

And I go on to complete the quotation:

> —to replace what they have been catching in the Gulf and, specifically, no obligation to provide them with any northern cod, over and above allocations made under the Fisheries Agreement with the EEC, which expires at the end of 1987.

Our only obligations to the French to give them fish at all were caused by the treaty of 1972, entered into by the Liberal Government of the day, and by the treaty of 1982 entered into with the EEC. I hope the hon. gentleman will apologize when he next gets to his feet.

In addition, at these discussions tomorrow, the hon. gentleman will be happy to know that the Hon. Member for Bonavista—Trinity—Conception and the Hon. Member for Burin—St. George's will be present. There will be a strong Newfoundland delegation. I will have a representative there, and I can assure him that we will be well represented in those discussions.

NORTHERN COD—NEGOTIATION OF QUOTA

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Department of External Affairs said today that a quota will be negotiated. The Canadian Embassy in Paris said that a quota will be negotiated. The federal Department of Fisheries said that a quota will be negotiated. Does the Minister really expect Canadian fishermen to believe a Minister who closes Canadian ports after the French have gone home? Can he guarantee us now that the first thing he will do tomorrow morning, during these negotiations, is to remove northern cod from that menu? Let them eat cake.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter which has been on the menu with the French since 1972 when the Liberal Government, which was supported by the hon. gentleman, put it on the menu in a treaty that has no termination date. It is on the menu every year from now on, indefinitely. It is a Liberal menu put there by the Liberals. That is why it is on the menu.

The hon. gentleman asked about closing the ports. Our Liberal predecessors never closed the ports to French fishing vessels, nor did they ever close Burgeo Bank to French fishing. The next time the hon. gentleman rises to his feet, will he explain to Canadians why in 1982 they signed away 47,500 tonnes of prime northern cod to France and other nations in the European Economic Community? Let us hear no more from the hon. gentleman.

HUNTING OF MATURE SEALS

Mr. Morrissey Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, last week two East Coast Canadian companies announced that they would be sending ships to the front off the East Coast of Newfoundland and Labrador to hunt mature seals. On Saturday the Department of Fisheries and Oceans notified these companies to suspend their operations until further notice. Will the Acting Minister of Fisheries assure these companies and the House today that the Government of Canada will not impede their legitimate operations to harvest a renewable resource? Will he also assure us that we will not see those sealers harassed by so-called anti-seal protesters?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to answer a question from a mariner who knows what he is talking about, not a baker who does not know what he is talking about.

An Hon. Member: Let him bake cake.

Mr. Crosbie: I hope he gets a rise out of that one.

The Fisheries Minister is announcing today that strict controls are being placed on all companies with large vessels participating in the seal harvest this year. They will be permitted to participate. The seal hunt is not illegal in Canada. The Minister is asking for and obtaining a written undertaking that they will take no white coats. In other words, they will not take any baby seals or seals of that age. The Minister is announcing that this is entirely consistent with the recommendations of the Malouf Royal Commission on seals and the sealing industry which found sealing to be a humane and economically significant industry that posed no threat to the seal population. Two inspectors will be placed in each vessel to ensure that the seal hunt is humane and that all regulations are observed. I hope that satisfies the Hon. Member's query.

ACID RAIN—STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO U.S. SECRETARY OF ENERGY

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. Is he aware that U.S. Energy Secretary John Herrington predicted today that Canada would settle for a downpayment on American action on acid rain that would constitute going ahead with previously selected projects already deemed by the Government of Canada, the EPA and others, to be not in accord with the Envoys' recommendations? Was the Minister aware of this statement by the U.S. Secretary of Energy and is the Prime Minister aware of it? If he is, why did the PM insist on saying today in Quebec that he still regarded what President Reagan committed himself to do last week as a significant commitment when, in fact, it is not, even by the Minister's own previous analysis?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the short answer is that I am not familiar with the particular quotation from Secretary of Energy John Herrington to which the Hon. Member has referred. All I can do is take at face value what commitment has been given to me directly by the Secretary of Energy that there would be an amendment to the 1988 budget as proposed by President Reagan to Congress, to honour the commitment by the President when he endorsed the Envoys' Report.

CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister look into the Secretary's comments? It appears the American administration is still intent on pulling a fast one on the Government. With that in mind, given the overwhelming evidence, which became even more significant this weekend with the statements by Congressman Gerry Sikorski of the United States, that the enthusiasm which the Government is showing for what President Reagan has done to date is actually harming the cause of those in the U.S. Congress who are seeking real acid rain abatement and not circuses such as we have had to date, will the Prime Minister and the Minister of the Environment reconsider the message which they are sending to Americans and to Congress that Canada is somehow satisfied with what is going on when no Canadian should be satisfied with what is going on?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member bases his question on a statement made by a Minnesota Democrat, a highly partisan adversary of the President, attacking the President of the United States by way of the Prime Minister of Canada. There are 435 members of the House of Representatives in the United States. They are as capable of regurgitating partisan tripe as are some of the members of the N.D.P., the Hon. Member's own Party. I do not think we should give any more credence to what they say than this House often gives to what they in the NDP say.

U.S. CONGRESSMAN'S STATEMENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister who probably knows that one of the key activists on acid rain in the United States Congress is Representative Sikorski. By the way he is also one of Canada's strongest allies and he is quoted as having said over the weekend: "Each time the Prime Minister of Canada sidles up to President Reagan on acid rain, he confuses the American public and diminishes the effective pressure from Congress—"

Will the Deputy Prime Minister have the courage to tell the Prime Minister that it is time to repair the damage which the Prime Minister has done to the cause of acid rain reduction in Canada? Will the Deputy Prime Minister do that?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we hear the same rhetoric from the Hon. Member who was a Minister of the Environment and who did nothing to deal with this very important issue. I would suggest to the Hon. Member that saddling up is better than saddling away as the Liberals did when they were in office.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately the Deputy Prime Minister is trying to rewrite history, but the record is very clear as to what the Government of Canada achieved before September, 1984. We certainly do not subscribe to that threat.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Tell us.

Mr. Caccia: Any time.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Right now.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of the Environment. Will he now urge the Prime Minister to stop taking these backward steps, as indicated by Congressman Sikorski, stop undercutting Congress, which is a very serious development, stop accepting research instead of action, and demand at last a program of acid rain cuts which are meaningful to Canada, at the next summit? Will he do that?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I honestly do not think that there is a big gulf between what the Government is seeking from the Americans and what the Hon. Member is calling for. In Quebec City a few moments ago the Prime Minister of Canada completed a major speech to a very large audience of Americans, on which occasion he articulated with great precision what our position is. We are seeking nothing less than a 50 per cent reduction in the transboundary flow of acid rain from the United States into Canada by 1994, in concert with similar reductions that we are achieving ourselves within Canada through bilateral accords with the provinces.

I do not think it becomes the Hon. Member to stand in this House and quote some partisan tripe from an individual Member of the House of Representatives whose objective is not to add to the sum of knowledge on the subject but rather to subtract from it.

THE ECONOMY

WESTERN ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the tremendous economic difficulties now evident in western Canada. In mid-February I invited the Deputy Prime Minister to confirm the existence of the Western Initiatives Office which is now known as the Western Diversification Office. Since at that time he did not acknowledge the existence of the office, will he now tell western Canadians about the Western Initiatives Office, what its budget is and what its mandate is? It is important to western Canada. Can the Deputy Prime Minister now tell us what his plans are and reveal the mandate for that office?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the so-called Western Diversification Office in Winnipeg to which the Hon. Member refers is a figment of the Hon. Member's imagination. If he sticks around in the House this afternoon, I will attempt to outline some of the principles and objectives that we see important in putting together a western economic development and diversification strategy.

Mr. Keeper: There is an office.

MANDATE OF ALLEGED OFFICE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Maybe I will give the Minister a second chance, Mr. Speaker. I have here a list of 15 people who work in the Western Diversification Office in Winnipeg on Ellis Avenue. I have their office numbers, their phone numbers from the co-chairman right down to the clerical staff. In light of that—and I will send the Deputy Prime Minister a copy of this list if I may get a Page—will he now confirm that such an office exists and will he tell the House what its mandate is and whether or not it will have independent spending authority for projects in western Canada?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member would do well to subscribe to the code outlined by the Leader of the Liberal Party: First, before you ask a question, make sure you know the facts.

BANKS AND BANKING

CHARTERED BANKS—INTEREST RATES CHARGED TO FARMERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. He knows that thousands of farmers are facing the loss of their farms this year through foreclosure, many due to the chartered banks illegally charging high interest rates by switching promissory notes that were a fixed rate to a floating rate, as in the case of the Allen Wilford—Royal Bank case last year, who was charged some $300,000 extra. Is the Minister prepared to require that farmers who have been overcharged be repaid these funds?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member wishes to give me any specific information relating to this practice, I would be happy to look into it.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION BY INSPECTOR GENERAL OF BANKS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, this is a very important issue. Thousands of farmers have been charged millions of dollars and I am surprised that the Minister would not know about it because the practice has been widely carried out. The Minister of Agriculture in Alberta indicated that he would be glad to intervene. I am surprised that the Minister would not. I wonder if the Minister would direct the Inspector General of Banks to order a full investigation and audit of these practices of the banks and require that the banks repay the farmers and small businessmen who have been over-charged when the banks have illegally switched a promissory note at a fixed rate to a promissory note at a floating rate.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if there are practices that are illegal under the Bank Act, the Inspector General of Banks will be taking every action needed to remedy that. As I indicated in my first response, if the Hon. Member has something that indicates illegal practices are being carried out, I would be very appreciative if he would bring it to my attention.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

CLOSURE OF ALGONQUIN RADIO OBSERVATORY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. Several weeks ago the Prime Minister boasted at the University of Waterloo about his Government making us leaders in world technology. However, actions speak louder than words. Why has the Government permitted the closure of the Algonquin Radio Observatory, resulting in the destruction of a first-class scientific team here in Canada? How can this make sense?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, Question Period simply is not long enough for me to point out to the Hon. Member the actions we have taken to make sure that Canada stays with world leaders on the new frontier of science. It was on the recommendation of the scientific community that we will participate in an international effort to establish a telescope in Hawaii where the atmospheric environment is the most ideal in the world and cannot be matched elsewhere. The project is of the size that one country simply cannot afford it by itself.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the Minister must know from the NRC memo of October that scientists are in fact deeply opposed to what is being suggested. I ask as a supplementary question why the Government continues to hack away at scientific research in Canada, turning us into what in fact is a scientific tenant in Hawaii.

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the interpretation the Hon. Member puts on this initiative simply does not coincide with the facts. The council has recommended that we enter into negotiations with several other countries that have embarked on this major international effort to establish the best possible facility on earth to observe the skies. The council has obviously decided that Canada wants to be among the best in the world and that this particular project offers the best chance for that.

IMMIGRATION

PROSPECTIVE LEBANESE IMMIGRANTS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration and concerns a group of Lebanese individuals who were in the process of being sponsored by Canadian family members in Ottawa. Because of an indifferent and uncaring Minister, these individuals had to be stranded for four days at airports in both Madrid and Athens and are now reportedly in a jail cell in Cyprus.

Why has the Minister refused to negotiate for these people a temporary status in either Spain or Greece? Why has he also refused to issue a ministerial permit allowing these people who are family members of Canadian citizens to enter Canada so that their papers can be processed in safety, rather than risking their lives on a return flight to Lebanon?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I already explained to the Hon. Member for York West a number of times how we proceeded in the case of persons applying for status inside this country. The 17 Lebanese who left Damascus last week were arrested in Madrid because they did not have the documents required to enter Canada. That being the case, we applied the rules that were introduced on February 20. There is absolutely no reason for us to change those rules. Again, I wish to point out to the Hon. Member that according to Canadian policy, certain documents are required before people can have access to the laws by which we are governed. I said so last Friday, and nothing has changed since then.

[English]

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, the Minister has shamelessly washed his hands of the entire affair and is placing technicalities before the safety of human lives.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT GIVE IMMEDIATE HELP TO GROUP OF PERSONS INVOLVED

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, again, I want to ask the Minister: Why did he feel so little interest in and compassion for their Canadian relatives, in such critical circumstances that demand passion? Will he agree to provide immediate assistance to this group, and at least keep their Canadian relatives informed of present and future developments?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, last week I told the Hon. Member about the status for which these people applied. Eight applied for immigrant status and did not wait for a reply before leaving Syria. Six applied for visitor status, which was immediately denied. These people did not ask Canada for refugee status, and the Hon. Member wants me to give them a status they did not apply for. Mr. Speaker, when will the Hon. Member understand that this country has certain immigration policies and that they are going to be applied, whether he likes it or not!

AIRPORTS

PROVISION OF FIRE RESCUE SERVICES

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Transport is about airport fire-fighters. I am sure the Minister is aware that while 42 flights landed at Pearson International Airport between 10 p.m. last night and 1.30 a.m. this morning, 14 in one half hour alone, there were only five active fire-fighters on duty to respond in the event of a major emergency and this would not help in the evacuation or rescue of passengers. What will the Government do about this deplorable situation regarding safety in the air industry?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there is no deplorable situation in connection with safety in the air industry and there certainly is not in connection with the crash fire rescue service at Pearson or at any other airport where all the rules and regulations laid down by ICAO are being met to the fullest. As a matter of fact, across Canada, not only do we meet the standards at the larger airports but we also exceed them at the smaller airports.

It is not understood properly that the job of the crash fire service is to secure a route from a damaged or crashed aircraft so that passengers inside can get out. That is their primary and main job and, in addition to that, there are other forces available at the airport and there are plans designed to go into effect to help evacuate passengers. The job of the CFR service is to maintain the foam, get to the aircraft and form a passageway for the passengers to get out. That is their particular job and the regulations and rules are being met in full.

NIGHT OPERATIONS AT REGINA AIRPORT

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, how can the Minister expect Canadians to believe that the Government has safety on its mind when he has allowed the Regina airport to operate from midnight until 8 a.m. while very large planes are arriving with no fire-fighters based at the site? How can he expect us to believe that he has safety uppermost in his mind?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, neither Regina airport nor any other is operating without meeting ICAO requirements at least. I would have to investigate the particular situation the hon. gentleman has mentioned but there are airports that do not have full service for a complete 24-hour period. The pilots and airlines are so instructed and know about that. It is then up to them to choose to land after midnight or whenever the service is reduced during the time from midnight onward. That is what I think the situation is, but this has been so for many years and it is so now. Unless some impartial authority can assure me that this is not a safe practice, it will continue. If an impartial, outside authority will report to me that this is not a safe practice, then of course changes will be necessary.

DAY CARE FACILITIES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister who should know that the real crisis in day care means that nine out of 10 children in care are being looked after in unlicensed and sometimes unsafe surroundings. Yet we now know from leaked press reports that the Conservative Government's day care plan does not include national standards for day care facilities. In the words of one advocate, if this goes through, they may find themselves presiding over a day care system which most of us would not touch with a barge pole.

• (1500)

Will the Minister agree today with the Liberal Party that any national day care strategy must include national standards so every Canadian child can be guaranteed a safe and healthy day care experience?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Hon. Member will wait for the report to be tabled. At that time it can be considered to its fullest extent.

The Hon. Member asks us to endorse the Liberal Party position. I am not sure what that is. The London Free Press of March 20 said that "child care is not a top priority to Turner". Is that the official policy? Or, is it another policy that the Hon. Member might want to impart to me?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Read the whole quote.

NEED FOR NATIONAL DAY CARE POLICY

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised the Deputy Prime Minister doesn't want to answer the question, because the report in the press which refers to the Conservative day care plan is shamefull, and it is felt as such by all Canadian parents who would like to have a place where their children are looked after.

I would like to ask him once more if he agrees with the Liberal Party that a national day care policy must set national standards to protect our children. If it does not set such standards, all the reports will be absolutely meaningless.

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the position of the Right Hon. Prime Minister on this issue is not shameful. The position of the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare is not shameful. The position of the Minister responsible for the Status of Women is not shameful. In the spirit of parliamentary reform, I invite the Hon. Member to await the work of the parliamentary committee. The committee is composed of all Parties in the House of Commons. Surely that is the way Parliament should function. I know the Hon. Member has not been around here very long. She is learning fast, but she needs to learn a lot faster.

CHARTERED BANKS—INTEREST RATES CHARGED TO FARMERS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In response to a question from the Hon. Member for Algoma today, he indicated that he knew nothing of the activities of the banks regarding floating interest rates and farm loans. I wonder whether he has had a briefing from his staff concerning the Allan Wilford case of some five months ago where Mr. Justice Galligan ruled something in the order of $300,000 more was collected by the bank than it had the power to collect. Similar situations are surfacing in a great number of provinces. Will the Minister follow up on the promise of his Minister of State for Finance on Friday to look into this and give a full report to the House?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I understand the Hon. Member has to get up a second time on this for his own reasons. However, he was told specifically by the Minister of State for Finance that he would be given an answer. I believe he was also spoken to outside the House. It was promised an answer would be forthcoming in the very near future.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, since this has been an issue for some five months, does the Minister not have an answer and a briefing of his own to decide whether or not the Bank Act is being adhered to as was intended during its writing in 1980?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, there has been a court decision on this matter. It is being reviewed by the Department. My colleague, the Minister of State for Finance, is directly responsible. As I indicated, the answer will be forthcoming as was twice promised to the Hon. Member by the Minister of State for Finance last Friday.

FEDERAL DEVELOPMENT BANK

ROLE AND MANDATE—INQUIRY WHEN GOVERNMENT WILL ANNOUNCE POLICY

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.

Ever since the Conservative Government came to power, it promised to look at the role and mandate of the Federal Development Bank. We had national consultations conducted by the former Minister of State (Small Busineses), the Nielsen task force study, and today, we still don't know what the Government's policy is.

Could the Minister inform the House when he is going to announce his policy on financing assistance for small businesses, and could he let us know why his department is hiding a consultation report that was printed in the fall of 1985?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, we will make the announcement when we are ready to do so.

REVENUE CANADA

INVESTMENT TAX CREDIT AUDITS—TRADE-IN VALUE OF FARM EQUIPMENT

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue and concerns the business investment tax credit audits in western Canada. The Minister will be aware that his Department is questioning the value of farm equipment traded in. These values were fairly determined in the market-place by individuals dealing at arm's length. The Department has been substituting its own arbitrary opinion. Will the Minister instruct his officials to abandon this arbitrary and dangerous departure from the previously established practice of not investigating bona fide market-place values between individuals dealing at arm's length?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question from my colleague and indeed from others in this House who have expressed concern about the investment tax credit and capital cost audit. We have been looking at the situation across the country, not just in western Canada. As a result of representations such as this from my colleagues, we have instructed our Department to pause in this audit activity to make certain a fair and reasonable approach is being taken. We will then reassess the situation at that time.

THE LATE HON. WALTER GORDON

Mr. Speaker: It is my unhappy responsibility to draw to the attention of all Hon. Members the death of the Hon. Walter Gordon, a distinguished former Member of this House and member of the Privy Council. It would be appropriate to hear comments and I call upon the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner).

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, when I walked into the House at 2.15, I learned of the death of Walter Gordon on Saturday. He was well known to several Members of this House of Commons having sat as the Hon. Member for Davenport from 1962 to 1968, and having served as Minister of Finance from 1962 to 1965 in the Government of the late Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson.

Prior to his election to the House of Commons he had a very distinguished career. He was one of our country's leading chartered accountants and one of its first management consultants, first with the firm of Clarkson Gordon, and then Woods Gordon. He was perhaps best noted prior to his election to this House as Chairman of the Royal Commission on Canada's Economic Prospects, 1955. That was an immense piece of work which influenced economic thinking in this country for the following generation.

Since his retirement from public life he has had a very remarkable career. He was Chancellor of York University, one of the founders of the Committee for an Independent Canada, President of Canadian Corporate Management, a hugely successful Canadian-owned company. Among his major interests he was a Director of The Toronto Star. He was an author. Most of us have read some or all of his books such as, Troubled Canada, A Choice for Canada, Storm Signals, A Political Memoir, What is Happening to Canada.

Mr. Gordon was among those people who considered public service to be the highest calling in a free country. I think I can say that he has been the most influential of our Canadian economic nationalists. He was a pioneer in seeking an economically independent Canada. I can tell you that he was deeply concerned by the current free trade negotiations. An open letter he wrote to me on the pages of The Toronto Star last October had this paragraph:

> I have long been convinced that a large majority of Canadians wants our country to remain free and independent, or as free and independent as is practicable in this interdependent world. Certainly we do not wish ever to become part of the United States or to agree to policies that could lead in that direction such as the proposed free trade deal.

He cared passionately as well for the dispossessed and disadvantaged of this country and, although born to relatively easy circumstances, devoted a good deal of his professional and political life to re-establishing a better equality in our country. We knew him as a man of tremendous ability, of sensitive manners, warm personality and infectious sense of humour. Perhaps the words which might characterize him superbly would be "a civilized man".

Liberals remember him as one of the seminal influences of the renewal of this Party from 1958 to 1968. He was among our best loved figures. Denis Smith qualified him in his biography of Mr. Gordon as "that gentle patriot". He loved this Canada he served so well and with such altruistic distinction.

In personal terms, Mr. Speaker, I was proud to have known him well, to have counted him as a friend and a counsellor. On my own behalf, on behalf of the Party I lead, and on behalf of a legion of friends across Party boundaries, I offer to his widow Liz and their three children our heartfelt condolences and our total admiration.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, one did not have to agree with all of the works and attitudes of Walter Gordon to share a profound respect for his contribution to his country, his Party, and this Parliament. He was a man of outstanding accomplishment in both public and private life. On behalf of the Government, my Party, and my Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) I want to associate myself with the words uttered by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner).

We all felt a great sadness when we learned of the death of Walter Gordon. He combined outstanding careers in both the public and private sectors. As the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition said, he was one of Canada's leading chartered accountants and then became one of our leading management consultants.

However, it was really in the public sector, in the service of the country, that Walter Gordon most distinguished himself; first as a Royal commissioner of a vast, often controversial, but highly imaginative and wholly Canadian commission into the economic future of our country; then as a cabinet Minister; and then not simply as an architect of the rebirth of the Liberal Party in the early days of the 1960s but, more than that, as the force around whom the reformers who wanted to bring new life and new perspective to that Party gathered, the active force which gave it direction. He was, of course, a committed and persuasive Canadian nationalist.

I think of Walter Gordon as a reformer, a man who was prepared to challenge old ideas and also prepared to work to change them. I think of him as a man of honour who was prepared to follow the highest dictates of Canadian parliamentary life, even when they were difficult for him to follow. Throughout his life he was a thorough gentleman, a model for others in public life, a model for Canadians through time. On the Prime Minister's behalf and on behalf of all those in my Party, I want to express our condolences to his widow and family and our respect for the example he has given this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) on this very sad day in this tribute to the Hon. Walter Gordon. Everything that has been said about him is so true. If I may, for just a moment I would like to put a personal perspective on what has been said.

The Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs referred to the way in which Walter Gordon gave direction and courage to the reforming element in the Liberal Party. I was in the Party at that time and he was certainly the beacon for me as well as for many others who joined the Party then. It began for me at the Kingston Conference and continued right through our common period in the House of Commons.

For example, when I was a back-bencher in the fifth row on the far side I sat almost directly behind Walter Gordon. Walter would bring together an interested group of young Turks, as we were sometimes called, who were interested in genuine social and economic reform in Canada. He would have meetings with us at regular intervals and include us in discussions on any Bills he was going to bring into Parliament. I can remember Bills on the establishment of the Economic Council of Canada and many other measures while he was Minister of Finance. He made us feel very much a part of the system. I am speaking of many years ago; 1963, 1964, and 1965.

It was during this period also that he encouraged us to really think, some of us for the very first time, about what Canada really meant, about our slide into continentalism, about our need for an independent economic strategy, our need for Canadian ownership of resources and secondary manufacturing, and our need for an independent Canadian foreign policy. There were touches of this, of course, in the Royal Commission on Canada's Economic Prospects in the late 1950s and again at the Kingston Conference, but they came to full bloom during his period as Minister of Finance and after that in the House of Commons in the 1960s.

Indeed he was "a gentle patriot" as Professor Denis Smith called him in his biography. I guess that is one reason why even those who disagreed with him loved him. He was really universally loved in this country; perhaps not always as loved south of the border from time to time, but always respected. His leadership in forming and developing the Committee for an Independent Canada, of which I and many other Members here today were early or founding members, was incredibly strong. He did alert the Canadian public to the need for a genuine independent Canadian economic strategy and as complete as possible Canadian ownership of the economy.

He was as concerned also with the disadvantaged. His appeals for social progress were as strong as his appeals for economic independence and an independent foreign policy. He had an enormous impact on so many of us. It was really a shock, since I was talking to him not long ago, to learn that he died on Saturday. It is a great loss to Canada and, indeed, to all members of all Parties, not only in Canada but in many other parts of the world.

On behalf of all New Democrats, who, I may say, in the 1960s thought very highly of Walter Gordon too and tried to urge him to come over, I would like to say how sad we are at his dying and how very much we want to send our compassionate best wishes to his widow Liz and the family.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, as the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) said, Walter Gordon was the Member of Parliament until 1968 for Davenport. He came to Ottawa in 1962 and was instrumental with former Prime Minister Pearson in the return of the Liberal Party to Government in the early 1960s. Walter Gordon fought many battles. He was motivated by a strong sense of justice in providing Canadians a worth-while social security system. He was motivated by a strong dedication to the protection of the less strong in society. He was a strong player in the movement for strengthening Canadian ownership of our economy. He was an instigator of a broad policy which eventually resulted in the formation of the Canada Development Corporation, the Foreign Investment Review Agency, and was an enthusiastic supporter of the National Energy Program.

Walter Gordon was a man of great integrity, honesty, and dedication to the public interest. He was reserved and even shy, but motivated by a strong passion for Canada which we, as new Canadians in Toronto, readily understood. Walter Gordon leaves a vacuum in the movement for maintaining Canadian independence. He leaves a vacuum in the movement for disarmament and peace. He leaves a vacuum in the movement by Canadians who are dedicated to the protection and strengthening of Canadian sovereignty.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I would ask Hon. Members to stand for one minute's silence.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Nystrom:

That this House condemns the government for its lack of a long term economic development strategy for Western Canada that would, among other things,

(1) address the severe hardships being faced by the agricultural sector, especially as it relates to depressed grain prices, which have devastated the farm community;

(2) deal effectively with the problems of the forest industry and in particular, the need to conserve and manage the forest resource for future generations;

(3) come to terms with the need for realistic and pragmatic policies to revive the energy sector, whose decline has created such hardships for average Albertans;

(4) commit the government to pursuing policies that would assist in the economic diversification of the economy and the growth of secondary manufacturing;

and that the lack of such commitments by the government to Western Canada will result in a continuation of the unacceptably high levels of unemployment and economic hardship suffered by the people of Western Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) had the floor at the time of the recess. I recognize the Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, in resuming debate on this very important motion that has been presented by the Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), let me say that one of the characteristics of the New Democratic Party that occasionally troubles me is their penchant for doom and gloom and negativism. The House will recall that when we announced the $1 billion grain assistance program it was greeted with derision, if not outright condemnation by the New Democratic Party. Immediately they set out to try to sow the seeds of mistrust and skepticism by suggesting to Canadians and farmers in particular that it would not happen and would only consist of money coming from other agricultural programs, that it would be taken out of the stabilization program, that it would be a loan, or it would be provincial moneys. They wanted to know whether it was new money and where we would find it.

If one looks at Hansard beginning with October 3, 1986, one can see that it is filled with these vicious attacks on the Government, particularly on the Prime Minister, for coming to the aid of western Canadian farmers. That sort of misleading conduct is shameful, especially at a time when we are all trying to do our best to deal with these issues.

The fact is that the money is being received in a manner that has been recommended by the producers. Never before in the history of the country have we seen the kind of co-operation and support from the agricultural community about how to deal with this very important issue. That dialogue is continuing in spite of what my good colleague, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), refers to as the nattering nabobs of negativism. The work is going on with the agricultural community. After the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) met with 55 farm representatives representing 35 farm organizations, he issued a press release on March 5 indicating that progress is being made. We must put these things into perspective.

All of us know that the problems facing western Canada are not simple or easy to resolve. It will require a coherent long-term approach involving government, business, labour, and all sectors of the economy. That will have to be balanced with firm and aggressive action on the international front.

Our Party began that process during the recession in 1983, recognizing even then the challenges and obstacles facing the west. Our efforts culminated in the Prince Albert Declaration which contained a broad range of policies which would promote economic development in the key sectors of the western region. Some 52 specific commitments were made at that time. Of 16 commitments made in agriculture, 14 have been fulfilled. There were 12 commitments made in energy and 10 of them were fulfilled. There were nine commitments in forestry, seven of which have been fulfilled. There were six commitments in mining and four have been fulfilled. Of nine commitments in grain transportation, eight have been fulfilled. That represents 43 out of 52 commitments that have been fulfilled.

Since assuming office many other initiatives have been taken to meet urgent questions, such as the drought payments, the question of action on imports of beef from the EEC and others, and the removal of the unfair energy taxes in the energy sector. The removal of the farm fuel tax works out to some 33.75 cents per gallon. I was interested to note that the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville advocated an increase in farm fuel prices because he was talking about a floor price for oil which would have the effect of driving up prices.

Our action on interest rates is another major element. In 1982-83, the interest rates were hovering at 22 per cent to 24 per cent. Today, the Bank of Canada rate is down to 7.14 per cent, the lowest in 14 years. We have provided the capital gains exemption for farmers, introduced interest rate reduction programs and debt review boards. We amended the Western Grain Transportation Act and amended the Grain Stabilization Act. We dismantled the National Energy Program and dismantled FIRA. We removed the confiscatory back-in provision.

There have been many initiatives, none of which singularly and perhaps collectively are a magic panacea, but they do represent a substantial improvement. The Prince Albert Declaration demonstrated our government's commitment to address the challenges facing western Canada. We addressed the issues on the basis of building upon our strengths, and the success in fulfilling those commitments provides us with building blocks on which to take further steps.

Since 1984, many other initiatives have been taken in concert with the Prince Alberta Declaration. As the United States-European Economic Community grain subsidy war escalated, we provided $1 billion worth of relief. We accelerated the removal of the PGRT. We worked out a deal with the U.S. on softwood and lumber. That deal was supported by all western premiers. We launched the historic trade initiative, of crucial significance to western Canada.

We have initiated the new National Transportation Act. Again, the Hon. Member said three or four times that there is a need to address the transportation problems and the discriminatory features of our current transportation system. Once and for all, with the passage of the new National Transportation Act, freight rate discrimination in western Canada will be a thing of the past. Why are the New Democrats against it? The two very fundamental matters we are addressing in western Canada, the trade issue and the transportation issue, are being fought right to the wall by the NDP and they should be ashamed of themselves.

We have embarked upon ways and means to utilize western coal in Ontario to a greater extent. Contracts have been awarded to Microtel Systems in British Columbia for high technology equipment for the North Warning Systems. The CF-5 contract was awarded to Winnipeg, with spin-off benefits to Edmonton. The CF-18 contract had corresponding spin-off benefits to Edmonton. The minting of the new dollar coin was awarded to Sherritt-Gordon in Fort Saskatchewan. These are all important elements in diversifying western Canada's economy.

We have signed federal-provincial agreements in all four provinces covering urban development, irrigation, tourism, agricultural processing, industrial development, science and technology, forestry and small business. Since the new year we have announced that Versatile Pacific will build a new Polar 8 ice-breaker at a cost of something in the order of $350 million, a very major initiative. We have announced $100 million in canola oil purchases for Food Aid. We have facilitated and supported the sale of Versatile Farm Equipment which will re-establish itself on a permanent basis in Winnipeg. It will be good for western Canada and good for the western Canadian farmer.

We have made a number of announcements with respect to forestry. My colleague, the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew), announced a $13 million program with his B.C. counterpart for the establishment of a Canada-British Columbia forest resource development agreement, as well as a science and technology exchange program. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) announced the establishment of a Pacific Rim national park on Vancouver Island.

These are all very important initiatives. Time does not permit me to go on in more detail. Suffice it to say that we will continue to identify and work with the provinces and industry in dealing with these very important issues.

I wish to deal quickly with the issue of energy because it has been raised. I was rather interested in the proposal emanating from the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) which, as I see it, would drive up the price of fuel, in particular farm fuel. I can advise the House that discussions have been taking place in an intensified way with the Government of the Province of Alberta, and other provincial Governments, as well as with industry, in an attempt to deal with the energy sector and the very difficult period it is going through. We have discussed the need to attract investment capital and the need to stimulate drilling, exploration and development. I can advise the House that these talks are going very well. I am sure that within the not too distant future there will be a major announcement with respect to addressing the needs of the energy sector in western Canada.

With respect to western diversification, over the past two and a half years we have responded to the situation, albeit in very tight financial circumstances. I note that the Hon. Member talked about the difficulties that provinces were having with respect to deficits. Because the Hon. Member played a part in creating the burden of debt that was inflicted upon the Canadian people during the four years he and his Party supported the Government of the day formed by the Liberal Party, he should know that the net public debt increased from $85 billion to $200 billion in those four years. That is scandalous. Now the Hon. Member and his Party sympathize with the provinces, but they are indeed the architects of huge deficits.

It is interesting to note as well that the NDP Budget in Manitoba hits the lower income people the hardest.

Mr. Keeper: That is untrue.

Mr. Mazankowski: Finance Minister Eugene Kostyra's Budget will impose a 21 per cent tax increase on a single mother earning $27,000 per year. I say shame.

Mr. Keeper: That is deliberately untrue.

Mr. Mazankowski: We recognize that more needs to be done to renew and re-energize the economy of western Canada. We intend to build on our previous efforts in a comprehensive and orderly fashion.

Last September's Speech from the Throne committed the federal Government to placing special emphasis on diversifying the economic base of western Canada, a pledge that has since been reaffirmed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). Western Canada has a wealth of resources: physical, capital and human. The federal Government is committed to playing a leadership role in harnessing those resources and overcoming the obstacles and the challenges which confront us.

As I have indicated in this Chamber before, the Government will be coming forward shortly with a western economic initiative as a fundamental component of its regional development strategy. This initiative will provide a framework for growth across western Canada. It is being developed consistent with the Government's broad economic agenda as outlined in November, 1984, under the agenda for economic renewal. Our objective will be to continue to seek new opportunities for traditional resource sectors, whether it be through increased value-added and secondary processing in livestock, forestry and mining or crop diversification, aquaculture, market penetration or productivity enhancement. If the resource sectors are to continue to play an important role in our economy we must improve our access to world markets. In that connection it is important to pare down the barriers to trade. At the same time our objective will be to identify those opportunities in newly emerging high technology sectors, and the key secondary and service sectors such as petrochemicals, aerospace, transportation, tourism and financial services.

We believe that western Canada has the potential to become a world leader in technology in the areas of medical research, biotechnology, micro-electronics and others. We must recognize these opportunities and work with the provincial Governments, with industry and our universities to achieve that potential. Specific initiatives contained in the western development package will be announced in due course. It will reflect the following guiding principles. The private sector will be seen as the engine of economic growth. Trade enhancement and the removal of obstacles to growth are indeed an important component of this initiative. We must create a positive climate of investment to attract new investment capital into western Canada. Our emphasis will also be on increasing productivity and technological development. Above all, and consistent with all this, the necessity for federal co-operation will be a must.

These are but a few of the corner-stones which I would like to elaborate upon further. Unfortunately, time does not permit.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, I will give the Minister a chance to elaborate on his points further. I asked him a question during Question Period today about the Western Diversification Office. I have a memo on the matter here in my hand. The office is located on the fourth floor of the Canadian Institute of Industrial Technology Building at 435 Ellis Avenue, which is the NRC building in Winnipeg. I have a list of the 15 people who are supposedly working in the office, including the chairperson, John Blackwood, and the other co-chairperson, Anthony Reynolds. Mr. Blackwood is the co-chairman for resource industries. Mr. Reynolds is the co-chairman for manufacturing and services. Also on the list I have the names of the support service staff. As I have said, there are 15 names listed here, plus the names of those who work in the data centre and the processing centre. I have their room numbers and their phone numbers.

I would like to ask the Minister whether or not he can elaborate as to what it is these people do. My understanding is that they have been in these facilities for a couple of months. When I asked the Minister about this in February, he did not really confirm or deny their existence. But in Question Period today he said that these people are a figment of my imagination. If they are a figment of my imagination I would like him to explain this great mystery to us. Can the Minister elaborate on what it is these people do and what their mandate is? Are these people working on his western economic initiative, his western development package? If so, for how long? Will they be given any more spending authority and so on? We in western Canada would be very interested to know exactly what the Government is planning.

I understand from talking to key people that they originally planned to used a slick audio-visual presentation to kick this off across western Canada. That was the plan. Has the plan been scuppered? Why is the Minister saying that this is a figment of my imagination? Is this just another snow job with a fancy title? I think these people are doing the same jobs as are currently being done by the people who work in DRIE, which is the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. Is the work being done by the same people but with a fancy western title for political reasons for the Conservative Party in western Canada? If not, please tell us what they are doing.

Mr. Mazankowski: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member insists on perpetrating falsehoods and inaccurate statements. First, I did not suggest that the people were a figment of his imagination. I am not sure what people he is talking about. I said that the diversification office was a figment of his imagination. The Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) suggests that what the Hon. Member is talking about is the Industrial Technology Centre and the fact that these are NRC people. There is absolutely no truth or foundation whatsoever to what the Hon. Member is talking about. There is no diversification office in Winnipeg. I can tell the Hon. Member that right here and now.

The fact of the matter is that there is work going on through the general provisions of the Regional Industrial Expansion office. It is putting together some suggestions and some ideas. There are other groups in PCO putting together some ideas. The Hon. Member's suggestion that we have already put people in place and are planning a slick advertising campaign is the kind of nonsense and balderdash that really confuses people and distorts debate in this House. I wish the Hon. Member would stop doing that.

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, I wonder if the Minister would not check more deeply than just the notes given to him by his researchers. This office is in my riding in Winnipeg. We have received calls from people who work in that office. They have described it as a western initiative or western development department or branch project. So I would call upon the Minister to look deeper into this matter.

At the same time, would he re-examine the statement he made just a few moments ago in which he claimed the Manitoba Budget hit the poorest hardest? That is clearly a distortion and a complete falsehood with regard to the real impact of that Budget.

I think the Minister is basing his comments upon reports in the Winnipeg Free Press or Winnipeg Sun the day after the Budget, so I can understand how he has been misled. However, he should know that that Budget hits upper income earners hard, while at the same time giving a break to poor Manitobans. I would ask the Minister to check his facts.

Mr. Mazankowski: Madam Speaker, first, I do not have to rely on anyone to make my notes. I make my own notes. My answers are still the same. I do not care who is calling whom or under what name they are calling it. I repeat, there is no Western Diversification Office in Winnipeg, and I will repeat it again and again and again. That sort of question does not really deserve the dignity of any further response.

In terms of the Hon. Member's accusation that I am distorting, I do not know how I could outdo Hon. Members opposite. They are the champions of distortion. I welcome the opportunity to read again into the record from the Winnipeg Free Press of March 22. Its headline reads: "NDP budget hits lower income hardest". The article reads in part:

> Finance Minister Eugene Kostyra's budget will impose a 21-per-cent tax increase on a single mother earning $27,600 a year.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Foster: The Deputy Prime Minister has—

Mr. Keeper: That is a distorted report.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. I am sure the House would like to hear what the Hon. Member for Algoma has to say.

Mr. Foster: Madam Speaker, I think the debate so far has indicated that the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) does in fact have a task force or team working in the NRC building in Winnipeg. I think it is really sad, when we have a research laboratory set up there, that we have filled it with a bunch of bureaucrats. I do not mind the bureaucrats working to develop a western diversification program. However, to take up the space which is supposed to be filled by NRC researchers, is really a waste of the NRC's ability and capacity. The Minister should get that lab working on high-tech and doing the things for which it was designed rather than have it simply populated by a group of bureaucrats.

When the Minister does announce his western diversification program, which, as he indicated a few weeks ago in The Western Producer, he would be announcing some time later this spring, would he restore the full $2 billion which was cut from the DRIE budget per year so that this proper western diversification can take place, as well as diversification in other areas?

I have two quick questions relating to the whole oil industry. Why did the Deputy Prime Minister not provide the loan guarantee which was asked for by Syncrude on a 50-50 basis with the Alberta Government? And can the Deputy Prime Minister tell us why the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) did not provide in the Budget the earned depletion allowance which groups like IPAC indicated would have a net cost of some $60 million, would create some 20,000 jobs, and would provide an extra 2,000 wells of employment and production this year? Could the Deputy Prime Minister clarify to western Canadians and to Members of this House why the Government declined to support those two desperately needed projects?

Mr. Mazankowski: Madam Speaker, I have a lot of respect for the Hon. Member opposite. He and I came to the House at the same time. He is smart enough and a good enough politician not to have to borrow the claptrap from the New Democratic Party to pose a question.

I will tell him again that there is no Western Diversification Office in Winnipeg writing a policy for western economic diversification. I will tell the Hon. Member where the policy is being written. It is being written in my office with the help of DRIE and other officials, and essentially in consultation with western Members of Parliament. Members opposite can continue to talk all they want. Whatever western diversification plan comes forward will certainly not come from that office, I can tell them that right now.

With regard to Syncrude, first, the Hon. Member should know that Syncrude never asked the federal Government to participate. It was the provincial Government which asked the federal Government to participate. There was considerable federal participation in the Syncrude project heretofore. There is another phase of the Syncrude project coming on later and there was a clear indication they would be interested in federal Government assistance on the further phase.

Another reason is the fact that this would have only assisted that particular project, and it was deemed very important, as the Hon. Member indicated in his third question, to address the issues of the conventional oil industry, the need to have further exploration and development and additional equity investment so that that development could go on. It was in that context that we set out to work with the industry and with the provincial Government to try to come up with a package which would serve to revitalize the energy sector both in the interests of Alberta and in the national interests from the standpoint of having adequate supply and security of supply, plus the creation of many jobs, as the Hon. Member has indicated.

Mr. Shields: Madam Speaker, as the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) is aware, of course, the national energy policy which was imposed on western Canada and on the resources of western Canada by the Liberal Party, and supported wholeheartedly and up front by the New Democratic Party, created a tragic period of wasted human resources and missed opportunities for harnessing our energy wealth. The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) will also know that on January 30 the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) called together all the Ministers of Energy across the country to sit down and talk. I wonder if the Deputy Prime Minister would like to comment on those two facts?

Mr. Mazankowski: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to reiterate the very severe damage which was inflicted upon western Canada at the hands of the Liberals and New Democrats who imposed the National Energy Program. There was not one tax, there were several taxes; the natural gas and gas liquids tax, the incremental oil revenue tax, the petroleum and gas revenue tax, the petroleum compensation charge, the export tax and the Canadian ownership service charge, all of which raided the energy sector of western Canada to the tune of $4.5 billion to $5 billion a year. We are not raiding the industry any more, we are helping it, and we will continue to help it so it will be able to provide the kind of supply necessary for Canadians and generate the kind of jobs which are necessary.

The Western Accord which was put together clearly was put together with the blessing of the producing provinces, and, indeed, the industry. The dramatic decline in prices forces us back to do something more, and we are, we have, and we will.

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, I would like to address particularly the neglect of the forest industry by this Government and, of course, since I come from British Columbia, I am particularly concerned about the consequences of that neglect.

The Minister who just spoke said that most of the promises had been carried out, including forestry. I do not know what he had in mind. As I look at the promises, I see that on July 5, 1984 the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said in Prince Albert that a Conservative Government would "recognize the overwhelming economic importance of the forest industry". In their election handbook and in other speeches which the Prime Minister gave, they promised to "establish a new department of forestry at the federal level". We all cheered that because we thought, considering that this was Canada's largest export and the importance it had for all exports, that the neglect of the forest industry by previous Governments would at last be redressed. One of the most important ways in which it could be redressed would be to have a line department, not just a Minister of State, in Ottawa which would have as its full responsibility the development of the forest industry, silviculture, reforestation, and forest management in Canada.

We have been waiting since 1984 for a full department of forestry to be developed. All we got was a Minister of State for Forestry who has no real clout either in Cabinet, because he does not have a full department, or in the country. Indeed, the role he might have played on behalf of forestry has been even further diminished by the fact that he is also Minister of State for Mines. He has a dual role, and the mining industry is in about as bad a shape as the forest industry and probably needs fuller attention from the federal Government than it has been given. When the Government talks about having carried out its election promises, including the forestry field, I must ask why we still do not have a full-fledged department of forestry at the federal level.

The reports we have been receiving recently on the forest industry particularly in British Columbia are alarming, to put it mildly. I should like to refer to the most recent report a couple of months ago of the forest economics and policy analysis project of the University of British Columbia under Peter Pearse and written by Sten Nilsson. He pointed out in the report that unless immediate steps were taken to revitalize the forest industry, B.C. was 15 years away from an economic disaster. The report warned that there would be few, if any, plywood mills in the province and that the production of lumber, pulp, and newsprint would decline seriously. It also indicated that nearly 7,000 more direct jobs would disappear, that is, on top of the 17,000 or more direct jobs which have already disappeared in the forest industry.

He also pointed out in the study that the annual volume of timber available in B.C., which is now about 75 million cubic metres, would decline to 67 million cubic metres and, even with productivity improvements, it would mean a 5 per cent to 10 per cent decline in pulp and a 5 per cent drop in lumber. The report went on to indicate that the timber volume could dip as low as 44 million cubic metres with catastrophic results.

As I mentioned a moment ago, the report indicated that most plywood plants in B.C. would close by the year 2000, and that a switch from bulk commodity products to greater value added products was necessary. However, we see very little movement in that direction.

Most significant of all is that the report indicates that the industry needs to invest $35 billion by the year 2000 in reforestation and modernization but that it "cannot generate sufficient capital". This is perhaps the most serious component in the picture of the B.C. forest industry.

I mentioned a moment ago the unemployment which has already taken place in the forest industry and that the UBC report projected that it would continue at an accelerating rate. Returning for a moment to the promises of the Government, it promised jobs, jobs, jobs. I assume that meant jobs in western Canada and in eastern Canada—indeed, in all parts of Canada. It is absolutely incredible that the unemployment rate in British Columbia is now running at 13.3 per cent, seasonally adjusted, as opposed to a national average of 9.6 per cent.

Let us look at some of the areas of the province in detail. We see that unemployment is running at about 18 per cent in the Kootenays; at about 17 per cent to 18 per cent in the interior, in the Okanagan and Kamloops; at over 12 per cent on Vancouver Island; at 14 per cent in Prince George and the northern interior; and, perhaps one of the most amazing statistics of all, at 14 per cent in the lower mainland, greater Vancouver. In fact, in February of this year it was 14.3 per cent, the highest unemployment in any major metropolitan centre. Youth unemployment in British Columbia is running at 22 per cent. There have not been jobs, jobs, jobs.

Some of us at least hoped that as a result of the federal Government's export tax on softwood lumber in the deal worked out with American lumber producers, a deal we questioned very much at the time, the revenue, which in the case of B.C. would amount to between $360 million and $400 million per year, would go into silviculture, reforestation, and the adjustment needs of workers. We hoped that it would be at last a shot in the arm to the forest industry. The Government, in the creation of the Canada-B.C. Forest Resource Development Agreement, will actually pump in $18 million this year, which will be matched by B.C. When we saw what would be the results of the federal export tax on softwood lumber in revenues, it seemed to many of us on this side of the House that at last some genuine effort could be or would be made to see to the redevelopment of the forest industry.

It was extremely disappointing, as I stated on Friday in the House, to discover that the British Columbia Government was putting only $36 million in new money into silviculture, reforestation, and so on. I know that it has been indicated in the Budget and in some of the speeches of the B.C. Minister of Finance that the amount is $54 million. As I mentioned, $18 million of that is the part that would automatically be going into forestry under the Canada-B.C. Forest Resource Development Agreement—that $18 million is not new money that could have come out of the federal export tax—leaving only $36 million. Yet, as I say, the export tax on softwood will bring somewhere between $360 million and $400 million. No wonder the British Columbia Government was able to cut its deficit. It simply put what we firmly believe are federal moneys, it is a federal tax, into general revenues in order to do other things and reduce the deficit. The response to this activity by the Socred Government from the forest industry itself has been extremely critical.

• (1600)

In last Friday's Vancouver Sun we find:—

> Spokesmen for both management and labour said they are "disappointed" that more revenue from the $350 million tax on softwood lumber exports to the U.S. is not going directly into silviculture.
> The harshest critic of the reforestation plan was International Woodworkers of America Regional President Jack Munro, who said the provincial Government has failed to live up to its responsibility to B.C.'s primary engine of economic growth.
> "There could be all kinds of jobs in the forest industry, not just silviculture and reforestation, but secondary industries, manufacturing, products that haven't even been thought of yet," Munro said.
> He said the revenues earned from the lumber-export tax should have been invested more heavily in the forest industry.
> "We don't have enough nurseries, we don't have enough trees, and in the nurseries we do have they're shutting down," Munro said.
> Mike Apsey, president of the Council of Forest Industries of B.C., also expressed regret the provincial Government did not commit more funds from the exports revenue to reforestation.
> "If there is a disappointment, that's it," Apsey said. "All of the forestry community in this province has been recommending some sort of fund be set up into which the export tax proceeds would be put."
> Art Gruntman, vice-president of the Canadian Paperworkers Union said putting most of the $350 million into general revenue instead of reforestation is "utterly and totally wrong."
> I think the people of B.C. have the right to expect that the major part of the export tax money be put into reforestation because it has got to be done. We are running out of trees."

The point in quoting these sources in the forest industry, Madam Speaker, is that they say they expect to see a large part, if not all, of the revenues from the export tax on softwood going into the forest industry. That was certainly the expectation of the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) who herself, on February 5, referred to British Columbia as a silvicultural slum. Surely it you want to remedy the situation, if you want to see a development in forestry and if you want to try to curb the growth of unemployment in the forest industry sector, then you, the federal Government, when federal money is going into the province, should have required some performance guarantee. The federal Government should have at least said in a written agreement with the province, and with the other provinces as well that receive revenues from the export tax, that x amount of money will go to the forest industry.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister said on Friday that that would be dictating. The federal Government, when it is spending federal moneys, whether in health care or, in the old days, in post-secondary education, sets guidelines for the expenditure by the provinces of those moneys. I do not hear people objecting and saying that this is dictating if it is in the field of health care, which presumably, according to the BNA Act, is a field of provincial jurisdiction. Yet somehow or other the Conservative Party is saying, "You cannot have some kind of performance guarantee on the expenditure of revenues from a federal export tax". That is absolutely ridiculous, Madam Speaker. As I said on Friday, the Prime Minister has been conned, taken, by Premier Vander Zalm who is laughing all the way to the bank as he uses these moneys for other purposes or to cut his deficit.

I am reminded very much of the comparable situation in post-secondary education. Hon. Members well know that until the Liberal Government, supported by the Tory Opposition, changed the rules a decade ago, the moneys sent from the federal Government to the provincial Governments for post-secondary education under the fiscal arrangements Act had to be spent on post-secondary education. Since then the provinces can spend that money any way they please.

Mr. Blenkarn: Not really.

Ms. Jewett: Pretty well. Indeed, in the case of British Columbia—

Mr. Blenkarn: There was an amendment to the statute, remember?

Ms. Jewett: I will come to the amendment in a moment. The amendment simply states that there has to be tabled in the House—

Mr. Blenkarn: Correct.

Ms. Jewett: I was here and voted for the amendment. There has to be a tabling in the House of the ways in which the money is expended, simply a tabling. We had a further amendment which required that the money be spent for the purposes intended. The federal Government is giving up responsibility, except in the field of health and a few others, for ensuring that federal moneys are spent, at least to a substantial extent, for the purposes intended. That is exactly what should have been done. I do not think it is too late yet to do it. There will be further revenues from the export tax before it is converted into stumpage or whatever other arrangements are made, but I do not really see much chance of the federal Government doing that. That and what it would have done to have helped the forest industry would have been extremely significant not only in British Columbia but in Canada. As I said a moment ago, we get more export dollars from this resource than from any other single resource. It would have also helped to diversify the economy, which the Minister says is one of the goals of the federal Government.

All kinds of secondary industries can develop if we have a strong forestry policy. As Jack Munro pointed out himself:

> There could be all kinds of jobs in the forest industry, not just silviculture and reforestation, but secondary industries, manufacturing, products that haven't even been thought of yet.

The Government talks a great deal about diversifying, but in fact it has done nothing that I can see nor frankly does it even claim to have done anything to help both the growth of the basic resource in British Columbia and the diversification of that resource.

I had hoped to have a few minutes to elaborate on other topics. Perhaps I could just mention the way in which the federal Government is handling the Canada Employment Centres. It is cutting back on staffing of those centres at the very time when unemployment itself is growing. I will find a later occasion to discuss that in more detail.

Mr. Crofton: Madam Speaker, I listened with some interest to the comments of the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett). She began her remarks by saying that the federal Government had failed to address the needs of the forest industry in British Columbia. She did not bother to include in her opening remarks that her Party aided and abetted the former administration which raped the Treasury of Canada, picked the pockets of all Canadians and left the new Government with an extremely serious financial mess with which to deal. In my mind, it is very regrettable that members of the NDP simply cannot bring themselves to function in the real world.

The Hon. Member observed that we had not established a full forestry ministry. I share her regret that indeed we have not achieved that goal, but we have created the Department of the Minister of State for Forestry, a quantum leap ahead from what we had in the past.

The Government worked very hard at negotiating with the Province of British Columbia a $300 million ERDA agreement on forestry. I do not recall members of her Party saying anything complimentary about that. Again, it was a quantum step ahead in addressing the serious needs of the forest industry in B.C.

In particular, I would like to comment on the 15 per cent export tax which is returning some $600 million a year to Canada, $600 million a year that would not be coming to Canada if members of the NDP had had their way in the debate. They fought the agreement tooth and nail and spoke against it. It would seem that they would have preferred to see the $600 million paid into the treasury of the United States. Is the Hon. Member now saying that it was a good idea? She certainly had a lot to say about how that money should be spent, money that we would not have had, had her Party had its way.

Ms. Jewett: Madam Speaker, is the Hon. Member saying that the money should be spent in any way British Columbia wants to spend it? That is the real question. It is a federal export tax and the Hon. Member apparently thinks that a federal export tax on softwood lumber can or should be used in any way possible except for silviculture and reforestation. He is certainly contradicting the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) who said on three separate occasions that it was the full expectation that a large part of the moneys would be spent on silviculture and reforestation. I suppose the Hon. Member is trying to make the argument that this does not really matter, the Tories do not really care how the money is spent, let Premier Vander Zalm do what he wants with it. That seems to me to be what the Hon. Member is saying.

Mr. St. Germain: Madam Speaker, it really surprises me that the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam

(Ms. Jewett) wants virtually to usurp the powers and authorities vested in the provinces of Canada. There is no way that anyone would not advocate protecting our forests and maintaining a high level of silviculture and reforestation in British Columbia. However, the Hon. Member has tried to make Canadians believe that they are the protectors of the forest industry. In the COFI report on Bill C-18 and Bill C-19, there is a situation to which I would like the Hon. Member to respond if she can.

On January 29, 1987, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) spoke on joint line rates, something which would be beneficial to all forest companies and would allow them to find much more competitive rates for shipping lumber anywhere in North America. At that time, the Hon. Member quoted the exact words of Mr. R. S. Allison, CP Rail's President, to the 30th Annual Traffic Transportation Conference, virtually speaking against the mandated joint line rates which would reduce the transportation costs to the forest industry considerably. I hope I have made my question quite plain. I would like the Hon. Member to let us know if she is on the side of the forest industry or if she is on the side of giant corporations like CP Rail. I think it is important that Canadians understand where the NDP stand on issues as important as this one is to the forest industry in British Columbia.

Ms. Jewett: Madam Speaker, the Tories are very funny. When they find that we are quoting a union leader, they engage in union bashing and NDP bashing and say that the NDP is being dictated to by the unions. Then when a union leader takes a position different from that of the NDP, as was the case on what we regard as being the sell-out on softwood lumber, then they blast away at us because we in the federal House of Commons are taking a position different from that of union leaders. That defeats their whole argument that we are always in lock-step with the unions. Then when an Hon. Member says that he thought something said in a speech by the President of the CP was worth repeating in the House, we get lambasted because we are supposed to be anti-corporation. I wish the Tories would make up their minds on this and would not engage in such stereotyping.

Mr. St. Germain: Answer the question, Pauline.

Ms. Jewett: You can ask the Hon. Member later today, Gerry. He will be speaking. You ask him why he quoted the President of CP instead of giving us all this garbage because we do not fit into your stereotypes.

Returning to the first part of the Hon. Member's question, perhaps he would rise and explain why it is that Tories allow all kinds of guidelines under the national health Act for the expenditure of federal funds. Why did they not say that that is dictating to the provinces? I do not think they ever said that.

Mr. Crofton: He didn't.

Ms. Jewett: I know, but he prefaced his remark on that. Turning to the ERDA agreement, in response to the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Saanich (Mr. Crofton), I did mention that agreement and said that it was a good one. It is just that there is hardly any money in it.

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, I was wondering if we could hear the New Democratic Party's policy on taxation of provincial resources when those provincial resources are exported. The Hon. Member will know that this particular tax with respect to softwood lumber is collected by the federal Government and, as trustee for the provinces, the federal Government distributes that money back to the provinces from whence the tax came. Is it the policy of the New Democratic Party that the federal Government has the right to levy export taxes on raw resources and to keep that revenue for its own purposes?

Ms. Jewett: Madam Speaker, my position is exactly that of the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney). She is away right now, but I know that she is absolutely furious and believes that Premier Vander Zalm has acted in bad faith in his handling of these revenues.

• (1620)

Mr. Shields: Madam Speaker, I have three very short and quick questions for the Hon. Member. Did she support the National Energy Program and does she believe it was beneficial to western Canada? Does she believe that Imperial Oil should have been nationalized? Did she agree with the theft involved in the back-in provision of the NEP? Just answer those questions without rhetoric.

Ms. Jewett: You know I am incapable of rhetoric.

On the first question, we voted against the NEP.

Mr. Nystrom: It is on the record, Jack.

Ms. Jewett: It is on the record.

Mr. Shields: Listen to that!

Ms. Jewett: He asked me to answer the question and I answered his first question.

Mr. Shields: Look at the debates.

Ms. Jewett: I will wait until he checks the facts before I answer the rest of his questions.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time for questions and comments has now expired. Resuming debate.

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Madam Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity to speak in response to the motion of my friend from Yorkton—Melville. The motion condemns the Government for its lack of what he calls a long-term economic development strategy for western Canada. Perhaps the Hon. Member should consult his constituents as to whether they condemn a Government which dismantled the much hated National Energy Program of the previous Government, removed the PGRT, and abolished the universally unpopular Foreign Investment Review Act. The Government has launched as well trade negotiations with the U.S. which stand to benefit western Canada. This Government does indeed have in place a long-term economic development strategy for western Canada. That strategy is based on the principle that the economic health of western Canada, as does the rest of the country, depends on private sector led initiatives.

For this Government regional economic development stands at the centre of economic policy. We regard it as part of the process of building a greater, more cohesive pan-Canadian community. It is no less an exercise in nation-building in this century than was the construction of the railways in the last century. We will all remember that only a week ago in this House the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) underscored the role that regional development plays in the economic thinking of this Government. He warned against the danger of building two Canadas, one which is rich and promising and one which is underdeveloped and underemployed. He went on to speak about the need for building one Canada where fairness and equality of opportunity for all would prevail.

The basic principles of that policy were enunciated in the Throne Speech of October, 1986. That speech called for new approaches which would build on the human and natural resources strength of the regions and which would show greater sensitivity to local conditions and opportunities. In a very few words those are the corner-stones of our new directions in regional development policy.

I am pleased to note that the New Democratic Party, in its March, 1987, convention in Montreal seems to have endorsed this approach. It approved a shifting of priority for regional development away from a complete reliance on investment from outside the regions to a more self-reliant approach emphasizing the application of human and physical capital already in less developed regions. I appreciate the NDP support for our policy.

The type of assistance the federal Government provides to assist these aims can take many forms. That is why we provided, for example, $263 million of federal support to Expo 86, for example. That is why as well the Government is providing one-third support to the $50 million Yellowhead Highway upgrading program. Let us talk now about specifics and the instruments we have available to deliver these regional programs.

First, the Government has in place a very effective instrument for economic development in the western provinces in our ERDA agreements which we negotiate with the provincial Governments. The ERDAs allow for agreed approaches to priority areas pertaining to the provinces. Each ERDA outlines a broad development strategy and priorities for action. The agreement forms the framework for the development of specific subsidiary agreements tailored to the needs of each region. Since September, 1984, my Department has committed $308 million under 16 subsidiary agreements with the western provinces, and a further $93 million under agreements that were part of the previous agreement system.

In Manitoba for example, Madam Speaker, subsidiary agreements have been concluded with respect to the development of an urban bus transit system, the launching of a tourism initiative, an another project for downtown Winnipeg, as my colleague would know. Similar agreements with Saskatchewan will pave the way for new technological industries and their rapid expansion. By the same token, Madam Speaker, this will promote the tourism industry in the province and boost economic development in northern Saskatchewan.

In addition, last year in Alberta for instance, we signed a few agreements concerning science and technology, native people, economic development, and transport. The Department shares the cost of a number of tourism, farm technology, and northern development subsidiary agreements. In British Columbia, several such agreements are aimed at promoting tourism, industry and small business. Regional and economic development agreements are the key to future growth. But, Madam Speaker, they are not the only program designed to improve western diversification and economic expansion. The main objective of this program is to promote industrial and regional development through private sector projects designed for just such expansion. The industries and new technologies which stand a very good chance of becoming profitable are also included in these projects so that we may be able to guarantee the sustained development of a region while at the same time remaining competitive on international markets.

[English]

The program responds specifically to the needs of the small and medium-sized businesses and compliments other federal programs. Since September, 1984, assistance has been authorized of close to $100 million for some 470 projects in western Canada. More than 63 per cent of this assistance as well was authorized for innovation, expansion and modernization projects. Then there is the Western Transportation Industrial Development Program. This program was specifically tailored to the four western provinces to provide assistance for firms in the manufacturing, processing and other related industries so that they might take advantage of opportunities presented by changes in freight rate legislation.

It was under our Government that we expanded the benefit of this program to assist Alberta. Since September, 1984, as well, 161 authorizations have been made under this program representing $29 million in assistance.

Under the Small Businesses Loans Act, since the beginning of 1984, nearly 24,000 business enterprises have been assisted in the western provinces to obtain term loans to a total of about $670 million. These small businesses have access to term loans at better rates for acquisition and modernization of equipment and buildings. They are engaged in manufacturing, wholesale trades, retail, services, construction, transportation and communication. Also, since 1984 the Federal Business Development Bank has provided term loans to western Canada, as it did to eastern Canada, in response to the question of my colleague, to promote and assist in the establishment and development of fitness enterprises.

The list goes on. The very popular special Agricultural and Rural Development Act program has provided $54 million in assistance for western Canada since September, 1984, primarily to native and native-related initiatives. The Native Economic Development Program has provided another $47 million to native peoples' business initiatives. The Government is fully committed to helping native people in Canada achieve economic self-reliance and will make this program as effective as possible to help realize this objective.

Recently announced improvements to the native program include widening program criteria to enable primary resource businesses to qualify for assistance, broadening program support for community economic development activity, improving program accessibility and delivery, creating new flexibility for individual applicants, and extending the deadlines for applications by one year to March 31, 1989. These are not just statistics, Madam Speaker. These funds are being provided to support dynamic, exciting initiatives.

I have mentioned these federal initiatives because I want to underscore the broad policy and program directions that the Government has set in terms of encouraging the kind of local entrepreneurship that is needed to promote regional self-reliance. The Government will continue to use the traditional tools of development that have worked. There is clearly a need to continue to strengthen the resource base and to ensure as well that the necessary infrastructure for development is in place. This is reflected in the approach the Government has taken with initiatives under the economic and regional development agreements with the provinces.

The Government is also sensitive to the changes which have taken place in the West. For this reason I have agreed to review our programs and ensure that they are regionally sensitive. In the West this will mean focusing on diversifying the resource base that exists. A perfect example would be the recent signing of a Memorandum of Understanding with the Province of British Columbia on the Pacific Centre for Trade, Commerce and Travel. This MOU will allow the two Governments to co-ordinate initiatives to enhance British Columbia's future economic development.

These include encouraging the growth of international banking and other financial services in Vancouver, co-ordinating transportation improvements, enhancing trade-related services and opportunities in those professional and technical services where British Columbians have developed significant expertise. The MOU will also improve the co-ordination of marketing and promotion of British Columbia as a tourist destination. This is only a sample of long-term economic planning which the Government believes in.

Partnership in development is essential if we are to succeed in strengthening the ability of all our regions to meet the challenges and opportunities of the emerging world economy. Aggressive international competition in resource and traditional manufacturing industries represents one such challenge. Rapid growth in services and knowledge-intensive industries represent new opportunities. The development efforts required to enhance the productivity of our traditional wealth-generating industries and to foster these skills and knowledge necessary to capture the new opportunities can only be undertaken in close co-operation with the provinces. Their jurisdictional responsibilities for resource management and many facets of social policy mean that the provinces have a key role to play in the development effort.

I have launched a joint review with my provincial counterparts to determine what direction our future collaborative approach to regional development should take where joint programs exist. Provincial Ministers and I will be looking for realistic and practical ways to engage the Canadian people of all regions in their economic development. I am optimistic about our prospects for arriving at a consensus about what needs to be done and how to develop initiatives that are sensitive to the unique circumstances of each region.

The Government's broad directions have been set. Other initiatives announced in last fall's Throne Speech, specifically the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and western diversification, will also reflect these broad directions. As was stated in the Speech from the Throne, the Government is convinced many positive proposals for new policy initiatives will come from those who live and work in the regions concerned.

Those words sum up my message today, Madam Speaker. This is not a Government which believes in made-in-Ottawa solutions. Ultimately the solutions have to be found in the regions and in the spirit of self-reliance and initiative of the Canadian people.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Nystrom:

That this House condemns the government for its lack of a long term economic development strategy for Western Canada that would, among other things,

(1) address the severe hardships being faced by the agricultural sector, especially as it relates to depressed grain prices, which have devasted the farm community;

(2) deal effectively with the problems of the forest industry and in particular, the need to conserve and manage the forest resource for future generations;

(3) come to terms with the need for realistic and pragmatic policies to revive the energy sector, whose decline has created such hardships for average Albertans;

(4) commit the government to pursuing policies that would assist in the economic diversification of the economy and the growth of secondary manufacturing;

and that the lack of such commitments by the government to Western Canada will result in a continuation of the unacceptably high levels of unemployment and economic hardship suffered by the people of Western Canada.

Mr. Gagliano: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté) a question about the speech he made this afternoon in the House, and more specifically about the Small Businesses Loans Act. The Minister praised his Government for its decision to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act. Since the spring of 1985, to be eligible under the Act which before . . . the Government guaranteed 100 per cent of the loan, while today, the Government only guarantees 85 per cent and the banks have to guarantee the difference, in other words, 15 per cent. Of course, there is the 1 per cent to be paid initially, 1 per cent of the total amount of the loan, which is a kind of loan insurance in the event the person or business that applied for the loan is unable to meet payments.

I have no quarrel with the 1 per cent which seems entirely reasonable as a guarantee. However, during the debate on the Bill to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act, I strongly objected to the fact that once the Act was amended, it could not be effective immediately. In fact, we have had feedback from a number of chartered banks who take part in this program and who are not longer interested in giving these loans because they have problems applying the Act as such and the amendment makes it harder because of the 15 per cent, and so some banks have decided not to recommend this kind of loan to their clients. Could the Minister therefore inform the House today what the situation is and whether these reports are true? Does he intend to propose an amendment to make the legislation effective, so that the banks can implement a program that, as we all know, has met with encouraging success in the past?

Mr. Côté (Langelier): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his interest in the matter. It so happens that the various policies of the Federal Development Bank are currently under review, as he knows.

There has been a series of rather exhaustive consultations in that area for a number of months now.

It stands to reason that since it is anxiously trying to equalize those regional disparities, the Government must use the available tools to try and maximize the economic spin-offs and benefits of the policies it is putting in place.

To this date, the Federal Development Bank has been intensively involved in making sure that available programs are provided.

We are sure the FDB's new direction—and I can reassure the Hon. Member on that point—as well as the many changes that will take place not only with respect to regional development initiatives but in co-ordination with them, and the nature of the FDB's new policies will be such as to increase such use of the FDB by small businesses, thereby promoting and helping with regional development.

Mr. Gagliano: A supplementary, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Since several members have risen, I will then have to recognize other members.

The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

[English]

Mr. Nystrom: I thank the Minister for his remarks. I know that he is a very forthright and frank minister so I will ask him about the Western Diversification Office. The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) was not too forthcoming with the House on this question.

I have a list of employees of the Western Diversification Office. It is not my list or an NDP list, it came in a brown envelope that has been circulated around the bureaucracy. I have phone numbers, addresses and positions. As far as I know, all or most of them were employees of the Minister, at least until the end of last week. Will the Minister tell me what his employees are doing?

For example, I know that Mr. Anthony Reynolds is a very important person in the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion in Manitoba. I know that John Blackwood, at least until the end of last week, is a very important person in DRIE in Manitoba. If you call some of these numbers, the response is: "Department of Regional Industrial Expansion". Will the Minister level with the House and tell us about the Western Diversification Office that is in the National Research Council building in Winnipeg on Ellice Avenue? Will he tell us the purpose of that office and describe its objectives? Does it have a budget? Will he tell us what is happening in his own Department?

Mr. Côté (Langelier): Madam Speaker, there is nothing going on. As a matter of fact, the Member knows that we have an office in Winnipeg. Officials there are trying to do their best. Some of them work on different initiatives. I have more than 2,500 people in different offices all over Canada. I do not know what each of them is doing on a daily basis.

In order to develop a western diversification policy, or make changes, some people may, at certain times, devote time to prepare some documentation for the Department on that aspect. I would not say that there is a Western Diversification Office, per se.

Mrs. Collins: Madam Speaker, I was very pleased to hear the Minister say that there cannot be made-in-Ottawa solutions to meet the needs of the western economy. I fully agree with that.

One very interesting example is the Memorandum of Understanding which the Minister signed with his provincial counterpart, the Honourable Grace McCarthy.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. It is very difficult for the Chair to hear what the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) is saying. I am sure the Minister is having the same problem. I imagine he would like to hear what the member is saying, if he is expected to answer. The Member for Capilano has the floor, hoping that her colleagues will give her the courtesy of listening.

Mrs. Collins: Madam Speaker, I am sure my colleagues will want to hear this. The Memorandum of Understanding designates British Columbia as a Pacific Centre for Trade, Commerce and Travel. I hope to have an opportunity to speak about this at greater length today, if time permits. It will provide the private sector with that opportunity to co-operate with the federal and provincial Governments.

There is great enthusiasm. Some ideas that are already being explored include the devolution of the Vancouver Airport, the development of the international banking centre, and the emphasis in the tourism area.

My question concerns tourism. In 1986, $2.9 billion came into British Columbia through the tourism industry, which is the second largest industry in the province. The Cruise ship terminal at Vancouver Place, to which the federal Government provided $26 million, accommodated 350,000 visitors last year. There is much potential there as well.

A number of us who have studied the current tourism sub-agreement between the federal and provincial Governments and the potential for growth in the tourism industry in British Columbia see the need for perhaps a greater emphasis on some areas of the province which have not yet been designated as major destination points. With some assistance they could become those major destination points. Perhaps the emphasis should be more on helping to develop the infrastructure and letting the private sector bring in the capital, whether it is offshore or within Canada, to build the facilities. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon), is interested in the Sydney breakwater and other colleagues are interested in other infrastructure capabilities.

Is the Minister prepared to discuss this with his provincial colleagues so that we can develop the tourism potential in British Columbia to the greatest possible extent? It is indeed western diversification.

Mr. Côté (Langelier): Madam Speaker, it would seem important to me to emphasize first of all that 1986 has been a somewhat exceptional year for the tourist industry in Canada. This is due to a large extent to Expo '86 in beautiful British Columbia, and I know that my honourable friend has been particularly involved in the various activities which took place in that part of the country.

Madam Speaker, the House is aware of the great impact the tourist industry has on our economy. The tourist industry generates a little over $20 billion and is responsible for the creation of over 675,000 jobs. It is clear, therefore, when considering the possibility of setting up or extending tourism agreements with some provinces, to consider certain facts. Madam Speaker, I would be pleased to discuss with my provincial counterparts new initiatives and opportunities which could be taken both by the federal and provincial Governments, to enhance the tourist industry in some areas of this country where it generates such vital economic renewal.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Madam Speaker, the motion before us today asks the House to condemn the Government for its lack of a long-term economic development strategy for western Canada that would, among other things, address the problems of agriculture, forestry, energy and economic diversification in the West. The motion goes on to state that the lack of such commitments by the Government will result in unacceptably high levels of unemployment. It is in that respect that I am participating in this debate as the employment critic for the Official Opposition. I ask the House to look more closely at the unemployment figures for western Canada and, in particular, the figures for Alberta and British Columbia.

In January, 1987, the last date for which I have the figure for Alberta, although I guess there is one out for February, the unemployment rate was 10.8 per cent. That is the highest monthly figure for unemployment in Alberta since January, 1985. I remind the House that we are a full three years out of the recession of 1982 and 1983. Coming out of that recession the Province of Alberta reached a low rate of unemployment in February of 1986 of 8.4 per cent. However, since that time the unemployment rate has continually increased until it is now at 10.8 per cent, and there is no sign of it declining.

We have heard some harsh remarks from members opposite with respect to the record of Liberal Governments, the National Energy Program and so on. Let us look at the unemployment rates for Alberta under Liberal Governments and, in part, under the National Energy Program. In the period 1975 to 1980, the rate of unemployment was 4.15 per cent, with a low rate of 3.7 per cent in 1980. Even in 1981, the rate was 3.8 per cent. I remind Hon. Members that the National Energy Program was brought in in 1980. In 1982, the unemployment rate was 7.7 per cent. Of course in 1983, with the recession, the rate increased to 10.8 per cent. But it increased in all provinces at that time. Not only did it increase in all provinces, it increased throughout the western world.

I am amused when members of the Government compare the national rate of unemployment, which is now 9.6 per cent, with the highest rate during the recession, which was a little over 11 per cent, instead of comparing it with the average rate during the 1960s and the 1970s. Under Liberal Governments from 1965 to 1980 the average rate of unemployment in all of Canada was 5.6 per cent. In 1981, the year before the recession, the rate was 7.5 per cent. It then leapt up in 1982 and 1983. However, we are now three years out of the recession and the rate is still 10.8 per cent in Alberta. In January the unemployment rate in British Columbia was 13.6 per cent. In February it was 13.3 per cent. Again, the rate declined to 12 per cent in mid-1986 coming out of the recession as Expo was being constructed in Vancouver. Even that was not a good rate considering that at that time we were supposed to be out of the recession.

Where are the jobs that the Government promised to create? They are principally in the Province of Ontario, more particularly in the southern part of Ontario. I now read from a report in The Globe and Mail for February 28 which states:

> Despite the federal Government's assurances that economic renewal is working for all Canadians, more than 95 per cent of the additional jobs created last year were located in one province—Ontario.
> Between January, 1986, and January of this year, the total number of jobs in the country rose by 137,000, according to unadjusted figures. But only 5,000 of those jobs were created outside Ontario.

This points to very grave problems in terms of regional disparity and grave problems in western Canada. It also points to the fact that not much effort has been made on the part of the Government to do anything about it.

In case Hon. Members might think that what I am saying is simply opposition rhetoric or negativity, let me quote what Albertans have been saying. The Premier of Alberta, which has a Conservative Government, has been hustling with the federal Government here in Ottawa, which is also a Conservative Government, for months now to do something about the depressed resource, agricultural and energy prices in the province and to help the industry. An article in The Toronto Star in this vein states:

> The premier said he warned Prime Minister Brian Mulroney and Deputy Prime Minister Don Mazankowski during recent trade talks that time is running out for the financially-strapped industry, which has been hard hit by low world oil prices.

I now refer to an article in the Calgary Herald of February 27 under the headline "Albertans worried about jobs" which states:

> Unemployment and the poor state of the economy are the major concerns of Albertans still in shock after a year of low oil prices and a continuing agriculture slump, according to an Angus Reid poll commissioned by the Herald.

I have many other quotations from people in Alberta, people who are not Liberals and who are non-political but who are critical of the attitude taken by the Government as a result of the situation in that province. It is resulting in serious matters for the Unemployment Insurance Commission and for welfare spending in Alberta. An article from The Edmonton Journal of February 27 states that there has been a 22 per cent increase in welfare cases which has forced the Alberta Cabinet to approve $35 million in social allowance payments for the beleaguered social services department.

The situation is even worse in British Columbia where there is over 13 per cent unemployment. While this is the situation in the Provinces of Alberta and British Columbia, and also in eastern Canada, the only place where we really have full employment, or something approaching it, is in the Golden Horseshoe around Toronto and southern Ontario. What is the attitude of the Government while this is happening?

Let us look at what it has been doing with its budgets with respect to job creation and job training. In 1984-85, the budget for job creation and training was $2.2 billion. It has been steadily reduced under the Conservative Government each year since it took office to the extent that this year it is $1.7 billion. On the one hand we have concern expressed in speeches and in rhetoric by the Government that it is taking these matters seriously, while on the other hand it is reducing the moneys for training and retraining. Training is required for the diversification of the economy in the West. If someone has been in one type of work for years and years and has to go into a more diversified economy then one needs retraining. The Government is seriously cutting back the moneys available for such training. As I just pointed out, it is cutting back from $2.2 billion which it allotted in 1984-85 to $1.7 billion in 1987-88.

We just heard the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté) put before the House a number of projects that the Government is funding in western Canada. Well and good, but not enough. When are we going to return to those low rates of unemployment we experienced in the period to which I referred, from 1965 to 1980, an average of 5.6 per cent? In the envelope of the Government for spending in the area of economic and regional development, it has reduced the Budget by $3.3 billion or 25 per cent in the period from 1984 to 1987. That is a serious cut in moneys available to create infrastructure and to help develop the economies in those parts of the country where it is essential that something be done.

I am ready to admit as a Liberal that the acceptance of the Liberal Party in western Canada was not as good as we would have liked in recent years. There were years when it was better.

Mr. Kilgour: That is a concession.

Mr. Allmand: Well, it is a concession. I admit it. In this respect, I give credit to the Conservative Party which did not have any seats in Quebec save one before the last election. It tried hard to develop new policies and it won a certain amount of support in Quebec. However, the Liberal Party in western Canada, I can recall in the 1950s, 1960s and even in the 1970s, did have a good base of support. I want to tell westerners that we are now searching for new approaches and new policies which will help and better serve western Canada. We were pleased to have at our national policy convention in November here in Ottawa large delegations from the Provinces of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, because we do not in our small caucus have an opportunity to talk with westerners except for those in the Senate, and we adopted policies which I think will serve western Canada well.

Mr. Kilgour: What about an elected Senate?

Mr. Allmand: There were two resolutions for an elected Senate with equal representation from each province, one put forward by the Liberal Association of New Brunswick and another by the Liberal Party in Manitoba. Both those resolutions carried by wide margins in the Liberal Party. Let me say that in the last Parliament, before the election of 1984, we had a special joint committee of the House and the Senate to discuss and study Senate reform. I appeared before that committee and recommended an elected Senate with equal representation in all provinces. I did that as a representative from Quebec. I have come to realize, having been here for 22 years, that we will never have federal institutions which do justice to the regions of Canada which are less populated unless we have a Senate which is elected and which counterbalances the "rep by pop" principle in the House of Commons.

I think westerners realize that, unfortunately, they will continue to be short-changed as long as we have a federal legislative system where the overwhelming bulk of votes in this House are in the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec. If one Party gets together and gets those votes in Ontario and Quebec, it controls the country. The only way to counterbalance that sort of situation is to have an elected Senate as there is in the United States with an equal number of seats from each province so that we then counterbalance the strong populations in Ontario and Quebec with an upper house which is effective and can really represent the people in those provinces. I am committed to that kind of policy. We will then have policies coming out of the central Government which will more truly reflect and help all the regions of this country.

There were just two of the resolutions which were carried by the Liberal Party which were directed to the needs of the West. There were others dealing with full employment policies and with policies related to a western industrial strategy. A resolution was introduced by the Saskatchewan Liberal Association to the effect that we establish a western industrial strategy to develop secondary industries, particularly those related to the resource and agricultural industries, and to develop and support infrastructures to that end. There is more detail to it, but resolutions along those lines were also passed in the areas of energy, agriculture and other economic matters of interest to the West.

This motion states that the Government should be condemned for its lack of policy for the West, and I fully support that condemnation. The policy of the Government has been one of laissez-faire, if we let the private sector do it, the job will get done. The job is not getting done. The rate of unemployment is going up in Alberta and in British Columbia. It is still quite low in Saskatchewan and Manitoba, but both provinces have had a decline in their labour market which accounts for their continuing low rate. There has been a migration over the years from those two provinces but not to the same extent from Alberta and British Columbia. A policy of laissez-faire, let the private sector do it, will not work in Canada. It has never worked in Canada. What we require is a sound partnership with the private sector between Governments at all levels. I do not go to the extent of the New Democratic Party which would like to see a dominant role played by the Government. We have seen in this country under Liberal Governments over the years sound partnerships between the federal Government and provincial Governments with the private sector. Our country is so vast, with sparse population in many places and many regional problems, but when that partnership came together we had, as I pointed out, low rates of unemployment, high rates of growth and economic justice for Canadians in all parts of the country.

I support this motion. I believe that more can be done. I believe that instead of budgets being cut in the Department of Employment and Immigration, there should be an increase at this time, especially in those provinces where there are increasing rates of unemployment. Instead of cuts in the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion there should be increases. Some of the things mentioned by the Minister are good things, but that is not enough. More has to be done. We need more political will, more commitment from the Government, if those problems are going to be solved in the West as well as in the East.

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, the member doth protest too much, I think. He is now for an elected Senate. When was he converted to an elected Senate? When were the 70-odd Liberal—and I underline the word "odd"—Senators converted to an elected Senate? How are we ever going to get a Bill through that other place to bring in an elected Senate? The Hon. Member and I know that those people who are appointed to life, answerable to no one, accountable to no one, would block such a measure. Until he can rise in this House and tell us that the Liberal Senators have had a change of heart, I submit his position, although sincere, is not one which is reflected by his Party.

In fact, the elected members of the caucus cannot even elect a chairman of their caucus. It is those people in the Upper house who elect the chairman of their caucus. The vote was 70 votes for the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr.

Prud'homme) against 38 elected member votes from the House of Commons. What kind of Party is that? Has there been a repentance or is it just the Hon. Member who is with us today, and I point out he is the only one in the House today, who is converted to some of these causes?

Mr. Allmand: Madam Speaker, I will deal with the last point first. I do not know how the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) knows the results of the vote for the chairman of our caucus when I did not even know it myself. I guess he read it in some newspaper. It is news to me that the chairman of our caucus was elected by that margin. The results were never revealed to us.

The Hon. Member asked when I became converted to an elected Senate. I have been in favour of an elected Senate since my days in law school. He asks me when our Party became committed. I want to tell him that our Leader and several other leading members of our front bench have been speaking across the country in favour of an elected Senate.

I would agree with him that we did not always have that position. We did not have that position in the last Parliament. However, I wonder when the entire Conservative Party became committed to an elected Senate. I have the impression that many of us sitting in the House here in Ottawa have seen the light in recent years. We have seen institutions at the federal level not really working for the remote regions of the country. Many of us have finally come to the realization that if we want a federal system which works for all parts of the country, we need institutions that better serve all those regions. If we just have a lower House controlled by Ontario and Quebec, we will never have institutions which are credible in the west or in the Atlantic provinces.

That is the position of our Party and our caucus. What certain Members of the Senate might or might not do, I do not know. However, if there is a common will in the House among members of his Party, my Party, and the NDP in this regard, let us get it done. I can tell him that I will support it. I am on record. Many other people will support it. It is fundamental for justice in the west and justice in the east. No matter what might be said in Ontario and Quebec—and it means a loss of power by them in a certain sense—if we are to have a united country, this must be done.

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the sentiments of the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand). Speaking strictly on behalf of myself, I think we must look at a change in the system where we have representation by population on one side and representation by regions on the other side, so that there is a balance and small provinces are not discriminated against.

Mr. Beatty: Since when is the NDP in favour of the Senate?

Mr. Nystrom: I just finished saying that I was speaking on behalf of myself and no one else. We must move in that kind of direction.

We must also move in the direction where the provinces have some input over central institutions such as the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court is appointed by the federal Government, and it has to adjudicate or referee between the provinces and the federal Government. Once again I think we need some kind of input from the regions of the country. I would certainly support going in that direction. I will not be a Senator, anyway, so it does not matter much. I will leave that for my friend from Assiniboia.

I have a question for the Hon. Member. What changes are there in Liberal policy which will be attractive to western Canada? We have seen the Liberals almost become an extinct species in western Canada. Of course the Conservative Party is now fitting into that category as it used to be when John Diefenbaker was a lone Member from the Prairies. He said that they were so few and far between that they could hold caucus meetings in a telephone booth. I notice Mr. Getty is talking about separating the Alberta Conservative Party away from the federal Party because the federal Party is so unpopular.

I also noticed today that despite the efforts of the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour), the PCs are running third in the City of Edmonton. That is an incredible fall in two months. It is probably unprecedented in North American history to have a Party fall so far and so fast. In any event, it is now the third Party.

I ask the Hon. Member what changes there are in Liberal policy, since the two of us will be fighting for government in the next election campaign, which will make that Party more attractive to western Canada? I do not think the Liberals have changed at all.

Mr. Allmand: Madam Speaker, I started to refer to the resolutions passed at our convention, but I did not want to take up the time of the House by reading them in detail into the record. I would like to do that some day. I think it would be very interesting, if I had the opportunity to read them into the record. However, in that I only have a few minutes at this point and that I only had 20 minutes earlier, I did not do so. I would be glad to do it on another occasion.

There are very detailed resolutions on western industrial strategies and a full employment policy, which is much better than the one drafted at the NDP convention because I drafted it myself. There is also a resolution regarding the oil and gas sector.

I might say that these policies have come out of the western provinces. Two very key ones which are not new policies—and I think my hon. friend would agree with me—are policies which existed in the area of regional economic expansion in the past. I referred to the cuts to the budget of that Department. If it were restored, something could be done.

I just answered questions about our change in policy in respect of the Senate and so on. There is a lot for western voters to consider. They seem to be giving us a new and better look since the election of 1984.

Mr. Beatty: Madam Speaker, it has been so long since I have had an opportunity to question my hon. friend that I could not miss it. In view of his glowing comments with regard to the Liberal policy meeting in November, has the Hon. Member forgotten his letter to the editor, published in The Gazette on December 17, 1986, in which he referred to the same resolutions in the following way:

> Some were passed unanimously and others by a narrow margin. Some were detailed and others general, some were clear and others vague, some were complimentary while others contradictory, and finally, some issues were not dealt with at all. More significantly, many of these resolutions were carried without information on their financial implications.

Has he forgotten that letter to the editor which he wrote?

Mr. Allmand: Madam Speaker, no, I have not. I wish the Hon. Member would read the whole letter. I would like to read it into the record. He is quite correct, because the letter was written in response to an editorial and some comment that all the nearly 200 resolutions should be implemented holus-bolus, without any further work being done on them. I wrote that letter, and what he quoted was quite correct, but there was much more which he did not quote. I would have no hesitancy if the Hon. Minister were to read the entire letter into the record, because I still support what it says.

In effect, it says that more work must be done to fine tune and to bring the resolutions to fruition. On the ones about which I was asked, since the convention we have had many opportunities to talk about an elected Senate. Our Leader and other members have spoken about it. On that one there does not seem to be any difference or any falling back.

Mr. Beatty: Madam Speaker, it is funny that the Hon. Member should ask me to read more. I would be delighted to do so, particularly the following two paragraphs:

> Secondly, while nothing explicit is written down, it has been the tradition that where Liberals, through resolutions, have spoken strongly and clearly in convention, then those resolutions should be the official policy of the party.
> However, if conditions or the context should change, then the leader has the right to suspend, delay, or even reject such resolutions. But if he does so, he has the obligation to justify his decision to the party and its members at the first available opportunity. If he fails to do so, then his support by the party could be in jeopardy.

In view of the fact that my hon. friend's Leader has specifically repudiated the position taken by the Liberal Party in convention with regard to the ending of the testing of Cruise missiles in Canada, is it his view that that was adequately justified by his Leader or, in his words, is his support by the Party in jeopardy?

Mr. Allmand: Madam Speaker, of course that particular issue is not relevant to the debate. However, let me tell him that he has distorted the Leader's position. As he knows, while I differed from my Leader on that particular day, the difference between us was not that much. My Leader was willing to vote for a resolution to end Cruise missile testing within the NATO context. I did not vote against that amendment, but I voted for the NDP resolution because I thought it was right.

However, I do not think that the difference between my Leader and I on that issue is that deep, and I think he will see on that issue, as on many other issues, that we will come united into the election. I hope the Hon. Minister will give attention to that, because he is going to be in a lot of trouble.

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak to the motion of the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom), a member whose provincial ridings are now fully represented by provincial Progressive Conservative members.

Mr. Nystrom: That is the biggest assistance I have.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): It is for sure that he will need some. It is interesting to note that we come from a perspective in western Canada where for years and years we went without any federal representation. All we had in the federal Cabinet were a couple of broken-down Senators who were wandering around the countryside shrugging off responsibility for decisions of the previous Government, occasionally accepting whatever gratitude there was for some lucky international incident that might have resulted in something good for the west. But by and large, there was no representation whatever. I am happy to note now that western Canada is fully represented in a national Cabinet by some 58 Members of Parliament, 10 Ministers, among them the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) and a number of others. I am heartened by that because it is fairly evident that a considerable response is being made to western Canada, the likes of which has not been seen in our history.

• (1720)

Mr. Keeper: We agree with that.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): In dealing with this motion, it is important to do so from the perspective that we in western Canada will never be the manufacturing, the industrial centre of Canada, nor for that matter the population centre. We should not approach it from that point of view because there will not be the fundamental changes suddenly making us a country of 100 million people. What is important are the steps that have been taken in western Canada by the Government to strengthen and to diversify what we have.

I would like to speak to this motion from the perspective of the agricultural sector as a representative of a prairie riding which is largely dependent upon the growing of wheat. Contrary to what is stated in the motion, the Government has acted and continues to act in support of the important sector of agriculture. The member who proposed this motion should be well aware of our Government's high priority commitment to agriculture. That, of course, includes a commitment to the grain farmers in western Canada. Agriculture matters to each and every Canadian. Our grain industry means jobs, exports and the very survival of a great many rural communities in western Canada. The federal Government's many policies and programs are proof of our commitment to a strong agricultural industry in western Canada. We are addressing the hardships currently threatening many of our western grain farmers.

I would like to repeat what the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) said in a debate here last week, "That this Government will stack its record in agriculture, including programs that benefit western farmers, against the record of any previous Government". I challenge anyone to take an objective look at the record and to make the comparison. The initiatives and the dollars tell the story.

To begin with, it would be worthwhile for all Members of this House to examine the roots of the problems facing farmers in western Canada. The problems are not simple, nor are the solutions. First, we have to acknowledge that over the past couple of decades farmers have made great advances by applying new technologies. Our grain farmers have become more efficient and more productive. Those are positive developments, but they have implications. We should consider also that many farmers in western Canada are carrying debt-loads many times what they were carrying 15 years ago. Some of that was, I think, government induced. We had the business investment tax credit, an ill-advised Liberal initiative, which encouraged many farmers to overinvest in expensive farm machinery and equipment and to go into debt for it. We had high-priced land, and I hate to say that in the Province of Saskatchewan the stimulus and impetus for some of that was the Land Bank Program of the New Democratic Party's provincial Government of the day, a Government which used young farmers own tax money to enter in bidding wars over the value of land, a most unfortunate circumstance.

Mr. Althouse: It was lower than the markets.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Much of the increase occurred in the 1970s when farmers borrowed heavily for equipment and farmlands to expand their operations. Those expansions left many farmers in western Canada with high-debt costs and monthly payments that are very hard to meet.

The high interest rates of the early 1980s continue to haunt many farmers who are still trying to recover. In addition, the value of farmland has fallen in western Canada, eroding equity, and making it difficult for farmers to borrow operating capital. All of these factors are influencing farm incomes. Obviously, no single program can address the wide range of problems. The international market-place is also a major influence, probably the most significant influence of all on our western grain farmers. Some traditional customers for our grain exports have become net exporters themselves. Surpluses have built up around the world. Some countries are trying to get rid of their surpluses by offering huge export subsidies. The European Economic Community and the United States are the most notable examples. This subsidy war has driven world prices way down. Our grain farmers in western Canada are among the unfortunate victims of this trade war.

The federal Government recognizes that these international influences must be dealt with at the international level. We are doing that vigorously, forcefully and on a priority basis. I would be remiss if I did not comment on the efforts of the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) who has been instrumental in getting together representatives of the grain exporting countries with a view to trying to bring back some measure of sanity into the international wheat market-place.

It is interesting to note that the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister for International Trade succeeded in having agriculture included for the first time as a priority item in the forthcoming Uruguay round of GATT talks. The Government knows that solutions to the international problems will not happen overnight. We also know that the problems facing farmers in western Canada are the result of many different influences. That is why we must approach the solutions, not from one but from many angles, and that is exactly what we are doing.

Our Government has delivered an historic special grains program, a program that no other Government has ever matched. It is a program that demonstrates clearly the Government's understanding of the problems facing the nation's grain farmers. The Special Canadian Grains Program is putting $1 billion in cash directly into the pockets of about 200,000 grain and oil seed farmers this year. The share of this program accruing to producers within my Province of Saskatchewan is in excess of $400 million. The net farm income in Saskatchewan this year was projected to be possibly $400 million. With one stroke of the pen our Government has managed to double the net farm income in the Province of Saskatchewan this year. I am disappointed that there are those representing western Canada who would have the temerity in the face of that to suggest that our Government has not addressed agricultural hardship.

The special grains program is specifically designed to help cushion the drop in grain prices caused by the massive export subsidies in the European Economic Community and the United States. The Government worked with farm leaders and organizations, including the prairie pools and some 30 others to put together a fair and equitable program for distributing the $1 billion among grain producers. I would like to point out that about 84 per cent of this $1 billion will be going to grain farmers in western Canada. In fact, about 140,000 cheques worth one-quarter of a billion dollars were mailed to eligible Canadian Wheat Board permit holders in January and February. We expect that about $600 million of the remaining $700 million to be paid out under the Special Canadian Grains Program will go to farmers in western Canada. It is largely because of this special program that payments made to western grain farmers under federal programs in 1987 will far exceed any previous level at any time in this country's history.

The Special Canadian Grains Program, Madam Speaker, is not the only initiative that the Government has directed toward western agriculture. We have the Federal-Provincial Crop Insurance Program, 50 per cent of which is contributed by the federal Government and 50 per cent by the producers, with the cost of administration contributed by the participating provinces. This program has seen improved levels of coverage at no additional cost to the producer.

The Government also participates in the Western Grain Stabilization Fund making contributions of $2 for every $1 contributed by the western grain farmer. The Government has responded to representations from western grain farmers and delivered amendments to the Western Grain Stabilization Act in order to ensure that timely interim payments be made each spring. Under the western grain stabilization program, over $500 million was paid out in 1985, some $859 million last year and payments for the 1987 year will likely set a record. Western grain farmers can obviously expect a large interim payment again this year and very soon.

The Government also delivered two new lending programs to the Farm Credit Corporation, programs which are giving farmers more financial flexibility at a time when they really need it. Today, loans under the commodity-based loan program and the shared-risk programs total more than $300 million.

The Government amended the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act to double the level of cash advances and also to eliminate the irritant of having a landlord's signature required for a tenant to be able to secure advances. We delivered farm debt review boards which are helping farmers in western Canada to negotiate arrangements with their creditors, arrangements that will keep them on the land. So far, well over half of the arrangements that have been negotiated should result in keeping viable farms in operation.

We have also acted to reduce effectively farm input costs. Last year, the Farm Fuel Tax Rebate Program reduced input costs for farmers by some $70 million. In this year's federal Budget, the rebate program was expanded to cushion farmers fully against the one-cent per litre tax increase on gas and diesel fuel. These rebates now total in excess of eight cents a litre or some 35 cents a gallon.

The $80 million interest rate reduction program continues to hold down interest costs for more than 5,000 farmers with Farm Credit Corporation loans. This five-year program is helping farmers who were caught by high interest rates in the early 1980s before we came into office and brought those rates down. Our economic policies have caused interest rates to drop by more than 4 percentage points so far. Every one point decline represents a saving to the farm community of between $100 million and $200 million. There is approximately $25 billion in farm debt outstanding, and it is easy to extrapolate from that just how important each 1 per cent reduction in interest rates really is.

Federal Government spending to benefit the grain farmers of western Canada and farmers in other parts of Canada as well is higher than it has ever been before. This year, the level will be much higher than last year's record level. Some of this assistance obviously comes from programs to which farmers contribute, programs on which I have touched already, but the bulk of it, particularly this year, represents federal funds. That is over and above spending on important and ongoing programs that serve the farm community such as research, technology, inspection, grading and trade development. The level of direct payments to farmers is high and will no doubt remain high until market prices recover. We know, however, that this investment in agriculture is a worth-while investment on behalf of all Canadians.

There can be absolutely no doubt about the Government's commitment to western grain farmers and indeed to farmers all across Canada. We have delivered and we will continue to deliver. The Minister of Agriculture and the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board are continuing to meet with their provincial counterparts and with farm leaders to plan new measures that will benefit western grain farmers in the future. Agriculture continues to be a key element of the Government's agenda for economic renewal. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) tabled a progress report on the agenda along with his February Budget, spelling out the Government's commitment to having the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board continue to meet with farm organizations and the provinces on a priority basis.

The Government's objective is to find new ways to ensure that the Canadian grain industry remains a competitive force in world markets. In fact, the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board met with farm leaders on March 5 to begin planning actions to assist grain farmers in the coming crop year. Obviously it is still too soon to come to any definitive conclusions about what help will be needed or how it should be delivered, but it is clear, and farm leaders have agreed, that grain farmers should not expand or shift production on the expectation of the special payment based on this year's acreage or production. Any new assistance measures will be production and market neutral.

The Minister of Agriculture will be meeting with his provincial counterparts next week on March 30 and with farm leaders again in May or June. Western grain farmers and other farmers from coast to coast recognize that the Government regards agriculture as a top priority. They appreciate the fact that we intend to include the farm community in the planning of future actions.

The Government's record speaks for itself. It is unequalled. We take a back seat to no one in actions on behalf of western grain farmers. While others may talk, we have taken strong, concrete and significant action. Just as we have taken action in the past, we will continue to take action in the future, in good faith and on behalf of western Canada's farmers.

It is unfortunate that the motion has been put forward in such a negative fashion. It is a pity that it is always the dark side and the gloom and doom that seems to be coming from the benches of the NDP. In fact, there is a lot of hope out there and promise for the future. There are good things happening and I want to refer to some recent figures which indicate, for example, that employment in Canada has increased between September, 1984, and February, 1987, by 719,000. That means that 719,000 more people are working today than just two and a half years ago. The bank rate is now at 7.14 per cent. That is more than five points lower than it was in September, 1984. The prime rate is down four and one-quarter points.

It is pretty clear that the greatest gift any Government can give to Canadians, whether in farm communities, in western Canada or in any walk of life anywhere in the country, is lower interest rates. It is pretty clear that the policies of the Government over-all have led to a very, very substantial drop in interest rates, and I think it is evident that the additional investment and jobs flowing from it have been forthcoming.

I was amazed at the remarks of the previous speaker who seemed to indicate that it was the job of Government to create jobs. I would categorically reject that proposition and suggest that it is the job of Government instead to create the conditions and the environment in which small business can flourish, in which entrepreneurs can invest capital with some reasonable hope of success without being weighed down by undue interest rates. Certainly it is through the small business sector that jobs are being created. They are being created because of the policies of the Government regarding small business in western Canada and everywhere else and because of the life-time capital gains tax exemption which gives some hope for small business people to be able in fact to realize their equity out of their businesses after lifetimes of hard work.

In answer to my hon. friend's motion, I would suggest that he should ask Canadians where they would prefer to be. Would they prefer to be in Canada or would they prefer to be in some other country? Perhaps we should look at the flip side of that and ask why it is that people from virtually every nation on the face of the earth are trying by the thousands to get into Canada by any means possible. They are prepared to leave behind everything they have in order to get into Canada. In conclusion, I want to say that I am glad to be a Canadian, I am glad to be a western Canadian, and I am glad to be a western Canadian under this Government.

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This afternoon, I had the honour of participating in the Forum of Young Canadians. It was brought to my attention that during today's debate, the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour), in his usual way, induced the House in error. I would like to reserve my right to present a question of privilege if I see fit to do so. When I read the text of exactly what he said about my chairmanship of the Liberal caucus, I may wish to raise a question of privilege. I found his comment totally unacceptable and totally erroneous.

Again, the Hon. Member has shown that his passion for some issues has caused him to mislead the House, and I reserve the right to raise a question of privilege if I see fit to do so. However I wanted to give you advanced notice right away.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair accepts the notice given by the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) and will entertain it later on if and when he sees fit to formally raise a question of privilege.

Mr. Prud'homme: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions and comments. Debate. The Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse).

• (1740)

Mr. Althouse: Madam Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson) on an excellent speech. He ended by talking about a lot of people who wanted to get into our country and the feeling of hope scattered among Canadians. Since he raised the issue of people waiting to get in, and since he also spoke about the Western Grain Stabilization Act and the pay-out to be made this year, and since he is probably aware that about 22 per cent of western producers are not covered by the Act, would he tell us if there are any plans to provide another open door for those people to come in? With this coming payment the fund will be in deficit. Grain producers in eastern Canada have their grain production costs covered by the Agriculture Stabilization Act which requires no payment of premium and no previous sign-up. It requires simply the production of grain to make them eligible for a pay-out from the federal Treasury. I wonder if he has addressed this in his own caucus and if there is going to be some hope for the 22 per cent who were not originally in the program and could not get in because there were very few open windows for them.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to respond to the Hon. Member's concerns. That is an interesting point which I have canvassed with many of my own constituents during my travels, particularly during the summer tour I embark upon each year in an attempt to come face to face with as many agricultural producers as possible. I certainly hear expressions of mixed feelings from them. Those who are in are quite adamant that there ought not to be some form of easy entry for those who are not. There are, as the Hon. Member knows, mechanisms for entry available to those people. As to whether there should be a quickening of the pace at this point in time or some changing of the circumstances, I must say that I have not found any consensus on that from producers in my region.

However, I know the Hon. Member is a member of the Standing Committee on Agriculture and I urge him to raise the matter there to see what sort of response is forthcoming.

Mr. Foster: Madam Speaker, I was interested in the Hon. Member's comments. I wonder if he can tell us if he believes that we should try to provide assistance in order to maintain the return to farmers at the 1986-87 level for the new crop year which starts August 1, 1987. Does he feel as well that the Government should maintain the freeze on freight rates? The Senior Grain Transportation Agency has recommended that it increase from about $6 a tonne to about $9 a tonne. Does he support that in view of the 20 per cent reduction in grain prices forecast by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and representatives of the Advisory Committee of the Canadian Wheat Board? Can the Hon. Member give us his views on those topics?

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member raises two points. The first bears on the matter of support levels for farmers in the forthcoming crop year. The Minister of Agriculture has already indicated, in response to questions in this House and elsewhere, that farmers ought not to plan production based on the criteria everyone used in this special grains program. He also indicated, and I am sure the Hon. Member knows this, that there are ongoing consultations between the Minister and the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, as well as with representatives of many farm organizations, with a view to assessing the situation and determining the appropriate response for the forthcoming year. I am sure that in doing that they will make reference to the international prices and the sort of export activity, subsidies elsewhere, and the pressures bearing on the farm community. The Hon. Member can rest assured that this Government will continue to make a generous and understanding response to the problems facing farmers, especially the hard hit grain farmers.

As to whether the form of assistance could be along the lines he posed in his question, that is some sort of a guaranteed price equivalent to what it was during the past crop year or some other level, I believe that remains to be seen. It is clear that there are those who would criticize that approach by saying that it might encourage a shifting into wheat, for example, as a result of an artificially high price. I am sure there are those in the farm community who would say that this is not the way to go. We ought not to be encouraging that at this time, rather, we ought to be encouraging the farmers with programs which address input costs and interest rates. Clearly there are literally hundreds and hundreds of proposals being discussed. I know they are being discussed in my riding among farmers everywhere, in the coffee shops, homes and halls. I think, too, that the same discussions are being held nationally. We know that the programs to be put forward, if need be, will be the proper response and will take into account the needs of Canadian producers as well as the financial ability of the Government to respond.

If I might briefly address the second point, I believe the Hon. Member asked if I would prefer to see a freeze on freight rates. I am not a transportation expert by any means. Privately, of course I would. I was under the impression that those rates were set by formula and by statute, which statute was put forward by the Hon. Member's Party some years ago. I would think he would be able to answer that question better than I.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Madam Speaker, I would first like to compliment the Hon. Member for a very capable and well-articulated address. We have come to expect that from him. During the course of his remarks he pointed out very clearly and quite properly that this Government has done more for western Canadian agriculture than any Government in a comparable period of time. However, I think those of us who live in western Canada have also bemoaned the fact that we depend so heavily on the primary resource sector. It seems to me, and I think others would agree, that if western Canada is to reach its full potential it will depend on a greater degree of diversification than has occurred to this point. Has the Hon. Member any thoughts on that subject?

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Madam Speaker, the list is long but I will try to be brief. I think there have been enormous strides made toward diversification in western Canada. In answer to my hon. friend I would like to refer to a couple of matters in Saskatchewan. Presently the second largest paper mill in Canada, which will produce 600 new jobs, is being built in the Prince Albert area. An ERDA agreement has been signed between Saskatchewan and the federal Government which will cause $100 million to be spent in the irrigation sector in Saskatchewan. The Government of Canada has guaranteed $250 million to $300 million worth of loans to assist in the new Regina upgrader project. This is the largest project of its kind in Canada at the present time. It will upgrade Saskatchewan heavy and medium crude oil which will give us an opportunity to refine these products at home in Saskatchewan.

In my own City of Swift Current, Saskatchewan, in the first three months of this year there are already four times as many applications for building permits as there were in the entire previous year. There is a mall project going ahead there which has been talked about for years and is finally coming to fruition, notwithstanding low farm and oil prices. It is coming into play now because of low interest rates and the outstanding economic policies of the Government.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in this debate. The first sentence of the motion before us reads:

> That this House condemns the government for its lack of a long term economic development strategy for Western Canada that would, among other things—

It goes on to deal with the agricultural sector, the forest industry, the energy sector and the need for economic diversification in western Canada. The motion before the House condemns the Government for its lack of a long-term economic development strategy for Canada. I would like to put my opinion with regard to this motion and the poor performance of the Government on the record in the few minutes which are available to me today.

To put it briefly, I think the Government has simply forgotten western Canada. I will give you three reasons why I think that is the case. I want to discuss three aspects of western economic development. I want to discuss briefly the political promises which the Conservatives made when they were seeking office, particularly those promises made to western Canada. I want to discuss what is actually going on in western Canada today and I want to take a brief look at the Government's economic policies.

If I can have the attention of the House, Madam Speaker, I would like to begin by pointing out that when the Conservatives were running for office they promised "jobs, jobs, jobs". They promised to make a place around the Cabinet table for western Canada. They promised to bring western Canada in from the cold with regard to power and decision-making. Those were the promises, but what has been the result, what kind of performance has the Government put on? It has certainly been a performance in the theatrical sense, but with regard to the promise of "jobs, jobs, jobs", as indicated in an article in The Globe and Mail of February 28, the jobs which have been created have been created in Ontario and not in western Canada. The article by Ross Howard says:

> Between January, 1986, and January of this year, the total number of jobs in the country rose by 137,000, according to unadjusted figures. But only 5,000 of those jobs were created outside Ontario.

The article also says that:

> —more than 95 per cent of the additional jobs created last year were located in one province—Ontario.

The promise of "jobs, jobs, jobs" has been real for the Golden Horseshoe of Ontario, but it has been a lie for western Canada. The jobs which were promised by the Government have not been created in western Canada. What has been the result of the promise to include western Canadians in the economic decision-making of the country? Briefly, the result has been that farmers are in difficulty today due to the performance of the Government. Small Canadian oil companies in Alberta are endangered due to the performance of the Government. Support is rising throughout western Canada for the western separatist Party as a result of the actions of the Government. Even more ludicrous is the fact that the Government has revived support in western Canada for the Liberal Party. That is an achievement, albeit a negative one. I hope the Liberal Party, stem and trunk, has not been revived, but it has certainly been revived in the public opinion polls.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. I know it is very close to six o'clock, but I think the Hon. Member should be allowed the courtesy of being able to hear himself when addressing the House. The Chair is having a difficult time understanding what the Hon. Member is saying. There are Members from all Parties who are talking rather loudly. Let us give the floor to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) and let us pay attention.

Mr. Keeper: Thank you, Madam Speaker, I would appreciate being heard. I want to discuss briefly the economic performance of the Government in western Canada. With regard to the softwood industry in British Columbia the Government buckled under to American pressure and applied tariffs to our own products. When our products were competing well in the United States the Government failed in negotiations with the Americans. The actions which the Government took to help the oil industry in Alberta helped the multinationals but failed to help small Canadian companies. In Saskatchewan and other western provinces farmers are having a very difficult time surviving today. While the Government has taken some action with regard to the agricultural industry, it is insufficient to assure farmers that they can survive and to give them enough confidence to plant in the forthcoming season. The Government took a swipe at Manitoba's capacity for industrial development. When Bristol Aerospace in Winnipeg won the bidding process for the CF-18 contract, which is of major industrial benefit, the Government took it away from Manitoba and gave it to Quebec on the basis of a political decision.

When I look at what has happened in western Canada I see that the performance of the Government is dismal and that it is time for the Government to wake up and realize that it raised expectations and made serious promises in western Canada. We want an industrial policy and an economic strategy for western Canada. We want to be more than only hewers of wood and drawers of water. We want in on industrial development. We want our fair share of the economic pie and we expect the Government to live up to its promises made when it was running for public office. It is not enough simply to have people around the cabinet table. The Ministers must be effective in fighting for western Canada. We are waiting for that to happen.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—ACID RAIN—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Madam Speaker, this evening I have a question for you. Do you believe in polls? I do not mean telephone poles or hydro poles, or even barber poles. I mean public opinion polls. I can tell, Madam Speaker, that like me, there are probably one or two recent polls in which you would rather not believe. However, I believe in public opinion polls and I suspect that you do as well.

Recently there were two public opinion polls on the question of acid rain. Those polls found that two out of five Canadians believe that reaching an acid rain agreement with the United States is even more important than reaching a trade agreement with the United States, as far as Canada is concerned.

Acid rain comes from emissions that originate from coal-fired smelters, from non-ferrous smelters like the Inco smelter, and emissions from automobiles. These emissions float into the air, seem to go a long distance, and come down to have a devastating effect on our environment. We know that these emissions cause damage to fish, birds, lakes, trees and to buildings all around us.

At least half of these emissions emanate from the United States. It is no wonder that Canadians are concerned about these acid rain emissions and getting some sort of agreement with the United States to solve the acid rain problem. In the same poll to which I referred, 60 per cent of Canadians who responded indicated that they felt our Government was not doing enough about getting an agreement with the United States on acid rain.

That prompted me to think about just what the Government has done about acid rain since it came to office in the last two and a half years. It made me think back to the fact that in January, 1985, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) indicated that Canada could not expect to make any progress with the United States in its negotiations unless we came to the negotiating table with clean hands and unless we got our own house in order.

In February, 1985, I remember that the federal and provincial Environment Ministers came together to agree on some targets to achieve the goal of reducing sulphur dioxide emissions in eastern Canada by some 50 per cent of their 1980 levels by the year 1994. The federal Government agreed to put up financial assistance, as did the provinces, to help those smelters ensure that they could meet those targets and reduce those acid rain emissions.

I also remember that in March, 1985, the Prime Minister announced a national program for reducing acid rain emissions in Canada. That included new automobile emission standards, $150 million for smelter emission controls, $25 million for technology development, $70 million for cleaner and more efficient use of coal, $18 million a year for research and monitoring, and a study of the increased use of low sulphur western coal. All of that amounted at the time to a commitment of some $300 million on the part of the federal Government toward acid rain control in this country.

In March of that same year Hon. Members will remember that the Prime Minister met with President Reagan at the so-called Shamrock Summit. At that time they agreed to appoint acid rain envoys, Mr. Bill Davis, the former Premier of Ontario, and Mr. Drew Lewis, to study and identify ways of solving the problem.

In July of 1985 the federal Government announced new automobile emission standards that would be effective in September of this year. In January of last year the Special Envoys reported and recommended ways in which the United States could implement a five-year, $5 billion clean coal technology program. Then, in March of last year, President Reagan announced that he was endorsing that program. At the same time the Canadian Government announced that it was providing $9 million to assist the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Company, Inco and Falconbridge, to meet their deadlines for reducing acid rain emissions in this country. In March of this year you will recall, Madam Speaker, that the federal Government and the provinces began entering into formal abatement agreements. Hopefully, all of these agreements will be entered into soon.

Those are the steps that we have been taking in this country. What have the Americans been doing? Until recently, in fact just up until last week, it has been hard to see exactly what they have been doing. In fact, until last week they had no indication whatsoever of even putting money in their budget. Last week they announced they were going to do so. However, I heard the President of the United States on television last Thursday indicating that he still was not sure what the real problem was with acid rain. We are now coming to the point where it is up to Canada to meet with the United States, meet with President Reagan, to see what we can do about getting the Americans to finally get moving on this issue.

Tonight, I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary will tell us that when our Prime Minister meets with President Reagan very shortly that he will give him an even bigger earful than he gave to Vice-President Bush just a few weeks ago.

Mr. Ron Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, in March of 1986 President Reagan endorsed the Report of the Special Envoys on Acid Rain and their recommendations, as was just mentioned by the Hon. Member. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) took that as a commitment by the administration that acid rain was a serious transboundary problem and that it would seek the funds necessary to implement the Special Envoys' Report. The President's 1988 budget proposal submitted to Congress in January of this year provided the first concrete information on the U.S. response to the President's commitment.

The initiatives outlined in that budget proposal fell far short of meeting the commitments made to Canada by President Reagan. This was the clear message that the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and

However, as recently as last week President Reagan announced several initiatives. These initiatives represent a significant and important step forward in our efforts to develop the bilateral accord that will provide a long-term, lasting solution to the acid rain problem. They will also put specific substance and timetable to the general commitments that he made at the 1986 summit meeting.

For instance, the administration will secure $500 million per year in new funds for each of the next five years to cost share clean coal commercial demonstration projects which meet the criteria of the Special Envoys. The projects will not be of a research nature but, rather, will be to demonstrate new cost-effective technologies on a commercial scale and to reduce the transboundary flow of sulphur dioxide into eastern Canada. The projects to be funded under the program will be selected by a panel which will include Canadian government representatives. The administration is also examining its economic and regulatory programs to determine any disincentives that may exist to the implementation of pollution controls.

Reaching this agreement before the summit will allow the Prime Minister and President Reagan to discuss how to move the issue even further ahead at their next meeting. The Canadian objective is to get the United States to reduce its transboundary flow of sulphur dioxide into eastern Canada to about two million tonnes, about 50 per cent of the 1980 level, and to implement programs to achieve this level on a scheduled basis. This objective is based on sound scientific information and existing principles and obligations under international law that countries must ensure that activities within their jurisdiction do not cause damage to the environment of other countries.

The commitment to our objective holds strong. Acid rain will be one of the top agenda items at the April 6 summit meeting and we will do everything possible in the weeks leading to the summit to advance the issue.

CANADA POST CORPORATION—(A) LINGUISTIC POLICY—GOVERNMENT POSITION. (B) MANNER IN WHICH POLICY IS APPLIED

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my intervention this evening concerns the linguistic policy of the Canada Post Corporation.

First, I would like to make something clear for all those who might be interested in this debate.

I personally believe in bilingual services whenever practical and possible. I am also very concerned about the linguistic problem, especially in Quebec, which can be a very emotional problem, as I know personally since I represent the constituency of Saint-Léonard—Anjou which was the scene of a well-publicized linguistic conflict a while back. I can therefore assure all my colleagues, Madam Speaker, that I have no intention of initiating a linguistic debate.

What I want to show this evening is that the Canada Post Corporation is doing everything possible to reduce its staff, harass its customers and cause people to wonder whether or not Canada really has a postal service.

Now for the facts. I shall start with an official document of the Canada Post Corporation where we find, on page 5, under the title "Guidelines for the publication of press releases and instructions, Quebec Division":

> Official languages
> The Quebec Division having been identified by the Official languages Commissioner as a unilingual French Division, all press releases and instructions will be written in French only. The English version of these documents will be available on request.
> However, it is essential that communications with the outside public be published in both official languages when the English-speaking segment represents at least 10 per cent of the total population.

Madam Speaker, according to the figures, the English-speaking population of Quebec City and the area is only 2.8 per cent. This guideline therefore applies.

At the beginning of December, as soon as Canada Post submitted its corporate plan, it immediately issued new directives, announcing that from now on, the Customer Services Division, and perhaps I should explain that this is a technical division and not one that deals directly with customers, would be a bilingual division. I have no quarrel with the fact that Canada Post is free to issue such directives and to switch its divisions around, provided, Madam Speaker, employees who had these jobs when the division was still considered unilingual French, are given the time and assistance they need to become bilingual.

Unfortunately, Canada Post did as follows: From now on, this is a bilingual division so you are redundant. If you want to reapply to get your job back, you will have to prove that you are bilingual and you will not be given the necessary time or resources to become bilingual.

Madam Speaker, I think this is an intolerable situation for Quebec City, where only 2.8 per cent of the population is English-speaking, and it is unacceptable also because the policy was effective the day after it was announced.

Madam Speaker, I put the question to the Minister, and I was very disappointed at his reply which was that as a Minister, he could hardly be expected to be involved in that kind of minute details of the Corporation's operations. However, it is not a minute detail but a fundamental issue, Madam Speaker. It seems we are always having trouble with Canada Post which takes measures and takes the kind of action which makes one wonder about the measure of intelligence involved. We saw that this weekend, when someone at Canada Post, instead of trying to improve customer services, took the time to write a letter to Members of this House, to send us . . . , and I imagine Madam Speaker, you also received the same form letter. They wrote us a letter saying: You have had complaints from your ridings, and this is how to answer those complaints. Since when is a Member of the House going to let someone at Canada Post dictate the answers he should give to his constituents? Who do the people working for the Canada Post Corporation think they are, Madam Speaker? These are the reasons why I was very disappointed with the reply of the Minister. We have a Minister responsible for the Canada Post Corporation, and if he really is responsible for the Corporation, he should immediately deal with the problem and instruct Canada Post to serve the taxpayers properly. Leave the Members of Parliament alone; they know what to tell their own constituents. We have no need for a model letter telling us how to answer their questions. We also believe that the employees should be given a chance. This is a harassment policy. How can there be any peace in the service when every opportunity is used to create further conflict? Who pays in the end? It is the public, the people who need the service.

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I shall try to reply to my colleague and to respond to his concerns.

The Canada Post Corporation must obey the laws of Canada in all its activities, which includes the interpretation of the Official Languages Act. About a month ago, certain media reported that a number of Canada Post Corporation employees in Quebec City had been judged surplus to requirements by corporate management because they were not bilingual and did not speak English. Such is not the case, Madam Speaker.

When the sales and customer services department in Quebec City was reorganized last December, there was absolutely no change for 13 positions. Nine other positions were reclassified in order to better reflect the additional duties added to those positions, also reflecting the requirements of the Official Languages Act. In the course of that reorganization, customer service representative positions were reclassified from grade 2 to grade 3. This means that Customer Sales Service was added to the duties of grade 2 positions, which come under Customer Service. The new grade 3 positions have become bilingual.

Since bilingualism is a required qualification for the new positions, the corporation has made available to the employees involved, free of charge, an intensive course.

In the meantime, those employees are still working for the corporation, which has decided to wait for those employees to complete their intensive courses before considering any application for the new positions.

This does not necessarily mean they will be appointed, but Canada Post Corporation will have made the effort. Under the existing agreement with the union, any corporation employee must be allowed to apply for the newly created positions.

The corporation's Chairman, Mr. Sylvain Cloutier, has informed us that Canada Post is committed, over the coming months and years, to better identify its customers' linguistic preferences and to offer them additional bilingual counter and telephone services.

The corporation's service to the public takes into account first language data as established by Statistics Canada, by census divisions. The corporation is now reprocessing those statistics and expects to have in hand more pertinent data on the language profile of all its postal communities. Management officials will thus be able to make more accurate forecasts of linguistic requirements concerning over-the-counter services.

Telephone service in both official languages is another major Canada Post objective, and this is why management are now re-examining their telephone network and, more specifically, the services available in their 25 customer service units. They are considering such technological breakthroughs in this field as might enable them to meet the demand for information in English and French throughout Canada. The plan now being developed by Canada Post should have an impact on all telephone directories from coast to coast as of the beginning of fiscal year 1987-88.

In the next few months, Canada Post senior officials will be urged to play a more active and direct role in defining specific official languages objectives. Canada Post will also make sure that senior officials keep a closer and more formal progress watch through employee appraisal reports.

Since these appraisal reports bear directly on remuneration and promotion opportunities, they are tantamount to applying the good old carrot and stick principle which has proved to be quite successful over centuries. I do not see why it would not work just as well at Canada Post.

RAILWAYS—GRAIN FREIGHT RATES. (B) REQUEST FOR RETENTION OF FREEZE ON FREIGHT RATES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, on February 16 I put a question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), asking him to give a clear indication of what the Government was going to do with regard to grain freight rates for western farmers. As you know, farmers are suffering through one of the most difficult times in their history. In the last general election, the Government Party made a clear commitment to maintain the freeze on western grain freight rates charged to farmers until the farmers were better able to make larger payments for grain freight rates.

A report has now been passed from the Senior Grain Transportation Agency to the Canadian Transport Commission indicating that grain freight rates will rise from $6 to approximately $8.50 or $9 per tonne in the coming crop year. Last year, on April 30, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) called a hurried press conference announcing that he was freezing freight rates to help farmers in their serious difficult time. That time is even more difficult today.

I put a question to the then Minister of Transport. He indicated that the Government would look at it, consider it, but he did not give a clear commitment. The Government did not really freeze freight rates last year. The then Minister of Transport, who is now the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), simply sent back the recommendation from the Senior Grain Transportation Agency which suggested that the volume of wheat to be shipped last year was something like 3.5 million tonnes. He asked the agency to reduce its estimates to around 27 or 29 million tonnes, which it did, to 28.5 million tonnes.

As a result, grain freight rates charged to farmers did not rise last year. However, the volume to be shipped in this current crop year has been increased from 28.5 million tonnes to around 31 million tonnes. All of the surplus funds which were in the tally averaging account of the Department have been used up. We are facing a new crop year on August 1 in which the volume has been estimated at close to 31 million tonnes. The Government has to face the prospect, since the Minister of Transport last year reduced the volume, that there will be a serious short-fall.

I hope the Parliamentary Secretary responding on behalf of the Minister of Transport this evening will indicate that the Government will maintain the freeze on western freight rates charged to farmers in the new crop year and that the Government will not increase rates by 50 per cent, as has been forecast by the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. If we have an increase of the magnitude of about $3 a tonne, western farmers will be looking at an additional transportation cost of some $90 million to $100 million. This is absolutely unacceptable in the light of reduced grain prices in the new crop year and all the other difficulties facing the western grain industry.

In addition, the Government has not acted on a recommendation of the Senior Grain Transportation Committee which would increase the amount of funds in the Crow benefit by some $25 million. original amount in the Crow benefit was $658 million. The Canadian National Railways has indicated that it should be providing an extra $25 million. That recommendation came to the Department last September-October but still no action has been taken. I hope that tonight the Parliamentary Secretary will tell us that the Government is increasing the Crow benefit by some $25 million as recommended by the CNR and by the Senior Grain Transportation Committee from $658 million to $583 million. That amount would also assist in alleviating the desperate situation western grain producers face in the new crop year with the Government indicating that commodity prices for wheat, barley and other western grains will be reduced by some 20 per cent.

Mr. Ron Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) said on February 16 that it is still too early to know for certain what will be the rail rate for grain which will come into effect next August 1. Under the provisions of the Western Grain Transportation Act, the administrator of the Grain Transportation Agency, the Hon. Jack Horner, has now issued his official tonnage forecast which is 31.8 million tonnes. The Act then requires that the Canadian Transport Commission use this grain forecast to set the new rail rate. The CTC has until April 30 to complete its calculations and issue the new rate.

When the Government came into office, we moved immediately on amendments to the legislation to implement our election promise to establish a ceiling on the shippers' share of the grain freight rates. The passage of Bill C-44 limited the shippers' share to a maximum of $7.70 per tonne until July 1987. Indeed, the producers' actual share of the freight rate was $7.70 per tonne in 1984-85, $6 per tonne in 1985-86 and $5.97 per tonne in 1986-87. As a consequence, over the past two years, the producers' share of the freight rate fell by more than 20 per cent since we came into office. It now represents a relatively small proportion of the producers' total input costs.

The CTC has not yet calculated the freight rate for 1987-88. I would remind the Hon. Member of the announcement of a $1 billion assistance program for grain producers made on December 9, 1986. Under the Special Canadian Grains Program, Canada's grain and oilseed farmers will receive cash payments to cushion the impact of the subsidy war between the EEC and the United States. The Government is indeed sensitive to the plight of Canadian grain farmers.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

PETITIONS

REQUEST FOR IMMEDIATE ADDITIONAL AID TO CO-OPERATIVE HOUSING

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and the duty to table a petition concerning the housing policy in Canada. It is signed by some of my Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic constituents who object to the Government's decision to make major changes to the housing policy in Canada.

They feel, in this International Year of the Homeless, that this Government's definition of essential needs is preventing hundreds of thousands of Canadians living below the poverty line from receiving government housing assistance.

For these reasons, the petitioners humbly ask Parliament to provide immediate additional aid to co-operative housing.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I have a second petition. I table it pursuant to Standing Order 106. This petition is also signed by some of my Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic constituents who object to the proposed amendments to Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act.

They feel that the Government's proposals will increase the already high costs of the provincial health insurance plans and also directly affect all Canadian men and women who are not covered by private drug insurance programs.

The petitioners ask the Canadian Parliament to turn down these proposals which would increase the cost of drugs for all Canadians.

[English]

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF WITHDRAWALS FROM CN PENSION PLAN

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to the House a petition, duly certified by the Clerk of Petitions, on behalf of employees of Canadian National residing in my constituency of Sarnia—Lambton. These workers are protesting that management employees with less seniority are drawing money out of CN's pension plan ahead of union employees with greater seniority. They ask that Parliament investigate and correct this unjust situation.

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the first petition I have the honour to present relates to the question of refugees. The petitioners are concerned about the fact that recent regulations are turning away genuine refugees. They call upon Parliament to enact legislation which will embody the principles of fair and complete oral hearings of claimants before a refugee board independent of the Immigration Commission, universal access to such hearings for every claimant in Canada, and a fair chance to arrive in Canada to present this claim.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the second petition, which has also been duly certified, relates to proposed legislation to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs. It points out that this will result in increased costs both for individuals and for provincial drug plans. It calls upon Parliament to reject these proposals forthwith.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour to present two petitions today. One relates to changes to the Patent Act. The people who have signed the petition are from the Province of Quebec, and I have the honour to present a petition on their behalf. They are opposed to the Government's intention to change the Patent Act. They believe that the proposals of the federal Government will result in higher costs for provincial government plans. They believe that it will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis. They also believe that it is yet another example of the Canadian Government making concessions to the United States at the expense of average Canadians.

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my second petition is signed by residents of Canada. They indicate their concern about the Government's attempt to change the refugee status and procedures for refugees in the country. They call upon the Parliament of Canada to enact legislation which will embody the principles of fair and complete oral hearings before a refugee board independent of the Immigration Commission, with universal access to such hearings for each claimant in Canada, and a fair chance to arrive in Canada to present this claim.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition from a number of residents of Canada, most of them in the City of Toronto but some as far away as Willowdale and one from Ballinafad, Ontario. These residents of Canada support the recommendations of the Standing Committee on Parliament on a new procedure for refugee determination which is quicker and fairer than the one now in force. They note that it is supported by the Canadian Council of Churches, the Canadian Bar Association, the Canadian Jewish Congress, and other groups and individuals. Therefore, they request Parliament to enact legislation which will embody the principles of fair and complete oral hearings of claimants before a refugee board independent of the Immigration Commission, universal access to such hearings for every claimant in Canada, and a fair chance to arrive in Canada to present this claim. As in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—IMMIGRATION—FAMILY REUNIFICATION—REFUGEES

Mr. Speaker: Before the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) moves his motion, since today is the final allotted day, the House will go through the usual procedures to consider and dispose of the supply Bills.

In view of recent practices, do Hon. Members agree that the supply Bills be distributed now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West) moved:

That this House condemns the Government for creating a state of confusion within its immigration program and for its lack of leadership and vision, which has seriously undermined the confidence of Canadians in the over-all direction of immigration policy;

That this House also deplores the Government's failure to address the growing frustration experienced by large numbers of Canadians who are unable to sponsor successfully family members as immigrants from abroad and its recent actions that undercut Canada's humanitarian assistance and protection for refugees legitimately seeking haven in Canada;

That, therefore, this House urges the Government to:

(1) recognize the long-standing importance of family class reunification and to re-establish this program as the cornerstone of Canada's immigration;

(2) adopt a fair, humane and efficient refugee policy which would reinforce Canada's past proud tradition and honour Canada's international obligations under the United Nations Convention relating to the status of refugees, signed in 1951;

(3) introduce immediately a new and independent refugee determination system that would assure claimants processing that is fair, effective and expeditious while discouraging fraudulent applications; and

He said: Mr. Speaker, Canada has a long-standing history of providing an opportunity for immigrants to start a new life. Past Liberal Governments have been especially hospitable to family reunification and compassionate toward the plight of legitimate refugees. We are a nation which opened its doors to the world and invited people to join in the building of a new country, a new life, and a fresh beginning.

Immigration has enjoyed a prominent place in Canada's history, but I am troubled by the questionable and confusing actions of the Conservative Government in Ottawa in respect of immigration policy. Thus, we in the Liberal Party have moved the motion today with the hope that by examining the status of our immigration program, the Government will end the uncertainty and aggressive ideology paralyzing the direction of the immigration policy in the country.

For my part, I would like to focus on three issues: family reunification, refugees and the need for a comprehensive vision of immigration. As a Member of Parliament for the riding of York West and as my Party's Immigration critic, it is painfully clear that under the Conservative Government one of the greatest frustrations experienced by Canadians is an inability to sponsor relatives from abroad successfully. Not only must they overcome the aggravation of a lengthy processing time, but at the end of that long road all too many applications are rejected. Canadians are asking themselves why. Four reasons help account for that frustration.

First, under the Tory regime the priority for the family class designation has been lowered substantially. Conversely, under Liberal led Governments, family reunification was the cornerstone of the country's immigration policy. In his announcements of the 1987 levels last October, the Minister, who is still not present in the House, limited and froze the family class proportion to only 30 per cent, whereas under Liberal Governments in the mid-seventies and early 1980s the family class stream ranged from an impressive 45 per cent to 55 per cent of the total program.

Second, last June, the Minister refused the Liberal Party's recommendations, contained in the immigration committee's report on family class immigration, that prospective immigrants who have family in Canada should be awarded additional points under the current point system. The result would often make the difference between a negative and positive determination. We also encouraged the Government to expand the definition of "family" so that brothers and sisters of Canadian citizens could also qualify for priority processing. These recommendations were founded on the principles that as Liberals we believe in the important and relevant role played by the institution of the family within the immigration process. For it is the family in Canada that provides the newcomer with a cultural, linguistic and psychological bridge as well as opportunities for employment, shelter and financial assistance. Consequently, having relatives in the country should be elevated to as an important criterion as other variables, such as education, language and job skills. These reforms would be welcomed by Canadians. They would be far reaching toward easing the frustrations that grip many Canadians.

Third, the Conservatives doubled the number of entrepreneur immigrants permitted into Canada. While we all welcome and recognize the economic benefits of business class immigrants, this category should not develop into the predominant one and create a situation whereby those immigrants, able to pay their way into the country, would be the only or principal benefactors of our system.

In addition, our immigration officers abroad have reported to me personally that as a result of the ambitious, entrepreneurship targets imposed by Ottawa and the extensive work required to review and approve each single business proposal, financial and personnel resources are being shifted away from the family class sector into the business immigration class. The net effect, of course, of the family reunification applications processed is both fewer and slower. This should not occur. Yet the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) allows the practice to continue unchallenged.

The Minister also refused to increase the visa fees for business immigrants, who are more than able and willing to pay a higher rate, so that additional staff could be hired with the extra revenue to facilitate additional business immigrants. Instead, because the entrepreneur and family class applicant both pay the same $125 charge, imposed for the first time in Canada's history by this Conservative Government, we have the absurd situation where the wealthy are being subsidized by the poor and where the family class reunification is being hampered by the entrepreneurship program. It is a reality which is most unfair and in need of immediate reform.

Fourth, the recent targets for immigration levels announced by the Government are misleading. While the Minister increased the target levels, he has not provided our immigration posts abroad with a proportional increase in visa officers who are required to process the additional immigrants. As a result, in 1986, while the target was established at 115,000, projections indicate that we were going to fall short of that figure by some impressive 30,000 individuals.

Therefore, when the Minister announced a further increase for the 1987 levels to 125,000 without allocating additional resources, he was simply being intellectually dishonest with Canadians because these figures will never be realized. If the Government is unwilling to increase resources to match the increased targets, then it should stop playing politics with immigration targets and honestly inform Canadians of the real number of immigrants arriving and allowed to enter Canada.

When these four factors are taken together, it is obvious why such delay and frustration exists within the family class levels. Again, we call upon the Minister and the Government to re-establish the family class reunification stream as the undeniable, unquestionable cornerstone of our immigration program, and further, that he accepts the Liberal Party's recommendations which would serve to relieve the pressures within the family class system and substantially eliminate the frustrations felt by thousands of Canadians each year when they attempt, unsuccessfully, to have their relatives join them in Canada.

With regard to our responsibilities toward the plight of refugees, and as a signator to the 1951 United Nations convention relating to the status of refugees and the 1968 protocol, Canada has developed an honourable tradition of humanitarian assistance to those who are displaced, persecuted and who are fleeing in search of a new home. The proud record, Mr. Speaker, for which Canada recently received the Nansen medal took many years to achieve. It was only made possible with the extensive and warm support of all Canadians.

However, the recent actions of the Tory Government are cause for grave concern. In a few short months, Tory initiatives have begun to undo our country's hard-earned reputation in the area of refugee policy. Canadians are witnessing a Government preoccupied with fabricating a refugee immigration crisis and thereby manipulating public opinion in a desperate attempt to bolster its sagging popularity in every part of the country. The Tories are labelling the current situation as a crisis. On this basis they have advanced the regressive changes announced on February 20. The only crisis is the one which lies on the Government benches, the Tories inability to provide moral leadership and compassion in what is one of the most sensitive and emotional areas of federal public policy.

In past years, Liberal Governments, together with all Canadians have demonstrated their belief in a humane and generous refugee program. Canada has welcomed special refugee movements in an addition to annual quotas in response to crises around the globe. Consider the past acceptance in individual years of some 37,000 Hungarians, 12,000 Czechoslovakians, 7,000 Ugandans, 7,000 South Americans, over 50,000 Vietnamese boat people in the late 1970s and early 1980s, 11,000 Lebanese, 9,300 Poles and 3,000 Salvadorans. How shameful it is in the backdrop of these numbers, approved and taken with open acceptance by Canadians, for a Government which now attempts to create a crisis out of some 85 stranded Chilean refugee women and children in Argentina who, with their husbands and families in Montreal, were caught in transit following the changes of February 20, to have refused them entry into this nation just recently. I submit with all due respect that this is a tactic which is morally bankrupt. Whatever happened to the Prime Minister's announcement of August 19 last year when he said in reference to the plight of refugees " . . . and if we err, we will always err on the side of compassion, and on the side of justice."

Despite yet another shattered commitment from the Government, I and my Party have faith in the judgment and fairness of Canadians. I have every confidence in their genuine desire to overcome the politics of fear and deception. Together with them, the churches and the countless refugee organizations that have strongly protested the direction of the Government, I call upon the Ministers responsible for immigration to stop turning back the clock on the refugee policy, not to return it to the dark ages but, instead, to present and discuss the straight facts before Canadians and involve them in making the appropriate choices that would be fair, sensitive and just to those fleeing persecution, and in the best interests of our country and the international community.

Another significant drawback has been Canada's unwillingness to distinguish between a landed immigrant and a refugee. The circumstances moving these two types of individuals to come to Canada are entirely different. While the immigrant seeks to join his or her family, to improve his or her lifestyle and to start anew, something which is completely legitimate, welcomed and acceptable, the legitimate refugee is escaping persecution, torture or death and is seeking a life of order and security. Yet there is one system through the Immigration Appeal Board dealing with the two types of applicants. The result is a backlog and questionable judgments.

As well, an outdated system is addressing a new phenomenon. In the 1960s and the 1970s, the task was largely limited to selecting our quota of refugees from refugee camps around the world. It was then a relatively simple and effective method. In recent years, however, people have been arriving on our shores claiming refugee status and we lack a system capable of addressing them in a fair, humane and expeditious fashion. The backlog is further aggravated and, to a great extent, the Conservative Government is the architect of its own misfortunes. It has failed to act by establishing a new and independent refugee determination system. Such legislation has been promised for the last two and a half years by no less than four different Ministers of Immigration. The Government's inaction cannot continue.

The Plaut report, the Standing Committee on Immigration, the churches, the refugee organizations, the legal community and interested Canadians have all endorsed the concept of a new structure. The Liberal Party's position for a new refugee determination system with proper safeguards and a strong appeal mechanism is crystal clear and was fully explained and illustrated in a recent minority report. Our model advocated a fair and expeditious hearing, one which would discourage potential abuse of and within the system.

The evidence is clearly in, yet the Government continues to stall and to further complicate the system by tinkering with temporary short-term measures. It makes tough policy stands one day only to be followed by intentions of imposing a general amnesty the next day. The Government is adding layer upon layer of confusion and this is causing Canadians to lose confidence in the entire system. In addition, within such a disorderly and unpredictable atmosphere, it is the legitimate refugee who suffers while the chances for fraudulent applications are greatly improved. This situation must stop and it must stop now. We cannot afford further delay. The Government must introduce reforms immediately.

The third failure is the Government's lack of leadership toward developing a long-term strategy for a progressive immigration policy for Canada, a strategy that would seize immigration as a tool to strengthen national unity and create greater economic prosperity. We need a strategy that sensitizes Canadians to the benefits resulting from immigration, a strategy that addresses our nation's massive landscape and abundant resources, a strategy that accounts for our dwindling birth rate, our aging population, our need for skilled labour and the net outflow of 50,000 Canadians every single year. We need, therefore, to articulate what role immigration can play and how it can best play that role for the future interest of Canada and its future generations.

Of particular importance is the need to communicate the advantages of immigration and to refute some of the prevailing myths. Throughout the century, Canada's birth rate has been gradually declining and particularly so since 1960. The fertility rate in 1976 was 1.8 per family. Over the decade, it has fallen to 1.6 as of 1985. Projections indicate that the birth rate will continue to fall to 1.5 by 1991 and to 1.4 by 1996. By the year 2031, our country will begin to face a sharp decline in population. Such a dwindling birth rate has been considered by many policy-makers as being dangerous to a society such as ours with a relatively small population. I would submit that a coherent immigration policy can help to solve that dilemma.

Conversely, Canada has a rapidly aging population. While this can be claimed as being a victory over mortality and ill health, many studies on the age structure see this as being a social crisis for Canada. The ramifications this will have on our labour and employment needs, our social services, our health and educational institutions and our viable continuing support of a pension system are indeed profound and serious. Once again, immigration can help address this challenge facing Canada.

Regrettably, immigration has been perceived as contributing to unemployment. It is felt that immigrants place a heavy burden on the social service infrastructures. Yet study after study has painted a very different picture.

A major 1986 report entitled "The Employment Effects of Immigration: A Balance Sheet Approach" by John Samuel accounted for jobs created by business immigrants, for jobs created by an increased number of consumers, for the skills immigrants have brought with them to Canada and for the capital and investment they have brought into Canada. The study concluded decisively that between 1983 and 1985, 17,000 more jobs were created in Canada than there were immigrants coming to Canada to fill them in those two years. Another report by the same author found that newcomers to Canada generally found employment relatively soon. A 1980 study demonstrated that immigrants spend fewer weeks on unemployment than their domestic cohorts. As well, statistics reveal that of the 10,000 applications for welfare received each month in the Province of Ontario, it is estimated that only 800 originate from refugees.

Immigration can and does increase domestic demand, worker productivity, economic growth and job creation. In addition, there is the value of the skills of immigrants, skills for which Canada has not had to pay. The investment value of the capital and earnings they bring to our shores further stimulates our national economy. The Government, however, has failed miserably to communicate these aspects of immigration and has ignored the solutions an immigration policy can provide to some of our more pressing and major social and economic challenges. It is a responsibility that the Government must actively and immediately pursue if it is genuinely concerned about its immigration and refugee policies. I invite the Minister to do exactly that.

The history of this country is deeply rooted in the moving and magnificent saga of a people uprooted by circumstance and history who arrived on our shores to an undying promise of hope and purpose. Make no mistake about it, immigration will continue to play an integral role in shaping the Canada of tomorrow. That tomorrow can, however, be clouded by a Conservative Government which today advances a mean-spirited and disjointed immigration and refugee policy. That attitude and approach must change. It is not in keeping with the proud heritage which the Conservative Government received from previous Governments and Canadians at large.

Future legislation must be of a radically different temperament. It must recognize that social progress and social justice are the fulfilment of freedom. It must recognize that one moral obligation of free men and women and free nations is that of employing all our ability in improving the lot of our fellow human beings. Canada must be a leader in the international community in addressing the plight of refugees. It must not by its actions encourage other countries to opt out of collective international agreements arrived at after many years of struggle and debate. It is also essential for the Conservative Government to remember that this year has been designated the International Year of the Homeless. It must ensure that its philosophy, actions, statements, legislation and leadership is guided by that spirit.

Finally, we in this House and in this country must recognize one undeniable reality. History has placed us all within one common border and under one common law. All of us, from the wealthiest and most powerful to the poorest and weakest share one precious position; we are Canadians. Granted, from time to time it is not easy to remember what that means, but in large measure it means to have left the familiar for the unfamiliar. If the Conservative Government continues to deny the stranger among us, it will be denying the very essence of Canada and its future. I look forward to hearing the Ministers responsible for immigration and government Members as well address this motion today. We should be able to leave this Chamber and use the debate as momentum to indicate Parliament's resolve to create a better country today and a better country tomorrow.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On a question or comment, the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly).

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, before directing a question to my colleague concerning his remarks, I should like to say where I stand in this debate. If I may, I want to tell the House that my Lithuanian grandmother and my Polish grandfather came to Canada in 1904. On my father's side however we have been French-speaking Canadians for 200 years. So I might indicate that I am somewhat emotionally divided in this debate, but certain facts did take some significance in the course of my life. This is why I should like to ask my colleague a question about his approach to this issue. He confuses refugee and immigrant, and he refers to the welcoming country which Canada once was and which, as he sees it, is threatened by political changes or quite simply by refugee regulations.

With that in mind I will quote from a February 21, 1987 editorial published in Le Droit and entitled:

So that refugee status might regain its legitimate meaning —and subtitled:

A pause

In his first paragraph Alain Dexter writes:

A Minister of Immigration in a Government which does not rally full public support has to show some courage to take position on an issue such as refugees. Any decision on so impassioned a topic automatically becomes a controversy.

Mr. Speaker, he goes on to say:

—there exists a commercial trade in human misery.

Were the Ottawa Government to accept unconditionally all foreigners anxious to come to this country it would play into the hands of those unscrupulous "travel agents" who exploit the naivete of people who seek to better their living conditions by looking for a piece of land where prosperity, they are assured, is a sure thing.

And further on:

Some people accuse the Mulroney Government of betraying a long-standing Canadian tradition—

In fact, Ottawa is doing nothing more than reverting to the practice followed by the previous Liberal administration.

So I should like to hear what my colleague has to say, knowing as I do that he is quite sincere. He is the son of an immigrant. I am the granddaughter of immigrants, and I should like to have a truly serious response, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I fully appreciate the family history of the Hon. Member for Gatineau. I think she is sincere, as most members are sincere, in relating her family history. However, it was not this Member of Parliament for York West who lumped immigrants and refugees together. What I was attempting to do in the time allotted to me was make the Government aware of the position it is putting immigrants and refugees in when it lumps them together in one stream. We cannot allow the Immigration Appeal Board to judge the immigration application of someone's grandmother from Holland and at the same time deal with refugee applicants from El Salvador. The two are very different. Unless we separate the two, we will not only create a backlog, we will also be making erroneous judgments in life and death matters. It is my duty and the duty of the Government to distinguish between the two and give us a system to deal with them independently. That would be much more fair to both groups and would resolve the frustration many Canadians experience in their attempts to have relatives join them in this country.

The Hon. Member referred to an editorial which suggested that Canada cannot allow everyone from all corners of the world to enter Canada unconditionally. I hope she is not suggesting that I or my Party believe that we can. Everyone knows we cannot accept the 15 million refugees searching for a home around the world. However, what we can do, and what Government has done in the past, is play our role and provide leadership to the international community. If we opted out, as we seem to be doing, given some of the regressive moves introduced by the Government, we will be sending a signal to the Great Britains and Switzerlands of the world that they, too, can opt out. They will use Canada as justification for their actions. If Canada can do it, and it is in the forefront, then we can as well.

The corner-stone of our policy has always been family reunification. That is what Canadians want. That is what they had. My father entered this country with $30 in his pocket. He was able to build a life, educate his children, buy a home, start a small business, and become a proud, loyal and contributing Canadian.

We on this side of the House are suggesting that while we need to take in more business immigrants to help us build a stronger economy, the country will also be built in the future by immigrants who have neither dollars nor investments. Given the opportunity, they will help to enhance and develop this country so that it will become even bigger and better than it is today.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for his answer, but I would remind him that I also asked a question concerning the editorial sentence which reads:

> In fact, Ottawa is doing nothing more than reverting to the practice followed by the previous Liberal administration.

This is why I am wondering.

Mr. Prud'homme: What practice?

Mrs. Mailly: It is explained in the editorial. I quote:

> the practice . . . of having betrayed a long-standing tradition by repealing its policy under which refugee status claimants were not deported.

It says that the practice existed before, and that it was a practice of the previous Liberal administration. Would Mr. Dexter be wrong?

[English]

Mr. Marchi: The Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) should have listened more attentively to my speech. We are not talking about returning to the practice of past Liberal Governments because the phenomenon of refugees has changed. In the 1960s and 1970s Canada played its role by going to the refugee camps and selecting a quota of refugees which would best integrate into this society. That method was very clean, clear and effective. However, in the last several years some refugees have not been waiting for our visa officers to visit them in Bangkok, the Philippines or Hong Kong. They are arriving on our shores by sea and by air, sometimes coming across the American border.

The system we used in the 1960s and 1970s was right for that time, but we are now living in the 1980s. We are asking the Government to put in place a system which can meet the needs of the refugees of today. Only then will we be able to build upon the heritage and traditions of yesteryear. If the Member for Gatineau suggests that we should return to the systems of yesteryear, she will be placing her Government in an even more precarious position because that is to say that we should get refugees only from the refugee camps and close our borders. That is not our position.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I commend the Hon. Member for the motion he has introduced. I will have more to say about it later. Would he expand a little on his comments with regard to the Government's recent actions which he finds unfortunate? Would he comment on what he thinks may be the reason for the Government's action? Would he also comment on whether there are similar patterns of action in governments of the United States and western Europe?

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I thank the NDP immigration critic for that question. As he well knows, on February 20 the Government moved, in our estimation, in a regressive way. I said that the actions were disturbing and disconcerting because one of the actions was to remove the B-1 list from our immigration policy. That was a list of 18 countries developed with Canadians and External Affairs offices abroad. We said that the situations of humanity in those countries were too fierce to deport individuals. Overnight, and apparently without consulting External Affairs, the Government removed those countries from the list and said that individuals from those countries must now apply within the process. The Government has thrown away a number of years of work in producing that list for maximum protection.

When that list was in place individuals from the Soviet Union, as an example, would not be deported and, therefore, were not placed through our refugee stream. By eliminating the list the Government is placing in that refugee determination system thousands of people who otherwise would not have gone through it. Therefore, in addition to it being unfair, the backlog has been increased.

In addition, the Government has touted an agreement which it supposedly has with the United States. To this day we have not seen one line on one piece of paper showing conclusively that there is an agreement between the two Governments. Perhaps in their upcoming meeting the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his friend, President Reagan, can elaborate for Canadians on whether such a legal and binding agreement in fact exists. If it does not, they should tell Canadians.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard).

Supply

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I think it is unfortunate that today's subject for debate is immigration, since the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) is not in the House and in fact is out of town. I think he would have made a very constructive contribution since, his knowledge of the daily operations of the department, he would have provided the kind of information that I think would have been of interest to Hon. Members on both sides of the House.

In any case, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate, because I believe we all realize the importance of this issue and of the various points raised in the motion presented by the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi).

In my opinion, Canada will have many challenges to meet in the years to come, especially with respect to immigration, which has always been, and still is, an important factor of our economic and social life.

The present Government is now giving immigration a new orientation which I believe will better serve the cultural, social and economic interests of the Canadian society.

[English]

In this regard, Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by saying a few words about future immigration levels. Last November my colleague, the Minister of State for Immigration, announced levels for 1987 of 115,000 to 125,000 new Canadians. This is an increase of 10,000 to 20,000 from 1986. Our reason for increasing immigration levels is fundamental. Canada needs immigrants. We need the growth and enterprise the immigrants represent.

This not an isolated gesture. We have increased the level every year since coming into power. We have sought out new Canadians who can build the economy. We have made room for refugees from camps overseas. We have increased family reunification flows and made the procedures simpler. The Government understands and supports the importance of an immigration policy which emphasizes economic, social and demographic growth.

Mr. Speaker, this Government believes and has always maintained that far from taking away jobs from Canadians, whatever they may be, and I think this is fundamental in this debate, immigrants create jobs. Basically, they bring in capital. They set up businesses. They stimulate consumer spending. No other Government has worked so hard to make Canadians aware of the positive impact of immigration on our economy.

In setting immigration levels, both social factors and humanitarian considerations are taken into account. Family reunification is and will continue to be the cornerstone of the immigration program. We are always extremely diligent in reuniting families separated by vast distances.

Forty-five thousand immigrants in that class will be admitted to Canada in 1987.

• (1200)

[English]

In charting this course, we placed unprecedented emphasis on the consultation process. Last year our consultations involved more than 600 groups, including non-governmental immigrant, church and community organizations; provincial and territorial Governments; other federal Departments; and experts in immigration and demography.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we are putting more emphasis on consensus. In December, we sent some important documents to volunteer organizations and the private sector. In those documents we outlined a number of measures aimed at improving the process for consulting with the private sector on immigration levels.

Mr. Speaker, we received many replies, which contained some valid proposals, both regarding the process itself and some specific factors that should be considered in determining future immigration levels.

We fully intend to maintain and refine the practical and compassionate method we are using to set immigration levels in the years to come.

[English]

This consultative process has prompted the Government to increase immigration levels over those set by the previous administration. Contrast this with the decline in announced levels from 130,000 in 1982 down to 90,000 in 1984.

With the Government's first level announcement in 1984, we moved to increase immigration in a moderate and controlled manner. Let the numbers speak for themselves. In 1985, we increased the levels from 85,000 to 90,000; in 1986, from 105,000 to 115,000; and 1987, from 115,000 to 125,000. This simply demonstrates our strong commitment to bring more immigrants to this country.

Mr. Speaker, as far as established levels are concerned, we shall not only maintain a humanitarian attitude towards refugees but we will go further. Canada will admit 17,000 refugees in 1987. Of that number, 12,000 will be sponsored by the Government.

Furthermore, Canada is co-operating closely with international organizations dedicated to the cause of refugees, including the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the International Red Cross, which receive major contributions from this country.

Mr. Speaker, I think Hon. Members are aware that recent events have posed a serious challenge to the Government's refugee policy. The aim of our response has been basically to maintain the credibility of the Canadian government policy. With this in mind, on February 20 we adopted a set of temporary measures—the operative word is indeed temporary—to control arrivals of claimants and to minimize abuse of the system. We have always said, in the House and elsewhere, that these measures were basically aimed at controlling abuse of the system and thus protecting the bone fide refugee.

[English]

Canadians appreciate, even if certain Members of the House choose not to, that these measures to stem the flow of illegal claimants do not signal a move away from the basic humanitarian thrust of Canada's immigration policy. On the contrary, they seek to preserve the integrity of that policy for bona fide refugees. The Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) says that the Government has created confusion and it accuses us of lack of vision.

Mr. Speaker, we are not creating a state of confusion, on the contrary.

Admittedly, the situation is difficult and unprecedented: the facts of immigration have changed and 50 million people in various parts of the world are looking for a land of refuge. This is an international political fact, but not specifically a fact of our immigration policy. Indeed, it is because of the concerns of this Government for genuine refugees that we believed at the time and still believe that the action we took was necessary.

Let us talk about the control measures. While this term might seem frightening and likely to describe a mechanism used to restrict freedom, I believe that some control was necessary. These measures not only show that it is unfair—and I emphasize this basic fact, Mr. Speaker—it is unfair to process the claims of people who ask for refugee status without justification when tens of thousands of people ask to immigrate, and I am indeed talking about immigration, through legal channels, but these measures also indicate that Canada alone cannot solve the problem of international economic disparities.

Mr. Speaker, no government can allow the refugee status process as a subterfuge to allow people to usurp the immigrant status, for which they must basically apply.

[English]

Significant reforms are currently before Cabinet and new legislation will soon be introduced in the House reflecting commitment, fairness and efficiency. The Government's record in this regard is indisputable.

In addition to developing this expansionist, enlightened legislation for the future, we have already put in place the most sweeping quality of service changes ever seen in immigration operations. Canadians seeking to bring relatives to Canada can now deal with increasingly streamlined, efficient offices, radically different from the neglected and outmoded standard of service only a few years ago.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, most Members of this House are probably aware of the excellent work carried out by the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration chaired by the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), which Committee made 59 recommendations. The importance of providing a quality service to the public, the consolidation of the administrative methods on which officers base their decisions, the acceleration and improvement of the family reunification process for close family members who already have relatives in Canada.

[English]

This Government was quick to respond to the recommendations of this all parliamentary committee, adopting more than 50 of its recommendations. Before, a sponsor had to visit a Canada Immigration Centre to sponsor a relative abroad. We are conducting pilot projects on the benefits of doing this by mail. We are actively pursuing other means to ensure that family reunification is dealt with more expeditiously overseas. Decisions will be rendered within months, instead of years, as was too often the case. In order to do this, we will take advantage of modern technologies and eliminate unnecessary steps.

[Translation]

As for processing each claim in the substantial backlog accumulated under the Liberal Government, matters are now progressing well. We are now dealing with the increasing number of claims filed in Canada in an orderly and timely manner. While the number has been high, we have responded to each claim in an orderly and timely fashion.

[English]

In short, we have dealt and we continue to deal head on with the variety of immediate immigration issues, as well as with the legacy of neglect inherited from the previous Government. We are also addressing the long-term implications of immigration as no other government has. Although they have come in record numbers, we have responded in a manner that has allowed orderly processing and timely attention to everyone seeking assistance.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member describes the immigration policy as confused. The fact is, and I believe that this is important—

• (1210)

[English]

We have to remember that a government must settle a problem with firmness and equity. That the Liberals have never done. I think this is something which could create confusion, but I also think Canadians are fully aware of what we have done and support fully the Government.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, Canadians understand our commitment to immigration, to genuine refugees and to our humanitarian traditions. They understand that this Government makes decisions which will benefit Canada, as well as all Canadians now and those who will apply for citizenship in the future, both in the short and the long term.

Mr. Speaker, this country has a proud tradition of welcoming people from around the world. We shall maintain and emphasize this tradition in coming years.

[English]

We are making the tough decisions both in the long-term and short-term. Let me assure the House that we will continue to make these decisions in the days ahead.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister a number of questions. The policies of the Government are certainly tough and they are not humane. They do not, in my estimation, meet with the long-term goals of Canadians, once Canadians are given the straight goods, and the straight goods alone, and they are far from fair to those who legitimately seek entry into this country.

The Minister spent quite a bit of time speaking about increasing the immigration levels and targets. Can he tell the House why, when the Government has increased the target levels, it has not increased the resources to allow our ministries abroad to increase their production, as it were, in order that those numbers can be realized? In 1986 the Minister said the Government was going to allow 115,000 persons into the country, but predictions had only 80,000 to 85,000 people coming into the country. The Minister should answer that question in terms of correlating the resources and the target. The Government can have one million as a target but if it does not attach sufficient visa officers to those posts, it will still be processing 80,000.

The Government talks about family class reunification. Why did the Government's figure of 45,000 only represent 30 per cent of the entire immigration program? In the 1970s and the 1980s it was as high as 55 per cent. Out of those 59 recommendations, I support and compliment the Government on the 50 it approved, but it refused the more far-reaching and implicating type of recommendations, such as increasing the points for people having families here and increasing the definition of family. Why were those recommendations rejected?

Where is the agreement with the United States of February 20? Is it legal? Is it binding or is it a glorified statement between officials of both countries? Why did the Government remove the B-1 list without consultations as was specified by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark)?

When is the legislation for a new refugee determination program which was promised going to be introduced? With all due respect, the Minister's predecessor suggested that we would have it immediately after the Plaut report in 1985. The Minister of State (Mr. Crombie) said it would be the fall of 1986. Then it was Christmas of 1986, then January of 1987, this year. Then it was February. We are now in March. Can the Minister tell the House and those groups across the country who are very interested and frustrated with the Government's promises in the last two years, when Canadians can anticipate new legislation so that the work can really begin?

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Speaker, I would like to start with the last question about when the new legislation will be brought forward. It certainly will be done a lot quicker than when the Liberals were in charge. The previous Government took three or four years and came up with only two reports regarding the question of refugees and immigration. I do not believe the Liberals had the courage at that time to face what we face today. They always put off any decision about immigration. They decreased the level of immigration, and that is all they did in 1982. I can tell them that in 1985, 45 per cent of immigrants accepted in Canada are family reunification. We do understand. When I talk about bringing the legislation in pretty soon, I say to my colleague quite frankly that I hope it could be within the next two or three weeks. I say I "hope" because there are many reasons for the delay, the first one being the complexities of this House.

The Hon. Member asks about the agreement with the United States. I know of the Hon. Member's commitment and the commitment of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). I do not want to play the kind of game where we put the refugees at the United States border with more problems than they already have. I can tell the Hon. Member we have all the guarantees. It is not a question of signatures and so on. We have the guarantee, and I challenge my hon. friend to tell me one person who was deported from the United States before requesting the status of the refugee at the Canadian border? It has not happened, and I do not want it to happen. If it does happen, I hope I will be informed by the Hon. Member or by someone else.

Concerning the whole immigration policy, it is my view, following the Hawkes Committee report which was submitted to us by all the people involved, I believe, that actually Canada is asking for just two things: first, that general immigration levels be raised, and, if possible, pretty soon I will strongly recommend to Cabinet that they be raised to 150,000, perhaps 175,000 immigrants a year, and that we be provided with the resources needed to implement that. I am convinced that Canada must not only maintain its immigration levels, but that it definitely must raise them.

As I said, what Canada needs is not just a political formula, I have always said and I will always repeat that Canada was born, developed and enriched by immigration. And Canada can go on doing it. However, this must be done in an orderly fashion and within parameters determined by the Government of Canada, rather than by way of measures that would not respect them.

Again, it is my view that within that process, and I think that the Committee last year proposed—I stand to be corrected if I am wrong—a particular section, a specific part relating to family reunification. I think that is an excellent recommendation. We were not ready at that point to respond, but there certainly will be recommendations I would think will be made in that direction for the development of our future policy.

Once more, Mr. Speaker, it is my view that the Conservative Government's immigration policy is a consistent one, basically a policy evolving from parameters which respect it.

I will never accept that such a policy be managed on the basis of exceptions. I am just as sensitive as the Hon. Member to the question of refugees, having lived as I have, in the last three months, those events in a very intense way. But as I said, it is my view that this country will not accept that people should, using mechanisms other than those provided by the Act, enter into Canada and take the place of thousands of immigrants who run the risk of not being accepted themselves for lack of being refugees—resort to subterfuge, and take a roundabout way of entering Canada. All refugees, all genuine refugees who apply to Canada will be accepted. Those who are not, and this is a method that has been used far too long already, those who are not will unfortunately have to go through the standard procedure, seeking immigrant status or whatever.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I have two short questions which I would like to ask the Minister. In 1986 the total number of immigrants who entered Canada, including refugees, fell 6,000 short of the Government's minimum target. The minimum target was 105,000, while the maximum was 115,000. The total number of immigrants admitted was 99,000, even though the Government had been warned that the new point system was too restrictive. I want to ask the Minister why the Government did not correct that restriction.

My second question is the following. Nine months ago in its report to the then Minister the standing committee proposed that an information package containing the information needed to complete an application for immigration be given either in Canada to the sponsor of the applicant or to the applicant himself overseas. Thus far little or nothing has been done about those suggestions which would have speeded up the process at no significant cost. In fact, there would have been a saving in terms of time in respect of interviews. I want to ask the Minister why nothing has been done.

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Speaker, will the Hon. Member specify what he means by "restriction" in his first question?

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, the number of points required was increased from 50 to 70 out of 100, making it nearly impossible for a great many applicants to succeed. Over 180,000 people made the initial inquiry in 1986. Yet we did not even fill the modest number proposed by the Minister's predecessor. That is one restriction.

The other restriction is that the number of points attributable to family relationship was cut from 30 to 15. Therefore applicants were reduced in their ability to meet a standard that had been increased by 40 per cent. It is no wonder that the Minister fell short of his target.

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Speaker, this is something about which I would like to look at further in light of the fact that we dealt with a smaller number of immigrants in 1982. The number of people we had on staff at that time was in relation to the number of applicants we had to process. The increased level of immigrant processing does not have to be dealt with with the same efficiencies that were in place at that time. It is possible to improve, and I spoke about that in my speech. We have already improved a great many different parts of the process. I agree with my friend that it has to be possible to improve.

In terms of the main target, we do not want to say that we will accept 120,000 immigrants and accept 100,000. We want to accept 120,000 immigrants. We will consider all the ways by which we can do this. At the same time this is something upon which we can improve. Once again, in 1982, 1983 and 1984 we dealt with 70,000 people. The Hon. Member realizes the complexity of the system. It is not always easy to improve the services and the efficiencies in the great number of offices that we have as quickly as we decide to increase the number of immigrants.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the Minister said that the previous Government put off the question of refugees. Is the Minister aware that in 1982 the Liberal Government admitted three special movements of refugees? It admitted 9,344 Poles following the Solidarity crisis; 3,024 refugees from El Salvador; and 2,501 refugees from Iran. These were all special movements which were taken into consideration in addition to the regular flow of refugees. Just before 1979, with the crisis in Lebanon, some 11,321 Lebanese were admitted. After the Vietnam war in 1975 some 9,060 Vietnamese were admitted into Canada. In terms of Ugandan Asians, in 1973 some 7,069 were admitted. After the Czechoslovakian problem in 1969 some 11,943 Czechs were admitted into Canada. Following the Hungarian crisis in 1957 the Government admitted 37,149 Hungarians. These figures are what led Canada to its receiving the Nansen Medal last year. Why does the Minister not follow the good example that we set in recent years and provide for special movements instead of cancelling them? Why does he not keep up with the record that we established?

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that I was not referring to numbers. I was referring to two reports which were tabled during the time the Hon. Member's Government was in power and to one report tabled since we took office. The Hon. Member's Party never had the courage to deal with those two reports. This is not a question of numbers; it is a question of making a very tough decision. The Government of the Hon. Member decided not to deal with the question of refugees but rather to deal with the matter by exception. That is the reality which we face today as a result of his Government. Members of the Opposition want me to deal with the refugee issue by exception. There is always an exception somewhere. Just two weeks ago there was a matter involving Chileans, and last week another involving Lebanese. I am sympathetic to the causes, but at the same time we have to be sure that these people are refugees. It is not the Minister who decides if they are refugees or not. It was decided at the time that they were not refugees. The Government of the Hon. Member did not have the courage to deal with changes in refugee and immigration policies. That is what I meant.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend my colleague, the Liberal Party critic for immigration, the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), for the introduction of this motion. It provides a good basis for debate. The main point of it is to condemn the state of confusion in which the Government has maintained our immigration policy, particularly the frustration experienced by a large number of Canadians who are unable to sponsor successfully their family members as immigrants and the recent actions which undercut—I would say reverse—Canada's humanitarian assistance and protection for refugees who are legitimately seeking protection in Canada.

First, I want to say that during the debate not only of the last few weeks and months but of the last two or three years I have become aware that there are many men and women of goodwill in all three Parties in the House who are concerned for both immigrants and refugees and who recognize more and more that these are two distinct matters not to be confused with each other. I hope today's debate will contribute to resolving the difficult problems that we have to face. I wish to talk more about the problems than about the possible erroneous attitudes of the Government, even though that subject cannot be entirely set aside. I wish to talk about the history of our immigration policy since World War II.

Second, I wish to talk about the recent attempts which I think will reverse that policy.

Third, I wish to deal with the strong push from Canadians who insist that we not only continue our policy but extend it further and improve it.

Fourth, I want to talk about specific recommendations on that matter. The recommendations which I favour, in line with large bodies of Canadian opinion, are not only my own personal opinion, nor are they the personal opinions of members of our caucus. They were endorsed, if not unanimously then by overwhelming and uncontested vote, at the biannual convention of the NDP a few days ago with the following resolution: "Be it resolved that the NDP strongly condemns the Conservative Government's February 20, 1987 guidelines on the treatment of people who come to Canada to seek protection as refugees; and be it further resolved that the NDP endorses a refugee determination process that is speedy, fair and accessible to all and which ensures the safety of those who seek refuge in Canada".

To develop the first point I mentioned, after World War II Canada greatly increased our immigration policy. In fact, the population of Canada more than doubled since that time. While it was not all due to refugees—we had the baby boom—we took in many hundreds of thousands of refugees at that time. We developed, as has been said, as the corner-stone of that policy the principle of family reunification. We also brought in independent workers. Many of the manual workers in the factory where I served for 18 years came in at that time. We also brought in skilled workers, although many of them did not get skilled jobs here, and we also brought in immigrants with lots of money. It was one of the criteria used, however informally. I will not go into the political selection that was carried on at that time, which is being documented even now.

The refugees who were mostly selected—and perhaps beginning in the sixties a few were allowed to seek asylum in Canada and to make their claim here—were slowly recognized as a distinct group. Distinct practices, regulations and, eventually, legislation were developed. The United Nations played a vital part in that by developing the principle of asylum, the principle that a refugee is a person with a well-founded fear of persecution for race, nationality, religion, political opinion, or social group. In the five years following World War II, and into the fifties, that criterion was worked out among a large number of the nations of the United Nations, and documents were signed legally, in international law, binding countries including Canada to observe those principles.

Since then, as has been pointed out, Canada has received many thousands and many tens of thousands of refugees, sometimes in large numbers in a short time—and it has done it willingly—from Europe, from Uganda, and from Vietnam.

The rationale for that appears to be that it was in one sense the final stage of the European conquest of North America, doubling the population almost entirely of Europeans in the country. Second, it was also a magnificent source of cheap labour. I remember one of the immigrants in the factory telling me—and he could laugh about it because it was years past—that he was lucky enough when he came over to meet a fellow countryman from his own village who had a construction company and took him to work in his truck every day for a year, until the immigrant learned enough English to find out that he was being paid less than the minimum wage. That happened thousands if not millions of times, and it is still happening.

A third part of the rationale clearly is that we developed a humane principle, the principle that every human being has a right to be protected and that every state in the world—at least every state which signed the UN Declaration as has Canada—has an obligation to ensure that protection, not to close the door and say "go somewhere else".

In the publication Refugees from the UNHCR, the special issue on Asylum in Canada, a very good point was made. It says that it is remarkable "the international community still maintains an agency responsible for the defence of individuals in their relations with states." In other words, the refugee law of the United Nations protects every individual in the world, to the extent that it makes it a duty of other states, if necessary, to protect an individual against his own Government. It continues:

> In 1986 a Group of Governmental Experts' report identified "coerced movements" as sufficiently reflecting the rationale for refugee flight. It is compulsion in a wide sense, including war and armed conflict, which induces flight in fear for life, liberty and security.

They are broadening the definition of "persecution" to fit the facts of our time.

It continues:

> UNHCR is a human rights organization in the sense that these basic human values are central to its organizational ethic.

It was very important that we developed that understanding. It would be very unfortunate to have it reversed. That appears to be what may be happening now, and the question is, why?

We have been told that there is a backlash. The Minister himself referred to the backlash in statements at the beginning of January, and he has built on that story which he told us. On January 8—and this was published in Refugees internationally— the Minister said, "we must face up to the reality that two-thirds or three-quarters of the people", meaning the people who come claiming status here, "abuse the system". That is false. The committee, in studying the matter, found that at least 50 per cent of the claimants were in fact either bona fide refugees or had a bona fide claim to humanitarian consideration. In fact, more than half the Chileans, more than half the Salvadorans, and more than half the Guatemalans who applied to our country have been found to be refugees. To slander all of them as being in majority false claimants is in fact promoting the very backlash some people have called racist.

It is very unfortunate that the Government, not just the Minister but senior officials, talked for years about queue jumpers and cheaters as though all refugee claimants were nothing but immigrants trying to get ahead of other people in the line. It is very unfortunate that they have encouraged, whatever their intention was, such a backlash. In fact, two years ago Canadian officials took a leading part in demanding that the countries of western Europe should collude with each other to shut the doors to refugee claimants. Canada's action in the United Nations High Commission Executive was to demand a "get tough" policy with refugee claimants. That is a disgrace to Canada.

We must recognize that our humanitarian policies going beyond the strict definition of refugee were dictated by what Canadians felt was good reason that a person should not be forced to return to the U.S.S.R.; after the Khomeini revolution or coup, a person should not be forced to return to Iran; by the same token, during the period of martial law against Solidarnosc people should not be forced to return to Poland; and, likewise, people should not be forced to return to El Salvador.

We have had no assurance from the Government that in any of those countries, or in any of the others on the list of 18, the situation has changed so that it is safe to force people to return there. In other words, the policy which the Government is now following is a policy of saying: "We will accept refugees only by selection overseas, only if they measure up to our needs for immigrants, whether it is for manual labour, mental labour, or any other purpose". We will not take refugees, is the Government's clear intention, except when we find they serve our purpose. They are to be kept at a distance, thousands of miles, until we give the signal to accept them.

A very foul example of this kind of misleading propaganda against refugees is to be found in The Saturday Star for March 21, 1987. On the front page is an article written by Gordon Barthos. He went to Salvador to find out why Salvadoran refugees were coming. His opening statement is that last year Salvadoran refugees cost Canadian taxpayers $11 million. He begins right away to attack them simply for being here. Then he asks why. He goes on to suggest that the first cause is the earthquake. That is so patently false because, although the big flow of Salvadorans started almost at the very same time as the earthquake, they were coming from the United States, not from Salvador. I am sure the reporter knows that and I am sure his editors know it. It gets worse, Mr. Speaker. He goes on to say:

> Before rattled Salvadorans had time to recover from Wednesday's tremor, rebels raced through the city spraying machine-gun fire at several political targets.

In a half page story this so-called news reporter has not one word of acknowledgement of the billions of dollars which the United States has spent to arm and supervise the military of El Salvador in its war against the Salvadoran people by its intensive bombing of civilian villages and the assassinations by government-sponsored death squads. There is not one word in this whole misleading article. Then Mr. Barthos talks about the trickle of Salvadoran political refugees turning into a torrent. Six thousand people is a torrent when we took nearly 100,000 refugees from Vietnam? Mr. Barthos is trying to mislead the public. He goes on to write:

> Canadian officials in Central America say deported Salvadorans face no risk of persecution in returning.

That is false, Mr. Speaker. If the reporter had examined the report done by the American Civil Liberties Union, he would know that there are documented cases of murdered returned refugees and that other reports show it to be very difficult to find most of the returned refugees when people go looking for them. They may be there, but nobody knows, and nobody knows what has happened to them.

Mr. Barthos comes close to the truth without actually hitting it when he says:

> The war since 1980 has left 60,000 dead and a million displaced;—

He ignores, of course, universally attested statement that it is primarily the Government that has killed those people. The article goes on that the war has:

> —caused $2 billion damage to the economy;—

He says people are forced to work for $4 a day wages. He implies that because, and only because, they are forced to work for $4 a day wages and that therefore they are coming to Canada as economic migrants and not as genuine refugees. His whole article denies the truth of persecution in El Salvador. This is the same paper which, with crocodile tears, published an editorial last Wednesday saying we should help the refugees.

The majority of Canadians have no use for such false propaganda. The Canadian Council of Churches representing the major denominations of the Protestant religion in Canada have called for a program in which the refugee claimant would arrive at the border and immediately be sent for an appointment with the refugee board. He would have a hearing at the refugee board with counsel if he wished. There would be a quick review of any negative decisions, not another hearing, and the individual would have a chance to add any further information. The whole thing would be done in about three months. The Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops have said:

> We wish to join with other community organizations and church groups in expressing shock and deep concern following the adoption of restrictive refugee measures, as recently announced by the Minister of Immigration.

That was written on February 25, 1987, speaking about the Minister's action on February 20. They say that the Government of Canada:

> —must fulfill its commitments and grant asylum to all refugees, as defined by the terms of the Geneva Convention.

The Canadian Jewish Congress has taken the same stand endorsing what they call the "Hawkes model" which provides for universal access and a right to a review on the merits of all cases.

The CSN—

The CSN said on February 27, 1987.

> The right of asylum must be recognized, respected and protected. If persecuted people in this world are to have a way of escaping such situations, the right to seek refuge must actually exist. Any open policy is subject to abuse—it is incumbent upon us to find an effective procedure to discourage and fight such abuse. We therefore request:
> (1) that the right of asylum be fully maintained;
> (2) that the centres for applying for refugee status be maintained, and that the staff concerned be increased.

And, item 8

> (8) that the CSN make representations to the federal Government for the repeal of the three measures recently adopted that change refugee access to Canada.

[English]

The Canadian Labour Congress has demanded that the Government re-establish the B-1 list and that it take measures to speed up the determination process and guarantee that claimants will not be returned to Guatemala or El Salvador. It has demanded that the Government take special measures to ensure Chileans are not unduly singled out as they were by name in the Government's regulation for transit. It was specifically directed against Chileans. The Congress goes on that the Government should reverse the policy of staff cutbacks in the federal Public Service. In other words, to allow that the good work be done. It wants the Government to ensure that funds are made available to those provinces which are faced with large numbers of refugee claimants so that humanitarian and legal needs of these persons can be met without an unfair drain on provincial resources.

The Canadian Auto Workers write:

> We call on the Canadian Government to rescind recent measures directed against refugees. We further call on the Government to resist the temptation to play to one of Canada's most unpleasant galleries: the nativist Canadian element including Government Members, who arouse public passions in spite of their own immigrant roots.

There are many other groups who have endorsed this position. I want to speak about what it means to them. They represent millions of people. First, they want a society based on a commitment to mutual obligations rather than on force or on the advantage of money. Founded on that, they want solid human rights recognized, such as the right of asylum with no turning away from the person in need. What they have said in effect is that what we deny to others we implicitly deny to ourselves. What we wish for ourselves, we must extend to others.

Finally, this calls for a fair division of the labour and wealth of this world. Instead of using those people in El Salvador to run factories for Canada or the U.S. at $4 a day wages and insisting they stay there and work, with their union leaders shot, their co-op leaders shot, their church leaders shot, such as Archbishop Romero, for starvation wages for our benefit, we have to seek a fair division of the world's wealth and work so that those people will stay in the country they love and be able to live there, work there and be our neighbors.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief comment to make. I was very surprised and indeed shocked that this motion should be introduced today in view of the fact that the number of immigrants admitted to Canada since 1984 has been greatly in excess of the number admitted in the previous two years. This has been a pro-immigration Government which has recognized how immigration has been part of the Canadian story and has a positive contribution to make to the life of Canada.

As I understand it, the Government is attempting not to close off immigration or to reduce it, not to close off our borders to legitimate refugees, but to have a rational immigration policy that gives a fair chance to all who are legitimately seeking admission to Canada. I find that the changes in the regulations affecting immigration have received the most strenuous support from members of ethnic minorities in my own community.

I regret very much the reference to something called nativism. I believe that the support for the Government's policy is nowhere stronger than among the ethnic minorities who have been outraged that so many people waiting their turn, going through the legal process to gain admission to this country, have apparently found others getting ahead of them in the line. I believe that it remains part of the commitment of the Government that every legitimate refugee who is truly fleeing from persecution will still find asylum in Canada and the refuge that has been part of the Canadian tradition.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I note that the Hon. Member did not ask a question. Perhaps that is because he knew the answer. I am sure the Hon. Member will recognize the following statement if he has read this month's issue of the Canadian Churchman:

> "We are of the opinion that Canadians want a policy in relation to refugees that is generous, but just,"—

This comes after the article indicates that "the current government policy is unjust, unworkable and unconstitutional". The article goes on:

> "We need a better process," he said. "Immigration officials are not the appropriate people to decide if a person who claims to be a refugee is, in fact, one.

The article goes on:

> "The days when we go off to refugee camps to select people to be admitted are over," he said. "The new situation is that refugees will arrive on our shores and at our airports. That phenomenon will not disappear and the government must enact procedures to deal with it."

I hope the Hon. Member is in communion with that sense.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I was curious to hear from my hon. friend about the union movement. In my speech, I indicated that one of the myths that has been allowed to continue is that somehow immigrants increase unemployment and take away jobs from native Canadians. I also indicated that studies clearly show that not only do immigrants not take away jobs but they create them; a general impetus of a healthy national economy.

Perhaps the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) could share with me the viewpoints of union leaders across Canada who are affiliated very closely with his Party. Perhaps he could tell the House about their thinking on the economic equation as it relates to our policy of immigration and refugees vis-à-vis employment opportunities and the needs that exist within the labour market at present.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I would be very pleased to report to the Hon. Member that the position of the Canadian Labour Congress for some years has been to redouble our efforts for family reunification and for refugees. The Congress recognizes problems that have been associated with immigration in the past including those to which I and the Hon. Member referred. The mistreatment of immigration workers has the effect also of weakening the position of earlier immigrants and Canadian-born workers. In other words, the congress is wary of how immigrants are used to cut wages or to create unsafe working conditions because of their desperate need. Nevertheless, it has said that we should redouble our efforts for family reunification and for the refugees.

I do not know if the Hon. Member was listening, but I quoted strong statements from the CSN, the Canadian Labour Congress and Canadian auto workers. I also could have referred to strong statements from the Toronto Labour Council and the Ontario Federation of Labour but I did not have the time to do so in 20 minutes. The labour movement strongly supports a generous refugee policy and a generous family reunification policy.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend my colleague for the very enlightened approach he took in his speech. He pointed out the falsehoods in the story in The Saturday Star and he said that Canadians have no use for that kind of false propaganda. Earlier he referred to a false statement made by the Minister who had claimed that up to two-thirds of the refugee claimants were bogus and then detailed the fact that that was a false statement. Does the Hon. Member have any idea why the Minister would make a statement like that when the facts are completely different? Does the Minister not know the facts? If he does know the facts, why does he not come clean? Why does he try to present a false picture?

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, as I said at the beginning, in this debate there are men and women of good will from all Parties. I recognize that only a few months ago the Minister took responsibility for the portfolio of immigration as well as employment. Therefore, he is at the mercy of senior officials who give him their select information and their views. These are the officials who went to a meeting in Geneva in October 1984, the minutes of which record that "the Canadian delegation called upon the High Commissioner of refugees to undertake to study the issue of irregular migration of refugees in its broadest aspects, focusing on identifying the flows, both the source and the destination, the question of fraudulent documentation and associated issues". In other words, Canadian immigration officials have been campaigning for several years to restrict the entry of refugees into Canada. They have not been ashamed to use the newspapers as outlets for their misleading propaganda. I regret that they may have had some effect on the Minister, considering the tremendous responsibilities he undertook last year when he took on the super-large portfolio of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

FINANCE

EFFECT OF TAX ON POTATO CHIP INDUSTRY

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his recent Budget piled more and more hidden taxes on low and middle-income families. In addition, the Budget imposed a 12 per cent tax on potato chips.

I recently received a copy of a letter that the Manager of the Prince Edward Island Potato Chip Co-operative wrote to the Minister. The Manager wrote, "The P.E.I. Potato Chip Co-operative was founded in May, 1986, and expects to start commercial production in two weeks time." He told the Minister the 12 per cent tax is causing them immense concern. It threatens the survival of their project which otherwise has the potential to make a genuine economic contribution to their region and our province. He also told the Minister the tax will have a very damaging effect on both their business and other enterprises. I ask the Minister to take immediate action to ensure that this industry is not destroyed by his tax grab.

SEVENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF 4-H MOVEMENT—SUGGESTED ISSUANCE OF COMMEMORATIVE STAMP

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, in 1988 the 4-H movement in Canada and Manitoba will be 75 years old. This organization got its start in the late 1800s in the U.S. Its goal was to improve farming methods by teaching young people new farming skills. Since then its role has expanded to helping youth between the ages of eight and 19 improve their people skills.

Through numerous projects, whether it be caring for a calf and preparing it for show, or participating in public speaking competitions, 4-H members learn co-operation, responsibility and leadership. Lately 4-H clubs have also taken on the important role of educating the public about the continuing importance of agriculture to the economy and the need for support for family farms.

A Manitoba group has requested that a commemorative stamp be issued in honour of this upcoming anniversary. As 4-H has made such a positive contribution to some three million young Canadians, I wholeheartedly endorse this request and urge Canada Post to issue that stamp at the appropriate time.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—CLOSURE OF UNION FUNDED ACTION CENTRES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, 210,000 British Columbians suffer the tragic effects of unemployment because neither the federal nor provincial Government has had the imagination or the commitment to adopt a full employment policy. Five years ago the B.C. Federation of Labour tried to help those workers by opening unemployed action centres throughout the province. They spent over $7 million to maintain them. Since the Conservative Government withdrew its funding in 1985 the B.C. labour movement has spent $36,000 a month to keep those centres open. Unfortunately, they can no longer afford the funding and most of the centres will close March 31. However, the problems and suffering continue.

Is it not time that the Conservative and Social Credit Governments took their responsibility seriously and acted to create jobs for British Columbians?

WAR CRIMINALS

DESCHÊNES COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS—SUPPORT FOR GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, the Government's response to the report of the Commission of Inquiry on War Criminals is indeed welcome news to members of Canada's Baltic, Ukrainian, and Jewish communities. The Government found the problem of war criminals in Canada to be far less serious than originally considered, but that if even one individual guilty of war crimes has sought refuge from justice here in Canada, it is a matter of grave concern.

Canada will try any war criminals under Canadian laws, any investigation would take place under the jurisdiction of the RCMP and the Department of Justice, and we would not create a special organizational body. The findings and recommendations of the commission are fair and just and provide an excellent basis for our Government to develop a Canadian policy on war criminals. I commend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) for his prompt actions in responding to this report and helping to finally put to rest a most difficult issue.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTRODUCE JUST AND EQUITABLE LEGISLATION ON BEHALF OF ELDERLY WORKERS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Yesterday in Montreal, Mr. Speaker, more than 1,000 early retirees attended an information meeting organized by the Coalition de la défense des droits des préretraités, and they unanimously decided to continue fighting against the injustice which the Government is trying to do to elderly workers.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to give only one example. An elderly worker who was earning $385 a week and is eligible for unemployment benefits of $231 but gets a $300 pension from his former employer forfeits any entitlement to UIC benefits. However, another elderly worker who earns $385 a week and is eligible for $231 in unemployment benefits and who gets $300 a week under a registered retirement savings plan is entitled to the full $231 weekly unemployment insurance payment.

Mr. Speaker, I do hope that Conservative Members will continue to pressure their Government so that the Minister will introduce just and equitable legislation concerning all elderly workers in Canada.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

NORTHERN TAX BENEFITS PROGRAM—ELIGIBILITY CRITERIA

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, for years many Canadians living in Canada's north have been treated unfairly. Those who worked for the Government or large companies generally received subsidized housing and/or special wage supplements to compensate for the high cost of living in the north. Those who worked for smaller businesses or were self-employed did not. The Government moved to return fairness to the rest of northern Canadians by making much needed changes to the Tax Act to allow the same benefits through the Northern Tax Benefits Program. I applaud those changes.

Unfortunately, the present eligibility criteria have created tension between neighbouring communities in the Peace country. Unless the eligibility boundaries are adjusted, neighbours in my constituency will be pitted against each other with one having an advantage over the other. I urge the Government to re-examine these criteria as soon as possible.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY

HARASSMENT OF WOMAN FIREFIGHTER AT REGINA AIRPORT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, those on the government side who have recently boasted about the bright future being built for women in this country obviously have not heard about the case of Bobbi Stadnyk. Ms. Stadnyk was one of Canada's few female Transport Canada firefighters and worked at Regina Airport until being fired in 1985. Her case is a horror of harassment and discrimination at the hands of some other staff and management.

In addition to being subjected to lewd behaviour, her equipment was faulty and dangerous and was sometimes tampered with. Her personnel files were falsified, and daily, for a three-week period, insecticide bombs were discharged within the cab of her truck in order to make a dangerous and unpleasant mess for her to clean up. Much of what occurred was with the knowledge, participation, or actions of management.

Three investigations have concluded that Ms. Stadnyk was fired without cause and that she was a victim of harassment. I call upon the Government to do the proper thing, to compensate Ms. Stadnyk fully and offer her another position in the Public Service. The Government must also hire additional airport firefighters whom we so desperately need, and ensure that equal opportunities for those positions are given to women.

DEPARTMENT STORES' CREDIT CARD INTEREST RATES

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, news reports claim that banks are reviewing their credit card rates and are expected to cut them before the end of next week. We are also told that major department stores are reviewing their charge card rates. Since those rates are still 28.8 per cent, the level at which they were when the bank rate was over 21 per cent, that review is as late as spring this year is early.

In 1974 when the bank rate was 8.75 per cent the stores charged only 21 per cent. Now that the bank rate is down to 7.14 per cent, what justifies these big stores insisting on a whopping 28.8 per cent? May their review be as short as the patience of their customers has been long.

DISAPPROVAL OF LEGISLATION AMENDING PATENT ACT

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, by forcing Bill C-22 through Parliament the Conservative Government has proposed to destroy a vital part of Canada's health care system. For more than 15 years Canada benefited from some of the lowest drug costs in the world while still allowing the pharmaceutical companies to be one of the most profitable sectors in all manufacturing industries.

Canadians have expressed their disapproval of this legislation. Thousands have signed petitions, and hundreds of groups and individuals wanted to appear before the Committee on Bill C-22 to voice their concerns about the legislation. However, the Government of Canada and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) have chosen to ignore these concerns. Rather, they are more prepared to listen to the demands of American multinationals and surrender, all in the hope that this might enhance the opportunity for some kind of free trade agreement.

Canadians are not prepared to pay hundreds of millions of dollars more each year in order for the Government to satisfy the demand of foreign lobbyists. The sick and the elderly and the poor should not be made to pay the price for the Government's mistakes. I call on the Minister to withdraw this legislation immediately and to end this unfair attack on the poor, the sick, and the elderly.

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

PARTY'S DEMOCRATIC DISCIPLINE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, the centralization shown by the socialists during their latest national convention is a telling commentary on their Party's democratic discipline. It amounts to centralization with respect to both ideological principles and geography. British Columbia had twice as many delegates as the Province of Quebec. These "twice as many" travelled 3,000 miles to go to Montreal. Quebec socialists who live close by accounted for only 5 per cent of delegates, while Quebecers make up 27 per cent of the entire population of Canada.

The socialists used Quebec as a camping grounds whence the leader tried to kill the old resolutions and define the substance of the new resolutions of his Party. Quebec is not a camping grounds, not for the 1,391 socialist delegates any more than for their leader's camping trailer every year in the month of July.

My advice to the socialists: Study our country. Quebec is a lot more than a camping grounds.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CENTRAL AMERICA—CALL FOR END TO UNITED STATES MILITARY INVOLVEMENT

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, this week the leaders of the Anglican, Lutheran, Presbyterian, Roman Catholic, and United Churches of Canada urged the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to press for an end to U.S. military involvement in Central America when the Prime Minister meets with United States President Ronald Reagan next month. We in the New Democratic Party strongly endorse that call.

The church leaders have reminded all of us that the U.S. administration's aid to the Contras and its economic blockade of Nicaragua are unacceptable to Canadians.

They have reminded us as well that the continuing militarization of Central America is creating a mounting economic and refugee toll.

At a time when the United States has announced major new military activities in Honduras, involving 50,000 troops, it is crucially important that the Prime Minister put Central America on his agenda and make Canada's voice heard for peace and the withdrawal of all foreign troops and advisers from Central America.

CALCULATION OF SEVERANCE PAY AS INCOME

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) brought in his unfair legislation, judging that pensions and severance pay were to be considered as income for the purpose of unemployment insurance, not only did he attack in a discriminatory fashion those people who have retired on company pensions, he also attacked those who are hurt when companies close down.

Consider the situation of Otis Elevator in Hamilton. The Government of Ontario, in an attempt to redress the damage done by the federal Government, brought in new legislation to permit workers to collect severance pay. As a result of the new legislation of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, that severance pay right will no longer be available to those workers.

I call on the Minister in particular to consider the case of the more than 200 workers at Otis Elevator in Hamilton who have a right to the severance pay. They in fact want to continue to work and would have liked to work, except that the company has closed down. They should get support through severance pay benefits.

I plead with the Minister not to bring in this legislation retroactively to cover those workers who have already been forced to leave companies, and to make sure that Otis Elevator workers are included in those who are still able to get severance benefits.

HUMAN RIGHTS

U.S.S.R.—TREATMENT OF JEWISH CITIZENS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, last week a number of us were visited by students who are very concerned about the continuing plight of Jews in the Soviet Union. The facts presented to me by Steven Cohen and Joel Busner, of Montreal, stand in stark contradiction to Premier Gorbachev's much publicized campaign of glasnost, or openness. The students point to the grim statistics which show a drastic reduction in the number of Jews being permitted to leave the U.S.S.R., coupled with continued suppression of Jewish culture, and with the Soviet police practising anti-Semitism in many forms.

I know that at every appropriate occasion Canadian Ministers and officials urge the Kremlin to adopt a more compassionate approach toward Soviet Jewry, because our Government does know of the Soviet Union's failure to comply with its international human rights obligations. There are small, encouraging signs toward reunification of a few families with their relatives in Canada.

But the Canadian Government must step up its contact with the Soviets, in the name of religiously persecuted Jews in that country, if glasnost is to mean more than just another word in the Soviet dictionary.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

TAXATION OF NORTHERN BENEFITS—CALL FOR AMENDMENT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, earlier in the period for Statements by Members, the Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) rose to complain about the way the Government brought in the taxation of northern benefits. The member is quite correct. About a year ago we knew that there would be a change in the taxation of northern benefits. We tried to get the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to meet with labour representatives and people in the north so we would not end up with the type of system we have at the present time.

• (1415)

The Conservative Member for Peace River is quite right in saying that the system is unfair at this time. However, the Conservatives had the choice. They had the option to meet with northerners and to meet with the unions affected. They could have brought in a fairer system. It is ironic that the Conservative Government brought down the regulations about which the Conservative Member is now complaining after this House recessed, after we had passed the tax law, and therefore, Members of Parliament were not able to stand in the House and complain about the unfairness before it became a fact.

I call upon the Government to listen to its own back-benchers and to the people in the north, and change the law.

CANADIAN EMBASSY IN HELSINKI—CALL FOR RETENTION

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission—Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, the Finnish population in Canada have made a vital contribution to the economic, social, and cultural fabric of this country ever since the first Finns arrived on the shores of Vancouver Island in the mid-1880s. The skills, enthusiasm, and initiative they have shown in building this great nation of ours are recognized and respected by historians and the Canadian population alike.

Today there are well over 50,000 Finns living in Canada making a positive, multifaceted contribution to the Canadian way of life. In light of this important contribution I urge the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to act swiftly to ensure that the Canadian Embassy in Helsinki remains open. In addition, the Government of Canada must continue in its efforts to enhance its historically strong commitment to the country of Finland and to the Finns settled across this vast nation of ours.

VISIT OF PRIME MINISTER'S PRINCIPAL SECRETARY TO QUEBEC CONSERVATIVES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, on the weekend, Quebec Conservatives were visited by "Royalty"! In fact, Canadians were astonished when the Prime Minister's Principal Secretary, Mr. Bernard Roy, stood up to make a partisan speech before a group of Conservative Members and militants from Quebec. As if this were not enough, the same Mr. Roy decided, unless the Prime Minister made the decision for him, to go before the people of Canada by appearing on the CTV public affairs program, Canada A.M.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that the Conservatives are in deep trouble and that in their desperation they are ready to do just about anything—in fact the dissent proves it—but there is a limit, even for Conservatives. If Mr. Roy wants to get into politics, let him run for office, and if he wants to be an organizer, he should get himself hired by the Party, but if he wants to keep his present job, I would advise him to stop abusing his office.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

POTASH EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Since we started negotiations with the Americans almost two years ago on free trade, we have had nothing but a series of trade harassments emanating from that country. The latest was a decision yesterday by the International Trade Commission of that Government to approve unanimously an application of injury by the $600 million potash industry, particularly founded in western Canada.

On March 3 the Secretary of State for External Affairs said he would personally undertake to talk to Secretary of State George Shultz concerning the potash dispute. Did he raise the matter with Mr. Shultz and did Mr. Shultz give him a commitment that the United States Government would totally and completely disavow the continuing trade harassment in this very important potash case?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I told the House of Commons I would raise this matter with Mr. Shultz and I did so. The Hon. Member would know, because he is not entirely ignorant of these things, that what we have is a pro forma process, a pro forma decision, the first step in a process seeking an anti-dumping investigation. We certainly intend to do everything we can to ensure that Canadian interests are well protected, but the Hon. Member should not raise false alarms too early.

Mr. Axworthy: Well, we received exactly the same kind of assurances in the softwood lumber case which was totally fumbled and bumbled by this Government to the point it is going to cost the Canadian industry $600 million.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if anyone has been in contact with the Minister of International Trade, on one of her world travels, to ensure she will not be making another final offer in this very important potash case so that we do not blow this case again with the Americans?

• (1420)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Minister for International Trade is participating in a meeting with other Ministers of Trade to advance the cause of multilateral trade negotiations. A little while ago some spokesmen of the Liberal Party were in favour of multilateral trade negotiations. I understand from the question posed by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry that they are now divided on that, too. They are divided on the negotiations with the United States. They are divided on the MTN. They are divided on the Cruise. They are divided on the question of a nuclear freeze. Is there anything on which they are united?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the Secretary of State I would say, yes, we are totally united in standing up for the interests of Canada against those types of trade harassments, something that this Government is clearly not against since every time it gets a chance it surrenders those interests.

REQUEST THAT CANADA PRESENT CASE UNDER GATT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, since the Secretary of State for External Affairs is so interested in multilateral initiatives will he tell us if the Government has now exercised its proper right to go to the international trade forum, GATT, and bring a case against the Americans on potash, basing it on the fact that they are committing a major action of trade harassment?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, what is most at issue here is whether or not the present system relating to the resolution of trade disputes between Canada and the United States is adequate. That is a system which grew up under Liberal Governments. As I understand the several positions of the Liberal Party, it seems more or less to want to support the present system in which we are vulnerable to American actions on potash—

Mr. Axworthy: Are you going to help Saskatchewan or not?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —softwood, and a range of other issues. What we are seeking to do is put in place a better system. For years and years the Liberals ignored that duty, as they ignored their duty to defend Canada's interest in the Arctic.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AIR TRANSPORT

TRANSPORTATION OF PLUTONIUM BY AIRCRAFT—POSSIBLE USE OF CANADIAN AIRSPACE

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Yesterday the Minister said that the Government has the authority under the International Civil Aviation Convention to forbid overflights of Canada by planes carrying highly dangerous plutonium to Japan. Why is the Government waiting until the United States and Japan sign and ratify an agreement on these flights before taking a stand? Why will the Minister not say right now that, no matter what agreement is ratified, the Government will say no to any such overflights of dangerous plutonium to Japan by the United States?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, whenever something is in the newspaper we can depend upon hon. gentlemen opposite to behave like Pavlov's dog. They salivate whenever they think there is something about which they can ask a question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, if the dogs would just stop for a moment—

Mr. Foster: You are the guy who is salivating, John.

Mr. Crosbie: —the answer is that Canada made representations in May and August of 1986 to the U.S. Government with respect to the U.S.-Japan nuclear co-operation agreement. So we are well ahead of The Globe and Mail. We are well ahead of the Liberal Opposition. We are well ahead of the NDP Opposition. We are way ahead of the game.

Mr. Gauthier: What about in the polls?

Mr. Crosbie: If the little crackies will quiet down, under the terms of the U.S.-Japan agreement all countries en route will be fully consulted before any steps are taken. As a matter of fact, the shipments may not transit U.S. territory unless they are satisfied with respect to the safety measures taken and the cask that will be involved. So the hon. gentleman can relax. Everything is under control.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SUGGESTED USE OF UNITED STATES AIRSPACE

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, after hearing the Minister's answer millions of Canadians will be very worried. They will ask, and I am doing it on their behalf, why the Minister will not give a clear no to this request to transfer dangerous plutonium by air to Japan. Why does the Minister not tell the United States to use its own airspace? Why can he not do that today?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman wants us to say no before anything has even been proposed. There has been no proposal that aircraft cross our airspace with a plutonium cargo.

• (1425)

There is an agreement to be negotiated between the U.S. and Japan. The U.S. has not even yet agreed to have U.S. airspace used. If the time comes when we need to say "no", we will say "no". However, that time has not yet come.

POTASH EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He knows that yesterday in the United States the International Trade Commission ruled that Canadian potash mines are injuring American producers in New Mexico, a ruling which effectively penalizes Canadians for having more efficient mines and more efficient ore. In light of the statement made by Pierre Gosselin, the Canadian Trade Commissioner in Washington, that the industry will fight this to the end, I want to know whether or not the Government will join in that fight. Could the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell the House in detail what steps the Government will take to make the Canadian potash case to American officials?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I take it the Hon. Member was out of the House when his soulmate from Winnipeg—Fort Garry asked that question and received an answer.

INDUSTRY'S POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, could the Secretary of State for External Affairs confirm to the House that up until now the Canadian potash industry did not really want him to be involved in this case because of the screw-up in softwood lumber? Could he confirm to the House that that was the industry's position?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, he does not confirm it, but I notice that he does not deny it, either.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT AND INDUSTRY UNITE ON ISSUE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister aware that, just like in the case of softwood lumber, some six potash mines are now in the process of filling out a questionnaire of more than 40 pages, as has been demanded by the U.S. Commerce Department, detailing transactions between Canada and the United States? Is he aware of the fact that they have been asked to fill out these questionnaires? If so, will the Government now take the lead and sit down with the industry, with the unions, and with the two provincial Governments involved, in order to get our signals straight and speak with one voice on the issue like we didn't on softwood lumber?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes.

Ms. Mitchell: Very cute.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think that even I can get anything more out of the Minister than that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ACID RAIN—UNITED STATES INITIATIVES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister, whom I welcome back to the House. He is probably aware that U.S. Secretary of Energy Herrington is reported as saying that the Prime Minister will accept five acid rain research and demonstration initiatives at the summit. Is the Prime Minister aware that on January 22 of this year his Minister of the Environment issued a press release, on blue Tory paper, indicating that in the absence of an American acid rain control program none of the currently planned American clean coal technology initiatives will provide any significant reduction in American transboundary air pollution flows for at least the next 25 years?

Does the Prime Minister expect Canadians to wait until the year 2012?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I suspect that by the year 2012 the Hon. Member will still be asking the same old, stale questions.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: That's right, because you will have done nothing about it.

Mr. Frith: Exactly.

Mr. McMillan: The fact is—

Mr. Axworthy: Now you have the point, Tom.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Minister.

Mr. McMillan: The Hon. Member is taking issue with a very small part of the total $5 billion clean coal technology program in the United States, not with $150 million, but rather with some part of the $150 million. Quite apart from the fact that he is nickelling and diming the program, the truth is that a panel will be established by the U.S. Government, on which Canada will be represented, to vet every single project which will be considered for receipt of funds under the same program. We will have a direct input into the relevant decisions to ensure that the applied research money, designed to slash acid rain-causing emissions in the United States which travel into Canada doing irreparable damage to our environment, does meet the criteria of the Envoys' Report.

TECHNOLOGY RESEARCH PROGRAMS—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, these are the words of the Minister of the Environment. He says that for at least the next 25 years there will be no consequence as a result of the technology research programs to which the Prime Minister is adhering. Those are his own words. I have to ask the Prime Minister again when will he muster enough courage to tell the President of the United States frankly that what Canadians want is not further research but cuts in emissions targets, deadlines, and percentage cuts, for a program that is parallel to the one that Canada has launched.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have said many times that our objective is a treaty with specified targets. As the Leader of the NDP indicated the other day, the Government of Canada has indeed made progress on acid rain. We are going to be making much more progress. I think the indication of the firm commitment was acknowledged yesterday. The member quoted Secretary of Energy Herrington but he did not say that "U.S. Secretary John Herrington predicted yesterday that Congress will approve Reagan's request for $2.5 billion in acid rain projects". That is half of the amount to be committed, which will then be a further step—

Mr. Caccia: Are those cuts?

Mr. Mulroney: —that we are working on to meet the ultimate objectives of the Government of Canada. I think my hon. friend, and I say this with some sadness, after his desultory record as Minister of the Environment should be the last person ever to raise acid rain in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INDUSTRY

COLECO CLOSURE IN MONTREAL—LAY-OFFS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and concerns the Coleco company in Montreal.

Does the Prime Minister think it is proper for a company like Coleco which has received $2 million in grants to lay off 250 employees? And what is he doing to help these employees?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I can inform the Hon. Member that we were of course advised of Coleco's decision to close its operations in Montreal. I must say that we accept this decision which reflects a trend in the industry, not only in Canada but across North America. We must remember that the company also closed several production plants in the United States.

Mr. Speaker, we intend to work together with this company to try and find alternative solutions for the workers affected by the company's decision.

CONDITIONS ATTACHED TO GOVERNMENT GRANTS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, it seems the Government cannot even keep cabbage patch dolls produced in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Langdon: I have to ask the Minister what conditions were put on the grants, the most recent of which was given last year, from his Ministry to keep these jobs guaranteed here in Canada, or did the Minister just simply forget about that?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, obviously, every time grants are given, the question of job creation is always a major point.

I would also like to point out to the Hon. Member that, since September 1984, many new jobs had been created as a result of new opportunities introduced by this Government, especially in the province of Quebec where more than 130,000 jobs have been created since September 1984.

INQUIRY CONCERNING CONCRETE MEASURES GOVERNMENT WILL TAKE TO ENSURE INDUSTRIAL RECOVERY OF MONTREAL

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister and also concerns the closing of Coleco in Saint-Henri. Mr. Speaker, after the decline of Montreal East's industrial base, which the Government has done nothing about, the southeast is now feeling the effects of the shutdown of Stelco and, more recently, Coleco. I want to ask the Government what specific steps it intends to take to renew Montreal's industrial growth, other than creating a lot of committees that are producing absolutely nothing.

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, we shall go on doing what we have been doing since September 1984, which is creating jobs seven times as fast as the previous Government.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, if the Government goes on doing what it is doing now, plants will continue to close.

[English]

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): The announcement of the closing of this plant has definitely shocked employees. Just before Christmas they were told their jobs were guaranteed for five years. They took loans to buy houses and cars and now that is all down the drain. What concrete steps will we see to foster the improvement of the Montreal industrial base? We do not want any more committees. Montrealers have waited long enough. They want action.

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I realize they want action. They never had any before 1984. However, it's the kind of action we can take, because—

An Hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Côté (Langelier): —because, Mr. Speaker, by consulting not just with the industry but also with the workers, we have been able to create this level of employment, reduce unemployment and reduce interest rates to their lowest levels in thirteen and a half years. That is what this Government's performance has been.

REPORTED CLOSURE OF POST OFFICES IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, my question today is for the Minister responsible for Canada Post. I have to admit to the House that I do not really understand how Canada Post works. I also have to admit that I still have a lot to learn about the way they do things in Newfoundland. Notwithstanding these personal shortcomings, would the Minister relate to the House why the Government has found it necessary to close some post offices in Newfoundland, but more important, why is the Government just closing the ones in Conservative ridings?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): That is a good question, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: Do I have any volunteers from the Opposition?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: The Post Office, as everyone knows, has a horrendous program of trying to bring some sanity to a corporation as a result of political interference which has developed truly massive problems. We are trying to do it in a reasonable and proper manner which will result in the improvement of service while bringing the fiscal situation under control.

I might just add that two weeks ago a list was published by one of the unions about supposed closures around the country. I denied that, and I was challenged on it in the House. A few days later the union had to admit it had created the list and that it was wrong and inaccurate. I would counsel members of the House to be very careful about accepting the kinds of observations that are being made.

ACID RAIN—UNITED STATES CONGRESSMAN'S CRITICISM

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister approve of what his Minister of the Environment said yesterday in this House of Commons to the effect that when Congressman Gerry Sikorski from the United States criticized the Prime Minister's approach on acid rain in the United States he was engaging in partisan tripe? I wonder if the Prime Minister is aware that Congressman Sikorski is one of Canada's staunchest allies on acid rain abatement in Congress. Does the Prime Minister not think that it is a particularly dumb strategy to dump all over the few friends we have in Congress rather than being able to take friendly criticism?

• (1440)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member was referring not to the few friends we have but to the few friends he has. With regard to the Congressman—

Ms. Copps: Brian and Ronnie sitting in a tree.

Mr. Mulroney: Not even the presence of the Salvation Army does much good for Hamilton East.

Mr. Speaker: Just remember, there will soon be two of them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: Let's go for a majority.

I think the point the Minister was trying to make was a very simple one. One of the principal obstacles to acid rain legislation emanating from the Congress of the United States is individual Congressmen who, in the main, are of the same political Party as Congressman Sirkoski—

Some Hon. Members: Sikorski.

Mr. Mulroney: I had never heard of him before in my life.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): That's the problem.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Right Hon. Prime Minister could answer the question.

Mr. Mulroney: My kids have never gotten over being called Muldoon.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister was trying to urge that particular Congressman to begin the process by persuading members of his own Party who are committee chairmen, sub-committee chairmen and members of the Democratic leadership, to support Canada's vigorous position on acid rain. If he began to do that, then he would be doing a service for those of us who believe in trying to get rid of acid rain. That is what the Minister was trying to say.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, that is not what the Minister said. He accused the Congressman of engaging in partisan tripe. I find it disappointing that so much humour should attend a very serious question like this one.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the fact that the Prime Minister has not heard of Congressman Sikorski, one of the major movers of acid rain legislation and one who hosted our Special Committee on Acid Rain in Minnesota in 1985, a committee of which the Prime Minister is fond of bragging, tells us a lot about what the Prime Minister really knows about acid rain legislation in the United States.

Why is there a double standard? Why is it that we are constantly lectured about the inadvisability of tossing verbal hand-grenades across the 49th parallel? Why is it not okay for people to criticize President Reagan whose commitment to acid rain legislation is minimal, if it exists at all, yet it is okay to cast verbal hand-grenades at one of our few allies in the U.S. Congress?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend says that this particular Congressman is one of the major movers of acid rain legislation in Congress. If so, he has not been moving very fast. One of the key problems is that the leadership on both sides of the aisle—

An Hon. Member: That's incredible.

Mr. Mulroney: NDP Members raise the question of acid rain. They contend that they are concerned about the environment. Yet when we begin to deal with it seriously, all they can do is heckle and chortle from the back-benches. Canadians will find that unacceptable.

The point is that one of the problems in not having a treaty is the disinclination of members of the Congress on both sides of the aisle to bring one forward and to pass one. If this gentleman is interested in having the United States fulfil its responsibilities in regard to acid rain as it must, I believe it would be very, very helpful if he convinced his next-door neighbours down the aisle in Congress who are members of his own Party and who are resisting acid rain legislation. Get them onside and I guarantee that all Canadians are onside.

CHARTERED BANKS—FLOATING INTEREST RATES CHARGED TO FARMERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday he undertook to look into the problem of farmers who had signed promissory notes at fixed rates of interest while the banks kited those rates of interest and put them on a floating rate, costing farmers hundreds of thousands of dollars in illegal interest charges and forcing many of them off their land in the last few years. Is the Minister prepared to take action now to roll back these illegal interest charges?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think that question would be more rightfully handled by my colleague, the Minister of State for Finance, but he is in Montreal today. Let me comment from my knowledge of the situation. I believe there have been court judgments on both sides of the question. I think the Hon. Member is aware of that. Because there are judgments on both sides of the question, it puts the Government in a difficult position when taking one side or the other. It seems to have happened that in the relationships between farmers and other citizens who have borrowed from the banks, there have been unwritten understandings that are subject to interpretation. That interpretation is best made by the courts.

REQUEST THAT INSPECTOR GENERAL OF BANKS CONDUCT AUDIT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, many farmers who have been put in a very difficult financial position because of these excessive interest charges are simply not able to afford legal counsel to fight their cases in court. Would the Minister be prepared to have the Inspector General of Banks undertake a full audit of all those accounts for which interest has been unfairly or improperly charged to farmers and other small businessmen, and have proper restitution made?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am quite prepared to discuss this further with my colleague who has looked into the matter. As I indicated yesterday in the House, he has indicated that he will get back to Hon. Members who have taken an interest in this. I would caution the Hon. Member that there are different points of view on this as interpreted by the courts. It is difficult for us to make broad rules in a blanket way because of those different interpretations based on the different circumstances or relationships between the banks and the borrowers.

SOVEREIGNTY

THE ARCTIC—CONSULTATION WITH YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Yesterday the Prime Minister told reporters that there has been progress in the discussions with Washington regarding Canadian sovereignty in the Arctic and the U.S. desire for rights to transit the Northwest Passage. Since, according to the remarks made by the Prime Minister yesterday, these discussions are accelerating, would the Prime Minister explain why the duly elected Legislatures of Yukon and the Northwest Territories have been excluded from these accelerating discussions to this point?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think that question was raised yesterday in the House. If it was not raised, at least it was answered. I indicated that if we reach a point where we believe we have a positive result to the process I announced a year ago September with respect to a discussion with the United States, of course we will consult with the elected Heads of Government in both Yukon and the Northwest Territories. I repeat that assertion.

THE 1002 QUESTION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs. Yesterday he confirmed that serious negotiations and consultations are under way between himself, Tony Penikett, and Nick Sibbeston regarding what the Americans call the 1002 question. Will the Minister commit himself today to expand those negotiations to include those matters of sovereignty within the Canadian Arctic presently being discussed with Washington at, as we learned from the Prime Minister, an accelerated rate?

• (1450)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, just to clarify the record, there are no negotiations between Canada and the Territories with respect to the representations we are making on the 1002 matter. There is very active co-operation between our Government and those of the Territories. I am quite prepared to get on the phone again to the Heads of Government of both the Territories and the Yukon to bring them up to date on where we are in the discussions with the U.S. There is nothing final to report yet but I am certainly prepared to give them a progress report, as I have yesterday and today given the House of Commons.

CANADA-FRANCE DISCUSSIONS—CHANNEL ISLANDS PRECEDENT

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, negotiations started today to give away more fish to the French for the next four years while the St. Pierre-Miquelon boundary is being discussed. Some people are wondering why the Government of Canada did not look to international precedents such as the Channel Islands arbitration in developing its policy. Is the Secretary of State for External Affairs aware that France was able to limit Britain to a six-mile zone around the British protectorate islands off the northwest coast of France? When the shoe is on the other foot and France is demanding a 200-mile zone around its own protectorate islands off our coast, why are we bending over backwards to please the French?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, this important precedent raised by the Hon. Member underscores the reasons for the Government's course of action in negotiating with France a set of conditions known as un compromis whereby the boundary issue would be referred to international third party arbitration. We feel this and other precedents may very well lead to a final determination which will be very much to the benefit of the fishermen of Newfoundland, Labrador, and indeed all of Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, France has no right to any fish in Canada in Canadian waters. The Minister knows it. The only fish they have a right to are those necessary to satisfy the needs of St. Pierre and Miquelon. Pour Saint-Pierre et Miquelon, oui; pour la France, rien!

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, why is the Minister offering more fish during these negotiations when he has already given them unlimited access to what his Government calls the disputed zone? That zone is 200 miles and larger than the entire Province of Nova Scotia. Why is the Government so weak-kneed, impotent, and a scaredy-cat when it comes to dealing with France?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I do not know how many times we have to educate the Hon. Member, but I can assure him that there will be absolutely no fish given away to France in negotiations under way today. I should remind him again that French quotas of cod and other important groundfish in Canadian waters in 1987 are half what they were in 1986.

FISHERY RESOURCES OF ATLANTIC CANADIANS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The people of Atlantic Canada are very worried as the Government sits down to discuss with France the process for resolving the long-standing boundary dispute around St. Pierre and Miquelon. They are worried that their resources will be bargained away as the Government tries to maintain good relations with France. Will the Government reassure the people of Atlantic Canada that their resources will not be on the bargaining table, and that it will use all its foreign policy instruments to ensure a reasonable resolution of this dispute without always trying to bribe France to come to the bargaining table?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, of course I will give that assurance again as it has been given before in this House. Let me, if I may, in a House of Commons generally marked by a more internationalist perspective than that shown by the Hon. Member, warn him of some of the consequences of deliberately mounting attacks against other countries and saying things that can only be interpreted as being anti-French in their design, with all the implications that carries.

Mr. Manly: I do not think our Party can be accused of being anti-French. I think we are very much pro-Canadian and pro-Atlantic Canada. We would like to see the Government stand up for Atlantic Canada.

TRADE IMBALANCE WITH FRANCE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, France has a $600 million trade surplus with Canada. Will the Minister assure the people of Atlantic Canada that this trade surplus and not their resources will be on the bargaining table if France is not prepared to co-operate in this matter?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have already made some very significant progress in repairing the trade imbalance which existed between Canada and France. That issue is separate from the fish negotiations. If I may say so, we know perfectly well the position of the NDP. It is to get out of NATO, get out of NORAD, and then to attack France.

Mr. Crosbie: Rambo Manly.

COMMITTEE REPORT'S RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post. His first reaction to the unanimous committee report on rural post offices was, "The Minister responsible gets yelled at in the House of Commons if Canada Post acts unreasonable". How much yelling do Members of Parliament and other Canadians have to do in order that the Minister understands that Canada Post is treating Canadians unfairly? Will he accept the report and order Canada Post to implement the report?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, two or three weeks ago I wrote to every Member of the House, including the Hon. Member, outlining the policies Canada Post would be following regarding any change in postal service. If he rereads that letter, and reads the recommendations of the committee, he will see they are essentially identical. In fact, Canada Post has in place now the policies recommended by the committee with one small, minor exception, depending on the interpretation. A formal response to the report was requested by the committee and that will be made in due course.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT REQUIRE CANADA POST TO ACT WITHOUT DISCRIMINATION AGAINST ANY CITIZENS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, Canadians want to keep their post offices and receive their mail without discrimination on the basis of where they live. Is the Minister going to ask Canada Post to act as a corporation that serves all Canadians, without discrimination, or will he, like his two predecessors, go on protecting the Corporation as it continues to cut services to Canadians who need those services?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, after some 20 years of political interference in the operation of the Post Office, there was a terrible mess with a monstrous deficit and deteriorating service. We are trying to turn that around. We are making good progress in that regard. I think if the Hon. Member were being fair and reasonable, he would recognize that fact. We cannot continue to ask future generations to deliver the mail today. Through privatization, better management practices, better labour relations, and a whole host of other procedures, we will improve service and operate in a fiscally responsible way. I think the Hon. Member should applaud that.

COMMUNICATIONS

LACK OF WOMEN APPOINTEES AT ADMINISTRATIVE LEVELS TO BOARDS FOR WHICH MINISTER IS RESPONSIBLE

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications and has to do with the appointments, or rather the lack of women appointees to boards of directors of organizations under her responsibility.

How can she justify the fact that only one woman was selected among a total of 12 appointees? Does she not know any qualified women, or does she prefer appointing Conservative gentlemen, particularly those who have contributed to the Conservative Party coffers?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member should be fair-minded enough to recognize that since this Government came into office it has increased the number of appointments of women from 15 per cent to almost 27 per cent of total appointments.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: When I was speaking the other night the Hon. Member would have heard me say that I think the Government should be doing more in appointing women to boards and agencies in the broadcasting field. We will be doing that. However, at the same time I urged that throughout the whole broadcasting system there be more women in decision-making roles, running stations, running networks, and making day-to-day decisions in the programming. I hope the member would support that.

• (1500)

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ACTION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I certainly will support that, but there has not been one woman appointed in broadcasting since the Minister took charge of the Department. Will she be willing to consult arts organizations and women's organizations to ask them for proposals of competent women, of whom there are many across the country? Will she take them seriously rather than going through the old-boy network which she has been drawing on so far which is quite unacceptable to Canadians, especially Canadian women?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member will be pleased to know of the reappointment of Rosalie Gower to the CRTC.

Ms. McDonald: I am indeed.

Miss MacDonald: Thank you. I am sure she will be glad to know that Jocelyne Bourgon is being appointed to the National Film Board which has had a shortage of women. There will be others. Those kinds of appointments will continue. I look for the member's continued support.

MANNER IN WHICH ELDERLY WORKERS ARE TREATED

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Last Friday the Minister of Employment and Immigration told the House that it was the Minister of Finance who decided to take pension income into account in the calculation of unemployment insurance benefits.

Yesterday in Montreal I met with almost 1,000 older workers who want to know why the Minister of Finance has chosen to discriminate against older workers who contribute to an employer pension plan, as compared with older workers who belong to a registered retirement savings plan. As a result, the older worker who draws the employee-employer pension is being denied full unemployment insurance benefits, whereas another one who receives payments under a registered retirement savings plan is eligible for full UIC benefits.

Why this double standard?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie knows the answer.

A registered retirement savings plan is of course an optional savings plan for individuals, whereas public plans are mandatory for both employers and employees. I might add that the Minister of Employment has always been a staunch supporter of the principle under which people, who after 1986 received payments from a pension plan administered as I explained, are considered to have an income for the purposes of unemployment insurance. I fully agree on that.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT GIVE EXPLANATION TO ELDERLY WORKERS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's answer shows that the Conservatives favour rich people.

Can the Minister explain to the elderly workers of Coleco, who have just learned they will be laid off, that they will not be entitled to their full unemployment insurance benefits simply because they get employer-employee plan benefits, whereas workers aged 30 are eligible for full UIC benefits?

Can the Minister explain to all elderly workers in Canada that, in future, if you lose your job the Government will penalize you for withdrawing your contributions?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie is flying off at a demagogic tangent. He will resort to just about anything. Coleco has just closed its doors, it has just made the announcement, and already he has cut off their unemployment benefits. We did not even have time to take appropriate measures.

Mr. Speaker, we listened to the Hon. Member. He should listen to others. We listened to him a moment ago. I suggest the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie ought to learn one thing, namely that we have regulations in this country. Since January 1986, any pension fund benefits paid to people have been considered to be an income for unemployment insurance purposes, and there will be no change. That is quite clear.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I advise the House that I will recognize two members for single questions and that will be all.

DISASTERS

CHERNOBYL NUCLEAR REACTOR EXPLOSION—TESTING OF CANADIAN CARIBOU FOR RADIOACTIVITY

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I understand that after the Chernobyl disaster extensive testing of Canadian caribou and the lichen on which they feed took place and has now been completed. Can the Minister tell us what levels of radioactivity were found and whether the caribou remain fit to eat?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would like to indicate to the Hon. Member and all Canadians living north of 60 and in northern Quebec who use caribou as part of their food cycle that the testing which we did indicated that levels of radioactivity relating to the Chernobyl accident were substantially below the levels in the 1960s when atmospheric nuclear weapons testing was taking place. We will continue to test, but I can tell northern Canadians, as we have through a press release dated, I believe, March 19, that they need not change their dietary habits. All testing we have done indicates that they are not in any danger. We will continue to monitor any radiation on an ongoing basis.

NATIONAL PARKS

GRASSY ISLAND NATIONAL PARK PROJECT

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. The Minister is well aware of the historical significance of the Grassy Island National Park to the Atlantic Canadian fishery and the people of Canso. Can the Minister provide a status report on efforts to achieve this development?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the further development of the Grassy Island National Historic Park is, in fact, a departmental and a government-wide priority. In that connection, we have developed a management plan which we are putting in place. About $733,000 has been spent to date. I regret that I cannot give a commitment to the Hon. Member today to further funding imminently.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I know of no other Member in the House who has campaigned harder at Environment Canada on any issue than has the Hon. Member. I hope his lobbying will pay off before very long.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED USE OF UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I seek your advice as to whether this should be called a question of privilege or a point of order. I am concerned about remarks made by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary yesterday. I do not wish to reopen a discussion on the substance of the debate, but as reported on page 4429 of Hansard he said: "—when they present petitions—", that is referring to members of the New Democratic Party, "—certified by other Members in a deliberate attempt to create the impression—" and so on. On page 4430 he said:

> —the delaying of the presentation of petitions in order to pretend that a long-standing issue exists is a cheap political trick. It is a complete fabrication and a charade. It is an attempt to mislead the House and the Canadian public.

Further on he says:

> —is also a cheap political trick, a complete fabrication and charade, and an attempt to mislead the House and the Canadian public.

Those comments, taken together with those at the bottom of page 4429 and at the top of page 4430 where he said it more indirectly, at which point you warned him, comprise a very clear accusation which is unparliamentary. I request that the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary withdraw those remarks.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think the fact that you interrupted me, as indicated in Hansard at page 4430, and said that you had heard my words very carefully and indicated that I used the word "if" indicate that you were following the exchange very closely. None of my hon. colleagues in the New Democratic Party sought to interfere with the debate which was going on.

I stand by what I said. I suggested that the effort to mislead the Canadian people into thinking that there was a grand swell of public opinion by distributing petitions to others to distribute was a charade, a complete and absolute fabrication and charade. I was shocked that other colleagues in the New Democratic Party would participate in that charade. Quite frankly, I thought better of them.

• (1510)

As I indicated yesterday, there is more to the petitioning process than coming into the House and handing petitions to colleagues for presentation. I stand very strongly behind the petitioning process. The request for redress of a grievance is very valid, but to come into the House and deliberately put petitions that were certified the day before to four other colleagues is nothing more than a charade and fabrication.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to contribute to the substance of this debate, but I think that some Members of the House sometimes say things which go a lot further than they intended. I know the Parliamentary Secretary to be an honest man. I also know that our rules prohibit the use of the terms he employed yesterday, even if this is done with some ability. I would like to refer to page 4429 of Hansard, where we find the following:

> If that is not deliberately misleading the House, it comes as close to deliberately misleading the House as anything in my experience.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member clearly used these words and accused an other Member of misleading the House deliberately. I believe that he should withdraw what he said, to maintain at least some civility in this House. I therefore ask the Hon. Member to think this over and withdraw the words he used if possible.

[English]

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I made the request for withdrawal. I could argue the point and suggest that the precedent claimed by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary means that we can say anything hypothetically, which has not been a custom in the House in the past, or we can accuse somebody of misleading the House or attempting to mislead the House so long as we leave out the word "deliberately". I believe that this will create a precedent and give the House some difficulties. However, I will not argue the point further.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) has raised a matter which gave the Chair some difficulty yesterday. Hon. Members will recall that the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary raised a matter which involved the presentation of petitions that had in fact been signed some time before they were presented to the House. His position was that this created an impression that perhaps was not entirely accurate. I believe that is the basic thrust of his comments, which I have deliberately put in very mild language.

The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary said, as reported at page 4430 of Hansard, and has been referred to in interventions today:

> If that is not deliberately misleading the House, it comes as close to deliberately misleading the House as anything in my experience.

The Chair is always in the position, when it hears something that may lead to difficulty, that it ought to intervene. Sometimes the Chair intervenes too rapidly and sometimes the Chair waits too long. There is no particular science to it.

In any event, I did rise and say:

> I heard very carefully the words of the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, which were "if that is not deliberately misleading the House", it comes very close to it. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary is also as close to getting out of order as he can be. I will take account of the very careful wording he used, but I would ask that he be extremely careful as he continues his remarks.

I believe I made it clear to Hon. Members at that point that the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary was getting awfully close to being out of order. I do not think that should be interpreted to mean, as the Hon. Member for Spadina has warned the Chamber, that just by putting the word "if" in front of provocative words, it will always meet with the satisfaction of the Chair.

The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary went on to say:

> Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I take your admonition.

He continued, and at that point the Parliamentary Secretary was in a close position but nonetheless a proper one. I took it that his remarks were directed not at any particular member of the New Democratic Party but at the New Democratic Party and its particular strategy in the case being debated. After saying that it is a complete fabrication and a charade, the Parliamentary Secretary stated:

> It is an attempt to mislead the House and the Canadian public.

Then he went on to say:

> The holier than thou New Democratic Party . . . .

The Chair heard this and was listening carefully. The Chair felt that those words were directed not at any particular member but at the strategy being used by the Party in question.

I will consider the matter carefully, but I must say to the Parliamentary Secretary that I did not take his comments as aimed at a particular member. I see he is indicating that. He may want to make it very clear to the House that my interpretation is in fact correct and that might end the matter, except to say that it is an example of how we must be careful in what we say.

My comments today do not take away from the point the Parliamentary Secretary made yesterday with respect to the use of petitions in the Chamber. I will return to the Chamber at an appropriate time to discuss that matter further. However, if the Parliamentary Secretary would like to indicate to the House that at no time was he directing that particular comment at any particular member, it might be helpful to the Chair.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, you have interpreted my intent accurately. I meant to encompass the entire tactics of the New Democratic Party and not to single out any one person as being any more guilty than another. That was my intention.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—IMMIGRATION—FAMILY REUNIFICATION—REFUGEES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Marchi:

> That this House condemns the Government for creating a state of confusion within its immigration program and for its lack of leadership and vision, which has seriously undermined the confidence of Canadians in the over-all direction of immigration policy;
> That this House also deplores the Government's failure to address the growing frustration experienced by large numbers of Canadians who are unable to sponsor successfully family members as immigrants from abroad and its recent actions that undercut Canada's humanitarian assistance and protection for refugees legitimately seeking haven in Canada;
> That, therefore, this House urges the Government to:
> (1) recognize the long-standing importance of family class reunification and to re-establish this program as the corner-stone of Canada's immigration;
> (2) adopt a fair, humane and efficient refugee policy which would reinforce Canada's past proud tradition and honour Canada's international obligations under the United Nations Convention relating to the status of refugees, signed in 1951;
> (3) introduce immediately a new and independent refugee determination system that would assure claimants processing that is fair, effective and expeditious while discouraging fraudulent applications; and
> (4) initiate a comprehensive educational program that will fully inform all Canadians of the facts about and benefits resulting from immigration and develop a long-term vision that would utilize immigration as a vehicle to strengthen our national unity and to contribute to greater economic prosperity.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the motion before the House today which was presented by the Liberal Party condemns the Government for its misguided policy with respect to immigration and refugees. Since my colleague, the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), who introduced the motion, dealt with the Government's lack of policy with respect to family reunification, I want to concentrate on the refugee question.

First, I want to put this problem into a proper perspective. Hon. Members should know that there is a growing tragedy of refugees and misplaced persons in the world. This has been due in part to the incidence of regional wars, civil conflict and revolutions throughout the world.

Since 1945 there have been 120 regional and local wars in the world, resulting in 19 million deaths. Two-thirds of those 19 million deaths were inflicted on non-military personnel and 16 million of those 19 million deaths took place in the Third World. Those who say we have had peace since 1945 do not know the facts. The figures I just gave the House were as of February, 1986. They are a year out of date. There have been 120 regional and local wars on this planet since 1945 resulting in 19 million deaths. As a result of those conflicts the United Nations estimates there are between 15 million and 20 million refugees in the world today, people who have been displaced from their homes and countries due to conflict, persecution, local wars and so on. The greatest number are from Afghanistan. The next greatest number are the Palestinian refugees. Then there is Iran, East Europe, Central America, Chile and so on.

This human tragedy cannot go unanswered. I would like to remind Canadians that all of us in this country, except our aboriginal people, came here as immigrants or refugees; either ourselves, our parents, our grandparents or our great-grandparents came here after fleeing from conditions of persecution, hunger, or whatever. My own family, which is basically of Irish origin, came here after the famine in 1840 and conditions of persecution.

As Hon. Members know, Canada signed the United Nations Convention on Refugees in 1969, according to which Canada agreed to receive refugees as defined in that treaty, and now as defined in our own law. In order to decide who in fact were refugees under the treaty and who were not, a previous Liberal Government set up a process by which to decide, including a body known as the Refugee Status Advisory Committee.

While this process might have been adequate in the early days of its establishment, it was found in more recent years, with the growing volume of refugees, to not be adequate, that the number of applicants was too great for the system with the result that a large backlog of refugees developed. At one point that backlog amounted to almost 20,000 refugee applicants who had to wait up to two or three years for their cases to be heard by the Refugee Status Advisory Committee. This in turn led to more problems in that by the time the applicant finally had his case heard after two or three years, he very often had married someone in Canada and had children. It was then extremely difficult to deport him even if it was found he was not really a refugee according to the definition in the international treaty. In other words, the long delay, the backlog and the overwhelming number of persons in the system, led to many problems which led to still further problems.

Faced with that situation, the former Liberal Government appointed the Plaut Commission headed by Rabbi Plaut of Toronto. He was appointed in 1983 to advise on a new refugee determination process and a system to deal with the large backlog. Rabbi Plaut reported back in April, 1985, after a change of Government. He gave his report to the new Conservative Government. That report in turn was referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, of which I am a member. That Committee heard witnesses and heard all points of view and reported to the House of Commons in November and December, 1985.

The Plaut Royal Commission and the standing committee recommended that there be a new refugee determination process which would be quick and fair. It was very important that it be quick, because if it could be decided within two or three months after the refugee lands on our shores whether he or she is a legitimate refugee then that system would discourage fraudulent refugees who come here and get into the backlog, which takes two or three years, knowing that it is difficult to deport them after that period of time.

The Conservative Government of the day responded in part to the reports of the Plaut Royal Commission and the standing committee in May of 1986. The former Minister of State for Immigration promised in May of 1986 that there would be new legislation to deal with refugees in September of 1986, more than six months ago. There was no legislation in September of 1986. There was none in October, November, December, January or February. We are now in the third week of March and we still have no legislation to deal with this important problem.

This morning, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard), in answer to a question said that we will see the legislation soon. We have been told that now for many, many months by the Minister and his predecessor and still the legislation is not before us. These delays and procrastination have encouraged more fraudulent claims for refugee status and the problems resulting therefrom have doubled and tripled. Finally, in panic at these developing problems, the Government brought in ad hoc measures on February 20, 1987, which not only shut out the small percentage of fraudulent claimants but also legitimate claimants, those suffering severe hardship, the really legitimate refugees.

In order to support its ad hoc panic measures, the Government is giving a false impression of the refugee situation at our borders. The numbers at our door in recent months have not been greater than those who have come here in special movements over recent years. The special movement which is being denied entry right now is principally from Central America and South America. These people are from Guatemala, El Salvador and Chile. The Government said about 5,000 people applied near the end of last year, which has given the perception that that situation is worse than it is. What heightens that perception of something wrong is the fact that we had the Sri Lankan refugees dropped off by boat off the coast of Newfoundland last summer. There was a reverse reaction to that. There was also an adverse reaction to a statement made by one refugee in Montreal who did not like his accommodation in the Lasalle Hotel in Montreal. I think his comments were badly placed. Those comments in that situation received a lot of publicity which was blown out of proportion and gave a bad perception of what is the real tragic situation.

I want to point out that the 5,000 number near the end of last year may sound large, but it is not an unusual number, especially when we recognize that we have between 15 million and 20 million refugees in the world, and considering what we in Canada did in former years. I put that on record to a certain extent this morning in my question to the Minister. I feel it is very important that we recognize what has been done in Canada with respect to refugees over the past few years so that we can see that what we are trying to do now is not extraordinary. In the one year of 1982, in addition to the usual flow of refugees which amounted to 16,900, we took in three special movements. We took in 9,344 Polish people who fled Poland as a result of the Solidarity crisis in that country. In the same year we took in 3,024 refugees in a special movement from El Salvador and 2,500 refugees from Iran. So we took in three special movements in 1982 in addition to the usual flow of refugees. In the years leading up to 1979, as a result of the horrible situation in Lebanon, we took in 11,321 Lebanese. As a result of the end of the war in Viet Nam, prior to 1978, we took in 9,060 Vietnamese and Cambodians. From 1975 to 1979, as a result of the situation in Chile and Argentina, when that country was under a dictatorship, we took in over 7,000 South Americans. At the time of the crisis in Uganda, when the Asians were being expelled, we took in 7,069 Ugandan Asians. In 1969, following the uprising in Czechoslovakia, we took in 11,943 Czechoslovakians. After a similar situation in Hungary in 1957, we took in 37,000 Hungarians. We must recall that at the end of the Second World War when displaced people from central Europe had nowhere to go this country took in up to 186,000 displaced persons per year when the population of our country was but 15 million.

I have referred to these special movements of refugees, the members of which have all integrated well into Canadian society. They are now leading productive and full lives in this country and have not caused any problems. There are not many of us here in the House who can refer to any of these people as a group which has caused any problems here in Canada. As a matter of fact, we know them as neighbours and as people with whom we work. They are contributing to our society in a positive way.

I have referred briefly to the refugee movements, which are separate and distinct from the movement of immigrants. We take in refugees, in accordance with a treaty to which I referred, when people are displaced from their countries because of persecution, war and so on. These people are refugees. On the other hand, with respect to immigrants, we set down legislation. We bring in immigrants in accordance with our needs. Last year we brought in 97,474 immigrants. In 1957 we brought in 282,000 immigrants. In 1967 we brought in 222,000. In 1974 we brought in 218,000. During most years in the post-war period we brought in over 100,000 immigrants per year.

When we look back we have to admit that these immigrants and refugees integrated well into our country. They have become good citizens. If there is now a problem with respect to the number of refugees who are at our door it is because the Government has not brought in the legislation which was recommended to it by Rabbi Plaut and by a standing committee of this House. This is legislation which the Government promised to bring in last May, legislation which would have provided for fair and quick treatment of refugees and which would have discouraged false claimants, those who would have jumped the line.

I fully agree with the Government. We have to do something about false claimants, about those who want to jump ahead of others who are in line, but not in the manner in which the Government has undertaken it in its new ad hoc policy announced on February 20. In doing that it not only shuts out false claimants but it shuts out many legitimate refugees. In bringing in this sort of ad hoc policy the Government is playing right into the hands of those in our country who are prejudiced against immigrants. We have to admit that such prejudice still exists today. The Government is contributing to the situation by giving out false information and by leaving a false impression. It may not be doing it intentionally, but that is the result.

In general terms, immigrants contribute much more to this country than they take. They are all consumers. As soon as they arrive here in the country they become consumers. They need homes, clothing, food and household products. They need education and health care. These needs create employment. In addition to being consumers many of them create their own employment by starting small businesses. They pay taxes. In fact, they pay more than their fair share in taxes in many cases because they often have larger families than native-born Canadians. There may be individual cases in which immigrants take jobs which might be open to Canadians. But, on balance, they create more jobs. In any case, our immigration policy over the years, and it is still the case today, was designed to concentrate on immigrants whose skills are needed rather than those which are surplus in Canada. I must continue to make the distinction between immigrants and refugees. As I said earlier, members of refugee movements which we let into Canada in the years since the Second World War have not caused the disruption that is now being feared by some Canadians.

What are other people saying? We can look to some of the comments in the press with respect to these measures. I have in front of me an editorial taken from the Calgary Herald of February 24, the title of which is: "Restore the refuge". It states:

> Immigration Minister Benoit Bouchard has gone overboard with tough measures to curb the wave of bogus refugees flooding Canada.
> Rather than being content with addressing the problem of fakes and frauds who want to end-run the system, Bouchard appears to have drawn a bureaucratic paper curtain, nearly as impenetrable as any of iron, around Canada.

I now refer to an article in The Vancouver Sun of February 21, 1987, which is entitled: "Heart and head on the refugees". It states:

> The new rules for the admission of refugees to Canada are far from being a perfect way of sorting out the mess created by the lack of a coherent immigration policy. At best they offer an opportunity to stem the flood of refugee claims until the government can finish drafting a new policy that is both humanitarian and practical.
> It is distressing that the government is taking so long to produce a program and that it must respond to each new refugee crisis with ad hoc regulations like those announced yesterday by Immigration Minister Benoit Bouchard.

There are reports which we have to the contrary of what was told to us by the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner). There are reports that some of these people who applied from the United States are being deported from that country. I would now like to refer to an article from The Globe and Mail for February 24, the title of which is: "Refugee claimants may face deportation". It states:

> Central Americans awaiting hearings get no guarantees from U.S. officials.
> Despite assurances from Canada's two immigration ministers, Central American refugee claimants who are returned to the United States to await an immigration hearing in Canada have no guarantees that they will not be deported.

In Le Devoir for February 23 the policy is described as follows:

—irresponsible and inhumane.

[English]

In conclusion, we must do something about false refugee claims. But the Government's ad hoc policy is not the way to go about it. That policy is keeping out many legitimate claimants, as well as fraudulent ones. If the Government had not procrastinated, if it had not dragged its feet, we would not be faced with the specific problems which have led to these misguided measures announced on February 20. Rabbi Plaut and the parliamentary committee recommended a new and improved system in 1985 and 1986—some two years ago. The Government promised action in May of 1986 for September of 1986, and we still have nothing.

I conclude by asking the Minister the following question. Unfortunately, he is not in the House. When will the Government finally act? When will it bring in a Bill that will deal quickly and fairly with refugees in accordance with our obligations under the United Nations' treaty?

Mr. Oostrom: Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of questions for the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand). First, I wish to congratulate him for having perceived the contribution of not only the skills but the economic contributions that immigrants have made to Canada. He has a great perception of that economic contribution. However, my question concerns the problems we are facing today with economic refugees. Back in 1976, why did the Liberal Government, of which he was a part, not take any measures in respect of refugees who obviously abused the system? Abuses were taking place some 10 years or 20 years ago. I would like to have an answer to that question.

My second question concerns a CBC interview on August 16. I am sorry I could not be present this morning, but I was on the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism. However, the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) referred to the middle ground as being something like a holding centre, a detainment centre, or what is commonly known as an economic refugee camp. Is this now the policy of the Liberal Party?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is also a member of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, along with me and a few other Members of the House. He has studied the issue along with me. He asked why nothing was done to deal with the problem of refugee abuses in 1976. He is a new Member of the House, having come here in 1984, so I must tell him that there were changes.

Very substantial changes were brought in by the Government in 1981. I believe there were changes in the 1970s as well. I cannot recall the exact year. I have been here 22 years and I have dealt with continual changes to the system.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): 1975-76.

Mr. Allmand: I thank the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). In 1975-76 there were changes to the legislation. In 1981 there were changes to the regulations. Also in 1981 the advisory committee on refugee status was set up. Changes were made over the years.

The refugee problem is a difficult one. The Hon. Member will recognize that the problem is becoming more and more severe world-wide. With air travel being what it is today, compared with the early post-war years, it is easier for people to board planes—and for that matter, boats—and leave their countries. Sometimes it the only way they can do it. They do not have time, nor is it safe, to go to the embassy to obtain a visa and so on.

In recent years the problem has become more serious and more tragic. That is why the Minister responsible for immigration in 1983 appointed Rabbi Plaut to come up with a new system to deal with the problem. The Hon. Member was on the committee with me. We recommended a new system as well. We were more or less unanimous on it. We made a report in November-December, 1985. If the Government acts on that report, I am sure we will have a much improved system, and we will support the Government in bringing in such legislation.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, it is curious that the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Oostrom) would question Liberal immigration policy when he was quoted recently as favouring only trained workers from western Europe entering the country. Then he tried to hide that by saying it was because they were more adaptable to our winters. I do not think that he should be asking questions about our Liberal policy if that kind of talk is representative of the government benches.

I thought my Liberal colleague articulated very admirably the whole question of refugees. In terms of the question posed by the Hon. Member for Willowdale about why the Liberal Government did not move on some of the things he thought it should have moved on, would the Hon. Member explain something which I think is very important? In the 1960s and in the 1970s the process was to select refugee claimants and our quota of refugees from refugee camps, whereas now, particularly over the last two and a half years to three years, we have been seeing individuals coming to our shores. It is no longer a question of why it was not done in the past. It is more that the system in the past was then and we now have an outdated system to try to address a new phenomenon. Would my colleague be able to make some comments on that particular aspect of the policy?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is correct. In the 1960s and 1970s it was not as common to have refugees simply arriving on our shores and claiming status. That was not the phenomenon at that time. It happened, but it was not as frequently as it happens today. I tried to refer to that in my earlier answer.

I visited Central America and some of the Salvador refugee camps. Even those refugee camps were raided from time to time to time by members of the Salvadoran death squads. Refugees were dragged out of the camps and they were decapitated, only to be found by the side of the road. This sort of thing happened very often because they were opposed to the regime in power. There has been a change in refugee movements and the way in which they have claimed status around the world in recent years.

I did not know of the statement made by the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Oostrom), but we cannot presume that because people come from western Europe they will adapt more quickly to Canada than people from more southern climates. Some of the most hardy individuals in our winter climate are people who came from South American, Asia, and many other such countries. Many people of our background cannot stand the winter and often go to Florida and the Caribbean to take in the sun. We cannot generalize on such things.

We have good immigrants and refugees from many parts of the world. That is the way Canada was built. I hope we will continue to live up to the record which earned us that Nansen award from the United Nations last year.

Mr. Oostrom: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member did not reply to my question on whether he agreed with the Hon. Member for York West that perhaps we should have detention camps in Canada for economic refugees.

The only change made by the Liberal Government from 1981 to 1984 of which I am aware was a consistent reduction of immigration levels every year. Particularly it froze the category of independent immigrants who could make a great contribution to Canada. Why was that done in those days? Today the Government is trying to reverse that whole situation.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I will answer the Hon. Member's last question first by giving him the figures. In 1979 we brought in 112,000 immigrants. In 1980 that figure was increased to 143,000. In 1981 it went down to 128,000. In 1982 it was at 121,000. There was a sharp drop for 1983 and 1984, he is quite correct, but I remind him that we were in a world-wide recession. I do not recall his Party or any other Party in the House suggesting at that time, when the unemployment was almost 12 per cent, that we should bring in large numbers of immigrants. Refugees were always welcome under the law. The point is that in 1983 we brought in 89,000 and in 1984 we brought in 88,000.

Now, three years after the recession, the Government brought in 97,000 last year. It has in no way matched the numbers which we as Liberal Governments brought in during the 1970s and the 1980s. I referred to those numbers earlier. In 1974, we brought in 218,000. In 1967, we brought in 222,000. Perhaps the Hon. Member could look at the figures over the years. It is true that we dropped in the two years of recession, from 1982-83 to 1983-84. However, I was on that side of the House at the time and there were no questions from Conservative Members asking us to increase those numbers.

When the Hon. Member's Party returns to even the 121,000 figure which we had in 1982, then he can start preaching lessons to us.

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Government and also as the Hon. Member for Willowdale, I am pleased to participate in debate on the motion respecting the central role played by family reunification in our approach to immigration.

• (1550)

Our Government has introduced significant and forward-thinking adjustments to both policies and programs as well as to procedures in order to reaffirm and consolidate the priority of family immigration. To suggest otherwise, as outlined in the motion, is to ignore the numerous important initiatives that have been undertaken. I know, Mr. Speaker, that these adjustments in policies and procedures may not be enough, but in the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, of which I am a member, we continue to work and suggest further improvements, and we expect to meet this week to that end.

The Government's policy regarding family reunification intake is really quite simple. Applications from close family members from abroad which are accompanied by sponsorship undertakings by their eligible relatives in Canada are accepted. It is that straightforward. The only requirements are that the applicants be in good health and of good character, requirements which apply to all immigrants to Canada. For 1987, the planning estimate is 45,000 family class landings. If more than that number of 45,000 eligible applicants come forward, they will be admitted.

By way of clarifying the Government's position in this matter, I can only stress that there is no numerical limit on family class immigration whatever. The 45,000 planning figure announced by the Government last November is just that, an estimate of client demand made for administrative purposes. It is not a quota, it is not a ceiling and it is not a target. I think it is important to emphasize as well that the total family class landings in 1987 and beyond will not be affected by increases or decreases in any other immigrant categories. In fact, far from restricting family class levels, we are pursuing measures to expand the scope of family reunification as suggested by the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration in reports tabled in this House.

In 1986 our Government introduced a policy aimed at increasing immigration levels in a moderate and controlled manner. It is important to understand that although no restrictions are placed on family class immigrants, there is nonetheless a casual relationship between the global announced level for all classes of immigrants and the number of family class immigrants who are admitted. Simply stated, increased numbers of immigrants generate increased applications for family reunification over time.

For instance, in the past year, the Government has extended eligibility for 119 new occupational groups of selected workers who may be admitted without pre-arranged employment in Canada. This increase in selected worker landings will be reflected in increased family class landings in 1987 and beyond as recently arrived selected workers become established in Canada and begin sponsoring close family members who are still abroad. This will reverse a trend that developed in previous administrations from 1982 to 1985 because of restrictions on independent immigration, and I am sure that my hon. colleagues will appreciate these increases. As I pointed out earlier in the House, the past Liberal administration decreased immigration levels from 1981 to 1984. Our Conservative Government has increased levels since taking power in September, 1984. It is our policy to continue that.

In addition, refugee and humanitarian intakes have also risen in the past three years and many of these immigrants, once firmly established, will also sponsor close relatives who were not able to come to Canada with them. When we combine these developments with the improvements in procedures and processing times, which I will address later, we are clearly looking at a growth scenario as far as family class levels are concerned. In these terms, it becomes clear that the level of family class immigration revolves on sponsorship demand which, in turn, Mr. Speaker, hinges on global immigration levels. At the same time, however, parliamentarians should recognize that there is an element of family immigration that is largely hidden.

It is worth noting that in the first 10 months of 1986, in addition to the 34,239 family class landings, there were an additional 21,420 landings of the spouses and other dependants of applicants in other immigrant categories. The total of 55,659 family members represents fully 70 per cent of all landings in that period. In fact, all successful principal applicants from any immigrant category may be accompanied to Canada by their spouses and dependants. Clearly immigration to Canada is a family movement.

An overview of client and sponsor patterns reveals some other facts that confirm the family's pervasive influence on practically every aspect of immigration activity. During the 1980s, for instance, only 20 per cent of landings can be attributed to the arrival of immigrant children under the age of 15. In 1986, more than 45 per cent of the applicants in the new occupations, opened for the selected worker category, had one or more relatives already in Canada. Some of these applicants will have gained bonus selection points on the strength of undertakings of support submitted by these relatives. This overlapping, interrelated aspect of immigration categories was not lost on the Hawkes committee members. In an attempt to clarify and consolidate the interface between families and the Department, its report recommended the creation of a new assisted family class category constituted of parents with dependants, siblings and non-dependent children.

The proposed assisted family class, and several other closely related recommendations, have far-reaching implications for future immigration policy in Canada. These recommendations speak of a fundamental reshaping of family class immigration that must be carefully considered, both in terms of its effect on operational procedures and its impact on the provinces and private sector immigration organizations.

We have begun discussions on these proposals as part of the ongoing process of consultation that provides the essential input needed to keep immigration policies and systems in touch with evolving needs. Last year, our consultations on the assisted family class and many other issues involved more than 600 groups, including non-governmental organizations; provincial and territorial Governments; other federal Departments; and academics and experts in immigration and demography.

I want to assure all Members, Mr. Speaker, of the Government's commitment to family reunification as we embark on an era of progressive, expansionist immigration policy. It is widely recognized that for Canada to realize the objectives of this new era of heightened emphasis on immigration, our immigration services must be streamlined. The fact that processing improvements are being implemented both at home and abroad has special relevance to family reunification. Now, family class applicants and sponsors alike will be the beneficiaries of fully co-ordinated procedures more attuned than ever before to their related needs.

While many of these initiatives will be internally generated, the invaluable contribution of the report of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration on family reunification must be recognized.

Under the chairmanship of the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) the committee made 59 recommendations that addressed three key areas: the importance of high quality service to the public; the strengthening of the management systems that guide officers in their work; and the acceleration and the improvement of the reunification process for close relative members abroad with their relatives in Canada. The Hawkes report and the Government's fast and positive response to it clearly signalled a long-term commitment to the family unit as the central fact of immigration policy. Already the Government is moving to implement recommendations to expedite the processing of spouses and dependants. The improvements being implemented signify the beginning of a new era for sponsors and their relatives. It is an era that will be characterized by service that is faster, fairer, more courteous and more humane.

What do these improvements mean to our constituents? It will be more convenient for sponsors of family-class immigrants to file sponsorship applications. Families will be encouraged and will find it easier to complete their own applications. The waiting period for sponsorship appointments will be, and in fact already is, considerably reduced. In addition, services for immigrants overseas will be enhanced through more efficient security and background checks as well as through improved medical processing.

These improvements will be an encouragement to all Canadians who want to bring close family members to Canada. They are also consistent with our goal to provide the highest quality of service possible. The way in which we respond to immigrants says much about Canada as a whole and the national values we espouse.

In conclusion, I would reiterate that the one value that remains a constant is the pre-eminence of the family in Canadian life. Immigrant families have provided the very foundation of Canadian nation-building. As we begin to chart an exciting future of increased immigration as an essential element of demographic, social and economic growth, the family unit will remain the corner-stone of Canadian immigration policy. In Willowdale, there is already some evidence of that. However, some people from the U.S.S.R. are not being allowed exit visas for family reunification in Canada. We have to do a bit more work and apply some more pressure there.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I listened attentively to my colleague from Toronto, the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Oostrom). My riding of York West happens to be a very multicultural riding, and many people who live there are still in the process of sponsoring their relatives. In my experience, the greatest frustration experienced by those individuals and individuals across Canada is their inability to sponsor relatives from abroad successfully. The Hon. Member for Willowdale has said that the Government is entering into a new era of progress and expansion in family class immigration, but that is hard to believe after looking at the facts of the matter.

In the last immigration targets, the Minister froze family class immigrants to 30 per cent of the entire immigration program. In the mid-1970s and early 1980s, that figure ranged from 45 per cent to 55 per cent. It is hard to understand how the Hon. Member can say on behalf of the Government that we are entering into a new era of progress.

As well, the Hon. Member mentioned that over the last couple of years, the Minister has increased the targets. However, the Hon. Member has failed to inform the House that while the Minister has increased the targets, there has not been the increased allocation of resources needed to process the increased targets. The Hon. Member and I were both fortunate enough to be able to travel with the Standing Committee on Immigration. He as well as I received information from visa officers abroad indicating that it is very easy for a Minister to increase targets, but if he does not allocate personnel and financial resources to meet those ambitious targets, he will simply not get the people coming into Canada. The year 1986 was a perfect example of that. The Minister announced a target of 115,000, but we fell 30,000 short of that. Is it any wonder that we are seeing the frustration of Canadians who are unable to sponsor family relatives from abroad successfully?

I believe it is incumbent upon the Hon. Member to explain why the Minister is playing the politics of targets. If the Government is not prepared to increase resources, then let us not get into an intellectually dishonest campaign. Let us tell Canadians how many people are actually coming to Canada without pointing to targets which are basically not worth the paper on which they are written unless they are supported by increased resources.

Could the Hon. Member tell us why, at the standing committee of which he is a member, the Minister accepted a good number of technical recommendations but failed to agree to two essential recommendations that were designed to break the bottleneck in family class immigration? The first was our recommendation suggesting that there should be more points allotted to prospective immigrants with family members in Canada in order to recognize the role of the family in immigration, and the second was the recommendation to expand the family class definition to allow brothers and sisters of Canadians to enjoy some kind of priority in processing. Can the Hon. Member explain why the Minister refused to accept those two recommendations?

Mr. Oostrom: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) has some difficulty with statistics. For example, he said that during the Liberal administration, approximately 45 per cent of total immigration was family reunification. That is simply not true. In 1975, family reunification accounted for 34.1 per cent and in 1980 for 35.6 per cent. It was only when the Conservative Government came to power that family reunification as a part of total immigration increased. As a matter of fact, in 1985, it was already close to 46 per cent and we will continue in that direction.

I can understand the Hon. Member's frustration if he is looking at the wrong figures. Last year he said that we fell 30,000 short in immigration. That is simply not true. That is the tactic members of the Opposition have employed continually in the House. They are misrepresenting facts and figures, and the people in our constituencies simply do not understand the truth if the right figures are not made available to them. I understand that last year, the total number of immigrants came to 97,500. That is a figure I got from officials and it indicates that we did not fall 30,000 short. We did fall short by a few thousand, but we are trying to make up for that this year.

Again, it is simply not true that the Minister did not comply with the recommendations of the standing committee. I think we submitted some 70-odd recommendations and only one was rejected by the Minister. He held six in abeyance and was to report back to us on them at a later date. He approved all the others in one way or another. In fact, he approved well over 50 recommendations. I do not know what more the Minister can do. He is one of the best Ministers we have when it comes to responding to requests of the committee.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I welcomed the Hon. Member's comments with respect to the Government's intentions concerning immigration. As the Hon. Member will know as I have discussed this with him before, I feel that my family and I would not be in Canada if we had been faced with the immigration policies, procedures, rules and regulations that exist now. My family came to Canada approximately 100 years ago from Britain. At that time, we had no family here. We would not have qualified as family class immigrants. At that time, we had just gone through bankruptcy proceedings in England. We had no capital and could not have come here as entrepreneurs. At that time, we would not have qualified as refugees seeking refuge in a new land so we could not have come here as refugees. It was an era of great unemployment not only in Britain and in Europe but in Canada. Certainly if the rules and regulations we now face as a result of economic conditions were in place at that time, my family would never have got here and I would not be here.

It is for those reasons that I welcome the comment of the Hon. Member that the Government intends to take some initiatives to increase the number of people who qualify to come to Canada. I suspect what the Hon. Member is referring to, and what the Government has in mind, still would not allow me to come to Canada today under those conditions, but at the same time I welcome what he had to say.

I look on him as an expert in this area and I would like to ask him if, as far as he is aware, it is the Government's intention to broaden the category of family class immigrants. In that way not only the spouses of landed immigrants or Canadian citizens, under age and dependent children and other relatives in those categories would be allowed into Canada, but other family class immigrants such as working children, brothers and sisters and other relatives would be allowed in as well. Is that what the Government intends and, if so, when can we look forward to something of that sort?

Mr. Oostrom: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is quite right. In those days there were not that many restrictions because there were quite a few independent immigrants who could quickly come to Canada. Those restrictions were implemented a few years ago and we are trying to open it up again. Personally I think there are not enough immigrants, but we also have to think about the family class and refugees. While I would like to increase it even more, it is coming along very well.

Our committee suggested that we should have a population study, such as that currently being done by the Department of National Health and Welfare. We foresee a population for Canada of about 30 million by the year 2000. That would mean that we need to have 200,000 immigrants every year until that year. Naturally, as the Hon. Member suggested, there would be many more independent immigrants in that category and many more family class immigrants. As a matter of fact, if one includes all the independents and the children in the other groups, we can see how in 1986 we had almost 21,000 landings of other independents. That has grown now to 31,000, and I admit that these are preliminary figures. That brings the total landings estimate which the Hon. Member referred to earlier to 97,474. We are moving ahead. It is perhaps not fast enough, but we have to consider all opinions and we are doing a lot by seeking opinions.

What should the total number of immigrants be? We hope the standing committee will be involved in that once the study by the Department of National Health and Welfare becomes available. We can then ask questions of Canadians. How big a population do you want Canada to have? Is it 30 million? We know the population, we know the death rate and we know the number of children. Unfortunately, Canadians are having smaller families, so the difference will have to be made up by immigrants. That could well mean a figure of more than 200,000 every year until the year 2000.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have been listening with interest to the speech made by the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Oostrom) and the questions and answers which followed. I recognize the obligation on a government Member to put the best possible light on the policies his Government is following. It is easy to talk about a fairer and faster way of handling immigration applications. That is easy to say, but it is strange when the reality of past years does not coincide. It is easy for the Government to point to an increase in the immigration figure. Of course what those figures are is a nice question. As the Hon. Member said, these are not goals and they are certainly not quotas. They are supposed to be targets, but they are not. Last year there was a significant shortfall in family class immigration, 5,000 under the supposed target. There were 10,000 fewer assisted relatives than had been allowed for by the Department in its planning. Why? Primarily because of the lengthy procedures those people faced. As the Hon. Member recognized in giving the figure of 97,000, which he was able to get thanks to the resources of the Department being made available to him as a government Member, that resulted in the Government's hopes for immigration last year not being met. Will they be met in the coming year? Fine words in this House are not going to do it. Much more is required.

Because of the necessity of developing a policy which will ensure the increase in immigration which various members think is necessary, it is useful to have this sort of debate on an opposition motion to condemn the Government for failures in its immigration policy. It has created confusion and suffered from a lack of leadership and vision. That is seriously undermining the confidence of Canadians in the over-all direction of immigration policy.

I want to say something in general about immigration and explore various aspects of the kinds of immigration to Canada that we enjoy these days. I say "enjoy". I know there are many Canadians who have a very real interest in our immigration policy. Many of them want to see that policy conducted in an expansive and fair way. Many are dissatisfied with the way in which the policy has been applied by the present Government and, to some extent, by preceding Governments. I do not think the Liberal Governments did everything perfectly in this area either.

First, immigrants have played a vital role in the development of this country. We can say quite truthfully that we are all the descendants of immigrants. Even the aboriginal peoples might be prepared to recognize a migration to North America once upon a time. Without arguing that point it is obvious that immigration has brought us a great diversity of human resources, cultures and communities. That is a fact and something we should all appreciate. Certainly with respect to multiculturalism, we have a national policy which asserts that that is a good thing. It allowed us to cultivate the consequences of immigration to this country. We need to assert that because the Minister suggested in a speech in January that there are those who like to celebrate their homogeneous societies and like to think of themselves as untouched by immigration and its various realities. That statement, which I asked him to withdraw and he did not, might have been allowed to pass until now if it had not been for the fact that he brought in guidelines on refugees at the end of February which suggested that he meant every word of what he said. It suggested that he would be quite happy to exclude from this country certain international realities, the creation, if you will, of refugees in various parts of the world and their desperate search for a sanctuary which these days seems to be available only in Canada.

In considering the question of immigration as my friend, the Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), did this morning, we face various attitudes over the years. I do not deny the fact that in labour circles in the past there has sometimes been ambivalence about immigration. That was quite understandable in cases where immigrants could be used in industrial relations against those who were then employed or those who sought to better their livelihoods. Wherever there were such experiences, one can understand people reacting against them. That is surely part of the reason the history of British Columbia was so disfigured by anti-Asian feeling from the late 19th century on into this century. It is necessary to transcend that by ensuring that there is fair treatment in the workplace and that employers do not do that.

At various times the reality of unemployment has led people to see immigrants as competitors and to want them to be excluded from the country. We obviously ultimately need policies that will ensure that we are near full employment which will allow us to look with pleasure to the arrival of people bringing in skills and abilities which can be developed and put to good use to build up the economic potential of the country. In the last 20 years there have been very important and significant developments of that sort.

I submit that to regard immigrants as competitors is misguided. As my friend from Spadina pointed out so well this morning, evidence from various labour organizations shows that it is not a concern these days. We have instead a growing recognition of the need for higher levels of immigration to this country in order to ensure that the Canadian population grows rather than stagnates as a result of the very small families which Canadians have these days, the result of which is that we are not even maintaining our population by natural increase.

There had been a suggestion that we should be aiming at a level of 30 million by the year 2,000. That calls for immigration levels well above the 125,000, or a little more that we have at the moment. If the Government recognizes these needs, we will see movement toward 150,000 or 200,000. That is surely necessary. When we do that surely arguments about people being economic refugees, wanting to come to this country not because there is anything wrong in their homeland but only because it is good here, would fall by the wayside. We want to recognize that when people have skills and see opportunity they should be encouraged to bring their skills to Canada and seek the opportunity of a good life here. In the process they can only enrich Canada by living here, working here, and maintaining their families here.

Every time I hear someone talking about economic immigration or whatever in this critical sense, it seems to me that there is a hint of that kind of opposition to immigration peeking through. I do not think that should exist in the Canadian mind. It should never be expressed by persons in government or speaking for government. We want to rule that out because Canada is a land of opportunity. We very urgently need persons of ability to come here to improve themselves and build Canada.

I said a few moments ago that in the past 20 years laws have been in operation which have brought to this country persons of high ability. That has been a basic factor in the growing diversity of the Canadian population, the development of a multiracial Canada. In 1967 the laws were changed to remove elements that had been fairly clearly racist in their intent. Instead of maintaining a white Canada we began to build a Canada of ability and merit, if you will. We began to accept immigrants who had the education and ability to contribute to Canada. One may say that is, in a sense, creaming off the population of other parts of the world, but I do not suppose I should make very much of that, any more than I should deny the right of others to complain about economic motivation in bringing people to this country.

The high quality of immigration is worth noting. It has many, many consequences. In the City of Toronto there is a remarkably high percentage of people of Asian origin among university graduates. They certainly comprise a much larger proportion than do other segments of the Canadian population. That is one of the realities in a multicultural Canada. It is one of the realities that drives on the demand for full participation by individuals and communities.

It is this sort of experience that has me celebrating immigration year while recognizing that the opposition motion which we are debating today is appropriate and necessary because there have been shortcomings. All the fine words of one member or another from the government benches cannot deny the fact that the perception in the country is one of a tightening up. Many of us have the perception that the procedures are very lengthy in too many parts of the earth from which people want to immigrate to Canada. As a result, we have the low figures which I have already cited, 5,000 and 10,000 below the figures which were supposed to be the target for immigration to this country.

I was talking earlier today to one of my assistants in my constituency who takes primary responsibility for immigration cases, if you will, which come to my attention. We were exploring the situation which faces us, particularly the reaction which public opinion polls suggest is developing among too many Canadians these days. As she said very truly, the fact that many people think that the present system is unfair has a good deal to do with the fact that when they try to work within that system they face so many delays and roadblocks that they become terribly frustrated. When they see those who have managed to circumvent the system by extra-legal means of one sort or another they cannot help but become angry. This means that the limited personnel involved in handling cases and the drawn out procedures which presently prevail are really at the heart of the unhappiness which has developed among many Canadians with regard to our present immigration system.

If we were operating the system fairly, if all of the talk about family reunification were actually being acted upon by the Government, if those who seek to bring relatives to this country were able to do so as they should, they would not become unhappy because a group of Tamils from Sri Lanka who had become anxious about their ability to stay in Europe safe from the civil war that is raging in northern Sri Lanka decided to go to a country where they would be safe, namely, Canada. We would not have reaction against their landing on our shores of the sort that we had last August.

In emphasizing the fact of the inability to achieve family reunification I would like to allude to a couple of cases which my assistant, Judith Foulds, has had to deal with. I, of course, have dealt with the persons as well. We have the case of an East Indian family, a physician and his wife. The wife would like to bring her elderly parents to Canada. There have been some medical problems with her parents. Yet they face the declaration of the Canadian Government that they may be a burden on the medical system of the country and will not be allowed to emigrate here. I submit that this physician is perfectly capable of providing for his in-laws and would surely do so.

Now that these people have applied to come here, they are caught in the system, and the possibility of coming to Canada to visit is excluded because of the rampant suspicions in our system that visitors will turn themselves into immigrants. When relatives die in other parts of the world because of the rigidity of our system and the anxiety that our prized medicare system will suffer a slight burden from people from other parts of the world it is nothing less than a system of institutionalized brutality. It is outrageous. That would not happen if we had any kind of humanity in our refugee policy, overseas development aid policy and our immigration policy generally.

When one examines the visitors' visa applications with which we have had to deal, they underscore the lack of political will in these areas at the top of the Department and some levels down. I must also say that the personnel with whom we deal at the lower levels are excellent in their administration and are humane and sensitive in their undertakings. These include personnel at the Thunder Bay office and the lower levels at the head office here.

That lack of political will in the case of visitors' visas is exemplified in another case of an East Indian family. There was an application for relatives to visit. The husband is employed by Air India and the wife is a teacher in India. However, they were denied visitors' papers at the High Commission because of the obvious distrust that they would try to stay in Canada if they visited. It was appealed all the way to the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner). There was no resolution, but there was a hard line attitude taken by the Minister and his officials. Such an attitude is an indication of what is wrong not only with the federal Government but with the administration of immigration and visitors' visa systems of government.

The complaints I received reached their ultimate ridiculous point when I tried to help someone from Poland pay a visit to Canada. He was denied a visitor's visa, but all he wanted to do was come to Canada to sightsee, fish, and have a rest. I do not know what else visitors want. He had no intention of working and it was not obvious that he would want to try to stay here. Yet he was denied his opportunity to visit, which perfectly demonstrates the kind of inhumanity that has crept into the administration of our laws. That is the case, whatever may be the protestations of government Members in the House.

This inhumanity reaches its ultimate point when refugees from various parts of the world are faced with similar drawn out procedures and similar hostility in the administration of the law.

I suggest that for the last 200 years refugees have made a vital contribution to Canadian history. As a matter of fact, the bicultural and bilingual nature of central Canada, certainly in the 1960s, was a result of the initial arrival of United Empire Loyalists who were political refugees from the new United States of America. They were refugees as diverse as Mennonites, who came here in the realization that they could have a freer life in Upper Canada than in the United States. They were refugees as diverse as the Six Nations Indians who settled in the Red River Valley.

The United Empire Loyalist migration was fundamental to the development of a Canada and les Canadiens. These English and other settlers of great diversity began to build and continue to build a diverse Canada.

I am of Mennonite origin. There was the Mennonite migration of the 1870s and, more particularly, the 1920 political refugees from Soviet Russia who are very grateful to be in Canada.

Let me suggest that refugees from authoritarian and repressive regimes of the right surely are the most valuable addition we could have in this country. They seek a free society in which they can practise their faith, speak their mind, and lead the kind of open lives that it is not possible to lead in a repressive military dictatorship in Chile, the civil war situation in El Salvador brought on by the desire of a few to maintain their power and the desire of the majority to break free from it, or the Palestinian situation in the Middle East which has not been resolved in over 40 years.

One can think of the Hungarians who left after the abortive attempt to change the society of their country in the 1950s. There are the East Indians who were forced out of Uganda in the early 1970s. There are the boat people of Vietnam. Surely these are people who had some independence of mind in most cases, if not all, and have sought to maintain their freedoms and speak their minds. Surely they are the kind of people we want.

In conclusion, I plead with the Government to respect the letter and the spirit of this resolution as coming from both opposition Parties. It is expressing our intense desire that in 1987, a year after Canada was awarded the Nansen award for its openness to refugees over the years, we cannot go back and see Parliament adopt principles that are truly unfortunate in the administration of refugee requests. Let us maintain the openness that this society should have and increase the numbers we need in order to build Canada for the 21st century.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member referred to the speeches of government Members in this debate as fine words with nothing in the way of substance behind them. I have concluded, after listening to the Hon. Member for some 20 minutes, that his comments were a lot of fine words and very supportive remarks for immigration, whether it be immigration of refugees or others, but lacking in specifics and substance.

Will he outline specifically what his policy and that of his Party is with respect to immigration? Is his Party's policy with respect to refugees to wipe out the recently introduced rules and regulations and return to the rules and regulations introduced in late February of this year? Is it his policy and that of his Party to wipe out all the rules and regulations relating to refugees altogether, as he seemed to imply in his comments? Is it their policy that those who are able to get out of camps or places in which they were detained and come to this country by hook or by crook are the ones whom we should accept? Should we scrap the system altogether and let anyone arrive who wants to come here? Or should we design a new streamlined system which in some way changes the procedures to speed things up? Perhaps there should be a different quota, an increased quota for refugee claimants. What specifically does the Hon. Member and his Party advocate with respect to refugee immigrants to this country? At the same time, can the Hon. Member tell us what specifically he and his Party advocates with respect to immigration generally? Again, is it to scrap all of the system and have no rules and regulations? Or should there be some rules and regulations which differ from the ones we have now? If that is what he and his Party advocate, does the Hon. Member advocate an increase in the quota? If so, has he some specifics in mind as to how much that should be? Does he advocate a broadening of the definitions of the categories of who should be allowed to come to Canada? If that is what he and his Party are advocating, what specifically should it be?

I think rather than being generally critical of the policies of present and past Governments—and I am certainly not immune to that sort of thing—the time has come to be positive and to tell us what he and his Party stand for, not what they are against.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's last words were a gratuitous shot. If I was anything, it was not negative. I spoke of what we needed to do. I celebrated immigration and refugees. The Hon. Member recognized that himself in suggesting he would like to have some specifics as to what the system actually ought to be. I noticed, incidentally, in his previous question and answer exchange with the Hon. Member for Willowdale that the Hon. Member himself was uttering a critique of the policy by suggesting that if the present system had prevailed at the time his ancestors arrived, they would not have been able to stay in this country. That is itself eloquent enough. He is an able Member of the House. If his ancestry had not been allowed to stay here it would have impoverished Canada somewhat. Surely that is what we are suffering these days.

The Hon. Member has asked a great variety of questions. I would not presume to answer them all, although I can start. The answers clearly need to come from the critic for this area rather than from one of the other members. However, to ask if what we should do is to go back to the system which prevailed before the end of February, is to ask one question which is very easy to answer. That system was so unsatisfactory and had been criticized by so many people. We are not that kind of fools. We have humanity. We want the recommendations which have been made in the area of refugee determination to be overhauled. We have more than enough studies on the matter. I remember that a year ago we finally passed the Bill which provided for an enlargement of the Immigration Appeal Board. That is something which should have been done a year earlier. What we clearly need is a procedure under which refugee determination can be carried out expeditiously. We in our Party are quite pleased to draw on the expertise of those who work with the situation. We are quite pleased to look to the work of the Canadian Council of Churches and those groups which come together under its aegis to consider the question. I could take the time to read their recommendations. There are proposals for a refugee status determination which could be completed in about 14 weeks. If it were necessary to have an appeal to the Federal Court, perhaps that would take up to another 13 weeks. That is an expeditious process, a simplified and humane process. That is the kind of action we in the New Democratic Party look for.

As far as targets of immigration are concerned, I believe I was speaking within the parameters of what the Hon. Member for Spadina, as critic, is developing in putting forward what I regard to be a positive program for immigration to Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) for a question or comment.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, our Party has many spokesmen and I do not think that I will have an opportunity to speak today. However, I would like to make a comment and ask a question to my colleague. I was listening carefully this morning when the Minister spoke about immigration and the refugee problem.

What my colleagues and myself, and especially our immigration critic, have suggested is that Canada should now show some leadership in this issue at the international level. While I am speaking about the refugee issue, I would like to ask my colleague if he agrees with our suggestion that Canada has not only a mission and a responsibility in this regard, but also a duty to do something more in view of its good reputation throughout the world as the problem has become so prevalent internationally. Is it not time to take the first step and even to call if necessary an international conference of major Western countries to deal with the refugee problem immediately? Would the Hon. Member tell the House what Canada should do to fight against the serious international problem posed by refugees, which everyone realizes will become the major problem of the nineties? The refugee problem will obviously become the major problem of the last decade of this century. Because of our privileged situation in Canada, it is our duty to understand the refugee problem. I would like to ask my colleague if he can tell us what he thinks about this suggestion which we intend to develop and to put forward, probably even in our electoral program.

[English]

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): I thank the Hon. Member for that very good question. I am not sure it is going to be a crisis of the 1990s. It certainly is a crisis already in the 1980s.

Mr. Prud'homme: A world crisis.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Yes, it is already a world-wide crisis. We have massive movements of persons. Some of these migrations are the result of political difficulties of one sort or another, and those are the ones to which the system is sensitive. I think the Canadian Government should look down the road and recognize challenges and needs and see them as opportunities to play a leading role on the face of this earth. I am pleased to see the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) taking his seat. I would suggest that we have here not simply a matter of refugee determination, not simply a matter of something which should be provided for within immigration, but we have a challenge to our role as peacemaker, if you will. I have become somewhat involved with difficulties in several parts of the world which generate refugees. It seems to me—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Jonquière (Mr. Blackburn), on a point of order.

Mr. Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw your attention to the fact that the interpretation system has been out for several mininutes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will ask to have the system restored as soon as possible.

[English]

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): As I was saying a moment ago, Mr. Speaker, in various parts of the world we find political situations which are producing refugees. Some of those situations we may not be able to do anything about. I suppose we can do precious little to change the Government of General Pinochet in Chile. We might be able to have some influence on other parts of the earth. I look to the Government of Canada to do its part in these areas, drawing on our Canadian experience with the federal system in which we have not always been brilliantly successful, yet we have retained a peaceable society. We have managed to absorb dissent. We have managed to overcome even violent dissent in this country. Perhaps that gives us some reason for acting in some of these areas to encourage federal solutions, if you will, perhaps a redrawing of boundaries. I do not mean to dodge the question at all. I recognize the world-wide nature of these difficulties. However, I think there are possibilities of going beyond our national defence-based role in providing peace-making forces to certain areas and trying very actively to deal with the political difficulties and to encourage solutions. If we were to do that then the Canadian people could see our activity here as an indication that we want to enable people who want to stay where they are in the world to remain there and to live in peace and security. On the other hand, those who are not able to stay, or those who do not want to, should be encouraged to come here.

• (1650)

I think a Canadian initiative through the United Nations which would come to grips with this situation is what is needed. The suggestion I have made is designed to keep the global problem within manageable dimensions. Without such manageable dimensions we cannot end repressive regimes, and wars cannot be brought to their end. From such situations we need to challenge other western countries, if they are to be the prime recipients of refugees. I suppose those are the countries about which we are aware in terms of refugees. I suppose that refugees end up in all parts of the world far from our borders and we are hardly aware of them. However, if they are confined to refugee camps in Thailand and Cambodia or in the Middle East that will never be satisfactory. We need to do something about that situation. A United Nations initiative on the part of the Government would be a splendid step to deal with that.

I thank you for your indulgence for allowing me this extra time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, in their book entitled None is Too Many which addressed the question of why Canada was closed to the Jews of Europe in the 1930s and 1940s Professors Irving Abella and Harold Troper wrote as follows in their preface:

> To the condemned Jews of Auschwitz, Canada had a special meaning. It was the name given to the camp barracks where the food, clothes, gold, diamonds, jewellery and other goods taken from prisoners were stored. It represented life, luxury and salvation; it was a Garden of Eden in Hell; it was also unreachable.

They go on to state that the barracks at Auschwitz symbolized what Canada was to all the Jews of Europe throughout the 1930s and 1940s—a paradise, enormous, wealthy, overflowing and full of life, but out of bounds—a haven totally inaccessible.

You might think that it is perhaps inappropriate to draw a parallel between what Canada's policies were in the 1930s and the 1940s, Mr. Speaker, and what they are today. However, I will defer perhaps to a higher authority than myself, namely, Dr. Rabbi Plaut, who authored the report on Canada's refugee policy which was presented to the Government about two years ago. In an article in The Canadian Jewish News of Thursday, March 12, he states:

> We have instituted measures which are effective practically, and defective morally. We have signalled a return to former practice which made Canada all too often inaccessible to those most in need of succor.

Last February 20 will go down in Canadian history as a day of shame, for it is the day that our Government closed its doors to refugees.

[Translation]

It was the day when this Government announced a series of cruel measures that go against the humanitarian tradition established in Canada about 40 years ago. It was on February 20 that the Government erected a barrier, not just on the U.S. border but across the world. From now on, refugees who knock on our door and ask for Canada's protection will get the following answer from the Conservative Government: Do not disturb. Don't call us, we'll call you.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) tells us that our policy is unambiguous, and I quote:

> We offer asylum to all bona fide refugees arriving in our country.

The Minister does not say that the Government has just erected a barrier around Canada to ensure that no one will be able to enter the country. The Minister does not say either that the true objective of his policy is to discourage refugees from knocking on our door. The Minister does not say that the message transmitted throughout the world is that Canada's doors are now closed.

[English]

It has been made abundantly clear in recent weeks that the Minister of Employment and Immigration and a bunch of mean-spirited Tory back-benchers call the shots when it comes to the Government's immigration policy. The Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner), the junior Minister, does not have a word to say about the formulation of policy. But he has become the major apologist for the Government. The Minister of State for Immigration says that real refugees will never be sent back. He says that every claimant will be entitled to a fair and open hearing. Should we believe him? After all, the Minister of State is an honourable man. Let us examine what has happened in the past month.

On a snowy Sunday one week after our Government closed Canada's borders to refugees I visited a refugee shelter in Plattsburg, New York, 60 miles or so from Montreal. I talked to refugees at the shelter who are fleeing violence and death threats in Central America. Many have been living underground in the United States. They were homeless, penniless, scared and, in many cases, separated from their families. They came to our border and asked for Canada's protection. We told them: "Wait for a month or two in Plattsburg and then we will admit you to Canada for an immigration inquiry".

When they were turned back at the Canadian border these people had their first encounters with U.S. immigration authorities. They were forced to sign documents voluntarily agreeing to leave the United States. Many were living underground and had not had any previous contact with U.S. immigration authorities. If not accepted in Canada they will not be allowed to stay in the United States and, presumably, they will have to return to the countries they are fleeing, or face deportation. They were not quite sure what awaited them a month or so down the road in Montreal.

[Translation]

Among those I met, Mr. Speaker, there was a boy with his mother and sister, all three from Guatemala, whose father had been in Montreal for some time. Our Government is obliging them to wait at the border for at least a month, in uncertainty and squalor. Why make them wait? The Government is making them stay at the border pending an inquiry in Montreal that will rule on their application for refugee status, a process that may take several years. During that time, they will be able to stay in Canada. Making them wait at the border, I should point out, makes no difference to the investigation. Does it make sense to make them wait 60 miles from Montreal while they could just as well wait for the inquiry with their father in Montreal, and enjoy the support of the churches and various organizations that provide assistance to refugees? Why make them wait? Mr. Speaker, this is harassment. The Government is making them wait for no reason at all, in squalor and uncertainty, at the Canadian border, because the Government and the Minister want to discourage and prevent refugees from entering Canada.

[English]

As of February 20, the Government also requires transit visas for refugees from some 98 countries who plan to stop over in Canada en route to another destination. People from these 98 countries include refugees who used to be on our non-deportable list. The countries include Afghanistan, El Salvador, Guatemala, Iran, Cambodia, Lebanon, Sri Lanka, and Viet Nam. Just to recite the names of these countries tells us that they are countries torn by violence and war to which our Government, up until now, considered it too dangerous to deport refugees. They are countries, Mr. Speaker, in which neither you nor I would want to live and would think twice about visiting these days.

Refugees from these countries are often lucky to get out with their lives. Now they are told by the Minister of Employment and Immigration to put their lives in further danger by openly presenting themselves to Canadian embassies and consulates and indicating that they want to leave their countries permanently. Does the Minister not understand that going through such bureaucratic procedures is a luxury which refugees cannot afford? Does the Minister not understand that refugees are lucky if they have the time to pack a bag and run?

The Minister says that he wants an orderly process. I can tell him that he has succeeded. Transit visas are indeed very effective, as we can see from the example of the Chileans who were caught up in Argentina. The Minister did not even have the basic decency to allow for the fact that they had already left Chile for Canada at the time the new measures were announced on February 20.

Last August the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) urged Canadians to show compassion toward the Tamil boat people who had arrived on our shores. At the time he said: "It is not the presence of 155 frightened human beings searching for freedom and opportunity that is going to undermine Canada or our immigration policies". Never a finer statement was made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), but it begs a question. If 155 Tamil boat people will not upset our whole immigration policy, why would a few thousand bus people from Central America over the Christmas holidays upset it?

In recent months the Ministers responsible for immigration have actively promoted the idea that we in Canada are facing a wave or flood of refugees. I note the use of words which convey a sense of natural disaster. However, what evidence is there that we are facing an unmanageable number of refugee claimants?

Last year, 18,000 claims were made in Canada, not more than the number of people it would take to fill an average hockey arena in Canada. The Minister of State for Immigration stated on a number of occasions that because we took in a thousand a week in the first few weeks of 1987, we would have reached some 52,000 by the end of the year. Perhaps that is what he was afraid about. However, is it accurate that this number of refugees would have continued every week throughout 1987?

What evidence is there? The Minister has not given us an iota or scintilla of evidence to prove that his forecasts were anywhere near realistic. Indeed, a recent decision of the United States Supreme Court on the rights of refugees in that country will probably have the effect of substantially reducing the numbers that would have come to Canada.

When I was in Plattsburg, representatives of local social service agencies told me that rumours had been circulating for weeks that Canada would bring in tough new refugee rules. If this rumour had reached Plattsburg, is it not logical to assume that the unusually large numbers which we saw in the first few weeks of 1987 were people who were trying to get into Canada under the wire? I would remind the House that in the last few weeks before the Berlin Wall was put up in 1962, thousands of refugees crossed from the East to the West because they knew it would be their last opportunity to do so.

What evidence is there to suggest that Canadian society has reached its capacity to absorb or integrate refugees or immigrants? Have we reached that level? The evidence suggests that we are far from it.

Let us look at what our country was capable of doing for Indo-Chinese boat people. At that time the Government showed leadership. I am happy to see the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) present in the House today. He was the Prime Minister at the time the Government appealed to the better instincts of Canadians, to the generosity of Canadians, who sent up sponsorship groups in community after community across the country. We opened up our military bases and chartered aircraft. Since 1979 we have taken in over 100,000 Indo-Chinese refugees, with over 60,000 in 1979 and 1980 alone. Today, seven years or eight years later, all these persons are contributing to our country.

The question I would put to the Government today is: Why not act in a similar fashion in 1987? Why not, if we are afraid of a large number of refugees perhaps coming to Canada because of inhumane laws in the United States, remind President Reagan of his responsibilities? Why not call an international conference on Central American refugees where each country would agree to welcome a certain number of refugees? Such a conference was held in 1979 to deal with Indo-Chinese boat people. Why not show this kind of leadership?

Instead, we have a Government which has let the situation deteriorate. It has delayed bringing in legislation to deal with refugees for over two years now. The Government has also failed to commit adequate resources and has taken no action against fraudulent counsellors and travel agents.

In Quebec, some people say our province has taken more than its fair share of refugees. In fact, that was the conclusion of a poll published in Le Devoir a few weeks ago. It is just not true. We have ranked fourth for at least seven or eight years, coming after Ontario, British Columbia and Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, some people insist that immigrants are taking away our jobs. I would like to thank Senator Rizzuto for suggesting the following argument: If it is true that immigrants are taking away our jobs, how come Ontario, which year after year has received three times as many immigrants and refugees as Quebec, has an unemployment rate of only 6 per cent, while Quebec's unemployment rate is 10.5 or 11 per cent or more?

[English]

Canadians are a generous people. If presented with the facts, they will respond positively with generosity. Canadians are capable of rising to the occasion as they did with the Indo-Chinese boat people.

I have had occasion to work with some of the people who help refugees and immigrants—non-governmental organizations, church groups, and immigrant aid societies. I visited refugee camps in southeast Asia in 1980 at the height of the crisis. People who work with immigrants and refugees are extremely dedicated and committed. If we present them with the challenge, they will respond.

These groups are dismayed with the policies of the Government. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), who was here several minutes ago, shook his head when I drew some parallels and said that the doors of our country were closed to refugees. He seemed to disagree. I ask him to speak with the people in the Mennonite Church whom he knows intimately and to ask them what is their opinion of his Government's policies. These groups, Mr. Speaker, will not accept these policies and will not stop fighting until they are changed, until this Government adopts the recommendations of the Plaut report, the report of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, and introduces a refugee determination process that is independent, fast and fair. Our Government is capable of better. Canadians are capable of better.

If I might just close my comments on what I regard to be a rather depressing situation, perhaps one can make a point better in a humorous fashion than one can in a serious fashion. A predecessor of mine in the Liberal Party, Sam Jacobs who was the Member of Parliament for Cartier district in the 1930s, which takes in much of the same area that I represent today in the riding of Laurier, once said that Jesus of Nazareth would be barred from Canada under current government policies. Why, Mr. Speaker? There are four reasons? One, he would not have a proper passport. Two, he had no relatives in Canada. Three, he would not be travelling to Canada by a continuous journey—the same thing could be said about the refugees who now require a transit visa. Four, he was a carpenter. Who needs carpenters? Mr. Jacobs also at one point said that the policy of the present Government on immigration is like the wisdom of God, it surpasseth understanding. The same thing could be said today.

I hope that the Government will review its policy introduced last February 20, read history and listen to what people like Rabbi Plaut are saying. Again, I would ask the Minister for National Health and Welfare to speak to his friends in the Mennonite Church and ask them what they think about these policies. He was part of a much more generous Government. I would ask the Government to show leadership and tear up the shameful refugee policies that were introduced last February 20.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) who I think spoke with compassion and integrity. His interest in the over-all subject of immigration and the plight of refugees goes beyond a one day debate in the House of Commons. The Member has been very active on that front.

I was interested by the debate earlier on with respect to perhaps paying some attention to the international community and to the international obligations that we signed on behalf of the plight of refugees in 1951 as well as the protocol of 1968. If Canada has been a leader—and it has—then the type of policy announcements that we have seen coming down the pipeline will send a very dangerous signal to other countries. We will soon see the Great Britains and the Switzerlands begin to retract, and regrettably they will use Canada as a justification for doing so.

If we are to play that educational role in calling for an international agreement or a strengthening of those agreements through an international conference, what about a domestic international campaign which the Government ought to begin to initiate? It should present Canadians with the straight goods. The Government should begin to put this in the perspective of our declining birthrate, of our aging population, of an outflow of 50,000 Canadians each and every year, of our needs in terms in skills and labour and those jobs that you and I, Mr. Speaker, perhaps do not wish to do as well, as the other benefits we have been talking about. What are the views of the Hon. Member for Laurier in conducting that type of domestic educational campaign and structuring a positive constructive role rather than trying short-term temporary solutions that only feed off misconceptions and fear for the benefits of a political Party?

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, it would be great for the Government to undertake an educational campaign but it would have to change direction 180 degrees from what it has been doing. We have a Government which is morally bankrupt. It has manipulated public opinion. People are beginning to see through this facade. There have been a number of well-thought opinion articles and editorials in newspapers across the country which point to the hypocrisy of the Minister of Employment and Immigration . . .

—who wept crocodile tears when he heard about the poll published in Le Devoir which said that Quebecers thought they were getting more than their fair share of refugees. This is the same Government and in fact the same Minister who let the system deteriorate for two years and procrastinated and failed to introduce the Bill all groups have been waiting for, the Bill that will correct the present situation.

I agree the Government could set up some kind of policy or campaign to educate the public, but that would require a drastic change from what we have been seeing in the past few months.

[English]

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, primarily I have a comment. As you know, Ministers do not very often intervene in the comment or Question Period. I think it is important for me to comment in view of some of the statements the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) has made which are erroneous—I cannot use an unparliamentary word to describe them. He said that the refugee numbers have decreased. The member used the 1979-1980 figures. He did not mention that it was a Government at that time, along with many volunteers, led by the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), now the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who initiated that policy together with the present Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald).

Let me come to the present situation. It is not true and it is patently false when the member says that refugees are being cut off by decisions taken by our Government in February. In fact, the number of refugees has increased. The Government made a very clear point when we assumed power that we would increase immigration. Immigration flows when we came into Government were 89,000. The 10 year average is about 140,000. Most of us who had some dealings with immigration in the past know that we have to increase those numbers. That is a given fact.

We also know that if we look at demographic factors Canada is below replacement value. The demographic studies taking place now in the Department of National Health and Welfare as we look to the turn of the century show that immigration has to increase. Immigration has been good for Canada. Statements should not be made which are not in keeping with the facts.

In 1984 we had 89,000 immigrants. The Government came forward with an amendment, which I moved way back—supported at the time—that the Government of the day had to come before Parliament and give annual targets. We did that. We hoped that we would have an improvement in the economy and there would be new employment, which is taking place, and we said we would increase that figure to 105,000 in our first year and that we would increase it to approximately 125,000 the next year. What other decisions the Government will take when we have to appear before this House—I think it is in November this year—will again show an increase.

Let us look at refugees specifically. We increased the refugee numbers along with the entrepreneurial class. We went to 12,000 of government-sponsored and another 4,000 of co-sponsored refugees. Just recently, after the announcements here on the refugee matters, I was in Traiskirchen, the basic camp from which eastern Europeans come. I met with NGOs there. To a person, they told us to keep our refugee policy.

They said we cannot jeopardize a good policy. We did win the national humanitarian award. There is integrity in the system.

There are convention refugees who cannot come into Canada because of jumping the queue. It is not the Conservative Government that does not want more refugees and it is not the Liberal Party nor the NDP. It has nothing to do with partisanship. It bothers me when there is this twisting of the facts.

We have increased the number of refugees and, I would think, we will increase it again. That is natural in the Canadian context. Hon. Members may put forward their partisan views but I would hope that they would at least put them forward with a factual point of view rather than to score political points based simply on information that is not factual.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I have a great deal of respect for the Hon. Minister but I must ask him to get in touch with some of the people he knows in the Mennonite Church and ask them about their position on the Government's current policies. It is not just members of the misguided Opposition who are saying what I have said. I refer to the comments of Rabbi Plaut. He said that we have signalled the return to a former practice which made Canada all too often inaccessible to those most in need of succour. Does the Minister think that Rabbi Plaut is also misguided?

I would point out that I did mention the initiative begun by the Government which was led by the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead. That initiative was based on a much sounder moral ground than the one of the current Government. The policy as it related to Indo-Chinese refugees was very humanitarian and was carried through by our Government.

The Hon. Member spoke of refugees that we select at our visa offices abroad. I would point out that we did not fill the number of positions available for those selected abroad last year. Does the Minister think that that kind of procedure is appropriate for all refugees? Does he think that refugees should put their lives in danger in many cases by openly presenting themselves at Canadian offices abroad and indicating that they want to leave their country permanently? Does he think that this is an acceptable risk for many refugees to take?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions are coming from the Hon. Member who made the speech and the Minister is answering. Is there unanimous consent to allow the Minister to make a comment and to allow the Hon. Member to make a final reply?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer the Hon. Member. In Mennonite communities, there is the same kind of division of opinion as that expressed by the Hon. Member. My father who is a member of the Mennonite Central Committee was a refugee who came through that system. Always there was respect for the manner in which one had to address the issues, laws and regulations of the country.

Many people do not understand immigration. Immigration has been good for Canada. However, we cannot leave the impression that those who come here through conventions or by being sponsored by voluntary organizations are not coming here under the laws of Canada. The Hon. Member has asked if people should put their lives in jeopardy. At present, Canada does take people who are not convention refugees and cannot have a hearing. The regulations are quite clear on that.

Let us take a look at the number of refugees. In 1981, the total number of refugees, both convention and otherwise, was 14,996. In 1982, it was 16,908, in 1983 it was 13,643, in 1984 it was 15,400, in 1985 it was 16,550 and in 1986 it was 18,625. The Minister of Immigration has indicated that he is looking at an increase in that number. However, it must be done in a way that does not put immigration as a whole in jeopardy. That is the point we are making, and I think many Canadians agree with that point. That has always been the bottom line for immigration in Canada.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the Minister, as I have throughout my comments, that under the guise of stemming abuse, the Government has slammed the doors of Canada shut. The Minister talks about the need to respect and address the laws of the country. I suggest that our country has an obligation under international refugee conventions and our Government is not respecting the spirit and the letter of those obligations.

Refugees who would run great risks in presenting themselves at our visa offices abroad will be shut out from any recourse by the policies the Government implemented last February 20. I would ask the Minister to think about the situation in which some people find themselves. There are those who do not have the time to present themselves at a Canadian Embassy abroad and there are those to whom no such embassies are accessible. Some embassies have been closed down by the Government because of the financial straits in which it finds itself from time to time.

Refugees from Lebanon often find that their home towns are bombed flat in the middle of a war. They do not always have the time to line up at a visa office abroad.

Again, I would suggest that under the guise of stemming abuse, the Government's policy has slammed the doors shut on many refugees who really counted on Canada as being one of the last countries in the world to present an open door and a humanitarian attitude. If the Minister is really sincere about wanting to address the problem of refugees, I would suggest that he encourage his colleagues to implement as quickly as possible the recommendations of the Plaut report and the recommendations of the Standing Committee on Immigration. The standing committee recommended that a new refugee determination process be instituted, a process which would be independent, impartial, quick and fair to refugees. Refugees should be treated in that manner rather than with the kind of cavalier attitude that we have seen from the Government since last February 20.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Jonquière (Mr. Blackburn).

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, we have reached an exciting and significant moment in the history of Canada's refugee policy, and it is my privilege to speak to that part of the motion that is more specifically concerned with refugee issues. I am looking forward to seeing the development of a progressive policy in this area and to following the progression of that policy very closely with the Members of this House.

The Government's measures with respect to refugees continue to reflect a commitment to humanitarian principles. Canadians can be proud of what this country has achieved in the area of assistance to people who reach our borders after having been victims of oppression and persecution. I am looking forward to a debate on this policy by the Members of this House. Too often, such debates only take place when there is a crisis, and are then quickly forgotten.

The motion before the House today urges the Government to adopt a fair, humane and efficient refugee policy which would reinforce Canada's past proud tradition and honour Canada's international obligations under the Geneva Convention signed in 1951.

As far as our immigration policy is concerned, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that the Nansen Medal was awarded to Canada on November 13 last year in recognition of its tireless commitment to refugees from countries around the world. It is the highest honour awarded by the United National High Commission for Refugees to those involved in assistance to this group.

Mr. Speaker, awarding a prestigious medal to an entire nation is a rare event. That tribute was paid to us as a result of the co-operation and dedication of a great many individuals and organizations. We have every intention of remaining faithful to the commitment for which we, among all other nations, were found worthy of such regognition, and of maintaining our efforts on behalf of immigrants and refugees.

In 1987, for example, Canada will welcome more than 20,000 people under refugee and other humanitarian programs.

This is the kind of generosity which characterizes measures taken by Canada on behalf of refugees and which singled out our country as the deserving recipient of such a great honour.

More measures will be taken with respect to refugees. For instance, participation in the activities of international agencies abroad; settlement assistance for refugees; signing sponsorship contracts; intervention of action groups.

We agree, Mr. Speaker, the Government does have a role to play but it cannot act alone. Religious groups and non-governmental organizations can participate actively by helping refugees and immigrants. Sponsorship and initiatives in settlement cases are so important that they are covered under the Immigration Act. Indeed, the whole process began in 1979 at the suggestion of a Conservative.

For all practical purposes, it was the official aim of new co-operation which included consultation, policy drafting and participation in resolving settlement problems, determining required services, and setting immigration levels.

Now, Mr. Speaker, a few words about sponsorship. The refugee program is a model, particularly because of strong sponsorship on the part of private groups. The best example is the Nansen Medal which was awarded to us last November. We now have in excess of 50 sponsorship agreements, proof positive that the Government and private agencies are working together to relieve suffering people.

In 1979-80, 32,000 people came to Canada under the sponsorship of about 7,000 groups encouraged, once again, by the dynamism and initiative of the Conservative Government. Over the past five years, more than 18,000 refugees were sponsored by private groups which helped them get settled in this country. Hon. Members of this House cannot but applaud such worthy efforts.

Let me say a few words, Mr. Speaker, about starting costs. Despite the increasing cost of dealing with the flow of refugees and the costs involved in the adaptation assistance program, we have in no way reduced funding in that area, quite the opposite. Three years ago, $30 million were used as income support for 10,000 Government-sponsored refugees. In 1987, because we are aiming at 12,000 refugees, that amount should go up to $50 million. Those monies have already been earmarked for that purpose.

In addition, this Government does not intend to reduce the amount of assistance offered. We will seek by all means to achieve a better control over adaptation assistance program funds.

Let me now refer to agency funding. We recognize the value of services offered to newcomers by private agencies. We are committed to supporting them. The funds allotted to the immigrant settlement and adaptation program for the coming fiscal year have been increased to $4.9 million.

As far as language training is concerned, the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission has launched a pilot project, the newcomers language training program. Immigrant women outside the labour force are an important target group. This is another example of this Government's innovation. We have recognized the need to implement a federal program to meet special language training needs.

Mr. Speaker, the project allows women to get out of language ghettoes and to assume better their rightful place in Canadian society. During the coming months, the Canada

Employment and Immigration Commission and the Department of the Secretary of State will review their language training programs, with a view to strengthening the Canadian Government's role, and more importantly, to establishing a program that will meet the various needs of people who have just entered Canada.

What about legislative measures for acknowledging refugee status, Mr. Speaker? Our commitment to refugees is as steadfast as ever. It will be strengthened when legislative measures for the recognition of the status of refugee are tabled in the coming weeks. The draft proposals are in their final stages, Mr. Speaker. This is an extremely important and complex matter which requires our undivided attention.

The growing number of claims, which went from 8,400 in 1985 to 18,000 in 1986, should reach 50,000 this year. Mr. Speaker, it is important that Canadians should realize this constant increase. I repeat that the figures—8,400 in 1985; 18,000 in 1986; and probably over 50,000 this year—have forced us to take temporary control measures in order to set up a new process without having to face an overwhelming number of claims.

However, Mr. Speaker, we must make sure that we have a fair and adequate system.

Our legislation will emphasize certain elements. It will make it possible for us to protect refugees while preserving our reputation all over the world as a compassionate country. The legislation will reflect also our moral, legal and international commitments.

The new legislation will reflect the contributions of many groups, including the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, and that of Mr. Plaut.

Particular attention has been paid to the opinions of sponsoring groups and ethnic organizations.

Here are some of the highlights of the proposals announced last May: First, the setting up of a commission of immigrants and refugees independent of Canada Employment and Immigration Board. Second, hearings by an independent tribunal which would give claimants the benefit of the doubt. Third, an impartial climate during the hearings. Fourth, an appeal authorization before the Federal Court of Canada and, fifth, an access which would not jeopardize the integrity of our immigration program.

These elements had to be reassessed in the light of the new events which have occurred since last May, but, as a whole, the characteristics of the new process combining justice and effectiveness, will be maintained.

The new refugee determination process will discourage the abuses which have prevented the process from being effective these last few years, and the Hon. Members know what I mean by that. For instance, we found out that Turkish nationals who wanted to come to Canada were abusing the process. These abuses were eliminated. We have slowed down the rapidly increasing number of people crossing our borders, without however exposing a single one of them to being sent back to his country of origin. However, Canada will always ensure that genuine refugees have the best protection possible.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian delegate to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees said the following on February 25: Canada was unfortunately the victim of such abuses, and it has unfortunately had to take a number of measures to protect itself. But even so, explained our representative to the High Commissioner for Refugees, the methods used by Canada are much less drastic than those applied by certain other countries to stop an excessive inflow of refugees.

We have to keep up our tradition.

At the international level, Canada has sponsored initiatives to organize to some extent the procedures used by various countries to face the refugee problem and prevent those who already benefit from a certain protection from bypassing the process at the expense of people who really need this assistance, that is people who really need our help. Various international organizations as well as the High Commissioner for Refugees have supported such initiatives, which will very soon have positive results.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I would like to add that Canada was built by immigrants and refugees. They met their challenges with pride, integrity and success. We shall continue to be proud of their achievements because they are for us all the guarantee of a brighter future. Indeed, we believe immigration to be increasingly important for the future development of Canada for a variety of reasons. First, there are economic reasons, because we believe that immigrants create more jobs than they take away from the Canadian economy. They take part in the economic growth and development of this country by contributing to the creation of capital, by increasing the demand for Canadian goods and services, by providing needed skills and dynamism to our labour force and by contributing to the tax revenue of all levels of Government.

Also, socially and demographically, I might add that my Government is convinced that immigration is a major force which contributes to the economic and social prosperity of Canada and which has allowed our country to take the lead when international solutions have been needed to solve the problem of refugees and immigrants whose cases involve humanitarian considerations.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 5.45 p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 82(10), to interrupt the proceedings and to put forthwith all questions necessary to dispose of the Supply proceedings now before the House.

ENERGY

CANADIAN EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVE PROGRAM

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, just a little over a year ago the Government discontinued grants under the Petroleum Incentives Program after denouncing them for several years.

Today the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) announced in Edmonton the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program, which is a new system of incentive grants to stimulate exploration and development in the oilfields. He is providing some $350 million in grants which will provide about $1 billion in exploration and development and create some 20,000 jobs.

It is interesting that the Independent Petroleum Association indicated that the net costs, after taking into account unemployment insurance, welfare and social costs in a $350 million program like this, would be about $60 million for the Government. If those figures are correct, why is the Government so timid? Why did it not provide a program which would create more than $1 billion worth of exploration and development when, over the past year, we have lost $5 billion worth of exploration and development? If the Premier of Alberta had not threatened to split the Tory Party unless there was action on this issue, we wonder whether there would have been any program at all to assist the oil industry.

VIA RAIL

TORONTO-GUELPH-KITCHENER-LONDON SERVICE

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, last week in this House I expressed my extreme dissatisfaction with VIA Rail and the arrogant way in which it makes its decisions. So far I have received no response either to my letter to Mr. Hanigan or to my comments in this House.

My request to VIA is really a very simple one—and if my Liberal friends would keep quiet, it could be heard. I want all plans to remove trains or to change train times on the Toronto-Guelph-Kitchener-London run delayed until these plans have been discussed with the liaison committee in Guelph which was established for just such a purpose. If VIA will not do this on its own initiative, I ask the Minister to step in and see that common courtesy is given to the people of Guelph.

ACID RAIN—U.S. CONGRESSMAN'S RECORD

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) whether he approved of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) accusing U.S. Congressman Gerry Sikorski of engaging in partisan tripe when he was critical of the Canadian approach to President Reagan. I had hoped that the Prime Minister might moderate the tone of his Minister's words and, consistent with his own rhetoric about Canada-U.S. relations, show some respect for differences among friends. Instead, the Prime Minister made matters worse. He either pretended not to have heard of Sikorski before—a deliberate insult—or has not actually heard of him. I am not sure about which we should be most upset.

Yes, Mr. Sikorski has not persuaded many in his own Party to act on acid rain, but he has an extremely well-known record as one of the handful of people in the U.S. Congress who have persistently tried to get both Republicans and Democrats to wake up to this issue. For our Prime Minister either not to know or not recognize this is ignorance on a level that should make all of us embarrassed.

Perhaps Mr. Sikorski's unforgivable sin in the eyes of the Prime Minister was his devastatingly accurate comparison between the Prime Minister and Charlie Brown, who, every year, takes a kick at the football held out for him by Lucy. Every year she pulls it away and Charlie is the laughing stock. President Reagan is holding out the acid rain ball again, and the P.M. has got his kicking shoes on.

SPECIALTY CROPS—SUGGESTED INCLUSION IN SPECIAL CANADIAN GRAINS PROGRAM

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, many of our progressive western farmers have been looking to alternative crops to grow rather than the traditional wheat, feed grain and oil-seeds. The farmers and export companies have developed markets to the extent that there are now about 1 million acres in Saskatchewan alone producing specialty crops, thereby reducing grain acreage. Dry peas, beans, lentils, mustard, canary seed and dehydrated alfalfa products are the main specialty crops grown.

When the Special Canadian Grains Program was instigated this year, these crops were left out of the payments. Because this acreage is out of grain production, the farm groups who were in charge of the program should reconsider their decision and see that a payment is made this time around out of the balance due later this spring.

ACID RAIN

DECAY OF MAPLE TREES—UPA DEMAND THAT GOVERNMENT INTERVENE

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, although irrefutable scientific proof is not yet available, an increasing number of researchers and scientists, both in Canada and abroad, agree with the UPA that acid rain is causing the deterioration of our maple trees.

The UPA is therefore asking the Government of Canada to get involved and intervene quickly and decisively in this matter by negotiating a genuine bilateral agreement with the United States; by establishing a calendar for these negotiations and the implementation of the agreements that will be negotiated; by assigning research teams to finding ways of at least putting a halt to further deterioration of our maple trees and other hardwoods; and finally, by compensating producers for the losses and damages suffered which amount to $100 million.

SUGGESTED CONVERSION OF SURPLUS GRAIN INTO ETHANOL

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the Western Canadian Wheat Growers Association is progressive, active, and innovative. Its analysis shows that wheat farmers are facing a crisis because of loss of overseas markets for wheat, but instead of crying the blues this association looked for opportunities to redirect the lost export volume of wheat and have come up with a significant plan to convert surplus grain into fuel ethanol for blending with methanol and gasoline. The economy of western Canada depends upon grain just as much as it depends upon oil and gas. This innovation would create jobs, keep people on the farm, support livestock on animal feed which is the by-product of methanol manufacture, and even help the petroleum industry.

The leadership of the federal Government is needed. The refiners can help by realizing that alcohol blends serve the interests of the region, contribute to energy security and have significant environmental benefits. Congratulations to the Western Canadian Wheat Growers Association. With the help of government, we can have another industry in western Canada.

PROCEEDINGS IN STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, when Canadians elect representatives to speak for their concerns in Ottawa, they do so in the hope that, when appropriate, all Parties will work toward constructive ends. As the spokesman on aboriginal issues for the New Democratic Party, I have and continue to hold the view that partisan concerns and parochial attitudes do nothing to further the cause of Canada's first people.

Yesterday the Indian, Inuit and Métis people of Canada were reminded again of that truism. In an anonymous office tower, behind closed doors and safely tucked away from probing microphones, four Members of Parliament abrogated their responsibilities to aboriginal people. In a recorded vote, the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann), the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall), the Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz), and the Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Scowen) voted to block the report of the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development in breach of the committee's traditions and the spirit of the McGrath reforms.

Tomorrow the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will chair the last First Ministers' Conference on the self-government aspirations of our first citizens. He and the other 16 participants at the table will decide on the constitutional rights of future generations. We in the New Democratic Party hope Governments will take the opportunity to deal fairly and to end many years of injustice. It is a sad comment on democracy that the views of the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs will not be heard.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

SUGGESTED LOCATION OF THERMAL GENERATING UNIT IN DALHOUSIE, N. B.

Mr. Albert Girard (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, recent statistics have again demonstrated that the County of Restigouche suffers from chronically high levels of unemployment and the lack of a dynamic industrial base. With lay-offs at CN and two other major industries in my riding, the federal Government and the Government of New Brunswick must continue to work together to create more durable employment in Restigouche.

To that end, I would urge the Government of my province and the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission to locate in Dalhousie their proposed carbo-gel thermal generating unit. This new process, developed with generous assistance from the federal Government, uses New Brunswick coal mixed with Venezuelan oil, and would be a natural for the second unit at the Dalhousie thermal plant.

We have the port facilities in Dalhousie for the transportation of the raw materials, and we have the manpower. We are located close to the New Brunswick-Quebec interconnections. Restigouche needs the 200 permanent jobs that this project would create.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA AND ROMANIA—PLIGHT OF HUNGARIAN MINORITIES

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to call to the attention of Canadians a serious minority rights problem within the communist bloc. The Canadian-Hungarian community is crying out for pressure to be brought on the communist Governments of Czechoslovakia and Romania over the plight of the Hungarian minority living in those two countries since the partition of Hungary following World War I.

Four million ethnic Hungarians live in Transylvania and Slovakia. They are forced to give up their national identity, language, religion, and culture. A growing protest is being registered by the community mainly through the Hungarian Human Rights Foundation which is sponsored by religious and community organizations in Canada.

Canadians fully understand the importance of cultural expression as a part of human identity. The Liberal Party urges the Government to send a strong message to Romania and Czechoslovakia in the cause of human rights denied.

LIBERAL PARTY

PARTY FINANCING

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, the Liberals still think they own Canada and Quebec. Their political stars from Quebec still want to rule the roost.

The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) and Senator Rizzuto are practising a form of blackmail against municipal authorities. Is the Liberal Party in such financial straits that it has to resort to threats to get back in the black?

On February 23, 1987, the municipal authorities of the riding of Saint-Jean received—

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ELGIN MARBLES—CALL FOR RETURN TO ATHENS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, today Canadians join with Greeks all over the world to celebrate Greek National Day. On this day, March 25, in 1821 began the uprising which resulted eight years later in independence from Turkish rule. Greek men and women then endured brutal repression to secure their freedom. As we salute them we remember the courage of other peoples all over the world who still live under foreign domination and continue to struggle for freedom. Today we remember especially the people of Cyprus where our own troops guard the fragile Green Line which demarcates the Turkish Army occupation zone.

There is still some unfinished business from the period of Turkish domination of Greece which is of particular concern to Canadians and other members of the Commonwealth. I refer to the removal of the so-called Elgin Marbles from the Parthenon to London. All civilized people must denounce this act of cultural terrorism and call for it to be undone, specifically by the return of this great work of art to its original home in Athens.

SUPPORT FOR GOVERNMENT POLICY AND MEASURES

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, in recent weeks the Opposition has been uncharacteristically silent about science policy. I have not refrained from criticizing government policies when I felt they needed criticism, but fairness demands that when real progress is made we are as even-handed with our praise as we are with our criticism.

Real progress is being made. First, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) established and now chairs a National Advisory Council on Science and Technology. Second, the Estimates tabled recently give the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) and the research councils substantial real increases in funding. Third, the Minister negotiated a genuinely historic agreement with the provinces to co-ordinate national science policy. Yesterday he gave us the broad, general direction of the federal strategy to promote scientific and technological development in Canada. There is more to come. The situation is not perfect but this House really should applaud the Prime Minister, the Minister and the Government for the real progress made in recent months in bringing science and technology policy to the forefront of our national priorities.

IMMIGRATION

MINISTER'S ROLE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the problem of 17 Lebanese immigrants was raised in the House by my colleague for York West (Mr. Marchi), and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) missed a golden opportunity to show compassion by using his discretionary power to relieve the sufferings of these 17 people.

A Minister of Immigration ought to know the value of human life. His main responsibility consists in preserving the dignity of men and women who are hoping to find refuge in Canada.

But what does he do? He hides behind the mountain of paperwork to justify his actions and his decisions. He is totally insensitive to the fact that 17 desperate and helpless individuals are carted around from one country to another and from one airport to the next.

Instead of being adamant and unflexible the Minister should contact the Canadian embassy in Damascus to find a temporary refuge for these people while waiting for his officials to deal with the required red tape formalities.

In addition, since some of these immigrants have relatives waiting for them in this country, my own riding included, in this case the Minister should use his discretionary power to reunite the families involved as soon as possible, thus saving them from further torments and worries.

TRIBUTE TO FORMER TABLE OFFICER AND DISTINGUISHED EX-SERVICEMAN

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members will want to pay some attention to the following statement which it is my unhappy duty to make. I ask for the attention of all Hon. Members.

Hon. Members will no doubt have learned that Mr. Alexander Small, a former officer of this House, died on Saturday, March 21. I am sure all Hon. Members would agree that it is fitting for me to pay tribute to him for his past services and express, on behalf of the House, our deepest sympathy with his family.

Alex Small joined the House of Commons staff in 1952 as a committee clerk. He gained steady promotion, becoming Assistant Chief of English Journals in 1958 and Chief of Journals in 1961. In 1964, as part of an administrative reorganization of the House of Commons, he became Director of Legislative Services and Third Clerk Assistant. In 1969 he was appointed Second Clerk Assistant, a position that he retained until his retirement in 1982.

Alex Small served as a Table Officer for a considerable part of his career and his face was familiar to many of us who are still Members of this House.

Alex Small also had a distinguished war record in the Royal Canadian Air Force and was held as a prisoner of war during the last year of the war.

He died following a courageous fight with cancer, and will be greatly missed by his friends and all who knew him.

On behalf of Members of the House of Commons I will convey a copy of this message to his family.

PATENT ACT AMENDING LEGISLATION—U.S. REPORT ON FOREIGN TRADE BARRIERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, although I thought I saw the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs earlier, in his absence I will direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I see we have now flushed him out, Mr. Speaker.

The Minister has always taken the position in this House that he never came under American pressure to change our drug price legislation. Will the Minister confirm that on pages 54 and 55 of the official 1986 United States Report on Foreign Trade Barriers, which I cited to the House of Commons during the trade debate, it states that Canadian "practices cost U.S. pharmaceutical interests significant lost revenues each year. The United States continues to raise its concerns at senior government levels." "The United States "urges speedy submission of modifying legislation"."

Why did the Minister and his colleagues cave in to that style of American pressure on drug prices and sell out our elderly and poor and those dependent upon drugs on a daily basis?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I have said in the House on many occasions, I have never been approached by the American Government. The Minister for International Trade has never talked to me about this being a trade issue. We are introducing this legislation because it is good for Canada. It is going to generate $1.4 billion of incremental new research and development, at least 3,000 jobs, and better health care for Canadians. It is a good Bill for Canadians. The only people who are preoccupied with what the Americans think about this are the members of the Opposition.

REPORTED LOBBYING OF AMBASSADOR

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister confirm that Mr. Edmund J. Pratt, Chairman of President Reagan's United States Advisory Committee for Trade, personally lobbied Canada's Ambassador to the United States to change our drug price legislation? Will the Minister also confirm that the same Mr. Pratt is the chairman of Pfizer Corporation, one of the world's largest drug companies? How could the Minister sell out Canadians under this kind of pressure?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I was aware of those accusations. The Canadian Ambassador to the United States informs us that his recollection of the conversation is entirely different.

Will the Leader of the Opposition confirm that when he was chairman of Sandoz, a Swiss-based pharmaceutical company, he, according to the president of another Swiss company, Ciba-Geigy, on many, many occasions expressed his opposition to compulsory licensing and the damage it was doing to the pharmaceutical industry in Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I do not deny the appointment, but I never made such a statement because I brought that legislation into the House of Commons in 1969.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POSITION OF UNITED STATES GENERIC PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY ASSOCIATION CHAIRMAN

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a sworn affidavit in my hand from Mr. William Haddad, Chairman of the Generic Pharmaceutical Industry Association of the United States, which states in part that on September 10, 1986, "the ambassador" that is our ambassador, "said that Mr. Pratt took strong positions on the Canadian drug legislation and placed it high on the list of U.S. demands on Canada, but that it was not clear whether in doing so he was speaking for Pfizer or the U.S. Government".

• (1425)

I will put my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Since his embassy received a copy of the affidavit 48 hours ago, he must be up to date on the information. Will he confirm that the Canadian Government came under high level pressure to change our drug price legislation and that the Canadian Government yielded to that pressure?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will not confirm that because that is false.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It concerns a question he was asked about drug prices in the Patent Act. On November 19, 1986, as reported at page 1320 of Hansard, the Minister said:

> No one made representations to me either from the United States, through the trade office or through the External Affairs office or in any other way.

This sworn affidavit clearly indicates that the Canadian Ambassador felt that the Canadian Government was under heavy pressure from the United States Government. Will the Minister reconcile these two contradictory statements and confirm that the Canadian Government was under great pressure from the multinational corporations?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has just denied and said that that affidavit is in fact not true. But when talking about pressure, part of the pressure that was applied was of the type of pressure the Hon. Member for Sudbury and other colleagues brought to bear. The Member for Sudbury said in a Canadian pharmaceutical magazine:

> I may be branded as a heretic amongst Liberals in this country—but I happen to believe in intellectual property rights, and I think the patent laws of 1969 went too far in one direction.

That is the kind of pressure to which we are responding. Those changes went too far.

REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, when will the Minister stand up to protect the elderly in this country as opposed to the multinational corporations? The Minister knows that drug prices will rise dramatically in this country. Is he prepared to withdraw this unfair and unjust legislation in view of the evidence which has been submitted by affidavit and proves beyond a shadow of a doubt that Canada was lobbied by multinationals and undue pressure was put on the Canadian Government? Will he not do that?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have a letter that a colleague received from a 35-year-old physician who has two children and was just diagnosed as having leukemia. He wrote:

> —please do not oppose the new drug Patent Act for soon forgotten political points and newspaper coverage.
> Please remember that to oppose this legislation will deny the hope of new treatment and cures for patients like myself . . . . Please give the hope of new drugs—

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Andre: I am listening to that person.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River.

FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, after more than five years of negotiation, countless meetings and boatloads of promises, the Prime Minister will chair the First Ministers' Conference on Aboriginal Rights tomorrow. In echoing the voices of hundreds of thousands of native people in Canada, will the Minister of Justice tell us what success the Government believes is possible in these talks if the Government is not prepared to move from its position that the right to self-government should be contingent rather than inherent?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for asking this question, which is very appropriate on the eve of most important meetings between aboriginal leaders and the leaders of Governments of our country. I must say, though, that the premise to his question is not correct. The fact is that it is not the federal Government that has been inflexible in terms of positions it has been putting forward with respect to constitutional amendment. We have been giving leadership and, according to independent impartial observers, the Prime Minister has been recognized as doing more in moving this debate toward a positive conclusion in the interest of the aboriginal people than any other Prime Minister. We are going into these discussions with the determination that we will do everything possible in order to achieve the amendment within the constitutional period set down, in the interest of aboriginal people and, indeed, in the interest of all Canadians.

Mr. Parry: If the Minister of Justice seriously believes that he can put that message out unchallenged, he had better buy some commercial time.

SELF-GOVERNMENT—ABORIGINAL PEOPLE'S CLAIM OF INHERENT RIGHT

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that the aboriginal people of this country are looking for a recognition of their inherent right to self-government. Is the Government prepared to sacrifice these talks on the legalism of contingent right in the face of the fact that the aboriginal people of this country have never, through treaty or otherwise, renounced their right to self-government?

• (1430)

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Hon. Member and his Party will not resort to partisanship with respect to an issue which I believe should transcend partisanship. I think this is far too important to try to achieve cheap political points. I say to the Hon. Member that when he is making these kinds of allegations with respect to positions which have been put forward, he should be mindful of the fact that we have been working tirelessly—the Prime Minister has given this a very high priority—in order to achieve an explicit recognition of the right to self-government, and we want to find the wording which will be appropriate to all the participants.

I remind the Hon. Member that it requires the co-operation of provincial Governments. We need seven provinces representing 50 per cent of the population of this country in order to have a constitutional amendment. I say to the Hon. Member that he should go to some of his political friends and tell them what he thinks about this matter and ask them to be a little more flexible in this area.

Mr. Parry: We will soon find out whose political friends are found wanting in this matter.

CONFERENCE AGENDA

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister is so committed to finding a formula to which all can agree, would the Minister of Justice tell this House why his telex read that the first part of the conference will focus neither on the specific language nor on specific proposals? How do we get a constitutional amendment in this country without specific language?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member by his question indicates he does not know what this meeting will be dealing with. The telex is clear. If the Hon. Member were fair he would know that the telex indicates we will use as a basis, or what we are proposing to put forward as a basis for some discussion, the Nova Scotia third draft, with amendment, as representing the basis upon which all the items which require to be attended to at this conference could be addressed. So there is a specific piece of paper, and other participants are now coming forward with their suggestions.

Let me put it this way—I hope there will be flexibility. I hope other Governments and the aboriginal people will follow the lead of the federal Government which has shown leadership, the determination to work toward an agreement, and that it is prepared to be flexible in order to achieve agreement.

CONTINGENT RIGHTS ISSUE

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is also addressed to the Minister of Justice. Would the Minister explain to the House, to the aboriginal people of Canada and to the citizens of Canada, why his Government would take the position that an aboriginal right must be contingent upon agreements being made, when with respect to other rights, for example, the rights of women and linguistic rights, we have never insisted they be contingent upon agreements negotiated and signed with the Government. Why, Sir, are aboriginal people being treated so differently in the seeking of their rights?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, again I think the Hon. Member attempts to put labels on the position put forward by the federal Government. If the Hon. Member were to consider the position of Liberal Governments across this country, he may be dealing with a contingent concept, but he cannot make that accusation with respect to the federal Government. What we are saying is that we want to recognize an explicit right. We want the right of self-government to be within the Canadian Confederation. I hope the Hon. Member shares that basic and fundamental precept with respect to these discussions. Indeed, a recent polling has indicated that most Canadians support the idea that the articulation of self-government should be through negotiated arrangements. This is the Canadian way. This is the appropriate way in order to achieve self-government.

We recognize, and we are prepared to recognize explicitly and clearly in the Constitution, the right to self-government. We say we are going to include in the agreement a non-derogation provision which will say that nothing in this amendment derogates in any respect whatsoever from any rights the aboriginals have under our Constitution. That is our position. I would like to know what the Liberal position is.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT SUPPORT INHERENT RIGHT CONCEPT

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of Justice whether he will carefully reconsider the position being taken by the federal Government at this time and follow the lead offered by the Leader of the Official Opposition in his motion last Friday, and make a declaration when he goes to that conference tomorrow that the right to self-government is both an inherent right and an inalienable right? Will the Minister do that?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have to say with all deference to the Hon. Member—who I acknowledge has had a long interest in this matter and I commend him for that; he has been very much involved in aboriginal matters—that I have a very difficult time understanding the position put forward by his Leader on the basis of last week's discussion. I do not know what else we can possibly do in a constitutional document, and I remind the Hon. Member again, it is not a matter which can be dealt with unilaterally by the federal Government. We must have with us seven provinces representing 50 per cent of the population of this country in order to get—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Show the leadership.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We want to ensure that we can build a plateau upon which the aboriginal people can go forward. We are putting forward propositions which meet all the criteria of the things the aboriginal people have asked for, yet do reflect the fact that our preferred route is through negotiated settlements. I hope the Hon. Member will support us in our endeavours.

PATENT ACT—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. As the Minister knows, since 1969, when Canada changed its Patent Act insofar as pharmaceutical products were concerned, there have been no less than four major studies which have examined that policy and concluded that it was a sound one for Canada. Would the Minister now stand in his place, in face of this additional evidence, and simply tell the Canadian people that the only reason the Government is now changing that policy is because of pressure from the industry in the United States and President Ronald Reagan?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member had participated in the committee deliberations on this Bill, and I might remind the Hon. Member the House has already approved of the Bill in principle, he would have seen the studies and examination, and had he kept an open mind he would realize that this Bill provides an enormous net benefit to Canada. I frankly cannot understand why the New Democratic Party is opposed to more research in this very important health care area here in Canada. Why do the New Democrats insist we let the rest of the world do that research and that Canada should opt out of this important area, thereby denying hope to people like the young sufferer of leukemia about whom we talked?

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, the only person who believes that flimflam is the Minister and his Conservative colleagues, no other Canadians.

REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister whether he will now come clean with Canadians, and rather than trying to make a case about who pushed hardest for changes in this policy, the previous Government or this Government, will he just stand in his place and tell Canadians he is prepared to stand up for Canadians and withdraw the legislation?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, standing up for Canadians is precisely what we are doing in the face of hysterical, false accusations as to the impact on the consumer, in the face of misrepresentations by the New Democratic Party, and in the face of so-called financial analyses, the authors of which deny they put together. In the face of all of that, we are standing up for Canadians because this Bill is good for Canada, and reasonable Canadians know that.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—PRIME MINISTER'S SCHEDULED MEETING WITH PRESIDENT OF AFRICAN NATIONAL CONGRESS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns communication with the South African Government. The Prime Minister visited several front line States a few weeks ago. Yesterday I read a report that the Prime Minister may meet with a senior African National Congress spokesman here in Ottawa. In our earnest efforts to help bring about an end to apartheid can the Secretary of State assure us that constructive dialogue is still taking place with President Botha and the South African Government? Will he, or the Prime Minister, be visiting South Africa this year or next?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, neither the Prime Minister nor I have any present intention to visit South Africa. However, if it would serve a constructive purpose toward bringing an end to apartheid, I would certainly be prepared to undertake a visit of that nature. The Prime Minister and I will both be meeting with Mr. Oliver Tambo, the President of the African National Congress, when he is here sometime over the next several weeks.

With regard to relations with South Africa, embassies are open in both countries. Despite my natural modesty, I draw to the attention of the Hon. Member remarks in a speech I made in Montreal the other day when I said:

> —we must all seek means to keep lines open to all parts of South Africa—black and Botha, Buthelezi and Tambo, Mandela and Afrikaner. The worst result would be for us to cause the Botha Government to change its view, and then not have the channels to effect that change.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

IMMIGRATION

PORTUGUESE REFUGEES—ALLEGATIONS CONCERNING CONSULTANTS AND OFFICIALS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It concerns the revelations that Canadian immigration officers in Portugal are linked with unscrupulous consultants in an extensive immigration scam. We have an immigration policy that is misguided, a program paralyzed by confusion, and now allegations of visa officers peddling visas for $4,000.

Given that I urged the Minister of State for Immigration last May to conduct a full investigation and to take action on the ring of unscrupulous consultants behind the movement of Portuguese refugees, I want to ask the Minister why the Government failed to take this affair seriously. Why has there been no action or charges laid by the RCMP after a full year of investigation? Why did the Government appoint this morning a second RCMP investigation when we already have one which is ongoing? Canadians want action, not whitewashing.

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for York West may very well ask me why the RCMP did not take action, but he should direct his question to them. What I can tell him for now is that indeed I was told Monday night about the case he is referring to. I did ask the RCMP to make a full investigation in this matter, and I would suggest we would be ill-advised to comment any further since the police are investigating.

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF DEPARTMENT

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, a once proud immigration record in the department has become a national disgrace, something which Canadians regret. I ask the Minister again why his Government failed to act on the network of phoney consultants when, as a Party and as Members of Parliament, we brought them to his attention fully one year ago. These consultants are now turning their eyes on other countries such as Brazil. Will the Minister agree to a full and public review of the entire Department of Immigration so that we can clean up this mess once and for all and regain the confidence of Canadians?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is entitled to express his opinion on the Department of Immigration and its employees, but as far as I am concerned I think that the people who work for the Department of Immigration are quite competent.

As to his question concerning these allegations, I said a moment ago that the matter is under investigation, and I should think that the RCMP are qualified and competent enough to assess such cases. We will act in accordance with their recommendations.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

BRITISH COLUMBIA LAND CLAIMS—FUNDING OF FEDERAL COURT CASE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice regarding the dispute being fought between the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development before the Federal Court of Canada. Since Canada approved a policy to negotiate comprehensive land claims in British Columbia just three months ago will the Minister explain to the House why the Department of Justice and the Minister of Indian Affairs are supporting and funding the position of the Nishga Tribal Council and the Government of Canada before the Federal Court, while the Minister of Fisheries has approved at the same time funding of up to $100,000 for the plaintiffs who wish to strip the federal Government of its powers to negotiate a settlement constitutionally?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I take it the Hon. Member is acting as the justice critic for his Party even though that is usually the job of the Hon. Member for Burnaby who I see is now here breathing fully again in the House. We are glad to see him back.

As far as the position put forward is concerned, I want to say to the Hon. Member that, naturally, we are looking after the Department of Justice which, in fact, is looking after the expenses of the federal position. Other departments will in fact entertain and receive applications in respect of funding. I know that the Hon. Member is supportive of an application for funding concerning the aboriginal peoples' position in this litigation. Each department will look at particular interests and determine whether or not appropriate funding should be made available for important constitutional issues that should be clarified before the courts. That is the simple explanation to the Hon. Member.

FEDERAL POSITION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the facts of the matter are that B.C. fishermen and B.C. Indians are being used as cannon-fodder in a dispute between two Ministers. Will the Minister of Justice tell the House if the cabinet policy passed in December of 1986 to negotiate comprehensive land claims in British Columbia still stands? If it does, why is the Government of Canada paying for the plaintiffs, the Department of Justice, as well as for the defendants there in the Federal Court? Why does the Government not resolve this issue at the cabinet table or the negotiation table rather than dragging it through the courts at the cost of millions of dollars?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member gets sued some day and decides that he will not enter a defense he will understand the position we have taken here. We are not the ones who initiated this litigation. The fact of the matter is that we have been brought into this litigation as a defendant.

Mr. Fulton: But you are paying for it.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We are dealing with these matters. I can only speak for my own department. We are dealing with these matters in order to resolve important issues because we have been brought in by motions of the party who initiated these actions, that is, the Province of British Columbia, in order to put forward the federal Government's position in terms of the claims made. We have done that. The Hon. Member has approved of the position taken by the federal Government in this matter, which I think is a responsible one. We have done it for the purpose of having the matter determined by the courts. Our preference is a politically negotiated settlement. I repeat that. It is something I have said a number of times to the Hon. Member. I know that he would accept that as being the better way of doing things.

PATENT ACT AMENDING LEGISLATION—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Last November 19 I asked the Minister whether during the trade negotiations or by any other diplomatic means there had been any form of negotiation or representation by U.S. Governments on the Patent Act, something which was categorically denied. We now have a sworn affidavit from Mr. Haddad, Chairman of the Generic Pharmaceutical Industry Association in the United States, which seems to indicate that the Minister has been suffering from an extensive lapse of memory for the last several months.

In light of the information revealed in this affidavit is the Minister still prepared to say that at no time, or by any means, has a representative of the United States Government, or its advisers, made representations to the Government concerning the Patent Act, especially in light of the statements made by Ambassador Gotlieb that Mr. Pratt was directly involved in those trade negotiations and discussions and that the drug matter was raised? Is he still prepared to stand by his words of November 19?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am. The previous Government, the Government of which the Hon. Member was a part, issued a paper in 1983 stating that the Patent Act needed to be changed in respect of pharmaceuticals because it was damaging Canada. It did not get any further than that declaration. We have taken it further because we agree with the previous Liberal Government which said that the Patent Act as amended in 1969 went too far. We put in place a package that protects consumers and provides enormous benefits to Canadians. That is why we are doing it. We do not care what Mr. Haddad has to say, what Mr. Pratt has to say, or what anybody else has to say. We are doing it because it is good for Canada.

REQUEST THAT CANADIAN AMBASSADOR APPEAR BEFORE COMMITTEE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I will direct my supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Considering the major discrepancy between the Minister's continued declarations and the sworn affidavit of the Chairman of the Generic Pharmaceutical Industry Association, is the Secretary of State prepared to authorize Ambassador Gotlieb to appear before the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade to testify concerning the meetings that were held between Canadian and U.S. officials on the Patent Act to determine if in fact there was undue pressure put on by Mr. Pratt acting in his capacity as a major trade adviser to the U.S. President?

• (1450)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member were a rookie who had just rolled in here from nowhere, a question of that kind might be accepted as being on the basis of simple innocence. However, the Hon. Member is a former Minister of the Crown. He knows that what he is asking is nonsense. He knows that on every—

Mr. Axworthy: You are afraid, Clark, to go before the committee. You are chickening out.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I am accused of being afraid by this man who cannot even support his Leader on any one of 15 questions.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: What are you afraid of?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): He does not cause me any fear but, by golly, he causes his Leader to shake and tremble.

ENERGY

ANNOUNCEMENT OF CANADIAN EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVE PROGRAM

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the statement of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in Edmonton today. I want to tell him that I generally regard the measures as positive for small oil companies. However, why did it take the Government so long to announce the program? Why was there so much squabbling associated with it? Why did the Government not use our proposal, which was to take the money raised from the one cent per litre tax on gasoline, or about $450 million, and earmark that amount for grants for small oil companies? It would have been a greater amount, and it would have been a better amount.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's support for the announced initiatives. We believe that they will go a long way toward enhancing exploration and development, creating new energy activity and, most important, creating some jobs—anywhere between 10,000 and 15,000 direct and probably 10,000 indirect jobs. We expect some 2,000 wells to be drilled.

This policy was developed in concert and close discussions with the industry. We believe the industry will be very supportive of the initiative, as well as the producing provinces. In so far as the Hon. Member's suggestion is concerned that there was a delay, I remind him that the Government has taken firm action in the energy area since it assumed office, with the Western Accord which was signed in early 1985, plus further action on the PGRT and other very important measures. However, most of all, it is the result of the economic policies of the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister which brought down interest rates to the lowest level in 15 years. This will be most complementary to the initiative announced this morning.

GOVERNMENT INITIATIVES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister must know that the energy industry and the economy of Alberta are in disastrous circumstances. Now that we have PIP-2 today, these grants, would the Minister tell the House why we are getting an energy policy by dribs and drabs? There are already rumours that this might be it, that this might be the last initiative. Will more initiatives be taken, or is this the last one? When will the Government come out with a real, coherent energy policy rather than bits and pieces from time to time?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House know that the Hon. Member was a very strong advocate of the NEP. We do not share that view. In the last election we campaigned on a platform of dismantling the NEP, and we did that. We brought in the Western Accord, which has been very well accepted. That is the basic policy. The fact of the matter is that when there was a rapid decline in oil prices, as the Hon. Member is aware, the Government responded. This was the latest response. The province has responded. The industry has responded. We hope the Hon. Member will respond by being co-operative and seeing that the legislation is passed with all due dispatch.

USE OF LAPRADE FUND—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. The Minister denied what was said by Mr. Mackay of DRIE before the Standing Committee on Research, Science and Technology on March 18, namely that for the time being, he was unaware to what extent the $40 million from the Laprade and Lower St. Lawrence Fund in the Gaspé would be specifically earmarked for these regions or for regions immediately adjacent.

Mr. Speaker, is there a possibility that part of the Laprade Fund will leave our area to go to one of the regions immediately adjacent to ours? Who is telling the truth? The Minister or Mr. Mackay?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member can rest assured that no part of the Laprade Fund will be earmarked for regions other than those originally specified. The Hon. Member can also rest assured that the reason we are using permanent jobs as one of the criteria, unlike the temporary jobs originally created by the former Laprade Fund, is because we have regional Members who are taking the interests of local workers to heart.

NEED TO ALLOCATE SUFFICIENT FUNDS TO ACHIEVE OBJECTIVES

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. I said I was going to be the Laprade Fund watchdog, and I intend to play that role to the end.

Mr. Speaker, I want to urge the Government to promote the development of the aerospace industry in our region. My question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board.

Since when have local economic partners been aware of this new development approach for the Mauricie—Bois-Franc region being promoted by the Government through its use of the Laprade Fund? Will the Minister retain sufficient funds to complete the industrial, commercial and tourism infrastructures already identified by local economic partners?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as I have said time and time again, when we came to power in September 1984, there was $87.3 million left in the Laprade Fund. These $87.3 million will be spent in the Laprade region. They will be spent on creating permanent jobs. They will be spent in the areas identified by local economic partners and by local Members who have made many representations urging the development of a program for the creation of permanent employment, instead of the program for temporary employment on which the previous Government spent $112.7 million, with very few economic results.

HEALTH

TOBACCO—PROPOSED GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO PROTECT CANADIANS' HEALTH

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It concerns the regulations and legislative measures he intends to introduce in the House soon to protect the health of Canadians. Can he assure the House that these measures will be as adequate as or perhaps even better than the provisions of my own Bill C-204? Will all non-smoking employees under federal jurisdiction, including the Armed Forces, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, Crown corporations and Parliament Hill staff be entitled to a smoke-free workplace? And will tobacco advertising be banned outright?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I repeat today what I have said many times, that is, the Government is working on a tobacco policy and when it is ready it will be announced.

GOVERNMENT'S TOBACCO POLICY

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I think Canadians and all health agencies that are supporting my Bill C-204 want to know whether this is a serious attempt or whether this is an attempt to undermine the growing support for that Bill. Will the Minister assure the House that the measures he will introduce will be serious ones and, particularly in the case of advertising, that they will not be a half measure which will make things worse by allowing advertisers to shift from one type of advertising to another? Will it be a serious measure, or is he just playing with Canadians for his own publicity purposes?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, regarding tobacco policy, right from the first Speech from the Throne the Government said that health promotion and disease prevention were a major plank. I have been working on that very diligently. In fact, I have often been accused of being too active in that field. When our policy is announced, I hope the Hon. Member will endorse it and will obviously see it as a great improvement on what she has done.

SPECIAL CANADIAN GRAINS PROGRAM—PAYMENTS TO FARMERS

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture who knows that there is considerable uncertainty at the moment in respect of the extent of landlords' entitlement to a share of the $1 billion Special Canadian Grains Program. Would the Minister explain to the House whether a payment should be considered as part of grain receipts, and whether a landlord should be entitled to a share of that payment?

• (1500)

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in an effort to clarify this matter the department sent a letter to all permit bookholders the first part of this month. I welcome this opportunity to clarify the matter further. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the cheques will be issued directly to the producers or to the farmers themselves. We would expect that the normal tenant-landlord agreement will be applied with respect to the Special Canadian Grains Program.

OPERATIONAL PLAN—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post. According to the Canadian Press, the Minister stated that he does not believe the chairman of the Standing Committee on Government Operations that studied the postal plan intended it to give rural residents a veto on post office closures or changes to postal services as recommended in the unanimous report released March 23. Did the Minister meet with the committee chairman and, if so, what made him retract his unconditional support for this unanimous report?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated yesterday, the recommendations of the report are already policy. The Hon. Member would know that if he read the letter that I sent to all Members. Under the Canada Post Corporations Act, which was supported by all Parties in this House, the Post Office has the responsibility to manage. I have indicated that I will guarantee that Canada Post will do that in a sensitive and a proper way and a way which reasonable people can understand, appreciate and agree with. That remains a commitment. If that remains at odds with what the committee recommended, then so be it. I have to fulfil my responsibilities.

RURAL POST OFFICES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister tell this House what the misunderstanding is? The committee report was unanimous. In clear language we find this is the report:

> (a) that no closure of a rural post office or change in rural service be undertaken without meaningful consultation and the consent of the community affected.

How clear can it be? Why is the Minister playing with words and creating fear in the community?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is the Hon. Member and people like him who are creating fear. In the letter I wrote to the Hon. Member—and again I plead with him to reread it—I indicated that in the event of any change Members of Parliament will be the first to be told. There will be consultations with the people affected and the changes should be of the sort that reasonable people can agree to. I do not know how much clearer I can make that statement. It is just a repetition of what is in the letter. Why does the Hon. Member not read the letter?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre. I would ask the Hon. Member for one question, please.

TOBACCO—ALTERNATE CROPS PROGRAM

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Would the Minister of Health tell us whether his proposed tobacco program will contain more assistance to reduce tobacco acreage than has already been proposed under the Alternate Crops Program, which is a $15 million program to find alternate crops to tobacco, or is the $15 million crop payment to take tobacco acres out of production? Is the Minister proposing any further programs to that in his soon to be announced tobacco program?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, that was a fairly convoluted question. My answer is specific. When the announcement will be made, it will be clear.

FINANCE

SALES TAX CREDIT PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR GREATER PUBLICITY

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. Last year the Government introduced an important new program for low-income Canadians, the Sales Tax Credit Program, $50 for an adult and $25 for a child. In order to get the credit for 1986, one needs to file an income tax return. The problem is that many Canadians who are eligible for the credit, such as students, seniors, and social welfare recipients do not have enough income to be taxable and do not file income tax returns. What steps is the Minister prepared to take, along with cabinet colleagues, to make sure that all eligible Canadians are aware of this program and do receive the tax credit?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I do want to thank my colleague for her interest in making certain that eligible Canadians are aware of this very progressive tax measure brought in under the auspices of my colleague, the Minister of Finance. We have received good co-operation from the media in getting out the message. I will be putting out a press release to remind Canadians of this program.

We have a volunteer program which helps Canadians file income tax. They will be asked to stress this measure this year. Any Canadian who neglects to file his or her income tax return and is unable to get the credits this year will be eligible to receive those benefits for the next two years.

Mr. Speaker: I very much regret I cannot recognize any other Member. We are significantly over the time for Question Period. I will try very hard to see the Hon. Member for Montreal—Saint-Marie demain.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

PETITIONS

SMOKING—HEALTH HAZARD

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have three petitions.

[English]

The first petition is from residents of Manitoba. They indicate that cigarette smoking is Canada's major preventable health hazard and is responsible for 35,000 Canadian deaths each year, that secondary smoke is implicated in the deaths of 500 involuntary smokers each year and that Bill C-204 seeks to protect the health of Canadians by restricting the promotion of tobacco and guaranteeing smoke-free air to Canadian workers and travellers.

OPPOSITION TO CANADA POST CORPORATE PLAN

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the second petition, which is extensive, deals with Canada Post. It indicates that the federal Government's proposal to seek financial self-sufficiency for Canada Post Corporation will result in cut-backs, deterioration of service of the Post Office and consequently will be at the expense of service to Canadian consumers.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the third petition is an extensive one and has to do with the Patent Act. These petitioners from my riding indicate that the federal Government's proposal to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. The petitioners call upon the Government to withdraw its patent drug legislation.

OPPOSITION TO CANADA POST CORPORATE PLAN

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition to present on behalf of the residents of Bird Cove on the great northern peninsula of Newfoundland. The petition is signed by some 270 residents of Bird Cove who live on the northern peninsula, an area of small and isolated communities. The petition asks of the Members of the House of Commons, under the ancient and traditional rights of residents of Bird Cove or any other small community to make themselves heard, to consider the postal plan announced by the Minister responsible for the Post Office that would set up a system of supermailboxes across Canada and would affect in a very negative way the quality and means of rural postal delivery in all parts of Canada and particularly in the community of Bird Cove. The petitioners call upon Members of Parliament and more important the Government of Canada to bear in mind the essential nature of the postal services in a community such as Bird Cove which is located some 400 or 500 miles north in a very isolated part of Newfoundland where this service is essential to the rural way of life.

I have a petition signed by 60 people from the community of the River of Ponds in the great historic area of St. Barbe again concerned with the postal plan as enunciated by the Government of Canada and in particular the notion of withdrawing from the petitioners their rural postal delivery. It should be noted that in communities such as Bird Cove and River of Ponds, when we talk about a post office, we are talking about the only federal service or facility directly available to those people. We are not talking about the kind of services available in urban communities.

I have a petition from residents of Piccadilly, Pointe au Mal, Port au Port East and Port au Port West on the great historic Port au Port Peninsula of Newfoundland's southwest coast, a great historic area, and these petitioners as well seek the attention of the House for their concerns that rural postal delivery be maintained in that part of Newfoundland.

I have a petition which comes from the Burin Peninsula of Newfoundland which is not in my riding but is on the South Coast and is also a great historic and beautiful area. The petition is signed by some 30 people from a number of communities all of which are composed of under 500 people, again concerned that their right to expect postal delivery and service in their communities be maintained.

I have a petition from the people of St. John's East which is on the East Coast of Newfoundland. People from the community of Portugal Cove wrote to me and I sent them back a petition. Some 27 people from this small but vibrant and dynamic community signed this petition again availing of their ancient right to be heard in Parliament petitioning the Government of Canada to ensure that those people who live in these small rural communities are able to maintain this service which is so essential to their way of life.

I have a petition signed by 95 people from the community of Trout River in the great historic area of Bonne Bay and Gros Morne National Park which represents the crown jewel and the gem that is western Newfoundland. These 95 people living in this community at the end of the line petition the Parliament of Canada to never forget that some people live off the beaten track and away from the towers of concrete, glass and steel. They demand that the only federal service available to them, a post office, is maintained so that the quality of their lives is not seriously jeopardized by the actions of an uncaring, unthinking, insensitive Government. I know if Hon. Members think about it, they will cant this action.

Mr. Speaker: I warn all Hon. Members that that will be a hard act to follow. If any Hon. Members want to follow it, perhaps they could send the Speaker a map.

SMOKING—HEALTH HAZARD

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I appreciated the travelogue. I have the honour to present two petitions today from citizens of my riding and that of my neighbour, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp). The first is a petition regarding smoking and the need to do something to eliminate the health hazard of smoking in the workplace and in the modes of transportation. The petition was prepared by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), and is in support of her Private Member's Bill C-204. It is interesting to note that I know one of the people who signed the petition. She is an entertainer in Thunder Bay and wants to be able to work in a smoke-free environment while she sings and plays the organ before crowds in Thunder Bay.

OPPOSITION TO TRANSFER OF UIC DIRECT MAIL UNIT

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, the second petition is from residents of the Thunder Bay area who are concerned about a decision by the Unemployment Insurance Commission to transfer the direct mail unit from the CEIC office in Thunder Bay to Belleville thereby necessitating very lengthy delays in the processing of UI claims and the returning of cheques to the citizens of Thunder Bay and northwestern Ontario. These petitioners call upon the Government to re-establish that very important service.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from my constituents from Prince Albert, Birch Hills, Kenistino and Lac La Ronge. The petitioners feel that the passing of the Patent Act will increase the costs of drugs to Canadians and it should be stopped.

SUPPORT FOR NON-SMOKERS' HEALTH ACT

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the second petition comes from people from Dartmouth, Halifax and Dalhousie University in the Province of Nova Scotia. The petitioners are speaking up in support of the non-smokers' health Act, Bill C-204, and would appreciate it if this Act were to be passed by Parliament.

OPPOSITION TO CLOSURE OF POST OFFICE AND REDUCTION OF POSTAL SERVICES IN CADILLAC

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and the duty to present, pursuant to Standing Order 106, a petition signed by 121 residents of Cadillac and by myself. Petitioners are strongly opposed to any cuts in staff and services to which rural areas are entitled. They object to the closing of the Cadillac post office and will not tolerate Cadillac being penalized through lesser postal services. Mr. Speaker, they ask that Parliament confirm that people in rural areas will suffer no discrimination through the quality of their postal services and that the Cadillac post office will not be closed either now or in the future.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have petitions from residents of the City of Thunder Bay and surrounding areas. The petitioners are residents of the riding represented by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus), as well as the one represented by me and are from the city as well as areas outside the city like Kaministiquia, Red Rock and Nipigon. These residents show that the report of the Commission of Inquiry on Unemployment Insurance, the Forget report, proposes to eliminate regional extended benefits, taking $1 billion in income transfers out of Quebec, $660 million out of the Atlantic provinces and $670 million out of the West, devastating the regions with the highest unemployment rates in Canada. They point out that the Forget proposals to annualize the UIC program would reduce benefits to the unemployed overall by 31 per cent and that the Forget recommendations would also eliminate any contribution to benefits from federal Government revenues, putting the full burden of regional disparities and employment opportunities onto the provinces and individuals in hard-pressed regions of the country. Therefore they humbly pray that the Parliament of Canada will not pass any legislation designed to eliminate federal contributions to the unemployment insurance program or reduce benefits for unemployed Canadians.

LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS AT ARMED FORCES BASE AT GOOSE BAY

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition from a number of residents of Canada in Halifax, Gabarouse, Wolfville and Port Williams, Nova Scotia, and from Toronto. The petitioners point out that the Goose Bay low-level flight training program not only disrupts the traditional way of life of native people in that area, but is also a regressive war-fighting action which tends to endanger world peace rather than protect Canada. Therefore the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) end all low-level flight training at the Goose Bay Canadian Forces Base and cease negotiations with NATO for establishment of a larger base there.

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition from a number of residents of Toronto, Scarborough, Richmond Hill and other parts of Ontario who point out that Canada needs to improve its standard of refugee protection and to adopt the proposal of the standing committee tabled 18 months ago, supported by the major religious groups in Canada, the Bar Association and other groups. Therefore they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to enact legislation which will embody the principle of fair and complete oral hearings of claimants before a refugee board independent of the Immigration Commission. There should be universal access to such hearings by every claimant, and there should be a fair chance for those concerned to arrive in Canada to present their claim.

SMOKING—HEALTH HAZARD

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition from residents of Burlington, Willowdale, Oakville, Hamilton, Toronto, St. Clair Beach, Kingsville, Amherstburg and other parts of Ontario. They point out that cigarette smoking is Canada's major preventable health hazard responsible for 35,000 Canadian deaths each year. They request attention to Bill C-204 which seeks to protect the health of Canadians by restricting the promotion of tobacco, guaranteeing smoke-free air to Canadian workers and travellers, and call upon Parliament to enact the non-smokers' health Act, Bill C-204.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a number of petitions. I am pleased by the support growing across the country from health agencies and concerned Canadians for Bill C-204, the non-smokers' health act. The petitioners are Ontario residents and they point out that cigarette smoking is Canada's major preventable health hazard, responsible for the deaths of some 35,000 Canadians every year. They point out that secondary smoke is implicated in the deaths of 500 involuntary smokers each year. Bill C-204 seeks to protect the health of Canadians by restricting the promotion of tobacco and guaranteeing smoke-free air to Canadian workers and travellers. They ask the House to enact Bill C-204.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour to present another petition largely from citizens in my own riding of Broadview—Greenwood. The federal Government's proposals to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. Accordingly, the petitioners call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

SUPPORT FOR NON-SMOKERS HEALTH ACT

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from residents of my own riding of New Westminster—Coquitlam, in Port Coquitlam, Port Moody, Burnaby, Maple Ridge, Surrey and Delta, some 90 signatories in all. They humbly pray and call upon Parliament to enact the Non-Smokers' Health Act, Bill C-204, introduced by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald). That Act seeks to protect the health of Canadians by restricting the promotion of tobacco and guaranteeing smoke-free air to Canadian workers and travellers. It is my duty to present this petition.

RIGHT TO LIFE OF UNBORN BABIES—PROTECTION OF CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

Mr. Elliott Hardey (Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present to this House a whole host of petitions from my riding of Kent. The number of signatures is in excess of 1,100. The petitions are properly certified by the Clerk of Petitions. The petitioners humbly pray that Parliament will support Motion No. 37 and allow unborn babies to be protected by the Charter of Rights.

CANADA-UNITED STATES DAYS OF PEACE AND FRIENDSHIP

DESIGNATION OF JULY 2 AND 3, 1987

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think you will find unanimous consent to deal with a government motion standing in my name. There have been all-Party discussions on this and if you would seek unanimous consent of the House so I can put the question, I will then proceed.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm there have been such discussions and there would be unanimous consent to have the motion in question put before the House at this time.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, there is unanimous consent.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of pleasure that I move this motion, seconded by the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) and the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom). There is a blank space in the motion which we hope will be filled in by the Senate to incorporate the Senate of Canada. The motion is as follows:

That the House of Commons and—resolve that July 2 and 3, 1987, coming between July 1, Canada Day, and July 4, U.S. Independence Day, be designated "Canada-United States Days of Peace and Friendship" in recognition of the close and peaceful relations that exist between the two countries, the warm, personal links that prevail between neighbouring communities along the length of the common border and the commitments to freedom, democracy and human rights shared by the two nations.

And that a Message be sent to the Senate requesting that House to unite with this House in the said resolution by filling in the blank with the words, "The Senate of Canada".

Mr. Speaker, Canada and the United States share a unique relationship, one in which all of us take pride. Our two nations are friends and allies. We share the world's longest undefended border. We share common ideals and institutions. We stand for freedom, democracy, human rights, justice under law, and the desire for global peace.

The motion which I put forth today symbolizes the bond of friendship and the desire to further advance our mutual objectives through diplomacy and goodwill. A similar resolution commemorating continued peace and friendship between our two countries was passed in the United States Congress in the fall of 1986. Therefore, it is with great pleasure that I put this motion before the House. I trust that all Members will share in its spirit and trust and will support the Canada-United States Days of Peace and Friendship.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, this resolution has special meaning for my own city of Windsor, Ontario. It has special meaning for myself as the Member for Windsor West. I say this because for the past 29 years Windsor and the adjacent city of Detroit, Michigan, have been doing, in a practical and meaningful way, exactly what the resolution calls for through a major event known as the Windsor-Detroit International Freedom Festival. The festival was founded to jointly celebrate the national holidays of Canada and the United States.

Twenty-nine years ago, in creating the International Freedom Festival, the people of our two cities recognized and anticipated the ideas in this resolution, to use its words, "the close and peaceful relations that exist between the two countries, the warm, personal links that prevail between neighbouring communities along the length of the common border and the commitments to freedom, democracy and human rights shared by the two nations".

The festival has grown since 1959. Instead of covering only the 1st and 4th of July and the two days in between, it now extends for 17 days and is attended by some three million people at events on both sides of the international border. I am told it has become one of the nine largest outdoor festivals in North America. In Windsor the Canada Day celebration, marked by a major flag-raising ceremony and parade, is likely the largest such celebration outside of Ottawa, the national capital. Later there is a huge fireworks display set off from barges moored in the Detroit River, one of the largest such displays in North America.

In Windsor the many festival events involve the entire community and are organized by 3,000 volunteers. I want to pay tribute today to the efforts of the volunteer board of directors and the 3,000 volunteers who are responsible for the success of the festival year in and year out. The festival also includes the annual Freedom Awards and an international dialogue on Canadian-American relations. I want to extend an invitation to all Canadians and Americans to attend our International Freedom Festival.

All Canadians and Americans are invited to participate in this festival.

[English]

Celebrating together, through the International Freedom Festival, our respective national holidays and our friendship and shared values does not mean that we overlook or ignore that our two countries are different and that we each have and want to maintain our distinctive heritages, our traditions and our independence. We do not forget that, even as good friends and good neighbours, Canada and the United States can and do have differences. However, as the resolution says, we do share a common border. As Robert Frost, the late distinguished United States poet wrote: "Good fences make good neighbours". Knowing and recognizing what we have in common yet how we are distinctive is part of being and remaining good neighbours. Yet, any differences between our two countries and the strong desire of Canadians that their country is and continues to be truly independent and sovereign do not in any way diminish or detract from the highly valid sentiments of this resolution.

Therefore, personally as the Member for Windsor West and on behalf of my Party, I am pleased and honoured to second the motion for the adoption of this resolution by this House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of all members of the New Democratic Party in the House of Commons I should like to support this resolution. As we have already indicated, we would like to give it unanimous support. Canadian communities, particularly those along the great, long undefended border with the United States have, over many, many years, developed very close links, and often very special occasions to celebrate those close links, with their neighbours to the south.

To strengthen these links we in the New Democratic Party think it is a very good idea to choose two particular days in 1987 to be designated as days of peace and friendship between Canada and the United States. July 2 and 3 of this year are very appropriate days for this.

As a Member of Parliament from the greater Vancouver area in southern British Columbia, I can say that we have continuing ties involving visits, the attending of seminars, and business and labour relations with our great neighbour to the south. Indeed, in the last many years many of us have been engaged in the cause of peace and disarmament. There are people on both sides of the great border who have a strong and common view on the need for de-escalating and finally eliminating nuclear arms. We meet very frequently indeed on this matter as well as on many others.

Our foreign policies on many matters are different, of course. We are an independent country. We in this Party strive to ensure that we have and retain an independent foreign policy on matters on which we are at variance with the views of the United States. This does not prevent friendship. In fact, it enhances friendship when two mature societies can argue their differences peacefully. Therefore, it is with great pleasure that we in the New Democratic Party join in the designation of July 2 and 3, 1987, as Canada-United States Days of Peace and Friendship.

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley—Hants): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed an honour and privilege for me, as co-chairman of the Canada-U.S. Interparliamentary Group, to associate myself with the remarks of my House Leader and those of the House Leader for the Official Opposition and the Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett).

I would like to give credit in particular to David Boyer, a private U.S. citizen who, through persistence and diligence both in the United States and Canada, has brought this matter to fruition. He exerted proper lobby pressure in the United States to have this motion passed through both the Senate and the House of Representatives and we are now in effect closing the circle.

As one who has practised what we are preaching here today, having married an American many years ago, I am hoping that the Canada-United States Days of Peace and Friendship will extend to the days in one's matrimonial home.

The purpose of this motion is to encourage and formalize community arrangements for joint national days along the undefended border. I do want to pay tribute today to Mr. Boyer for making us move on this in a symbolic way. Symbolism is part of the spice of life. In further congratulation, I would like to give credit to my colleagues, the Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz) and the Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker) who, in their respective constituencies, already have joint national days between the two countries. Through their diligence and persistence they got the executive of the Canada-U.S. Interparliamentary Group to consider this motion. It is as a result of the unanimous recommendation of the Canada-U.S. Interparliamentary Group that this be sent to the House Leaders that the matter is before the House today. This is indeed a very happy day to be dealing in such a positive frame of mind with such a positive resolution.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge—Foothills): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed an honour to rise and comment on this resolution. I want to express my thanks to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) as well as the House Leaders of the other Parties for putting this resolution through with unanimous consent. I also want to express my thanks to my colleague, the Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz) for his support over the last few months, as well as to my colleague, the Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan), for the support given by the Canada-U.S. Interparliamentary Group.

This resolution is the direct result of a unique hike celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of Parks Canada and the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Glacier National Park, which was taken in Waterton and Glacier National Parks during July, 1985.

The sponsors were Mr. Bernie Lieff, Superintendent of Waterton Lakes National Park and Mr. Bob Haraden, Superintendent of Glacier National Park.

The hike was along a trail from the top of Logan Pass in Glacier National Park to Waterton town site in Alberta. During the hike, which involved a camp-over, the idea was brought forth, discussed and agreed to that the two nations should celebrate July 2 and July 3, between July 1, our national holiday and July 4, the U.S. national holiday.

I want to pay particular attention to the unheralded work done by Mr. David Boyer who, over the months since July, 1985, nurtured the idea, put in many hours of work on it which resulted in its ultimate passage through Congress and now Parliament.

Because of the historic nature of the hike, and because we hope that these "Days of Peace and Friendship" continue for hundreds of years, I want to put on the record the names of the 17 participants who undertook the unique hike. We were led by Mr. Bernie Lieff, Superintendent of Waterton Lakes National Park and Mr. Bob Haraden, Superintendent of Glacier National Park. U.S. Congressman Pat Williams participated, as did the Hon. Fred Bradley, Minister of the Environment for Alberta and Member of the Legislative Assembly. Other participants were: Mr. Lowell Georgia of National Geographic magazine; Joanne Speelman, editor of Kalispell Weekly News; Lori Dowling, Marketing Consultant with Travel Alberta; Duanne Barrus, Chief Interpreter, Waterton Lakes National Park; David Boyer, National Geographic magazine; Ray Baker, Tamarack Mall, Waterton Lakes National Park; John Flink, Press Secretary for U.S. Senator Max Baucus; Bob Frauson, retired District Ranger, Glacier National Park; Brian Kennedy, editor of Hungry Horse News; Charlie Russell, rancher, Twin Butte, Alberta; Michael Drew, Alberta Report magazine, Mountain Standard Times, Lethbridge, Alberta; Jo Ann Meisser, Kootenay Bayshore Hotel, Waterton, Alberta; and myself. It was a unique experience and I am indeed honoured that flowing out of that experience will develop these "Days of Peace and Friendship" between Canada and the United States of America.

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege and certainly a pleasure to speak to this motion on Canada, the United States, and friendship. I owe a debt of gratitude to the Government and the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) for his interest in this important matter. I thank the Opposition for their support today. We can look at a map and see a great frontier stretching over 3600 miles, scratch our heads and ask what is defending it, and know there is nothing but the sound common sense and goodwill of two practical nations. That is what Admiral David Beatty said before the Canadian Club in Toronto in November, 1921. Sixty years later, common sense and goodwill prevail with the knowledge that over 70 million people cross our border without a passport. While it is true that Thomas Jefferson wrote in the year 1812 that the acquisition of Canada would only be a mere matter of marching, and one hears the same talk today of Canada becoming the fifty-first state, it is utter nonsense. Such myopic views have proven and will continue to prove to be groundless. Common sense and goodwill are the key ingredients that make us special neighbours and an example of the peaceful and amicable coexistence of two neighbours which ought to be upheld for all countries who share their borders to see.

Arthur Meighen may have described the special relationship between us and the United States best when he commented: "We are not in the same boat but we are pretty much in the same waters". Indeed, we are not the same and we have our differences, but we can discuss and negotiate our differences in a friendly fashion, without war.

The motion before us today began in earnest nearly a year ago when Mr. David Boyer, whose name was mentioned today, as senior editor for the National Geographic magazine, the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker) and I met and discussed the merits of a proposal to recognize not only the unique worth but the warm and friendly feelings that each country holds for the other.

The "Canada-United States Days of Peace and Friendship" will begin in 1987, centred on July 2 and July 3, between Canada Day on July 1 and Independence Day on July 4. Hundreds of American and Canadian towns and cities will pair themselves off and celebrate the close ties that each have shared historically and geographically.

I want to pay special tribute to the Chairman of the Canada-U.S. Interparliamentary Group who has worked with the Member for Lethbridge—Foothills and myself so closely. We appreciate his effort in bringing it before the group.

Not only was I fortunate to play a role in the "Canada-United States Days of Peace and Friendship" motion, I am also the Member from the riding of Erie at a time when this summer the communities of Fort Erie, Ontario, and Buffalo, New York, will stage a four-day celebration between July 1, Canada Day, and July 4, Independence Day, inclusive. It will mark 175 years since the War of 1812. What better symbol to emphasize the peace and friendship that has existed between these sister communities than the Peace Bridge over the Niagara River? The Peace Bridge was initially planned to be a memorial to be completed and officially opened in 1914 to mark the one hundred years of peace between Canada and the United States since the War of 1812-14. However, due to wars elsewhere, about which Canadians are only too familiar, it was not officially opened until August, 1927. Nearly sixty years later, the Peace Bridge remains the largest port of entry between the United States and Canada. It is still useful and still vital, much in the same way as the ties of peace and friendship between Americans and Canadians, two great neighbours.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I want to join with all those Members who have spoken in the House today in lending my support to this resolution moved by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) and seconded by the member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray). I am now aware that it comes about in large measure because of the work of three members of the Canada-U.S. Interparliamentary committee who just spoke. I want to commend this motion which would designate July 2 and July 3 as "Canada-United States Days of Peace and Friendship".

The people of Newfoundland have long had an historical relationship with the people of the United States that, in fact, predates our days as members of the Canadian Confederation. During the Second World War Newfoundland was an independent colony and not a member of the Canadian federation. The American Air Force and Navy established bases at Goose Bay, Labrador, Harmon Air Force Base at Stephenville, Pepperrel at St. John's, and the navy installation at Argentia, just off Newfoundland's Avalon Peninsula.

In those days, Newfoundland, as an independent nation, became very much a part of the Commonwealth war effort. We worked hand- in-hand with the people in the Government of the United States of America. We developed a relationship which to this day is still important to many people in Newfoundland and, I believe, very important to many people in the United States. Historically, preceding those days, Newfoundland's main trading partner was not, as some would assume, the country called Canada, or the province of Canada, but the eastern seaboard of the United States.

I am typical as a Newfoundlander in that my father was employed for 30 years with the United States Air force as a fireman and ultimately a fire chief. I grew up and lived a good part of my life on an American air force base. I recall now with some amusement that as a teenager, and a Newfoundlander living on an American air force base, living in American housing with young people from all across the great United States, I was saying things like: "Right on, man", and dancing the "bump" before most Newfoundlanders on the Island. I also recall with some amusement that quite a few of my American friends were saying things like : "Guaranteed, my son", and most of them could dance a pretty mean jig by the time they were 16 or 17 years old. The influence which was felt, the environmental effects, were shared on both sides.

I think this motion is important because Canada and the United States are in the midst of a number of negotiations and discussions on defence matters, on trade questions and other matters which can lead from time to time to a high degree of rhetoric from both sides of the border. From time to time some of us on both sides of the border find ourselves wrapped in the flag and saluting the National Anthem. What this motion really does is remind us that despite the differences we may have from time to time between governments on questions of policy, our two peoples share this North American Continent as good neighbours. Neither of us, particularly those on the northern side of the border, are tenants. We are co-owners. As my friend, the Hon. Member for Windsor West, said, good fences make good neighbours, but there can be no question that despite the debates which are ongoing in this country and in this Parliament, and with our differences, the people of the United States of America and the people of Canada have been and shall remain the best of friends on this continent.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

TERRITORIAL LANDS ACT

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved that Bill C-43, An Act to amend the Territorial Lands Act, be read the second time and referred to a Legislative Committee.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me to be able to speak on Bill C-43 this afternoon, an Act which would amend the Territorial Lands Act. If I might be permitted a personal comment, it is a double pleasure, not only because this is good legislation, but it is also something with which I have been constantly and intimately involved for at least a dozen years. Although this place operates slowly, if one is persistent and waits long enough, one can achieve success, and the people of the Territories are achieving success this afternoon.

The objective of this legislation is to allow the Northwest Territories to take over the responsibility for forest protection and management and to allow for the possibility of the Yukon doing likewise in the future, should it so wish. It is interesting to note that for many years now, forest protection, forest fire fighting in the Territories, was done pursuant to Territorial legislation. It was done by the Forest Protection Ordinance now called the Forest Protection Act of the Legislative Assembly of the Northwest Territories. However, it was administered federally. As a result of negotiations, a transfer date of April 1, 1987, has been set for this transfer to take place. Hence, the need for expeditious passage of the Bill. I am pleased to note the co-operation of both the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party in dealing with this legislation this afternoon. We are also dealing this afternoon with what might be described as a companion Bill, Bill C-45, which amends the Northern Canada Power Commission Act, which will allow for the transfer of certain assets of NCPC to the Yukon.

There is something of a friendly rivalry between the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory as they proceed along the road to provincial status. There is a certain amount of leap-frogging taking place. The Territories, for instance, can claim that it was first in taking the responsibility for imposing its own income tax. The Yukon can claim a first in terms of its adoption of a system of political parties in its legislature. This afternoon, both the territories will be able to claim a first. For the Northwest Territories it will be in the case of forestry. For Yukon it will be in the case of the responsibility for electric power and electric energy. I hope that they will catch up with each other in the near future.

I know that discussions have been ongoing since the fall of 1985 with respect to the transfer of responsibility for electrical energy in the Northwest Territories. When the former Minister announced, in the fall of 1985, that the federal Government was prepared to devolve this responsibility to the Territories, Yukon was out of the starting gates. It had its act together already.

The question may be a little more complex in the Northwest Territories. The nature of the assets is different. It got off to a slower start. But since the responsibility for negotiations at the territorial level has been given to the Hon. Tom Butters, the Minister of Finance there, I suspect that progress will be much more swift. I note with approval that negotiations between officials of the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs and the territorial Governments are progressing.

To a casual observer Bill C-43 and Bill C-45 might seem to be technical amendments. Such a casual observer might ask: "This is so simple and so obvious. Why was it not done many, many years ago?" For someone who has devoted most of their adult life to the struggle for responsible Government in the Territories, these companion Bills this afternoon mark a major milestone. It is only a generation and a half ago that we had no vote in the Territories. We did not vote for Members of Parliament. Local government at the municipal level did not exist. There was not provincial or territorial government. The government of that day was in fact a federal public servant appointed by Ottawa who resided in Ottawa. Our laws were made by a committee of public servants in Ottawa. We had no say ourselves in what our laws were to be or how we were to be governed. We have come a long way since those days. We will not rest until we enjoy the same rights to provincial government as are enjoyed by southern Canadians.

In the last Trudeau Government the progress that was being made, and had been made up until that time, virtually came to a halt. I can think of only one transfer that took place in that period of four-and-a-half years or so, and it was a very minor one in terms of dollars and numbers of people involved. It was a transfer of responsibility for mining inspection services.

With the new government in 1984 things really began to happen. Very major transfers are now under way. We have the issues for forestry, electrical power and energy with which we are dealing this afternoon, as well as the provincial-type health services, a very major transfer. If the previous Government was guilty of going too slow then what we are doing now is probably at a speed at which it is difficult for the territories themselves to keep up and to assimilate those things which we are prepared to devolve upon them. For myself, it is a nice position to be in.

The federal and the territorial Governments work together hand-in-glove and rapid and responsible progress is being made. Responsible government leading to provincial status is being achieved in the North. We have come a long way since the colonial days of 20 years ago. I compliment what I would call the Canadian political genius. It is something about which we do not hear very much. It is a genius that we have in this country for compromise, fair play and the orderly conduct of public affairs. All that has happened during this period has happened not only without one incident of violence, but without a single incident of an unlawful act being committed that I can think of. We have done that all through the political processes that we have in place in Canada. I think that that is something about which we can be proud. Canadians and Canadian politicians of all political stripes can be proud that we can make these changes in Canada and that we can do so in a peaceable and sensible manner.

I would just like to make a few remarks about the history of the forestry transfer. In the early 1970s, in the sixth Legislature of the Northwest Territories, at a time when it was not even a fully elected legislature, the forestry area was one which was identified as a provincial-type responsibility which ought to be taken over by the territorial Government. For many years there has been a continuing debate at the grass roots level, tinged with dissatisfaction that exists with the fire-fighting side of things rather than the forest management side. I refer to questions such as designated priority areas for fire-fighting, expenses involved and local involvement in the decisions with respect to forest fire-fighting. These are difficult problems to resolve. I do not think they can ever be resolved to everybody's satisfaction. But at least the decision ought to be made locally and not handed down from on high.

The Drury Report of 1979, published in 1980, the report of the special representative of Prime Minister's of the day on constitutional development in the North, recommended the two transfers with which we are dealing today. Mr. Drury did an excellent job. The actual start of negotiations for the transfer on forestry started in July of 1985. In September of that year an agreement in principle was arrived at. In December of 1986 a final transfer package was approved by the Government. Pretty good progress was made.

This month, this year, Treasury Board gave its final blessing, and of course Bill C-43 has been introduced into the House of Commons. The transfer involves about $25 million worth of assets in land, buildings, equipment, et cetera, and about $24 million in ongoing annual O&M expenses.

It is always difficult to forecast precisely how much one will have to spend on forest fire-fighting, since it depends on the weather and a number of other factors. Thus, for a three-year period, special arrangements are being put in place just in case there is an exceptionally bad fire season. After that, the territories will be on their own and will have to finance it out of the normal moneys that are made available under the financial formula.

There are 122 person-years involved in the transfer and about 200 actual living souls. Some of them are full-time and some of them are part-time. It is important that the interests of the employees be safeguarded. It is my understanding that all present federal employees have been offered positions with the territorial Government and that arrangements have been made for the portability of pension credits, et cetera. I have had the opportunity to attend at least one meeting which was designed to integrate federal employees into the territorial public service, and everything seemed to be going well.

I should like to make a few concluding remarks. I can assure the House that the legislation will be very popular and very well received in the Northwest Territories. The people there, by virtue of the Bill, will gain that which is justly theirs—the right to determine how their forests will be managed and how they will be protected. This is no longer to be done by an absentee landlord, however benevolent the landlord might have been.

My thanks go to the politicians involved at the local level, the territorial level, and the federal level. They have recognized the wisdom of the move and have given the necessary sense of direction reflecting the issues of the people they represent. Of course, special thanks should go to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight).

Some of the unsung heroes of the move are the bureaucrats at all levels of government involved who undertook a very complex series of negotiations. They deserve some credit which they seldom receive.

My thanks also go to the employees of the Northwest Lands and Forest Service for their understanding and willingness to undertake this transfer, which of course will mean some change to their lives.

Finally, I note that today is a happy day in the constitutional history of both territories north of the 60th parallel.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I well appreciate the importance which the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) attaches to Bill C-43. For many years he was an active member of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Along with many other members of that committee representing all three Parties, there was a constant demand before various Ministers that the devolutionary process for territorial Governments be speeded up. I appreciate my hon. friend's delight that we are taking one of those steps in the House today.

Bill C-43 is a simple but very important housekeeping amendment to the Territorial Lands Act. In essence, it will delete reference to the federal forest management role in the Northwest Territories and also incidentally in Yukon, but that will only come about at a later date fixed by regulation. With this Bill Parliament is transferring the forest and fire management programs to the Government of the Northwest Territories. The territorial Government, in what is a quasi-provincial manner at present, will administer legislation for the management of forest resources and the prevention and control of forest fires. I am convinced that resource management will be improved by integrating forestry with the current responsibility of the Government of the Northwest Territories for wildlife and local economic development.

The Hon. Member for Western Arctic and I are on the same wavelength in terms of our satisfaction with the legislation. I guess the only place where we would part company would be on the history of the transfer. The Hon. Member left the impression that the previous Government had dragged its feet and had not moved quickly enough in the devolutionary process. My hon. friend was rather selective in his chronology, and I should like to fill in some of the gaps, if I may. I am sure this will be familiar history to the Hon. Member for Western Arctic.

In 1979 and 1980 there were severe forest fires in the Northwest Territories. The Dene nation and the Métis association expressed serious dissatisfaction with the fire management policy of the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs. They insisted that fire management be transferred to local control.

In 1980 and 1981 some meetings were held among federal and territorial officials and the Dene and Métis. However, the meetings were put on hold at the request of the Government of the Northwest Territories, not the Government here in Ottawa. The Government of the Northwest Territories had been unable to reach an agreement with the Dene and Métis in terms which were satisfactory to them in respect of the transfer and involvement of the Dene and Métis in the fire management program after the transfer.

In April 1984, just before the last administration went out of office, the transfer issue was raised in the Legislative Assembly in Yellowknife. In July 1985, when the present Government was in power, the territorial Department of Renewable Resources officially requested the transfer of the forest resource program. That is a very important date. I do not think my hon. friend was suggesting that the transfer should have begun unilaterally with Ottawa. It was right and proper, as the Government has done, to wait for the request from the Northwest Territories, and it came in July 1985.

In September, as my hon. friend mentioned, an agreement to transfer was signed between the Department of Northern Development and the territorial Department of Renewable Resources.

In September 1986—and this is crucial to the entire agreement and to the legislation today—the Dene nation and the Métis association announced their full support for the transfer. We came full circle. Therefore, the timing of the legislation is right and proper. I fail to see how it could have come much sooner without the concurrence of the territorial department, of the Dene nation, and of the Métis association.

I want to take a moment to relate briefly, for the benefit of those who are unfamiliar with what is involved in forest management, what is involved. In the north, forest management involves, for example, issuing timber permits to authorize the cutting of timber on a small scale. It also involves the negotiation of timber management agreements with major operators and the implementation of inventory projects to develop knowledge of the location, the quality and the extent of harvestable timber, and the management of forest fire operations. Forest fire fighting to protect people, property, and resources is one of the major responsibilities which the Government of the Northwest Territories will now be assuming.

I, along with my hon. friend from Western Arctic, strongly favour an accelerated devolution of responsibility from the federal Government to the territorial Governments. Along with him I take satisfaction that all affected employees under the Department of Northern Development will be offered a job. If for one reason or other they do not wish to accept that job, they will be receiving benefits under the federal workforce adjustment policy. Along with the devolution, I also favour a rapid winding down of the northern development section of the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs. My hon. friend will know from many committee meetings on the subject that there is an excessive amount of overlap in what is done by the federal Department of Northern Development, the territorial Government, and the territorial public service. In these days when we have to be concerned about rising Government expenditures, the national debt and the continuing deficit which is mortgaging future generations, here is one area where an effective step could be taken by winding down that part of the department and transferring responsibilities to the territorial governments. I share as well with the Hon. Member that in time, and let it be the not too distant future, the Territories will achieve full provincial responsibility within our federal system.

The Hon. Member knows, as do all members of the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development, that before that can happen, as desirable as it is, there are some outstanding and unresolved issues. They include a fair, equitable and satisfactory settlement of all the comprehensive aboriginal claims north of 60. I am pleased to note with respect to this legislation that the actual ownership of the forests will be transferred to the Government of the Northwest Territories only after there is an enactment of a Dene-Métis land claims settlement, after we ratify such an agreement in this House. I am also delighted that in no way is this piece of legislation today in any way affecting native claims.

There is also the need to deal with the recognition of aboriginal self-government in the north, the conclusion of successful negotiations regarding jurisdiction, funding and resource revenue sharing. Those matters must also be dealt with before devolution can be hastened. Then, of course, we must know how aboriginal Governments will interrelate with those territorial authorities. None of those matters are beyond resolution. They require reasonable exchanges, leadership at the federal and territorial levels, and further improvement in our comprehensive claims policy, but in all those areas we are moving in the right direction. Devolution also depends on resolving the matter of dividing the Northwest Territories into two separate Territories.

Since I and my Party are not in any way opposing this Bill— we want it to go through its various stages as quickly as possible—I simply conclude by urging the Government of Canada and the Yukon Territorial Government, which has now agreed in principle to a similar transfer, to get on, conclude this transfer for the Yukon as quickly as possible under the authority of this Act and to proclaim that transfer affecting forest and fire management at the earliest possible date on which it can be done. I say to the Minister, and again to the Member from the Western Arctic, that what we are doing today is a correct, progressive and welcome step for the great north of this country.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, like the two previous speakers, I am very pleased to speak to Bill C-43, an Act to amend the Territorial Lands Act. It is a timely move on devolution of federally-held powers to NWT and very shortly down the road—I am sure the Minister and others would agree—to Yukon as well. As my friend, the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) has pointed out, the Bill we are dealing with today is done without any prejudice whatever to the settlement of comprehensive claims in NWT. This is a legislative mechanism, as other Members have pointed out, for forest management and protection. It adds $24 annually to the NWT formula and transfers assets in terms of buildings and so on of $24.5 million. There is no prohibition on the use of funds provided today to the Northwest Territories. I think it is very appropriate that the decisions will now be made by northerners as they see northern forest issues.

One thing I want to flag though, Mr. Speaker, is the three-year period within which the NWT can come back to the federal Government for funds to fight forest fires. Over the last half a dozen years the costs for fighting fires has ranged dramatically from $3 million to $18 million, which averages out at about $8 million a year. As Members of this House know, a huge amount of territory and forest land north of 60 has been burned by some of the massive fires that have swept through in recent years. I hope the federal Government might take a look, perhaps two or three years from now, to see whether or not some kind of ongoing adjustment can be made; perhaps in terms of a transfer of payment for fire fighting costs, as was done by the federal Government through the Supplementary Estimates instead of being a separate budgetary item. Until the Northwest Territories has a larger capacity for creating its own revenue, fighting fires can put the Territory in a very difficult position.

This Bill is supported by the territorial legislature, by the Dene and the Métis and for those reasons it has been declared acceptable to the Inuit, as has been pointed out. The Bill affects the transfer of 122 person-years, which is about 200 persons, almost all of which are PSAC members. There are some IBEW members and some members from the professional institute. As of April 1, as I understand it, all will become members of the Public Service Association of NWT, although somewhere down the road a short pace that situation may change as a result of the case now being tested before the territorial courts by the professional institute in relation to the Baffin Regional Health Services transfer which took place September, 1986. That court case is a challenge of the ordinance that Territorial employees must belong to the Public Service Association of NWT. As of now, should they wish to be transferred to positions in NWT and become members of the Public Service Association of NWT they can, but that situation may change not too far down the road.

I am advised there are no problems with transfers or employee benefits. I assume that the officials who provided me with that information in a briefing are correct and that the same process is now under way for Yukon in moving to transfer employees and forest management and protection to Yukon.

The amendment to Section 19(e), which is interesting, was done at the request of the NWT legislature. It was in relation to concerns about experimental plots and national forests, that there might at some point be unilateral actions possibly taken by Ottawa prior to the actual and final transfer of ownership of forests and the lands north of 60. The wording as members will see was deleted from Bill C-43.

This indirectly affects the 10 sawmills in NWT and about 50 workers will be affected indirectly by this transfer of legislative responsibility in new licensing and so on. As of April 1, and I am sure we will pass this Bill in a few minutes, there will be no residual forest responsibility left within DINAC which will take an enormous weight off the back of the hard-working Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight). The Canadian Forest Service, however, will still have some residual responsibilities and those may be sustained for some time to come. Northerners and all Canadians would agree that it is appropriate to have a national body co-ordinating some of the work done by CFS in finding new biological ways of dealing with disease, root rot and that kind of thing.

I am also advised by officials who were very helpful to me that there is a straight indemnification of all matters relating to this Bill as of this point. They still rest with DINAC. On April 1, they will become the responsibility of the NWT. The reason I raise it and will long continue to raise it is that I have a long memory for Bill C-44 which passed through this House a couple of years ago. We all have to reflect on the hatchet job done to John C. Turner as a result of the passage of Bill C-44. A few days ago, I wrote again to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) asking that he have one of his senior people and perhaps Dalton Camp meet with Mr. Turner to have a look at the effects of Bill C-44 on him.

I have been given the assurances that I now always seek from officials that there is no large-scale litigation and that there is not a need for a legal grandfathering clause in this Bill. There is a straight indemnification at this point in time and, as of April 1, it will be transferred to the NWT.

I trust the Government will move promptly to complete the process of settling comprehensive claims north of 60, not only in the Northwest Territories but in Yukon, and that we will move forward diligently in the spirit of a Bill such as this with self-government and assist with the Territories' very obvious desire for devolution to provincial status. Perhaps there will be three new provinces before the end of the decade, the Western Arctic, Nunavut and Yukon. I welcome this small step which is clearly a step in the right direction. I think all Members would agree that the Minister is making a good move today.

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, I believe, with the unanimous agreement of the House, all Parties would be prepared to see this legislation move to Committee of the Whole and proceed through all stages this day.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, the Minister is quite correct. There have been discussions along these lines and my Party would be prepared to proceed to the next stage in the passage of this Bill.

Mr. Fulton: I think that would be most appropriate, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. McKnight, seconded by Mr. de Cotret, moves that Bill C-43, an Act to amend the Territorial Lands Act, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Danis in the chair.

Clauses 1 to 7 inclusive agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

NORTHERN CANADA POWER COMMISSION YUKON ASSETS DISPOSAL AUTHORIZATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved that Bill C-45, an Act to authorize the disposal of certain assets in the Yukon Territory that are held or used by the Northern Canada Power Commission and to provide for other matters in connection therewith, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise at this time to say a few words on Bill C-45, a Bill to transfer the Northern Canada Power Commission's Yukon assets and dispose of them through an Act of Parliament. Before I do, I would like to say how much I appreciated both the co-operation of the Hon. Members who spoke on the previous Bill which transferred forestry to the Northwest Territories and their recognition of its importance. I share in the pleasure that was expressed and I was pleased to be able to hear my colleague, the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson), discuss the matter from a first-hand point of view, something which I would not be able to do.

Under the agreement we are discussing now, all Yukon assets of the Northern Canada Power Commission will be transferred from federal to territorial control. The assets being taken over by Yukon are substantial and include four hydro stations, five diesel generating stations with a total capacity of more than 106 megawatts as well as related transmission and distribution facilities. Yukoners will have full ownership and control of this very important utility.

This is a major step for Yukon and its citizens who are anxiously awaiting the agreement's completion. It is consistent with the philosophy and policy of the Government that government services should be provided as close as possible to those who are directly involved and affected. This policy struck a particularly responsive chord in Yukon and the Northwest Territories. A few moments ago, we spoke about forestry being transferred to the Northwest Territorial Government with provision for transfer to Yukon at a future date. The transfer of NCPC to Yukon is being made and we are now having discussions with the Northwest Territorial Government regarding the transfer of the utility to that Government.

In the past few years, there has been very remarkable progress made in the political development of both Yukon and the Northwest Territories. To a much greater degree, territorial Governments are ready and willing to take over more responsibility in areas such as resource management, utilities and other provincial-type powers. That is as it should be. The transfer of the powers and federal responsibilities to the territorial Governments is at the heart of the process of political development in the North.

The transfer of NCPC to Yukon is an important, positive and very concrete step in achieving not all but some aspirations of northerners. I would like to acknowledge particularly the role of my predecessor, the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie), the former Hon. Member for Yukon, Erik Nielsen, and representatives of the previous Government of Yukon who worked together to set in motion the negotiations which led to this agreement. I would like to pay tribute to officials both from the federal Government and the Yukon Territorial Government who spent many, many months negotiating to see this agreement completed.

The memorandum establishes certain basic principles which provide a common framework for negotiations on both sides. These principles are that the quality and integrity of the electrical service be maintained, that the legal and financial integrity and mandate of NCPC be maintained during the transition period, that the interests of northern consumers be protected, and that NCPC employees affected be given fair and equitable treatment. Throughout these negotiations, both parties sought to achieve an agreement that would be fair to the Canadian taxpayer, fair to Yukon and its people and fair to NCPC and its employees. We also sought an agreement that would ensure the viability of NCPC's operations under territorial control. We wanted to ensure that the utility would operate on a financially sound basis for the benefit of the people of Yukon in the years ahead.

The agreement was announced in Whitehorse last month and I had the privilege of being there along with the Leader of the Government of Yukon. The agreement meets the objectives I enunciated earlier. It is a good agreement, one that has been achieved through the application of much patience and much persistence. I believe it is one of the best kinds of agreements because it is good for both sides.

Briefly these are the main elements of the agreement. The financial value of NCPC's Yukon assets have been set at $95 million. The current debt on operations is an estimated $128 million. In effect, the federal Government is agreeing to the $95 million price and in doing so we are writing off some $33 million in debt. Yukon will assume $39 million in equity in the new utility called Yukon Power Corporation, half of which will represent a cash payment by Yukon and half will be an equity transfer by the federal Government to be provided through conversion of existing NCPC debt to equity. The remaining $56 million will consist of two bonds to be held by the federal Government, $16 million on commercial terms and $40 million on flexible terms, for which the interest cost will decrease or even be eliminated should there be a major decline in power consumption in any given year. This flexible bond was designed to protect Yukon consumers from the adverse effect of any possible industrial slow-down. All in all, the financial agreements agreed to are deemed to be fair and equitable, a fair price has been paid, and with the substantial debt write-off by the federal Government, Yukon should be able to have an operating, viable utility in both the short and long term.

Power rates under the agreement will be frozen at the present level for at least two years. This decision has been well received, to say the least, by Yukoners. This will also provide for a stable environment for the new ownership during transition. Care has been taken to ensure fair treatment for employees, and I am pleased to announce that as a result of the agreement all Yukon NCPC employees will be offered jobs with comparable salaries and benefits. We believe that is very important.

The Bill provides for the Minister to authorize NCPC to sell its Yukon assets to the Yukon Development Corporation, an agency of the Government of Yukon. It writes off the debt and authorizes the Minister to transfer to the Government of Yukon our contribution towards equity. It contains a number of related provisions such as the protection of pension rights for NCPC employees, and the transfer of water and land use rights for operating the utility. Yukon is now ready, willing and certainly able to take the responsibility for NCPC and provide to the consumers in Yukon its own utility at a reasonable rate. It is very important for the people of Yukon and to Members of this House. I feel confident in saying that with the support of all members and all Parties in the House, this transfer will go forward, to the benefit not just of Yukoners but of all Canadians.

I thank the House for its attention.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, in speaking to this Bill I would like to begin by relating a brief incident which took place in the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development yesterday. We were considering presenting a report to Parliament regarding the amendment to the Constitution on aboriginal rights, specifically referring to the right of Indian self-government. Unfortunately, government Members decided there would be no report and used their majority to stop such a report from being tabled in the House of Commons today. I am not raising that as an issue at this moment. I simply want to point out that during the vigorous debate which took place in the committee one member said that the reports of parliamentary committees were no more than tokens. He asked why we should involve ourselves in tokenism.

My reason for mentioning this is that what we are doing today in this House is proof positive that timely committee reports can be effective.

It was on March 12, 1981, that the then Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development established a subcommittee, the terms of reference for which were to study all aspects of the operations of The Northern Canada Power Commission. That subcommittee reported to Parliament on April 7, 1982. Quite a number of members played a very key and important role in that committee, and in passing I would like to make reference to them. One was the then Hon. Member for Abitibi, Mr. René Gingras. There was the then Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq, Mr. Peter Ittinuar. There was the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson), who introduced the forest transfer Bill today. The then Hon. Member for Edmonton East, Mr. Bill Yurko, was there, and also the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly), who is also a Member of this Parliament. I might just say it was my privilege to be the Chairman of that subcommittee, but without the help of the Hon. Member for Western Arctic, who has an engineering background, and that of the then Hon. Member for Edmonton East, himself a chemical engineer, I do not think we could have successfully undertaken such a difficult task. It really required a huge amount of technical information to be absorbed and then appropriate recommendations had to be made. It was one of the more difficult assignments I have had as a Member of Parliament. Therefore, I would like to spend a little time on the recommendations of that report, and I will not be unduly long.

The subcommittee recommended that complete federal devolution to the territorial Crown corporations be accepted quickly, along with the forgiveness of federal debt and the commencement of a process of discussion by the territorial Government involving private utilities as well as the Northern Canada Power Commission. The recommendation reflected the findings of the subcommittee that the federal Government's decision-making and budgetary powers did not make the NCPC fully accountable to the people it serves. The territorial Governments have almost no legislative and regulatory jurisdiction over the NCPC. In our hearings in the North we detected a strong level of hostility against this arrangement.

The subcommittee's report also recommended that all electrical power utilities operating in the Yukon should be fully subject to regulation by the Yukon Utilities Board. Most Canadians would find it surprising if that were not the case, but in fact there was only an understanding that NCPC would appear before the Utilities Board. They had no genuine or real power over them. Devolution of the NCPC responsibility to territorial utilities would remove the existing obstacle to effective regulation, namely the fact that NCPC was not subject to the Yukon Utilities Board. The subcommittee also concluded that the power rates paid by Northerners were excessive. It specifically recommended that the existing debt of the NCPC to the Government of Canada should be written off in its entirety and that the flexible financing arrangements which we thought were possible should be established for loans to finance any hydro facilities.

Now, Sir, the agreement made between Canada and Yukon to transfer the NCPC, which is being done through this legislation, will mark the fulfilment of not all but many of that report's recommendations, certainly with respect to devolution of the NCPC, ownership and regulation. The specific financial terms for this transfer also recognize other aspects of our recommendations, namely, the provision of the flexible bond arrangements to prevent consumer costs from escalating to unacceptable levels during those periods when local power loads are insufficient to permit economic use of major hydro facilities such as is sometimes the case at the Whitehorse No. 4 structure.

Through Bill C-45 we are ratifying an agreement between Canada and Yukon to transfer the Yukon portion of the Northern Canada Power Commission from the federal Government to territorial control and ownership. I want to say how pleased I am that in that agreement there is to be a freezing of power rates for the next two years. I take satisfaction as well from the fact that job security will be provided for all the Yukon-based employees of the Northern Canada Power Commission. That is a matter which came up subsequent to the report. I strongly urged those in the decision-making role in Yukon to ensure that employee interests be protected in a fair and equitable manner. I have every reason to believe that that is the case unless something develops of which we are not aware at the moment.

Members will note, as indicated in the Minister's speech, that not all of the existing debt has been written off but that the debt has been written down. There is a little confusion with regard to the figures. Perhaps in Committee of the Whole I might ask the Minister about this. The Minister's statement indicates that the current debt on operations is an estimated $128 million. My information is that the total debt amounts to $142 million. Perhaps there is something other than the operational side involved. I would appreciate an explanation from the Minister on that later.

Nevertheless, whether it is a total debt of $128 million or $142 million, the fact is that it has been written down by the Government of Canada to $95 million, which reflects the true value of the NCPC assets in Yukon. The Yukon Government will put up $19.5 million in cash and the Government will turn the same amount of debt, $19.5 million, into equity. Of the $95 million we are left with $56 million. I have already referred to the flexible financing arrangements, the $60 million bond of the federal Government on commercial terms, and another $40 million on flexible terms and conditions.

I had a meeting with Mr. Penikett, the Leader of the Government in Yukon, and he told me that he and the other members of his Government are pleased with the terms and conditions. If that is the case, far be it from me to say that they could have got a better deal. I accept their decision and view that this is a satisfactory arrangement with respect to price and financing.

I believe I am correct in asserting that the Northern Canada Power Commission was a target for privatization. I may be corrected, but I think it was on the list of the Minister of State for Privatization (Miss McDougall). I am pleased that the Government of Canada has agreed to Yukon retaining public ownership through the Yukon Development Corporation. A new public sector group is not being created in Yukon at this time to manage the assets that are being transferred from the Northern Canada Power Commission. Instead, and I think this will interest the House, a private sector contract management was selected. This approach effectively combines the benefit of public sector ownership on the one hand and efficient and effective management from the private sector on the other. That is suited to the present needs in Yukon.

Of course, the future may change all that. As Yukon continues to develop and in due course achieves provincial status, it may very well want to follow the pattern which is standard across the country except, I think, in the Province of Alberta where there are entirely publicly owned electrical utilities. At that time the Yukon Government may decide it wants its own electrical power commission, Yukon Hydro or whatever they want to call it. I want to stress that by way of this transfer agreement that option remains open even though for the present time the assets will be managed by the Yukon Electrical Company Limited which is a private sector company.

I will conclude by saying that this Bill represents an important step forward as the Minister indicated in his remarks. There remains now the problem of how to do something similar in the Northwest Territories. There are some different issues there. I think that in some ways the situation there is a little more complex, although I would yield to the opinion of the Hon. Member for Western Arctic on that point. There are some unresolved questions such as the matter of division of the Territories. The Minister and I have had private discussions from time to time about the very high-cost diesel generating units which are scattered throughout the Eastern Arctic and how they could be best managed and controlled by the Government of the NWT.

I believe this is a difficult and more complex challenge than that in Yukon. If we were dealing only with the Western Arctic I think we could quickly put the same plan into effect. However, when dealing with the entire Northwest Territories the Eastern Arctic poses additional difficulties. I hope that we will not back away from those challenges and will carry out the rest of the recommendations in the report of the special subcommittee to make a similar transfer there at the earliest possible time.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I, as well, am pleased to speak this afternoon on Bill C-45. I do not think it would be appropriate to speak on this Bill without paying tribute to the hard work done by the Minister in relation to all the negotiations on this Bill. I would like to pay tribute as well to Tony Penikett, the Government Leader in Yukon, and to my colleague, the Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner), who has just spoken. It is hard to pat oneself on the back, and I am glad to do it for him. I know how much work he and other members of that committee did in 1982, particularly in taking a long look at what could realistically be done for Yukon and also for the NWT.

The disposal of the NCPC assets from Canada to Yukon symbolizes another small step in terms of devolution of powers from the federal sector to Yukon, in this case, and in the case of forestry, to NWT. As other Members including the Minister have said, I hope the day is not too far away when Yukon will provide for management and protection of forests and there will be a devolution of control over power production to all of NWT.

The Northern Canada Power Commission was set up in 1948 in the NWT and Yukon basically to provide power to the mines that were opening at that time. Eighty per cent of the power produced in the Yukon is hydro electric from four main hydro stations and 20 per cent is from diesel from five diesel generation stations. Some other power is provided by Yukon Electric, a privately owned Alberta power corporation. It mainly distributes power but also has control of the systems in Watson Lake and Old Crow.

The annual report deals with a number of things but other Members have touched upon it and I will not go into it in any detail. I want to deal with the recommendations from the 1982 standing committee which did the real groundwork to set this transfer in motion. The matter was picked up by the previous Minister responsible for northern development and very effectively continued by the present Minister, and with the new Government of Yukon, including the initialling of the original MOU by Piers McDonald.

The proposed writing off or writing down of the debt is the key to making this proposal operational. After its hearings in 1983-84, the National Energy Board recommended in 1985, principally for fiscal reasons, that NCPC remain as one unit. I believe a rather imaginative approach has been taken to deal with the matter of power. The mine at Faro uses about 45 per cent of the gigawatt hours produced in Yukon. The viability of the system hinges on the amount of power produced and the amount produced per kilowatt hour.

The interest payments in relation to the $40 million flexible bond is really the key in that entire area. Presently, 394 gigawatt hours are produced. When production goes below 310 gigawatt hours, an interest rate formula kicks in. Once it is down to 200 gigawatt hours of production, all interest payments are forgiven below that point and the principal is frozen. It is a very imaginative way of dealing with that part of the interest payments.

We all know and are too often saddened to see that the mines not only in Yukon and Northwest Territories but in my area of northwestern British Columbia tend to be cyclical in relation to world mineral markets. I think we are all waiting to see what happens with the Red Dog mine in Alaska and what may well happen in relation to Cyprus Anvil.

I addressed the question of liability in relation to Bill C-43. We are now dealing with Bill C-45 and have skipped Bill C-44, that great nightmare for Canada's Parliament. Again, I take the opportunity to flag it for Ministers who are here and for the Government and Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), in reminding them that the Turner matter must be dealt with.

I have pursued this with officials before coming to speak today. I am absolutely assured that there are no major suits pending or hidden and that the liabilities are presently carried until the proclamation of this Bill on April 1 by the federal Government. The liabilities then will be carried by the new owner on April 1, which is effectively the Government of Yukon.

Various exploratory studies have been conducted on ways of preserving power, improving conservation and so on. In Yukon, although the majority of power is produced through hydro turbines, the Yukon Government will now have an opportunity to study seriously such things as coal, wood waste, wind and particularly conservation. Governments and electrical companies, particularly north of 60, must carefully consider conservation in order to make the best use of that high cost power.

Now that this has been transferred to the Government of Yukon, I am sure no future Yukon Government would ever consider placing a dam on, at, near or around Atlin Lake, the largest lake in British Columbia, which happens to be in my constituency. For some time, the Northern Canada Power Commission has been looking at it as an opportunity for more power. I am sure the Minister, the Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) and I will mount a massive battle in Parliament to stop anyone with NCPC—

Mr. Nickerson: So long as you don't go after Liard.

Mr. Fulton: My friend, the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson), says as long as the Liard is not dammed. We are certainly on the same wavelength about damming some of these vital northern water systems.

The employees of the NCPC are principally members of the Public Service Alliance of Canada. The process has begun for them to become members of the Yukon Electric Employees Association. I am advised that PSAC certification ends on March 31, which is a coincidence, and that the certification will then move to Yukon Electric Employees Association on April 1. There has not been a great deal of concern about this.

Let me point out some of the benefits for Yukoners. The concept is good, in terms of devolution. Furthermore, there will be a power rate freeze for at least two years and there will be local control over rates, subsidies, equalization and services. There will be local control over decisions to proceed with capital projects and to use the territorial electrical system to stimulate greater economic development and diversification in Yukon.

There is job security for present employees of NCPC. Another benefit is the reduction of the leakage of funds from the territory for head office charges and so on. There is full equity financing of NCPC-based assets, and the establishment of the flexible debt terms, to which I referred in relation to the largest bond instrument in this proposal. There are reduced interest rates on the debt from an average of 11 per cent presently being paid to an average of 7.6 per cent to be paid on the new utility.

We have already dealt with the transfer of employees from NCPC to YECL, which appears to be well in hand, with no major hurdles to overcome.

This transaction ensures that the utility is financially viable, that the electrical rates are frozen during the first two years of the process, and that Yukon consumers are protected from a major slowdown in economic activity through the flexible bond issue.

Canadian taxpayers will receive fair value for the transferred assets. The federal Government's role in decisions respecting the provision of electricity and subsidies in Yukon is terminated.

The new utility is accountable to Yukoners, which is really the key to the whole process.

The NCPC employees in Yukon are being offered jobs and receive comparable benefits and full credit for their past service and experience with NCPC. The pension rights of all NCPC transferred employees are protected in accordance with federal statutes and policy.

I believe a tribute should be paid to some members who are in the House today. I know the Leader of the Government in Yukon is here and I know he is very pleased that this will pass and become law on April 1.

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been discussions and I believe if you seek agreement, there will be consent to proceed with all stages of this Bill at the present time.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I concur with what the Minister said. There have been such discussions and this Party is ready to proceed.

Mr. Fulton: That is fine with me as well, Mr. Speaker. I do not want to be beaten up by Tony Penikett later in the day.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. McKnight, seconded by Mr. Crosbie, moves that Bill C-45, an Act to authorize the disposal of certain assets in the Yukon Territory that are held or used by the Northern Canada Power Commission and to provide for other matters in connection therewith, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Danis in the chair.

Northern Canada Power Commission Yukon Assets Disposal Authorization Act

The Chairman: Order, House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-45, an Act to authorize the disposal of certain assets in the Yukon Territory that are held or used by the Northern Canada Power Commission and to provide for other matters in connection therewith.

On Clause 2:—Definitions.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, Clause 2 refers to the agreement that has been signed, sealed and delivered between the Government of Yukon and the Government of Canada. For many weeks I have been trying to get a copy of that agreement. Now that we have a public Act of Parliament which refers within it to an agreement, I wonder if the Minister could give us the undertaking to table that agreement or at least to make it available to Hon. Members who would like a copy?

• (1710)

Mr. McKnight: I do not know under what reason or rationale the agreement has not been made available. I will give a commitment to check and if those reasons are not substantial, I will make the agreement available.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Chairman, I would like to get a clarification from the Minister regarding the size of the write-down of the debt. I was led to understand that the current debt obligations of NCPC Yukon were approximately $142 million, in which case the write-down would amount to $47 million. The Minister in his statement says the current debt on operations is $128 million. That makes the write-down $33 million. I wonder if I could have an explanation from the Minister as to this discrepancy?

Mr. McKnight: The Hon. Member is correct. The existing debt is $141,357,999, approximately. The difference between $128 million, which is the debt on operations, and the $141 million, is accrued interest on the operations which will accrue at the end of March, 1987, and it is some $13,321,000 plus. That is added in to arrive at the $141-$142 million mentioned by the Hon. Member.

Mr. Nickerson: I had originally intended to wait until we got to Clause 6 which deals with the financial implications, but seeing as the matter has been brought up now, I would seek clarification on whether the $128 million debt includes the $19.5 million which will be transferred from debt into equity and then those shares given to the Government of the Yukon, or prior to the transference of that $19.5 million from debt into equity, was the total debt $128 million plus $19.5 million?

Mr. McKnight: No, Mr. Chairman, the total debt on the outstanding operations was $128 million. The $13 million to which I referred is the accrued interest which is also outstanding, which comes to a total of $141 million plus. The $19.5 million which the Government of Canada used was taken from debt and converted to equity and put in as equity.

Message from the Senate

Mr. Nickerson: Before this transfer from debt into equity took place, the debt then stood at $128 million plus $19.5 million, is that correct?

Mr. McKnight: The total debt was identified. Then there was a number selected which would be fair. That was $95 million. We started at $95 million, taking that from $128 million which gives us $33 million. Then there is $13.2 million which is the interest. That brings us back up to $46.2 million. There is then $19.5 million which brings us up to $65.7 million. Then the bonds of $16 million and $40 million amount to $56 million, plus the equity of $39 million amounts to $95 million.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 3 to 12 inclusive agreed to.

On Clause 13.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, when the Bill passes, as it undoubtedly will, the Board of the Northern Canada Power Commission will have to be rearranged pursuant to Clause 13. When this happens, how many vacancies will then exist which will have to be filled by residents of the Northwest Territories? And when does the Minister expect to make the new necessary appointments?

Mr. McKnight: It is my understanding that the vacancies will be created with the total board on transfer date. I believe right now there are three members, if I am accurate, from Yukon. That will mean we will have three additional members which will be appointed to the Board of NCPC in due course.

Mr. Penner: I would just inquire of the Minister regarding the facilities of the Northern Canada Power Commission in Edmonton. Is there now excess capacity in those facilities? Does the Minister have some plans to utilize the extra facilities in order to cover the cost of the overhead of that facility? What are the Minister's plans for the headquarters in Edmonton?

Mr. McKnight: That certainly is a reasonable question to ask. The headquarters in Edmonton will not be utilized to total capacity at this time. Until we have concluded discussions with the Northwest Territories, I am reluctant to make any changes or to ask that they be made. As the Hon. Member is fully aware, the Crown corporation, the Northern Canada Power Commission, is held by a shareholder of the Government but does recognize the ability of the Government to establish policy. Therefore, until the discussions have concluded with NWT, I would be reluctant to ask for a change in policy.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 14 to 17 inclusive agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McKnight moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

He said: I regretted that in my previous remarks I was not able to identify the Members from the other place who gave pre-study to this legislation and through their efforts allowed speedy passage and the date of April 1 to be met.

• (1720)

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the Minister's last comment, we are certainly prepared to let the legislation go forward. However, I object to the process of using the other place for pre-study.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

TELEGLOBE CANADA REORGANIZATION AND DIVESTITURE ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-38, an Act respecting the reorganization and divestiture of Teleglobe Canada, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe) moved:

That Bill C-38 be amended in Clause 35 by striking out lines 33 to 35 at page 19 and substituting the following therefor:

"35. This Act shall come into force on a day or days to be fixed by proclamation but not until an agreement incorporating an employee compensation program has been negotiated and accepted by the employer and the employees of the new corporation established pursuant to section 4 of this Act."

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to note that the Hon. Member who seconded the motion, the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), and members of the New Democratic Party will support this eminently sensible amendment to Bill C-38.

The entire process by which the Legislative Committee on Bill C-38 had to undertake its work was flawed from the word go. For the first time in the history of the reform of Parliament we have seen in the work of a legislative committee an entirely new set of circumstances, circumstances which we have never encountered before. In studying a Bill in a legislative committee which gives legal authority to the privatization of a Crown corporation, Bill C-38, members of all Parties were disconcerted to discover that in contemplating amendments to it we were constantly and consistently told by officials of the Minister of State for Privatization (Mrs. McDougall) that while they recognized the primacy of Parliament, the right and authority and responsibility of Parliament to study a Bill and, if it chooses, to make amendments to it, if we were to uncross any "t's" or undot any "i's" or if we were to make any changes to Bill C-38, the effect of those changes which we are entitled to make could be to abrogate the agreement signed between the Government of Canada and Memotec, the new owner of Teleglobe. In effect, Members of Parliament were subjected to a scenario that, in effect, affected our privileges as Members of Parliament. We were being told by the Government of Canada: "Here. Study the Bill. Examine it and improve it, that is your role. However, if you make any changes to it you will have abrogated a legally-binding sales agreement between the Government of Canada and a private company. If you do that, my friends, the Government could be liable to a court action and the Government would be obligated to rebid the entire process again because you might have changed the terms of the sale after the fact". That was the scenario that was consistently and shamefully laid out in a wanton manner by the Minister and her officials. Members of Parliament were told, in effect, in a normal way, as opposed to a back-handed way, that the entire legislative committee process is a sham. We were being told: "You are entitled to investigate, you are entitled to make recommendations, but if you do you will have undone, you will have abrogated, the agreement that was entered into between the Government and a private company. That is the ramification of your doing exactly what you have been charged to do by the people of Canada in your legislative committee".

Let me say from the outset that that type of problem is one that I will not permit myself to tolerate ever again. I am saying to the Minister and to the Government that if they ever come again before a parliamentary committee with a Bill to privatize a Crown corporation, they had better be prepared to ensure that the privatization of another Crown corporation is pre-studied, pre-examined by way of a White Paper or whatever is necessary before it ever hits the legislative committee stage. If the Government is going to tell Members of Parliament, in particular this Member of Parliament, that the legislative committee process is a necessary sham, then I will not participate. When I say that I will not participate, what I am saying to you, Mr. Speaker, is that the matter will never get out of a legislative committee in the future.

Thus, every single amendment that was put at the legislative committee stage on this privatization Bill, the first one we have had in Parliament, was defeated by members of the government majority, not because they were necessarily exercising their best judgment with respect to the Bill but because they had held over their heads the threat that accepting an amendment could in fact indirectly abrogate a private agreement reached between the Government and a private owner. In fact, Parliament was hijacked.

Let the Government be warned that that type of process will never, ever, be tolerated again in the legislative committee process. Mr. Speaker, you will never see again a Bill come out of the legislative committee process if that is to take place. We will keep it there until Rip van Winkle wakes up and goes home if it is ever tried again. Any self-respecting Member of Parliament from any one of the three Parties will not tolerate it. I know that Conservative Members of Parliament, at least on the principle that Parliament not be shanghaied if not on specific amendments, were as concerned as I am concerned today in putting forward these comments.

The amendment I move today is an amendment that would have the effect of ensuring that Bill C-38 not come into force until such time as the Government, specifically the Treasury Board and Memotec, and the employees and representatives, particularly the ad hoc committee on pensions, have reached an understanding with respect to the acquired pension rights of employees.

There are 1,107 employees of Teleglobe Canada who today, as this Bill completes the legislative committee stage and awaits introduction at third reading stage, as it gets ready to rocket itself out of Parliament to become law, have not as yet reached a satisfactory conclusion with either the Government of Canada, Treasury Board, or with Memotec, on what exactly is involved when the Government and Memotec say that employees who find themselves coming under new owners will have an identical pension plan. In fact, the Government has used a different set of actuarial assumptions in calculating the amount of money to be transferred from the Government of Canada to Memotec to cover the acquired pension rights which those employees have accumulated. It has used a different set of assumptions than it used in the case of the privatization of Canadian Arsenals. In that case the 1980 assumptions of the Chief Actuary were used. In the case of Teleglobe Canada a brand new set of assumptions were manufactured by Treasury Board to determine how much money should be transferred to cover the acquired pension rights of employees.

You may be wondering, Mr. Speaker, why I would be concerned that a brand new set of assumptions have been used. It is because, based upon the new assumptions cooked up by the Government versus the old assumptions used very recently in the case of Canadian Arsenals, employees will see anywhere between $7 million and $10 million less being transferred to the new owner of Teleglobe in order to cover their acquired pension rights. As the Government of Canada waves goodbye to its former loyal employees, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) reaches out the doors with his long, sticky fingers to dip into their pockets and take out $10 million. That is what the Government of Canada is doing to its former loyal, productive, and efficient employees.

All the amendment seeks to do is to ensure that the completion of the sale and the proclamation of the Bill into law will not occur until the Government of Canada, like the tardy pickpocket, "fesses up" to the $7 million to $10 million taken in a shameful manner out of the pockets of employees and ensures a proper transfer of funds to cover the acquired pension rights and benefits of 1,107 employees who have been rudely awakened to the fact that they are suddenly working for a new employer. They have also awakened to the fact that the Government of Canada, in a shameful, callous, and repugnant manner in a $600 million privatization deal, has reached out to try to pick their pockets. That is all the amendment seeks to do.

All the Government must do to see the Bill proceed is to come to its senses. It must acknowledge this bit of dirty work, find whatever excuses for it that it must, and make right what is wrong in this attempt to ram the Bill through Parliament.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, I would just request that the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) speak up when he is speaking in the House, because we always have a problem hearing him.

In the midst of all he had to say there was a point very well taken, that is, his suggestion of some kind of pre-study. One thing we have done through the privatization process, certainly in connection with Teleglobe, is to make a considerable amount of information available. We have produced our Bill in an open and forthright way. In fact, I invited all Members of Parliament to a briefing the day after it was announced. I am sorry that no Members showed up for the briefing. However, we have done everything we could by providing an information package and so on for all Hon. Members, because we recognize that this is a complex and important issue and we want to ensure that all Members understand it.

Let me say that the Hon. Member's suggestion of some sort of pre-study is a good one. I am quite prepared to take it under advisement. I think that was the essence of the first part of his message.

Let me say on the amendment that as written it would have the effect of postponing in perpetuity the closing of the transaction. He suggested that we keep the Bill open until every "t" is crossed and "i" is dotted and every demand of every employee has been met. That could go on for some considerable length of time, long after the Hon. Member across the way has moved on to more interesting challenges in other parts of the country.

The other point about the amendment is that he takes it in a circle. Until such time as the Act is proclaimed, a new corporation cannot be established and the amendment preconditioned for proclaiming the Act cannot be satisfied.

Having laid to rest that there is any inherent merit in the amendment, let me turn to the issue of employee benefits, one of the concerns of the Government when it put together the arrangement for Teleglobe and its employees. The employees are actually better off than they were before. They asked for and received a public service plan equivalent. They were offered a mirror plan to the public service plan.

The employees have three options. They can opt for the normal pension options available under the PSSA, which include the return of contributions, immediate pension, deferred annuity, or annual allowance depending upon age and service. They can transfer their past service into the new PSSA equivalent plan, or they can retain their accrued pension benefits in the PSSA with future service, with the new employer counting toward establishing their eligibility for various PSSA benefits.

Memotec has also agreed to count prior service with the PSSA toward establishing eligibility for various benefits under Memotec's PSSA equivalent plan. The key concerns of employees, as they were presented to us by them, were the establishment of a mirror plan by Memotec, the adoption of a going concern basis for calculating amounts to be transferred, legislating a continuity of service option, and securing contractually the recognition of all PSSA service.

That is exactly what the employees have. In addition—and it is something they could never have in a Crown corporation—they have an employee share purchase plan which allows them interest-free loans with which to buy shares in their company. Hon. Members of the House should have so good a plan. There is very little existing in the country of such a quality and calibre as this pension plan.

I am very proud of the package which we put together for the employees. I believe that with the mirror plan and with the employee share purchase plan we have been very accommodating around employee benefits, which I regard as my responsibility and take very seriously.

I should also like to point out that the future of the company under Memotec will be a very exciting one for the employees. The dynamics which we are seeing in these companies being merged will be very valuable for the employees. There will be future benefits through increased job opportunities and through increased markets for the company. All this works for the benefit of employees, as well as the fact that the company will remain in Montreal.

As far as our own amendments are concerned, the major amendment we are making, and I will address it later, was made to accommodate something for which the employees asked.

I do not know what more we could have done to accommodate the needs and requirements of the employees and remain responsible to taxpayers. If we were doing what the Hon. Member asked and just took a big chunk of money out of the PSSA and moved it over to Teleglobe and Memotec, we would be increasing the unfunded liability for existing public servants who remain in the Public Service. We have a responsibility to them and to the taxpayers of the country. Considering the merits of the employees' plan, I would simply like to conclude by saying that what the Hon. Member has said is poppycock.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, as a member of the legislative committee and as my Party's privatization critic, I should like to speak to the amendment. Let me start by picking up on the points made by the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) who said that the legislative process was flawed in two aspects. One aspect was flawed, and the Minister was wrong when she said that she was very accommodating and very open in the beginning. This may not have been entirely her fault. We were faced in committee with the demand to get the Bill through in one day. An incredible amount of witnesses were lined up, and that was it. To give the committee credit, and I see one of the Members here, I believe it is the Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton (Mr. James), it backtracked and presented an open process. It was not flawed that way. That is a tribute to the members of the committee who recognized it to be wrong. There was a problem at the beginning. The Minister has this kind of notion that she had to get this privatization—

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The timetable was established by the parliamentary committee and not by the Minister. The parliamentary committee when it had its organizational meeting could have benefited from this kind of analysis from Hon. Members opposite.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order. That was not a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Member is entirely correct.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the point of order that is not a point of order, I assume you will extend to me the same courtesy. I would like to respond to what the Minister has said. There was an attempt to put this whole matter through the committee in one day. That is the kind of importance the Minister attached to it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall we resume debate? The Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, maybe I am not speaking loudly enough. I was trying to say that it was not the Minister's fault. We will not blame anybody. The committee corrected it. There was a flaw in the original procedure. I detect that the Minister is a bit sensitive and also thinks the process of privatization can be through tomorrow. It cannot. There are some major issues being dealt with here when you privatize a $600 million corporation. This is the forerunner perhaps of Petro-Canada, Air Canada and some of those corporations where there will be some incredible fights in this House.

Let me say that the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) has a point when he says—and I hope the Minister was listening—that she cannot make deals with the private sector, then come back to a House of Commons committee and say, "You cannot change that because I have made a deal and it will change the whole thing". I hope we will hear from the Government in reply. I hope this is not the case, but it seemed to be the case. The Minister can tell the private sector that it is a condition inherent in any deal, that a deal can be changed by the House of Commons. I would think the private sector knows that. I tell the Minister not to give us the argument that we cannot change the terms of the sale because it is in the deal. Memotec, or whoever the buyer is, was never presented with that. This is a fundamental flaw and the Minister should listen to what the Member said.

Let us deal with the pension. The amendment covers the pension. The Minister, and I quote her, said she was "very accommodating", that Members of the House of Commons should have such a good plan. We have a great plan, much better than these employees will be getting out of this.

Mrs. McDougall: What about job security?

Mr. Waddell: We do not have job security, I admit that, but we do have a heck of a good pension plan.

These employees are asking, and I think they are entitled to ask, that when a company is privatized they should be in no worse a position than they were before the company was privatized. The Minister gave us some words on the kind of actuarial set-up. I am not an expert in actuarial matters, neither of course is the Minister. I see here some union representatives representing 1,100 people who are unhappy.

They are reasonable people. They are not screaming for the sake of screaming, and the Minister had better deal with the issue if she wants to get this Bill through the House of Commons.

Mr. Tobin: Management as well as union.

Mr. Waddell: My friend says management is not too happy with the situation either. I have dealt with the union people. They are here in the House. They tried to get a meeting the other day with the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret). I am told they were unable to have a meeting with him personally. The Minister should meet with these union people before the Bill goes through and maybe before this clause goes through because I suspect it will be debated for a little bit. The Minister should at least talk to them to see if she cannot work the matter out. The union people tell me that the Government is pocketing $10 million and that in committee it admitted as much. There is a problem here, Mr. Speaker. If the Minister wants to be accommodating, she should deal with the union people on the principle that workers should be no less better off after privatization them before. I think that is a principle the Minister should accept.

Before I sit down, let me say that, tied in with this, I want to draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, is a matter that arose in the committee that worried me somewhat. Perhaps it is another reason that we should go slowly in passing the Bill at committee stage. I am speaking of the international aspect of Teleglobe. Teleglobe will be taking over some international obligations of the Government because Teleglobe was into international treaties. One involves Commonwealth countries, I think it is called the Commonwealth Communication Organization Financial Agreement. Canada went into that along with Britain, Australia and New Zealand. So much is paid per year. Teleglobe contributes $1.5 million a year to this group. If I might put it this way, it is really foreign aid in a different aspect. It helps Third World countries with the development of telecommunications matters. It is foreign aid by another name, if you like. Who will continue to keep that up after the agreement expires in 1989? The Government should have another look at that. I get the feeling that Memotec is just starting to realize some of what it is involved with. I call Memotec "Minnowtec". It is a minnow that swallowed a big whale called Teleglobe. The minnow is discovering that there are a lot of hidden obligations it must look into.

I hope the Minister will have another look at that in order to clarify the situation when she speaks on third reading of the Bill. I hope she will have another look at the pension matters as well. She has given an answer today, but I point out to her that through evidence in committee it appears that the Government will be making some money from this deal, or at least not forgoing as much money. The union people are terribly unhappy about that. I think they are reasonable people. Something smells here, as my friend from Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe said.

[Translation]

As my hon. friend from Newfoundland has said, there is a problem with the unions. We in the NPD say that this Government, and especially the Minister, should look again at the situation and treat the unions and the workers fairly. We say that the workers should find themselves in the same situation after taxes as before the company changed hands. This principle is fair and the Minister should look again at what will happen to the pensions of the workers.

• (1750)

I hope the Minister will take another look at it while we are debating this Bill and will work out an accommodation with the unions involved so the Bill can go on to third reading.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few moments to speak in favour of the very thoughtful amendment presented to us by the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin). I hope the Minister will stick around because there are things to be discussed which are very important.

First, the Minister will recall that last year, the House dealt with Bill C-87, the divestiture of Canadian Arsenals. The Parliamentary Secretary says that he recalls, and he should remember, that at that time we obtained benefits for the employees that are substantially better than those we are coming up with today.

I ask the Minister just as she is about to leave the House if she is aware of the report on the valuation of assets and liabilities of Teleglobe Canada prepared by Touche Ross. The Touche Ross report indicates that there were no restrictions on the scope of its assignment except that it was specifically requested not to address the question of pension rights of Teleglobe employees.

Mr. Marchi: Why?

Mr. Boudria: My colleague, the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), asks why. The answer is right here. The answer is that the Government did not want anyone to know what was in that report. The reason the Government did not want that was so that in the process of divesting, the piggy bank could be raided. In fact, according to estimates given to me by Mr. Carlos Saldanha, President of the Canadian Overseas Telecommunications Union, his members will be losing $10 million as a result of this, and he claims to have an actuary's report to prove that.

In the case of Canadian Arsenals, I assume we used correctly a specific set of assumptions to arrive at the value of the pension fund. We used a 1980 chief actuary's report in its entirety in that particular case. It must have been right because we passed the Bill. This time we are using something that is totally different when employees of another Crown corporation are being privatized. Surely this cannot be right. Either the other case was wrong or this one is wrong.

I ask Conservative Members across the way to respond to me. We are dealing with 1,100 employees who will lose $10 million collectively and this is no laughing matter. In the case of Canadian Arsenals, the Government backed down. In the beginning, the Government even forgot it had employees at Canadian Arsenals, but gradually it came around, recognized the mistake and amended the Bill. The Government changed the process completely after report stage and finally gave the employees what was theirs.

Let us be perfectly clear. We are not asking for any presents. We are simply asking that these employees be able to leave with what is in their own pension fund. They worked hard for it like everyone else. I suppose I will have to continue my remarks another time.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to thirty-nine petitions, Nos. 332-945 to 332-983 inclusive.

OPPOSITION TO REDUCTION OF POSTAL SERVICES

Mr. Albert Girard (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition to the House of Commons from citizens of Petit-Rocher, Beresford, Robertville, Madran, Alcida, La Plante, Nigadoo, Pointe-Verte and Free Grant. Canada Post management have been reducing the quality of rural postal services and shown they intend to pursue systematically their plan to close a great many postal offices in small municipalities. People in rural areas protest vigourously against cuts to the staff and services they are entitled to and cannot accept in any way that small parishes be penalized as to the extent of postal services.

The House resumed from Wednesday, March 25, consideration of Bill C-38, an Act respecting the reorganization and divestiture of Teleglobe Canada, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee; and the amendment of Mr. Tobin (p. 4569).

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak on the amendment to Bill C-38 proposed by the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) which reads as follows:

> That Bill C-38 be amended in Clause 35 by striking out lines 33 to 35 at page 19 and substituting the following therefor:
> "35. This Act shall come into force on a day or days to be fixed by proclamation but not until an agreement incorporating an employee compensation program has been negotiated and accepted by the employer and the employees of the new corporation established pursuant to section 4 of this Act."

Today's discussion on Bill C-38 bears a strange resemblance to what was discussed in the House some months ago when we had to come to grips with an identical problem dealing with Canadian Arsenals. I took part in that debate because of my interest in public service pension plans and because I thought at the time that the Treasury Board was not playing fair ball with the employees. We were asking that the Treasury Board come to an agreement with the employer before the deal went through, and we got that. The employees were satisfied, everyone was happy and the Bill went through.

This time there seems to be some resistance. In this new situation, the Government is essentially pleading that it cannot meet with the request of the employees to give them the $10 million they require to fund their new pension plan fully because of what is called streamed actuarial assumptions. It is a little difficult for most of us to understand what is meant by that because the figures are not forthcoming from the Government. It does not seem to be too generous with information. I would like to relate to the House my experience with actuarial assumptions.

As we know, assumptions are made by actuaries based on certain things such as the interest rate anticipated to be paid, the anticipated cost of living index and the increase in salaries of the employees which will, of course, become a cost to the employer. Many other things are considered but those are the main considerations. We know that until last year, the so-called experts in the insurance department of the Government were telling us and the Auditor General that the combined Public Service Superannuation Acts including Canadian Forces superannuation, the CFSA, the RCMPSA and the elementary retirement benefit plan had a combined unfunded actuarial liability of some $16 billion. We were told how terrible that was because with an unfunded liability of $16 billion, public servants were receiving pensions which were based on poorly funded sums of money.

That is a lot of nonsense, and most of us know that today, because these so-called streamed actuarial assumptions have been changed in the last year. We are now being told that there is not $16 billion in unfunded liabilities but it could possibly be that because of new assumptions, there is $4 billion but they are not so sure. As a matter of fact, the Treasury Board told me not very long ago that it could amount to $3.7 billion. That is a $12.3 billion error in assumptions made by professionals under circumstances which are easily understood to me as being a sham.

I would like the Government to tell us how we can reconcile a deficit of some $16 billion a year ago with a deficit of some $3.5 billion to $3.7 billion now, because the same people are using another method called streamed actuarial assumptions.

I cannot blame the employees of Memotec for telling the Government that they do not buy that junk and nonsense. Neither do we. That is why we put forward the amendment. Until the Government comes up with assumptions that are believable and that we can understand, and we are not that dumb, until the Government comes up with assumptions that we can publicly quote as being reliable figures, assumptions that are defendable, we will continue to ask that employees and the Government be able to negotiate before the final signature is put on this transaction. In that way what the Minister yesterday called the mirror pension will have the actuarial stability required so that the employees can depend on the plan.

The $15 billion or $16 billion figure mentioned by the Auditor General in his report, and used repeatedly by Treasury Board until recently, was fictitious, to say the least. It was an estimated assumption based on what is called market trend. That, essentially, is the debate we will be getting into when Bill C-33 is called. That should be a very interesting and long debate. I can tell you that based on the figures we have been given, we will not buy a pig in a poke and easily go along with the Government when it tries to tell public servants that their pension fund, which is nothing less than their money set aside for future use, will be fiddled around with by the Government to suit its purposes. We will not sit idly by while the Government tells its employees what they should be getting from these plans. It has to be a joint effort and it has to be done in a fair manner. I hear the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Turner). I hope he will speak in the debate and give us his views. It is very important for these employees to know what figures the Government is using and the assumptions it is making. If the Government changes the assumptions to fit its purpose, that is wrong, and I think he will agree with me on that.

In closing my remarks I would like to say that indeed I hope the House will see fit to approve this motion to incorporate in the agreement an employee competition package which would look after the interests of those employees regarding their pensions. We will then have dealt fairly with these people.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, it is very important to realize that, if the House does not pass this amendment that will contradict what the Minister, with whom I have just been chatting, indicated publicly in her statements at the time this privatization was announced, that there was acceptance by the employees involved to the pension plan suggestions which had been made. I am not sure where the mix-up in communications took place, and I certainly accept it as just that. However, it is quite clear from testimony we heard in committee that that is not the case.

I would like to review for the House some of that testimony we heard from a group which calls itself the ad hoc pension committee representing all the employees of Teleglobe. They described to us their meeting with Treasury Board officials, at which they hoped to clarify a series of important questions, as having been something like the James Bond movie Dr. No. In their view, each question they asked was answered with a negative. That left them without assurances and without satisfaction.

They asked first that the Canadian Arsenals case be a precedent for their pension plan. We are told by Treasury Board that this is not possible. To give a sense of just exactly what this means, we later questioned Treasury Board officials and they conceded that the difference was some $7 million which would not be transferred to the funding for this pension plan. That money would have been transferred had the Canadian Arsenals example been used. That figure, when divided among the number of employees at Teleglobe, amounts to a reduction in benefits of something like $10,000 per year, per person. In all fairness and justice that is not something this House can accept.

The employees stressed the fact that there were other concerns as well. First, it was necessary for Memotec to say that it retains the right to change the pension plan. Memotec was quite honest and forthright in saying so. Frankly, it is a good pension plan, but the company retains the right to change the plan's conditions and reduce benefits if there are changes in business conditions affecting Teleglobe. Of course we know there are various risks facing Teleglobe. There is the risk of being bypassed by other telephone companies, especially the provincial companies. If that occurs, Teleglobe could very easily face a serious decline in its business prospects. It is also quite conceivable, and this is in fact envisaged in this privatization move, that the monopoly presently held by Teleglobe on overseas telecommunications will have to end in five years' time. It is possible that the termination may be extended a little bit longer, but in any event, we are faced with the likelihood that the monopoly will be eliminated. That gives serious cause for concern to the employees of the company and Memotec itself. That is why Memotec says it cannot guarantee that this generous pension plan will be maintained.

In addition, the employees talked about the possibility that Memotec itself is susceptible to a takeover. This privatization has been financed in an extremely risky way. An individual bank has put up most of the capital. In such a situation it is quite likely that at some time in the future Memotec itself will be a potential victim for takeover. If it is taken over, of course, there is every possibility that the pension plan which it will have established for its employees can be changed.

In addition, in the Bill itself there is no explicit or even implicit commitment to job security for the workers. For that reason workers have quite rightly said that they want a funded pension plan provided which will guarantee to them the benefits which they believe they have already earned under the public service superannuation system of which they are part.

When the Government brought in its plans for the privatization of this company it said that it had solved these pension problems. Therefore, it seems to me perfectly sensible that this amendment be accepted. The amendment does not stop the privatization but, rather, puts into place one of the conditions which the Government itself stated was important to have in effect at the start of the privatization process.

The Minister has stated her belief that this legislation gives workers an extremely generous set of pension options. Unfortunately, this view is not shared on the other side. We heard from three groups of workers, the union itself, the supervisors, and the ad hoc representatives of those concerned about pensions in the company. Every single one of them stressed that they were not satisfied with this pension and were concerned about a potential loss of at least $7 million in benefits and a loss of some specific benefits explained to us by the head of Teleglobe, Mr. Delorme. Those specific benefits which the workers now have will not exist under the new plan.

In those circumstances I cannot see how, in conscience, this House could pass legislation for privatization which runs counter to that to which the Government is committed which is still a large question mark at this stage. It is for this reason that my colleague, the Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), seconded this motion. It is for this reason that we sought in committee to suspend hearings for 10 days to permit an agreement to be worked out between workers, the company and the Government with regard to pensions.

Unfortunately, there is an inordinate thrust on the government side to get this legislation passed, which I can only interpret as an effort to get the money received for Teleglobe into the national accounts for this year in order to make the deficit look better. I cannot understand a Government putting those kinds of public relations concerns before a commitment to which it gave effect in its statements and to which we should all be party, a commitment that workers be satisfied with the pension arrangements in a privatization deal such as is occurring here.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Teleglobe Canada

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add some further comments to the amendment moved by the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin). His amendment deals with a very specific and important anomaly, in fact, an important omission by the Government in dealing with the rights of the employees of Teleglobe. As other commentators have pointed out, the amendment raises broader questions about the purpose and objective of the Government in bringing about privatization.

The most disturbing aspect of the privatization movement of the Government is that it is not related to any policy other than the recovery of funds for the Government. It is not related to a policy dealing with telecommunications or transportation or to trying to put together an economic agenda which seems to make sense with regard to how we should develop the regions and the country and how we should develop better relations between workers and employers.

Privatization can be legitimate if it can be proven that the operation of an industry in the private sector is a more effective way of achieving goals than having it under government ownership. However, the only rationale we are given by various spokespersons for privatizing existing Crown corporations is that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) wants to make a money grab to pay the bills. We are selling off companies simply to acquire funds to help the Minister of Finance reduce his deficit or meet some other obligation which he thinks is important.

As a result, there is no rationale, raison d'être, blueprint, or form of useful framework to analyse why we are doing this. No one has yet explained to anyone's satisfaction why Teleglobe will be a superior instrument in the private sector to what it is in the public sector for the pursuit of Canadian objectives in the area of telecommunications.

I have read the Minister's speech and other commentary but one cannot find enough wit in the Conservative mentality to give even some explanation of how this measure will assist the growth of telecommunications in this country. While everyone recognizes the limitation of the Conservative mentality by now, one would have thought that there would be some appropriate rationalization behind this move. However, it is simply a money grab to fatten the consolidated revenue and it has nothing to do with telecommunications.

This is most evident when we look at the treatment of the current employees of Teleglobe. One of the primary responsibilities of any company, public or private, is to ensure that the employees are properly treated when there is a major dislocation. They have a responsibility to ensure that employees are not the victims of that change, or treated in a cursory or arbitrary way.

One would have thought that the federal Government would try to provide a model of how to deal with employees properly and effectively and would have made an effort to set a standard of responsibility and fairness to be applied to other companies, rather than simply attempting to chisel and niggle away a few extra dollars. The Government is miserly in trying to short-change its own employees while carrying out a policy that has no purpose. The Government is deliberately ignoring the necessary consideration it must have to form a proper relationship with its workers, and is even taking the further step of overturning previous standards that have been set in the allocation of pension benefits.

The purpose of the amendment moved by my colleague is to rectify a very clear mistake by the Government. It also attempts to point out that the Government, in pursuing its privatization plan, must be required to do so in a far more legitimate, effective and humane way.

We will not be able to correct the program at least for another 18 months or two years until we are back in power to do things properly, so we believe that it is at least important to point out how the Government can proceed without treating its employees in this shabby way.

I suggest that Conservative Members, especially those who represent public employees in their ridings, should demonstrate some sensitivity to this matter.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): We are always sensitive.

Mr. Axworthy: They should at least show some responsibility to their constituents. Perhaps they have become so inured to the kind of insensitivity that characterizes the Government—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Baloney!

Mr. Axworthy: —that they have lost that capacity for sensitivity. I see certain Members in the House who represent Ottawa constituencies. They know, perhaps more than anyone, how this Teleglobe Bill is a transgression of public service rights. Therefore, one would think that they should be compelled by a sense of conscience and obligation to convince the Minister that there is no shame in admitting a mistake and accepting an amendment when it is legitimate and workable. So far, there has been no such indication on the part of those Members, and certainly no interest on the part of the Minister to respond to such representations.

We can only conclude that they do not care and are unwilling to use Parliament as a way of debating issues, exposing legislation to public scrutiny, and having the ability and wisdom to correct mistakes. It is the only Government I have seen that is somehow congenitally unable to make amendments to its own legislation. Perhaps it believes it has inherited a divine right, but that is not how this institution is supposed to work. That is not how it has worked in the past because there has always been a willingness to accept amendments and change legislation.

Mr. Lewis: I remember when Pierre did it all the time.

Mr. Axworthy: The Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) seems to be having an attack. He was a Member of the House when we brought in the Western Grain Transportation Act. Some 25 amendments were proposed and accepted at that time. I give that to him as an example which may prompt him to go back and read history. Those who do not learn from history will repeat its mistakes. Also, there are some good historical precedents in the House which the Minister of State for Privatization (Mrs. McDougall), as a reasonably new Member of the House, might be well advised to consider as well.

Before the report stage of this Bill is concluded, I hope the Minister will reconsider the very wholesome and positive amendment put forward by my colleague.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak to a matter of this magnitude, and to the two consequences it will have, and I am referring first of all to the effects of privatization. Perhaps I may say right away that I have no objection to privatizing, or returning to the private sector, enterprises that were formerly Crown corporations, but I don't think privatization should be the end-all and be-all. When we are talking about businesses that were set up with taxpayers' money and which have become competitive, viable and prosperous concerns, I don't think we should necessarily hand them over to the private sector to let it make even more profits. Teleglobe was making a profit and this was benefiting the Canadian taxpayer.

The reason why my honourable colleague is moving an amendment is that there will be consequences for the future of employees who were with Teleglobe and who are now working for the new company, Memotec, and I am referring to their pension plan. It is common knowledge that, unfortunately, the Conservative Government is not particularly concerned about vested rights. We saw this in their approach to de-indexing Old Age Security pensions. We also saw this with unemployment insurance benefits where they again ruled against employee/employer pension plans, the private pension plans. In fact, what my hon. colleague is proposing is quite simple. It is that Bill C-38 be amended in Clause 35, by striking out lines 33 to 35 at page 19 and substituting the following:

> "35. This Act shall come into force on a day or days to be fixed by proclamation but not until an agreement incorporating an employee compensation program has been negotiated and accepted by the employer and the employees of the new corporation established pursuant to section 4 of this Act."

Why the Liberal Party is moving this motion? Because it is in line with Liberal philosophy to protect the rights of the individual. Institutions and corporations are fine, but the individual is more important still. The purpose of the Liberal Party's motion is, although we may not agree with the privatization of Teleglobe Canada, to ensure that as little damage as possible is done in the process. In other words, we have to prevent this from being privatization with no holds barred, without safeguards for the employees. I think we should consider that if people, both management and support staff, had known when they paid their contributions to the employer's pension plan for Teleglobe Canada, and when they started working for the corporation, that the corporation would be privatized and their pension fund would not be fully protected, they might have made arrangements for another retirement plan.

When Canadian Arsenals was privatized, there were negotiations involving the Government, the new buyer and the union representing the employees. They managed to agree on a formula that was satisfactory to all three parties, namely the Government, that was selling the company, the new company that was buying the corporation and the employee representatives. All three were satisfied with the safeguards, not just for jobs but also for the pension plan to which both employees and the Government had contributed. Now the question arises, and last week I had the pleasure of meeting with the representative of the employees' union: Why isn't the Government making the same offer it made to Canadian Arsenals employees? Why isn't the Government applying the same rules and the same procedures in this case? Why is it changing its mathematical assumptions? Why this double standard? Unfortunately, that has been typical of what the Conservative Government has been doing, the double standard. We see it in this case. They found a solution to a problem, but instead of simplifying procedures so that all other privatizations, although one may not agree with the principle, would include safeguards for pension plans. There would be the same rules, the same calculations and the same safeguards. But no, they had to come up with a different offer, and typically, we saw the same attitude with unemployment insurance benefits.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration decided to create two classes of elderly workers. The first group which is entitled to receive payments from the employee/employer pension plan is penalized because it cannot draw unemployment insurance benefits, while in the other group we see elderly workers, exactly the same age, who are drawing benefits from their own registered retirement savings plan and are entitled to full unemployment insurance benefits.

Mr. Speaker, the situation is similar in the case of Teleglobe Canada employees whom we are talking about now. The Government does not guarantee full protection, certainly not to the satisfaction of Teleglobe Canada employees, the union which represents them, and the Official Opposition. My colleague moved this amendment strictly to ensure fairness and justice, and because the Liberal Party is intent on protecting people. I can appreciate that the Conservative Party may be more enclined to say that it is now a question of dollars and cents. We sold Teleglobe Canada for so many dollars and this will boost our image once the money has been paid into the public coffers and we can make people believe that we have reduced the deficit. This is a minor consideration: what counts is the individual and human aspects.

If the Government were to say in the end—and the intent of the motion, the purpose of these interventions by Liberal Members is to tell the Government: You want to privatize Teleglobe Canada, go ahead, you have the majority, but we do not agree. If you want to claim that it is a sound financial deal, that is your privilege. But do say as well—and this is where we want to help you—that you have protected the rights of the people who work for this company. Although I am not quite convinced, you seem to have guaranteed and maintained job security as well as the same pay increases opportunities in the company, but all people now on the Teleglobe Canada payroll should be assured that they will continue to benefit from their vested rights in the good pension plan to which they have been contributing all along.

Mr. Speaker, you are indicating that I have only one minute left. I would conclude by expressing the hope that some Conservative Members from Greater Montreal as well as elsewhere in Quebec and other regions will support this motion and urge the Minister to show every consideration for the working people and put less emphasis on the purely economic aspects of the deal.

[English]

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the amendment put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin), is specific and clear. It states that the proposed Bill C-38, which deals with Teleglobe:

> —shall come into force on a day or days to be fixed by proclamation but—

And this is the important part:

> —not until an agreement incorporating an employee compensation program has been negotiated and accepted by the employer and the employees of the new corporation established pursuant to Section 4 of this Act.

Yesterday the Minister of State for Privatization (Mrs. McDougall) in her intervention made the point that until the Act is proclaimed, a new corporation cannot be established and the amendment preconditioned for proclaiming the Act cannot be satisfied. This is where we differ on both the question of procedure and the question of policy. We say to the Minister that this can be done. As put so well by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Saint-Marie (Mr. Malépart), and earlier in the morning by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), the interest of the employees must be protected. That was the main thrust of the speech made yesterday by the mover of the amendment, the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe.

What we face today is a Government in its third year in office which is set in favour of privatization of Crown agencies. Yet in its third year it is incapable of coming forward with a set of principles or guidelines, a general policy, for the protection of its own employees when it privatizes. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, is that the way to run a Government? The Government has left these people hanging loose. Then, at a certain point, it has said, as the Minister said yesterday in her intervention, and I hope I am paraphrasing fairly, that we cannot cross every t and dot every i before the demands of each employee has been met. This is not just a matter of crossing t's and dotting i's. This is a matter that concerns the future of a number of employees. Therefore it should not be relegated to the category of small items. As the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe reminded us yesterday, there are some 1,107 employees involved here. We are talking about a substantial number of Canadians who have worked for their country in this Crown corporation. Not only have they worked for the Crown corporation, they have made it into a success story.

We on this side of the House regret very much this Bill coming forward. We do not think the Government of Canada should sell this success story. If anything, it should keep Teleglobe and ensure that it becomes a model for other Crown corporations. The fact remains that what we on this side of the House are endeavouring to do, if we cannot stop its insane policy of privatization, something to which we object in the first place, is hope that it will come to its senses in the treatment of these employees. That is what the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe is fighting for. I am more than happy to join him and my other colleagues in support of this social rescue operation.

The Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe indicated to the House that the Government has not come to a satisfactory conclusion in terms of Treasury Board and Memotec, which is what prompts this motion at third reading. Therefore a situation has been created which creates a vacuum in the minds of everyone concerned, hence our initiative.

Evidently, what is at stake here is the fact that the employees of Teleglobe could see anywhere between $7 million and $10 million less being transferred to the new owners of Teleglobe in order to cover, as the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe put it so well yesterday, their acquired pension rights. How would Members of Parliament like to see something like this undertaken with respect to their pension rights? There would be an outcry from back-benchers to front-benchers and back again several times. There would be a tidal wave sweeping this place.

Mr. Keeper: That is what the Government will do next.

Mr. Caccia: Maybe it is setting a precedent, who knows? However, I do not think it will do that because it is too conscious of its own majority rights. But because of that it should not apply different standards to the employees of the Government of Canada and, in particular, as it does in this case to the employees of a Crown corporation that is being sold.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier put it very well this morning. He said the Government, not as an acquired new theology but as a political commitment during the last campaign, committed itself to the desire of selling to the private sector corporations that are owned by Canadians through the state, so in its third year in office it would not be unreasonable or outlandish to expect it to establish ground rules when it comes to privatization. In this way those who are affected would know from the beginning that the Government is protecting some basic rights, including pension rights.

It is in that sense that I join the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe, the Hon. Member for Montréal—Sainte-Marie and the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier in putting forward this amendment which, as I mentioned earlier, is a very sensible one. It is intended to provide protection to the employees in relation to their pensions. It is an amendment which we hope the Government with its majority and overwhelming power in the House will have enough sense to listen to and actually support when it comes to a vote in a few moments' time.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I took my time getting to my feet in the hope that one of my colleagues from the Conservative Party might enter the debate.

Mr. Lewis: We do that in caucus.

Mr. Keeper: My hon. friend says that they do it in caucus. We know that they discuss these types of questions behind closed doors. What we want to know is whether they are prepared to discuss the question in public. Is the Government prepared to answer questions that have been put to it by members of the Opposition in broad daylight so that everyone can know where it stands?

The Government has decided, and I think foolishly, without due regard for the interests of Canadians, to privatize Teleglobe. Such a move will take our telecommunications industry from the public sector and place it in private hands. This move will make us the only country in the world that will rely upon a private profit-making company to handle its international communications.

There are serious questions of public policy involved here, including questions with respect to national security. There are also questions concerning economic development, as well as the national economic interests of Canada. It is important for us to deal with the amendment which is before the House in the context of our serious questions concerning the direction in which the Government is going.

Since it has decided to turn over Teleglobe to the private sector, what implications are there in this legislation for the people who work for Teleglobe Canada, in addition to the interests which I have already mentioned in terms of the public? What we are being told is that the people who work for Teleglobe Canada are very worried and concerned. What they are concerned about is their pensions. Over the years that they have worked for Teleglobe they have negotiated pension arrangements. After working a lifetime they should be able to enjoy a secure retirement. This is an ideal, a goal, and a dream of all Canadians. Of course it is the reason that my Party has fought over the years for pensions for average Canadians, so that they can be secure in their old age.

The pension before us is not a public one. It is a private pension which has been negotiated between the parties—the employees and the employer. It is important that the security of the employees be protected. They have earned their pensions. Year after year they sat down at the bargaining table to negotiate. The pensions have been costed out, and they have been a part of the deal between the employees and the employer. These people are not asking for something for nothing; they are asking for that which they have already earned. They are also asking that it be protected.

However, the Government plays its political games to satisfy its own ideological drives. It seeks to fly the flag of privatization and to convince Canadians that it is good for all Canadians. While it is playing these political games, the people who work for Teleglobe Canada want to be assured that they will be treated fairly. They want assurance that their pensions, for which they have worked so hard and negotiated each year, will be protected and secure so that in their old age they can enjoy the fruits of their labour.

We have been called upon by the employees of Teleglobe Canada to indicate to the Government that they are very worried about present pension arrangements. They are concerned that there is no satisfactory agreement to protect their pensions. In fact, the pension arrangements are such that if demand or the forces of the market-place change, the company has a right to change the pensions. If we know anything about markets, it is that they are shifting. They are like the sands of the Sahara; they shift with the winds. A guarantee which depends upon no change in the market-place is not a guarantee at all. In fact, it is a contradiction in terms.

These people are genuinely and legitimately concerned that their pensions are being put in jeopardy by the privatization of Teleglobe Canada and that their interests are being sacrificed on the altar of privatization, because the Government wants to pursue a policy for which it has no mandate but which simply satisfies its particular ideological inclinations.

There are some pension precedents which are worth while noting. When Canadian Arsenals was sold by the Government to a private company, or put into the private sector, pensions were provided on a generous basis for the employees. It is possible to provide adequate protection of the pensions of employees who are presently public employees and will soon be private ones. According to Treasury Board figures, the difference between what is being arranged for Teleglobe employees and what is in place for Canadian Arsenals employees amounts to $7 million.

What does that mean? It means that each employee at Canadian Arsenals has $10,000 more in the kitty to secure or bolster his or her pension than those at Teleglobe Canada. There is a measurable and quantitative difference between the pension arrangements of employees at Canadian Arsenals and those at Teleglobe Canada.

Let us challenge the Government to provide at least equal arrangements for the employees of Teleglobe Canada, as it has already provided for employees at Canadian Arsenals.

Let us deal with why people at Teleglobe Canada are feeling insecure about their pensions. Of course, the first reason is that the company has the right to change the pensions if demand or the economy changes. If we know anything today, it is that the economy is changing, does change, and will change.

Also the monopoly enjoyed by Teleglobe Canada is being phased out. It will be more subject to the whims of economic circumstances, which will undercut the security of pension arrangements. Provincial telephone companies are talking about bypassing Teleglobe Canada and using American systems. That will weaken the economic base upon which the pensions of employees at Teleglobe Canada rest. Some of the employees are afraid that Teleglobe Canada can be subjected to takeover. If the company were taken over, and given the fact that the pension agreement includes a clause allowing the company to change it, a new management may exercise that right and thereby undercut the pensions which they negotiated over the years.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I stress the fact that the pensions which Teleglobe Canada employees seek to protect represent fringe benefits they earned through collective bargaining. They are not looking for gifts, they simply want to protect their rights, to protect the fruit of their labour over the years.

I strongly urge the Government to negotiate a commitment with the employees to safeguard their pension benefits so they will be able to look forward to secure retirement years.

Mr. Speaker, I see that I have only one minute left. I simply want to say that we question the Government policy to privatize Teleglobe Canada because sound public policies do militate in favour of keeping Teleglobe Canada within the public sector. However the Government has decided to privatize Teleglobe Canada. Even so, it has to protect the interests of the current Teleglobe Canada staff, just as it must be fair with them and make sure that the pension rights they have already acquired will not be frittered away.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is only fair that the Government take both time and care to negotiate an equitable arrangement to protect the pensions of these employees.

[English]

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House are not favourable to the sale or privatization of Teleglobe Canada. It is not because we are against privatization. It is because we are against privatization at any cost.

However, the Government has decided in its poor wisdom to sell Teleglobe. That being done, we are very pleased that Memotec is the purchaser and that Memotec saw fit to offer the employees a pension plan which would be identical to their present one. There is a small problem with that, Mr. Speaker. One has to look at the fundamental flaw in the way the Government dealt with Memotec and the employees in this instance. The Government has again found a way to save itself money, but at whose cost? If it were at the cost of Members of Parliament we would be screaming blue murder, but the saving is at the cost of the 1,100 workers or more who work for Teleglobe and who will now be working under the Memotec leadership. They are not complaining about that. They are happy and are looking forward to the creative and dynamic leadership with the synergy that will come about as a result of this decision.

One has to look at Canadian Arsenals Limited and what happened to it. We should look as well at the chief actuary's report and at the financing. What about the workers who are transferred as a result of the sale and privatization of this company? We should see if we have been fair and equitable to the workers of Teleglobe. In my exchange with Mr. Kingsley from the Department I said:

[Translation]

Mr. Kingsley, first, do you agree that an assumption has been changed through pension evaluation, that you changed your calculations, and if the interest rate for the first five years is changed, do you not agree that the amount transferred is no longer the same? In other terms, you were trying to save Government money when you said those transfers involved $7 or $8 million. However, the actuary hired by Teleglobe Canada employees indicated that those transfers were rather in the order of $10 million. This means you are trying to save Government money by changing the plan's financing terms and the end result is that your evaluation upsets the symmetry of actuarial assumptions, which explains the transfer difference between the evaluations made by the Government actuary and by the employee actuary. This means the pension fund would have a deficit, and that deficit would not be made up immediately. As you know, the deficit should be made up over 15 years.

[English]

The question is, will the company be able to make it up? Is the Government being fair to Memotec, which in all good faith and good will is prepared to present, give, support and supply those workers with fair and equitable treatment? With an enriched pension plan it will meet its commitment. The Government will thereby save itself money, underfunding Memotec's initial investments. I think this is all unfair, unconscionable and unacceptable. With that thought in mind, my colleague moved:

> That Bill C-38 be amended in Clause 35 by striking out lines 33 to 35 at page 19 and substituting the following therefor:
> 35. This Act shall come into force on a day or days to be fixed by proclamation but not until an agreement incorporating an employee compensation program has been negotiated and accepted by the employer and the employees of the new corporation established pursuant to section 4 of this Act.

[Translation]

Now, as you know, Mr. Speaker, since the outset when I was really involved in that matter, before there was a shuffling of our responsibilities, on a number of occasions I met representatives of Teleglobe employees. I also spoke with the Minister involved. I have always indicated that in the contents of the sale, in the memo of intent that is in the legislation, there were serious flaws. One concerned the monopoly and another the pension fund, especially with regard to long-time employees. And it is not acceptable that the line of thought, the philosophy of the Conservative party should be reflected here, because Conservatives want to sell and privatize all Crown Corporations without any reason whatsoever and without consideration for Government employees. It is those employees who have made that corporation profitable, so profitable in fact for the Canadian society that they have contributed for Canada as a whole significant amounts of money to our country's general revenues.

Each year, it was possible to count on significant amounts of money which could be used to reduce our deficit. Which means, Mr. Speaker, that even if this government feels that privatization is a good thing, they do not realize what they are doing.

[English]

This is not fair play for the worker nor for the company which bought it. The Government would be well advised to review what it had to say.

There are no provisions for ensuring in law an employee compensation package with respect to acquired pension benefits. The Government is attempting to rush this Bill through the legislative committee process and through the House of Commons, despite the fact that negotiations concerning pension benefits between Teleglobe employees, Treasury Board and Memotec are incomplete.

That is why I believe this House must support the amendment which I just brought to your attention, Mr. Speaker. What is the big rush? Is it because the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) wants about $500 million to keep his word to the Canadian public? Is that what is motivating this big rush? Is that what allowed the legislative committee to decide it would rush this whole thing through in one day? It took a conscientious and concerned Member of the Liberal Party to say "Wow. Hold back. We are not rushing this thing through. These are workers who built this marvellous company for Canada. This is our only international voice in the telecommunications world. We are proud that we have been able to work compatibly with communications companies around the world and across our land". But the committee and the Minister decided to rush the whole thing through without giving careful consideration to all the players in the game. This is an indication of the ridiculous language, the hyperbole, which the Government has been so busy using by saying, "Yes, we are great at consultation. We believe we should talk things through. We listen". But in reality the Government goes its merry way and listens with blocked ears. The Government is like the three monkeys: see not, hear not and say nothing.

I would like to recommend strongly that the Minister go back to the drawing board. I would recommend that the Minister, with the good will and intent demonstrated by Memotec, with the concerned interest and good will of all the employees—and by the way, Mr. Speaker—

[Translation]

I suggest we should commend these working men and women and tell them: Come on, you have done your duty, you have decided to become the mouthpieces of all working men and women, while trying to save your skins because the Government has forgotten to balance things out for all current Teleglobe workers. That is the reason why I congratulate the Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin).

[English]

—for the excellent work he was able to do together with the employees, in the interest of Memotec and of all Canadians to ensure that when you are about to change the rules of the game you let everybody know. If the chief actuary's figures we were prepared to use for Canadian Arsenals are no longer relevant, that should have been public knowledge. If the Government is going to change the money to be vested into the private plan, that should have been public knowledge. Everyone should have been playing fair ball in this game.

• (1230)

This is obviously a Government that is not so good at keeping its promises. It is great at using words and the fanciest of its rhetoric is enough to turn my stomach at times.

Will the company be able to make up this kind of money? Will it be secured? If it needs continued viability, how can we ensure that it gets it? The request of the employees was that the Government use the same assumptions that were used for Canadian Arsenals.

[Translation]

The employees had asked you to use, when computing the amounts of these transfers, the same actuarial assumptions as those which had been used for Canadian Arsenal employees, but you decided against it. They want the same treatment, which was refused to them, but I think it is their right. Back to square one, I am sorry. Fairness is of primary importance, and this matter must be settled before we start considering this bill.

[English]

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It would be most inappropriate to let this moment pass without commenting on the eloquent and excellent speech that has just been given by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone). It has simply taken us away on wings of destiny, seeking justice and truth—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for his comments.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, it never fails to surprise me that an Hon. Member would rise to emphasize—

Mr. Gauthier: Quality.

Mr. Skelly: He says quality. Things that are of quality are generally self-evident and, as good as he is, we do not need the Hon. Member to call it to the attention of the House.

Mr. Gauthier: We'll get up after your speech too.

Mr. Skelly: Of course, the Hon. Member's willingness to rise after my speech to point out its jewels could be forgone as well.

The amendment before the House is one that makes good common sense and should be supported by every Member of the House. It calls on the company to recognize established pension benefits that have been earned to date by its employees in a satisfactory pension program. Certainly that makes common sense and is worth support in every quarter of the House.

In a letter to the Minister, the Canadian Overseas Telecommunications Union drew the Minister's attention to the fact that during recent telecommunications privatization processes in the United Kingdom, France and Malaysia, employee concerns were satisfactorily resolved before any bids were entertained and the union sees no reason why this just and equitable method cannot be the norm in this country. I believe we really should put in place in this legislation a guarantee that would protect the employees. Although this did not occur in advance of the bids, there is certainly still time to do the honourable thing and to ensure that pension protection provisions are developed in a negotiated way by the employees and the company. We can ensure that this happens by prohibiting completion of the transaction in advance of those negotiations.

The question of the privatization of Teleglobe is an interesting one. It is my understanding that Teleglobe, operating as a Crown corporation, handled international telecommunications. It was almost a public utility which guaranteed that Canadians controlled their communications linkages. In the present Government's rather undignified haste to fulfil its right-wing philosophical point of view, it would appear to be casting off an extremely important Crown corporation. It is placing into private hands a virtual public utility. The main customers of this organization will now have an option to use Teleglobe's Canadian operations or simply to bypass them. It would appear that down the road, those companies in Canada that depend upon that communications linkage can use the United States or other places in order to bypass that linkage. It does not seem to be very desirable to remove this control Canadians have over their communications linkages.

In the mood of privatization, we are anticipating down the road the Petro-Canada and the Air Canada manoeuvres. I understand that an announcement will be made on April 10. I wonder if the Minister might enlighten us as to some of her plans so that initial discussions with Canadians about these two very important Crown corporations can take place.

The precursors of this Government's actions have already occurred in British Columbia. No common sense was used in the disposing of government assets; there was simply a philosophy that the Government cannot own assets in the private good, and the B.C. Government wanted to dump as many as it could. It certainly did. The BCRIC experience harmed employees, caused unemployment and caused economic dislocation. All those people Bill Bennett was going to treat to a lesson on how the free enterprise system worked bought shares at $6 and then experienced a disaster. Now Bill Bennett's successor will take privatization a step further. He is attempting to privatize the B.C. ferry system and is talking about selling it off piecemeal.

Mr. Andre: Gorbachev and all kinds of people are doing it.

Mr. Skelly: The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), in his usual helpful manner, has diverted the entire discussion into outer space where he generally spends most of his time. In any event, the British Columbia precursors to this Government's endeavours have been complete disasters. I would predict, as have many others in the House, that the same kind of disasters will be experienced by the federal Government on a national basis.

There has been talk of privatizing Petro-Canada. There was a massive inquiry into the petroleum industry done by the competition branch. The upshot of that was that Canadians should have a window into the industry, an effective control over the development and direction of that industry. It would appear that the Government opposes that. The Government would just as soon turn control back to the seven major oil companies, the seven sisters.

Mrs. Sparrow: Back to industry.

Mr. Skelly: Back to industry, the industry that controlled this country and shafted it beyond anything that could ever be considered reasonable. We see where the Government is in the polls. Somehow there is a lapse in the Government's logic. It does not seem to see that its philosophy and actions have created in the minds of Canadians a reputation so low that we must ask if the Government still has the right to govern this country. When the Government is at 20 per cent and change in the polls, can it make decisions that have such fundamental negative impacts on Canada? The privatization activities, the failure to consider employee pension plans and the failure to consider long-term economic impacts on Canada have led the Government into a position in the polls which indicates that it no longer enjoys the confidence of the majority of Canadians. The Conservatives are the fourth Party in Canada. From having had a massive public endorsement and from having been in first place they have dropped to fourth place. The two opposition Parties are well ahead of them in the polls, then come the undecided, and then comes the Conservative Party at somewhere around 20 per cent. With that level of public confidence, they are going to make massive fundamental changes in the structure of the economy and privatize Air Canada and Petro-Canada. That should not be allowed to happen. That is not a democratic procedure. Because those people lack logic in their operations we really should have an election. I hope logic will return to the individuals on the other side. I hope they will join with the Opposition in supporting this very worth-while amendment to the legislation before us. Possibly the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) will rise in his place and overrule the Minister. That would show that the people on that side of the House have regained their reason, logic will prevail, and this amendment will pass.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Point of order, the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone).

[Translation]

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate my colleague for his obvious common sense. Frankly, he carried out a valuable political analysis and I thank him—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I know all Members make good speeches.

Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is the following one. Mr. Tobin, seconded by Mr. Murphy, moved:

That Bill C-38 be amended in Clause 35 by striking out lines 33 to 35 at page 19 and substituting the following therefor:

"35. This Act shall come into force on a day or days to be fixed by proclamation but not until an agreement incorporating an employee compensation program has been negotiated and accepted by the employer and the employees of the new corporation established pursuant to section 4 of this Act."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Tobin) which was negatived on the following division:

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

ABSENCE OF QUEBEC PREMIER FROM FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the federal-provincial conference on aboriginal peoples opened today. I should think that everyone is aware that the Premier of Quebec has no intention of attending the conference. Mr. Speaker, it is important to remind Canadians that the Premier of Quebec has chosen to stay away from the conference because the federal Government and the Prime Minister of Canada have failed to understand that settling the claims of the provincial Government would make it a lot easier for Quebec to sign the Constitution.

It must be remembered that the federal Government has not shown open-mindedness with respect to Quebec's claim concerning the power to select its immigrants and financial compensation under established programs.

Mr. Speaker, all Members of this House ought to know that, should the conference fail and the Prime Minister attempt to shift the blame to the Quebec Government, the person responsible for the absence of the Quebec Premier at the conference is the Prime Minister of Canada.

BEAUCE REGION

QUALITY OF SCHOOLS

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, recently, Radio-Canada broadcast a series of programs on the public school system in Quebec. I want to register my indignation and that of the members of the Chaudière regional school commission at the lack of objectivity reflected in these programs. Mr. Speaker, I think it is unconscionable that the network should select certain facts and events to give an unnecessarily negative picture of the polyvalentes, the high schools across Quebec, and especially in Beauce. We have some excellent high schools, and we are not alone. Radio-Canada has no business casting doubts on the quality of the curriculum and the services offered, and on the behaviour of our students.

In Beauce, we are proud of the standards of all our high schools and of the quality of both administrators and students. Our teachers, who are a conscientious and dedicated group, deserve our support, Mr. Speaker, and I think that applies to many teachers in Quebec. We have suffered as a result of the bad publicity generated by these broadcasts which seemed to generalize on the basis of just one situation. Our teachers and students in Quebec and in Beauce deserve our continuing support and encouragement.

FAMILY REUNIFICATION—GOVERNMENT PROMISES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the Government has ignored two promises it made last year for family reunification of immigrants. First, it promised to put information packets in all immigration offices. A sponsor could pick up a packet at an office in Canada with an application form and explanation of immigration rules to send to the relative overseas, or the relative overseas could pick up a packet at the visa office there. This would have saved staff time and speeded up service, yet the Government did not do it. Why?

Second, the Government promised to reduce overseas processing time after the file is complete to six weeks for spouse or minor child, and to 12 weeks for other family members. Still there is no sign of progress. Why?

These are promises made by the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) last October after the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration studied and consulted with immigration officials and tabled these recommendations in June.

By ignoring these promises to immigrants and Parliament, the Minister increases the frustration of immigrants, which the Government then tries to blame on refugees.

TRADE

TAX ON LUMBER EXPORTS—EFFECT OF EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR

Mr. Aurèle Gervais (Timmins—Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgency to the residents of my riding engaged in the softwood lumber industry. The Ontario Lumber Manufacturers' Association in a brief to the legislative committee on Bill C-37 of the House of Commons raised two problems which I feel the Government should address immediately.

One is the rising value of the Canadian dollar which, since the agreement was signed, has turned the 15 per cent export tax into an approximate 20 per cent tax. I would suggest that the value of the Canadian dollar be fixed for the purpose of this tax as of December 30, 1986, the day the Canada-U.S. agreement was signed, and that the 15 per cent tax be tied to the value of the Canadian dollar on a sliding scale.

The other problem is the difference in stumpage fees in the various wood-producing provinces. I suggest the Government continue talks in earnest with the provinces to set a common stumpage fee so that all the companies from all provinces are playing on a level playing field.

FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, the aboriginal rights conference taking place today and tomorrow is an important period in Canadian history. Our aboriginal peoples are seeking their basic right, the unrestricted right of self-government. On Friday in this House, in the form of an amendment, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) stated the Liberal position by asking the Government to fulfil its constitutional obligations to protect and guarantee the aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal people of Canada, the inherent right to self-government, and that it be recognized in the Constitution.

Erica-Irene Daes, a human rights official from the United Nations, said earlier this week:

> That the United Nations and the international community is watching very closely... I will underline that the Canadian Government has ratified the international agreements on human rights and is legally bound to honour them.

The aboriginal people have been in Canada before the white man ever appeared but they are forced to fight for their basic human right to handle their own affairs. The Canadian people have given their support to the aboriginal people, and I now urge the Government to stop its ambivalent approach and take a stand to provide our fellow Canadians the right to determine their way of life, to make decisions, manage, control and direct their own affairs.

LIBERAL PARTY

INVITATION TO MAYORS AND ELECTED MUNICIPAL REPRESENTATIVES IN FEDERAL RIDING OF SAINT-JEAN

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I have here a copy of a letter dated February 23, 1987 and sent to various mayors and elected municipal officers in the federal riding of Saint-Jean. The letter is from the Liberal Party of Canada.

The letter is quite clear. It orders the elected officers of the riding of Saint-Jean to attend a benefit where the guests of honour will be none other than the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) and Senator Rizzuto. The letter says, and I quote:

> The presence of elected municipal officers at political events organized by the Liberal Party of Canada has been exceptionally discreet since the general election in September 1984.
> Bearing this in mind, your presence—

Mr. Speaker, this is a letter to our mayors.

> —or absence will most certainly be noticed at our May 1 benefit supper.

Are the Liberal Party's finances in such a sorry state that the party feels it has to resort to blackmail to get people to attend its benefit events?

To prevent similar occurrences, I now ask the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides to make amends for this attack on the freedom of speech of elected municipal officers.

FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, for non-native Canadians the time has come for us to decide whether we see ourselves as conquerors or as co-inhabitants with the aboriginal peoples of this land. It is clear that at the time of the signing of treaties the idea of cohabitation was the legal framework for the relationship between native and non-native people. But the cultural and political context was far too often, and still is, one of non-native Canadians seeing themselves as essentially a superior culture that would eventually overrun and eliminate aboriginal peoples as distinct peoples, and the way our various Governments have acted has reflected this belief.

In recent years through seeing the shortcomings of our own way of life, and through new insight into native culture and spirituality, we have come to regret past attitudes. But regret is not enough. The fact is that continuing inaction in recognizing aboriginal rights and the inherent constitutional right to self-government makes us no different from those of our ancestors who used force to subdue the legitimate rights of native peoples. We have the luxury of being able to do this by simply letting things go on without resolution as the status quo is on our side. The law is our law. But morally we will be no better than those who used force in the first place. Unless, unless today the First Ministers decide to break with a shameful past, recognize the inherent right of aboriginal peoples to self-government, and commit themselves to meaningful negotiations on how this long-overdue justice can take shape in a new and an exciting Canada where conquerors are no more.

ENERGY

CANADA EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVE PROGRAM

Mr. Bob Porter (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in Edmonton the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) announced the Canadian Exploration and Development Program. While all energy companies will benefit, it is the hundreds of companies in the service sector and the smaller oil and gas producers that will benefit most from this program. An important feature is the provision to allow oil and gas companies to offer flow-through shares which will attract capital and offer Canadians an opportunity to invest in exploration and development in this country.

• (1410)

The drilling of 2,000 wells will result in 4,500 direct jobs and over 12,000 jobs in the service and supply sectors. While the immediate benefits are obvious, it is vital that the expertise in manpower and technology that Canada's energy sector has developed over the past four decades be maintained. This announcement should not be considered a short-term solution but an investment in the future security of energy resources for the benefit of all Canadians.

POTATO INSPECTION FEES

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, earlier this month the Prince Edward Island Legislature unanimously passed a resolution condemning the federal Government's new inspection fees on potato exports. Agriculture Canada intends to operate its inspection programs on a full cost-recovery basis. Under this plan, potato inspection fees will rise from 3 cents per hundredweight this year to 15 cents per hundredweight by 1990.

Prince Edward Island potato growers export 90 per cent of their crop and one of their major markets is Ontario. With these extra costs, the exports will not be able to compete with Ontario-grown potatoes which are not subject to those fees. This is actually a tariff that Prince Edward Island potato producers must pay in order to market their products. In effect, the fees will act as a barrier to interprovincial trade.

Why does the Government continue to treat potato producers with utter contempt? I call upon the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) to cancel these unfair fees now.

PUBLIC LOAN INSURANCE IMPROVEMENTS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I spoke in the House last week to point out that the Bank of Canada rate of 7.14 per cent was the lowest it has been in 14 years. This trend creates record low mortgage rates enabling young couples to buy homes.

Two days ago the Minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation announced significant changes in public loan insurance which will also encourage tenants to buy homes. Starting May 1, 1987, the federal Government will increase its guarantees to mortgage lenders accepting lower down payments. For example, the minimum down payment for a $150,000 home will decrease from $22,000 to $7,500.

For the first time, insurance will be provided for second mortgages to buy a home or to fund renovations. As well, borrowers will now be able to transfer RRSP holdings into their own second mortgages. The Canadian Real Estate Association is meeting in Ottawa today and its President, Robert Pedler, agrees that these positive changes demonstrate a recognition of and sensitivity to the changes taking place in the market-place.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

PROCEEDINGS IN MANITOBA LEGISLATURE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, Manitoba Conservative MLAs have again proven themselves to be totally insensitive to native issues. Although they have had time to debate the Manitoba Budget since its introduction, the Conservative Leader late last night chose to stage a petty grandstanding bell-ringing session. Because of this deliberate delay, Premier Pawley and the relevant Ministers could not make it to the First Ministers' Conference last night. They were unable to be here to speak on a very important issue because of petty politics in Manitoba.

It is very important that on this extremely important issue, politicians of all stripes work together. Manitoba Tories have proven time after time that they will never let a greater dream interfere with lesser politics.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

CRITICISM OF MANITOBA BUDGET'S PROVISIONS

Mr. Léo Duguay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Manitoba has complained bitterly about, to use the Premier's words, the federal Government's mechanical pursuit of deficit reduction no matter what is gobbled up in the process, whether it be family allowances for children, education for young adults, or health care for all. The Premier also makes an issue of fairness and standing up for Manitoba. That is why I am rising today to stand up for Manitoba.

The Manitoba Government's deeds betray its words. Last week's provincial Budget raised an already insidious payroll tax to 2.25 per cent. We know that this tax discourages job creation and chases away business. Worse, it taxes hospitals and independent schools.

This tax on the sick will cost St. Boniface Hospital some $1.6 million and it will cost the Health Sciences Centre some $3 million in this year alone. All of us in the House will understand what the NDP means when it talks about fairness: say one thing but do the opposite.

IMMIGRATION

ILLEGAL DEMANDS MADE OF CERTAIN PORTUGUESE REFUGEES—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, recent allegations concerning the network of phoney immigration consultants attest to the inaction of the Conservative Government.

Last year I urged the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) to control such scandalous activities. The guilty individuals implicated in these operations related to false applications from Portuguese refugees are well known, but the Government has failed to take action. The Government missed an opportunity to send a strong signal indicating that those operations will not be tolerated. It would rather blame the immigrants who have been misled, and it chose to impose visas on friendly countries instead of going to the source of false statements.

Mr. Speaker, time has come to put an end to these illegal activities, and all Canadians expect immediate action.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

LONDON LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY'S ACTION TO REDUCE DISABILITY PAYMENTS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I draw to the attention of this House a great injustice perpetrated against my constituent Rosemary Barber, and other disabled persons, by the London Life Insurance Company and George Weston Ltd. Rosemary Barber has incurable bone cancer and has been receiving disability payments since 1983. The insurance company disability payment is integrated with that of the Canada Pension Plan.

Last year this House recognized the serious problem of disabled people and decided to increase the CPP disability payment substantially by up to $150 a month. At that time George Weston Ltd. elected to grab that money for itself and instructed its pension insurer, the London Life Company, which went along with the deal, to reduce Rosemary Barber's pension by the full increase in the Canada Pension.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Blenkarn: The benefit paid to Rosemary Barber was actuarially sound before the Canada Pension was increased. The effect of the change is to enrich George Weston Limited at the expense of a disabled person.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION MODERNIZATION—CALL FOR FULFILMENT OF COMMITMENT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the obvious lack of concern the Government of Canada has for the people of eastern Nova Scotia. You will recall that in July of 1984 the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) gave a clear undertaking to those people that he and his colleagues were committed to the second phase of the modernization program at Sydney Steel. Eighteen months elapsed only to have an announcement by the former Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, given front page coverage in local newspapers, that once again the Government was committed to modernization and had signed the agreement.

In June of 1986 the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) said in this House that the Government was in receipt of the business plan, was reviewing it, and would have an answer forthwith. We then waited an additional 12 months to hear from the government benches that they are once again going to review the plan. In fact, the Government has taken it upon itself to have five Ministers of the Crown review a commitment made in July of 1984. I say this is totally irresponsible behaviour by the Government. It should live up to its commitments or it will leave the people of Cape Breton with one alternative, that is to believe the Government is made up of nothing but a bunch of hypocrites.

SUGGESTED USE OF LOW SULPHUR WESTERN COAL BY ONTARIO HYDRO

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, for environmentally conscious Niagara I strongly support the Government's "Made in Canada" program to fight acid rain by using western coal in Ontario. If we can get that province to go along with the federal-provincial task force recommendation regarding the use of low sulphur western coal in Ontario's hydro thermal generating plants, we will see large reductions in Ontario's acid gas emissions, create much needed cargo for the St. Lawrence Seaway, and create 13,000 jobs across the country, 40 per cent of which will be in Ontario. Who is dragging his feet?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

PATENT ACT AMENDING LEGISLATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, hundreds of thousands of sick and elderly Canadians find the Government's decision to raise drug prices a very bitter pill to swallow.

[Translation]

Senior U.S. officials have admitted they put pressure on the Canadian Government to amend our patents legislation for pharmaceutical products. However, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs denies such pressure was exerted. My question to the Minister is therefore: Why does he not at least have the courage to admit what he has done to the elderly and the sick in this country?

• (1420)

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition continues to misrepresent what the Bill will accomplish. He asks what pressure we responded to. For example, the National Assembly in the Province of Quebec under two different Governments unanimously passed resolutions asking us to do this. That is pressure to which we responded.

In fact for 17 years all of our partners in the western industrialized world have been asking Canada to get in phase with the rest of the world with regard to respecting intellectual property. The fact is that we as a Government believe that Canada should be involved in this vital area of high technology and research. If the Liberal Party thinks it is appropriate that the rest of the world does health research while we in Canada do not, we disagree with it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INQUIRY WHETHER ALLEGATION IS FALSE THAT GOVERNMENT IS AMENDING PHARMACEUTICAL PRODUCTS LEGISLATION AS CONSEQUENCE OF PRESSURE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I just heard the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Yesterday, he said that the information contained in this sworn statement was false. My question is therefore directed to the Secretary of State. Is it false that Mr. Pratt is the President of Pfizer, a U.S. pharmaceutical company? Is it false that Mr. Pratt met with our Ambassador to the United States, Mr. Gotlieb? Is it false that Mr. Pratt put pressure on Mr. Gotlieb to amend our patent legislation? Is it false that as a result of such pressure, the Canadian Government amended our legislation as a favour to Mr. Pratt and others?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is false.

REPRESENTATIONS MADE TO CANADIAN AMBASSADOR

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, sometimes the glare of the truth blinds the Minister. I will direct a further question to him. When the Secretary of State for External Affairs first read the text of the affidavit which was deposited with our Embassy in Washington 72 hours ago, did he inquire as to the position of Mr. Pratt who was not only the president of a leading American pharmaceutical company but also the President's Chairman of the Advisory Committee on Trade Negotiations? Did he inquire whether that placed undue pressure upon our ambassador?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, I did not make those inquiries. The ambassador has made it clear that his recollection of the events referred to in the affidavit differ from that of the person who signed the affidavit.

REPRESENTATIONS ALLEGEDLY MADE TO GOVERNMENT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. We know that Canada and in fact the ambassador in Washington were lobbied on the drug legislation by the Chairman of the President's Advisory Committee on Trade Negotiations who also happens to be the president of one of the most influential and profitable drug companies in the world.

How can the Minister reconcile his persistent statements in this House that he received no representations whatsoever from the United States when the document says unequivocally that there were representations made to the Canadian Government? Will the Minister explain to the House that this is in fact a contradiction made by him and his Government to cover up the fact that the multinational corporations are writing Canadian legislation affecting our senior citizens?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Haddad visited Canada and made a number of public statements which were patently false. Presumably he can do in writing that which he can do orally. That is the only explanation I have.

• (1425)

If the Hon. Member has been doing his homework he will be aware that the Government he supported in 1983 announced its decision to restore patent protection for drugs—

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Axworthy: Nonsense!

Mr. Andre: —because the 1969 Bill had gone too far. I ask the Hon. Member what American multinational forced the Member for Papineau in his then capacity to announce the Government's decision to restore patent protection in this important area?

REQUEST THAT AMBASSADOR APPEAR BEFORE COMMITTEE

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I say with great regret that the Minister has persistently and consistently refused to acknowledge in the House that representations have been made to the Canadian Ambassador in Washington. On Monday I met with the Canadian Ambassador and he admitted to receiving representations from the Chairman of the President's Advisory Committee and the chairman of one of the most profitable corporations in the United States. Will the Minister, as well as the Secretary of State for External Affairs, agree to have the Canadian Ambassador come before the External Affairs Committee and testify about an obvious contradiction which is being perpetrated by the Minister?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated, and as the Member well knows, Canada has been under pressure from the rest of the western industrialized world for 17 years. Our ambassadors and high commissioners in Britain, Switzerland, Germany, France, the United States, Japan and everywhere have been under pressure in this regard. That is no secret.

The fact is that this legislation will improve the health care of Canadians. It will produce 3,000 high-tech jobs and $1.4 billion in extra research and development. The only Party that is preoccupied with what the Americans think is the Party opposite. Why do they not read the Bill as it is and give it a factual and honest examination? They will see that the benefits to Canada are extraordinary and it should be passed forthwith.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will the Minister advise the House whether the Canadian Wheat Board and other marketing agencies, as well as postal rates, copyright protection, and pharmaceutical patents are all part of free trade negotiations between Canada and the United States?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that I heard the whole list. He asked if all on that list were included. I am reasonably confident, subject to reading the whole list, that the answer to the question would be no.

U.S. REPORT ON FOREIGN TRADE BARRIERS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I have in my hands a copy of the foreign trade barriers report from the office of the United States trade representative, which lists all of those items I just mentioned as being part of the negotiations between Canada and the United States. Will the Minister advise the House whether this information that we received from the United States Embassy is, in fact, correct?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would have to read the document, which I will do with care, as I try to listen with care to the question of the Hon. Member. However, I believe that my answer stands.

PATENT PROTECTION QUERY

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. On December 8, 1986, my colleague, the Member for Windsor—Walkerville, asked the Minister whether patent protection was on the table for negotiation. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs said, as reported at page 1879 of Hansard:

> The fact is that this matter has nothing to do with the free trade talks.

Why would the United States trade representative specifically mention patent protection in his report and say that they were continuing to discuss this matter at the free trade negotiation table with Canadian representatives?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not know how many times it is necessary to repeat that this legislation was introduced because it is of benefit to Canada.

Mr. Young: Is this part of free trade?

Mr. Andre: The whole question of intellectual property, which includes copyrights, patents, trademarks, industrial design and so on, is in fact within the ambit of the free trade discussions. There is no question. There may be in fact other aspects of patents which may be discussed; I do not know. However, I am telling the Hon. Member, as I told the Hon. Member for Windsor-Walkerville, that this legislation, Bill C-22, was brought in because we are concerned about Canada's research and development capabilities and future. We are concerned about the health of Canadians. We have introduced the Bill because it is of benefit to Canada.

• (1430)

Why are the New Democratic Party and the Liberals so preoccupied with what the Americans think? We do not care. We are doing this for Canada's benefit.

ACID RAIN—EFFECT ON LAKES IN EASTERN CANADA

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. According to Dr. Schindler of the Freshwater Institute of Winnipeg, up to 600,000 lakes in eastern Canada are vulnerable to acid rain damage, not the 300,000 as estimated so far. As many as 28,000 lakes, not 14,000, are already acidified. Will the Deputy Prime Minister relay Dr. Schindler's findings to the Prime Minister and urge him to find the courage he needs to get up from his prime ministerial knees and demand from the President, in the name of good Canada-U. S. relations, specific reductions in acid rain pollution which is coming into Canada in deadly quantities, when they meet on April 5 in Ottawa? Will he do that?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I have no interest whatsoever in debating with the Hon. Member for Davenport the sciences of acid rain. I think it has been demonstrated to the satisfaction of the Government that it is a very serious transboundary problem. Acid rain is the number one environmental priority of the Government of Canada. It is one of the top priorities on the government-wide agenda. Whether 300,000 lakes are being destroyed, or whether it is 600,000, we could not make it any higher a priority than it already is.

Mr. Caccia: If that is the case, why does the Prime Minister not openly say what Canada wants in the interests of Canadians, rather than dancing around?

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER PRESS ECONOMIC ARGUMENTS WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): In view of the increasing economic damage to the United States and Canada in terms of agriculture, forestry, the fisheries, human health, buildings and structures, will the Deputy Prime Minister or the Minister of the Environment urge the Prime Minister to stop applauding President Reagan and start pressing the economic arguments with the President, which are so convincingly in favour of acid rain cuts, in Ottawa on April 5? Will he do that?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I would have thought that acid rain would be the last issue on which the Liberal Party of Canada would moralize, given its record over a quarter of a century.

When I was environment critic for the Official Opposition for three years, I used to ask the Liberal Prime Minister at the time, after every single meeting he had with the President of the United States, through bilateral discussions or multilateral discussions, whether or not he had used the occasion of his meeting with the President of the United States to raise Canada's very serious concerns about acid rain. The reply of the Liberal Prime Minister was always: "Well, I can't raise just every bilateral issue". Under the Liberals acid rain was just another bilateral issue. For us it is the number one priority.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—AGRICULTURAL MARKETING BOARDS QUERY

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I do not care which one answers. Over many months this House has been assured a number of times in answers to questions that under no circumstances would the Canadian Wheat Board or other marketing boards be part of or on the table in negotiations on free trade. Can the Government assure us that that is still the case and that they are not part of the free trade talks?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I can, I will, I do.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: In view of the facts, I am glad that was not a marriage proposal.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT COMMITMENT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, the office of the United States trade representative states: "The role of the Canadian Wheat Board and other Canadian marketing boards will— not "maybe" or anything else but "will"—be discussed during the bilateral free trade agreements negotiations". What is going on? Can the Minister tell us with certainty that our representative has been instructed that they are not on the table and they are not negotiable and that he will not discuss those items with the United States?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The only people who raise these matters are the New Democratic Party. We are not going to be negotiating the question of the Canadian Wheat Board, and the principle of supply-management, as I said in the House before, is not a matter involved in the trade negotiations.

With regard to the other part of the question, I know something about NDP marriage proposals and we have no interest in them at all.

FISHERIES

MINISTER'S LETTER TO ST. MALO OFFICIAL

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, Canadians have been wondering why the French metropolitan fleet is being given fishing quotas in Canadian waters after its treaties ran out last year. We now learn that not even the French in France believed they had any rights to Canadian waters when their treaties expired last year. Why did the Secretary of State for External Affairs write on February 14 of last year to the Assistant Delegated to Maritime Affairs, City of St. Malo, France, saying:

> —the Prime Minister asked me to thank you for your letter of December 23, 1985, in which you made known to him your concerns about the rights to fish by French vessels, and especially those from St. Malo, in Canadian waters.
> —Canada has not abandoned the people of St. Malo—these people will be able to continue to fish Canadian waters in 1986 and well beyond that.

Why did the Minister write that when the French did not even know they had fishing rights here until his letter of February 14? Did he get carried away on Valentine's Day?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is a shame that an Hon. Member with such dramatic talents would not apply them to reading the whole letter instead of simply part of it. If he read the whole letter he would see that the letter makes reference to the 1972 agreement. It says: "It is by virtue of that 1972 agreement that the French metropolitan trawlers will fish in future in Canadian waters". That 1972 agreement is known otherwise as the "Liberal Government agreement".

Mr. Baker: It is nice to know that this Government is now educating the people of France that they can fish forever in Canadian waters. The letter did not go to St. Peter's in Prince Edward Island, St. Andrews in New Brunswick, St. Ann's in Nova Scotia, or St. Anthony in Newfoundland; it went to St. Malo in France.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Under what legislative legal authority did the Secretary of State for External Affairs guarantee fish to France in this letter of February 14 when he says: "Oh, we won't forsake the people of St. Malo"? It sounds like he is running an election campaign in France. Joe Blow for St. Malo!

[Translation]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): In France, they say: "Joe Qui?"

[English]

The facts are that the Liberal Government in 1972 signed a treaty which gave fishing rights to France. That was a Liberal treaty. I was sent a letter by a citizen of France. I replied to that letter. My habit when I am replying to letters from people anywhere in the world is to tell them the truth. I do not know what the habit of the Liberal Party is.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—U.S. DOCUMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In reply to a question just a moment ago the Secretary of State for External Affairs flatly contradicted an official U.S. document.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: As the Minister will realize—

An Hon. Member: But we are a sovereign country!

Mr. Broadbent: As the Minister will realize, it is no joking matter for the Government of Canada to say one thing and the Government of the United States to say another about what both see as historically important trade negotiations.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I will wait until Members opposite quiet down.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: Next question!

Mr. Speaker: The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Oshawa. I would ask that Hon. Members give proper attention.

Mr. Broadbent: I will now read to the Secretary of State for External Affairs what the official U.S. document says and ask him if it is the truth or not. In this document it states:

> The role of Canadian Wheat Board and other Canadian marketing boards will be discussed during the bilateral Free Trade Agreements—negotiations.

That is the official U.S. policy. Is it true or not?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the only thing that would shock the United States administration more than having the Leader of the NDP acting as its spokesman in the House of Commons would be if the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition were to do it again.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Take us on one at a time, Joe.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The reference in the document was to discussions. The document then went on, as was just read to us by the new spokesman for the U.S. trade representative, to talk about negotiations. There is a difference between discussions and negotiations. We cannot help what is raised at the table. If somebody wants to raise something at the table, and they might want to raise something at the table, we have to answer it. We are prepared to discuss it. What we say about the Canadian Wheat Board, so there can be no misunderstanding, is that it is not negotiable.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

UNITED STATES POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, in reply to an earlier question that is not what the Minister said. The earlier question was with respect to whether it was being negotiated and talked about and the Minister said no. If I understand him now, the Americans are correct when they say that if they put in on the negotiating table they are talking about it. Is the Minister prepared to confirm that or not?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Wheat Board is not being negotiated in the trade discussions between Canada and the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Slower, Joe.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The Canadian Wheat Board is not being negotiated in the trade negotiations between Canada and the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

LABOUR

LAY-OFFS IN SAINT-HENRI—WESTMOUNT RIDING—MEASURES GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO TAKE

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In my riding, in Saint-Henri—Westmount, we have had another disaster: 300 lay-offs. What does the Government intend to do to protect these workers who are desperate?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me draw the Hon. Member's attention to the fact that in a period of change, as I am sure the Hon. Member would be quick to admit, there will be changes in employment in different companies. Some companies may shut their doors. But the important thing is that we keep creating new jobs on an incremental basis. We have been creating new jobs. We have created over 700,000—

Mr. Benjamin: Part-time at minimum wage.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member says "part-time". He knows that 80 per cent of the jobs that have been created since September of 1984 are full-time jobs.

Mr. Broadbent: Where?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): In the Province of Quebec 175,000 jobs have been created. So while there have been shut-downs, and we understand that, the important thing is that net of any of the shut-downs, any job losses, there have been new jobs created, 175,000 in the last two-and-one-half years.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTERVENE

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, that is not really an answer to my question, because in the industry, at Coleco in Saint-Henri, today there are 300 workers who are desperate. In fact, there have been quite a few plant closings recently in this industry.

I would therefore like to know whether the Government intends to do something such as setting up a specific program to protect these workers and stimulate the economy in this sector, in order to create new jobs in the south-west section of Montreal.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think it is quite clear our Government has stimulated the economy across Canada, and that includes Quebec.

I said in my last answer that 175,000 jobs had been created since September 1984. That is the purpose of this Government's economic policy, and we have had a great deal of success with this policy.

CONSULTATION WITH COMMUNITIES

Mr. Albert Girard (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for Canada Post Corporation. Recently, the Standing Committee on Government Operations presented its second report to the House. The report stressed the importance of consultation. During hearings the committee was presented with horrendous stories concerning the lack of consultation between Canada Post and the population it is supposed to serve. Will the Minister instruct Canada Post to confirm its commitment to service by undertaking meaningful consultation with all communities affected by its decisions?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. There certainly were mistakes made in the past. But, as I have indicated to the House, the consultations are to be meaningful and to involve the Member of Parliament from the start. As an example, in the town of St. Albert in the constituency of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell the Member for that riding was actively involved in discussions, as there was a change in the postal services there. I understand from the Hon. Member, from Post Office officials and others, that it went very well and everybody was involved. The consultations were meaningful and to everyone's satisfaction.

I hope that that will be the pattern for the future. I hope that Members of Parliament will keep me apprised if in fact we slip off that pattern since we all have a responsibility in this regard.

VICTORIA—CASUAL EMPLOYEES—PICKET LINE POLICY

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the Post Office. I wonder why, when the Minister gives an example of a community giving consent for a change of postal service, he does not elaborate on it as policy. My question relates to a news report which states that in Victoria the Post Office is making it a condition of employment for casual employees that they be prepared to cross a picket line. I wonder if the Minister would indicate that that action is provocative, and would he dissociate himself from it and call upon Canada Post to seek to reach an agreement rather than to provoke a strike?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, all parties—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order—

Some Hon. Members: Not during Question Period.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

BABY GIRL BORN TO MEMBER FOR HAMILTON EAST

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I am pleased to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that with respect to your comment on Tuesday regarding the Hon. Member for Hamilton East, your prediction has come true. There are now two of them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): At the Ottawa Civic Hospital the Hon. Member for Hamilton East made history. She is the first sitting Member of the House of Commons to give birth—to an eight-pound baby girl.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I think all Members will join me in offering the Hon. Member and her husband, Ric Marrero, our warm and heart-felt congratulations and best wishes.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East is also the first Member to manage to get a point of order raised in Question Period for many years. The Minister may continue his answer.

VICTORIA—CASUAL EMPLOYEES—PICKET LINE POLICY

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think I remember the question, but first let me congratulate the Hon. Member for Hamilton East on this tremendous occasion.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre is aware that all 28 contracts which various bargaining units have with the Post Office are up. They are under active negotiation. They are at the table now. It is in his interest, in our interest, and in everybody's interest that we try not to involve ourselves in those issues and thereby inadvertently provoke some action which could only be damaging to the collective bargaining process and to Canada.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I am sure it is the first time the Minister has been protected by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister.

He failed to address the question, that is, that Canada Post is hiring casual employees and making it a condition of employment that they be prepared to cross a picket line. Does that not appear to him to be provocative action rather than action which leads to agreement? Will he not take action so that the postal service can be maintained and we have good labour relations in the Post Office?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am quite certain that good labour relations in the Post Office are not contributed to by involvement in the House in the negotiations and the issues. I know that the Post Office, like every other appropriate corporation, is bound by the Canada Labour Code and must follow it in all its dealings. I would assume that whatever it is doing—and the Hon. Member talks about some press report—it is obeying the law. I would expect it to obey the law. If there is some evidence that it is not obeying the law, I would appreciate knowing about it, and I will see that it does.

DEVELOPMENT OF MONTREAL EAST—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Finance follows that raised by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount. Next Monday in Montreal Members of Parliament and their provincial counterparts, as well as municipal councillors representing the Montreal East area, will meet with Montreal's new mayor to discuss the development of that region. The Minister is well aware that his Government has set up many committees, including the Picard Committee, the de Cotret Committee and the Pichette Committee. So far, nothing has happened. Could the Minister tell us before Monday's meeting, whether the Government together with the provincial government and the City of Montreal is prepared to grant fiscal benefits to make Montreal East into a designated or business area? Is the Government going to do its share to help Montreal East economy recover and create new jobs?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member is quite well aware, the President of the Treasury Board is the chairman of a committee which has been doing a considerable amount of work in reviewing various proposals. When those proposals are ready, they will be coming forward, and we will be able to make a decision based upon the facts at that time.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT PARTICIPATE FINANCIALLY IN ESTABLISHING NEW ENTERPRISES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montréal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. It is true that the President of Treasury Board has spent much effort, gone through a lot of paperwork, been involved in many discussions, organized many panels, done a lot of on-the-spot running, with no concrete proposals to put forward. Only ten employees out of 650 are reported to be working at the Hearst plant. At the Bombardier plant, they do not know whether in three months from now they will have work for the 650 employees. Would the Minister accept a concrete proposal from the Quebec Government and the City of Montreal to participate financially in establishing new businesses through tax shelters granted to a designated area. Yes or no?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of Treasury Board): As my friend the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie has just indicated, Mr. Speaker, we have indeed done a lot of work, carried out many studies and consultations. But above all we have created jobs.

An Hon. Member: Where?

Mr. de Cotret: We have, above all, made considerable investments in the Montreal area. Mr. Speaker, in Quebec we have created 175,000 jobs. In the Montreal area, thousands of jobs were created over the past year. In Montreal East, significant financial help has been provided. As I indicated to all the spokesmen for the area Mr. Speaker, the Federal Government is there to support financially all new business ventures which could create permanent jobs in Montreal East, Montreal West, Downtown Montreal, as well as in the area represented by the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount: our money and jobs are there to prove it.

FINANCE

CREDIT CARD INTEREST RATES

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. The bank rate has fallen again. This time it is down 9 bases points.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stackhouse: Major credit card institutions and department stores are defying low interest rates, a parliamentary report, and public opinion by keeping their rates at excessive levels. What action is the Minister ready to take to remind these institutions and stores that there is such a thing as good corporate citizenship?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, again I commend my hon. friend for his interest in the subject. I think it is his interest and the work of the House committee which led to a close examination of the problem he raises. Given the fact that a number of financial institutions have made it clear in the last few days that their interest rates are under review, I am more hopeful. Also I should like to say that the provincial Ministers will be discussing the matter shortly at the federal-provincial level. It is not just a question of financial institutions, but it is broader than that. If rates do not come down, as I have said before, we will consider the best way to proceed.

GRANT MADE TO COLECO—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. It concerns Coleco. It has just been reported, according to the American vice-president of Coleco, Barbara Wruck, that the Montreal shutdown was part of a restructuring plan devised in 1982, and my question is this: Since the Government approved a $500,000 grant to that company last year, did the company mislead the Government in negotiating that grant?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I was not part of the negotiations, so I am unable to answer the question. I presume the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion was the Minister responsible, although I am not quite sure the Hon. Member stated specifically what program it was under. However, I will bring the matter to his attention and will get an answer back to him.

Mr. Langdon: It seems to me that the case is self-evident, that a serious and very unfortunate misleading took place.

CLOSURE OF AMERICAN SUBSIDIARY PLANTS IN CANADA

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. What assurance can the Government give us that this will not be the pattern which takes place under any free trade agreement right across the board in Canada, with subsidiaries shut down here to keep plants open in the United States? What possible guarantee can be given to the people of Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, if that is to be used to link it to free trade negotiations, the Coleco situation in Montreal is this—the grants that were extended generated in Montreal at the time investments of $8 million by that company. The $1.5 million in grants the company received were extended under applicable standards and there is no question of any trickery. In fact, for the last project for which Coleco accepted a grant, it exceeded its job creation goal by 150 per cent.

WAR CRIMINALS

ISRAEL'S REQUEST FOR ACCESS TO UNITED NATIONS FILES

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The United Nations is currently holding 38,000 closed files on war criminals from World War II. Access to these files has been requested by Israel, and the United Nations Secretariat consulted member states on their advice about whether the files should be opened. This weekend, The New York Times printed the names of the countries which recommended that Israel not be given access. Why is Canada on that list? Why did Canada refuse Israel access to these files?

• (1500)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the position of Canada has been that files should be open to access by judicial and quasi-judicial bodies and official investigative agencies, which is the usual safeguard, as the allegations in the files have never been subjected to judicial process or legal evaluation.

REQUEST THAT CANADA AGREE TO ALLOW ACCESS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the result of that tortured answer is that the files may never be open. Is Canada prepared to say yes and allow a responsible member of the United Nations to have access to those files?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): We would be prepared to allow those files to be open to access by judicial and quasi-judicial bodies, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Kaplan: Not Israel?

FISHERIES

LABRADOR SHRIMP PROCESSING PLANTS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Today we have reports that the federal Government will ban Danish vessels from fishing shrimp in Canadian waters. In Labrador, two co-operatives provide jobs for 1,300 workers in communities such as St. Mary's Harbour, Cartwright, Rigolet, Nain and L'Anse-au-Loup. They do that in exchange for a sufficient supply of shrimp from the Danish vessels to allow them to process year round. Can the Minister tell this House what specific proposals and suggestions he has to maintain employment, 1,300 jobs, in these communities?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): I certainly can, Mr. Speaker. The decision, several years ago to develop the northern shrimp fishery off the coast of Labrador in particular, was taken to advance the opportunity and the income potential of that resource to the benefit of northern communities, both native and non-native.

Just recently we decided to introduce enterprise allocations and to increase the number of shrimp licences. This will enable Canadian fishermen in Canadian-owned vessels to catch and land shrimp at Canadian operated plants, and to end, as has long been the policy of the Government of Canada, the practice of royalty charters whereby foreign vessels take our shrimp away for nothing more than a cash payment to some particular organization. Our objective is to produce jobs to the benefit of the unions and the native people of the coast of Labrador and in northern areas of Canada.

PRACTICE OF JOINT VENTURES WITH DANISH TRAWLERS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the same Minister. In light of the fact that these co-operatives presently employ 1,300 workers who are prepared to enter joint ventures with the Danish fishing trawlers to continue these jobs, would the Minister consider this arrangement which would, in effect, Canadianize the trawlers and maintain employment for 1,300 people?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is speaking of the practice of the Labrador Union Fishermens Shrimp Co. Ltd. and the Torngat Fish Producers Co-op of bringing foreign vessels in each year for several years against our policy and taking nothing more than a cash payment for their own purposes in exchange for renting the right to take a Canadian resource out of Canada and process it out of Canada.

Mr. Broadbent: That is not the question.

Mr. Rodriguez: I didn't say that.

Mr. Siddon: I know what the past practice has been. The policy has been to replace that practice with the encouragement of Canadian participation in the direct harvesting and processing of this resource. We are facilitating the kind of joint venture which the Hon. Member mentions, which will use Canadian vessels landing that resource at Canadian processing plants.

Mr. Speaker: I have to advise Hon. Members that the following question will be the last question. The Hon. Member for Saskatoon East.

Point of Order—Mr. Clark (Yellowhead

REVENUE CANADA

SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH TAX CREDIT DEFRAUDERS—REQUEST FOR EXTRADITION FROM UNITED STATES

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. As he is well aware, there are a number of Canadians who have defrauded the Canadian Government of tens of millions of dollars as a result of using the scientific research tax credit. Many of these people are now living in the United States or in other countries.

Will the Minister look at having these individuals extradited from the United States? If not, will the Minister propose changes to the Income Tax Act in order that these tax dollars can be recovered?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the interest of the Hon. Member in this matter which is causing so much difficulty and which has given rise to so many abuses. I can tell him that in cases where our Income Tax Act does not facilitate bringing offenders before the criminal courts, we will certainly utilize the provisions of the Criminal Code, including any extradition processes which are inherent in it. These processes are sometimes difficult. We are receiving good co-operation from the RCMP and from the Department of Justice in this regard.

POINT OF ORDER

ELUCIDATION OF ANSWER

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. An answer I gave to the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) may have left an incorrect impression. With the permission of the House, I would like to correct that impression.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs have the consent of the House to do so?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, the position of Canada and the decision of the UN Secretariat would allow a quasi-judicial body of Israel to have access to the files. The distinction is between publishing the files and allowing quasi-judicial bodies, including of the State of Israel, to have access to them. Under that decision, such quasi-judicial bodies of Israel obviously would have access to those files.

Business of the House

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Government House Leader. Will he give us a statement of the government business he intends to call for this afternoon and for the next week?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Most certainly, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon we will proceed with Bill C-41, amendments to the Judges Act, followed by Bill C-28, amendments to the Criminal Code, followed by C-2, which is Canagrex, and Bill C-37, which will depend upon the arrangements we can make with the spokesmen for the opposition Parties. On Bill C-37 we are subject to negotiation. That should take us to the end of the week.

My understanding is that arrangements were made to call Bill C-41 first, the Judges Act, and then Bill C-28, the torture Bill.

Mr. Kaplan: I had been expecting Bill C-28, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, the arrangements have been made for Bill C-28 to be called first. Perhaps we could make that change.

• (1510)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the wish of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) to have this matter referred not to a legislative committee but to Committee of the Whole?

Mr. Mazankowski: Yes, an understanding has been reached with both opposition Parties.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, in light of the confusion opposite, I might say that I have given notice of an amendment which I would like to make at the proper time and I would like to make a speech on the Bill, and so would one of my colleagues. We do not require that the Bill be referred to a committee other than the Committee of the Whole after second reading. I hope that is of some help.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, we agree as well that the Bill in question can be debated at second reading. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy), will be speaking to this legislation briefly and then it will be dealt with in Committee of the Whole. That is the understanding that has been reached.

CRIMINAL CODE

Hon. Don Mazankowski (for the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved that Bill C-28, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (torture), be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. François Gérin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, state-inflicted torture has been a fact of life since ancient time. Torture is not a recent phenomenon, nor is it limited to a political system, a regime, a culture, a religion, or a specific geographical region. A good many societies have resorted to torture with a view to obtaining information, meting out punishment, and discouraging opposition to power wielding authorities.

The connection between law and torture has been an evolving process. In earlier times, throughout the world, torture was not prohibited by legislation. Laws covering certain forms of torture were passed gradually in only a few states: some laws banned torture, others created such general offences as acts of violence or intimidation. And yet some societies continued to consider torture as being an acceptable form of interrogation or punishment. Nowadays a number of governments and human rights organizations severely criticize and denounce torture. Many states specifically prohibit torture or similar treatments in their constitution, and many international conventions condemn and prohibit it as well.

In this respect I should like to remind Hon. Members of the House that our Constitution prohibits the use of torture. Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms Section 12 states that "everyone has the right not to be subjected to any cruel and unusual treatment or punishment".

And yet, despite these denounciations on a national scale, several international human rights groups do have information to the effect that torture is still a common practice is many states, at the instigation of their leaders or with their expressed or tacit approval. Torture is all the more insidious that it is practiced by state authorities against their own people—the very people they are expected to protect. People in certain parts of the world still believe that torture is acceptable in some cases, to the extent that sometimes it makes it possible to reach other objectives.

The present campaign against torture is being conducted on several fronts. At the international level, negotiations are taking place and conventions and other instruments are being signed to oblige member states to take the necessary steps to prevent torture. At the national level, individual states are criminalizing torture and providing better training for police officers, prison staff and military personnel. Furthermore, national and international human rights groups are taking an active interest in the campaign against torture. Concerted action is necessary if we do not want torture to be tolerated or covered up.

The United Nations is taking an active part in this campaign, and Canada is giving it energetic support. In 1975, Mr. Speaker, the U.N. National Assembly adopted the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment. Subsequently, the General Assembly asked all member States to reinforce their support by proceeding unilaterally with declarations against torture. Canada did so in 1982.

However, feeling that the Declaration was not enough, in 1977 the U.N. Assembly asked the Commission on Human Rights to prepare a draft convention against torture, based on the 1975 Declaration. Canada was active on the Human Rights Commission's task force and supported this initiative which was a concrete manifestation of international action against torture.

Canada has always been of the opinion that the Convention should not simply repeat the 1975 Declaration but also contain provisions for actual enforcement. In fact, the provisions give a broad definition of torture and provide for universal extraterritorial jurisdiction to prevent safe haven being offered to torturers, and also include a mechanism for compulsory enforcement consisting of an international committee authorized to proceed with investigations and submit comments.

In 1983, Canada jointly supported a procedural resolution, enjoining the Commission on Human Rights to give top priority to the preparation of a draft convention. The text of the draft convention was brought before the General Assembly and adopted by the Assembly in December 1984. The U.N. Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment was ready for signing on February 4, 1985 and was signed by Canada on August 23 of that year.

[English]

Under the convention, an obligation is put on parties to the convention to criminalize acts of torture as well as acts constituting complicity or participation in torture. A definition of torture is provided. The convention also provides that neither exceptional circumstances nor orders by a superior officer may be raised as a defence to torture. Any statement made as a result of torture may not be admitted as evidence in legal proceedings.

In order to enforce the convention, a system of extraterritorial jurisdiction is created to prevent safe havens for torturers or for their accomplices. States are obligated to investigate allegations of torture and to prosecute alleged torturers. With respect to a foreign torturer found on its territory, each state is obligated to either extradite or prosecute the alleged torturer. A state may refuse extradition if it fears that the person will be tortured if returned to another country.

In addition to these criminal enforcement provisions, the convention also obligates states to take other legislative, administrative, judicial or other measures to prevent both torture and other acts of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment that does not amount to torture. These include regulatory directives, education and systematic reviews concerning arrest, detention and imprisonment. Victims of torture shall have an enforceable right to fair and adequate compensation and rehabilitation.

The convention also provides for the establishment of an international supervisory committee to monitor the implementation and operation of the convention and to receive reports. The implementation provisions further contain two optional procedures enabling the committee to consider complaints against state parties. I will not go into the details of the committee or its powers since this involves matters of international relations. They are not directly relevant to the implementation of the convention within Canada. The convention will come into force once 20 states have ratified or acceded to it. To date, over 50 countries have signed the convention and 16 have ratified it.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, Canada supports that Convention which enables us to better develop the legal obligations undertaken under the International Civic and Political Rights Pact. Let me indicate for instance that Section 7 of that Pact forbids torture or any cruel, inhuman or degrading penalties or treatments. Further, those obligations are also constitutionnally recognized under Section 12 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, under which everyone has the right not to be subjected to any cruel and unusual treatment or punishment.

By implementing the Convention, Canada would be more committed to promoting human rights internationally, and more specifically to eliminate torture. The Convention's provisions, which for the most part are compatible with Canadian criminal standards and practices, could easily be adapted to it. However, the Criminal Code would have to be amended to make torture a new offence and to establish extraterritorial jurisdiction in this area.

The Bill would enable us more specifically to attain the following goals: it would create a new offence, torture, committed by officials such as police officers, public servants, members of the Canadian Forces and foreign officials performing similar functions under foreign laws.

The new offence would also apply in the case of anyone acting with the express or tacit consent of those officials. Torture would be defined as any act or omission by which severe pain or suffering, physical or mental, is intentionally inflicted on a person for various purposes or for any reason based on discrimination of any kind.

Although it is possible to punish torture under existing provisions concerning assault and battery, what is required is the establishment of a new offence. In the first place, torture is an offence more limited in scope than assault and battery. It applies only to torture that is intentionally inflicted by officials, that inflicts severe pain or suffering and that is inflicted upon the victim for a purpose or for any reason based on discrimination of any kind. Since Canada has agreed to extradite torturers and, in certain cases, to institute proceedings against them, it is important that such extraditions and proceedings be aimed at the offenses defined by the Convention and be consistent with our international commitments, without however exceeding them. The best way to achieve this is to define a new offense, torture, rather than deal with aggravated assault, an offense wider in scope whose definition is not as narrow as that of torture under the Convention.

Second, we must define a new offense because current provisions dealing with assaults do not apply adequately to the notion of purely and simply inflicting mental pain or suffering, in the absence of violence, or if the acts inflicting the mental pain or suffering are not otherwise illegal.

Third, we must define a new offense because the current legislation would not apply in the case of civil servants who would take an action otherwise lawful, for instance, the lawful imprisonment or interrogation by the police for the purpose of obtaining information from a person, for punishing this person, for intimidating or coercing the person or for any reason based on discrimination of any kind during which these persons would inflict severe mental pain or suffering.

I should like to emphasize that the definition of torture both in the Convention and the Bill applies only to an act causing severe physical pain or suffering, which is intentionally inflicted on a person. Therefore, under this Bill, a great many lawful police or non criminal activities which could unfortunately or inadvertently cause to a suspect or prisoner some degree of normal anxiety will not be deemed to be crimes.

[English]

In addition, the Bill, in accordance with the terms of the convention, also excludes pain or suffering arising only from, inherent in, or incidental to, lawful sanctions. In light of the history of the convention and other international instruments in the human rights area, I think it is safe to say that this exclusion shall be interpreted generally in accordance with international law and standards.

Fourth, for Canadian officials the creation of this new and specific offence of torture will have an educational dimension.

Pursuant to the convention, the Bill provides that it is no defence to a charge of torture that the accused executed the orders of a superior, or that the acts of torture were carried out in such exceptional circumstances as a state of war, political instability, or any other public emergency.

Again pursuant to the convention, the Bill provides that any statement obtained as a result of the commission of an act of torture would be inadmissible in evidence in any proceedings over which Parliament has jurisdiction, except as evidence that the statement was so obtained.

The measure would enable Canada to take legal action against an alleged torturer in the following cases: the act is committed in Canada, on a Canadian aircraft or ship, the accused or victim is a Canadian citizen, or the accused is, after the commission of the act of torture, present in Canada.

With the foregoing in mind, Mr. Speaker, I think it is obvious that this Bill deserves the support of the House since it flows from Canada's commitment to eliminate torture. Canada signed the convention with the agreement of all provincial governments, for they endorse principles. They have expressed their willingness to take any measure required to implement the convention. Were Canada to ratify the convention at the earliest opportunity, we would be able to sit on the new international committee to be struck under the terms of the convention.

Mr. Speaker, I urge Hon. Members to support the adoption of this Bill.

[English]

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, as the Liberal critic on human rights and also as a member of the Standing Committee on Human Rights, I recently had the privilege to be an observer with the Canadian delegation at meetings of the Human Rights Commission in Geneva. One of the major concerns of that commission, a concern which has been on the agenda as one of its top priorities, has been to try to eradicate the gruesome practice of torture which unfortunately exists in all too many countries. We in Canada have tried to give leadership, as the Hon. Member who just spoke pointed out, over many years with respect to human rights legislation. Certainly we were one of the first countries to sign the international human rights covenants. We have signed many of the covenants promulgated by the UN. In fact, the Canadian delegation has played a leading role in trying to make sure that these international covenants are signed and ratified by various countries, and that there is an enforcement mechanism such as the optional protocol of the international human rights covenants. Our ultimate goal is that all countries in the world would ratify and abide by these various covenants.

• (1530)

By passing Bill C-28 we will fulfil our commitments and the ideals which we have given leadership to on the international scene. Canada has participated in discussion and preparation of documents in Geneva. An important speech was given in Geneva by Mr. Kurt Herndl on February 2. As the Assistant Secretary- General for Human Rights on the occasion of the opening of the forty-third session of the Commission on Human Rights he said:

> Therefore States have an obligation to see to it that their legislation does in fact correspond to international human rights laws.

That which is before the House today for consideration and passage will enshrine in our national legislation proof that we are ratifying and accepting the responsibilities of that convention and covenant.

I would like to call your attention to a report on the issue of human rights of all persons subjected to any form of detention or imprisonment, torture and other cruel, inhumane or degrading treatment or punishment by the Special Rapporteur, Mr. P. Kooijmans, in Geneva very recently. That important presentation will be part of the documentation of human history which is clawing its way slowly upward from primeval cruelty into a more civilized state. In that report the following observations were made:

> Torture should be viewed objectively and seen by everyone, Governments and individuals alike, for what it is: the criminal obliteration of the human personality, which can never be justified by any ideology or overriding interest as it destroys the very basis of human society.

That is a very poignant way of putting the issue. He also made the following succinct statement:

> —torture (is) contempt for the personality of the other individual which has to be destroyed and annihilated. It is for that reason that torture is one of the most heinous violations of human rights as it is the very denial of the essence of human rights, namely the recognition that each living being has a personality of his own which has to be respected.

These words have been addressed to all the nations of the world. I suggest that we in Canada have a very special role to play by setting an example for other countries by ratifying the covenant against torture. By adding the name of our nation to that list we will make it possible to bind the signatory nations together in a solemn covenant to work together to obliterate torture throughout the world.

Mr. Kooijmans also said that he wanted to stress the importance of limiting the period of incommunicado detention under national law since many of the allegations we have received refer to torture in countries where a detainee may be kept incommunicado for a prolonged period. As Mr. Kooijmans points out, we cannot only talk about the eradication of torture because in some countries torture is related to the way in which prisoners are detained, kept incommunicado, and cruelly treated. Therefore, that about which we are speaking goes beyond the nastiness of torture to the very conditions which make torture possible. We are, therefore, talking about a convention against torture and other cruel, inhumane or degrading treatment or punishment. It is in this wider context that we must speak today.

Mr. Kooijmans goes on to discuss the tragedy that in many countries where torture is used medical personnel, including doctors, are, if you will, recruited to carry out the effectiveness of torture by helping to resuscitate the victim and keep that person in such a condition that the torture may continue. It is to this extent that violations of human rights are seen in many nations. It is shocking that some nations which we hoped would have carried on legal, just and humane practices are in fact guilty of gross violations of human rights and of torture.

A list of nations in respect of which urgent action is required includes the following: Bahrain, Bangladesh, Chile, Colombia, El Salvador, Indonesia, Iran, Paraguay, Korea, South Africa, Suriname, Thailand, Turkey and Zimbabwe. These are only the official records. These nations have all been asked, in some cases time and time again over years, and in some cases decades, to report on demands that have been made for information with regard to people who have been tortured or executed and people who have disappeared. This is all part of the same lugubrious picture which exists in the nations I have mentioned. Some are far worse than others.

I brought to the attention of the House and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) the problems regarding to the violations of human rights which have been going on in Indonesia practically since its inception. There were vast gruesome occurrences there in the earlier years against their own population and from 1975 on against defenceless people in various areas as well as various minorities. The violations have been recorded over the years by Amnesty International. Amnesty International has brought to our attention and to that of the United Nations the reality of these offences against human rights. Probably no other organization on earth deserves as much credit and appreciation as does Amnesty International for the work it has been doing so patiently and painfully to document the suffering, the disappearances, and the torture that has taken place around the world.

I single out Indonesia because we have good diplomatic relations with that country and have been providing development aid to it. It is one of the core countries with regard to the receipt of CIDA aid. Therefore, I believe we have a special responsibility to carefully monitor the record of Indonesia, not only with regard to what it has done to its own people, its students, minorities and Islamic groups, but also what it has done in areas that were not originally part of Indonesia. I refer particularly to East Timor and Irian Jaya and other places which could also be cited.

I want to bring to the attention of the House and Canadians that Amnesty International published a book entitled East Timor: Violations of Human Rights, Extra-Judicial Executions, Disappearances, Torture and Political Imprisonments. They said the following:

> In July, 1983, Amnesty International received a set of military manuals issued to Indonesian troops serving in East Timor. These manuals, among other things, contain guidelines which appear to permit the use of torture and the issuing of threats on the lives of prisoners being interrogated.
> Although Indonesian officials have repeatedly tried to cast doubt on the authenticity of these documents, neither they nor anyone else has produced any evidence that might indicate that they are false. Indonesian officials have correctly stated that the Ministry of Defence and Security never published the manuals, but Amnesty International is not aware of any claims that the Ministry did so.

The book continues:

> The manuals appear to have been written by officers of the Command for East Timor for local use and to have no application beyond East Timor.

It continues:

> Indonesian officials have argued against the authenticity of the manuals largely on the grounds that it would, in the words of the country's Foreign Minister, Dr. Mochtar Kusumaatmadja, be "fantastic" that a manual prescribing the use of torture should have been issued. But the documents do not deal exclusively with torture. They are not "torture manuals" and Amnesty International has never referred to them as such.
> First-hand evidence from other sources that military personnel have persistently resorted to torture and that people taken into custody by Indonesian troops have been arbitrarily executed tends to confirm Amnesty International's belief that the manuals are authentic.

The entire book is devoted to human rights violations in Indonesia. Amnesty International has published another book on violations in Indonesia.

I bring this to the attention of the House because it points out that this problem exists throughout the world. We must ask ourselves about our relationship with countries which carry on torture. We should consider the role our Government will play in diplomatic sorties in terms of our foreign aid. We must be concerned about the way Indonesia has been torturing its citizens and, even worse, invading other places, such as East Timor, and subjugating the rather primitive tribesman to cruel and unusual punishment. The whole story about the violations of human rights in Indonesia have been documented and I have turned these over to the Secretary of State for External Affairs so he may review them himself.

Other countries to which I have referred are, in some cases, also guilty of extremely gross acts of torture and cruelty. It is important for us today to make sure that Canada sets an example that will help build up that kind of moral and political power and persuasion to bring about a change in the way those countries deal with their prisoners.

I have singled out Indonesia, but one can also speak about the horrors of Chile. While I was in Geneva, a young lady and her mother who now live in Canada were there to testify. This young lady was cruelly beaten, covered in gasoline and left to die. She made her report to the United Nations. Other reports like that have come from Chile and the violations of human rights in that country are so gross that some of the descriptions are almost unbearable to hear. This young lady was burned almost to death. When one sees her, it brings not only a sense of pity and concern but the reality of the cruelty and torture taking place in other countries and makes one feel proud that we are today debating how we can play our part in preventing these gross violations of human rights throughout the world by adding the name of our country to those having ratified that convention against cruel and unusual punishment and torture.

There are some nations that will use the excuse in their laws that they were only acting on orders from higher authorities. For that reason, I commend those who wrote this Bill for including Clause 2(3) which states:

> It is no defence to a charge under this section that the accused was ordered by a superior or a public authority to perform the act or omission that forms the subject matter of the charge, nor that the act or omission is alleged to have been justified by exceptional circumstances, including a state of war, a threat of war, internal political instability or any other public emergency.

When I confronted members of the Indonesian delegation in Geneva with their record of human rights, they expressed the view that if this was done in a local area it was because that person was simply obeying the orders of a local army official who was in charge there. Therefore, it was not really that individual's fault that the events took place.

That was precisely the kind of defence used in the Nuremburg trials following the gruesome holocaust that overtook the world during World War II. During those trials and subsequent war crime trials, there was the excuse of not being responsible because the person was just obeying orders. That is precisely what we want to ensure does not exist in our law or in the laws of other countries. It is simply an excuse, like saying: "The devil made me do it". Such an excuse should not be allowed in our law and that is why I am pleased this clause in the Bill makes it clear that there are no exceptions whereby people can claim they were told to commit acts of cruelty or torture against another.

Our legislation should be a model to other countries who often look at other legislation and sometimes copy it verbatim. It is important that this law include that kind of explanation and provide an example for other nations to follow.

We must ensure that nations like Argentina are not allowed to carry on under the excuse of the generals and admirals that they are following orders to kill, make disappear, or torture thousands of people, including young students who are the cream of the crop of Argentinian young people.

When we look at events during World War II, at events in Argentina and in so many other places around the world today, we realize the gravity of this subject. Our nation is very comfortable. We feel so far away from it all. I only wish my words could create some sense of personal involvement on the part of all Canadians. What we do with this Bill is a major part of what can be done throughout the world. Organizations like Amnesty International and the United Nations can show the example of Canada to other countries. The legislation we create here in the House of Commons can be put before them as an example to follow. Hopefully, after we pass this Bill, we will use our resources to monitor these human violations in other parts of the world, but we should also be concerned about what is happening in our own country.

There is a phrase in this Bill about which I am deeply concerned. It is a phrase which suggests there may be some escape hatch provided along the lines I just mentioned. It is always possible for people to say when they committed some act in the name of the government, in the name of police action or in the name of the state, that they were simply following orders or that it was in pursuit of lawful sanctions. There is no lawful sanction under the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, no lawful sanction which can override the issue of torture and cruel and unusual punishment. There is no law above the law of God. There is no law above the law of the brotherhood of man. There should not be in our legislation any possibility for excusing ourselves or giving any excuse to anyone else so they can claim they were acting on the basis of some matter of lawful sanctions. I am concerned about that phrase and my colleague, who brought this to my attention, the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan), will be presenting an amendment in this regard. I hope that Members on the government side will consider very carefully that amendment.

I would like to conclude my remarks by commending the presentation of this Bill. I know our Party is fully behind the Bill itself in general. I urge all Hon. Members to consider the amendment which will be made by my colleague, the Hon. Member for York Centre, later on.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to stand in the House today in support of this legislation on behalf of my Party, thereby joining with, I am sure, all Hon. Members in the passing of legislation which allows Canada to fulfil its international commitments by giving legislative effect to the United Nations convention for the protection of all persons subjected to torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment.

This is an issue which has a considerable history, but not a long history. The concern about torture in this world and the development of a consensus of the need for its elimination really developed rather late. If one looks back to the development of the declaration in this convention, one sees that it first arose during the 1960s and 1970s when there was concern about reports of torture in southern Asia, Africa, South America, eastern Europe and elsewhere.

Giving a more dramatic effect to the concern, there followed the Bertrand Russell tribunal which examined the situation in Chile, Brazil, Paraguay and Uruguay. The tribunal reached the conclusion that torture constituted a crime against humanity. Since that time Canada has been actively engaged in furthering the development of an international system and convention. Its purpose would be the elimination of torture and the punishment of those who inflict torture. It was a part of the special working group of the Human Rights Commission in 1977. It was the first to sign a unilateral declaration in 1982. In 1983, it cosponsored a resolution according the highest priority to the development of an international declaration and convention. The convention which ultimately resulted was open for signature on February 4, 1985, and Canada signed in August of that year. Canada was among the few nations to provide financing to the UN Voluntary Fund for the Victims of Torture. Canada has consistently provided leadership. This Bill is not only a reflection of Canada's international humanitarian and human rights obligations, it also provides a legislative base for the implementation of appropriate sanctions to implement Section 12 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms which asserts that everyone has the right not to be subjected to any unusual or cruel treatment or punishment.

The convention calls upon the signatory states to develop legislation which provides for the criminalization of torture, as well as acts which comprise complicity or participation in torture. This Bill does that. Torture is defined as inflicting severe pain or suffering upon persons, or inflicting severe pain or suffering which results from omission, by an agent of government for reasons of punishment, coercion, intimidation or to obtain information. There is another reason for which torture may not be inflicted which is specified, and that is by reason of discrimination. That is included in the convention and in the legislation and certainly calls attention to the widespread use of torture and other activities which inflict pain on a considerable number of people in South Africa.

The first requirement, that is the criminalization of torture of a mental or a physical sort, is provided for in the legislation. The second requirement is that it be given universal jurisdiction. Torture inflicted by Canadians, imposed by Canadians, or torture inflicted by someone who is in Canada, even if that act took place elsewhere, is subject to prosecution. It also covers acts of torture if it occurs on Canadian ships or aircraft and provides for extradition in appropriate cases and, if extradition is inappropriate, calls for prosecution here.

Further, the convention sets out that there can be no justification for torture, that it is not an excuse to state that torture was inflicted by the order of a superior officer. It also provides that if evidence is provided or statements are made by virtue of the pain inflicted through torture, then they cannot be considered as legal evidence in any proceeding.

In those respects the legislation meets the requirements of the international convention in a legislative way. But when one praises the Government for introducing this legislation, which will surely pass, we have to be conscious of the other requirements that the declaration requires to be met. First, when one considers the requirement that acts of torture be prosecuted, that they not go unpunished, let us not reach the conclusion that we refer only to situations that may occur elsewhere. Of course, Canada is not a nation that has been accused of the use of punishment or torture in ways which are condemned in the universal convention or its preceding declaration. However, there are situations in which torture has been alleged although not proved.

If one refers to an additional aspect of the universal convention, it states that member states are obliged to prevent other acts of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment that do not amount to torture. All one has to do is recall the situation some years ago at Archambault Prison where it became evident, as it has all too often become evident in the past, that when allegations of torture or mistreatment are made against the police we are faced with extreme difficulty in proving them. We are all too often faced with a situation in which those who are accused of torture, cruel punishment or inhuman punishment, are the very people, the very groups, the very agencies to whom the allegations are made. It seems to me in looking at the implementation of this legislation domestically that one has to consider that provision has to be made for the independent examination of allegations, apart from the police or others who may be involved directly, in order to provide those people who make such claims have an opportunity to have their claims properly heard. All too often, and most notably in instances where native people or visible minority groups make allegations of mistreatment, such allegations are left unsatisfied because we do not have the mechanisms by which such allegations may be properly heard by an independent body in which trust can be had.

I note, too, that the international convention provides that there should be compensation for victims of torture, that they should have an enforceable right of fair and adequate compensation, including the means for full rehabilitation, to the extent that that is possible. I hope that in the discussions that are to occur with the provinces the right of those who prove themselves to be victims of torture will be specifically addressed, and that they be compensated for whatever harm has been inflicted upon them.

I hope that we will have a report from governments, federal and provincial, of the extent to which those governments have met another requirement of the convention. I refer to the implementation of administrative, judicial, legislative and other measures to ensure that all who are responsible, whether they be police officers, police forces, military personnel or any others who may be involved in the arrest, detention or imprisonment of Canadian citizens, will be well-informed of the requirements of the legislation that we are discussing today, and that an active effort be made to educate them about the limits of their power and the sanctions that will be imposed upon them if they violate the legislation which we have before us. If there is any prescription for the failure of legislation of this sort, it is not to provide clear directions, a statement of clear regulations and the education of those who might be involved in situations in which torture may occur.

I am proud that Canada has exercised leadership in the area of this international covenant. But I must take note of the fact that when, in 1985, the declaration was approved by the United Nations, there was absolute unanimity within that body in favour of its adoption. However, if we look at the record revealed in reports of Amnesty International we find that 67 nations, more than one-third of the membership of the United Nations, are nations about which allegations of torture, cruelty and inhuman punishment have been made. There is within that fact a great deal of hypocrisy. Some of the nations are well known for their violations of human rights in general, for the inappropriate detention of prisoners and for cruel and inhuman punishment and torture. South Africa leads the list in that regard. Surely, El Salvador, Indonesia, Sri Lanka, Taiwan, South Korea, the U.S.S.R., Israel and Saudi Arabia provide us with a spectrum of nations that are involved in this inhumane treatment of humankind.

Thus we are drawn to another consideration with respect to Canada's implementation of its strong concern about torture. It is to examine closely the kinds of relations this Government has with countries which have clear records of vicious treatment of their own citizens. It seems to me that torture is not that frequent in Canada; this is an empty piece of legislation unless we are able to also implement other measures that will show the world our utter contempt for those who would torture their own citizens, whether in war or in peace, whether for intimidation or because of race. So we should be looking systematically at the human rights records of the countries of the world with which our Government has relations. The Congress of the United States does it. The Americans have a complete listing, and examine human rights situations including false imprisonment, torture, and other inhumane acts. This provides a basis by which policy in respect of those governments can be directed.

When it comes to the provision of aid, the records of those nations should be available to us to determine in what manner, in what form, to whom, and whether we will provide aid. It is significant that we are not only unaware of what nations the Government considers it appropriate to have dealings with, but we do not know to what nations our country sells arms. In many cases that puts Canada in a position where we place guns in the hands of those who kill, maim, and torture their citizens. If we are to live up to our responsibilities in that regard, we must move beyond this legislation. Then we will have met our obligations.

When we look at those who come within our borders, whether they be diplomats such as the Ambassador from Sri Lanka or ordinary people of no particular notoriety, we should examine their records to see whether they have been involved in the imposition of torture. If that is so, we should either put them in jail or tell them to go home where they will be tried for their crimes. Only with complete involvement in ensuring that torturers will be punished will we have fulfilled our international obligations and our obligations to the consciences of Canadians.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) spoke on the Bill. He indicated our general position of support for it and our commitment to a large role by Canada in pursuing internationally the elimination of torture.

The reason I wanted to speak was that in my political career I have had fair experience in the workings of the United Nations. When the United Nations is unanimous about anything, I tend to worry. When I was first introduced to this dossier, including the Bill, I took a look at some of the details of the negotiations of the United Nations, of the treaty reached, and of the Bill now before the House. I want to say unequivocally, as did the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence, that the Bill and the debate which took place at the United Nations represent a step forward in the elimination of torture in the world.

I do not want to indicate that we have any reservations about what the new Government has done at the United Nations and here by bringing forward the Bill in compliance with the terms of the convention which it signed. However, I suggest that there is a very serious shortcoming in the convention signed at the United Nations and in the Bill before us. I do not want to suggest that we should have objected to the convention when it was negotiated at the United Nations. I can almost take it for granted that Canada would have been one of the nations pressing hardest for effective measures to reduce torture and eliminate torture in all parts of the world.

However, the Bill before us could be better. When we reach the stage of clause by clause consideration in Committee of the Whole, which I hope will be in a few minutes, I will propose an amendment. I think the principle is important enough to mention it now.

The United Nations is famous for intentional ambiguities. The ambiguities are intentional because in many cases without ambiguity in the measures brought forward by the United Nations there would not be consensus. It gets agreement among a large number of states because one group has a certain interpretation of what it is doing, while another group has another interpretation. The basic consensus at the United Nations about torture is a step forward, but the Bill before us does not go as far as it should.

When we in Canada talk about domestic legislation, we should set an example in the legislation that we bring forward. It might inspire some of the other countries that signed the convention to bring a forthcoming, unequivocal Bill before their own Parliaments and legislatures to provide real measures for dealing with torture and torturers who may be found in their countries, instead of half measures such as the ones contained in the Bill, which are better than nothing.

Let me explain why the Bill is inadequate. If we look at Clause 2, we see that the definition of torture includes any act—and I am skipping to make the point, certainly not to change the meaning—by which severe pain or suffering, whether physical or mental, is intentionally inflicted on a person for the purpose of punishing that person for an act which he has committed. It is a very good statement, and I think Hon. Members of the House would support it unequivocally. If a person is whipped or beaten, if a person is locked into a freezing room, if a person is buried up to his or her head in the sand, or if a person has a limb amputated, all these things would be permitted under the Act under certain circumstances because of the concluding language in that clause. It says that the definition of torture does not include any act or omission arising only from, inherent in, or incidental to lawful sanctions. We do not need that reservation in Canada. We do not mean to say that an act in which severe pain or suffering, mental or physical, is inflicted for the purpose of punishing a person will be acceptable, if it is incidental to, inherent in, or arising only from lawful sanctions.

There are states which specifically, deliberately, and officially torture people by way of punishment. I was not at the United Nations when the treaty was negotiated, but I say sincerely that I assume we tried to eliminate that type of practice in every country. I would assume we tried to make the convention one which would eliminate that. We succeeded to a point, and that is why I am approving the convention on behalf of my Party. However, I urge the House to eliminate the additional language which would qualify certain kinds of torture and make them justified. I do not think they should be.

In our own country and in our own Parliament where we have control of exactly what we will do in the way of ratifying and carrying forward the noble goal of the abolition or elimination of torture, I hope that when I move my amendment it will find favour.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to say a few words on the legislation before us and to add my thoughts to the whole question of torture, not simply from a domestic perspective in terms of what goes on in Canada, but from a more global perspective.

It has been quite some time now, but I visited Chile for a couple of weeks. Meeting with people who had been tortured and who lived in such a state taught me some lessons about torture. It is important for Canadians to understand what torture is and for our Government to have a serious global commitment to the elimination of torture.

Torture has to do with democracy and dictatorship. It has to do with a Government being at war with its people. It has to do with living in fear and a Government using torture, using all of the powers available to the state to keep people in line to preserve an unjust regime. Torture has to do with injustice, not only a lack of political freedom and a lack of freedom of the press but also when a society is characterized by social and economic injustice. I saw this in Chile. People are living in poverty the likes of which we do not know here. For the unemployed there is no social safety net, no welfare to keep body and soul together. Families have to go without food. People live in shacks that bear no relationship to what a house is like. This is the context in which we must see torture. Torture is part of an unjust society. It is an instrument that a Government uses to impose its will upon its people.

Any effort that our Government can make in the direction of eliminating torture from this planet is worthwhile. How easily the Government, as many of my colleagues have pointed out, could have gone further. We need to go further. However, it is important for Canadians to appreciate just what torture is in real terms. I wanted to share my experience with Canadians about what I learned of torture by visiting a country like Chile, whose citizens are tortured for speaking out and for calling for action to meet the people's basic human needs. I met with individuals who lived through that and still had the courage to go on, were still part of the human rights organization and who spoke out against the lack of freedom and injustice.

It is crucial that whatever Canada can do to support people who are fighting against political repression that we do everything we can.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-28, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (Torture) be read a second time and referred to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Danis in the Chair.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. If Members of the House wish, we could bring in officials to assist in the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That appears to be the wish of the House. I thank the Hon. Member.

The Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-28, an Act to Amend the Criminal Code (Torture).

Shall Clause 1 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 1 agreed to.

On Clause 2—Torture.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to move the following amendment to Clause 2:

That Bill C-28 be amended in Clause 2 by striking out line 42 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"which that person or a third person has com-"

The purpose of this amendment is to eliminate the use of sexist language from the Bill. I have discussed it with the Parliamentary Secretary and I believe there is agreement to proceed with the amendment.

The Chairman: The Chair finds the amendment in order.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment carried.

• (1630)

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Chairman, I move:

That Bill C-28 be amended in Clause 2:

(a) by striking out line 48 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor: "nation of any kind."; and

I moved this motion such a short time after I made my statement about the purpose of the amendment that perhaps I could save the time of the House by indicating that this amendment is to achieve the purpose I have just described.

The Chairman: I find the amendment to be in order.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak briefly in support of the amendment proposed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for York Centre. The reference at the top of page 3 to any act or omission arising only from, inherent in or incidental to lawful sanctions significantly weakens the protection included in the previous part of the provision. As I read them, those words qualify both subclause (a) and subclause (b) of the definition of torture. This would mean that if an individual intentionally inflicted severe pain or suffering on another individual for the purposes which are set out in subclause (a), that would be permitted if it arose from lawful sanctions.

Surely no lawful sanction should be accepted in Canada which would have as its result the infliction of severe pain or suffering, whether physical or mental, for the purpose referred to in the definition of torture. I cannot imagine how under any circumstances such acts or omissions would be considered acceptable in any civilized society. For that reason, I would hope that the Government would be prepared to accept the amendment of my colleague, the Hon. Member for York Centre.

I might just note as well that while certain incidents of the nature referred to in this Bill are, fortunately, rare in Canada, from time to time there have been allegations of serious wrongdoings including the possibility of torture as defined in the Bill. I recall, for example, visiting Archambault Penitentiary in August 1982 and meeting at that time with prisoners who made very serious allegations of the infliction of physical and mental torture upon them. Unfortunately, those allegations were dismissed by the Solicitor General of the day who suggested that the individuals in question should press charges in court if they felt they wished to proceed with the matter. That Solicitor General, of course, sits today as the Hon. Member for York Centre. It was only after a number of independent investigations including an investigation by Amnesty International, an investigation by the International Federation of Human Rights and an investigation by the very respected Moderator of the United Church of Canada that it became clear that there was indeed a very serious possibility of grave wrongdoing, injustice and possibly the infliction of physical and mental torture on prisoners at Archambault. To this day, there has been absolutely no justice whatsoever rendered in that case.

While we certainly support the provisions of this legislation, I would note that it is important that these provisions apply at all levels within Canadian society including Canadian prisons. I would seek clarification from the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice on the circumstances in which it might possibly be considered lawful to impose torture flowing from, inherent in or incidental to otherwise lawful sanctions.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérin: I must tell you that the amendment suggested by my colleague is well intended. That is beside the point, except that we are here to ratify an international convention by way of a Canadian Bill. This is what matters. I appreciate that the Hon. Member is asking us Canadians to go further than the international convention, but if we go further than that Convention, we will put other countries to which we promised concurrence in a situation that may be awkward for some of them. It is not without reason that the United Nations took ten years to reach a consensus on that convention. And I know for having attended the United Nations 40th session from beginning to end how difficult it is internationally to reach a consensus, and how much each detail is significant. I cannot visualize that Canada, which is committed to ratifying that international convention, would add an item that has been discussed in the United Nations, that has been extensively discussed and debated and the inclusion of which found no support.

The Convention states at the end of Section 1: "—but does not include any act or omission arising only from, inherent in or incidental to lawful sanctions".

But the latter part of Section 1 also adds that this section is without prejudice to any international instrument or national act that may contain provisions of a wider scope. There are also other arguments for opposing the amendment. Under that convention, we could be obligated to extradite an individual. This means we could find ourselves in a situation where we would have to extradite an individual because we would have gone further than the International Convention and extradited that person to another country that accepted the International Convention as it now stands. We therefore have an international responsibility to abide by that unanimous consensus, as other speakers have indicated.

According to the United Nations, the provision should be interpreted broadly, and I think you have there an answer to your questions, those terms should be interpreted broadly according to international law and human rights. That same section—let us not forget we are implementing it by way of an amendment to the Criminal Code, let us not forget that Section 245 of the Criminal Code is still there and also that that amendment should also be interpreted in the light of Section 245 of the Criminal Code. Hence, Canadian courts will have to use judicial discretion when interpreting Section 245, when interpreting Canadian law.

In conclusion, I would remind you that Section 12 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms—because after all that is the basis for all our rights here in Canada—the Canadian Charter of Human Rights and Freedoms states in Section 12:

> Everyone has the right not to be subjected to any cruel and unusual treatment or punishment.

A Canadian judge when faced with a situation as described earlier by the Hon. Member will interpret the case on the basis of the Charter and Section 245, and that should be ample. My point is, however, that we must respect this international consensus. We must, although at the United Nations, we could for instance ask the U.N. Commission on Human Rights to review this matter and consider going a bit further, and ask U.N. partners to provide the amendment you desire, but always according to the normal procedure at that level.

Mr. Kaplan: The Parliamentary Secretary says and admits that our Charter does not contain similar conditions, in other words, administering cruel punishment cannot be justified according to any clause in the Charter because there is none. Here we have a condition for allowing torture. I would like to ask him just to repeat the second article in the Convention he read to us, or both articles. If I remember correctly, the second article provides that the individual State may go further in its own statutes. It is rather difficult to talk about a document I have not read recently. Perhaps I may ask the Parliamentary Secretary or one of his officials to expand on the article that says "without prejudice to any international instrument or national statute containing provisions that are broader in scope." My question is as follows: If we decide to adopt the Bill with the amendment I am proposing, that is, without the qualifying clause and in the spirit of our Charter, will our ratification obligations allow us to do so?

Mr. Gérin: I think the second part of article 1 should be interpreted as a definition of assault. So if in Canada, under Section 245, you want to punish assault and battery and this definition goes further than what we are proposing today, obviously that definition of assault will take precedence. I think that is what is meant. In fact, we could amend other provisions in the Criminal Code to make them stricter, without tinkering with the Bill that ratifies an international procedure. I think that is how I would interpret it and that is why I think that at the United Nations this second part was added to article 1.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I find it quite extraordinary for the Parliamentary Secretary to suggest that the Canadian legislation cannot have a broader scope than the consensus reached at the United Nations. Of course, that consensus was reached, and various countries had to compromise to reach it. However in Canada, it rests with us to decide what will be our priorities and our legislation. I will then ask the Parliamentary Secretary to explain very clearly to me what is the intention of the Government because section 2 reads as follows: "—torture does not include any act arising only from lawful sanctions."

Does it mean that if the Government of Canada or any other government decided to provide in the law cruel sanctions which would effectively be a physical or mental torture that such sanctions would be accepted and that there would be no penalty for the enforcement of such sanction in Canada or elsewhere?

Mr. Gérin: The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms provides you with all these guarantees. Of course we have the right to legislate in Canada. What I am saying is that it is necessary to take into account the international consensus which was established with Canada's participation and today we have agreed to ratify this Convention. We have the right to legislate, but when we participate in a discussion, join a consensus, and agree to ratify a convention, we have to ratify it as proposed and in a way which will meet our partners' approval. I feel that is the way we will further this issue in the world. Our interest here is as Canadians in Canada but it is also our interest as Canadians to see that there is no torture in the world. In this way, I think we can make progress.

So there is protection under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms for all the situations you mentioned.

• (1640)

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Chairman, it is one thing to say that Section 12 of the Charter would provide protection, but the proposed amendment to Section 6 of the Criminal Code provides that where the person who commits the act or omission is, after the commission thereof, present in Canada, then that individual can be charged in Canada. Let us say that Chile, referred to by my colleague from Winnipeg North Centre, has a system of punishment which we clearly view to be cruel torture, but which is legally sanctioned in that country. If an individual from that country who has participated in the physical or mental torture of someone in there finds refuge in Canada, according to the wording of this Bill as it now stands, because those acts were legal in Chile, and despite the fact they are profoundly unjust, unacceptable and indeed unconstitutional in Canada, that individual is immune from prosecution in Canada. That is the implication of these words.

Can the Parliamentary Secretary explain why we are prepared to accept within our borders the presence of individuals who have clearly committed acts of torture solely because they are defined as legal acts under the laws of the country in which they were committed? Why on earth should we accept torturers in Canada?

[Translation]

Mr. Gérin: All I can say, Mr. Speaker, is that the legitimate sanctions mentioned here will clearly have to be interpreted in the light of international law and the United Nations Charter of Rights.

I suggest this is an adequate guarantee. In this context, the unfair legislation of another country which you mentioned would not be considered legitimate under international law in Canada.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, let us go back to the example given by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). In the case of an individual who committed acts of torture in his own country and who comes to Canada, a person who committed crimes elsewhere, except very special crimes in the area of terrorism, the problem is that, in Canada, there is an escape hatch. He has found a shelter, and his country of origin will not seek his extradition. In this country, we could not punish him, because his crime was committed abroad.

Then, we have an opportunity here to do more to abolish and eliminate torture. If we adopt the amendment as proposed, we have the possibility of finding ways to act against this type of torture. That is a very good example. It could happen easily.

I just want to ask again whether the Parliamentary Secretary wants these torturers to find a shelter, or an escape hatch in our country, when we can take action against that.

Mr. Gérin: No, there will be not refuge in Canada. Let us take the example of a country that would enact a statute to make torture acceptable and, after torturing people, contacted Canada and told us: "There is a law in our country that says torture is acceptable." Clearly, Canadian courts would not find that a lawful sanction. That is clear. According to the interpretation of Canadian law, international law, international human rights charters, that could never be found lawful. This means that nobody will be able to find refuge here.

Mr. Kaplan: Against such charges, the individual could answer that the torture inflicted was justifiable because this arose only from lawful sanctions. This is what he could say. He would have a case, and this is why I want to delete that language.

• (1650)

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary a very specific question. This is really the crux of the matter. Consider the case of an individual found in Canada who has committed acts in a third country which we would view as acts of torture, whether they be the infliction of physical or mental suffering. The individual has committed the acts pursuant to laws of that third country. In other words, the acts in question are legal. There are lawful sanctions in the country from which that individual has fled. A Canadian judge would be obliged to find that those acts flow from lawful sanctions because the sanctions in question are lawful in the country from which the individual has fled. There is nothing here which states that if the sanctions are illegal by virtue of international law there can be some sort of escape. The only criterion is whether they are lawful sanctions. If indeed the laws of that third country permit these acts, which we in Canada would view as acts of torture, the judge has no jurisdiction whatsoever. Obviously the country in question will not seek extradition and the individual is free to escape justice.

Does the Parliamentary Secretary not recognize that by including this reference to "flowing from lawful sanctions" he is in fact permitting a very serious escape loophole for individuals who may have committed acts of torture in other jurisdictions?

[Translation]

Mr. Gérin: Mr. Speaker, I for one have confidence in the Canadian judicial system to make the necessary distinctions in that area. I do not think you could give me a specific example of what you just mentioned.

The Canadian courts will interpret this in the light of Canadian law and international law. If the action was committed in another country, the courts will also have to base themselves on international conventions accepted and recognized around the world.

So you already have a safeguard, and I do not foresee any complaints. There are countries we will never hear from, where there will never be any problem. When it comes down to it, we know very well where torture is to be found, where torture is inflicted, and we also know those countries often have laws they should be amending.

We in this country will have no problem with that. Our judicial system will make it easy to fight acts of torture that have been inflicted anywhere around the world by people who seek refuge in Canada. I see no problem with that.

[English]

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I would then ask the Parliamentary Secretary whether he would be prepared to consider an amendment which would make it clear that any lawful sanctions in question must be in accord with the principles of international law. It would appear that that is what the Parliamentary Secretary is in fact stating, and that it is his hope that our courts would in fact interpret the only acceptable sanctions to be those in accord with the principles of international law. If those words at least were included, that would provide some safeguard and an assurance that we are not dealing with sanctions which are solely lawful according to the country in question but, rather, must be recognized as lawful by the international community of nations. The Parliamentary Secretary may wish to consider this and we could certainly come back at an early date to consider the Bill with that amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérin: That same suggestion was made at the United Nations, where it was turned down by a group of nations which still wanted to sign, and did sign unanimously that international convention. I will refer you to everything that was said at that time at the United Nations. It is my view that we should pass the Bill now, immediately, ratify the international convention that was unanimously adopted by the nations, in order to give a chance to the largest possible number of nations to participate.

[English]

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, I have a question for my hon. colleague. Is he aware that the torture that goes on in countries such as Chile—and I know this from having visited the country—is lawfully sanctioned? When people seek redress in the courts there is no legal remedy. Chile did not write a piece of legislation which says that it is okay to torture, but torture is lawfully sanctioned. I want to remind the Minister of that.

Why should we have such a provision in legislation in Canada? Surely we are against torture. The Parliamentary Secretary said that we have the protection of the Charter of Human Rights. The Charter of Human Rights also has a qualifying clause saying that whatever is reasonable in a democratic society is acceptable. Perhaps a judge would look at this law and say that since Parliament passed it this is reasonable in a democratic society.

The Minister asks whether we do not have confidence in our courts. The courts are there to interpret laws, not to make them. I ask the Minister to think seriously about this. Does he really want to have an exception in law to a ban on torture in this country?

Mr. Kaplan: When the Parliamentary Secretary indicated that the qualifier conformity with international law had been rejected it reminded me that I had mentioned earlier that I worry when the United Nations is unanimous about anything. The worry is that the measure on which it has become unanimous is so watered down by intentional ambiguities, vague language or exceptions, that it permits a measure of comfort to a number of states which I think Canadians would like to deny to those states. We know that the list of states which are entering this treaty and perhaps passing legislation include states in which torture occurs.

That which the Parliamentary Secretary has said has made me more convinced that this is important for us in our own country. I am not saying we should not have signed the treaty because I think we should have signed it. It is a step forward. As well, this legislation, without my amendment, is better than no legislation. It is good, progressive, liberal legislation which our Party supports, but it would be better and would add more to the war against torture if this amendment were made. I regret to say that I am more convinced now than I was before we started that the amendment is an improvement and that there is no reasonable excuse for not adding it. I urge him once again, before some of his colleagues, who I know from what I read in the media are not trained seals, to recognize the importance of this amendment and to support it.

The Chairman: It is my duty to interrupt the proceedings at this time and report progress.

Progress reported.

USE OF LEAD IN SEALING FOOD AND BEVERAGE CANS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider prohibiting the use of lead solder in sealing cans used for food and beverages.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is a straightforward and very direct proposal. As you indicated, it is a request to the Government to prohibit the use of lead as solder in the sealing of cans used for food and beverages.

The basis for that request is the conclusions of the Royal Commission on Lead, which reported in September last year. That study is rather comprehensive and technical but makes a number of interesting points.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[Translation]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy to the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this Honourable House in the Chamber of the Honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate Chamber.

HEALTH

USE OF LEAD IN SEALING FOOD AND BEVERAGE CANS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Caccia that, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider prohibiting the use of lead solder in sealing cans used for food and beverages.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): You will recall my earlier reference to the Royal Society's Commission in 1986 on the question of lead in the environment. Lead is a powerful toxin and scientists have concluded that it has adverse effects on several body functions, including the central nervous system and circulatory system. Lead is also believed to affect intelligence, particularly in children, as a result of studies carried out over the years by the Learning Disabilities Association of Canada.

The findings of the Royal Society last fall concluded that women, especially when pregnant, and young children are the most vulnerable groups. The commission recommended that the Government's public health and environmental policy should be to reduce blood lead to its lowest possible level. Our exposure to lead ought to be reduced. Food in cans with a lead soldered side seam can absorb lead. Studies which have been conducted have concluded that acidic foods or beverages such as tomatoes or fruit juices can have as much as ten times more lead than fresh fruit or vegetables. The commission recommended that efforts should be made to accelerate the decline in lead content in food, banning lead soldered seams on cans as quickly as possible.

As you will note, Mr. Speaker, if you go to a food market and buy food in cans, both imported cans of food and cans manufactured in Canada with soldered seams are not regulated. Let me be absolutely clear on this and quote from the excellent book written by Barbara Wallace and Kathy Cooper entitled The Citizen's Guide to Lead. If one wants to be sure when buying food in a can that it is safe, one would want to look for a can with no seams at all. If the can has no seams it is safe; it is leadfree. One can always detect if there is a seam even if there is paper wrapped around the can by scratching with a fingernail. If there is a thin blue or black line running along the seam, that food can is leadfree and therefore it is all right. However, if it does not show a blue line or a black line along the seam, then it has been soldered with lead and therefore it is not desirable or advisable to purchase that type of canned food.

Of course, I am not suggesting that all the sources of lead are from canned food. There are a number of occupations that put men and women in touch with lead, people who have to pay particular attention to the presence of lead. I will quickly mention only a few. They are: auto mechanics and automobile workers, cable makers, dental technicians, electroplaters, electrotypers, gasoline blenders, insecticide makers and insecticide users, jewellers, lead miners and lead smelter workers, linoleum makers, solderers, of course, varnish makers, wallpaper printers, and so on, just to mention a few.

It is important that we also remember that one of the largest single sources of environmental lead is the emissions from cars, cars that use leaded gasoline. Over the years the Government has moved in the direction of reducing the content of lead in gasoline, but we still have a certain distance to travel to the day when all the gasoline that will be used and made available both to light vehicles as well as to heavy ones will be free of lead.

At the present time we face a very disturbing situation with motorists who are misfueling their cars. I refer to owners of cars that should be running on unleaded gasoline who tend to buy gasoline which is leaded because it costs less, in spite of urgent signals that many of us have given to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) urging him to change the federal tax on gasoline. Nevertheless, there is an increasing gap in the price between the two gasolines.

Those motorists who are misfueling, namely, those buying gasoline that is leaded for cars that should be running on unleaded, are carrying out a practice that is illegal, as well as doing something which is unhealthy and unfair to the rest of society. We know that the Government has urged motorists to abandon the practice of misfueling gasoline. That campaign has been carried out through the use of advertisements. However, those advertisements will have only limited impact, although I hope they will have some impact, since so long as there is a price differential in gasoline we will be facing this type of problem on the part of motorists who will be tempted to misfuel.

We eat food and we breathe air that contains lead. We have food contaminated by lead fall-out from the atmosphere. It comes back to us by way of coal-fired power plants, by way of cars and trucks using leaded gasoline, as I mentioned before, by factories using heavy fuels and also by way of smelters. We can also have an intake of lead by way of canned food or drink that is canned where lead solder is used to seal the can. As I mentioned earlier, acidic food or acidic beverages, such as tomatoes and the like, or fruit juices, seem to indicate a greater incidence in the presence of lead in those foods. Therefore, the Royal Society's Commission on Lead in the Environment concluded that within the human body lead can lead to a number of difficulties which I have already mentioned.

Returning to my motion, I would, through you, Mr. Speaker, call on the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to take measures that will ban lead soldered seams on cans, which in itself would be a major step forward. Also, the same Minister through his offices must ensure that the importation of cans with lead soldered seams that contain food be brought to a stop.

Finally, it is encouraging to know that the domestic canning industry is gradually replacing cans with lead soldered seams, but that is not enough. The Minister of National Health and Welfare should accelerate this phase-out, particularly with respect to imported canned foods, for the reasons that I have mentioned and which are so well described in a technical paper in the report to which I have made mention.

In the end you and I will agree, Mr. Speaker, it is the consumer who makes the final decision when choosing what to purchase from the shelf in stores. It is for this reason that I am putting this motion in the hope that the message from the Royal Society will be picked up by the Canadian consumer who can, by refusing to purchase lead soldered canned foods, discourage the use of this type of technology which has proven to be unhealthy in terms of the merits and the advantages of human health in general.

Canned Food and Beverages

[Translation]

Mrs. Monique Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the toxic effects of lead have been known for quite some time. As early as two centuries before the beginning of our era the Greeks and the Romans were aware of the harmful effects of lead, but still they continued to expose themselves to them through foods and beverages, particularly wines.

Over the years, many outbreaks of lead poisoning were traced to lead contaminated foods and beverages.

The industrial revolution which had a worldwide impact around the middle of the 18th century led to wider use of lead and, early in the 19th century, workplace related lead poisoning had become a serious public health hazard.

During that period, the toxic effects of lead on the children of lead industry workers were noticed for the first time. In addition, cases of sterility, miscarriage, stillbirth and premature delivery were common, not only among women working in the lead industry but also among the wives of men working in that industry, not to mention the fact that infant mortality was very frequent among the children of these workers.

Gradually however, thanks to better occupational health standards in the industry, cases of congenital lead poisoning declined sharply.

Between 1930 and 1940 the United States reported many serious cases of lead poisoning among children. Some of these cases were thought to be brain tumours, whereas others were wrongly diagnosed as being acute abdominal attacks, which required unnecessary surgery.

The number of deaths due to lead poisoning was extremely high, but some health professionals mistakenly thought that the effects of lead poisoning tended to wear off, without serious consequences.

Two researchers, Byers and Lord, published an eloquent rebuttal of this erroneous concept in 1943, and their book has become a classic on the subject.

They observed that this view, although very widespread, did not take into consideration the effects of lead poisoning on the growth and development of the nervous system of children.

They followed the cases of twenty children who had been cured of lead poisoning and found that all except one did poorly in school.

Most of these children had various behavioural problems, including very short attention spans and impulsive behaviour patterns.

Their study was probably the first to infer that low-dose lead poisoning could lead to subtle behavioural changes and other neurological problems. However, there were no clear signs pointing to a deficiency in the central nervous system.

From the early fifties until the mid-sixties, public health workers alerted to the problem in many major cities in the United States learned to recognize cases of lead poisoning when it became clear that many children were suffering from this condition.

They found hundreds of cases. Between 1950 and 1960, for instance, 611 cases of lead poisoning and 48 deaths associated with this condition were recorded in Baltimore. Similar surveys were also carried out in New York, Philadelphia and Chicago.

Because of the interest shown in this problem, an increase in the number of cases diagnosed was invariably recorded, as well as a decrease in the seriousness of the affliction. A consistent picture emerged from the data collected by these cities during that period.

Lead poisoning in infants affected nearly exclusively children between the ages of one and six living in run-down housing in large unsanitary urban areas. Smaller children between the ages of one and three were more at risk than older children. The main sources of exposure in such housing were pealing lead-based paint and cracked lead-soaked plaster.

The affliction occurred throughout the year, but the symptons were most common during the summer months. In the absence of adequate building codes or a proper application of existing regulations, the dangers associated with lead-based paint were seldom corrected, which meant that lead poisoning continued to be widespread.

In the mid-sixties came a new social awareness with the discovery of lead poisoning, an avoidable affliction which had reached epidemic proportions in many unsanitary urban areas throughout the world. Moreover, thousands of children who showed no evident sign of sickness were found to have high lead concentrations in their blood. These findings brought health care professionals to recognize the importance of detecting not only an excessive absorption of lead in children to prevent symptomatic poisoning, but also the toxic effects of lead in youngsters.

While lead-based paint used in millions of homes remains the main source of concentrated lead to which children living in run-down housing are exposed, the frequency of an excessive absorption of lead by young children living outside these zones who could be described as rich resulted in a more detailed examination of the possible sources of this substance in the early seventies.

Other sources of exposure were in fact detected at the time: pottery covered by lead-based glazes, leaded gasoline and lead sealed food and soft drink cans.

The seventies also saw a substantial number of discoveries and new technologies. The world came to understand better the metabolism of lead in the human body and the influence of various nutritional factors on lead absorption and toxicity.

Among the major discoveries, I should mention the documentation of substantially higher rates of lead absorption and retention by the gastrointestinal system of children, as well as the fact that children are more sensitive to lead toxicity.

Studies carried out during the same period on laboratory animals also showed that long term exposure to weak concentrations of lead could result in behavioural deficiencies.

The United Nations Joint Committee on Food and Agriculture and the World Health Organization, which includes experts on food additives, reviewed the question of lead and its toxicity at its thirtieth meeting in Rome last June.

At a previous meeting held in 1972, this committee had set provisionally the tolerable daily dose of lead at 50 micrograms per kilogram of body weight. The admissible weekly intake, Mr. Speaker, is the maximum amount of lead that a person can ingest in a week without any sign of adverse effect. The committee had mentioned then that it did not apply to children. Due to the particular concern about children and infant health, the committee assembled in 1986 tried to assess the dangers associated with lead in those age groups.

The committee reviewed carefully all available data on that subject. Considering that a daily intake of 3 to 4 micrograms of lead per kilogram of body weight did not cause any increase in blood levels in children and infants, a provisional admissible weekly intake of 25 micrograms of lead per kilogram of body weight was established.

Exposure to lead comes from many sources and lead-soldered cans are only one of the possible sources of contamination.

The Department of National Health and Welfare has provided other federal departments and provincial organisations with particular information on health risks associated with exposure to lead and recommended to limit, as much as possible, exposure to that substance. To that end, federal and provincial levels of Government have passed measures to limit exposure to lead.

Limits have been set for lead in a variety of products such as paints, pesticides, solder for kettles, glazing material for ceramics, especially when used for food.

Regulations have also been passed regarding emissions by lead smelting operations. Moreover, the Department of National Health and Welfare is supporting all initiatives to reduce or eliminate lead in gasoline.

Over that period it has been further established that nutrition was the main source of direct lead exposure for the general population, that is, people who are not exposed at work.

It has also been confirmed that lead-soldered seams was an important source of lead contamination in canned food.

Based on those discoveries, Mr. Speaker, experts in the Health Protection Branch of the Department met with representatives of the canned food industry. Their discussions led to a co-operative, Government-industry program aimed at effective, orderly reduction of lead rates in food.

Since it has been established that babies and infants were more sensitive than adults to the toxic effects of lead, regulations have been passed to limit lead rates in canned milk products.

In this way, lead rates in those products could be reduced to concentrations near natural levels. Moreover, other baby foods are no longer sold in lead-sealed containers, and they now include negligible amounts of lead.

Finally, regulations have been made with the aim of limiting the permissible amount of lead in a whole range of foods, including fruit juices, other drinks and more recently, tomato products.

That co-operative effort is on-going and other regulations will be passed where needed to limit the admissible lead concentrations in food.

In an effort to identify any area that could cause problems in that area, the Health Protection Branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare is implementing an on-going monitoring program under which its Canadian and imported products experts look for signs of lead contamination.

What has been found is a constant reduction of lead rates in canned foods since the introduction of the program, to such an extent that the lead contamination from that source is now well below tolerable limits established by the Joint Committee of Food Additive Experts.

This is why, Mr. Speaker, I feel there is no need to forbid generally lead sealing of cans.

[English]

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to have an opportunity to address the resolution introduced by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). As well, it was a pleasure to listen to the very carefully prepared written notes provided by the bureaucracy to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary so that she could exercise her indirect expertise on the subject of the history of lead poisoning in humans.

Of course we know that lead poisoning is a well-known phenomenon. In fact, if the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary had chosen the correct writer for her speech, she would have found in documents of the Department of National Health and Welfare the record of the effects of lead poisoning even in Roman times. Upon the exhumation of corpses in Pompeii, the skeletons were revealed to contain immense quantities of lead, and therefrom arose the theory that perhaps the downfall of Rome is largely attributable to the wide occurrence of lead poisoning among the Romans. Indeed, it has been suggested that the peculiar behaviour of Nero when fiddling while Rome burned and other peculiarities of behaviour among Roman emperors were attributable to their being victims of lead poisoning. If one speculates on the behaviour of presidents, one might perhaps speculate that lead poisoning is not a dead issue insofar as its modern effect on the behaviour of national leaders is concerned.

I have listened with interest to the document read by the Parliamentary Secretary. We have had a nice discourse on lead poisoning, its history, its sources and so on. What we have before us today is a proposal to eliminate lead solder welds on cans. It may be argued that to a very large extent regulations have been introduced which limit the extent of lead poisoning. Lead poisoning is not only a serious form of pollution, but a dangerous form of pollution even when it is present in small quantities or low concentrations.

Let me review the effects of lead. The significant toxic effects are on the synthesis of hemoglobin, on renal function and on neurological development, manifesting itself in blood dysfunctions, in aminoaciduria, in glycosuria and neurological impairment. If, during their development, children are exposed to lead, neurological impairment is experienced which manifests itself in difficulty in understanding, in retardation to some degree and on their emotional development. All of this is well documented, and it leads to the conclusion that the effects of lead are so subtle that we should not tolerate any presence of lead in circumstances where it is unnecessary.

The premise of the resolution of the Hon. Member for Davenport is very simple. It is a premise that has been adopted by all of those concerned with environmental pollution. Where it is possible to eliminate sources of pollution, those sources should be eliminated.

One may argue that the regulations already introduced have provided a fair measure of safety. To some degree, that is true. With respect to acid foods where the quantity of lead is to some degree regulated, regulation is not enough. When canned tomatoes, pickles or even a can of milk that has soured are exposed to air, oxidation occurs and lead is spread into the contents. Unless we are prepared to have indicated on every can of food that once opened that can should not sit because it will become acid, then one should approach the problem another way. How many of us open a can of Campbell's Tomato Soup after reading the label carefully? Most of us just open it up, throw the contents in a pan, add milk or water and sugar and eat it, not paying very much attention to what it says thereon.

Mrs. Finestone: What does it say?

Mr. McCurdy: It is not as if the gentleman from Davenport is suggesting something revolutionary and difficult. There is abundant literature, not only on substitute containers for preserved foods but abundant literature on how to seal a can without using lead.

What we have here, with all due respect to my dear colleague, is not a revolutionary proposal but one that I am sure will come as a surprise to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, dependent as she is for her notes from the bureaucrats who will defend their past works. There are welding seals, plastic seals and cans without seals at all that can be substituted and so provide an extra margin of safety. Then we could add to the efforts, so far successful in some areas, in cutting down the amount of lead poisoning in the environment to those other measures that have been taken.

But it is the same in this example as in everything else with the Government. Canada is still far behind the United States in regulating the use of leaded gasoline. Somehow we cannot come to grips with changes, or even meet the standards which the Americans have already adopted. Now we have a simple proposal that would not be dismissed in any other context: where there is a source of pollution, eliminate the source and then you will not have to bother about the statistics or the scientific evidence that may be doubtful, because when in doubt, be safe. To be safe, the simplest answer is to take the simplest course—whether immediate or phased, eliminate lead from cans.

Mr. Gerald Comeau (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, might I just suggest to the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) that he might avail himself of the writer of the last speaker's very fine speech, a speech that I found to be superb, well presented, well researched. I would invite the Member from Windsor—Walkerville to see the bureaucrat and have the bureaucrat write his notes.

Mr. McCurdy: I did, but I wrote my own speech.

Mr. Comeau: The Member did not say which country it was, but he suggested there was a certain president somewhere who might be suffering from lead poisoning. Could he tell us who that president is and what is going to happen in the future? Will the president go the way he suggested? Will it result in the fall of the an empire? I would suggest the Member might read history and rewrite history as he wanted to suggest today.

The Health Protection Branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare, recognizing the potential health hazard to Canadian consumers from lead contamination of canned foods, initiated a co-operative program in 1975 with the food canning industry to reduce lead levels in canned foods. One of the options considered in 1975 was a complete ban on the use of the lead soldered can, as is now proposed in the motion before us. This option, however, was not considered viable and was rejected in 1975 in favour of an orderly and co-operative approach aimed at reducing lead contamination of canned foods. This approach involved regulatory initiatives by the Health Protection Branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare, together with improvements in lead soldered canned technology and gradual conversion to alternate technologies by the industry.

Why was the banning of the lead soldered can not considered a viable option? The lead soldered can has been the mainstay of the food canning industry since its inception. Not only was the lead soldered can of high physical integrity and durability, the technology for its production and use in the food industry was highly developed, both in Canada and world-wide. Canadian can manufacturers and food processors alike had extensive technical expertise on facilities for the production and use of this canning technique.

While alternative technologies were available, these all had a number of shortcomings which mitigated against the Canadian industry making a radical switch to these techniques in a short period of time. For example, the so-called two-piece can which is drawn from a single sheet of metal and does not require any soldered seams lacked the physical integrity to be produced in the many different sizes and styles required by the food industry.

In addition, to be cost effective, the production of this type of can requires that the production line by operated at least 16 hours per day and that a large volume of one size of can be produced. Because of the relatively small production capacities of the Canadian Food Industry, neither of these requirements could be readily met.

The welded seam can, on the other hand, presented other problems pertaining to its durability, functionality and production which required additional research before its utility in food packaging could be fully determined. Other alternatives such as cemented seams instead of soldered seams, pure tin solders and the like were all considered and found to be fraught with difficulties which prevented them from being immediate viable solutions.

Apart from the technical aspects of these alternate technologies, capital costs as well as operating costs for these new can manufacturing methods had to be considered. It was estimated that conversion to the two-piece can would bear a capital cost investment on the part of the industry of between $1.6 million and $6.4 million per production line with an increased operating cost of $5 to $6 per 1,000 cans. Similarly, the welded-seam can would require a capital investment of about $1 million per line with an increased operating cost of $2.50 to $3.50 per 1,000 cans. These costs had to be compared with the cost of line modification to the existing technology to reduce lead contamination which were of the order of $50,000 per line with an added operating cost of only 20 cents to 30 cents per 1,000 cans.

Conversion to these alternate technologies would not only involve tremendous capital and increased operating costs but could also in certain instances affect jobs. Some food processors in Canada operated their own lead-soldered can manufacturing facilities. Faced with the immediate capital outlay required when switching to different manufacturing methods, these companies might well have decided to discontinue their manufacturing operations and to purchase cans from alternate sources. This could well have resulted in a reduction in these companies' workforce requirements. All of these economic factors would undoubtedly have resulted in substantial increases in the cost of canned foods to Canadian consumers.

One other possible repercussion of a ban on the lead-soldered can had to be considered. As I indicated earlier, the lead-soldered can has been the mainstay of the food processing industry for many years and is used world-wide. Canada is a major importer of canned foods. For example, in 1985, more than $300 million worth of canned foods were imported into Canada. A ban on the use of the lead-soldered can by Canadian food processors without a concomitant ban on imported foods packaged in these containers would have resulted in a profound negative impact on the Canadian industry. On the other hand, to ban the importation of canned foods would have been construed as being a non-tariff barrier to trade, contrary to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade of which Canada is a signatory.

Bearing in mind the technical difficulties, the potential effects on international trade and the economic consequences of banning the lead-soldered can, it was considered in 1975 that the Canadian consumer could best be served through a program of regulatory initiatives designed to reduce lead levels in canned foods, together with a gradual conversion of the industry to other can manufacturing methods. One might ask if this has been an effective approach. The simple answer to this question is yes. One need only consider, for example, that as a result of this co-operative program between Government and industry, baby foods are now packaged in glass jars, not soldered cans. Consequently, lead levels in such products are in the order of naturally occurring background levels.

In addition, the regulatory initiatives taken by the Health Protection Branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare to limit lead levels in certain canned foods, together with improved lead-soldered can-manufacturing techniques, has resulted in significant decreases in lead levels in many canned foods. For example, average lead levels in canned fruit juices prior to the initiation of this program were in the order of .15 parts per million. Today the average lead level in such products is .08 parts per million. Similarly, average lead levels in canned fruits have been reduced from about .3 parts per million to .18 parts per million.

Furthermore, great strides have been made by the canning industry to convert to alternate technologies in an orderly and manageable fashion. In fact, as noted in the recent report to which the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) referred, completed by the Royal Society of Canada, entitled "Lead in the Canadian Environment: Science and Regulations", less than one-third of the 3.5 billion food cans used in Canada in 1985 had lead-soldered side seams. Furthermore, the report noted that by the end of 1986, it was then expected that lead-free cans would account for 95 per cent of Canadian production and use.

To sum up, a ban on the lead-soldered can was not an appropriate or necessary measure in 1975 and it is even less so today. The major steps that have been taken by the Canadian industry, in co-operation with the Department of National Health and Welfare, to convert to new technologies and to limit lead levels in canned foods have resulted in Canadian consumers no longer being exposed to excessive levels of this potentially hazardous metal from canned foods. As the Royal Society of Canada report concluded, food and beverages used to be severely contaminated from solder in cans, but this source has been largely eliminated.

The Hon. Member for Davenport and the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) wanted to get into a discussion of lead in gasoline. The Parliamentary Secretary and I would like to discuss this much further one day, and would like to compare what our Government has done on this subject with what the Liberal Government did. That is a challenge.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate and make a few comments on the motion introduced by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia).

Mr. Speaker, the toxic effects of lead have been indentified for hundred of years now, so much so that everybody is aware of the serious consequences of exposure to massive doses at work or as a result of accidents, for example. However, controversy is focused on the potential hazards of ongoing exposure to weak lead concentrations, especially among children. Many scientists in Canada and elsewhere in the world claim that certain intellectual and behavioural child deficiencies may result from continuous exposure to low lead levels. Such harmful effects are very difficult to pin-point, so it is nearly impossible to prove these theories. But we cannot ignore the fact that exposure to lead concentrations once thought to be harmless may indeed have neurological and behavioural implications.

Lead is a metal which abounds in nature. It is found in soil, air, water and food, usually in very limited quantities. However, as a result of human interventions and activities, this soil, this air, this water and this food may contain much more lead than would otherwise be found in nature.

It has been shown that environmental pollution from mines, smelters and refineries increases the lead content of soil, air, water and food. In addition, the manufacture and use of leaded products, particularly batteries and gas additives, are also sources of lead contamination.

After occupational exposure, the three main sources of exposure for adults are air, water and food.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but the hour allotted for Private Members' Business has expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

CANADA POST CORPORATION—FUTURE OF RURAL POST OFFICES

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure if you know where Aylesbury, Saskatchewan, is but I am sure that you and many others across Canada have heard about it during the past few months. Aylesbury is one of the 33 towns in Saskatchewan which since 1985 have had their post office closed.

I would like to give the House a bit of an idea of what Canada Post was like about 20 years ago. It was a Canadian institution ranked at about the same level and with about the same amount of respect as the RCMP or the Canadian flag. It was cost effective, had many dedicated workers and, believe it or not, delivered the mail on time. Under the previous Government all of that fell apart. Billions of dollars were spent on technology which displaced workers but did not work.

Canada Post went from an institution operating on a break-even basis to incurring an annual deficit of over $500 million. That in turn led to the start up of a lot of courier operations in competition. When the Post Office became a Crown corporation it really did not improve much. Making it a Crown corporation would supposedly remove the political interference that occurred when it was operated by a Minister of the Crown. It did not really work out that way.

People have to voice their concerns and vent their frustrations somewhere about something like this, so they appealed to the only people they knew, their elected Members of Parliament. In Aylesbury, Saskatchewan, people were justifiably and understandably upset when their post office was closed. One of the first things that would happen as a result was that Aylesbury would disappear off the map. Families who had been getting their mail in Aylesbury for three generations would no longer be able to do so. The people protested to Canada Post and to me. I took up their concerns. We finally got Canada Post to agree that these people would still be able to get their mail addressed to Aylesbury even though it would go to either one of two nearby towns. When we indicated that was not good enough, we were told the Post Office would provide green boxes for incoming and outgoing mail. Provision would be made for a stamp agency in town. This was only as a last resort and after the residents of Aylesbury had understandably kicked up quite a fuss.

These people understand the need for restraint and fiscal responsibility. We all understand that. Everyone makes that kind of decision in the operation of their business or household every day. We know we must live within our means. Yet look at the deficit of $123 million which Canada Post is going to try and eliminate by 1987-88. Compare that to the few thousand dollars lost at the Aylesbury Post Office. It is nothing in comparison. Rural residents are understandably upset.

Canada Post does not seem to realize that the post office is more than a place where you get your mail. It is a social gathering spot in small towns. Everyone goes there in the morning to pick up their mail and they meet their friends and visit with each other there. It is a very important part of rural Canada. Then look at the fact that Canada Post has a president and 14 vice-presidents paid, we are told, in the neighbourhood of $120,000 a year. People find it difficult to understand why we need 14 vice-presidents in a Crown corporation when we have only 10 provinces. People look at the absentee rate in the Post Office. Two years ago the big sorting plants had an average absentee rate of 25 days. Twenty-five days is five weeks out of a year. Although that has now dropped to 16 days a year, it is still too high.

Those are the concerns of the people of Aylesbury. The Mayor of Aylesbury, Mr. Hank Watkins, decided to get active to save his post office. He kept the fight up himself as long as he could and then joined up with Rural Dignity. On January 25, 1987, they had a meeting in Aylesbury which the President of Rural Dignity of Canada, Mr. Gilles Raymond of Quebec, attended. Over 200 people from Aylesbury and towns all over Saskatchewan came to the meeting to voice their concerns. They have brought their concerns to Ottawa by appearing before the standing committee. We now have the assurance of the Minister responsible for Canada Post (Mr. Andre) that Members of Parliament will be notified when post office closures are contemplated. We will then discuss that in the communities.

That is what the people want. They want meaningful discussion and to be able to present their concerns to Canada Post and be assured that Canada Post understands them. The people understand that small post offices which have only a very minimum number of boxes will have to be closed. On behalf of the people of Aylesbury that is the plea I want to make to the Minister responsible for Canada Post.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the new Minister responsible for Canada Post (Mr. Andre) said the other day in the House—you may recall, it was Wednesday, February 18—in the past weeks and months some Members of the Opposition have not been very objective in their statements and questions on the Canada Post Corporation. Mr. Speaker, in so doing, they have helped to cause considerable concern among Canadians in rural areas with respect to the future of postal services in those areas. Mr. Speaker, one Member even went so far as to ask whether Canada Post was going to drop a plan to close 1,700 rural post offices.

Mr. Speaker, Canada Post never intended to proceed with wholesale closing of rural post offices. Furthermore, when the President of the Canada Post Corporation, Mr. Don Lander, appeared before the Standing Committee on Government Operations on November 20, 1986, he referred to Canada Post's plan to have more, not fewer outlets in the future. This is what he said, Mr. Speaker, and I quote: "The net result of our representation plan will be that Canadians will be provided with more outlets in more convenient locations, and at more convenient hours, at less cost to the postal user."

Canada Post will introduce changes in the course of the next ten years and after, turning over the majority of its retail services to the private sector. Generally speaking, private sector outlets have lower operating costs because they are often located on premises where other, non-postal products are already being sold. Canada Post plans to upgrade the service enjoyed by Canadians by improving access to its products and services, putting its outlets in more convenient locations, extending business hours and relying more on the private sector.

The Corporation has now approximately 8,000 sales outlets, with twenty-five per cent of them privately operated as auxiliary post offices. The other sales outlets are operated by the Corporation itself under different guises and are staffed by Corporation employees. The current sales outlets were established over a long period of time and generally speaking, they have not progressed with population growth and business development.

Rural Canada is not the only one affected, Mr. Speaker. The rationalization and streamlining of postal services is also occurring in major centres. The Corporation's plans provide for an increase in the number of sales outlets where the public can buy stamps and other goods and services. Furthermore, there are plans to extend service hours to the public.

Moreover, Canadians in rural areas can be assured that no change will be made without public consultation. The Corporation will give a 90-day advance notice, thus ensuring sufficient time for the Corporation to explain its move and for the community to make its response known. You may rest assured, Mr. Speaker, that we will take due note of this response.

Rural service will improve. The purpose here is not so much to close down post offices as to open new avenues for providing service.

In short, Mr. Speaker, Canada Post Corporation projects for the next ten years should not be cause for alarm, doubts or concern about postal service in Canada. During that ten-year period or more, the Corporation will increase and not reduce the total number of sales outlets for its goods and services in urban and sub-urban communities as well as rural ones. Moreover, due to the fact that the hours of opening will be different and the sales outlets better located, the users will have better access to the Corporation's services.

Finally, Canada Post Corporation intends to consult residents of a community before making any change whatsoever and, to this end, it will give at least a 90-day advance notice to Members of Parliament and users of postal services when changes are being considered.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY—PROPOSED AMENDMENT OF PATENT ACT-COST OF DRUGS. (B) REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF STUDIES

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight to make a few remarks on the Government's proposed legislation to Canada's Patent Act as it applies to pharmaceutical drugs.

On several occasions I have asked the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) what those changes will mean to Canadian consumers if the legislation is indeed adopted by Parliament. I have also asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) the same question several times. To date I have not received a satisfactory answer from either Minister.

Canadian consumers do not know what the exact cost of these changes will mean to them. Provincial Governments, which in many instances provide free coverage for those over 65 years of age and for people on fixed incomes, do not know what the additional cost will be to them either. For a party that was elected on a promise to bring more honesty and openness to Government in its relations with Canadians and provincial Governments, it is sure going about it in a strange way.

The Government has also denied repeatedly that this proposal is not part and parcel of the free trade negotiations with the United States. Recent documents have shown that the Government has been less than forthright with Canadians on this matter as well.

You will be interested to know that I have a copy of a report from the office of the United States Trade Representative called the 1986 Report on Foreign Trade Barriers. In this report is a discussion of the Canadian Government's Bill to change the Patent Act regarding pharmaceutical drugs. Under the section of the report entitled "Compulsory Pharmaceutical Patents Licensing", there are three items. The first is a U.S. description of the Canadian legislation. It states:

> Section 41 of Canada's patent law says any company may request the Canadian Patent Commissioner to provide a compulsory licence for pharmaceutical patents. It also requires only a nominal 4 per cent royalty payment. Although a similar provision dates back to World War I, this section was enacted in 1969 after assertions that foreign pharmaceutical companies were making inordinately high profits in Canada.
> The measure was based on a subsequently repealed British patent law. It was designed to rectify perceived problems and foster greater pharmaceutical industry competition. The law is highly popular.

He means that the law is highly popular in Canada. It continues:

> On May 27, 1983, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs announced Canada's decision to change Section 41 and launch extensive discussions with provincial governments, the pharmaceutical industry and consumer groups to stimulate the Canadian pharmaceutical industry and maintain reasonably priced drugs.
> More than 150 applications for compulsory licences were filed following the May 1983 announcement of a possible change in the law. U.S. officials indicated any legislative change needs to take these applications into account.

That I find rather strange. It goes on to say:

> In June 1986 Canada announced the terms of legislation it will introduce in late fall 1986 to modify Canada's patent law.

The person goes on to say:

> This proposed bill is being reviewed to see whether it would provide acceptable patent protection standards.

Acceptable to whom? In this case the United States Government is saying it would have to find Canada's legislation acceptable to its interests. Under the heading "Estimated Impact" he estimates that these practices which have existed in Canada since 1969 cost U.S. pharmaceutical interests significant lost revenues each year. Under the heading "Actions Taken or To Be Taken", he goes on to say the United States continues to raise its concerns at senior government levels. It urges speedy submission of modifying legislation to address serious U.S. concerns about the inadequacy of Canadian patent protection in this area.

• (1815)

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs continually stands in this House and tells us that no officials from the United States Government have approached them to have any influence on Canada's patent laws. I find the statements made by this representative of the U.S. Government to be totally in contradiction and, indeed, in conflict with what the Minister has been saying in an effort to try to convince Members of the House, and the Canadian public, that this law is being changed in the Canadian interests. Clearly, the document to which I have just referred shows that the legislation is not being changed in Canadian interests. It is being changed simply because the President of the United States has demanded that Canada change it as a precondition to trade negotiations commencing and also to ensure the multinational pharmaceutical industry a higher degree of profit at the expense of Canadians.

I want to say, as I have said before, that Canadians are going to pay an arm and a leg as a result of this change in policy, whether through higher drug prices or through higher provincial taxes because these governments give senior citizens, for example, free drug coverage. One way or the other, Canadians are going to pay through the nose for this.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister replied to the question of the Hon. Member last October 6, he referred to the cost of some 3,000 drugs available on the Canadian market. None of the proposed amendments to the Patent Act should result in a price increase of these products. The price competition engendered by the generic sector will continue under the new policy since generic products now on the market will not be affected by the proposed changes. In addition, Mr. Speaker, the new compulsory licenses will continue to be granted to generic manufacturers as soon as the period of exclusivity for patented products comes to an end.

In addition, the proposed amendments to the Patent Act provide for establishing a Patented Medecine Prices Review Board which will be empowered to review the prices of all patented medecine. If it finds their prices excessive according to its standards, the Board will have the power to impose sanctions to the producers. The Board will then be able to set a reasonable price level. It will also be able to revoke the exclusivity period for the drug in question or any other drug sold by the same producer.

Mr. Speaker, by establishing evaluation criteria for the price of drugs now on the market, the Board will be empowered to consider the price of drugs in the same therapeutic category as that particular drug or similar drugs, the prices set in other countries, manufacturing and distribution costs, the rate of increase in the price of the drug compared with the consumer price index and any other factor which the Board will consider relevant.

In the case of newly marketed drugs, the Board will be empowered to set an entry price by referring to factors similar to those already mentioned. The Patent Act will require each manufacturer to provide the Board with information to make comparative analyses. Failure to do so will be treated exactly the same as the setting of excessive prices. Thus, the Board will be assured of obtaining all the information required to determine whether the price level of drugs is reasonable or not.

Finally, the Bill includes provisions which will allow for reviews of the legislation four years and ten years after its coming into force. Price trends for drugs and the level of industrial benefits will then be analyzed, and adjustments will be made to the original legislation if required.

SHIPBUILDING—CONSTRUCTION OF FISHING TRAWLERS—REQUEST FOR CANADA-FIRST POLICY

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to make a few comments about the state of the shipbuilding industry and, in particular, how it could be positively affected in Atlantic Canada. To preface my remarks I wish to express my gratitude to the Canadian Shipbuilding & Ship Repairing Association for providing me with documentation, facts and figures, which I hope will go a long way to presenting a positive case to the Minister responsible and the position that I am taking.

I also want to say that I have had an opportunity to talk with the Minister directly since my question to him of November 20, 1986. At that time I asked him to consider a built-in-Canada policy for the construction of fishing vessels over 100 feet in length. I am pleased that the Minister has responded from the point of view of being interested in the points that I have brought to his attention, as well as the points which the association has brought to his attention, and others.

At this time I wish to take a few moments to re-emphasize the points that have been made. Hopefully, the Minister will take this as a positive representation and act accordingly. I am very interested to hear what the Parliamentary Secretary has to say in response to my comments.

I do not think it is any secret that the ship repair industry and the shipbuilding industry as a whole in Canada have taken a substantial plummet in terms of employment opportunities and in terms of contributing to the economy of the nation over the past few years. By way of substantiation of these remarks I would like to point out that in December of 1986 employment by association members in the CSSRA reached its lowest level in one-half a century with the employment of only 5,500 people. Just a short six years ago, in 1982, almost three times that number were working. We also saw several shipyards close last year.

There is no question that we are in desperate need of new policies by the Government to encourage and to inject into the shipbuilding industry a new sense of responsibility and opportunity. I would like to suggest that there is one way we can address ourselves to that.

By way of background, I would like to say that in 1955 there was a decision taken by the Government of the day to exempt fishing vessels over 100 feet in length from the normal 25 per cent duty that had been imposed on foreign ship imports into the country. That move was generally based on the fact that at that time Canada had a 12-mile limit on fishing. In order to allow our fishermen to compete with foreign fishermen, it was decided that it would be in the best interests of the fishing industry to not impose that duty of 25 per cent. It became redundant in 1970 when Canada proclaimed its 200-mile limit on fishing.

Since that time there has been substantial interest expressed in this issue by various Premiers. I refer to Premiers Buchanan, Hatfield and Peckford. All three of these Premiers have come out in favour of removing the exemption, as have the Premiers of Prince Edward Island and Quebec.

I think it is important to point out that at the end of 1985 of the 221 vessels that were in service in the Atlantic fishery, on 194 of them we were able to procure an age profile. We can assume that 20 years is the average life of vessels equipped sufficiently to harvest quality catches. A substantial number of those vessels, at least 169 of them, according to that criterion should be replaced over the next 10 years.

However, taking into consideration the likelihood that new vessels will be more efficient and thus fewer of them will be required, and working with an average of 80 vessels to 100 vessels, we see that the potential for demand could be substantial if indeed the 25 per cent exemption were eliminated. I am talking in the vicinity of anywhere from $560 million over a 10-year period to in excess of $1.1 billion.

I want to impress upon the House and the nation that in terms of Atlantic Canada this could mean an average of 2,700 to 5,700 jobs in the period of 10 years, with the majority being in Atlantic Canada. It is very important to that part of the country.

Also, it would have a minimum impact upon the fishing industry. If all things were taken into consideration, it would probably mean that the fish processing costs would not be increased from a low of .89 per cent to a high of 2.83 per cent.

Our major competitor is the United States of America, and 80 per cent of our fish exports go to that nation. All U.S. fishing vessel repairs and conversions done abroad are subjected to a 50 per cent tariff. In view of those facts, it is obvious that we should adopt an open "buy Canadian" policy which would be a tremendous boon to Atlantic Canada and to the people of the nation as a whole.

I urge the Government to take immediate action to impose a policy which would bring Canadian shipbuilding back on to its feet in Atlantic Canada and to address itself to the very serious concerns of that region of the nation.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr.Speaker, I shall, if I may, respond to the constructive comments made by the Hon. Member for Fundy—Royal (Mr. Corbett) with respect to the tariff applicable to large fishing vessels.

The Government is well aware of the very serious problems facing the Canadian shipbuilding industry, and it wants to do everything it can to help the industry in its efforts to remain viable, considering the world-wide slowdown in activity in the shipbuilding sector and the fiercely competitive situation on international markets.

The Canadian Shipbuilding and Ship Repairing Association has made representations seeking implementation of further safeguards. Unfortunately, we are very restricted in the kind of action we can take on many of these proposals because of our international trade obligations.

One of the requests of the shipbuilders concerns imposing a duty of 25 per cent on large fishing vessels, namely those over 30.5 meters. Smaller fishing vessels are already subject to a duty of 25 per cent. Although the tariff for large fishing vessels has not been consolidated under GATT, I would like to point out that these vessels have been entering this country duty-free since 1955 and that, at this stage, it would be difficult to justify to the fishermen a re-imposition of the tariff, especially at a time when the fishing industry is starting to show signs of becoming viable once more.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) indicated on November 20 last year, this question was considered very carefully in preparation for the 1985 budget. At that time, as many Hon. Members will be aware, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) decided, considering the cost differential between Canadian and foreign vessels, that such a tariff would have put a heavy financial burden on the fishing industry, with no guarantee of benefits for the shipbuilding industry to compensate.

According to the Government, the situation has not evolved to the point that it could reverse the decision it made only two years ago. However, officials have been asked to re-examine the question to confirm that the situation has remained basically unchanged since the 1985 Budget, and this would lead us to believe that the financial burden of such a tariff for the fishing industry would be more than offset by the benefits which the Canadian shipbuilding industry would stand to gain.

Mr. Speaker, I should like in conclusion to emphasize once again that the Government is committed to considering all practical steps that could be taken to help the shipbuilding industry which is experiencing some difficulties, recognizing the importance of that industry for many communities as well as for the national economy.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SIZE OF ANNUAL DEFENCE BUDGETS

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, in a recent Defence Committee meeting the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Dick) denied that his Party had made a promise to increase the annual defence budget in Canada by 6 per cent in real terms. In his perplexed mood, the Minister said to me: "Darn it, I hope you will be able to find one that has 6 per cent in it and I would like to get a copy of it".

I hated to see the poor Minister in such a state of amnesia, forgetting what went on during the last election campaign, so I was more than happy to help him out of his fog by supplying him with three separate reports from the election campaign of 1984, each clearly pointing out the 6 per cent commitment made by the Tories. These reports can be found in the Toronto Star of July 31, 1984, the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of August 18, 1984, and the London Free Press of August 6, 1984.

These reports not only clearly state that it was PC defence policy to increase the defence budget by 6 per cent in real terms but also quote Tory MPs as stating that a PC Government would look last at its defence budget for funding of other programs. In true Tory form, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) lifted $154 million out of the defence budget in November, 1984. In his most recent Budget, he lifted another $200 million out of the Budget. Now, two out of three Budgets have allowed negative growth in the defence budget. This makes a mockery both of the Tories' 6 per cent commitment and of their commitment not to touch the defence budget.

Instead of an 18 per cent real increase in defence spending over the last three years, the Tories have given us less than 2.5 per cent over three years. That can be compared with the average annual increase of 5.4 per cent under the Liberal Government between 1980 and 1984. Clearly the Government shares this selective amnesia—

ELIGIBILITY OF EX-SERVICE PERSONNEL—SUGGESTED SPECIAL DISPENSATION

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, 15 years ago members of the Canadian Armed Forces and the RCMP became part of the Unemployment Insurance Plan. Over the years they contributed millions of dollars to help make the plan more financially sound. In January of 1986 our Government brought in measures to prevent wealthy retirees from ripping off the plan. Unfortunately, those changes pulled servicemen and servicewomen into the same category. In other words, those who had served our nation in the Armed Forces and the RCMP, many of whom were forced to retire at middle age but determined to find new work, were suddenly unable to benefit properly from the plan they had paid into. Realizing this, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) recently brought forward changes to correct this anomaly once another job had been found. However, upon retirement, when the need is greatest, those people are still being penalized.

The solution is simple. Our Government should acknowledge service to country and make special dispensation. The men and women of the RCMP and Canada's Armed Forces ask for nothing less and demand nothing more.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—ACTIVITIES OF CONTRA FORCES FUNDED BY UNITED STATES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, President Reagan's $100 million freedom fighters against Nicaragua have killed a mother after taking her baby, burned 25 houses, and blown up a 14-year old boy. These Contra terrorists continue as much as possible to avoid fighting the Sandinista Army or even attacking guarded power sites or bridges. They find it safer to assassinate unarmed farm workers, school teachers, health workers and children.

On the other side, the Sandinista Government has sought peace by releasing two American citizens caught in terrorist activity, delivering weapons or spying. Why does President Reagan continue funding this campaign of terror? The churches of Canada and the United States have urged him to stop. The labour movement has urged him to stop. A huge majority of the UN, including Canada, voted to tell him to stop. When President Reagan visits Canada next weekend, Canadians expect our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to tell him we are sick of the senseless crimes of the Contras. Cut off the dollars to the Contras and stop the war.

SHIPBUILDING

ACQUISITION OF SUBMARINES—MEASURES GOVERNMENT MUST TAKE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, our Government is about to overhaul our national defence system and will soon decide whether we should acquire submarines for military defence purposes. The authorities have yet to make a choice between conventional or nuclear propulsion submarines.

Should the Government opt for nuclear propulsion it will have to consider the advisability of such a decision entailing country-wide economic benefits for our shipbuilding industry. Mr. Speaker, our defence experts will have to take into account the skills of the Canadian shipbuilding industry labour force and their amazing adaptation ability should the green light be given to nuclear-powered submarines.

It is imperative that Canadian shipbuilders be soon given indications in that respect. The credibility of their experts does entitle them to this privilege.

WORLD THEATRE DAY

THEATRICAL ACTIVITIES—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT RECONSIDER ITS BUDGETARY APPROACH

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, today, on Friday, March 27, all Canadians working in the theatre will join their colleagues throughout the world in celebrating World Theatre Day.

For over 30 years, actors, technicians and playwrights have been marking this occasion.

This year, however, a pall has been cast on the festivities as a result of the cutbacks announced by the Canada Council in its 1987-88 budget for assistance to the theatrical arts in Canada.

Last year, available funding totalled $17,121,000. This year, nearly $1.5 million has been cut.

For the coming fiscal year, the Canada Council will have a little more money to spend on supporting cultural activities in Canada.

Unfortunately, the theatre sector will not benefit from this increase.

Mr. Speaker, with the thousands of actors and actresses, directors and playwrights in this country, I must deplore these cutbacks, and I want to ask the federal Government to reconsider its budget policy and be more open to the needs of the people in the theatre.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

CALL FOR HOLDING OF BOUNDARY PLEBISCITE

Mr. Thomas Suluk (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, as the last day of the last Constitutional Conference on Aboriginal Rights comes to a close another deadline is approaching in the Northwest Territories—the Ides of March. The N.W.T. Legislative Assembly passed a watered down resolution to put the question of a boundary agreement to plebiscite. This plebiscite is to be held on May 20 if the Dene and Inuit ratify their overlap agreement reached last May by March 31, this issue being a separate matter altogether. The Dene have since reneged on that overlap agreement, hence no plebiscite.

A great injustice has been committed against the residents of the Northwest Territories by denying them the right to decide their own future. I call upon the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight), through this House, to direct the Commissioner of the Northwest Territories to hold a plebiscite without any conditions.

TRANSPORTATION

DEREGULATION—NEED FOR TRUCKING SAFETY CODE

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, it will not be long before the Standing Committee on Transport is compelled to report the Bills which deregulate the transportation industry. During its hearings many groups, companies, and individual experts repeatedly warned the Government about the severe economic and safety ramifications of Bills C-18 and C-19. The Government, however, remains selective in its understanding of the issues.

Last night the former head of the regulatory agency in the United States urged Canada not to repeat the American mistake of not having a functioning and enforced national safety code for trucking in place before deregulating. The same point has been made over and over again by the Canadian Trucking Association, individual carriers, and labour, yet the Government seems deaf.

John Nance, transport pilot and deregulation expert from the United States, told the committee that if deregulation proceeds with the American example we should expect even more tragedies like the Arrow Air crash at Gander last year. Even being presented with Mr. Nance's book on air safety, Blind Trust, seems not to have affected the Government's own blind trust in so-called market forces to protect the innocent.

VOLUNTARY WORKERS

PATRICIA STARR—RECOGNITION OF COMMUNITY SERVICE

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, a truly outstanding star was honoured in the City of North York on March 24, 1987. Patricia Starr was presented with B'Nai Brith Canada's Scroll of Leadership for her years of unstinting community service. Husband Jerry, daughter Brooke, and four sons, David, Evan, Stuart and Randy, are so proud of this achievement. Her leadership roles include the Integrated Bathurst Prince Charles Building for seniors, disabled and disadvantaged families. Patti and her team of volunteers seized the idea, worked to arrange the supporting government financing, and made sure that construction was completed on time.

Mrs. Starr is president of the Charitable Foundation, past president of the National Council of Jewish Women (Toronto Section), an officer of the Canadian Jewish Congress, and former chairman of the Foundation Division of the Metropolitan United Way Campaign. She was also recently appointed to the board of the O'Keefe Centre.

Patricia Starr, I am sure, will continue to serve community needs in a caring, sensitive way and will continue to attract and lead many other concerned Canadians to give their time, talent, and energies to worthwhile causes.

ACID RAIN—UNITED STATES PRESIDENT'S PROPOSED ADDRESS TO PARLIAMENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, apparently it is being proposed that President Reagan address a special joint session of the Commons and Senate when he visits Ottawa on April 6. When the President last addressed this Parliament in 1981 he spoke of acid rain, stressing the need to "control the air and water pollution that respects no borders".

What will he say in 1987 about acid rain, that it is a serious matter which needs attention for the sake of maintaining good Canada-U.S. relations? Six years later we can say that Canadians have made progress on the Canadian side of the border. We are cleaning up following the federal-provincial agreement launched in the spring of 1984. However, we cannot say the same about the U.S. Government. It is not cleaning up its act with regard to acid rain.

Will the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) speak up this time, at the third summit, and ask President Reagan to launch an American program to cut acid rain which would be meaningful to Canada?

ENERGY

INCREASES IN GASOLINE PRICES

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I recognize the need for ongoing exploration for oil and, therefore, welcome the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentives Program. However, if oil companies are to accept public funds they must also be good corporate citizens, in both their upstream and downstream operations.

• (1115)

My constituents have been deeply concerned about the recent increase in gasoline prices far beyond the one cent per litre increase in tax, and they are equally concerned about the differential in prices between the Ottawa market and those markets outside Ottawa and in southern Ontario. No reasonable analysis on the cost side can justify the increase or the differential.

I therefore welcome the announcement by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) that the regional Bureau of Competition Policy will investigate this matter to the fullest. The national capital region has long been the recipient of unfair gas prices and this must stop.

AIR CANADA

PROPOSED PRIVATIZATION—TIME AND MOTION STUDY

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, first I want to thank my MP, the Member for Nepean—Carleton (Mr. Tupper), for that last statement.

Air Canada is now faced with deregulation and privatization. I understand that the airline has hired the Alexander Proudfoot Corporation, a time and motion study firm, to make an analysis of its workforce, machinery, expenditures and so on. This is particularly demoralizing for the workers because of Proudfoot's methods, which invade their privacy and usually precede massive lay-offs.

In view of the hints already made by the president and chief executive officer of the company and by the Government, we want to know if this is being done as a means of attracting a buyer for this Crown corporation. What is the Government spending on Proudfoot's untendered contract? What is the purpose behind this new study? We also want to know what emphasis is being put on safety with regard to this study. We want these answers now.

TOXIC POLLUTION OF GREAT LAKES—PUBLIC EDUCATION PROGRAM ADVOCATED

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, the respected Royal Society of Canada and the United States National Academy of Sciences have claimed that people living near the Great Lakes have more pollution in their food than anyone else in North America. It is said this is because the lakes are like a sink, with only 1 per cent of the water leaving the lakes in any one year, so that the toxins added to them will simply stay and stay.

This makes urgent the recommendation of the International Joint Commission, in its call for a major program of public education. Frequently we are unintentionally adding to the pollution of the lakes by the products we purchase and consume. Some of us may be part of the problem. We can become part of the solution, and a public education program will help to achieve that.

U.S.S.R.—TREATMENT OF DISSIDENTS

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, the Soviet's new policy of "glasnost", or openness, poses some puzzling contradictions.

While criticisms of Soviet life can now be read in Pravda, dissidents convicted of criticizing the Soviet Government remain behind prison walls or in special psychiatric hospitals reserved for political prisoners.

The promised release of 140 political prisoners, to be followed by 140 more, was welcome news. However, according to monitoring groups, some 60 dissidents, less than half the promised number, have actually been released. On returning home, they have been subject to harassment, refused residency permits, had their passports confiscated, or informed that they are on parole. Is this how former political prisoners will fit into Gorbachev's new open society?

As for Canada, is it not an embarrassment for us to be in such a hurry to applaud Moscow for promising conditions that we ourselves would not tolerate for one moment?

The Government of Canada must acknowledge the warning that these contradictions provide and not confuse Soviet promises with Soviet reality.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CRAB FISHERY—DELAY IN GRANTING LICENCES

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) is dragging his feet once again in granting licences to some 30 crab fishermen on Prince Edward Island. The crab fishery season opens in only two weeks but the fishermen do not know whether they will be getting those licences. They do not know whether they will be able to take part in that fishery this year.

Since the season opens within two weeks, this is the eleventh hour. The fishermen have their gear and equipment ready on the docks, but the Minister is still procrastinating about whether or not these fishermen will be granted those licences. I ask the Government and demand of the Minister that the announcement be made this weekend so the fishermen will know, once and for all, whether they will be able to partake in this fishery.

TRADE

CORN EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES—UNITED STATES SENATE'S PROPOSED INVESTIGATION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. At a time when the massive U.S. farm subsidies are driving thousands of Canadian farmers out of business, the United States Senate has had the gall and effrontery unanimously to pass a resolution undertaking a unilateral investigation into our own countervail action. Taking into account the incredible nature of that act, does the Government intend to send a note of protest to the U.S. administration pointing out this really breaks the fundamental obligations under the trade contract we have with the United States under international trade rules? Is that the kind of action the Government intends to take immediately to show our reaction to this serious intervention by the Senate?

• (1120)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, I think it would be useful for members of the U.S. Senate to learn more about the GATT. They will find that the action we took is fully compatible with GATT rules. If they want to carry forward that kind of investigation, we think that would be instructive to them.

REQUEST THAT ISSUE BE REFERRED TO GATT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, if the U.S. Government does not undertake, as the Government's own spokesperson suggested, that this matter be brought before GATT for examination, would the Canadian Government, under GATT rules, take this U.S. action for arbitration in front of a GATT panel, to examine its own illegality in terms of GATT rules?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Let me be clear, Mr. Speaker. Is the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry asking me to refer to the GATT a sense of the motion which was passed by the U.S. Congress?

CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the U.S. resolution is not only a resolution by the Congress, it authorizes a U.S. administration to undertake a unilateral investigation. It is clear that that is an act which really transgresses the kind of contractual arrangements we have under GATT rules. I am asking the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether in fact we are prepared to show our serious reaction against this matter and to take it in front of GATT ourselves, if the U.S. authorities, after the Minister's representations, are not inclined to do so.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, first, the Hon. Member's characterization of the U.S. action is wrong. Second, I do not propose to take a sense of the motion to GATT, a matter on which the United States has not acted. I think it would be very helpful for United States legislators on all levels not only to know more about GATT, but to bear in mind that in the rash of trade actions brought on both sides of the 49th parallel, they have taken many more than we have. The system which is in place now to resolve those disputes is woefully inadequate, whether from an American or Canadian perspective. That is why we are seeking a trade negotiation which will put a better system in place.

REFUGEES

REQUEST THAT SOME CHILEANS BE ADMITTED TO CANADA

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

The Quebec Government has concluded that at least ten of the Chileans being held back in Argentina are bona fide refugees.

Will the Minister act on the assessment made by the Quebec Minister of Immigration, recognize that the Chileans are refugees and allow them to enter the country as soon as possible?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, about two weeks ago I said in the House that if new information became available on the case of the Chileans in Argentina, we would be willing to assess it.

The Quebec Government is offering an assessment. Two weeks ago, the same Government told us there were no refugees among the people concerned.

We received some information not long ago, and we are now trying to assess these cases. I think we should be able to give our response soon.

EVALUATION PROCESS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister.

Considering the amazing contradiction between the Quebec Government's assessment and its initial assessment, will the Minister admit that the procedure for evaluating refugees abroad has some serious deficiencies?

Furthermore, will he agree to meet with Noël Saint-Pierre, a Montreal lawyer just back from Argentina, who would like to give him some important information he picked up there?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have no doubts at all about our evaluation procedures in connection with the refugee case. I think everything is working as it should. If the Government of Quebec has decided to change its assessment, it may be that in light of facts reported by Mrs. Herrera, especially from the Council on the Status of Refugees, we may do the same . . . We have always kept an open mind about that possibility.

Now I repeat, there are quite a few different assessments of this case. Some talk about six, others 16 and others 10. I think that in a case like that, the best thing a Minister can do is to look at the information people give him and make his decisions accordingly. And that is exactly what we are going to do.

CANADA-FRANCE DISCUSSIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. As the Minister knows, the Government of Canada just completed two days of discussions with the French about the temporary fishing agreement to which the two Governments had previously agreed. Is the Minister now in a position to give us a report on those discussions? Specifically, can he tell the House whether the Government of Canada has withdrawn its initial offer to give the French additional access to our northern cod?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it would be normal or productive for me to report on the conclusions of each set of an ongoing series of negotiations. I think, among other things, that would make it difficult for those negotiations to pursue fruitfully to a mutually agreed conclusion. As the Leader of the New Democratic Party knows, the Canadian delegation involved in these negotiations is broadly constituted, involving representatives of various Governments and interests concerned.

PRESENCE OF MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I can understand what the Secretary of State is saying about giving some detailed reports on ongoing discussions. However, what I do not understand is the following. If the Minister is now saying that he prefers not to share certain information at this stage with Parliament as a whole could he explain why the Government of Canada had among its delegation as observers two Members of Parliament who happen to be Conservative Members of Parliament who are not cabinet Ministers? Why is it that they have access to these ongoing discussions and that other Members of Parliament are denied that access, in particular Members of Parliament from Newfoundland? Do we have a two-class system of Members of Parliament as seen by the Government?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker.

SELECTION OF MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT TO ATTEND DISCUSSIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, that is very interesting. It is a briefer reply than one normally receives from the Minister. We have in the House of Commons today Members who are from Newfoundland who are not permitted to take part in these discussions. Can the Minister tell us why only Conservative back-benchers can sit in on these discussions? Why is the Government excluding other Members of Parliament who have as deep an interest in what is going on as his Party members?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party will know that by their nature these are controversial discussions. For that reason we have gone out of our way to broaden the participation in the negotiations and in the discussions. Naturally, we have assured that representatives of the fishing interests are there, both the fishermen and the industry, that the provinces are there, and that Members of Parliament who have shown an unusual interest in the question are there.

IMMIGRATION

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Two Ministers are claiming to be responsible for running the Department of Immigration. The Minister of State for Immigration has said: "I am the minister now and I have the jurisdiction and responsibility to make the decisions." In answer to a question in the House by the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis the Minister of Employment and Immigration admitted that he talked to his colleague, but he said that he was the Minister of Immigration. In light of the confused situation in the Department, which Minister was correct?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, had the Hon. Member been in the House he would probably be aware of what we said last November. I told the House last November that I would ask departmental officials for a complete report on the case in question and make the necessary decisions once their recommendations were available. It simply means that the Minister of Employment and Immigration has not made a decision because the matter has yet to be finalized.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION CONCERNING IMMIGRANT RESIDING IN MONTREAL

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I did not refer to a specific case, but I have another question for the Minister and it will be interesting to see which one of the two will rise to answer. My question is directed to the Minister who will make the decision in the case of the immigrant who lives in Montreal, has a rather impressive criminal record, and wants to remain in Canada. I should like to ask him how he can allow this man to remain here, considering this Government's attitude with respect to refugees, to people who have just been married, to Chileans, and to other cases which are just as difficult and deserve every consideration.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): First, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member was in Cabinet long enough to know that only the Minister of Employment and Immigration has the authority to make a recommendation to the Governor in Council concerning the case he is referring to.

Second, for two years now the Conservative Government has been making decisions concerning immigration, something which you never did have the courage to do. You invariably deferred policies and cases. We have made decisions. By saying what you have just said you are already assuming that people are criminals.

I will make my decisions whenever the information is complete, and this should not take very long since I expect to have the final report very soon. But again I repeat what I said earlier: the Minister of Employment and Immigration is legally empowered to make a recommendation to the Governor in Council, and he alone can do that.

TRADE

CORN EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I must start by saying that in my constituency, as is the case across southern Ontario, corn farmers have been badly hurt, as documented by the report of the Canadian Import Tribunal. It indicates that Canadian corn prices were pushed down from $3.67 in July, 1985, to $2.39 in October, 1986. Since the United States Senate has taken extraordinary action, and since we have just learned that the United States is appealing the case in the Canadian courts, will the Minister assure the House that there will not be a backdown in this case? Will he assure us that we will not see a surrender, as we saw in the case of softwood lumber, and that we will protect these hard hit farmers as we should?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there are certain elemental responsibilities attached to Members of the House. Among those responsibilities is not to become a deliberate purveyor of false fear. That is what the Hon. Member is doing. He knows that there has been an action taken by Canadians in accordance with Canadian law and in accordance with GATT practice. It has had a result in the case of the corn countervail, and Canada intends to stand by that result. There is no doubt about that. He should accept his responsibility as a Member of Parliament not to sow false doubts.

Mr. Langdon: False doubts are so easy to see when one looks across the aisle at a Government which has given in so easily on cases like the softwood lumber one.

USE OF CANADIAN QUASI-JUDICIAL PROCESS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Government about a further step on this major issue. Will the Minister officially remind the United States that we in Canada are using the same quasi-judicial process of which the United States boasted? We are following GATT rules which the United States has used against us more than we have used against it. This includes cases like agricultural products such as hogs, which are presently being hit by ITC rulings that put tariffs on them.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, not only have I made that case frequently in the United States directly to cabinet secretaries and public audiences, I just made it here in the House of Commons. The Hon. Member would be well served if he would pay attention to proceedings rather than reading reviews in Saturday Night.

AFFIDAVIT OF CHAIRMAN OF U.S. GENERIC PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY ASSOCIATION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Yesterday, in answer to a question by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition regarding the contents of the affidavit of Mr. William Haddad, Chairman of the Generic Pharmaceutical Industry Association of the United States, the Minister said that it "is false". Will the Minister explain to the House what investigations he undertook to arrive at the conclusion that the affidavit, in its entirety, was false? Would he explain that to the House?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has his days wrong. He meant to quote an exchange in the House between myself and the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra, who I believe is his Leader, two days ago, not yesterday. The Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra asked me a question on whether or not the Government of Canada had, in his words, yielded to certain alleged pressures, and the answer to that is "no".

Mr. Dingwall: I would have hoped that the Secretary of State for External Affairs would have answered the question.

REQUEST THAT CANADIAN AMBASSADOR APPEAR BEFORE COMMITTEE

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. I now have in my possession a second affidavit, signed by a Canadian citizen, Mr. Jack Kay, and duly notarized, which substantiates the veracity of the affidavit of Mr. William Haddad. They both attended the same meeting with the Canadian Ambassador in Washington on September 10, 1986. In view of the unqualified evidence before the House, would the Minister not do the honourable thing, in the interests of the elderly, the sick, and the poor, and recall the Canadian Ambassador in Washington to Ottawa to appear before the Standing Committee in order to defend a claim of the Government which is obviously indefensible?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Party appears to have discovered affidavits.

Mr. Dingwall: Something you flunked in law school; I would not mention that.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I trust that Hansard will pick up what the Hon. Member purports not to want to have on the public record. There is a long-standing tradition in respect of ambassadors and their appearance with regard to committees. The Ambassador has indicated that his recollection of the conversations to which Mr. Haddad's affidavit apply is different from that of Mr. Haddad. I accept the word of the Ambassador. I convey it to the House of Commons. If there is to be further questioning of it, it can occur, as in the normal course, in the House of Commons.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE DISCUSSIONS—ATTENDANCE OF MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Moments ago, in response to a question from my Leader, he indicated that the negotiations with the French included two members on the government side whom he described as having a particular interest in the negotiations. One wonders why the Secretary of State excluded a number of Members in the House who, all will know, have a manifest, clear interest. Is it that the Government has adopted a policy in these negotiations or in its activities creating two classes of Members of Parliament?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, essentially that is a repetition of the question asked by his Leader, and my answer has not changed.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the question should be asked more directly. Is it that interest in these negotiations is manifested exclusively by being in line with the Government's policy in this regard?

• (1140)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Of course not, Mr. Speaker. Obviously the Government is anxious that the kind of situation will not reoccur that is designed to raise the kinds of illegitimate and dangerous fears that were raised the other day by one of the Hon. Member's comments when he came as close as I can recall someone in this House to deliberately excite anti-French feelings in Canada.

ANNOUNCED CLOSURE OF MARINE ECOLOGY LABORATORY IN DARTMOUTH, N.S.

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. My question concerns the Government's decision to close the Marine Ecology Lab at the Bedford Institute of Oceanography in Dartmouth, Nova Scotia. I know that scientists are to be shifted around in Atlantic Canada. Why would the Government sacrifice a facility which has earned over the past 20 years an international reputation for excellence in marine research?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, perhaps I might take that question as notice, look into it and get back to the Hon. Member as soon as possible.

INSTRUCTIONS TO EMPLOYEES

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question deals with a gag order which I have here in my hand. This gag order was imposed upon a group of scientists who have criticized the closure. Rule No. 4 of the order says that "DFO employees should not speculate on future policies, programs, activities or direction of DFO." Does the Deputy Prime Minister think that this is an appropriate way to treat internationally acclaimed scientists?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is the Government of the day that sets policy and the Hon. Member knows that. I do not have a copy of the document to which the Hon. Member refers. Perhaps he might want to forward one to me. Certainly in the process of looking into this matter before I get back to the Hon. Member, I will take that into consideration without in any way agreeing with the allegations that have been put forth.

REQUEST GOVERNMENT RECONSIDER DECISION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is on the same topic but I will direct it to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. The Minister is probably aware that a number of renowned scientists from around the world have come out against the decision of the Government which will close the marine ecology laboratory at the Bedford Institute. In light of international pressure to maintain that unit, will the Government now reconsider that very stupid decision?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the Government spends $4.2 billion a year on research, development and science-related activities. It is the intention of the Government to spend much smarter in the future. If there has been a closure and a phasing out of any of the facilities such as the one to which the Hon. Member referred, obviously the work can be done more effectively, efficiently and productively in another centre.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that there is no other work being done in these fields in Canada. The Minister knows that some of these scientists are leaving the province and some of them are leaving the country. Why has the Government made a decision which is costing us first-class research in an area which is so important to Canada?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I know no such thing. As the Hon. Member knows, we now have a national policy which has been signed unanimously by all of the provinces. The other day I announced a national strategy on science and technology for the first time in Canadian history. These policies and strategies are intended to build on our Canadian strengths, wherever they are, and to overcome some of our weaknesses. Yes, certain adjustments will from time to time be necessary but they will be in the Canadian interest.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

COMPLIANCE WITH RENT CONTROL REGULATIONS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Will the Minister confirm that there has been an historic breakthrough in that, although Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation has no legal requirement to comply with rent control regulations in the Province of Ontario, it has in fact agreed to do so for the Main Square apartment complex in Toronto? Will he also advise the House if CMHC is prepared to follow the same course in all similar cases in the future?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is well informed. I can say that there has been a liberalization, if I may use the word, of attitudes in the rent control legislation of Ontario. This permits CMHC to conform to the spirit of the legislation and we intend to do that. The assumption of the Hon. Member's question is quite correct.

SALE OF UNITED STATES CRUDE OIL TO CANADA

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. A Congressional committee has just recently approved proposed legislation for restricting the sale of crude oil and refined petroleum products to Canada. Just recently when Canada required export permits for the sale of those same products into the United States, there were numerous protests from the United States. The Government looked after the protests from the United States because export permits are no longer required. What will the Government do to look after Canadian consumers and independent gasoline retailers who require this allocation of American crude oil products as security against even higher prices from Canada's integrated oil companies?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we raised that question with American officials. I would have to check my records to be able to give a detailed reply to the Hon. Member as to the response but I am prepared to do that on another day either in the House or privately.

GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, Canadian subsidiaries of multinational oil companies have been talking to their parent companies and to lobbyists in the United States in order to remove this source of competition so they will not have to worry about competition from the United States. The situation of competition in gasoline prices in Canada is a very serious one. Although the Minister has sent a letter, and I would welcome a chance to look at that letter, I would ask the Minister and the Government to send a firm complaint registering in the strongest possible way objection to the action by this Congressional committee, particularly in light of Canada's action against the request of the United States regarding export permits. Will the Government take further action to object to this, or will it stand idly by and let this happen?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I made it clear that we do not idly stand by. I am pleased to receive the representation of the Hon. Member. I have indicated to him that I will try to get back to him with more information, and I shall.

Oral Questions

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PENSIONS—RESPONSE TO COMMITTEE REPORT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It is a question of which I am sure he is aware and no doubt it has been a topic of cabinet discussions. The CNR has finally responded to the report of the Standing Committee on Transport on CN pensions and is pleading poverty. It has indicated that the modest improvements we have recommended cost too much money. Aging railway pensioners whose benefits range from inadequate to ridiculous cannot wait forever. While the Government debates this responsibility with CN, will the Minister of Finance see to it that moneys will be made available now so that benefits to pensioners may be increased and so that the pensioners, some of whom are not able to wait any longer, will not have to wait any longer?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has raised a topic that has been the subject of some discussion in cabinet. It has not yet reached my desk at this point in time but I will certainly take the Hon. Member's interest as a signal that I should be looking forward to receiving some recommendation.

SURVIVOR BENEFITS FOR WIDOWS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, this is not a new matter, as the Deputy Prime Minister can tell the Minister of Finance in spades. Ultimately the responsibility lies with the Minister of Finance. Will the Minister take immediate action by recommending to his colleagues that survivor benefits for widows of railway pensioners be increased from 50 per cent to 60 per cent, and that other modest improvements to the railway pension plan be met? These improvements will not cost that much money to the Government when amortized over a period of 15 years. Will he proceed to act on that basis?

• (1150)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the information the Hon. Member has given me. As I said, I will discuss the matter with my colleagues and take their recommendations.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—CANADA-UNITED STATES SUMMIT MEETING

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister, I will address my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Yesterday U.S. Senator Leahy said the Reagan administration has left the Prime Minister in the lurch by refusing to take steps to reduce chemical emissions which fall as acid rain in Canada. Earlier this week our Minister of the Environment told a conference on wildlife in Quebec City: "I do not expect the President and Prime Minister to sign some binding accord".

Can the Minister tell this House and the rest of Canada what the Prime Minister expects to accomplish at the third summit?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there was a time before this Prime Minister and this system of summits when the position of the Government of Canada on acid rain was to walk away from the negotiating table. The Hon. Member knows that position very well because he was the one who gave up and walked away. We did not give up. We did not walk away. We are meeting with the Americans. We have not made as much progress as we wish, but we have made considerably more progress than had been made before.

Mr. Caccia: The Minister is rewriting history and inventing things. We never walked away and the Minister knows better. It is a pretty sad state of affairs when, in reply to a question, the Hon. Minister has to go back several years in order to justify the lack of effectiveness of his own Government after three years in office.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

STATEMENT MADE BY HEAD OF U.S. ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, how can the Minister express even a notion of progress when the head of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, Lee Thomas, is reported as talking about scientific uncertainty on the cause and effect of acid rain at this stage of the process?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing new in Americans speaking about uncertainty on the question. What is new is that we have a very significant commitment by the President of the United States to invest billions of dollars in this issue. We have an agreement with the U.S. to set up a committee to monitor and give guidance in the allocation of that money. The committee will include Canadians so that we can make sure there is an impact upon transboundary emissions. Under the aegis of the U.S. Vice-President we have a major review of state and federal regulatory practices which will affect acid rain-causing emissions. None of that occurred before. All of that occurs now because of the actions of this Government.

It is not yet enough but it is progress, and we intend to continue to make progress against the destruction being wrought upon our environment by acid rain originating in the U.S.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REFUGEES

CHILEANS STRANDED IN BUENOS AIRES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. He has said several times that he will reconsider the refugee claims of the 80-odd Chileans stranded in Buenos Aires if new information comes to light. Therefore, in view of the Quebec Government's plea to reopen 10 cases based on what they consider new information, I ask the Minister if he will request the UN High Commissioner for Refugees for advice on these 10 and on all the stranded Chilean refugee claimants in Buenos Aires?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we have already requested advice about these cases from the High Commissioner, Miss Herrera, in Argentina. We have received the advice and we are dealing with that matter and we will take a decision as soon as possible.

CONFLICTING PRESS REPORTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for his positive answer. In view of conflicting press reports, both about what Miss Herrera has said and other sources, would the Minister seek the advice of the Montreal lawyer, Noel Saint Pierre, who recently interviewed these claimants in Buenos Aires?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I heard about the request of Mr. Saint Pierre to meet with me. I do not know if I will have time to meet this gentleman but I believe we are really close to a final decision on the Chileans in Montreal. My friend does understand that we receive two or three different opinions about that case every day. We heard about 36, we heard about 16, we heard about 10. We are trying to deal with all the components and, once again, I think we will be able to give a decision pretty soon.

ROAD SAFETY

NATIONAL SAFETY CODE FOR TRUCKING

Mr. Terry Clifford (London—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, the killer truck scenario reported in the U.S. media last weekend cannot be allowed to happen on Canadian highways. The actions taken by the Standing Committee on Transport and Members of this House in this regard have been very important in promoting safety not only among the decision-makers but among Canadians at large. Regulatory reform is one step in this process. A National Safety Code for trucking is paramount. In the absence of the Minister of Transport, can his Parliamentary Secretary confirm that federal and provincial Ministers have agreed to adopt this code effective January 1, 1988, to coincide with the National Transportation Act and the Motor Vehicle Act which are to be put in place at the same time?

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the interest in auto safety on the part of the Hon. Member for London—Middlesex is well known. I can tell the House, Sir, that all provincial highway Ministers and the federal Minister agreed yesterday to a National Safety Code.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kilgour: It will be implemented on January 1, 1988. It will include such things as requiring a safety test for the granting of a licence to truckers, driver training and qualifications, vehicle conditions and maintenance. This measure speaks to the matters raised by the Hon. Member and it will be an important addition to road safety for all those who use the highways in Canada.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INTERCEPTION OF SOVIET BOMBER AIRCRAFT OVER NORTH ATLANTIC

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, yesterday was a typical day in the ongoing game of who can catch the Bears, that is the Russian bombers known as Bears which, with some frequency and regularity, test our air defence system in the North Atlantic. Is the Associate Minister of National Defence aware that we, under his Government, have to rely on U.S. interceptor jets scrambled from U.S. Air Force bases to intercept Soviet bombers that test our defence lines in the North Atlantic?

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member poses a very good question but unfortunately he does not have all the information. Two Canadian CF-18s scrambled from Gander to intercept Bear aircraft coming in from the north. Those Bear aircraft turned around and went back to the Soviet Union. While our aircraft were so engaged another two Soviet Bear aircraft came up from Cuba along the eastern seaboard and were picked up on radar by an AWACS aircraft. NORAD in North Bay asked for the closest aircraft, which happened to be those in Maine, to scramble and identify those Bear aircraft.

SITING OF INTERCEPTOR JETS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, there have been three incidents of interceptions of Soviet Bears in Canadian airspace this year. Two of the three interceptions were made by American interceptor jets. Since these Bear aircraft normally come down from Greenland and Iceland and are intercepted off the Labrador coast, and since the Government announced new bases for advanced staging of interceptor jets, why did it not put those jets where the action takes place, in Newfoundland and Labrador, instead of moving them further away? Does he not realize that the Russian bears are having a picnic at our expense?

• (1200)

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member is unaware of the vast expanse which we have in Canada. They were placed in Bagotville because it is more central to the entire northern region rather than only Newfoundland. We usually scramble our aircraft from Bagotville to Gander, the take-off point. The interceptions are usually made off Newfoundland rather than being made by the Americans.

Perhaps the Hon. Member is unaware that we happen to have an agreement which we believe is working extremely well. It is called NORAD. We and the United States work together.

STATUS OF WOMEN

HARASSMENT OF WOMAN FIREFIGHTER

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the status of women. The Minister will recall that two investigations into the case of Bobbi Stadnyk, Canada's only woman fire-fighter, concluded that she had suffered intolerable sexual harassment and discrimination on the job and was then fired without cause. It is disgraceful that almost a year later the Government has taken no action. Will the Minister insist that the Government provide compensation, as was recommended in these reports, reinstatement, and damages for the torture this woman went through as a public servant?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, the Government has been very concerned about harassment on the job. I have discussed it with my colleagues with a view to developing further policies in this regard. I understand the nature of this case and will continue to try to find a solution.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, this is not good enough. This is the Minister who is supposed to be an advocate for women. This public servant was terribly abused when she worked for the Government of Canada.

REQUEST FOR PAYMENT OF COMPENSATION

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister going to take this woman's case up actively now? Is she going to ensure that she gets the compensation to which both investigations said she was entitled? One investigation was initiated by the then Minister of Transport, the present Deputy Prime Minister.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, I have already answered the question. I said this is something about which the Government is concerned and that we have discussed it with a view to developing a policy on it.

Ms. Mitchell: You were concerned a year ago. Let's have some action.

Mrs. McDougall: There is no stronger advocate for women who find themselves in this position than myself.

Mr. Heap: What are you going to do?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOUTH AFRICA—ISSUANCE OF TRAVEL VISAS TO ELDERLY AND THE INFIRM

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Several of my constituents in Willowdale, among them Mrs. Beverley Suttner, who has a ninety-year-old grandmother in South Africa, have approached me and asked if the Canadian Government could, for humanitarian and compassionate reasons, allow only the handicapped, the elderly, and the infirm to apply for a visa in either South Africa or Canada when they wish to visit relatives in Canada. They presently have to travel and remain several days outside South Africa. What does the South African Government have to do in order to have the ban at least partially lifted for the elderly and the handicapped?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Member has asked two questions. With regard to what the South African Government must do, it must end the system of apartheid. The Government of Canada has announced a practice with regard to visas which I do not intend to vary. However, there are exceptional circumstances of people who are handicapped, ill, or elderly. In those cases we try to facilitate applications through posts which are handling visas with respect to South Africa.

LAPRADE FUND—INQUIRY WHETHER INTERESTED PARTIES WERE INFORMED OF GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the President of the Treasury Board, I should like to ask a question pertaining to the Laprade Fund. The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion did admit that $40 million would be drawn from the Laprade and Gaspésie-Bas-

Saint-Laurent Funds to promote the establishment of an aerospace industry in these regions. Can the Minister assure us that, before last March 19, local economic agents, trade commissioners and others knew that the Government intended to explore this new development avenue for the Mauricie-Bois-Francs and Gaspésie-Bas-Saint-Laurent region?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, I take notice of the question and will convey the information to the Hon. Member at the earliest opportunity.

DISTRIBUTION OF FUNDS

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the Minister might also enquire about this. Since $52.3 million will be left in the Laprade Fund after the withdrawal for aerospace research, how will the funds be distributed in the region to honour the Minister's commitment in the media that the money will be fairly and equitably shared by each of the counties involved in the Mauricie-Bois-Francs region?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I read in Hansard that the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice said something about standing guard over the Laprade Fund. He should have done just that when the Liberals were in office, he might have made some savings and there would be more money left. He can rest assured that the funds will be expended to benefit the region involved. That is what is going to happen.

TRANSPORTATION

DEREGULATION—COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport. The committee is holding hearings across Canada to consider major changes to the National Transportation Act. Many residents of Metro Toronto fear that safety regulations will be compromised through deregulation.

Would the Chairman please comment on this issue and explain why Metropolitan Toronto, with over 2.5 million people, and southwestern Ontario were not chosen as sites for hearings on this vital issue?

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley—Hants): Mr. Speaker, the member has asked two very serious questions. With regard to safety, we heard in the House earlier today what has happened on that issue and I will not get into it because it is very much before the committee. The committee will be speaking to that when it reports on Bills C-18 and C-19 to amend the National Transportation Act.

When the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister, the then Minister of Transport, introduced this Bill he said that safety would never be compromised. Clause 8 of Bill C-19 says that there will be an interprovincial and international safety code. More work has been done on the safety code which brought together the 10 Ministers and resulted in an agreement being arrived at yesterday. We all know that that takes a lot of time, and both the present Minister of Transport and the past one deserve credit.

The question relating to Toronto is more in the domain of the committee and myself as chairman. The committee decided to go to the capital city or its equivalent in each province to hold hearings on the Bill. We have already travelled across the country on Freedom to Move. We will be completing our last eastern trek next week. In the process of studying Freedom to Move and the Bills we have crossed the country twice.

When the last changes were made to the Transportation Act 20 years ago there was no travel whatsoever. We have already heard over 100 witnesses. Everyone from Toronto was able to come here and we have heard all the points of view.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Parliamentary reform lives.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POINT OF ORDER

ALLEGED IMPUTATION OF MOTIVES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, in the tremendous enthusiasm which the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) seems to draw from Question Period from time to time, he stated today, if I caught his words correctly, that the question which I posed to him indicated that I was deliberately purveying false fears. Is this not, Mr. Speaker, casting aspersions on the motives of Members of Parliament? In addition, is that parliamentary language to use in the House of Commons?

• (1210)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if the language is unparliamentary I regret it and withdraw it, just as I would regret the practice.

Mr. Benjamin: The withdrawal is supposed to be unequivocal.

Mr. Speaker: I think that probably disposes of the matter, unless the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) has a further representation to make.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this is a serious matter. We were talking about a very serious issue and the question I posed was one of great importance to my constituents and many people across the country. To suggest that purveying false fear is the motive that lies behind that is an important and serious criticism. It was certainly not part of my attempt to get information from the Minister—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) has raised a matter which has bothered him. The Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) has risen and unequivocally withdrawn—

Mr. Benjamin: No he did not.

Mr. Keeper: It was very equivocal.

Mr. de Corneille: He should make a withdrawal, period.

Mr. Speaker: I am prepared to put it to the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs that if there is anything more he can do to make that withdrawal unequivocal, I would ask him to do so and the matter could perhaps be ended.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I take the point that has been raised by the Hon. Member. I think it is one of the difficulties of the House, that the practices with regard to parliamentary language do make it difficult to describe in the House actions which occur from time to time. However, those are the rules and, in conformity with those rules—with which I try to stay in conformity—I will make an absolute, categorical withdrawal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Chair thanks the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs. I hope that will satisfy the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor. I might comment that sometimes questions are posed in an argumentative way and imply things of which the Minister would not like to be accused. Similarly, the same thing happens occasionally when a Minister is replying to an Hon. Member who has sought the floor to ask a question. I ask that all Hon. Members continue to be as careful and as co-operative as they have been for this long time now.

Again, I thank Hon. Members for the intervention and thank the Right Hon. gentleman for his generosity and adherence to the spirit of this place.

EXTRADITION

TABLING OF TREATY WITH INDIA

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 67(2), I rise to table in both official languages the extradition treaty with India which came into force on February 10, 1987.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to table several other international agreements that have already come into effect.

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to 12 petitions, No. 332-1015 and Nos. 332-1094 to 332-1104, inclusive.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis), I have the honour and duty to present two sets of petitions from residents of Stalwart, Liberty and Imperial, Saskatchewan, and from Weyburn and Oungre, Saskatchewan, in which your petitioners avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right to show that the Government's proposals to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers, will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require prescription drugs on an ongoing basis, and will result in higher cost to provincial government drug plans. Therefore these petitioners humbly pray that the House will have the Government withdraw that legislation amending the Patent Act.

TRANSPORT—ECONOMIC REGULATORY REFORM

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have a group of petitions on another subject. They are from Burnaby, Vancouver, and New Westminster in British Columbia, as well as from residents of Toronto, Brampton, Willowdale, Peterborough and other places in Ontario; from residents of St. John's, Newfoundland, Winnipeg, Edmonton and Leduc, Alberta, in which these petitioners humbly show that in their opinion, transportation is a natural monopoly without economic regulation, and that economic regulatory reform, namely deregulation, of the dimensions proposed in Bill C-18 will create chaos in the transportation industry, lead to unacceptable reductions in safety standards as well as deterioration in the quality, type, and frequency of service. Therefore, the petitioners request that Parliament have the Government withdraw Bill C-18 and retain public convenience and necessity as a fundamental factor in the development of public transportation.

OPPOSITION TO REDUCTION IN POSTAL SERVICE

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of presenting a petition drafted by the authorities and residents of the Town of Thurso, who object to Canada Post's plan to start cutting back rural delivery, and especially its plan to close some post offices in municipalities with a population of less than 2,000.

OPPOSITION TO SUBMISSIONS CONCERNING RURAL MAIL DELIVERY

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): I also have a petition from residents of the municipalities of Saint-Césaire and Saint-Liboire in the Province of Quebec who object to Canada Post's new procedure for tenders for rural delivery contracts.

These people feel that this policy will reduce the service and be prejudicial to those who for many years have been providing the service at a reasonable rate for Canada Post.

[English]

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CANADA POST CORPORATE PLAN

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have petitions from the communities of Annaheim and Dundurn in my constituency who note that the federal Government's proposal to seek financial self-sufficiency by 1988 for Canada Post Corporation will result in cut-backs, deterioration in service of the Post Office and consequently will be at the expense of service to Canadian consumers. They note that this has already resulted in the closure of many rural post offices. The petitioners call upon Parliament to instruct the Government to make improved service the highest priority of the Canadian Post Corporation, and to instruct the Government to abandon this policy of closing rural post offices.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED LOCAL MEASURED CHARGES

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of a large number of residents of Burnaby, including, in particular, residents of the Doug Drummond Manor for senior citizens in Burnaby. The petitioners note that the telephone is essential for communications and that rental costs must always be affordable. They note further that the telephone pricing scheme known as Local Measured Service means having a telephone will cost much more per month for most people. Therefore, the petitioners call upon Parliament to direct the CRTC to deny telephone companies such as B.C. Tel the right to charge for each telephone call and order the retention of the monthly rental for telephones.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by residents of Burnaby, Richmond, New Westminster, Port Coquitlam, Vancouver and other British Columbia municipalities. The petitioners note that the federal Government's proposal to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. They note as well that these plans will result in higher costs to provincial government drug plans. The petitioners call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

OPPOSITION TO ESTABLISHMENT OF TARGET RANGE—SAGUENAY—LAC-SAINT-JEAN

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Finally, Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of presenting a petition in which it is pointed out that funds earmarked for a shooting range in the Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean area could be reinvested there in real development programs for job creation, education, health and social services, tourism, and that is why petitioners are humbly praying Parliament to turn down the plan for a shooting range in the Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean area.

RIGHT TO LIFE OF UNBORN BABIES—PROTECTION OF CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and privilege to present a petition from approximately 200 residents of Niagara-on-the-Lake, St. Catharines, Virgil, Queenston, St. David's and other places within the Niagara Peninsula. Because of the killing of thousands of unborn Canadian babies each year for reasons of convenience and for such babies capital punishment exists for the crime of being unwanted, the petitioners ask Parliament and all parliamentarians to support Motion M-37 and allow unborn babies to be protected by the Charter of Rights. With those sentiments, I completely agree.

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I too have the honour to present a petition to this honourable House, certified as to form, and signed by about 100 Niagara residents who call upon Hon. Members of this House to support Motion M-37 which allows unborn babies to be protected as persons under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have petitions to present. The first petition deals with the Patent Act. The petitioners indicate that the federal Government's proposal to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. The petition is signed by several hundred residents of my riding.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CANADA POST CORPORATE PLAN

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): My second petition relates to Canada Post. The petitioners indicate that the federal Government's proposal to seek financial self-sufficiency by 1988 for Canada Post Corporation will result in cutbacks, deterioration of service of post offices and consequently will be at the expense of service to Canadians. The petitioners call upon the Government to abandon this policy.

CONTINUATION OF WOMEN'S PROGRAM

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of a large number of women from Whitehorse in the Yukon Territory. The petition states that the undersigned fully support and encourage the continuance of the Secretary of State women's program. The petitioners encourage strong support on the part of Hon. Members of the Government for the Secretary of State women's program and that future applications of REAL women to the aforementioned Government and Members of the House be seriously reviewed and discussed by this House to ensure strict adherence to the Secretary of State funding guidelines, and that REAL Women Canada be dealt with appropriately and in such a manner as this House sees fit.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): I also have several petitions on the subject of the Patent Act. Most of them are from senior citizens from various parts of British Columbia who are very concerned that this Patent Act will increase the price of drugs and will hurt senior citizens in particular. The petitioners call upon the Government to withdraw this Bill.

COMPENSATION TO JAPANESE CANADIANS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition from a number of residents of Toronto, New Hamburg, St. Marys, Stratford, Mitchell and other parts of southern Ontario, on behalf of the National Association of Japanese Canadians as being the only elected national organization of Japanese Canadians in Canada. It has 15 centers in different parts of Canada and has held public meetings on the subject of redress for what Japanese Canadians have suffered during World War II at the hands of our Government. The petitioners request Parliament to deal honourably with Canadian citizens—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. Would the Hon. Member get to the end of the petition, please.

Mr. Heap: I was in fact making a request at the point you rose, Mr. Speaker. The petitioners call upon Parliament to deal honourably with Canadian citizens of Japanese descent by entering into negotiations immediately with the National Association of Japanese Canadians. As in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I also have petitions mainly from people in Toronto, Ottawa and Mississauga, concerning refugees who are applying to enter Canada and the recent changes made in the regulations and the envisaged changes in the legislation. The undersigned, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to enact legislation which would embody the principles of fair and complete oral hearings of claimants before a refugee board, independent of the Immigration Commission, and universal access to such hearings for every claimant in Canada, and a fair chance to arrive in Canada to present this claim. In duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS AT ARMED FORCES BASE AT GOOSE BAY

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition signed by a number of residents of Canada, mainly living in Toronto, London, Benoit's Cove in Newfoundland, Kingston and Port Coquitlam, on the subject of low-level flight training of pilots from NATO countries at the Canadian Forces Base at Goose Bay, Labrador. Because of their concern for the traditional hunting life of the people who live there and for the aggressive and war fighting nature of the training, the petitioners request Parliament to ensure that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will end all low-level flight training at the Goose Bay Canadian Forces Base and cease negotiations with NATO for the establishment of a larger base there. As in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour to present a number of petitions on behalf of citizens of Canada, all of which are duly certified pursuant to Standing Order 106.

The first petition protests the procedures recently adopted which turn away refugee status claimants from ports of entry before their claims are examined, which puts real refugees at risk. The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that the Government in Parliament enacts legislation to embody the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of refugee claimants before our refugee boards, independent of the Immigration Commission, universal access to such hearings for every claimant in Canada and adequate opportunity to arrive in Canada to make this claim. As in duty bound your petitioners ever pray. These petitions are signed by a number of citizens of Windsor, Ontario.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions which originate from my constituency in Windsor which are in addition to the many petitions which contain thousands of signatures protesting legislation which will lead to an increase in prices of drugs and an increased cost to government drug plans. The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Thursday, March 26, consideration in committee of Bill C-28, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (torture)—Mr. Hnatyshyn—Mr. Paproski in the chair; and on the amendment of Mr. Kaplan (p. 4608).

The Deputy Chairman: When the committee was interrupted at five o'clock on Thursday, March 26, 1987, Clause 2 of the Bill was under consideration and an amendment to Clause 2 had been moved by the Hon. Member for York Centre. The Hon. Member for York Centre had the floor at that time. I now recognize the Hon. Member for York Centre.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Chairman, I will be brief. The Parliamentary Secretary has now had the evening, as well as the benefit of excellent advice from officials. I wish to ask him whether the Government is prepared to accept the amendment which I moved yesterday.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérin: No, for the same reasons mentioned yesterday afternoon, but we do hope the Bill will be adopted very quickly so as to enable Canada to be the eighteenth country to sit on the international commission which will monitor the implementation of this important treaty.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to delay the study of the Bill. But still in our discussions yesterday we raised the possibility of another amendment, an amendment to reduce the meaning given in the definition of torture. In that sense I should like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary whether one of the drafts of the other amendments can be acceptable, for instance a reference to international law or another formula between no reservation at all and the reservations proposed under the Bill.

Mr. Gérin: As we know the United Nations studied this question for nearly 10 years and came to the conclusion . . . I gave the United Nations documents to my colleagues from York Centre and Burnaby. I just want to read the last conclusion:

[English]

However, it was widely agreed that in the absence of specific existing international standards it was not advisable to refer to universally acceptable principles.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Chairman, I agree with the Parliamentary Secretary that a reference to international law would not take us very far beyond the situation that I was describing. I regret the Government's decision. However, under the circumstances of this Parliament I am prepared to move my amendment without any further debate or argument. I hope that some members of the Government will see the wisdom of removing this reservation on the definition of torture. I propose to leave it at that.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Chairman, I have received the documents which were forwarded to me by the Parliamentary Secretary from the United Nations Commission on Human Rights, as well as from the Economic and Social Council. I would like the Parliamentary Secretary to clarify whether or not it is the intention of the Government that in interpreting the reference to lawful sanctions courts should be guided by the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the 1949 Geneva Conventions Act and the protocols to that Act. If it is the intention of the Government that these particular principles of international law guide the courts in their interpretation of lawful sanctions, then certainly that would go some distance to meeting the concern that has been raised. I certainly support the amendment proposed by my friend, the Hon. Member for York Centre. I hope that at the very least the Parliamentary Secretary is prepared to indicate that the courts in viewing this provision should be guided by the relevant principles of international law.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérin: As I understand, Mr. Chairman, that is how the Government interprets this passage, and I am convinced that Canadian courts—indeed they have done so on many occasions in the past—will interpret this provision just the way you have suggested.

[English]

Mr. Robinson: By way of a supplementary question, Mr. Chairman, if it were argued on behalf of an individual who had been engaged in acts of physical or mental torture in a third country, that those acts were in fact lawful in that individual's country, but nevertheless those acts were clearly in violation of the internationally accepted standards with respect to punishment, would it then be the intention of the Government that the courts could in fact proceed with respect to such acts?

[Translation]

Mr. Gérin: Yes, that is our conviction.

[English]

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Chairman, I am not quite clear in my mind as to how the assurances that I know are well-meant by the Parliamentary Secretary will in fact have any impact when a matter such as this is before a court of law. I do not see how at that particular juncture his views will particularly persuade the judges that that is what the law is really saying.

• (1240)

Recently Mr. Kurt Herndl, Assistant Secretary-General of the Human Rights Commission said:

> Norms of international law, whether based on treaty or custom, address themselves as a matter of principle to States and hence have to be implemented primarily by them. This holds true for human rights provisions as well as for any other rules of international law. Therefore States have an obligation to see to it that their legislation does in fact correspond to international human rights law. To that end States may have to adapt their laws or enact new legislation. It is in this process that the United Nations can be of direct assistance—

That is exactly what is happening today. Through this law it will be possible for us to ratify the covenant on torture.

I also point out to the Parliamentary Secretary and to my other colleagues in the House that more is at stake than that. Countries look to Canada to show leadership in the field of human rights. Our country has an eminent record in that respect. The actions of the Government at this time will carry forward Canada's very esteemed program in the field of human rights. However, if the Government passes legislation which except for this clause is rather comprehensive and clear and leaves in it a clause which would seem to other countries to provide an out or an escape hatch, the example will not be as persuasive and convincing. We can say, as happens so often in countries behind the Iron Curtain, that those rights are provided in the Constitution. However, if we provide, as is the case in some of those countries, escape hatches in the legislation, it nullifies and makes void the legislation.

Countries look to Canada to find written legislation to copy and use for their laws. If oppressive countries can say that they are using the same laws as Canada and then use the escape hatches, it would be regrettable, not only on the basis of making our own law, but on the grounds that we do not want to set that example for other countries. We do not want them to say that provided there are lawful sanctions, it is fine. In effect, that would nullify the effectiveness of the law itself.

If an individual intentionally inflicts pain or suffering upon another individual, according to this clause it would be permitted if it arose from lawful sanctions. That is the problem. Unfortunately in some countries it may very well arise from emergencies and lawful sanctions. This is why I think to include such a clause does nothing for Canada, because presumably we would not have to worry about that. It certainly does not set an example for other countries and in effect it says that we are really not serious in that we have built in an escape hatch which we can use.

I believe I pointed out yesterday that this has been a problem throughout human history. Whether we are talking about Nazi Germany or the admirals and generals in Argentina or whoever, the appeal has always been that it was done according to the law, because of orders, et cetera. It seems to me that the key phrase is found in subclause 2(3):

> It is no defence to a charge under this section that the accused was ordered by a superior—

To include an escape hatch that the situation is different if it is a lawful sanction nullifies what follows, to a considerable degree.

For the sake of setting an example, not just for ourselves but for other countries, I hope we will consider the eradication of those three lines as a helpful suggestion to make this law an absolutely exemplary one.

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Chairman, most of us who were in the House when the piece of legislation was tabled applauded the Minister of Justice. Canadians who have followed the course of the amendments are very hopeful that they will soon become the law of Canada.

I was somewhat encouraged by the Hon. Member for York Centre who said that he did not want to delay the Bill. I think that is the hope of everyone. I must say that I am somewhat disappointed that this piece of legislation was not enacted yesterday.

In any case, I wanted to direct a question to the Parliamentary Secretary. It is my understanding that for the United Nations Convention to come into force it is necessary for a number of countries to ratify it, so that it will be brought into force throughout those countries. How many countries are necessary to have the Convention ratified to bring it into force, and how many countries have done so at the present time?

[Translation]

Mr. Gérin: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question, because this is extremely important. Twenty nations must ratify the convention before it is implemented. To this day, 17 countries have ratified it, and let me add that after 20 have done so, an International Commission will then be established to monitor the convention's implementation. It is my view that Canada could play a very important role in that commission, and it is also my understanding that the legislation should be accepted as it now stands, because it would give Canada a better chance of playing a role in the convention's implementation.

[English]

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Chairman, I would just hope that in expressing his irritation about the delay in the passage of this piece of legislation the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls was not imputing the motives of members. It ought to be perfectly clear that all members are very anxious for Canada to pass the necessary legislation to implement the international Convention.

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Let's get on with it, then.

Mr. McCurdy: It does not help in serious discussion of a matter which concerns us all for the Hon. Member to say: "Let's get on with it, then". Those kinds of expressions indicate all too often much haste and little thought. When we address ourselves to the caveat, it is because we are concerned.

In response to my colleague the Parliamentary Secretary indicated the basis upon which, I would hope, the courts would interpret the law when it has been implemented. They would provide by judicial decisions the kinds of protection we hope will be there in terms of ensuring that torturers will be punished. However, we are still left with some doubts.

One must ask the Parliamentary Secretary about some rather specific cases, practices, and actions which have occurred. One would want to ask about the activities of the CIA when it administered drugs to the wife of one of my colleagues. One would want to ask, were it to occur now, whether it would be covered by the legislation. The Soviet Union sanctions in law the use of drugs, under the pretence of psychiatric treatment, which cause pain, mental anguish, and doubtless physical harm. In South Africa, children 11 years and 12 years old, by virtue of being deprived of association with their families, may be deemed to have been subjected to mental anguish and significant harm, but it is sanctioned in law. In Iran, people are stoned as a part of the system of criminal justice. This is not the kind of treatment that would be sanctioned in Canadian law but someone accused of breaking this convention by virtue of those sanctioned activities might escape punishment unless we are absolutely sure that no interpretation will be imposed that would allow it to be tolerated. As well, if one considers martial law, all kinds of activities by the military are not subject to any kind of limits or even supervision. That set of circumstances is sanctioned in law.

• (1250)

Are we absolutely certain that, by virtue of the inclusion of this caveat and by virtue of the statements made in response to questions put by my colleague, none of those instances would be allowed to circumvent the intent of the legislation?

[Translation]

Mr. Gérin: Let us not try to re-invent the wheel, to rediscover the world. The United Nations Organization includes more than 150 nations which unanimously accepted the wording and recommended that other definitions not be added. That was unanimous. And what we are asking the House is to ratify the unanimous convention that was accepted by more than 150 world nations. That is all we are asking finally—nothing more, nothing less. We are asking that the convention be ratified, which would allow Canada to play a leadership role by becoming one of the first nations to sign the convention and hopefully to be in a position eventually to sit on the commission that will supervise its implementation.

[English]

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Chairman, I have just one brief question to ask because we too are anxious to see this particular legislation adopted so that Canada will join with other nations which have ratified it. Hopefully this will allow Canada to play a major role in the oversight process of the convention as well.

At what point does this particular amendment to the Criminal Code come into effect? Would it only apply to acts which are alleged to have taken place after the coming into force of the Criminal Code amendment, or would it apply as well to acts which took place prior to the coming into force of the amendment but with respect to which the alleged perpetrators of the acts are present in Canada after the coming into force of the amendment?

[Translation]

Mr. Gérin: There is no provision for retroaction in the Bill, and in order that there be retroaction, it would have to be mentioned in the Bill as such.

[English]

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Chairman, is the Parliamentary Secretary telling us that the text we see in this Bill is the text which was sent to the Government by the United Nations and therefore has been approved by the United Nations? If the answer is no, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary what is the purpose of the phrase, "but does not include any act or omission arising only from, inherent in or incidental to lawful sanctions". I would gather from what the Parliamentary Secretary said a few minutes ago that some 140 nations approved this text. Is this the text the United Nations gave us, and if it is not the text, why was this phrase put in and what is its purpose?

[Translation]

Mr. Gérin: Those provisions on lawful sanctions are taken from the United Nations wording. I will not read again the document from which I quoted earlier. I have given a copy to Mr. Kaplan and Mr. Robinson. I have another here before me and I will be pleased to send it to you.

[English]

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Chairman, the answer is not quite clear. Is he saying that this is the text the United Nations sent to us to use as the text for our Bill?

[Translation]

Mr. Gérin: In the definitions, we took those in the United Nations wording, but the United Nations did not send us the wording of the Canadian Bill.

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chairman: The question is on the amendment of Mr. Kaplan:

> That Bill C-28 be amended in Clause 2:
> (a) by striking out line 48 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor: "nation of any kind."; and
> (b) by striking out lines 1 to 3 at page 3.

Amendment (Mr. Kaplan) negatived: yeas, 9; nays, 18.

Clauses 2 and 3 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When shall the Bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) (for the Minister of Justice) moved that Bill C-28, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (Torture), be read the third time and passed.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 1 p.m., I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

JUDGES ACT, FEDERAL COURT ACT, TAX COURT OF CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Paul Dick (for the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved that Bill C-41, An Act to amend the Judges Act, the Federal Court Act and the Tax Court of Canada Act, be read the second time and, with unanimous consent, referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. François Gérin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the amendments to the Judges Act, the Federal Court Act and the Tax Court of Canada Act provided under Bill C-41 are important in substance though not in form. Time is of the essence, and I want to thank the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) and the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) for agreeing to have the second reading of this Bill today.

The Bill before the House today, Mr. Speaker, deals with several important matters that concern the magistracy. It is an attempt to apply equality and equity to the retirement age of federally appointed judges. The purpose of this Bill is to strengthen the fundamental principle of the independence of our magistrature, as reflected in the criteria for tenure of office. For the benefit of the House, I will deal with these amendments in the order in which they appear in the Bill.

First of all, Bill C-41 will maintain the indexation of judges' salaries, substituting the Industrial Aggregate for the Industrial Composite.

Under the provisions of Section 100 of the Constitution Act, Parliament sets and pays the salaries, allowances and pensions of judges appointed under Section 96, and thus of all federally-appointed judges.

Since 1981, judges' salaries have been indexed on April 1 of each year, using one of the two following percentages, whichever is less: the difference in the Industrial Composite or 7 per cent. An indexation formula was adopted to allow for annual increments so that the Parliament of Canada would not have to make these changes.

Statistics Canada has now dropped the Industrial Composite, and like other users I am asking Parliament to approve substitution of the Industrial Aggregate in its place.

Hon. Members of this House will no doubt recall that for the past few months we have been considering some statutes which were similarly amended, that is the Canada Pension Plan, the Salaries Act, the Senate and House of Commons Act.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, and that is perhaps the most important aspect, this Bill will set a consistent retirement age for all judges appointed by the federal Government.

Since 1971, there are for retirement purposes two groups of judges: those who retire at 70 years of age and those who retire at 75 years of age. Judges of county and district courts as well as those of the Tax Court of Canada and the Federal Court leave their office at 70 years of age. Judges of Provincial Superior Courts are bound, under the Constitution, to retire at 75 years of age. Judges of the Territorial Supreme Courts and the Supreme Court of Canada are allowed under the legislation to carry on their duties up to that age. In addition, all judges of county and district courts who held an office on October 6, 1971 and judges of the former Exchequer Court which held their office when that court was called the Federal Court of Canada have been given a special privilege. Although the other judges sitting in those Courts will retire at 70 years of age, those who held an office on the date when the 1971 clause was enforced will not be compelled to retire before 75 years of age. Consequently, there are not only two categories of judges dependent on the court, but in some cases two categories of judges within the same court.

When the clause dealing with both ages of retirement was implemented in 1971, the validity of the legislation was never questioned. However, what was valid at the time is no longer so because of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Charter Section 15 did constitute one of the sound arguments to contest these two retirement ages for Federal Court judges. In 1985, in the case of Mr. Justice Addy, the ruling was that Federal Court Act Sub-section 8(2) did prejudice his rights to equal treatment. Indeed it was stated that the law had created two categories of judges in that court, namely those who had been judges of the Exchequer Court of Canada and who were allowed to retire at age 75, and those who had not been with the Federal Court in its early days but who had been appointed later and had to retire at age 70.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) and his predecessor agreed to be bound by the court ruling in this case, to the extent that it applied to Federal Court judges. We have agreed to introduce the necessary legislative amendments so that judges of other courts in a similar situation will benefit from this ruling. The amendments are deemed to have come into force on April 17, 1985, the day when Charter Section 15 came into force. This Bill honours our commitments and sets the same retirement age for all federally appointed judges. We are therefore standardizing the age of retirement to conform generally to the Constitution, and more specifically to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

To protect the rights of judges who are now obliged to retire at 70 and who may wish to take advantage of the previous system, they will be allowed to retire earlier and will be given the option of retiring at 70 or at 75.

Changing the age of retirement to 75 for the entire federal magistrature will require consequential amendments to the provisions of the Judges Act for election of supernumerary status. The Supernumerary Judges Program allows judges who have held judicial office for many years to take on a reduced workload, without any reduction in salary, provided they meet certain legal requirements as to age and the number of years they have held judicial office.

Election of supernumerary status vacates a seat in the court which can then be filled through a new appointment, while the court can still call on the services of a judge with many years of experience. Court judges whose retirement age is set at 75 are allowed to elect supernumerary status at 65, provided they have held judicial office for at least 15 years, and at 70, if they have held judicial office for at least 10 years.

Judges who are supposed to retire at 70 were offered only the first option, that of electing at 65 after 15 years in office. Now that the age of retirement has been changed, all federally appointed judges will have the same options for electing supernumerary status.

Finally, there are a number of amendments relating to tenure of office. All federally appointed judges hold office during good behaviour. However, they are removable for good reason, under certain conditions. Judges of the provincial superior courts may be removed by the Governor General on address of the Senate and the House of Commons to the Crown. The same statutory guarantee with respect to tenure applies to judges of the Supreme Court of Canada and the Federal Court. Similarly, judges of the Tax Court of Canada may be removed on address of the Senate and the House of Commons, but by the Governor in Council, not the Governor General. This distinction may not seem very important for practical purposes and in the light of present day constitutional law, but it does not provide the same guarantees enjoyed by judges of the courts mentioned earlier. The difference is most flagrant when we look at judges of county courts and district courts who may be removed by the Governor in Council on recommendation of the Minister of Justice.

We believe that, as a guarantee of the independence of the magistrature, this is not satisfactory and that all federally appointed judges should be on equal footing. The purpose of this Bill is therefore to amend the Judges Act and the Tax

Court of Canada Act in order to remove these two anomalies and provide judges in the county courts, district courts and the Tax Court of Canada the same guarantees for tenure enjoyed by judges of the provincial superior courts under the Constitution.

Mr. Speaker, the last three amendments I mentioned are in response to concerns based on the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The Parliament and the people of Canada have placed a heavy burden on the courts. We have entrusted them with the task to safeguard our individual rights and freedoms. We expect them to strike a balance between our rights and those of the community, between our rights and our obligations to Canadian society.

It would be strange indeed if conditions for the tenure of judges who are asked to shoulder such major responsibilities were to become a subject for concern, in terms of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. These amendments are aimed at giving judges fair and equitable conditions of tenure, and that is why I urge Hon. Members to adopt this Bill as soon as possible.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I view this Bill as a housekeeping matter, although I recognize that there are parts of it which are very important housekeeping, bringing the judges retirement age into compliance with the Charter, taking account of important cases decided under the Charter. I listened with care to what my friend, the Parliamentary Secretary, had to say about the Bill and my Party supports it for the same reasons.

As I suggested earlier, I would be perfectly happy to deal with the Bill in Committee of the Whole but, if my counterparts in the other two Parties are disposed to refer it to a legislative committee, I will not withhold my consent.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to participate in the debate on Bill C-41, an Act to amend the Judges Act, the Federal Court Act and the Tax Court of Canada Act. The essential thrust of this Bill has already been outlined by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Gérin). I will not elaborate on the details of the Bill. The Bill makes some important changes of a technical nature which, nevertheless, are overdue. For that reason we are certainly prepared to support the Bill before the House. The amendments in question relate to uniform mandatory retirement age, supernumerary status for judges, and tenure for federally appointed judges. There is also an amendment with respect to indexation.

The age of retirement has been established at 75 for Superior Court judges. This Bill would set the age of retirement for Federal Court judges, Tax Court of Canada judges, and county and district court judges at the same age and establish the same mechanism for the removal of those judges. With regard to district and county court judges, only in the Provinces of Ontario, British Columbia and Nova Scotia do county or district courts now exist. In all other provinces the superior court is the sole court at that level.

I would like to take this opportunity to raise a couple of concerns with respect to the nature and substance of the process of the appointment of judges in Canada. In November of 1984 the then Minister of Justice, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), announced with great fanfare that a longstanding dispute between the Government of Saskatchewan and the federal Government concerning appointments to the Superior Court of Saskatchewan had been resolved. Members of the House will recall that there had been considerable debate and controversy about the lack of consultation with the Government of Saskatchewan, and in particular the Attorney General of Saskatchewan, prior to the the appointment of individuals who fill Superior Court judgeships in that province.

In November of 1984 the then Minister of Justice promised a new era of consultation with the provinces before superior court appointments were made. Members on all sides of the House welcomed that promise of consultation. This was particularly appropriate because only a few months previously there had been a significant number of patronage appointments made by the outgoing Liberal Government. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that 23 Liberal Members of Parliament were given public appointments. Of those 23 Liberal Members of Parliament, five were appointed to the judiciary; three to the Federal Court and two to the county courts of Canada. Those five appointments were the subject of considerable controversy.

In the wake of those appointments the Canadian Bar Association established a special committee to study the issue of judicial appointments in Canada. That committee conducted its work from the summer of 1984 until August of 1985. It submitted its report to the annual conference of the Canadian Bar Association in August, 1985.

• (1420)

As I mentioned, shortly after the present Government took office in November, 1984, it announced this new era of consultation. Sadly, while that consultation was announced and there was a tremendous spirit of openness and co-operative federalism, in the case of one of the most recent appointments, the one to fill a vacancy in the Manitoba Court of Appeal, that consultation process was ignored. While we welcomed the announcement of the then Minister of Justice in November, 1984, that there would be effective consultation before appointments were made, unfortunately the Manitoba Attorney General indicated that that consultation was completely lacking in the case of the most recent appointment to the Manitoba Court of Appeal.

Unfortunately, in response to that we have a situation in which the Province of Manitoba has decided to proceed with legislation similar to legislation that was in effect in Saskatchewan prior to the 1984 decision of the Minister of Justice to consult. We are back to a situation where a provincial Government was not consulted and, therefore, will bring forward legislation to ensure that no further vacancies are filled unless that consultation takes place.

Let me return to the Canadian Bar Association recommendations with respect to the judicial appointment process. The Bar Association appointed a committee of distinguished lawyers, chaired by Neil McKelvey, a lawyer from Saint John, New Brunswick. That committee met with many individuals and groups across Canada and submitted to the Canadian Bar Association their report on the appointment of judges in Canada.

The findings of the Canadian Bar Association report on the appointment of judges represent a very damning indictment of the system of the appointment of judges which has existed for many years in Canada.

In their report, the special committee said that Canadians are cynical about the current method of appointing judges and want a totally different approach. They point out as well that in a number of provinces, politics—meaning partisan politics—play too great a role in selecting candidates for the Bench. The committee pointed out, for example, that political favouritism played an especially dominant role in federal appointments to the higher levels of courts in a number of provinces, including New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, and Saskatchewan. They point out as well that with respect to appointments in Alberta, Manitoba, Newfoundland, and in Ontario to county and district courts, political favouritism has in fact been a significant consideration. Indeed, the Canadian Bar Association Committee went so far as to note that in one province 100 per cent of the appointments were to supporters of the Party in power. Obviously there is serious damage to the integrity of the judicial system in Canada when appointments are made exclusively on the basis of one's partisan political background.

The committee noted that since 1978 there was strong evidence to indicate that being a friend of the Party in power in Ottawa and in some of the provinces was in fact the main criterion for landing a judicial appointment. The committee noted further that although the quality of the Canadian judiciary is good, it is uneven, with some of the more manifest weaknesses being attributable to patronage appointments.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have been listening to the representative of the New Democratic Party for several minutes. He has been devoting his time to talking about the process of appointing judges, and insulting members of the Bench appointed by my Party and members of the Bench appointed by the Party that forms the present Government. That might be in order, as tasteless as it would be, if the Bill had something to do with the appointment of judges. However, it does not. I would ask Your Honour to impose the rules of order and ask the member, if he has anything to say, to direct himself to the provisions of the Bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Marin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Gaspé (Mr. Marin) on a point of order.

Mr. Marin: Mr. Speaker, if our New Democratic Party colleague wants to make accusations, I would suggest he ought to give names and spell out his accusations.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I think the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) realizes what is happening during his speech this Friday afternoon. I hope that he will refer to the Bill and discuss what is before us, rather than making any further accusations.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, certainly no one is making any accusations. In fact, I was quoting from a unanimous report which was submitted to the Canadian Bar Association by a number of very distinguished lawyers, including J. J. Robinette, and a committee which was chaired by Neil McKelvey of New Brunswick. I was quoting concerns that these individuals raised with respect to the appointment process in Canada. This Bill certainly deals with the question of appointment of judges, with the removal, the tenure of judges and a number of other concerns of that nature.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It does not deal with the appointment of judges. It has nothing to do with the appointment of judges.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): As I see it, the only portion of the Bill that deals with the appointment or removal of judges is Clause 5. I will have to look at it more carefully, but I hope that on this wonderful Friday afternoon we could settle the problem in a very short time. The Hon. Member for Burnaby.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I will be brief in my remarks. I wanted to take this opportunity, since this is one of the few opportunities when the Judges Act comes before the House for amendment, to raise some concerns which flow directly from the provisions of that Bill.

The findings of the McKelvey committee were certainly a serious indictment of the present practices of the appointment of judges in Canada and certainly Mr. McKelvey himself indicated, when he was asked, that indeed the practices of the former Government appear to have been continued by the—

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, he keeps coming back to this question of appointment. He has no basis for doing that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Burnaby.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I have made reference to a number of the concerns that were raised by this Canadian Bar Association committee with respect to the appointment of judges. What flowed from that was a recommendation that there be special advisory committees established to advise the Government of the day with respect to the appointment of judges.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérin: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary on a point of order.

Mr. Gérin: Mr. Speaker, again the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) is making partisan remarks as he speaks to a Bill which does not have anything to do with that process as such. There will be many other opportunities because the Government said recently that it intends to review this process. As a matter of fact, with respect to the appointment of commissioners, it was this Government which implemented a new parliamentary system that is a lot better than what we had before. Sadly enough, in his attempt to debate an issue which is totally alien to the measure under consideration, the Hon. Member is delaying the adoption of this Bill which was introduced in the House solely to make it consonant with the Canadian Charter of Rights. I suggest that the Hon. Member for Burnaby who claims, like his NDP colleagues, to be a great champion of the Charter, could lead the way today by immediately supporting this Bill and keeping his partisan remarks for another forum.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I think the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) has been here long enough to realize what is happening. Perhaps he will come to a conclusion so that we do not have to carry on with any more points of order this afternoon.

• (1430)

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I have been trying to come to a conclusion of my remarks, but I have been interrupted constantly by points of order. Perhaps I might be given an opportunity to conclude my remarks by noting that the study to which I referred did make a recommendation for a new system of advisory committees to seek out potential judges and assess their qualifications. It noted that such committees exist in six provinces. I would hope that the Government might take the opportunity to put into place a new model for a revised appointments system for the appointment of judges to the federal bench.

It was in February of 1986 that the then Minister of Justice in fact promised that before the end of 1986, a new system for the appointment of judges would in fact be in place. I had hoped that in the Bill which came forward today—

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please! The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary rises on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has no respect for the House. He is again dealing with a matter which, as he has just been informed, has nothing to do with the bill. He complains about being interrupted. The reason he is interrupted is because he is out of order.

Therefore, he should be considerate and polite enough to respect his colleagues and the House.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Burnaby.

Mr. Robinson: We certainly had hoped that the Minister, in tabling legislation dealing with the Judges Act, would bring forward the changes which were promised over a year ago. It is entirely in order, in speaking on a Bill to amend the Judges Act, to raise concerns with respect to other subject areas which might have been included at this point and which in fact have not. I know the Speaker recognizes that as well.

I would hope the Minister or his successor, the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) would in fact live up to the promise made by his Government to bring forward a new appointments system at the earliest possible time. We recognize, particularly in dealing with some cases with complex socio-economic questions arising from the Charter of Rights, and in dealing with a review of Cabinet decisions—the courts can now review these decisions, after the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in the Cruise missile case—that it is essential that partisan political considerations not play a role in the appointments process.

I believe as well that in examining the nature of this process, the Bench should more accurately reflect the ethnic and multicultural diversity of our country. There should be more women appointed to the Bench. I would hope that the Supreme Court of Canada position which is now vacant would in fact be filled by one of the excellent women from the Province of Quebec who are eminently qualified to fill that position. I am pleased that the record of the Government with respect to the appointment of women has improved significantly. I am quite prepared to concede that and to concede as well how pleased I am, particularly in view of the fact that until this Government took office not one woman had been appointed by a Conservative Government to a federal judicial post in the history of the country. I welcome the progress which has been made in that regard.

To conclude, I want to reiterate our concern that the judicial appointments process in Canada must be changed. There must be a role for independent advisory bodies. There must, indeed, be a role for Parliament to play with respect to appointments to senior judicial positions at the Appellate Court level, the level of the Supreme Court of Canada. I would hope the Government would recognize its responsibilities in this regard and will move forward to quickly overhaul the judicial appointments process in Canada.

At this point I would like to ask for the agreement of the House, pursuant to discussions I have had with the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council that this Bill not be dealt with at this point in Committee of the Whole but that it be dealt with by reference to a legislative committee. My understanding is that that is agreeable and that the legislative committee would, of course, deal with the Bill expeditiously.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérin: Yes, because I feel that otherwise, the Committe of the Whole would be dealing with another matter, as suggested by the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan). Therefore, it will be referred to a legislative committee.

[English]

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I was consulted about this agreement. The agreement I was prepared to accede to was not that the Bill be dealt with expeditiously in committee but that it be dealt with at one meeting with the Minister in committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is that so agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on the motion of the Minister of Justice.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

CANAGREX DISSOLUTION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Paul Dick (for the Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-2, an Act to dissolve Canagrex and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee, be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Dick (for the Minister of Agriculture) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Canagrex

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to speak to Bill C-2, an Act to repeal the Canagrex Act and to dissolve the Crown corporation. The details of this legislation, and the reasons for it, have been fully outlined in this House previously and at the committee stage. Therefore, I will only briefly review the matters involved.

Canagrex has been, in effect, phased out since April of 1985. The purpose of Bill C-2 is to officially dissolve the corporation. As far back as the November, 1984 Economic Statement by the Minister of Finance, the Government has made clear its intention to phase out Canagrex. There were good reasons for this decision.

First, the initiative reflected our policy of fiscal restraint and our firm resolve to make the most efficient use of available resources. Second, it was, and remains, our view that Canagrex was not going to achieve the target set out for it. We believe the industry was not going to use the Crown corporation in the manner planned. Third, we believe that existing government departments would be more effective in co-operating with the private sector in pursuing our trade goals.

Many of the intended purposes of Canagrex were certainly worthy ones. Canagrex was to identify new markets, to promote exports of Canadian products, to participate in state-to-state trading, to provide export counselling to the industry, to make available grants, contributions, loans and loan guarantees, and to import, export, buy and sell. These functions are now being carried out more cost effectively and in a co-operative manner by the Department of External Affairs, the Export Development Corporation and Agriculture Canada. The Agricultural Products Board of Agriculture Canada can also buy and sell, if necessary.

The Export Development Corporation, the EDC, provides insurance, loans and guarantees. Through the EDC, the Government has introduced new, more flexible insurance programs which have succeeded in putting Canada's agricultural exporters in a much better competitive position.

The Department of External Affairs takes a lead role in foreign markets. Its program for export market development will have spent more than $1.2 million for export promotion activities. This program, combined with a promotional projects program, is more effectively mounting Canadian exhibits at international trade shows and bringing foreign buyers to Canada.

Agriculture Canada and External Affairs work jointly on numerous trade initiatives. Recently, the two departments worked to improve their co-operative relationship. The results have been beneficial to agricultural exporters. For example, the two departments have co-operated in numerous technical and promotional activities, seminars and trade fairs. They worked together to develop the export market information system, which provides current, detailed information on agricultural markets throughout the world. They have established a joint committee on agri-food trade. This committee ensures that resources in the two departments are combined, whenever possible, in order to identify new market opportunities, and to help the private sector take advantage of those opportunities. In addition to co-operating with External Affairs, Agriculture Canada works closely with the private sector and the provinces to develop markets for our agricultural products.

Federal and provincial Ministers of Agriculture have reactivated the federal-provincial Market Development Council as a mechanism to enhance market development, both domestic and foreign. The federal-provincial Agriculture Trade Committee continues its active work. These efforts are complemented by Agriculture Canada's Export Expansion Fund and the Export Development of Agriculture Products Program.

The department also provides export counselling and co-ordinates private sector trade initiatives. Often, the department has been successful in helping to overcome technical barriers to export expansion through, for example, the establishment of animal and plant health agreements with other nations.

The Government recognizes that it is the men and women of the private sector in Canada who export, not governments. The task of government is to assist the private sector in developing and facilitating international trade. It is an approach that is working. I ask Hon. Members to consider the results.

Thanks to some enterprising Canadian engineering firms and officials at Agriculture Canada, a number of foreign buyers have made trial purchases of Canadian agricultural and food processing machinery. Further sales could pave the way for greater economic diversification of Canada's agriculture sector.

Producers in the Maritimes have found new customers for their hay, particularly as a feed for racehorses in the United Kingdom and in the United States. This success story is a result of federal and provincial co-operation with the private sector, as well as support from the federal Export Expansion Fund.

These examples demonstrate that in a challenging world trading environment we are succeeding in creating new export opportunities for Canadian agriculture. We are doing so by creating a positive environment for exporters, by strengthening interdepartmental co-operation, and by forming closer working relations with the private sector. We are proving that we can attain our goals without necessarily creating new corporations, agencies or bureaucracies.

Clearly, the 1984 decision to dissolve Canagrex has proven to be a sound, responsible initiative. I urge all Members in the House to support the Bill that is before us.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the debate we are participating in this afternoon is really a form of memorial service for Canagrex. The Government dissolved Canagrex well over a year-and-one-half ago. We are now finally completing the formalities of a legislative burial for this agency. I was hoping that the Government might at least have the decency to provide a proper burial. Instead, the description we heard in the statement made by the Government's spokesperson seemed to miss the whole point. What we had was a recitation of the original intentions of the Government in getting rid of Canagrex.

I ask Hon. Members to listen to what they were. First and foremost was a demonstration of the Government's commitment to fiscal restraint. Mr. Speaker, if 6,000 farmers were in arrears with the Farm Credit Corporation, if export markets to Third World countries had dropped by 20 per cent or 30 per cent, and if western farmers and those in Ontario and Quebec were losing markets daily to the European Economic Community and the United States because of their aggressive, massive subsidization of agriculture, do you think you would have brought forward fiscal restraint as your first objective? Do Hon. Members not think that the Government might have at least had the wit to say that, unquestionably, the overriding priority, at a time when the Canadian agricultural economy is facing the most severe challenge since the Depression, is to help the farmers? Would it not have had the wit to say that it wants to help develop new markets and develop new products? Would it not have had the wit to say that it wanted to help farmers develop the capacity to break into areas in which there was intense competition? Oh no, the answer was, "fiscal restraint". Unfortunately, that is the continuing motivation that drives the Government's economic policy, something which is totally oblivious to the circumstances surrounding it, and in many cases the tragedy surrounding it. I cannot believe that any Member in the House would be foolhardy enough to try to argue that, in fact, there is not an incredible crisis facing Canadian agriculture today.

One of the tragedies which I think we have to recognize in this memorial service late on a Friday afternoon is that Canagrex might have provided one of the effective responses to that crisis. Canagrex was specifically set up to provide Canadian agriculture with an alternative means of selling its products, of developing its products and of promoting its products. When the Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson) said there was no acceptable proof that it was doing its job, the fact is that in the first nine months of its operation, while the Party of which I am a member was still the Government and Canagrex was in an embryonic stage, it had already something close to $16 million worth of committed sales and was in the process of negotiating another $150 million worth of sales. That is clear proof that in a short nine-month period there was an incredible opportunity of which to be taken advantage. In fact, a vacuum needed to be filled by an agency that would be able to help small farmers, in particular, farmers who did not have large marketing agencies such as the Wheat Board working for them. In a short period of time it was able to develop a sure commitment for $16 million worth of sales and $150 million worth of pending orders. Clearly, that demonstrates the need for such an operation.

The government spokesman went on to say that he did not think it was necessary because there were other departments that could do the job. He referred to External Affairs, the Department of Agriculture and the Export Development Corporation.

I would now like to recite to Hon. Members the events that have occurred since then. Has there been one single additional contribution from the Export Development Corporation to promote agricultural exports? It has had its budget cut back. The only area in which the Government has increased funding for the promotion and marketing of our exports is in the area of defence. The primary objective of the Government is to become a big arms exporter. That is where it is putting its money. That is the area in which it has increased financing, that is, to sell arms overseas, not to help farmers sell their products. When we look at the budgets in the last Estimates the only increase that we can see is with respect to DIPP, the Defence Industry Productivity Program. It received a big increase in funds. If we look at the Export Development Corporation's own estimates we see that there was a substantial reduction.

We admit that other departments did not like Canagrex. External Affairs saw it as a turf battle. It wanted to be the great chieftain of export management and trade. They were to manage this new trade strategy of the Government, and we have seen how they have managed it. The softwood lumber case is costing the Canadian industry $600 million. There have been more countervail cases in the last two years than in the last 20 years. There has been a total and complete withdrawal from any serious commitment to multilateral trade negotiations. They have closed embassies. They have closed consulates. They have cut back staff and financing to the Department of External Affairs. It was to be the great engine of motivation for increasing Canadian trade. However, we have seen a shrinkage, an erosion, a cut-back, and a withdrawal from any kind of commitment.

The Hon. Member also gave us some examples. He indicated that there was a little more hay from the Maritimes being sold to Great Britain. I apologize that I did not leap to my feet and click my heels in wild exultation at that good news. Did the Hon. Member talk about the number of lost sales of specialty crops in western Canada? We have been pushed out of business in the Middle East. Did the Hon. Member talk about losing the opportunity to put together co-op efforts for field crops across Canada. He did not say a word about lost opportunities or lost sales. He talked about selling a little more hay to Great Britain. It seems that is the sum total of the contribution of the Tory agricultural trade strategy.

Although I do not want to strain Your Honour's generosity, I am tempted to speak for a moment about the other side of the trade picture, that is, the trade war in which we are engaged with the European Economic Community and the United States on the question of grain sales. I must take note, for the sake of relevance, of the response which we received this morning from the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). When he was asked about the resolution passed unanimously in the U.S. Senate authorizing an investigation, of all things, into Canadian agricultural subsidies, he said that he thought it would be a useful lesson for Americans to learn.

Since the inception of the United States Farm Bill, grain prices to Canadian farmers have fallen on the average of 15 per cent to 20 per cent per year. This spring farmers are facing the reality that when they put seed in the ground they will get 50 cents to 60 cents less per bushel than their cost of production, and that is a minimum judgment. Those prices are being driven down by Americans day after day. With their BICEP program they are pushing us out of markets in Algeria, Saudi Arabia, and you name it. They are after our skins.

The flaccid response of the Secretary of State for External Affairs was, "I do not see anything wrong with it. Let the Americans learn a lesson or two". There is no inclination on the part of the Government to go after the United States Senate and the U.S. administration and say, "What the hell do you think you are doing to us? You have a lot of nerve trying to investigate us when you are driving down prices and driving us out of the markets and when you are about to destroy our grain economy".

Where is the Canadian Government's investigation of U.S. subsidies which are putting us out of business? Where is the diplomatic note asking what is going on? Where is the Government's willingness to go to GATT and say that unilateral action on the part of Americans is breaking the trade contract which we signed years ago?

I suppose we should know better than to expect the Secretary of State for External Affairs to have any backbone when it comes to dealing with the Americans. I suppose we should know better by now than to expect the Government to represent Canadian trade interests with any kind of courage or dignity.

The Tories are compelled by that obsessive demand that they must get the free trade deal on the table. They know the political credibility of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is going into the ashcan. The one way they are trying to save it is by signing a cosmetic deal with the Americans. Everything is sacrificed for that deal. Everything is surrendered. Everything is put up for grabs, including Canadian farmers. Do we have the right to expect any more? Surely, when dealing with agricultural products and the plan of action for Canagrex, one would have thought there would have been an effort by External Affairs, Agriculture, or someone else to make a gesture to fill the vacuum. On the contrary, they have in fact ignored the problem.

I should like to recount—and I am glad to share the information with other Hon. Members of the House—a tour which members of my caucus and I took to western Canada three weeks ago. We visited the four prairie provinces and met with over 80 groups, many of which were agricultural groups. Time after time we heard a very clear appeal for assistance of all kinds. I think western farmers recognize that they have to deal with a different kind of international market. Many of our former customers are now our competitors. They realize that they will have to shift into wider diversification in crops and get much smarter when it comes to sales, promotion, and marketing. There is a willingness or a receptivity to begin to broaden and diversify the agricultural pitch.

However, at the same time those farm groups said that they were not big enough to do it themselves, particularly in specialty crops and field crops. Those operators are usually smaller ones and do not have the major economic muscle necessary to mount a big promotional campaign.

They also pointed out that the Government of Canada cut back on agricultural research and on the very capacity to help develop new products and new strains. The Government has eliminated Canagrex. It has cut back on the budget of EDC. It does not provide the support for farmers which is absolutely essential if they are to cultivate new markets. The willingness is there. There is interest and there is co-operation. However, what they see is a full-scale retreat.

We know why that is. The Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek referred to it in the first words of his speech. It is because they are interested in fiscal restraint. That is very dumb economics. If we force people into bankruptcy and force farmers to go broke, there will be fewer taxpayers to help pay future bills. Fiscal restraint is another expression for squeezing the small guy. The entire country will pay the price.

We know that the legislation simply formalizes a ghost. The damage has already been done. If there is any purpose in a memorial service, I hope it is to draw some lessons from the short nine-month life of Canagrex. The Government of Canada has a real responsibility to give the farming community the support it needs to diversify its crops and sell them abroad in a toughening international market.

We want to see some action. We want to see the trade strategy of the Government incorporating agriculture as a major component. We do not want to see it throw up its hands and say that it is waiting for some negotiation down the road, throw a cream puff at the Americans, or say that we will sell more hay to Great Britain. That is hardly a proper epitaph for Canagrex. It is a compounding of the failure to come to grips with the hard reality of the world of international agriculture trade. All I can say is that we live with some hope that some time soon, someone in the Government will come to his or her senses and do something about it.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise at third reading stage of this Bill to make what I suppose will be one last speech on Canagrex. Canagrex had a very short life. It was brought to an unseemly end just at the very beginning of its attempt to fulfil a mandate which I felt was one that needed to be fulfilled.

We do have a great need for an agency like Canagrex to act as a facilitator between the producers of farm products and potential markets. Government spokesmen, today and previously, have justified the disposal of this tiny, budding new agency by saying that there exists in various Departments most if not all of the expertise necessary for farmers to pursue markets in other countries for those commodities that are produced in relatively small volumes in Canada.

When we supported this experimental initiative, it was our feeling that it would help numerous producers of small-volume commodities, from honey producers to pea and bean producers to even at times tobacco producers and soybean producers. The list goes on and on. Commodities that have as yet been produced only experimentally to see if they are agronomically suitable to our climate could perhaps have been grown here under economically viable conditions if markets for them had been made available.

I think it is quite clear to anyone who has attempted to market some of these products for which there are no existing national boards that the act of going through the various departments, agencies and branches of Government to attempt to put together a marketing project is so costly and time-consuming that very few commodity groups have the volume necessary to make it economically viable. Canagrex with its few dozen experts in insurance, finance and intermediary businesses proved that it could do that for these groups. When people from Canagrex made trips to foreign countries with market potential for Canadian agricultural products, they were able to go with briefcases containing six, eight or even 10 commodities that were looking for markets. They could therefore spread the cost of marketing initiatives over that many products. It was a cost-effective and efficient kind of marketing that was made possible with Canagrex. One need only read its first annual report which, I remind the House, the Government attempted to keep from being presented as it should have been presented by law.

To digress for a moment, I would point out that the Progressive Conservative policy on Canagrex is consistent with the rest of its policies. It had always run hot and cold on Canagrex and it has always been quite contradictory. I suppose that is typical of the words "Progressive Conservative", which in themselves are going in two different directions at once. When the Bill was first introduced, we saw the spectacle of the then House Leader, Erik Nielsen, making a speech at first reading stage of the Bill, something which in itself is quite unusual. On December 8, 1981, as reported on page 13834 of Hansard, he said the following:

Madam Speaker, we on this side are delighted to give our consent to the introduction of an idea initiated by the Hon. Member for Elgin (Mr. Wise) when he was in office. We in this party express our gratitude to the minister for perpetuating the idea of the hon. member for Elgin in this legislation.

He then pointed out what a successful piece of legislation it was and what a successful future Canagrex would have from the point of view of the Progressive Conservative Party.

The now Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), who at that time was his Party's critic for agriculture, rose in the House on second reading debate to praise the implementation of Canagrex. The only thing he could find to criticize about it was that Eugene Whelan, the then Minister of Agriculture, was proposing a budget for the new agency of only $14 million to be spread over three years. It was the current Minister of Agriculture's contention that he would have given the agency $60 million over the same period of time and that, had he continued as Minister of Agriculture, he would have made it a very successful, well financed agency.

The debate on second reading stage went on for some time. The current Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) rose to defend the implementation of Canagrex and outlined some proposals that he had for Canagrex that would permit some of his constituents to export veal calves to Israel. He was quite supportive of the program. In fact, all those of the then Official Opposition who spoke were supportive of the Canagrex initiative until it came time for the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre, the current Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), to speak. He took great exception to the implementation of an agency that would provide some assistance to farmers in exporting products. He thought that this was an infringement on the export activities of private enterprise which, I point out, was not doing the job anyway. He succeeded in convincing his caucus over the initial enthusiasm of the now Minister of Agriculture and the now Minister of National Health and Welfare that Conservative Members should reverse their position and oppose to the last drop of blood the implementation of Canagrex.

Those Hon. Members who were here at the time will recall the historic and histrionic display of emotions which then occurred in the House of Commons, the likes of which we had not seen before. The bell-ringing incident that went down in history was attached to this Bill. The Bill was stalled in committee stage. We saw the spectacle of having the chairman of the Ontario Soybean Board, Peter Epp, come from southern Ontario with his officials on two separate occasions to give testimony before the Committee on Agriculture, and because of procedural games playing, the then Official Opposition prevented the committee from hearing the testimony of Mr. Epp on not one but on both occasions. That was the emotion that the initiative of the current Minister of Finance generated over the good initial judgment of the now Minister of Agriculture and the now Minister of National Health and Welfare.

I submit that the agency, during its very short life, showed signs of being able to bring these various scattered bits and pieces of trade and commerce, external affairs, agriculture, trade insurance, transportation and other brokerage operations together under one roof where a producer could go for both advice and service. It succeeded despite a very slow start caused by the political heat generated by the Official Opposition during committee and report stages of the legislation. The agency had succeeded in selling some $16 million worth of agricultural products which would not have been sold without it. As well, about $150 million in sales were under negotiation. Anyone involved in marketing knows that you have to initiate deals many months in advance at times. Those sales were just written off when the Minister of Finance stood up to present his budget statement in November of 1984. That was done without consultation with the employees or board of directors of Canagrex, or any of the farm organizations who used Canagrex. It was simply a unilateral decision by a Minister and members of the Government who, during the election campaign, took pride in saying that they would form an open Government that would be democratic and consult with people.

After that initiative was announced, there were certain moves to avoid the rule of Parliament over procedures engaged in by the Government. The Government attempted to avoid the law which required an annual report to be tabled in the House of Commons. That requirement was avoided for several months, but eventually complied with. We brought the debate to a close over that issue and the official death of Canagrex, the final act of which is happening in this debate, was delayed until such time as the Government began to live up to the letter of the law.

We have indicated there was much that could have been done with this agency. The plight of a great many producers of small volume commodities would be much better than it is had the agency remained in operation. It had the expertise and direction to seek out and open up new markets for those producers. It would have been the contact point for a producer or group of producers who wished to initiate such sales, and it had the power to provide all of the services necessary to complete an international sale, including the insurance and transportation arrangements, without jumping around to a multitude of agencies, boards and brokers. Instead, the Government decided to follow the advice of the Minister of Finance, regrettably so, and overrule the initial instincts and, I think, the good judgment of the opposition agriculture critic who supported implementation of Canagrex in its initial stages.

Because I have only four or five minutes left in my time I want to refer very briefly to another action taken by the Minister of Finance which has been extremely harmful to another group of farmers. I am speaking of the first excise tax imposed by the Minister upon tobacco users and the harm done as a result to tobacco producers. That tax increased tobacco taxes by 40 per cent. It raised close to $500 million annually. At the same time the Minister and his colleagues assured tobacco producers there would be some compensation to assist them in adjusting to the reduced demand resulting from this taxation policy. Two years and five months later there is no program. I was in the tobacco-producing region yesterday and the day before listening to the plight of some tobacco farmers. We know that between 600 and 1,000 tobacco farms out of just over 2,000 are now out of business as a result of this program. They have received none of the promised assistance to this point in time.

Just to put it in context I will tell you how little assistance they were hoping to get. They had understood that of the approximately 40 cents extra per package that the Budget put on the price of finished tobacco products, about a nickel would go to an industry restructuring program. Some 18 months of inaction has produced the demise of close to 600 family farms. There is now a rumour about that there may be a program amounting to about $15 million, which is about 1.2 cents per package instead of the promised five cents, or about one-fifth of the original promise. There are still no details on a program, simply more talk.

Before I sit down I want to read into the record some comments of a woman who appeared before the subcommittee on tobacco yesterday. In the context of closing down Canagrex and another agency I think it is fitting, given the demise of a great many of these tobacco farms, to listen to what she had to say. She recalled an incident on November 11 when she did what she usually does with her younger children in gathering them together to talk about what Remembrance Day means. She said she would like to draw to their attention the fact that the freedoms they enjoy in our democracy were brought about at the expense of other people's lives in the two world wars. She said that they, as the people carrying our traditions into the future, have a responsibility to understand the meaning of those deaths and to try to carry some of these ideals forward. She reported that after her little talk, her youngest son Jonathan, 10 years old but quite keen of mind, stopped for a moment and asked a very touching question. He said: "Why don't I have a grampa or great-grampa who fought in any of those wars?" She explained to him that it was perceived during wartime to be very important to the country to have farmers and that the Government, having realized we could not win a war without farmers, ensured that farmers stayed home to produce food for the survival of the country. Since all of his forefathers were farmers, none of them had fought in the wars. He thought for a few moments and then he said, "Mommy, why don't they care now if we lose our farms? Isn't Canada still a country and don't we still need farmers?"

• (1520)

That is the basic question which the Government is avoiding. It cannot avoid it. We still need farmers to be a country. The Progressive Conservatives understood that when they initially supported the concept of Canagrex which would have permitted farmers to get their production into the hands of consumers around the globe through an agency with the concentrated expertise which Canagrex could have put together. The Government failed to do that. It has failed the people of Canada and, most importantly and regrettably, it has failed the farmers of the country.

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a few brief comments on Bill C-2. This will likely be the final opportunity to speak to this Bill. I say that with a great deal of sadness because I think Canagrex would have done a lot for our farmers. I supported Canagrex when the previous Government brought the Bill to the House to establish the corporation. I supported the then Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Whelan, not because I was a member of his governing Party, but because I thought that the agricultural community needed some expertise and direction in marketing. I also supported it because the potato producers in the Province of Prince Edward Island were totally in support of the Bill. I had met on many occasions from 1980 to 1984 with potato producers and other farmers in my province. They made it quite clear to me that they, as farmers, did not have to be told how to produce a product, that they were quite capable of producing their products very efficiently.

I remember the great debate on Canagrex. In the early stages after the Bill was originally introduced by the former Minister of Agriculture most Members of the then Opposition, including the present Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), thought Canagrex would be a vehicle to aid the agricultural industry. It was not long after the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) spoke in that debate that most of the then opposition Members changed their tune. I remember the bell-ringing incidents, the tactics which the then Opposition used to stall this legislation. I was not very proud of that and I think that after reflection a lot of the members who took part in those tactics were not very proud of their actions either.

I remember that those tactics brought the subject to the minds of the farmers across the country who derive their income from the production of agricultural produce. They had seen the benefits of Canagrex as we in the previous Government had seen them. In order to remember what people were saying at that time I will read into the record a letter from the Prince Edward Island Potato Producers' Association. The letter was addressed to the Member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass), myself as the Member for Egmont, the Member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan) who is now the Minister of the Environment, and the then Minister of Veterans Affairs in the former Government, Bennett Campbell. The letter reads:

Dear Sirs:

At a Potato Producers' Association meeting held on January 6, 1983, a motion was passed that we write to our three MPs and Cabinet Minister to again re-iterate our support and desire that Canagrex be passed as quickly as possible.

We, in the Association, feel that this Bill would be of great benefit to the Island potato industry in the area of export. We feel new markets could be created and old ones strengthened by export credit, which we understand is part of this package.

On behalf of the potato industry, we hope you can see your way clear to support this legislation. As to some criticism of the bill that Canagrex has the power to enter the market if it so desires to buy and sell product we do not see this as a great threat provided it is only done when it can be shown the private sector cannot survive this service.

Yours truly,
P.E.I. Potato Producers' Ass'n
Norman Ramsay, President

I received many letters in 1983 from people who were interested in the agricultural industry in Prince Edward Island. They expressed the same sentiments toward Canagrex as did this letter. There is nothing the Liberal and New Democratic Opposition can do. There are 211 Members on the government side and they are certainly bent on burying Bill C-2 and what is left of Canagrex. There is no question that we have done everything we could. I have spoken on this subject many times. We should remind ourselves of what Canagrex was all about. The Bill is now in its final stage and during the last weeks and months some of us may have lost sight of what Canagrex would have done for our agricultural industry and other industries which could have participated in the program which Canagrex could have offered. Canagrex would have actively assisted export development in this country.

• (1530)

The powers contained in the legislation that was passed gave Canagrex six main purposes. The first was market identification and intelligence. I have been told by shippers that while they know there is a possibility of markets, since they are small shippers they have difficulty developing those markets in foreign countries. Indeed, many of those countries which may need those products have difficulty in providing the Canadian funds required to pay for them and may require a line of credit.

This was one of the difficulties facing our potato exporters. Argentina and other South American countries do not have enough foreign currency and the producers must wait lengthy periods for payment. They see Canagrex as a vehicle which could have helped them by providing loans and guarantees while waiting for their payment for their product. Indeed, Canagrex could have arranged a state-to-state agreement to sell goods and services.

The second thrust of Canagrex is promotion and information services. Trying to develop a new market in a new country is not much different from developing a new market for a new product in our country. There must be a great deal of promotion and education about the product. Canada is known throughout the world for its excellence in quality. We certainly had good inspection regulations to ensure that we deliver the very best quality products to foreign markets.

It is very difficult to create a new market for a new product that is basically unknown. For example, the promotion of generic fishery products in the United States, which the Government abandoned, would have helped our small producers and processors market their fishery products in the United States. The large companies such as National Sea have marketing outlets in the United States and, in fact, many have their own marketing and distributing facilities there. However, the smaller companies do not have the money to promote their products and the generic promotion program in the fishery would have helped.

Canagrex could have acted as an agent of the Crown in negotiating state-to-state contracts. It could have provided grants and contributions to help accelerate product development and promotion or the provision of needed infrastructure.

In no way was Canagrex given a monopoly in the legislation over any commodity, either in exporting or importing. Its powers could have only been used in conjunction with private trade, to facilitate exports on a state-to-state basis. In other words, it could have helped any of the agencies, but only at their invitation. For instance, if the Canadian Wheat Board wanted help from Canagrex it could have received that help to develop new markets abroad.

In my area the fox trapping industry has revived in the last number of years. Many years ago Prince Edward Island was a world leader in the silver fox industry but, due to changes in style and other factors, the fur industry declined from the late 1930s until its revival in the late 1970s.

There are a number of well organized and efficient fur farmers in my riding. Approximately one month ago the manager of England Fur Farms Limited told me that he had identified a number of markets for fox furs in Finland, Poland and other European countries, as well as an interest in Japan. He said it would require a lot of money to form a group to visit those areas. He inquired where the funds could be obtained in order to help develop that market, and I suggested the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion.

We phoned that Department in Charlottetown, since it had helped the fur industry in the past. They were able to form a partial package and take two fur farmers to Poland. These farmers had great praise for the two departmental officials who accompanied them to Poland, with some of the live animals which they had to put on show.

While the reception was favourable and there is a market in Poland, it is difficult for Poland to provide the Canadian funds in order to develop the market for the furs and live animals. A corporation such as Canagrex could have played a role in assisting this industry. It would have helped the industry and probably some 150 people on Prince Edward Island.

The fur industry is growing because we have some of the best quality furs. Our fur farmers are progressive and have been able to keep up with the latest developments in cross-breeding and new technology in the industry. However, the premium markets cannot necessarily afford to pay the price and Canagrex certainly could have assisted in developing a strategy for the fur industry for Prince Edward Island and Canada.

It is not just Prince Edward Island any more. There are a lot of fur farmers in the western provinces and a goodly number of them in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Ontario. Certainly, the demand is there in certain areas, but there is a problem in some parts of the world to get that hard currency in Canadian dollars.

I come back again to the potato producers and what they have been telling me about losing Canagrex and how they feel it would have been helpful to them. I have talked a lot over the years since I came to Parliament about potatoes. I have not talked too much about potatoes this year because, fortunately, it is a supply-demand situation in which we find ourselves. We are very pleased that the price is good for potatoes this year, so I am not here harassing the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) or the Minister of Finance to help alleviate a drastic situation in the potato industry.

I must mention, as I did last year and this year, and will continue to mention, the inspection fees. The Government is going ahead with three cents a hundredweight charged for inspection fees this year. By the year 1990, it will be 15 cents a hundredweight. That is very short-sighted. There was a unanimous resolution passed a couple of weeks ago in Prince Edward Island. That resolution was passed by the good Liberal Government in Prince Edward Island and the opposition Members, the few Tories who are left down there. They themselves agreed there should not be potato inspection fees. I am sure the Minister of Agriculture—I do not know about the Minister of Finance—would have received a copy of that. The resolution asks the Government to act expeditiously to abolish those inspection fees which never should have been imposed in the first place. I have always believed, and always will to my grave, as this Bill is going to its grave today, that the inspection is a protection for the consumer and the cost of it should not be put on the backs of the producers.

I want to say that it is a sad day, I think, that we are winding up the debate on third reading of this Bill which would have given a lot of hope to the agricultural community in my province, but it has been given the death knell. It is now going to its final resting place until after the next election when, hopefully, we will be able to revive it. When we get a good government back in power, we will be able to revive Canagrex and some other good programs and policies which this Government has thrown out.

Other speakers have mentioned that Canagrex did not really have a fair chance having been only nine months in operation. The Government continues to throw the baby out with the bathwater and it will pay for that mistake when the next election rolls around.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, when many people think about southwestern Ontario it signifies to them automobiles and automobile parts. However, southwestern Ontario is also a major agricultural area. Many people do not realize that more wheat is grown, for example, in southwestern Ontario than in the entire Province of Manitoba. It is a major producer of corn. Southwestern Ontario, especially the Country of Essex, is also a major source of cash crops such as tomatoes, beans and so on. Not only is agriculture a major source of economic activity in terms of the growing of products, but thousands of people earn their living by working in factories which process agricultural products, particularly cash crops like tomatoes.

In my area we have major plants operated by Green Giant and by Heinz, and I can mention many other companies of that sort, which produce many thousands of jobs for Canadians.

There was a lot of interest in the Canagrex concept in my area and there is a lot of sadness at this point in time because of the way in which this foolish Conservative Government choked off and is killing Canagrex just as it was getting going in a way which could have been very beneficial to the farmers of southwestern Ontario and the thousands of people who work in the companies which process the agricultural products of our region. The concept of Canagrex was that it was going to assist Canadian producers of non-grain commodities with export sales. Assistance to producers would include the promotion, development and enhancement of Canadian agricultural products around the world. Canada is one of the major producers of food. It is one of the few countries which produces enough food so that it can export food to the rest of the world. That does not mean that all the opportunities for export of Canadian food products, both unprocessed and processed, have already been identified or seized.

The previous Liberal Government received advice that there were opportunities for further sales of Canadian agricultural products, both processed and unprocessed, which were being overlooked and missed through not having an organization operating in the way in which Canagrex was intended to operate. It was argued, and there was strong evidence to support the argument, especially when it came to smaller manufacturers of food products and individual farm groups or farmers, that there were opportunities we were not able to take advantage of and, as a result, the potential for incomes from exports for our farmers and food manufacturers and the resultant jobs were being lost. This was the case not only with respect to those countries where there was a market system but also countries which were essentially based on the concept of state trading. These countries had more confidence in deals where there was involvement of the Government of the exporting country. With the killing of Canagrex, these opportunities will be lost. That is why there is tremendous sadness in my area, throughout Ontario and in much of Canada in the agricultural sector. It is a foolish and short sighted action of the Conservative Government in killing the concept of Canagrex.

At the time Canagrex was first proposed, there was concern among certain people and organizations in the agricultural sector that Canagrex was going to supplant and take the place of activities already being carried out by private sector entities.

The previous Government went to great lengths, not only to assure people that this would not be the case, but to modify and tailor the Canagrex concept to ensure that Canagrex would help fill gaps and help the Canadian private agricultural sector to take advantage of opportunities which would otherwise be lost if there was no entity in place like Canagrex. Certainly, by the time the Bill was adopted by Parliament, the private sector connected with agriculture largely, although perhaps not entirely, had come to agree with the Government that there was a need for Canagrex, that there was a gap in filling the potential for exports of agricultural products, both processed and unprocessed, and that Canagrex was there not to supplant but to help the private sector. This I think was proven by the fact that outstanding private sector executives were willing to accept appointments to the positions of operating heads of Canagrex. More important, it was proven by the fact that outstanding representatives of the private sector in agriculture, both from producer groups and from some manufacturing companies, were willing to accept appointments to the Board of Canagrex to help direct its work and ensure that it carried out its mandate.

I do not think people of this calibre would have accepted these appointments if they were not convinced that there was a valid role for Canagrex to play, a role which was not being carried out by any other entity or that would not be carried out by any other entity in the future. I am given to understand that at the time that funding for Canagrex was removed by the Government and it was killed de facto pending this legislation there were deals that were about to be put in place, deals which were being booked, that could have brought in some $100 million more in exports of Canadian agricultural products abroad. If that was the case only within the first few months of its existence, imagine what could have been accomplished if, instead of being killed, Canagrex had been supported and encouraged by the Government responding to the responsible voices of agriculture in my region and across the country. That has not happened. The Government has put narrow inward-looking ideology ahead of common sense. It has put narrow, inward-looking ideology ahead of seeking practical opportunities to help Canadian agriculture find new and additional markets outside of the country.

As a result of the passage of this legislation we will see not only sadness expressed on the part of the Canadian agricultural sector but we know that there will be missed opportunities for this sector which would have been to the benefit of the Canadian economy if this Bill had not been presented and if Canagrex had been supported and allowed to flourish and grow.

When the Bill to dissolve Canagrex was first introduced by the Conservatives in September of 1985, they said that resources would be made available to External Affairs to continue the work of Canagrex. It would appear that that has not been the case. We have looked long and hard in the Estimates for External Affairs for 1985, 1986 and 1987. We find that there are no funds to carry out this so-called commitment. This is just one more broken promise to add to the ever growing and lengthening list of broken promises made by this foolish Conservative Government. The Government said that if Canagrex was dissolved, the money that would otherwise have been spent in support of it would be there and that External Affairs, through its external trade component, would be carrying out its work and nothing would be lost. But the money is not there. The work is not being carried out. Thus the opportunity for better incomes for Canadian farmers and more jobs in food processing for workers in my area is lost.

What else does this failure of the Conservatives to carry out their promise to provide funds through the Estimates for External Affairs to carry on the work of Canagrex in a different form mean? It is further proof that the Government lacks credibility. It is further proof that the Government, in spite of its lip service, is not really committed to agriculture, at least not to the important agricultural sector of my region, as well as to areas like Prince Edward Island. The riding of the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) comes to mind in this respect. It also means that in the area of trade the Government is showing its foolishness in terms of not wanting to be creative in order to protect and to create overseas markets. This is not only another move to be added to the long list of broken promises. It must also be added to the long list of foolish actions taken by the Government which are hurting the best interests of the country. There was the sell-out of Canada on shakes and shingles. There was the sell-out of Canada on softwood lumber. There was the sell-out of Canada when it came to our dealings with France on the fishery. Added to this black record there is the sell-out of agriculture in my region when it comes to killing the opportunities that were there and which could have been dealt with through the support of Canagrex.

It may be that for the time being the Conservative majority will blindly march into this place to support the Government in terms of carrying out its blind commitment to narrow, inward-looking ideology in place of common sense and in place of support for Canadian agriculture in general, and, in particular, agriculture in my area. The Bill may well pass. But we will make sure that the farmers and the workers in the food processing sector in the country, in particular those in my region, will not forget this foolish, narrow, inward-looking move. We will make sure that they remember, so that when it comes time to vote in the next election one of the reasons the Government will be thrown out of office and massively defeated will be the way it killed Canagrex before it had a chance to do the job that the farmers and the workers in the food processing plants in my region wanted it to do in their interests.

This foolish Conservative Government has been working against the interests of agriculture in my area, just as it has been working against the interests of the automobile and other manufacturing sectors. The people of my area will not forget. No matter if the Conservatives use their majority to get this Bill through the House or do not, the Canadian people, particularly those in my region, will have their say in terms of what they think of this decision when they vote en masse against the Government and throw it out of office after the next election.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there questions or comments?

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) care to make any comparisons between the Government's action with respect to Canagrex and its apparent flip-flop with respect to the implementation of a national tobacco agency, which is one of the promises it made in the last election campaign? We permitted the Bill to go through the House and yet the agency is still not in place.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I am glad my hon. friend reminded me of this matter. This was another promise made to one sector of the agriculture area in southwestern Ontario. If the Conservatives have some good reason to break this promise why do they not come into the House and come clean and say that they will not proceed with it?

Mr. Benjamin: Another sacred trust.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): My hon. friend says—was it a secret trust or a sacred trust?

Mr. Benjamin: Both.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): It is both secret and sacred. It is a broken one at that. What will members of the Government say to the growers in the area of Delhi and Norfolk County about this promise? That promise is gone; it has been broken. As my hon. friend said, in the closing days of Parliament before the last election special efforts were made to add to our farm marketing law the opportunity to have a marketing agency in that sector.

There are those who would argue that there may be reasons why that is no longer sensible. There are those who would argue instead that now is really the time to have such an agency since that sector is under pressure and it may well need to restructure. But what has happened to it? I ask that in light of the fact that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) is from southern Ontario. He should have been the one standing up in Cabinet pounding on the table saying: "No. Canagrex is a good idea. I know we said that Canagrex should go, but it is a mistake. I want you to listen to the farmers of my area". Where was he? He was silent. Was he asleep or scared? I do not know. But when it came time to speak up for agriculture in my area he was not there.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Benjamin: No! It is four o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Mr. Wise, seconded by Mr. Weiner, moves that Bill C-2, an Act to dissolve Canagrex and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be now read the third time and passed.

• (1600)

Mr. Benjamin: It was four o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour—

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Carried on division.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. With the utmost respect that I have for you—and I do not think anybody else has more respect for you than I have—there are those who argue that when you got to your feet it was actually four o'clock. In addition to that, when you called for—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Fine, fine.

It being four o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--MOTIONS

PUBLIC SERVICE

PROTECTION OF WHISTLEBLOWERS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of introducing legislation to protect federal public servants, employees of Crown corporations, employees in businesses regulated by federal law and employees of businesses contracting with the federal government who report, in a written or oral communication, a violation or suspected violation of any law, rule or regulation, or mismanagement, a gross waste of funds, an abuse of authority, or a substantial and specific danger to public health or safety, from being discharged, threatened or otherwise discriminated against with respect to the terms or conditions of his employment unless the employee knows that the report is false and providing that the employee who alleges any such violation, may bring a civil action for appropriate injunctive relief, actual damages or both, within 90 days after the occurrence of the alleged violation.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate Your Honour's fine reading of the motion before the House. I also appreciate the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park (Mr. Witer) having seconded it.

As all Hon. Members of the House know, the motion before us is something which is known to most people as whistleblowers legislation or a proposal for whistleblowers legislation. That type of legislation is aimed at protecting employees who tell the public of improper practices or improper conduct carried out on behalf of their employers. As we all know, it is a very dangerous thing to do. It can cause great problems for employees who have the courage to blow the whistle or to tell the public of problems about which they learn in the course of their employment.

Of course it can result in employees being branded as trouble-makers, as malcontents, or as publicity seekers. However, worse than that, it may well mean that an employee is fired or transferred to some other department or part of the business. He could be demoted, isolated by other employees or by the boss, blacklisted, harassed, or intimidated. There are all sorts of retaliation which takes place when an employee in fact speaks out and reveals something publicly which his or her employer has done that will cause a problem for the public.

The motion is aimed at getting at the problem of protecting employees in such situations. It is not a problem which is unknown to Members of the House, nor is it unknown to you, Mr. Speaker. You are well aware of a variety of cases in which this sort of activity has come to the attention of the public and has raised concern in the public mind.

I suppose the classic cases are those in the United States. I am thinking, first of all, of the Firestone Tire case in 1973 where a senior employee of the company discovered that there were flaws in one type of tire it manufactured. He advised his employer of the fact that he knew there would be problems. In fact, the employer ignored the advice and censured him. Later, as we all know, there were massive problems as a result with tire blow-outs on automobiles in the United States which caused a number of deaths and a number of injuries. There were lawsuits and replacement tires had to be issued by the company. A great deal of money was involved. Most serious of all was the deaths of a number of people resulting from the fact that the particular person who wanted to blow the whistle was unable to do so in an effective way.

Similarly, there was the classic case with asbestos. It has now been documented that since the 1930s workers in asbestos companies were aware of the health hazards caused by asbestos and that in fact it was not made public. There was the case of a medical consultant with an asbestos company who, when he warned about health hazards with asbestos, was actually fired from his employment.

In addition, we are aware of the Hooker Chemical Company and the Hooker Chemical case. That was the company which gave us the Love Canal, the Hyde Park chemical dump, the S-Area chemical dump, and the 102nd Street dump in the Niagara frontier of the United States. The Hooker Chemical Company knew, as a result of its employees, that it was polluting underground water in California through toxic pesticides. However, it kept it quiet until suddenly the Love Canal situation burst on the world and we all became aware of the great health hazards involved.

In Canada there has been a number of cases as well. The ones which come to mind occurred recently, such as the Ad Varma case in Canada Post. This man indicated that he had information and knowledge that millions and millions of Canadian taxpayers' dollars were being wasted in Canada Post by mismanagement or improper management. He made it public, and of course he was fired.

When he was reinstated, the Government which had a hand in reinstating him was accused of political interference. It was accused of political interference in reinstating an employee who was trying to do a public duty and trying to prevent his employer from wasting millions and millions of dollars.

Even more recent was the example in the City of Ottawa. I am referring to John Quigley in the Department of Immigration. Members of the House are familiar with that case. I understand that the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration is investigating the matter.

Mr. Quigley was fired for telling the public—and I understand for in fact telling the Minister—that in order to get rid of the refugee backlog, known criminals were being invited to apply for landed immigrant status because discretionary powers were granted to immigration officials to deal with the situation. Because he blew the whistle in that case by telling the public and the Minister, he was fired by senior officials. We are now into an investigation of the problem by the standing committee.

The problem is not a new one. It has been around for a long time. Of course, the difficulty is what sort of protection there is for this type of individual who has enough courage to get up in public and try to protect the public. There is very little, if any, protection in the law as it now stands. There have been some attempts to correct the situation.

In January 1985 a task force of the Association of Professional Engineers of Ontario recommended that there be legislation to protect professional engineers in such cases. In July 1986, just last year, the Ontario Law Reform Commission called for legislation to protect Ontario civil servants in such cases.

Recently we debated Bill C-229 in the House. It was an Act to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act, the Canada Labour Code, and the Public Service Employment Act, to deal with the whistleblowing situation in the public sector. Of course my motion goes beyond the public sector. It deals with the private sector as well to the extent that it is possible within federal jurisdiction.

• (1610)

In many American states, there is already legislation protecting whistleblowers. There are some forms of whistleblower legislation in the States of California, Connecticut, Illinois, Kansas, Louisiana, Michigan, Ohio, Oregon, Maine, New York and Rhode Island. The courts in the States of California, Connecticut, Indiana, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Oregon, Pennsylvania and West Virginia have banned retaliatory firings in cases of whistleblowers. Unfortunately, we do not have that sort of protection in Canada.

All of us in the House have at one time or another called for open Government and for an openness in dealing with public dangers and hazards. Surely that is what this motion is all about. It is about trying to protect the public, and it is inconceivable to me, Mr. Speaker, as I know it is inconceivable to you, that in this day and age, Hon. Members would not want to do everything in their power to protect their constituents. I urge all Hon. Members to support this motion and to see that it passes so that the Government can introduce legislation for the protection of whistleblowers in Canada.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I too have a motion before the House on the establishment of whistleblower legislation and I am glad to be able to support this resolution on the same subject. Indeed, I hope it can come to a vote and that the Government will take account of the feelings of the House and will bring in whistleblower legislation in short order.

From the thought I have given the subject and the discussions I have had on it around the country, I have no doubt myself that it is an idea whose time has come. Canadians, as are people in other democracies referred to by the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway), are indignant when they find that a person who, in their opinion, in editorial opinion and in media opinion, is performing a public service has been fired or charged with an offence under Section 114 of the Criminal Code on the grounds of breach of the duties of a public servant.

While the Hon. Member for York East was speaking, I was thinking not of the cases he mentioned which have occurred in other countries nor was I thinking of the Quigley case. I was thinking of the Richard Price case. In that case, a Canadian official, during the term of this Conservative Government, was working in the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs at a time the Minister was reassuring the Indian communities of Canada that no cut-backs were being planned in Indian programs. At that time, Richard Price and his fellow workers had been assigned by the Minister and the Government to prepare cut-backs in the budget for programs of the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs. Mr. Price, who was a highly principled man and a lay clergyman, got in touch with the head of his religious order in British Columbia and had some consultations with him about how he could square his duty under the Criminal Code and his normal master-servant common-law duty, which is also very clearly defined, with his sense that there was a higher public interest to be served by going public.

In this case, Richard Price went public. He gave his information to a Member of Parliament who raised it here in the House of Commons and across the country. The public servant was suspended and charges were laid against him by the Attorney General of Canada. Then there was a big public outcry in this House and elsewhere in which I was involved on behalf of our Party. In the end, the Attorney General backed off and did not proceed with charges.

There is a balance that must be achieved. I have been a Minister of the Crown and I hope to be one again. I would like to see us move on reforms with which we can live. I think the general duty of a public servant to respect his undertakings of confidence and loyalty to his employer, the Government, not the larger sense of the Canadian people at large, must be real. Again, while the Hon. Member for York East was speaking, I was thinking of a situation I experienced which Hon. Members might find enlightening.

While I was Solicitor General, I received a letter from a corporation that owned an island off the coast of Canada, and I will not be any more specific than that. This corporation was closing down an industrial operation on that island and had the idea that it might make a good prison colony. Canada does not have prison colonies. A prison colony is a place where inmates and free people together go to live in a community. There is some measure of surveillance, but the people who are serving time basically act like the other people and interact with the other people. Those who are serving time can hold regular jobs and can live with their families. In other words, it is an interesting idea that has not been part of the Canadian tradition.

I wanted to give the matter some thought. One of the first things I was advised about by my political advisers was the political aspects of the matter. We were worried on the one hand that some Canadians would say we wanted to set up a Siberia in Canada while, on the other hand, others might say that we wanted to set up a paradise island where inmates could live with their families rather than being punished for having committed crimes. I wanted to think my way through the problem, but I also wanted some time to decide what position I could take with respect to my colleagues in Cabinet, what position we could advocate.

If, during my consideration of the matter, a member of my Department had felt free to go to the media to reveal the story that the Minister was thinking about establishing a Siberia or thinking about establishing a paradise island for inmates, I would not have been able to respond properly to the idea. That is only one example showing why a balance is needed. There are thousands of examples, some more sensitive than others, proving that a Minister should be able to count on the discretion of his or her officials and should not feel that the officials will go around thinking that while they work for the Government, they also work for the taxpayers and they had better warn the taxpayers about certain things.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for York East, has come up with a pretty good list of exceptions, cases in which officials should feel entitled to go public and to be protected. Obviously a good case is when a crime is being planned or committed. Another good case is when there is a danger to public health, public safety or the environment. As well, it is possible that a Minister could lie in the House, as occurred in the General Belgrano case. In that case, a Minister of the Crown in Great Britain said the reason the armed forces shot the General Belgrano was that it was approaching their theatre of war, while in fact all the records of the department showed that the General Belgrano was leaving the area of conflict and therefore there was no excuse for shooting it. This aggravated the war and resulted in the loss of lives. Such a case, which I am sure my friend would add to his list, would be a good one as well.

Just before I conclude, I want to deal with another dimension of the problem, and that is the sanctions that should be available to the Government for a government employee who improperly blows the whistle. I wonder why the Crown requires the protection of the Criminal Code in so many cases. If an official blows the whistle when he should not have, why does the Government not use the ordinary remedies open to an employer whose employee is in breach of his duties? Why does the Government not simply fire the employee, demote him, dock his pay or put a black mark on his performance record? The sanctions available to the Crown are pretty dramatic. Fourteen years in prison is too great a sanction for an employer to have, even if it is the Government, in order to force employees to toe the line and comply with the duties attached to their employment. I am not saying there are not certain areas where blowing the whistle improperly or going public improperly could cause a disaster. For example, an official giving secrets to a foreign power that would use them against Canada is a good example of where Criminal Code sanctions should apply. However, in this case it is broader than it needs to be. I would like to see a whistleblower law, but not the way some states have it where an official can go public when it is in the "public interest" to do so. That just gives the problem to the courts, and I do not think that is an appropriate way for legislators to deal with the problem.

My third point is that we should have sanctions which are more like those that a normal employer has when an employee steps out of line.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to say a few words in support of this resolution. I think the notion of having legislation to cover those people who speak out in the public interest when their organization is doing something wrong, or contrary to the public interest, is an idea whose time has come.

When an organization, whether it be government or private, is threatening people's health or safety, wasting public resources, or breaking the law, people who work for those organizations should have the right to blow the whistle, so to speak, so that the public is informed about what is going on. When I say "blow the whistle", that brings to mind the image of a policeman, a cop. What we are really looking for here is a citizen cop who can make a citizen's arrest when organizations are operating contrary to the public interest. We have had examples in Canada where it would have been worthwhile to have legal protection in place for someone who is willing to speak out. We all know that there is pressure to fall in line, and that includes legal sanctions. It takes a great deal of courage for someone to speak out. If a law is being broken, then someone should be able to speak out about it and be protected when doing so. There was the example of Ad Varma, who worked for the Post Office. He said millions of dollars were being wasted and spoke out about it. He lost his job as a result. The newly-elected Government took another look at that case and decided he had been unfairly treated and should be given his job back. In fact, an investigation was made into his claims. The outcome was not entirely satisfactory in that the report says that the investigators were not really able to determine whether his claims were accurate. Perhaps more facts about that case will come out in the future, who knows?

There have been examples in the auto industry involving safety. People have had knowledge that a car their company produced was unsafe. I remember one gentleman who waited until he retired before he spoke out. He lived for years with this knowledge, and of course people died in the interim. Therefore the time has come to strike a new balance between responsibility to the public and responsibility to the organization you work for.

In the case of Government, obviously there has to be confidentiality in order for Government to function and develop policy. We all have a lot of experience in this city with government documents being leaked, and it does not seem possible for a Government to keep anything confidential. It always ends up in the public arena before the Government wants it there. There has to be a balance between the need for secrecy in Government and the need to provide some protection for those willing to speak out when the public interest has been severely breached. That applies whether it is a law being broken or whether it involves people's health and safety. That is where we need to strike a new balance so that people who are willing to speak out can be given some protection.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I just wish to say that I support this motion, because it is about time we provide protection for employees who have the courage to indicate that their organization is acting in a way that is detrimental to the public interest. It is necessary to balance this protection with the organization's need for confidentiality. Now is the time to find a new balance.

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak to this motion I would like to thank the Hon. Member from York East (Mr. Redway) for this expression of his concern for the rights of Canadian workers. I share his concern, and I am eager to support any measure that would improve the safety of Canadian workplaces and the accountability of employers in the federal jurisdiction.

I will limit my comments to the safety and health implications of the motion, for I am very concerned about the appalling losses of life and property caused by industrial accidents. As you may know, Mr. Speaker, every year in this country about 1,000 workers die and many more are seriously injured because of workplace accidents and employment-related illnesses. In addition to the pain and suffering that result, these accidents and illnesses take some $14 billion out of the economy in the form of lost wages, lost production, equipment damage, and workers' compensation payments. If the Hon. Member's motion represented even a partial solution to this serious problem I would gladly support it.

Unfortunately, I fear that the action suggested by this motion would not offer such a solution. In fact, it might reduce the efficiency of existing procedures under the Canada Labour Code for preventing potentially hazardous working conditions. It might even create an atmosphere of confrontation and hostility in certain workplaces, which would be both contrary to the goals and policies of this Government and itself a threat to workplace safety.

The Hon. Member's motion is intended to protect workers who resort to a practice known in labour affairs circles as "whistle blowing". The phrase implies that, if an employee knows that his or her employer is engaging in illegal, unscrupulous, or dangerous practices, he or she is not obliged to meekly go along with a course of action that is wrong, but may instead "blow the whistle"—that is, inform the authorities or the general public through the news media and thus help end the abuse.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, the responsiblity of the law-abiding citizen to defend the public good does supersede the employee's loyalty to an unscrupulous employer.

But there are ways already provided in law for employees to report irregularities without inviting retaliatory action from the employer.

The majority of workers under federal jurisdiction belong to unions, and a union can bring strong pressure to bear on a delinquent employer. In most cases, a concerned worker would be best advised to inform his or her union of any irregularities such as are foreseen in this motion and rely on the established practices of the industrial relations system to correct the matter. The employee who complained would remain anonymous and so need not fear retaliation. Where safety and health are concerned, both unionized and non-unionized workers are protected by provisions of the Canada Labour Code that guarantee the right to refuse dangerous work.

Let me briefly describe what happens under present legislation when an employee believes that his or her employer is in violation of safety and health regulations or engaging in practices that could create, in the Hon. Member's words, "a substantial and specific danger to public health or safety". Section 85 of the Canada Labour Code states that, if an employee has reasonable cause to believe that a particular work process or condition could be dangerous to himself or any other employee, the employee has the right to refuse to do the work, without being subject to any disciplinary action or discriminatory treatment because of the refusal.

In certain cases, these conditions could have public safety implications. For example, a truck driver required to drive in excess of the maximum hours permissible under the Code may pose a threat to employee and public safety. There are established steps that must be taken when an employee refuses to do dangerous work. First, the employee must inform the employer of the refusal to work and the reasons for it, and also report the incident to the workplace safety and health committee or representative. Second, the employer must then investigate the condition, along with the safety and health representative or a member of the committee. Third, if the condition is not corrected to the employee's satisfaction, a Canada Safety officer is to be called in to investigate the complaint. Fourth, if the employee is still not satisfied that the condition is safe or has been corrected, the matter may be referred to the Canada Labour Relations Board for adjudication.

Throughout this procedure, the employee is protected from dismissal or discriminatory treatment for refusing to work in dangerous conditions. The Canada Labour Relations Board has the authority to make the employer reinstate an employee who has been dismissed for this reason, rescind any disciplinary action, and repay any wages the employee may have lost because of the employer's discriminatory action.

Furthermore, under Section 72 of the Canada Labour Code, an employee who complains to the Minister of Labour about any irregular working conditions imposed by the employer may request that his or her identity be kept secret. Clearly, a worker who chooses, instead, to blow the whistle on his or her employer by reporting abuses to the news media cannot expect to remain anonymous. In short, Mr. Speaker, the intent of the Hon. Member's motion, insofar as it concerns circumstances under the purview of the Canada Labour Code, is already being adequately met by the existing legislation.

Furthermore, the measures recommended in the motion, if adopted by this House, could potentially disrupt the Government's whole approach to ensuring workplace safety and health. This Government takes very seriously its responsibility to improve the safety and health of Canadian workplaces. Over the past year it has implemented a coordinated policy to ensure that employers and employees comply with the occupational safety and health regulations that have been drafted into law.

Fundamental to this compliance policy is the recognition that occupational safety and health is the joint responsibility of employers and employees. Mandatory joint safety and health committees have been established because we believe that, whatever their differences at the bargaining table, employers and employees have a common interest in making their workplaces safer and thus more productive. We do not assume that all employers are angels, and the policy does provide for swift and strong action against an employer when warranted.

But we do give employers credit for acting responsibly in this area of common concern, and we recognize that it is the people who work in an establishment, employers and employees together, who are best able to ensure the safety and health of that establishement. Only an atmosphere of co-operation will help ensure safer workplaces and a less secretive management.

The measures proposed in the Hon. Member's motion, on the contrary, would foster an adversarial approach, which I believe is in no one's interest. The potential is there for a few disgruntled employees to make frivolous disclosures inspired by spite rather than commitment to public good, and this could discredit many others whose concerns are well-founded.

Equally dangerous, complex issues involving interpretation of the law might end up being debated in the news media, with all the inaccuracies and confusions that would inevitably result. So, by encouraging public disclosures rather than co-operative problem solving, the procedures recommended in this motion may well result in a hardening of attitudes that would work against a speedy resolution of problems in the workplace.

This could only result in more confrontation, less co-operation, less sharing of information on safety and health matters, and therefore greater secrecy and suspicion and a more dangerous working environment for Canadians.

For all of these reasons I recommend that all Hon. Members reject this well-intentioned but ill-conceived motion.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of attention to the remarks of my hon. colleagues on the Bill introduced by the man we call Mr. Redway. I prefer to use his name as we see it here.

• (1630)

[English]

Members always say that they did not intend to participate and will not be long, but end up talking extensively. However, I will try to make the shortest speech of my 23-year career.

I favour this Bill. I hope that all my colleagues will indicate whether they favour the Bill, object to it, or would like to have it referred to the appropriate committee where the subject matter can be discussed. I am sure that the Hon. Member who moved the motion would be prepared to change it after having listened to the remarks today.

My hon. colleague, the Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan), has put on the record his views in favour of the motion. I do not wish to repeat what he or the Hon. Member for York East said. I favour the Bill. I see nothing wrong with studying it further in committee. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have participated so briefly. I believe that my colleagues, too, should speak briefly and allow the motion to be sent to the appropriate committee for further study, amendment and action.

[Translation]

Mr. Louis Plamondon (Richelieu): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak concerning motion M-92, proposed by the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway).

Basically, the motion calls upon the Government to consider the advisability of introducing legislation to protect federal public servants, employees of Crown corporations, employees in businesses regulated by the federal Government and employees of businesses contracting with the federal Government from being discharged, threatened or otherwise discriminated against for having reported legal violations, mismanagement or other wrongdoings on the part of their employers. The motion further stipulates that the employee should have the right to bring a civil action for appropriate injunctive relief or damages in cases where he or she is made to suffer for his or her disclosure.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that this motion seeks to achieve a number of desirable goals. At least in its principle in our society, and in an age when many persons distrust large and powerful organizations. The lone employee who risks his or her job in order to bring abuses and wrongdoing to light has taken on the status of a hero.

Indeed, such disclosures often play an important role in maintaining integrity and efficiency in business and government. However, Mr. Speaker, I find I must strongly oppose this motion. For no matter how commendable may be the sentiment that inspired it, it is seriously flawed because it is too sweeping, too general, and too vague, and because it fails to take into account a great many realities and factors in the areas of labour law and of employer-employee relations.

In short, it seems to me that the full repercussions of these proposed measures have not been sufficiently identified. Or considered. In the first place, human nature being as it is, it is obvious that not all disclosures are necessarily motivated by high ideals. Frivolous disclosures inspired by reasons other than commitment to the public good can and do occur, and may well be in nobody's best interest.

Mr. Speaker, when we examine this motion in detail rather than dwelling on the overall principle that inspired it, its flaws become clearly evident. For instance, the motion mentions disclosure of "mismanagement", as well as disclosure of legal violations. Now, Mr. Speaker, a legal violation may be determined by referring to definitions contained in law. But what exactly is mismanagement? When does a waste of funds become "gross"? What exactly is an abuse of authority? One person's mismanagement is another's reasonable decision. What one person sees as an abuse of authority may appear as firm, decisive action to another.

This brings me, Mr. Speaker, to another serious problem with this resolution. It is proposed that employees who make such disclosures shall enjoy protection "unless the employee knows that the report is false." Who would bear the onus of proving that the employee knew the report was false? Could any employee who wishes to discredit an employer avail himself of this provision? In many cases, disclosures may be based on half-truths and partial information. The employee may happen to see a document proposing a course of action that would in fact have been illegal but which, unknown to the employee, had been rejected in a subsequent decision. Could such an employee not honestly claim that he did not know his report was false? If the employee's disclosures were reported in the media, subsequent corrections and retractions would, in fact, do little to repair the damage caused by the initial publicity. Which brings me, Mr. Speaker, to an unjustified assumption upon which this entire motion seems based, namely, that the media will in all cases accurately assess the credibility of a disclosure and report the pertinent facts in a just and even-handed manner, and that the significance of a particular fact or event will be reported in context.

It should also be noted, Mr. Speaker, that the proposed measure could lead to serious problems for employees as well. Employees who unknowingly cause a false report to be published in the media might be protected from dismissal, but they would not necessarily be protected from a libel action by employers.

The provisions of this motion would affect roughly 900,000 persons in the federal Public Service, and in industries and Crown corporations regulated by the Canada Labour Code, but would also apply to "employees of businesses contracting with the federal Government".

Also, Mr. Speaker, since the provinces have jurisdiction over labour law in most enterprises in Canada, it can safely be assumed that many or most of the businesses contracting with the federal Government are under provincial labour jurisdiction, including construction firms, almost all forms of manufacturing, and many forms of service industry. Yet, according to the terms of this motion, the Parliament of Canada would be assuming the right to regulate an aspect of employer-employee relationships within these enterprises. For this reason, Mr. Speaker, I have serious misgivings as to whether this particular provision of the motion, if enacted, would even be constitutional.

In respect to labour relations, this motion ignores another important reality, namely, the privacy of the collective bargaining system as a preferred and viable way to achieve realistic solutions to workplace problems. Intrinsic to this principle is the fact that group rights, with certain caveats, take precedence over individual rights. This means that the locus of responsibility for workplace problems primarly rests with the duly elected representatives of workers—union officials. These officials are expected to, and in fact are required to—pursuant to the duty of fair representation requirements of Section 136.1 of part V—act faithfully and fairly on behalf of the employees they represent.

This would clearly include a responsibility to respond to the kinds of problems detailed in the Hon. Member's motion. It would not necessarily, however, involve a rather kneejerk public disclosure of the alleged problem. This is so because the collective bargaining system rightfully recognizes that with few exceptions the most meaningful forum within which to address and resolve such problems is either the bargaining table during the open period of collective agreements or by ongoing dialogues with management during the term of agreements. It should be stressed that disputes arising during the term of agreements can, where impasses occur, be resolved through the grievance/arbitration system, as the previous speaker said.

Mr. Speaker, this motion, when examined in detail, proves to be ill-conceived, vague, overly general, and basically counter-productive. That is why I urge this House to vote against its adoption.

[English]

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate on a motion introduced by the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway), a member for whom I have a great deal of respect.

This matter was given a thorough airing in this Chamber only some six weeks ago, on the second reading of a Bill which was introduced by another colleague, the Hon. Member for Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington (Mr. Vankoughnet). The Bill was aimed at providing sanctions to help prevent public sector employers from discharging employees in retaliation for reporting, or blowing the whistle, on serious misconduct by their employers. Bill C-229 called for amendments to the Canada Labour Code, the Canadian Human Rights Act, and the Public Service Employment Act.

The motion we are debating today, if adopted, would have the Government consider the advisability of introducing legislation to protect a wide range of employees, including those in the federal Public Service, Crown corporations, the transportation and communications sectors, and those employees of companies which contract with the federal Government. As you will appreciate, this is a huge number of people, so huge that I dare say no Member of the House, and certainly not myself, could tell you today what that number is.

These people would be employees of organizations that are very different in size and mandate. They vary enormously also in the amount of influence they might have on the daily lives of ordinary Canadians. At one end of the spectrum we would have the federal Public Service, the largest employer in Canada, with approximately 230,000 employees across the country. At the other end, we could conceivably have small businesses, perhaps consisting of no more than a few employees. The motion proposes that these people be afforded special protection from a variety of sanctions when they report on such things as perceived violations of the law, alleged mismanagement, possible gross waste of funds, or abuses of authority.

I would like to look back for a moment to Bill C-229. Its purpose was to provide sanctions for those who might retaliate against whistleblowers. As one way of looking at these two approaches, we might say that one could take a punitive approach, and as the other, a protective approach. It would seem to me that the latter, the protective approach, would be more in keeping with modern human resource management if, indeed, new protective measures are actually warranted.

Bill C-229 proposed amendments to legislation. This motion, on the other hand, envisages a new piece of legislation. No one needs to be reminded that Acts of Parliament have a habit of spawning regulations, regulations spawn policies, and policies lead to directives, which in turn call for interpretation, updates, monitoring and administration until, inevitably, they spawn their own bureaucracy to oversee everything.

During the debate in this Chamber in January on Bill C-229, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State made what I think is a very important point in relation to the experience to date since the Civil Service Reform Act was passed in the United States in 1978. This U.S. Act provides protections such as those envisaged in Bill C-229. The Parliamentary Secretary made his point in the form of a question, and I think that question is crucial to the debate on this motion as well. He asked: "What are the motives of the whistleblowers?" This nagging question has been asked many times in the United States since the passage of its protective legislation. I think Hon. Members must ask themselves that question before we proceed further in our review of this motion.

Authorities on the whistleblowing phenomenon have noted that whistleblowing can be a defensive mechanism on the part of employees who are already under threat of disciplinary action for reasons unrelated to the alleged misconduct. In other words, public servants about to be discharged for unsatisfactory work performance could seek to protect themselves by accusing superior officers of misconduct. Whistleblowing can also result from personal or organizational conflicts, again unrelated to the alleged misconduct complained of. What about employees using this blanket protection to embarrass the Government of the day for personal partisan political reasons? It seems to me that the potential for abuse is very significant.

Hon. Members will see from these serious concerns just what a complex issue this is. Its very complexity is reflected in the infinite variety of circumstances in each instance, affecting and influencing the actions of each individual whistleblower. What of those who blow the whistle using proper existing internal procedures, alerting superior officers or senior management so that appropriate action can be taken? I think it is clear that it is virtually impossible to subject all these organizations, all their people and all circumstances to the rule of rigid law and regulations, rigidly prescribed and rigidly enforced.

Hon. Members will know that there is already in place legislation which deals with the abuse of authority and responsibility by public servants at all levels. Section 110(1)(c) of the Criminal Code, for instance, makes it an offence for any official or employee of the Public Service to demand, accept or offer, or to agree to accept from a person dealing with the Government, any reward, advantage or benefit, either directly or indirectly, through anyone else, for his or her own benefit without appropriate authorization. There are sanctions in place now to prevent, avert or penalize proven dishonourable conduct, criminal actions, waste, extravagance, discrimination or abuse of trust.

Standards of conduct have been in place since 1973 and many departments have their codes of discipline to deal with misconduct. There is, as you know, Mr. Speaker, a code of conduct and conflict of interest guidelines for public servants, much like those which apply to elected public office holders. Parliament has already seen fit to pass legislation in the context of the federal Public Service which is designed to prevent abuses and protect employees. The Public Service Staff Relations Act is a good example. It applies to about 200,000 public service employees.

That Act allows employees to grieve any perceived injustice or wrongdoing where there is no other recourse provided in law. In some cases, employees may bring their grievances before an independent third party, or even before the courts.

No amount of legislation will prevent some managers from doing what others may call or classify as "wrongdoing". The best that good internal management and legislation can offer is to present the mechanism and opportunity for fair and adequate recourse for the offended party, all the way to an independent third party, if need be. Existing legislation does that now. The Canadian Human Rights Act protects employees from discrimination. The Privacy Act provides a measure of protection as well.

Returning to the Public Service, the personal harassment policy adopted by Treasury Board for all Public Service employees, specifically forbids harassment for any reason whatsoever. It provides a simple and confidential mechanism which allows employees to bring their concerns to the attention of a neutral third party.

The Public Service Commission which is, of course, an independent agency of Parliament, has a staff of investigators who look into cases of impropriety brought to their attention. The Public Service Employment Act provides for a quasi-judicial tribunal known as an appeal board, which is empowered to make rulings on alleged irregularities in connection with the staffing process. The Public Service Commission also has certain powers under the Inquiries Act to investigate allegations of fraud.

Another independent agency of Parliament, the Office of the Auditor General of Canada, has a proven track record of uncovering examples of mismanagement or even fraud. Most departments, in addition, now have in place an effective internal audit mechanism which can advise senior management on these matters.

Any debate on the issue of mismanagement or abuse of power cannot overlook the power of the press in Canada or, indeed, of the power of the Public Service employee unions. Both of these bodies have demonstrated a continuing interest in keeping government employees and public sector organizations, inside the Public Service and beyond, on the straight and narrow, and they have done a very good job indeed.

I respect the Hon. Member's motives in introducing this motion. It is an important and difficult issue, worthy of debate and further discussion. I am a former public servant myself, indeed, I am the only public servant who was elected in the last election. When I joined the Public Service I took an oath of allegiance to Her Majesty, the Queen. I took an oath of secrecy as well. That always meant something to me as a public servant and I think it means a good deal to most public servants. An oath is something which is just that, something sacred and important to all good citizens.

It seems to me that this motion in its present form would undermine the basic obligation to the Crown which all public servants have and the obligation to an employer which any good and dutiful employee has to that employer. There may well be room, from my own point of view, for consideration of whistleblower legislation for a narrow area of public policy. I think particularly of serious environmental dangers or hazards to public health or safety. However, this motion, in my view, is too wide and simply too open to abuse.

EDUCATION

NATIONAL FORUM ON POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to inform the House that the National Forum on Post-Secondary Education will be held in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, from October 25 to October 28. The aim of the forum will be to explore the challenges and opportunities facing Canada's universities and colleges in preparation for the 1990s and the 21st century. Learning is a lifelong process and our institutions must become flexible enough to respond to the differing needs of the 45-year old executive, the 65-year old pensioner, and the 18-year old student fresh from high school. These are formidable challenges and demand the utmost from all involved in post-secondary education.

[Translation]

This Forum will not be a federal event, a provincial event, or even a federal-provincial event. It will be an historic occasion for discussion among informed and concerned Canadians. The role of the governments here is to facilitate such discussions and respond to the issues and concerns that are raised.

[English]

The planning of the forum will be in the hands of a national committee, a group of eminent and respected Canadians from across the country. I am pleased to announce today, together with the Chairman of the Council of Ministers of Education, the Hon. Anthony Brummet, the names of those who will be responsible for organizing the event.

Chairing the National Forum Committee will be Dr. Brian Segal, President of Ryerson Polytechnical Institute. He will be supported by two vice-chairpersons: Dr. Jean-Guy Paquet, Rector of Laval University; and Dr. Sylvia Fedoruk, Chancellor of the University of Saskatchewan. The remaining persons on the steering committee include: Jill Bodkin, Chairman, British Columbia Securities Commission; Adrienne Clarkson, President and Publisher of McClelland and Stewart Publishers; John Evans, Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of Allelix Incorporated; Paul Gallagher, President of Vancouver Community College; Claude Pichette, President, Société d'entraide économique du Quebec; the Hon. Robert L. Stanfield, Chairman, Institute for Research on Public Policy; Geneviève Tanguay, student at Laval University; Ronald Watts, Professor, Political Science, Queen's University; Noel Stoodley, the Canadian Labour Congress.

[Translation]

The complete list of members of the National Forum Committee, which we are releasing today, includes Canadians from all walks of life: students, teachers and administrators from the academic community, and representatives of business, labour, and other interested groups.

[English]

It may well be advisable that I read the list of those who are going to participate because it shows the breadth, depth, and importance of this National Forum. They include: Lise Bissonnette, journalist, Quebec City; Gina Blondin, school teacher and graduate student, University of British Columbia, from the Northwest Territories; Paul Davenport, Vice-Principal, Planning and Computer Services, McGill University; Ronald Duhamel, Professor of Educational Administration, University of Manitoba, Winnipeg; William Dunbar, Vice-President and General Manager, NorthwesTel; Gilbert Finn, Chairman of the Board and Chief Executive Officer, Assumption Mutual Life Insurance Company, Moncton; Graham Flack, student, Dalhousie University, Halifax; Paul Gallagher, President, Vancouver Community College; Thérèse Gouin-Décarie, Professor of Psychology, University of Montreal, Montreal; Ray Hainsworth, Comptroller, Ontario Workers' Occupational and Safety Health Centre; Paul Inchauspe, Director General, CEGEP Ahuntsic; Linda Inkpen, member of the Board of Directors of the Cabot Institute in St. John's, Newfoundland; Anthony Johnstone, Executive Director, Nova Scotia Human Rights Commission; Gordin Kaplan, Professor of Biochemistry and Vice-President, Research, University of Alberta; Muriel Kovitz, Chancellor, University of Calgary; Ian MacDonald, Director of Extension and Summer School, University of Prince Edward Island, Charlottetown; Tony Macerollo, Chairman, Canadian Federation of Students, Ottawa; Andrew MacKay, Ombudsman, Province of Nova Scotia; Colin MacKay, former President, University of New Brunswick; John Panabaker, Chairman, Mutual Life of Canada, Waterloo; Charles Pascal, President, Sir Stanford Fleming Community College, Peterborough; Frank Smith, Co-ordinator, National Educational Association of Disabled Students, Ottawa; Ahab Spence, Teacher of Cree and Indian Studies, University of Regina; John Stoik, former Chief Executive Officer, Gulf Oil Canada, Saskatchewan; David Strangway, President, University of British Columbia, Vancouver; Edward K. Turner, Executive Director, Prairie Pools Inc., Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, Regina; Dorothy Wills, teacher, Vanier College; and Claudia Wright, Associate Professor of Political Science, University of Winnipeg.

I read the entire list because it is important that people understand the representativeness and excellence of the group which will carry on the National Forum.

Members of the House will recall that in the Speech from the Throne last October the Government reaffirmed its commitment to supporting, with the provinces, a system of post-secondary education based on excellence and equality of opportunity. At that time we proposed that a national forum on post-secondary education would be convened to provide the opportunity for a full discussion of the challenges and opportunities facing our colleges and universities as we approach the 21st century.

[Translation]

Following the speech from the Throne, I undertook extensive consultations. In particular, I met individually with most provincial Ministers responsible for post-secondary education and, on February 2, I met with the full Council of Ministers of Education.

[English]

Everywhere I went I discovered widespread support for the forum and I was particularly pleased that the Council of Ministers of Education agreed to co-sponsor the event. I have also received numerous letters of support for the forum and expressions of interest from individuals and groups right across the country. Everyone wants to avoid the forum being simply a replay of some of the sterile debates we have had in this country about the specifics of post-secondary education financing arrangements. The forum is a much-needed opportunity for dialogue and co-operation among all sectors of our society; government, business, scientists, educators and young people.

[Translation]

I see the forum also as an occasion for the federal Government to show leadership in the critical area of higher education and university research. I don't mean a leadership based on control and supervision—which inevitably leads to confrontation and discord—but one which was defined so well by the Honourable Claude Ryan in a 1984 conference on federal-provincial issues: "A leadership of inspiration, encouragement, and support."

[English]

The forum will enable us to look to the future with a broader vision, to examine the issues and opportunities facing our universities and colleges, and to help make us ready for the challenges of the next century.

To quote the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in a recent address to the University of Waterloo on the topic of research and development:

> The western world is moving toward knowledge-based economics, and Canada must move with it. We want to be known not only as a resource-rich nation, not only as a trading nation, but as a nation known for our brainpower, our ideas, and our intellectual and educational achievements. The issue is no less fundamental than how Canada will earn a living in the 1990s and beyond—

[Translation]

The forum will help all Canadians appreciate the challenges facing our post-secondary system in the years ahead. We now have the organizational framework for the forum in place.

[English]

I am confident that the co-operative approach we have established will produce a very successful event and contribute to making our post-secondary education system one of the best in the world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Minister for sending me a copy of his statement in advance. Along with all Hon. Members and all Canadians, I am pleased that this forum is going ahead about a year after it was mentioned in the Throne Speech. I believe that the Minister has put together a blue-ribbon steering committee. There is some balance on that committee, certainly in the male-female ratio, but I would point out to him the absence on the steering committee of a member of the Canadian Federation of Students. The President is on the committee, but not on the steering committee. Students, whose fate is most involved and whose future is most at risk, should be on the steering committee itself rather than only on the committee. I make that suggestion to the Minister.

The Minister said in his statement that he wants a positive, wide-ranging and national dialogue rather than only a federal-provincial dialogue. I think that is important. He also said that he does not want a repeat of the sterile debate on financing.

However, that is surely fundamental to a healthy system of post-secondary education. Apropos of that, I want to draw to his attention an article from The Sunday Express from Newfoundland this weekend which draws attention very graphically to a real crisis in post-secondary education. The headline reads, "Memorial University in Crisis". The article reads:

> Mortar is oozing out from between the bricks on several buildings around campus. Buckets catch water dripping in an underground tunnel system that is not properly maintained. Department heads this year requested $4.2 million in funding for 125 teaching positions. Of the 125, zero was authorized.

I could go on. The President of the University did not want to go public but was forced to talk about a real crisis in post-secondary education with regard to the maintenance of buildings, the number of students, and the kind of support they are getting.

I would like to draw to the attention of the Minister two other events which show that this problem is not confined to Atlantic Canada. The University of Regina was told on the weekend that it was receiving a zero per cent increase in funding this year and that it has to retire its deficit of $6 million over the next four years. At Carleton University a referendum is taking place today on whether there should be a $15 increase in the annual student fees from now on to provide for the construction of buildings and repairs to the campus. Carleton University is not one of the poorest universities in a province which is not one of the poorest in the country.

I believe that these examples illustrate graphically that there is a serious crisis all across the country, not only in national policy but indeed in funding. We can construct a vehicle, but if we do not have gas in the tank of the vehicle it will not go anywhere. EPF and Canada student loans must be on the agenda for that forum.

It is important that we have this debate at the same time as the child care issue and proposals for it are coming forward. Women are the most disadvantaged in the country in terms of access to post-secondary education. We recognize that child care is important as well and we will have a debate on that issue. However, if women are really going to achieve equality it is important to have access to improved education. That is fundamental to the achievement of equality for women. That should be highlighted at this discussion in the forum on post-secondary education. Women must be involved and their particular case must be put forward.

I do not want to give the impression that I feel negatively in any way about this forum because I think it is a good initiative, one which we have called for for the past two years. However, I want to ask what the follow-up to this forum will be. That is very important. We can have a three-day forum of learned discussion as the beginning of a national debate on post-secondary education, but it is what happens the day after which is important. I hope the Minister can give a commitment that after that forum the Government will listen and seriously consider the recommendations of that forum and make a commitment to follow up. I would like to hear the Minister say he is hopeful about establishing an ongoing permanent national advisory council on post-secondary education.

A three-day forum will not be enough. Canadians must build on that three-day forum and indeed create a policy that is not federal or provincial, but a national policy on post-secondary education. Such a policy requires continuous administration.

I welcome the leadership the Minister is showing this morning and the fact that he has also brought the provinces into this initiative. Indeed, I believe some provinces, such as Quebec and Ontario, have shown leadership themselves. Ontario has shown leadership recently with its announcement of an increase in funding and its initiatives toward post-secondary education. The Minister will know that many other provinces still have much to do in order to have a total consensus about what must be done in post-secondary education in this country.

Therefore, while I welcome the announcement today, I want to repeat those three points. First, students must be involved at the top level in planning for this forum; second, the agenda must include the funding of post-secondary education in the future; and third, there must a commitment to follow up.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the university system is in crisis, just as science, research and technology has been in crisis for the last several years. The Government has done very little in either area.

When faced with the crisis of a deterioration in research, science and technology and innovation, the Government held a forum. The appropriate reaction was that at least it is doing something, however little. Now, we will have a forum on post-secondary education. Again, the appropriate response is that at least the Government is doing something.

When faced with concern about the post-secondary educational system and education in general in the United States, the President formed a commission and the Carnegie Foundation conducted an investigation which led to considerable reform and increased financing in many states in the U.S. But we will have a forum.

Many of the provinces have conducted Royal commissions on post-secondary education, all of which have identified a deterioration in the state of our universities in many provinces and stated that reform was necessary if the system was not to deteriorate to the point where it would serve no national or provincial purpose. But we will have a forum.

Leaders in industry, academia, and students all across this land have sounded the cry of alarm about the failure of governments, both provincial and federal, to recognize the importance of the university for our future economic development and opportunities for our youth. But the federal Government is going to have a forum.

Everyone who is interested in universities has condemned the federal Government for cutting back on the rate of increase in transfer payments for the funding of universities. They have indicated that there clearly is an urgent need for the federal and provincial Governments to get together and to establish their respective responsibilities toward post-secondary education. The need is clear, but the federal Government is going to have a forum.

Many of us have said that an advisory council on post-secondary education must be established. Indeed, such a council should engage in a long-term and continuing study of elementary and secondary education. It must study the needs of post-secondary education and elaborate on the kind of policy that the OECD indicates this country needs desperately. But the Government is going to have a forum and solve all of these problems in three days.

The Canadian Association of University Teachers, the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada, and the Canadian Federation of Students and many of those who are interested in post-secondary education and research and science have had repeated forums. They may even welcome another forum as a result of their experience.

A few months ago there was a forum on science, research and technology that was held in Winnipeg. There were five recommendations as a result of that forum, but no action.

Some Hon. Members: Louder.

Mr. Rodriguez: You think it is funny over there.

Mr. McCurdy: One cannot speak loud enough to call attention to the utter failure of the Government to respond to the needs of youth and all those who ought to be served by post-secondary education in this country. I will congratulate the Government for holding a forum and at least doing one thing right. Indeed, it has invited representative groups of Canadians to participate in the forum and I give the Government credit for ensuring that there is some degree of representation of women, visible minorities, natives, youth and others.

While that is good, the need has been demonstrated so clearly that the Government should be able to see beyond another forum. Yet there will be another three days of talking about post-secondary education while we wait for the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) to produce his policy for youth. Part of that policy should include action on the restrictions to accessibility and opportunity in post-secondary institutions in this country. But we will have another forum.

I hope it is a good forum. I hope the Government will listen to what it has been told repeatedly, that it has responsibility for exercising leadership, for full participation in the funding of post-secondary education, and a responsibility to find a solution to the impasse between the federal and provincial levels so there will be a stable level of financing for post-secondary institutions. Perhaps it will realize that it is time to stop having forums and will direct its attention toward implementing a national advisory council on post-secondary education.

It is interesting to note that the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) mentioned the need for increased attention to research in universities and elsewhere. I hope the Government will stop closing laboratories, transferring scientists and playing games with the scientific community, that it will stop holding forums and make a determined effort to improve the situation in this country with respect to science, research and technology.

While we do not need any more forums, the Government may need them because it has failed to appreciate the dimensions of the problem or recognize the solutions to it.

CHILD CARE

PRESENTATION OF FINAL REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mrs. Shirley Martin (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the final report of the Special Committee on Child Care in both official languages.

It is with great pleasure that I table the report. It represents 15 months of exceptional effort by members of all Parties. It is a report which I believe reflects the views of most Canadian families. It is a report that challenges the Government and its provincial and territorial counterparts, that challenges the child care system, volunteer organizations and, most important, Canadian families. It is a report which offers no simple solutions. It recognizes that no one approach can effectively deal with the unique and diverse needs of Canadians. With this in mind, it is important that the recommendations put forward by this committee be examined as a complete package rather than isolated components.

• (1130)

This report opens many doors. It is now up to all of us to ensure that Canadian children receive the love, encouragement and quality care they so richly deserve.

I would also indicate that the committee, in accordance with Standing Order 99 (2) requests that the Government table a comprehensive report to its recommendations.

PETITIONS

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege of presenting a petition on behalf of several constituents in my riding, regarding the fact that innovative drug companies will be put in a monopoly position that will preclude competition from less expensive generic drugs, resulting in increased drug prices for the Canadian consumer and making it increasingly difficult for many people to purchase the drugs they need; that the proposed amendments to the Patent Act will have a direct impact on all Canadians who are not covered by public or private health insurance plans; that the Government's proposals will add to the already high cost of provincial health insurance plans; and that the proposed amendments to the Patent Act are one more example of concessions made by the Canadian Government to the United States in the context of free trade negotiations, to the detriment of the average consumer. Therefore, my constituents humbly pray that Parliament reject the proposed amendments that will otherwise increase the price of drugs for Canadians.

[English]

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CANADA POST CORPORATE PLAN

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I, too, have the pleasure of introducing two petitions this morning, both of which have been certified by the Clerk of Petitions. The first petition is from residents of the Village of St. George, which is in my constituency. The operative clause is, wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to instruct the Government to make improved service the highest priority of Canada Post Corporation and to instruct the Government to abandon the policy of closing rural post offices and cancelling rural routes.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, the second petition is also signed by a group of constituents from the St. George area in my constituency and has to do with the generic drug legislation. The operative clause is, wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT—FISHING

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour to present a petition from several hundred people throughout the riding of Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador. The petition calls upon the Government to right the wrong done to Newfoundland and Labrador by immediately cancelling the offer which was made to France with regard to the resolution of the fishing rights in the gulf and to immediately seek other means to resolve that dispute.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from residents of Red Bay and Capstan Island in Labrador which calls upon Parliament to ensure that no changes are made to the unemployment insurance regulations or benefits concerning fishermen.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present several petitions signed by petitioners in my constituency who responded to a mail-back in my Householder, in regard to Bill C-22, the Government's proposal to amend the Patent Act and to restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. These petitioners call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

I might say, for the benefit of the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis), assistant to the Government House Leader, that these petitions were submitted by myself for certification and are being presented by the same Member who presented them to the Clerk for certification.

SMOKING—HEALTH HAZARD

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition which I have also had certified by the Clerk regarding Bill C-204, which seeks to protect the health of Canadians by restricting the promotion of tobacco and guaranteeing smoke-free air to Canadian workers and travellers. The petitioners call upon Parliament to enact the Non-smokers Health Act, Bill C-204.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present two petitions dealing with the price of prescription drugs. The first petition is from residents of Halifax, St. Margarets Bay, Ketch Harbour, Bedford, Nova Scotia. The second petition is from residents of Winnipeg, mainly in my constituency. These petitions state that the federal Government's proposal to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescriptions and, therefore, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

EXPORT OF GOODS TO CHILE

Question No. 76—Mr. Riis:

For the period January 1, 1986 to January 1, 1987, were export permits issued for goods destined for Chile and, if so, what was the value of the permits for category (a) 7000 (b) 7001 (c) 7002 (d) 7003 (e) 7004 (f) 7005 (g) 7006 (h) 7007 (i) 7008 (j) 7009 (k) 7010 (l) 7011 (m) 7012 (n) 7013 (o) 7014 (p) 7015 (q) 7016 (r) 7017 as contained in the Export Control List?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, for the period January 1, 1986, to January 1, 1987, export permits were issued for articles of military electronics and lifesaving equipment which fall under the appropriate ECL item numbers. The total value of these authorized exports is $6,112,180, of which a certain percentage is for a temporary export for demonstration purposes.

Details of the specific equipment by ECL number is protected under Section 20,1 b, c, d of the Access to Information Act.

VISITS BY FOREIGN VESSELS TO GREAT LAKE PORTS

Question No. 77—Mr. Heap:

What visits by foreign naval vessels to Canadian Great Lakes ports are scheduled for the summer and fall of 1987 and, in each case (a) what is the name and country of the ship (b) what are the dates and ports of visit (c) what is the purpose of the visit (d) under what international agreement will the visit be permitted?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): At present, no foreign naval vessels are scheduled to visit the Canadian Great Lakes ports during the summer or fall of 1987. Visits of ships on the Great Lakes are governed by existing international agreements including a 35 year old bilateral agreement affecting the Movement of Ships, Troops and Aircraft between Canada and the U.S.A. and a NATO standardization agreement that applies to all member countries.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I wish to inform the House that because of the Ministerial statement, Government Orders will be extended twenty-four minutes beginning at one o'clock p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

TELEGLOBE CANADA REORGANIZATION AND DIVESTITURE ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Flora MacDonald (for the Minister of State (Privatization)) moved that Bill C-38, an Act respecting the reorganization and divestiture of Teleglobe Canada, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to say a few words on this particular Bill at third reading. Perhaps the question should be asked at third reading why the Government of Canada is selling Teleglobe. Why did it decide to sell Teleglobe at this time? Why did it decide to sell Teleglobe, period? Was there any great reason for its sale? Was it a philosophical reason? Was it a financial reason? Was it that it was competing with private enterprise? As I understand it, the answer to those questions from members of the Government is yes.

• (1140)

We are dealing here with a company that actually makes money. It makes incredible profits. One would suspect that when a company makes money and is a monopoly, as has been pointed out by members of the Government, that one would use a bit of arithmetic to try to figure out what such a company is worth to the Canadian taxpayer. Would you, Mr. Speaker, sell for $400 million a company that makes $100 million a year and has a monopoly?

An Hon. Member: Why not?

Mr. Baker: An Hon. Member sitting on the government benches asks "Why not?" This is a member of the Progressive Conservative Party saying "Why not?" Why not sell a company that makes $100 million for $400 million? That seems to be the financial philosophy of this Government. In other words, for a short term gain before March 31 to deal with the deficit—not the national debt but the deficit—the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) says: "Would it not be lovely to have another $500 million knocked off the deficit for the financial year before we reach March 31?" That is the financial philosophy of the Government of Canada today. It goes from March 31 to March 31 to March 31. There is always a scramble at the end trying to figure out how the deficit can be reduced by x number of dollars. Why? So that it can carry through with the philosophy it espoused during the election campaign.

Where has this philosophy gotten the Government of Canada? When one looks at the national debt of the country one discovers that in the short time that this Government has been in power the debt has climbed more than in any other time in our history. There is no other three-year period in our history in which we can find that the national debt rose at the rate which it has risen under the present Government. It is the highest rise in the national debt, the entire national debt of Canada, that we have ever seen. This includes the accumulated deficits of every Government since Confederation.

The Minister of Finance says that the national debt has risen by one-third since his Government took power. The accumulated deficit since Confederation has risen by 30 per cent since the Government came to power. Why is that? The Government's usual response is that it is because of the previous administration. That is the reason which is always given. The first year in which the Government was in office the deficit was about $37 billion or $38 billion. Members of the Government said that that was due to the previous administration. The next year came along and what was the deficit then? It was about $35 billion, give or take $3 billion or $4 billion. I am not sure of the exact figure. At any rate, members of the Government said it was due to the previous administration. They projected that the deficit would go below $30 billion in the next year. If we look at the publications of the Minister of Finance, including his budget projections and fiscal plans, we see that for two years in a row it was projected that the deficit would go down below $30 billion. What happened after that? In the next Budget the Government said it had missed the mark by $4 billion or $5 billion. Members of the Government said, "We are now projecting that it will go down to under $30 billion in the next year". However, next year will come along and they will say, "We were off $4 billion or $5 billion in our projections because of this, that or the other thing, but next year it will go down to less than $30 billion".

There has never been a time in Canadian financial history in which we have had such a disastrous record as far as the deficit is concerned. Yet the Government claims that it is selling Crown corporations because it wants to reduce the deficit and the national debt. Mr. Speaker, I am sure you can recall all the Bills that went through this Chamber in a hurry giving $1 billion here and $1 billion there. Do you remember, Mr. Speaker, when the Government gave $1 billion here and there to foreign banks? Do Hon. Members remember that? Do Hon. Members remember when the Government gave money to rich people, the millionaires, buddies of the Government and friends of cabinet Ministers? Do Hon. Members remember when the banks were bailed out? It did not make much difference at that time that $1 billion was being handed out here and there. Nor did it make much difference at certain other times when there was a real reason for granting such sums of money.

Why then does the Government of Canada come along all of a sudden and say, it is going to sell Teleglobe? I would say that 99 per cent of the people in Canada do not even know what Teleglobe is. Why should they? It is a Crown corporation that handles telecommunications. It does not actually charge for it, it just handles telecommunications, mostly across the Atlantic Ocean. This is a marvellous company which gave the Government of Canada $108.1 million last year and another $80 million this year. Of course, the Government of Canada is now saying that it is up for sale and, in fact, it will sell this company to another company called Memotec, which I believe is the name of the company. At any rate, the chairman of the board is a fellow by the name of Baker. The Government now wishes to sell the company for a song. It will make Memotec the prize of the stock market, just as Fishery Products International was made the prize of the stock market. The same is true with respect to other sales that the Minister responsible has carried out and is carrying out at the present time.

We can see on the face of it that it is difficult to try to figure out why the Government is selling Teleglobe. It is very difficult to figure it out. One could stretch it on this or that point, but one would come to the end and say, there is no reason whatsoever for the Government to sell Teleglobe. I am now searching for reasons for this sale. I am trying to say that the Government had some reason for selling this company. While doing some reading the other day I noticed that other countries have sold out companies comparable to Teleglobe. But that is no reason to do the same thing in Canada, if the company was making such a magnificent profit and was carrying on in a good manner as a good Crown corporation, not just to its employees but to the Canadian public.

• (1150)

There was some discussion, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the rates that were being charged, but the Chairman of Teleglobe, before the standing committee, said that, as far as the rates were concerned, they had contemplated a decrease in any event. He also pointed out that, as far as the actual tariffs are concerned, that is a matter of bilateral negotiation.

What is the reason for selling Teleglobe? One can search but one cannot find a justifiable reason for selling this company. One can perhaps find the reason, Mr. Speaker, when one compares it to the sale by this Government of other Crown corporations. We look to another sale that this Minister made, that being the sale of Fishery Products International, a fish processing company on the East Coast. In fact, while this sale of Teleglobe is in progress, the sale of Fishery Products International is also in progress. The shares of FPI have just been offered on the market.

Mr. Blenkarn: We can walk and chew gum at the same time.

Mr. Baker: The Chairman of the Finance Committee is talking about walking and chewing gum. I do not know, Mr. Speaker, whether you understand what he means. I do not know. Usually when he talks one cannot understand what he is talking about. But "walking and chewing gum"! I suppose, Mr. Speaker, he is trying to say that both can be done at the same time. I suppose that that is what he is saying.

An Hon. Member: You've got it, George!

Mr. Rompkey: But mostly what he is talking about are bubbles; a bubble full of hot air.

Mr. Baker: Mostly what he is talking about is a bubble, yes.

An Hon. Member: Now, now, boys!

An Hon. Member: It is not even his line.

Mr. Baker: What is the reason for selling Fishery Products International at the same time as Teleglobe is being sold? I suppose one could say that there is a certain amount of justification on the economic side, the financial side, in selling Fishery Products International. FPI was established as a Crown corporation at a time when fish plants were closing—

Mr. Rompkey: By us.

Mr. Baker: The former Minister just said "by us"; and "by us", he means, of course, the Liberal Government of the day.

FPI was set up at a time when fish plants were closing all over eastern Canada, with hundreds and thousands of people being laid off. This was something that was being done by a very large private sector company at a time when fish prices had gone down. The whole of the fisheries industry at the time was in financial trouble. The Government of Canada created a Crown corporation, and it did so because that was the only way to go. Both the federal and provincial governments jointly took the decision to create a Crown corporation, and that is exactly what they did.

Fishery Products International was created to save jobs, to save the industry, and to maintain continuity insofar as the export of Canada's fisheries products was concerned. One does not want to see, in terms of international markets, a substantial drop in the export of any one commodity, as another country will then come along to fill that vacuum. Once the industry recovers and plants are reopened, it is difficult to regain lost markets. For that reason, it was important that the Government of Canada act very swiftly to maintain the supply of Canada's fisheries products into the international markets. Insofar as the nation's economy was concerned, and the economies of the affected provinces, not to mention the thousands of jobs affected by a substantial downturn in prices, there was good reason for the creation of FPI.

The world has now changed insofar as fisheries products are concerned. Current demand is high in all parts of the world. There are many fisheries products in the market-place—frozen fish products, fresh fish products, fish fillets, and so forth. In certain instances, fisheries products are almost refined products. With the supply remaining relatively the same, with the increased demand, we have had increased prices.

What we have seen, Mr. Speaker, in FPI, a Crown corporation that controlled 30 to 35 individual companies in eastern Canada, is a substantial increase in the bottom line. Substantial profits have been made. I believe last year the profit was something in the order of $24 million to $30 million. This represents quite a turn around insofar as the fisheries industry is concerned. FPI was a Crown corporation owned by the federal and provincial governments.

This Government then decided to get rid of that Crown corporation. Given that FPI no longer fulfilled a public purpose, one can understand the sale of FPI. There was a guarantee in the sale that the employees would be taken care of, that the employees would not lose their pension contributions, and that they would maintain their positions in the workforce. There was a also a condition of sale whereby if for any reason the new board of this now private sector corporation decided that any one of the individual operations was to be closed down or sold, the Government of Canada and the affected provincial Government would be notified and given the first option to purchase.

The FPI sales agreement was drawn and supervised by some very prominent Newfoundlanders, and we have in the telecommunications industry in this country today some very prominent Newfoundlanders. When those individuals drew up the sales agreement in respect of Fishery Products International they left no holes. No employee could turn around and accuse the Government of Canada of not taking care of jobs, of not ensuring that each community was protected. The Government of Canada ensured, through the sales agreement, that the new board of directors, the new shareholders of that company, understood that they could not close any individual plant connected with that former Crown corporation without making a first offer to the Government.

Why is it, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister who handled the FPI sale so well now comes before the House with this measure? In the one case, the Minister came into the House and read out a glorious statement in respect of the sale of Fishery Products International. In the case of the sale of FPI, we had an agreement with all of the guarantees written in, an agreement with not even a shadow of a doubt that the employees would not be taken care of. In fact, we had the Government even instructing the new owners that they could not sell a portion of the business at any time without first giving the Government of Canada and the affected provincial Government the first option of purchase, and the same guarantee applied to plant closures.

Everybody appeared to be quite happy with that agreement. The Minister made the announcement, and the shares of FPI were listed for sale on the stock market, and were immediately bought up by investors.

• (1200)

The value of the shares was nine to one as far as the profits were concerned. The Government gave factory freezer trawlers to another profitable company called National Sea Products and gave them permission to operate it in eastern Canada, against the wishes of fishermen. As I say, the company was very profitable in the fish business.

The Minister made a statement in the House of Commons assuring the employees of their guaranteed benefits, saying that the new owners of the company would have to abide by the rules. After saying that they were not allowed to touch a piece of equipment in all the plants in eastern Canada, unless they notified the federal Government, what did the Minister do? The Minister of State for Privatization (Mrs. McDougall) will be sending out a letter today to all Teleglobe employees. Actually, the letter is dated March 27, 1987, but it will be going out today. It is a four-page letter. I do not want to get into its particulars, but it goes back to a problem which the Government brought on itself in the clause in the Bill dealing with employees and their pensions.

I would like to read into the record a letter from the Teleglobe Canada Ad Hoc Committee on Pensions. It is signed by Mr. Carlos Saldanha and Mr. E. A. Rutherford, Ted Rutherford, who are in charge of the committee. The letter was sent to the Minister of State for Privatization and Minister responsible for regulatory affairs. In part it reads:

> We, the Teleglobe Ad Hoc Pension Committee, understand that it is in the best interest of the parties concerned that Bill C-38 be passed and come into effect by March 31, 1987. We also wish to see this date achieved.

If that were not in the letter, I guarantee that the Bill would not be passed through the House before March 31. It would not be passed in the House unless the pension committee wished it to be passed.

I cannot see any other reason for passing the Bill other than standing up and protecting Teleglobe employees. They might change their minds if the Minister does not answer their letter properly. However, it goes on to say:

> However, some issues related to transferring values for past service, in our opinion, are still not resolved.

We are getting to the pension issue now. It continues:

> We expect that your Government will endeavour to sit down with representatives of this committee, as was previously promised by the Honourable Robert de Cotret, to reach an equitable solution in the process of developing a Reciprocal Transfer Agreement.

We all know what reciprocal transfer agreements are as far as pensions are concerned. Then it continues:

> A proper transfer agreement, when coupled with the future plan offered by Memotec,—

That is the name of the company which is buying Teleglobe for a song. It continues:

> —which we note was more generous than the norm your Government recommended, will maintain Teleglobe's pension plan features for existing employees as they were prior to privatization.

In other words, at the last minute, at the last hour, members of the ad hoc committee on pensions are saying to Members of the House of Commons, "Let us help the Government get the Bill through before March 31". However, they are also saying that they need a reciprocal transfer agreement on their pensions.

I looked at the letter from the Minister which will go out today to all Teleglobe employees. I looked for some substance in it. Before the day is out, perhaps the Minister will be able to explain to the House what the particular letter means. However, we know what the reciprocal transfer agreement is all about.

You and I, Mr. Speaker, know what happens when someone changes employment. For example, when workers are laid off from a Crown corporation, are given early retirement, or whatever the case may be, they always hope and pray for a reciprocal transfer agreement on their pensions. Why is that? It is because they are interested in adding the time they were employed somewhere else on to their new employment. When a lay-off or an early retirement takes place in a Crown corporation, the man who is affected always looks back at where he worked 10 years ago, 20 years ago, or 30 years ago. Perhaps he worked with the department of highways in a provincial Government or something like that. Then he wonders whether he can transfer his pension benefits from the provincial government department to the Crown corporation and add it all together. Perhaps he will wonder if the private company for which he might work will take his accumulated pension benefits from years of service into its pension scheme and honour them.

There are people in Canada today who make a living in Crown corporations examining whether it is to their benefit to have reciprocal transfer agreements or pension transfer agreements. I imagine that the office of Canadian National in Montreal would have people working on that continually.

It is interesting to note that a Government which wanted to get rid of Crown corporations and said that they were a menace to society would create a Crown corporation to save money, that is, Marine Atlantic. That Crown corporation has a pension transfer agreement with the Province of New Brunswick, the Province of Prince Edward Island, and the Province of Quebec. However, it does not have one with the Province of Nova Scotia or with the Province of Newfoundland. It is amazing that a Crown corporation would be laying off people or offering them early retirement at this time of the year and have no signed pension transfer agreement.

Employees of Teleglobe are interested in a reciprocal transfer agreement as it relates to their pension funds. The Government of Canada through the Treasury Board should have had this worked out some time ago. It should have made sure that this issue would not arise during the final moments of the sale of the Crown corporation, but it did not do so. The Government did not satisfy the employees of Teleglobe otherwise the employees would not have written such a letter dated March 27, 1987. Why is the Government of Canada selling Teleglobe today? Why did the Government sell another Crown corporation at the same time it created another one? I suggest it was to save money? The whole thing does not add up, Mr. Speaker.

In the letter being sent by the Minister of State for Privatization, certain blanket guarantees are supposed to be made to the employees of Teleglobe. I think what would be of benefit in the Chamber today is to have a statement directly from the Minister or the Parliamentary Secretary to the effect that they will comply with the wishes of the Teleglobe Canada ad hoc committee on pensions, that they will immediately sit down with them and immediately state publicly in the House of Commons before the Bill is passed today exactly what the Government of Canada has in mind for all the employees. It is a very confusing scenario. It is not clear at all what the Government of Canada has in mind.

This Crown corporation, as we know, has to do with telecommunications. It is the carrier of the telephone lines, the telegraph lines and the telex lines from Canada to other countries in the world. It is the sole carrier. It is the actual carrier of the message. It is a guaranteed monopoly for the next five years which is being put under a regulatory agency, I believe the CRTC. Under those circumstances, with the incredible investment made at the beginning in Teleglobe, with the incredible amounts of money used to build cables across the Atlantic and at the same time to have the satellite feed in case the cable breaks—if the cable breaks, then the satellite is there, and if something goes wrong with the satellite, the cable is there—for this company now to be getting into the business of new cables, into fibreoptics and everything else at a cost of probably hundreds of millions of dollars or even billions of dollars, $400 million or $500 million seems a very small price to pay to purchase such an operation.

One wonders about the philosophy of the actual sale of Teleglobe and the recommendations of the Government of Canada respecting Crown corporations. What about the Government being involved in businesses that perhaps should be in the realm of the private sector? Will the overriding philosophy of the Government of Canada be, let's get rid of everything that we believe the private sector can do? If the private sector cannot possibly fulfil a transportation function in Canada, then we will maintain our presence. Yet even in that area today we hear the Government of Canada saying to Crown corporations "Cut, cut, cut. Reduce, reduce, reduce." What was the message with Teleglobe? Efficiency exports came into the shops of Teleglobe and said, "Let's cut here, there and some place else". The same thing has happened to practically every other corporation in Canada today, especially in the telecommunications business. We have several Crown corporations in the telecommunications business.

Miss MacDonald: You know nothing about it.

Mr. Baker: The Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) should listen. She may learn something about telecommunications. The Government of Canada has Crown corporations that operate telephones like Bell Canada—

Miss MacDonald: Why do you think Bell Canada is a Crown corporation?

Mr. Baker: —like Maritime Tel and like B.C. Tel? The Minister of Communications does not understand what Teleglobe is. She does not know. We are into the area of telecommunications. She did not even know that the Government of Canada owned telephone companies.

Miss MacDonald: When did the Government of Canada take over Bell Telephone?

Mr. Baker: The Government of Canada actually through Crown corporations owns telephone companies, but does this mean now that the Government will sell its telephone companies?

Miss MacDonald: What telephone companies?

Mr. Baker: The Minister of Communications has asked what telephone companies.

Miss MacDonald: Right.

Mr. Hockin: Gather your thoughts together.

Mr. Baker: Let me educate the Minister of Communications for just a moment. CN Telecommunications recently applied to the CRTC and to the Government of Canada for rights to go into the business of long-distance operations against Bell. The reason it did that, and not very many Cabinet Ministers in this Government know why, is that CN operates telephone companies. My entire district is operated under CN telephones, and so are other areas of Canada. Granted they are northern areas. We each have our own little cubicle. Ours is called TNT. The names change every now and then. It used to be called Canadian National, but that was not, I suppose, a very good word from which to develop a slogan so it was changed to Terra Nova Tel. You see TNT all over the place. Now the Minister of Communications is beginning to learn a few things.

Are we to take it from the sale of Teleglobe that the federal Government will say that all other Crown corporations dealing with the public, which could be owned by the private sector, should be gotten rid of, dissolved or sold? If you look at any of the northern telephone networks, if you look at telecommunications as a part of Canadian National up north, you will see that it has a fairly profitable operation in northern Canada. Last year Terra Nova Tel made about $4 million after all its capital expenditures were taken into account. One would have to say it is a profitable company but that does mean it is on the Government's list to be sold? Perhaps I should not have mentioned it because I do not think the Government knew that it owned telephone companies. Now that it knows, it might sell them and I do not want them sold.

It is unfortunate that we do not have more competition in the telecommunications field. It is unfortunate that a monopoly exists. That is perhaps the most unfortunate thing of all in the telecommunications field. The unions would not agree with me on that, but I will tell you who would agree with me. The woman whose telephone is removed because she could not pay for a long-distance call she did not make would agree with me. She has no choice but to pay, no choice whatsoever, because if she does not get her telephone from that company she does not get a telephone. It is a monopoly. In some constituency cases it is an absolutely disgusting monopoly. Certainly we would not recommend that the Government get rid of its telephone companies. Yet that is what the Government wants. We cannot figure out any other reason for putting this Bill through the House.

If you read the letter from the Minister of State for Privatization you will see there is no guarantee that a reciprocal transfer agreement will be arrived at with the Government. The Minister sent this letter to every single employee of Teleglobe. She says:

It is false and misleading to suggest that they are being deprived of benefits;

The Minister should stand in her place today and give her guarantee on the pension reciprocal agreement before we decide to filibuster the Bill. If that is done to the satisfaction of the employees, fine, we will let the Bill through. If it is not done, I am sure the Whip will agree with me that the Bill will not go through. The Minister of Finance will lose $500 million on his deficit reduction plan.

Mr. Gauthier: It is $600 million.

Mr. Baker: I am sorry, $600 million. I have been using the figure of $400 or $500 million. Anyway, the entire budget speech will have to be rewritten unless these employees are satisfied with the pension plan. You are an expert in parliamentary procedure, Mr. Speaker, and you know that one thing the Opposition can do is stop the passage of this Bill by March 31. It is a simple thing to do. Anyone in grade six or grade seven can read the rules and see how an opposition can prevent the passage of a Bill over a two-day period. The Whip has a whole list of things written on both sides of a sheet of paper, threats he will make unless the Government satisfies these employees.

Mr. Gauthier: Single spaced.

Mr. Baker: We have a letter from the ad hoc committee saying they want the Bill to go through if the guarantees are there. That is the final word to the Minister of Communications. She should intervene and contact the Minister of State for Privatization and say, let us get this thing straightened out. The Minister has been trying to develop this wonderful rapport with everyone in the communications media in Canada and around the world. Here is an opportunity for her to do just that.

We have made our position perfectly clear on this Bill and we await the Government's response. The Whip of the Official Opposition will have a few words to say in a few moments.

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in the third reading debate on Bill C-38. I will be speaking specifically to the Bill and the divestiture of Teleglobe rather than giving a long dissertation about everything under the sun in order to pass the time. We have just been given a little education on supply and demand economics and almost how fish patties are made. I was surprised to hear a whole speech built around why the employees do not want the Bill passed when the Hon. Member has a letter in his hands from the employees who appear to be pleading to have the Bill passed. I think they understand that they can best handle the negotiations for the proper transfer of pension benefits.

The sale of Teleglobe is an important initiative by this Government. The legislative and policy initiatives associated with it are designed to protect the interests of consumers and employees, and provide for regulation of the privatized company in order to ensure that Canada's international obligations continue to be met and provide Teleglobe with the opportunity to pursue a bright and exciting future.

I want to express my appreciation and that of the Minister to members of the committee for their conscientious review of the legislation. We also should say thank you to the witnesses for their valuable assistance in committee. Certainly I am delighted that a frank and full debate has taken place and that the many interested parties have had an opportunity for a balanced discussion, to the greatest extent possible.

Since the legislative review process began a few weeks ago certain amendments were made in the committee and I would like to briefly explain them for the benefit of Hon. Members. First, discussions with employee representatives led the committee to conclude that an amendment to the Bill would add greater certainty to the pension alternatives available to those employees. Accordingly, an amendment was made to delete Clause 24(1)(b) in its entirety. Second, there was a series of minor technical changes made in committee to improve or clarify the language of the Bill. There was a minor change to Clause 4(3) to make the language consistent with similar clauses such as Clause 19. There were changes to the wording of Clause 5 but no change to the spirit of the provision. It was to improve or clarify the clause as it relates to the associate rules. There were a few phrases in Clause 5, Clause 13 and Clause 18 where the French and English versions differed as to meaning. Changes were made to rectify that situation. In order to facilitate the creation of a new corporate entity with the name Teleglobe Canada and avoid any possible confusion it was appropriate to change the name of the old company while its affairs were being wound up, and a new Clause 20 was added while Clause 21 was amended accordingly. This amendment also necessitated appropriate renumbering changes and the reference to clause numbers in Clause 34 as well as the addition of the new name in Schedule II.

I believe all Hon. Members would agree that the Government has been forthcoming in terms of the information it has made available in connection with this transaction. We provided extensive documentation and offered technical briefings to assist Hon. Members in their understanding of the sale of Teleglobe to Memotec. This is indeed a complicated transaction. By appreciating the many benefits of this privatization I am sure Hon. Members will understand the advantages to both consumers and Teleglobe employees and to the telecommunications industry itself. The timely passage of Bill C-38 is important.

Opportunities for growth and employment have been foremost in our objectives for this privatization. This Bill will sanction the alliance between Teleglobe and Memotec, thus creating a dynamic new force in the Canadian telecommunications industry. Teleglobe's proven technical expertise and industry experience will get renewed vigour from Memotec's entrepreneurial energy and marketing abilities. I will give you a few examples of the kinds of benefits that will be in store for Canada once this sale is completed.

While Teleglobe has profited under good management, it still had to perform under the operational restrictions of Crown ownership. Expansion was pre-empted because of impediments imposed on Teleglobe as a result of legislators and bureaucratic requirements. Consequently, Teleglobe was kept from exploring other avenues of growth despite its recognized industry expertise.

However, Memotec can give to Teleglobe what Crown ownership could not, the freedom to grow, expand and mature. Memotec understands the dynamics and the opportunities of the telecommunications market-place. It has proven itself as a force to contend with in the business world by its marketing, sales and distribution expertise. In addition to Teleglobe's client base, Memotec will add its own international market base and its own customer network which includes major corporations in banking, insurance, transportation, other governments and so on.

A new Teleglobe allied with Memotec can create and take advantage of opportunities presented by this added national and international market base. The word "synergy", which has been coined of late, describes this kind of alliance. In simple terms this means the creation of new products and services offered in expanded markets and generous new exports. Such dynamic growth potential will create more opportunities for Canadians in all parts of the country.

Private ownership under public regulation will continue to serve the public interest while providing further benefits to consumers. Effective January 1, 1988, there will be a rate reduction on overseas telephone calls of more than 13 per cent. In addition, telex rates will decrease by 10 per cent at the same time. Consumers will also benefit from special protection of their telecommunications services through CRTC regulation. This is a new safeguard which was not present under Crown ownership. Thus, lower rates will be charged for the same high standard of services to which all Canadians have become accustomed. Consumers will benefit over-all, either by taking advantage of savings or by using services more frequently or for a longer duration.

I am especially pleased with the care that was taken by the Government to ensure that employees' interests were safeguarded. It was clear in the Government's announcement of November 19 that employee concerns were a key factor in setting the terms and conditions under which Teleglobe would be sold. I and my colleagues in the Government were sensitive to employees from the very beginning of the privatization process of Teleglobe. The Minister personally met with employee representatives prior to the initiation of the final round of bidding. Meetings were held over the course of the last few months between officials and Teleglobe employee representatives where employee concerns, particularly related to the future pension arrangements, were given ample discussion. In recognition of these concerns, Memotec's generous employee package was a key factor in supporting the Government decision to select this firm as the preferred purchaser for Teleglobe.

I think all Members must agree that Teleglobe employees are being well taken care of. For example, Teleglobe employees will remain under federal labour jurisdiction and all existing collective agreements will remain in force. As compared to industry norm, Memotec has offered a generous pension proposal, a plan which will be equivalent to the federal public service pension plan for all existing employees of Teleglobe. Furthermore, I would like to point out that we took heed of employees' interest in purchasing shares of Teleglobe. This was proposed by representatives of employees crossing all union lines. They had a very special interest in purchasing, and a purchase arrangement is therefore included in the agreement. Special provision has been made for an employee share ownership program which will offer 5 per cent of shares to employees at a discount of 10 per cent with interest-free loans available from the company.

In addition, Memotec has undertaken to make every effort to qualify employee share purchases under the Quebec stock savings plan and similar plans implemented by other provinces. Finally, in order to limit the disruption to employees and management, the legislation provides that Teleglobe's headquarters will remain in Montreal.

The discussion with regard to pensions centred on the transfer of past service. I asked a Treasury Board official what transfer of past service he would receive if he went to work at a university as compared to what employees would receive under this plan. This plan is substantially better than the benefits available to a federal employee who goes to work for one of our universities.

It seems that the question of whether the Government is receiving fair value for Teleglobe has finally been put to rest. At committee even the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) recognized that a reasonably good price had been received for the company. However, for the record, I want to state that Memotec is paying the Government $488.3 million which is a premium of $110 million over the revised book value of $378 million. I believe this represents a very good return for the taxpayers' investment in Teleglobe. Added to that, of course, were profits of over $100 million plus another $18 million.

You can see, Mr. Speaker, that the sale of Teleglobe to Memotec is a good deal for all interested parties. An equal and fair balance has been struck for taxpayers, shareholders, customers and, very importantly, the employees. The result will be a more dynamic and exciting new Teleglobe with advantages for all Canadians and for the telecommunications industry.

The passing of Bill C-38 will make Teleglobe our eleventh privatization since the Government came into power. This is a forward-looking program based upon a vision the Government has developed to promote better management of public resources and to create new opportunities in industry. I have only to point out the success of de Havilland and Canadair. I noticed that the previous speaker never referred to the additional employees and the additional business which has been generated at de Havilland and the positive environment of Canadair. Our vision has created more flexibility, new challenges and greater incentives for these firms and their employees to pursue new opportunities for growth. In following this course we have prepared these companies for the future rather than anchoring them in the past.

The rapid pace of technological advances requires adaptation not only just to keep up with but to lead global competition in the provision of telecommunications services and equipment. A new Teleglobe bolstered by Memotec will result in industry dynamism which will serve the interests of all Canadians and ensure that Canada remains a world leader in telecommunications.

It is important that Members recognize the urgency and importance of this legislation. The employees have also brought it to our attention that they want this legislation passed. I thank the House for assisting the Government and suggesting that the Bill be passed with expediency.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, are the employees of Teleglobe entirely satisfied with the pension arrangements that have been made?

Mr. James: Mr. Speaker, the Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) read a letter from the employees asking that the Bill be passed. The discussion in which employees wanted some input was the area of past services as it was transferred from the government plan to Memotec. Specifically, it concerned the actuarial assumptions that were used in comparison, for example, to the actuarial assumptions used in the Canadian Arsenals Disposal. That was the centre of the discussion. A number of different employees' groups made representations. Certainly, the request by the group that wanted the opportunity to purchase stock in a new company was fulfilled. They are happy with that aspect. The supervisors' group made representations and appear to want to handle the negotiations with their company. All the groups were concerned about this actuarial assumption. It appears to be negotiated between them and Memotec and I assume the negotiations will come to fruition.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, in my opinion the question of the transfer of the pension to Memotec is serious. I have the letter alluded to this morning by the Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker). It is indeed true that the employees are satisfied with the Memotec offer and the arrangements for their pensions.

My question concerns something that has bothered many of us. The actuarial assumptions which were made in 1980 and used for transferring the pensions from Canadian Arsenals are not the same assumptions that are being used this time. The question is whether it is a 5 per cent rate and salary increase assumption, whether we are looking at a 3.5 per cent CPI, at a 6.5 per cent interest rate and so on. Actuaries have a very complicated formula, including mortality rates and other factors.

In the committee, the unions stated that there would be a shortfall of some $7 million to $8 million in the transfer of the funds to the new company.

Teleglobe Canada

In the letter to the Minister of State for Privatization (Mrs. McDougall) on March 27, which was signed by Carlos Saldanha and E.A. Rutherford, it is stated:

> —it is in the best interest of the parties concerned that Bill C-38 be passed and come into effect by March 31, 1987.

That is true. The reason is the Quebec stock option plan, and it will be more easily saleable if they can roll this new asset and equity of Teleglobe into the Memotec assets.

We are not trying to prevent the passage of the Bill, but trying to understand exactly how the Government came to the logic of using new actuarial assumptions. How can one who is uninitiated in the matter—I am no actuary—justifiably say that, until the date of agreement, which is the proclamation of this Bill, prior service under the Public Service Superannuation Act is fully covered? The Minister of State for Privatization states that in the letter she sent to all employees on March 27. She states on page 3:

> For those employees who choose to transfer their prior service credits to the Memotec "mirror" plan, the government will transfer the greater of twice the employee's contributions plus interest or the actuarial value of the accrued benefits computed on a going concern basis that recognizes future salaries and indexing and includes a provision for survivor benefits;

The next paragraph is key:

> This amount will be fully adequate to allow Memotec to pay all of the obligations for prior service benefits;

Will the Hon. Member, who just spoke on behalf of the Government, request that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) come to the House to confirm that indeed he fully gives to the employees the guarantee that he will sit down with them and explain what he means by a guaranteed prior service fully covered pension plan? Then there will be no difficulty in letting the Bill go through today. Will the Member give an undertaking that he will call his Minister, as I tried this morning, to have him come to the House this afternoon and give us an undertaking that prior commitments will be kept and the plan will be fully funded on the basis of actuarial assumptions?

Mr. James: Mr. Speaker, there were many points in the Hon. Member's question, but I will attempt to answer him.

First, the Hon. Member alluded to the fact that there are a number of areas of input in developing an actuarial assumption. I, too, am not an actuary. Certainly, the Treasury Board must change and establish those assumptions from time to time, based upon all these inputs that are given, including interest rates and other factors.

• (1250)

I would not want to confuse anyone in that there are $7 million or $8 million involved. The Minister said it would be twice plus interest or actuarial assumption. Certainly, twice plus interest is much increased by the actuarial assumption. The example I referred to earlier was of the Treasury Board official who left the federal Government and went to work at a university. The best he would get would be twice plus interest. This transfer has a much greater transfer of past service than that through the actuarial assumptions. We must make sure we put these things in the right place.

I want to re-emphasize that what is important here is that employees are attempting to get everything they possibly can. They are receiving total protection under the Labour Code. They are able to buy stock and receive the equivalent to the PSA Superannuation Program. They are looking for something that is different than has been set up by the actuarial assumptions established by Treasury Board. It is not like it is our money. That money belongs to the fund of all the other employees working for the Federal Government. Do we keep doing this even though it is not a right and proper actuarial assumption based upon sound calculations? If it is given to those few employees, there is going to be less in the fund for others.

Mention has been made of the Minister coming and speaking to the situation, and I am sure we shall carry on with the debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, what we have with the decision to sell Teleglobe, which has been a Crown corporation, publicly owned, since its inception, is another example of the belief of the Conservative Government that the private sector can operate much more efficiently than the public sector and that wherever possible Crown corporations should be sold and privatized. That really ignores a great part of the history of the development of this country.

At the federal, provincial and municipal level we have several thousands of Crown corporations in Canada. They have been a way in which governments—and let me make it clear, not just socialists governments, but Liberal, Conservative, Social Credit, P.Q., CCF, and N.D.P. Governments—have set up Crown corporations when they saw a need to serve the public and when it was obvious that the private sector was not interested because it could not see that it could make a profit. After all, that is the reason private companies are established. I do not question that reason.

Therefore, what we have are Crown corporations which operate electric-power systems in our provinces. In the Province of Ontario, Ontario Hydro was set up, not be some radical socialist government but by the Conservative Government of the day. The three prairie provinces, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, have publicly-owned Telephone Systems. In my Province of Manitoba, the Manitoba telephone system was set as a publicly-owned utility by a Conservative Government in the year 1908. That was a government headed by Sir Roblin, the grandfather of Senator Roblin.

The Canadian National, a publicly-owned railway, was set up when a number of privately-owned and operated railway companies found they could not make a profit and were going bankrupt. The government of the day brought those companies together and established the Canadian National as a publicly-owned system.

The Canadian Wheat Board was an agency set up by the Conservative Government headed by the Prime Minister at the time, the Right Hon. R. B. Mr. Bennett, to handle the sale of grain.

This was done because governments of the day, regardless of their political persuasion, realized there was a need because the private sector would not enter the field. These Crown corporations have provided a needed service and have helped develop this country in a way which would not have been possible had we depended entirely on the private sector.

I am sure there is no one in this House and no one in any political Party who has not realized that for the foreseeable future, for as many years as we can see in advance, we are going to operate in this country, as is the case in most countries, with a mixed economy in which there will be public ownership at the federal, provincial and municipal level—co-operative ownership—and in the main, privately-owned companies operating in most facets of Canadian life. We accept that. We do not say that because a certain Crown corporation was established recently or years ago for a very good reason it must always continue as a Crown corporation. We must ask ourselves if the Crown corporation provides a useful service and if it is operating efficiently.

We have to ask ourselves if the Government made its decision to sell Teleglobe after examining, as it should have done, what it was doing and whether it was operating efficiently? I do not think so. It seems to me that the Government was more concerned with achieving a quick sale of this Crown corporation, and others, than in linking any sale of Crown corporations to a well-thought out industrial policy, or after considering what the effect of the sale of Teleglobe would have on competition in the area of telecommunications.

Let us look at the record of the Government. It sold Canadair and de Havilland, companies in which governments, because they believed—and there was not much opposition to that belief—that in a modern industrialized country like Canada we must have an aerospace industry. When these two companies, which were earlier privately owned, decided that they could not make a profit and, therefore, they wanted to close down, the government of the day was, I think, almost unanimous in support of taking over these companies. Hundreds of millions of dollars were invested in research to make these companies efficient, in order for them to produce products which were state-of-the-art and could compete in the world market.

Fishery Products International was a publicly-owned corporation established because the private sector fishery companies were going bankrupt. Having bought these companies, and after the people of Canada paid hundreds of millions of dollars to keep these companies going, they were sold at a fraction of their cost.

The Government is now talking about privatizing the CNR and Air Canada. The objective when these two companies were taken over as publicly owned corporations was that they provide service to the people of Canada. That will go by the boards because as private companies they will be required to make a profit. One cannot object to this since shareholders of companies are entitled to gain a profit from their investment. However, service to the slow growth, have-not areas of the country will be drastically cut back. We have already seen that with regard to both the railways and the airline.

Let us take a look at the situation with regard to Teleglobe. Teleglobe is a Crown corporation responsible for all overseas telecommunications entering and leaving Canada. These include telephone, telegraph, cable and telex communications. Teleglobe is a joint owner of submarine ocean cables and telecommunications satellite systems. It has an effective monopoly in Canada on all overseas telecommunications. Overseas telephone calls account for 85 per cent of its revenues.

Was Teleglobe operated efficiently? Was it a money-loser or was it a money-maker? Teleglobe has always been a consistent money-maker. It has been known as the jewel of Crown corporations. In 1985 it recorded profits of over $53 million. Its profit picture for the last 10 years has been excellent. In 1985 Teleglobe's revenues totalled $678 million.

The Conservative Government has sold Teleglobe to Memotec Data, a small Montreal-based data processing and data communications company. The Government claims to have sold Teleglobe for $608 million. However, if we analyse the sale more carefully we will find that at most Memotec is paying $488 million for the company. Indeed, since Memotec as part of the purchase price has said it will assume Teleglobe's liabilities, which amount to $143 million, we must then estimate that the Government will only receive $345 million for Teleglobe. No actual funds will be paid for the debt.

We believe this is a low purchase price. The company's book value is reported to be anywhere between $300 million and $400 million. Furthermore, its sale value is much higher, as it has had, as I have indicated, an extremely profitable picture. We have been told that some time ago British Telecom made a bid of $750 million for the company.

Government and analysts thought that Teleglobe would bring in at least $600 million, and expected that it would receive that price. Unfortunately, the Government has let the company go for just one-half of that. The $600 million mark also explains why the Government has tried in its press coverage to create the impression that the company is being sold for more than $600 million.

We are completely opposed to the sale of Teleglobe because the company has been a consistent money-maker, because it is a monopoly and because it occupies the field of communications in which there is a legitimate public policy interest to be protected. It adds insult to injury to receive only a paltry $350 million for such a lucrative company so valuable to the people of Canada.

There was a great deal of surprise about the sale of this company to Memotec. Memotec is just a minnow in the sea when compared with Teleglobe. In 1985 Memotec reported revenues of just $17 million. We must compare this figure to the $678 million in revenues reported by Teleglobe for the same year. We have to wonder how Memotec will manage this acquisition of Teleglobe. In Canada and in the United States we have seen companies which have gone in for these acquisitions and have done so by borrowing huge amounts of the money required from banks and other companies, and have then had tremendous difficulties in meeting the interest costs and showing a profit.

We have another problem with this sale. Teleglobe was the company which dealt with the international telecommunications business as a result of agreements made and treaties signed with other countries. With the exception of Japan and the United States, in countries which include Australia, New Zealand, France, West Germany, Italy, Norway and Sweden, there are government-controlled overseas telecommunications systems. In Great Britain the British Government has completed a major privatization of British Telecom through a share offering. However, the British Government retained just slightly more than 50 per cent ownership in the company. Thus it has a controlling interest.

Canada is a party to a treaty called the INTELSAT Treaty. INTELSAT is the international body which was set up in 1964 to govern all international overseas telecommunications satellite traffic. A key objective of INTELSAT is to provide even the most remote areas of the world with access to the global communications system. Therefore, services are to be provided at the same cost in high density traffic regions, for example industrialized countries, as in lower traffic regions. Essentially, the INTELSAT Treaty provides for a cross-subsidy system by which the richer countries subsidize the poorer ones.

With a U.S. satellite set up a privatized Teleglobe, which has as its goal the bottom line and profits for its shareholders, could well be in a conflict of interest situation. On the one hand it is supposed to represent Canada internationally on INTELSAT and carry out Canadian policy. On the other hand, it could be tempted to send at least some of its calls overseas via the cheaper U.S. systems. Its obligations to its shareholders would almost demand this, we believe, if going through the U.S. would be more lucrative. While Teleglobe could always endeavour to remove itself from INTELSAT, how would Canada then fulfil its international obligations? That question has not been dealt with.

I now wish to deal with the position of the employees. Memotec has agreed to provide current Teleglobe employees with a pension plan which is the equivalent to that which they currently have under the Public Service Superannuation Act, which is a good pension plan. Unfortunately, despite comments made by the previous speaker, an Hon. Member from the Conservative Party, future employees of the company will not be eligible for this equivalent pension plan. For new employees there is to be a pension plan equivalent to the norm "in the telecommunications industry" in Canada. In other words, what we will see created after this deal is completed is two classes of employees, one with a respectable pension plan and the other with a less generous one. There are no job guarantees past the five-year period provided for in the Bill.

The employees are not very happy with the arrangements made with regard to their pensions. They point out that the arrangements made here are not the same as those made in other cases where the Government has divested itself of Crown corporations. Let me point out some examples.

• (1310)

In the case of Veterans Hospital, which was turned over to municipal operations, the employees were allowed to retain their Public Service pensions; in the sale of Canadian Arsenals, the purchaser and the union were able to negotiate a pension plan which allowed for the same kinds of benefits as a public service pension.

It should be recognized that most people had no concern about the growth or success of the purchasing company after privatization. With the Teleglobe sale, the Government is saying, as it did in the case of the sale of Canadian Arsenals, that they are protecting the employees. It is being said that they are offering the employees of Teleglobe everything offered to the employees of Canadian Arsenals, other than that in respect of the level of future additions.

The employees at Teleglobe have not negotiated with Memotec Data Incorporated, and they are feeling very insecure. There is no guarantee that Teleglobe will have the monopoly protection that the Government has suggested. Already Bell Canada and some provincial telephone companies are talking about bypassing Teleglobe; in other words, going through the United States.

So, there is no guarantee of success, and the employees feel that they are leaving a secure and growing pension plan for something smaller and less secure. Even if they could be guaranteed the protection which was theirs under the Pension Benefits Standards Act, they might accept.

The employees of Teleglobe have made their position clear: they are unhappy. They are unhappy about the lack of job security. There is no guarantee that Memotec will be able to grow and, even if it gets more business, that it will protect the job security of the present employees.

For all of these reasons, Mr. Speaker, it is our intention to oppose this Bill.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, let me say that we believe that Teleglobe has proven itself an effective money-maker, and as such we do not know why it should be sold. The long range outlook is that the company will stay a monopoly beyond the five year guarantee. There simply is not the demand in Canada to have another overseas telecommunications service. Teleglobe is, effectively, a utility company, and therefore should remain in public hands, as do some of the telephone companies—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to say that the Hon. Member's time has expired. Questions or comments?

The Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton (Mr. James), on a question or comment.

Mr. James: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I should like to address some comments on the remarks made by my friend from Winnipeg North. It may be that there will be a question come out of all of this.

I am a little concerned about the paper that he read from when he talked about the sale price being $350 million. It was $488 million, plus $100 million in returned profit, plus $18 million. Those are very right and proper figures. We have to be careful about the figures that some researcher gave to him. I am wondering whether his researcher read the proceedings of the legislative committee on this Bill. Certainly, the sale price was not an issue of any consequence during committee consideration of the Bill. There may have been one question on it. Certainly there was no lengthy discussion or questioning on the sale price itself. In fact, a Member of his own Party made the statement in committee that it was a very reasonable price.

Also, there was no argument mounted against the selling of Teleglobe by the employee group. Certainly, they had some thoughts and questions, but not about the sale itself.

It has been stated by the Minister, and it was stated in testimony by the President of Memotec, that there would be an equivalent pension plan put in place. The fact of there being an equivalent pension plan was not in issue. What was in issue was the actuarial assumption used in respect of past service. Certainly, it has been stated that there will be an equivalent pension plan for the employees. The only issue is whether the actuarial assumptions would result in sufficient moneys being transferred into the pension plan to handle all of the eventualities that actuaries attempt to calculate in setting up a pension plan.

Given that there was no argument mounted during committee consideration of this Bill in respect of the intelligence of selling Teleglobe Canada, given that the employees did not come before the committee to mount an argument against selling Teleglobe Canada, and given our experience with de Havilland and Fishery Products International, where privatization has resulted in added employment, why does the Party of which my friend from Winnipeg North is a member continue to talk against privatization?

Mr. Orlikow: Let me try to deal with both points raised. With regard to the pension plan, let me put on the record a few paragraphs from the brief presented to the legislative committee which dealt with this Bill by the Communications and Electrical Workers of Canada, on March 10, 1987. Under the section headed "Vested Rights and Collective Agreements", the brief reads:

> —we were told that the purchaser had made a commitment to provide a pension plan identical to the Public Service Superannuation Plan—and the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Plan—for all current employees of Teleglobe Canada.
> Our position is that all measures taken to make this affirmation a concrete reality should be defined and tabled to the unions representing those employees before the Bill is passed, in order to avoid any ambiguity.

I do not think that that was done. They go on to say:

> We think plans identical to the PSSA and the SRBA should be offered to future employees as well (as current ones), to avoid treating them in a discriminatory manner.

That is exactly what I said in my remarks. The brief continues:

> So far we have yet to see concrete written proposals from Memotec or the government with respect to the pension plan that will be introduced; that is why we think all such questions ought to be settled before the final passage of Bill C-38.
> The CEWC considers that all rights and privileges currently enjoyed by Teleglobe's employees, and more especially those in Local 1653, must continue to apply, and that the government should make every effort required to ensure complete openness about this aspect of the matter.

Insofar as the point made about the price paid, let me read to the House the position which our researcher has given to us. It is as follows:

> Memotec is to pay $488.3 million to the Government for the Teleglobe, and then the Government is to get $102 million in accumulated cash out of the company, plus an $18 million dividend, for a total of $608.3 million. But, these latter payments cannot be considered part of the purchase price, because they represent funds already in Government hands held by the crown corporation.
> However, it is also understood that Memotec, as part of the $488.3 million purchase price, has said that it is assuming Teleglobe's debt liabilities, which amount to $143 million. If this is the case, then the government will only really be receiving $345 million for Teleglobe, as no actual funds will be paid for the debt. Memotec has said that it plans to raise the $345 million by a loan of $225 (million) from the National Bank, and an issue of $125 (million) in debentures to institutional investors.

That, Mr. Speaker, is precisely the point I made in saying that we can have real doubts as to whether Memotec can make this financial arrangement work.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker), on a question or comment.

Mr. Baker: A short question, Mr. Speaker.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) has said that the sale of Teleglobe Canada makes no sense economically.

Given that Teleglobe Canada is guaranteed a monopoly for five years, the purpose of the sale cannot be to increase competition. Given those facts, why does he think the Government of Canada is privatizing Teleglobe Canada?

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North has told us that there is no logical reason for the sale of Teleglobe Canada. Given that that is his view, can he tell us why he feels the Government is privatizing Teleglobe Canada?

• (1320)

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to try to answer that question. I thought I explained my understanding at the beginning of my comments.

We have a Government which ignores the entire history of the development of Canada and really believes that the private sector can do things better than the public sector.

Mr. James: Hear, hear!

Mr. Orlikow: I hear the Hon. Member. He ignores the success of all hydro companies in the provinces and the success of publicly owned telephone companies.

Government Members really believe that the private sector can do things better than publicly owned corporations. In believing that, they ignore the entire history of Canada. We have seen again and again that publicly owned corporations in many areas do a job efficiently and provide a service at a price which the private sector cannot meet. The Government ignores that because it is ideologically locked into the concept that somehow the private sector can do things efficiently and that all government operations are somehow incompetently run.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I just heard conflicting comments in the House and I want to rectify the record, if possible.

I heard a government representative state that the unions were in favour of privatizing Teleglobe. However, if we look at page 3 of the union brief put to the committee in February, 1987, we see the following:

> The Government's preoccupation with the privatization of Teleglobe seems to arise from their fixation with the national deficit. They intend to use the profits from the sale to reduce this deficit. The short-term gain they will realize from this transaction pales in comparison to the amount that the dividends from Teleglobe would have poured into the national treasury in future years.

It goes on to indicate categorically—and perhaps I will read it this afternoon—that the union opposed the sale of Teleglobe.

Mr. James: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I said that there was no mounted argument about selling Teleglobe in the legislative committee. That is what I said. I did not say that there was no argument. Maybe the Hon. Member did not hear me. Perhaps he was behind the curtain.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) has about 30 seconds in which to reply.

The period for questions and comments is now terminated. On debate the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

It being 1.24 p.m., I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1.24 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

FAILURE TO ENSHRINE IN CONSTITUTION

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, last week Canada's First Ministers missed their opportunity for greatness. With few exceptions, insufficient political will and vision among our government leaders prevented the breakthrough which would have recognized in our Constitution the aboriginal right to self-government. The federal Government's mind-set was predicated on failure. Preparations for the conference were inadequate and the federal strategy became one of damage control.

The aboriginal peoples of Canada lost nothing at the conference. They emerged strong and united with all their rights intact. The Canadian Confederation lost, and our international reputation in the field of human rights has suffered.

We must try again, but this time with strong federal leadership and advocacy. The first step must be an agreement between the federal Government and aboriginal leaders. Once that is done, work can begin on a program of persuasion so that when another conference is called there will be unanimity that constitutional recognition of aboriginal self-government in this country is long overdue.

GENOCIDE

LESSON OF ARMENIAN HOLOCAUST

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, last night 1,200 people jammed the Concert Hall of the Royal York Hotel in Toronto to watch two films dedicated to the 1.5 million Armenians killed at the hands of the Ottoman Empire in the first genocide of the 20th century.

The 60,000 Canadians of Armenian origin ask us to recognize and acknowledge their tragedy, not just for the sake of Armenians but for the sake of all mankind. There is a lesson here of what can happen when Governments and people are indifferent to the plight of religious and ethnic minorities.

In 1939, on the eve of his invasion of Poland, Adolf Hitler told his generals to show no mercy "because who, after all, speaks today of the annihilation of the Armenians?" The Armenians perished during World War I, the Jews during World War II.

Canada has recently spoken out eloquently about the Jewish Holocaust. Isn't it time for us to speak out just as eloquently about the Armenian Holocaust?

THE ARTS

HAIDA ARTIST'S REFUSAL TO PROCEED WITH NEW WASHINGTON EMBASSY COMMISSION

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, Bill Reid, a world-renowned Haida artist, has reminded us that art is not simply a commodity which can be bought and sold or produced on demand. Art springs out of the life of an individual or of a people. As an artist, Bill Reid believes that when Canada refuses to recognize the legitimate rights of the Haida people, Canada has no right to display Haida art in its embassies around the world. Because the First Ministers' Conference on Aboriginal Rights has failed, Mr. Reid has said that he will not proceed with a commission for a sculpture using Haida motifs and symbols which was to have been placed in the new Canadian embassy in Washington.

Mr. Reid has made this decision at great personal cost, both in terms of money and also in terms of international recognition of his work. But Bill Reid keeps two things more important than either money or fame. These are his integrity as an artist, and a living relationship with his people.

When will the Government of Canada come to terms with aboriginal nations so that the work of artists like Bill Reid can be shown in Canadian embassies and be seen as a symbol, not of colonial usurpation but of a living partnership among peoples?

ABORTION

VIOLENCE AGAINST THE UNBORN—FILM PRESENTATION

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, life is priceless. Since 1975, according to Statistics Canada, there have been an average of 60,000 abortions a year. It is crystal clear that abortion is the number one killer in Canada. The film, Eclipse of Reason, focuses on second-trimester abortion. I should point out that over 6,000 unborn Canadian children are aborted in the second or third trimester of pregnancy. This film shows quite graphically the manner in which they are killed.

• (1405)

Dr. Nathanson has stated, "Abortion, all abortion, is violence, and violence is impermissible in a world of reason. Late abortion, the systematic and deliberate destruction of a viable foetus, is especially odious". I agree with his statement and applaud his efforts to show all of us the hard, cold truth about the procedure known as therapeutic abortion.

I urge all Members of the House to attend the film presentation today and see for themselves that abortion violently destroys a living human being. I am pleased to note that Dr. Nathanson is with us in the Gallery today.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

THE CONSTITUTION—RESULT OF FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, aboriginal nations left last week's First Ministers' Conference disappointed and frustrated. All aboriginal organizations, Indian, Inuit, Métis, and non-status, could not accept the final amendment proposal which was in part a complete contradiction of their long-standing position that they have an inherent right to self-government. They exercised this right prior to the arrival of the Europeans, never gave it up, and it was never extinguished.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) should have spent more time seeking a consensus acceptable to the aboriginal nations rather than one acceptable to opposing provinces. As a result he failed on both counts. Although this conference is over, Members of Parliament should continue to work with aboriginal groups in their pursuit of justice and fair play.

CHILD CARE

PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE'S REPORT—CRITICISM OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY'S RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, today the Special Committee on Child Care tabled its report along with its recommendations on government involvement in assisting Canadian families in the care of their children. Throughout our hearings Canadians told us they did not want the Government making decisions on how they would bring up their children, but they asked for assistance when it was needed.

No one attempted to advise us on how to differentiate between needs and wants, although in reviewing parts of the NDP wish list it would appear they are dealing with wants and not needs. Their definition of affordable is, "Cost should not be a barrier to access. Parental fees should diminish over a period of time until they are ultimately phased out." That means complete government involvement.

Neither do they subscribe to the fact that parents may be the best decision-makers concerning their own children. In fact in January they called for the resignation of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) because he dared to make that suggestion. What hypocrisy! Canadians do not subscribe to that kind of thinking. Today's report goes some way toward addressing people's needs and is conscious of the Confederation of which we are so proud.

CHILDREN

PLIGHT OF HOMELESS CHILDREN

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, over the weekend many of us heard the program on CBC which gave a description of the situation of homeless children. The example used was that of Winnipeg but the problem is not restricted to Winnipeg. It is a national problem. These kids are on the street. They prostitute themselves for meals and shelter. They use chemicals to escape harsh reality.

There is no reason why a country like this cannot take care of all its children. Canadians are relatively comfortable. The report was extremely disturbing and should prod us into action. We must have specific policies in order to make service available to these children while they are on the streets. We also must have policies designed to attack poverty so that children will have decent homes in which to live. I call upon the Government to take leadership in this area so that we have no more homeless children in our country.

NATIVE PEOPLES

FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Mr. Speaker, contrary to lead articles, and unlike Members of the Opposition and certain people who attended the recent Prime Ministers' Conference on native peoples, I for one consider that it proved to be a worthwhile and profitable exercise in several respects. First, it enabled the native groups themselves to take counsel together, for they must strengthen the ties that bind them so as to form a common front in the quest for the settlement of their claims. Then it made it possible for the provincial premiers to weigh their different views on the question of self-government of the first nations and set up a real mechanism to resume negotiations in the coming year. It also made it easier for Canadians to become better acquainted with the whole matter of native peoples' right to self-determination and understand that the Canadian conference cannot operate without Quebec.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, it made it possible for all Canadians to appreciate the leadership of our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who advocated a logical formula from which all Parties can draw inspiration if they really want to find a solution to this basic question of the right of the first nations to self-determination.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—PRIME MINISTER'S SCHEDULED MEETING WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in looking at the world of acid rain it is interesting to note that it took the United States a short time to negotiate a treaty to control acid rain which crosses its border from Mexico. This means that when the shoe is on the other foot the United States knows how to get fast action on acid rain.

This is an important fact to keep in mind on the eve of the third Summit. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) should, in his discussions with President Reagan, ask some pointed questions about the U.S.-Mexico deal to regain the ground he lost when he went out of his way two weeks ago in praising President Reagan for now keeping a promise made a year ago to spend money next year on research and demonstration.

By not restraining himself the Prime Minister gave away his negotiating position at the Summit. It is now time to regain the lost ground and openly and frankly demand acid rain cuts which will be meaningful to Canada.

SPORTS

CANADIAN TEAM WINS WORLD WOMEN'S CURLING CHAMPIONSHIP

Mr. Patrick Crofton (Esquimalt—Saanich): Mr. Speaker, Canadians enjoy, support, and indeed participate in the full range of local and international athletic competitions. Athletics make a substantial contribution to personal good health, to building the fabric of our country, and to presenting a favourable image of Canada abroad.

Such a happy event occurred this past Saturday which merits the applause of all Canadians. A team of young women representing the Racquet Club of Victoria, the Province of British Columbia and, most important, Canada, won the World Women's Curling Championship held in Chicago. The Pat Sanders rink of Victoria, which includes as a key member the niece of a distinguished Member of this House, overcame with courage, perseverance, and great skill all the challenges before it. Members of this House, indeed all Canadians, salute them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MULTICULTURALISM

CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, action against racism in our country is an urgent necessity. The multiculturalism sector sponsored a conference last July to consider strategy in race relations. Participants at the Winnipeg gathering urged strong action by the federal Government. There was debate between those who think that the primary challenge is to sensitize Canadians to these issues and those who believe minorities need to be empowered to grapple with systemic discrimination.

The Minister responsible for Multiculturalism (Mr. Crombie) has failed to resolve this debate. He has not yet stated what his race relations strategy is. Members of Canada's ethnocultural communities have been largely disappointed in the multicultural policies of the Government. Members of the visible minority communities have even less reason to be pleased. They have heard a lot of talk but have seen very little action.

I call on the Minister responsible for Multiculturalism to develop a strategy for overcoming racism in this country and to tell us what it is. The social situation becomes more urgent with every passing day.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

WILDLIFE—EFFECT OF ACID RAIN

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound—Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, last week two very important environmental conferences were held in Quebec City. I refer to the National Wildlife Federation and the fifty-second North American Wildlife and Natural Resources conferences. Both organizations have their head offices in Washington, D.C.

Over 1,000 delegates were present and most were American. They heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and our Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) speak forcefully on acid rain saying that the United States must do more to reduce its emissions, specifically that action should be taken by the White House and the U.S. Congress to enact legislation which will reduce U.S. emissions falling in Canada by 50 per cent by 1994. Estimates of these emissions are about 4 million tonnes annually.

Canada and four provinces, P.E.I., Newfoundland, Ontario, and Quebec, have already signed agreements to this effect to reduce their SO_2s by 1994. Manitoba is expected to sign very shortly. New Brunswick and Nova Scotia have not signed as yet. However, our Minister of the Environment recently met with Premier Buchanan of Nova Scotia to discuss this. The Special Committee on Acid Rain has invited Premier Richard Hatfield of New Brunswick to appear before it on Thursday, April 2. This is another example of great progress being made on the serious problem of acid rain reduction.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—ADVERTISEMENT PUBLISHED BY THE GLOBE AND MAIL

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, this morning, in a full-page ad in The Globe and Mail, the representative of the Government of South Africa said goodbye. He urged Canadians to go to South Africa to see that virtual nirvana will be found there for black people.

The Globe and Mail printed this ad at a cost to the South African Government of $29,000. Of course its defence will be freedom of the press, but I ask The Globe and Mail to seek fairness as well and accord gratis to the other voices from South Africa equal space to tell the truth.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—USEFULNESS OF DEBATE

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, since the debate in the House on new trade arrangements a couple of weeks ago, I have sensed in my riding of Guelph and elsewhere in Canada a growing awareness of the importance of the Government's trade initiatives, both with the United States and the multilateral discussions under GATT.

The debate clarified many points. We learned that our agricultural marketing systems were not on the table. We learned once again that our social programs were not in jeopardy. We learned that protectionism in the United States was strong and growing stronger. We put to rest the Liberal and NDP concerns about the Auto Pact.

The debate strengthened the Government's resolve to protect Canadian sovereignty while promoting Canadian jobs. We learned that the NDP is afraid of American competition. We tried to learn where the Liberals stood. Following the debate, Canadians from all walks of life have come forward to say: "We can compete. Let us get on with it".

Oral Questions

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

DONATIONS TO MUSEUMS AND ART GALLERIES—POSSIBLE EFFECT OF TAX CHANGES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the provisions of the Income Tax Act and the Cultural Property Export and Import Act encourage, through tax incentives, Canadians to donate works of art or other cultural property to public institutions in this country.

The fair market value as determined by the Cultural Property Export Review Board for the last year amounted to some $17.5 million in respect of some 430 donations.

It will be interesting to find out whether changes rescinding the exemption from capital gains tax on certified cultural property for taxpayers who are required to use the minimum tax calculation will adversely affect the generosity of Canadian donors.

In the meantime, let us thank those people who have done so much to enhance the stock of cultural property held by Canadian museums and art galleries.

CHILD CARE

CONSTRUCTION OF DAY CARE CENTRES ACROSS CANADA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the official document released by the Prime Minister during the last election campaign contained a promise—the words are those we read in the document—to find a speedy, realistic and effective solution to the pressing problem of child care.

This morning, almost three years later, the Conservative Members of this committee produced a report that fails to fulfil the promise made by the Prime Minister and fails to meet the pressing need for a national day care system.

Will the Prime Minister commit himself now, this afternoon, to building day care centres across Canada, because otherwise a national day care system is doomed to failure?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, is the Leader of the Opposition serious about asking me to start building day care centres across Canada, when I received the report of a special committee of the House on child care, published under the title: "Sharing the responsibility", only a few minutes ago? Is he serious about having no hesitation about approving anything that can get the slightest bit of support for his party? Would he not prefer to take a more reasonable and sensible position? He could say, for instance, that now a report by a parliamentary committee has been submitted, we will take a quick look to see if the basic criteria at the national level are met, and if that is the case, we will make some progress. If not, we will table a proposal in the House to give Canada a day care system that will help those who need it, first of all, and include conditions for providing for the necessary funding.

Interestingly . . . I would like to hear what the Leader of the Opposition has to say about the taxes involved and the people who will have to pay for this extraordinary suggestion . . . Now he is being coached by the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides. He certainly needs coaching because suggestions like that tend to raise expectations.

• (1420)

[English]

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I can say to the Prime Minister that I am deadly serious because the recommendation of his members this morning did not respond in any way to the promises the Prime Minister made on behalf of his Party during the election campaign. Three years ago the Prime Minister's Government already had a report by Katie Cooke available and it has taken another three years to study the question once again.

SITUATION OF MODERATE-INCOME FAMILIES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Since Conservative Members this morning proposed virtually nothing to help moderate-income parents in their struggle to afford quality child care, will the Prime Minister question his members as to why in their report they gave no hope to the children of moderate-income families for quality day care services?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I hear the "Hear, hears" from the other side. Reference was made to the Cooke Report. My understanding is that the implementation of that report would cost $11 billion a year.

Some Hon. Members: That is right.

Mr. Mulroney: That is $11 billion a year, the equivalent of the total cost of the old age pensions. Is my right hon. friend saying he wants the Cooke report implemented today because he just referred to it so favourably? If he is, let him then stand up for the first time with some degree of responsibility and indicate to the Canadian people how he is going to pay for it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What we have here is a bit of bravado to disguise the fact that the Conservative members of that committee have broken another promise of the Prime Minister. That is what we have. The Conservative members of the committee have ignored the need for national standards and a national plan for child care.

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL MEETING ON NATIONAL STANDARDS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Will the Prime Minister meet urgently to obtain a federal-provincial consensus on national standards so that we can have a plan which responds on a national basis? Forget the bravado, forget the rhetoric, for once give us some action and response on one of the promises made by the Government.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): The Right Hon. Leader says to forget the bravado, but he is also implying forget the facts, forget the costs. We are saying, no, you cannot have it both ways. You either have to be fiscally responsible and have low interest rates and growth or you are going to have the bankruptcy inflicted on the country by the Liberals in the past. You can't have it both ways.

You cannot have the hypocrisy of the Liberals on fundamental issues like this because some people, including the media, are going to begin asking you where you really stand. Do you want $11 billion a year expenditure here? If so, where are you going to get the money, because it will have to come from Canadians. It is time you started to tell them that.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You made the promise.

Mr. Mulroney: On March 2, I said on behalf of the Government:

> We know that a comprehensive child care system will require significant resources, and we are going to have to find them. For I want to state clearly that our commitment to a child care program is real and that Canada shall have an effective national child care system.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): When?

Mr. Mulroney: That is the commitment of this Government and it shall be consistent with the commitment to fiscal integrity which was abandoned by the previous Government and which cost Canadian families so dearly.

COMMERCIAL DAY CARE CENTRES—PUBLIC FUNDS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. According to the Cooke report and the "Conservative" report submitted this morning, today Canada has only 10 per cent of the day care facilities it needs to acommodate 1.9 million children. Is the Government prepared to table proposals that are more generous than those in the "Conservative" report tabled in the House this morning?

• (1425)

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, first it would be appropriate to thank the chairperson of the Special Committee on Child Care who chaired long meetings which produced the report, the Hon. Member for Lincoln—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): —as well as all members of the committee, including the Hon. Member who just asked the question.

I intend to study the report in detail, as many of us will. I think all of us recognize that when we are dealing with child care there has to be a mix of programs and choices into which parents can opt. That is the basis of the report, and I have only read parts of it. I have not studied it completely, but that is the way the report reads.

Having said that, it is important to take a look at those recommendations. I wish to say to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition that we have already met with the provinces on various configurations, some of which are similar to those in the report and others which are not. As the Prime Minister has said, there will be a national plan.

One thing I want to disabuse members of the Opposition of very quickly and clearly is that there is only one method about which there is a consensus among Canadian parents as to how child care should be funded. The report very clearly indicates that there has to be more than one method. On that point, I think we should all agree today.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF LIBERAL MINORITY REPORT

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, we know that a number of recommendations made by the Special Committee reflect a fragmented and weak approach to the crucial problem of children and day care.

Could the Minister inform the House whether he would consider both the Liberal Party's minority report and the Conservative report, in order to create a satisfactory, equitable and high quality system across Canada?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in partisan politics there is always the temptation to give a quick response. As people have only had the report for a few hours I hope that they will study it in detail. By the same token I say to the Hon. Member, and, again, I do not know the entire proposal put forward by the Hon. Member and her Leader, if we are to trigger it only through the Canada Assistance Plan, even with the recommendations they make, then the problem becomes the following. Where is the turning point? We have discussed that here before as well. Do we make the turning point approximately $23,000 or $24,000, as it is currently under CAP? What happens to families with gross incomes above that which have a number of children and in which both parents are working? Before people go shooting all over the place like rockets that find themselves with nowhere to go, I am simply saying that they had better be careful that they analyse these matters carefully. Once that is done, the Government will come forward with a report.

REQUEST FOR UNIVERSALLY ACCESSIBLE SYSTEM

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. More than 20 years ago we launched a universal medicare system in Canada which is the envy of most of the world. Today we should be doing precisely the same thing, based on the same principles, for child care. In the past we knew that we could not have medicare based on a system of tax breaks. My question to the Prime Minister is this. Since the Conservative majority on the committee which has just brought in its report advocates most of the government spending on child care come from a tax break system, will the Prime Minister now make it clear that he is committed to a universal, publicly effective system of child care, categorically reject this majority recommendation and say that the Government will put up money directly to provide the services our children need?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1430)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, child care is a very significant and worthy national objective. We have discussed it. I have indicated that my Government is committed to it.

This report by parliamentarians came in only a few hours ago. In the tradition of parliamentary respect, we will want to read it and analyse it very carefully before responding.

As I have indicated in other circumstances—and I am delighted to do so again today—a child care program, which is something that cannot be instituted overnight, obviously, will require significant new resources. Notwithstanding that money has been rare in terms of its availability for new programs, we shall find, during the first mandate of this Government, the significant new resources necessary to ensure that, along with the provinces, we are on track in the development of a national child care program.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister knows that a fundamental question of principle is involved here.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Considering that 77 per cent of those who addressed the committee on the issue of funding opposed using the tax system to launch an important needed service such as child care, will the Prime Minister at least deal with that principle and say that we will do with child care what we have done with education in this country, what we have done with medicare in this country that is, not make it dependent on a specially calculated tax cut system but make it dependent upon direct government commitment?

Will the Government make that commitment now?

An Hon. Member: Read the report!

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party dismisses the tax credit system, as he did in his question. I think it is important that it is understood by those following this debate that what he is saying is that he does not want a certain amount of the money that is to be put into child care to go directly to the parents, who will then decide, in their circumstances, what is best for their children.

It is easy to make those kinds of statements, but one has to analyse the effect. The first point that has to be made is that parents want to have some of those choices.

As the Prime Minister has said, it is obvious that we need more day care facilities; but I cannot accept the kind of response that the Leader of the NDP gives, with a cavalier rejection of the one side of the equation, that of parental choice. Those living in rural areas often have greater access to the extended family, and using the extended family for child care is a system that has worked well for them. Let us not deprecate that. Let's look at how we can extend that throughout our modern society, in giving to parents the choices that they need.

Mr. Broadbent: Since the Minister has chosen to answer, I can tell him that the arguments he has just given were arguments given by his Party against medicare when it was introduced more than 20 years ago. The same arguments were given in the 19th century against the introduction of a public system of education.

An Hon. Member: State ownership of children.

Mr. Broadbent: If the Minister reads our report, he will see that all kinds of options are given to parents. We want parental input into the decision on child care.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Since the Minister has chosen to answer, let me ask him if he will admit that 70 per cent of those who gave advice to the committee on this issue were turned down by the Progressive Conservative majority on the committee? And will he admit that 78 per cent of those appearing before the committee recommended against public funds going to profit-making day care centres and that that, too, was turned down by the committee?

Will he admit that he is not bringing in a universal system of child care but is, rather, going back to quaint old reactionary 19th century ideas, ideas almost innate to his Party.

An Hon. Member: State ownership of children.

Mr. Broadbent: I am prepared to have a battle on this one.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the NDP can have his own views, but he at least should have his history correct. If he goes back to the issue of hospitalization—

Mr. Broadbent: I said "medicare". Listen.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I am listening. If he goes back to the issue of hospitalization, if he goes back to Tommy Douglas, Emmett Hall, and the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, because there was the five-province rule, it could not be triggered in—

An Hon. Member: Diefenbaker was opposed to the Canada Pension Plan.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Because of the five-province rule, Mr. Diefenbaker couldn't trigger it in. The last province staying out was Ontario, and Mr. Diefenbaker said: " Look, we will remove that condition, and any province that wants to come in can do so. We will have a national plan."

With all respect, your history is wrong.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: You guys are rewriting it. What about the CPP?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The second point I would make is in relation to the 77 per cent figure. If he has read the report, he will find who comprised the 77 per cent. Yes, they were people from the CLC primarily, from each location, as can be seen from the report and the break-out of the witnesses.

If one looks at page 342 of the Cooke report, it will be seen that the NDP propose to finance the $11 billion expenditure by, first of all, removing all dividends on any earnings of interest—and, by the way, the first $1,000 interest exemption is claimed by seniors; secondly, Mr. Speaker, they would propose that there be removed from RRSPs all tax benefits. For all Canadians RRSPs would be gone—

Some Hon. Members: No, no.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): And number three, they are going to wipe out the Department of National Defence.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE TO COMMITTEE REPORT

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

The Prime Minister has said on at least three if not four occasions that "we shall have an effective child care system"; and he has also indicated—and I was very glad to hear this—that he will commit substantial resources to this end. He has said repeatedly: "an effective national child care system."

The major tax recommendations of this special committee do not reflect this promise of the Prime Minister's, nor do they reflect the views of most of the witnesses who appeared.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he will personally take the time to review these submissions; and further, will he ensure that the Government's response calls for federal funding for non-profit accessible quality child care as a top priority, rather than giving money away in tax breaks?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, indeed I will take the time to review this important report carefully, and I would hope that my hon. friend will do the same thing.

Ms. Mitchell: I already have. I wrote it.

Mr. Mulroney: The member opposite says that she wrote the report.

Mr. Broadbent: Not that one.

Mr. Mulroney: Well, maybe I will have to stand up and congratulate her, because she is breaking away from the NDP position of trying to nationalize our children. I can tell you, that we will not have. I want to congratulate the member for her enlightened position.

Mr. Broadbent: I cannot believe this! This is incredible.

Ms. Mitchell: I heard the Leader of the Liberal Party this morning talking about kidnapping children, and this is going one step further.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You didn't hear clearly.

NON-PROFIT SYSTEM QUERY

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): The Prime Minister is aware of the various studies that have been done on day care, and many are repeated in the report he has in front of him. These studies show that non-profit child care is qualitatively better than "for profit" child care. Studies right across the country have shown this.

An. Hon. Member: Right on!

Ms. Mitchell: My question for the Prime Minister is: will he be sure, when developing this national child care program that he talks about, to ensure that this principle is embodied in the Government's national child care program?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I indicated to my hon. friend, who has had a great interest in this subject over many years, the extent of the Government's commitment. For example, at the First Ministers' Conference held in Vancouver last year, I, on behalf of the Government, as I did on prior occasions, committed the Government of Canada to searching for ways, with the provinces, whereby, together, we could bring about a genuine and effective national child care system.

• (1440)

I think all of the provinces, be they of NDP, Liberal, or Conservative background, acknowledged that the complexity and the financial burden implied in such a program were such that it could not be done overnight, but they viewed the approach of the federal Government or the commitment of the federal Government as one of very considerable importance, because it marked the beginning of that kind of program which would benefit Canadian families and Canadian parents so greatly. I tell my hon. friend that we will examine very carefully, not only this report, but the minority report submitted by my hon. friend, against the backdrop of the following commitment—that our commitment to a child care program is real and that Canada will find the resources to have an effective national child care program.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

REQUEST FOR REOPENING OF DISCUSSIONS WITH ABORIGINAL LEADERS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. As the Prime Minister knows, last week's constitutional conference on aboriginal rights was doomed to failure almost from the outset. The key factor in that failure was his Government's unwillingness to accept the fact that aboriginal self-determination is an inherent and inalienable right. That is a vital and first step. There had to be at least a united front between the federal Government and the aboriginal leaders. Is the Prime Minister prepared to say today to the House and to the country that he will reopen discussions and negotiations with the aboriginal leaders without delay, so that a suitable and appropriate self-government amendment could be found? Would he try, please, to get it right this time?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we put forward the proposal on behalf of the Government of Canada that the constitutional amendment should reflect the existence of an explicit right. This position was endorsed by Governments of Liberal, NDP, and Conservative persuasion. It was viewed by the provincial Governments to which I just referred as the appropriate way to go. If my hon. friend is saying that I, as Prime Minister of Canada, should have accepted a constitutional amendment that provided for an undefined and immediately enforceable right to self-government giving rise to nation to nation sovereignty in Canada, that is an entirely different proposal. If he is putting forward that proposal, may I ask him if this is the position of the Liberal Party of Canada, the Official Opposition?

LIBERAL PARTY POSITION

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Prime Minister knows the position of the Liberal Party of Canada. It is in the motion—

Mr. de Cotret: Nobody else does.

Mr. Penner: The position of the Liberal Party of Canada and its Leader is clearly stated in the motion proposed by the Leader of the Opposition in the House just over a week ago; that is the position. Will the Right Hon. Prime Minister study that motion and will he accept it as being the route to follow, and engage in a program of persuasion to convince the Premiers of the country and the public that this is the kind of self-government amendment we want and need in order to complete this Confederation of ours?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am interested by the suggestion of my hon. friend. While I was not in the House at the time, I read Hansard. I think there was a question from the Minister of Justice addressed to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition asking him if the position he had adopted meant that he espoused a position consistent with that put out by the AFN which has implications of sovereignty, nation to nation sovereignty. The Leader of the Opposition, as I understand it, rejected that proposal and rejected that position.

What we have put forward, endorsed by the Government of Ontario, by Premier Peterson, by his very distinguished Attorney General, by Premier Ghiz, and by the Leader of the Government in Yukon, the NDP, was a commitment which was far in advance of anything put forward before on behalf of the federal Government. If we compare it with the position in 1983 and 1984, we see a tremendous step forward on behalf of native rights coming from the Government of Canada.

I think that I share the view of Ontario Attorney General Ian Scott who said that history will show that Canada missed an excellent opportunity to entrench self-government, because the proposal we put forward, while not perfect, on behalf of the people of Canada and the Government of Canada, strongly endorsed by Ontario, Prince Edward Island, and others, would have marked in its acceptance a great stride forward toward equality and fairness for the native peoples of Canada. I deeply regret that we did not succeed, but I give my hon. friend the assurance that we shall try again to make sure that justice comes about for the native peoples of Canada.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CALGARY—TOXIC GAS CLOUD

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. As the Minister is aware, yesterday, shortly after midnight, a mysterious cloud of toxic gas arrived in the southeast area of Calgary causing concern and illness to many of my constituents. Will the Minister give the House an update on the progress being made in identifying the cause of this toxic cloud over Calgary? Can he assure the House that he will offer technical assistance to the provincial Ministry of the Environment?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can give the Hon. Member the assurance he seeks. The primary responsibility rests with the provincial Department of the Environment, but the Government of Canada, through the Atmospheric Environment Service of my Department, is backing that jurisdiction to the hilt through every possible technical and scientific avenue. We have not, frankly, been able to determine the exact nature of the toxic cloud. We have, however, eliminated certain possibilities, for example, sulphur dioxide, hydrogen sulphide, and carbon monoxide. The investigation is continuing, again with the full backing of the Government of Canada. We share the Hon. Member's deep concern and are following the issue with a great sense of urgency.

NATIONAL SECURITY

CANADIAN SECURITY ESTABLISHMENT—INVOLVEMENT WITH MIST GROUP OF COMPANIES

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question concerns the surreptitious organization known as the Canadian Security Establishment and its involvement with the Mist group of companies. Press reports today raise some very disturbing questions regarding this secretive organization. Who are they? What do they do? To whom are they accountable? Are they acting within the law, and exactly what role did they play with the Mist group of companies? Will the Government refer this whole issue to the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General to investigate all the disturbing questions that are raised regarding the Canadian Security Establishment?

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I can indicate to the Hon. Member that the CSE is a division of the Department of National Defence, reports through the Minister of National Defence, and it is a matter which can be brought up in the National Defence Committee at any time.

Mr. Nunziata: The Minister is mistaken. The Canadian Security Establishment is not accountable to any one Minister and in fact is not accountable to Parliament.

REQUEST THAT REVIEW COMMITTEE BE ESTABLISHED

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a supplementary question to the Minister. Will the Government bring in legislation immediately to establish a review committee to monitor the workings of the Canadian Security Establishment, to ensure that the privacy of innocent Canadians is maintained, to ensure that the organization is accountable to Parliament, but, more important, to ensure that the organization operates within the law?

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I can assure him that the organization operates within the laws of Canada and that it does report to Parliament through the Minister of National Defence.

NATIVE PEOPLES

ENTRENCHMENT IN CONSTITUTION OF RIGHT TO SELF-GOVERNMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Considering the strong disappointment expressed by the chiefs of the aboriginal peoples following the failure of the First Ministers' Conference, and considering that the Prime Minister himself rejected Mr. Pawley's suggestion to simply adjourn the conference until a later date, what is he prepared to do specifically, as of today, to work towards entrenchment in the Canadian Constitution of the right to self-government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I missed the very end of the question. If you would have the kindness to repeat it?

Mr. Parry: Of course, but not as a supplementary.

Considering the strong disappointment expressed by the aboriginal chiefs following the failure of the First Ministers' Conference and considering that the Prime Minister himself rejected Mr. Pawley's decision to adjourn the Conference to a later date, what is the Prime Minister prepared to do specifically, starting today, to work towards enshrinement in the Constitution of the right to self-government?

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, we are still looking for a formula that will make it possible to enshrine the rights of aboriginal peoples in the Constitution of Canada. We worked non-stop on a formula that would receive the approval of seven provinces with 50 per cent of the population. We did not succeed last week, but the federal Government's obligation is clear. I think the responsibility is equally shared by the provinces, and we intend to examine with them and the leaders of the various aboriginal groups the various alternatives available, in order to try and develop another formula that would meet with the requisite consent of the various groups so that this right can finally be enshrined in the Canadian Constitution.

[English]

POSITION OF NATIVE PEOPLE

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary question, the Prime Minister stated at the conference that the people who would bear the heaviest price for that failure were the native people of Canada. I would like to hear, and I am sure so would all Canadians, what the federal Government will do to ease that burden of failure that has been laid upon the native people of this country.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I indicated that I thought the native peoples would bear the heaviest price, not because of their responsibility but because of our collective failure to achieve an agreement that would relieve them of that burden. I said with the greatest sadness that this was a moral obligation that has been unfulfilled by Canada, by the federal Government, by the provinces and so on.

I point out to my hon. friend that when the amending formula was devised, it was devised, of course, with the concept of 10 provinces involved. I want to tell my hon. friend how difficult it is when a province, which reduces the number to nine, with about 30 per cent of the population, is not part of the amending formula, of the process, and how few doors on which a Prime Minister can knock on behalf of the aboriginal peoples in trying to build that consensus which is necessary.

It may be that if we get the leadership and generosity from other provinces that we will be able, for example, to find a formula which will allow Quebec to become part of the constitutional process. In which case it is my judgment that that would greatly facilitate an equal degree of justice so long overdue to the native peoples, because the Government of Quebec is quite favourably disposed to many of the things that we have been trying to do over the last number of years.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Mulroney: I am sorry to have taken a little time, Mr. Speaker, but I know the sincerity of my hon. friend in this matter. I want to assure him of our fullest co-operation in bringing justice to the native peoples of Canada.

FISHERIES

MARINE ECOLOGY LABORATORY IN DARTMOUTH, N.S.

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The Minister knows that as of tomorrow the Marine Ecology Lab in Dartmouth, Nova Scotia, will be disbanded based on a decision that he made some time ago. In light of the fact that this move has been condemned by scientists around the world and by the fishing industry in Atlantic Canada, will the Minister stand in his place today and admit that his original decision was wrong? Will he defer the closing until a proper study of our fisheries research programs is undertaken by the industry and the Government?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, first I should point out to the Hon. Member that the work of the marine ecology laboratory at the Bedford Institute is not being disbanded. I should indicate that the commitment of this Government is to strengthen and enhance the effectiveness of our scientific research across the board and, in this case, in support of the needs of our fisheries and our ocean industries. For that reason, out of the some 60 scientists at the marine ecology laboratory, no more than six will have their office location changed or their presence in that laboratory altered. Those six will be moved to St. John's, Newfoundland, where they will assist us to do a better job of supporting the important fisheries management and science in that northern region which was vastly understaffed in previous years.

CANADA-FRANCE BOUNDARY DISPUTE—IMPORTANCE OF SCIENTIFIC DATA

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same Minister. I realize that some of those scientists will be shifted to Newfoundland. But I want to get something across to the Minister today. He knows full well that the favourable decision we got over the United States in the Georges Bank dispute was mainly because of good scientific evidence and data supplied by the Marine Ecology Lab in Dartmouth. That is one of the reasons why we do not want to see that unit broken up.

In light of the fact that we have a real boundary dispute between Canada and France and we need good scientific evidence and data to support our claim in those negotiations, does the Minister not agree that it is more imperative than ever to have this kind of scientific evidence and data to support our case with France?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the process in which we are engaged is one of integrating and consolidating our scientific resources to bring together more effectively oceanographers with fisheries biologists and hydrographers in certain centres of disciplinary expertise, of which two new ones will be created at the Bedford Institute. The marine ecology laboratory was only a sub-branch within the Bedford Institute. It is being enhanced and improved by the creation of a new centre on plankton ecology; another new centre on contaminants and toxicology, as well another strengthening of this centre in marine biology. We are, in fact, improving our ability to serve the industry in the way in which the Hon. Member seeks.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—PRIME MINISTER'S FORTHCOMING MEETING WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. It has to do with the upcoming meetings between the Prime Minister and President Reagan. Will the Prime Minister assure the House that when he meets with President Reagan, pursuant to an anxiety that was placed before the Special Committee on Acid Rain last week by a distinguished American expert on acid rain, Mr. Paul Hansen, of the Isaac Walton League, he will seek assurances from President Reagan that if there comes to be a congressional consensus and congressional action on acid rain legislation, the President will not veto such legislation?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have been urging the Congress to get its act together for a long time. For example, some of these Congressmen who take the liberty of coming up here—God bless them all—to give us some lectures, I have been saying to them: "Why don't you stay at home and persuade the leadership of your own Parties—not the guy across the aisle, persuade your own leaders—to adopt a position in favour of a control bill on acid rain?" Once it gets through the House and the Senate, I think it will be widely acclaimed in the United States and would be ratified by the administration. We very strongly agree with anybody who shares that view. We have been putting it out for some years.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill on a short supplementary, please.

POSSIBLE PRESIDENTIAL VETO

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I am asking the Prime Minister if he would seek assurances from President Reagan that when that day comes—when Congress is able to do what the Prime Minister says he wants Congress to do and what we all want Congress to do—that the President will not veto any such congressional action, because there is a legitimate worry among the acid rain constituency in the United States that the President might actually contemplate such an action. Would the Prime Minister seek an assurance from the President that he will not do that? That is what we are asking the Prime Minister to do.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I suppose it would depend on what kind of a Bill came out, if any—my friend is shaking his head—in much the same way as New Democrats would not accept, until they saw it on their legislative desks, a government proposal. The Hon. Member would not want someone else in another jurisdiction to give a blind cheque in advance until such time as the legislation is there. All I am saying is that I hope my hon. friend uses his very considerable influence with some American legislators and urges them to take the time and the energy to stay at home prevailing upon members of their own Parties to bring forward a Bill. The member should not worry. If that Bill passes the House and the Senate, it will pass through the United States.

IMMIGRATION

REPORTED SALE OF CANADIAN VISAS IN LEBANON

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Immigration. We now learn that shady travel agents and consultants in Lebanon are involved in peddling Canadian visas for up to $6,500. This comes on the heels of similar activities and practices in Portugal.

Given that the Government ignored repeated requests last year on trying to come to grips with this problem and that it is not an isolated, insignificant matter, will the Minister investigate the latest scam in Lebanon as part of a comprehensive inquiry covering all our immigration posts abroad so that, together and collectively, we can stamp out this growing industry of fraud and manipulation?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, last week I pointed out to the Hon. Member that, particularly in the case of charges made concerning Toronto passport trafficking with respect to Portuguese, we had asked the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to investigate. The same procedure is followed in any alleged criminal activity concerning the Department of Immigration, that is again we did ask the RCMP to check into and investigate the case raised by my colleague. I should think that the RCMP will pass on to us any information likely to warrant further inquiries.

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. The confusion paralysing his Government's immigration policy is seriously eroding the confidence of Canadians, including his own back-benchers who have requested his intervention to ensure an overhaul of the entire policy. Will the Prime Minister order a full review, indeed a royal commission on immigration, so that we can collectively clean up the mess and articulate a clear, sound vision of immigration policy? If not, how will he, not the Minister, respond to the request by his own back-benchers, let alone other Canadians?

Mr. Shields: He is trying to clean up your mess.

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I wish my colleague would have had such clear policies when his Party was in office, because on several occasions he blamed me for being too clear in the policies we have implemented over the past two years, everything is clear and definite... We tell him that the RCMP must do their job and he responds with a confusing question.

Mr. Speaker, some people have specific roles to play in this country: we have ours in immigration, the RCMP have theirs and we are not going to ask them not to do their job simply because everything is confused in the Hon. Member's mind. The events will unfold as they should because that is the way it works in a country and a government where things are done in an orderly manner.

CHILD CARE

COMMERCIAL DAY CARE CENTRES—PUBLIC FUNDING—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Tradition in this country is such that health care and education are too important to be considered as profitable sectors. The committee reports indicate that the Government should use public funds to finance commercial day care centres, yet most witnesses who appeared before the committee were against that policy. Would the Prime Minister assure us that his Government is against this commercial approach?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will reply to the member in the same way I did to others, namely, that the Government has received the report, will study it, and then come forward with recommendations not only to government Members but also to the provinces. As the Hon. Member should know, this is a shared responsibility. As of today the report has exactly that status and that is the way we will proceed.

ESTABLISHMENT OF UNIVERSAL DAY CARE SYSTEM—DIRECT GRANTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I should think that time has come for the Prime Minister to live up to his promise to establish a universal day care system. Can the Prime Minister commit himself to making the direct grants required for that purpose before the end of June this year?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, that is not what the Prime Minister said. The new member of the NDP does not seem to be any clearer on the issues than his Leader.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Keep on talking, Jake.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The Prime Minister's position is quite clear and we will not—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. Members will have noted that this Question Period has been marked with long questions and long responses and is nearly at the end. The Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

ALGONQUIN RADIO OBSERVATORY

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, thank you for the new challenge.

In a letter to me the Minister of Science and Technology said it would cost $12 million to upgrade the Algonquin Observatory. The National Research Council Vice-President for Science said it would cost $15 million to $20 million. The Minister's own Parliamentary Secretary used yet another set of figures in this House. Why does the Minister disagree with the NRC and his own Parliamentary Secretary? Why is there this big ploy to create the worst possible scenario for the Algonquin Observatory in order to try to justify the Government's colonial decision to remove this science and technology from Canadian soil?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as I told the Hon. Member on several occasions last week, it was not a government decision not to refurbish the Algonquin Observatory but instead to co-operate in an international effort to establish the world's finest observatory on the best possible site. That decision the scientists made for us on behalf of the NRC and it just happens to be the best option available to us.

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL'S POSITION

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, it is not difficult to read the Hon. Minister because my next question is: why is he blaming the NRC for closing the Algonquin Observatory at a time when the officials at the NRC are clearly saying that if the Government had not cut the NRC budget so drastically, $20.5 million, upgrading of the ARO would have gone ahead and Canada would have its own world-class millimetre telescope located on Canadian soil. Now, answer that!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: Answer that!

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, like every other Member of the House, you will recall that several months ago I was being criticized for something I was not doing, that is, directing the NRC on how to spend the money Parliament allocates to it. Now the Hon. Member asks why I did not interfere with the decision. He cannot have it both ways. The decision happens to be the best decision—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This will be the last question.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PUBLIC FAITH AND CONFIDENCE—REQUEST FOR CHANGES TO PAROLE SYSTEM

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. Does he agree with the Minister of Justice and the Attorney-General of Ontario, both of whom say Canadians have lost confidence and faith in our criminal justice system? Will he take immediate steps to change our parole system, bearing in mind that the Chairman of the National Parole Board said recently there are no clear-cut criteria at present for the granting of parole?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question and I welcome the opportunity to clarify the statements of the Chairman of the NPB. I am happy to advise the Hon. Member that, yes, indeed, we do have criteria. The study presently under way is to try to implement a more even method of establishing these criteria across the country.

As far as the criminal justice system and the method of sentencing are concerned, as you know the commission has just reported after a two and a half year study. I welcome the report and I and my colleague, the Minister of Justice, are studying it and will report in due course.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall (St. Paul's) that Bill C-38, an Act respecting the reorganization and divestiture of Teleglobe Canada, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I will give my colleagues a choice: they can either listen to me or leave, but I hope at least 20 members will stay in the House!

Teleglobe Canada

[English]

We are dealing today with Bill C-38 which will give legislative authority for the sale of Teleglobe Canada to Memotec. This is a $600 million transaction. My preoccupation with this sale has mostly been with the question of pensions and the right of employees of the new company to a mirror plan pension equivalent to what they had when they were covered under the Public Service Superannuation Act.

• (1510)

The Bill is fundamentally flawed because it does not ensure in law that the employee compensation package will be fair, equitable and respectful with regard to the acquired pension benefits. The Government is attempting to rush Bill C-38 through the House and committee arguing that tomorrow, March 31, is a deadline for the deal, although the Bill has a June, 1987, date for finalization. The reasons are basically financial with regard to the Quebec stock option plan and the new rules which will apply on April 1 for those who invest in plans approved by the province. By blending the equity of Teleglobe, Memotec would change category and there may be some people who would have less interest in buying this stock under the Quebec stock option plan.

Nevertheless, the employee organizations to which I had the pleasure of speaking this morning have assured me that they have received a better deal from Memotec than they were originally offered by the Government. Although the Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton (Mr. James) said that they had not mounted a sustained attack on the Bill, their interest is to protect acquired rights in regard to pension and to protect their plan from being eroded by a pick and choose option of the Government with regard to actuarial assumptions and, more specifically, the interest rate and mortality rates.

This is a rather complex issue and for the average Canadian who has not been briefed it could be somewhat difficult to understand. I will try—in French we say "vulgariser", and in English I would say —make it as simple as possible. I will use the KISS principle, "Keep It Simple, Stupid". The idea starts with actuarial assumptions.

[Translation]

[Translation]

And what are those actuarial assumptions? In the case of Memotec, we are talking about $100 million, a fairly substantial amount, that would be set aside for employees.

The Government, however, has decided against transferring the entire amount to the new company which would otherwise have had a fully funded plan. The Government is proposing to transfer only 90 per cent, on the basis of actuarial tables produced by the Chief Actuary of Canada in 1971. The Government has considered factors which we find hard to reconcile with what we know today about the latest assessments made by Canadian actuaries of the Canadian Institute of Actuaries.

Regarding the first item, interest, the Government maintains that the interest rate proposed by the actuaries is too high and therefore wants to bring the rate down. Furthermore, the Government again, while recognizing that the GAM, which is a GAM 83, the—

[English]

—the Group Annuity Mortality.

[Translation]

So, what the Government did was to use GAM 71 instead of the far more recent GAM 83. The difference between GAM 71 and GAM 83 is that the latter study recognizes that the life expectancy of workers is far greater than it was in 1971. People are living longer and so will be entitled to pension payments for a longer period of time, and we must therefore provide for additional funding.

The latest GAM was a study prepared by the Canadian Institute of Actuaries in 1983, which recognizes, as I said before, that life expectancy has improved and people are living longer. The Government did not consider GAM 83 but GAM 71 because it was more convenient. According to GAM 71, people were dying at an earlier age which meant that the Government's outlay for pensions was not as high.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should explain that these actuarial assumptions are based on the following components. One component refers to interest, set at 6.5 per cent over the long term. Another component refers to long-term inflation of 5.5 per cent, and there is also a component that refers to wage and merit increases, in other words, advancement during a person's career, which is set at 1.5 per cent. Usually, inflation and wage and merit increases are about 5 per cent. This is important. It is this 5 per cent margin that is most often used by actuaries.

As I was saying earlier—and I am getting back to my point on interest rates—the Government feels that interest rates are too high and that nothing justifies investing as much as $100 million at current rates, which as we know are about 8 or 8.5 per cent, to produce that much money. Expecting the fund to yield more, the Government holds back the money, the Government helps itself and says: We will put back only 90 per cent because we believe that 6.5 per cent over a long term would be enough to meet pension commitments.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the union, the employees and management maintain that there is something wrong, something unfair in this Government approach. And this was, if you will, the basic argument of the union and the employers during the committee proceedings. They quite rightly maintained that indeed the employees had every reason to be concerned because, on one hand the company was committed to continue and maintain a plan identical to the one the employees had with Teleglobe, and on the other the company promised to maintain and give the same sound bases, the same financing and the same benefits the employees had been enjoying all along.

What worries the unions and Memotec management is that if the $100 million actuarial fund were paid to the company there would probably be enough money to keep the fund on a sound actuarial basis. But if the amount paid is reduced to 90 per cent, $90 million instead of $100 million, the employee is quite justified to ask the following question: Will my savings, my money, my contributions be sufficient to guarantee the pension benefits I am entitled to in future years?

And this is an honest question, it is even very serious because ever since the committee sat we had to put up many arguments to convince the Government to listen. Mr. Speaker, in a 1986 telex to Teleglobe Canada employees concerning privatization, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) had this to say: "Regarding your March 21, 1986 telegram, I assure you that I will be available to meet with you and answer the question on pensions before an announcement is made. As soon as my agenda is definite I will see to it that my office get in touch with you to set the time and place of the meeting." It is signed Robert de Cotret, President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Speaker, the President of the Treasury Board had promised he would meet with the employees to re-assure them and explain the Government position concerning this transfer of pension funds, but he did not keep his word, he did not take this opportunity he had to give the employees more explanations. He sent his officials to do that, Mr. Speaker, and God knows the employees did their best, but these officials did not have authority to change anything and, since their hands were tied, they had to admit that only the Minister could solve the problem, that is come up with the $10-odd million to put the fund on a sound actuarial basis and do justice to Teleglobe-Memotec employees.

Mr. Speaker, not only the employees said that, so did management people, senior officials who belonged to the ad hoc committee. Here is a quotation from page 243 of the March 11, 1987 legislative committee proceedings on Bill C-38:

[English]

> I am a manager at Teleglobe. I am a member of the Ad Hoc Committee on Pension Matters. It was put together after 90 per cent of Teleglobe employees expressed their concerns about the way pension matters were evolving. The committee was formed to protect the pension benefits which had accrued and would continue to accrue.
> The committee is representative of all employees, unionized and non-unionized, and those almost between two chairs. Possibly it is going to become a technical personnel association in the future.

It goes on in the next paragraph:

> Why are employees concerned? I think we should talk about a few terms: pensions and acquired pension benefits.

Later in the same hearing on March 11, 1987, Mr. Rutherford said:

> One more point. We also have been informed by government personnel that the actuarial methods used will be different from those used for Canadian Arsenals and that the results obtained by Teleglobe employees will certainly not be as favourable. They have tried to assure us that it will be close, but whether it will be close or not we have another actuary who says that maybe it will not be. We do not really know and understand why we would not get the same sort of treatment as Canadian Arsenals. It is discriminatory.

Indeed, it is discriminatory that the Government would have deux poids, deux mesures, or two weights, two measures. One set of assumptions was used for Canadian Arsenals and there was a good and fair settlement. A different set of figures was used for Teleglobe, another company being privatized by the Government. No wonder employees, managers and non-unionized people would join together to say that it is discriminatory. There must be one standard that will apply to all, otherwise it opens discussions and the possibility of this kind of discrimination.

After the committee stage, the Bill returned to the House at report stage where we moved an amendment that was defeated by the Government.

Today we began third reading. The Member for Sarnia—Lambton (Mr. James) said that in his opinion the unions had not mounted an attack against the privatization of Teleglobe. I think that statement will not bear scrutiny when one reads the reports of the various intervenors in the debate.

The Government has made a decision on privatization. It decided to sell Teleglobe and make $600 million to reduce the deficit. One of the union representatives stated in committee that this was like selling the furniture to pay the rent. Nevertheless, apart from the privatization debate, which I will not enter because my time is limited, I suggest it would have been a good occasion for the Government to show some sensitivity by meeting with the union representatives and others to better explain the transaction as it relates to their pension acquired rights.

Today we saw a letter from the Minister of State for Privatization, who is also Minister responsible for regulatory affairs, which was addressed to all employees of Teleglobe. We also saw the answer from Mr. Carlos Saldanha and Mr. Rutherford, whom I quoted before, on behalf of the Teleglobe Canada AD HOC Committee on Pensions.

I want to quote from those documents in order to clarify the situation. The Minister's letter to the employees, attempts to make the case that all employees will be protected fully by this transaction in regard to the continuity of their pension benefits. The Minister states in her letter:

> Teleglobe employees will have the equivalent of a PSSA pension plan and more.
> The Conditions of Sale required prospective purchasers to put in place a pension plan that was at least as good as the telecommunications industry norm;
> Memotec is replacing the PSSA with a plan that mirrors these benefits for all existing employees;

I accept that. The employees and some of us in the House are concerned that if less money than required is transferred to Memotec, perhaps some of the hard-earned savings will not be there in five years when the monopoly in telecommunications will more or less have run out for that company. Our difference of opinion lies in the fact that the Government, in using the actuarial assumptions it has, literally reduces the actuarial transfers that will be given to the new company by some $10 million. That worries the employees today because it is possible the company could face some difficulties and fall short of the expectations that the Minister seems to imply. She goes on to say in her letter:

> This means there will be no change to the current level of pension benefits enjoyed by Teleglobe employees. It is false and misleading to suggest that they are being deprived of benefits;

No one ever said that. We are saying that there is a shortfall and a use of figures which I do not believe is easily explainable in regard to the actuarial assumptions that have been changed, and with regard to the interest rate and the actuarial mortality rates. We know that Canadians are living longer. We must not try to make people believe that despite the fact that the actuarial studies show an increase in life expectancy, we will use some 1971 study to justify the transfer of funds. That is a measure of some concern.

I would like to make with a few closing remarks. I said that this Bill is discriminatory. I think the employees feel that in this transaction the effects of the actuarial assumptions will have a difficult and possibly damaging effect on their pension benefits. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) could have solved that if he had kept his word and met with the employees and explained what he intends to do. That complaint not only comes from the unions, it comes from non-union individuals and management. They all feel very nervous and concerned about this plan and would like the Minister to sit down with them—that is all they are asking—and explain and then come to an agreement and, if need be, have a third-party arbitrator to do that for the sake of protecting the integrity of the employees and their savings and pension benefits.

Mr. James: First, I would like to reread the letter in its entirety. The letter was written to the Minister of State for Privatization Mrs. McDougall and is dated March 27:

> Dear Madam Minister:
> We, the Teleglobe AD HOC Pension Committee—

This is the committee which was concerned about past service actuarial assumptions, and so on.

> —understand that it is in the best interest of the parties concerned that Bill C-38 be passed and come into effect by March 31, 1987. We also wished to see this date achieved.
> However, some issues related to transferring values for past service, in our opinion, are still not resolved. We expect that your Government will endeavour to sit down with representatives of this committee, as was previously promised by the Hon. Robert de Cotret, to reach an equitable solution in the process of developing a Reciprocal Transfer Agreement. A proper transfer agreement, when coupled with the future plan offered by Memotec, which we note was more than generous than the norm your Government recommended, will maintain Teleglobe's pension plan features for existing employees as they were prior to privatization.

The letter was signed by Carlos Saldanha who appeared a number of times before our committee. I think that certainly tells it all. Certainly their committee is satisfied with the way in which things are progressing.

In the same vein, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) about the actuarial difference between the CAL proposal or the CAL privatization, and the Teleglobe privatization. Would the Hon. Member also have some ideas as to the differences on the plus side of the benefits and so on of the agreement on Teleglobe versus the one on CAL?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I am not, as I said, a specialist in actuarial things. I am concerned with the pension side of it. The request I was making and the plea I was putting forth can be explained by the second paragraph in the letter quoted by the Hon. Member, which reads:

> However, some issues related to transferring values for past service, in our opinion, are still not resolved.

That is what I was addressing. It continues:

> We expect that your Government will endeavour to sit down with representatives of this committee, as was previously promised by the Hon. Robert de Cotret, to reach an equitable solution in the process of developing a Reciprocal Transfer Agreement.

My argument with the Government is that it did that with the SNC and Canadian Arsenals. The Government did sit down and come to an agreement. It did meet half way, or I might possibly say in a full way, in trying to come to terms with the actuarial evaluations which were being made.

I am here voicing what I think is a general opinion of the employees and non-union individuals and management. Even though the employees admit that the decision to privatize was taken, it was not their decision. They have told the Government since 1978 or 1979: "Do not privatize. There are dangers here. But if you do, we would like to make sure that what you do is done properly".

There are documents I could read if time would permit which would support the view that the unions consistently have said to Governments since the Liberal Government of 1980-1984, and particularly to this Government, "Do not privatize". But this Government decided to privatize. I am not discussing the privatization process in itself. I am talking about the employee pension plans and the employees' rights and concerns and their repeated requests. The letter of March 27 states:

> However, some issues related to transferring values for past service, in our opinion, are still not resolved.

What I am doing is asking the Government to try honestly to resolve this issue of using actuarial assumptions which possibly are questionable and using the GAM83 instead of the GAM71 which are the actuarial mortality rates it is using now and which, I think, a debatable question and could possibly be resolved by mutual agreement.

Clause 35, of Bill C-38 refers clearly under "Coming into Force", to sections 20, 21 and 25. Section 25 is the section dealing with the pensions entitled "Transitional and Consequential Pension Rights". Clause 35 reads:

> Subsection 4(4) and sections 20, 21, 25, 30 and 32 to 34 shall come into force on a day or days to be fixed by proclamation.

But what the people are saying is, "You want the Bill, you have the majority, and you are going to privatize it anyway, but now let us have some concern for the people involved. Before you can proclaim this Bill, would you please meet with us and explain what you are trying to do with actuarial assumptions, how you are going to guarantee and maintain the purchasing power of our savings and come to grips with that issue, either on a one-to-one basis with the unions or have a third party arbitrate and decide by a third-party arbitration process, as we do with many other things, who has the better deal and who can come forth with reasonable, assured pension right benefits, guaranteed and solidly in favour of the employees".

Mr. James: Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier is very concerned about the employees, and on his part he is very ethical and right. I think, though, we have to take all things into consideration. He said he did not know about the other aspects of the agreement under CAL. I think we have to take all things into consideration. Of course, the employees want a different actuarial assumption and want it enhanced. Let us take into consideration a comparison between CAL and the Teleglobe plan. The Teleglobe plan has a defined benefit. The CAL plan has no pre-determined level of benefits. Whatever the money is in the plan is what can be bought upon retirement. That is a very significant difference. I think the Hon. Member would want to know that when he considers how the employees are being treated.

Additionally, the Teleglobe plan has full indexing for past and future service. The CAL plan does not. I think the Hon. Member would want to know that when he looks at the total package. Employers' implicit contribution to the Teleglobe plan is 10.6 per cent or more. Employers' contribution to the CAL plan is 6.5 per cent or less. There is a very significant difference between the two. I know my colleague who is interested in this matter will want to know that.

● (1540)

The CAL employees bear all the risks. The Teleglobe employees bear no risks. The risks, if any, in the plan will be borne by the Memotec-Teleglobe Company. These are significant differences, and I know that the Hon. Member would want to take all aspects of all plans for employees into consideration, notwithstanding the fact that the employees have said that they have confidence in the Government and Memotec. They seem to be saying: "Pass the Bill. Let's not muck around with this. We have been consulted all along". We will continue to consult in terms of a final understanding as far as past service is concerned.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I have just a short reply. I am glad that the Hon. Member gave us the figures which he did.

We did not have those figures this morning. I wish that we had had them because I would have liked to check them. In debate it is always useful to have that type of information.

If the Memotec plan was so good, why is it that the Government is using different assumptions? That is the only question I am putting. As far as the Canadian Arsenals plan is concerned, at the time everyone seemed to be satisfied with the deal made. Why was that not used as the standard? Those are the questions I would ask the Hon. Member. I accept some of the figures, and I will check them out.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time allotted for questions and comments has now terminated.

TELEGLOBE CANADA REORGANIZATION AND DIVESTITURE ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-38, an Act respecting the reorganization and divestiture of Teleglobe Canada, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to participate in the debate today on third reading of Bill C-38, an Act to authorize the sale of Teleglobe. I am pleased to have an opportunity to say a word about privatization, about the Government's privatization program in general and, more specifically, about the privatization of Teleglobe. I regret that the Minister of State for Privatization (Mrs. McDougall) did not take the opportunity, which was hers at third reading, to speak to the House, giving us the benefit of her reflections on this process and on the proposal by the Government. In abdicating her responsibility to do so she gave the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) the opportunity for unlimited time in which to make his remarks. Knowing the oratorical talent of the Hon. Member, I am surprised that that time did indeed come to an end and that he is not still speaking. One thing I would have liked to have heard from the Minister, if she had deigned to enter the Chamber and share her thoughts with ordinary Members of Parliament, would have been the Government's philosophy and over-all strategy with respect to the money that the Government will receive as a result of privatization sales.

In the fall of 1985 I had the opportunity to go with a parliamentary study group to Great Britain. I was there with the former Member for St. John's East, His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor of Newfoundland, and several others. I suppose I can refer to the former Hon. Member by name now since he is no longer a sitting member. Mr. McGrath was chairman of the delegation. We spent some time in London meeting with officials and politicians from both sides of the House to discuss the politics and the mechanics of privatization. We all know that the British Government committed itself to a privatization program which, in large measure, it has completed. A great many British Crown corporations have been privatized to one degree or another. I would note, however, that even the British Government and Mrs. Thatcher, whom we in my Party regard as being ideologically extreme with respect to economic matters, retained a 51 per cent controlling interest in British Telecom when they privatized it. Even Mrs. Thatcher was wise enough and pragmatic enough, one might say, to realize that when it comes to something such as communications, and in particular international telecommunications, the public interest must come before any particular ideological consideration or any particular opportunity for increasing the profit that might come to the Government through privatization. Thus the British Government retained a 51 per cent ownership in British Telecom. If I remember correctly, it privatized the other 49 per cent in the market-place through the offering of shares for sale.

When I was in Britain at that time there was a debate going on within the Conservative Party with respect to what should be done with the moneys received from privatization. It was a very interesting debate. One of the things I have found odd about the politics of privatization in Canada is that there has been no debate in Canada similar to that which went on in Britain. The privatization debate here in Canada seems to be somewhat of a sideline. It is something that is going on while other more important things are going on.

I find this regrettable for two reasons. The first is, of course, that I am opposed to the Government's privatization program. Quite frankly, I think it is getting away with murder. I think it is getting away with having all these privatizations, not having all that much attention paid to the process either by the media or by Parliament for that matter. I think these Bills have made their way through the parliamentary process with much less hassle than the Government deserves on its measures to privatize Crown corporations.

Having said that, what I found most interesting about the debate going on in Britain was the debate going on within the Conservative Party itself about where the money from privatization should go. As I understand the position of the Conservative Party of Canada—and if I misunderstand the position I hope government Members will correct me—it is that this money will simply go into operating revenues, into current accounts. This money will not be set aside for any specific purpose that might either now or later be determined by the Government to be a worthy object of such funds. Within the Conservative Party in Britain there was a debate about whether the money from privatization—and we are talking about considerable sums of money— should go simply into offsetting the deficit or whether it should go into a special fund created by these numerous privatizations. On the part of those Conservatives who were in favour of the special fund option, if I may put it that way, their thought was that they might be better able to persuade the public of the value of privatization if they could point to specific things that they were going to do with the money received from such sales.

The criticism of simply taking any money made from privatization and applying it to the deficit was best put by the late Lord Stockton, or Harold Macmillan, a former Prime Minister of Great Britain. During debate in the House of Lords, Lord Stockton compared the policy of the Conservative Government of Mrs. Thatcher to selling off the family silver in order to pay the electricity bill.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, this is exactly the kind of policy that we see coming from the Progressive Conservative Government here in Canada, the difference being that at least—and this is no ringing defence of the Conservative Party of Great Britain—at least within that Conservative Party, they were intellectually alive enough, or at least the 92 year olds were, to ask whether it was a viable strategy to take this money that was being made from the sale of important institutions and using it in this non-specific, non-goal oriented way of applying it against the current deficit. There was a great debate, and I was impressed with the way a 92-year old parliamentarian delivered a criticism of his own Government. I am probably not being faithful to the exact words, but certainly the analogy of selling off the family silver in order to pay the electricity bill was used.

An Hon. Member: We could sell a few Tories.

Mr. Blaikie: And here, Mr. Speaker, we have a good example of how the Canadian Government is leaving itself open to this particular kind of criticism, leaving aside the more fundamental criticism of the Government's privatization program in the first place, a program with which we, as New Democrats, disagree. We disagree with it both in principle and in practice: in principle because we do not think that a comprehensive privatization program is what is going to bring about the rebirth and necessary restructuring and revitalization of the Canadian economy; and opposition in practice because thus far none of the privatization that this Government has embarked upon has met what we would consider to be the condition under which isolated privatization might be to the benefit of Canada.

I say that, Mr. Speaker, because I want you and other Members to know—and I have said so in the House before—that we are not opposed, on principle, to each and every privatization that each and every Government might consider in each and every moment of Canadian history.

The Manitoba Government, for instance, only recently decided to privatize the Flyer Bus Company. It was felt that that was the only reasonable course of action left to the Government in the circumstances of that case.

It would be a mistake to imagine that this Government's privatization program is simply a matter of pragmatic judgment being made on a case-by-case basis, and what we do disagree with in principle is that privatization should be one of the main elements, or indeed an element, of the Government's over-all approach. We do have a fundamental difference with the Government in that respect.

The privatization of Teleglobe has proceeded without the kind of attention that a major privatization such as this should have received. Teleglobe is a Crown corporation which has been a consistent money-maker. Its sale raises the question of how Crown corporations cannot win when it comes to the Progressive Conservative logic in respect of Crown corporations. According to that logic, if a Crown corporation is losing money, it should be privatized, because obviously the Government cannot do a good job; and if a Crown corporation is making money, then it, too, is to be sold.

The only Crown corporations that fit into this strange Conservative cosmology when it comes to Crown corporations are those which exist in the twilight zone between profitability and bankruptcy.

An Hon. Member: What about de Havilland?

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I would ask anyone who is prepared to get up once I have finished to give to me the definition of a Crown corporation that ought to be kept, given that both being profitable and/or incurring losses are grounds for privatization.

I mentioned earlier, Mr. Speaker, the matter of this being an example, to use Lord Stockton's words, of selling off the family silver. Teleglobe has been regarded by many as the jewel of the Crown corporations. In 1985, it recorded profits of $53.2 million. Its profit picture over the last 10 years is a good one. In 1985, its revenues totalled $678 million.

One of the aspects that has not been considered often enough with respect to the sale of Teleglobe to Memotec, Mr. Speaker, is the international dimension of the services for which Memotec will be responsible as a result of its ownership of Teleglobe.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to consider that Canada is a party to the INTELSAT Treaty. INTELSAT is the international body set up in 1964 to govern all international telecommunications satellite traffic. The key objective of INTELSAT is to provide even the most remote areas of the world with access to the global communications system. Its services are to be provided at the same cost in high density traffic regions as in lower density traffic regions. Essentially, the INTELSAT Treaty provides for a cross-subsidy system, with the richer countries subsidizing the poorer ones.

Another central purpose of the INTELSAT Treaty is to ensure that all member countries will direct their satellite traffic exclusively through INTELSAT.

Teleglobe has always been Canada's designated signatory to the INTELSAT operating agreement, and represents Canada on the INTELSAT Board of Governors. A privatized Teleglobe is to continue this role.

Recent developments in the United States, springing from the introduction of so-called competition in telecommunications in the U.S., have led to the U.S. deciding to renege on its commitment to INTELSAT. It will be putting up competing satellite systems, and these competing systems will not have cross subsidies in their rate structures.

With U.S. satellites set up, a privatized Teleglobe which has as its goal the bottom line profit for its shareholders could well be in a conflict of interest situation. On the one hand, it is to represent Canada internationally on INTELSAT, and carry out Canadian policy; on the other hand, it could be tempted to send at least some of its calls overseas via the cheaper U.S. system.

Its obligations to its shareholders would almost demand this, if going through the U.S. would be more lucrative. While Teleglobe could always endeavour to remove itself from INTELSAT, how would Canada then fulfil its international obligations?

Teleglobe has proved itself to be an effective money-maker. Why should we sell off the family silver for a very, very short-term consideration on the part of this Government, for obviously purely ideological reasons, so ideological that they look extreme even in comparison to what has been done in Great Britain?

• (1600)

The privatization program of the Government should receive more attention than it has been receiving. I hope, this afternoon and in subsequent debate, that Canadians will awaken to the fact that what is happening under the Government is a basic restructuring of the economy. I do not think that this is always apparent.

Before my time is up, let me say that the days of the Conservative Government are numbered. But even if the Tories are defeated at the next election, and if they are able to proceed with the economic agenda which they have before them now, through privatization, deregulation, and free trade, it worries me that they will have fundamentally reoriented Canadian economic thinking and restructured the Canadian economy.

Some Hon. Members: It is about time.

Mr. Blaikie: I know that this is their goal, and they are being honest about it right now. However, I am worried that all the dirty work will have been done for the right wing of the Liberal Party. The Conservatives will have been in power for a few short years. They will have done the dirty ideological work for the Liberal Party, if indeed the Liberal Party forms the Government after the next election. It may well be the New Democratic Party. In any event, the fact remains that the Conservative Government is getting away with these things, particularly in respect of deregulation and privatization. These things are happening now. They are not free trade; sometime in the future. They are at third reading, second reading, and in committee. It is high time that people realized what is going on and paid more attention, as we are trying to do this afternoon, to what the Conservatives are doing to our country.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, New Democratic Party members seem to be speaking vigorously on the Bill. I was wondering whether my hon. friend could tell me why they are objecting to the Bill when the employees want it, when it has been before the public in one form or another since the incorporation and the arrangement for sale of the company by CDIC, when we have had public hearings on the Bill, when not one editorial board of any major newspaper across the country has objected to it, and when there is no public effort to try to hold it up? Why are NDP Members trying to impose their unacceptable business, governmental and social philosophy on the House by delaying the passage of a piece of legislation which has overwhelming public approval?

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I hardly think that we could be accused of delaying the Bill. The Bill was debated very briefly before it went to committee. I believe it went through committee in something like a day or two. We have gone through report stage already, and here we are at third reading. I do not know by what standards the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) gets up and accuses the Opposition of delay. If this is delay, they should have more of it. It is hardly a case of where the opposition has made life terribly difficult for the Government.

The Hon. Member for Mississauga South has a brief memory. I remember when he was in Opposition. The amount of time we have taken on this privatization would not have been regarded as significant at all by the Hon. Member.

Regarding his comment about why we are against it, it was nice to have a Progressive Conservative Member of Parliament quoting editorial boards. It is very interesting. I always thought the Hon. Member had a more independent sense of judgment than that. It was interesting to hear that coming from him.

He also mentioned that the unions involved with this privatization are happy with it. We have not been getting the message that they are completely satisfied. It may be that they have not opposed the sale. Quite frankly—

Mr. Gauthier: They have.

Mr. Blaikie: Whether they have or have not is immaterial to me. I happen to be against the Government's program in this respect. If there are unions in favour of the Government's privatization program, then they are unions with which I have a fundamental disagreement. It is as simple as that.

The Hon. Member will not succeed in intimidating me by telling me that unions are in favour of it, that the Chamber of Commerce is in favour of it, or that editorial boards are in favour of it. One of the reasons he is able to rise and say that there is no public outcry is that there has not been the kind of attention paid to it which I think ought to have been paid to it. Part of the problem, apart from the people working in a plant which may be privatized, is that there is no identifiable constituency. It concerns the over-all macro-economic debate, and it is very difficult for a lot of people to get involved. I admit that that is one of the problems. However, he should not mistake silence from the general public on the issue as approval.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment on the latest intervention. Maclean's magazine contained an interesting article entitled "Memotec's Tangled Roots". As a matter of interest I should like to read an extract from that article to the House. It says:

> —a very senior official in the communications department says that—his department's advice was overshadowed by the government's political objectives. He said that such a critical telecommunications vehicle as Teleglobe should not have been sold to a small firm like Memotec.
> Memotec, he said, is simply too small and is saddled with debt that may jeopardize Teleglobe's operation. Said the official: "On straight dollars, Memotec made the best offer. But the government did not make the best deal for Teleglobe, and that is dangerous for such a strategic industry".

It goes on to explain that the Government is indeed selling the furniture to pay the rent.

I have a question for the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie). Since 1978-79 the unions have consistently opposed the privatization of Teleglobe.

As a matter of fact, in the transcript of the committee meeting of Wednesday, March 11, 1987, we find the comments of Mr. Carlos Saldanha, President of the Canadian Overseas Telecommunications Union. He stated categorically that the unions were against the privatization of Teleglobe.

Perhaps I misunderstood the Hon. Member. I thought he said that he did not care whether the unions were for or against it, that he thought the principle of privatization was wrong. If I did not understand him properly, it is up to him to correct me. However, I would like to quote the transcript where Mr. Saldanha said:

> There is another reason that the government says we should privatize Teleglobe. Probably other priorities have to be addressed. I appreciate the concern of the government toward the Canadian deficit, being a concerned Canadian. But even there, I still do not see how the government is selling the furniture to pay the rent.
> Reports on Teleglobe Canada have shown that the government could easily decrease the deficit by applying some sort of recapitalization of Teleglobe Canada. As an example, Teleglobe could utilize certain debt-to-equity ratios, borrow in the market, give the money to the government, utilize the present assets as collateral, and still be a profitable organization giving the government the dividends as a consequence of these profits.

Does the Hon. Member not agree—and I guess he agrees with me—that Teleglobe was a paying proposition and a good proposition? Does he not agree that it should be maintained, if possible, in the public domain?

The concern I want to address is that of the employees' pension plan. Has the Hon. Member thought about the position of the NDP with regard to the pension plan? I know it has had a long history with these problems. Does he not agree with me that until the pension issue is resolved, we in the House should not vote for such a measure which gives Teleglobe employees a bad deal in respect of pensions?

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I did not think I had to get up to tell the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) that we have those concerns about the pension plan. We voted with his Party on the amendment at report stage, proposed by the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin). When other members of my caucus speak this afternoon, I fully expect that they will be addressing those issues. There is no point of contention there between the Hon. Member and me.

• (1610)

With respect to the other point which the Hon. Member raised about what I had to say concerning the unions, I was simply making the point that we arrive at our judgments about the merits of privatization either through a general approach or by a specific proposal as a result of judgments we make ourselves. We do not take marching orders from the unions, or from anyone else for that matter.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. The Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly).

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a few comments to make on Bill C-38 dealing with the privatization of Teleglobe. This is important to me. In my constituency we have the earth satellite station at Lake Cowichan. A number of employees are very concerned about their future and the future of the company as it is being taken over by Memotec.

We have questions about the whole process of privatization. In the last few months there has been a great deal of emphasis in the media on the scandals that have racked the Government, and perhaps on that basis there has not been the kind of critical attention there should have been to the failure of the Government to have a coherent economic policy. At the same time, there has not been the kind of emphasis in the media that there should be that the Government is proceeding with its own very right-wing agenda of deregulating and privatization. The privatization of Teleglobe is a prime example. This Bill is a very clear example of privatization for no other reason than ideology. Teleglobe, as everyone in this House knows, has been a consistent money-maker. In 1985 it had earnings of $53.2 million. Teleglobe has been bringing money into the federal Treasury at a time when we are all concerned about the deficit. The company is a money-maker, and yet the Government is getting rid of it. It is killing the goose that laid the golden egg because the Government wants, I guess, to have a few quick dollars that will look good in reducing the deficit. In addition, Teleglobe performs a vital function in Canada's whole communications industry. Teleglobe is a vital link in international communications.

There are some very serious questions as to whether or not it is in the interests of the Canadian public that a vital link should go into private hands. The Government says it will regulate the company. On the one hand, the Government says we should be getting out of the whole area of deregulation and that we should be deregulating. On the other hand, it says it will privatize Teleglobe but will regulate it. There is a certain inconsistency here. I believe it would be much better if Teleglobe remained a Crown corporation earning money for Canadians, serving the general public interest in the whole field of telecommunications.

I do not wish to speak at any great length this afternoon, but I do want to emphasize the whole question of pensions. When I spoke at second reading on February 16, 1987, I noted the importance of the pension issue because I spoke to the employees of the earth satellite station in my constituency a year and a half ago. It was their primary concern.

Teleglobe is being sold to Memotec. As our critic, the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), pointed out, it is like a minnow swallowing a whale. Memotec is not a large corporation. It does not have a distinguished track record. There is a lot of concern about the future of Teleglobe in new hands. Does Memotec have enough clout to be able to maintain the monopoly position that Teleglobe has had? There are no guarantees in the Bill that that will happen. Naturally, employees are very worried about their protected pension plan now being transferred to Memotec, even though some of the provisions are good. People are wondering whether the pension plan will grow or whether there will be problems detrimentally affecting the pension plan.

Concern has been raised that there has been a smaller transfer of funds to the new pension plan than there should be, thus creating a shortfall.

I want to register my concern that the Government is proceeding with an ideological program for privatization when there are no rational reasons for the privatization of Teleglobe. The Government is selling Teleglobe, this very important link in our communications industry, at a time when we see that it has made money for Canadians. We have to ask why. We do not see the reason. There is only one reason I can think of. If there is one thing the Tories like less than a Crown corporation that loses money, it is a Crown corporation that makes money. We are very concerned about the lack of adequate protection for the pensions of the employees of Teleglobe. On that basis, we will have to oppose the Bill at third reading.

Mr. James: Mr. Speaker, I want to speak to the point about there not being adequate protection for the employees. I know the Hon. Member is interested and has concern for the employees. Teleglobe employees will have a PSSA equivalent plan with some added features. I know the member did not have the opportunity to be present at the legislative committee and hear all this and perhaps he has not had a chance to read the minutes. But the pension plan is better and more generous than that provided to other telecommunication industry employees, other private sector employees—with the possible exception of General Motors employees—and other public sector employees in Canada. Why, Mr. Speaker? There is a 2 per cent accrual rate per year, versus 1.5 per cent for Bell Canada employees. There is a maximum pension of 70 per cent of the average best six years of salary. There is full indexation, versus a 2 per cent to 3 per cent contractual indexation or ad hoc indexation for telecommunication employees. There is early retirement at age 55 and 30 years of service. There is an unreduced pension at age 60 with five years of service for the people who move over. There is generous pre and post-retirement survivor benefits, 50 per cent for a spouse and 10 per cent per dependant, up to a maximum of 40 per cent. There is full recognition of all prior PSSA service by Memotec, versus recognition of service after January 1, 1987, in most private sector plans. There is an employer contribution of 10.6 per cent of payroll or more for Teleglobe, versus 5 per cent to 8 per cent on average for the telecommunication industry.

I think the Member would want to know those things when taking into consideration his concern for employees and how they are being treated.

• (1620)

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I cannot dispute what the Hon. Member said concerning some important features of the pension plan. I simply know that there are several unresolved issues concerning the pension plan which the employees of Teleglobe are very concerned about. Both they and I would have liked to have had those issues resolved before this deal goes through. If the Government wanted to deal in an open and above-board manner with those employees, it should have been prepared to wait a while and make sure those issues were resolved before it attempted to push this deal through. If the agreement is as good as my hon. friend says it is, why do the unions continue to insist there are several unresolved issues?

Why is the Government not prepared to resolve those issues before it pushes the Bill through?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a few words I would like to say on this legislation. Because of the Government's majority there is no doubt this Bill will go through. However, the Government has not done what any good employer would do to make sure its employees are well treated. It is allowing this sale to take place in such a way that it will be branded as a Government that allowed employees of 25 or 35 years to be sold off with the company and without the same kind of pension plan they had before.

I have heard the protestations of government Members, but we are still faced with the fact that there are employees of Teleglobe who are not satisfied that they have been treated properly. They have put more into the pension plan than they are going to be able to take out. Those employees will receive $7 million less than they would have received had the Government made the same arrangement in this sale as it did in the sale of Canadian Arsenals.

Teleglobe was established in 1949. Since that time, with the infusion of public funds, it has grown. Yet with this legislation we are going to allow a private corporation to reap the benefit of that infusion of public money. That is quite unacceptable to most people. The taxpayer has the right to expect to get most of that money back. That has not been allowed to happen in this particular case, and a very profitable company will be sold to another operation which has very little experience in operating this type of company.

There is something else of concern to us. Here we have a monopoly operation and I am a little surprised that the free enterprise philosophy of the Government did not hold in this case. Ordinarily, if that philosophy did hold, the Government would have sold the company to Memotec and left it to the rough and tumble competition of the communications market-place. Instead, this company will remain under the control of the CRTC, but with only a partial guarantee of a monopoly. That bothers the employees of Teleglobe as well. There will be quite an opportunity for other companies to bypass Teleglobe when it becomes a private organization.

The Government suggests that it will guarantee a monopoly to Teleglobe for at least five years. Even were that to hold true, and there is nothing in this Bill that says it will, what will happen after the five years? There are employees of this company who have given 15 and 20 years of their life who, five years from now, will be working for a company that does not have that protection and that may not have the expertise or power to survive in a free market-place.

There is also the matter of security. As my colleague from Winnipeg—Birds Hill said, every country in the world depends on a secure communications system in that they own and operate to a certain extent their communications with other countries of the world. When Britain sold its overseas telecommunication operations it retained 51 per cent and control remains under British direction. Almost every country in the world is in a similar situation with the exception of the U.S. However, the U.S. has a parallel system operated by the military which is as effective or maybe even more effective than the private system on which it only partially depends.

We are not only giving away a corporation which could do quite a bit to reduce the deficit over the next few years, but we are putting ourselves in the position where we will be dependent upon a corporation which may or may not make a profit. In the end it may have to divest itself of some of its less profitable operations.

There are a number of issues in this sale which the Government has not dealt with in the legislation. It has not taken care to make sure that the employees are satisfied with the new organization, not only for today but into the future. The Government has not made sure that the corporation will continue to be successful. The Government has not even ensured that it will be able to operate profitably beyond the first five years.

The Government has decided that privatization under any circumstances is a good thing. It came to office almost three years ago with the conviction that the privatization of Crown corporations was good for Government and the country. From the day it came into power it began to do something about that conviction. The experience of privatization has not proven that that conviction was worth while following. The Government is now privatizing with no consideration for public interest or public policy but rather on an ideological conviction which it does not even bother to defend.

Canadians must be very concerned about the idea that the Government should not be involved in any enterprise that can be operated by the private sector. There are many areas of service in the country which it makes a lot of sense for the Government to operate. Admittedly, there are many operations in which it does not make sense for the Government to be involved, but there is an area in between, and in that area each divestiture should be examined closely. The divestiture of Teleglobe is one which should have been examined carefully. Through this transaction we are putting into the hands of a private corporation part of an industry which is important, not only to us in Canada but in our relationships with other countries.

If the Government continues its commitment to privatization, we will eventually put at risk the basic structure of Canada. In the West, for instance, we have private telephone companies in almost every province and private hydro companies in every province. All those companies operate well. Those kinds of services as well as international telecommunication services should be carried out by the public sector. Consequently, we in this Party will not be able to support this Bill when it finally comes to a vote.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, would the Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) give us the benefit of his reflections on the difference between the sale of Canadian Arsenals Limited, with which I know the Hon. Member was very familiar as a result of having looked after that issue for the NDP caucus and having sat on the committee? Could he point out some of the significant differences between the way in which that privatization was handled by the Government and the way in which this one has been handled, particularly with respect to employee pensions and the rights of employees in the privatization deal?

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I was even more concerned about the reason for the sale of Canadian Arsenals Limited than I am about Teleglobe. Canadian Arsenals made armaments for the Department of National Defence of Canada only. With regard to the specific question, the Government was no more prepared in that divestiture to deal with the union than it is in this one. The difference is that this time the Government was willing to sit down with the union and the purchasing company and come to an agreement before the Bill returned to the House. Before the committee stage was concluded, the Government accepted a solution to the pension problem and the union was able to say that it was satisfied with the solution which had been reached, would accept the sale, and believed it had protection for the future.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my colleague from Prince Albert. Elephants have an awful fear of mice, but I do not think that an elephant has ever been afraid that a mouse would swallow it. The Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) said that there was no objection or protest with regard to this sale. However, Maclean's magazine has noted that a communications expert questioned seriously, as have others in the business community, the capacity of Memotec to handle this acquisition. The member also indicated that there was no significant antagonistic editorial comment. Yet I see an article in Maclean's magazine entitled: "Memotec's Tangled Roots". Perhaps the Member has forgotten the headline in The Financial Post which reads: "The Memotec-Teleglobe Buy Raises Serious Questions".

One of the more significant questions is why in God's name the Government is doing this. I was impressed by references to the fact that the Government is willing to unload the family jewels, the epitome of the family jewels being Teleglobe. There must be some reason for this. I am sure it is not just stupid, empty-headed ideology. It may be that there will be jobs created. Is there anything inherent in this arrangement which is certain to lead to the creation of new jobs? Has he heard or been privy to information from the Government that more jobs will be produced and will demonstrate that this sale is consistent with the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) promise of jobs, jobs, jobs?

• (1640)

Mr. Hovdebo: First, Mr. Speaker, we must remember that a telecommunication policy was not in place during the first attempts to sell Teleglobe. When a buyer was finally found, it was protected by being given a monopoly. This means that it would be under the jurisdiction of the CRTC.

No one can be sure what will ultimately happen to Teleglobe when it is in the market. It may or may not develop into a strong company, but it must operate under the jurisdiction of the CRTC for at least five years.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, does the Hon. Member believe that this particular privatization is not in the public interest? Does he have an explanation as to why the Government is pursuing this policy?

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I cannot read the Government's mind, but I do not believe the sale is in the public interest because telecommunication should be controlled and operated by the Government, particularly in relation to other countries. I have no reason to believe that the Government's motive is anything but blind ideology.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, will the Hon. Member explain, in view of the difference in size between the two companies, why the Government is selling Teleglobe to a company that had a total worth in 1985 that was virtually the same as the profits of Teleglobe in that year?

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, there were five bids before the Government decided on Memotec. Obviously, the companies that were larger and more capable of controlling Teleglobe would not bid for it once they knew the basic guidelines. I presume the Government decided on the company that would follow the rules that were laid down and still make a bid.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am a bit disappointed that none of my colleagues from across the way rose to the occasion to speak in the debate. One must ask why government Members have chosen to sit silent rather than respond to the questions that we on this side of the House have put to them. Members of our Party have been questioning the privatization of Teleglobe all day. We have been raising valid questions about the sale of the company, yet members opposite have failed to state clearly why the Government is turning this company over to the private sector in its pursuit of its privatization policy.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Because it works.

Mr. Keeper: They heckle from their desks rather than stand up to tell us why they are dragging Canadians with them down the road to privatization. While it is entertaining to hear my colleagues throwing those pointed barbs in my direction, one wonders why they do not stand up to tell us why they are pursuing this policy of privatization.

I wish we had more time for debate today so there would be an opportunity for a government Member to explain the Government's policy and why they support it rather than belie my assertion that they are supporting this policy in silence.

This debate characterizes the Government's economic policy. It leads one to wonder whether the Government is pursuing this economic policy on fiscal or ideological grounds. One must wonder whether it was wearing ideological blinders when it devised this policy of privatization because Teleglobe is a profitable company that contributes money to the public Treasury and reduces the burden on the Canadian taxpayer.

Why does the Government want to give away the goose that lays the golden egg and deprive Canadians of a money-making machine?

When the Conservatives were in opposition, a role in which they have much experience and to which we believe they will soon return, they believed that Crown corporations were a waste of public money and a drain on the public Treasury. Now that they are the Government, they have taken action under the flag of privatization in order to save public money. However, is Teleglobe an example of such a Crown corporation? When we examine the facts we see that this jewel of a Crown corporation makes money.

While the Conservatives were in opposition they said that Crown corporations were money losers and a drain on the public purse. Yet the Conservative Government is selling those Crown corporations that are making money and easing the burden on Canadian taxpayers. That is a strange about face and reveals quite a difference between the rhetoric when in opposition and the reality of their policies when in government.

The Government has not yet succeeded in privatizing Teleglobe although it is trying very hard to do so. We can see that it is very anxious to privatize this company. Every time a speech concludes in this House, these Hon. Members are waiting to see if there is going to be further debate and then sit silently in their seats. They do not rise to the occasion and enter into public debate. The Government is trying to privatize this company and we, on this side of the House, are not going to make it easy for the Government to do so. We are not going to roll out the red carpet for the Government to privatize this Crown corporation.

• (1650)

Why has the Government picked on Teleglobe Canada? The Minister of State for Privatization (Mrs. McDougall), when commenting about privatization, said that if there is a public policy reason why a corporation should remain in the public sector, it will remain there, but if the public policy reason for a Crown corporation to exist has long passed, then the Government should privatize. The Government can then sell that corporation to the private sector. That is a policy question beyond the question of whether the company can make money or whether it can help out the public Treasury and the average taxpayers. It is a public policy question. Is there a reason that Teleglobe Canada should be in public hands rather than private hands? One of the reasons that strikes me is that all other western industrialized countries have their major telecommunications instrument in public hands. Why do we want to stick out like a sore thumb among western industrialized countries? It seems we have found a secret formula and we are going to go in a totally different direction down a strange road, down which no other western industrial country has gone.

This is beyond toleration. I do not want to make a display, but my colleague has just handed me a cartoon which I would say seeks to demean the New Democratic Party. I would like to tell you about the cartoon, Mr. Speaker, just so you will know why I smiled when I saw it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If the Hon. Member would send it up to me, I would like to have a look at it, please, and we will carry on with debate.

Mr. Gauthier: Table it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member is not tabling it. He is just sending it to me.

Mr. Keeper: I appreciate the fact that you took the cartoon off my hands, Mr. Speaker, because the cartoon was not really relevant other than that it took a poke at the New Democratic Party. It took a poke at our high standing in the polls. I think that might have something to do with what we say in this House. Our position on this piece of legislation might also have something to do with our standing in the polls, and perhaps the position of the Government on this piece of legislation with which we are dealing today may have something to do with its lack of standing in the polls.

Dealing directly with the whole question of Teleglobe Canada, I asked if there is a good public policy reason why Teleglobe should be in public hands rather than in private hands. I cited the fact that other western industrialized countries have their telecommunications instrument in public hands rather than in the private sector. I think that should alert us to examine the whole question. The function of Teleglobe Canada is to keep us in touch with the globe, to keep us in communication with our whole planet. The "tele" part of Teleglobe has to do with communications. The "globe" part has to do with the fact that Teleglobe touches the whole planet. If we turn Teleglobe over to the private sector, and allow the lines of communication we have with the globe determined by where a private company can make a profit, obviously there will be vast parts of the globe which will be non-favourable. We will be limiting our own communications with the planet on the basis of where it is favourable to make a profit. If this corporation remains in public hands, it can help us keep in touch with the whole globe. Our planet is shrinking in size and it is becoming more and more important that we be able to communicate globally. It is vital that we have an instrument which allows us to communicate with everyone around the world on the basis of our communications needs rather than on whether or not a profit can be made in carrying on those communications at any one particular time.

The other interesting part of this whole public policy question is the fact that we in Canada have used Teleglobe Canada to represent us on an international basis in countries which concern themselves with telecommunications, for example, INTELSAT. Do we want to use a private profit-making corporation as the instrument to represent the interests of the nation of Canada, rather than having a genuine representative of the public interest, a public body which can provide that kind of representation? I think that would suggest a kind of image of Canada as a large private profit-making corporation. It is like the old saying: "What is good for General Motors is good for the United States. What is good for Eatons is good for Canada".

Canada is more than a profit-making company. We have other reasons to exist. We are a nation and we have national interests. We want those national interests to be objectively represented rather than have them represented by someone whose simple and legitimate purpose is to make a profit and to see its stockholders get the largest possible return.

I have a few more points to make. I would not wish to mislead my colleagues into thinking that I have made all the points I want to make, although I know they may want to get into the debate between now and 5 o'clock, and I welcome their doing so. However, I think it is crucial that I make a few more points. I would like to examine a little more closely the price that is being paid by Memotec for Teleglobe Canada. Memotec is the minnow of the telecommunications industry. It has found the whale. With the assistance of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his colleagues, this little minnow is seeking to swallow that whale. It has been known that whales have swallowed small fish—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. When this Bill is called again tomorrow, or whenever, the Hon. Member will have five more minutes to speak in debate, plus 10 minutes for questions and comments.

It being 5 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--MOTIONS

[English]

THE SENATE

SUGGESTED EQUAL PROVINCIAL AND TERRITORIAL ELECTED REPRESENTATION

The House resumed from Friday, February 6, consideration of the motion of Mr. Taylor:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of introducing the appropriate measures to abolish the Senate and create a new Senate composed of Senators elected by the people of Canada on the basis of equal representation for each province and territory, and to initiate discussions to that end with provincial and territorial Governments at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge—Foothills): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed an honour to speak to the motion of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), with respect to abolishing the Senate and creating a new Senate. I believe this is a motion that is worthy of passage by this Parliament. I feel the best contribution I can make to the debate and, in particular, to Members who were elected in the election of 1984, is to reiterate the conclusions of the Special Joint Committee on Senate Reform on which I had the privilege to serve.

The special committee was composed of some eight Senators and ten Members of Parliament. We held hearings in Ottawa and in each provincial capital. We received and reviewed carefully some 280 briefs. We heard from 119 witnesses and some 30 organizations. We spent hundreds of hours reflecting on the issue. I now wish to read into the record part of the committee's conclusions. They are as follows:

We have concluded that the Canadian Senate should be elected directly by the people of Canada.

An appointed Senate no longer meets the needs of the Canadian federation. An elected Senate is the only kind of Senate that can adequately fill what we think should be its principal role—the role of regional representation. We propose a Senate different in composition and function from the House of Commons and from the present Senate. The second chamber we recommend is designed specifically—by its distribution of seats, by the way it is elected, and by the powers it exercises—to represent the sometimes diverse interests of the people of Canada's provinces and territories in federal legislation and federal policies.

In fulfilling that role, an elected Senate would strengthen the authority of Parliament to speak and act on behalf of Canadians in all parts of the country.

We reached this conclusion after reviewing the work of previous inquiries into the question of Senate reform and after hearing the testimony of witnesses in all provincial and territorial capitals . . . We were told frequently that, after so many abortive attempts at Senate reform, the time has come for vigorous action—for fundamental change in the Senate—and that it would be a mistake to adopt inconsequential reforms.

Our conclusion was not reached lightly or easily. Although a substantial part of the testimony we heard favoured direct election, a roughly equal part opposed it, mainly on the grounds that a parliament with two elected houses cannot be reconciled comfortably with the principle of responsible government as it has operated in the British and Canadian traditions. Some highly respected people in public life and in the academic community prefer a reformed system of appointment to election. Among this group is one member of our Committee.

Although a reformed appointed Senate could bring about some needed improvements, we are persuaded that it would lack the political mandate to fill what we believe is the Senate's primary role. Only a politically strong second chamber can dispute, when necessary, the decisions taken by a government that is supported by the House of Commons.

Therefore only an elected Senate can satisfy the original intent of the Fathers of Confederation: the provision of a chamber that would balance judiciously the power of the Commons (which is based on representation by population) by safeguarding the legitimate interests of the people of the less populous provinces—

We believe that Canada should establish an elected Senate designed in such a way that it would not be vying continually for supremacy with the House of Commons: it should have significant powers, but it should not be able to undermine Canada's well-tried system of responsible government. We therefore propose that the new Senate be given only a suspensive veto, which would allow time for national debate and reflection, but which the Commons could, after a suitable lapse of time, override by re-passing the legislation in question.

We also propose that every effort be made to ensure that Senators have a significant degree of independence of party. Only then will they be able to speak in favour of local and regional interests without having to be concerned primarily, as Members of Parliament must be, with adhering to party policy. A healthy measure of independence is therefore essential if the Senate is to fill its role of regional representation. This does not mean that Senators would lose sight of the needs of the country as a whole.

It is for this reason, and also to distinguish Senators from members of the House of Commons, we propose that Senators be elected for a single but comparatively long term—nine years—with one-third of the Senators being elected every three years.

To lessen party influence in the choice of Senators, all but one of us prefer 'first-past-the-post' elections in single-member constituencies to proportional representation in multi-member constituencies. Each province would be divided into as many constituencies as it had Senators.

We recognize that, in the absence of proportional representation for an elected Senate, the political parties will have to work hard to achieve balanced representation from across the country in the Commons and the Senate. This is as it should be. In striving to do this, they will have to adopt their policies accordingly, and this can only benefit national politics.

On the question of the distribution of seats, the Committee was advised by nearly all witnesses across Canada that the division should be made not on the basis of the present four Senate regions but by allocating seats to each province and territory. We accept that this kind of allocation reflects more closely the diverse nature of Canada.

As to how many seats should be allocated to each province or territory, we recognize that there is no perfect solution. We believe that giving an equal number of seats to each province would not be appropriate, having regard to Canada's historical development and the configuration of its population. If each province had the same number of seats, five provinces with as little as 13.4 per cent of Canada's population would have a majority of seats if they had the support of the territories.

While the less populous provinces merit a stronger voice in Parliament, equal representation in the Senate would tilt the balance too far and would be unacceptable to the vast majority of Canadians, not only to those living in the two largest provinces. We therefore propose a compromise whereby most provinces would have an equal number of seats, but Ontario and Quebec would have more and Prince Edward Island and the territories would have fewer. Our proposal would, for example, give the four western provinces together as many seats as Ontario and Quebec jointly. We believe that most Canadians would agree that our proposed distribution, or something close to it, represents a fair solution.

That quotation gives the heart and core of the summary of a thoughtful committee composed of some eight Senators and some 10 Members of Parliament which studied 280 briefs and held hearings in every province of Canada. I personally believe that a combination of this report, together with the report of the Alberta Legislature done by the committee chaired by Dennis Anderson, who is now the Minister of Culture for the Province of Alberta, would give a solid basis for reform of the Senate, something which I think we all agree is very much needed. However, I think western Canadians in particular have to consider carefully the question of "equal per province" since I am not sure that in a resource-based economy it would be wise in the long term for us to transfer to five provinces with only 13.4 per cent of the population a majority of Senate seats. That constitutes a very serious question that I have with respect to the Triple E proposal. It is something that I would join with in a flash if it could satisfactorily answer the question of the transfer of power to one region.

The federal report proposed that there be 96 Senators representing the regions, with 48 seats for the two populous provinces: Ontario would keep 24, Quebec would keep 24. The four western provinces would have 48 seats, thereby neutralizing the two central provinces; and the Atlantic region and the Territories would have 48 seats.

That would amount to a massive transfer of power to the regions, at the Senate level. I believe that is a proper transfer of power, and it is one that Ontario and Quebec could live with as compared to the current Triple E proposal, which calls for an equal number of Senate seats for the provinces.

As Members consider this question, I hope that they will take these views into consideration.

[Translation]

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Mr. Speaker, the motion before the House today, presented by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), urges the Government to consider introducing the appropriate measures to create an elected Senate where provinces and territories will enjoy equal representation.

An elected Senate and equal representation for the provinces reflect the proposals submitted and supported by various groups and individuals, including the Premier of the province represented by the mover of this motion. I would like to point out, however, that most proponents of an elected Senate have a third requirement in addition to the two "e's" of "elected" and "equality". They would like to see effectiveness in the Upper House, Mr. Speaker.

I think it would be useful to take a few moments to consider how effective a reformed Senate could be. When we make any changes in the powers of the Senate, such changes also affect the powers of the House of Commons and its ability to defend the interests of the people. Among the proposals for Senate reform, made in the last decade, four major reform proposals recommended having an elected Senate. These proposals were submitted by the Canada West Foundation in 1981, by the Government of Prince Edward Island in 1983, by a Special Joint Committee of Parliament in 1984, which was referred to by the previous Speaker, and last but not least, a plan was proposed by a committee of the Alberta Legislature in March 1985 and renewed since by the Premier of that province.

Of these four plans, only one did not propose electing the same number of senators from each province. The Special Joint Committee of the House of Commons and the Senate was more in favour of a weighting system that would encourage over-representation of the smaller provinces while nevertheless respecting substantial differences in population. According to the report, this formula would prevent five provinces with only 13.4 per cent of the population from controlling the Senate or one inhabitant of Prince Edward Island from being the equivalent of 70 Ontarians or 50 Quebecers for the purposes of representation in the Upper House.

Committee members recommended that the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec should be represented by 24 senators each, Prince Edward Island by six and the other provinces by 12 each.

To respect the statutory equality of each component of the Canadian federation and ensure that national policy takes into consideration the interests of outlying regions, proposals by the Canada West Foundation and the Governments of Prince Edward Island and Alberta, as well as the motion by the Hon. Member for Bow River, all fall back on the formula applied in the United States, in Switzerland and Australia, with the request that the provinces be represented in the Senate on an equal basis.

However, where the motion by the Hon. Member for Bow River is silent on the question of the powers of a reformed Senate, the three proposals I mentioned earlier do focus on this question.

In a study made in 1983, the Government of Prince Edward Island suggested that a Senate elected on the basis of provincial equality should retain the full legislative powers possessed by the Senate as we know it today. Although it would not, and it does not today, have the power to initiate supply Bills, the Senate would retain its absolute veto over all measures adopted by the House of Commons and would, generally speaking, exercise the same powers as the House of Commons.

According to the document submitted by Prince Edward Island, Senate reform would not be justified if that body were to be deprived of the necessary powers to defend the interests of those it is supposed to represent.

In 1981, the Canada West Foundation also proposed that on the basis of its increased legitimacy, an elected Senate should be able to maintain its right to vote on Bills initiated by the House of Commons and to exercise substantial powers.

According to this project the basis of representation—the population for the Commons and the province for the Senate—did not justify one House being directly subordinated to the other. The consensus was that allowing the Senate to have its say about ordinary legislation would guarantee that regional views would be taken under consideration in drafting national policies. However the Canada West Foundation did not go as far as giving the Senate a veto over ordinary legislation. Deadlocks would be impossible since a legislative measure rejected by the Senate would come into force after re-endorsement by a significant Commons majority. Without actually specifying the terms, the proposition made it clear that in most cases a significant majority would imply that the Government in office would seek the support of some of the Opposition Members to reverse a Senate vote.

But the Senate would have an absolute veto in cases of constitutional amendments to ratify certain appointments and to authorize the Government of Canada to exercise such extraordinary powers as war measures, disallowance and declaratory powers.

In short, the Canada West Foundation position in 1981 was that the Senate would be effective in the sense that the Upper House would be able to examine and amend all Bills, exercise a power of suspensive veto over most pieces of legislation, and of absolute veto over extraordinary Government measures.

In 1985, the Special Committee of the Alberta Legislature also looked at the question of the Senate's effectiveness. It recommended that the Senate retain the power it now has to discuss and recommend amendments to all the Bills coming from the House of Commons. The Senate would still have the right to oppose legislation, but the House would have various ways of getting around that opposition.

On constitutional matters, the Senate's veto would only be suspensive for a period of 180 days, as the 1982 constitutional Act now provides. A negative vote by the Senate on legislation with financial or tax implications could be overturned by a simple majority vote here in the Commons.

Finally, on all non-financial Bills, a Senate amendment or veto could only be overturned in the Commons by a larger majority vote than that expressed in the Senate.

Honourable Members will have understood from the foregoing that proponents of the Triple E-Senate support significant powers for Senators. Their view is that the Senate's effectiveness in defending regional interests requires that it be able to control, if not direct, natural policies.

Maintaining the current veto, as proposed by Prince Edward Island, or the requirement of an outlandish majority in the Commons to go around a negative vote in the Senate, are only two of the possible means of strengthening the higher Chamber to make it more effective.

The need for such effectiveness is indeed clear. Once elected, the Senate would have the legitimacy it now lacks to exercise its broad powers. To that new legitimacy, equal provincial representation will add a clear mandate by indicating to the Senate what interests it must protect.

Knowing the commitment of Canadians to their regions, a chamber that would be devoted solely to the defence of provinces would not be long in gaining their sympathy, thereby strengthening its mandate. Therefore, how could we deny that legitimate chamber the powers required by its mandate? There would be no reason to do so. This is what supporters of the Triple-E Senate formula have understood.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to stress that for some time already, one of my constituents, Mr. Jean-Guy Legault, from Oka, who chairs the Fondation Édouard-Montpetit, has been consistantly asking the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to appoint volunteer deputy senators whose responsibility would be to advise the Government on draft Bills, etc. While finding this proposal original—it clearly goes against the reported collective will of an elected Senate—I am convinced that Mr. Legault will be interested in today's debate which will give him the opportunity to add new elements to his proposal or amend some current ones.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, I will send him a copy of today's Debates. I see that you're indicating to me that I may still have a minute and a half left.

With equal powers and different representation structures, would the two Chambers not run the risk of attracting sympathy from different segments of the population, thereby increasing the opportunities for conflicts?

Although the supporters of an elected Senate have convinced me of the validity of their claims and a need for reform, none as yet has reassured me as to the dominant role the House of Commons would continue to play. To these and similar questions which come to mind today I have not yet found any completely satisfactory answer. It seems to me that, so far, the issue of Senate reform has been addressed in isolation, independently from the development of other Government institutions.

Without opposing this reform, Mr. Speaker, I feel that we should look into its impact on our political life generally, and of course I would fully support unreservedly any initiative to that end.

[English]

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I begin my contribution to the debate as I did on a previous motion by the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry). His Private Member's motion called for the abolition of the Senate by calling to the attention of Hon. Members the traditional or long held view of the New Democratic Party of Canada that the Senate ought to be abolished because of its non-democratic nature.

However, I want to make clear that it is the current non-democratic Senate which my Party has a long-standing policy of wanting to abolish. In my judgment there is openness within the Party, collectively and among individual New Democrats, on what kind of democratic Senate might be appropriately put in the place of the current non-democratic Senate which, as I said, ought to be abolished.

One of the origins of the current push for Senate reform quite legitimately comes from the feeling of certain regions in Canada that they do not have enough power at the centre, that they do not have enough power in the decision-making process in Ottawa, whether it is in the House of Commons or in the Senate as it now stands. They feel that there is a strong tendency, manifest in many ways, for the decision-making process in the House of Commons not to take into consideration the interest of the regions. I speak particularly from the point of view of the region from which I come, that is, western Canada.

Another way people have thought about addressing the problem has been through House of Commons reforms. They have imagined ways in which, through a combination of the system we have now, proportional representation, and representation based upon regions as opposed to constituencies strictly, we might be able to address the imbalance between the centre and the periphery in the House of Commons and still be able to get rid of the Senate and have a unicameral House.

That is not what we are debating today. We are debating the motion of the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) which, as I understand it, calls for a Triple E Senate. It is important that these kinds of motions have come forward because they give us a chance to debate the matter. I am particularly appreciative of the contribution of the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker) who I think did the House a service by reading into the record the recommendations of the Joint Committee on Senate Reform. He pointed to the fact, if I understood him correctly, that the notion of equality could be achieved, not necessarily on a province-by-province basis, but on the same sort of regional basis originally envisioned in the constitutional amending formula at one point, where we would have had western Canada considered as a region, Ontario considered as a region, Quebec considered as a region, and Atlantic Canada considered as a region. If we had equal representation devised on that basis, we might then get over some of the problems involved in having equal representation from each province. I think that bears more study.

However, one thing which concerns me as a western Canadian is some of the expectations raised around the idea of a Triple E Senate and what it could do. Part of the problem with the Triple E Senate proposal is that we do not know exactly what powers many of its advocates have in mind, whether it would be strictly a suspensive power, whether it would have well defined areas of jurisdiction, et cetera.

There is a variety of expectations being placed upon the Triple E Senate. In my judgment, support for such a Senate, although I respect many of the people who advocate it, has come into rather bad company lately with the support being given to it by an editorial in the Western Report by Mr. Ted Byfield. He went on at great length giving, in my judgment, the classic example of the false expectations raised about a Triple E Senate.

He referred back to the controversy over the CF-18 contract. He suggested that had there been a debate in the new Triple E Senate which he had in mind, these new Senators, unbound by Party discipline, would have somehow been able to prevent the decision to give the CF-18 contract to Montreal instead of to Winnipeg where it should have gone.

He used the phrase, "Unlike the Commons debate, it would be worth covering". As you know, Mr. Speaker, and as everyone knows, there was no Commons debate on the CF-18 contract. It was a contract let by the Government with the full powers of the Government. There was no debate in the Commons. There would not be such a debate in any new Senate, except in some aside way, the same way as we managed to have an aside debate in the House of Commons during Question Period about the contract after the fact.

There would have been no debate either in the Commons or in a Triple E Senate on a matter of government contracts.

It is quite misleading to give the impression that somehow a Triple E Senate would have been able to stop that or that a Triple E Senate would somehow exist in some sort of pristine political atmosphere where Parties would not have any effect.

I remind Mr. Byfield, through you, Mr. Speaker, that it was the Tory Premiers of western Canada—and Mr. Byfield is fond of chastising New Democratic Members of Parliament from western Canada—who decided not to stand by the Premier of Manitoba, Mr. Pawley, in his protestation against the CF-18 contract going to Montreal. They certainly had more freedom than any Senator would have had down here, working in close proximity to the Government. Yet, they could not be prevailed upon, through any sense of western Canadian solidarity, to be more than purely symbolic in their solidarity with Manitoba in protesting the injustice of the contract going to Montreal.

I think the whole debate about a Triple E Senate insofar as it relates to western alienation is being poisoned by this kind of false expectation. I think it is being done deliberately. I should like to quote from the March 16 editorial. It says:

> Unlike the Commons debate, it would be worth covering. Neither in the Senate would we have to witness such loathsome spectacles as that of four Manitoba NDP members declaring themselves in favour of taking the CF-18 project away from their own province.

You were here, Mr. Speaker, in the fall of 1986, as were the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills, the Hon. Member for Brandon—Souris (Mr. Clark), and many others. They will know—and I hope everyone will agree with me—that it is simply a lie, just a lie to say that we, the NDP Members of Parliament from Manitoba, declared ourselves in favour of taking the CF-18 project away from our own province. Why would anyone want to say that when it is so patently untrue, and say it twice?

This kind of thing was said previously in the Western Report, and I wrote a letter to the editor which was printed. Subsequent to that, a month or so later, we get, in the form of this editorial, a blatant lie.

• (1730)

This was raised in the House many times by Manitoban New Democratic Members of Parliament. If Mr. Byfield, or anyone else for that matter, is unhappy about the way the House of Commons works or the way the New Democratic Party handled the CF-18 contract, there are many criticisms he could make, but there is one thing he could not say with any pretension to truthfulness, namely, that the four Manitoba New Democratic Members of Parliament were in favour of the contract going to Montreal.

This debate has become tied to a much more serious political reality in western Canada. It has become associated with a deliberate attempt on the part of certain elements in western Canada, Mr. Byfield among them, to distort and misrepresent what is actually going on here in the House of Commons. There is enough to be unhappy about in terms of real western alienation and western Canadian grievances. I would be the first one to admit that. We ought not, for obviously ideological reasons, pretend that certain things happen when they did not happen. We ought not to allow people like Mr. Byfield to pretend that the only real western Canadians are those who happen to agree with him. We western Canadians disagree among ourselves, be we New Democrats or Progressive Conservative western Canadians. We have had left-wing Governments and right-wing Governments, and we do all that within the freedom of the democratic process that we cherish. For anyone, Mr. Byfield or anyone else, to pretend that somehow only those who agree with the Western Report are real western Canadians is a disservice not only to New Democrats, whom he is so fond of attacking, but also to Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament from Alberta and from western Canada generally who are now becoming the object of this particular form of garbage journalism.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles-Eugène Marin (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), which seeks the abolition of the Senate and the creation of a new Senate composed of Senators elected by the people on the basis of equal representation for each province and territory. The motion also urges the Government to initiate intergovernmental discussions to that end at the earliest opportunity.

Today I would like to take a closer look at one of the most interesting aspects of Senate reform, a subject that has been getting a great deal of attention recently in this House.

Mr. Speaker, when we look at the purpose or objective of the Senate reform, I think we should look at the various roles that could be played by a new Upper House. I think it would be useful to consider the function of the Upper House, especially in other countries with a federal system. In most cases, the Upper House has a responsibility for examining legislation. It is supposed to look at legislative measures to detect any possible errors, contradictions or shortcomings. Today, most Upper Houses perform this function without challenging the general principles or policies underlying legislation already adopted by the Lower House. Often, they are also asked to provide legislative support. For instance, Upper Houses may conduct inquiries on questions of public policy or they may have special powers to scrutinize subordinate legislation.

Some Upper Houses play a role in representing and protecting minorities. When minorities are regrouped geographically in a given region, they can be protected from the majority by giving this region a specially weighted representation. During the debate prior to Confederation, Lower Canada demanded representation in the Senate equal to that of the two other regions, Ontario and the Maritimes, and it is clear that the francophone leaders at the time thus hoped to enjoy a form of linguistic and cultural protection. Mr. Speaker, there is also the option of demanding special procedures when voting on certain issues in the Upper House, so as to avoid any hasty action that might prove prejudicial to the interests or rights of certain minorities.

Upper Houses can have an intergovernmental function. They can be structured to enable various governments within a federation to take part in the business of the central or federal Government. A prime example of this is the Bundesrat in West Germany, whose members are Ministers or their delegates of the Governments of the component States. Members of the Bundesrat vote as one according to the instructions given by their respective governments. Many observers think that the Bundesrat makes an appreciable contribution to intergovernmental coordination and co-operation within Western Germany. In the late 70s the supporters of Senate reform in Canada came up with a number of propositions aimed at creating a similar institution at the federal level.

The fourth function which a second chamber may have is to represent the regions. This is intended to mean representation of the regions or constituent elements on a basis other than representation by population. In certain cases each state or province may have a representation equal to the second chamber. In others the number of members may vary, but the scale is usually tipped in favour of those with fewer people. In any case it is always a matter of limiting somewhat the will of the Lower House by reflecting the diversity of the regions or elements which make up the federation and, to that extent, to compensate for the rule of simple majority.

It is widely acknowledged that the first and second of these four functions—examining legislation and representing regions—are the ones which were expected to be the main role of the Senate when it was created. In light of this we can indeed wonder about the way the Senate has fulfilled these functions over the years. To answer the question, I would refer to the report of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons which was tabled in the House in January 1984.

According to the report, the role of the Senate had evolved so as to complement rather than compete with the popularly elected House of Commons. The Committee made the following comments concerning the role of the existing Senate, and I quote:

> Its principal functions are now improving legislation and investigating questions of public policy. It is said that investigation is one area where the present Senate has shown a commendable degree of independence from the executive.

On the matter of other important functions the Senate could perform, the Committee report noted that:

> The more recent arguments for Senate reform—notably those made to our Committee—have focused on achieving one of the original goals of the Senate, the protection and representation of regional interests. These arguments spring from a belief that Parliament needs a chamber that represents those interests with more political authority that can be achieved with a Senate appointed in the present way.

Based on the representations made by the various witnesses, the Committee went on to say:

> The principal complaint the Committee encountered was that federal institutions as they are now constructed are unable to express and mediate regional concerns. Although the Senate was originally designed to give the regions a weighted voice in Parliament's decisions, it is argued that this does not apply. Witnesses pointed out that regional interests are now forced to seek outlets through other means, often through provincial governments.

It is very clear, Mr. Speaker, in the Committee's report, that most witnesses heard focussed on the Senate's representational role. For instance, Hon. Robert Stanfield expressed the following opinion:

> I find it highly desirable that we have a Senate that would allow regions to be more present and have more influence in Ottawa.
> I do not believe it is possible to govern this country in a satisfactory manner based only on the majority rule, in spite of the distribution of powers and the Charter of Rights.

For its part, the Business Council on National Issues noted the following:

> The specific powers that should be vested in a new, elective Higher Chamber are less important than the principle that there must be an elected Canadian Senate, and that it should play a positive and strong role to iron out increasing regional tensions.

In its report, the Committee recognized that better regional representation was important in the opinion of witnesses.

> The principal complaint the Committee encountered was that federal institutions as they are now constructed are unable to express and mediate regional concerns . . . The more recent arguments for Senate reform—have focused on achieving one of the original goals of the Senate: the protection and representation of regional interests.

The Committee further emphasized that its primary objective was > —to strengthen the Senate's capacity to fill its role of regional representation. If this objective and others which are consequential were achieved, there would be a new forum whose principal role would be to discuss openly and to reconcile competing regional interests in matters under federal jurisdiction. We do not argue that regional differences would disappear, but we do believe that the system for resolving them would be much improved and that regional tensions would be less troublesome—

Similar arguments could be found in a fairly recent study on the Senate reform. In its report issued in March 1985, the Alberta Legislative Assembly's Special Committee on the reform of the Senate wrote, and I quote:

> The role of an Upper Chamber in the federal decision-making process is effectively quite clear. The first function of the Canadian Senate, as contemplated by the Fathers of Confederation, was to represent provincial points of view within the federal decision-making process. The Committee does not believe that the Senate should get involved in intergovernment negotiations. The Senate of Canada must have, as its first objective, to continue representing regions at the federal level, as the Fathers of Confederation wanted it.

In the light of the few examples I have just given, Mr. Speaker, it can be said that the recent proposals aimed at reforming the Senate all share a common objective: To improve regional representation within the Senate and Parliament as a whole. I feel that during our discussions on the way to improve the Senate's regional representation, we should keep in mind that, basically, it is the Canadian people which will make it possible for the Senate to become a truly efficient forum; through their support for a reformed Senate, whatever its nature, it will receive the power to act on behalf of the regions during the proceedings of Parliament.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, this resolution before the House is two-pronged. The first part is very easy to support. It calls on us to abolish the Senate as it is today. I support that because I believe the Senate as we know it today is an affront to democracy. Senators are appointed until age 75. They are not elected and they are responsible to no one once appointed. Neither can they be recalled.

The second part of the resolution is a bit trickier. It suggests that we create a new Senate composed of Senators elected by the people of Canada on the basis of equal representation for each province and territory, and to initiate discussions to that end with provincial and territorial Governments at the earliest opportunity.

Speaking only for myself, I believe we should initiate some discussion on the possibility of an elected Senate. There should be some discussion as to the kind of representation we want in the other place, if any at all. I hesitate to endorse the idea of a Triple-E Senate as proposed in this motion by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) because it says that there should be equal representation for each province and territory. I am concerned that because we have so many small provinces and territories with very small populations there could be a time when a majority of Senators represent less than 10 per cent of the population of Canada. For example, if one were to have 10 Senators per province or territory, or five, you could add the populations of the four Atlantic provinces, Yukon and the Northwest Territories, and that would be half the Senate, and they would represent less than 10 per cent of the population of Canada. I think that is going a bit too far.

On the other hand, I think it is extremely important in a federal democratic state that there be a balance between representation by population on the one side and representation by region on the other. There has to be some balance between the two. We do not have that balance today. Ontario and Quebec make up the overwhelming majority of our population, about 38 per cent in Ontario and about 28 per cent in Quebec. Add those figures, and you will find that two-thirds of the Canadian population lives in two provinces. As a result, this House of Commons is dominated by those two provinces under representation by population.

We have to find some way of balancing that with representation by region. The Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker) talked about equal representation from each region. That is one possible way of doing it. The system would perhaps allow for special recognition of Quebec and the French fact. Perhaps there should be some special recognition of our native people on matters affecting their rights where a majority of native Senators would agree with the rest. Those are things we could look at in considering the possibility of another place.

I want to indicate my support for the idea of looking at taking steps in this direction without endorsing all the ideas in a Triple-E Senate. It is very important that we have some representation by region as well as by population. For example, in the U.S. House of Representatives there is representation by population. A state like North Dakota has one Congressman, as does the small state of Rhode Island. New York and California have many Congressmen and Congresswomen because of the size of their populations. On the other hand, there is representation by region in the Senate where every state gets two Senators, whether it be Rhode Island, North Dakota, New York or California. The U.S. has that balance, which I think is so important.

We of course now recognize equality of the provinces in our amending formula. To amend the Constitution you need to have agreement by at least seven provinces and they must represent at least 50 per cent of the population. That covers both regions and populations and gives us that balance which is so important.

Going back to the U.S., there is no way that a number of smaller states could block the will of the country as a whole. We could have that kind of situation here where the smaller provinces and the territories, with about 8 per cent of the population, would have as many Senators as the rest of the country and its 92 per cent of the population. That does not exist in the U.S. because there are many more states of roughly equal size, many more states of moderate size, and many more states of small size. There is that difference in the two systems.

I would like to return to the first part of the motion, which is to abolish the Senate. As I said, I believe the present Senate is not a democratic institution. It is an affront to democracy, a throwback to the 19th century. I believe that the Senate, as it exists today, should be abolished. I think all Members of Parliament should agree to that. I have nothing whatsoever against any member of the other place. There are many fine men and women who are Senators in the other place who work very hard and have served this country very well. However, in many ways the other place has become a house of patronage. Many people who worked very hard for the Prime Minister's Party, regardless of what it may be, got their just reward by being appointed there until the age of 75, regardless of whether or not they work or keep in touch with the province which they represent.

The second thing that concerns me is that campaign managers are appointed to the other place by the Prime Minister, regardless of his Party. They have a public office, draw a large salary, and have a large expense account and a staff paid for by the public. A good example is Senator Atkins who was appointed by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). Senator Jean Bazin is there in the same capacity.

On the Liberal side there is Senator Keith Davey, a good friend of mine who has been there for many, many years. He is the chief Liberal campaign manager in the country extending back to the days of Lester Pearson. Senator Kirby is the newer version of Senator Keith Davey. He is a very intelligent man, a very decent Canadian, and a very competent political manager. However, that is not the role of the Senate. In a democratic society people should not be appointed for such functions in such an institution. I believe campaign managers should be paid out of the coffers of political Parties rather than by the people of Canada. That is not the purpose for which the Senate was created. That is another reason that the Senate of Canada, in its present state, should be abolished.

With that I call upon the House to support the first part of this motion to abolish the Senate. Although I do not agree with everything that has been advocated with regard to a Triple E Senate, I believe we should study this motion and begin discussions as soon as possible with regard to whether or not there should be an elected second House in this country in order to have a balance between "rep by pop" and "rep by regionalism". Without that, in a federal state we will have continuing problems of disunity within all political Parties because the problems of central Canada are often perceived as being more important than those of the west, the north, or Atlantic Canada.

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, I think no one in this House can doubt the necessity of doing something about the other place. Since the September, 1984 election, Members of this House have witnessed two incidents where Members of the other place have sought to frustrate the will of this House. With this in mind I would draw the attention of Hon. Members to the serious conflict at the turn of the century between the British House of Lords and the House of Commons, which culminated in the Parliament Act of 1911. I would like to take a few moments to explore the development of the Act because it is important in terms of the discussion which we are presently having.

The real catalyst of that crisis was the 1909 Budget of Mr. Lloyd George, Chancellor of the Exchequer. He, like the Government of Canada today, faced the problem of a large deficit and introduced a series of taxation measures which particularly affected Britain's wealthy land-owning class. Some observers at the time suggested that the Liberal Government had brought forward a particularly tough Budget in order to dare the Lords to veto it, thus allowing the Liberals to go to the electorate on a "peers versus the people" platform. Whether or not that is true, the fact remains that the Lords had not rejected a finance Bill in 250 years.

On November 30, 1909, the House of Lords rejected the Budget and in doing so disregarded one of the most fundamental principles of the parliamentary system, that is that the power of the purse belongs to the democratically elected House of Commons alone. Parliament was then dissolved and, as expected, both the Budget and the unparalleled action of the Lords were the key election issues. The Liberals remained in power with the support of a group of Irish nationalists who demanded that limits be put on the power of the Lords.

The Liberals then began to draft the Parliament Bill. It was introduced on April 15, and the 1909 Budget was passed without incident by both Chambers a few days later. With the introduction of the Parliament Bill came a warning from Prime Minister Asquith that if the Lords rejected the Bill there would not only be a second election, but the existence of the House of Lords would be an election issue.

A constitutional conference of Liberal and Unionist Party leaders aimed at ending the crisis was quickly convened. That went on from June until November when Prime Minister Asquith finally admitted that there was "an apparently irreconcilable divergence of opinion" between the two Parties. Shortly thereafter, in an audience with King George V, Asquith sought a guarantee that, assuming a Liberal victory in a general election, enough Liberal peers would be created to allow the passage of the Parliament Bill in the event of another deadlock. This guarantee was obtained.

As expected, the December, 1910, general election produced another stalemate, but Balfour himself, who had urged his House of Lords colleagues to reject the Bill in the first place, recognized that the British public had had enough and that the Unionists ran the risk of being blamed for any further constitutional upheaval.

After a serious and emotion-filled debate in both Houses, the Parliament Bill was finally passed on August 11, 1911. The vote in the House of the Lords was 131 to 114, with 37 Unionists voting with the Government. As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, the Parliament Act seriously reduced the power of the Lords. If the House of Lords does not pass a money Bill certified as such by you, Sir, the Speaker, within 30 days of its passage by the Commons, it may be presented for assent without the Lords' consent. In 1949 the Lords' power to prevent or unduly delay the passage of legislation was reduced still further. The Parliament Act has rightly been described as the most decisive step in British constitutional history since the extension of the franchise in 1867. It greatly reduced the authority of the House of Lords and established once and for all the supremacy of the democratically elected House of Commons in our parliamentary system.

I think you will see from my recounting of these events, Mr. Speaker, the similarity to the situation we face regarding the Canadian Senate. Here, too, there have been attempts by the majority Party in that Chamber, an appointed, non-accountable body, to thwart the clearly-expressed wishes of the House of Commons. Not only that, but the first incident was on a question involving public revenues, which are indeed the responsibility of the people's representatives in this House. Just as the "ditchers" of 1911 refused to accept the decision of the majority, we, too, have witnessed vain efforts from our own little band of "ditchers".

George Dangerfield, in his book, The Strange Death of Liberal England, put the matter very well. He said that these individuals "did not realize that life consists in change, that nothing can stand still . . . . Clinging to the realities of the past, they prepared to defend their dead cause to the finish".

I sincerely hope, Mr. Speaker, that all Hon. Members, both here and in the other place, will heed the words of Dangerfield.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, will the Parliamentary Secretary tell us what we will be dealing with tomorrow? I am sure everyone is interested and will want to know so that we can prepare for the debate.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to confirm that we will continue with Bill C-38 tomorrow morning until it is completed. We hope that we can finish it expeditiously so that the deal can be completed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—POSSIBLE USE OF LOW-SULPHUR WESTERN COAL BY ONTARIO HYDRO

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, you are probably not aware of it, but I have a friend and constituent by the name of Judy Fournier. Judy lives in my constituency in the Don Mills Road and Lawrence Avenue area.

She has a brother who works for a coal company in Grande Cache, Alberta. This coal company used to be very prosperous. Its sales were very high, but recently they have gone down, production has fallen, and there have been lay-offs, as I am sure you are aware. The fact that there have been lay-offs at this mine in Grande Cache, Alberta, is an example of the problems that the Alberta economy has been facing and an example of the problems of regional economic disparity in Canada.

As you know, jobs are available in Toronto and, in fact, a report in the newspaper on the weekend states that thousands of jobs are unfilled at the moment. However, there is unemployment in Alberta and elsewhere in Canada. Judy Fournier is worried about her brother and his future. Although he has been working at that mine for a long time, even with his seniority he may very well be out of a job before too long.

Judy has a boss who is a very good friend of mine. His name is Chuck Thornton. He owns a printing company in Toronto and he and his family also have a cottage property on an island in Lake Muskoka near Gravenhurst, Ontario. It is a beautiful cottage, on a beautiful lake, in a beautiful summer resort area.

That summer resort area, Lake Muskoka, and the Muskoka Lakes generally, have a problem. The problem is acid rain. There is an answer to that problem, an answer to Judy Fournier's problem, and an answer to the problem facing Chuck Thornton and his family. The answer, which is the same, is for Ontario Hydro to begin using low-sulphur western coal instead of the high-sulphur American coal it is now using to generate electric power.

The House will know that a study was completed last summer which indicated that if Ontario would begin substituting western coal for U.S. coal, it could create some 13,000 permanent jobs until the year 2000. Most of those jobs would be created in Alberta and British Columbia and perhaps as much as 40 per cent would be created in Ontario.

That same study indicated that the income that would be generated by that effort would be some $4.1 billion. Of course, that would be important for western Canada and Canada as a whole, and, perhaps from a parochial point of view, it would be important for Ontario because it would cut the amount of acid rain emissions and reduce the amount of acid rain in Ontario.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, and as the Parliamentary Secretary knows, Ontario has agreed to cut its acid rain emissions by some 50 per cent by 1994. Ontario Hydro is responsible, through its coal and thermal generating plants, for some 85 per cent to 90 per cent of all of those emissions. Western coal, on the other hand, has a sulphur level of 0.25 per cent compared to the U.S. coal-sulphur level of 2.2 per cent.

If Ontario Hydro would use Canadian coal instead of American coal, it would create jobs, it would reduce regional economic disparity, it would help bind our country together instead of tearing it apart, and it would reduce acid rain emissions in Ontario. It would reduce acid rain which would help our lakes, fish, birds, trees and people with respiratory problems. It would make Judy Fournier happy. It would make Judy's brother happy. It would make my friend, Chuck Thornton, happy, and his entire family, his wife Pam and his children, Scott, Bruce and Paul, would all be happy. It would make the people of Ontario happy and it would make the people of Canada happy.

What is holding it up? Of course, it is Ontario Hydro and it is the Ontario Government. I ask you, Premier Peterson, what is holding it up? Let us get on with it. Let us substitute western coal for U.S. coal. Let us create some jobs and cut acid rain in Ontario.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment my colleague on his continued interest in environmental matters, especially acid rain. I want to lend my voice to his efforts to encourage Ontario Hydro to use western coal.

My colleague asked the Deputy Prime Minister if the Premier of Ontario is prepared to order Ontario Hydro to cut acid rain emissions in the same manner that private industry has been asked. The Deputy Prime Minister has met with the Premiers of Ontario, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia to seek ways to use low-sulphur western Canadian coal at Ontario Hydro. This is in response to the federal-provincial task force which reported in June of 1986 and recommended that increased utilization of western coal be treated not just as a possibility but, indeed, as a reality. Not only is this possible from a financial sense, but its importance in reducing acid rain is the key concern.

The sulphur content of western Canadian coal is .3 per cent. This is about nine times less than the sulphur content of Pennsylvania coal. That is the reason we must take advantage of our western-Canadian coal. The Hon. Member asks whether Ontario Hydro has been ordered to reduce its acid gas emissions in the future. The short answer to this is, yes. In fact, Ontario Hydro has pledged to reduce its total acid gas emissions by 50 per cent over the next six years. This means that the 430,000 tonnes per year of acid gas emissions must be reduced to less than 215,000 tonnes per year by 1994.

In order to reach this level it is anticipated that during the 1990s, when Ontario Hydro will be needing new capacity, western-Canadian coal will be efficiently utilized to ensure these levels are met. This project could potentially create 13,000 jobs across Canada.

That is the reason we are treating it as an exciting project which will unite the country and will provide jobs in many regions and reduce acid rain. Quite clearly, this is good for the economy, good for the environment, good for Ontario, good for the western provinces and, Mr. Speaker, good for Canada. We are very optimistic that this project will become a reality in the near future.

PENITENTIARIES—ILLITERACY AMONG INMATES

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, on March 5, 1987, I rose in this House to ask a question of the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) about the steps being taken to combat the problem of illiteracy among prisoners. My question was prompted by the discovery of some alarming statistics.

• (1810)

Before pursuing my specific question about the illiteracy rates in prison, I would like to comment on this problem, which exists throughout our entire society. By coincidence, the leading editorial of The Globe and Mail today provides some shocking statistics about the illiteracy afflicting many Canadians.

Some one million Canadians cannot read at all, and four million cannot read or write well enough to function adequately in our society. The editorial points out that it is not an imported problem, since 70 per cent of the illiterate people in Canada were born here. Nor is it a problem of the elderly, since 40 per cent of the illiterate people are under the age of 45. Tragically, 60 per cent of the illiterate population is out of work. As Senator Fairbairn rightly said: "The illiterate population is our country's hidden shame."

With regard to my direct question of the Solicitor General, he assured me at the time that concrete steps would be taken shortly to deal with this situation. Indeed, on Wednesday of this week an adult basic education program will be launched in federal institutions across the country by the Correctional Service of Canada. Therefore, this is a good time to shed some more light on this unprecedented initiative, the success of which depends not only on my support or that of my colleagues in the House, but also on the awareness and goodwill of Canadians in general.

It would be instructive to begin with some further statistics. Currently, about one-half of all federal inmates have a level of competence below grade eight, which is considered to be the standard for conventional literacy. Out of these approximately 6,000 prisoners only 500, or less than 10 per cent, are enrolled in a basic education program, and of them only 150 or so will complete it successfully. Considering that 80 per cent of all prisoners are in jail for six years or less, this means that a great majority of those who enter being illiterate serve out their sentences and leave without any improvements. The question arises: Why educate prisoners? Some allege that this simply leads to well-informed, competent criminals. That is a narrow-minded, vindictive view.

To begin with, criminals, even if they have at one time consciously violated the law, are human beings who at some point will return to society. To be able to function within society on par with other citizens certain basic skills are essential. Certainly, being able to read and write are in that category. Not having these skills is yet another obstacle for a productive return to those already branded with the social stigma of a "record".

The adjustment process is difficult enough as it is. No conclusive evidence exists linking crime and lack of education, but one may draw a common sense link between the latter and repeat offenders. After all, if there is one area in which prisoners are relatively well educated, it is crime. Therefore, it is reasonable to assume that lacking alternative "employment", many will again resort to crime. In 1979 the then Chief Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court expressed his concern in the following way:

> In many of the institutions in this country today, a majority of the inmates cannot read or write. They are functional illiterates. This is why during the period of incarceration, a concentrated program must be available on two levels: first, to see to it that every prisoner learns to read and write; and, second, to see that each prisoner is trained in a marketable skill.

Aside from these specific considerations, it is important to look at what prisoners do during their term in a general way since, in a sense, that is their period of preparation for returning. These people have pride. But a lack of the most basic education often contributes to a low sense of self-esteem and self-confidence. Crime can be an escape from the system which may have failed them. Being better educated may enable them to discover new interests and skills and give their life in prison meaning and hope. Their preoccupation with anger and frustration may be channelled into something positive. Therefore, when they are released, literacy may qualify them to return, not just in a technical sense, but it should also raise their morale. Often, merely knowing that one can contribute in a meaningful way to society can be enormously inspiring and satisfying.

The goals of the program announced by the Solicitor General are ambitious. The target is to increase the number of successful completions of the program by 400 per cent in the first year, and ultimately to achieve a level of literacy among prisoners comparable to that of the Canadian public in general. This will not be easy, but the proposed initiative provides measures pointing in that direction. Incentives will be provided to encourage prisoners to participate. They will include linkage between program completion and, for instance, jobs in the institution and parole dates.

There will be improved co-ordination of the entire system so that prisoners transferred between jails will not be affected by the lack of standardized programs. More effort will be given to identify individual perceptual and hearing deficiencies, and correct them. Increased participation by qualified inmate tutors, with whom the prisoners will feel more comfortable, will also be encouraged.

In the entire process, success will depend largely upon the involvement of sectors of the community. Fortunately, a number of private organizations are ready and willing to help. For instance, there is Listen for Pleasure, a commercial group which distributes literacy programs in the form of cassettes—something that may be ideal for inmates often uneasy about formal classroom instruction. Frontier College is an institution whose basic mandate is to provide literacy in general, but its commitment to prisoners is very strong and well known.

And last, but most important, there are volunteer organizations, such as the John Howard Society and the Salvation Army, which have helped thousand of prisoners, and which try to foster goodwill toward them on the part of the public at large.

These groups provide an invaluable service, especially to young offenders and first-time offenders, during all stages, from court appearances, prison visits, and the problems associated with re-entry into society, to rebuilding family life, and in finding worthwhile employment.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to emphasize the importance of recognizing inmates as decent human beings, with dreams of a better future. Yes, they have violated our social and criminal codes of conduct. However, given that ultimately they will rejoin society, they deserve every opportunity to be able to make a productive contribution and to shoulder some of society's responsibilities.

Mr. François Gérin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I want first of all to thank the Hon. Member for Don Valley-East (Mr. Attewell) for providing us with an opportunity to raise this important issue in the House, and to emphasize that the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Kelleher) shares his opinion on most of the points he has made. The Solicitor General of Canada, who is responsible for the penitentiary services in this country, is also well aware of the serious problem resulting from prisoners' illiteracy. His response, therefore, was to announce recently an adult basic training program which will be implemented in all Canadian prisons.

To give you an idea of the scope of the problem, I will give you some statistics: recently, in Canada, almost 50 per cent of the inmate population, which means about 6,000 individuals, were functionally illiterate. Out of an inmate population of 12,500 people, only 500 were enrolled in basic education programs, and each year barely 150 complete successfully the program they have started. With this initiative, the Solicitor General seeks to raise the level of literacy among inmates to a level similar to the one found in the general Canadian population, that is 70 to 80 per cent of people with a grade nine education or better. To reach that goal, we are aiming for a 400 per cent increase in the number of literate inmates in 1987-88, thus helping 600 more men and women to reach a grade nine education level. The second year the program budget will be doubled and the number should reach 1,200.

Why all these efforts, Mr. Speaker? Because illiteracy is a social and economic problem particularly acute among prisoners. Most of them, when they come out, are confronted with serious adjustment problems in their job or social life. Illiteracy is another obstacle to their social rehabilitation. Illiterate people cannot read or complete a job application; they cannot go through the classified ads to look for a job or a phone number; they cannot read the street signs or find an address. Such simple tasks can be beyond their ability. As to those who finally find a job, they cannot read instructions, regulations or safety precautions at the work site.

Mr. Speaker, the facts speak for themselves: chances of finding and keeping a job are better if the applicant can read and write. It has also been acknowledged that there is a direct correlation between the ability to keep a job and not to commit a subsequent offence. In light of that principle, whenever the National Parole Board examines the record of an inmate it takes into account the efforts he may have made to acquire a basic training.

Other efforts will be made to encourage these people to take part in the program. As can readily be seen, the program is not additional punishment for the inmates, quite the contrary, it was designed to help them help themselves.

Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General is convinced that most Canadians support him. According to a 1984 Gallup poll, more than 50 per cent of respondents felt that reading and writing should be the number one priority of programs for inmates. It is one way of expressing a basic truth concerning social reintegration: the inmate must have skills which will enable him to do something other than returning to criminal activities, and he can acquire the necessary skills by becoming more proficient at reading and writing. All Canadians who are concerned by this question will surely welcome this initiative whose aim is to enable inmates to reach that objective.

THE ECONOMY—WESTERN ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT. (B) MANDATE OF ALLEGED OFFICE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, this evening I want to elaborate on why I want the federal Government to announce its plans for the Western Diversification Office. About a month or so ago I asked a question in the House about the western initiative office. At that time the Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council (Mr. Mazankowski) said that it did not exist.

Since that time they have changed the name of the office to the Western Diversification Office. Once again the Deputy Prime Minister refused to acknowledge that such an office existed. I do not know why they are delaying making an announcement because there is such an office in the bureaucracy now.

I have a copy of a leaked list of the employees of the Western Diversification Office. It was sent to me in a brown paper envelope. It is not a "Lorne Nystrom" or an NDP list. It comes out of the Public Service of Canada from someone who is in the knowledge, in the situation, and has access to the list of employees of the Western Diversification Office.

It is an office which has not yet been announced by the federal Government. It is an office which does not have a budget of which we know or a mandate of which we know. It is an office which does not have the discretionary power to decide on what projects will be accepted or not or what projects will be funded or not. Yet, there is such an office.

I want to read into the record and make an announcement on behalf of the federal Government. On behalf of the Deputy Prime Minister I announce that there is a Western Diversification Office. It is located on the fourth floor at 435 Ellice Avenue in Winnipeg, Manitoba, in the Canadian Institute of Industrial Technology Building. This is a National Research building in Winnipeg.

When I first mentioned it, the Deputy Prime Minister said that these 15 employees were employees of the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle). That is not true, and I will read into the record the names of the employees.

First, there are two co-chairpersons. The first is John Blackwood, Co-Chairperson of Resource Industries. He is located in Room No. 473 and his phone number is 949-6956. The other Co-Chairperson, Mr. Speaker—and do not forget that the Deputy Prime Minister said that this office did not exist—is Mr. Anthony Reynolds. He is co-chairperson of Manufacturing and Service. His Room No. is 474. His phone number is 949-6589. These are the two co-chairpersons.

In addition, the Western Diversification Office, which has not been announced by the Government of Canada, has a secretary. The secretary's name is Kay Hoare in Room 472. In addition, there is a senior policy adviser for Manufacturing and Services. This person's name is Robert Stalker. In addition, there is Derryl Millar, Senior Policy Adviser for Resource Industries. There is also Burt Waslander, Senior Economic Adviser. By the way, he was a person in the Ottawa headquarters of DRIE, the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. He is now in Winnipeg in Room No. 466.

There is John Inns, Senior Project Manager. There is Gary Hosea, Co-ordinator of High Technology. There is Randy Winnitowy, Co-ordinator of Resource Processing. By the way, Mr. Winnitowy is from my home province. He comes from the Saskatoon office of DRIE.

There is also Bill Whiting, Co-ordinator of Traditional Industries. There is Kim Nishikaze, Communications Officer. There is Terry Gibson, who is Project Manager of Resource Industries; Mr. Ron Smith, Administration Co-ordinator; Janice Dyck, a word processing operator; and Joann Primrose, who is a secretary.

In addition, this Western Diversification Office, which does not exist according to the Deputy Prime Minister, has a communications centre. That communications centre is located in Room No. 461. In case you want to communicate with them, Mr. Speaker, their phone number is 949-2489. If that is busy, you can call 949-7950. That is the Western Diversification Office. It has not been announced by the Government of Canada. It is in existence. It is doing some work. It is paying rent at the NRC building in Winnipeg which happens to be in the riding of my friend, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper). I want to know now from the Parliamentary Secretary, who is a very honest, decent forthright gentleman from Alberta, why the secrecy. Why has the federal Government not announced that the office exists? Why has the Government not told us what the mandate of the office is and whether or not there will be a budget?

I have another bit of information that you will be interested in, Mr. Speaker. I have been told by a reliable source, who I cannot name, that the federal Government did not make this announcement because it is planning a very slick, audio-visual presentation in the four western provinces in order to kick it off at an opportune political time, using senior Ministers from each of the four provinces. Winnipeg, of course, is the headquarters, so I assume the Minister involved in Manitoba would be someone like the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), in Saskatchewan it would be one of our two Ministers, in Alberta I would assume it would be the Deputy Prime Minister and in British Columbia one of the Ministers from there. Is the Government going to use taxpayers money for a slick, political kick-off rather than do some real work on western diversification?

With regard to western diversification, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) does say that there is work going on. The work is in his office and there will be an announcement very soon. Up to now there has been nothing at all in terms of western diversification. What we have had so far are western emergency programs. We appreciate them, like the $1 billion for farmers, the ending of the PGRT and the $350 million to western oil and gas. But that is not western diversification. That is western emergency aid which does not diversify the economy.

What we need in western Canada is a western Canadian economic strategy to diversify the economy, one with more local control, more self-reliance, more local input where western Canadians have more say. That is what I want and that is what western Canadians want. I hope that this office will have some input in real industrial economic strategy for western Canada so that in the future we will have a more balanced view of what the national interest is. I do not want to see more CF-18 decisions made that do not diversify the western Canadian economy but instead restrict the possibilities for diversification.

I look forward to my friend from Alberta enlightening this House since the Deputy Prime Minister felt he could not do so.

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to reply to the statements by the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom). First I want to compliment and thank him for supporting the Progressive Conservative Government on its western Canadian strategy.

I want to point out that this matter is not secret. We are not preparing a slick, audio-visual presentation. I am sorry to say that the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville was again using innuendo in this House in an attempt to discredit the Government.

He talks about the brown paper envelope with this list of people working in an office in Winnipeg. He says it came from someone who knows who has access to the information. He admits that he does not know from where the envelope came but in it there is a list of people who are in a so-called secret office.

I would like to point out that the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté) has asked officials of his Department to undertake wide-ranging analytical work on the manufacturing and service industries of Canada. This work, of course, and I think the Hon. Member should agree, illustrates again the high priority which the Government places on western diversification. For administration convenience, the work is being co-ordinated by the Winnipeg office of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. The officers involved could not be accommodated in DRIEs permanent offices, so temporary accommodation has been rented in the Canadian Institute of Industrial Technology Building.

I underline that that is not the Western Diversification Office in Winnipeg. There is no Western Diversification Office in Winnipeg. The Hon. Member knows exactly what we are talking about. He heard the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) say there is no Western Diversification Office in Winnipeg. There is an office of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. Employees of the Department are doing analytical work so this Government can make decisions based on a good study of what is going on in western Canada. For some reason the Hon. Member would rather believe something from a brown envelope. Of course, the NDP are very used to brown paper envelopes.

Mr. Nystrom: So are the Tories.

Mr. Shields: They would rather believe that than the word of the Deputy Prime Minister. The Hon. Member knows the implications of making a misleading statement in this House, and he should also know that what the Deputy Prime Minister said is correct. The work going on does not constitute a Western Diversification Office. The Hon. Member should realize that and accept it once and for all. When the time comes for an announcement on the western diversification strategy and the setting up of an office, the member will know it and he will be there in the front ranks applauding this Government's initiatives.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

JUSTICE AND SOLICITOR GENERAL—REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge—Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour this morning to present in French and English a unanimous report of the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General on the review of the Access to Information Act and the Privacy Act to which, pursuant to Standing Order 99(2), the committee requests a comprehensive response within 120 days.

This report is unanimous and contains 108 sensible recommendations which will lead to the second generation access law and the third generation privacy law in Canada. It is also historic in that this is the first example of a statutory review clause inserted into the laws of Canada. We conducted our review pursuant to the clause which was inserted in 1982 into the then Access to Information Act.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES IN PATENT ACT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106, which petition is signed by a number of residents who are very concerned about the Government's proposal to change the Patent Act with relation to prescription drugs. They believe this will severely increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and restrict the ability of Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs.

• (1110)

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, on a different topic, I am pleased to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106, signed by fishermen on the East Coast of Canada who are very concerned about an indication that the Government may be changing the Unemployment Insurance Act. They are concerned because many fishermen on Canada's East Coast as well as the West Coast depend on the provisions in the present Act.

RIGHT TO LIFE OF UNBORN BABIES—PROTECTION OF CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from approximately 50 Canadians, most of whom reside in my riding of Erie. They are concerned about the killing of thousands of unborn babies each year for reasons of convenience, and for such babies, capital punishment exists for the crime of being unwanted. Therefore, they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to support Motion M-37 and allow unborn babies to be protected by the Charter of Rights.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I have the honour of presenting a petition signed by several constituents in my riding, which says that the monopoly position given innovative pharmaceutical companies will preclude competition from less expensive generic drugs, resulting in increased drug prices for the Canadian consumer and making it increasingly difficult for many people to purchase the drugs they need; that the proposed amendments to the Patent Act will have a direct impact on all Canadians not covered by public or private health insurance plans; that the Government's proposals will add to the already high cost of provincial health insurance plans; and that the proposed amendments to the Patent Act are one more example of concessions being made by the Canadian Government to the United States in the context of free trade negotiations, to the detriment of the average consumer.

Therefore, my constituents humbly pray that Parliament reject the proposed amendments which will otherwise increase the price of drugs for Canadians.

[English]

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I would like to present a number of petitions. The first is from residents of British Columbia and the Province of Ontario, particularly Brampton, and concerns their opposition to amendments made to the Patent Act. They call upon the Government to withdraw this legislation. They believe very strongly that amendments to the Patent Act will cause the price of prescription drugs to rise dramatically.

I have another petition signed by residents from Dartmouth, Nova Scotia, who, like the previous petitioners, are opposed to the amendments to the Patent Act which they believe will cause prescription drug prices in this country to rise to an unprecedented level. They call on the Government to withdraw the legislation.

I have another petition signed by residents from Saskatoon, other parts of western Canada, and Windsor, Ontario. They are also opposed to amendments to the Patent Act. They call on the Government to withdraw this legislation because they believe it would negatively affect senior citizens and their ability to buy prescription drugs at a reasonable cost.

The final petition comes from residents of my constituency of Cape Breton—East Richmond who are opposed to amendments to the Patent Act, precisely for the reason I have outlined, that prescription drug prices in this country will rise to a dramatically high level. They call on the Government to withdraw this legislation in order to protect the disabled, elderly, and poor in this country.

CONTRACT AWARDED TO BRIKON MASONRY

Question No. 81—Mr. Boudria:

1. Since September 17, 1984, did the Department of Public Works award contracts to Brikon Masonry or Franco Trinci and, if so, how many and, in each case, in what amount?

2. For each contract, were public tenders called and (a) if so, were they the lowest bidder and if not the lowest bidder for what reason were they hired (b) if not, for what reason were they hired?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): 1. On March 6, 1985, one contract was awarded to Brikon Masonry in the amount of $56,000. No contract has been awarded to Franco Trinci.

2. No. Public tenders were not called in order to meet a tight construction schedule. Consequently, tenders were invited from five contractors. Brikon Masonry submitted the lowest of four competitive bids received.

TELEGLOBE CANADA REORGANIZATION AND DIVESTITURE ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Monday, March 30, consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-38, an Act respecting the reorganization and divestiture of Teleglobe Canada, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to return to this debate. Last week, the debate centred on the question of pensions and the desire of the employees of this company to have an agreement prior to their accepting employment with the new corporation. They want such an agreement because of the potential difficulties which may face Teleglobe in the future, as well as Memotec, as its owner, due to its heavy reliance on the large loan capital on which it has based its purchase of Teleglobe.

In the materials supplied to us by the Minister of State for Privatization (Mrs. McDougall), there is great emphasis placed on the benefits for employees which will result from this sale. In fact, highlighted within those points are the tremendous benefits which are supposed to be received by Teleglobe employees in the transfer. Yet, it has not been possible to arrange an agreement between the Government and the employees of this company, despite the fact that they have requested meetings, suggested compromise and laid out possible alternatives they might be prepared to accept. It is a crying shame that a government which makes a commitment to privatization cannot follow that commitment through by ensuring, as is done in most parts of the world where privatizations have occurred, that an agreement has been reached with the employees of the company concerned.

In this case, the employees are prepared to take on good faith the probability of the remaining points being worked out. They have suggested to us that they would, therefore, like to see this legislation put through before the end of the present fiscal year in order that the company will have a good start as a private enterprise and not have to face significant difficulties which might arise because of complications if the sale itself were delayed.

I think that is a tremendously generous attitude on the part of the employees involved. I compliment them for putting their interests secondary to the survival of this new company. However, that, of course, still leaves in front of us a great many questions with respect to the viability, sensibility, and sensitivity of the privatization of this company. We could take Hon. Members in the House through a great many different documents which raise questions, documents from disinterested parties who are not anxious to attack the Government on ideological grounds, yet see in the case of this sale a foolish step being taken which can result in some very damaging effects for the company and for the country.

I would like to put on the record some of the perceptions which I think the Canadian people should have in mind as they judge this privatization over the years ahead. I think, for instance, they should know the views of one of the employees of Teleglobe who has written to us. He writes:

> I work for the time being for a Crown corporation, Teleglobe, which is about to be privatized against the good advice of many people and sectors of the economy.

He goes on to say:

> I am not very optimistic about the "benefits" that this will bring to anyone, the Canadian public, employees, the telephone users, et cetera, except perhaps one or two large corporations.

That is the view of an employee of this company who has put long term service into building up the corporation and who sees it now as being sold off to the private sector without a sense of logic ever being presented by the Government as to why this corporation, with its important role, should be part of the private sector as opposed to the public sector.

I said at earlier stages in this debate that this particular privatization demonstrates as well that the Government, having decided to act, could not even get its act together and do the job properly. We have enquiries taking place about insider trading with respect to Memotec's stock. This is taking place not only in one stock exchange. It is being looked at in the Toronto Stock Exchange, the Montreal Stock Exchange by the Ontario Securities Commission. We also have investigations undertaken by the federal Government itself with respect to insider trading. It has been a botched privatization in which clearly there have been people who seem to have had prior knowledge that Memotec, very much an outsider, would receive the right to purchase Teleglobe and, as a consequence, would see its shares go up significantly. That is what insider trading is all about, the purchasing of shares prior to a public announcement such as this. When Memotec was announced as the purchaser, of course, its shares did go up and those people benefited significantly.

I think as well we have to look at the question of Memotec itself. Memotec is not a large company. It is not a company which is experienced in telecommunications. Independent analysts in Toronto such as Nigel Allen suggest that if interest rates were to increase by even a quarter of a percentage point it could take a big chunk out of Memotec's equity. Other people have made the same point. This is an important public firm which handles our telecommunications with the entire world, and which works not just with other private companies but very much with public agencies in other countries. A private purchaser will, in a curious way, sit as our public representative, despite the fact that it is a private firm, and as part of many of these international agencies which govern telecommunications. Despite that public role, the company has been sold to the private sector.

I refer Hon. Members to the assessment of The Globe and Mail of the process by which this sale was initiated. Lawrence Surtees writes in the business section of The Globe and Mail that the Teleglobe Canada sale is a question of act first and think later. I think that anyone who has sat through, some of the sessions of the legislative committee which heard witnesses, as I did, would have to say that there are a great many questions which remain unanswered with respect to this sale. There are questions, for instance, which were brought to us by the head of the CRTC. I tell Hon. Members that it is a pretty rare occasion when the head of the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission has to come to a committee and publicly criticize a Bill which deals with telecommunications, first, because he has not been consulted sufficiently and, second, because the context of the Bill and the content of it are, in his view, dangerous to the future of CRTC regulation in Canada.

Teleglobe Canada is a company which in 1986 made for the people of Canada almost $32 million, which is a great deal of income. In 1985 it made over $33 million. This is money that went directly to the taxpayers of Canada to reduce what they had to contribute and pay to the Government. Teleglobe is a company which all taxpayers have paid for over the years. Despite having listened to witnesses, I cannot see the logic of selling this company off and making what should be a public firm serving Canadians, a public firm giving income back to the Canadian taxpayer. I cannot see the logic of selling it off except for the logic of an ideological commitment which bears no relationship to practicality, need or the concerns of the country.

As I think back to the witnesses who appeared before the legislative committee it seems to me that the thrust of the arguments which they brought forward, especially those brought forward by the employees of the company, were that they hoped very much that the company could stay public so that they could continue to do the excellent job which they have done for Canada. I would have hoped that that logic, that sense of commitment with respect to the desire of the workers to keep a good company going and to return benefits to the taxpayers would have eventually won out. It did not win out in the legislative committee. It has not won out with respect to government thinking. I think it will win out eventually with respect to the thinking of the people of Canada as they assess this faulty, botched privatization Bill which is before us today.

Mr. James: Mr. Speaker, I wish to read into the record a letter that was sent to the Minister of State for Privatization (Mrs. McDougall) just a couple of days ago. It states:

Madam Minister:

The Telecommunication Technical Services Association has learned that a motion on Bill C-38 was proposed to the House which implies that Teleglobe employees would have to negotiate a "compensation package" with the new employer prior to Bill C-38 coming into force.

Our Union does not support this motion and strongly opposes such irresponsible action as it may jeopardize the interests of the TTSA members and ultimately cause delays in the adoption of the Bill resulting in serious consequences for all concerned.

They go on to state that they hope that the meetings will take place in the meantime but that the Bill should certainly pass.

The amendment which is referred to in the letter was moved by the Liberal Party. In the legislative committee all along members of the Liberal Party attended and expressed their concern about one aspect of the actuarial assumptions, and so on, as part of the pension issue. So they were on to this issue early. Members of the New Democratic Party came onside later in an attempt to catch on to the coat-tails of the Liberal Party, so to speak.

In the meantime, members of the union are telling us in letters which they have sent to us that we should not do what members of the Opposition are asking us to do. Members of the Opposition now make long dissertations about many and varied aspects of the Bill. Under the protection of past service, Teleglobe employees have a wider range of options than what is generally available in the private sector; notably, normal PSSA options are, first, return of contributions; second, immediate pension; third, deferred annuity at age 60, or annual allowance at age 50, depending on the age or service; as well as a transfer of prior PSSA service to a new plan on a going-concern basis. For example, there is full provision for future salary increase, indexation and survivor benefits versus the private sector practice of transfer on a termination basis only. There is also a guarantee of maintenance of the full body of accrued pension benefits which are in place. There is also the option of accrued benefits with respect to leave in the PSSA under the continuity of employment option, which is similar to the private sector practice. The pension transfer provisions that these employees are looking at are tremendous. They know it. They want the Bill passed before the end of the month. The employees are telling us that we should pass this Bill, and we should heed their words.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I am not certain if the Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton (Mr. James) was here for the beginning of my speech. Had he been here he would have noted that I too received a copy of the letter to which he referred and that I complimented the employees on their generosity and, frankly, their acceptance of the goodwill of the Government. I must say it is more than I would be willing to bet on these days.

Mr. Boyer: Why is that?

Mr. Langdon: The point I make to the Hon. Member for Etobicoke—Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer) is that to believe in the goodwill of the Government it would take a miraculous wiping clean of the slate of the over two-and-one-half years of disastrous government. This would include wiping clean the slate with respect to privatizations which, to my mind, like this privatization, have been badly botched and have been most unfortunate for Canada, not just for the employees involved.

If the Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton had wished to give the full flavour of the letter to which he referred he might have read it all. In the letter it is indicated that there are still some points of disagreement that the employees of the company have with respect to the pension arrangements which have been made.

I wish to point out to the Members of the House, and to people across the country, that we are not simply talking about minor issues here; as we heard from the Treasury Board officials who appeared before the legislative committee, what we are talking about is a difference of approximately $7 million insofar as the funding of the pension plan is concerned, and that amounts to something close to $10,000 per employee. So, it is a significant factor.

As a last point, let me say that while I respect the generous decisions which the employees of the company have taken—and we shall not be holding the Bill up—that is no reason not to put before this House and before this country some of the botched efforts which have gone into privatization in this particular case and some of the sad results which may well ensue for taxpayers right across this country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso (Mr. O'Neil) on a question or comment.

Mr. O'Neil: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I should like to make a brief comment on the remarks made by my colleague.

I could not help but reflect upon the discussions and debate that took place some time ago when the Government was in the process of privatizing de Havilland through a sale to Boeing Corporation. At that time, both in the House and in committee, there were many bleak predictions about what the future would be for that corporation, what the future would be for its employees, and what the future would be for the technology involved.

As we all know, Mr. Speaker, all of those predictions have proven to be incorrect. All of those predictions appeared at the time—and I think events have proven this—to be based upon adherence to ideology and a resistance to change, and the desire to make all Canadians public servants of one sort or another. I think today in this debate we are witnessing more of the same. Were we to go back in Hansard and take out some of the speeches made at that time and read them into the record today, the flow would not be all that much different.

Mr. Langdon: Our argument, of course, with respect to the privatization of de Havilland was that Boeing itself was getting a Christmas gift because of the very low price which it was having to pay and because de Havilland would prove to be extremely profitable and extremely beneficial for Boeing.

The money of which the Member speaks so glowingly could be money coming back to the people of Canada, to the taxpayers of Canada, who put so many billions of dollars into de Havilland. Instead it is money which is going to the United States in the form of yet further benefits for Boeing.

It would seem to me in fact, Mr. Speaker, that the member's argument proves our point and not his point, our point being that Boeing Corporation was going to get a Christmas gift with bells on it and keep receiving benefits of immense proportions for years on end. That is precisely what has happened because this excellent company, de Havilland, was sold to a private U.S. company, a company which is now benefiting so tremendously.

As a last point, Mr. Speaker, let me quote from the letter with respect to the pension plan. I shall put on the record the sentence which the Member for Sarnia—Lambton did not. It is as follows: "Some issues relating to transferring values for past service, in our opinion, are still not resolved." That is the reality. I think it is a sad reality. Privatization is taking place without a key question such as that being resolved.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), on a very brief question or comment.

Mr. Gauthier: A very short question, Mr. Speaker. It deals, again, with the pension issue.

As we know, there was something of a precedent set in the Canadian Arsenals Limited transfer to the private sector, a precedent which was not followed in the Memotec-Teleglobe transaction. There are distinctions and differences between the two plans. One is a money-purchase plan; the other is a defined-benefits plan. I am wondering whether the member has a preference for either the money-purchase plan or the defined-benefits plan?

As a person who has, at this time, in the Public Service of Canada a defined-benefits plan, would he like to carry that forward to his job with the new company? Or would he perhaps like to take the risk of the money-purchase plan?

I am just wondering what he thinks about that.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, it is of course not for me to make judgments on behalf of the Teleglobe employees. They have made their judgment, and they will live with it—

Mr. Gauthier: They don't like it.

Mr. Langdon: I think it is very important to recognize that one of the major reasons the Teleglobe employees were in favour of a fully funded money-purchase plan is the great uncertainty that hangs over the future of Teleglobe under this privatization plan, an uncertainty that is there, first, because there is no guarantee that provincial telephone companies will not bypass through the United States, thereby reducing the revenues of Teleglobe; and, second, there is a considerable possibility that Memotec itself, because it has had to take out so many loans to make this purchase, may end up in severe financial difficulty and have to cut back its pension plan, as it has reserved the right to do.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House now ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is as follows: Mrs. McDougall moves that Bill C-38, an Act respecting the reorganization and divestiture of Teleglobe Canada, be now read a third time and passed.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed to the motion please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mrs. McDougall) which was agreed to on the following division:

And the Clerk having announced the result of the vote:

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. When we were in opposition I recall the Government bringing to the attention of the House a certain member who was in the House without a tie. I notice today that the Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), who was part of the former Government, came into the House without a tie. I suggest that his vote not be counted.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker,—

Some Hon. Members: Withdraw. Out!

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member will first look at his side of the House he will notice that there are many members on his side who are not wearing a necktie. Second, I have come from a committee meeting where the way I am dressed is acceptable. Since the committee is an extension of the House and allows members not to wear a tie, it seems to me inconsistent to have two different sets of standards in both places.

Some Hon. Members: Out!

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I believe there is an important question to be settled, and I would not want to minimize the fact that the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) is not wearing a necktie. However the fact that you gave him the floor—he was recognized—would seem to confirm that you did not object to his presence and his being seen tieless.

In my opinion, the question as to whether a Member should be denied the right to vote or have his vote struck out after the division is a matter to which we should perhaps give serious consideration. The fact the the Hon. Member was here, that he voted, and that you recognized him, Mr. Speaker, just might point to a more contemporary approach concerning the way we dress. As the Hon. Member for Davenport said, and I repeat, there are people in this House who do not and probably will not wear a necktie ever, yet that does not prevent them from voting.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) on the same point of order.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to associate myself with the words of our distinguished Whip for the Official Opposition. Government Members do not recognize that a number of their group are in the House without wearing a tie. I think I can identify the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald), the Minister of Supply and Services (Mrs. Vezina)—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I can identify a number of others who are not wearing a tie.

An Hon. Member: Don't be silly.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I think the right to vote in the House should not depend on whether one is wearing a tie. The Member for Davenport is dressed neatly and in a way that cannot be considered disrespectful of the House. Certainly the right to vote in the House should be considered on the basis of something more serious than whether or not a member is wearing a tie. I am very surprised that the chief government Whip thinks that the right to vote should hinge on something as irrelevant as whether or not one wears a tie.

I believe we have reached the point where we should not approach these kinds of matters on the thesis of deux poids, deux mesures. I ask you to take a moderate, enlightened approach to this matter and recognize the right of the Hon. Member for Davenport to vote, failing which one must strike from the record the votes of all Conservative Members who are not wearing ties, and there are quite a few of them.

Teleglobe Canada

Mr. Epp (Provencher): What about Thérèse? Do you count her vote, too?

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, I will relent on my argument the day the Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) comes into the House wearing a dress.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Go for it, Herb.

Mr. Fennell: The opposition Whip, my colleague and friend, in quieter times would probably agree with me that it is important to retain dress in the House. I repeat that I would relent on my argument if the Member from Windsor would do as I request.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I hope that not all Hon. Members want to speak on this question. However, I would like to hear the opinion of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), who is a member of important committees concerning the House.

Mr. Shields: We are getting into jeans next.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, lest the wrong impression be left, I want Hon. Members to know, particularly the government Whip, that many male Members of the House of Scottish origin, have often appeared in the House wearing a kilt and that has and should continue to be regarded as appropriate dress.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am prepared to rule. There are two matters to this issue. First, with regard to the right of the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) to vote, the vote will stand.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Second, with regard to the dress of Hon. Members in the House, there is nothing specific in the Standing Orders. However, Citation 244 of Beauchesne states quite clearly that Speakers should enforce what is described as conservative, contemporary dress.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In light of that citation, as far as men are concerned, I would ask members to please wear ties in the House, possibly with the exception of the Member for Eglinton—Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille).

I declare the motion carried.

Bill read the third time and passed.

Canagrex

CANAGREX DISSOLUTION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Friday, March 27, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wise that Bill C-2, an Act to dissolve Canagrex and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There were six minutes remaining in the question and comment period on the excellent speech of the Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray).

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) a question concerning Canagrex. First, I point out to you that one of the requirements for being allowed into the Speaker's Gallery in the House is that one must wear a tie.

Does the Hon. Member for Windsor West believe that the Conservative Government perhaps made a mistake in 1984 when it cut all funding to Canagrex? Did it make a prejudgment on the results of the work commenced by the Crown corporation? Does he think that is what happened? Or does he think that this was an intentional move by the Government to try to satisfy, perhaps, some objections from the United States with respect to Crown corporations in Canada? Why does he think the Government cut off its funding in 1984 and only two years later tried to do away with the Crown corporation?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I do want to answer the question. However, I also want to seek your guidance, Mr. Speaker, on whether I should raise a point of order about the lack of a tie being worn by the Speaker when occupying the Chair. I will seek your guidance about this very interesting point because one cannot say that the tabs worn by the Speaker are the equivalent of a cravat. I will seek your guidance, Mr. Speaker, and reserve my right to raise a formal point of order on this subject.

Dealing with my hon. friend's question, one would have thought it would have made a lot more sense for the Government to give Canagrex a reasonable period of time to see just what kind of business it could generate for the Canadian agri-food sector, which would not otherwise have been there, before it proceeded to choke off its funding and rush legislation into the House to kill Canagrex.

It is my information that at the time the Government withdrew funding from Canagrex, it was in the process of formalizing some $100 million in export sales of Canadian agricultural products, both processed and unprocessed. These sales would not have been there had Canagrex not been able to step in and seek out opportunities in world markets. There is no doubt in my mind, therefore, that the foolish step taken by the Government to eliminate the funding of Canagrex and to kill that organization was done prematurely. It would have made more sense to respond to the views of many in the private sector and give Canagrex a chance to show what it could do before making a final decision about its future.

The decision the Government did take was not only premature, it was foolish. The result was to lose opportunities for sales of Canadian agricultural products abroad in the area, initially, of likely $100 million, and over time perhaps in the billions of dollars. The effort by the Conservative Government to kill Canagrex has been another $1 billion mistake. The way the Conservatives bungled the matter of the failures of the two banks has cost taxpayers $1 billion. This Bill with which we are being asked to deal today represents another mistake which may well cost taxpayers, the Canadian private sector and the agri-food business perhaps another $1 billion or $2 billion.

It is a shame that the Government has taken this action. As I said before in answer to my hon. friend, we are going to make sure the Government's action is not forgotten by the voters. They will have the final say. I am confident their say, through their votes, will be that the Government made a terrible mistake, but the voters will not be making a mistake in getting rid of the Government for this $1 billion error.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) that this will be another $1 billion bungle by the Conservative Party. It is amazing to see the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) sit back and allow his Government to shaft the farmers of Canada. I cannot understand that. I was in his riding on Friday night and people there are wondering why he does not stand and defend Canagrex. I was in Kindersley and the people there are so angry that from a small New Democratic Party fund raiser of 120 people we raised over $5,000. That shows you the concern those people have that the Cabinet Minister is not doing his job, and we have many good farmers who want to run in that riding. I think the only people who will win in the west now are New Democrats. I am just reading the polls.

It is very important we keep Canagrex because of competition now between the Europeans, the EEC and the Americans with their farm Bill. It is very important that we get out there and hustle to find markets for Canadian food products. I cannot understand why the Government would get rid of an agency which could do just that. The Hon. Member for Windsor West was a member of the previous Government. He and his Government knew a number of years ago that there was getting to be more and more competition in terms of sales and markets for Canadian farm goods. Why on earth did the Hon. Member's Government take so long to bring in Canagrex in the first place? Why did it wait until the dying days of a Liberal regime, until the last gasp for breath, before it introduced Canagrex to try to get a few more votes from Canadian farmers? Why was the Liberal Government so slow. It was almost slower than the Conservative Government.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the original concept, I have to admit, created some controversy. There were concerns in the private sector, both on the part of producers and processors of agricultural products, that the original concept would overlap activities already going on, and would take away opportunities which could be carried out by the private sector.

I think the parliamentary process did its job. Through the debate on the Bill at second reading, through the committee hearings and through consideration of the report of the committee, we were able to develop a concept which eliminated almost all of the concerns of the private sector and there was as a result a consensus that Canagrex, as it was passed by this House, was a good idea and deserved the support not only of this House but of the agricultural sector of Canada generally. I, therefore, say that I do not think that we took too long. The parliamentary process did its job, eliminating issues and problems which the community outside of Parliament saw in the Bill.

I think the real mistake is the mistake we are now trying to stop the Government from making by proposing this Bill. It is a mistake of the Government to try to kill Canagrex. If there was any mistake on the part of the previous Liberal Government, it is that we could not see how such an obviously good idea as Canagrex would not be accepted and would be rejected even by a Conservative Government. We thought that if it happened that we would not be returned after the next election, even the Conservatives would be able to see what a good idea Canagrex was. We could not anticipate they would be so foolish as to reject this very good idea.

In this respect I have to admit we were wrong. However, I am sure the Canadian people will assist in helping make sure these kinds of mistakes are not made again, and I refer to the mistake in judging just how foolish and lacking in understanding and intelligence Conservatives can be. I am sure that after the next election they will not have the same chance they have now to do the damage they are doing to the Canadian agricultural sector and to the Canadian economy.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have the opportunity to say a few words about Canagrex because I was very closely involved with the development of Canagrex. As the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) suggests, it was a product of the past Government. It was also a product which was supported by the Conservatives in opposition. In fact, during the time of the Government of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) brought in legislation almost identical and was ready to have it pushed through the House. Somehow between that time and when it finally got to the House four years later, the Conservatives had decided they could make it a political football. What they did was—and I can only think of one word—disgusting in its approach. They took what was a good idea, what they themselves had supported, and made it look like something which was not worthwhile.

Canagrex was born out of neglect, out of the neglect of many Byears of governments which did not put into place the type of marketing and exporting system which would work well for the agricultural producers of Canada. It was created because a developmental policy that would allow the continuing increase of exports around the world was not forthcoming. It was built to fill a vacuum, in spite of the fact that the Department of External Affairs said that it had in place around the world agents who would do the type of work that was necessary to increase the agricultural export market. They had not done it, and they did not do it. Consequently, Canagrex was created to fill a vacuum.

It would be of interest to review for a few moments exactly what Canagrex did put in place in its short life span of eight months. Canagrex was born on July 3, 1984. Immediately, it set out a corporate plan which touched on those areas in which it thought it could be the most effective in terms of the export of agricultural products around the world. This plan was approved by its board of directors and by the Minister of Agriculture of the day. The plan included a great number of developmental ideas. By June its plan was pretty much under way. It had a team of people in place which was working not only in Canada but around the world to develop markets and to establish a basis for realistic proposals which were put forward in the corporate plan. It found a tremendous amount of interest in the agricultural community for its plans. Producers of almost every type of product other than those already handled by marketing boards, such as wheat and grains, were interested in having for themselves some type of an agency which would develop export markets for them.

Canagrex did not go out to sell goods or to buy goods. In fact, it did not have the right to do so under the legislation. What it did was leave buying and selling to the private sector. Its objectives were to facilitate sales and to provide information to the producers and shippers of agricultural products. It surveyed Canadian commodities and found that many of them could be produced in surplus and could be sold on the world market. It also went out into many countries to find out what products they might want to buy. In the process, a source list of Canadian products, of commodities, was developed. It is probably the most comprehensive and most up-to-date source list of agricultural products that are available in Canada for sale even up to this date. I point out to Hon. Members that Canagrex was created about three years ago.

The next step Canagrex took was to develop a market survey program. This program entailed in-depth research of specific markets around the world, markets which were considered to be promising in countries which were most interested in buying Canadian products. When Canagrex went out to investigate these markets it took with it producers from each of the product areas concerned. For instance, when it went to Singapore it took pork producers along. When it went to Cuba it took potato producers along. When it went to Egypt it took along tobacco producers. In each case Canagrex used the producers and the distribution industry in such a way so as to give them direct contacts with buyers. Many countries in the world have central buying systems. These countries practically demanded a central selling system from Canada. That is a role which Canagrex could have fulfilled, although it was not the basis of its initial mandate.

Canagrex also developed programs for the Philippines, Colombia, Panama and other South American countries. It prepared a comprehensive study that identified the markets for a number of commodities that were available. For example, it prepared a comprehensive study of markets for pork, a study which was developed in conjunction with pork producers. Commodities were listed and a potential sales list was sent out to producer organizations around Canada.

In the short time in which I have been speaking I have mentioned a number of countries. I wish to point out that if we take a look at a list of those countries to see which ones have so-called agricultural people in our External Affairs offices in those countries we will find that a number do not have any agricultural people. Consequently, nothing has developed since the days of Canagrex in terms of sales to these countries.

Canagrex was developed in such a way that most of its operation costs would be defrayed by the sale of products. The only costs of the operation of Canagrex which would be referred back to the Government, or which would become a government expense, were those with respect to the employees on its staff and the sending out of information.

After Canagrex had surveyed the markets and pin-pointed them, it then went out to stimulate export sales in the countries which it identified. It did this in a way which no commercial officer who has been posted abroad could possibly do. No agency of the Government which is not specifically interested in agriculture could have done this. To illustrate my point, Canagrex transported high quality breeding swine stock to Italy for show to ascertain whether or not Italy was interested in that type of market.

Mr. Speaker, I see you indicating that it is almost one o'clock. I will continue my remarks later on today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 1 p.m., I do now leave the Chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

TRANSPORT

PROTECTION OF MOTORISTS—MEASURES GOVERNMENT WILL TAKE

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, Transport Canada had an excellent idea last week when it held a public forum on March 25 and 26, on restraint systems in cars.

I attended the forum and was delighted to see the positive attitude shown by all parties either directly or indirectly concerned with finding better ways to protect automobile users against highway accidents.

A number of participants stressed the importance of educating the public to increase the rate of seat belt use. A coroner who spoke to the forum pointed out that there was a right way and a wrong way to wear a seat belt.

Finally, car manufacturers announced that installation of rear shoulder belts in the back and air bags in the front would be complete by 1990.

Much remains to be done, and we will have to keep up the pressure, Mr. Speaker. The organizers are to be commended for the tremendous success of this forum, and I am anxious to see the measures the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) will introduce to ensure that the Canadian car user will have maximum protection against highway accidents.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

CALGARY NEWSPAPER'S CAMPAIGN

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, recently the Calgary Sun had a write-in campaign for the reinstatement of capital punishment, entitled "Let Brian Know".

As the Calgary Sun promised the petitioners, it would be hand delivered to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). After finishing my statement, I shall do so on behalf of the petitioners.

I feel more confident now that we have the promise of the Government to have a debate and a free vote on the reinstatement of capital punishment before June 1. I feel more confident, too, that this issue is going to be resolved to the satisfaction of the majority of Canadians.

HUMAN RIGHTS

CHILE—TORTURE AND OTHER VIOLATIONS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, this week Pope John Paul II visits Chile, where he will become familiar with the terrible human rights situation in that country.

The Vicariate of Solidarity, sponsored by the Catholic Church, has documented hundreds of cases of torture, kidnapping, and murder. Sadistic torture methods sometimes reach new levels of technical sophistication. At other times, as in the burning of Carmen Quintana, who came to Canada for healing, they reflect old fashioned brutality.

During his visit the Pope will see a fascist Government, will see all of the trappings of power; but he will also see the courageous spirit of the Chilean people, who refuse to accept dictatorship and who continue to work and struggle for a return to democracy and freedom. I say, let the spirit of the Chilean people live and triumph.

PETRO-CANADA

PRIVATIZATION RECOMMENDED BY ECONOMIC COUNCIL OF CANADA

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, after careful consideration and detailed study, the Economic Council of Canada, under the eminent chairmanship of Judith Maxwell, has concluded as follows:

> We recommend that Petro-Canada be privatized. The corporation should be sold through a broad share offering, made initially only to Canadians, but no specific legislative restriction should be placed on individual shareholdings.

Since the passage of the Petro-Canada Act in 1975, this Crown corporation has become the largest refiner-marketer in Canada. But there is no indication that the public is better off by one cent than had previously been the case.

It is time that this most sensible recommendation of the Economic Council of Canada was acted upon by the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN COALITION ON ACID RAIN—TELEGRAM SENT TO PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Coalition on Acid Rain has urged Prime Minister Brian Mulroney to press, at next week's summit, for more substantive American actions to fight acid rain.

The Prime Minister "should ask U.S. President Ronald Reagan to submit a formal legislative proposal to Congress that would actually reduce acid rain emissions", the Coalition said in a telegram to the Prime Minister.

The telegram, signed by the Coalition's 55 member groups and 900 individual supporters, was sent Monday. A copy was released today. Coalition Co-ordinator Michael Perley said that the Prime Minister's statements on acid rain have indicated Ottawa is satisfied with Reagan's commitments, which amount to little more than research. "This impression needs to be corrected and a clear message sent to U.S. legislators and the American public that nothing short of emission reductions will solve the acid rain problem", Mr. Perley said.

LIBERAL PARTY

USE OF MEDIA HIGH-TECH FACILITIES

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, on Sunday morning in Quebec City, Liberal Party Members had the honour and the privilege of brunching with their Leader, thanks to modern computer technology.

Initially, the organizers were going to set up 100 tables, but because of low attendance, they reduced this number to 60.

Subsequently, they decided to seat two or three people per table, because it is a problem to fill 480 seats with 250 guests. Mr. Speaker, some of the guests felt rather uncomfortable attending such a lavish event with so few people present.

Finally, the guests who were present and, we assume, listened to the Leader's speech were very disappointed since it contained no definite program worthy of a political party.

Did the Liberals hand out cassettes of their Leader because they were afraid the cameras would show a lot of empty tables?

Is this a ploy on the part of the Liberals to obtain a consensus among all dissidents? Or was it to avoid fortuitous contradictions by their Leader?

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

LAY-OFFS IN MELVILLE, SASK.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday of last week CNR announced that it was laying off some 47 employees in the city of Melville, which represents about 11 per cent of its workforce in that city. The payroll of CNR in the city is around $12.5 million. It will be a tremendous cut-back and hardship, not only for the families working with CN but for the business community and for the city as well.

CN is downgrading the car shops from repair shops to cleaning shops. What makes me angry as the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville is that some months ago, or a little over a year ago, CNR announced that it would not be cutting back on personnel in Melville, that indeed it would be maintaining the workforce and perhaps even expanding it.

I call upon CNR to keep its promise, to rehire the people it is laying off in Melville, and to expand the car shops not just to cleaning shops but to repair shops as well.

AEROSPACE INDUSTRY

DE HAVILLAND—INCREASE IN EMPLOYMENT FOLLOWING PRIVATIZATION

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, when the Government decided to sell de Havilland, the opposition Parties predicted that privatization of the corporation would result in the loss of jobs. Further, they argued that the Government had destroyed a major portion of our aerospace industry.

The doomsayers on the opposition benches have been proven wrong again. Since the sale of de Havilland to Boeing, employment has risen from 4,400 people to 5,200 people, an increase of 800 jobs.

For the first time orders for Dash-7 and Dash-8 aircraft exceed production. The new management, coupled with the world-wide network of Boeing Corporation, has led to this excellent increase in orders for these fine aircraft.

This success has allowed de Havilland to produce a new series of aircraft, which will allow de Havilland to increase its penetration in the short-haul commuter field and will mean a further increase in jobs and technology. No wonder the Opposition now avoids the issue altogether.

REQUEST FOR JUSTICE FOR ELDERLY WORKERS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, on Monday, March 23, more than 1,000 early retirees attended an information and consultation meeting in Montreal.

On Friday, in Quebec City, over 600 early retirees went to a similar meeting and today we have the visit of Coalition and ARSAC representatives who came to protest against the Conservative Government decision to take a harder position concerning elderly workers in Quebec and the rest of Canada.

Sad to say, Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Members of the House do not seem to be overly eager to defend the interests of elderly workers.

Today the Minister of Employment and Immigration is attending a federal-provincial conference with his provincial colleagues responsible for employment, and I happen to know that some of the provincial Ministers will request the federal Government to play fair with elderly workers because the Conservative Members simply will not come to their defence.

PATENTS

ADOPTION OF LEGISLATION TO PROTECT PHARMACEUTICAL DISCOVERIES—IMPACT

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, the results of a nation-wide poll show that 80 per cent of respondents support the adoption of federal legislation to protect pharmaceutical discoveries, with the guarantee that drug price increases will not exceed the inflation rate.

Bill C-22 now before the House provides for the creation of a patented medicine prices review board. Canadians think this is a good idea. Only price increases lower than the inflation rate will be authorized.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians hope that intensified research will lead to better medical treatment in this country. I would stress that if the Bill is adopted, over 10 years the industry is committed to double its biomedical research and development budget, as a percentage of its sales. In Canada this will translate into new investments of $1.4 billion, for a total of $3 billion.

This also means jobs for young people joining the labour force. The Liberals are against that. The New Democratic Party is against that.

Meanwhile, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party has both hands deep in Shirley Carr's handbag. Both of them will quickly waste the Canadian Labour Congress membership funds on the election campaign.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

OPPOSITION TO U.S. DEMOCRATIC SENATOR'S PROPOSED LEGISLATION ON ACID RAIN

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Coalition on Acid Rain has rightly sent a message to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) critical of the impression he has given to the American administration, the Congress, and indeed the American public that Canada is somehow satisfied with what President Reagan has committed himself to do so far. But things continue to go from bad to worse. We learned yesterday that Democratic House Leader Robert Byrd from Virginia is intent on weakening what is already an abysmally weak proposal by the President. Mr. Byrd is a Democrat, and so with respect to our hopes that action will come from the United States on acid rain we find that we have staunch opponents on both sides of the Congress, something that all members should regret.

I asked the Prime Minister yesterday whether he would consider asking President Reagan to assure us that he would veto any such congressional action. That kind of action has become less likely as a result of Senator Byrd's statements. I wonder whether the time has not come for all of us here in the Canadian House of Commons and in the Senate to get together to pass a unanimous resolution sending a message to the United States Congress, both the House of Representatives and the Senate, saying just how unanimous we are that the United States must take real action to reduce acid rain emissions and become the good neighbor that it says it is.

CHILD CARE

PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE'S REPORT

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, the Special Committee on Child Care presented its much awaited report to this House yesterday. The committee was asked to report on three related subjects: the needs of children being cared for inside and outside the family, how best to define a role for the federal Government in child care, and what steps the federal Government could take to fulfil this role.

The federal Government has 120 days to give a sensitive, caring and thoughtful response to the committee's report and its 39 recommendations. I am confident that most Canadians will be supportive of the Government's response. On the other hand, I believe the knee-jerk reaction by some Members of this House and leaders of other groups in the public sector is irresponsible and smacks of blatant political posturing.

I intend to read the entire report over the next few days, and I would encourage some of the most vocal critics to do likewise, unless they fear that a more thorough understanding and knowledge of the facts, the intensive research and well thought out recommendations, including an appreciation of the funding requirements, might alter their preconceived opinions.

LABOUR

CLOSURE OF A. GOLD & SONS—EARLY RETIREES—REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF GOVERNMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of letters from people in my riding who are aged 55 and who lost their jobs because A. Gold & Sons have closed their doors. In their situation they were entitled to early pension benefits until August 17, 1986. Once these employees have used up their 52 weeks of unemployment insurance they will be without jobs or early retirement benefits, and they are now wondering how they will manage to keep their children in university and provide for family needs.

The Conservative Government put the axe to the early retirement program and today still, after many months, it has not announced a replacement project. These people are quite worried, Mr. Speaker, and we urge the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) to unveil his program immediately.

PATENT ACT—SUPPORT FOR AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, like my colleague, the Hon. Member for Beauce (Mr. Bernier), I would like to draw to the attention of this House a recent Decima poll, released yesterday, which shows that 82 per cent of Canadians support the principles of Bill C-22.

In fact one of the questions asked was whether or not Canadians would be willing to pay higher prices for their prescription drugs if more research and development were done here in Canada. Sixty-five per cent of respondents said yes.

Bill C-22 is good for Canada, and Canadians support it. The opposition Parties are basing their politics on unfounded fear of vastly higher prices, but they have failed to address the important issues of better health care and intellectual property protection, values that Canadians support.

This poll indicates that Canadians do support research and development and Bill C-22. It is a Bill which, with the establishment of a drug prices review board, will provide Canadian consumers for the first time with monitoring and regulation of drug prices. Canadians like that.

FISHERIES

MARINE ECOLOGY LABORATORY AT BEDFORD, N.S.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my sincere disappointment with the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) for his decision to close down the marine ecology lab at the Bedford Institute of Oceanography in Nova Scotia. There can be no sensible reason to dismantle this world-renowned facility, a facility that has proven its worth many times over since it was created.

How can the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, with the silent approval of the Government of Nova Scotia, make this decision? Time and time again the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans has made decisions that have impacted negatively on the fishing community and industry of Nova Scotia. It is about time the Government of Nova Scotia and members of the Cabinet from the Province of Nova Scotia make it clear to the Minister that this decision is completely unacceptable to the people of Nova Scotia.

I call upon the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, the Minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and the Member of Parliament from Halifax to stand up for the constituents of that particular region of Nova Scotia and to have the Government reverse its decision and maintain the marine ecology lab at the Bedford Institute of Oceanography.

CHILD CARE

PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE'S REPORT—NATIONAL CHILD CARE PROGRAM PROMISE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I put a question to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Prime Minister's defence yesterday of the proposals of his caucus members on child care was about as irrelevant as those proposals themselves. The Prime Minister either misrepresented the facts or does not understand those facts. Does the Prime Minister understand that if the proposals of his caucus members are accepted, they will be breaking the major campaign promise made by the Prime Minister for a national child care program?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition must recognize that this report was presented to the House. The Prime Minister said very clearly yesterday that he as well as other members of Cabinet would be studying the report. The Leader of the Opposition also knows that, under the changes to the parliamentary rules, the Government has 120 days from yesterday to respond to the report. I think that is very much in keeping with the negotiating timetable the Ministers of Social Affairs, both provincial and federal, have set for themselves for finalizing these plans by the middle of this calendar year.

LACK OF MODERATELY PRICED PLACES IN DAY CARE CENTRES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Well, I believe that under the circumstances I should direct the following questions to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Does he know whether the Prime Minister is aware of the fact that his own Members have failed to understand the biggest problem, which is the very severe lack of places in day care centres? Is the Minister aware that there is a very severe shortage? And what is he going to do to meet the needs of Canadians, to have enough places to meet the demand of Canadian families, particularly lower income families?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister as well as members of the Cabinet and Canadians who have looked at the child care issue know that there is a need for more spaces. The Prime Minister has said that right from the beginning. He said that during the election campaign of September, 1984, and he repeated it in Vancouver at the First Ministers' Conference. He mentioned it again as recently as Saturday night when he addressed a group of women delegates to Impact 87. Quite frankly, that point is not the issue.

I think the issue is what kind of a mix we should put together in child care so that there will be more spaces and so that those parents who choose, for whatever personal reasons, not to access the so-called formal day care system will also get some recognition, either financial or otherwise, from the Government of Canada and from provincial Governments.

POSITION OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, of course we paid due attention to the Prime Minister's speech to a very carefully chosen and culled audience. When the country as a whole seems to be taking a more mature and progressive approach toward child care, why is the Minister's Party moving backward? Could he explain to the House why his colleagues on the committee are so opposed to setting national standards for quality child care? Why are they so opposed to meeting the immediate need of lower and middle-income families? Why do they resist fulfilling the immediate need for spaces for Canadian children who do not have access to quality child care? Why did his colleagues react in this way? Could he explain that to the House so we know just where he and his Party stand?

• (1420)

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I addressed the matter of spaces in my second answer to the right hon. gentleman. The Progressive Conservative Party is not moving backward. The parliamentary committee has put forward recommendations to Parliament. The Government has not yet either endorsed or acted on them. I think the right hon. gentleman should be fair and recognize that this is a federal-provincial area with primary responsibility in the provinces. I am not saying that to deny any federal responsibility.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Let's see a little leadership.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): We are willing to give leadership. It is a given that, if there is public money put into a system, there must be standards. As an example, under the Canada Health Act the Government of the day set standards and, if those standards were met, funding was provided to the provinces. That model could also be used in a national child care system. The Right Hon. Member should not jump to conclusions which may be of short-term political gain but may not necessarily be of the greatest benefit to child care.

IMPLEMENTATION OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister. In the answers so far the Government has shown no recognition of the compelling need to have a comprehensive national child care system set up right away. Some 1.2 million Canadian children live in poor families which have problems earning an adequate income due to the lack of adequate day care. The lack of adequate day care means that single mothers do not have an equal opportunity to earn better incomes for their children.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister put aside the scatter-gun approach of the Conservative Members and tell us how the Prime Minister will keep his promise to provide a comprehensive national day care system for Canadians, or is he asking Canadians to wait another two and a half years for the answer?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member really amazes me. I thought he was in the House yesterday. I am sure that if he had been paying attention he would have heard very clearly the words of the Prime Minister which are reported at page 4687 of Hansard as follows:

> We know that a comprehensive child care system will require significant resources, and we are going to have to find them. For I want to state clearly that our commitment to a child care program is real and that Canada shall have an effective national child care system.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, in spite of the glib answer of the Deputy Prime Minister, if he accepts the proposals of the Conservative members of the committee, in the year 2000, which is less than 20 years away, we will still be more than one million child care spaces short.

Why will the Deputy Prime Minister and the Government not show leadership today and tell us how they will meet the need of Canadians for an adequate comprehensive child care system?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, why does the Hon. Member not start paying attention? The Minister of National Health and Welfare just answered that question. The report presented by the parliamentary committee will be studied, considered, and responded to, as the Minister indicated.

PROVISION OF SERVICES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Yesterday, virtually every expert in the country who knew something about the need—no one on that side of the House I assure you—and knew anything about the almost 2 million Canadian children who need child care services, condemned the Conservative majority report for being totally inadequate in terms of increasing services.

• (1425)

I remind the Minister that on page 41 of this Conservative document there is a recommendation to spend a mere $10 million in increasing the services for children. The whole country knows that the Government will spend $40 million to move an unneeded prison into the Prime Minister's riding.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I want to ask the Minister a serious question—

Mr. Crosbie: Get serious!

Mr. McDermid: You want to ask a serious question? Get serious!

Mr. Broadbent: The Minister has some responsibility for this. Does he believe that it is the right priority for a Government of Canada to spend four times the amount of money on a prison for the Prime Minister's riding than for all of the children of Canada? Is that the right priority?

Mr. Siddon: Don't be ridiculous.

Mr. Mazankowski: You are being ridiculous, Ed.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, there are two responses to those comments. First, the Leader of the New Democratic Party used the figure of 1.9 million—

Mr. Broadbent: No, I did not. Where did you get that?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): One point nine million as the number of children, for example, who should have child care. He knows full well that the figures he and his members use include children from 18 and under. When you talk about universal systems, you put all of this together and come up with a large figure.

When one considers the amount of money the committee recommended yesterday, the member was again very selective in his figures and gave the figure of about $10 million in new services for the children of Canada. That is simply not what the committee recommended. The committee is recommending that the federal Government expend approximately $700 million in programs. You might disagree with the mix; I might want a slightly different mix too. However, I am telling the member to start using all the facts rather than selectively, as you always choose to do.

PROVINCES' REACTIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I was quoting from the document and the Minister knows that the figures he has just given mostly are in the form of tax breaks which have not worked in the United States, which have been rejected by every country in Europe that has effective day care, and have been rejected by church groups in Canada and every expert. You are a disgrace in terms of providing child care, and you know it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: Shame on you!

Mr. Holtmann: Ask Howard Pawley.

Mr. McDermid: There is a clip for The National.

An Hon. Member: Grandstanding again.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Stomp all over Parliament.

Mr. Shields: Ed makes The National again.

Mr. Speaker: I ask all Hon. Members to respect the right of the questioner to put a question. I would ask the Hon. Member for Oshawa not to use the personal pronoun "you". I remind all Hon. Members that if preambles are argumentative there will, of course, be a response. The Hon. Member.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, after this report came down the Government of Ontario said it is inadequate in terms of services, the Government of Manitoba has said the same thing, and the Conservative Government of Nova Scotia has condemned it as being inadequate in supplying services for Canada's children. Three Governments have responded—

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is always very reluctant to interrupt the questions, but the Hon. Member for Oshawa has already had a long preamble and seems to be on a second one. I would ask the Hon. Member to put the question.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, will the Government listen to these Governments, if it has not listened to the experts, and commit itself now to increasing the services needed by Canada's children, before the end of June?

• (1430)

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, first, the date we have given in terms of June was agreed to by the federal Government, the provinces and the territorial Governments, and I think the Hon. Member should respect that. Second, the Leader of the New Democratic Party tells us to listen to the Government of Ontario. The Government of Ontario also has approximately 40 per cent of its spaces commercial and it wants to continue the commercial side of child care. But the Hon. Leader's Party objects to that totally. So what part does he want me to take? What part does he want me to leave out? I really think what is needed is a lot less heat and a lot more study on this subject, and that is what we are going to do. In June we will be ready, we have said, with the federal, territorial and provincial Governments.

INQUIRY WHY ELDERLY WORKER WITH COLLECTIVE PENSION PLAN IS PENALIZED

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, this is another subject where the Government has shown a complete lack of understanding with respect to low-income Canadians. My question is directed to the Minister of Finance. There are Coalition representatives who object to the cut in unemployment insurance benefits for the early retirees we met this morning. These people would like to hear from the Minister of Finance what kind of social justice the Government had in mind when it decided to penalize elderly workers who had opted for a group pension plan as opposed to the elderly worker who has to set up his own pension plan. Why the double standard? Why penalize elderly workers for having saved to contribute to a group pension plan?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure I caught the thrust of the Hon. Member's question. I think the translation of the words was not accurate in terms of the thought the Hon. Member is trying to get across. However, if I can assume what I thought he was trying to say, I can tell him with regard to the basis of pension funds there is a clear connection in the contractual arrangement between the employee and the employer. That is the basis on which the decision was made.

[Translation]

INQUIRY WHY THERE ARE TWO CLASSES OF ELDERLY WORKERS IN CANADA

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows perfectly well that in his statement on November 8, he said he would subtract pension income from group plans from the unemployment insurance benefits paid to these people, even to people in the armed forces who have to pay unemployment insurance premiums and whose benefits are now being cut. These people, who are here today, want to know what kind of social justice the Government had in mind when it decided to penalize people who opted for saving part of their wages to contribute to a pension plan and who also paid unemployment insurance benefits. When they took early retirement, the Government cut these people off. A person who has to contribute to a RRSP can draw on his RRSP without having unemployment insurance benefits cut off. Why the double standard for elderly workers in Canada?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the question was very convoluted. I am not sure that I got the sense of the question. Possibly the Hon. Member could put the question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration because I believe the Minister has responded specifically to that question, if I can understand what I think the Hon. Member said.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I think there may be a problem with the translation. Perhaps the Hon. Member would care to put his question again?

INQUIRY WHY CERTAIN CATEGORY OF ELDERLY WORKERS IS PENALIZED

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the Minister of Finance that I put this question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration, who answered at the time that it was the Minister of Finance, in his November 8, 1984 statement, who decided that from then on, payments from a private pension plan would be subtracted from unemployment insurance. Why has the Minister decided to subtract group pension plan payments from unemployment insurance benefits, while people who contribute to a registered retirement savings plan are not penalized? Why the double standard? Is that clear enough?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that is the answer I gave in my response to the Hon. Member's first question. It is very clear and very easy to make the link between savings and the contractual arrangement between an employer and employee. It is not so easy to make that link in relation to RRSPs.

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMUNITY INITIATIVES FUND

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Witnesses told the Special Committee on Child Care that the lack of rural child care is causing accidental deaths. Native children are dying while white people talk. Teenage moms need school-based child care. Poorer communities need special resources. These are urgent needs. They need action now. Will the Government immediately allocate $26 million for a community initiatives fund which will allow parents and communities to develop innovative programs to meet these special child care needs?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member checks the report—she was a member of the committee which tabled the report yesterday—she will know there were recommendations respecting the matter of the federal Government's direct responsibility in respect to native children and to child care based on reserves and specifically directed to native Canadians. I think she should also keep in mind that there have been agreements. I do not think the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development would say it is sufficient, but steps have been taken, for instance, in a number of provinces where agreements have now been signed not only with a number of native organizations in Provinces such as Ontario, Manitoba, Alberta and British Columbia, but also with some tribal councils.

I think that initiative which is being taken by the Minister, along with some of the recommendations made by the parliamentary committee, could at least address in part some of the problems which the Hon. Member has raised and of which I am aware as well.

REQUEST FOR DIRECT FEDERAL FUNDING

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister does not seem to be aware that the committee did not ask for any extra funding for native children. The Special Committee's inadequate recommendations will only cause further delays. Will the Minister establish a community initiatives fund, a direct fund of the federal Government, which does not require cost sharing, so that native communities, rural communities and others can apply directly with innovative projects to meet local needs? The Minister could do this immediately. He does not have to wait for the provinces.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will take that representation from the Hon. Member if she wants to add that to her minority report. As I said, the recommendations the Government is accepting from the Hon. Member, from the parliamentary committee and from others will be put together with a national plan to which the Prime Minister has committed his Government and himself personally well before the Hon. Member had risen in her chair today or some other day.

CARE OF NATIVE CHILDREN

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to go back to the Minister who I know is concerned about native children. We were talking about a $26 million community initiatives fund, which he missed in my first question. Coming back to native children, will he personally take responsibility to see that more substantial money is available, if necessary through DIA if not directly to native bands, so that native children will have some alternatives and their children will not be taken away from them, which is happening over and over now?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, with respect to additional funds and programs for native people, there is no question in my mind, when one takes a look at what is happening, and has happened in native communities and on the reserves, that the points that the Hon. Member makes, and I have made myself, both as Minister of National Health and Welfare and formerly, are a correct reflection of what is taking place.

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and my cabinet colleagues in terms of the agreements which are being signed, as I mentioned to the Hon. Member before, with tribal councils and native leadership and with the provinces, take us some distance along the lines the Hon. Member recommends. If there is additional work which should be considered, that is fair comment, and I said to the Hon. Member that the Government is willing to do that.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

NORTHERN ONTARIO RECOVERY PROGRAM

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. On November 19 of last year in answer to a question which I raised in the House of Commons the Deputy Prime Minister outlined the bare bones of a northern Ontario recovery program. Since then the economy of northern Ontario has continued to decline. In northeastern Ontario the unemployment rate is well above the national average, and more jobs are being lost every month. When, if ever, will the Deputy Prime Minister put some flesh on those bare bones with respect to a northern Ontario recovery package? I especially wish to ask him about item number four, his promise to bring in a stabilization program for forestry and mining.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Soon, Mr. Speaker.

PUBLIC SERVICE JOBS QUERY

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, while the Deputy Prime Minister is getting his act together I also want to ask him to pay attention to promise number three which is: "to transfer some federal agencies and services to northern Ontario". Why, instead of keeping that promise is the Government cutting staff in northern Ontario unemployment insurance offices, shutting down northern Ontario customs offices, and relocating northern Ontario immigration officers to Ottawa?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this Government and this Party are recognizing the unique problems of northern Ontario—

Mr. Penner: What a laugh!

Mr. Mazankowski: —after 25 years of Liberal neglect. The Hon. Member should not get too excited over the delay of a month or so, after he was a member of a Government which ignored the economic problems of northern Ontario for over 20 years.

CHILD CARE

RESPONSIBILITY OF PUBLIC SECTOR—REQUEST FOR NECESSARY FUNDING

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

The spokesman for Canada's Catholic bishops has just said that child care is too important to be left to the private sector.

As requested by Canada's bishops, will the Minister now give the regions and small communities in Canada the necessary funding to create the new day care centres that are needed today across Canada?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member says that child care is too important to be left to the private sector. How does the Hon. Member define the private sector? Does he define the private sector only in the commercial sense when, in the Province of Alberta, over 70 per cent of child care spaces are now located in that sector, or in the Province of Ontario where over 40 per cent of the spaces are located in that sector? Is the private sector the home? Is the private sector the family? Is the private sector relatives? Is the private sector maybe a church day care centre? What does the Hon. Member mean by the private sector?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, the Catholic bishops of Canada said that child care is too important to be left to the private sector.

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILL FOLLOW ADVICE OF CANADIAN CATHOLIC BISHOPS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Is the Minister prepared to take the advice of Canada's bishops and provide the necessary funding to create day care centres across Canada? Is he now prepared to take the advice of Canada's Catholic bishops?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member is asking whether I will endorse a program of child care which is only in the public sector, which is only non-profit and which leaves out the family, then the answer is an unequivocal no.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

IMPORTATION OF JAPANESE MANUFACTURED VEHICLES

Mr. Jim Caldwell (Essex—Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade or the Parliamentary Secretary. As the Parliamentary Secretary is probably aware, the current agreement with Japan under the import restraints program ends today. Can the Parliamentary Secretary indicate what the Government intends to do to replace this agreement? In the meantime, can we expect a flood of Japanese imports into Canada which will hurt our domestic industry?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, as was reported in the press this morning, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion is conducting a complete review of the auto policy of our Government. Of course that includes the regime with respect to imports. I might say that the report is expected within the next couple of months. In the meantime, our Government expects the foreign countries which do ship autos here to respect the system that was in place before. There will not be a surge of imports into the country.

AIRPORTS

PROVISION OF FIRE-FIGHTING SERVICES

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. It is not only the airline pilots but also the people who are disabled and handicapped who are shocked by the fact that the Minister has reduced the required number of fire-fighters at our major airports from seven to five in order to save $1 million. How can a person who is visually impaired, or a paraplegic, slide down an emergency chute or get off that chute without assistance? Even worse, what if the flight crew is overcome by smoke inhalation? If it takes all five fire-fighters just to operate and man the vehicles, I ask the Minister who is left to help the passengers?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I might start in answering this question by saying that the present CFR policy was adopted in 1982. If it was good enough for the Government of the hon. gentleman then, one would think it would be good enough even today.

With respect to this service, the first point that must be realized is that it is the job of the CFR people to provide foam and a passageway out of an aircraft if there is an accident at an airport. They are not targeted, and it is not their duty, to try to get on to aircraft to assist passengers coming off. It is their duty to provide protection so that the crew, the passengers, and others, can assist them in getting off. That is their primary task, not to go on to aircraft and get in the way of passengers who are trying to leave the aircraft. I would ask the hon. gentleman to try to understand that.

There has been no reduction in the number of fire-fighters. I said that a week or 10 days ago. I do not know why the hon. gentleman wants to misinform the House about that. There has not been a reduction of one in the number of airport fire-fighters across Canada—not one. There have been some changes with respect to overtime rules, and that is all.

Mr. Gauthier: Sit down!

Mr. Crosbie: Hon. Members opposite should listen and get the facts. It is they who ask the questions. They do not like the answers.

Mr. Gauthier: It's an abuse of time.

Mr. Crosbie: If Hon. Members want the answers, we have the answers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DEPARTMENT'S REGULATIONS

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at the Minister's response. Obviously he is not even familiar with his own guidelines. The Minister maintains that the job of fire-fighters is limited to putting out fires. His own Transport Canada Fire-fighters and Rescue Standard—and since he has not read them I will give him the number—TP3660—provides—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. All of the matters referred to by the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence are important. However, I think it is appropriate for him to put his question.

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, why does the Minister insist that his own Transport Canada regulations which require that if the flight crew is unable for any reason whatsoever to give assistance the fire and rescue team will force entry to the aircraft and provide assistance in the evacuation and rescue of the occupants, if the job of the fire-fighter is merely to fight a fire, as the Minister claims—

• (1450)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure whether the Hon. Member had completed his question. If not, I would ask him to do so.

Mr. de Corneille: If the job of the fire-fighters is merely to fight a fire, as the Minister claims, why are the trucks equipped with ladders, axes, and jaws of life? Why is that?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, for each airport there is an emergency plan for use in the event that an aircraft is damaged on landing, or there is an impact, or a fire, or whatever. It is the first responsibility of the CFR crew to provide a corridor through the use of foam, so that anyone left alive on the aircraft can be evacuated. The standards for that are set by ICAO.

If there is no fire, or once they have cleared a corridor to the plane, they are then to assist in the evacuation of those on the aircraft. There are other personnel then involved. There is a complete plan of emergency action to be taken in the event of an accident.

I do not think anything can be plainer than that, but if—

An Hon. Member: It is not true.

Mr. Crosbie: —if the Hon. Member wants to spend five or six hours with me in another question and answer session, I would be prepared to join him.

An Hon. Member: Save us!

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—REQUEST THAT HOUSE PASS UNANIMOUS RESOLUTION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister, or the Minister of the Environment, or whoever is answering on acid rain today.

Given the unanimity that exists in this House—

Mr. Crosbie: On what?

Mr. Blaikie: —with respect to the fact that we would like to see acid rain abatement legislation in the United States, I am wondering whether the Government would be prepared, given the remarks yesterday by Democratic House Leader, Robert Byrd of Virginia, to sit down with members on all sides of the House concerned about this issue for the purpose of drafting a resolution, which could be passed unanimously by this House, thus sending a very clear message to the American public and the Congress of the United States of just how seriously Canadians take the issue of acid rain and how desperately we see the need for real acid rain abatement south of the border.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be presumptuous of me to dictate to the House of Commons how it might wish to express its will on a subject such as this, or on any other.

There is some legitimate concern behind the Hon. Member's question. Possibly he could suggest to his House Leader that the matter be referred to the committee of House Leaders to be pursued just as any House-related matter would be.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, this isn't just any other matter. This is a matter—

An Hon. Member: Who is the House Leader of your Party, anyway?

Mr. Blaikie: This is a matter about which there is exceptional unanimity on the part of Canadian political Parties.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): I am asking the Minister of the Environment, as the Minister charged with this particular responsibility, whether or not he would be open to the possibility of sitting down with Members on all sides of the House for the purpose of drafting a resolution which would be passed quickly through this House, thereby sending a strong message to the Congress of the United States and to the American public as to just how urgently Canadians regard the need for real acid rain abatement legislation in the United States.

It seems to me that that is something to which the Government should be open. I am talking about a non-partisan matter. I am talking about something that we can do together, and something that would have an important effect.

What does the Minister have to say?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I have the following to say: I am prepared to sit down with any member at any time about any subject.

LABOUR

CONSTRUCTION WORKERS—DECISION TO STOP ISSUING WAGE SCHEDULES

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour, who recently made a decision which will affect thousands of construction workers on federal construction sites.

As of tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, construction workers will no longer be protected insofar as the issue of fair wages is concerned, the reason being that the Minister has decided to do away with the practice of issuing wage schedules identifying wage rates for construction workers.

What logic prompted you to do this? What is the Government trying to achieve through this decision? Who will benefit from it?

And while the Minister is looking into this, I should like to know who requested this action and what support the Minister has for this decision, a decision which will affect thousands of workers, and particularly those in British Columbia.

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Speaker: Certainly it is an interesting question. The question went well beyond the preamble. Since that is what we are driving for, perhaps the Hon. Member is to be commended.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated on March 18, 1987, all I did was to take the administrative measures required in connection with a situation which had been prevailing since 1982, a situation which started under the then Liberal Government.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that there is widespread opposition to his measure.

Mr. Crosbie: It is your measure.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): My question for the Minister is: why did you choose not to consult the construction industry before reaching such a decision? Why did you do that? And why is it that the players involved in this decision had to learn of it via the media? That is what I should like the Minister to tell us.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as I also indicated on March 18, 1987, all of those interested in the subject had made their views known since 1982, and all of those parties affected learned of my decision through a letter from myself, and not through the media.

FISHERIES

MARINE ECOLOGY LABORATORY AT BEDFORD, N.S.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

The Minister will know that there is a great deal of opposition to his decision to close the marine ecology laboratory at the Bedford Institute.

Can the Minister explain why his departmental Deputy Minister and Assistant Deputy Minister are issuing letters of reprimand and ordering disciplinary hearings for the five oceanographers who disagreed publicly with the Government's plan to close the marine ecology laboratory at the Bedford Institute?

How can we have honest and objective discussion of this important decision when those in opposition to the decision are being told that they will be punished if they make their views known?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that the Hon. Member was not here yesterday when I dealt with this question.

Mr. Orlikow: I was here yesterday.

Mr. Siddon: Obviously, you weren't listening, then.

We are not closing the marine ecology laboratory; we are changing its name and consolidating and strengthening the scientific work that it does, in the context of creating six new centres—

An Hon. Member: Why the gag?

Mr. Siddon: —creating six new centres of expertise in important Fisheries and Oceans related research. Secondly, Mr. Speaker, no gag order has been issued by any of my officials, and no punishment has been threatened. In fact, there are standard Government of Canada guidelines for communications by public officials, and I, in particular, encourage public officials to speak out, as they wish, with the degree of discretion that is appropriate to their duties.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Orlikow: Surely the Minister knows that at least two of these people have had reprimands placed on their records.

ASSISTANT DEPUTY MINISTER'S LETTER TO UNIVERSITY PROFESSORS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Let me ask the Minister a supplementary. Can the Minister explain the actions of Assistant Deputy Minister Scott Parsons, who wrote to Dalhousie University professors who had protested the cut, suggesting that they might consider keeping quiet on this subject since they receive government funds for oceanography research?

Does the Minister approve of that kind of blackmail threat on the part of a senior official of his Department?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, of course I do not, and Canadian Press falsely repeated a story attributed to one Dr. Eric Mills, who presumes from Mr. Parsons' letter that certain things were said which I do not find in the letter which I have in my hand.

An Hon. Member: Table it.

Mr. Crosbie: The usual innuendo.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

Today in Halifax-Dartmouth the scientific community is holding a funeral service for the marine ecology lab, the closure of which has been termed by one American scientist as a victory of bad government over good science.

Mr. Crosbie: She is dead but she won't lie down.

Mr. MacLellan: Why are this Minister and this Government determined to close this facility, with the stated belief that they are going to improve upon the services that this institution can provide, when already this institution is internationally recognized as one of the finest institutions of its kind in the world?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Again, Mr. Speaker, it would be helpful if this Hon. Member would pay attention to the answers given. As well, he could have attended the standing committee this morning, where these questions were addressed in detail.

• (1500)

The marine ecology laboratory is not being abandoned. As I indicated yesterday, of the 60 personnel in that laboratory, some six will be transferred to strengthen our research capabilities in other parts of Atlantic Canada. Most of the remaining personnel, but for one or two, will continue to sit virtually in their same offices. In fact we are creating three new areas of competence in the Bedford Institute which encompass the work of the marine ecology laboratory.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, the facility is being done away with, and I wish the Minister would have the courage to answer the question.

GOVERNMENT RESEARCH FUNDING QUERY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for Captain Tuna, the Chicken of the Sea. Why is the Government cutting back so drastically on funding for Atlantic fisheries? In addition to the reduced funding, why is there also a reduced percentage of funding for research and development? Why, in the reduced percentage to research and development, is so little being done for basic long-term research? Why is all of it going to short-term projects?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member had been taking note he would have realized that over a year ago we decided to bring oceanographers together with fisheries biologists so that we might do a better scientific job. This current matter was announced last September 28 in Atlantic Canada. Where has the Hon. Member been for the past six months? We are creating a new centre for marine plankton ecology and a new centre for toxicology at the Bedford Institute—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

NORTHERN ONTARIO—ALLEGED TRANSFER OF PUBLIC SERVICE JOBS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Far from being one month, as he suggested, it has been six months since the political announcement of an economic recovery program for northern Ontario. It has been four and a half months since he announced the 7-point program in the House. Since northern Ontarians have had their expectations raised and are now obviously looking for a far-reaching strategy on the part of the Government, will the Minister at least advise his colleagues, while he is waiting to make the announcement, not to transfer jobs out of northern Ontario as they have been doing?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's interest. I am not sure of any deliberate policy of the federal Government to transfer jobs out of northern Ontario. The objective of the Government is to strengthen the economic base of northern Ontario to provide many long lasting and durable jobs.

Mr. Parry: If not deliberate, it must have been by accident because it has been happening.

REQUEST FOR FREEZE ON JOB TRANSFERS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, instead of simply blaming the former Liberal Government, will the Minister freeze those transfers, pending an announcement?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will answer the question again by simply saying that the policy is in the final stages. It will be announced very soon. The Hon. Member can respond then, and I am sure he will find something negative to comment about at that time.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

INQUIRY WHEN GOVERNMENT WILL INTRODUCE PROMISED AMENDMENTS TO ACT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, this morning, the Commissioner of Official Languages summarized the Government's performance in the following terms:

[English]

After another year marking time, 1987 will be the year of the test.

[Translation]

He also said: "The machine has run out of steam. There are no directives from higher up."

The President of the Treasury Board admitted to me in the House that enforcement of the legislation would not be relaxed and that the Government was truly committed to amending it. We have been promised this for two and a half years, in two Throne Speeches. When will this Government introduce the promised amendments to the Official Languages Act?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, to answer the Hon. Member's question, first of all, I would like to say that the Government welcomes both the criticism and the suggestions and recommendations submitted in the Commissioner's latest report. As I have said before here in the House, we are conducting a thorough review of the Official Languages Act which is now several years old and is in need of significant renewal. This will come in the form of a new Bill that will be tabled in the House as soon as possible.

SOCIAL SECURITY

PAYMENTS TO DISABLED—ACTIONS OF GEORGE WESTON LIMITED

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Minister has correspondence from London Life, from George Weston Limited, and from myself in respect of their attitude concerning what they should do with money received by people on disability insurance, and how they propose to handle disability insurance policies by reducing the payment to the insured by the amount of the increase the Minister gave to disabled people. The Minister will know that the attitude of George Weston Limited is that it thinks that its seizure of this money is fair. What action does the Minister intend to take in respect of the benefit to ensure that the disabled receive what they were entitled to receive?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member's question, I have been very concerned about the fact that, when Parliament passes legislation which gives an increased benefit to the disabled of Canada, the money is not passed through to the disabled. I wrote to Canadian Health and Life Insurance Underwriters. I want to make quite clear that they are the ones who are co-operating fully. George Weston in this case has not. I must make the point that these plans are operated by the company. They are insured by the company rather than by a life insurance company.

It is not only George Weston. It includes some universities, some Public Service unions, and some other unions. I have a list. I do not intend to go public with others yet because they have not responded. However, I do intend to do so if Canadians decide, regardless of what happens when Parliament passes a law or legislation giving benefits to the disabled, to withhold the benefits.

NATIONAL PARKS

PACIFIC RIM NATIONAL PARK—MORATORIUM ON INTRODUCTION OF ENTRANCE FEES

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. The Minister is aware of plans by his Department to install a toll-gate at Pacific Rim National Park on Vancouver Island. He is also aware of concerns that the proposed gate is uneconomical and extremely difficult to police. The region's geography makes it a hindrance to tourism promotion as well. When will the Minister respond to these concerns? In other words, for whom does the gate toll? Hopefully it is not for Pacific Rim National Park.

Patent Act

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, it is true that my Department and the Government of Canada had intended in June of this year to introduce national park fees at Pacific Rim. The Hon. Member and other B.C. colleagues on the government side have argued very strongly that it would be inappropriate for us to do so, on the grounds that Pacific Rim is not yet a full-fledged national park, that we have yet to receive all the relevant lands from the Province of B.C., and that we have not paid for those we have received. Because of his very strong representations and those from the B.C. Government too, I have decided to put a moratorium on all relevant national park entrance fees at Pacific Rim. I think this would be particularly welcomed by the residents of Tofino and Ucluelet, and I congratulate the Hon. Member for his most successful lobbying in this connection.

PATENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to consideration of Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: There are 47 report stage motions on today's Notice Paper in amendment to Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto.

[Translation]

Motion No. 1 was moved and negatived in committee and therefore will not be selected for debate and will not be put to the House.

Motion No. 2 will be debated and voted on by itself.

[English]

Motions Nos. 3, 4, 5, 11, 13, and 15 seek to amend that part of Clause 15 which deals with restrictions on the importation by the licensee of processes or products related to a medicine for which they have been granted a manufacturing licence, the duration of such restrictions, and their coming into force. Therefore, these motions will be combined for debate but voted on as follows.

• (1510)

(a) vote on Motion No. 3 will be applied to Motions Nos. 13 and 15.

(b) Motions Nos. 4, 5 and 11 will be voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 6 and 7, in the name of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) seek to amend the same subclause of the Bill as his Motion No. 4 and, therefore, they will not be selected for debate and will not be put to the House.

[Translation]

Motions Nos. 8, 9 and 10, in the name of the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall), seek to amend the same subclause of the Bill as his Motion No. 5 and therefore they will not be selected for debate.

Motion No. 12 will be debated and voted on separately.

[English]

Motions Nos. 13 and 15 were dealt with earlier and are grouped with Motion No. 3.

Motions Nos. 14 and 16 will be debated and voted separately.

Motions Nos. 17, 18, 30, 39 and 40 deal with information to be submitted by patentees to the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board and the time frame for submission of such reports. Therefore, these motions will be grouped for debate but they will all be voted on separately.

[Translation]

Motions Nos. 19 and 20 seek to amend the same clause of the Bill and are virtually identical. Since Motion No. 19, in the name of the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond was placed on the Notice Paper first, it will be put to the House and voted on separately. Therefore, Motion No. 20 will not be selected.

[English]

Motions Nos. 21, 22, 23, 24, 25 and 31 seek to limit the powers or the options of the board to exercise its mandate in controlling the market price of a medicine of a patentee in favour of the patentee. Therefore, these motions will be combined for debate but voted on as follows:

(a) Motions Nos. 21, 22 and 31 will be voted on separately, and

(b) an affirmative vote on Motion No. 23 will obviate the question being put on Motions Nos. 24 and 25. A negative vote on Motion No. 23 would require the question to be put on Motion No. 24 and on Motion No. 25.

Motions Nos. 26, 27, 28, 33, 34, 41 and 42 seek to make the work of the Board more accessible to the public and, therefore, will be grouped for debate. Voting on these motions will take place in the following manner:

(a) a vote on Motion No. 26 will apply to Motion No. 27; and

(b) Motions Nos. 28, 33, 34, 41 and 42 will be voted on separately.

Motion No. 29 was moved and negatived in committee. Therefore, it will not be selected to be put to the House.

[Translation]

Motion No. 30 was dealt with earlier and was grouped with Motion No. 17.

Motion No. 32 will be debated and voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 35, 36 and 37 will be debated and voted on separately.

[English]

Motion No. 38 in the name of the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond, seeks to levy a charge on patentees of medicines which is then to be distributed to the patentees in a part of the Bill dealing more specifically with information to be provided to the board on sales and expense analysis. Thus the amendment is irrelevant to this part of the Bill. Further, such a charge, an annual royalty of 14 per cent on the sales of patented medicines in Canada, would extend the objects and purposes as expressed in the Royal Recommendation and would require the passage of a Ways and Means motion. Therefore, I must rule the motion out of order. In doing so, I refer the Hon. Member to Citations 516, 517, 773(1) and 773(7) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition.

I have dealt already with Motions Nos. 39 and 40, grouped with Motion No. 17, and with Motions Nos. 41 and 42, grouped with Motion No. 26.

Motions Nos. 43, 44, 45, 46 and 47 will be debated and voted on separately.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond) moved:

Motion No. 2

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by adding immediately after line 34 at page 10 the following:

""research" is exploratory and innovative work undertaken on a systematic basis towards the acquisition of new knowledge in new ways. New knowledge involves the integration of newly acquired information into existing hypothesis, the formulation and testing of new hypothesis or the re-evaluation of existing observations;".

He said: I thank you for your ruling, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the grouping of various amendments that I have submitted on behalf of my Party, as well as those amendments submitted by the New Democratic Party. Before I debate the substance of the particular amendment, I must say that I may be calling upon the Chair from time to time to enlighten us as to the exact motion with which we are dealing. Some of them, as I am sure the Chair and the Table will recognize, are grouped together for the purposes of debate but, as you know, they are voted in different ways. Just so we have clarity throughout our debate, we would want to have some indication as to where we are. I make that point at the outset just so that members opposite as well as members in the respective opposition Parties will know that we are not attempting to unduly delay the passage or the time of debate on this piece of legislation.

This amendment, known as Motion No. 2, which includes definition of research really stems from our deliberations at committee stage. It should be noted that we are dealing with a piece of legislation which fundamentally alters the way that Canadians and industry will have to respond, if you will, to the whim of the Government in the United States. Bill C-22 is not a product of any Canadian Government, it is a product of the American Government and American multinationals which have told their branch plant economies here in Canada that they have to adhere to policy which has been developed in Washington, New York, Philadelphia and other places.

One major, and I want to underline "one", and I want to underline "major", omission from Bill C-22 is that there is no definition whatever of the word "research". We have heard time and time again the Minister extol the virtues of Bill C-22, particularly with regard to research and development, but he fails miserably to include a direct reference to the concept in the definition in the parameters of the word "research".

In making these amendments to Bill C-22, it should not be interpreted by Members opposite, no matter how perverted their thinking may become, that we agree with the thrust and substance of the Bill. We do not agree with the Bill, and I want to make that perfectly clear.

There are ways to improve upon the Bill, as Hon. Members would know if they were to keep their minds open and accept the arguments, not only of opposition Members but indeed of some very distinguished representatives who have made representations to the committee and to individual Members. I am certain that we could arrive at a definition of research like the one I am advocating today which would be suitable to all sides.

It should be noted that there are a number of questions about the omission of the word "research" from Bill C-22 that ought to be put on record. Why has the Government refused to table the $1.4 billion commitment allegedly made by the multinationals to the Government in exchange for greater patent protection? Why is there no provision in the legislation referring to the commitments made by the multinationals and no enforcement by the board if the multinationals refuse to live up to their commitments? The only sanction in the Act is a review by Cabinet in four years' time.

We need a definition of research in the Act. No one will know what commitments were made by the multinationals if there is nothing to be a judge or a guide. Of course, with great fanfare, the Minister rebutted the suggestion by saying that this will be done by regulation. I thought that Tory Members were concerned, as they said during the election campaign in repeated pronouncements across Canada, about getting away from regulation. That is why they talked about regulatory reform. Now, when we want to include within the pith and substance of the Act a definition of research, the Government opposite is refusing to accept our amendment.

Can the Government explain why the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada was instrumental in drafting the research and development guidelines, better known as Regulation 2900, for the purposes of the Income Tax Act? How will Canadians be assured that more jobs, growth, et cetera, will be created by this legislation when Canada has the most favourable research development tax incentives of any country in the world but Singapore? How will Canadians know if the Government is spending more by virtue of these tax write-offs than what it alleges will be gained through increased commitments by the industry? It would seem that the two will neutralize any positive growth effects. That is another reason for including in Bill C-22 a definition of research, taking it out of the politically-motivated hands of the Governor in Council.

As has been shown to us by Gallup poll after Gallup poll, Canadians do not trust this group of bandits across the way to somehow represent their interests. Therefore, Canadians need a definition of research in the legislation which is clear and unequivocal as advocated by my amendment.

Members opposite might say that they need more time. They may argue with my definition of research, but the Government has had many months to come up with a suitable definition to be placed in the Act. I am suggesting that the Government does not want to include a definition of research in this piece of legislation because the group which is controlling the Government's agenda on Bill C-22 is composed of multinational corporations. The multinational corporations do not want a definition of research in the Bill.

I know that there are members of the Tory caucus who believe very strongly as do I that this piece of legislation is regressive and does not represent the interests of ordinary Canadians. There are many members of the Tory caucus who believe that without a clear definition of research spelled out in the Bill itself, this legislation will not be effective. The Minister can shake his head all he wants, for many days, nights, weeks and months, but if he is trying to use the back-door argument that this will be put into regulation, it seems to me that he is talking out of both sides of his mouth. Government Members were on the one hand the ones who advocated regulatory reform and less regulation, but now on the other hand we are seeing the exact opposite taking place in the legislation.

It was my hope that government Members would see the value of this amendment, not only in terms of how ordinary Canadians view this particular legislation but also in terms of how the pharmaceutical industry views it. By providing a clear definition of research, I would think that government Members would be able to send a clear signal to the pharmaceutical industry in Canada and, indeed, the multinational pharmaceutical corporations that there will be guidelines and parameters attached to the word "research".

The Government has done nothing. It has listened time and again to the multinational corporations, to corporate interests from the United States, as opposed to the Canadian industry and the sick, the elderly, the disabled and the four million Canadians who would prefer to have a definition of research in this particular Bill.

The Canadian Federation of Biologists appeared before the committee and was supportive of the Bill. However, when its members found out that there was no definition of research in the Bill, they withdrew their support. These were very distinguished and reputable individuals who came before the committee to make that presentation. I had hoped that through their verbal communications to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) and others, the Government would have seen fit to include that definition in the legislation.

The Government had already received representations from members of the New Democratic Party, the Liberal Party and the Canadian Labour Congress. After hearing from those individuals who are directly involved, the Government should have reasoned that it was time to include this particular amendment in Bill C-22.

I suppose I have several minutes left, Mr. Speaker. How much time do I have? I do not want to overdo it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is one minute over the time he was allotted. However, I think I will give the Hon. Member the courtesy of 30 seconds so that he may conclude. Hon. Members may speak for only 10 minutes at this stage.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief because I certainly would not want to extend my time, although I know Hon. Members opposite would like to hear what I have to say.

Let me conclude by saying that there is a great deal of support in Canada for research and development. I think it is important that government Members recognize that, notwithstanding the fact that multinational corporations seem to be pulling the strings, Canadians want to see more research and development taking place in Canada. By omitting the word "research" from this legislation, government Members have made the Bill fall far short of the expectations of Canadians and Members of Parliament regarding research.

• (1530)

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, we must face the fact that when this Bill is passed it will substantially increase what Canadians pay for the prescription drugs they need. Before 1969 we paid the second highest prices for prescription drugs in the world. Since 1969 we have had among the lowest costs for prescription drugs in the industrialized world. That was brought about by amending the Patent Act in 1969 with regard to prescription drugs. That amendment allowed the company which researched and developed a drug to recoup its costs after which generic drug companies could get a licence, pay a royalty, and duplicate the drug. When prescriptions are filled with generic drugs there is a 50 per cent or greater saving than when they are filled by brand name drugs.

We are talking about a lot of money. Professor Eastman of the University of Toronto, who did a major study on this issue in the last couple of years, pointed out that in 1983 Canadians saved $211 million by having prescriptions filled with generic products. This Bill will give the company which develops a drug an extra six years of exclusivity during which time no other company will be able to duplicate the drug or compete pricewise. Dr. Eastman points out that as a result of this the multinational companies which develop the drugs will be able to charge as much as they want and that Canadians will pay a great deal more.

We must keep in mind that because of the revolution which has been going on in the fields of biotechnology and medical research prices for the drugs which have been coming on the market in the last year or so are substantially higher than they had been before. As I said, we are talking about a great deal of money.

Nothing is more important with regard to this Bill than the definition of "research" and what can be done under its terms in this country. Surprisingly, for all its claims about what Bill C-22 will do to advance research in Canada, the Government has chosen not to define "research" for the purposes of this Bill. A number of witnesses who appeared before the parliamentary committee in support of this Bill expressed their belief that the Bill was deficient in that the term "research" was not more clearly defined. I will mention a few witnesses who made that point. They include the representatives of Cangene, a company which is highly involved in the most modern techniques in biotechnology. The Canadian Medical Association, which has supported the principles of this Bill, made it clear that the term "research" had to be defined. Dr. Gerry Karr, a member of the board of directors of the Canadian Medical Association, made it clear in answer to questions that he believed that the term "research" had to be much more clearly and precisely detailed in this Bill.

Clause 41.25(7) of Bill C-22 reads:

> The Governor in Council may make regulations defining, for the purposes of this section, the expression "research and development".

That leaves the matter up to the Cabinet. This is not a point which the House should leave to regulation. The disadvantages are only too well known on such an important principle of this legislation. Many delegations appeared before the committee, and had the Conservative majority on the committee not imposed a time limit for reporting to the House there would have been many more individuals and groups appearing before it. Almost all of the delegations which appeared before the committee to express their views opposed this Bill.

The only support for this Bill was from representatives of the industry and some of the medical researchers who, looking at the cut-backs in funding which the Government has imposed on the Medical Research Council, on the universities through cuts in Established Programs Financing, and on the have-not provinces through cut-backs in transfer payments, and desperate in their desire to do more research, supported this Bill because of the increased funding they expect will come from the multinational drug companies. However, even they believed it was necessary to define much more precisely what research and development meant.

The Cabinet caved in to the representations of the multinational pharmaceutical companies. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) caved in to the request of President Reagan that we change our legislation in respect of prescription drugs because—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That is false.

Mr. Orlikow: The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) says that is false. I cannot think of another reason why the Government would be so determined to proceed with this Bill in the face of the tremendous opposition which has come from nearly all sources. Organizations of seniors, labour, and consumers as well as Keystone Agriculture, a very important farm group in Manitoba, have opposed this Bill. I could continue all day to list organizations which have opposed this Bill.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Your assertion is false. You're uttering falsehoods in the House.

Mr. Orlikow: I cannot believe that there is any other reason for the Government to proceed with this Bill except as a result of the pressure which has been exerted by the pharmaceutical manufacturers in Canada and the United States. We are not satisfied to leave the definition of "research" to the Cabinet because we believe that the Cabinet has already caved in to the multinational companies and will continue to cave in. This is not a point which the House should leave to regulation because the disadvantages of not defining clearly what the term "research" means in this Bill are only too well known. Regulation is a hidden process. The legislative statute provision which this Bill provides is an open one. Regulation can be changed by another regulation, often unnoticed but with enormous implications in this case. Regulations allow those with vested interests in regulation to make their case to the exclusion of any broader public interest in Parliament.

• (1540)

We have seen the history of regulatory agencies established to protect the interests of ordinary citizens. Consumers and passengers in the transportation sector, not only in this country, have watched in horror as the regulatory agencies frequently become the defender of the special interests rather than the defender of the people. One need only look at the Canadian Transport Commission.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I want to remind the Hon. Member that his time has expired. I am sure the House will give him a couple of seconds more in which to conclude his remarks.

Mr. Orlikow: Let me just say in conclusion that the motion moved by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) is commendable in its attempt to make a statutory definition of research. It calls on the Government to account for promising such things as 3,000 high-tech research jobs for graduates, then failing to define just what the research will be for the purpose of Bill C-22. We believe that this makes a mockery of what Bill C-22 is supposed to achieve.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few very short comments on Motion No. 2 which is now under consideration and which would add to Bill C-22 a provision containing a clear and specific definition of the word "research". The motion moved by my colleague the hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) reads as follows:

> ""research" is exploratory and innovative work undertaken on a systematic basis towards the acquisition of new knowledge in new ways. New knowledge involves the integration of newly acquired information into existing hypothesis, the formulation and testing of new hypothesis or the re-evaluation of existing observations;"

To me, Mr. Speaker, this appears to be a clear, specific and adequate definition which for many Canadians may indeed be one of the reasons why Bill C-22 must be amended.

Mr. Speaker, this Bill contains definitions and measures which the Canadian public must be able to understand. It is important that Canadians know that this Bill may have a hard and very direct impact on the price of drugs.

One of the reasons given by Government Members to take action and try to amend the Patent Act is that they want to promote research in Canada, or so they say. According to their statements and their definition, the multinationals would spend close to $1.4 billion—that is 1,400 million dollars—on research in Canada.

As you may recall, Mr. Speaker, the former Liberal Government commissioned the Eastman report. It was tabled and led to amendments to the Patent Act. In his report Mr. Eastman pointed out that the multinationals had not invested any more than they had to in Canada, that as a rule many of those companies treated our country as a branch plant, if you will, and that very little money was invested in pure and applied research in Canada.

As a result the money of Canadians, the admittedly huge profits of these multinationals end up in foreign countries, mostly in the United States. They are spent on research and development in the United States, so the new jobs are created in the localities where the companies have their head offices. To a certain extent we too benefit from this research, but not from the economic fallout of research work done here in Canada. Now the Government is telling us: Well, you can expect $1.4 billion worth of commitments if we pass Bill C-22. This Government has been making strong statements, Mr. Speaker, but never did the companies make any kind of firm commitment with respect to research. This is why we want to define the word "research" just so people will begin to understand that we aim to ask the companies to carry out research and development projects here in Canada so as to create jobs in this country and boost our economy.

Mr. Speaker, this is all I wanted to say. I suggest it is altogether appropriate and normal that the Government accept to amend Bill C-22 and include a clear and specific definition of the meaning of the word "research", and I commend the Hon. Member for moving this amendment.

[English]

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I too wish to speak to this amendment. We oppose Bill C-22 because it is negative legislation that is damaging for Canadian people and will result in higher drug prices. This Bill is a result of the cave in of the Government to the demands of the U.S. pharmaceutical industry and to the American Government which is largely under the influence of that industry.

We know that we cannot make a bad Bill good by amending it, but we hope that perhaps some amendments can build fences to remove some of the more damaging aspects of the Bill.

That is why we are very anxious to see some definition of research. We do not believe that the amendment moved by the Hon. Member from the Liberal Party goes far enough, but it is still a beginning. We do not want to leave the definition of research to the regulatory process which is hidden away and has no accountability to the House.

Therefore, given the need for a definition of research and that even the Canadian Medical Association in its appearance before the committee stressed the need for a stricter definition, why did the Government not introduce such a definition of research? Why does the Government leave it up to the Opposition to define something as basic to this Bill as that? In fact, in other legislation the Government provides a definition.

For example, Section 2900 of the Income Tax Act defines scientific research for the purposes of the Income Tax Act. Not only does it have a positive definition, it also has a negative definition, part of which I would like to read into the record. It says that scientific research:

> —does not include activities with respect to
> (d) market research or sales promotion;
> (e) quality control or routine testing of materials, devices or products;
> (f) research in the social sciences or the humanities;
> (g) prospecting, exploring or drilling for or producing minerals, petroleum or natural gas;
> (h) the commercial production of a new or improved material, device or product or the commercial use of a new or improved process;
> (i) style changes; or
> (j) routine data collection.

Such things as market research or sales promotion, or style changes, or routine data collection are not allowed in the definition of research according to the Income Tax Act. I suggest that they should not be allowed in this Bill. But we do not know what is going to be allowed. Why does the Government not come out and say what its definition of research is? I suggest it is clear that the reason the Government rejected the Income Tax Act definition is that the pharmaceutical manufacturers want to include expenditures of this kind in areas such as applied research, market research and style changes. That is simply not good enough.

• (1550)

The Government has promised that there is going to be basic research. We have a great many concerns as to whether or not that is really going to happen. Dr. Lexchin has characterized the way in which applied research takes place in the drug industry, and I would like to quote from his comments. He said:

> Much of the applied research and development that is carried out by Canadian companies is done for one of two reasons: either to take advantage of tax concessions, or to satisfy the Health Protection Branch's regulations about clinical testing of new drugs. Applied research and development also assumes a highly routine character, which tends to make these tasks unappealing to university scientists. Furthermore, in a profit motivated firm there is always a latent conflict between an atmosphere of freedom, which is necessary for good scientific endeavour, and the necessity of direction from those who are responsible for the conduct of the firm.
> When applied research and product development are the predominant research activities, both the goals and procedures become relatively well defined, and an atmosphere of completely free inquiry is not crucial. These considerations may explain the fact that although the pharmaceutical industry provided approximately 21 percent of the total funds for health care research in 1977, it utilized only 11 percent of the total number of medical researchers in this country in that year.

In other words, the pharmaceutical industry is not oriented toward the kind of basic research the Government would have us believe from some of the comments made by government Members in the debate so far. It is interesting that even the Canadian Medical Association, which has supported the PMAC in its desire to have changes, has said in its brief, and I quote:

> It is our opinion that additional measures are required to encourage investment and high quality research . . . In order to achieve this goal it will be necessary to define more precisely the term Research and Development as it applies to C-22.

On page 8, the CMA, as one of its three recommendations, adds:

> That a precise definition of research and development be established for the purposes of interpreting and administering Bill C-22.

This is from a supporter of the Bill. When the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) asked:

> Do you believe that the section in the present draft legislation is deficient, in that it should be much more specific as to what kind of research should be considered as part of the package that the companies have promised, in terms of going to $1.5 billion rather than just leaving it to the companies' whim?

Dr. Gerry Karr of the Board of Directors of CME said: "Emphatically yes". For these reasons I would very much want to say that either the definition proposed by my Liberal colleague should be accepted or the definition which is proposed in the later amendment of my colleague, the Hon. Member from Winnipeg North, should be adopted. I think it is absolutely essential that we not leave this Bill completely defenceless and open with respect to the question of what "research" involves. We should not leave that entirely to the regulatory process. We as Members of Parliament, representing the people of Canada, should have a say in it.

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I want to take time to speak to this motion, which was introduced by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall), defining the word "research". I think I should read that motion one more time. The Hon. Member, I might add, has done a tremendous amount of work trying to get legislation through this House that will not destroy our drug industry in Canada, certainly on the generic side, so that we can show some compassion and feeling for our poorer citizens and, indeed, for all Canadian citizens by being able to give them drugs at a cheap and affordable price. The motion states:

> " "research" is exploratory and innovative work undertaken on a systematic basis towards the acquisition of new knowledge in new ways. New knowledge involves the integration of newly acquired information into existing hypothesis, the formulation and testing of new hypothesis or the re-evaluation of existing observations;".

For the life of me, Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand why the Government would try to get a Bill through this House without clearly defining the word "research". I can only think it must be trying to hide something. I have received letters and I am sure every Member of Parliament has also received a number of letters from interested individuals and groups such as senior citizen groups and groups representing the Royal Canadian Legion and all those who would be affected by paying a higher price for drugs if this legislation is passed. I have a copy of a letter written to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) dated November 24, 1986. A copy of the letter was sent to me as well as to other Members of Parliament from Prince Edward Island, to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and to the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney).

We are dealing with the importance of the word "research" being defined in the legislation and not by regulation. I believe this letter is very appropriate to the motion before us today and I would like to read it into the record. It reads:

> Dear Minister:
> As a long-time member of the pharmaceutical industry in Canada, a former company director and member of the PMAC I can no longer remain silent regarding the issue of drug patent legislation.
> Based on nearly 25 years experience in the industry and participation on numerous PMAC committees I can say without hesitation that you and your government associates are being bamboozled and indeed railroaded into a quick decision in the sole interest of U.S. protectionism.
> If the legislation you are now proposing is enacted into law this country will be faced with a monstrous increase in drug costs.

This is what a man who has been working for 25 years in the industry and who understands it is saying versus the Minister who tells us there will be no extra costs for drugs. The letter continues:

> With rising hospital costs and insurance premiums individual Canadians will have to dig deeper into their pockets in order to provide additional profits for the majority of PMAC members whose head offices are located in the United States. Canadians will gain nothing!
> The suggestion that this country will profit from multi-millions of dollars of investment in drug research is ludicrous in the extreme. Less than 5 per cent of new drug introductions over the past several decades have been the direct result of research in the United States or Canada. The great bulk of new drugs introduced on the North American continent had their origins in Switzerland, Germany, Great Britain, Sweden, Norway, Italy and Japan.

Working through appointed resident research groups every major U.S. company seeks to obtain a license for new drugs as they are discovered in the countries mentioned. These, in turn, are then put into a screening and clinical research process before they ultimately appear on the North American market.

This procedure of screening and testing is indeed subject to high costs and a protracted time schedule due to U.S. and Canadian government regulations but is a far cry from the costs involved in basic research to isolate new drugs. The high costs claimed by PMAC members for "so-called" research—

• (1600)

This is the point at which he brings in the so-called research.

—involves a higher percentage for "clinical research" that should more appropriately be debited to merchandising. This results in highly exaggerated claims that have no relevance whatever to actual research expenditures.

That is why the word "research" should be clearly defined in the Bill.

Three companies alone in Switzerland—Ciba-Geigy, Hoffman-La Roche and Sandoz control a remarkable number of widely used prescription specialties. It is well known that Hoffman-La Roche alone earned well in excess of one billion dollars on the drug Valium which only now has come off the protected patent list. What is more important is that close to 100 per cent of the research and development facilities of these companies is located right in Switzerland. Do you seriously think that these and other PMAC member companies are going to duplicate costly research facilities just to satisfy the Canadian Government and then not raise prices on all drugs? To suggest that Canada's minuscule contribution to Valium profit will encourage greater investment in Canadian research facilities is naive indeed.

The PMAC is interested in the protection of its members. This is first and foremost. It has no interest whatever in seeing Canadians get the best of available drugs at competitive prices. Drugs, like cars, textiles, electronics or food are marketed to make money. The fact that they happen to cure some diseases or relieve pain is incidental. This is the nature of the business and if you and your government can be hoodwinked into believing otherwise then all Canadians must pay the consequences.

As one Canadian who just happens to have been close to the drug scene for many years this is how I see it. I trust and indeed hope that the legislation now in the discussion stage will be abandoned completely before it is too late.

The letter is signed by R. H. Wygant, President of Seawood Estates Inc., Prince Edward Island.

Not I, nor any Member of Parliament, could have outlined the situation any clearer than is outlined in this letter. That is why I thought it important to read it into the record. This letter was written by a man who spent 25 years as a member of the pharmaceutical industry in this country. This is a man who took the time to write the Minister and advise with respect to this legislation. This is a man who understands the industry. He is a man who happens to reside in my province right now, the Province of Prince Edward Island, who understands that it is the province in which the highest number of senior citizens in the country live. This man should be listened to. He is the man who also makes it quite clear that more than 5 per cent of the research that is done on drugs, and prescription drugs of any kind, is done either in Canada or in the United States on what he calls "basic research".

Mr. Wygant is trying to tell us that the American drug laws and the American multinational companies are trying to force this issue, and very successfully I might add, on the Government at this time. This is a man who is trying to tell us that the only research that will be done will be done in marketing. That is what I suspected when this legislation was first talked about. I suspected that here was a way that the United States, and the large American corporations, could see a weak and vacillating Government in Canada of which they could take advantage. In this way they can move in here and exploit the poor people of this country, the aged, the sick and those on this continent who are less fortunate than probably some of the multinational corporations who are paying their presidents as much as $1 million a year.

PATENT ACT

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee; and on Motion No. 2 (Mr. Dingwall) (p. 4745).

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, at long last Bill C-22 is back before the House for consideration at report stage. This Bill, which would change the conditions by which Canada would permit the production of generic drugs, is bad medicine for Canadians. It is bad medicine for our national health program. I note the arrival in the House of the Minister in charge of this legislative catastrophe. I note also that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) has been here in the House throughout the initial stages of the debate on report stage of Bill C-22. That is appropriate since this Bill has a lot more to do with the interests of a foreign power than it has to do with the Canadian people.

Earlier, I heard the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) taking wing in a flight of fancy, lofted by the vents of the PMAC poll. She was ecstatic, I suppose because she was surprised that the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association conducted a poll and found out that massive numbers of Canadians are in favour of legislation that will hurt them. She somehow found it within her naive consideration of reality that all of the previous polls, and all of the thousands of names submitted in this Chamber in protest against this legislation, were somehow misled or perhaps a sheer invention.

One searches and has searched repeatedly for reasons for bringing this legislation to Parliament. One of the reasons about which we are certain is of appropriate interest to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. We know the history. Ronnie and Brian got together. Ronnie said: "Brian, come on, man, we have to change this ridiculous arrangement up here in Canada which provides drugs cheap to sick people. That has to change". There are reasons for this, of course. The Government craftily negotiated a trade arrangement with the United States. It had a list of the things it wanted to give up to show its sincerity. We know the history of what has been given up in order to have nice, comfortable, friendly negotiations with the United States. Never has a Government offered so much in order to have another country buy this country cheap.

We could look beyond that for reasons which have been articulated by the Minister for wanting to pass this legislation. He tells us that he has a promise from the multinationals that they will do "oh so much research in Canada", that they will create 3,000 jobs and spend $1.5 billion by 1990-91. There are two notable aspects with respect to this matter. There was the contesting proposal from Eastman that there be legislated in a new Patent Act a mechanism involving increased royalty payments which would provide a stimulus, an inducement, an incentive, for more research by those companies, which have had up until now, it is true, a ridiculously bad record of research expenditures in Canada. That record is even worse than the average among multinational companies in other areas of manufacturing.

Having set aside a reasonable proposal, he has a promise that is not on paper. But the most absurd thing in all of this, Mr. Speaker, is that he has a promise for research and he does not even know what it is, or at least there is nothing in this legislation that tells us what it is.

To the multinationals, "research" could mean everything from basic research to studies on whether the pills should be square, round, longitudinal, or hollow.

The amendment before us is intended to help the Minister out. It at least provides a definition which will fit into the provisions for the evaluation of costs, provisions which are supposed to serve the Drug Prices Review Board. As you may recall, Mr. Speaker, the Drug Prices Review Board is going to look at what the companies are charging and somehow make them adhere to some notion of "appropriate pricing".

We will not talk about how ridiculous that notion is in its fundamentals, but among the costs that are supposed to be included are the costs for research.

One would think that any normal human being, much less a Minister, would have the good sense—and even the Secretary of State for External Affairs across the way is smiling because he knows how ridiculous it is—would expect that this legislation would at least include a definition of research.

And so, Mr. Speaker, I think the amendment suggested by the Official Opposition that an attempt be made to define research is a good one, and they have taken their shot at it. I want to congratulate them for that. They at least show a little more sophistication than the Minister and the Government whose legislation this is. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the definition is somewhat flawed. Let us examine what it states. It is as follows:

> "research" is exploratory and innovative work undertaken on a systematic basis towards the acquisition of new knowledge in new ways. New knowledge involves the integration of newly acquired information into existing hypothesis, the formulation and testing of new hypothesis or the re-evaluation of existing observations;—

I have been a scientist for a long time, and I can tell you that this is the kind of definition that philosophers attribute to science. There is one notable omission from this definition, and it is that it makes no reference to the fact that science is empirical, that it involves the laboratory. Unfortunately, this definition would involve as "research" history as well.

With deference to my historian colleague to my right, it may very well be that it would be useful to fund research in the pharmaceutical industry so that the Government will remember the situation that existed pre-1969, a situation which would be repeated by this Bill, and it is that the multinationals raped this country in their pursuit of profits, and all at the expense of the ill. The arrangements which were then enacted became a part of a coherent program, providing health services to all at prices they could afford.

But, Mr. Speaker, I know that you are liable to allege that I am not being serious when I suggest that there be the inclusion of history as appropriate research for the pharmaceutical industry, and so, whatever happens to this amendment, I will in fact recommend to you the proposal of the New Democratic Party in Motion No. 43, an amendment which, while it does not define research, certainly prescribes the limits that make it possible to evaluate what the multinational drug companies will be doing in terms of research.

I think that the conclusion, Mr. Speaker, will be that the Minister knows no more about research than he does about the nature of this country, when it comes to the basis of a national health program which provides service to all at an economical cost.

Patent Act

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I, too, am very pleased to rise on the motion introduced by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall).

One of the major planks that the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada has used in trying to market Bill C-22 is that of the research and development spin-offs that would accrue to Canada.

In the legislation, Mr. Speaker, that comes before the House, Canadians—not scientists and not researchers, but Canadians from coast to coast—can identify with the political Party of their choice. The legislation itself helps define the differences between the various philosophies that we see exhibited on the floor of the House of Commons.

Certainly, Bill C-22 is such a piece of legislation. It is a piece of legislation that illustrates to Canadians the mind-set of the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada. It is a piece of legislation, Mr. Speaker, that underlines the progress that we have made in the area of our health care system and the medicare system of this great country.

Canadians will ultimately reject this piece of legislation. We saw this in the emotionalism contained in the over-all mobilization of the senior citizens across this country when this Government tried to move on the deindexation of senior citizens' pensions.

I am not sure that what we will see in connection with this legislation will match that which we saw in connection with the deindexation of senior citizens' pensions, but it will come close. The Government simply cannot move on such pieces of legislation and not expect feedback from the Canadian electorate.

Going back to the initial response of this Government on the whole question of research, given that the Government is using the research and development argument as the major selling point in respect of this piece of legislation—a piece of legislation which ultimately will be rejected by Canadians—it is disconcerting for Canadians to learn that the Government of Canada has not even taken the step of defining what research means. This is something that goes to the very heart and soul of this legislation. The Government has not even made a commitment to ensure that the moneys that it says will flow from research and development on the part of the multinationals will in fact come about.

The amendment put forward by my colleague is an attempt to get this Government to commit itself to what it means when it speaks of research and development, an attempt to get this Government to ensure that the $1.4 billion figure that it uses in respect of the research and development expenditures that will be encouraged through this piece of legislation is in fact spelled out in black and white for all Canadians.

The Government cannot argue that this legislation will help the average Canadian in terms of drug costs; it cannot argue that this is a made-in-Canada policy. We all know, Mr. Speaker, that this policy is being dictated by the large U.S. multinational corporations. It is something that is being dictated by those south of the border.

The Government cannot argue that this legislation is in the best interests of our nation. Therefore, its only remaining argument is that of research and development; its only remaining argument is to try to show to Canadians how many jobs will in fact be created. But, this Government is not doing that, Mr. Speaker. The Members of this Government are talking about it and using it as rhetoric in their speeches across this country. But when it comes down to showing a commitment in the legislation itself, when it comes down to showing the clarity that Canadians request and require in order to begin to believe some of the things the Government is saying, the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada has not had the courage to illustrate that its convictions, its rhetoric, have a basis in fact.

It is for this reason, Mr. Speaker, that the consumer and corporate affairs critic of the Liberal Party of Canada has tried to tie this Government down in terms of its promises to Canadians. If the Conservative Government is not prepared to be very specific in defining what it means by research and development, if it is not prepared to ensure that there will be a guarantee of the $1.4 billion in research spin-offs, it is removing the very proof that it has tried to demonstrate to Canadians in order to obtain their support for the piece of legislation. If it is removing the entire research plank, why is it continuing to put forward this piece of legislation? If it is not prepared to define its essential argument, which is the guiding light in this piece of legislation, for whom is the legislation triggered or whom will it help?

In my constituency of York West there is no support for the legislation. Last weekend I had occasion to address 400 Canadians belonging to an association of senior citizens of Metropolitan Toronto and affiliated with the Villa Colombo, an Italian senior citizens' home. This piece of legislation was at the forefront of those discussions. It was at the forefront of their concerns, concerns which we as a Parliament must begin to understand and listen to. One would have thought that the Conservative Party of Canada would have learned its lesson with its deindexation legislation.

Government Members thought that they would be able to move on what they thought was a very unorganized, unmobilized, and perhaps passive constituency. How wrong they were. Canadians discovered that the senior citizen constituency was far from being immobilized or far from being dispassionate about issues concerning themselves in a very direct way. This piece of legislation is moulded in that same regressive attitude which characterized their initial legislation on the entire deindexation of senior citizens' pensions.

It is much larger than simply the senior citizens constituency. It gets at the very essence of Canadians who are deserving of drugs. I am not referring to those who can simply afford drugs, but those who in fact need them. Drugs should be accessible to such people. However, if we are to move forward vis-à-vis the accessibility of drugs and the affordability of drugs, we should move in a progressive way which will enhance the accessibility and affordability of drugs for all Canadians regardless of age, income, or background. That is for what the Liberal Party stands for. That is what is behind Motions Nos. 2 and 3 and the long list of amendments we proposed at committee stage.

It is time the Government began to understand where those amendments came from. Essentially, they are not amendments from an opposition Party whose sole interest is to oppose. The amendments reflect the evidence which we heard in committee. The amendments reflect the national constituency out there which is beginning to tell the Conservative Party of Canada and the Government it leads that they are mistaken in their direction, that they are mistaken in the essence of Bill C-22.

Bill C-22 embodies something which Canadians will ultimately reject. Unfortunately, Bill C-22 depicts what it means to be a Conservative, a Tory in Canada. It is our hope and aspiration that these amendments will be accepted, that these motions will be taken in the light in which they are being offered, that is, essentially speaking on behalf of average Canadians who do not want their drug costs to rise and medicine to be inaccessible to them.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words in support of Motion No. 2 which is now before the House. It deals with the definition of research presented by the Liberal Party.

I find it very strange that in a Bill respecting research, amending the Patent Act, and abolishing generic pharmaceuticals, there is no definition of research. I find it extremely surprising, coming from the Conservative Party of Canada.

An Hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Nystrom: I will answer the question. I am surprised that the Conservative Party of Canada would leave the definition of research to the Cabinet, to the bureaucracy, and to the multinationals, in effect.

I remember the same Conservative Party when it was in opposition. Time and time again it said to the House, when the Liberal Party did the same thing, that we should not leave the definition of important things to regulation, to secret meetings behind the scenes, to cabinet Ministers, to their bureaucrats and staff, or to vested interest groups, be they corporations or whatever. Also it said to the House that we should have more openness in Parliament and in the country, and more participation by parliamentarians in terms of drafting regulations and defining what we mean by certain legislation which goes through the House.

I could name many pieces of legislation in the last number of years where parliamentarians meant one thing at the beginning and the meaning was entirely different at the end. When a piece of legislation was passed and it got into the hands of the bureaucracy, regulations were made to define terms and concepts, and its entire meaning was different at the end of the process from what it was at the beginning.

I am really surprised to see the Conservative Party take one line in opposition, and now that it is in government take the other line. Perhaps it is a bit like the name of the Party. It is the Progressive Conservative Party. Its Members are a bit more progressive in opposition and a lot more conservative once they are in government.

An Hon. Member: Just like the Liberals.

Mr. Nystrom: Yes, like the Liberal Party. I see the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) nodding in agreement. He realizes that that is exactly what happened. Once they are in power they become more conservative and more reactionary. They put more and more faith in the bureaucracy. I see the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) sitting in the House this afternoon. When he was in opposition, he protested against power being given to the bureaucracy to draft regulations and power being given to cabinet Ministers to draft legislation. However, now that he is in government, he sits quietly by and, like a trained seal or a little pup, says "aye man aye". When a cabinet Minister says, "jump", he says, "how high?"

I am surprised by these long-time members who used to criticize the Government when they were in opposition for not allowing parliamentarians to have more power. Now that they are government back-benchers, they are afraid to stand and speak their mind. Why do they not have the courage of their convictions to rise in the House and say what they think? Is it because the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine believes that if he does not rock the boat he will be a cabinet Minister some day? Is that the reason? God help us if that were to occur. I will bet that is why he is afraid to get up. He does not want to make big Brian angry. He does not want to make officials in the PMO angry. He does not want to make the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) angry. The Minister of National Health and Welfare is the tsar of Manitoba when it comes to patronage and when it comes to making political decisions for the Conservative Party in that province. He does not want to make him angry.

It is surprising to see these Members, who were so vocal, sanctimonious, and self-righteous in opposition, become toothless tigers or toothless pussy-cats once they are in government. Their fangs have been pulled.

Mr. Riis: They are jellyfish.

Mr. Nystrom: They are jellyfish. Perhaps one of them would rise to explain why the transition took place. I am sure that it is a real disappointment to their constituents.

Perhaps it is why the Conservative Party is now the third Party in the country according to poll after poll after poll.

They have misled Canadians. They are one thing in opposition and another thing in government.

• (1630)

Second, I am really surprised to see the Conservative Party support this kind of legislation that would allow American multinationals and Ronald Reagan and his buddies in the United States to call the tune over what happens in Canadian industry. Where is the great nationalist Party of Sir John A. Macdonald of many years ago which had a national vision that we can do things in Canada ourselves, that we can do our own research and development to develop our great country? Where is the great Party of Sir John A. Macdonald? I suggest it has gone and it is finished.

Where is the Party of John Diefenbaker? If he were here and Prime Minister today we would not have this kind of legislation. He would not have gone to Quebec City in February, 1985, to sing When Irish Eyes are Smiling with Ronnie Reagan and agreed with him when he said, "If you want free trade, then you have to adopt our policy in generic pharmaceuticals". John Diefenbaker would not have agreed to that. He would have stood up for Canada and for cheaper drugs for Canadian consumers and for our senior citizens.

The fact that the Conservatives are not standing up for Canada is another reason that the Conservative Party is now third in the public opinion polls. Conservatives are not true to their traditions or their roots. Soon there will be a rebellion among the back-benchers of the Party. Back-benchers will be more and more unhappy as they realize their Party is going down with this change in direction.

Where is the Conservative Party, Mr. Speaker, that was there under the leadership of the man from Yellowhead, who was also a strong nationalist when he was Prime Minister for a few months? Where is that Conservative Party? It has disappeared under the leadership of the man from Baie Comeau, who has a vision of our country as a Canada that is a branch plant. It is much like his vision of the business community, when he was a corporate lawyer, being a branch plant of American corporations, when he was head of Iron Ore. He has brought the same philosophy with him as Prime Minister that he had when he was President of Iron Ore and that he had as a little boy growing up on the north shore in Baie Comeau, where many people at that time worked for branch plants and American corporations.

That is not good enough. That is not the tradition of the Conservative Party and it is not Canada. That is why this Bill must be defeated and why people will rally around the New Democratic Party to stand up for their national interest, for the consumers which will defeat this legislation. And in a couple of years we will defeat the Conservative Party as the Government of Canada.

Whenever the Conservative Party gets into power for a few years it destroys its Party for about two generations. It happened with R. B. Bennett in the 1930s. It happened again in 1958-59. Once the Conservatives are in office they forget about what Canadians want. They try to implement a Conservative agenda which goes against the wishes and the grain of the people of Canada. I call upon the back-benchers of that Party who sat in that position to rise to their feet and say no to cabinet Ministers who are saying, "We want regulations defining research drafted by the bureaucracy, drafted by the multinationals and drafted by the Minister and officials in his office". I say: Stand up and say that parliamentarians should have the right to define what we mean by research in a very important Bill about research and development. That is the tradition of the Conservative Party as it was led in this House by the Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), that is the tradition of the Conservative Party as it was led in this House by Mr. Stanfield in 1967 to about 1974-75. Where is that Conservative Party of these hon. gentlemen? The Conservative Party has now become more of the Republican north than the Conservative Party of Canada.

I wonder why all these trained seals are sitting around so shyly. I see the Hon. Member for Pembina (Mr. Van De Walle) here who is anxious to get up on his feet. He will say that politicians should draft this definition, not bureaucrats. He will say that because he has had first line experience in the front lines. He ran in a by-election and won by 200 votes in a seat the Conservatives won by about 30,000 two years ago. He knows how the Conservative Party will be dealt with when the Conservatives face the people in 1988 or 1989. I am anxiously looking forward to the Member from Pembina, the rookie member, getting up and saying that parliamentarians themselves should have the power to decide what we mean by research in a Bill we are passing through Parliament.

I am sure the member is sensitive enough to the needs and the wishes of his constituents to get up and say that right now. Because of that I will sit down. I encourage him to put his colleagues into line.

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I wish to shed some intelligent remarks on the Bill presently before the House. We have before us an amendment to the present legislation. Let me read it because members of the Government are not willing to listen to the reason and impassioned plea of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall), who has so ably steered the legislation on behalf of the Liberal Party through the committee stages. His amendment reads:

> That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by adding immediately after line 34 at page 10 the following:
> ""research" is exploratory and innovative work undertaken on a systematic basis towards the acquisition of new knowledge in new ways. New knowledge involves the integration of newly acquired information into existing hypothesis, the formulation and testing of new hypothesis or the re-evaluation of existing observations;"

Until now accusations have been made by government Members in debate and in committee that somehow the Opposition, by fighting for changes to the legislation, is against the original research and development being done in Canada. Nothing is further from the truth, Mr. Speaker. In the evolution of the law since 1969 and as a result of Bill C-22 we want to ensure that Canadians, while paying higher prices for their drugs, will have spin-offs in research and development from the funds being allocated.

The difference between the Conservative Party, the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party on this Bill is clear cut. I admit that. We are in favour and were in favour of amending the 1969 legislation, but only in favour of amending it as it was recommended to be amended by the Eastman Commission. That is the difference between ourselves and the New Democratic Party which has taken the position consistently that there should be no changes to the 1969 legislation.

I refer now to the Eastman Commission. I want to come full circle on this point about the need for original research and development. Professor Harry Eastman was asked by the previous Liberal Government to head a commission into the state of the pharmaceutical industry in Canada. I think it is now acknowledged that the Eastman Report represents the state of the art of the knowledge of the pharmaceutical industry in Canada. Since the 1969 amendment, the Eastman Commission found that the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada's ratio of R and D to sales was no better before the 1969 amendments than it was after. He states:

> —the reason for this is our "branch plant" economy and that R and D in Canada will never be at high levels due to our small domestic market and due to the fact that historically multinationals perform innovative R and D in their home country.

The major reason that the Eastman Commission decided on the basis of the study to recommend only that the pharmaceutical manufacturers be allowed an amendment to the 1969 legislation was to allow only a shorter period of time for exclusivity on any research and development on any products introduced after the legislation is passed. If there was a desire on behalf of Canada to increase the R and D levels to allow our university graduates an opportunity to pursue their professional interest in a career for which they have studied at universities, he stated the following. He said that that ought to be done on the basis of a revolving R and D fund which would link the level of R and D done by pharmaceutical manufacturers in Canada to a period of exclusivity that would make it worth while for those companies to do R and D in Canada. That is why at the very beginning we in the Liberal Party set forth our position. We wanted to indicate to the House that we were prepared to allow amendments to the 1969 legislation but we wanted to ensure that Canadians' pocketbooks would be protected and that the goal of increased R and D could be attained. What disturbs the Liberals about Bill C-22 is that, in our opinion, there is no clear-cut protection to ensure higher levels of R and D in Canada, the object of amending the legislation.

As has been pointed out by speaker after speaker, the legislation has given a period of exclusivity to the multinational pharmaceutical industry that is too long, and it does not give enough protection to the consumers. That is why members of the Liberal Party want to amend it, and I hope members opposite would listen. We have argued this consistently in committee and I believe that there is a genuine desire on the part of members of the Government to have higher levels of R and D in Canada. If this is so, we must ensure that there is a proper definition of research and development in the legislation. Otherwise, we will find that over the next decade, Canadians will be paying much higher prices for drugs but there will still not be a corresponding increase in R and D levels in Canada.

I submit to the House that without a proper definition of research and development, the multinational corporations will call product development research under the terms of the legislation. That will not attain the goals Eastman wanted to attain for university graduates. That will not attain the goals of the scientific community. That will not attain the goals of the universities.

As I have travelled across Canada I have spoken to deans of pharmaceutical universities about the future of health care in Canada. I have spoken to deans of medical schools and scientific colleges. I have listened carefully to their impassioned plea, one that I share, for a climate in Canada that would allow increased R and D activities, thus ensuring that the next generation of graduates will have an opportunity to use their knowledge in a field that is useful for all of mankind.

Without a proper definition of research and development, I believe that there will be very little original research and development taking place in Canada. Consumers will ultimately pay a higher price for drugs. I question the Minister's ability to defend his contention that this Bill will not add to the cost of drugs. Anyone with a reasonable knowledge of the pharmaceutical industry is aware that over a long period of time, a higher price will be paid for drugs by Canadians.

Opposition Parties are not voting against this proposed legislation because we are somehow against more research and development into new cancer drugs. It is not true that if we are against this legislation, we are against new, innovative products being introduced, products that would save Canadian lives. It is far from that. I am indicating that if we are to change this law, and I believe it should be changed, let us ensure that we word the amendments and the motion so that we will end up with what we wanted in the first place, a reasonable change to the 1969 legislation that would ensure a level of R and D that would lead to a viable scientific and pharmaceutical industry and to innovative products. Without that, this legislation is wrong.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to say a few words about Bill C-22 at this rather critical stage. I must admit that I am a bit surprised that the Bill has reached this stage. As the Minister, the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone), the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) and the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) will know, for days and days, in fact for many months, the people of Canada have actually spoken out in this House individually. They have signed their names to petitions that have come from every province and territory in Canada telling the House of Commons just how they feel about Bill C-22. I would like to take a moment to read the wording of many of these petitions which are addressed to the Honourable House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled:

> WHEREAS, the federal government's proposals to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs, and,
> WHEREAS, the proposed measure will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an on-going basis, and
> WHEREAS, the proposals of the federal government will result in higher costs to the provincial government drug plans, and
> WHEREAS, the proposed changes are another example of Canadian government concessions to the United States, at the expense of average Canadians, in the Free Trade negotiations,
> WHEREFORE, the undersigned, your Petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

My colleagues and I have risen day after day, week after week, month after month to present hundreds and thousands and tens of thousands of names of individuals from every community in Canada telling the Government to stop this madness and start treating Canadians as they ought to be treated. The petitioners are telling the Government to stop picking on those people who require prescription drugs, the elderly, the sick, the people who face all sorts of difficulties. Now the Government is planning to literally increase the cost of living borne by these individuals. There is no question about that. If anyone believes that having a monopoly on a new drug without having any competition will make that drug available at the lowest price possible, then that person will believe that there are pink elephants floating around in the House of Commons as well.

I wonder why the Hon. Member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass), the Hon. Member for Okanagan—Similkameen (Mr. King), the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) and the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) are not on their feet speaking strongly against continuing with this legislation. They might say that they disagree with the hundreds of thousands of Canadians who have registered their concerns in Parliament because they are interested in all the new research this will create. Let us look at some of this research that is being proposed. During the committee meeting, various witnesses, through access to information, found that the Ministry of Consumer and Corporate Affairs had done its own research into these new jobs that would be created. We heard that some of the new positions that would be created would be for clerks, animal keepers, cleaners and managers, not the scientific research staff the Minister has commented on time and time again.

Mr. Nystrom: What is an animal keeper?

Mr. Riis: My friend, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom), asked what an animal keeper is. Animal keepers would presumably keep the pens of animals that are being used for experiments. They are people who will be raising rabbits. That is what the Minister calls research people. These are the new professional scientists who will be raising chickens and rabbits for various experiments. That is not what we ought to be encouraging.

The Government is cutting back on research and development. University presidents across Canada are complaining about the brain drain. They are saying that the best researchers in Canada are required to move to universities or centres of research in other parts of North America because of the atmosphere in Canada. Even in terms of research, there is a problem.

If there is a critical element to this legislation, it has to do with the whole matter of research. It is only reasonable that one asks what the Government means by research. Does it mean the people who will be keeping the cages of animals clean? Does it mean the clean-up crews which will be working in the offices and research facilities? Who does the Government mean? We look carefully to the legislation to find the definition of research and find that it is not here. This is a critical piece of legislation with regard to a very critical matter, yet there is not a single line defining research.

• (1650)

I want to remind members of the Government that when they were in opposition they lived in fear that if anything in legislation was left open to interpretation the Cabinet could define whatever it wanted as research. It is important to have predictability and consistency so that people opening new research facilities will know precisely what the Government means when it says "research". We must have precision and accuracy in order that people can plan for the future. Good scientific policy is not built by leaving it to the whim of Cabinet. For that reason we have proposed a motion which attempts to define research.

In my conversations with people involved in the pharmaceutical industry I have been told that most of the research which will be done in Canada will be marketing research, finding new ways of packaging and marketing prescription drugs, rather than good, pure scientific research into new ways to defeat cancer and other illnesses facing people today.

My good friend, the Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), presented a motion as follows:

> That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 6 to 9 at page 25 and substituting the following therefor:
> "(7) The Governor in Council shall make regulations defining, for the purposes of this section, the expression "research and development" which shall include the following criteria:

This is the very critical point:

> (a) all expenditures made under the requirements for a notice of compliance for phase one and phase two of clinical trials;

The reason for that is obvious. I do not think I need expand on that because I think all Members of Parliament are well versed in phase one and phase two of the various clinical trials. The motion continues:

> (b) all expenditures made for laboratory and preclinical work which lead to a notice of compliance;

Again, I think that is perfectly clear. The motion goes on with the following important element:

> but shall not include
> (d) all expenditures associated with the marketing of the medicine including all direct and indirect marketing schemes by patentees."

In other words, if the Government's idea of research is to find new ways and means of packaging prescription drugs, finding new colours for packages and deciding whether to use certain kinds of cellophane for the exterior of packages and so on, that is not what parliamentarians suggest ought to be called research. Yet, there is nothing saying that that will not take place. As a matter of fact, most people knowledgeable about this Bill say that that is exactly the kind of research that the various companies have in mind.

The motion which we are presently discussing is an attempt to express in a clear and concise way that Bill C-22 will support only research that will be defined in this legislation. However, that definition is absent. Perhaps you, Mr. Speaker, would have confidence that the Cabinet would identify research appropriately, but I am not certain that the rest of us have that same confidence. That is not necessarily a reflection on this Cabinet. We have concerns about future Cabinets as well. If we are serious about scientific policy and scientific research, we ought to include a definition in this legislation as is attempted by the motion before the House.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. I would like to deal with a couple of issues, one being the definition of research with regard to this Bill. As Members of the House ought to know, the definition of research for income tax purposes is established under regulations pertaining to the Income Tax Act. When a company declares its expenses, research expenditures are defined according to the Income Tax Act. I do not know how any reasonable Member of the House could suggest that a different definition than that in the Income Tax Act could be proposed in a way which would allow meaningful assessment of the amount of research that a company does and aggregates. We have commitments from the industry that 10 per cent of sales will be directed toward research.

Mr. Orlikow: What kind of research?

Mr. Andre: Research as defined by regulations under the Income Tax Act, the same regulations as apply to research in every other area of endeavour. Research has a definition which is established there.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): What about market research?

Mr. Andre: Market research does not qualify as research under the regulations of the Income Tax Act. That is a bogeyman which has no basis in fact. In fact, none of the hypothetical situations which the Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) talked about would be acceptable under the Income Tax Act as research.

Mr. Riis: Why don't you put it in the Act then?

Mr. Andre: To have two different categories of research, one in the Income Tax Act and one in this Act, would make it impossible to make the kinds of comparisons which we all want to make. Once a year we want to have the report of the Drug Prices Review Board showing the amount of research that can be used for comparison purposes. The industry has made the commitment that after four years of application of this Bill it will have reached a certain level. We want to be able to have those figures on a meaningful basis.

In his opening remarks the Member for Kamloops—Shuswap said that thousands of Canadians, the majority, everybody, is opposed to this Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: Tens of thousands.

Mr. Andre: I would like to read—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): You need a new pollster over there.

Mr. Andre: They do not want me to be heard. I can understand why.

Mr. McCurdy: Tell us about it.

Mr. Andre: In a scientific poll 1,200 Canadians—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McCurdy: Is this research?

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, the NDP is for freedom of speech except if it is a speech from this side of the House.

Mr. Riis: We never hear any.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): That's blarney.

Mr. Nystrom: Read The Globe and Mail, Harvey.

Mr. Andre: The question that was asked, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will recognize the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) on a point of order at 30 seconds to five o'clock.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I hope all Members will give the Minister an opportunity to expand upon a poll which was conducted and paid for by interests in Washington, Philadelphia and New York, so that he can expose to Canadians the real reasons why this legislation is being put forward today when the poll was released yesterday. We will give him an opportunity to explain.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister has the floor to conclude.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, the poll was taken by a Canadian company, Decima Research. The question that was asked was—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gauthier: We heard about it yesterday.

Mr. Andre: They do not want to hear, Mr. Speaker. The House Leader leaves. They do not want to hear. If I had to choose between lower drug prices—

NON-SMOKERS' HEALTH ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Thursday, February 12, consideration of the motion of Ms. McDonald that Bill C-204, an Act to regulate smoking in the federal workplace and on common carriers and to amend the Hazardous Products Act in relation to cigarette advertising, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to join in today's debate on this very important subject outlined in Bill C-204.

Smoking kills over 300,000 Canadians every year. It is the single most common cause of health problems in our society today, and it is preventable.

Before becoming the Member of Parliament for Scarborough Centre, I had the pleasure of serving as the Chairman of the Public Health Board for the City of Scarborough. During my term of office the board began drafting the by-laws for the City of Scarborough. I am very pleased to say that today those by-laws that were being drafted to promote non-smoking and encourage a healthy life-style are now in effect. The Scarborough Council recently passed a non-smoking by-law that all civic offices are now smoke-free and local establishments are subject to defined non-smoking regulations.

While there has been a recent decrease in smoking, the trend toward increased smoking among young people, especially women, is really quite discouraging. In addition to the two out of five Canadians who are smokers, there are many more involuntary passive smokers.

These people suffer many of the same health effects as smokers. Tobacco smoke irritates eyes, impairs lungs, aggravates the respiratory system, and increases blood pressure. It can also lead passive smokers to greater risk of lung cancer and one recent study showed that non-smoking spouses of heavy smokers had twice the risk of developing lung cancer as spouses of non-smokers.

Cigarette smoke contains over 50 known carcinogenics. In fact, if the toxic chemicals in cigarette smoke were taken out and dumped somewhere, they would be outlawed by the federal Government's new Environmental Protection Act. Two of these chemicals come under the classification of the Dangerous Substances Safety Standards which say: "No exposure or contact by any route, respiratory, skin, or oral, as detected by the most sensitive methods shall be permitted to these chemicals".

Non-smokers exposed to smoke are at as great a risk as smokers. A non-smoker in a smoke-laden room will inhale as many of these carcinogenics in one hour as a smoker smoking 35 filter tip cigarettes.

Smoking in the workplace not only causes health problems but economic problems as well. Smokers take more sick leave than non-smokers. Smoking affects the morale of workers as well. In a recent survey by the Canadian Journal of Public Health eight out of 10 respondents stated that they experience physical discomfort in the presence of second-hand smoke. Lost productivity and wages due to smoking add up to over $5.5 billion every year. That is a drain on our business community and on our economy as a whole.

Comprehensive non-smoking policies which include smoking cessation programs have been implemented by Health and Welfare Canada, the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, the Auditor General's Office, the National Research Council, the Public Service Commission, and Statistics Canada. These programs provide a model for several other federal Departments that are currently developing a smoke-free work space.

Most provincial Ministries of health have enacted some non-smoking restrictions and several are providing support to community initiatives to reduce smoke in the workplace.

I am very pleased that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) has recently proposed a new air regulation to ban smoking in Canadian aircraft for both domestic and transborder flights of two hours or less. The flights between Toronto and Ottawa are certainly much more pleasant.

The Department of National Health and Welfare has done some advertising aimed at discouraging smoking. The most recent is the Break Free campaign which is targeted at young people. This is a component of a federal, provincial and territorial initiative, the national program to reduce smoking. Moreover, there are campaigns sponsored by non-governmental organizations such as the Canadian Cancer Society and the Canadian Lung Association. A number of these organizations receive government funding for their campaigns to promote a smoke-free society.

What is the future? Given current trends, a number of directions are expected. In the matter of claims of non-smokers and smokers' rights, the trend toward according greater attention to the rights of non-smokers can be expected to continue and be extended.

Second, in the aspect of health, enhanced efforts at informing the public about the illnesses attributable to smoking and encouraging the adoption of healthy life-styles can be expected, with children and young people as major target groups.

Third, with respect to safety, it can also be expected that efforts to protect the public from the hazards from involuntary exposure to smoke will be enhanced, especially in the workplace and in public transit vehicles.

Finally, efforts to develop ways to assist those involved in the production and marketing of tobacco to switch to new enterprises in order to offset the economic losses caused by the declining market for their product are expected to continue over the long term.

Although the federal Government has already taken steps in addressing these issues, it plans to do more and is currently studying new initiatives with a view toward adopting a more comprehensive and health-oriented policy on tobacco. That is why it supports the spirit and the essence of this Private Members' Bill which attempts to reduce tobacco consumption and protect the public from involuntary exposure to tobacco.

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join in the debate on the Private Members' Bill introduced by the Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald). The legislation proposed in Bill C-204 would regulate smoking in the federal workplace and on common carriers other than in designated smoking rooms. Smokers in contravention of its provisions would be subject to a maximum fine of $50. Employers who failed to provide a smoke-free working environment would be liable to a maximum of $10,000. The employers envisaged by the Bill would include not only the federal Government but also Crown corporations, contractors operating under the Canada Labour Code, the Senate and House of Commons, the Library of Parliament and individual Members of Parliament.

The legislation also attempts specifically to regulate smoking on aircraft, ships, railway cars and motor vehicles which are governed by federal legislation, and it is this aspect of the Bill that I wish to address.

With respect to smoking in the workplace, I know many other Hon. Members have had a chance to speak on the subject, but as a non-smoker myself, I applaud the efforts I know my colleague has been making for so many years to encourage non-smoking throughout Parliament Hill and in our offices. It is happening. I see it around me every day. I go into committee rooms which are non-smoking. I go into conferences which are now non-smoking. The message is certainly getting across.

Before dealing with the issue of smoking on common carriers, I would like to make it clear that I am fully aware of the dangers associated with tobacco smoke to both users and non-users. My colleague, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Browes) pointed some of those out in her previous speech.

If I have some concerns with the specific legislation prepared by the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood, it is not because I disagree with her broad objectives, which are admirable, but because I think her strategy for attaining them, particularly with respect to common carriers, is costly, perhaps impractical at this point, and in some cases possibly even counter-productive. The Bill makes smoking, and in the case of an employer the failure to prevent smoking in a non-designated area, a criminal offence.

Ms. McDonald: Not so.

Mrs. Collins: Not so? I appreciate the information. That was the way we read the Bill, but it is certainly an offence for which there are the fines which have been indicated.

I think the problem we would still find in trying to implement this in the case of common carriers is the fact that it would be costly to try to enforce, and in the case of common carriers such as ships, enforcement would be pretty difficult at this point in time. Transport employees who provide direct service to the public often share their workplace with the public, and in large airports, ports, railway and bus stations, with private users of the facility. Those who operate the means of transport, pilots, ships crews and truck drivers, perform most of their duties in quarters which, under Bill C-204, would constitute work spaces. Depending on the particular situation, in some cases they are now indeed separate places. A truck driver usually has a cab and a ship's crew, depending on the kind of ship, will have a separate place. It might or not work out depending on the make-up of the crew in that particular kind of operation.

The Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow) spoke recently on this Bill and she had similar concerns. She dealt with some of the details of the problems associated with regulating smoking on common carriers and in transport terminals where the employees share their work space with the public. She also outlined the many voluntary self-regulating initiatives which have been undertaken by employers in the carrier industries. I am sure all Hon. Members present today are aware that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) has published in The Canada Gazette for public comment before March 3, the regulations he would like to impose on smoking on passenger aircraft. As indicated, this would apply to flights of less than two hours. I think that is certainly a very laudable effort. I know that Air Canada has already initiated this ban on some of the shorter flights. I certainly appreciate that. I hope it is extended and receives public support. I believe from the indications we have received so far that the non-smoking flights have been accepted by the public, but it is being done in a gradual and progressive way.

The problem of regulating smoking in operational work spaces in all aspects of the transport sector would not perhaps be quite as easy to deal with. While the federal employer may reasonably require employees who smoke to be subject to certain restraints during normal working hours in buildings and workshops, since they are free to smoke once they leave and can be provided with designated smoking areas, operational staff do not enjoy the same liberty. I might just say that I support the Hon. Member's initiatives with respect to the concept of having separate smoking areas to which employees can go if they must have a cigarette.

The Coast Guard fleet, for example, spends more time at sea than alongside, and it would not make either legal or common sense to impose unilaterally a ban on smoking aboard Coast Guard vessels. The crew are at home when they are not on duty and should be entitled to the same sort of freedom on their own time as are land-based employees. In circumstances such as these, the only practical approach to resolving conflicts between the wishes of non-smokers and those of smokers is a co-operative one. Differences must be dealt with in a spirit of mutual respect and understanding when people are confined to small areas for lengthy and often stressful periods of duty.

The issue of smoking and non-smoking has a long history which goes back at least to the time of James II. As far as I am aware, it has yet to be resolved. A careful study of that history suggests that persuasion has always worked better than fear or punishment as a modifier of private behaviour and a catalyst for good interpersonal relations.

I agree with my colleague, the Hon. Member for Scarborough Centre, that the major emphasis should be on prevention. As we know, the biggest group which is still attracted to smoking are young teenage women. I am a mother of a teenage girl and we have often talked about this particular issue. As she says, everyone is going to try smoking at some point or another. It is part of growing up and part of experimentation. A lot of it relates to peer pressure and what is acceptable within a group. It seems to me that through advertising on television, through promotion in magazines and books which teenage girls read we can get the message across. I know the kinds of books teenage girls read and the message imparted is that smoking is not the smart thing to do, that we do not need to smoke to be acceptable to our peers or to be grown up. Indeed, it has the potential of a real hazard to your health. I think we could be more creative than we are now in trying to deal with that particular part of the problem.

I would like to see a much more concerted effort with respect to the prevention side of smoking and some reasonable measures with respect to the rights of smokers and non-smokers in public places and private offices, recognizing that harsh penalties are not the way to bring about those changes.

In conclusion, while I agree with the spirit and objectives of the Hon. Member's Bill, I do not support it in all its details. I think it will make an important impact and progress towards the ultimate objective I believe most Hon. Members share, that of diminishing the amount of smoking and the costly impact of smoking on the health of Canadians.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I rise happily to participate in the debate on Bill C-204, the legislation introduced by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald). I have listened very carefully to the intervention of the Hon. Member for Scarborough-Centre (Mrs. Browes) and the Hon. Member for Capilano I thought those interventions were thoughtful. I would like to confess that I am perhaps the only smoker who has participated in this debate thus far.

Smoking has a very long tradition, having begun several centuries ago. It is a habit that provided some pleasure to a population whose life expectancy was somewhat shorter than it is today. In fact, what has happened is the discovery that as conditions of health and the environment have improved in most respects over the years, people have increased their life expectancy. Indeed, people have lived long enough to discover that some of those things that we had become used to can affect our health very seriously.

Up until now the condemnation of smoking that I have experienced has been from my wife who complains about my yellow teeth, and from my barber who tells me that my gray hair is coloured by the smoke of the cigarettes I smoke. But my wife has taken a rather more deliberate and critical examination of my habit, limiting me to certain rooms in the house, conscious that it is not just a question of a filthy habit but a dangerous one, a habit that certainly should not be encouraged. It is an addiction. There can be no doubt about that. It is an addiction that is shared by a great many Canadians. Roughly one-third of Canadians smoke. They spend something in the order of 1.2 per cent of the Gross National Product on their habit. I should say it is we smokers who spend that amount of money. It is an interesting figure because it turns out to be just about the money that we spend on scientific research.

When one considers the over-all cost of the health system and so on I think it can be fairly claimed that with the amount of money that tobacco smoking costs the population, Governments are more than enough compensated for the needed expenditures required by the country in the area of scientific research. Some 30,000 people die—and I note here that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Scarborough Centre, suggested that 300,000 people died per year from smoking. I am not even sure that that many people per annum die; but certainly 30,000 people die as a result of indulging in the habit. Increasingly, evidence demonstrates that approximately 1,000 people become victims of indirect smoking. Thus we are faced with the reality that an increasing proportion of the population which condemns smoking are being affected by it and want to see the habit eliminated. That includes many smokers. I must confess I have a compact with my son that will determine in specific terms when I will have to take hold of the issue and abandon my $3-a-day habit.

When one considers all of the issues involved, when one considers the costs involved, and when one considers the discomfort caused to non-smokers there can be nothing clearer in terms of what should be done if we are to take a significant step forward in improving the state of the health of the people of Canada. Undoubtedly, the single most important step that we can take would be to pass legislation such as that tabled by my colleague. Parenthetically, I say that my colleague has been an effective educator in this respect.

Whatever we may want to consider with respect to caveats, whatever we might want to take into account with respect to the situation of the smoker, the emphasis must be on the non-smoker and the termination of this habit which has the dimensions of a national habit to so many. It may well be that as the Hon. Member for Capilano has indicated, there has to be a great deal of care in drafting the final form of this legislation. I agree that in committee, perhaps, it will be necessary to take into account that if we are to solve this major problem we also have to in some measure take into account the great difficulty involved in imposing sharp and rapid change upon a certain portion of the population which by and large consists of people who have grown up smoking. But these are details. I see no proper place in this debate for examining very closely those details because the principle of this legislation is clear. If we are to change the smoking habits of the nation, if we are to provide the single most important change in respect of improving the health of Canadians, then this legislation should gain the support of the House.

Let us remind ourselves of what it would do. It would have the Government do what it could easily do itself by virtue of introducing legislation. I think it is unfortunate that it was necessary that a Private Member provide the initiative that the Government lacks. Essentially, what this Bill would do is to amend the Hazardous Products Act so that tobacco would be classified under that Act as a hazardous product. This would provide for the regulation of advertisement, importation, sales and so on of tobacco products. It would have the effect of ensuring that tobacco products be clearly labelled to be dangerous to one's health.

I must relate to Hon. Members an experience that I had just recently. I was trying to chose, as a smoker, a package of cigarettes that had a low tar and nicotine content as compared to others. I know that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood, would say that that is a silly exercise. But, after all, I am a victim. I could not read the label. It was not a question of looking at this item, smoker or not, and having provided to me a clear indication that this is a dangerous substance. It was impossible to determine anything that was written on the label. Certainly, if anything, it is elementary. What could be more elementary than making it clearly known to all who would engage in the habit, or might be tempted to engage in the activity, that tobacco, cigarettes, are a dangerous product to one's health?

This Bill would also provide a guarantee to workers that they would be able to work in a smoke-free environment. What could be more elementary than that? Surely, it is necessary to make arrangements to let down softly those who are addicted to nicotine. That is a detail. But there can be no doubt that this House ought to pass a Bill—and I hope the other place will give its consent—that there should be provided to all of those working under federal jurisdiction, whether they are standing still, moving across the sea or through the sky, a smoke-free environment. Travellers on common carriers ought to be provided circumstances in which tobacco smoke will not be either an irritant or a threat.

So this is a Bill that is simple in its premise. It is clear in its purpose. Its justification is abundantly found in the danger that tobacco smoke poses to me, to other smokers and to those who must breathe the air that I create by virtue of my bad habit.

Mr. Nic Leblanc (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, as a smoker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to the Bill before the House. I admit that smoking can be dangerous. Any sensible person will understand that. For instance, if you eat steak three times a day, it might not be very good for your health either.

Mr. Speaker, cigarette smoke is not only bad for the smoker's health but also for that of non-smokers. More and more Canadians are starting to realize this. Scientific findings on side-stream smoke were recently published in a report by Everett Koop, the U.S. Surgeon General, who discussed the effetcs of side-stream smoke on non-smokers.

Tobacco smoke contains particles and gaseous products which in turn contain more than 60 substances that may cause cancer and other diseases. According to the Surgeon General's report, the smoke from the burning end of a cigarette contains more toxic products and cancer-causing substances than the smoke inhaled and exhaled by the smoker. In fact, many studies have concluded that the risk of lung cancer for the non-smoker is increased by 30 per cent as a result of exposure to side-stream smoke.

The combination of smoke produced by a lighted cigarette and the smoke exhaled by a smoker puts the lives of these involuntary smokers at risk.

When parents smoke, it increases the risk of complications during the pregnancy, including low-birth weight and a higher rate of stillbirths. The children of smokers are also more prone to bronchitis and pneumonia than children of non-smokers. Upper respiratory infections are more frequent and there is also a grater risk that they will get some kind of cancer later on.

Mr. Speaker, in a recent report on the environment on board aircraft, the U.S. National Academy of Science identified the danger of the effects of smoke in aircraft and recommended that the U.S. Congress considerer prohibiting smoking in aircraft and on public transit. In a subsequent report, the Academy also concluded that the risk of lung cancer was increased for non-smokers when they were exposed to tobacco smoke. Similarly, the Academy indicated that children exposed to side-stream smoke were more likely to get upper-respiratory and lung infections.

From scientific research on smoking and the health of non-smokers, we can draw three general conclusions:

"Involuntary smoking is a cause of disease, including lung cancer, among non-smokers.

Children of smokers suffer more frequently from respiratory illnesses and symptoms compared with children of non-smokers. The lung capacity of children of smokers develops at a slower rate.

Separating smokers from non-smokers on the same premises may reduce but does not altogether eliminate the problem of exposure to side-stream smoke."

Now that the Canadian public is becoming informed of the dangers of smoking and the risk incurred by passive smokers, it has been urging many changes with respect to the use of tobacco products in public places.

Across Canada, smoke-free public places, work places and public transit are being designated. Municipal and provincial Governments as well as labour and management are working very hard to change policies on smoking in closed premises.

The smoker's rights are questioned when smoking increases the risk of disease for those occupying the same environment. Today, our Government is subsidizing non-governmental organizations such as the Canadian Lung Association and the Canadian Cancer Society which are actively promoting a smoke-free society. In fact, these medical and public health interest groups play a very important role in changing the attitude of society to smoking, and that is why we intend to continue to support their efforts.

Furthermore, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) recently proposed a new regulation prohibiting smoking on domestic and transborder flights of two hours or less on Canadian aircraft. Most major Canadian cities are setting restrictions on smoking in public places and are gradually adopting increasingly stricter bylaws in this respect. For instance, one bylaw put into effect recently in Vancouver has restricted the number of areas where smoking is allowed in most public buildings in that city, including office buildings. If people working in an office are unable to agree on the issue of smoking at work, the office automatically becomes a non-smoking area. Smoking is also prohibited in taxis, retail stores, at service counters and in line-ups.

This year, Quebec also adopted legislation restricting smoking in public places. It is the first provincial legislation of its kind. The Quebec legislation consists of two components: the first prohibits smoking or restricts smoking to certain designated areas in Government buildings, hospitals, educational institutions, public transit and many other public buildings. In the second part, municipalities are empowered to pass additional bylaws in this respect within their respective jurisdictions.

In Canada today, several transportation modes, one province, 40 municipalities and thousands of work places and public places have adopted policies to protect non-smokers from side-stream smoke. This is a social trend that is becoming increasingly widespread and will bring us ever closer to the ultimate objective of a great many Canadians, namely that Canada will be a smoke-free country by the year 2000!

• (1740)

[English]

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I want to join in the debate on Bill C-204, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), and to speak in favour of this Private Members' Bill.

We often hear stories in respect of those who smoke. One time someone said that if God wanted us to smoke, he would have put chimneys where our heads are. I agree with those who say that smoking is not natural to the human species. In fact, when we really think about it and consider the nicotine and charcoal taken into our bodies, we can imagine that they are not very good for our health.

There was a time when we thought that smoking made us more confident. When we were young we put cigarettes in our mouths, lit them up, and thought that it gave us a certain ambiance, confidence, or grown-up approach to life.

We now know differently. All the evidence is in. There is no doubt. It all points to the fact that smoking is a definite health hazard, not only for those who smoke, but for the innocent, those who do not smoke and are in the presence of smokers.

Bill C-204 is an eminently wise Bill. What does it do? First, it bans promotion and advertising of tobacco. Second, it gives Canadian travellers the right to smoke-free air on common carriers. Third, it guarantees in federally regulated operations that workers have the right to smoke-free work sites.

Bill C-204 has support. The list of its supporters is indeed very impressive; very impressive groups and individuals support the enactment of the Bill. The Canadian Cancer Society supports it. The Lung Association supports it. The Canadian Medical Association supports it. Other regional health groups support it, such as the Manitoba Medical Association and the Medical Society of Nova Scotia.

Many Hon. Members who have spoken so far support the Bill. Previously we heard a colleague who is a smoker support the Bill. Unions representing workers support the Bill. I have in my hand a letter dated March 25, 1987, and directed to the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood. It reads:

> Dear Ms. McDonald:
> You can count on the support of the Airline Division of CUPE for Bill C-204.
> I will be in Ottawa on April 9 and could meet with you to discuss how the Airline Division of CUPE may contribute further to help Bill C-204 become law.

It is signed by Richard Nowlan, Division President of Local 4004 of CUPE. I recall sitting many times in the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration when it considered amendments to Part IV of the Canada Labour Code concerning occupational health and safety. When we considered changes to that part of the Canada Labour Code, we gave workers the right to refuse work in conditions which they considered injurious to their health.

There is a grave concern in the workplace in respect of all the new untested chemicals which come on the market. Workers may not know the contents of the chemicals or what their effects will be on their health. There is a consciousness now, and efforts are being made to ensure that the contents are clearly identified. In fact, workers can obtain from computer systems instant information about chemicals in the workplace and their health implications. That information is available to them.

All the evidence is clear on this one particular substance. It is a killer. However, we have not moved to ensure that workers can work in an environment free of second-hand smoke or the effects of smoking themselves.

We have not had the courage to follow up on what we now know is a danger to human health. We have not moved on it. The Bill would move us in that direction. No reasonable worker who would say that cigarettes are a dangerous substance would say that the Government should not ensure the health of workers on the job. It is something for which workers and their representatives have been fighting in provincial and federal labour legislation to ensure a healthy working environment.

I should now like to deal with tobacco advertising because the Bill would in fact ban it. I suspect that the Government from time to time has shown a reluctance to move on banning tobacco advertising and to encourage Canadians to give up smoking or not start it. It is a trend today that Canadians at a younger and younger age are developing the habit of smoking. I think the Government has become dependent upon tobacco usage, upon smoking. It has been reluctant to give up the smoking habit because it sees it as generating tax revenues. In every Budget since I have been around the House cigarettes have always been the favourite target. With every penny increase in the tax on cigarettes, the Government becomes more and more dependent upon income from tobacco.

As a matter of fact, the revenues collected by federal, provincial, and territorial Governments from tobacco sales amount to $3.03 billion per year. Of course the Government does not recognize that it is offset by costs in health care services.

The matter was brought home to me when I took a heart attack last summer. When I arrived at emergency in the hospital, the first question asked was: "Do you smoke?" When I said "no", there was relief on the face of those attending me.

We must think of the health care costs, the costs in absenteeism, and the costs in fire damage. They are estimated at $8 billion. The Government should recognize the false economy—approximately $3 billion are collected in taxes but over $8 billion are paid out in costs. The Government has everything to gain by phasing out and trying to encourage Canadians to quit the smoking habit.

The third area in the Bill concerns the right to travel in a smoke-free environment. I can only come to Ottawa by air, train, or bus, and I must be here. When I do so, I am trusting that the bus, plane, or train will be driven safely. My health is in the hands of those conducting the system. Yet, Mr. Speaker, I have no protection from second-hand smoke. As a matter of fact, you can smoke in the rear seats of buses but the air gets circulated to the front of the bus.

I think it makes a lot of sense for travellers on common carriers that airplanes, trains, and buses be smoke-free. I want to urge Members of this House with all the vigour that I can to support Bill C-204 because it is wise and healthy to do so.

Mr. Joe Price (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, one of the purposes of Bill C-204 is to regulate smoking in federal workplaces. The employees in these buildings and facilities are or will soon be subject to the Canada Labour Code which is administered by Labour Canada. Therefore, I want to take a few moments of the time of the House to elaborate on the provisions found in the code relating to occupational health and safety.

The Canada Labour Code consists of a number of parts of which Part IV is of interest to the House at this time. Part IV of the Canada Labour Code applies to federal works, undertakings and businesses and certain Crown corporations, and provides for the occupational safety and health of the employees of these establishments. Specific examples of federal works, undertakings and businesses include the federal Public Service, banks, radio and television stations, railway shops and grain elevators. When the code is extended to apply to operation of trains, aircraft and ships in the near future, it will apply to the employees in almost all the workplaces where the proposed Act should and would apply.

The purpose of the code is to prevent accidents and injury arising out of or occurring in the course of employment to which the code applies. It achieves this by requiring the employer to ensure that the safety and health of every person employed by the employer is protected while at work.

The Canada occupational safety and health regulation issued pursuant to the code prescribes the minimum standards that the employer must meet in order to comply with the code. Part X of the regulations addresses dangerous substances. A dangerous substance is defined as a hazardous substance or a chemical, physical or biological agent that because of a property it possesses is hazardous to the safety or health of a person exposed to it. Part X requires that when there is a likelihood that an employee may be exposed to a dangerous substance, the substance must be identified and its exposure quantified and compared to a permissible limit. Tobacco smoke contains literally thousands of potentially dangerous substances. They range from simple substances such as carbon dioxide to the more dangerous poisons such as carbon monoxide. Packages of American cigarettes specifically warn the smoker of the carbon monoxide hazard.

Under the Canada Labour Code, if a non-smoker were to complain about being exposed to the tobacco smoke from a colleague, the exposure of the non-smoker to specific constituents of the smoke would have to exceed the established permissible limits before it could be determined if the employer is in violation of the code. If the worker were exposed to more than the allowable concentration of a specific compound, the employer would be required to reduce the exposure to acceptable values or face a fine or even imprisonment. The fines under the code vary depending upon the severity of the contravention and range up to $100,000 where the contravention results in the death or serious injury of an employee. The maximum prison term is two years for a wilful contravention which results in a death or serious injury.

The code also permits employees to refuse to work if they have reasonable cause to believe—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but we have someone from the other place.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

And being returned:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that when the House did attend His Honour the Deputy to Her Excellency the Governor General in the Senate Chamber, His Honour was pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following Bill:

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—CLEAN-UP OF NIAGARA RIVER AND LAKE ONTARIO

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, today is a very special day. It is March 31, 1987. That may not mean an awful lot to you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, as you think about it, perhaps all it means is that it is the end of the month of March. Perhaps you are thinking that it is pay-day. I suspect there might be a ray of light which brightens you at that thought.

However, while it may not mean an awful lot to you, to the five million or more people who inhabit the area around the Niagara River, Lake Ontario and the St. Lawrence River, it is a red-letter day because today and from now on there should be less toxic chemicals going into the water they drink than there has ever been before. Today marks the end of one year of sampling. From April 1, 1986, until March 31, 1987, there was sampling of the water in the Niagara River for the purpose of establishing a base point over which we hope the quality of the water which people drink from the Niagara River, Lake Ontario and the St. Lawrence River will improve.

This is in accordance with a declaration of intent which was signed by four parties: Environment Canada, the Environmental Protection Agency, the Ontario Ministry of the Environment, and the New York State Department of Environmental Conservation. It was signed a short time ago with the purpose and intent of ensuring that from now on the toxic pollutants which are going into the Niagara River will be reduced by 50 per cent by the year 1996. In order to monitor that and ensure that it does happen, that declaration of intent calls for reports to be issued to the public every six months.

That is extremely important because it appears that real progress has been made at last in cleaning up the drinking water in Lake Ontario, the Niagara River and the St. Lawrence River. It is important because Canada and the United States have been talking about doing this since 1919. It is important because the chemical dumps on the American side of the Niagara River—particularly those infamous four, Love Canal, Hyde Park, S area dump, and the 102nd Street dump—have been described as the world's largest storehouse of deadly dioxin. It has been leaking into the Niagara River for some time.

This agreement is important because just one two-hundredth of a drop of the worst dioxin, which is 2,3,7,8,-TCDD, can kill a person. Only a shovelful of that dioxin dropped into Lake Ontario could destroy the drinking water of Lake Ontario for all time.

It is also important because we know that the deadly dioxin is leaking out of the dumps along the Niagara River, particularly the Hyde Park dump, where it has been identified as seeping down the face of the gorge right into the river. There are some 900 kilograms, almost a tonne, of that kind of deadly dioxin in the Hyde Park dump alone.

This agreement is important because we know that there are some 70,000 tonnes of other chemical wastes, most of which we have identified as cancer-causing wastes, in that Hyde Park dump alone. It is important because recently, near the mouth of the Petit Flume storm sewer located in Tonawanda, New York, they have identified that deadly dioxin in clams. We know that in this sewer alone is a chemical-laden sediment that would cover a football field to a depth of one metre.

This is an important step and that is why it is such a red-letter day for the people who live around Lake Ontario, the Niagara River and the St. Lawrence River. In spite of all this good news, there are some questions still to be answered. That is why I am delighted to have the Parliamentary Secretary here tonight to answer some of those questions that people have been asking.

For instance, why has the Environmental Protection Agency in the United States not designated these dumps under the American Super Fund legislation? Why has the Occidental Chemical Company that controls and owns these dumps on the American side of the Niagara River spent money to help clean up the Chernobyl accident in the Soviet Union but is not spending money to clean up the chemicals which they themselves own in our own backyard?

Will those chemicals be excavated and the toxic material removed and destroyed, or will there only be some containment plan to try to keep it there on site? Why, in spite of this declaration of intent and the target of reducing by 50 per cent the flow of toxic chemicals into the river, will 4.5 tonnes of pollution still be going into the river every day, even with these clean-up targets?

When will the 45 Ontario industries and the 53 United States industries that are currently polluting the Great Lakes be cleaned up? When will the 10 Ontario hazardous waste sites and the 105 U.S. hazardous waste sites around the Great Lakes be cleaned up? When will the 32 Ontario municipalities and the 81 American municipalities that are still dumping sewage and polluting the Great Lakes be cleaned up?

• (1815)

Those are answers the people of Canada want to know and I am looking forward to getting those answers from the Parliamentary Secretary tonight.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to respond to the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) and to acknowledge his enthusiasm for environmental issues, his search for answers and the need for certain measures to be taken. Tonight I will be elaborating on the question brought to the attention of this House by the Hon. Member on February 3. That was in relation to the international declaration of intent relating to the Niagara River Toxic Management Plan.

On behalf of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), I am pleased to provide the Hon. Member with details of that declaration, signed with Mr. Lee Thomas, administrator of the United States Environmental Protection Agency, Mr. Jim Bradley, the Minister of the Environment for Ontario and Mr. Henry Williams of the New York State Department of Environmental Conservation. The occasion of this signing, I might add, was a very successful three day international symposium on toxics in the Niagara, jointly sponsored by these four environmental agencies and held in Toronto.

This declaration of intent, which was toasted at the time of signing with pure water, is a statement of political will and commitment of the four jurisdictions to reduce the loadings of toxic chemicals entering the Niagara River by 50 per cent over the coming decade. In order to accomplish this goal, the four governments are committed to undertake and complete all the activities defined in an all-party Niagara River Toxic Management Plan which was released on October 30, 1986.

This plan is a technical document which describes specific work activities and schedules for completing these activities which we agreed to undertake jointly and individually. The plan will be updated and a revised version will be released in July, 1987. In addition, the declaration of intent also requires the four jurisdictions to review and publicly report on the state of new and emerging technologies to protect the environment from threats of hazardous waste landfill sites. The emphasis will be on such techniques as excavation, removal and on-site destruction of contaminated materials. At all chemical dump sites, excavation, removal and destruction will be considered an option.

The signing of this declaration constitutes the result of fruitful negotiations between the four governments and marks our will to offer a healthy and clean environment to every Canadian.

REFUGEES—IMMINENT DEATH OF HUNGER STRIKER—(A) GOVERNMENT POSITION. (B) PROCESSING OF REFUGEE CLAIMS

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, two weeks ago when the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) announced that the Chileans blocked by him in Argentina were not refugees, that none of those people were refugees, my reaction was not to believe him. I did not believe him because I had personally spoken to a number of Chileans in Montreal who had arrived recently and who were seeking refugee status. They were people I would consider to be refugees. For instance, there was a lawyer who had worked for the Church in Chile and had been arrested several times. He finally decided to leave his country because he feared for his life.

There was a truck driver whose friends had taken part in demonstrations and who was therefore implicated through his association with these people. He too feared for his life and decided to leave his country. In the group in Montreal, at least among those I spoke to, there are people I consider to be refugees because I felt their stories had the ring of truth.

When the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) said a few weeks ago that no one in Argentina was a refugee, I reached the conclusion that his assessment was not credible and that at least some of these people had a legitimate claim.

If the Minister had said that 20 or 25 were refugees, maybe half, I would have thought his assessment was credible. But when he says that no one is a refugee, I protest.

Since that time the facts have confirmed my feeling. Last week, the Quebec Minister of Immigration, after evaluating about 50 people, reached the conclusion that at least 10 of the people in question were in sufficiently precarious circumstances to be admitted to Quebec on humanitarian grounds. The Minister asked the Minister of Employment and Immigration to review those cases. I would like to point out that only those who asked to be allowed to settle in Quebec were evaluated by the Government of Quebec.

Then, Mr. Speaker, what has been the response of the Minister of Employment and Immigration? He says he is puzzled about the various assessments. You will admit Mr. Speaker that the Minister is disarming by naïve. This confusing situation would justify a form decision on his part. He may have 56,000 assessments, Mr. Speaker, but the only one which really matters is his own, because he is the one who may admit these refugees in Canada. He is the only one who decides whether or not they have the right to enter this country.

Such a decision being so crucial and final—for this people it is a matter of life and death—it is imperative to ensure that those who are seeking refugee status may do so with a minimum of legal protection.

This is why recommendations made to the Government in recent years have been unanimous. People are asking for an independent, neutral and impartial procedure. Department of Immigration officials should not be expected to decide the fate of refugees because their responsibility is to administer the Immigration Act. These applications should be examined by people who are expert in refugee matters, and the Department of Immigration should not have anything to do with the whole process.

When applications are filed abroad . . . For example, the Chileans who have made headlines in recent weeks, who have been detained in Argentina, left stranded in Argentina by the Minister, these people in foreign countries are often in a predicament, separated from their families, facing an official who may not feel much sympathy for refugees, they have no access to legal advice, they have absolutely no right to appeal, they are at the mercy of the Minister of Immigration and his officials.

I therefore urge the Minister to admit that the refugee determination process in foreign lands has serious drawbacks. The Government should repeal the shameful measures imposed last February 20 and set up a compassionate and fair treatment system for refugees.

• (1825)

[English]

Mr. Gordon Towers (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to expand upon the reply given by the Hon.

Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) to the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) on March 4, 1987.

On March 12, 1987, the Government decided, for humanitarian and compassionate reasons, to bring three wives and their children to Canada to join their husbands. The Minister's permits were issued, and they arrived at Mirabel on Saturday, March 14, 1987.

As for the remainder of the group, each has been interviewed by our officers at the Canadian Embassy in Buenos Aires. They have also been seen by a Quebec immigration officer.

On the basis of their interviews, our foreign service officers had initially concluded that none of the group fled Chile for reasons of persecution; rather, they were coming to Canada for economic reasons. However, we have received additional information from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees' representative in Argentina, and it is the conclusion of the Canadian officials that two persons have valid claims to be Convention Refugees.

The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees provides information and advice, but it is only the Canadian Government which can decide the validity of a refugee claim from someone seeking to enter Canada.

Under the Cullen-Couture Agreement with the Quebec Government, the Quebec Immigration Minister, Louise Robic, has the legal means to bring to Canada, as independent immigrants, any of the Chileans in the group remaining in Argentina.

Mme. Robic announced on March 30, 1987, that the nine Chileans granted permission to enter Quebec shall be processed as independent immigrants, including standard medical and background checks, before they can be brought forward. The remaining Chileans can, should they wish to do so, apply to the Canadian Embassy to determine whether they can meet the selection standards for immigrants other than Convention refugees.

Canada remains open to genuine refugees from Chile. However, many of the people coming from that country recently using the in-transit route have in fact been economic migrants or family class applicants joining relatives here. These people must be dealt with in the normal way and must not be allowed to short-circuit the immigration system, or jump the queue.

Canada has an ongoing immigration program from Chile. Last year, 453 Chileans entered the country under regular immigration programs. Canada has an outstanding record with respect to receiving refugees from Chile. Since the fall of the Allende regime in September, 1973, Canada has admitted 16,735 people from that country.

Adjournment Debate

FINANCE—SALES TAX CREDIT PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR GREATER PUBLICITY

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago the Member for York East (Mr. Redway) reminded us that it was March 31, and he did so because he had a particular interest in that date. What I want to speak about today also reminds me that it is March 31, which means that tomorrow we are into the month of April, by the end of which we must have our income tax returns filed. Now is the time to be thinking about preparing our income tax returns.

Last week, Mr. Speaker, I asked the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) about the federal sales tax credit that was introduced in the February 1986 Budget. This is a terrific program. Its purpose is to take into account the increase in federal sales tax while making sure that lower income Canadians are not penalized.

Because it is a new program, I have found that a lot of people who are eligible for it do not know about it. For that reason, I should like to take a few minutes to explain what the program is.

It is a tax credit program, and under it those with an income of less than $15,000 would be eligible for a tax credit of $50. For a family whose combined income is less than $15,000, a husband and wife who were living together as of the end of last year would be eligible for a tax credit of $100, plus $25 for each child.

This is a significant amount of money for lower income families, and we want to make sure that those who are eligible receive it. The point is, in order to get the credit, one has to file an income tax return. There are a number of people in this category whose incomes are such that they do not ordinarily pay any income tax and therefore do not file an income tax return.

I should like to refer to what was brought to my attention in my riding of Capilano. Senior citizens whose incomes were basically their old age pension, and perhaps the GIS, who do not ordinarily file income tax returns may not know that this year they should do so because they are probably eligible for the $50 credit. We want to make sure that people know about it.

Another category which has been brought to my attention is that of students. Every Canadian 18 years of age and over who is eligible and has an income of less than $15,000 should be filing an income tax form this year in order to obtain the particular credit.

I asked my question on March 25. I was pleased that the Minister of National Revenue in his usual way immediately issued a press release the next day—and I hope it has been well covered in the media—reminding people to claim their tax credit.

As he said in the particular press release: "This tax credit is of particular importance to low-income Canadians, many of whom would not normally have to file a tax return". He emphasized that in order to claim the sales tax credit, a tax return must be filed.

That is the message we want to ensure that we get across. I hope all Hon. Members of the House will make the effort, through press releases and householders to their constituents, to ensure that the message gets out.

There is another point I want to raise because it was brought to my attention. There is some concern about people who have never filed tax returns. They are not used to it, they might be scared about it, and they do not know where to go for help. First I would advise them not to go to tax discounters. I was very pleased with the legislation we brought in last year to limit the role of tax discounters. It is not worth it, because there is help out there.

In my own riding of Capilano, British Columbia, I have worked with north shore seniors' groups and the information centre. In particular, the north shore health and information service provides volunteers to help seniors fill out their income tax returns. This is probably true across the country. There are many volunteers who will go to the homes of senior citizens and be in community centres to help with tax returns.

I was delighted by an article which was brought to my attention. It indicated that this kind of service was being offered by the Department of National Revenue. The particular project in Sydney, Nova Scotia seems to be an ideal one. I hope it is done right across the country. In the article Mr. Ross Crewe, Public Relations Manager for the Sydney District Office of Revenue Canada, talked about a program where Revenue Canada recruited all sorts of volunteers in the community to help people prepare their tax returns. If someone phones up, they will send a volunteer to the homes of seniors to help them. It does not have to be a scary kind of situation. It has some 70 volunteers in Sydney working out of a store-front office, so it is accessible. People do not have to climb a lot of stairs or go into a government office, which might be a little scary.

I should like to refer to some of the comments of people who have used the service. A gentleman, Mr. John Briand, said:

> They say filling out the form is simple but it can be complicated . . . The volunteers know just how to fill it out, and it's a lot easier for them to figure—

Kristene Brown, a University College of Cape Breton student is not taking any chances. She said:

> I wanted to make sure I'd get it done right.

She had gone for that kind of help too. That kind of help is available.

I urge low-income Canadians—and we expect that 75,000 Canadian families will be eligible for the federal sales tax credit—to make sure that they get their forms in. If by chance they miss out or know of someone who has missed out, they will have a chance even after the end of April this year. They will have three years within which to claim the credit. Of course, $50 in the hand is better than $50 waiting out there.

I encourage the Minister, his Department, and all colleagues to make extra special efforts this year to ensure that Canadians are aware of this excellent program which the Government has put in place. It shows our care and compassion for Canadians who are having to make do on lower incomes.

• (1835)

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I respond to my colleague's question of March 25 regarding the public awareness of the federal sales tax credit. I commend her for her ongoing concern and compassion on behalf of all Canadians.

As you are no doubt aware, some four million Canadians can benefit from this Government initiative. I would like to assure all Members that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) is energetic in promoting and informing Canadians how to claim this valuable credit.

The federal tax credit is progressive. It permits eligible Canadians to receive a fully refundable credit of $50 for themselves, an additional $50 for their spouse and $25 per qualified relative. Not only is this a progressive measure by virtue of the fact that it is refundable, this credit is sensitive to the needs of low-income Canadians and gradually diminishes as a taxpayer's income increases. This credit is designed to help achieve the Government's objective of tax equity.

Department personnel have been mobilized across Canada to promote the availability of this credit through the Department's volunteer program, a program that assisted some 85,000 low-income tax filers last year. Positive results of their efforts are recorded in numerous news articles, articles which themselves stress the importance of filing a tax return in order to claim the federal sales tax credit.

The Minister of National Revenue recently issued a news release reminding Canadians of the eligibility criteria for this credit. In addition, the Minister will shortly be issuing a letter to all Members of Parliament and Senators urging them to publicize this credit in their constituencies. An article explaining the credit and how it is to be claimed will be enclosed with the letters so that Members of Parliament and Senators can provide copies to community papers and community groups right across Canada. I urge all members to use this opportunity to reach out to their constituents.

Not only has this Government introduced a progressive tax measure with this credit, we are conscientiously promoting the credit with those very Canadians for whom it was introduced. I would stress, Mr. Speaker, that throughout the remainder of the tax filing system, the Department will continue to explore all available channels for publicizing this important new credit.

The Minister believes that most Canadians who are eligible for the federal sales tax credit are aware of how to claim for it in their tax return. But, I want to remind my colleagues that there are provisions in the Income Tax Act for claiming this and other credits in future years should an individual overlook the availability of a credit this year. This provision gives tax filers up to three years to make claims that they may have missed.

I appreciate this opportunity to bring to the attention of Hon. Members the steps being taken by Revenue Canada, Taxation, to ensure that Canadians take full advantage of this new refundable credit.

PHARMACEUTICAL PRODUCTS

OPPOSITION TO AMENDMENT OF PATENT ACT

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government legislation on prescription drug patent is a good example of the definition of Canada's Conservatives.

The only consequence this policy can have is higher drug prices. It is a policy which compromises the access to and availability of prescription drugs. It is a policy which helps the major American multinationals. It is a policy which flies in the face of the Canadian progressive health care system established by Liberal Governments. It is a policy which Canadians reject outright.

I urge the Government to stop forcing Canadians to pay higher drug prices, to withdraw the Bill, and to be sensitive and fair to Canadians who need these drugs. We must make every effort to improve their standard of living instead of debasing their integrity and their existence.

U.S.S.R.—JEWISH CITIZENS—PROMISE OF PERMISSION TO EMIGRATE

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, a new but significant promise from the Kremlin to permit 11,000 Jewish refusniks to emigrate to Israel this year was reported yesterday. They are all on a long standing list of cases presented to the Soviets at the Reykjavik summit.

All of these people have been denied for a very long time the most basic human right, freedom to choose to leave the Soviet Union. We applaud Mr. Edward Bronfman and Mr. Abram of the United States for their efforts in negotiating this promise of the release of 11,000 people. I cannot applaud the U.S.S.R. for a promise, but we are encouraged. We will applaud the U.S.S.R. when they grant all the basic human rights to their citizens, including the right to pursue their religious convictions in the Soviet Union.

This latest promise is a perfect occasion to put the alleged policy of openness, or "glasnost", to the litmus test.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROPERTY DAMAGE CAUSED BY TWIN TRACKING PROJECT IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it has now been many weeks since the National Research Council submitted its report on the damage done to private property as the result of the Canadian National twin tracking project in Kamloops and Rayleigh, British Columbia. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) waited for the receipt of this report before taking action with CN with respect to compensating those whose homes and businesses have experienced structural damage, and before requiring CN to take corrective action to eliminate future damage.

The people of Kamloops and Rayleigh have been very patient. They have waited for months as studies have been conducted while watching cracks in their walls widen, foundations crumbling, and water lines break. CN has not been especially co-operative in recognizing the problem, and providing compensation or taking any corrective action.

Leadership by the Minister of Transport and the federal Government is now necessary. I urge the Minister to take action now to ensure that those who suffered, through no fault of their own, as a result of CN's twin tracking program through residential areas, are treated fairly by the railway which is itself the ultimate responsibility of the federal Government.

ENERGY

GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE TO SMALL OIL PRODUCING COMPANIES—IMPACT ON ECONOMY OF ALBERTA

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, Ottawa's $350 million a year offer to the oil industry might signal the beginning of annual investments of $1 billion in exploration for and development of untapped reserves in Alberta and Saskatchewan.

The National Energy Program had seriously distorted the industry, and it was up to the Government to make sure that small companies, one of the most important elements of the industry, would survive.

As a matter of fact, small companies had not been on the receiving end of the NEP bonanza to the same extent as major concerns, and their efforts to develop traditional western reserves had even been thwarted. Such assistance to small oil producers will boost the Albertan economy at a time when future prospects do not look very promising. It is aimed at a sector from which Alberta's economy draws its strength and on which rests the future of the province.

The help offered by the Government of Ottawa to small producers will enable that industry to rally and survive while waiting for renewed wider scale exploration boosted by higher world prices.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) was right, and Ottawa makes it possible for Alberta to get through the doldrums and save the jobs of skilled workers.

HUMAN RIGHTS

CHILE—POLITICAL PRISONERS' HUNGER STRIKE

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, 300 political prisoners in Chile have been on a hunger strike since February 25, 1987, in protest against unfair trials and treatment. The hunger strike started in connection with two trials involving members of an armed opposition group who are accused of smuggling arms into the country, and persons accused of attempting to kill General Pinochet. In both of these cases prisoners were badly tortured, a fact which has been documented by America's Watch, an American human rights organization.

This organization has interviewed 17 people who are detained. The interviews include reports that rats were let loose on victims' faces. Prisoners also received the normal application of electric shock to the most sensitive parts of the body. Some of the prisoners were also submerged in water to the point of losing consciousness, badly beaten, and sexually abused.

The hunger strikers are demanding the release of all political prisoners through an amnesty or else be allowed to exchange their sentence for exile, and the end to political appointments of special military prosecutors to deal with particular cases and the transfer of judicial proceedings from military to civilian courts.

Amnesty International has asked that urgent action be taken. I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs to condemn the Chilean Government for its gross indecent violation of human rights and to urge that Government to meet the requests of the political prisoners.

TOURISM

INCREASE IN GOVERNMENT SPONSORED ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, tourism is the fifth largest industry in Canada and is growing every year. Our Government has recently increased its tourism advertising by $5.5 million to attract more visitors from the United States. This will help Canada maintain its momentum of last year when a record number of Americans spent their vacations in Canada. The additional funding will be spent on expanded television and magazine advertising under the award winning theme of "Canada: The World Next Door".

The tourism industry is vital to Canada. It employs more than 600,000 Canadians and generates $20 billion in receipts. In Alberta tourism is the third largest industry and we are working hard to ensure that it continues its strong and healthy growth. It is a key factor in our desire to diversify our economy, and is an integral part of our future. Tourism is vital to our Government's economical renewal and we should all make an effort to ensure that Canada is indeed "the world next door".

INCOME TAX

AMOUNT PAID BY LOW-INCOME TAXPAYERS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, seniors, single parents and other Canadians with low incomes are fuming at the Tory Government for the amount of personal income tax they are having to pay for 1986. I would like to read one of several letters from my constituents on this matter.

Dear Mr. Parry:

My mother had a total income of $9,885.60 last year. I calculated her income tax for her and she owes $236.20.

Mr. Parry, my mother is in her 70s, her only income is through pensions. It does not seem right that she should have to pay tax at all. Also, her taxes to the Town are due this month, she has no idea where to get the money from ... Why are the poor being penalized again?

I should cite the figures calculated by Mr. Murray Kelso of Fort Frances. Someone who paid no federal tax in 1985 on $1,430 of taxable income has to pay $99 in 1986; and on $3,000 someone who had to pay $254 of federal tax in 1985 has to pay $352 in 1986.

A single parent writes me:

Financially, I would have been better to have stayed home with my children; between saving child care expenses and having a larger income return. My situation is not uncommon.

Indeed, these impositions on low-income Canadians cry out for a remedy.

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

LEADER'S ATTITUDE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, yesterday this Government and the Government of Quebec decided to invest $220 million, that is $110 million each, in the General Motors factory at Sainte-Thérèse. At stake are 5,500 jobs in Quebec and 5,400 jobs in Ontario, especially in Oshawa. The Leader of the NDP, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), did nothing in this respect to help his constituents. He was and still is against helping the private sector.

Although the Leader of the NDP accepts source deductions from Canadian workers and also benefits from our job creating activities, as the Member for Oshawa he has remained silent and very negative about an issue that involves Quebec and his own riding. Workers in Oshawa know this and will not forget! When will the Leader of the NDP show his true colours, Mr. Speaker?

MAPLE SYRUP INDUSTRY

DECAY OF MAPLE TREES—REQUEST FOR CONCERTED CANADA-UNITED STATES ACTION

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, not long ago, the President of the UPA wrote a letter to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in which he said, and I quote: Our maples, the symbol of Canada, are dying.

Mr. Speaker, the UPA wanted to make the leader of this Government aware of the fact that one of the worst disasters in the history of Canadian agriculture may compromise the growth and survival of the maple syrup industry. The deterioration of our maple trees has been increasing and spreading ever since the first cases were identified in 1979-80. According to the findings of recent studies carried out by the Quebec Department of Energy and Resources, 85 per cent of Quebec maple stands are now showing signs of deterioration, varying from slight to very serious.

It is imperative that the Canadian Government put pressure on the Americans to agree to a definite program, so that we can stop the deterioration process, stop pollution and get rid of the sources of pollution.

ETHNIC AFFAIRS

BALTIC EVENING ON PARLIAMENT HILL

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, tonight Canadians of Estonian, Latvian, and Lithuanian origin, as well as their friends and supporters, will gather on Parliament Hill to celebrate the fifteenth annual Baltic Evening. Baltic Canadians have a special understanding and appreciation of the good fortune Canadians enjoy living in a free and democratic nation. Baltic independence was lost when the Soviet Union forcibly occupied the Baltic States. This occasion serves as a reminder of the need to protect and encourage the spirit of freedom wherever it is found.

The Baltic culture has flourished in Canada, and Canadians of Estonian, Latvian, and Lithuanian heritage have proudly contributed their strengths and perseverance to Canada, and the cause of freedom. I call on all Members of the House to join Canada's Baltic community in celebrating this special occasion, and by their participation and presence to recognize the tremendous contribution the Baltic communities have made to the growth and development of Canada, and to demonstrate that Canada does not and will not accept the forcible and illegal occupation of the Baltic States by the Soviet Union.

TAX ON SNACK FOODS—SCHOOLCHILDREN'S APPEAL

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, an 11-year-old constituent of mine wrote the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) last week as follows:

We, the students of Claude E. Garton School, Thunder Bay, Ontario, feel that charging taxes on popsicles, ice cream and other snacks is unfair to the children. We work hard selling newspapers, babysitting, shovelling snow, household chores, etc. This money pays for snacks, fads and fashions, etc. that we want, but if you take more money from us there will be no reason to work since you will be taking money from our pockets too.

We appeal to you to kindly change this law.

• (1415)

This letter was supported by several hundred of her classmates and friends.

This letter, Mr. Speaker, makes a very important point about the effect that excessive taxation has on Canadians. The Conference Board of Canada made a further point about high taxation last week when it pointed out that the economy is slowing down because the federal Government is taking too much in taxes. Disposable income is stagnating, rather than rising.

I join, Mr. Speaker, with the children of Claude E. Garton School in calling on the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) not to tax the snacks that the children want to enjoy.

CHILD CARE

OTTAWA CITIZEN'S EDITORIAL MATHEMATICS

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw the attention of the House to an editorial in today's Ottawa Citizen regarding the report of the Special Committee on Child Care. In that editorial the statement is made, and I quote:

A good day-care centre can cost $10,000 a year or more for each child.

We have all heard the claim, Mr. Speaker, that day care workers are underpaid and that wages account for 80 per cent of child care costs.

I have been informed that the accepted care-giver to child ratio for preschool children—and by that I mean children ages three to five—is one care-giver to eight children.

Using simple arithmetic, if the cost per child is $10,000 a year and 80 per cent of that $10,000 goes to wages, as is claimed, the care-givers should each be receiving $64,000 a year in wages.

Today is April Fool's Day, Mr. Speaker, but in the important matter of dealing with the future of our children I believe we should stop fooling around and start providing the Canadian people with the facts, the facts that add up.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SITUATION OF SHIPYARD WORKERS IN LÉVIS, QUE.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, Canadian shipyards especially in Quebec are in a major crisis situation. When I saw the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) rising a while ago, I thought that he was going to stand up and fight for the workers in his riding, more specifically the 2,300 Lévis shipyard workers who were counting on him for help.

Last Friday, Mr. Speaker, when I was in the Quebec area I took pictures of the shipyard to show just how idle and empty it is. There is not a single ship nor a single worker in the shipyard. On three different occasions, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté) did promise to build the Caribou there. Well, once again he has misled the Lévis people, the Quebec people, for the Caribou venture has been delayed.

I dare hope that the next time the Hon. Member for Lévis rises in the House, it will be to stand up for his constituents.

HUMAN RIGHTS

UKRAINE—HARASSMENT OF CHRISTIAN BELIEVERS BY SOVIET AUTHORITIES

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, once again I stand before this House to speak out on behalf of victims of religious repression by Soviet authorities, and specifically the continued harassment and imprisonment of individuals seeking to keep alive the spirit of Christianity in Ukraine.

In 1975 Vasyl Kobryn was dismissed from his job for refusing to work on Easter Sunday, which had been declared a workday in order to harass Christian believers working at the factory. Kobryn lodged complaints and signed statements regarding his treatment, eventually becoming an active member of the Group for the Defence of Believer's Rights and the Rights of the Church in Ukraine, rising to the position of chairman in 1983.

As a result of his activities Kobryn was arrested as a criminal, tried and convicted of spreading so-called lies against the Soviet system.

The Soviet Government continues to take direct action against individuals whose faith and belief in Christianity have led them to take a stand against those forces who would deny them the basic right to practise their religious beliefs openly.

Once more I must urge the Canadian Government to seek effective means to impress upon the Soviet Government our strong and united opposition to this continued persecution.

INQUIRY WHETHER LINGUISTIC DUALITY IS PROTECTED IN FREE TRADE NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in his report tabled yesterday, the Commissioner of Official Languages criticized the Government for its inertia and made it abundantly clear that in this area as in so many others, the Conservative Government is serving up a lot of promises and hollow phrases but very little action.

We all know that bilingualism is one of the vital elements that distinguishes Canadians from Americans. Could the Prime Minister give the House the assurance he will protect our linguistic duality in his free trade negotiations with the United States?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Commissioner commented favourably on several federal initiatives with respect to bilingualism. For all of us it is the cornerstone of our life as a nation and as a people, and there will be new projects that will provide even more support for this Canadian reality.

As far as linguistic duality is concerned, I think I mentioned the subject in my speech on September 25, 1985, here in the House, and during the debate where we said quite clearly that this language dimension was not only enriching but indispensable for Canada's future and that our cultural and linguistic life was not on the table in negotiations that were strictly concerned with trade.

COMMISSIONER'S REFERENCE TO CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE NEGOTIATIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it may be that the Prime Minister has not been specific enough in his indications to Canadians because the Official Languages Commissioner, right at the beginning of his report, under the heading "Megatrends in Bilingualism", expresses concern that we are going to sell out our two official languages in our negotiations with the United States on free trade.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That appears right at the beginning of his report, so I say—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps Hon. Members would allow the question to be put.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, if it were only my words that were disturbing Hon. Members opposite, I might understand, but this is an officer of Parliament, the Official Languages Commissioner, who is blaming the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What concrete steps is the Prime Minister taking in supervising our negotiations with the United States on free trade to ensure that our bilingualism and our policy of multiculturalism are not being endangered by the style of those negotiations?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I noted—and I will wait for the "blues"—that the Leader of the Opposition says that in this report the Commissioner of Official Languages expresses concern that we are going "to sell out our two official languages" in free trade negotiations. I am going to read the report again very carefully, because that strikes me as being a very grave distortion of what the Commissioner for Official Languages said. I will read it carefully, and I urge the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition to do the same.

The Commissioner expresses concerns to which he is entitled. It is his job to protect official languages in the country, and we give him every support and every encouragement in that endeavour. However, I think I made very clear on behalf of the Government on September 25 at the University of Chicago, in a major speech on behalf of the Government of Canada, and here in the House of Commons during the debate on free trade, that culture and language were very much cornerstones of our national identity, that they were not at any time or in any circumstance in jeopardy or part of the negotiation process. That has been accepted by all sides. That has been accepted by the Americans. That has been accepted by all reasonable Canadians, and I hope eventually to persuade the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I think the Prime Minister ought to begin by attempting to persuade the Commissioner of Official Languages.

PRIVATIZATION OF CROWN CORPORATIONS—BILINGUAL SAFEGUARDS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my last question is directed to the Minister of State (Privatization).

In his report, the Commissioner of Official Languages says, and I quote, that "the privatization of federal agencies should be carefully scrutinised from the language angle to forestall any slippage in bilingual performance. As this subject is becoming more and more topical, we badly need a legal guideline to protect service to the public."

Could the Minister inform the House today what steps she has taken to guarantee that in selling our Crown corporations, we are not selling out bilingualism?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, I have made it very clear privately, as has the Prime Minister publicly, to all Crown corporations whether or not they are being privatized that the Government has a very strong commitment to bilingualism. In the Teleglobe case, the headquarters of the company will remain in Montreal. In all our companies which are under review, this is an issue we are addressing very carefully.

PUBLIC SERVICE—COMPLIANCE WITH LINGUISTIC REQUIREMENTS BY DEPUTY MINISTERS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, last October 23 the President of the Treasury Board stated in this House:

> There has been no Government decision which could weaken the efforts of this Government as concerns official languages.

In light of this assurance, can the Minister confirm a report carried by the Official Language Commissioner's report yesterday, which is in The Globe and Mail this morning, that a recent government decision has made it easier for Deputy Ministers and senior managers to avoid complying with the linguistic requirements for their positions?

[Translation]

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): In response to my colleague from Ottawa—Vanier, Mr. Speaker, I can say that the Government is as committed as ever in its pursuit of linguistic duality in Canada, as it has always been. Mr. Speaker, I can also say that ours is the Government which, under the leadership of our Prime Minister of course, has formally promised to introduce the first and greatly overdue amendments to a statute which has been on the books for 16 or 17 years already. These amendments will be introduced in the House in the next few weeks or months so that the legislation be more attuned to the current needs of the Canadian people.

POLICY ENUNCIATION—EFFECT ON PUBLIC SERVICE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, this Minister issued the guidelines I have here—I can send him a copy if he does not have one—to reduce the linguistic requirements for appointments of deputy ministers in the national capital regional and to the EX management group bilingual positions in a bilingual region.

Knowing the impact and influence which a unilingual superior may have on employees, on his own staff, when it comes to the language of work, how can the Minister explain that these policy statements which originate from his Department, such retrograde statements of management policy coming from him and his officials, indicate obvious and terribly retrograde laxity with respect to leadership within the Public Service of Canada?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the languages of work, the only laxity to which we can indeed point a finger is the laxity of the former Government. The new Government has taken and is taking steps to review the legislation and regulations as a whole to make sure that the public is getting better services in both official languages, and that the language of work is improved in both official languages. This is what we are doing, Mr. Speaker.

REQUEST FOR MORE FUNDS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In the area of child care, the greatest need now, all experts agree, is for increased services. But in the Minister's Budget, $300 million have not yet been allocated. Why does not the Minister use this money to increase these services right away?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, this question has been answered before, namely, when the Minister of Finance came forward with his Budget in February. A direct decision was taken that decisions such as child care would be made and announced by the Government as an individual policy item. The Minister of Finance also indicated in his Budget that there were designated figures in it. Perhaps the Hon. Member could read them. As I pointed out before, that was the approach we took. Nothing has changed from when I gave him the answer the last time.

COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, what has changed is that we have had a report brought in by a committee of this House supported only by a majority of Conservative Members on the problem of day care. Recommendations have been made that are absolutely disastrous in terms of meeting the need for services. The Government of Prince Edward Island joined this morning with the Government of the Province of Ontario, the Government of Nova Scotia, the Government of Manitoba, all other experts in the field and church leaders in saying that the priority recommendations of the Conservative committee were wrong. As well, they have called for an immediate increase in services in terms of day-care places for the children of Canada. Will the Minister now make a decision, change those priorities and use the $300 million to provide the badly needed services for children?

• (1430)

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the premise of the Hon. Member's question. It is not supported by a vast number of parents in Canada today. The vast majority of parents want to have a choice. The Government has clearly said that that will happen in child care. We have also said that there will be additional services.

The Hon. Member has said that this is only supported by the Conservative majority. I would point out that there happens to be a majority of Conservatives in the House who received a very strong mandate back in September, 1984, and that should be considered by the Hon. Member. Additionally, I find it rather strange that the member of his Party on the committee mentioned native care yesterday when it is a recommendation which she herself supported in the committee. Then she came here to the House and put a different face on it.

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN SERVICES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, if he decides to be frank with the House some time, the Minister will know why our member of the committee took the position she did. She, along with other Members of the House and members of my Party, has called consistently for increased services for the native people of Canada. It is wrong for the Minister to suggest the contrary.

The Minister has talked about choice. As far as I understand it, one thing all Parties agree on is that there should be a great choice for families in day-care services. Considering that some 75 per cent of Canadians say that the immediate priority is to have an increase in services, why does the Government not do something about that and allocate money that would increase services for the children of Canada who need them?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to note that the Leader of the NDP has finally started to come around. Up until now, he has always said that it should be one way only and that is universal day care—

Mr. Broadbent: That's a lie; that's a lie.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Minister.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, the NDP position has been one way only. It has been for universal publicly-funded day care and everyone is supposed to fit the pattern. Today he says the family is important.

Mr. Riis: It's a lie and you know it. Liar.

Mr. Broadbent: Go back to church, Jake, and learn the truth.

Mr. Riis: Tell the truth for once.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): So I am saying—

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid that this has gotten into debate. The Hon. Member for York South—Weston.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE—PARTICIPATION OF FRANCOPHONES

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and concerns the Government's apparent lack of commitment to bilingualism. As the Prime Minister knows, there is a proposal before the Treasury Board which would reduce Francophone participation objectives in the RCMP. The Official Languages Commissioner was extremely critical of this action, stating that it would dangerously compromise the force's ability to meet the requirements of the Official Languages Act and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. If the Prime Minister is as committed as he says he is to bilingualism in Canada, will he instruct the RCMP that this Parliament will not tolerate reductions in Francophone participation levels in the RCMP?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the Hon. Member and the House that the Government is committed to bilingualism. We are committed to it in the RCMP and there is an amended Article now before the Treasury Board with respect to this matter. I have had a number of discussions with the Commissioner and I am satisfied that a resolution satisfactory to all parties and to the country will be forthcoming very shortly.

REQUEST THAT CLEAR INSTRUCTIONS ON LINGUISTIC DUALITY BE GIVEN TO NEW RCMP COMMISSIONER

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the Prime Minister. He is well aware that in its recruiting process and its language policies, the RCMP is undermining the Official Languages Act. Could the Prime Minister assure us that he will give the new RCMP Commissioner clear instructions emphasizing that Parliament expects him to strongly promote the linguistic duality within our national police force? Will he do that?

[English]

Will he do that?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member is well aware that the new Commissioner-designate is fluently bilingual. I had the opportunity to be with him for 10 days during an inspection trip in Europe and I had an excellent opportunity to discuss these problems and matters with him. I can assure the Hon. Member that he is committed to bilingualism. Frankly, I look forward to working with a man who has already devoted 30 years of service to the RCMP. I would also like to take this opportunity to commend the retiring Commissioner who has done an excellent job for this country.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

INQUIRY WHEN GOVERNMENT WILL RESPECT AND REINFORCE ACT

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Francophones both in and outside Quebec have a right to obtain government services in their own language. This Government has now shown its "outrage" towards the basic principles of the Official Languages Act. Considering that the Official Languages Commissioner has often reiterated in the past his criticism of the Government, when will the Government finally abide by and enhance the Official Languages Act?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the Hon. Member is talking about. Explicit mention was made at times in the House of the fact that the Government of Canada would amend the Official Languages Act.

Mr. Gauthier: For the past two and a half years.

Mr. Mulroney: The Liberal Whip says: For the past two years. The fact is that this Act, which has been in the books for the past 17 years, has never been amended; at last, a Government is going to do it, a Conservative Government which is correcting the mistakes and blunders of the Liberal Government.

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE—LACK OF RESPECT FOR OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, the Government had already promised these amendments two years ago, and we are still waiting for this legislation to be duly enforced.

My supplementary question is directed to the Solicitor General. Mr. Speaker, is he aware that some 1,800 grievances have been made against the Canadian Security Intelligence Service for its failure to comply with this legislation. When is he going to insist that they abide by the basic principles of the Official Languages Act. When is it going to show consideration for Francophones in this Service?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have this opportunity to answer the Hon. Member's specific complaint about the 1,700 telexes sent to the Quebec region in English only in the first 10 months. The Commissioner of Official Languages has said that "very firm directives and stricter controls were subsequently introduced by CSIS and the number of such incidents declined considerably". As well, he said that "the service began to improve considerably in the closing months of 1986".

FINANCE

CREDIT CARD INTEREST RATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Finance. Following the unanimous report of this House on credit cards that was tabled in this House, the Minister of State said that if rates did not come down, Parliament would act.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister also stated that the Government policy would be to have credit card interest rates that would not be higher than 5 per cent over prime. My question to the Minister of State for Finance is this: Is it still this Government's policy to have credit card interest rates that are no higher than 5 per cent over prime?

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Hon. Member asked that question. It allows me to clarify two important mistakes made in his question. First, I made it very clear that, in my mind, interest rates are too high. The way to bring those rates down is to have the market-place do it. Parliament's action in this realm does not necessarily have to be action on rates. It can be on disclosure. It can be on all sorts of dimensions of the problem, perhaps including rates.

• (1440)

Second, the committee report and the research that went into it mentioned the 4 per cent or 5 per cent above prime rate profit margin. I have said that I am looking at that as perhaps a guideline. Whether that is the proper profit or not would depend on the type of card and the type of enterprise.

Mr. Garneau: In a press conference the Minister suggested that card issuers should charge 4 per cent or 5 per cent above the prime rate. I was just quoting his own words.

[Translation]

CREDIT CARD INTEREST RATES—INQUIRY WHY DIRECTIVE NOT OBSERVED

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the report has been tabled 13 days ago. I checked this morning, there are one, two, three, four, five, six banks whose interest rates on credit cards are higher than the 5 per cent above prime suggested by the Minister. I would ask the Minister of State for Finance when he intends to move in? Has he already taken action? Why has his directive not been followed?

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Scarborough West has been on top of this problem for two years. The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides has suddenly woken up to the problem. The Government's response to the report was almost instantaneous, and that is on the record.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—POSSIBILITY OF UNANIMOUS HOUSE RESOLUTION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Yesterday I asked the Minister of the Environment what he thought of the idea of this House unanimously passing a resolution calling on the U.S. Congress to enact acid rain abatement legislation. The Minister did not close off that possibility. He indicated he was open to something like that. Has the Prime Minister had an opportunity to think about it and will he indicate on behalf of the Government whether or not there is a willingness to sit down with Members from all sides and craft a resolution which could be passed quickly and unanimously to indicate to the U.S. public, Congress, and indeed the President, just how seriously Canadians take the issue of acid rain?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can assure my hon. friend, who has a very significant interest in this matter, that I have, as has the Secretary of State for External Affairs, conveyed the firm and I think unanimous view of this House regarding acid rain. We have made the point repeatedly, and I was pleased to note that the Leader of the NDP indicated a few days ago he had noticed progress on the acid rain issue as a result of persistence by the Government of Canada. It is encouraging for us to realize that other Parties recognize this improvement.

I have conveyed many times the view of the Hon. Member, and I shall be doing it again because his view is shared by all Members of this House. I thank him for his enthusiasm and ardent support of the Government on this initiative and assure him that I will be reporting back to the House, and to him specifically.

NEED FOR ACID RAIN ABATEMENT LEGISLATION IN UNITED STATES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister ought not to interpret my suggestion as casting any doubt on the forcefulness with which he has put Canada's case. That is not in question. What is in question is the value of a unanimous resolution of this House. I know it is possible if there is the political will, and I cannot see what could possibly be wrong with the House expressing in this symbolic and highly political way the unanimity with which Canadians regard the urgent need for acid rain abatement legislation in the U.S. Would the Government be prepared to sit down with Members from all sides and see what we can come up with?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, this is normally a matter to be discussed among House Leaders. I would be happy to ensure that the Government House Leader is available for discussions on this matter.

May I tell my hon. friend, with respect to parliamentary expression and going back to an exchange just a few days ago, a Democratic Congressman came up here and delivered himself of an opinion as to what the Government of Canada should do and how we should conduct ourselves. I noticed yesterday that his distinguished Leader in the U.S. Senate issued a statement which would have the effect of diminishing the impact of what President Reagan has been trying to do.

Mr. Blaikie: That is why we need the resolution.

Mr. Mulroney: I know the American administration and President Reagan in particular have come in for some strong denunciation by some Members of the House. In point of fact he has moved very substantially and I will need the Hon. Member's help in getting Congress to move, including those members of it who take the liberty of coming up here and lecturing us but who should be persuading their own leadership to act, because without congressional action a solution is impossible.

TRADE

IMPORT QUOTAS—MEETING OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE CAUCUS MEMBERS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister for International Trade I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. I have in hand a copy of a memo sent yesterday by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister advising PC caucus members of a meeting to be held yesterday to discuss the redistribution of import quotas on chicken, cheese, and footwear. Can the Prime Minister tell us if the Government called this meeting to inform Tory MPs of a new patronage tool for the distribution of import quotas, or is it simply an attempt to tone down dissent in a Tory caucus upset with the potential loss of import quotas in the free trade negotiations? Which is it?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as usual with regard to the Hon. Member's questions, neither.

[Translation]

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, there is nothing funny for people in farming and elsewhere to lose quotas. I am saying this to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

REQUEST THAT MINUTES BE TABLED

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Since that meeting was sponsored by the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown, in his Government capacity as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of International Trade, is the Prime Minister prepared to table in this House the minutes of that meeting if the Government has nothing to hide, and to consult the Opposition in matters of such significance? Is he prepared to do that?

[English]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member becomes more and more ludicrous in his—

An Hon. Member: Ravings.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —in his assertions in this House. Thank you. I had to look to one of my colleagues for a calm enough word to describe the Hon. Member's activities.

What occurred here was a discussion between a Parliamentary Secretary and interested members of the government caucus. That normally happens. It happened when the other Party was in office. What is absolutely unforgivable is for the Hon. Member to use his position in this House to try to create false fears among Canadians, as he regularly does.

FISHERIES

PLANNED REOPENING OF STAR-KIST PLANT IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, in the unavoidable absence of the Hon. Member for Carleton—Charlotte, who has been at the front and centre on this critical issue, I would like to direct this question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. It has been reported that Star-Kist Limited announced today it is prepared to accept the Government's proposed new quality testing techniques and that, as a result, it plans to reopen its Bayside, Charlotte County, New Brunswick plant within the very near future. Can the Minister confirm if he has received such a statement from Star-Kist?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, yes, indeed, I received a letter of proposal late this morning from the principals of Star-Kist Incorporated. This is the result of many weeks and months of negotiations and a number of fairly generous offers this Government made with a view to securing the reopening of that tuna processing plant in New Brunswick. If I might just read two sentences from this letter: "With the implementation of this scientific testing as outlined by your experts . . . we intend to begin making improvements to our plant as indicated in the Morrison report. We estimate these improvements will take approximately 120 days to accomplish. We then intend to reopen the plant."

This is not only good news to all Members of this House, if all the necessary conditions can be met, but it will be particularly good news to the unfortunate workers in St. Andrews and St. Stephen, New Brunswick.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

EMPLOYMENT IN PUBLIC SERVICE

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. The Minister is well aware of the special program to increase employment in the Public Service for members of the visible minority communities, which began in the past fiscal year. Will he confirm that only six of the 50 positions promised for the first year of this three-year program have been filled during this year?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we have been making every possible effort to improve the access to employment in the Public Service by visible minorities, as we have with the disabled, Francophones, and women. We have consultative committees that are set up and meet regularly to make recommendations which are being followed up by the Treasury Board on a very regular basis to ensure that the greatest access possible is available.

I will have to defer to the Hon. Member as to the exact number. I will be happy to give him the numbers, but I can assure the Hon. Member that we are making every effort possible to give all these groups the greatest access possible to Public Service employment.

REQUEST THAT ALLOTTED POSITIONS BE FILLED

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is well aware that action is wanted and consultation is the merest beginning for it. Will the Minister assure us that the 44 positions that I understand have not been filled will be rolled over into the present fiscal year and not simply cancelled, thereby breaking a promise from the Government to members of the visible minority communities to see some real advance during this three-year period?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we will not break any promises. We made a formal promise that we would help these groups that were underprivileged in seeking employment in the Public Service of this country. We are acting on that promise. Those positions will not be cancelled. We will uphold those promises for those to whom they are directed.

SHIPBUILDING

CONSTRUCTION OF FISHING TRAWLERS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Yesterday the Council of Maritime Premiers issued a statement calling upon the federal Government to provide financial assistance to the beleaguered shipbuilding industry in order that a contract for the construction of seven fishing trawlers be carried out in Canada and not lost to subsidized yards such as are in Argentina. Will the Prime Minister undertake to the House and Atlantic Canadians to promise financial assistance to those shipbuilding yards to ensure that Canadian ships will be built in Canada, thereby increasing employment opportunities for Canadians?

[Translation]

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, indeed the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion has received a request from Prince Edward Island concerning the said program. We are now assessing that request and as it has been done everywhere else in the country, our decision will be aimed specifically at strengthening the shipbuilding industry in the Atlantic provinces.

[English]

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Canadians, particularly Atlantic Canadians in Pictou, Nova Scotia, and Georgetown, Prince Edward Island, have been waiting since 1984 for the Government to introduce a shipbuilding policy. Will the Prime Minister not now take positive action such as providing concessionary financing to domestic shipbuilding yards in order to provide jobs here in Canada? Why are you selling out our shipbuilding workers?

[Translation]

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the Hon. Member can thus describe the federal policy on the shipbuilding industry. Such were not the conditions elsewhere in the country and such they will not be in the Atlantic provinces. Steps taken or to be taken by the Governement in the Atlantic provinces are specifically aimed at strengthening that industry and we will be continuing in this direction.

[English]

FILM INDUSTRY

TELEFILM CANADA'S FINANCES

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. It concerns the decision not to allow Telefilm Canada to keep $18.5 million and let it be rolled over into the next fiscal year from the past year's funding. It effectively means a loss of that amount of money to independent film producers for this year. Will the Minister show some sensitivity to independent film producers and an understanding that the organization of funding for films takes a long time? The rule that money not spent immediately within the funding period is simply lost to the industry is very strict. Should there not be some sensitivity to make the rules suit the needs of the film production community?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I believe that is exactly the kind of policy we are pursuing. If the Hon. Member had cared to look at the record she would have seen that initially Telefilm Canada was funded under a long-term program which was converted to meet the actual annual cash flow needs of Telefilm Canada. There is no reduction of any kind in that budget. There is no cash need. There are no producers in this country who are not able at the moment to access the funds that are available. As a matter of fact, the budget was set at a level that will allow Telefilm Canada not only to continue its very worthwhile work but to have an assured base of support financially for years and years to come.

Ms. McDonald: I think the picture is not quite as rosy as the Minister would have us believe.

FUNDING PROVIDED BY TREASURY BOARD

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister consider whether Telefilm Canada should be funded on a revolving fund basis like the Canada Council? This is what Telefilm has asked for, what independent producers are seeking and what the community says it needs. Of course, anyone who knows the film industry is aware that the funding takes time to organize and the rules should be made to suit the needs of the community. It should not be some arbitrary rule of the Treasury Board.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the member said a number of times that I know certain things. One thing I do know is that in the years of operation so far Telefilm Canada, while meeting all the needs of the community, has not been able to spend the money that was at its disposal. We are meeting all the needs that are presented to us and we have put the funding of that organization on a sound basis for years to come. The Treasury Board is very responsive to that community and will continue to be responsive. The Government is committed to that community and will continue to be committed.

CHILD CARE

DAY CARE CENTRES IN SCHOOLS—REQUEST FOR FUNDS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Mrs. Stella Guay, President of the Quebec Bureau of Day Care Services and Mrs. Gagnon-Tremblay, Quebec Minister for the Status of Women, said it was unfortunate the Parliamentary Committee failed to consider Quebec's recommendations for more flexible funding criteria for day care programs. The federal Government does not recognize day care centres located in schools, and it is a fact that in 1986-87, the Quebec Government lost $15 million in this way. Would the Prime Minister be prepared to make some changes in day care funding to ensure that day care centres in schools, and there are 528 in Quebec, be considered on a par with other day care centres and thus entitled to full refund of costs?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, obviously at the last meeting of the Social Affairs Ministers we looked at the child care issue and some of the conditions that had to be considered. We also looked at the Canada Assistance Plan. We mentioned at that time that the federal Government's exposure was about $105 million annually and that it could be higher if the provinces in fact triggered the expenditure. The Hon. Member may know that the money is there if it is triggered by the provinces, and 50 per cent is then returned from the federal Government. I have no doubt that as we go through the child care reports, make recommendations, and have discussions with the provinces, some of these questions about what new flexibility should be arranged with respect to any child care financing will arise.

QUALITY OF SERVICES—NEED FOR ADDITIONAL FUNDING

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, everyone admits, and the experts agree, that we need to improve the quality of the service provided by day care centres. The Minister will recall that in 1985, the Conservative Government robbed Canadian families of $1.2 billion by de-indexing family allowances. You deceived our families. To correct this injustice, is the Minister, and now the Prime Minister, prepared to commit these $1.2 billion as funding for day care centres so that we can have quality day care in this country?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Member has mixed up two things again, as he does so often. He said that there was a partial deindexation of family allowance so that families have less. Let me repeat what I have said so many times. If he considers low-income families and examines the Canada Assistance Plan and the increase in the Child Tax Credit for those families, he will see that they are getting more than the reduction if the full indexing had been there.

FINANCE

CREDIT CARD INTEREST RATES—VISA REDUCTION

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, supplementary to other questions on credit cards, I have been informed that the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce has just announced it is lowering the rate on its Visa card from 18.6 per cent to 15.9 per cent. The bank is quoted as saying the impact of the parliamentary committee was a factor in the decision. Is the Minister of State for Finance prepared to monitor the other banks along the same lines?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to hear this news. I am very pleased that the Bank of Commerce made it clear that the House of Commons committee report was a factor in its decision. I commend that bank and those banks which have already lowered their interest rates. They are responding not simply to the House of Commons committee report but, of course, to the market. I would hope that retail stores and other financial institutions will look to their rates as well.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—DAIRY PRODUCTS INQUIRY

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The other day in the House the Minister of Agriculture made the statement, with regard to free trade negotiations, that the Government will negotiate the import of supply managed farm products in the same way production levels were agreed to in the Auto Pact. Does the Secretary of State for External Affairs agree with the Minister of Agriculture that Canada should allow the Americans a say in how many dairy products, poultry, and other supply managed products Canadian farmers will be allowed to produce?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, neither the Minister of Agriculture nor I agree with that unusual NDP position.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): The Secretary of State for External Affairs has only to read the record to find out exactly what the Minister of Agriculture said. Would he agree that allowing the Americans to have an input into Canadian supply management decisions would diminish our farmers' role in Canadian agricultural decisions and that this would be bad for agriculture in Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, for some time now the Government has made it clear that we were discussing neither supply management nor the Auto Pact. The NDP and the Liberal Party apparently want us to discuss the Auto Pact, but we are not going to. The NDP has suggested in this House of Commons that we should be giving away the Canadian Wheat Board. That was its suggestion the other day. Now it is suggesting we should allow the United States to discuss our supply management programs. That might be the position of the New Democratic Party; it is not ours.

FORGET REPORT—ANNUALIZATION PROPOSAL

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Yesterday the Minister met with his provincial counterparts to discuss the Forget Report and reform of the unemployment insurance system. Considering the known views of several provinces, is the Minister now ready to reject clearly Forget's annualization proposal which would substantially reduce unemployment insurance benefits?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of yesterday's meeting with the provincial Ministers of Employment was to seek their proposals concerning the unemployment insurance reform. As a matter of fact, the provinces did suggest that the annualization principle be rejected. It had been agreed before the propositions were heard that I would not make an announcement at the time. I think it would not be proper to make one today. The answer will be given around May 15.

EARLY RETIREES' ELIGIBILITY FOR BENEFITS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, considering the Minister's meeting with the provinces yesterday, will the Minister now abandon his unfair proposal that early retired Canadians must be laid off from a second job before they can collect unemployment insurance? Will he not recognize that that proposal is unworkable and inequitable?
