Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, that is entirely out of the question.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR LISTING OF HONORARY BALTIC CONSULS

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Minister will know that the Baltic Federation of Canada has for some 15 years been urging the federal Government to list honorary Baltic consuls in the External Affairs directory of diplomatic, consular and other representatives in Canada.

The Minister will also know that Canada does not recognize "de jure" the illegal annexation of the Baltic States to the Soviet Union. Will the Minister reaffirm his commitment to this policy by undertaking to list the Baltic consuls in the next edition of the External Affairs directory?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member knows that that question is under review in my Department.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask Hon. Members if they are leaving the Chamber not to interfere with the proceedings.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED USE OF UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Today there was an exchange between myself and the Leader of the New Democratic Party, with an interjection by the House Leader for the NDP, regarding child care. We can disagree in terms of what is best with respect to child care. However, what we cannot accept in the House is the Leader of the New Democratic Party and his House Leader calling an Hon. Member a liar. That is unparliamentary. The Leader of the New Democratic Party called me a liar today. I ask him to withdraw it. The House Leader of the NDP did the same thing. If they are honourable Members, I would ask both of them to withdraw that word.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe, and I think the record will indicate, that that word was actually recorded.

Some Hon. Members: It was used.

Mr. Riis: Yes, we all heard it because I did call the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) a liar. There is no question about that. I did it, in fact, on a number of occasions during the interchange because what he did say was untrue. However, because our position has always been consistent—

Some Hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Riis: When it comes to day care, we have always supported a variety of programs. When the Minister of National Health and Welfare said that was not the case then I did call him a liar.

Mr. de Cotret: Withdraw.

Some Hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Riis: However, being a parliamentarian, I will withdraw the use of—

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Andre: You are out of order and you know it.

Mr. Riis: Just relax, Harvie.

Mr. Speaker: I would remind Hon. Members that it is the Chair's duty to decide on these matters, and that the Chair is helped in that not always easy task by the respect which Hon. Members ought to pay to each other and to this place. I would ask that Hon. Members keep their comments to themselves.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, as a parliamentarian, I certainly will withdraw the accusation I levied at the Minister for National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Hees: What about you, Ed?

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I, too, join the House Leader of my Party in withdrawing any term which is deemed by all Members of this House to be unacceptable. I will not comment at length about the reality which lay behind it.

Mr. Speaker: I think this is an indication to Hon. Members that there are many ways of viewing the same set of facts. I want to thank both the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) and the Hon. Member from Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) for their withdrawals.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour and a privilege to present, pursuant to Standing Order 106, a petition signed by a number of Canadians who are concerned about the Government's intentions to proceed with changes to the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs which they believe will increase drug prices for average consumers and severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. They believe that the proposed changes by the Government represents simply another example of the Government's concessions to the United States at the expense of average Canadians in the free trade negotiations. They call upon the Government of Canada to withdraw this legislation which will be considered by the House later today.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table three petitions from residents of the Province of Ontario. They wish to exercise their right to submit their petitions to the House. They state that the proposed changes to the Patent Act will directly affect all Canadians who are not protected by private or government medicare programs; that the federal Government's proposal will raise the costs, which are already high, of provincial health care programs; and that the monopoly granted to innovative pharmaceutical companies will prevent competition from generic companies and will result in an increase in drug costs and prices and severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. They state that the proposed changes to the Patent Act represents another example of Canadian government concessions, in the free trade negotiations with the United States, at the expense of everyday Canadians. The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject this proposal to increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

RIGHT TO LIFE OF UNBORN BABIES—PROTECTION OF CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure indeed for me to present a petition on behalf of 337 residents of Grande Prairie, Alberta, who unanimously believe in the right to life of the child in its mother's womb and who vigorously oppose the killing of such innocent human life. Therefore they call upon the Government and Parliament to take the necessary steps to legally recognize the child in the womb as a human being with the same rights and privileges under the law as other human beings.

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to the House petitions from over 130 people in the Chilliwack-Sardis area of British Columbia. By the way, Mr. Speaker, that is in Fraser Valley East. These concerned people call upon Parliament to support Motion M-37 and allow unborn babies the protection of the Charter of Rights.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge—Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege to rise today to present a petition on behalf of some 2,300 constituents of Lethbridge—Foothills. The petition, organized by a volunteer of the Lethbridge and District Pro-life Association Resource Centre, protests the killing of thousands of unborn Canadian babies each year for reasons of convenience. The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to support Motion M-37 and allow unborn babies the protection of the Charter of Rights.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by a number of Canadians from White Rock, and Vancouver, B.C., Brampton, Ontario, and New Carlisle, Bonaventure, and Gaspé in the Province of Quebec. The petitioners protest the monopoly granted to innovative pharmaceutical companies which will prevent competition from generic companies and which will result in an increase in drug costs and prices and severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. They state that the proposed changes to the Patent Act represent another example of Canadian government concessions in the free trade negotiations with the United States at the expense of ordinary Canadians.

I also have another petition from people in British Columbia and Caplan, Quebec. They also ask that this legislation be withdrawn and that the proposed changes to the Patent Act be dropped. They say that they will directly affect Canadians who are not protected by private or governmental medicare programs and that they will raise the costs which are already high of provincial health care programs.

I humbly present these petitions on the behalf of these petitioners.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present two petitions. One is from residents of Clearwater and Dauphin, Manitoba. The other is from residents of Winnipeg. The petitioners have asked me to present their petitions with regard to Bill C-22. They say, in part, that the proposed measures will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis; and that the proposals of the federal Government will result in higher costs to provincial government drug plans. Therefore, they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

SMOKING—HEALTH HAZARD

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition which I would like to present which is signed by residents of Clearwater, Manitoba. In part, they say that cigarette smoking is Canada's major preventable health hazard and is responsible for 35,000 Canadian deaths each year; and that secondary smoke is implicated in the deaths of 500 involuntary smokers each year. They humbly pray and call upon Parliament to enact the proposed Non-Smokers' Health Act, Bill C-204.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege and honour to present a petition signed by many residents of Levack, North Bay, Powassan, Sturgeon Falls, Dowling, Skead, Copper Cliff, Sudbury, Lively, Chelmsford, and Azilda. These citizens point out that the Government's changes to the Patent Act will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers, will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs and that they will unfairly hurt Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis. They say that, in fact, these changes will result in higher costs to provincial government drug plans and, furthermore, that they are just another example of the Canadian Government knuckling under to the United States at the expense of average Canadians in its mad dash to reach a free trade agreement. Therefore, these petitioners call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will only increase prescription drug prices to Canadians.

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by many residents of Toronto who point out that troubles in many parts of the world are causing people to seek safety in Canada. They point out that, in fact, a standing committee of Parliament has proposed new procedures for refugee determination which are quicker and fairer than the ones which are now in force. They also point out that the proposals of the standing committee have the support of all Parties, as well as the Canadian Council of Churches, the Canadian Bar Association and the Canadian Jewish Congress, other groups and individuals. Therefore, they call upon Parliament to enact legislation that will embody the principles of fair and complete oral hearings of claimants before a refugee board, independent of the Immigration Commission; universal access to such hearings for every claimant in Canada; and a fair chance for claimants to arrive in Canada to present their claims.

SMOKING—HEALTH HAZARD

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have a different petition signed by many residents of the Toronto area. These particular petitioners point out that cigarette smoking is Canada's major preventable health hazard and is responsible for 35,000 Canadian deaths each year. They also point out that secondary smoke is implicated in the deaths of 500 involuntary smokers each year. The petitioners point out that Bill C-204 seeks to protect the health of Canadians by restricting the promotion of tobacco, guaranteeing smoke-free air to Canadian workers and travellers. They therefore call upon Parliament to enact, speedily, the Non-Smokers' Health Act, Bill C-204.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I, too, have the privilege of presenting to the House a petition signed by hundreds of petitioners, from places like Brampton, Toronto, Fort Erie, Kingston, Azilda; as well as White Rock, British Columbia; Strathcona, Manitoba; Port Coquitlam, British Columbia; Winnipeg, Manitoba; and numerous other communities across the country.

These Canadians, Mr. Speaker, are petitioning Parliament to rescind the efforts by the Government, in Bill C-22, to increase the cost of prescription drugs to Canadians. These petitioners feel that the elderly and the young will be particularly hurt by this legislation. They are hoping, Mr. Speaker, that their names on these petitions, as well as the names of thousands of others of their fellow Canadians, will somehow convince this Government and the Members of Parliament belonging to the government Party to heed their call and not proceed with this legislation.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I, too, have a number of petitions to present, on a number of subjects. All of these petitions have been certified correct as to form and content.

The first petition I wish to present, Mr. Speaker, is one signed by a number of residents of the great Province of New Brunswick, who not only signed the petition but personally presented it to me when I visited New Brunswick last month. These petitioners state that the federal Government's proposal to change the Patent Act as it relates to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. They also feel that this measure will hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis. They also express concern about the higher costs to provincial government drug plans. They call upon Parliament to reject these proposals, proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

SMOKING—HEALTH HAZARD

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, the next petition is from residents of such places as Edmonton, Alberta and Calgary, Alberta. In this case, the petitioners state that cigarette smoking is Canada's major preventable health hazard and is responsible for 35,000 Canadian deaths each year, and that secondary smoke is implicated in the deaths of 500 involuntary smokers each year. As Bill C-204, the Non-Smokers' Health Act, seeks to protect the health of Canadians by restricting the promotion of tobacco and guaranteeing smoke-free air to Canadian workers and travellers, the petitioners call upon Parliament to enact the Bill.

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): The next petition I have, Mr. Speaker, on a different subject, has also been certified correct as to form and content. It is a petition from residents of my own City of Toronto.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dingwall: Could you just elaborate further on where that is?

Mr. Young: The petitioners are from the east end of Toronto, which is a city south of here. The petitioners point out that troubles in many parts of the world are causing people to seek safety in Canada, and it goes on to point out that while Canada has established good standards insofar as refugee status determination is concerned, the procedures have broken down under the unexpected strains placed upon them. The petition goes on to point out that the standing committee of Parliament has proposed a procedure for refugee determination, a procedure which is quicker and indeed fairer than those now in force, and that those proposals are supported by the Canadian Council of Churches, the Canadian Bar Association, the Canadian Jewish Congress, and other groups and individuals. Therefore, the petitioners call upon Parliament to enact legislation that will embody the principles of fair and complete oral hearings of claimants before a refugee board, independent of the Immigration Commission; universal access to such hearings for every claimant in Canada; and a fair chance to arrive in Canada to present their claim.

Those are all of the petitions I have to present today, Mr. Speaker.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have eight petitions that I wish to present to the House today.

The first petition is signed by residents from Saskatchewan to Lunenburg, Nova Scotia, to such places as Ottawa, Nepean and Vanier in the Province of Ontario. These petitioners state that the monopoly granted to the innovative pharmaceutical companies will prevent competition from generic companies and thus result in an increase in drug costs, severely restricting the ability of the average Canadian to buy necessary prescription drugs. The petitioners, Mr. Speaker, humbly pray and call upon the Parliament of Canada to reject the proposals contained in Bill C-22.

The second petition is signed by residents of the Province of Quebec, La Belle Province. They, too, are opposed to the amendments to the Patent Act. They call upon the Government to withdraw this particular piece of legislation, for they, too, believe it will negatively affect the average Canadian, and particularly the disabled and senior citizens, insofar as the cost of prescription drugs is concerned. They, too, wish to have Bill C-22 withdrawn.

The third petition is signed by residents who hail from the great constituency of Cape Breton Highlands—Canso, from places like Judique, Nova Scotia; Dunvegan, Mabou, Creignish, Inverness—and other such distinguished communities of Cape Breton Highlands—Canso.

The petition states that whereas the monopoly granted to the innovative pharmaceutical companies will prevent competition from generic companies and will result in an increase in drug costs and prices, and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs, we hereby call upon our Member of Parliament to ensure that Bill C-22 is defeated, if not withdrawn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I do not know the subject matter of the remaining five petitions the member has, but if they are on the same topic, I would ask the Hon. Member to summarize the topic for all of the petitions. Certainly, the Chair will not object to his naming the place of residence of the petitioners. So, if the remaining petitions are on the same subject matter, I would ask the Hon. Member to summarize the purpose of the petitions.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I would certainly want to comply with your wishes in respect of the assertion you have just made. If you wish me to name all of the various places, I will try to do so in summary fashion; but I have to remind you, Mr. Speaker, that my speed reading is not up to par, with the result that it may take me some time to list all of the place names set out on the petitions.

An Hon. Member: Just give us some examples.

Mr. Dingwall: Well, I have Sussex Drive here; I have Maple Street; I have Russell, Ontario.

An Hon. Member: Give us the provinces.

Mr. Dingwall: The provinces. All right, Mr. Speaker. I shall gladly do that. We have residents of the Province of Ontario who have signed a petition; we have residents of Russell, Ontario. They state in their petition that whereas the monopoly granted to innovative pharmaceutical companies will prevent competition from generic companies and will result in an increase in drug costs and prices and severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs, we hereby request that Bill C-22 be withdrawn.

We have another petition, Mr. Speaker, from a great constituency, a constituency which has seen fit, on two occasions, to re-elect their Member of Parliament, the constituency of Cape Breton—East Richmond. They call upon the Government to withdraw Bill C-22 which will have negative effects for some four million Canadians including those not covered by drug programs, the disabled, senior citizens, and the poor. They, too, wish to have Bill C-22 withdrawn.

I also have another petition signed by individuals in the City of Ottawa which is, as you know, Mr. Speaker, the city in which the Chamber is located at the present time. I am not sure whether it will change after the next Government is elected. However, these petitioners are opposed to Bill C-22. They hope that the Government will withdraw this very regressive piece of legislation which will have negative effects upon the people of that particular area.

I have another petition signed by residents of the Province of New Brunswick. In fact, these individuals from Saint John,

New Brunswick are opposed to this particular piece of legislation which they believe will grant an extended monopoly to multinational corporations. They call upon the Government to withdraw Bill C-22, which they believe will have negative effects.

I have a final petition which I should like to present to the House.

Some Hon. Members: Name them.

Mr. Dingwall: Perhaps, with the consent of the House, I could name all the streets and communities if they so wish.

An Hon. Member: Go ahead.

Mr. Dingwall: Since there is a consensus, there are several names from Sturgeon Falls, Ontario and from Whitehorse Bay. Like the previous petitioners, they call upon the Government to withdraw Bill C-22 and the amendments thereto which will have negative effects upon senior citizens, the disabled, the poor, and other Canadians. They hope that the Government of the day will see its way clear to withdrawing Bill C-22 in order to protect the system in place which has served Canadians very well.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your patience. As you can see, a great number of Canadians are opposed to Bill C-22. As a result, they have written to me with various petitions and have asked me to present them to the House. Again I thank you for your co-operation. In the future I will try to summarize, as briefly as possible, the names, the places, and the provinces, so that I will not have to take up the time of the House dealing with petitions opposing a very important piece of legislation.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition which is signed by people from various locations on Cape Breton Island—Sydney, North Sydney, New Waterford, and Louisbourg. They all state their disapproval and concern about the proposed changes to the Patent Act, which they feel will give rise to additional costs for drugs. They also feel that the Government is putting through these changes to try to buy, through the back door, a free trade agreement with the United States at the expense of the people of Canada. The people in my area of Cape Breton—The Sydneys and in other areas ask the Government to withdraw the proposed legislation in the interests of all Canadians.

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions to present from Canadians who are availing themselves of their right to petition Parliament.

The first one relates to the situation faced by refugees. It points out that trouble spots in many parts of the world cause people to seek safety from persecution in Canada, and that Canada has established standards of refugee determination which have broken down under strain. They also point out that the standing committee on Parliament proposed a new procedure which is quicker and fairer than the one now in force. It has not yet been put in place, even though it has support from a wide cross-section of Canadian organizations. The procedures which have been put in place turn away refugee status claimants from ports of entry before their claims are examined, which puts real refugees at risk. Therefore, the petitioners call upon Parliament to ensure that the Government and Parliament enact legislation which will embody the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of refugee claimants before a refugee board independent of the Immigration Commission, universal access to such hearings for every claimant in Canada, and adequate opportunity to arrive in Canada to make this claim.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the second petition relates to changes to the Patent Act which will affect prescription drugs. It points out that the changes will increase drug prices and restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary drugs. It also points out that this will have an adverse effect upon provincial prescription drug plans and is another example of Canada caving in to the United States. Therefore, the petitioners call upon Parliament to reject the proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

SMOKING—HEALTH HAZARD

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the third petition points out that cigarette smoking is Canada's major preventable health hazard and is responsible for 35,000 deaths each year, as well as 500 involuntary deaths from secondary smoke. It points out that Bill C-204 seeks to protect the health of Canadians by restricting the promotion of tobacco and guaranteeing smoke-free air to Canadian workers and travellers. It calls upon Parliament to enact Bill C-204, the Non-smokers' Health Act.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition, which has been duly certified by the Clerk of Petitions, from Canadian residents in Calgary, Vancouver, Lions Bay, and many other points in the West, and from New Brunswick residents in Casey Cape, Grande Digue, Cocagne, Shediac Bridge, and such places in that province. The petition points out that cigarette smoke has been the cause of the death of 35,000 Canadians each year and that even secondary smoke is involved in the deaths of 500 Canadians who did not want to smoke. It also points out that Bill C-204 would protect the health of Canadians by restricting the promotion of tobacco and by guaranteeing smoke-free air to Canadian workers and travellers. Therefore, it requests Parliament to enact Bill C-204, respecting the Non-smokers' Health Act and, as in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition from a number of Canadians living in Toronto, Ontario; Montreal, Quebec; Minnedosa, Manitoba; Wingard, Saskatchewan; Gravelbourg, Saskatchewan; Brockville, Ontario; Lakefield, Peterborough, Maidstone, Biggar and Rosetown; and in other parts of Ontario. The petitioners are concerned that many are driven by troubles in the world to seek safety in Canada where we have had good refugee status determination procedures and standards which have broken down under unexpected strains. Therefore, the standing committee on Parliament proposed a new procedure which would be quicker and fairer than the present one. It has support from all Parties and from major groups within the Canadian public. Present procedures are unsatisfactory because they turn away refugee status claimants from ports of entry before their claims are examined which puts real refugees at risk. They call upon Parliament to enact legislation which will embody the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of refugee claimants before a refugee board which is independent of the Immigration Commission, universal access to such hearings for every claimant in Canada, and adequate opportunity to arrive in Canada to make this claim. As in duty bound, your petitioners will every pray.

SMOKING—HEALTH HAZARD

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition which is one of many thousands from people across Canada who are petitioning Parliament in support of my Private Member's Bill, Bill C-204. These petitioners in particular are from the Toronto area; some from Scarborough. They point out that Bill C-204 seeks to protect the health of Canadians by restricting the promotion of tobacco and by guaranteeing smoke-free air to Canadian workers and travellers. Therefore, they petition Parliament to enact Bill C-204, the Non-smokers' Health Act.

• (1540)

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the second petition I have is signed by a large number of Canadians from a variety of locations. They point out that Canada has established good standards of refugee status determination but that procedures have broken down under unexpected strains. They point out that the standing committee of Parliament has proposed a new procedure for refugee determination that is quicker and faster than the present one in force. Whereas this proposal has support from all Parties as well as from the Canadian Council of Churches, the Canadian Bar Association, the Canadian Jewish Congress and other groups and individuals; and whereas recent regulations turning away refugee status claimants from ports of entry before claims are examined puts real refugees at risk, therefore, these petitioners call upon Parliament to enact legislation that will embody the principles of fair and complete oral hearings of claimants before a refugee board, independent of the immigration commission, universal access to such hearings for every claimant to Canada and a fair chance to arrive in order to present this claim.

LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS AT ARMED FORCES BASE AT GOOSE BAY

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the third petition I have the honour to present again represents the views of a sizable number of Canadians mainly from the Toronto area. These petitioners point out that low-level flight training of pilots of NATO countries at Canadian Forces base in Goose Bay, Labrador, disrupts the way of life of many of the native people there and that hunting, fishing, tourism and mining can provide more stable, healthy and peaceful employment than the Goose Bay Canadian Forces base. Whereas the training of pilots at Goose Bay to fly under radar into eastern Europe is a provocative and an aggressive action that tends to endanger world peace, these petitioners call upon Parliament to ensure that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) end all low-level flight training at the Goose Bay Canadian Forces Base and cease negotiation with NATO for the establishment of a larger base there.

OPPOSITION TO CANADA POST CORPORATE PLAN

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a number of petitions concerning the plans of the Government to privatize the rural post offices and to close other ones and provide superboxes. Most of these representations come from the towns of Echo Bay, Bruce Mines, Desbarats, Ophir, Richards Landing, Batchawana, Sault Ste. Marie, literally hundreds of names from Nairn Centre, Garden River, Wawa, Montreal River and Iron Bridge. In my constituency we have some 42 rural post offices so it is natural that these communities and the people living there are petitioning the Government not to implement this program to close rural post offices.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I have some six or seven petitions, concerning plans to change the Patent Act which would increase the price of drugs to Canadians, especially older Canadians, those who do not have proper drug plans and those who are sick and weak. Those petitions come from the communities of Webbwood, Bruce Mines, Thessalon, Spanish, Killarney, Iron Bridge and especially a poignant one from the residents of Algoma Manor in Thessalon, Ontario. It is my pleasure to present these and I hope the Government will respond in a positive way to these representations.

OPPOSITION TO EXODUS LINK CONTRACT

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to present to the House a petition on behalf of residents of Parkdale—High Park. The petition states their opposition to the Exodus Link parole privatization contract which would locate dangerous ex-convicts in Parkdale—High Park. The petition calls on the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) to terminate funding immediately to Exodus Link until an alternative location outside the boundaries of Parkdale—High Park has been found, and I want to add my full and complete support to this petition.

REQUEST FOR RETURN OF POSTAL BOXES TO TORONTO STREETS

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition also from the residents of Parkdale—High Park who have requested that I present this petition to the House of Commons on their behalf calling for the return of the mail postal boxes which were arbitrarily removed from the streets of Toronto without consultation. These signatures represent residents of Springhurst and Tyndall Avenues who have been greatly inconvenienced by the decision. I am pleased to add my strong support to their demand that Canada Post restore the mail boxes and ensure the level of efficient and convenient postal service that Canadians have every right to expect.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure and responsibility of presenting to this House of Commons and to the Government a number of petitions collected from across the country, including Sydney, Nova Scotia, Westmount, Montreal, and from other parts of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. They all concern themselves with Bill C-22. The petitioners petition the Government of Canada, the Conservative Party of Canada, to pull back a piece of legislation that will undermine the health care system that we have worked so long and hard to preserve.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, these people believe that the proposed amendments to the Patent Act will have a direct impact on all Canadians not covered by public or private health insurance plans. The Government's proposals will increase the already high costs of provincial health insurance plans.

Wherefore, the undersigned, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians across Canada.

[English]

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, one of the pleasures of being a Member of Parliament is to have the privilege of submitting petitions on behalf of citizens of Canada through which citizens avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right to present grievances which are common to the petitioners in the certain assurance that this honourable House will provide a remedy. Once more, I have an opportunity to present a petition which has been properly certified under Standing Order 106.

The first petition I would like to table is one which deals with troubling situations in many parts of the world causing people to seek safety in Canada from persecution. They recognize that while Canada has established standards for refugee status determination, these existing procedures have broken down under unexpected strains. While the standing Committee on Parliament has proposed a new procedure for refugee determination, which is quicker and fairer than the one now in force and which has gained the support among all Parties in Parliament as well as the Canadian Council of Churches, the Canadian Bar Association, the Canadian Jewish Congress and other groups and individuals, procedures have been recently adopted that turn away refugee status claimants from ports of entry before the claims are examined and thereby put real refugees at risk. Therefore, the undersigned, and the undersigned are a large number of citizens of Ontario, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that the Government and Parliament will enact legislation that will embody the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of refugee claimants before a refugee board which is independent of the Immigration Commission, with universal access to such hearings for every claimant in Canada and an adequate opportunity to arrive in Canada to make this claim, and as in duty bound, your petitioners ever pray.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have a second set of petitions which I can assure you have been found in conformity with Standing Order 106. These are additional signatures added to the thousands already entered on the record protesting the Patent Act changes. They petition as follows. They object to the Government's proposals to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs which will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. They note that the proposed measure will not only hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis by virtue of the increased costs that will result from this legislation, but they note as well that higher costs will be incurred by provincial government drug plans as well. They note with regret, sorrow and indeed embarrassment that this legislation is the result, not of priority being given to the needs of Canadians but of pressure imposed on the Government by the United States. The undersigned, our petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians. And as in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, today I shall try to be slightly more rapid than my colleague, if that is possible. I too have a petition to present which has been certified correct under Standing Order 106. It is a petition which, like so many thousands, came to the House from those who are concerned with changes to the Patent Act which are being debated by the House. This particular set of petitions comes from Halifax, Dartmouth, South Hampton and Bedford in Nova Scotia. It indicates very strongly the opposition of the petitioners to the Patent Act changes which, they feel, will definitely increase drug prices to Canadian consumers and will restrict the ability of average Canadians to purchase drugs. They feel as well that it reflects not the priorities of this country but very much an attempt on the part of the Government to satisfy the United States in order to initiate free trade arrangements with that country. I present this petition with my full support and in the hope that the Government will finally begin to listen to the many Canadians who are petitioning it.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Tuesday, March 31, consideration of Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee, and Motion No. 2 (Mr. Dingwall, p. 4745).

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I was shouted down by members of the New Democratic Party as I tried to put some facts on record regarding how Canadians feel about Bill C-22 and its intent and purpose which is to restore patent protection for creators of new drugs and to promote research and development in Canada along with better health care.

A public opinion survey was undertaken and the following statement was put to the people of Canada for response: "If I have to choose between lower prices for today's drugs or higher prices with more research money spent to speed up the development of new treatments, I would rather pay higher prices". In other words, people were asked if they would rather pay higher prices in order to have more research and development. It was a very loaded question. The choice is higher prices or lower prices but with higher prices there will be research and development and a search for new treatments. Twenty-eight per cent of the respondents disagreed with that statement. They said that they did not want higher prices, they wanted lower prices.

Mr. de Jong: Amazing on such a loaded question.

Mr. Andre: A loaded question? We are asking people if they want higher prices and the Hon. Member is asking if that is a loaded question in favour of the NDP argument. Sixty-four per cent of Canadians who responded to the survey agree with that position. They agree that what we are doing is right. Sixty-four per cent agree that research and development is the most important question.

Another statement made by the survey for response was: "I would support the Bill if the Government put in place a way of making sure that drug price increases would not be higher than the rate of inflation". That is precisely what is contained in the Bill. Increases in drug prices will not be higher than the rate of inflation. What did Canadians think of that statement? Eighty-two per cent of them agreed with that provision in this Bill. Six per cent said that it would depend, and those must be the Liberals. Twelve per cent disagreed, and those must be the New Democrats.

For days on end we have heard petitions and claims of outrage around the country about the provisions of Bill C-22. We can see now from these questions asked of Canadians that in fact all of those charges and claims are nonsense. If the opposition Parties believe, as they seem to believe because of statements they have made, that the will of the people is what should drive us, they should support this Bill. If they believe that more research and development in this important area is important, they should support it. If they believe that the inventor who has created something of value deserves patent protection, just as any creator, they should support it. If they think Canada has a responsibility in the world to do its share of research and development in the search for cures for Alzheimer's, for cancer, for multiple sclerosis and for other afflictions, and if they think Canada should be a first-rate country participating in this important area as a first-rate country, they should support this legislation. If they believe that they have a responsibility to do what is best for Canada, they should support this legislation.

It is only small minds and narrow partisan purposes that keep opposition Members resorting to cheap parliamentary devices to delay even a discussion in the House of this legislation. It is a pathetic Opposition. I hope they will soon come to their senses. I hope we can pass this Bill so that Canadian scientists and university graduates will know that they will have an opportunity to work in Canada in the search for cures for these diseases and will not have to continue to go to the United States or Europe to pursue their careers. I think the public has spoken, and it is about time the House listened and acted.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the poll the Minister had conducted is very interesting. To say it is slanted would be putting it mildly. I cannot imagine any poll with results like that unless the test group were known supporters of the legislation. Even 20 per cent of those initially in favour of the legislation would have changed their mind by the time they were called. The poll runs directly contrary to one published in the Reid report of January 1, 1987. It said that 58 per cent of Canadians oppose the Bill and only 30 per cent support it. Some 12 per cent are unsure. There is a significant level of opposition among Canadians from all walks of life. It is not just one particular group.

Information released with the poll states that most Canadians expect the proposed legislation will result in increased profits for the drug companies rather than more research and development activity in Canada. It says that perception is very widespread across various population groupings, including current federal Conservative supporters. Even the Government's own supporters are opposed to the legislation. We have stated in this House that all Canadians are opposed to this legislation and accentuated the opposition of the young, the sick and the elderly. However, the poll indicates all Canadians oppose the legislation.

The information supplied with the poll goes on to say most consumers expect drug prices will increase as a result of the legislation. Even supporters of the initiative expect it to result in increased prices. Who is left? I suggest it is the Minister and maybe two or three members of his caucus who may really believe this legislation will do some good.

It is incredible that we are even debating legislation which is so harmful to the people of this country. It is incredible that the Government has not woken up to the fact that Canadians are opposed to the Bill. Everyone knows the Government has been solicited by the U.S. drug lobby. They have gone to members of the Government and people in our embassy in the U.S. They have used every possible trick in the book. They have used influential lobbyists with connections to the Government. It is rank, to say the least, that the people who elected the Government with an overwhelming majority now find that support thrown back in their face. Their feelings concerning drug prices are being completely ignored.

I want to compliment my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall), for the job he has done in putting forward the position of this Party on the legislation. Having done that, I would like to deal particularly with the proposed amendment which relates to inserting in the legislation a definition of research.

We have been told that if this Bill is passed the drug companies will invest $1.4 billion in research and development in Canada. The Minister has gone across the country telling everyone that they are in line for research and development money. He has been like a Tory Johnny Appleseed going from region to region telling people that their ship has come in. Those areas are experiencing regional disparity, they need industry, and he has held out the hope to them that he has the answer. All they have to do is have faith in the legislation and they will be the beneficiaries of a brand new industry employing numerous people. That is a fallacy, to put it mildly. It has built up the hopes of a great many people, but the people are not taken in. They do not believe for one minute that this legislation will mean additional jobs. The Government says that 3,000 good high-paying jobs will be created. The facts tell us differently.

Before 1969, when the former Liberal Government brought in legislation to reduce the rampant rip-off of consumers by the major drug companies, there was no investment in research and development in Canada. In fact, there has been considerable investment since that time and it has nothing to do with this legislation. Where in the legislation are we shown what will happen if the drug companies do not give us the research and development they say they will? What are we going to do? We have a parliamentary review but there is no linkage. Who in the heck do we expect will believe what the Government is saying? It is incredible. Not only will it increase drug prices but it insults the intelligence of Canadians.

The legislation would require the multinationals to make or buy their basic ingredients in Canada if they want full patent protection. The new legislation removes that requirement. We are regressing. There is nothing here for the people to believe in. When the Government, through its own ineptitude, was unable to introduce the Bill in June, instead of apologizing or feeling embarrassed it punished Canadians by making the Bill even more ridiculous than it was then.

The Government says that over the next 10 years we are going to get $1.4 billion in research and development. That is absolutely incredible. Multinationals will have their profits rise by $3.5 billion over the next five years. The problem is that even if they did invest $1.4 billion in R and D, that is considerably less than the $4 billion to $5 billion it will cost Canadians through increased drug prices. There is no way the people of this country can win. The question really comes down to what will be the most damaging medicine to Canadians, and excuse the pun. We know that regardless of what happens it will not be in the interests of the people of this country.

I hope, I think in vain, that the Government will withdraw this Draconian legislation. The rest of the western countries look upon what Canada has done concerning competition in the distribution of drugs as a model. We are now going in reverse by throwing this model legislation and an enviable position away, and with it the price stability of drugs in Canada.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to join in the debate on this amendment to Bill C-22. The Opposition is asking the Government to include a definition of research and development in its legislation because we do not trust the multinational drug companies, we do not trust the Government, and we do not trust the Minister.

This legislation will result in a substantial increase in price for new drugs. It is estimated that Canadians saved over $200 million in 1983 because of the existing restriction in the amount of time the multinationals could have a monopoly in marketing their drugs. The Government has told us that this legislation is necessary in order to encourage more research and development in this country. In fact, the Minister stated that it will create over 3,000 new high-tech research jobs in Canada. Documents obtained through access to information show that the Minister's Department has other figures. While the Minister claims that 3,000 new high-quality research jobs will be created, his departmental document shows that in the best case scenario there will only be 1,148 new jobs. The document also shows that another 652 jobs are classified as technical, meaning lab technician jobs which could be filled by those with an undergraduate or community college standing. According to the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, another 620 jobs would be for managers, cleaners, animal keepers, statisticians and clerks.

Instead of the 3,000 high-quality research jobs for Canadian scientists and biochemists in the next 10 years, as the Minister has claimed, his Department shows in its study that there will only be 1,148 jobs. That is why we do not trust the Government, the Minister and certainly not the multinational corporations. We are asking for a definition of research in the legislation to which the drug companies would have to adhere. Why is the Government opposed to including such a definition in the legislation? Why does it want the Cabinet and the bureaucrats to decide what research means? It is not even willing to include the definition of research as it is found in the Income Tax Act. The broad term of research can include many things.

When the committee of the House was dealing with this legislation it heard testimony that the type of research that occurs in this country is often low-grade research, done to ensure that the product the multinational is developing in this country meets the standards of the Department of Health and Welfare. It is also research conducted to develop variations of existing drugs due to the high profit margin on these drugs; the drug companies are attempting to develop variations of those drugs.

For example, Doctor Lexchin, who is a leading authority in this country on the economics of the drug industry and the type of research it does, has stated:

> So the pattern of drug company reinvestment in research and development worldwide tends to be that they go for the bucks; they do not go for the health needs.

Later in his comments he stated:

> Without specifying what kind of research the government wants these multinationals to engage in, it is our feeling that the pattern of investment here in Canada, whatever new money we get, will be the same as the pattern of investment worldwide. In other words, most of the products that are researched here will have no major therapeutic value.

Yet the Minister stood in the House recently to insinuate that without this type of legislation we will not see the cures for Alzheimer's disease or cancer or other diseases for which men and women throughout the world are trying to find cures. The Minister is suggesting that this Bill is necessary because the drug companies need the money to develop cures that we all hope will be found. However, we do not know that this Bill will be of any assistance in developing cures to these ailments because there is no guarantee that the billions of dollars the multinational companies will derive as a result of the Bill will be spent in developing cures for such diseases as Alzheimer's and cancer. We do not trust the Government. That is why we ask that it include a definition of research in the legislation.

During his remarks this afternoon the Minister commented on the poll results. I have the results of two independent polls that were conducted by Angus Reid and Gallup. Both polls show that an overwhelming majority of Canadians are opposed to this legislation. The drug industry, ever mindful of its image and always having the resources to work on it, bought its own poll. It is not surprising that the results seem to show that the majority of Canadians are behind the Government's legislation in Bill C-22. It is very interesting that two independent polls—Gallup and Reid—show one thing while the one commissioned by the multinational drug companies seems to show something else. I will leave it to the Canadian people to determine which of these polls they should believe.

The Government, the drug industry, and the Minister in particular have a credibility problem. They are not believed by the people of this country. The people of this country do not believe that that Minister is acting in the interests of the Canadian people. They believe, and I support them in their belief, that the Minister and the Government are acting in the interests of the multinational corporations. Our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is a branch plant manager and that is all he is. He is attempting to run this country as a branch plant. I think the Canadian people feel enough is enough and are just hoping for an election which will turf this Government out so we can have a Government by Canadians and for Canadians.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the amendment to Bill C-22 which is before the House today is, I think, completely agreeable to the Government. The Government has not bothered to have the Minister in the House for the debate, but since the Minister is basing his reason for this legislation on the fact that he is going to gain a lot of extra research and development—he talks about $1.4 billion of research and development—he would want to identify what "research" means. The motion before us defines research in the following way:

> ""research is exploratory and innovative work undertaken on a systematic basis towards the acquisition of new knowledge in new ways. New knowledge involves the integration of newly acquired information into existing hypothesis, the formulation and testing of new hypothesis or the re-evaluation of existing observations;".

That is not something the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) dreamed up on his own, although he is certainly capable of developing a definition, having a legal mind and an excellent legal background. He has taken this definition directly from Regulation 2900 of the Income Tax Act, which defines research and development. Therefore, I think this is a valid description.

The Government does not want to say it is bringing in this legislation to pay billions of dollars back to the multinational corporations in the United States because the President of the United States twisted the Prime Minister's arm. But there has to be some reason for the Government bringing forward this legislation, and that is, we will gain research and development and $1.4 billion of investment.

It is well documented that for every $1 billion of R and D the Government gains, Canadians will have to pay $3 billion $4 billion in additional drug costs. So who wins? The multinationals win. Canadians will not win because they must pay. Members of the House of Commons will not pay because they have a drug plan. It is not 100 per cent but it covers most of their drugs. It will not be the people in executive positions or civil servants who will pay. It will be the four million or five million Canadians who do not have drug plans, those who are self-employed and those generally in lower income brackets. Instead of paying $2 for a prescription drug, they will pay perhaps $10 or $12. Of course that has been well documented by CBC and other groups.

I do not agree with the legislation. I think if the Government had come forward with the kind of legislation the Eastman report recommended, it would have received a lot of support. I am not sure the New Democratic Party would have supported it, but the Government certainly would have received support from our caucus.

The Eastman report stayed on middle ground. It costs about $100 million to create a new pharmaceutical drug. There is a reasonable argument for, say, a four year exclusive patent right and perhaps a special fund for R and D. If the Government had brought forward that kind of legislation, we would have supported it. However, this is just a locked in patent legislation. There is certainly no evidence that the R and D commitment will be kept. Over a 17 year period of exclusive patent rights, the benefits to Canadians compared to the costs are simply not there.

I hope the Government will support this amendment which simply gives a definition of "research" under the Act. I mentioned the importance of the excellent Eastman report which looked at the whole industry. As I indicated, the report stayed in the middle in providing adequate benefit to the drug companies if they actually do original research which creates new drugs which are beneficial to Canadians.

The Minister spent a considerable time justifying his legislation by quoting a poll, which I suppose his caucus paid for and therefore received the answers they wanted. I would point out to Hon. Members of the House the results of the Reid poll taken in January 1987. It asked the question:

> As you may know, the Government recently presented legislation which will give drug companies exclusive patent rights to manufacture and sell the drugs they invented for a longer period of time than they have now. Other companies will not be allowed to produce or sell less expensive copies of most drugs for 10 years. Do you yourself support or oppose this proposed legislation?

This survey was conducted on a 1666 sample base across the country. Only 30 per cent supported the position of the Government. 58 per cent opposed it. Twelve per cent were unsure. In Ontario, 54 per cent were opposed and 32 per cent were in favour. In Quebec, 35 per cent supported the legislation and 54 per cent were opposed. However, across the entire country, there was an almost two to one opposition to the legislation.

The amendment put forward by the Hon. Member Cape Breton—East Richmond is important. We are trying to pin down exactly what it is the Government requires in this legislation, so it can provide some written commitment.

This legislation does not even mention R and D. This amendment attempts to identify what R and D is, using an existing definition. If we are going to give this exclusive right for 10 or 17 years, and Canadians are going to have to pay $3 or $4 billion in return for only $1.4 billion in R and D, surely we should have a definition included in the legislation so we know where we are going, what the trade off is, and what the benefit is. At least, in our amendment, we have identified exactly what "research and development" is.

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on Bill C-22, and more specifically on the amending motion presented by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—Richmond East (Mr. Dingwall).

Mr. Speaker, your decision to let the House debate this motion separately is an indication of its importance. You could have decided to regroup the motion with others as you did for a number of other amendments, but I believe your decision was the right one. I shall, if I may, read the amendment presented by the Liberals, motion No. 2, dated March 5, 1987. The definition of "research"is as follows:

> ""research" is exploratory and innovative work undertaken on a systematic basis towards the acquisition of new knowledge in new ways.
> New knowledge involves the integration of newly acquired information into existing hypothesis, the formulation and testing of new hypothesis or the re-evaluation of existing observations."

What does that mean, Mr. Speaker? How discoveries are made has always been a subject of debate within the scientific community. Pemac told us that clinical research produces new pharmaceutical products. That is true. However, we must make a distinction between research on changing the colour of pills and research on a new drug that might, for instance, cure AIDS.

In our amendment, "research" is defined partly as "exploratory and innovative work undertaken on a systematic basis towards the acquisition of new knowledge and new ways". If that definition is not clearly indicated in the Act, the multinationals are going to set up their own. And I can guarantee they will not benefit Canadians or job creation in the high technology sector.

Blinded by the promises of the U.S. multinationals, the Minister told us the Bill would create 3,000 jobs. To hear the Minister, one would think all these jobs would be created in the research sector. I suggest we look at the straight facts. As we all know, to do research, scientists first have to do their experiments and testing on animals. That means people to clean the cages, people to take care of the animals at night and adminstrators to run the offices. Do people in the scientific communauty want to do that kind of work? Of course not. Do young graduates fresh out of university want to do that work? Certainly not! What we finally have is not 3,000 jobs in the research sector. If 3,000 jobs are created, nearly a third of those jobs, 600 or more, will be cage cleaner, janitor and administrator jobs.

Mr. Speaker, it is no surprise the multinational corporations did not convince this Conservative Government to insert into the Act the definition of the term "research". The reason is that those corporations did not want one. It was in their interest not to leave one. Because they succeeded in having the legislation amended between June, 1986 and November, 1986. After failing to have a Bill passed in 1986, the Government came back in November 1986 with a much weaker legislation. Clearly, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) bowed to pressures from President Reagan, the American Congress and the multinational corporations. One of the amendments made to the legislation between June and November dealt with manufacturing of basic ingredients. The June bill would have forced multinationals to manufacture basic ingredients in Canada, or else they were to lose their licenses. The November Bill has completely left out that clause, which means multinationals can go on, and I repeat go on importing ingredients from Puerto Rico or any other Third World nation. Worse still, they will be able to go on overstating the costs of their imports in order to avoid paying taxes.

I sincerely believe that if the term "research" is not defined in the Bill, the multinationals will have a free hand. As an example, some people say that discoveries happen by chance. Others in the scientific community believe that new discoveries stem from clinical manipulation, and others still, because of structured methods.

For all those reasons, the multinationals will have a free hand not to do any scientific research. They could for instance decide to have their significant research done in Switzerland, France, Belgium, England or, worse still, the United States, next door. And those same multinationals could make it a game of changing the colour of their pills in Canada. All this may happen in Canada if the bill includes no definition of the term "research".

I have two reasons to believe that very little research will be done in Canada. First, when the Government dropped the requirement for multinationals to manufacture basic ingredients in Canada, it thereby gave them an opportunity to paralyse all scientific development in that area. Why for example should generic drug manufacturers have to manufacture basic ingredients in Canada if the multinationals can go and buy their stocks in Puerto Rico?

As you see, Mr. Speaker, if the multinationals had been required to manufacture in Canada, we could have developed that side of research and I am convinced that the generic companies would have been more willing to invest.

But the problem is this: Why should generic companies bother investing in and developing a new basic ingredient research industry even if they could reduce by as many as three years the 10 year protection period to the patentee, when major multinationals will continue buying abroad their ingredients? Even if they decided to develop a basic ingredient research industry, generic companies would find the market closed, because they would be the only users of their own products.

The other reason that leads me to believe that very little medical research will be carried out in Canada stems from the high priority the Americans are giving defence research. My rationale is this. In May and June 1985, I sat on the Liberal Committee which dealt with Star Wars. We travelled everywhere in Canada. We received and heard several briefs. Several scientists and academics explained to us that it is often quite by accident if discoveries made by NASA and other branches of the US Defence Department end up in medical research sections. When asked if they could estimate the cost for defence research and for medical research, they could not give us a clear answer.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, how can anyone imagine that the Americans are going to transfer their medical research to Canada, when we know how closely connected it is to Defence Department research? As I said, they will come to Canada only to change the colour and shape of their pills.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that we, as Liberals, are not against the ten year protection, when the research is fully carried out in Canada with funds such as those from the Terry Fox and Steve Fonyo Foundations. The Ottawa—Carleton Chapter of the Multiple Sclerosis Society also share this view.

In other words, we are prepared to accept changes, but not at any cost. If the Government were serious, it would accept our amendment.

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee; and Motion No. 2 (Mr. Dingwall, p.4745).

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, this time it is not, I must say, a pleasure to take part in this debate. It is unfortunate, it is sad, it is a commentary on the unwillingness of the Progressive Conservative Government to listen to the people of Canada that we are still faced with this Bill, despite the thousands of petitions, the many public protests, and the widespread public opposition that has manifested itself in respect of the proposed changes to the Patent Act over the months since this Bill was first introduced in this House.

An Hon. Member: You are exaggerating.

Mr. Langdon: I very much hoped, Mr. Speaker, that this Bill would have been withdrawn by this point.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Langdon: Frankly, I can think of no more appropriate welcome for the President of the United States than the withdrawal of this Bill. The President of the United States should be led to recognize that this country is an independent self-directing country, a country which will take its own course with respect to the pharmaceutical industry, with respect to patent legislation, and not be put into the position where it has to accept certain demands from the United States, as has clearly happened in this case, in order to get some kind of free trade arrangement with that country.

Despite my disappointment, Mr. Speaker, I wish to talk this afternoon about the amendment that is before us, an amendment which attempts to do what is surely very basic to any effort to pass legislation of this kind, that amendment being to define "research".

If, as the Minister suggests, there is going to be this tremendous increase, this upsurge of research that will take place in Canada with respect to pharmaceuticals, surely it is possible, in the Bill which is going to make this happen, to define what "research" will be, thus enabling us to measure it and to assess whether the Minister, in his claims, turns out to be correct or incorrect.

This afternoon, Mr. Speaker, I want to talk a little bit about research. I wish to quote from a book entitled The Economics of Industrial Innovation some of the lessons which that book should have brought to this Government in its thinking about patents and in its thinking about research in pharmaceuticals.

Certainly, pharmaceuticals, as this book points out, represent a research-intensive part of the industrial structure. The figures from the United Kingdom, for instance, indicate that pharmaceuticals, in that country, contribute something in the order of 7 per cent of the net output of firms to research. That compares to a figure of 1.3 per cent for the iron and steel industry, a figure of only 2.1 per cent for machine tools, and a figure of 2.3 per cent for general mechanical engineering.

So certainly we are talking about a research-intensive industry. But the question which must face us is: Is this an industry which this Bill is going to make research-intensive here in Canada?

In the past in Canada, it has not had that reputation. If we take, for instance, the assessment of Dr. Joel Lexchin, a Toronto doctor who has investigated what research has actually been undertaken by the Canadian drug industry, he makes the following point: The little research money that is spent in Canada is divided into three areas. Only 8 per cent goes to basic research, which seeks to discover new concepts of drug therapy or totally new drug products; 36 per cent is used for applied research, which consists of testing potential drugs; and 56 per cent is applied to product development, which effectively is the small changes in dosage or in the reformulation of drugs, creams, or solutions.

So in the past we have not had a drug industry in this country which has given us the kind of research-intensive industry on which we could build exports, jobs, and growth.

Bill C-22 has fallen into the myth of accepting that the research which will give us that new approach, that new thrust toward innovation, will be research which will come from foreign companies being given their way here in our country.

I wish government Members had looked carefully at this book before drafting this legislation. Had they done so, they would have seen the results of Project Sappho in the United Kingdom, a project which attempted to investigate, scientifically, what it was that encouraged success in industry, success in firms with respect to innovation. They would have become aware of the conclusion that there is no systematic evidence that indicates that larger or smaller firms are more or less successful in research and development.

The myth that suggests that it is the large foreign firm that is going to give us our research success is simply not backed up by the research which has been undertaken. In fact, if one goes on from what was not a factor in shaping success or failure to what was a factor, the key points made in this Project Sappho study indicate clearly that what makes for success is direct knowledge of the market and an understanding of user requirements.

That, Mr. Speaker, is what we are going to get, not from the foreign pharmaceutical multinationals, which simply transfer their drugs to this country, but from building up in this country itself, on the basis of the generic industry, an indigenous powerful and successful Canadian drug industry, an industry which would know the market, which would know user requirements, and which, therefore, would be successful in research and development.

That, Mr. Speaker, is what we are in favour of; that is why we are so strongly opposed to this Bill which has been brought before us.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity today to say a few words on the proposed legislation and, in particular, on the amendment which is before the House.

I listened very carefully to what the Government has said over the last several months in defence of the legislation to amend Canada's Patent Act insofar as pharmaceutical products are concerned. I think I am fairly accurate in saying that its major defence seems to be, first, the creation of jobs in Canada and, second, the creation of Canadian based research and development on new pharmaceutical products.

In response to statements by the Government, some multinational corporations indicated publicly that they were prepared to make a fairly substantial commitment to research and development in Canada if the legislation were indeed passed.

A couple of things must be said about the legislation. There is nothing in it which requires multinational corporations to follow through with their commitment to increase research and development in Canada. Also, I find it extremely confusing to hear the Government talk about the need to increase research and development expenditures when in fact it has been cutting back on funding for research activity across the country.

Let us look at what multinational corporations have been talking about. The press releases indicate that they are not really talking about increasing expenditures for research and development. They are talking about perhaps putting more money into clinical research in Canada. Anyone who has looked carefully at the difference between the two knows that there is a significant difference. In the research and development activity money is used to develop and find new drugs, whereas clinical research is simply the process of looking at drugs coming on the market as they go through the approval process at the Department of National Health and Welfare.

For example, when Parke-Davis announced increased funding in a press release, it indicated that the money would be used for plant expansion, development of pharmaceutical firms, and the basic study of new drugs. It did not talk about research and development; it talked about clinical research.

When the Upjohn company made its announcement of new investment, it spoke about phase two clinical research, establishing a quality control laboratory, expanded office space, and manufacturing facilities.

Before the Minister or any other person in the House starts jumping on the bandwagon and talking about how there will be increased research in Canada, we should start looking closely at what the corporations are talking about. What they are talking about is attempting to pull the wool over the eyes of Canadians on these promises.

A few months ago I was in Cape Breton, Nova Scotia when an announcement was made about a new commitment from multinational companies in respect of additional funds for research and development on Cape Breton Island. The Minister of Health for Nova Scotia had an interesting response to the announcement. He asked, even if the money were made available—and he doubted it very much—under the most charitable circumstances, and even if the legislation went through the House of Commons and the investment was actually made on Cape Breton Island, what would it mean for the people in Cape Breton? It would mean very little, because what they would propose to do is to educate students on Cape Breton Island in certain research and development skills. However, after they had received those skills, they could not apply them in Cape Breton because there are no manufacturing facilities for pharmaceutical products in Cape Breton or in Nova Scotia.

That Minister pointed out quite correctly that the kids would have to leave their communities, families, friends, and close associates and move to either Quebec or Ontario in order to obtain employment in the industry. He said that if the Government were interested in creating jobs in the Atlantic provinces, it should get those companies to invest dollars in creating direct jobs in Nova Scotia where they are badly needed. He did not say that idly.

Professor Eastman, in my view and in the view of many others, has probably conducted the most extensive examination of how multinational corporations work in the pharmaceutical industry, not only in Canada but world-wide. I should like to quote what Professor Eastman said on page 423 of his report:

> Canada does not now possess either the scientific manpower or the physical infrastructure that would make it a major world centre for basic pharmaceutical research. Nor in the opinion of the Commission would it be wise for Governments to seek to create such an environment in competition with heavily supported, long established centres in other countries.

That was Professor Eastman's conclusion. What have we heard from generic manufacturers in Canada, those companies which have become quite sophisticated in copying brand name drugs over the years? They have now become so sophisticated that they are at the point where they can now begin their own research and development activity in Canada. However, the legislation will put the brakes on that because it will make it extremely difficult for those wholly owned Canadian companies, which provide jobs for Canadians, to reinvest any profits back into the Canadian economy or to expand job creation in Canada. Also the legislation will make it very difficult for them to continue to operate in the Canadian interest. Frankly, I find the legislation to be peculiar, to say the least.

The Conservative Government was elected on the promise of jobs, jobs, jobs. However, in the case of an industry which is doing its best in the Canadian corporate sector to create jobs, the Government is introducing legislation which will put that industry's back to the wall. It just does not make sense, any way one looks at it.

Canada's legislation, as it was passed in 1969 and as it has been reviewed by no less than seven commissions, including an all-party House of Commons committee, Professor Eastman, and internal studies by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, has been a good policy for Canadians. As we all know, Professor Eastman pointed out that in 1983 alone Canadian consumers saved something in the area of $211 million as a result of that policy. It is a "made-in-Canada" policy. It is good for Canada and good for Canadians. Quite frankly, the only reason it is being changed is that President Ronald Reagan in the United States does not like it and is demanding on behalf of the multinational industry that it be changed.

I see that my time is up. Thank you very much.

• (1700)

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can continue for a few moments where the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) left off. He made the point that the Bill presently before this Chamber was requested by the President of the United States. The Hon. Member was absolutely correct. The President of the United States did request the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) to bring in this Bill. It was in all of the newspapers, it was on television and on the radio. There was no mistake at all. The President of the United States made a special request to the Prime Minister of Canada, and that was followed up by various negotiations. Another element was involved, apart from the President of the United States. Action was taken directly by the multinational drug companies, which stand to gain millions upon millions upon millions of dollars from this move, to hire various lobbying firms in the United States and in Canada. In fact, they hired the most influential lobbyists in the United States—

Mr. Rodriguez: And in Canada.

Mr. Baker: —to convince the U.S. Government through the President to ask the Prime Minister of Canada—somebody is at the door, Mr. Speaker. You do not have to let him in. I will not be able to finish my remarks. Are you saying I just have a moment?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the Hon. Member wishes, he can certainly continue his remarks after we come back from the other place. I thank the Hon. Member for his courtesy.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable Deputy to the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the Chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate Chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that when the House did attend His Honour the Deputy to Her Excellency the Governor General in the Senate Chamber, His Honour was pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following Bill:

Bill C-38, an Act respecting the reorganization and divestiture of Teleglobe Canada—Chapter No. 12.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

The House resumed consideration of the Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee, and Motion No. 2 (Mr. Dingwall, p. 4745).

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the reason this Bill exists is that the multinational drug companies wanted it. They lobbied the Governments in the United States and lobbying firms in Canada lobbied the Canadian federal Government. Then the President of the United States, as he admitted publicly, asked the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) to make sure that the Bill was brought into the House.

When the Prime Minister of Canada is lobbied by the President of the United States and that is admitted on television, on radio and in the newspapers, then we know that something will happen. Lo and behold, something happened. The Bill was brought into this Chamber by the Government. One can then say that the reason the Bill is before us is that the President of the United States asked the Prime Minister of Canada for the Bill backed by the lobbying firms in the United States and here in Canada.

Mr. Mitges: Can't hear you.

Mr. Baker: The hon. gentleman says that he cannot hear me. He will hear me in a moment when I get to the point of my argument. I have a point to make and I will get right to it.

There are in Canada today several groups composed of people who can just barely make ends meet. These people are the elderly, people who have just recently married and have a family and people who live close to or under the poverty line. These people think twice about sending their children to get tested for glasses. Why is this? It is because they do not know if they can afford to buy glasses for their children.

In Canada today, there are thousands upon thousands of parents who think twice about sending their children to the dentist or to the optometrist because they cannot afford to pay the bill. The situation varies from province to province depending on what type of programs exist. Once upon a time a few short years ago, some provinces had programs that allowed children to go to the dentist up to age 11. However, generally speaking, right across Canada, there are thousands upon thousands of parents who think twice about sending their children to the dentist and the optometrist.

Then there is another group composed of people who hesitate to go to the doctor because they cannot afford the pills the doctor would prescribe. That is the reality in Canada today right from British Columbia to Newfoundland. It is also the reality that even under federal jurisdiction, there are institutions like senior citizens' homes which are government-built and government-subsidized, and the senior citizens who live in these homes receive only a certain amount from their cheques every month. Perhaps they receive $100 per month in some provinces or $120 or $150 per month in other provinces to pay for all their personal expenses.

Let me be perfectly clear that there are in our society massive numbers of people who can just barely make ends meet. On the lower end of the scale, there are those people who at times qualify for welfare because their expenses are so high. Because of the Bill that is before the House today, the prices of drugs in Canada may rise to the level at which they are in the United States. Several groups of people will then qualify for welfare. One might say that that is a fine thing. If they qualify for welfare, then they can live. A person on minimum wage making $400 a month may have to pay up to $250 a month for his pills. Some Hon. Members on the government side may scoff at that and say that people do not have bills for pills amounting to $250 a month, but of course they do.

You are saying that I have two minutes left, Mr. Speaker. I believe you agreed to give me a full 10 minutes after we came back from the Senate.

This is what it boils down to: in some provinces, people who make the minimum wage will be left with a choice. If they buy the pills the doctor advises them to buy, they will have to do without everything else. The only guarantee that people from coast to coast have is the guarantee of social assistance. The means test is $74 a month in Newfoundland for single people between the ages of 18 and 50. In Ontario, it is about $120.

The point is that that is all people will be guaranteed. Any action by a Government to take away the disposable income of large numbers of people will be frowned upon by Canadians.

If the reason for this Bill is research, then let us have the Government of Canada define research and put up the money for it. Some people say that if this Bill passes, we will find cures for this, that and the other thing. Cures have not been found to this time in the United States or in any other nation with a system like the one required by this Bill. There is no logic to that argument.

The reason for the Bill is that the President of the United States asked the Prime Minister of Canada to present it, and the reason he did that is that the lobbying firms in the United States paid by the multinational drugs companies lobbied the President and the Prime Minister of Canada. That is why this Bill is before the Chamber today. This is not a good Bill for the majority of Canadians. Therefore, speaking on their behalf, the Official Opposition will vote against the Bill.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT REAGAN TO BOTH HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Point of order, Mr. Speaker. There have been discussions among the Parties and I think you will find there is agreement to the following motion:

I move:

That, notwithstanding any Standing or Special Order of this House, when the House adjourns on Friday, April 3, 1987, it shall stand adjourned until 11.00 o'clock a.m., on Tuesday, April 7, 1987;

That the Address of Mr. Ronald Reagan, President of the United States of America, to be delivered in the House Chamber on Monday, April 6, 1987, at 2.30 o'clock p.m., before Members of the Senate and Members of the House of Commons, together with all introductory and related remarks, be printed as an appendix to the House of Commons Debates of Tuesday, April 7, 1987, and form part of the records of this House; and

That media recording and transmission of such Address, introductory and related remarks be authorized pursuant to guidelines for this occasion issued by the Speaker of this House pursuant to consultation with the parties' House leaders, dated March 31, 1987.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier on the same point of order.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I must commend the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) for his very enlightening reading and tell him that indeed we were consulted. We agree with the arrangements he has just proposed to the House.

[English]

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I want to confirm that the negotiations have taken place and we concur and give unanimous consent to changing the Standing Orders for Monday. I would like to add that this is the kind of thorough and complete consultation we ought to have on a continuing basis, not simply at these rather unique moments.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have the unanimous consent of the House to move his motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee; and Motion No. 2 (Mr. Dingwall, p.4745).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, as you know the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) is one of the finest orators, if not the finest, in the House of Commons. I am certain, in view of the fact that his submission was cut off in midstream, that if you canvass the House you will find unanimous consent to have the Hon. Member continue with his comments.

Some Hon. Members: No!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I heard someone say no.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I feel moved to participate in this extremely historical debate.

Mr. Blaikie: Just don't wave your hands around too much, okay?

Mr. Rodriguez: Why do I say it is a historical debate?

Some Hon. Members: Why?

Mr. Rodriguez: I am glad you asked. It is because this move to free up the Patent Act in this country began with the Liberals and is now seeing its conclusion with the Conservatives. I want to tell you that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) is responsible for this Bill. I want to ask these Members around me, as impartial observers, if they would say this Bill strikes them as really protecting the interests of consumers. Does it do so?

Some Hon. Members: No!

Mr. Rodriguez: Absolutely not. The Minister is not the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, he is the Minister of Corporate Affairs. Do you know who held that portfolio in the previous Government?

Some Hon. Members: Who?

Mr. Rodriguez: She was a very powerful Minister in the Liberal Government. The former Hon. Member for Nickel Belt.

Ms. Jewett: Where is she now?

Mr. Rodriguez: Where is she now?

Mr. Blaikie: Working for the multinational drug companies?

Mr. Rodriguez: You got it! That is where she is. She has now been embraced by PMAC.

Mr. Blaikie: Like a true Liberal.

Mr. Rodriguez: Just a minute! She is not the only one in the embrace of PMAC.

Mr. Riis: There are others?

Mr. Rodriguez: Oh, yes. You know who they have? Frankie Moores.

Some Hon. Members: No!

Mr. Rodriguez: Yes, Sir.

Mr. de Jong: He is a Conservative.

Mr. Rodriguez: You know who Doucet is?

Mr. Blaikie: He is in the PMO.

Mr. Rodriguez: Oh, we have to be careful. He has a brother in the PMO. These lobbyists for the multinational companies, they have connections. Do you remember Willie Loman in Death of a Salesman? He says:"He's got connections". Well, these drug companies have got connections. They reach right into the highest councils of the land. For $100,000 the former Liberal Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is now lobbying for the drug companies. She has joined Frankie Moores. The odd couple! When a Liberal and a Tory get together—

Mr. Blaikie: Don't describe it, it's too awful.

Mr. Gauthier: Don't forget Ian Deans.

Mr. Rodriguez: We are talking about a drug Bill that affects millions of ordinary Canadians. This Bill affects millions of ordinary, average Canadians.

One of the glaring omissions in this Bill has to do with the question of research and development. What does the Bill say about research and development? It says—

Some Hon. Members: Nothing!

Mr. Rodriguez: Oh, yes, it does.

Mr. Mayer: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I notice the Hon. Member is spending a lot of time with his back to the cameras. I want him to know I think that is a definite improvement in his speaking style.

Mr. Nystrom: That is a backhanded compliment, John.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I did not want to turn my back to the Government.

This is a very important point. The Bill has a glaring omission. In fact, it deliberately says that R and D will be defined by Cabinet.

Mr. de Jong: The fix again!

Mr. Rodriguez: How many times in legislation in this country have we had examples of that? Leave it to the boys in the Cabinet.

Mr. Nystrom: And the girls.

Mr. Rodriguez: Who has the greatest influence with the gang in the Cabinet?

Mr. Nystrom: Charlie Mayer.

Mr. Rodriguez: We know how the Cabinet lets the Government down. After all, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) said last weekend that the reason the Tories are so low in the polls is not because of government back-benchers, but because of the Cabinet. He says the Cabinet has let him down. He is asking the people of Canada to put their trust in a Cabinet that has let their own Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) down. How is this possible?

• (1730)

I do not believe that the people of Canada trust the Cabinet and the Government as far as they can throw them. We will find out how far they can throw them in the next election. Having no definition of research in the legislation is a glaring omission. The lobbyists will have a heyday with the Government as they had with the previous Government. John Sawatsky and Harvey Cashore in an article in This Magazine entitled "Inside Dope" talked about the fact that the former health critic for the Liberal Party got together with the prior Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs behind the Speaker's chair and agreed that the Liberals and the Conservatives would let the Bill go. As a matter of fact, the quote is that: "Only the NDP will bitch". The Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith) said that. He said: "That is all right, it is only the NDP who will bitch".

Let me suggest that not only the NDP will do that, but the Canadian people will do so as well.

Canadians know that the lobbyists have a friendly ear in the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. He said that we should not worry because the definition of research and development will be the same as that which appears in the Income Tax Act. Why does the Minister not simply put that definition in this Bill? All those watching this debate will suggest the same thing to the Minister, but he only listens to one group in this country. It is the group that is friendly to the Conservative Party.

An Hon. Member: Which group is that?

Mr. Rodriguez: Frank Moores and company is the group.

Why is the Government bringing in this Bill? Prior to 1969 we probably had the highest prescription drug prices in the world, second only to the United States. The present Act was proclaimed in 1969 and we now enjoy probably the lowest prescription drug prices in the industrialized world. However, the friends of the Government, the multinational corporations from whom the Tories raise the contributions for their election campaigns, have influenced the Government.

The fix was in because President Reagan probably persuaded the Government that it should change the Act so that the multinationals could have a heyday with Canadians. As a result of the Bill which the Minister and the Government is ramming through the House, the multinationals will pick the pockets of every Canadian. You can be sure that they are shaking hands in our pockets.

The New Democratic party has been fighting this Bill and we will continue to fight it with all the strength we have because we believe it is unfair. I only hope that the Liberal Party will find the courage to stand with us to fight this Bill to the bitter end.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to speak to this Bill which happens to be the best example of what makes the three Canadian federal Parties so different. First the position of the Conservative Party Members who are on all fours, yielding to the ransom demands of the multinationals; that is one extreme position where the rich have the upper hand. Then the other opposite extreme position of the NDP, as set forth by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). Finally, the realistic, honest, central and logical position of the Liberals.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Malépart: We have just heard . . . First I must say I am sad because I used to hold the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt in high esteem. But his speech has just shown that he is afraid of the former member who defeated him, and afraid of being defeated again by the former member and Minister. A courageous man does not refer to somebody he has defeated in the past. It just proved how insecure he is about his own views.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to explain the consequences. I would like to ask my colleagues . . . The position of the NDP proves that they know precious little about Quebecers, that they are not prepared to defend them. That is proof positive of the hypocrisy of that Party and their leader who came to Montreal and his Member from Terrebonne (Mr. Toupin) . . . Mr. Speaker, I was at the economic summit in Montreal where there were people from the Civic Party, people from the MCM, the new administration in Montreal, people from the Parti Québécois, people from the Liberal Party, people from the three labour unions—QFL, CNTU and CEQ—the Fédération de l'âge d'or du Québec, people from all political parties. And unlike Shirley Carr and the NDP, these people were unanimous in seeking, in the best interests of Quebecers and Canadians, a form of protection for patents and research because Quebecers would be likely to benefit. The position of the NDP and the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt is a clear indication that all this flirting with Quebec is nothing but hypocrisy.

Some Hon. Members: Right on!

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, there is only one man in this House . . . We have the hypocrisy of the Leader of the NDP. We have the obsequious attitude of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and then we have the Leader of the Liberal Opposition who, when the time came to abolish protective measures, did so to safeguard the interests of Canadians. Now that the situation has changed and that we should continue to protect people and their health and research and ensure—not just so companies can make a profit—that for certain products, products that are expensive and are used to cure people, the multinationals, the generic companies . . . We are not here to defend either one but to defend the interests . . . And the only man who had the courage to propose amendments was the Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner). He was the only one, with the Liberal Party.

Unfortunately, we now have the Conservatives who are afraid of their own shadow. We have seen the NDP hypocrites, but when I see people in the Conservative Party caving in to the blackmail of the multinationals, who said: If you give us a full monopoly for seven or eight years, we will invest so much. If you do not provide that protection, we will withdraw the funds. The Liberal leader, all the members of the Liberal caucus said: "No way!" We will never give in to blackmail, neither in this House nor to that of multinationals.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Malépart: And we will not give in to the blackmail of a union.

I should like to say to the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt that I am still an active member of the QFL. The National Council of the Canadian Labour Congress collects part of my dues to uphold the interests of Canadians. Part of that money is used to finance the NDP. Unfortunately, as a Quebecer, I should ask Ti-Louis Laberge that we should withdraw from the Canadian Labour Congress because the interests of Quebecers are poorly upheld within that Federation.

Mr. Speaker, what is the position of the Liberal Party—it is true that some protection is needed—but on what is based our position? It is based on the advice of an expert. And the Eastman Report, the people who made investigations proved that a minimum of protection is needed. And the minimum of protection is negotiable, and this is what my colleague will propose in committee, and it is my hope that Conservative Members—as far as New Democrats are concerned, they are hopeless—that those people will be realistic and say: We will grant a minimum of protection, a five or four-year minimum, as recommended by the experts, but we will protect the cost of drugs. We will allow research people in Quebec, Ontario, the Maritimes, Western Canada to go on working in Quebec, Mr. Speaker. As opposed to the stupidity of the NPD Party, who rejects any change, we Liberals are not afraid of reforms, we are not afraid of improving quality.

I appreciate that New Democratic Party Members are not used to facing criticism. I appreciate they are small-time actors in their own world, Mr. Speaker, but the truth is, the time has come for the Canadian people to know it. We have the extreme on the left, the New Democratic Members who oppose any change, even though the whole population, the whole Quebec people has requested protection at the Quebec National Assembly under a PQ Government, through a unanimous vote. And after there was a change of Government, under a Liberal administration, another Assembly made that same unanimous request. But then the NDP comes down from out West, and they want to impose upon Quebecers: Come to us, we are interested, we are open. Open my foot! People will vote Liberal!

Mr. Speaker, the 57 Conservative Members,—or is it 58, we are not sure how many are left—it is my hope they will listen to the call of logic, they will not yield to the multinationals, they will not yield to the American President who will come and tell us here: Listen, if you want to have such or such a thing! Remember your leader—he got the job of President of Iron Ore in order to shut the company down. After that, he had no job any more. He came here, but we will not let him shut Canada down and sell it to the Americans.

So there you have the best proof with that legislation. Listen, take the logical position, the sensible position put forward by the Liberal Party. And remember—when John Turner decided to pass an Act, he did it in order to improve the situation. Years have gone by, the needs are different. Once more, the Liberal Party, in a spirit of reform, implemented that.

Mr. Speaker, who will be affected? There are four million people in Canada, Canadian men and women who are protected by no health insurance plan, who have neither the protection of provincial public insurance plans nor collective agreements, because unfortunately it sometimes happens in Canada—even though I am a union member, I am not a union militant—that large labour groups are not interested in members in small communities where there is not enough people, not enough money there. So those people are not protected. Those who are protected are people with good labour agreements, they are numerous. So the four million people who are not protected, it is important that we in this House, of whatever political persuasion, ensure that those people be protected, and we have a responsability to do so.

And this is why the recommendation and the amendment put forward by my colleague is an amendment that we should unanimously accept. But we must totally reject—Mr. Speaker, I see I have two minutes left—the ridiculous idea of the NDP and the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt of rejecting the Bill off hand, because this is contrary to the interest of Quebecers.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We have just heard two great speeches, one from the New Democratic Party and one from the Liberal Party. I thought, in keeping with the principles of fairness and objectivity, perhaps some Hon. Member opposite would dare stand in his or her place and offer a rebuttal to some of the great arguments which have been presented.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, it is quite an afternoon for debate. I must confess there are some tough acts to follow.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have just returned from committee. I thought it has been a long practice in the House that we alternate. If my memory serves me well, the New Democratic Party had the floor, then the Liberal Party. I would imagine that it is now the Government's turn, unless I am proven wrong.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On debate. The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, these endeavours to draw the Government into the debate clearly fail because the Government has no desire to debate the questions on this Bill before us. Government Members are quite content to be taken in by the eyewash which the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) working for the multinational corporations, served up. The last thing they want to do is to have to defend him or criticize the Opposition.

I found the observations made by the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) rather curious, given that we are both working to improve the Bill. We are both concerned about definitions for "research". What is this attack on my good friend, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), the sort of divisiveness in the Opposition, when we are both involved in improving a lousy piece of legislation? It seems very curious. When one has to attack another Party, usually in an electoral context, one indulges in such attacks only on those who are ahead of one. Why bother with those who are behind us? After all, they are back there in the dust and that is where they ought to stay. But when someone ahead of you is threatening to seize the prize, that is the moment in which to attempt to trip him up. Those are the moments to attack and try to weaken him. I suggest to those who have their eyes focused on the leader in the race, that there is something wrong. That was the kind of attack the Hon. Member made, which I quite enjoyed hearing.

I know the realities in Quebec. The public opinion polls across the country have marvelous details these days. In the rest of Canada we are number two and trying harder, and the people of Canada realize that. In the Province of Quebec, of course, there are some additional realities. In that Province we are neck and neck. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie knows something the rest of us have not yet heard. Perhaps in his area we are actually number one. If we are number one, then now is the time to attack us, and that is the kind of speech he served up.

The Hon. Member asked who understands Quebec. Do we really understand Quebec? Well, I wonder, given the tone of this debate, whether he has any right to ask that question. Surely, we understand perfectly well what the people of Quebec want. Surely, we understand perfectly well that, like the people in the rest of Canada, the people of Quebec want medicines available to them at reasonable prices. The people of Quebec, like other Canadians, want pharmaceutical medicines not to be increased in price. The people of Quebec have the same concerns about economy in health care as do other Canadians. Those are the convictions of the people of Quebec, and we know perfectly well that the New Democratic Party speaks for those convictions in Quebec and across the country. We wonder whether our colleagues in the Official Opposition, the Liberal Party, which is falling into second place in the Province of Quebec, really understand those things.

I found myself wondering whether perhaps the reason the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie spoke as he did is that at the back of his mind is a readiness to accept the Bill from the Government as it stands. Perhaps the Hon. Member, or someone from Montreal, where promises for returns from this Bill have been held out, is actually content with the Bill as it is and is attacking those who are trying to improve it. Does that make any kind of sense?

Is there any real prospect that this legislation is going to bring us the returns the Government has suggested? There has been talk about 3,000 jobs out of the research which will follow. I realize that that is an attractive prospect. There have been some letters to my office and other offices about the possibilities of research jobs. But are we really going to get them? That is the question. Will we really find the type of research being done which we want to see done if there is an extension in the period of protection for medicines in Canada such as is proposed in the Bill? All the authorities in this area question that position. I can cite a number of them who point to the type of research presently being done in Canada. For example, Dr. Lexchin appeared before the committee and observed that the little research money that is spent in Canada now is divided into three areas: 8 per cent goes to basic research, which seeks to discover new concepts of drug therapy or totally new drug products; 36 per cent is used for applied research, which consists of testing potential drugs on animals and humans; and a full 56 per cent is applied to product development, which encompasses areas such as developing new dosage forms, or different forms of a drug, such as pills, tablets, creams or solutions.

Much of that research is a matter of tailoring the pharmaceuticals to the market. Much of it is a matter of either some further clinical testing or a matter of market research and response to it. That does not involve the type of jobs or the type of research that is attractive to people. To hold out the possibility that this will be high quality employment is misleading the Canadian people.

It was surely an indication of what would happen under this Bill to have the Department's own research staff indicate, as was reported in December, that jobs with respect to tending animals and cleaning laboratories, rather menial work, were going to be included in the 3,000 jobs. In fact, it became clear from the Government's own study that no more than 57 per cent of the 3,000 jobs will be jobs in professional categories involving the training that produces the PhD that would represent the type of employment for which Canadians are looking. Even to hold out the prospect of 3,000 jobs is to suggest that there will be an increase in activity in this country which the authorities in the drug industry internationally find almost impossible to expect. They look at the way in which pharmaceutical research is carried out now, centred primarily at or near the head offices of the companies in the United States and other companies. They note that a country such as Switzerland, which is easy to cite as one that is small and important in research, managed to get into the industry in the 19th century. The companies have been long established in that country. On that basis they are able to carry on research in that small country.

The possibility that a slight change in the legislation would bring the companies in is exercising an act of faith that we have come to expect from members of the Conservative Party when they talk about what multinational corporations will do. We have come to expect the Government to forget what the consequences will be for individual Canadians, the higher costs that will result, and what the people of Canada want. The Government wants to serve only the interests of the multinationals.

It is of course much more distressing to see something like this come from the Liberal Party which likes to pride itself on speaking to the needs of Canadians. It says that it understands the needs of Quebec. Surely, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) does not want to tell us that the people of Quebec are easily fooled by the Government, or that they are prepared to be taken in by this propaganda about 3,000 jobs when so much of it is going to be menial employment in laboratories, if it even occurs. Surely, he will not tell us that the people of Quebec are easily fooled politically. I do not think he wants to say that. I will certainly not assert that. The evidence these days which the public opinion polls make quite clear is that the people of Quebec understand perfectly well what their needs are. They understand perfectly well who is speaking to those needs. They understand perfectly well that the New Democratic Party understands what ordinary Canadians need. They understand that the New Democratic Party is working for average Canadians. They are turning to support us vigorously these days. We look forward to more and more of them supporting us as we move toward the next election.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take part in this . . . In the past few minutes mention was made that Quebec would profit from it but when one considers that by 1995, the pharmaceutical industry will have invested $3 billion in Quebec and the rest of Canada the 65 member Association, will wait before implementing for good their development program until Bill C-22 has been passed by the House of Commons. The new legislation will emphasize the creation of new drugs rather than the mere production of old ones.

As I read in this week's issue of the Journal des affaires which has been circulated from coast to coast, Mr. Speaker, this legislation is truly fantastic, and no matter what the NDP may say we, as Quebec Members of the Conservative Party, are all for it.

When we consider the total volume of the promised investments, we can look forward to a 60/40 sharing between Ontario and Quebec. And this investment distribution will reflect the research and development manpower within the industry, as represented in the two major Canadian provinces. About 43 companies in Ontario and Quebec are members of the Association, with nearly 600 researchers in Quebec and 40 in Ontario. Although the number of employees may differ today, the proportion remains the same. And even if in 1983, 8,600 employees were recorded in Ontario, compared to 6,300 in Quebec, out of a total 15,500 employees for the whole of Canada. The investment in research and development will reflect the distribution of researchers, which will favour Quebec, because this is where the greatest concentration is.

On the same subject, Mr. Speaker, the Journal des affaires, which is deservedly famous throughout the world, but especially in Quebec and the rest of Canada, is contemplating that approximately 40 per cent of all investments will be made in Quebec, 40 per cent in Ontario, 40 per cent in the western provinces, and 4 per cent in the Atlantic provinces. I read on. It says that it will create directly 3,000 new jobs in the industry. That is quite good for Quebec, Mr. Speaker. But there is one thing I should like to warn the House about, and it is the cost of medicine. Several people in my region of Abitibi have told me that the NDP constantly infer that the costs will increase. They keep saying that promises are always fine, but that they are quickly forgotten. To make sure that the companies will fulfill their promises and will not pass on their research costs to consumers through unjustified increases in the price of medicine, the Bill provides for a control mechanism. I mean, there will be a monitoring agency.

Mr. Speaker, that is truly what our party, our Government is doing for Quebec and the rest of Canada. We are going to monitor the prices right away. That will be a very good Bill and senior citizens . . . Well, the prices on these drugs will not increase anyway.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, since it is nearly six o'clock, perhaps you could call it six o'clock, and I could start my speech tomorrow. Or perhaps I could start with the preliminaries.

Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to take part in this debate. In the few minutes or few seconds remaining, I would like to pay special tribute to the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) who finally set the record straight on the whole NDP situation—these radical left-wingers who are so terribly pleased with themselves and who claim they represent the people of Quebec and French Canadians in general. Today, we see just what kind of representation they are giving them. Their insincerity is flagrant. As for the Conservatives opposite, Mr. Speaker, they are the people who introduced this Bill. They did what they usually do: they caved in to the multinationals and they got down on their knees before President Reagan, which was predictable of the Conservative Party. I would like to say more, and I could go on until tomorrow morning, Mr. Speaker, because I see the New Democrats and the—

EXTERNAL RELATIONS

MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON VISIT TO ASIA

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I am eager to share with the House what I have seen and experienced during the past couple of weeks as I travelled in China and Thailand. I say "eager" because I believe our relationship with the new Asia, which is emerging with astonishing speed, is crucial to our mutual interests.

After visiting several parts of Asia and a series of development co-operation projects in which Canada is involved, I am very pleased to say I was given tangible proof of the effectiveness of our development aid. The projects in which Canada is involved are having a definite impact.

Last week during my visit to Thailand, I signed several agreements aimed at promoting co-operation in major sectors between our two countries. For instance, Canada will provide a grant of $5 million to help the women of Thailand participate to a greater extent in the development of their country. These funds will enable them to initiate income-generating activities, open small businesses, have access to credit and receive leadership training.

Other agreements concern the funding of Canadian goods and services; scholarships for Thai students who want to pursue post-secondary studies in Canada in crucial areas such as energy and food production; and opening up new areas for co-operation such as food processing, air traffic control and environmental protection.

I visited the Champthai factory, an example of a joint venture involving a Canadian company, Champion Road Machinery of Goderich, Ontario and a Thai company. I visited a centre for remote sensing which is receiving technical assistance from Canadian companies in Montreal and Vancouver.

I was profoundly affected by my visit to a school for the blind, where fantastic work is being done.

I also went to Northeast Thailand, the country's poorest region, where I visited rural development projects funded by Canada. However, what struck me most was the way the relationship between our two countries has changed. There is so much vitality and growth everywhere in Thailand, and there are so many positive aspects for Canada that we can no longer properly speak of a donor-beneficiary relationship. These terms reflect a dependence that is no longer significant.

[English]

I can report that the same is true, but on a larger scale, in our relationship with China. It was a great privilege to spend 10 days in the world's most populous nation as a representative of the Canadian Government. It was a very productive 10 days, indeed. There were meetings with Deng Xiaoing, China's elder statesman, with the President, the Prime Minister and other officials at the highest level.

In following up on the Prime Minister's commitment of last year, I was able to announce, as Minister responsible for CIDA, 11 new projects of development co-operation to a value of over $90 million in such fields as management education, municipal planning and linkages at the college and university level. I was happy with the focus of our existing program, which The Globe and Mail has described as aimed at people and knowledge. I am particularly pleased to report that we have also taken some early initiatives in the important and promising fields of transportation and telecommunications.

There were many highlights. On one occasion I met with representatives of one of our development partners, the All-China Women's Federation, doubtless the world's largest such organization with 93 million members. On another occasion I travelled by boat on the Yangtze to the site of the proposed Three Gorges Complex where the river, the hills and the mists truly speak to the soul. However, this spot is also where China is contemplating building a power complex with a capacity greater than the entire James Bay Development. The proposed project would also control floods and extend river navigation. We can be proud that China has entrusted a Canadian consortium with the carrying out of the feasibility study. We can only assist China, in its great wisdom, to make this crucial decision about its future.

There are two further observations I would like to offer. The first concerns Asia in general. Asia is changing fast—much faster, I fear, than our Canadian ideas and attitudes about Asian reality. The fact is that Asia with immense needs, pent up demand, a large and growing middle class and huge human and material resources, will become the mainstream, the centre of gravity of the global economy in the very near future—likely by the turn of the century, less than 5,000 days from now. It will have the world's largest, most diverse and, perhaps, most modern industrial capacity. This means that our relationship with Asia will be utterly transformed.

In reality, of course, transformations do not happen overnight—they are already well advanced. Some of us gained that insight when we recently saw Canadian communities vying for investment by Japanese and Korean car makers. But I am very concerned that Canadian perceptions are lagging dangerously far behind the fast pace of change. How many of us have looked recently at GNP per capita figures and noticed how Asian countries have begun to surpass those in Europe? At current growth rates for per capita income Taiwan and Korea will be richer than the United States four decades from now.

The point I want to make is that if Canadians want a strategy for success, whether we are talking about government, business or Canadians in general, they had better realize that, especially in Asia, the old game is over and a quite different one is under way with new roles and new rules. It is important for Canada as a whole to understand the new reality so that our country can make major adjustments, economically, politically and psychologically.

One of the aspects of this new reality is the fact that we need China more than it needs us. A look at the total volume of our exports in 1985 reveals that China accounted for 3.4 per cent, whereas Canada was the origin of only 1.6 per cent of Chinese imports. At that time, we turned a new page of Canadian economic history when, for the first time, a larger volume of our exports went to the Pacific region instead of crossing the Atlantic.

If we expect Canada to prosper as a major trading nation we must gain a very clear insight into worldwide economic events and do everything we can to cultivate our ties with Asia. We must establish a long-term economic and institutional relationship.

More subjective, my second remark has to do with the state of our relations with Asia and the way the Government approaches this significant aspect of our external relations. In this respect I can say that our relations are excellent and that the Government is taking decisive action to strengthen these ties with Asia well into the XXIth century. Everywhere I went I was struck by the people's warm and friendly reception.

Although Canada does not rank high in terms of population, our impact in China is much more important than most of us would imagine. Our reputation over there is practically second to none. The name of Dr. Bethune was on everyone's lips.

I also believe that their attitude towards us is due in part to the deep respect which Canada has always shown for China and its priorities. Indeed, the same things goes for Thailand.

By any means the Government does not neglect any opportunity to expand these ties. I have just returned from my visit over there with the Governor General. The Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) as well travelled to that country a few days ago, and recently there were other ministerial visits.

[English]

While in Asia I had the opportunity to sign a number of agreements for specific projects, thus moving our co-operation forward in keeping with, for instance, the commitments made last year by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). To further the process, Cabinet has now approved a strategy for China which reflects the importance Canada attaches to its relations with the Asia-Pacific region in general and with China in particular.

The strategy builds upon the major achievements since Canada's recognition of the People's Republic of China in 1970, especially the measures taken by the Government in the past two years, such as the opening of a consulate in Shanghai and the announcement by the Prime Minister when he visited Beijing last May that Canada is doubling its CIDA bilateral program and setting up a concessional financing facility. The strategy is designed to set an institutional framework for the building of a focused, orchestrated and dynamic approach to our relationship with China, a key political actor in Asia and Canada's fifth largest market in the world.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I wish to share with you a Thai tradition. When one gives alms to a monk it is then customary to thank the monk for accepting the gift. The truth is that Canada's participation in Asia's development is indeed enriching and benefiting Canada. Day by day the relationship between our country, and those of Asia, grows more balanced and becomes more mutually beneficial.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, first, I want to say that I wish that my comments on the Minister's presentation could be better prepared, since I think it has been a valuable contribution. Unfortunately, I was not in receipt of her remarks and was therefore unable to give time to the preparation of the type of remarks that I would like to make on behalf of my Party. At the same time, on behalf of the Members of the House, I wish to thank the Minister for the fact that she has come to the House to report on her visit and to give us an insight into her findings.

As an aside, an interesting aspect of her remarks was her comment concerning the importance of the trade future of the Pacific Rim. The growth of the power of many of the previously undeveloped and now rapidly developing countries in Asia will in fact shift Canada's trade to a larger extent to the Pacific Rim as opposed to the Atlantic Region, which is an idea that Canadians have to catch up with, as the Minister has indicated. Now that she has come back, the Minister should now meet with the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) for the purpose of enlightening that Minister, as she is contemplating Canada's trade relations with the United States, on the importance of trade with the nations of the Pacific Rim. It is our contention that it is within the total context of our GATT relations and within the context of our total trade with all of the nations of the world that we should consider our trade relations with the United States. Perhaps the Minister for External Relations will be helpful in getting that point across to the Minister for International Trade.

I should like to call attention to the Minister's report on Thailand. Given that she is the Minister for External Relations, her report includes a section on the work of CIDA, something that is entirely within her area of responsibility. In looking at our development programs, both multilateral and bilateral, we want to ensure that such programs are beneficial to the poorest people of the countries involved. In addition, we want to ensure that any such developments are not in any way harmful to the weak and the poor of those countries. This, of course, is something that is difficult to achieve when one is dealing with sovereign nations. Certainly, we would not want them to feel that we were interfering with their plans and their views. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, we do have that responsibility of which I spoke.

I was pleased to hear that the Minister went to the poorer sections in Thailand and had the opportunity to see what some of those problems are. But, it does also raise certain areas of concern, those concerns having to do with the plight of the poorer people in these countries and the whole question of human rights. I regret that the Minister did not make a few comments in that regard.

Like everyone else, I was happy to hear about the desire to provide education and to work on co-operative educational programs with Thailand, including the exchange of students, the possibility of having Thai students in Canada—something which would be beneficial to both of our countries. Such programs are a positive step in beginning the process of improving human rights in other countries and in ameliorating the suffering that takes place in those countries.

I was pleased to hear about the Minister's visit to China, a country which we often speak of as the "Sleeping Giant". Given the vastness of that country, and the size of its population, it is certainly a good thing to have Canadians generally visit that country to acquaint themselves with it, and it is particularly beneficial when leading members of our Cabinet travel to that very important nation. While it is a Communist nation, it is an important one, and Canada has provided leadership in the past in opening up relations with it. In this regard, I make reference to former Prime Minister Trudeau, who helped create a better respect for China as a nation that must be dealt with in the realities of the world. So, it is a good thing that the Minister was able to spend time in China, allowing her to return to Canada with a better assessment and appreciation of things in that country.

I should like again to call the attention of the Minister to the manner in which we provide aid to these countries. As the Minister responsible for CIDA, she will be aware that some of the projects undertaken around the world have led to some tragic results. We have had examples of countries, with the assistance of the International World Bank and the IMF, going after major projects, including the construction of hydro-electric dams, that have led to tragic consequences. We have had examples where a nation's leaders, in their desire to keep up with the progress of other countries, have embarked on projects which, while providing them with some personal glory, have done a great deal of damage to the country's population. I will not cite specifics. I think the Minister knows what I am talking about. Certainly in various nations of Africa, this kind of thing has taken place.

I can understand that the Minister, in speaking about the Three Gorges Complex, would not want to insult the leadership of the Chinese people by challenging them about the wisdom of that project. However, it is a project in which we are involved, and a project on which Canadian firms are seeking contracts. The construction of hydro-electric dams in other areas of the world have led to the displacement of entire populations, with no provision for relocating the people affected or providing them with a better and improved way of life. On the contrary, such projects have oftentimes led to the total destruction of the lives of those people. Oftentimes, they result in economic ruin. In addition, there have often been, as a longer range result, dreadful environmental repercussions.

By no means am I suggesting to the Minister that all hydro-electric dams are bad. On the contrary, provided that all of the necessary safeguards are taken, they can be good. However, we have seen ourselves involved in projects where not enough attention has been given to these matters, with the result that, instead of having brought about alleviation of the suffering of the poor, we have in fact brought about just the opposite. Many projects bring about very dubious long range benefits for the economy of the country involved, with very powerful and tragic short term repercussions on the people directly affected by the project. I regret that the Minister did not comment on how some of these tragedies of the past could be avoided insofar as any involvement we have with China is concerned.

We have to ask ourselves, too, just how the Minister sees her role as one who is concerned with developments. Development, of course, does include trade, and certainly it is not her function to try to be the Minister for International Trade. However, I think her observations on the trade situation will be of assistance to her colleagues in Cabinet. I would welcome from the Minister, as soon as possible, a further detailed explanation as to what is happening in Asia insofar as the poorer people are concerned, those on whom we are supposedly focusing as our top priority in terms of CIDA aid.

Indeed, in the Minister's statement—and I appreciate that in a short presentation such as this she cannot cover everything—I did miss hearing anything about the tragic fact that there are so many people on the Asian continent who continue to live in very limited circumstances, people who are illiterate and not well cared for medically. These are the very people, through our CIDA operations, we want to help.

As well, I should like to have heard her observations on non-governmental organizations, organizations that monitor the human rights situation and the economic situation in those countries. I hope that she did visit some such organizations.

My comments, Mr. Speaker, are meant to constitute both congratulations to the Minister and an expression of concern in relation to those areas that were omitted from her remarks. I do want to express my appreciation to the Minister for her having taken the time to make this trip and for the courtesy of her report to the House.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary on a point of order.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There have been discussions among the Parties, and I think you will find that there is agreement to immediately move to the item Presenting Reports from Committees, in order that parliamentary committee reports can be presented, following which we can revert back to my colleague from Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) for his intervention in reply.

Mr. Speaker: I take it that there is agreement to the suggestion put forward by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: As your Speaker, I am reluctant to comment too often on matters of the relations among the Parties in this place, but I think it is appropriate to remark at this time that while the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) expressed a desire for more time to consider the Minister's statement before replying, he was extremely gracious in his response. I would ask that when statements are being made in the Chamber every effort be made to give those who must respond adequate time to consider the statements before making their reply.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I merely offer that as a comment. It is something that I hope will be given consideration.

DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

PRESENTATION OF FIRST REPORT OF SUB-COMMITTEE

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke—Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, this morning I have the honour of tabling the first report of the Sub-Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped. The title of the report is: CHALLENGE—Putting our House in order.

• (1130)

The report I am tabling this morning on behalf of the parliamentary committee on the disabled is a unanimous report entitled "Challenge-Putting our House in Order".

Pursuant to Standing Order 99(2), I specifically ask, on behalf of the committee, that the Government provide a comprehensive response within 120 days. In a very encapsulated form, when the report speaks about putting our house in order, it is something Hon. Members of the House can particularly take to heart. The message relates to mentally and physically challenged Canadians and it sets out an action plan for us to lead by example.

In presenting the report this morning, members of the committee would like to note that Your Honour is mentioned in the report for the exemplary initiative you have taken in responding to the concerns of the committee, developing an action plan, establishing timetables, and moving to action so that the needs and aspirations of mentally and physically challenged Canadians are being adequately responded to on the Hill, and through this example which the committee will be using, through all other departments and branches of the federal Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTERNAL RELATIONS

MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON VISIT TO ASIA

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my Party I wish to express appreciation to the Hon. Minister for External Relations (Mrs. Landry) for her statement and for the trip which she made, along with the Governor General and others, to China and Thailand. The growing importance of Asia in the world and in Canada's relationships with other parts of the world has been underscored by the visit and by the Minister's report.

In the early 1950s the question of the recognition of the People's Republic of China was something of an United Church heresy, because the United Church of Canada was advocating that before many other organizations in Canada were. Some people felt that the sky would fall in if Canada took such a drastic step. It finally happened in 1970, and since then there have been absolutely no regrets on the part of Canada that we have recognized the People's Republic of China. We have been seeking to build stronger ties ever since. It is important, as the Minister has done, to underscore the importance of those ties both for Canada and for the world in general. Coming from a riding on the Pacific Coast, I know how important it is for our people.

China is a country which has made tremendous strides in the last few years, yet it continues to face tremendous problems. Canadian and Chinese co-operation is essential and, as the Minister pointed out, it is essential for Canada as well as for countries in Asia. I was very pleased to note in the Minister's comments on Thailand that we are moving beyond the donor-recipient relationship. It is important for us to move into an era of international co-operation rather than see a kind of paternalistic relationship continuing.

I have some concerns about some of the issues mentioned by the Minister, certainly the major dam project. It is interesting to note that we have announced an additional $1.4 million to expand the scope of the Three Gorges feasibility study. This is in addition to the $8.7 million contract awarded last July to a Canadian consortium. That contract was to look at the technical, economic, and financial viability of a multi-purpose development in the Three Gorges. When we are considering a project of this kind, it is important to be aware of the environmental impact and of the human rights impact—what will be the results on people upstream and downstream from the developments. While we recognize that the final decision will be that of the Chinese Government—and its integrity as a Government is involved—and that Canada is involved in providing financial assistance, we have a responsibility to ensure that some values which are very important to Canadians in terms of the environment and human rights values are being protected or looked after. Before any further contracts are let involving Canadian money for the Three Gorges project, I urge upon the Minister that there be some statement to Canadians about the environmental impact and about the human rights impact of this massive development.

The Minister knows, as do all Members of the House, that sometimes massive developments which can produce some very positive results can also have some very negative results. Every Government must be involved in trying to weigh what is positive against what is negative. That is the final responsibility of the Chinese Government as far as the project is concerned, but I think the Canadian Government has a responsibility in terms of further Canadian assistance.

I was pleased to see an emphasis in the Minister's statement on assistance to women and the $5 million which will be going to women's projects in Thailand to help them develop income generating projects. It is a helpful emphasis. We want to underscore the need for CIDA constantly to find ways of emphasizing the needs of women around the world.

This brings me to a concern that there is no dollar figure attached to the support for the All China Women's Federation. The Minister pointed out that its membership is 93 million, a huge organization, yet there is no dollar figure attached to the kind of aid which will be going to it. Perhaps the dollar figures will come later. I hope they will. It is very important not to lose sight of this as we emphasize the importance of women. It has an important public relations aspect for Canadians. They want to hear about it, but they would also like to hear what dollar figures are attached.

The Minister's remarks about the changes which are taking place in Asia are well taken, yet she talked about a strategy for Canadian success in that huge and developing market. I am not completely sure what is our strategy for success, but I have a suspicion that the Minister is trying to have a closer link between Canadian development assistance and Canadian trade, and that bothers me. Development assistance has its own priorities which must stand on their own and be addressed on their own. Time after time, talking about development assistance, representations have been made to the Government that the primary target for such assistance should be the poorest of the poor. Yet Canada has traditionally had a policy of tied aid by which we seek to do two things; we hope to help developing countries and that somehow we help the poor, and we are also very concerned about developing Canadian industry, exports and services.

I do not think the best way to encourage Canadian trade and services is by trying to use development assistance as a lever. These two very commendable goals have to stand on their own, and when we try to use tied aid as a method of levering our way into a market, no matter how important that market is, we end up having some very skewed development projects. We have seen some of the white elephants that have been created by tied aid in other parts of the world. This should not be done on a continuing basis. Trade has its own priorities. We should be addressing it in a straightforward, honest manner, and we should be addressing development priorities in a straightforward, honest manner. I leave those comments with the Minister and with the House.

Again, I thank the Minister for her statement. I want to underscore the importance of her visit, and the visit by other Canadian Ministers and other Canadians generally to the whole Asian area.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Madam Speaker, I have the honour, pursuant to Standing Order 106, of tabling a petition signed by residents of the riding of Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic who object to the proposed changes to the Patent Act in Bill C-22. They feel the Government's proposal will increase the already high cost of provincial health insurance plans and will also have a direct impact on all Canadians not covered by private insurance plans. The undersigned call upon Parliament to reject this proposal which will increase the price of drugs for all Canadians.

REQUEST FOR INCREASED GOVERNMENT AID TO CO-OP HOUSING PROGRAMS

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Madam Speaker, I have another petition, which I have the honour and the privilege of tabling on behalf of my constituents. It is signed by people in my riding who object to the Government's decision to make substantial changes in Canada's housing policy. In this International Year of Shelter for the Homeless, they feel that the Government's definition of essential needs is preventing hundreds of thousands of Canadians living below the poverty line from receiving Government housing assistance.

Wherefore the undersigned humbly pray and call upon Parliament to immediately increase funding for the Co-operative Housing Program.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): My last petition is again signed by people from the riding of Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic who object to the proposed changes to the Patent Act in Bill C-22. The undersigned are advising me of their objections because they feel the Government's proposal will increase the already high cost of provincial health insurance plans, considering the fact that the provinces pay 65 per cent of all drug costs.

The undersigned therefore call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase the price of drugs for all Canadians.

[English]

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from a number of residents in Newfoundland protesting the Government's changes to the Patent Act. Whereas the proposed changes to the Patent Act will directly affect all Canadians who are not protected by private or governmental medicare programs, and whereas the Government's proposal would raise the cost, already high, of provincial health care programs, and whereas the proposed changes to the Patent Act are another example of the Canadian Government's concessions in free trade negotiations with the United States at the expense of every day Canadians, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices to Canadians.

I have another petition from residents of Hull and from different parts of the Province of Quebec and from as far East as Moncton and Dieppe, New Brunswick. They too say that the monopoly granted to innovative pharmaceutical companies will prevent competition from generic companies and will result in an increase in drug costs and prices which will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs, and that the proposed changes to the Patent Act are another example of the Canadian Government's concessions in free trade negotiations with the United States at the expense of everyday Canadians.

I have a further petition on the same subject, Madam Speaker, from residents of the Province of Quebec, Carleton, St. Omer, Nouvelle and so on. They protest the Government's action in presenting Bill C-22, the Patent Act, and are very much against it. They recognize that Bill C-22 will increase prices to the poor, to ordinary Canadians, senior citizens and those who can least afford it in our society. They ask that this House condemn the Minister and this Bill. They ask the Government to defer and, indeed, scrap this legislation.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure and indeed an honour to present, pursuant to Standing Order 106, quite a number of petitions on the issue of Bill C-22. They come from Kamloops, Langley, Burns Lake, New Westminster, West Vancouver, Richmond, Nelson, Merritt, Vancouver, Dawson Creek, Burnaby, Mission, Surrey, Coquitlam, Courtenay, Comox, Cumberland, Sardis, Clearbrook, Agassiz, Port Moody, North Delta. All of the petitioners are concerned that the federal Government's proposal to change the Patent Act related to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy the necessary prescription drugs. They believe this measure will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis. They believe this is simply another example of the Canadian Government's concession to the United States at the expense of average Canadians in the free trade negotiations. The petitioners ask the Government to reject these proposals which they believe will increase the cost of prescription drug prices.

I have a large number of petitions from central Canada and eastern Canada. I will not necessarily read all the various communities. The people are particularly concerned about the fact that the proposed changes to the Patent Act, Bill C-22, will result in higher costs to provincial Government drug plans. They ask the Government to stop proceeding with this legislation.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from residents of the City of Winnipeg. The petition is in connection with Bill C-22, and the petitioners say that the federal Government's proposal to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. Therefore, they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug costs for Canadians.

I have several other petitions on the same subject from residents of various towns in Manitoba including Gimli, Fraserwood, Whitemouth, Brandon, Inwood, Teulon, Gunton, Deloraine, Melita and Ranch Grove. They say that the proposed measure will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis. They say that the proposed change is another example of Canadian Government concessions to the United States at the expense of average Canadians in the free trade negotiations. Therefore, they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure and an honour to submit a number of petitions signed by residents of Vancouver, the Province of Ontario, Lachine, Quebec, and other parts of Canada. They say that whereas the monopoly granted to innovative pharmaceutical companies will prevent competition from generic companies and will result in increasing drug costs or prices and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs, the petitioners call upon Parliament to reject the proposals contained in Bill C-22, better known as the Patent Act Bill.

I have another petition from residents of Scarborough and Brampton in the Province of Ontario as well as from other parts of Canada. Likewise, they are calling upon the Government of Canada to withdraw Bill C-22 and the amendments thereto because they do not want this particular Bill to negatively affect those Canadians who are in need of prescription drugs, namely, the elderly, the disabled and of course the poor of Canada.

The third petition I have comes from individuals in Brandon, Manitoba, and from other parts of Canada. The petitioners reject the amendments to Bill C-22 for they too believe that this will negatively affect senior citizens, the disabled and the poor as well as four million Canadians who are not covered by any drug programs. The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

My final petition comes from a number of residents mainly of the Province of Ontario. The petitioners are calling upon the federal Government to withdraw Bill C-22 because the monopoly granted to innovative pharmaceutical companies will prevent competition from generic companies and will result in an increase in drug costs and prices and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. Whereas the proposed changes to the Patent Act are another example of the Canadian Government's concession in free trade negotiations with the United States at the expense of ordinary Canadians, therefore the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for all Canadians.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Madam Speaker, I have a petition here from a number of Canadians who avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right to present a common grievance to this House of Commons in the assurance that this House will therefore provide a remedy. They are very concerned about proposed changes to the Patent Act which will result in increased costs for prescription drugs and will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of these drugs on an ongoing basis. It will result in higher costs to provincial government drug plans and the petitioners see these changes as being another example of Canadian Government concessions to the United States at the expense of average Canadians in the free trade negotiations. Therefore, they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Madam Speaker, I have today two petitions for presentation to this honourable House. The first petition has of course been certified correct as to form and content pursuant to Standing Order 106. It has been signed by a large number of residents of the City of Winnipeg and surrounding communities such as Hazel Ridge and Dugald. In this instance, our petitioners are calling upon Parliament to exercise its influence upon the Government to reject the proposed changes to the Patent Act in Bill C-22. Our petitioners cite that the proposed measure will hurt those Canadians who require prescription drugs on an ongoing basis and our petitioners see these as basically being concessions in the free trade negotiations with the United States for which average Canadians will have to pay.

The second petition is signed by residents of communities in our East Coast provinces including places like Halifax, Dartmouth, Tantallon and Cape Breton. This petition also calls upon Parliament to act so that changes to Bill C-22 are not instituted because of the adverse effect they will have on the budgets of average Canadians who are dependent upon prescription drugs, and they too believe and declare that these are in fact concessions in the free trade negotiations with the United States.

NUCLEAR DISARMAMENT

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, it is my duty to table a petition from 70 people in my riding who are united in the Greater Victoria disarmament group. I table it with a sense of duty and privilege. This is a very sincere group and I agree with its ultimate aim of nuclear disarmament, although we may differ as to the best and safest route to get there. I received this petition three days ago. The Clerk testified that it was acceptable yesterday and I am tabling it today. I think that is a reasonable amount of time to spend on a petition from a delegation. I said that this group was sincere. It is also enthusiastic. There are 73 signatures, one gentleman signed twice and a lady signed three times.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Madam Speaker, I have the responsibility and privilege of presenting a petition to the House. This petition comes from many Canadians in Atlantic Canada including such places as Amherst, Springhill, Moccar, Joggins, Truro and Brookfield in Nova Scotia and Moncton and Riverview in New Brunswick. These petitioners make the point that the proposed changes to the drug Patent Act will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs, and that in fact these proposed measures will unfairly hurt Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis. They point out that it will result in higher costs to provincial government drug plans, something which the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) has confirmed. They also point out that this is another example of the Canadian Conservative Government knuckling under to the United States at the expense of average Canadians in an effort to get a free trade agreement. Therefore, these Canadians humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject Bill C-22 which will serve only to increase prescription drug prices for average Canadians.

• (1200)

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Madam Speaker, I, too, have a petition which has been properly certified pursuant to Standing Order 106. I am honoured to exercise the privilege I have as a Member of Parliament of tabling a petition from Canadian citizens who avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right to present a grievance in common in the certain assurance that the House will provide a remedy. This petition adds to the thousands of names submitted in protest over the Government's introduction of Bill C-22. The petitioners protest that the Bill contains proposals to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs which will increase prices for Canadian consumers and severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. The proposed measure will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis. As well, the proposals will result in higher costs to provincial government drug plans. We also know that this legislation is a part of the concessions, the genuflection, if you will, before the demands of the U.S. which were required for the free trade negotiations. Therefore, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians, as in duty-bound your petitioners ever pray.

POINT OF ORDER

HOLOCAUST—INTENT OF HON. MEMBER'S STATEMENT

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, on Monday, March 16, 1987, I rose on a point of order and delivered a statement concerning the Deschênes Commission. Upon receipt of the "blues" I approved the content as being the exact wording of my text. However, when Monday's Hansard was released, a change had been made to the final sentence, thereby altering the basis and intent of my statement. Mr. John Ward, Editor in Chief of English Hansard, assures me that the corrected statement will appear in the bound edition of Hansard. I appreciate the diligence and dedication of Mr. Ward and his staff for their prompt action in correcting the error. However, in order that my original statement appear in Hansard for distribution, with your indulgence, Madam Speaker, I wish to read it again today.

Madam Speaker, I rise with respect to comments attributed to me in the Edmonton Journal of March 13, 1987, regarding the Deschênes Commission report.

I want to state that the intent of my remarks was to acknowledge that both Ukrainians and Jews had suffered enormous losses at the hands of oppressors.

In recognizing the tragic death of some 5.5 million Ukrainians, I in no way wished to minimize or downplay the atrocities and the evil of the Holocaust perpetrated by the Nazis.

If, inadvertently, my remarks have given offence or led anyone to believe I do not share a sense of outrage at the Holocaust, I categorically apologize and withdraw any statement, which may be interpreted as offensive to the Jewish community and indeed to any Canadian.

Ukrainians and Jews share a common experience as victims of grotesque oppression and cruelty. My desire is to see us work together to ensure neither Holocaust is forgotten nor allowed to happen again.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I wish to inform the House that because of the Minister's statement, Government Orders will be extended by 32 minutes from 1 p.m. today.

The House resumed from Wednesday, April 1, consideration of Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee, and Motion No. 2 (Mr. Dingwall, p. 4745).

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to speak on one of the saddest pieces of legislation to come before us. It will do great damage to a very vulnerable sector of our society. It will impact mostly on the elderly, the sick and the disadvantaged. Why is this being done? We are told one reason is that more drug research will be done in Canada.

I want to address my remarks particularly to the amendment because it points out that there is no definition of research in the Bill. The Minister says he does not want to put a definition in the Bill for fear of limiting the kind of research to be done by a multinational. I want to remind him of the words of his Leader who said he was not afraid to impose prosperity on the regions. I say to him, do not be afraid to impose prosperity on the regions of this country. Do not limit the amount of research because all over my riding holes are being dug in the ground in anticipation of the research centres which will be going up. There is a hole in Donovans Industrial Park in St. John's. I suspect the man digging that foundation is doing it in anticipation of the new research centre to go up there. In Wild Bight, White Bay, there is another hole in the ground and I suspect another research centre will be going up there in anticipation of this new legislation. We will probably see research centres growing up all over Newfoundland and Labrador. Indeed, research could become a new growth industry employing all those unemployed fishermen, all those miners laid off in Labrador City because of the downturn in the mining industry, and all those unemployed young people. No doubt they will get jobs in all those new research centres that are going to go up.

Well, that is a fiction. The record will show that R and D has not been done in Canada up until now and most certainly will not be done in the future because Canada has a small domestic market and historically the multinationals have chosen to perform R and D in their home country. I suspect that no matter what this legislation does that situation will continue. The multinationals will continue to do their research where they have done it before in spite of this legislation. I do not buy the argument that more research and development will come to Canada as a result of the passage of this Bill.

There is no question but that drug prices will rise. As a matter of fact, the Minister has admitted that, by passing along to the provinces $100 million over the next four years in anticipation that drug prices will rise so that the provinces will be able to fund, to a certain extent, the drug programs. However, that will be only a drop in the bucket. The real burden of the price increases which will come will be on the elderly, the sick, and particularly on low-income people.

A Bill on day care was introduced earlier this week. We are doing something about day care in this country because of the changes that are going on in Canadian society. There are more single-parent families today and most of the single parents are women who, of necessity, must look after their children somehow or other. They are doubly disadvantaged because, as we know, women are already in a disadvantaged position with regard to employment in this country. The average working woman is making 60 cents to every dollar earned by a man. I make that point because I believe we need to understand the changes which are going on in our society and understand the kind of people on whom this Bill will impact. The pressure will be exerted when children are sick and drugs have to be bought. That is when the unhappy effects will be felt.

The effects will also be felt by the elderly, the fastest growing section of the Canadian population. That range in our population will escalate dramatically during the next few years. We all know that as we age we have a greater dependency on medical help and drugs. I am starting to feel it myself, although I am not that old. When drug prices increase the burden will be felt by the senior population as well.

These things will happen and that is why I think it is important to support the amendment before us today, and object to the measures in the Bill because there is no commitment to enforce the legislation. There is nothing built in which ensures that multinationals will live up to what they say they are going to do. I believe we would have been prepared to accept the reasonable position put forward by the Eastman report. Everyone understands that there must be some legitimate protection for people who invent new things, that there must be some legitimate compensation for them.

However, legitimate and reasonable are the words upon which we must focus. I do not agree that we should say that they may design and introduce whatever new drugs they wish and can have a monopoly for a 10 year period. I do not know of anyone who willingly holds down prices in a monopoly. Unless there is some sort of competition, some balance in the market-place, people who have a monopoly on a product will charge as much as they can for it. That is part of the free market system. However, it seems to me that there is no reason the Government of Canada should hand such an opportunity to companies which are mostly American, while putting at a disadvantage distinctively Canadian companies which have grown up over the years.

There is no question that some price rise has to occur. The Eastman report suggested that a certain minimum price rise occur, that there be a royalty, and that possibly the period for the royalty might increase somewhat, but not to a 10 year period. In other words, the Government has gone well beyond what Eastman recommended. We will get not a reasonable increase for people who buy new drugs in the country, but a gouging of the Canadian consumer, particularly the elderly, those who are sick, and those who are on low incomes. That is the reality, Madam Speaker.

There are some people who say that there is really no difference between Parties anymore, that all people are Liberal-Conservatives, Conservative-Liberals, or whatever. However, it seems to me that this Bill puts into focus the difference in philosophy. When this Party was the Government it introduced, I believe in 1969, the regulations which have been in effect up until now through which there has been some competition in the market-place, which has kept the price of drugs down for Canadian consumers. There was something in the order of $200 million a year in savings to the Canadian people as a result of the legislation that was passed. Legislation has now been introduced which will dramatically drive up the price of drugs. That may not happen right away because this is a Sominex Bill, a sleeper Bill, but the price rises are coming.

When the Government tried to reduce old age pensions there was a mobilizing, for the first time, of gray power all across the country. This is the time for a re-enactment of that play, for the return of gray power. If we are going to do a job in this chamber of opposing this legislation I hope the seniors will once again come to the support of the Parties who are opposing this, will mobilize their forces and tell the Government that they are not prepared to put up with legislation which impacts directly on them, by putting an undue and unfair burden on them over the next 10 years.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to say a few words about the amendment before the House which attempts to put into the Bill a definition of "research". Most of the Members of this House have at some time been in Opposition and have a healthy disrespect for Bills which leave too much to regulation. Any citizen who has dealt directly with the interpretation of legislation must have a concern with a Bill which leaves so much to regulation that in many cases the regulations become more important with regard to the impact of the Bill than the Bill itself.

Nothing is more central to this Bill than research, how it is defined and what research can be done in Canada. I understand that many of the people who appeared before the committee had concerns about this particular section and believed that research had to be much more clearly defined and detailed in the Bill. The clause in the Bill which says: "The Governor in Council may make regulations defining, for the purposes of this section, the expression 'research and development' ", leaves the matter up to Cabinet. It is our concern and that of the Official Opposition that this point should not be left to regulation.

The disadvantages of not adhering to this principle are pretty well known. When precise instructions are not in legislation it is left to a regulator and there is always a possibility that the regulator will interpret the Act in a way quite different than what was originally intended when Parliament passed the Act. We are not satisfied to leave the definition of "research" to the Cabinet. We believe the Cabinet has already caved in to the multinational companies and, with the establishment of regulations, will continue to cave in.

One of the great disadvantages of leaving the definition to the regulators is that it is a hidden process. It does not provide for input from a large number of people. The legislative structure of the Bill allows all of us to talk about it. It allows hearings and discussion, but that does not happen in the making of regulations. A regulation can be changed very quickly, for example, by another regulation. Even if we now receive regulations from the Government under this Act, that would not make us feel secure that the definition would be the same next year because those regulations can be replaced by other regulations.

Often this process of changing a regulation or replacing a regulation goes unnoticed, yet it can have enormous implications. We have found in the past that regulations often allow the vested interests of those who have the time and money, and the reason, to impact on the Cabinet. The changing of regulations is often controlled by that particular group. That is not in the public interest, or in the interests of Parliament.

The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) has made a commendable attempt to present a statutory definition of "research". The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) has also made an attempt to put into this Act a definition of "research" which would force the people who are going to be governed by this Bill to recognize that they have a greater responsibility.

Some kind of amendment to the R and D definition is needed. People who appeared before the committee told us that it is now a kind of logical decision. We have no guarantees that the companies will invest the sums they say they are committed to. We have no guarantees that the investments will be in research rather than in any other kind of investment. We have no guarantees that the investment will be in research or even in basic research of useful medicines. The investment may instead be in processes and other things which really have nothing to do with the basic idea of research into pharmaceuticals.

What we do have is some indication of how the companies intend to proceed toward meeting their goals. As the Minister for Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) has expressed it, there will be 3,000 high-quality jobs created for Canadian scientists and biochemists over the next 10 years. The Minister made that statement in his attempts to justify this Bill. The access to information application made by Southam News indicates that the Minister, even as he made this statement, did not believe it. What that document shows is that of the 3,000 jobs, there will be 1,148 employed by the industry in professional categories. So the statement of 3,000 jobs for highly-qualified people has become 1,148 in the professional category. There will be another 541 persons employed extramurally, probably in universities and research institutes. There are 652 jobs classified as "technical", which means lab technicians who would have an undergraduate or community college standing. There are 620 "others" who turn out to be, in the words of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, managers, cleaners, animal keepers, statisticians and clerks. These are not what we would consider highly qualified scientists and biochemists. These jobs are almost menial in their level. Are these the kind of jobs to which we are committing a large amount of money?

What we have seen in the context of this particular Bill, as far as the Government is concerned, is that very little will be delivered for what it will cost all Canadians in terms of increased drug costs. The reluctance of the Government to accept the definition of "research" shows it is really in the pockets of the multinationals. The multinationals do not want to be confined and committed to a long-term investment in research in Canada.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to rise today to address Bill C-22, specifically the amendment setting forth the definition of "research" proposed by a representative of the Liberal Party. In doing so, I am a little sorry there are not more Members of the Liberal Party in the House to hear me, because I intend to start by praising the Liberal Party for its political courage in attempting to define "research". That political courage means more when we consider that it was the Liberal Government, after all, which brought in the Scientific Research Tax Credit which cost the taxpayers something in the region of $3 billion. I think it shows that in the development of a political party there are times when the great tragedies and failures that political party has inflicted on the country in the past must in a sense be set aside in the search for better legislative solutions in the future. Therefore, I see this as very much being an acknowledgement by the Liberal Party of how much it has cost this country in the past in not properly defining and limiting the eligibility of research expenditures for tax credit treatment.

I must say that, having grasped that particular nettle and acknowledged the grave derelictions in Liberal history, that Party has not come up with what I would accept as the best offer of a definition of "research". I will talk later about why that definition of research is so important to this Bill. It has come up with what I believe is a somewhat incomplete definition. I must say that even were there no partisan considerations involved, and of course there are, I would prefer the definition that has been put forward in Motion No. 43 by my very distinguished and erudite colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), who, as I am sure every Member of this House is aware, has worked on this sort of problem and this sort of legislative project for very many years in the House. He has built up an enormous understanding of the significance of proper definition to the ultimate effectiveness of a Bill.

After all, what Bill C-22 aims to do, essentially, is open the floodgates to profiteering on the part of multinational drug companies. It aims to open them in such a way that the multinationals will not have to look at possible legislative differences between Canada and the United States when they are pushing a drug development project. In saying this I am not taking away from the significance, the relevance or, indeed, the hope for the future that some of these prescription medication development projects entail. I think we are well aware that, but for the progress that has been made over the past century in the development of medication, the public health scenario in North America and, indeed, in the world would be much bleaker than it is today.

But the existence of a system which sometimes produces excellent results and sometimes satisfactory results is no excuse for failing to attempt to develop or, indeed, in this case maintain a superior system. After all, resources are the common currency. Financial resources are the very language of government. The devotion of an excessive proportion of resources, as would be the case in the sort of profit-oriented regime proposed by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), to the rewarding through the profit mechanism of the multinational drug companies is not in the best interests of an intelligent allocation of resources or in the best interests of Canadian health care consumers.

What was wrong with the system that we had before the Government introduced its proposed amendments to the Patent Act as set out in Bill C-22? That system did not appear to deny Canadians access to new medication technology or to new medications. It could never have been said about that system that it crippled any of the multinational drug companies. It could never have been said that it drove them out of business. I do not think that it could ever have been said that under the present regime of patent protection the opportunities for drug companies to recoup their research were limited or in any way impaired below a reasonable expectation of return and a reasonable flow of funds for the development of future research. In going beyond the Eastman report in Bill C-22 the Government has essentially made a preliminary concession to the United States in terms of the trade negotiations. I am concerned about the status of these preliminary concessions because it seems to me that Canada is giving preliminary concessions in more than one negotiation in order to bring the other side to the table in a good mood. I do not think that is an appropriate basis on which to conduct bilateral trade negotiations. I do not think that it is an appropriate basis on which to negotiate the allocation of cod stocks on the Grand Banks of Newfoundland. I do not think that it is an appropriate basis on which to go into multilateral trade negotiations, for example. But, indeed, this might become the expectation of those who go into negotiations with the Canadian Government, if a pattern is set, providing these preliminary sweeteners bring the other parties to the negotiation table.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), provided a very detailed and, I believe, a very precise analysis of just what the 3,000 so-called high technology research jobs that the Government is claiming come down to. I think it is worthwhile to put on the record again that this is essentially a chimera, that there are no guarantees attached to those 3,000 supposed jobs. The Government really does not have any worthwhile assurances that those jobs will in fact be created.

It is also worthwhile to remind the Government that the Canadian system of drug licensing and the Canadian regulations, with their lower limits on patent protection, are indeed something that have been the subject of study. I believe it was a U.S. Congressional committee which rather liked the Canadian example and felt that it lay within its responsibility—indeed it was its duty as legislators of our great neighbour to the south—to examine the Canadian system to determine whether or not it might be applicable to the United States.

I would like to point out also that the delayed effect essentially allows the Government to forever slide out of any analysis or any form of objective assessment of any benefits that may be realized under Bill C-22. We may expect that Motions Nos. 2 and 43 will be rejected by the House, since the Government will exercise its majority. However, without the inclusion of one or other of these motions there will not be an opportunity for the Government and for the public of Canada to assess in some objective way if this Bill has achieved its objectives.

On the contrary, the Government wishes to proceed by regulation which, of course, is a hidden process. It wants to go by regulation since regulations can be changed virtually at will and virtually without any reference to Parliament or the public. It wants to go with regulation because that will allow the continuance of that obviously cozy, obviously mutually rewarding relationship which the Government has established with those same multinational drug companies. We know that in the case of powerful and committed lobbies, such as those of the multinational drug companies, regulations are at the mercy of those interests. Unfortunately, the natural order of things appears to be that regulations are involved to accommodate the industry and its appetite for profit and not to regulate it in the best interests of Canadians.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to be able to participate in the debate on this important amendment which would ensure that there is a definition of research in Bill C-22. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), who has done an outstanding job on behalf of New Democrats all across Canada—indeed on behalf of the people of Canada—with respect to this legislation has proposed an alternate definition which, quite frankly, is more tightly drafted and is in fact preferable to the proposal of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall), although I am certainly pleased to support his proposal as well.

The nub of this issue is the extent to which we as Members of Parliament are prepared to leave to Cabinet the definition of "research". I believe it is essential for us, as elected representatives of the people, as parliamentarians, to define this fundamental concept in the legislation. The whole thrust of the Government's amendment is that there will be a major expansion of jobs in the research sector in Canada if this legislation is adopted. The Government admits, as it has to, that the cost of drugs in Canada will increase, and in some cases increase dramatically, as a result of the passage of this legislation; but it says that it is prepared to accept those increases in the prices of drugs because, in exchange, it is going to create a lot of new jobs in Canada in the area of research and development.

An Hon. Member: Not true.

Mr. Robinson: Madam Speaker, I think we have to examine very carefully whether this basic foundation for the Government's legislation is well founded. We have to ask ourselves, for example, whether the jobs to be created in research and development will be jobs created in the area of basic research, or whether they will be jobs created in the area of clinical research. I suspect, Madam Speaker, as witness after witness who appeared before the legislative committee on this Bill confirmed, they will not be primarily in the area of basic research at all; that they will be, overwhelmingly, in the area of clinical research.

As well, Madam Speaker, it is important that we underline the fact that the promise of additional jobs in the pharmaceutical industry is not one that is directly based solely on the passage of this legislation. We have to recognize that in Canada we have an aging population, and as the population ages the demand for pharmaceutical drugs increases. So, the projection of new jobs in Canada is not only as a result of the adoption of this legislation, to which only a small part would be attributable, but also, to a very significant extent, to the natural increase in the demand for drugs on the part of an aging population.

Madam Speaker, my constituents in Burnaby have asked me why it is that the Government is determined to proceed with a measure which is going to result in significantly increased prices for new drugs for the elderly, for the sick, for the disabled. As well, Madam Speaker, it is a measure which will result in an over-all increase in taxes in those provinces which have pharmacare plans.

I have been asked what is the basis for this. A senior citizen in the New Vista highrise in Burnaby asked me why it is that the Government is so determined to increase drug prices, what is the advantage of this, and whether it is going to create new jobs. One of the seniors said that she had received a letter from the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) in which the Minister had promised that there would be a minimum of 3,000 high quality jobs for Canadian scientists and biochemists created over the next 10 years. She said to me: "I have a grandson who is studying chemistry at university, and we are concerned that there aren't enough jobs for young scientists in Canada. So obviously, if there is a real possibility of a significant expansion of jobs in basic research in Canada, that is something that all of us would welcome".

But, Madam Speaker, when one reads between the lines, as my colleagues have already noted, one finds that the promise of 3,000 high quality jobs for Canadian scientists and biochemists is a myth, is a fabrication. It is just not going to happen. The Government's own documents show that these so-called 3,000 jobs will not be jobs in the professional categories, let alone in basic research; rather, a significant number of those people will in fact be employed, to use the words of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, "as managers, cleaners, animal keepers, statisticians, and clerks".

An Hon. Member: No PhDs.

Mr. Robinson: Madam Speaker, the reality in Canada today is that some of our cleaners and some of our clerks are in fact PhDs, are people who, while highly trained, cannot find employment in their fields. As a result of the failure of this Government's policy, and the failure of the policies of the Government before it, many of these people are driving taxis or are in fact working as clerks or as animal keepers.

We in the New Democratic Party, Madam Speaker, believe that we should be using the resources of the people of Canada. We believe that we should be challenging our young people; that we should be encouraging them to engage in basic research—but not, Madam Speaker, in the way that the Government has proposed.

My colleague from Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) has spoken, often eloquently, on the subject of the crisis in funding for post-secondary education in Canada. Instead of pouring hundreds of millions of dollars into the coffers of multinational drug companies, why not put money into the future of the young people of this country by strengthening the system of post-secondary education in Canada?

When my constituents in Burnaby, Madam Speaker, asked me why it is that the Government wants to hit the old, why it is that they want to hit the sick, the disabled, I had a look at the Government's political agenda, and, Madam Speaker, what I found was very interesting. I found that part and parcel of the free trade negotiations between Canada and the United States is a commitment by the Progressive Conservative Government and the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) to the multinational drug companies in the United States that their concerns will be taken care of. That is the deal; that is the fix, Madam Speaker.

Clayton Yeutter, the chief U.S. negotiator on free trade, in a speech delivered in Chicago in October of last year, made the following statement:

> We have longstanding concerns regarding the inadequate protection in Canada of pharmaceutical patents, as well as the absence of copyright protection of U.S. broadcasting which is picked up and retransmitted throughout Canada. We wish to secure adequate intellectual property protection in both of these areas.

So, what we see here, Madam Speaker, is an attempt to placate American national drug companies. And who is being sacrificed? It is those who are most vulnerable in Canada today: the elderly, the sick, the disabled. And it is the poor, Madam Speaker, whose taxes will increase with the increase in the cost of provincial pharmacare plans.

Recently, Madam Speaker, we saw a budget tabled in the Province of British Columbia which will result in a significant increase in the cost of drugs right away to the elderly, an increase of some $250 a year—and this to those who can least afford to pay. That increase comes as a result of the Vander Zalm Government proposal to add on the increased costs to the B.C. pharmacare plan.

The senior citizens of Canada, Madam Speaker, have spoken out strongly, and unanimously against this Government's proposal to destroy what is an effective plan to keep the price of pharmaceutical drugs in Canada down. My colleague, the Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) is in the Chamber. He spoke yesterday with fire and brimstone—

Mr. Dingwall: And eloquence.

Mr. Robinson: —about the history of this matter. I do not think I have to remind Canadians, Madam Speaker, that it was the previous Liberal Government which first set out to erode the protections in this area; that it was the then Liberal Government, Madam Speaker, that appointed Martin O'Connell to head a commission on the subject, an individual who in fact was buddy-buddy with the multinational drug companies. Canadians know that history, Madam Speaker. They are well aware of the fact that this is a process which was started by the Liberals and which is now being continued by the Conservatives. The only Party which has consistently spoken out in favour of the interests of Canadian consumers, the elderly, the poor, the disabled in Canada, is the New Democratic Party, and we will continue to speak out on their behalf.

You are signalling me, Madam Speaker, that my time is in fact coming to an end on this particular amendment.

An Hon. Member: With regret.

Mr. Robinson: Obviously, my colleagues will be continuing, during the course of the next weeks and months, to speak out on this important Bill. I want to assure, Madam Speaker, not only the people of Burnaby but all of the people of this country, that there is one Party which is consistent in its determination to keep the cost of pharmaceutical drugs down, to enhance the quality of research in Canada, to provide jobs for young Canadian scientists, and that Party, Madam Speaker, is the New Democratic Party of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

[Translation]

Is the House ready for the question? The question is on the following motion: Mr. Dingwall, seconded by Mr. Gauthier, moved:

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by adding immediately after line 34 at page 10 the following:

""research" is exploratory and innovative work undertaken on a systematic basis towards the acquisition of new knowledge in new ways. New knowledge involves the integration of newly acquired information into existing hypothesis, the formulation and testing of new hypothesis or the re-evaluation of existing observations;"

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division is deferred.

That Bill C-22 be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 3 to 7 at page 13 and substituting the following therefor:

"production of medicine".

He said: Madam Speaker, as a result of a ruling by the Speaker, Motions Nos. 3, 4, 5, 11, 13, and 15 have been grouped for the purposes of debate, but I believe they have been split for the purposes of a vote which will take place at a later time.

With regard to Motions Nos. 3, 13, and 15, they will delete product patents from the legislation, which is the purpose of the amendment. As the law now stands, only process patents can be granted. Bill C-22 would allow product patents to be granted as well. Canadian biotechnology firms say that this change will effectively put them out of business.

I thought it was the intention of the Government of the day to try to foster new economic activity in the country, not to retard or negative in any way those industries already in place. However, with the way in which Bill C-22 is drafted, it will have the opposite effect of the stated intention of the Government. Biotechnology firms want to keep the process of genetic engineering patentable, but because these substances are naturally occurring they do not believe that the product developed from the use of process should be patentable.

For example, companies like Cangene, which appeared before the legislative committee on Bill C-22, made a very forceful, thoughtful, and reasonable presentation. Cangene extracts naturally occurring substances, genes, from healthy individuals and injects them into unhealthy individuals in a manner which triggers the unhealthy individual to manufacture the substance in his or her own body. The way the Bill now stands, it would prevent companies like Cangene, which are very actively involved in the biotechnology sector of the pharmaceutical industry or the health science industry, from carrying on their activities in a viable way.

As we debate the provisions of Bill C-22, I think it is important to try to maintain a clear and unequivocal objective. It is the stated intention, desire, and objective of our Party that we have a balanced approach to the vital elements which make up the pharmaceutical industry in Canada. Whether one looks at it from the point of view of the creation of new jobs, from the aspect of research and development and what will take place in Canada as a result of Bill C-22 being passed into law, or from the perspective of Canadian consumers who must purchase prescription drugs, it is clear that Bill C-22 will not allow us to attain that particular objective.

The Government is discriminating or unwisely prohibiting certain firms in that sector from prospering. We think that is wrong, Madam Speaker. If one has to have a Canadian pharmaceutical industry, one has to bring in public policy which addresses all of the concerns to achieve that result. Unfortunately, and I say this with great sincerity, Bill C-22 has major omissions regarding that objective.

Motions Nos. 4, 5 and 11, and I say this as simply as I can, Madam Speaker, because I know you are very attentive to these various amendments, deal with the recommendations contained in Dr. Harry Eastman's report. That report was commissioned by the previous administration whereby Dr. Eastman studied the subject at great length. It would be fair to say that from all perspectives he is indeed an authority on the pharmaceutical industry. Motions Nos. 4, 5 and 11, deal with Dr. Eastman's recommendations, namely, a four-year period of exclusivity after the granting of a notice of compliance. Here is where one will probably want to talk about Dr. Eastman's recommendations regarding the pharmaceutical royalty fund. I know members opposite, particularly those who served on the legislative committee, had some difficulties grasping—I do not say this to be disputatious or to be mean—and comprehending the thrusts of Dr. Eastman's recommendations regarding that. In summary, companies would pay into the pharmaceutical royalty fund and would receive back a proportion in accordance with the amount of research and development they conduct here in Canada. Dr. Eastman has felt that by increasing royalties rather than unduly—this is very key—lengthening patent protection we would avoid the anti-competitive aspect of exclusivity.

Since the Chair has ruled that these motions have been grouped together for the purposes of debate, let me conclude in the few minutes I have by saying that the present amendment of the administration of the Conservative Government grants an extended monopoly provision to multinational companies in this country. One is concerned with trying to develop and enhance the Canadian pharmaceutical industry but the Bill has grave and serious omissions with other elements regarding consumers, research and development. It is acknowledging in Bill C-22 that the concept of intellectual property ought to be the main thrust of a possible tool, as I believe Bill C-22 could be, for economic development in Canada.

My Party has accepted the recommendations of Dr. Eastman because he is an authority and because he has studied the subject. We believe the recommendations to be reasonable. Having said all of that, I have to clearly and unequivocally dissociate myself from what the Government is attempting to do. I disagree with its extended monopoly provisions to brand name companies. Nothing has been done about prices other than to pay lip service. In paying lip service, they have acknowledged, quite rightly, that prices in Canada will rise by an exorbitant amount. They have done nothing in terms of clear enforceable guarantees, vis-à-vis commitments for research and development.

Bill C-22 has major omissions. We as a Party disagree with the thrust of Bill C-22. We have submitted these amendments to try to improve upon the Bill. I would hope that the Government would accept our amendments because they are both reasonable and, I think, address all of the vital elements that go into developing a Canadian pharmaceutical industry.

The committee has heard a number of witnesses from all walks of life who are opposed to the Government's desire and intention to give unfettered monopoly sanctions or provisions to the multinational corporations. The amendments we are putting forward today, and I know my colleague from the New Democratic Party has an amendment and will probably want to speak to that directly himself, are trying to address a very important element of the Canadian economy.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, I rise to support the thrust of these amendments, one of which,

Motion No. 4, I moved on behalf of our Party. We should keep in mind the history of this Bill. Without going into a lengthy historical account, let me remind Hon. Members and the Minister that until 1969 our system of legislation for patent protection of prescription drugs was very much like the system in the United States. As a result we had the second highest prescription drug prices in the world.

A whole series of inquiries were held by the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, eventually by a parliamentary committee headed by a member at that time, Dr. Harley, and it was substantiated very clearly that Canadians were paying far too much for prescription drugs.

In 1969 the legislation was changed. After companies had satisfied health authorities that a drug would be medically safe and adequate they could get a licence to produce the drug. This drug had already been researched and developed by another company, usually a multinational, and companies we call generic companies could produce that same drug after paying a royalty fee to the original company.

After 1969, as a result of that change in the legislation, prices for prescription drugs in Canada have been among the lowest of the industrialized countries. The multinational corporations were, to say the least, unhappy about this and they began very quickly to mount a campaign against it. They are very powerful politically. They have a lot of money to help political Parties, Members of Parliament or candidates who want to become Members of Parliament with campaign funds. Their parent companies which are usually in the United States have tremendous power in the United States.

The multinationals were not simply worried about what had happened in Canada, they were worried that the American public would see the success of the program we instituted in Canada and would begin to call for a similar program in the United States. That in fact happened. Congressman Waxman heads up of a subcommittee which has studied this question extensively. He is moving to bring in the kind of program we have had in Canada since 1969. Governor Cuomo of New York State has found that the state is facing increasing costs because senior citizens who qualify for Medicaid and Medicare programs in that state receive all or part of their prescription costs from the state. The state is looking at these escalating costs and is now taking steps to encourage pharmacists to use generic drugs when filling prescriptions for senior citizens.

The then Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in the Liberal Government, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), listened to the complaints of the multinational companies and wanted to do something about them. However, he realized that there would be a great deal of pressure in opposition to any major change so he appointed a professor from the University of Toronto, Professor Eastman, to study the problem. Professor Eastman conducted a very lengthy study, but by the time he brought his report to Parliament the election had taken place and we had a new Government, a Conservative Government, but not a very progressive one.

What happened to Professor Eastman's report? Did the Government greet it with interest and hope? No, it virtually hid the report. The Government which talks so much about being open and wanting to listen to people then proceeded to try to achieve for the multinational corporations what they wanted, and that was a much longer period of exclusivity after having developed new drugs so that they could set prices at the levels they wanted. The Government proceeded to try to get for the multinational pharmaceutical companies what they wanted by arranging for secret meetings to be held between the members of the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada, representatives from the multinationals and representatives from the generic companies. The Government was telling the generic companies that they had better agree to something and give something up or else the Government would bring in legislation which they would like even less. There was very little talk about Professor Eastman's report or its merits.

When the many organizations that represent the people of Canada realized what was happening, they began to express their opposition to it. The Consumers' Association of Canada is not a very radical organization. It is an organization that is very cautious and careful. It very carefully examines issues which are of concern to consumers before it comes to a conclusion. As soon as that organization looked at the Bill which was brought in by the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, it made it very clear that it was very critical of the Bill and it has continued to oppose it. The Canadian Labour Congress and unions associated with it, seniors' organizations almost without exception and farm groups such as Keystone Agricultural Producers all opposed the Bill virtually from the day it came out.

Then began the waffling. We now have a Bill before us which supposedly implements the proposals of Professor Eastman's report. If one were to examine the Bill and compare it with Professor Eastman's proposals, one would see that they have very little in common.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) has said repeatedly that, as a result of this Bill, the cost of prescription drugs will not rise or at least not for some considerable time. Professor Eastman on the other hand made it very clear, both in his report and in his testimony before the committee, that evidence showed that the cost of prescription drugs would go up and quite substantially. In testimony before the committee, he pointed out that as a result of this Bill, pharmaceutical companies would have an extra six years of exclusivity during which they could set prices.

Let me conclude by saying to the Minister that there is evidence before us now that the cost will rise. A few days ago, the Social Credit Government of British Columbia presented a Budget. In it the cost of prescription drugs that will be borne by a family in British Columbia, before the Government plan picks up the rest, has been increased to $250 per family. This Bill is deficient. The amendment I moved and the amendment moved by the representative of the Liberal Party should be supported.

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Madam Speaker, I rise to speak to the motion put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall), and Motion No. 4 put forward by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). My constituents and the people of Prince Edward Island are very concerned about this Bill. Since this Bill was brought forward by the Government I have received, on a daily basis, letters and cards from my constituents protesting it. I have also received numerous phone calls in both my riding office and my Ottawa office. My office assistant tells me that at least 10 to 15 calls a day come in regarding Bill C-22 which the Government is ramming through this House.

These cards I have here inform me of the strong objection these individuals have to the proposed regressive changes to the Patent Act. They request me, as their Member of Parliament, to do everything in my power to see that this proposed rip-off of Canadians through exorbitant increases in drug prices is not allowed to pass. Among those who have sent me cards are Clifford Arsenault, Ferdinand Gallant, Michael Gaudet, Corinne Kay, Sidney Richards, James Fraser, Mitchell Kahill, James Douglas, Anthony Perry, Cindy Douglas, Earl Matthews, and Stewart McKenna. These people are from Ellerslie, Elmsdale, Summerside, St. Nicholas, Miscouche and Wellington, Prince Edward Island. They are all ordinary, hard-working Canadians with families. They are finding it extremely difficult to get along on the wages they are able to bring home. In times like this we see that tax increases on one thing and another are eroding the little bit of disposable income these people have. It is almost a disaster. It has gotten to the point where they can no longer afford any increases whatsoever in taxes or anything else. This Bill is a form of indirect tax and it is not needed. There is no need for the Government to change the Patent Act in order to allow the multinational drug companies to increase their profits.

The other day I referred to a letter that was sent to the Minister by Mr. Robert Wygant, a man who spent 25 years in the pharmaceutical industry in Canada. I read the letter into the record for a good reason. It was one of the best and clearest letters that I have ever received from a constituent on this subject. The man pointed out quite clearly the profits the drug companies are making. He also pointed out that it is wrong to think very much research is going to be carried out in this country when something less than 5 per cent of total research is done in the U.S. where they have patent legislation which prohibits these sorts of profits.

I have eight Royal Canadian Legion branches in my riding representing thousands of veterans. We all know those living on veterans' pensions are not living high on the hog. Those people are concerned about this legislation and I want to give this House the thinking of one branch of the Royal Canadian Legion. The branch is not in my riding, but in the riding of the Hon. Member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass). The branch sent me a copy of the letter. The letter says:

> The members of North Rustico Legion Branch 13 by a motion with 100 per cent approval to write you as our representative in the Federal Government.
> We are 100 per cent against the Federal Government's introduction of a bill to amend Section 41 of the Patent Act.

It was signed on behalf of members of that legion branch by Joseph Pineau, Secretary/Manager, and Ferdinand LeClair, President. We are not going out and soliciting this kind of support. I have not sent any petitions to my riding asking people to sign them. I do not have to. They come to me. Since becoming a Member of Parliament in 1980, I have never seen such a hue and cry, such outrage as I have now except perhaps when the Government tried to deindex old age pensions.

The legislature of Prince Edward Island unanimously approved a resolution condemning the Government and asking it to withdraw this legislation. I have talked at length with the Minister for Health and Social Services of Prince Edward Island, the Hon. Keith Milligan, and he wrote the federal Minister and made numerous overtures to the Government asking it to withdraw this legislation. It is not just the Government of the day in that province, which happens to be a Liberal Government, that is protesting. The Government of former Premier James Lee also made approaches to the federal Government asking it to withdraw this Bill and avoid increasing drug prices for Canadians.

Statistics point out quite clearly that Prince Edward Island has the highest percentage of elderly people per capita in Canada. I do not know whether that is because of the fresh air or the beautiful surroundings, but people live longer there, and there are statistics to prove it. We all know that there is more sickness and more need on the part of senior citizens to depend on prescription drugs. Those are the people who will be the hardest hit by this legislation. This legislation irks them, and it irks me as their representative. I speak out on their behalf, unlike the other three Members from Prince Edward Island. I have not heard them say one word on this Bill. Obviously they are following along the Government road of ramming this legislation through. They may not admit it, but at some time or other they have been told to follow the Government's lead. They have been told that some research will come to the Province of Prince Edward Island at the University of P.E.I. As they say in Prince Edward Island, that just ain't so. There will be no research at the University of Prince Edward Island because we do not have a medical component there. As I said before, this is a totally misleading statement because we have heard experts in the field say that of the total research that is now done on new drugs less than 5 per cent is done in Canada or the United States and there is legislation already in place in the United States which would prohibit this sort of research being done.

I would love to be able to speak for at least an hour if I could get the unanimous consent of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Andre: No.

Mr. Henderson: I am sorry that the Conservative Government does not want to hear the concerns of Prince Edward Islanders, the poor, the elderly, and the sick. That makes me feel very sorry and very disappointed in the Government and the Minister.

Mr. Andre: It's just you, George. We don't mind Islanders.

Mr. Henderson: Not only is the Minister gouging the people in respect of pharmaceutical drugs, he is also gouging them on postal service.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time allotted to the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) has expired. It being 1.32 p.m. I do now leave the Chair until 2 p.m.

At 1.32 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—PRIME MINISTER'S FORTHCOMING MEETING WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are beginning to wonder about the acid rain strategy of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). His acceptance of research and demonstration as progress means that Canada is being sidetracked on acid rain cuts. Unfortunately, the debate is now on how much money should be spent, over how many years, for research and demonstration, instead of pollution cuts.

On the eve of the third summit, Canadians expect their Prime Minister to speak frankly and ask that the dumping of acid rain pollution into Canada be stopped. We urge the Prime Minister to put before the President next Sunday a blueprint for cutting acid rain crossing into Canada, including quantities, targets, and deadlines. We must protect the Canadian environment. Canada must spell out what Canadians want. The Prime Minister's acid rain strategy must reassure, not create doubts, in the minds of Canadians.

SUGAR BEET STABILIZATION PLAN—NON-PARTICIPATION BY MANITOBA

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased the federal Government has announced it will sign a tripartite stabilization plan for sugar beets with the producers and the provincial Government of Alberta. Unfortunately, even though Manitoba's Minister of Agriculture is a signatory to the national agriculture strategy, which recognizes that both levels of government have a responsibility to support agriculture, the Province of Manitoba is unwilling to make a commitment to this plan.

Tripartite stabilization agreements prove that the two levels of government and producers can work together to support agriculture. The tripartite stabilization plan for hogs, in which Manitoba does participate, is a good example of how productive that co-operation can be.

The federal Government, the provincial Government of Alberta and producers in both Alberta and Manitoba all support the concept of the proposed tripartite stabilization plan. These parties believe in the future of the sugar beet industry and are willing to commit to it. I hope we will soon see the same sort of commitment from the Province of Manitoba.

CHOICES AVAILABLE TO PARENTS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, early this week the Government received a lot of advice on how to solve Canada's child care crisis. The common claim running through all proposals is that it provide child care choices to parents. Three key elements allow parents to choose child care uniquely suited to their family's needs. First, those child care arrangements must exist from which to choose. Second, the child care arrangements must be affordable to the family. Most important of all, child care arrangements must ensure quality care for children.

Canadians know these three elements cannot be achieved through Conservative tax credits which do not even cover the cost of care, and a laissez-faire free market attitude to child care. Canadians will reject the Liberal philosophy which sees child care as an extension of the welfare system. Canadians overwhelmingly told the Special Committee on Child Care that they want a publicly financed system developed at the community level with parent input, non-profit and accountable, with quality controls.

It is not too late for the Government to get a copy of the New Democratic Party's proposals entitled "Caring for Canada's Children".

DISASTERS

EXPRESSION OF SYMPATHY FOR VICTIMS OF ACCIDENT AT GASPÉ COPPER MINE AT MURDOCHVILLE

Mr. Charles-Eugène Marin (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, once again disaster has struck in the riding of Gaspé.

Last night, there was an accident at the copper mine in Murdochville in the Gaspé. Later that night, 56 miners were still trapped in the tunnels of the Gaspé Copper Mine.

At two o'clock this afternoon, we have had some relatively reassuring news about 33 miners with whom the rescue team is in constant communication, but we also know that 17 workers have not yet been reached. Six were able to get out of the mine, one of whom was taken to hospital and one, unfortunately, is dead.

Mr. Speaker, the House will recall that on October 19 last year, three young mothers and three children lost their lives as a result of an explosion in a pharmacy at Sainte-Anne-des-Monts.

Mr. Speaker, in a region like mine that already has so many social and economic problems, the impact of a tragedy like this one goes beyond the immediate family to affect every Gaspesian, both in the Gaspé and outside, as well as former and present miners across this country.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that you yourself and Hon. Members will join me in expressing our constant support for the miners, their families and the management of Gaspé Copper.

SITUATION OF TOBACCO GROWERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Tory Government has abandoned tens of thousands of farmers when they are facing the worst debt crisis since the 1930s. Fully 30 per cent of Canadian farmers now face insolvency or serious financial difficulty. Last week the Agriculture Committee heard tobacco farmers who had been promised action to help them to adjust to declining markets, prices and land values, blast the Government for its lack of action. The Tories had promised these farmers five cents from the 25 cent-per-pack tax imposed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in May of 1985 in an assistance program. That promise has not been kept, yet, daily, farmers are being forced off the land and a terrible personal toll is being taken.

These farmers were also promised a national marketing board by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). However, two-and-a-half years have passed and still no national marketing board has been established.

I call on the Government to keep its promise to these desperate farmers facing the loss of their farms, their livelihoods, and their homes.

ACID RAIN—NEW BRUNSWICK'S WILLINGNESS TO SIGN AGREEMENT

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, this morning at a meeting of the Acid Rain Committee, Premier Richard Hatfield advised that through negotiation with the federal Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) he has reached the point at which he will recommend to the Government of New Brunswick that an agreement on the control of acid rain be signed. The Premier pointed out to the committee that New Brunswick has led the way in its sensitivity on environmental matters and has met its 1994 commitment of 185,000 tonnes of SO2 many months ago.

The Premier assured the committee and the nation that New Brunswick's willingness to sign the agreement is consistent with its track record on pollution control and emphasizes the fact that the province has done, is doing, and will continue to do all that is necessary to carry its fair share and more to address this critical issue.

CANADIAN STUDENT LOAN PLAN

REPAYMENT OF HIGH INTEREST RATE LOANS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, a Government which has admitted the need for action to reduce interest rates on credit cards should take note of another interest rate problem—the exorbitant rates charged students under the Canada Student Loan Plan. Students are still paying off loans at high rates of interest on loans taken out when the rates were higher. Some 200,000 students are paying rates of 16 per cent.

The high rates of interest are only part of the problem of the high debt load students are forced to assume. Some months ago now I took a number of particular horror stories to the Minister for action. He agreed that procedures needed to be improved in order to prevent such cases from recurring. So far nothing has been done.

Student leaders across the country agree that we need a national grant scheme, not just loans. Presumably this will be discussed at the forum on post-secondary education when it is held in the fall. In the meantime, the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) should move to correct the deficiencies of the present system. He should take immediate action toward the reduction of those interest rates. Students should not have to start their working lives with such crippling debts. Our students deserve a better break, and the federal Government has its role with the provinces in providing it.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

POLYSAR LIMITED—HIGH LEVEL OF INVESTMENT

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, my constituency of Sarnia—Lambton is known across the country and, indeed, throughout the world, as the chemical valley of Canada. The Canadian industry located there works tirelessly to remain competitive and productive in today's rapidly changing technological market. For this reason our Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) decision to establish and chair the National Advisory Board for Science and Technology is applauded by this industry in Sarnia—Lambton.

A locally based multinational company in my community, Polysar Limited, is the world's largest producer of synthetic latex and rubber. Polysar is one of Canada's largest exporters of manufactured goods and last year accomplished $1.8 billion in sales overseas.

To maintain its position Polysar is heavily involved in R and D. Its current research efforts rank Polysar in the top 15 of all corporations doing research in Canada. Last year over $40 million was invested by Polysar in research and development. As a result Polysar is about to introduce to the world a new product developed in its Sarnia R and D laboratories.

Canada's future rests in the advancement of science and technology. I join with local industry in congratulating our Prime Minister on his recognition of the important field of R and D.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

INTEREST RATES CHARGED TO FARMERS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, most Canadians know that our farmers have been suffering from low commodity prices, whether it be with respect to grain, potatoes, or beef, just to name a few. Our farmers need all the help they can get, and the Farm Credit Corporation has to do its part.

I want to bring to the attention of the House the excessive lending rates charged by the Farm Credit Corporation. Its interest rate on five-year loans is 10.75 per cent, and for loans with terms over five years the rate is 11 per cent. At the same time chartered banks charge our farmers about prime plus 1 per cent, or 9.75 per cent. Farmers in my constituency believe that this is unfair, and I share their view.

This is the planting season, and farmers need financial assistance from the Farm Credit Corporation. I urge the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) to intervene and instruct the Farm Credit Corporation to give our farmers a break.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

YOUTH

UNEMPLOYMENT LEVELS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, 48 per cent of single people under the age of 25 in Canada live below the poverty line; 100,000 young people with children also live below the poverty line.

The youth unemployment in Newfoundland is 32 per cent; in British Columbia it is 23 per cent; in Nova Scotia it is 25 per cent.

The unemployment rate for young people in Alberta is two and one half times as high as it was in 1980. Last year in Canada 170,000 students could not find a summer job.

Three times the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) formally committed himself in the House of Commons to introduce major new programs for youth by April 1, 1986. Yesterday was April 1, 1987, and the Prime Minister still has not kept his promise.

Some Hon. Members: Shame! Resign.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): This, Mr. Speaker, is a disgrace; and what is worse, it is a tragic waste of Canadian talent.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—IMPORTANCE TO WORKERS IN CHURCHILL RIDING

Mr. George Minaker (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, the opposition of the NDP and the Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) to the Canada-U.S. trade negotiations is putting jobs in peril in that Member's own riding in northern Manitoba.

Statistics Canada figures show that 25 per cent of the people employed in the Churchill riding are directly employed in the primary industries, with almost every other job in the riding indirectly related to those industries.

Farmers in the Carrot River Valley, forestry workers in The Pas, miners in Flin Flon, Snow Lake, Thompson, Lynn Lake and Leaf Rapids, CN railway workers, all are dependent upon export markets.

Manitoba is an exporter of hydro-electric power, so hydro workers at Gillam and construction workers at the Limestone Power Project are dependent upon export markets for their livelihood.

With so many people in the Churchill riding dependent upon export markets, and particularly U.S. markets, I am surprised that the Member for Churchill is not supportive of our trade talks with the U.S.

Free trade will be good for the residents of Churchill riding, as it will be for all Canadians. The Member for Churchill should stand up for his constituents, instead of blindly following his anti-American socialist Leader, the Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent).

REVENUE CANADA

INCORRECT ANSWERS TO TAXPAYERS—COMPLEXITY OF TAX LAWS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) and his Department—

An Hon. Member: Careful.

Mr. de Jong: They incorrectly answered only 36 per cent of questions asked in a survey this year. That is down from a level of 42 per cent last year. But then, in 1985, they were at 3 per cent in the Toronto Star survey.

Why is it that Revenue Canada agents, who receive 270 hours of training in Introductory Law, and over 100 hours training in specialized areas, cannot answer correctly inquiries from harried taxpayers?

Let us be fair. It is not their fault. It is the fault of the folks in the Finance Department. They have created a tax code so confusing that only highly paid specialists can understand it. For the average person, for those who have to depend upon Revenue Canada for answers in order to fill out their forms, the reality is that they should not expect Revenue Canada to know all of the answers.

Hopefully the long awaited promised tax reform will produce a tax code that is not only fair but simple and understandable for the average Canadian.

STATISTICAL BREAKDOWN OF CHILDREN REQUIRING DAY CARE

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to the day care crisis in Canada, a crisis of which we have all been made very much aware during the past few days, and a crisis defined as being the need for 1.9 million day care spaces for Canadian children.

When day care advocates refer to the 2.1 million children in Canada who require day care spaces, their figures include all children under 12, where both parents work full or part-time, or where one spouse attends school for more than 20 hours per week.

Of the 2.1 million children referred to by the Opposition, I have discovered that over 1 million—actually, 1.1 million, to be precise—are children of school age.

While most of my colleagues in the House would agree that "latch key" children require some assistance, surely it is misleading to assume that all of these children are suffering from a day care crisis.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

REJECTION OF ATTEMPT TO REINSTATE DEATH PENALTY IN BRITAIN

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Mother of Parliaments showed us the way. The British House of Commons voted by a margin of 112 to defeat a proposed amendment to restore the death penalty for certain acts of murder in Britain.

Why is this important to Canada? It is important because the public mood in Canada is similar to that of Britain where about 70 per cent favour the death penalty. Our role is not to ignore public opinion but to make dispassionate decisions on public policy based on all the facts.

Why has Britain rejected the death penalty? British Members of Parliament said no to capital punishment because they know it is not a deterrent to murder. British MPs said no because they know innocent people have been executed. British MPs said no because they know that juries often fail to convict murderers if the accused is to be executed. British MPs said no because they know that many terrorists crave martyrdom. I suspect that British MPs said no because they know that it is wrong for the state, for the Government, to execute a human being.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Lesick) just pointed out that 1.1 million of the 2.1 million children who, we have been told, are suffering from the day care crisis are of school age. I would draw to the attention of the House that of the 1 million children remaining, 17.6 per cent are already in licensed spaces.

This leaves 842,000 children of whom 44 per cent are cared for by relatives. Where this family care has been established, it is difficult to understand how some advocates can claim that government run centres would provide better care than a family member. It is even more difficult to understand why anyone would advocate that licensed child care workers should replace the involvement of these families in bringing up their children.

CANADA-NOVA SCOTIA LIVESTOCK FEED DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, a joint Canada-Nova Scotia Livestock Feed Development Agreement was signed at the federal-provincial agriculture Ministers' meeting in Ottawa on Monday.

Nova Scotia's livestock industry has been highly dependent on outside sources of feed grains and protein crops. Because of rising transportation costs, this dependence has been seriously threatening the competitive position of livestock producers.

The Nova Scotia agreement includes programs geared specifically to the province's need to attain a high level of livestock feed self-sufficiency by the year 2000. The agreement will help ensure that livestock producers who grow their own feed, or feed producers who sell feed, can do so with the lowest possible cost of production.

In Nova Scotia's case, $11.25 million in funding will be made available. The federal Government will provide 80 per cent of this amount and the province the remaining 20 per cent.

This agreement proves that subsidies can be replaced by sensible programs which will achieve self-sufficiency. I congratulate the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) for responding to the needs of Nova Scotia farmers and the requests of the Nova Scotia caucus.

THE ADMINISTRATION

SITUATION OF QUEBEC

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Sad to say, Mr. Speaker, but once again Quebecers have been led down the garden path by this Conservative Government and this Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). Having been conned about the shipyards and the international banking centre, we are now being hoodwinked with respect to GM in Boisbriand. As the Premier and the Leader of the Opposition in Quebec put it, the grant made by the provincial Government will be used to save the jobs of Boisbriand workers in Quebec. Unfortunately, not only is the federal grant to Ontario used to save jobs, but it also creates new jobs. The people of Quebec will just have to remember that they have been ignored by their Conservative Members here in the House. Referring to all the members who are in the galleries, former Liberal Members of the House, never would such a betrayal of Quebecers have taken place when they were in office.

ACID RAIN—REQUEST FOR JOINT CANADA-UNITED STATES DECLARATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I would like to put a question to the Deputy Prime Minister. If there is unanimous feeling about anything in Canada, I would suspect that it has to do with acid rain. I would think also that one would command the virtual unanimous support of the House of Commons if one were to suggest to the Deputy Prime Minister that he prevail upon his Leader, the Prime Minister of Canada, when he meets with the President over the weekend, to ask the President to sign with him another joint declaration, this time providing for joint emission controls over acid rain, with a specific timetable for acid rain cuts, so that we can deal immediately on this continent with a most urgent problem.

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the short answer is this: that which the Leader of the Opposition has called for, which is exactly the position of the Government of Canada and the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister said in Quebec City on March 23 as follows:

> —we must continue to seek agreement with the U.S. on overall abatement targets and timeframes within which they must be achieved. Canada seeks to reduce acid rain to 50 per cent of its 1980 levels by the year 1994. Our objective continues to be a bilateral air quality agreement between Canada and the United States with specified emission control targets. We will not be fully satisfied until we achieve that objective.

That position is exactly what the Leader of the Opposition himself has called for.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER PROPOSE CLEAN AIR TREATY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): The Prime Minister has some good rhetoric there but he has not been very forceful in his handling of his counterpart, the President of the United States. I regret that he and the Secretary of State for External Affairs are not here. I understand there is a Priorities and Planning meeting of the Cabinet being held contemporaneously with this sitting of Parliament. With all the respect that I owe the Deputy Prime Minister, I would like to suggest to him that responding to Question Period outranks any meeting of Cabinet or any committee meeting of Cabinet.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I want to put another question to the Deputy Prime Minister. Would he impress upon the Prime Minister the need for some real action on acid rain, the pollution of our air, and would he propose to the President of the United States a clean air treaty for North America, similar to the International Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909 which went a long way toward mutual control and supervision of the Great Lakes system and our international waterways? Will he do that?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, first, on behalf of the Government I would like to associate myself with the expressions of sympathy and condolence to the victims and families of those involved in the mining tragedy and, of course, those suffering as a result of the floods.

With respect to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition's question, it seems to me that there is general agreement in Canada that we must address the very important issue of acid rain and other environmental problems, the subject of which will be discussed thoroughly when the President meets the Prime Minister in Ottawa this weekend. It also seems to me that rather than the nit-picking and carping we hear from the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, this would be an opportunity for him to join in support of the initiatives taken by this Government under the capable leadership of the Right Hon. Prime Minister who has been way out in front of any previous administration in tackling this very important issue.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I would say to the Deputy Prime Minister that we would be delighted to support any initiatives of the Prime Minister if we could see any initiatives of the Prime Minister.

URGENCY OF PROBLEM

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): With respect to acid rain, Mr. Speaker, should the United States not have as much regard for Canada as they do for Mexico? Will the Prime Minister tell the President of the United States that we Canadians respect them as good neighbours particularly, but that as Canadians we are rather upset by the fact that the Americans do not have a policy nor a sense of national urgency to co-operate with us in the quest for solutions to the difficult but vital acid rain problem?

[English]

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am very puzzled by the question of the Leader of the Official Opposition. In his first question he called for a bilateral accord on acid rain between Canada and the United States. In his third question, his second directed to me, he cited the agreement between the United States and Mexico on acid rain as being a model for such an accord. The Mexican agreement with the United States places all the requirements on Mexico and none on the United States. The Mexican agreement simply says that the U.S. clean air law will be deemed to apply to Mexico. I do not know if that is the kind of accord the Liberal Party of Canada want for Canada, but it certainly is not what is in the interests of Canada.

REQUEST FOR NEW PROGRAMS

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, I direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. On March 3, 11 and 21, 1986, when he was under political pressure, the Prime Minister told the House there would be new youth programs before the end of the fiscal year ending March 31, 1986. This was over a year ago and nothing concrete has been announced in the House. Will the Prime Minister keep his promise and unveil real programs for young Canadians?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, allow me to advise my colleague from Saint-Maurice that this question was put to me last Tuesday morning at the Standing Committee on Employment and Immigration when he was absent. I am disappointed to learn that he was—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Charest: I can understand the reaction. At the time I think I gave members attending the standing committee proceedings an answer which took into account the over-all problem facing young Canadians. Mr. Speaker, if we want to come up with a policy for young Canadians, and especially do more than pay them lip service, one of the elements to be considered is the fact that we must convince the provinces to join us. That is what I am trying to do now.

Mr. Grondin: Mr. Speaker, I would point out to my colleague that I could not have been absent from the committee last Tuesday for the simple reason that I do not sit on that committee.

CHALLENGE '87—REQUEST FOR INCREASED FUNDING

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister.

[English]

Many non-profit organizations, some of which are demonstrating on the Hill today, have seen their summer employment funding substantially cut since the Conservative Government came to power. Will the Minister change his priorities and increase funding for Challenge '87? This is something young Canadians really need.

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, let me point out that Challenge '87 is a flexible, workable approach to the task of creating meaningful summer employment for students—

Mr. Boudria: Who wrote that?

Mr. Charest: You did. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell wrote it in a column in his local paper.

ACID RAIN—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS PASSAGE OF HOUSE RESOLUTION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, before I ask my question may I, on behalf of the NDP caucus, add our concern to the concern already expressed by representatives of the other Parties for the families of the miners in the Gaspé, and offer our co-operation to the House and the Government if there is any way in which we can be helpful.

Mr. Speaker, I want to direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister in a non-nit-picking, non-carping spirit. Has he had a chance to reflect on the suggestion I made yesterday and the day before, and which I have incorporated into a resolution which could possibly be passed unanimously by this House and which is based on the language used by the Government itself in the packet on acid rain distributed as part of the summit literature? Would he be prepared to indicate to the House that some time could be allocated for this, either today or tomorrow? We could very quickly, perhaps with a speaker from each Party, unanimously express the opinion of Canadians and all Members of Parliament that action on acid rain is urgently needed on the part of our American neighbours.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Yes, Mr. Speaker, this issue was discussed briefly at the House Leaders' meeting yesterday. I do not think there is any secret about that. The Hon. Member's House Leader just handed me a proposed resolution. I have not had an opportunity to examine it in detail, but I think the answer the Right Hon. Prime Minister gave to the Hon. Member yesterday certainly left the door open for that type of undertaking. We will certainly co-operate in every way we can. However, while the Hon. Member is an ardent advocate of environmental concerns, particularly acid rain, I would have thought that, given the 12 days allocated to the Opposition, they might have chosen one of those days to discuss the issue and we would perhaps have a better idea of what their proposals might have been for dealing with this very important issue.

REQUEST FOR ALLOCATION OF PARLIAMENTARY TIME

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I will resist the temptation to respond to that because we are not asking for something to be passed as a result of a motion brought forward by an opposition Party on an opposition day. We are seeking a special response by the House of Commons on a special occasion to a special environmental problem, that of acid rain emissions coming from the U.S. into Canada.

Can the Deputy Prime Minister give a commitment now that the Government is open to having such a resolution passed, preferably before Monday if that is at all possible? If he cannot say that, would he at least commit the Government to making a short time available, because it would not require much time, in the very near future, so that all of us here together can send a message, without the nit-picking and carping, to the U.S. Congress calling on them to enact acid rain abatement legislation which would reduce acid rain precipitation in Canada?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think I have responded to that. We have certainly indicated that we were disposed to looking into this proposal. I have had preliminary discussions with the Minister of the Environment to look into the possibility of drafting an appropriate resolution. I think the Hon. Member is being somewhat hasty. The summit will take place this weekend and I think for the time being the most important initiative he and his Party could undertake is to support the Prime Minister in his efforts to deal with this issue in the positive way he has. He has clearly shown leadership. I call upon all Hon. Members of the House to support him in that endeavour.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FRIENDSHIP

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, without trying to be argumentative, that is precisely what we have in mind. What could be more supportive of the Prime Minister of Canada before sitting down with the President of the U.S. than a unanimous resolution of the House of Commons? This is not only for the sake of the Prime Minister. It is for the sake of the President who will be addressing this same House of Commons next Monday.

The Deputy Prime Minister knows there is a precedent for this. There was an all-Party agreement on a motion calling for July 2 and July 3 to be designated as Canada-U.S. friendship days. What can be more appropriate than using that same spirit of co-operation and mechanism to make it possible for this House, preferably today or tomorrow, to pass a unanimous resolution, using language we can all agree on, to send a very strong message to the American public, Congress, and President Reagan?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to the recent joint resolution approved by all Parties concerning the Canada-U.S. celebrations during the first week in July. That was the product of rather intensive discussions on an ongoing basis. The Hon. Member brought up this proposal yesterday and the day before. We indicated our willingness to act. I can give him the assurance we will act. I am not going to be put in a position of meeting a certain deadline or time frame. After all, the Hon. Member had two or three months to come up with this proposal, and in the eleventh hour he is expecting an instant response. At the present time I can give him the assurance that we will look into it. I have just been handed the resolution and I have not even had a chance to read it. He is asking me to accept it holus-bolus. That is like me asking him to support legislation which has yet to be tabled in the House.

MINES

REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF ACCIDENT AT GASPÉ COPPER MINES

Mr. Charles-Eugène Marin (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

The Minister is probably aware of the situation at Gaspé Copper since last night. Could he perhaps give the House the latest news on the situation?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to convey the condolences of this Government and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources to the family of deceased and give some words of encouragement to those miners who are still trapped underground.

Last night, around 6.30 p.m., the shift that was making the changes reported a fire that apparently started near a conveyor running through the new section of the mine.

On the basis of a conversation I had with those in charge at Noranda Mines, I can inform the House of the following: Twenty-nine miners were able to shelter in a holding area, away from the fire and smoke, and have been there for several hours. The mine's rescue team is communicating regularly with the miners who are getting an adequate supply of air and food.

Since this morning, six miners managed to escape on their own, by leaving the mine. There was the sad news that one miner was fatally injured.

A few minutes ago, I was told that 17 miners who were still missing this morning had been located. The teams have been able to communicate with them, and it seems they are also safe.

However, the heat underground is much too intense to allow completion of the rescue operations.

The rescue teams, which were quick to answer an appeal for help, include three teams from Noranda, two teams, I repeat, two teams from Thetford Mines in the Frontenac region, and a team from the Commission de la santé et de la sécurité au travail.

Although the Government of Canada has no direct jurisdiction in this area, we have given the miners' representatives and Noranda Mines the assurance that we are prepared to act on any request they may make.

Mr. Speaker, that was the latest report on the tragic occurrence at Murdochville, and once again, I want to express my condolences to the bereaved family, and I am sure everything will be done to get the miners, who have now been located, out of the mine as soon as possible.

PUBLIC WORKS

PLACE VINCENT-MASSEY IN HULL—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION CONCERNING RENEWAL OF LEASE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works and concerns Place Vincent-Massey in Hull. Why did the Government cancel the lease with Entreprises Duroc eight and a half years before the lease was due to expire and then renew at a much higher cost, namely, $26 million instead of the original $11 million, thus wasting about $15 million? How does the Minister intend to justify this increase?

• (1440)

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, there is ample justification for the decision. The decision was made on the recommendation of officials from the Department of Public Works after investigating all the circumstances which, succinctly put, are that the fire commissioner determined that that building had considerable deficiencies. Expenditures of some $4 million were required to bring the building up to par. There was no responsibility on the owner of the building to accept that burden. The Government decided it was in the best interest of the employees to pay that expense. It could only do so and protect its investment by entering into a new, long-term arrangement.

Mr. Nunziata: Boloney.

Mr. Gauthier: That's boloney and you know it.

Mr. Nunziata: That's nonsense.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, the decline of the Conservative empire goes on!

[English]

FORMER MINISTER'S ACTION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, Duroc, the developer, met with the former Minister on December 20, 1984, and wrote to the Minister on January 7, 1985, which resulted in two actions by the Minister within seven days. How can the Minister explain the fact that his predecessor instructed his deputy to pay Duroc some $15 million more than it was entitled to against the advice of his officials documented in a report I have here signed by G. R. Oram of his own Department? How can he explain that? Who did Mr. Duroc and that company know in order to get that kind of preferential treatment?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the former Minister of Public Works was very much on the ball and took appropriate action.

Mr. Foster: It sounds like the ball was on him.

Mr. Penner: I think he rolled himself out of the park.

Mr. Riis: The wrecker's ball.

COST OF REOPENING CONTRACT

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the people of Canada have been taken for a multimillion dollar ride by Mr. Tessier in the negotiation of this contract. My question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. The additional costs for bringing the building in question up to standard were about $4 million and the enhancement of this contract will result in a cost to taxpayers of as much as $35 million or $40 million.

Can the Deputy Prime Minister or the Minister responsible explain why this contract was reopened at a cost to the Canadian taxpayer of millions and millions of dollars? Why was this contract reopened in this way? Who made this decision despite the recommendation of senior officials in both the Treasury Board and Department of Public Works not to do this?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the assertion of the Hon. Member is ridiculous. Public Works officials recommended a 25-year lease-purchase agreement. That was accepted by Treasury Board because, compared with the cost of other lease properties at the time, that was very advantageous for the Government. The prevailing rate in Hull and Ottawa when the new lease was signed was $180 to $220 per square metre. The new lease was for $150 per square metre. That was in the best interests of the Government and it protected the capital outlay of $4 million which was made when there were only three years left on the lease. The expenditure was made in 1985 and the lease was up in 1988. You do not spend $4 million unless you are going to get a long-term benefit.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, you must ask yourself just who Mr. Tessier knew to get this cosy little deal.

INQUIRY WHETHER MR. ROY OR OTHER ASSISTANTS TO PRIME MINISTER INTERVENED IN ISSUE

Mr. Svend Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, in the past the Prime Minister has claimed that the involvement of his principal secretary, Bernard Roy, in awarding contracts in Quebec was entirely appropriate. Could the Minister inform the House whether there is any kind of link between Mr. Roy and Mr. Tessier and whether Mr. Roy or other assistants to the Prime Minister intervened here?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as President of the Treasury Board—the decision was ratified by Treasury Board—I can inform the House that at no time did Mr. Roy or anyone in the Prime Minister's Office discuss this matter with me. A judgment was made on the merits of the case, and a decision was made in the best interests of the Canadian taxpayer.

LEASE RECOMMENDATION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister and is on the same subject. He knows that his explanation is pure nonsense. In fact, the staff recommended that they continue with the existing lease. I have in my hand now the staff recommendation to continue with the existing contract, that is, to lease for eight and a half years at existing terms and conditions.

I would like the Minister to stand up and explain to the people of Canada why they were ripped off in this particular case.

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): As usual, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has only half the story.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Wait until we get the whole thing.

Mr. Rossi: It will be much worse.

Mr. McInnes: The fact of the matter is that one official at one time made the recommendation suggested by the Hon. Member. However, when regional officials looked at the entire case with regard to the best benefits for the Government, that suggestion was rejected. Treasury Board agreed with the officials of my Department.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CANCEL NEW CONTRACT

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the new agreement that was signed with this organization was not in the public interest in that the people of Canada were required to pay substantially more for a product they already had pursuant to an agreement. The Minister is a member of the bar. In view of the fact that this new contract is not in the public interest, will he take the necessary steps to cancel the new contract and insist that the landlord continue under the terms and conditions of the old contract?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, all Hon. Members and members of the bar know that you do not unilaterally rip up a contract.

Some Hon. Members: You did.

Mr. McInnes: With the consent of both parties.

Mr. Foster: For $15 million, I guess so.

Mr. McInnes: Does one make an investment of $4 million for three years, or does one secure that investment by making a good deal for 25 years?

REASON FOR REOPENING CONTRACT

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. The Tessier proposal for reopening the contract for the Vincent Massey Building, which would cost the taxpayers $80 million, was rejected by both the Treasury Board and the Department of Public Works. Why was the contract subsequently reopened? Why did Mr. Tessier receive a nice cushy contract which will cost the taxpayers $35 million?

• (1450)

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has forgotten that I indicated that the new contract was signed for $150 per square metre when the prevailing rate in the Ottawa-Hull area approximated $200 per square metre. Would the Hon. Member indicate how the people of Canada have been taken?

INQUIRY WHETHER REPRESENTATION MADE BY MR. BERNARD ROY

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the existing contract was half that, by reopening the contract we allowed Mr. Tessier to get $80 million; $4 million for the improvements to the building and $35 million for him to invest probably in some other building for which he has a proposal before the Government. My question is obvious. Mr. Tessier had connections—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Rodriguez: Did Mr. Bernard Roy make representation to any Cabinet Ministers with respect to the reopening of this contract on the Vincent Massey Building?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would like to restate once again what I stated several minutes ago.

Mr. Tobin: Answer the question.

Mr. de Cotret: I will answer the question if the Hon. Member would give me the opportunity to do so. The final decision—

Mr. Speaker: I think Hon. Members will know that the question which was put was a serious one. The Hon. Minister is attempting to reply and I think it would be appropriate to give the Hon. Minister the courtesy of being able to give that reply.

Mr. de Cotret: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to assure all Hon. Members that the decision which was finally made by Treasury Board was made without any kind of representation by any member of the Prime Minister's staff or any other political member. It was made on the strict basis of the financial realities of the situation. It was made in the best interests of Canadians. I can assure all Hon. Members of the House that neither at that time nor at any other time prior to the decision, was I contacted in any way, shape or form, to influence the decision the Treasury Board would take in this case.

ACID RAIN—GLOBAL INITIATIVE STRATEGY

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Deputy Prime Minister is probably aware of the fact that we are now hearing the theme from Washington that research and demonstration projects are to replace the need for acid rain cuts at least until 1992 and possibly well into the 1990s. Does the Deputy Prime Minister agree that the envoys' process is not working to Canada's advantage and that it is now time to revive Canada's global initiative, a strategy which would generate international pressures on the United States to join us and the 20 nations which have already agreed to cut acid rain by 1994?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is probably aware that the United States is not a party to that international agreement, which underscores the monumental task Canada has in achieving our full agenda on acid rain in Washington. I think it is ironic that the Hon. Member should rise to his feet every day in the House of Commons and lecture the current Government on its lack of progress with the Americans on this issue, when the truth is that the Liberal Party of Canada was in power during most of the period of the Reagan presidency to date. If it was so darn easy to achieve the kind of objective the Hon. Member has in mind, why did he not do it when he was Minister of the Environment?

Mr. Caccia: The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that we did initiate a global initiative which was dropped by the Tory Government. That is why we are raising it now. That is the whole point. It is very unfortunate that such an elementary step is not understood by the Minister.

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, if by Monday there is no agreement, no program agreed to by the United States of America, a parallel program which would match the Canadian program, will the Deputy Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs take this issue to the International Court at the Hague on the basis that serious economic damage is caused by U.S. pollution to Canada's natural resources and human health?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the representation made by the Hon. Member is a solid one. My knee-jerk response is that it is positive. My own effort in this regard has been aimed at trying to get those countries which are not now signatories to the so-called 30 per cent club to become signatories. In that connection I travelled to London, England, a few weeks ago to meet with Hon. William Waldegrave and Right Hon. Nicholas Ridley to see whether Canadian resources could not be mobilized to get Great Britain to join up. We will do the same thing with the United States and with the remaining countries.

SMUGGLING OF GASOLINE FROM UNITED STATES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance in the absence of the Minister of Finance. It has to do with the 1980s' version of the Al Capone style rum-running and boot-legging. In this case the boot-legging is the illegal gasoline coming across the border from the United States without appropriate taxes being collected. Since this was brought to the Minister's attention many months ago, can he explain to the House and to the people of Canada, particularly to the Petroleum Marketers Association of Canada, the small independent Canadian marketers, why no action has really been taken by himself, the Minister of Finance or the Minister of National Revenue?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we know, and the Hon. Member knows, that in the recent Budget we took measures to help alleviate this problem. We are studying how effective those measures have been. We are very disturbed to hear about the boot-legging which may be continuing. However, a large part of this problem was removed by the measures put into the Budget.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. He will know that the situation regarding the tax changes which were made in the last Budget have done nothing to stop this boot-legged gasoline coming into Canada. Why has he not responded to the nine suggestions the independent marketers gave to the Minister of Finance, the Minister of State for Finance, and the Minister of National Revenue as a way and means of stopping this illegal importation of gasoline?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member does not know whether the system is working or not. He is alleging it is not working. It is working to some degree, but not perfectly. We are considering those measures as well as others.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

SIZE OF GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. The presidents of 20 science and technology associations, representing more than 90,000 scientists and engineers across Canada, have today set up an action committee because they are concerned that the Government has abandoned its goal of spending 2.5 per cent of our gross national product on research and development and because the Government has failed to take steps to reach that goal.

Why has the Government abandoned the goal of spending 2.5 per cent of gross national product on research and development? When will it do something tangible to increase spending and establish a climate of confidence for scientists and young people who wish to pursue a career in science?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I very much welcome the initiatives taken by the action committee to which the Hon. Member referred. As you know, Mr. Speaker, we need all the help we can get, not just from other Governments but from the science community, industry and everyone else. The fact is that this action committee is designed to respond to the invitation and the challenge we have thrown out to Canadians to join together and form the necessary linkages between the public and private sector to achieve the goals we have set for ourselves.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister answer a straight question? Why has the Government backed away from its promise to double spending on research and development? Why do all the policy documents which the Minister has tabled in the past few weeks not make one mention of the target to spend 2.5 per cent of the Gross National Product on research and development? Will the Minister tell us why students, scientists, university administrators and teachers all across the country are so upset with his policies?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): The message I am receiving, Mr. Speaker, is that there is a lot of enthusiasm and excitement. People who know what we are doing are not upset. The Hon. Member asks me when I will show some tangible results of the policy and strategy. The answer is, soon, very soon.

YOUTH

COST AND AVAILABILITY DATE OF STUDIES

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Youth). On September 5 last year, Secor submitted a study of youth employment, which took three days to complete and cost $124,000, to the Wright-Gaucher Commission. When will the Secor study be tabled in the House as promised last November by the Minister of Employment and Immigration? And when will the Wright-Gaucher report be available, and could the Minister tell the House what this report will cost?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is referring to a report by Secor that was ordered by the Wright-Gaucher Commission, and to the fact that the report was completed in three days. I think he is mistaken. As far as I know, that was not the case. I am practically certain it was not. Furthermore, this particular study is not a report as such but a study that was ordered on specific points, and the Minister, in other words I myself, and the Commission were agreed that we wanted specific information on the way the youth problem was dealt with in certain countries. That was the object of the exercise at the time, and that is why we ordered this study. So as far as I know, there was no question of tabling a report in the House of Commons. Finally, I just want to add that Mr. Gaucher and Mr. Wright are working in an advisory role with the Minister of State (Youth).

• (1500)

TASK FORCE REPORT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, Wright-Gaucher provided a report in September of 1986. In fact, there has been a veritable paper shower of reports concerning youth on the Ministry of Youth which seem to melt just as soon as they hit the ground. There has been no action.

My question to the Minister is this. Will he confirm that he received a report, a special task force on youth report, on February 24, 1986, and will he table it? More important, given the Secor Report, the Wright-Gaucher Report, and the report from the Advisory Council on International Youth Year, with all this information is it not just about time that the Minister produced a report on a policy for youth? Or will he twiddle while the hopes of youth burn?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to play on words. What I can say to the Hon. Member is that what was undertaken by Wright-Gaucher, in accordance with an agreement that we had, was a study of very specific points that we felt at that time we wanted to look at. That is exactly what was done.

What the Hon. Member is asking me today, and I presume it is the new policy of the New Democratic Party of Canada, is to put forward a report. If I understand the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville, that is what he wants today.

Mr. McCurdy: We want action. We want a policy.

Mr. Charest: I take it that that is the new position of the New Democratic Party.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CANADA POST CORPORATION'S INCREASED RATES—EFFECT ON FOOD SHIPMENTS TO NORTHERN COMMUNITIES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Is the Minister aware that Canada Post recently announced a staggering 30 per cent increase in the rates that are charged for shipping perishable food items such as milk, fruit and vegetables into remote Indian and Inuit communities in northern Ontario and northern Quebec? What action is the Minister or his officials taking to persuade the Minister responsible for Canada Post, or the corporation, to roll back this huge hike in costs with respect to fresh food being shipped into these remote communities that are economically deprived as it is?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member expresses a concern that is shared by myself. I will be entering into discussions with my cabinet colleague. However, the Hon. Member must be aware that actions taken by other corporations are not the responsibility of the Government. Crown corporations make those decisions independent of government.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ACT TO REDUCE COSTS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, of course I recognize that. Does the Minister think it is fair or right that Indian and Inuit people who live on fixed and very limited incomes should be faced with these big increases in the cost of fresh food? I want the Minister's assurance that he will work out some arrangement with Canada Post so that these enormous costs to these people in these remote communities can be reduced.

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, again, I recognize the concern expressed by the Hon. Member. The enormous costs that he identifies are not known to myself at this time. I have said that I will enter into discussions to see what action can be taken. I also draw to his attention that it is my information that it is not just Inuit and Indian people but also non-native people who live in those areas who will suffer from the action that has been taken by a Crown corporation.

Mr. Speaker: In view of the time I would ask Hon. Members to make their questions as short as they can, keeping in mind the importance of the matter. The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, that is a serious challenge.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INCREASE IN INSURANCE COMPANY PROFITS—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): My question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Statistics Canada has just reported a massive $616 million increase in profits, up to $1.4 billion, for insurance companies in 1986. Will the Minister launch an investigation through his Ministry to see how this huge jump in profits is tied to the 38 per cent increase in car insurance rates which has taken place in the Province of Ontario?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what legislative authority the Hon. Member thinks might rest with my Department to make that kind of investigation. Certainly if there is any evidence of collusion or competition factors which have led to this increase, any evidence in that regard would be welcomed by the Department and an investigation would take place by the Director of Investigation and Research. Beyond that, I am not sure what the Hon. Member has in mind. We do not have a profit control regime in place in Canada through which I could act in the way that the Hon. Member has suggested.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, of course the Minister is responsible for the protection of consumers, and that could be the reason for such an investigation.

PROTECTION OF MOTORISTS—MEASURES TAKEN BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the Minister prepared to take urgent measures to protect motorists, and what is he doing now to protect them?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to give the Hon. Member a briefing on the consumer protection law within my Department and the responsibility within the Constitution that the federal Government has in this regard. However, I believe the actions which the Hon. Member is suggesting fall primarily within provincial responsibilities. I am at a loss what the Hon. Member might be referring to in terms of the authority. I am not the big brother protector of consumers.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence. Again I ask Hon. Members to keep their questions short.

REFUGEES

SAFETY OF CHILEAN REFUGEE CARMEN QUINTANA

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Prime Minister my question is addressed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Canadians want to know if the Canadian Government is offering any protection or is prepared to intercede on behalf of Carmen Quintana, a young Chilean refugee living in Canada, who was horribly set on fire last July by Chilean government soldiers and who has just returned to Chile to stand in solidarity with her people when she meets the Pope who is now visiting Chile.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry but I will have to take that question as notice.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence on a short supplementary question.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT PERMIT CHILEAN REFUGEES IN ARGENTINA TO COME TO CANADA

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister of State for Immigration, in co-operation with the Secretary of State for External Affairs and in a gesture of solidarity with the Pope who is now visiting Chile, prepared to announce today that he will permit the Chilean refugees in Argentina, who are desperately waiting for an answer from the Government, to come to Canada?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, our answer was clear. Concerning the two individuals whom our officials have found and who are genuine refugees, we will do everything we can to bring them here as soon as possible.

A few others are independent immigrants and, apparently, the Government of Quebec will issue provincial selection certificates. In the normal course of the immigration policy, they will also be admitted here if they can meet the requirements related to medical and criminal records.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

SUPPORT FOR AMENDING PATENT ACT—DRUG PRICE INCREASE CONCERN

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: I must advise Hon. Members that this will be the last question. I believe the Minister is still in the Chamber.

Mr. James: Mr. Speaker, my mail today contained a very interesting letter, a letter which detailed a Decima Research Limited poll commissioned by the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers' Association. The poll indicated that eight out of 10, or 82 per cent, of Canadians surveyed believe that the pending patent protection legislation is a good thing. This approval, however, is contingent upon adequate protection being in place to ensure that higher prices do not result.

My question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Can the Minister assure the enormously large majority of Canadians who support this legislation that Bill C-

22 contains provisions which will effectively guard against the drug price increase concern?

Some Hon. Members: Good question!

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Well, it may be that it comes after Question Period normally ends, but we've finally got a good question, Mr. Speaker.

The Drug Prices Review Board, Mr. Speaker, will absolutely keep all drug price increases to less than the cost of living increase, less than inflation—and, according to the poll, 82 per cent of Canadians approve of that.

I think a responsible Parliament should get that Bill passed as quickly as possible—

Some Hon. Members: Come on!

Mr. Andre: —as quickly as possible so that 82 per cent of Canadians will get what they want.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) on the usual Thursday point of order.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Government House Leader (Mr. Mazankowski) for his customary statement on government business, hopefully for the entire next seven days.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we will today continue the debate on Bill C-22, and tomorrow we will have a further day on the Budget. On Monday, the House will sit only to hear the President of the United States, when he will be addressing a joint session of the Senate and the House of Commons.

An Hon. Member: Can we ask questions of the President?

An Hon. Member: Will we have Question Period?

Mr. Mazankowski: I am not sure what is the protocol in that respect. Perhaps the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) can enlighten us on that.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I would enjoy that.

Mr. Mazankowski: The other order of business, legislatively, will see us continue with the debate on Bill C-22, followed by debate on Bill C-37, that is, if the opposition spokespersons are available and are ready to go on it. Of course, in our usual way, we will always co-operate with the Opposition in ensuring that they have all of their troops in line to debate these very important issues.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner).

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): A point on the business of the House, Madam Speaker. Yesterday, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) said that he will soon announce the details of the economic recovery package for northern Ontario. May I know whether "soon" will be some time next week? Will the announcement be made in the House in all of its detail, or will it be made in some other place?

Mr. Mazankowski: Madam Speaker, I am not sure what relevance that point has to House business—

Mr. Penner: It is right on. It is House business.

Mr. Mazankowski: Well, I am not so sure of that. We were talking about the legislative order of business—

Mr. Penner: Well, bring in the legislation. We will deal with that, too.

Mr. Mazankowski: Well, perhaps if we proceeded with Bill C-22 and a few other important pieces of legislation we would have more time to deal with the very important issue that the Hon. Member raises.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee, and Motions No. 3 (Mr. Dingwall), No. 4 (Mr. Orlikow) and Nos. 5, 11, 13 and 15 (Mr. Dingwall, p. 4820).

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak on this second grouping of motions, and particularly on the motion put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

Contrary to the information that was purported to be found in a sponsored poll, I do not think the majority of Canadians support this legislation at all, and the more they find out about it the less they are going to support it.

The fact is that up until 1969, when changes were made to the Patent Act that allowed for the production of generic drugs, Canada and Canadians were paying the second highest prices in the industrialized world for prescription drugs. As a result of the changes that allowed for the production of generic drugs in Canada, Canadians are now paying the second lowest prices in the industrialized world for prescription drugs.The change in the price that is being paid for drugs, Madam Speaker, is directly attributable to the change in legislation which allowed for the production of generic drugs, and we do not want to see that forward move turned backwards. The Government apparently does.

The Government apparently has concerns, has priorities, other than the health of Canadians. The importance of prescription drugs to the millions of Canadians who depend upon them in helping them to deal with one health problem or another cannot be underestimated, and the costs of such drugs is of major concern to Canadians. Also, it is of major concern to provincial health care programs and provincial pharmacare programs. It is estimated that without generic drugs the costs of provincial pharmacare programs would increase by at least 20 per cent.

In Bill C-22 we are faced with legislation that is going to change that very positive provision that allowed for the production of generic drugs. This legislation would turn the clock backwards. Canadian people have to ask themselves why it is that the Government is doing this. It seems that it is some kind of fancy foreplay to the consummation of the free trade talks. It is in line with the elimination of FIRA; it is in line with the Government buckling under to the Americans on any number of issues.

The fact is, there has been a great deal of pressure from the American pharmaceutical industry and from the American Government to have the Canadian Government bring in these changes. That pressure was first applied to the Liberal Government. Some members of that Government were prepared to go along with it; others decided that they would try to stall it, and to that end they introduced the Eastman Commission. When the Eastman commission reported in June of 1985, it made significant recommendations, recommendations that I think completely cut the ground from under those who would turn the clock and make it more difficult to introduce generic drugs.

On the one hand, the Government is facing pressure from the American Government and the pharmaceutical companies to turn the clock back; on the other hand, the members of the New Democratic Party, along with Canadians from one coast to the other, have been rallying around this issue trying to emphasize the need to maintain the provisions of the Patent Act that allow for the production of generic drugs.

I have received countless letters in my office. Other members of the New Democratic Party caucus have received a number of letters, and I know that members of the other Parties have as well, including a great many Members on the government side. Why they are not acting on the basis of those letters, I do not know.

We have also had many petitions tabled in this regard. Some of the Progressive Conservative Members have been a little bit skittish about the tabling of some of these petitions, because they indicate very clearly that there is a very great concern about the way in which these very positive provisions in respect of the production of generic drugs are being negated by Bill C-22.

We are concerned, Madam Speaker, with Motion No. 4, among others, which would limit the exclusivity of patent protection of newly introduced drugs to four years. This four-year provision is a bit of a compromise. It is what was recommended by the Eastman Commission report. It is a much better provision than the provision in the legislation, which allows for 10 years.

The Eastman Commission points out the importance of some period of exclusivity. I should like to read a short passage from the Eastman report:

> The pricing behaviour of firms introducing new drugs in the Canadian market and abroad is typically to set high prices initially when the novelty and uniqueness of the drug is greatest so as to maximize its profitability. As competition develops from imitative drugs either with patents of their own or as generics in Canada, prices tend to decline and so increase the benefit of the new drug to consumers and taxpayers.
> An assurance of monopoly in the market at the most profitable early period after the introduction of a new drug ensures a satisfactory return and therefore constitutes an inducement to introduce the drug in Canada.

The Eastman report recognizes that there should be some period of protection for a new drug. It continues:

> The question is to decide on the appropriate length of a period of exclusivity during which the innovating firm can charge prices well above the cost of materials and manufacturing to create a gross profit that covers all other costs including the high initial promotion costs.

The question is, what is the optimum period for monopoly protection? The Eastman Commission dealt with that wherein the report indicated:

> The Commission was told at the Hearings by representatives of Merck Frosst that many drugs achieved large sales in the first year following their introduction and that drugs that took longest to establish themselves required from three to four years after which the growth in their sales slowed. This view is consistent with other information. The four-year of exclusivity that the Commission believes should be given new drugs reflects these estimates.

In other words, this four-year exclusivity period reflected in Motion No. 4 has not been pulled out of a hat. It was based upon the testimony of a pharmaceutical drug company before the Eastman Commission which indicated that the longest time it took for a drug to establish itself was some four years. It gives adequate protection for new drugs coming on the market.

We recognize that that is important. There should be adequate protection, but we do not think that there should be the kind of protection which allows drug companies to continue making profits after profits to the detriment of Canadians who must purchase the drugs.

In Bill C-22 the Government wants to give a period of 10 years of exclusivity for the manufacturers of drugs. Over a period of 10 years the makers of brand name drugs will then have the opportunity to sew up the market in such a way that brand names will be so well established that even the introduction of generics will not have a sufficient downward impact upon the prices of those drugs. Even when generics are introduced, after such a long period they will not have a negative impact upon prices.

The American Association of Retired Persons was invited by members of my Party to appear before the legislative committee on Bill C-22. The Conservatives refused to allow the association to appear because they did not want to hear testimony from Americans about the way in which the system in the United States works to the detriment of average Americans who must purchase drugs.

I see that my time is up. I simply urge government Members to consider the implications of what they are trying to do by granting a 10-year period of exclusivity. It will mean that drug prices will remain high. They should look at the recommendations of the Eastman Commission which suggested a four-year period, based upon some solid reasons. They should listen to the voices of their constituents who urge them not to take this action which will result in higher drug prices for them and for their fellow Canadians. I urge government Members to pay attention to these issues.

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to Bill C-22 and to defend the amendments proposed by the Liberal Party. I am referring to Motions numbered 3, 4, 5, 11, 13 and 15. In these motions we talked about the period of exclusivity. The Bill is proposing a 10 year exclusivity period, and as all members know perfectly well, we in the Liberal Party are proposing four years, as recommended by the Eastman report. As for the date of proclamation, the House will recall that in 1986, the Government was unable to follow through on its Bill. However, in the Bill tabled on November 6, the proclamation date remained unchanged, which means that the legislation is retroactive, which is totally unacceptable. It means that the legislation is retroactive to June 1986.

And finally, regarding the motion on the priority status for process and product patents, we are proposing this amendment because it will have a very definite impact on development in the technology sector.

I would like to start by discussing the period of exclusivity. As I said earlier, the Eastman report recommended a period of exclusivity of four years. The reason was simple. According to the Commission of Inquiry, it was necessary to encourage pharmaceutical companies to do research. The Commission was well aware of the pattern followed by pharmaceutical companies: as soon as they enjoy too much protection, they tend to waste the funds this protection affords them. This argument is part of the Eastman report and Hon. Members will find it on page 338.

Indeed, Madam Speaker, there is a description of the consequences of too little and too much protection. I quote from page 338:

> Another consequence of excessive patent protection and of the profits to which it potentially gives rise is to induce patent holders—

—the multinationals in this case—

> —to incur excessive costs of promotion through marketing and selling expenditures designed to stimulate demand and maintain their competitive position in the market.

Madam Speaker, it seems to me the Minister completely forgot this fact when he decided to give 10 years of exclusivity. This is a striking example of a recommendation which was totally ignored, and it flies in the face of a serious study which cost Canadians a pretty penny.

When he refused to answer our questions in the House the Minister promised he would give the committee all data on which he had based his decision. We soon realized he had no intention of doing that. The Minister simply told the committee that fours years of exclusivity was too short, and that was that. Where did he get this information? We did not find out in committee. I am sure that not one Conservative Member can tell me either, and that none of the departmental officials can give me a rational explanation. Why 10 instead of four years? Why not follow the Eastman recommendation? The only ones in a position to give us the answer are the multinationals because this decision gives them the upper hand.

A 10 year exclusivity period will have an impact on the profits of those companies. In fact, in his report Mr. Eastman provided a documented and wide-ranging explanation of the phenomenon associated with the protection a patent may afford. According to him, new drugs are always priced high to recoup development costs.

The shorter the exclusivity period, the higher the introductory price. When the exclusivity period is longer, the introductory price is lower, but it takes much longer to decrease.

My question is as follows: Is there anyone in the House who has made an assessment of the impact the Conservative Government's policy will have? How do we know which option will cost more? A short or a long period of exclusivity? No assessment has been made. Government Members may argue that the Opposition is wrong to say it will be expensive and that prices will go up, but what contribution has the Government made to this debate? Not a single Conservative has had the guts to rise in the House to speak to this Bill.

And furthermore, we have no indication of the impact the measures proposed by the Government will have aside from a partisan study by the Department.

Madam Speaker, Mr. Bill Haddad, a representative of the U.S. generic drugs industry who was refused permission to appear before the Committee, nevertheless came to Canada to describe to us the situation in the United States. He pointed out that research and development for most of the drugs originating in the United States had already been paid for by U.S. citizens. In fact, the multinationals were making so much money they were researching the best ways to invest their excess profits. Considering all these factors, we can hardly accept a period of exclusivity for the duration proposed in the Bill.

As we all know, the Bill does not take into consideration the consumers of pharmaceutical products, and even worse, it fails to consider the needs of the biotechnological industry in Canada. I find it very difficult to accept the Government's defence of the need to adopt legislation that is similar to legislation in effect in the international community. The Government could have accepted, and it can still do so, the Liberal Party's amendment by which not only product but also process patents would be allowed as far as the biotechnological industry is concerned. This is a complex part of our amendments, but I wanted to have them included in the proceedings of the House because I think they are important. If the Government does not accept these amendments, it will be showing itself to be insensitive in the extreme and lacking in any understanding for the needs and the nature of the biotechnological industry in Canada.

Finally, I would like to talk about the drugs which, at the time the Government announced its intention to amend the Act last June, were still in the "pipeline". There were a number of specific provisions for the so-called pipeline drugs. In the new version of this Bill, the Bill that was tabled in the House several months ago in June, there have been no changes. An attempt was made to table the Bill in June and it was finally tabled in November, but nothing was changed which means that the Bill will be retroactive to June 27, 1986. That we cannot accpet. They could at least have changed this date for the date on which the present Bill was tabled, or as we state in our amendment, substitute the date of the royal proclamation. Once again, the Government has caved in to pressure from the multinationals.

This Bill does nothing at all for the whole sector of the generic and biotechnological industries, quite the contrary. This is why we are proposing an amendment to that effect. I want this to be very clear.

The 10 year exclusivity period is unacceptable, we believe that the four-year period recommended by the Eastman Commission is reasonable. Several interest groups share this view and gave us their support in the parliamentary committee. It is interesting to note that most interest groups are aware that it is necessary to provide better intellectual protection for patents, and this explains why they are prepared to accept changes to the legislation which dates back to 1969. Of course, they too realize the need for better protection, but they all agree that a 10 year period is too long and unwarranted. However a number of them would endorse the four-year period advocated by the Eastman Commission simply because most interest groups are reasonable and realistic.

The generic sector of the pharmaceutical industry told us it could quite probably have lived with a four-year exclusivity period for patent holders. We must bear in mind that the generic industry is the industry which copies.

My time has expired, Madam Speaker. Very well, I must accept your decision. I will be back for the next amendment. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak to this particular motion. It refers to the problem about which many Canadians have registered concern time and time again through petitions, namely, that this Bill will give exclusive rights, I like to call it monopoly rights, to drug companies, largely foreign multinational drug companies, over a particular drug, which will result in higher costs than they would be under a competitive system. It does not take any imagination to recognize that if you have exclusive rights, monopoly control, you will not take advantage of that monopoly if you are in the business to make profits, to distribute to your shareholders. That situation, however, will occur in Canada in the future. I think back to the beginnings of the Canadian economy when the Hudson's Bay Company of Canada was given sole monopoly over the fur trading areas of all the lands drained by rivers going into Hudson's Bay. You could not compete with the Hudson's Bay in that area.

I find it surprising that the Minister with whom we are dealing in this matter is the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre). Presumably the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is interested in competition in the market-place to keep the prices of prescription drugs as low as possible. One of the very tenets on which the Progressive Conservative Party exists is a commitment, belief and value of competition in the market-place. I have heard hundreds of speeches in this House that try to remind us all that competition of almost any kind is good. Yet this Bill is totally contrary to that because it excludes competition for 10 years. You would be aware, Madam Speaker, that it was Dr. Eastman himself, the author of the original study conducted by the then Minister of Consumer and Corporation Affairs in the Liberal Government, who suggested that it would be fair for a drug company, having discovered a new drug, to have a monopoly for four years in order to benefit from the research money invested. All right, one could perhaps make that case, but this Bill extends the monopoly not for four years but for 10 years. That perplexes many of us, and that is why we oppose this aspect of the Bill.

Time and time again during this debate Members on the government side have referred to a recent poll. It indicates, as it is alleged, that eight in 10 Canadians are in favour of the Government passing Bill C-22. This is a very serious problem as I see it. The poll released was commissioned by the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association and done through Decima Research. If you look at the poll itself, it is printed on the letterhead of the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada. All of the people one is asked to contact for further information are people with the association or the PR people for the association. This poll done by Decima was not an objective poll. The poll differs from any other that I have ever seen. I really wonder about Decima because it often prides itself on being on objective polling agency. We know it does a lot of work for the Conservative Party and we know that the Conservative Party is interested in getting this Bill through as rapidly as possible.

Consider the bias, Madam Speaker, which surprises me. Social scientists who conduct these polls pride themselves on devising questions that are as value-free and as bias-free as possible. We know that it is probably impossible to be free of bias, but there are degrees of bias that could be tolerated. In the Decima poll, Canadians were asked to respond to this statement: "If brand name companies double research efforts in Canada, health care and quality of life will improve because of early access to new, high quality cures". Of course an average Canadian would support such a statement. However, I would like to know if this statement is even correct. It is loaded with unproven statements and real bias.

There is nothing in the Bill compelling companies to double research efforts. The companies simply say that they will increase research and development efforts by 10 per cent of sales by 1995. We know better than to suggest that companies like these could be taken at their word. If this is serious and the companies mean what they say, why not put in the legislation that this is a commitment to research and development in Canada that the pharmaceutical industry is prepared to make? The legislation is mute in this respect.

There is no guarantee that this research will be basic scientific research. We have heard that much of the research that will be taking place in Canada will be market and clinical research, with basic research being only about 10 per cent of all research. We will see research into how best to market pills, how to get more mileage out of a certain coloured pill. That is not the kind of scientific research we want to have take place in Canada as a result of the monopoly control that these companies will have.

The primary objective of pharmaceutical research is to produce drugs that are big sellers. Let us not kid ourselves by believing that this is not so. The best way to produce these drugs is by imitating best-selling drugs using a slightly different chemical structure for what is known as a minor therapeutic gain. There is nothing in the legislation that will guarantee research. As a matter of fact, as we know from previous debate in the House, there is not even a definition of research in the Bill.

For this poll to suggest that research will take place once this Bill is passed is highly questionable. Quite frankly, I do not think it does the credibility of the Decima polling organization any good at all. In fact, an allegation of asking highly biased questions is very, very serious.

I would like to refer to what I believe is a much more appropriate poll taken by Reid. Some weeks ago, this organization asked Canadians to respond to this statement:

> As you may know, the Government recently presented legislation which will give drug companies exclusive patent rights to manufacture and sell the drugs they invented for a longer period of time than they have now. Other companies will not be allowed to produce or sell less expensive copies of most drugs for 10 years. Do you yourself support or oppose this proposed legislation?

The results were interesting. In Canada as a whole, 58 per cent were opposed and 30 per cent supported it. In British Columbia, 66 per cent were opposed to it, in Alberta, 62 per cent were opposed to it, and in Manitoba and Saskatchewan, 69 per cent were opposed to it. In Ontario and Quebec, 54 per cent were opposed to it and in Atlantic Canada, 56 per cent were opposed to it. When Canadians were asked if they believe that multinational drug companies operating in Canada ought to have exclusive rights and monopoly control to sell their new products for 10 years, eliminating any competition in the drug market-place, thank goodness an overwhelming number of Canadians said no.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part at this stage in the debate on Bill C-22. Perhaps I should remind the House that we are now on the amendments that were regrouped by the Chair and which deal with—amendments Nos. 3 . . . I'm trying to find the page, I won't be long. Meanwhile, Madam Speaker, I would like to say it is always easy to use the polls to support a point one wants to make, and in fact I too was surprised that the Government would use a poll ordered by the multinationals to justify Bill C-22, especially since we all know that in January and last year, a poll by the Reid Report and another by Gallup clearly indicated that Canadians were very much opposed to this Bill. According to the Reid Report, 58 per cent of Canadians were opposed to this legislation. The question that was put to Canadians was quite clear: Do you support this Bill? In the Decima poll referred to by the previous speaker, the question put by the company conducting the poll was somewhat different. The question was:

[English]

"After hearing all the various arguments in favour and against the proposed Bill," even though we are not finished arguing the Bill, "is it your impression that the Bill is a very good thing, a good thing, a bad thing or a very bad thing?"

Madam Speaker, obviously, Canadians were going to say what they thought and do so freely, but it is not very convincing when we know there were two polls, one by Gallup and the other by Reid, that produced the opposite results, while today we have a poll that says that perhaps Canadians think it might not be such a bad idea to review the provisions for protecting pharmaceutical companies and allow them to retain patent rights on certain drugs.

In any case, Madam Speaker, we object because we believe—and we have always supported the Eastman report that was ordered by the previous Government and which recommends a period of four years. We think that is satisfactory and sufficient, and we believe, polls or no polls, that people should listen to the points we have to make before jumping to conclusions.

[English]

The ruling having been made, we are discussing Motions Nos. 3, 4, 5, 11, 13 and 15. These motions deal with a radical, retrograde proposal of product rather than process patents for pharmaceutical products. In the past, process patents have allowed generic companies which produce low cost copies of medications to improve upon methods of creating drugs for their own ease in producing the drugs and for gaining an advantage over competitors by producing the drugs in question at lower costs. The innovation process was endless and enormously beneficial to Canada.

We in Canada are very proud of having one of the best health care systems in the world. It is highly recognized for its quality, its universality and its transferability from province to province. It is accessible to all Canadians and, of course, it is non-profit, something of which we are very proud. We cannot say that that is the reality in the United States. We know that in the United States, there is no national health care program accessible to all Americans in a universal fashion. It is not transferable and it is therefore very difficult sometimes to be faced with sickness and disease. In Canada we feel very comfortable with the very sound system of health care we have developed over the years. That system is based not only on the services rendered by health practitioners, but also on access to a solid range of pharmaceuticals.

The myth that if we pass this Bill there will be $1.4 billion of research and development in pharmaceutical products sounds good. It looks fine on paper. However, we have never seen any commitment from the industry and we have yet to hear from the Minister how he will hold them to that commitment if it does exist. We are a small but proud country. We are not a large market, but we are a stable and very good market. As far as we in the Liberal Party are concerned, we have been very well served over the years by both the generic and the multinational drug companies which operate within our borders. The Eastman report was needed and the recommendations in it should be followed.

To get back to the amendments and what I call the radical retrograde step of proposing product rather than process patents for pharmaceutical products, what we are trying to do is to delete product patents from the legislation. As the law now stands, only process patents can be granted. Bill C-22 would allow product patents to be granted as well. Canadian biotechnology firms say that this change will effectively put them out of business. I want to refer to the transcript of the committee hearing of January 29, 1987, where a company called Cangene appeared. That company developed a drug, Interleuken 2. For those who are interested, when mixed with a prostaglandin inhibitor it looks as though it will be a real cancer cure. It reverses in-place, solid tumours. This is what the company said:

> Cangene is one of the few companies in the world that can do this, and we are ready to move to scale-up to clinical trials, and to manufacture. We have succeeded in this one instance, and there may be more, using Canadian ingenuity and Canadian money, operating under Canadian law.

It goes on and, referring to the Government, says:

> On the verge of our success, you propose to change the rules. Under the new rules, the Cangene process, already successful with one and perhaps successful with others yet to be tried, will be useless.
> It will be useless, because you, in the amendments, will allow product patents. The natural health-giving proteins will become the private property of a single company. The process used to make that protein, the Cangene process, will be immaterial.
> Under your new rules or the rules proposed in the amendments, the battle for the market-place will move into the courtroom, as it has in the United States. That will doom Cangene and Canada forever—from establishing a Canadian niche in the protein-based pharmaceutical manufacturing industry. Surely together we can write legislation which will not throw out the baby, Cangene, with the bath water.

My time has expired, Madam Speaker. I would like to continue on the next amendment.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee, and Motions No. 3 (Mr. Dingwall), No. 4 (Mr. Orlikow) and Nos. 5, 11, 13, 15 (Mr. Dingwall) (p. 4820).

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Madam Speaker, the issue addressed in the amendments presently under discussion is that of intellectual property. Before examining the contrast between the Eastman report's recommendations and the Government's proposals in Bill C-22, let us once more remind ourselves of the impetus behind this legislation resulting from pressure exerted from south of our border.

Both you and Canadians generally know the history of the cosy get-together between the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the President a couple of years ago which set this legislation in train. You will know of the frequent interventions of Mr. Yeutter to encourage Canada to recognize something called intellectual property. It was argued that Canadians offend against that property right held by Americans by virtue of our present patent legislation. You will know, too, that the U.S. Vice-President is a former member of the board of directors of one of the largest drug manufacturing companies in the U.S., to wit, Eli Lilly. You will also know that the Chairman of the President's Advisory Committee on Trade, E. J. Pratt, was president of another large U.S. multinational with interests in Canada. You will know that the legislation before us then represents an effort on the part of the Government to meet the demands imposed upon it by the Americans as a condition to the free trade negotiations in which the Government is presently engaged. You will know that in every respect the Government has, with great urgency, attempted to fulfil every demand placed upon it by the Americans.

It is interesting to note that the present legislation, which does so much offence to our system of public health, is not enough. You are as familiar as every other Member of Parliament with the list of demands the Americans have been mandated to make at these negotiations. Still appearing among those demands, irrespective of the existence of Bill C-22, is increased protection for American intellectual property. That includes their opinion that the legislation we are discussing today is not enough. Therefore, if Canadians are watching this debate with the assumption that Bill C-22 is all the harm that the Government will perpetrate upon them, then I am saying, and they ought to know, that there may yet be more of an attack on the system of drug availability which heretofore has been so consistent with the Canadian assumption that health services ought to be available to all irrespective of cost. I am sure you recognize that that is not an imperative in the American system.

It has been alleged by members on the other side, including the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) that in opposing this legislation New Democrats are somehow opposed to the concept of intellectual property. This is, of course, unmitigated nonsense. Intellectual property is not something which can always be bought and sold. We are talking about intellectual property which leads to some kind of product, some sort of good which reflects the productivity of creativity.

You and I know, Madam Speaker, that if one examines the history of intellectual artistic endeavour one will see that the most fundamental contributions have not led to patents or to a penny. Surely everyone in the House recognizes that when Newton conceived of a way in which to express the relationship between material bodies his notion about gravity did not lead to any patent. To be even more relevant to the present discussion, let us reflect upon the discovery by Fleming of penicillin. The discovery of penicillin did not lead to a significant penny for Mr. Fleming. When Selman Waksman discovered streptomycin there was a patent and royalties were paid for it, but they did not go exclusively into the pockets of the corporation. They went to the universities and led to more discoveries in the area of antibiotics. Selman Waksman gained only a modest living therefrom.

The concept of patents is, of course, to provide some stimulus for making available to the general population products of intellectual effort and to provide a stimulus for making those products available in the market-place. It is for the convenience of the population at large and for the stimulation of those who, by virtue of their intellectual endeavours, create something which might benefit the population, to encourage that kind of creativity, but it is not absolute. It has never been conceived of as absolute. If it were absolute, patents would exist in perpetuity as would exclusivity, and they do not.

The reality is that when exclusivity existed for 14 years prior to 1969, the drug companies used this protection literally to steal money out of the pockets of the poor. Their profits were unquestionably excessive. The robbery imposed upon those who needed medicine was vicious. A situation was created in which it was clear to everyone that something had to be done to change the situation. As a result, in 1969 the present legislation was adopted by the Parliament and the Government of the time. There followed a period during which Canada became the heir of the best arrangement in the world for making drugs available to those who needed them. You will, of course, recognize that the mechanism was the compulsory licensing of generic drugs.

According to the arguments presented by the Government one might have thought that the multinationals must have virtually gone into bankruptcy, that they were looking at poverty as a result of the legislation. The fact is that their profits changed not a whit. In 1985, they averaged 22 per cent, and one of them had profits over sales of 51 per cent. Therefore, they are profitable. In fact, this sector is more profitable than any other manufacturing sector.

One must ask why the Government would suggest 10 years of exclusivity. Why were the recommendations of Eastman ignored? Why would a Government respond not to the needs of the people, not to the recommendations of a well and carefully prepared report, but to the demands of an American Government? It is sinful that a Government would behave in such a way. One must remember that this is a Government which 78 per cent of the population regards as an appropriate Party for the Opposition. I, too, share with the Canadian people their hope that some day the Party which is in government now will be as effective in opposition when we are in government as this Party is today.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Madam Speaker, I rise to speak on Motions Nos. 3, 4, 5, 11, 13 and 15. These motions fall into two general areas. Motions Nos. 3, 13 and 15 profoundly affect the Canadian biotechnological firms which see this legislation as a grave threat to their survival. Motions Nos. 4, 5, and 11 fall into another grouping. Motion No. 3 deals with a subsection which reads:

> (b) where the invention is other than a process, to make or use the invention for medicine or for the preparation or production of medicine—

These motions are asking for the removal of these sections. I wish the Government would appreciate what the impact upon the biotechnological industry in Canada will be if these sections are not removed.

These motions are moved by the Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) who has been spending a great deal of time listening to and studying the representations made by Canadian and multinational drug producers as well as all the organizations and people who will be adversely affected by the general trend and development of the Bill itself. The Bill is a threat, not only to companies operating in Canada and the pharmaceutical business, but also to the taxpayer, the provinces, and their budgets.

It is a particular threat to those in weaker positions, the elderly, those more prone to the need for drugs, those who are handicapped and disabled, and to poorer people of our population. It is certainly a threat to the disadvantaged groups which often turn out to be various people of certain races in areas of our country which are economically deprived. I am thinking, of course, at this moment of our native Canadians whom we have already so badly disappointed. There is already a crushing burden in so many ways upon those who are weak and poor in our society and the regions of our country which are not benefiting from the present increase in employment. The benefits being enjoyed in the Golden Horseshoe are not being enjoyed in areas like Newfoundland and British Columbia. It is for these disadvantaged that we speak because any increase in the cost of drugs ultimately, whether in the short run or the long run, will be a source of suffering for them.

We can talk about providing, perhaps, more research, and that case has not, to my mind, been proven. But even if there were more research in Canada, that does not solve the problem of the suffering that higher drug prices will mean to those who are poorer and less advantaged. It is for them that the Bill, which allowed Canadian companies to enter into the generic drug field after a reasonable period of time, was originally passed, so there would then be that kind of fair competition which would allow people in Canada to buy drugs at a reasonable price.

Members of our Party certainly are not opposed, in fact, welcome the idea that there be some decent profit for those companies which have had the courage to go into private enterprise and do the research for drugs and bring them on the market. Obviously, if we did not give some kind of rewards to such companies there would be no reason for them to do the research they do. At the same time, it seems to us Draconian to think we are going to give such complete protection to multinational foreign companies to continue almost endlessly, at least for the living life of the drug itself, to charge the kinds of prices they wish to charge.

I know the Government will say there are some forms of protection so that drug prices will not be unreasonable. Even those who are involved confess that it will be quite some time before the hearings are completed, before the value of the drug is really assessed, and we are not at all persuaded that through such a long process the interests of the public will be served, especially those who are less well off financially.

It seems like a tragic form of inverted logic, or a form of hoodwinking, when Members of the Government try to persuade the Canadian people that a 10 year protection is something that is required in order to provide worth-while research in this field. We know that multinational companies have been profiting rather well. We know they are still selling their products in this country. We certainly feel there is a need for some kind of fair competition.

We have been trying as a Party to follow the recommendations of the Eastman Commission which studied this matter. It suggests that there be a moderate approach to this whole question. On the one hand there would be respect for the need for research and adequate encouragement and, on the other hand, generic drugs would be provided to the Canadian public in a reasonable time period. Because of policies we have followed up to this time, Canadians have profited by lower drug costs. We have one of the best pricing systems in the world. Yet, the research which has been done has not been any less. In fact, I think we can, if we wish, provide incentives to Canadian companies to carry on research here. There would be plenty of opportunity to do so.

What will happen if this Government's Bill is passed, ultimately, is that multinational corporations will make a large profit, and the Canadian public will not be protected by the possibility of lower generic drugs being brought on the market, which means they will pay higher prices than they otherwise would. All of the abracadabra of the Minister who tries to play around with these words about what is more or less, will not fool the Canadian public one bit. If there is no competition through generic drugs we know that drugs will cost more than they otherwise would if there were generic drugs available. It is that simple and logical. Therefore, when we say that the cost of drugs will be higher, that is what they will be, higher than if the Government did not pass this Bill. If this Bill is not passed, the cost of drugs will not go up, and they will cost more if this Government's Bills are passed in future years.

The cost of health care is going to increase over the years as we have a larger and larger aging population. We still have not come under this Government's great era of supposed economic improvement. The same number of people are at the poverty line. As the provinces try to pay the cost of drugs to take care of those who, in larger numbers, are going to need those drugs, obviously the taxpayers are going to have to pay more money. Canadians will have to pay more money at the pharmacy. I do not think the pharmaceutical industry enjoys one bit having to charge more. I am sure it has appreciated the pleasure of seeing the availability of drugs to the senior citizens and poorer people.

I would suggest that the Government should go back to the drawing board and at least consider these amendments which are before it for consideration. I hope these amendments will be allowed to pass.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I am very glad to have a chance to speak on this group of amendments. The amendment I am promoting, of course, is Motion No. 4. This clause of the Bill would give a monopoly of up to 10 years, depending on circumstances, to the producer or manufacturer of a new drug. Our amendment would reduce that monopoly to four years. This is based on the study by Professor Eastman which received a very wide consensus in the country. He argued there should be some time protection for the patent, but not as much as 10 years. He recommended four years on the basis of intensive study. Why? He said that at the end of four years it was appropriate to let competition from the generic drug industry, which by now is well established in Canada and employs many people, lower or at least prevent a rise in price. His study estimates that in 1983 alone the present legislation saved people $211 million. This means senior citizens, young people, and persons who are mainly dependent on these drugs, would have paid $211 million more in total had the present generic drug legislation not been in place. That is the kind of benefit that will be considerably lost if this new legislation goes through without our amendment which would restore some protection to the consumers.

The point of view of the Government of Canada, the Government of the United States and the multinational profit drug industry, is that not only will they lose money—which they do not emphasize very much—but they will not create so many jobs in Canada, they will not produce new drugs in Canada and there will be higher prices than otherwise for any new drugs which are produced in Canada or elsewhere. We cannot take those arguments seriously. The fact is that the drug industry, which promised 3,000 new professional class jobs, turned out to be flim-flamming the public through the Minister. Only 1,148 professional jobs will be created. The large majority of the 3,000 jobs would be lower clerical and manual jobs. Of course, the industry does not mention that by doing this the pharmaceutical multinationals would destroy or cut back the generic drug industry in Canada. This means that many jobs could be lost if the Bill passes without the adoption of the amendments we have proposed.

According to a study by the Consumers' Association of Canada the multinationals are doing very well at the present time in Canada in terms of their prices and their profits. If they wanted to establish research in Canada they have the profits with which to do it. When they say that to continue with the 1969 legislation would cost us these new jobs, they ignore the fact that before the 1969 legislation was enacted there were 12,645 jobs in the drug industry, almost none of them in the generic firms. However, in 1982, after the legislation had been in force for 13 years, there were 15,707 jobs, about 1,300 of them in generic firms. Thus if the 1969 legislation had any effect on employment, it was to encourage an increase of about 25 per cent or 3,000 new jobs.

With respect to whether research and development has slowed, the fact is that very little research was being done before 1969. There is little reason to suppose that the multinationals will change their habits. They now have highly centralized world-wide production with high technology and low labour components. It is not likely that out of friendship they will establish many operations in Canada that will produce jobs, especially good jobs. By the same token, it is not likely that they will develop any new drugs in Canada. They were not doing that before. With respect to new drug prices being lower if they are granted a 10-year monopoly, that has absolutely no basis in terms of the experience before 1969. So there is no reason to think that if we give the multinational drug companies a 10-year monopoly there will be any benefit to Canadians in terms of drug prices or in terms of new drugs.

With respect to the benefit in terms of jobs, there could very well be more jobs lost than gained. If they do put in place 3,000 new jobs, that would only balance the 3,000 jobs that were created as a result of the 1969 legislation. Such a move would simply replace those 3,000 jobs. So there would be no net gain in terms of jobs.

The best arrangement would be to keep the old Bill in place, or to make more cautious changes to it. If the new Bill is introduced, we will need the amendment which we are now discussing, which would cut the monopoly from 10 years to four years. Monopolies are a fact of life. Bell Canada is a monopoly. We all know the difficulty consumers have in terms of getting a fair shake for a fair price out of Bell. The gas companies are near monopolies. We all know the difficulties we have in seeing any real competition which would lower the price of gas. It will be the same among these multinational drug companies. They now bring in a profit of between 22 per cent and 59 per cent per year. They do not really need to take any more money from the senior citizens and the children of Canada who are the main beneficiaries of prescription drugs.

We have a good health system in Canada as compared to the United States, which is the home of the majority of the multinationals which deal in Canada. The health system costs less per person in Canada than it does in the United States. In fact, it produces a higher level of health for the people of Canada than the American system produces for its people. We are getting far more for our money in terms of health care than the people of the United States are getting for theirs. Part of the system that has produced this benefit for the people of Canada has been a result of the generic drug legislation which was passed in 1969 which kept a reasonable ceiling on the price of prescription drugs. Therefore, this amendment is to the benefit of millions of ordinary Canadians. It far outweighs any doubtful claim that the Government or the multinationals can make, or that President Reagan can make when he leans on our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), that giving still more money to the monopolies will create extra jobs and new drugs and would, by some magic that the monopolies have never demonstrated, bring drug prices down.

I urge the House to adopt Motion No. 4 and the other amendments which are in the same spirit which would prevent the destruction, the erosion of the present generic drug legislation which has been of such benefit to Canadians during the last 18 years and which is basically very much needed by all Canadians, but in particular those most at risk, that is, senior citizens and children.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to speak to the amendement of my colleague for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall). I think it is important to remind our listeners what Bill C-22 is meant to amend. At present, as far as drug research is concerned, immediately after a new product has been introduced on the market, a so-called generic company can make a copy of the product and sell it cheaper. Such a legislation has been truly effective to meet the needs of Canadians. We should recall that that measure had been introduced by the Liberal Government in which Mr. Turner was Minister of Finance.

As a result of a review, especially at the request of the Quebec government and various socio-economic groups in the Montreal area, it was important to study the matter to see whether amendments should be made to protect jobs as well as research and discoveries made by our scientists.

Madam Speaker, I believe the amendment suggested by my colleague follows the recommendation that was made in the Eastman report following consultations, meetings with various parties involved and apparently with the approval of the majority. Unfortunately, as usual the Conservative Government and the Prime Minister yielded to the blackmail of both the American Government and the drug-producing multinationals, so they decided to allow a 10 year protection period, which is tantamount to inflating drug prices and hitting hard at lower and middle-income people. There are four million of them in Canada, and they have no private insurance protection, nor any kind of coverage provided by employers or the Government.

The Government may very well claim that prices will not go up, but this is not true, and the question which immediately comes to mind is this: If the Government is convinced that prices will not increase because of the 10 year protection, then why does it make allowance in the Bill for something like $100 million to be given to the provinces to compensate for the higher costs paid by health ministries? We know that in terms of social assistance and in hospitals this means those people would face higher prices.

Hon. Members will recall as well—and this is not surprising since it came from the Conservative Government—that the Government chose to tax sick people to the tune of 10 per cent. The tax on sick people is now up to 11 per cent, and these include people suffering from diabetes or cardiovascular and respiratory troubles, but pressure groups and the Official Opposition got together and forced the Government to back down once more in this case and withdraw this 10 per cent tax on sick people. But even a minimum of drugs must be kept in the family cabinet, say a father and mother, or a single-parent family with young children, and the fact is that these people must now pay this tax. So this means that in Canada, the more people are sick because of bad weather, the more the Conservative Government is happy, because the more money finds its way into the coffers. Their reaction is the same with this Bill.

I would strongly urge Conservative Members to consider amendment No. 5, put forward by my colleague, which would quite simply bring that down from 10 years to four or five. I would have the following question for Conservative Members: When we come up with an amendment, why is there no agreement? Let us not bow to pressures from multinational corporations. We say: Let us try that for four years, and after four years we will get together, make an assessment, see what impact this has had on consumers, what impact it has had on the drug industry, on research, and what impact it has had on the generic drugs industry. And based on that four or five-year experience—we can be flexible as to one year more or less—we can then see whether we should, based on that experience, go ahead and ask for a longer protection or reduce the protection, whichever way experience tells us.

Unfortunately, this Tory Government once more is going the wrong way about it. They say: We will protect you for 10 years. We guarantee that. You can rely on us, you have a ten-year protection. But five years down the road, we will make a review, to know whether this is sound. Why proceed that way? This Tory Government always proceeds backward. There is nothing new about it, if we look at the matter of de-indexing Old Age Security. I know, Madam Speaker, you do not appreciate it when I refer to Mrs. Solange Denis, but I will refer to her, and I will keep on referring to her. If we look at what happened with the Old Age Security pensions, the early retirement pensions and now with this tax on the sick in this Bill, it is easy to see that once again the Conservative Government and the Prime Minister are anxious to please the rich, not the ordinary rich, but the very affluent and the multinationals, which explains that they have yielded to blackmail.

On the other hand, I should like to remind Canadians of the position put forward by the NDP which completely opposes any amendment, thereby going against the interests and concerns of Quebecers. As evidence of this, I have here the report prepared by the Minister's Advisory Committee on the Montreal Region Development. Recommendation 36 reads, and I quote: "To change without delay the Federal Patent Act which amends Section 41(4) to provide a greater protection to intellectual property".

Madam Speaker, I wonder why the NDP, which is fighting for the Auto Pact—something I support—which guarantees jobs mostly in Ontario but forces Canadians to pay more for their cars, now that it is the jobs in Quebec which need protection why does the NDP object in an anti-Quebec action to have this Bill amended so that people would agree to pay just a little bit more, in order to protect jobs, research facilities and our young people in Quebec.

Madam Speaker, I was present at the economic summit in Montreal, and the person sitting on the Advisory Committee on the Montreal Region Development—was Mr. Louis Laberge, who is president of the Quebec Labour Federation, la Fédération des travailleurs du Québec who also attended the NDP convention, therefore I strongly urge the NDP Leader, if he does not want to have the same image as the Prime Minister, to be intellectually honest and tell Quebecers once and for all: In the unanimous request made by the Liberal Parties, the Parti Québécois, the Montreal Civic Party, the Montreal Citizens' Movement, the three labour unions, and the Official Opposition of the Liberal Party, why is the NDP leader opposed to the demands made by Quebecers, why does the NDP leader simply refuse to listen and give an answer to Quebecers? He must respond clearly. He will have to put an end to such hypocrisy once and for all. Once and for all, if he wants to project the image of an intellectually honest man, something the Prime Minister cannot do, he will have to tell Quebecers, first why he is not prepared to provide a minimum of protection as most Canadians and all Quebecers want, and second why these people are going against the expert advice of the Eastman Commission—and my colleague from Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic (Mrs. Killens) has defended this cause. Let him state clearly the reasons why . . . if the NDP leader is right, all he needs to do is prove it to all Quebecers, meet with the Premier of Quebec and with the Leader of the Official Opposition in Quebec, but he must tell us why Quebecers are wrong.

Madam Speaker, if the New Democratic Party leader fails to reply and does not tell the truth to Quebecers, he will be courting disaster. This is his only chance to project a good image.

Madam Speaker, I sincerely hope that the New Democratic Party Members who are here will convey the message—and the message is very clear—to their Party leader.

Madam Speaker, I should like to get back to the contents. For what reason do Quebecers—there has to be a reason—why do all Quebecers, regardless of political faction—the Quebec Liberal Party and the Parti Québecois find it hard to share the same bed—but for what reason do these two . . . Madam Speaker, I have one minute left . . . Why are those two Parties, why is the FTQ and Louis Laberge, which is part of the Canada Labour Congress, why is Mrs. Leblanc, President of the Fédération de l'Âge d'Or du Québec, why is Yvon Charbonneau, hardly a Liberal and President of the Central Teachers' Union, why is Gérald Larose, President of the CSN, why are all these people who represent such divergent opinions agreed on the position taken by the Liberal Party of Canada and by the Leader of the Liberal Party of Canada (Mr. Turner), and thus asking for protection? It is simply because most pharmaceutical companies are located in Quebec, in the Montreal area. And that is where so many jobs were lost. I want to ask the New Democratic Party and the Leader of the New Democratic Party if he is asking Quebecers, and this is just in concluding, Madam Speaker, to pay more for their American cars to save jobs in Ontario, to accept the amendment proposed by the Liberals to save jobs and universities in Quebec.

[English]

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, I rise today to support the amendment. Despite the claim of the previous speaker, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), what this amendment does is to insert into the legislation what Professor Eastman suggested in his study, and that is, that patent protection be given for a four-year period.

The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie spoke with a fair amount of wind, but very little substance—and perhaps that is understandable, Madam Speaker, when one considers that the political Party of which I am a member, the New Democratic Party, is snapping at the heels of the Liberal Party.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Jong: For the first time, we have heard the members of the Liberal caucus from Quebec addressing the concerns of the New Democratic Party. They are not normally concerned with us—

An Hon. Member: You only got 61 out.

An Hon. Member: They represented thousands.

An Hon. Member: We had more on one Sunday than you had—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. It is very difficult for the Chair to hear the Hon. Member who has the floor. I would ask all other Members to allow the Chair to at least to hear what the Hon. Member has to say.

The Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong).

Mr. de Jong: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is not surprising to hear the uproar coming from the Liberal benches. If we were not a threat, they would just laugh at us and ignore us. The fact is, we are a threat, and we continue to be a threat. We are closing in on them. And the reason for that, Madam Speaker, is the hypocrisy of the Liberal Party, and in particular the hypocrisy it exhibits when it comes to this particular Bill. This is yet another example.

This is the Party, Madam Speaker, of Mackenzie King, who said: "Conscription if necessary, but not necessarily conscription." In this case, we have: Bill C-22 if necessary, but not necessarily Bill C-22. It is a Party, Madam Speaker, that is trying to cover every conceivable position. Other examples are the Cruise missile and free trade.

The only way the Liberal Party could survive is if it were an octopus with many legs to cover many positions. However, in our society one must generally stand with both feet on one position—either one is for or against. One must let the people know where one stands. This is why I wonder whether the Liberal Party, after sitting so long on both sides of the fence, has some pain in its derrière and whether it is that pain which creates the outrage we heard this afternoon when its members attempted to address the motion.

What is our amendment? It is to amend Bill C-22 so that the pharmaceutical industry has four years in which it has exclusive patent rights. This is what Professor Eastman recommended in his study, one of the most exhaustive and competent studies of the pharmaceutical industry. In essence, it is what the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs advocated. At least he came close to it when he initially suggested six years. A little later, after a little more pressure from the multinationals, he suggested eight years. Now we see in the legislation that the Government wants the pharmaceutical industry and multinational corporations to have 10 years of exclusive rights.

We cannot go along with that. I think it perpetuates a rip-off of the Canadian people. Particularly it is a rip-off of those who are ill, the elderly, expectant mothers, people with chronic illnesses, and so on. We in the New Democratic Party just do not believe that those who are ill should be the object of exploitation, that their illness should allow others to exploit them for long periods of time. In fact, we find it immoral. Surely in this day and age it cannot be justified.

Government Members can claim intellectual property rights. I admit that when a corporation makes a breakthrough it should be rewarded fairly for the investment in the discovery of a new drug or whatever. I underline the word "fairly", because while the corporation will have invested in the new discovery, the public has also made an investment. We invest in our educational system. We invest in our university system. We invest in public research. This assists the corporations and allows for discoveries to occur. There is a public investment in all new discoveries. I maintain that the public also has an interest and a right to enjoy the benefits of new discoveries without being exploited. That is what Professor Eastman also stated.

When Professor Eastman appeared before the legislative committee on Bill C-22, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) asked him for his thoughts about the proposed legislation compared with what he recommended in his report. This is what Professor Eastman stated:

> I have to come clean with you; I still prefer the proposals I made . . . I realize that persuasive though a commission's recommendations often are, they are not always accepted.

We know that Professor Eastman recommended four years. What was the reasoning behind the four years? He stated that initially a brand new product comes out, not a copy or a variation of an existing drug, to address an illness in a new way. The first years are the years in which the largest amount of profit occurs. It is also the period of time when a large amount of promotion occurs to sell the new drug, to popularize the new drug, and to make the public aware of its availability. He stated that after the four-year period prices were well above what were the costs of producing and promoting the drug, that in the four-year period all investments made in the development of the drug were generally taken back by the corporation. In other words, it makes enough money in the first four years to cover more than adequately all expenses in developing the drug. This is why we asked the Government in our amendment to restrict the patent rights to only four years, not ten years.

Why should it be 10 years? Why should we allow the exploitation of the sick to continue for 10 years? Four years is enough. Four years will repay multinational corporations in a more than adequate way for the costs they have incurred in developing a new product.

Let me return to the central question: Why is the Government bringing in this piece of legislation? It knows that there are political risks. I refer to an article which appeared in the Friday, November 7, 1986 edition of The Ottawa Citizen entitled "Tories' medical drug bill a mistake". It indicates: "Bid to change generic drug law a political risk, says Andre". The Minister knows that it is a political risk despite the fact that he trots into the House with a phoney survey. He knows that Canadians are opposed to the legislation, yet the Government is willing to take the risk. I wonder why.

Perhaps the answer can be found in the following statement:

> "We've been exercising uncommon patience but even our patience wears thin", says Clayton Yeutter, U.S. Trade Representative, in April, when he called on the Mulroney administration to keep its repeated promises to make the changes the U.S. wants.

That is the answer to the question concerning why the Government is introducing legislation to which it knows Canadians are opposed, legislation which will increase the cost of drugs to Canadians and will increase the costs of Governments. The costs in jurisdictions with drug plans will increase. Either drug plans will cover less items or there will be less service, or there will be more public expenditure.

I see you signalling, Madam Speaker, that my time is up. I conclude by saying that the Government is under the pressure of the multinational corporations in the United States. It is buckling under because it finds that it is in its interest to support the multinationals rather than support Canadians. Therefore, I am opposed to the legislation and in favour of the amendment.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure to see you in the chair once again for this very important debate. It was very amusing to hear the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) speak about the virtues of the NDP in the Province of Quebec and trumpet the some 1,500 individuals at its annual convention. If Canadians only knew that of the 1,500 people attending that conference only 61 were Francophones, only 61 were from the Province of Quebec—

Mr. Nystrom: Look at the polls.

Mr. Marchi: Let us not suggest that we are about to perpetrate something on the Canadian electorate that is not true. We must keep things in perspective. We must tell Canadians the facts. We must live with reality rather than with dreams. Therefore, when NDP Members begin to suggest that they are on the move, I would suggest that it is a lot of spinning wheels, a lot of façades, and a lot of pushing their Leader forward when everyone is questioning the policy behind their Leader.

• (1650)

If you looked at the polls—members of the NDP said, "Look at the polls,"—you would find that Canadians are very worried about having the New Democratic Party heading our national Government. Canadians are worried about the NDP's defence policies, about an increase in taxes, about its position on NATO, and about its position on nationalizing the banks. When that grand microscope addresses the NDP in a specific way, Canadians will know what the NDP stands for. I do not want to get side-tracked, Madam Speaker. I do not want to play the New Democrat's game.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. I would like to remind the Hon. Member who has the floor that it is very difficult for the Chair to make the link between his comments and the motion being discussed. I do know, and I will say to the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), that the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) was not making things easy for him.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): We now have nine minutes left in the debate before we go on to the next item on the Order Paper. Perhaps we should all listen to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Marchi: I was just getting to the Bill when I was talking about the microscope, Madam Speaker. I was talking about the microscope in the labs, which brings us to Bill C-22.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Attewell: Madam Speaker, could you enlighten us as to what Beauchesne has to say about lovers' quarrels going on in the House?

Mr. Nystrom: Jealous lover.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi).

Mr. Marchi: Madam Speaker, here we are debating a very significant piece of legislation and the Hon. Member, inspired by the coming of spring, is thinking totally different thoughts.

Let us take a look at Bill C-22. If one used a microscope one would see a lot of strange things. One has a difficult time understanding how the Government can proceed with Bill C-22. Canadians are trying to find the legitimacy of a Government proceeding with Bill C-22, which will have, among other effects, the effect of raising drug prices.

Dr. Eastman suggested that a patent should be for no more than four years. But we have a Government which is trying to suggest that the watershed should be 10 years. We have to ask ourselves why the Government is supporting this legislation, why the patent should be for 10 years rather than four, why drug prices should be increased, why the protection and the interests of consumer becomes secondary to the interests of the large multinational corporations.

The question of drug pricing in Canada should not be based on whether you have the money to pay. The question should be maximum accessibility, maximum fairness, and the health of Canadians. It should not matter whether you are an old Canadian, a young Canadian, a rich Canadian or whether you are a Canadian who lives in western or eastern Canada. If we are to have reform in the area of drug pricing and if we have to have changes and modifications, they should be made to strengthen the accessibility and the affordability of drugs for all Canadians.

When we look at patents, we should not be looking at extending the number of years by which companies have a monopoly on those initial drugs introduced into the marketplace. The question should be on reforming the royalties, which would imply that other companies can also manufacture those same drugs and thus keep the prices lower. Under that type of system everyone would win. The drug companies would be making profits in the first four years, subsequent to which they will collect royalties. Other companies would be able to manufacture the products, make dollars, pay royalties, and consumers would be paying reasonable prices for drugs.

That is the type of progressive discussion and the type of debate Canadians would support and rally behind. But when we have a Government that is moving simply to satisfy the large multinational corporations and is taking its marching orders from the large multinational corporations to the south whose interest Bill C-22 serves, you will not get the support of average Canadians.

We had a debate in this House not too long ago on the whole question of deindexation of senior citizens' pensions. The Government thought it would win because it assumed incorrectly that it was going against a largely unorganized passive senior citizen community across the nation. How wrong the Government was. How wrong that piece of legislation was. That was demonstrated not only in this House of Commons by the two opposition Parties but also out in the streets, in the rallies, in the meetings, through petitions, and in telephone calls and letters to parliamentarians and to organizations. We had an emotional debate. It not only focused on senior citizens but it addressed Canadians of all ages who were able to identify with the plight of senior citizens. Bill C-22 is of the same cloth, Madam Speaker. It will mobilize that same constituency. For those people who fought the good fight, this legislation has the same definition that drugs should be accessible and affordable to all. This, together with the health care system, goes hand in hand. We are proud as a country to have had Governments which had the conviction to bring in a medicare system second to none. We are proud when we hear that senior citizens in the U.S. have to pay an arm and a leg and have to mortgage everything they have in order to have an operation in the U.S.

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hesitate to raise this point of order but if you would check the Standing Orders, I am sure you would agree with me that the Member who is speaking at present is speaking in general terms to the Bill before the House. He is not referring to the specific motion. It seems to me that it is important, if we are to have any sense of decorum in the House of Commons, any sense of progress in this debate and any intelligent logic for people watching us, that all Members should speak to the specific motion on the floor. I refer you to Motion No. 4, Madam Speaker. If you would check the record and consult with your experts at the Table you would agree with me that the Member is speaking in general terms. I think the Parliamentary Secretary would also agree that he has been doing that as well. The member should be referring specifically to the motion before us. If you would check Beauchesne and the precedents on this matter, I am sure that you would find that the Hon. Member who is in the process of speaking is clearly out of order. I think that reflects upon all of us in the House of Commons.

I hesitated to interrupt the Hon. Member because I know he had a few minutes left but I am sure that if you were to consult with the Table Officers, Madam Speaker, you would find that my point of order is legitimate and that the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) was clearly out of order, something that is not appropriate for debate at this point in time.

Mr. Dingwall: Madam Speaker, in response to my hon. colleague from the New Democratic Party, I would say that he is way out of order. In fact, my hon. colleague, the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), was not only addressing Motion No. 4 but he was also addressing Motions Nos. 3, 4, 5, 11, 13 and 15. I know that the Hon. Member would not want to mislead the House intentionally. He referred to the word "motion". Surely the Hon. Member will understand that we are talking about a group of motions.

For the benefit of the Hon. Member, I repeat that we were debating Motions Nos. 3, 4, 5, 11, 13 and 15. All members on all sides of the House can readily understand that the logic of the Hon. Member's train of thought in debate was perfectly in order with the amendments and motions put forward. I am sure the Hon. Member who just spoke would want to rise in his place to withdraw his ludicrous comments with regard to my colleague.

Mr. Marchi: And I was speaking with such great passion too.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair has listened carefully to both the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) and the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall), as she has listened to the very passionate speech of the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi). Having listened to speeches on this very interesting subject for most of the day, I think that most Hon. Members at times have somehow gone outside of the very strict limits of the motions being debated. I believe every Hon. Member wanted to have his or her say, and this is what has been done.

It being 5 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--MOTIONS

THE CONSTITUTION ACT, 1982

RIGHT TO LIFE OF UNBORN HUMAN PERSONS

The House resumed from Friday, February 13, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mitges:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Constitution Act, 1982, to include unborn human persons, and that the Governor General issue a Proclamation under the Great

Seal of Canada to amend section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights so that it reads as follows:

"7. Everyone including a human foetus or unborn being has the right to life, liberty and security of the person and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice."

And the amendment of Mr. Domm:

That the motion be amended in paragraph numbered 7 in the English version, by adding immediately after the word "unborn" the word "human".

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Madam Speaker, in speaking to this motion, I would like first to congratulate the Hon. Member for Grey—Simcoe (Mr. Mitges) for his continuous and courageous defence of the rights of the unborn child. I would also like to congratulate those who have spoken before me in favour of this motion. They have dealt with it in an eloquent and convincing manner on behalf of the unborn child. In particular, I would like to congratulate the seat-mate I first had when I came to the House, the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Oostrom), who on several occasions has spoken in support of the rights of the unborn child. I would also like to congratulate my present seat-mate, the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson).

During my election campaign, a pro-life debate was held and candidates were asked to put forward their positions on the important question of the rights of unborn children. In that debate, I outlined three particular reasons for my position on this issue. I said first that I accepted that human life is different from other life forms on earth. Second, I said that on secular, philosophical grounds, I opposed the destruction of unborn children. I said that this is not a religious issue but that it is a human issue that crosses all societies and all races. In fact, one of the chief proponents of increased recognition of the rights of unborn Canadians, Dr. Bernard Nathanson, is a leading pro-life advocate in North America and opposes abortion because it is the arbitrary destruction of human life. Dr. Nathanson is an atheist.

The core of my opposition to abortion on demand is a conviction that this is a violation of the civil rights of the unborn child. In earlier speeches in the House and particularly in the speech I made on January 17, 1986, in support of a private Member's Bill I introduced, Bill C-254, I put forward the case for support for the biological reality of life before birth. I said that the unborn child can sense pain, can respond to sweetness and sourness and can move. I put forward a description of the existing legal rights of unborn children and I made it very clear to all Hon. Members that when I speak about the legal rights of unborn children, I am not introducing a novel concept. Our existing body of law, both criminal and civil, recognizes that the unborn child has legal rights that can be enforced and that are being enforced in the courts today. I outlined to Hon. Members the wide abuse of our criminal law prohibition against abortion. Notwithstanding the prohibition against abortion that exists in Canada, there is a practice which in fact is abortion on demand.

Today's debate which focuses on a motion that calls for the entrenchment of the rights of the unborn child in the Canadian Constitution is one that is being watched widely by my constituents. Before I entered the House to speak today, I discussed this issue with a rural constituent of mine, Francis De Lorey, a very strong and courageous advocate of the rights of the unborn child. I spoke with others as well.

Today I will not repeat the arguments I made on earlier occasions with respect to legal rights or medical evidence. In my view, none of that is seriously disputed. I want to take this opportunity to deal with what I believe to be a false premise on which those who advocate abortion on demand base their argument, and that premise is that we as human beings have the right to control our bodies. That argument has a certain superficial appeal, but let us think a bit about it.

What is that right to control our bodies? Does any Member of the House have the right to be kept out of jail for committing a crime? Of course not. We do not have that right because our right to control our bodies is limited by the greater social interests of enforcing certain criminal laws. That is why we can be brought before justice if we commit a crime. We can be arrested. Where is our right to control our bodies if we can be arrested? Where is our right to control our bodies if we can be physically searched? We have no absolute right to control our bodies. The right to control our bodies is a limited one. It is limited by the rights of others and by the greater social good. We see this in many situations. We cannot, for example, speak in an irresponsible way. We have free speech, but we cannot publicly condemn other people and make false statements. If we do we can be called before the civil courts and penalized.

The right to free speech is a limited right. Therefore, when I speak to the argument being put forward, which has so much superficial appeal, that a woman has the right to control her body, I think it is a false argument. It is not borne out by our legal system or by the decisions made on a daily basis concerning the rights of individuals. This Parliament and others have decided that our rights can sometimes be limited. In the case of the unborn, we are talking about the most basic of all rights, the right of that unborn child to live. It is interesting that we talk about an "unborn child". By definition a child is a person. We admit that a person exists before birth.

To conclude, it is time that we amended our Constitution to reflect the biological reality and the legal revolution taking place in our society which recognizes that biological reality. It is time that Canadian jurisprudence explicitly reflected the right of the unborn child to life. In doing so it will reflect the balancing of civil and legal rights which is an ongoing part of the evolution of our society. I urge all Hon. Members to support this motion when it comes to a vote.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise to express my profound concern about and opposition to the motion presented by my friend, the Hon. Member for Grey Simcoe (Mr. Mitges). I recognize the strong and deep feelings which he brings to this question. However, I must say that I believe the adoption of this amendment to the Constitution would bring profound difficulties to the Canadian system of justice. The implications in a constitutional sense are grave and far-reaching. Most important, the implications for the women of Canada who have the right to freedom of choice on this fundamental question are very, very serious indeed.

I want to note as well that the Hon. Member has also strongly advocated that a woman who knowingly, to use his words, snuffs out a life in her womb deserves to be punished the same as anyone else convicted of premeditated murder. When asked whether that meant he would support the death penalty for women who have an abortion when their lives are not in jeopardy, his response was, and I quote, "Absolutely". Here we have a Conservative Member of Parliament advocating the death penalty for women who seek safe therapeutic abortions. I find it extraordinary that not one of that member's colleagues has stood in the House to make clear his or her opposition to this incredible suggestion. What he is saying is that women who choose to have an abortion, and it is often an agonizing personal decision, must subsequently be themselves put to death for making that decision. What an incredibly offensive and destructive attack on the women of Canada. Yet that suggestion is greeted with total silence by his colleagues in the Conservative Party.

We in the NDP agree with the concerns recently raised by the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women.

[Translation]

The President of the National Advisory Council on the Status of Women, Mrs. Sylvia Gold, recently criticized the lack of abortion facilities across the country and the serious problems arising from this situation. She pointed out that abortion facilities in Canada had deteriorated to the point that a number of provinces were facing a real crisis. For instance, in Prince Edward Island, women cannot have abortions. In Newfoundland, there are serious problems as well. There is one doctor who agrees to perform legal abortions, but now that he is ill, there no legal abortions are being performed in Newfoundland.

[English]

I think all Canadians would agree that we as a society have to take whatever steps we can to reduce the number of abortions in Canada. That means there must be effective sex education in our schools. There must be awareness, among our young people particularly and in society generally, of birth control. Groups such as the Planned Parenthood Federation of Canada must be supported instead of having their funding cut as occurred recently.

It is interesting to note that when the Supreme Court of Canada was hearing the appeal of yet another jury acquittal of Dr. Henry Morgentaler, Mr. Justice Willard Estey mused aloud that a person would have to be affected with what he called legislative blindness not to see that there are areas in the country where there is no access to abortion whatsoever. He said we have whole provinces that are carved out of the process. He asked if this was some kind of local option which has slid into the Criminal Code. Of course he was asking a rhetorical question. We know, for example, that there are nurses in the Province of Newfoundland who must spend considerable amounts of time on the telephone arranging for Newfoundland women to have their abortions in Montreal or Toronto. This happens some 40 times each month. One-third of the women of Newfoundland seeking abortions are teenagers. Many of them have never flown before or even travelled outside of the communities in which they were raised. One 14-year old was 10 weeks pregnant before she finally summoned up the courage to tell her mother. That is not an uncommon occurrence. Many Canadian women have been obliged to go to the U.S. for abortions which theoretically are medically insured, legal and available in Canada. If that is the case, why is it that in 1984 over 400 women from Prince Edward Island went to Maine for abortions? Why did 1,200 women from Ontario go to New York for the same reason? Why did 700 women from Alberta go to Washington state? Surely the time has come to recognize that this is a procedure which must be taken out of the Criminal Code as the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women and the Canadian Medical Association have both recommended.

The Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women has three essential recommendations. First, an abortion must be recognized as a medical procedure that need not be performed in a hospital. Second, the federal and provincial Ministers of Health must approve publicly funded free-standing reproductive health clinics that would cover the whole range of the reproductive concerns of women. Third, that abortion be removed from the Criminal Code. I have tabled a Private Members' Bill in this session, just as I have in previous sessions, which would repeal the provisions of the Criminal Code dealing with abortion and leave this important decision to a woman in consultation with her doctor. By accepting these recommendations the Government would be preserving the health and well-being of women's lives.

The proposal which has been made by the Hon. Member for Grey—Simcoe to entrench this right in the Constitution of Canada could raise very serious concerns with regard to the implications of the interpretations of other legal rights in the Charter of Rights. Unfortunately, I do not have the time to pursue that particular issue, but I would like to raise briefly one other concern in this area.

There are Canadians who have recently learned of the activities of a particular organization called the Catholic Foundation for Human Life. This is a Canadian organization headed by a gentleman named David Little. Unfortunately, this organization uses treachery, deceit and dishonesty to lure pregnant women into its clinics. It suggests that if women come to their clinics they will be able to get objective advice with regard to abortions in Canada. Once they get into the office, they are instead shown films about abortion which include a whole range of subjects, and it is suggested to them, for example, that they would be totally lacking in self respect if they went ahead and had a safe therapeutic abortion. It scares women and lies to women.

The Catholic Foundation for Human Life must be exposed for what it really is. In the United States a similar organization has been part of a congressional investigation. Action is being taken against it in the State of California for consumer fraud. In Canada other groups, including the well-known group, Birthright, have dissociated themselves from this particular organization. The founder of Birthright has said that their methods are harmful to the entire Pro-Life movement and that there is no reason to deceive at any time.

I hope that the Government and Members of Parliament will recognize that the time is long overdue for women in Canada to have access to safe therapeutic abortions, and for Canadians in general to have access to proper sex education and birth control devices. Freedom of choice must finally become a reality for all Canadian women.

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to be able to take part in this debate this afternoon. I would like to congratulate the Member for Grey—Simcoe (Mr. Mitges) who introduced this motion. I go back quite a long way on this particular issue. It is one in which I have taken a great deal of interest over the years while I have been a Member of Parliament.

In January of this year I presented a petition to the House of Commons which was presented to me by a church group in my constituency. The petition asked this House to take action to protect the lives of unborn children. The petition contained dozens of names, and I am convinced that they represent only a small percentage of the people in my constituency, let alone Canada, who are concerned about the lives of unborn children.

It has become apparent to me, through the initiatives of the Hon. Member for Grey—Simcoe, that a great many Canadians are watching this debate with a great deal of interest and hoping that some action will be taken to provide greater protection for the unborn in our nation.

I support the need for an amendment to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms to provide that "a human foetus or unborn being has the right to life, liberty and security of the person and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice". As you will be aware, Madam Speaker, in 1969 an amendment was made to the Criminal Code which permitted abortion under three basic conditions: one, if the life of the mother is endangered by the pregnancy; two, if the abortion is performed by a medical practitioner; and three, if the abortion application is approved by a therapeutic abortion committee in an approved hospital.

While the law provides for a therapeutic abortion if the life of the mother is at risk—and I believe that if such is the case the life of the mother must take priority—the rights of the unborn child are, by the same token, too loosely protected. Many doctors frequently ignore the life of the child when dealing with a pregnancy. It has been pointed out by other speakers that we should be dealing with a program of public education and accepting the responsibility of ensuring that unwanted pregnancies are avoided before conception. I believe that education, comprehension and prevention are certainly the most effective ways of avoiding unwanted children. I know that millions of Canadians share my view that abortion cannot be an acceptable method of birth control.

I am pleased that this motion has come before the House. In the constitutional debate of 1981 I spoke in the House of Commons and urged that the life of the unborn child be included in the Charter. As I said then, the fact that the Charter of Rights does not recognize the right to life and the rights of the unborn child is a very serious shortcoming. My position on this has not changed. I still urge the House to include such a provision in the Charter. I do not hesitate to point out that there are obviously those who disagree with me in my position on this matter. However, I have received a substantial amount of representation urging me to comply with the motion put forth by the Hon. Member for Grey—Simcoe. I believe that there is no doubt that a great many people believe that no one has the right to take the life of an innocent human being.

I would like to quote from some of the letters that I have received from my constituents. One reads:

> I am in full agreement with protecting the life of the mother. However, what I see happening in our country goes far beyond that. Abortions are being performed by the thousands in our hospitals as a matter of convenience to the mothers. It is common knowledge that in most hospitals the therapeutic abortion committees rubber-stamp the requests.

Another reads:

> Please take a firm stand against the awful crime of abortion and speak out for the cause of justice, life and rights of the unborn.

Yet another reads:

> What kind of society are we to allow killing of the unborn, unsuspecting fetus just because of their parents' selfishness and not wanting the responsibility to care and nurture them. This is what life is all about.

I have literally dozens of letters of this nature which have come to me from my constituents. There have been many charges made by pro-abortion support groups which basically say that pro-lifers are imposing their opinions on others. I do not believe that it is really a matter of imposing opinions of morality on others, but a question of defending the rights of those who cannot defend themselves. I submit that unborn children are human beings who, by reason of their physical and mental limitations, require special safeguards and care including appropriate legal protection.

Prior to 1969, the law was steadfast in its protection of unborn children. Unfortunately, as a result of the Criminal Code amendment in 1969 there has come to pass a loss of protection for unborn children. As a result of that, there have been hundreds of thousands of lives aborted primarily as a means of birth control. This has committed society to place the quality of life of one person, that being the mother, above the protection of the existence of another, that being the unborn child.

The most basic right of all, the right to life, has become undermined. Canada's legal system upholds the principle that no one has the right to take the life of another innocent person. What we are seeing here is that innocent human life may be taken to protect the quality of life of a person more powerful, a person with choice. I submit that we can no longer, as a society, permit that kind of focus in laying the ground work and rules for what we know is just not the proper position for a caring society to take.

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Madam Speaker, I am honoured to have the opportunity to participate in this debate on the motion of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Grey Simcoe (Mr. Mitges) to amend Section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights in order that human foetus or unborn beings are given full protection of the law. Since 1969, when the Criminal Code was amended, Canada has been split into two distinct factions on the question of abortion. I strongly believe that life begins at conception and therefore must be protected, as my seat-mate, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso (Mr. O'Neil) so eloquently pointed out earlier on.

The question of the rights of the unborn has been with us since man has been able to affect his environment. Once man learned he could manipulate his surroundings and was able to apply his knowledge to further his existence, the question of life became his focal point. The Bible is very explicit on life. Deuteronomy 30: 19 states:

> I call heaven and earth to witness against you this day, that I have set before you life and death, blessing and curse: therefore choose life, that you and your descendants may live, loving the Lord your God.

All major religions have made the protection of life a major part of their beliefs. "Choose life" is what the motion before us today is all about. By entrenching the right to life of a human foetus, or the unborn, we will finally bestow the fundamental principles of justice on the innocent who have yet to be born.

My focus on this motion will be from a contemporary and scientific perspective, because I feel that science is much easier to understand and accept for most people as proof that life begins at conception and, as such, the rights of the unborn must be protected in the same way as our own rights.

Advances in science such as ultrasound and photographic histeroscopy have provided the solid evidence that life begins at conception, as Dr. Nathanson showed Members of Parliament on the Hill this week with his film Eclipse of Reason. The question as to when life becomes human is, never. Like life, humanity is continuous. Intrinsically and extrinsically, the sperm, ovum, the zygote and all the cells, tissue and stages which arise from the zygote, are human. None of them can every be categorized as belonging to any other species. Human life is not started, it is transmitted. There is no instant or interval of time between fertilization and birth when the unborn offspring is anything but human.

Flanagan writes in The First Nine Months: "From the first hour the human cells are distinctly human". The medical profession is in complete agreement with this statement. The international code of medical ethics states: "A doctor must always bear in mind the importance of preserving human life from the time of conception until death". Similarly, the declaration of Geneva reads: "I will maintain the utmost respect for human life from the time of conception".

It is apparent that human life is recognized as beginning at conception, and abortion must then be the taking of human life. An editorial in the pro-abortion journal California Medicine admits that abortion is the taking of human life. The editorial states:

> The reverence of each and every human life has been the keystone of the western medicine, and is the ethic which has caused physicians to try to preserve, protect, repair, prolong and enhance every human life.

Since the old ethic, fortunately, has not yet been fully displaced, it has been necessary to separate the idea of abortion from the idea of killing, which continues to be socially abhorrent. The result has been a curious avoidance of the scientific fact, readily accepted, that human life begins at conception and is continuous, whether intra or extra-uterine, until death.

The considerable semantic gymnastics which are required to rationalize abortion as anything but the taking of human life would be ludicrous if they were not often put forth under socially impeccable auspices. It is suggested that this schizophrenic sort of subterfuge is necessary because, while a new ethic is apparently being accepted, the old ethic, fortunately, has not yet been rejected.

The Pro-abortion Journal pulls no punches. It recognizes that the concept that life begins at conception is the tenet in which the majority of the population still believes. The only way to counter this is to describe abortion as socially acceptable and as a means for a woman to control her body. There is no thought given to the innocent life which is being barbarically terminated. Yet abortions continue to be carried out at an average of 60,000 a year. Stop and think, Madam Speaker, 60,000 innocent lives are terminated each year in Canada for no reason whatsoever.

One may recognize that in some cases an abortion must be performed to preserve the physical health of the mother, but the overwhelming majority of abortions are made for purely social reasons. One asks how a human who possesses the capacities for consciousness, rationality and cognition makes such drastic decisions when it concerns human life. There is no thought given to the moral and physical obligation which is owed to the innocent life. Only the self is considered when such decisions are made.

Abortion is becoming the main means of contraception. Abortion has allowed individuals the freedom from responsibility for their actions. Individuals must accept responsibility for their sexual acts. The end result of intercourse, with ensuing pregnancy, should be acceptance of the unborn child as a unique gift. Avoidance of pregnancy by responsible use of our sexuality is the only alternative to abortion. In today's society, there should be no excuse for an unwanted pregnancy. Abortion cheapens the value of life. The ability to terminate a pregnancy with minimum discomfort gives individuals a lax attitude towards the sanctity of life. The greater ease with which abortion is conducted will serve to further desensitize the population to disregard the value of human life.

Respect for life is one of the cornerstones of our civilization. Any assaults on humans who are already born result in severe penalties on the perpetrators. Yet many in our society condone the barbaric acts inflicted on unborn human beings. We cannot have a double standard towards life. Either life is accepted as sacred for all or society runs the risk of cheapening the value of human life.

The main argument used to deny the unborn human the full protection of our laws is, meekly, that a foetus is not human because it cannot think. However, scientific evidence, to which I referred earlier, is clear that life begins when a sperm fertilizes an egg cell. Most pregnancies are not even detected until the sixth week. By then the baby's heart has been beating for three weeks, brain waves can be read, the nervous system has been complete for about two weeks and he or she is about to begin moving, although the mother will not feel it for another three and a half months.

There are on average over 20,000 abortions every year in Canada under nine weeks. Yet the foetus's brain is registering activity. The presence of the brain activity should be a major deterrent against abortion. Brain activity clearly indicates the individual's humanity, recognized even until death. By the eighth week the baby's skeleton, head, face, arms, legs, fingers, with finger prints, toes, circulatory and major muscle systems are complete. Yet abortions are done.

By the twelfth week, the baby already shows a distinct individuality in both appearance and behaviour, with the facial expressions resembling those of his or her parents. During the period between nine to 12 weeks an average of 35,000 abortions are carried out each year. However, abortions do not stop at 12 weeks. There are each year an average of 6,500 abortions carried out on unborn children over 16 weeks. In fact, there is no legal time limit on abortion. An abortion can be carried out at any stage of the pregnancy, up to the ninth month. This must be stopped.

With all the scientific evidence that has been accumulated and our moral history, it is clear that life must be protected. An unborn child presently has no protection. A criminal proven guilty has more protection under the law than the unborn. Just stop and think about it—a guilty criminal has more protection than an unborn human being. The unborn are innocent. Yet their fate is determined by very little or no consideration at all. Compare the consideration given the unborn to that a criminal receives in our justice system and it becomes apparent that something is very wrong with our morality.

Once life has begun it has the same right to reach its natural end. By destroying life to ensure one's economic and social success the human race is losing its honour and dignity. The human race which is now reaching for the stars must not be allowed to regress to the level where life has only a relative value.

I urge all Members of the House to give the unborn the right to survive. The Bible, and now science, have provided us with concrete evidence that life begins at conception. I will be supporting the motion which is before us. I urge all Members to do the same.

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to be entering into this debate this afternoon to put my thoughts and my position on abortion clearly on the record. I would like to acknowledge the contribution made by the Hon. Member for Grey—Simcoe (Mr. Mitges) for the introduction of this motion. I would also like to acknowledge the amendment, which was ruled on on January 26, 1987, which added the word "human" to this resolution.

I believe that the addition of the word "human" was very important to the wording of the motion. I think that one of the reasons people are advocating the pro-choice position is that they have tried for some time now to de-humanize the unborn child. By referring to the unborn child as a "foetus" they somehow indicate that it is something less than a person. There has never been any doubt in my mind that the unborn child is a human person and becomes one at conception.

Our individual biological system begins at conception and will end at death. It provides us with the very obvious fact that life is a continuum. At all stages of this continuum we are human, as the science of genetics can document. Thus our humanity does not depend on our size, our stage of development or our place of residence. Calling human beings "embryos" or "foetuses" serves the same purpose as calling them "adolescents" or "adults". These scientific terms are used to indicate where a person is in his or her development. They were never meant to imply that the unborn child is not human. As the infant is different from the adolescent in terms of development and dependence, so the foetus is different from the infant. Yet all are genetically human and therefore persons. When we consider that at the moment we were conceived our blood group, the colour of our eyes, the colour of our skin, our sex and all our inherited qualities were actually already determined, would it not then be logical to conclude that since we had our own blood group, the colour of our eyes and our sex determined that we began to exist at conception?

Another commonly held myth centres around the belief that whatever is legal is moral—in this case abortion. We all know, if we look back in history, that there were some regimes which tried to legalize, and in fact did legalize, things that they were doing but things that were very immoral. Probably the most common example of this is what took place in Germany during the Second World War. Although Hitler did legalize what took place, it was certainly very immoral. It was roundly condemned by other nations of the world.

I think that most adults in Canada would realize that abortion is killing a human being. I understand that in the United States there is a law that states if a person is convicted of destroying the egg of a bald eagle then that person can be fined up to $5,000. I am sure that everyone understands the thinking behind this law. It is that if one destroys a fertilized eagle's egg then one has destroyed an eaglet since a fertilized egg represents a potential eaglet.

I think it is also important to realize that this debate really began in 1969 when some amendments were made to the Criminal Code. What really happened in 1969 is that Parliament completely replaced judicial control after the fact by medical control before the fact. This is the real change in the law as it concerns abortion. Even though the number of therapeutic abortions has increased significantly since the reform of 1969, it is not because the legal criteria allowing abortions was liberalized but because it was decided that the responsibility for applying the legislation would rest with the medical profession. Parliament did not, as some people still believe, liberalize the substantive conditions for access to therapeutic abortion by allowing it either on demand or for various other reasons such as having an abnormal child, incest, rape and so on. It merely removed the determination from the courts by means of a purely procedural technique which entrusted to an administrative body, in this case a therapeutic abortion committee, the task of judging whether such an abortion is necessary, while taking into consideration the traditional criteria of the danger such an operation could represent to the life or health of the woman.

There are some other interesting facts regarding abortion that I would like to read into the record. On January 30, 1984, while addressing the National Religious Broadcasters Convention the President of the United States, Ronald Reagan, said:

> —medical science doctors confirm that when the lives of the unborn are snuffed out, they often feel pain, pain that is long and agonizing.

This statement immediately provoked ridicule from many columnists and reporters who said things such as "appalling", "dubious fact from his store of demi-knowledge", "outright demagoguery" and "there is no evidence". One columnist even suggested that this was a "fact" culled from an anti-abortion journal. This revelation of the fact of foetal pain could not go unchallenged by pro-abortionists as research indicates that the more aware one is of the facts about life in the womb the less likely one is to tolerate abortion. Public knowledge of foetal pain, and everything else that really happens in abortion, would strip pro-abortionists of their self-appointed mantle of compassion.

As a result of this statement by the President, Dr. Irvin Nichols, Director of Practice Activities for the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, purporting to speak for the association's 24,000 members, supplied The New York Times with this statement:

> We are unaware of any evidence of any kind that would substantiate a claim that pain is perceived by the foetus.

This statement was published in The New York Times of January 31, 1984. It prompted 26 other physicians, all specialists in the field, two of whom were past presidents of the American College, to denounce Dr. Nichols' official answer. They wrote the President the following:

> Over the last 18 years, real time ultrasonography, fetoscopy, study of the foetal EKG and foetal EEG have demonstrated the remarkable responsiveness of the human foetus to pain, touch and sound . . . The ability to feel pain and respond to it is clearly not a phenomenon that develops de nova at birth. Indeed, much of enlightened modern obstetrical practice and procedure seeks to minimize sensory deprivation of, and sensory insult to, the foetus during, at and after birth . . . Mr. President, in drawing the attention to the capability of the human foetus to feel pain, you stand on firmly established ground.

At the First International Conference on Abortion held in Washington, D.C., in 1967, world authorities in genetics, biochemistry, biology, medicine, law, ethics and the social sciences concluded that human life begins at conception. Their almost unanimous conclusion, 19 to one, was made as follows:

> The majority of our group could find no point in time between the union of sperm and egg, or at least the blastos stage and the birth of the infant, at which point we could say that this was not a human life.

Dr. Bernard Nathanson of New York, a former leading abortionist in the United States who presided over more than 60,000 abortions, came to the conclusion, with the use of ultrasound technology, that the foetus is an identifiable human being.

Dr. Heather Morris of Women's College Hospital in Toronto has said:

> The unborn human is still a human life, and not all the wishful thinking of those advocating repeal of the abortion laws can alter this. Only those who are irrational or ignorant of science doubt that when a human sperm fertilizes a human ovum, a new human being is created.

We are also heartened when we have decisions such as the one handed down by Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, a member of the U.S. Supreme Court, in her judgment of June, 1983, wherein she stated:

> I believe that the state's interest in protecting potential human life exists throughout pregnancy. Recent studies have demonstrated increasingly earlier foetal viability. It is certainly reasonable to believe that foetal viability in the first trimester of pregnancy may be possible in the not-too-distant future.

I should also like to point out to my constituents, Madam Speaker, with some pride, that on this difficult issue, I was prepared to make a choice, a choice that I believe is the right choice, and to stand up in this honourable Chamber and let that choice be known.

I should like to quote some words of the late Right Hon. Member from Prince Albert, Mr. Diefenbaker, who was well known in this Chamber, when he said: "I may sometimes have been on the wrong side of an issue, but I have never been on the side of wrong."

In my estimation, Madam Speaker, abortion is this type of issue.

I should also like to quote Edmund Burke, who said: "All that is required for evil to triumph, is for good men to do nothing." I think in this particular instance we could say: "for good parliamentarians to do nothing".

Every hour, eight unborn Canadians needlessly suffer an agonizing death. If we avert our gaze and close our ears to their "silent screams", can we claim to be compassionate human beings? The answer is obvious.

The unborn cannot help themselves, except as their tortured bodies offer evidence that moves those already born. If the suffering of the defenceless does not arouse our compassion and move us to act on their behalf, nothing ever will.

Madam Speaker, on behalf of the over 60,000 Canadian children who are aborted each year in Canada, I urge, not only Members of this honourable House, but all Canadians, to support the motion introduced by the Hon. Member for Grey—Simcoe.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, before entering the debate proper on this important issue, I should like to read into the record a letter that was sent to me by Sister Marie Philippe, who is in charge of the Grey Nuns Provincial House in the Town of Fort Smith, in my constituency.

It reads:

Dear Sir:

I am writing this letter to you concerning the Private Member's Bill of Gus Mitges MP. His Bill proposes that section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms should be amended to read as follows:

"Everyone, including the human foetus or unborn being has the right to Life, Liberty and security of person and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice."

I wish to make it clear that I totally support this initiative and amendment and respectfully request that you do the same.

And it is signed by Sister Marie Philippe.

Madam Speaker, I have received many letters, not only from other Grey Nuns but from people of many walks of life in my constituency, on this subject. Of course, I have to point out that I have received a few which take the opposite point of view to that which is set out in this particular letter. However, if the amount of mail in favour of this Bill is any measure, the Hon. Member for Grey—Simcoe (Mr. Mitges) would certainly seem to have the support of the majority of my constituents. I congratulate him for bringing to the floor of the House of Commons such an important subject. It is a subject that will require much more debate before amendments to the Criminal Code that meet with general acceptance by the Canadian population can be brought forward.

As Members of Parliament, we are all, at frequent intervals, asked to expound on our views on this subject, and I, like most other MPs, am pleased to do so.

My views are based on the concept of the sanctity of human life. I am of the view that abortions are not to take place except in certain very special circumstances. Exceptions that I can think of would include cases where the life or health of the mother is at stake, or in cases of pregnancy due to rape.

Abortions certainly ought not to be used as a form of birth control. I recall some statistics for the City of Toronto, where the number of abortions performed exceeds the number of live births. That is something that is wrong; that is something that is not acceptable.

I have some doubt as to the extent to which legislators' private moral concepts ought to be imposed, by law, on the public at large—and if time permits, I shall get back to that idea a little later in my presentation.

We certainly ought not to support the idea espoused by the New Democratic Party, one of abortion on demand. Quite frankly, I am appalled that a national political Party in Canada could take such a callous attitude toward human life.

I know that, generally speaking, Conservatives believe in individual rights—and surely each foetus is an individual; and I know that my socialist friends believe more in group rights, rather than in individual rights. But I cannot see how that would lead them to take the view that abortion on demand is something that should be permitted.

If one takes the Conservative view, if one believes in individual rights, in individual freedoms, one has to be very concerned with the whole question of abortion and what we are doing to so many unborn Canadians. I shouldn't think that the NDP would be so unmindful of those rights.

This question is one that is correctly argued on moral and ethical grounds. I think there is a moral and ethical basis to most of the laws of Canada. We cannot disregard those grounds. They are of paramount importance in a debate such as this.

Because morals and ethics are so intertwined with the question, the religious community takes a great interest in it. There was an article in today's Globe and Mail that pointed this out. The hidden suggestion in the article is that there was something wrong with that; that there was something wrong with people with firm and strong religious beliefs entering into this argument in the way that they do.

I do not take that view at all. That is why I started off this afternoon with a letter that had been written by a very well respected Grey Nun from my constituency. I think it is good that the church, and members of the church, takes such an interest in this question.

But apart from that, I feel that there are important practical reasons to discourage the practice of abortion in Canada. In my opinion, Canada remains under-populated. We have 25 million people in a country with an area of something like 4 million square miles. We have lots of land in which to expand. We can add many, many more people to our population.

In fact, the birth rate rate now is less than 2.1 per cent, the level necessary to keep the population stable; it is down to around 1.7 per cent. In my opinion, it ought to be national policy to keep up the birth rate, thereby adding to the population of Canada.

I notice, Madam Speaker, that my time is rapidly expiring. I hope that the few ideas and thoughts I have been able to put on the record with respect to this most important subject will prove to be of some value.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY—AFFIDAVIT OF CHAIRMAN OF U.S. GENERIC PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY ASSOCIATION. (B) REQUEST THAT CANADIAN AMBASSADOR APPEAR BEFORE COMMITTEE

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Madam Speaker, on March 27, 1987, I put a question to the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) regarding an affidavit of Mr. William Haddad, Chairman of the Generic Pharmaceutical Industry Association of the United States which I had introduced the previous day. He asserted that in his deliberations with the Canadian Ambassador in Washington, when they met with Mr. Pratt, the President's Chairman of the Advisory Committee on Trade Negotiations, as well as the Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of one of the largest multinational drug companies in the world with profits for the first nine months in excess of $500 million, it was reported by the Canadian Ambassador that he could not determine whether or not Mr. Pratt was representing the interests of the United States and/or the interests of his own multinational corporation.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs took the opportunity to say that the affidavit was false. I then asked him to explain to the House what measures he undertook with the Canadian Ambassador in Washington in order to arrive at that particular conclusion.

For whatever reasons, the Secretary of State for External Affairs chose not to tell us in any detail what undertakings he took. Suffice it to say, from his perspective he said: "I spoke with the Canadian Ambassador and I believe him".

That is not sufficient. I would have thought that the Secretary of State for External Affairs would have outlined some detail of the investigations he undertook on behalf of the Canadian Government, in order to clarify some of the assertions regarding the generic industry in the United States as well as here in Canada in the duly notarized and signed affidavit which was witnessed by legal counsel.

In a supplementary question to the Minister I asked to have the Canadian Ambassador appear before the Standing Committee on External Affairs in order that we would have an opportunity to examine first hand the representations he had received from the United States Government, as well as from individuals in the United States pharmaceutical industry.

The reason or the rationale for that is that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and International Trade (Mr. Andre) has persistently and consistently, inside and outside the House, said that he has not received any representations whatsoever from the United States Government and/or the pharmaceutical industry in the United States. We believe that to be patently false. We believe that some strong representations have been made to the Canadian Government. We know that the multinational corporations have lobbied long and hard to have changes and amendments made to our Patent Act.

For some reason the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, aided and abetted by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, refuses to acknowledge that those representations have in fact been made.

I have concluded from my investigations, from my knowledge of the file, and from the refusal of the Government to allow individuals to appear before standing committees to have the matter clarified once and for all, that the Government has something to hide when it comes to pharmaceuticals and the prices of drugs. It is clear that the policy now being put forward by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs was not written in Canada but in major cities in the United States, the homeland of the multinational drug companies. In my view the Secretary of State for External Affairs is being very catty with regard to the entire issue.

Furthermore, it is extremely interesting to note that when Members of the Opposition question the Government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) with regard to the policy on Bill C-22 or amendments to the Patent Act, the Prime Minister never avails himself of the opportunity to stand in his place and respond. I am not suggesting for one moment that there is anything wrong with that, but it is an interesting observation that if the Prime Minister believes so strongly in the legislation being advocated by his colleague in the Cabinet, he will certainly want to avail himself of every opportunity to buttress, enhance and support his colleague.

The facts are very clear. They are as follows: Canadians, as a result of Bill C-22, will pay substantially increased costs for prescription drugs. There is no enforceable guarantee or commitment regarding research and development. There is no enforceable guarantee regarding the creation of new jobs pursuant to Bill C-22. What is obvious to every reasonable, ordinary Canadian is that this legislation is being promoted by multinational corporations which have won their way into the hearts of the Prime Minister, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and, of course, the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will come clean with Canadians as to why we are being forced to swallow this legislation written in another sovereign country, namely the United States.

Mr. Roger Clinch (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for External Relations): Madam Speaker, I trust I will be able to clarify some of the allegations made by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall).

With regard to the affidavit sworn by Mr. Haddad on March 23, 1987, officials of the Department of External Affairs in Ottawa have been in contact with officials at the Canadian Embassy in Washington and, through them, with Ambassador Gotlieb. As a result, it has been ascertained that the contents of the affidavit do not conform to the recollection of the meeting held by the Ambassador and the Canadian officials who were present. Embassy officials meet frequently with representatives of special interest groups, like Mr. Haddad of the generic industry and Mr. Pratt of the brand name drug manufacturers as part of their normal responsibilities. There was no confusion at any time as to Mr. Pratt's role. His representations on this issue were made in his private capacity as chairman and chief executive officer of Pfizer Inc., and at no time did Mr. Pratt speak, or purport to speak, on behalf of the Reagan administration concerning Bill C-22.

As we have said before, the amendments reflect a careful balance between the concerns of the pharmaceutical industry, Canadian industrial development goals and the need to control health care costs. They are based primarily on domestic considerations and will increase research and development investment and create employment in a vital high-tech industry.

FISHERIES—REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET REPRESENTATIVES OF STAR-KIST PLANT WORKERS. (B) HERRING-ROE FISHERY-LEASING OF LICENCES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Madam Speaker, on March 3 of this year I asked the Hon. Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) when he was going to put an end to the practice now prevalent on the Pacific Coast of leasing herring licences and doubling herring licences. The Minister replied that the herring industry advisory board did not recommend changes this year. I would like to point out that organizations representing over 90 per cent of the same fishermen in British Columbia, the people most vitally involved with the herring fishery, have recommended that those practices be ended. I refer specifically to the United Fishermen and Allied Workers' Union, the Native Brotherhood of British Columbia and the Prince Rupert Fishermen's Guild.

Theoretically, the licences available for herring fishing are non-transferable. There are a number of ways of circumventing this, the most common of which is probably the 99-year lease. There is no requirement for licence-holders to own vessels. A practice has developed of renting licences to speculators and companies. Gordon Bisaro, a lawyer specializing in fisheries, pointed out that in 1986, the standard rate for a 99-year lease on a herring gill-net licence was $18,000 and on a seine licence it was $125,000. This year, the going rate is $45,000 for a gill-net and $300,000 for a seine. This amount of money is being paid for a licence for which the licence-holder had to pay the Government $200 in the case of a gill-net licence and $2,000 in the case of a seine licence.

The trade in these licences has gone completely crazy. The rental charged for a gill-net licence for a single season is $10,000 and it is between $50,000 and $100,000 for a seine licence. Some of the people who own or control these licences through 99-year leases have no connection whatsoever with the herring-roe industry or with the fishing industry itself for that matter. In some cases, it makes more sense for a licence-holder to sit on the beach and rent out his licence for $100,000, letting someone else do the work while he collects the money.

In addition to that, in 1981 the Government introduced a system of area licences. The coast has been broken down into several different areas and a licence covers just one of those areas. In recent years, there has been a doubling of licences. One person might control licences for more than one area. In order to pay for this, the people who work as crew members on seine boats are required to bid in for their jobs. In effect, they are required to buy their jobs. This is an immoral and uneconomical situation.

Because of the doubling of licences, many people who would traditionally work in the herring industry are unable to because other people control licences for more than one area. This year, up to 400 people who would traditionally work in the herring industry are sitting on the beach because they cannot afford to pay anywhere between $3,000 and $10,000 just for a chance to work on one of those boats as a crew member. That is a completely immoral situation.

As I pointed out, the organizations that represent the majority of the seine fishermen in British Columbia, the United Fishermen and Allied Workers' Union, the Native Brotherhood of British Columbia and the Prince Rupert Fishermen's Guild, have all indicated that this situation should be changed. The Minister has known about this problem since at least January 14, 1983, when he sent a letter to Bill Procopation, the business agent for the United Fishermen and Allied Workers' Union. The letter reads as follows:

Dear Bill:

Thank you for sending me a copy of your letter to the Minister of Fisheries on the subject of roe herring licensing.

The two-licence system definitely raises some serious concerns, and it is a matter of interest to a number of Progressive Conservative M.P.'S.

• (1815)

It then goes on to talk about some correspondence he has had. It is signed:

Yours very truly,
Tom Siddon, MP
Richmond—South Delta

That was when he was in opposition. He was aware then of the very serious nature of the problem. He pointed out that other Conservative MPs were aware of it as well. Yet so far no action has been taken. We have to ask why.

The Government was elected on the basis of its promise to create jobs. It has instead allowed the loss of jobs in the herring industry to continue.

I would like to emphasize the fact that this is a growing problem. In 1983 there were 30 doubled licences. That increased to 54 in 1984. By 1985 there were 75. It dropped slightly in 1986 to 67. This year there are at least 79. We do not know where the people who have the leases on those licences are located. In some cases it is speculators, in others it is the companies. The purpose of area licensing when it was introduced in 1981 was to prevent boats from racing from one area to another. It was an attempt to share the wealth and organize orderly management of the resource. However, it is very obvious from the statistics I have presented here, and which members of the industry have presented to the Minister, that the situation is not working the way theory says it should. It has completely broken down. It is working to the detriment of the industry and the workers.

I want to emphasize that there is something wrong with an advisory process when the largest organizations representing the fishermen on the coast cannot get the Minister to act to solve an obvious problem which he has known about for four years. He says the Herring Advisory Council has not recommended action for this year. However, it is absolutely critical that action be taken and that this situation not be repeated in the herring industry next year.

Mr. Roger Clinch (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for External Relations): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member pointed out, when this double licensing plan went into effect it was intended to prevent boats from moving from one area to another and infringing upon the rights of others. It was meant to spread the resource around, share the wealth, and allow for some management of the stocks. We know there were some problems with the plan at the outset. I know the Minister is very concerned about this.

With reference to the matter of the advisory process, I am in complete agreement with the member that the process must be made to work. The people concerned must be able to sit down with officials from the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and the Minister in order to come up with some recommendations acceptable to all concerned. The concern of this Government is to consult with the fishermen and others concerned on the West Coast and come up with some way of resolving the problem to everyone's satisfaction.

I know the Hon. Member has been very patient in this regard and I know he will continue to be patient and make his representations and those of his colleagues known to the Minister. I am sure the Minister will be willing to sit down with the Hon. Member and other interested parties in order to resolve the problem through the advisory and consultative process.

CITIZENSHIP

REQUEST THAT DELAYS IN DEALING WITH APPLICATIONS BE REDUCED

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, today I should like to speak on behalf of some of my constituents who have expressed concern about the inordinate amount of time it takes to obtain Canadian citizenship.

I am told that under normal circumstances the Royal Canadian Mounted Police or the Canadian Security Intelligence Service need three months to file an investigation report.

This sounds like a long delay, but in some cases the authorities do need time to do their work. Well, Mr. Speaker, it would seem that of late these delays have been as long as eight months, and this is unacceptable.

For example, Mr. Georges Tymowski wrote to me recently to inform me that, although he signed his application on June 16, 1986, he is still waiting for the results of the security investigation to complete the process. Mr. Ahmad Awale is another applicant who has been waiting for a long time for the completion of the investigation.

This is an unacceptable situation, Mr. Speaker, because it is prejudicial to people who need access to certain Government services such as passports.

I hope the Government is aware of the problem and will take every measure required to redress the situation.

FORESTRY

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF WESTERN FORESTS SCIENCE CENTRE

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, almost half the Members in this House represent ridings whose economies are dependent on the forest industry. To a great extent our nation's future is tied to the future of our forests.

Professor Les Reed and others at the University of British Columbia are discussing putting together a new facility called the Western Forests Science Centre.

Such a world-class facility would involve the forest industry, academics, and Government. It would greatly enhance the capability of the UBC forest faculty to teach and to attract the very best post-graduate students and visiting scholars.

More than that, Mr. Speaker, it would give the forest community in British Columbia a tremendous psychological shot in the arm.

And where would the funding for the Western Forests Science Centre come from? The recently imposed export tax, of course. Only 5 per cent of the funds the Province of British Columbia will receive this year alone would be required.

To paraphrase the poet:

I think that I shall never see
A poem, lovely as a tree . . .
But more than that, I hope there'll be,
A Forest Science Centre, at UBC!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONSTRUCTION OF NEW EMBASSY IN WASHINGTON—USE OF NON-UNION LABOUR

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, as Canada focuses on its relationship with the United States during the visit of President Reagan, I want to draw attention to Canada's use of non-union labour in the construction of the new Canadian Embassy in Washington.

The Embassy is being built by union contractors except for three crafts, one of which is the sheet metal workers, who are being paid substandard wages, with no health or other benefits.

Because many of these workers lack experience and training, there is concern that some of their work will not pass inspection, and that safety and health problems will result.

Since December of last year union officials have tried to meet with our Ambassador to discuss the problem. While the Embassy has agreed in principle to such a meeting, it has never set the time or the place.

I urge the Government to instruct our Ambassador to arrange this meeting in the near future so that the problem can be resolved.

We need to have good relations not only with American officials but also with the American people, including working people.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

MEASURE TO IMPROVE SITUATION

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, this week, the Commissionner of Official Languages has submitted his report for 1986.

As a French speaking Member of Parliament, I am sensitive to the Canadian language problem and I am very pleased to commend the Committee on Official Languages for the excellent work done under the chairmanship of the Hon. Member for Charlevoix. I commend Members of that Committee for their tremendous work.

However, much remains to be done and this is why I very much look forward to the tabling of the Official Languages Bill, which will have to reflect this country's linguistic duality and clearly state our commitment to French-speaking and English-speaking minorities in Canada.

SHIPBUILDING

CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, the Government's current standing in the polls is no accident.

During the 1984 election campaign the Tories made many promises which they have since broken.

Nowhere is this record more horrendous than in its treatment of the Canadian shipbuilding industry.

• (1110)

In fact the Conservatives have not only broken their promises, they have slashed the shipbuilding industry assistance program, and they have slashed the performance improvement grants just when these programs were most needed.

The situation is even worse for shipyards in Atlantic Canada. In my province there is the Georgetown shipyard. The future of its workers is not solely a provincial responsibility as some would suggest. At a recent meeting the Council of Maritime Premiers expressed their impatience with the federal Government which has turned a blind eye toward Atlantic Canada. I call upon the Government to get off its seat and take some action.

AIR SAFETY

WORK OF CANADIAN AVIATION SAFETY BOARD

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, since its inception in 1984, the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, through its independent investigation of accidents and its recommendations, has done much to advance air safety in Canada.

Canadian aviation activity is very high with 26,000 civil aircraft and 1,300 licensed airports handling annually some 54 million passengers. In 1986 there were 495 aircraft accidents in Canada, 73 of which involved fatalities.

The recent annual report of the board shows a favourable continuing downward trend in the accident rate, but unfortunately accident survivability remains unchanged.

Let us encourage the board in its important work of making air travel in Canada even safer than is presently the case.

NATIONAL PARKS

LYELL ISLAND—CONTINUATION OF LOGGING

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, many Canadians think that a settlement has been reached between the Haida people, the federal Government, and Victoria regarding Lyell Island, Windy Bay, and a National Parks reserve in South Moresby.

Despite a declared six-week moratorium on logging permits on Lyell Island, logging continues right down into the area sought for a national park. Last month the Hon. Member for Okanagan—Similkameen (Mr. King) had a letter published in British Columbia which falsely claimed that the B.C. Tory caucus was "unanimous in its support of the western forest products solution". That Tory Member forgets that at least five Tory MPs do not hold that view, including yourself, Mr. Speaker.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) met with the B.C. Premier recently and obtained his support for an early settlement of the boundaries for the park reserve, including all of Lyell. Next week the federal and provincial Ministers of the Environment meet to finalize the boundaries and move forward with compensation and economic development projects for the park, Sandspit, and the islands generally.

However, just hours before a settlement we discover that there are secret plans to go ahead and log Windy Bay, other parts of Lyell Island, and the small islands to the north and west of Lyell. Canadians were led to believe that all of Lyell would be included. We are sadly learning otherwise.

Mr. Speaker: I must say that all Hon. Members know that the matter raised by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) is of course a very serious one about which many people have very strong views.

However, I would ask Hon. Members when they make statements not to refer in one way or another to what they may think the view of the Speaker may be on any particular matter. I would ask for that courtesy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CHILD CARE

A DEFENCE OF TRADITIONAL CANADIAN FAMILY—STATISTICS QUESTIONED

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I rise today in defence of the traditional Canadian family, the family which many Members opposite have said is like the dinosaur—extinct. I refer, of course, to the recent statements pertaining to the issue of child care, statements that only 16 per cent of families are traditional, by which it is taken to mean that only one parent goes to work and the other parent stays at home to care for the children.

I do not know from where Hon. Members have obtained their information. However, I would point out that the figure obviously does not relate to families with young children. In fact 44 per cent of families with children under the age of three years have one spouse at home full-time. Thirty-eight per cent of families with children three years to five years of age have a spouse at home full-time.

The traditional Canadian family is not dead. I should like to know who the Opposition is including in its figures. Is it including retired couples, or Aunt Mabel in the nursing home?

In so far as these figures relate to families with young children, they are way off base.

ESTABLISHMENT OF CANADIAN SPACE AGENCY—POSITION OF QUEBEC

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, as a Member of Parliament from the Montreal area, I would like to join and support the Montreal Economic Community, municipal authorities in Montreal, the Leader of the Parti Québécois Mr. Pierre-Marc Johnson, and Quebec's Premier Mr. Robert Bourassa in saying unequivocally to the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) that we do not and never will accept the argument being developed by the Conservative Government to justify their refusal to locate in Montreal the space agency, for the reason that the Government of Canada just helped save jobs at the GM plant in Sainte-Thérèse.

Mr. Speaker, it is important to remember that the grant extended by the Quebec Government is helping save the 5,000 jobs in Montreal, while the Federal grant is aimed at helping save 2,800 jobs in Ontario and create 2,600 new jobs.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I say to this Tory Government that the whole Quebec population will unanimously refuse to be conned once more by this Tory Government.

FINANCE

CREDIT CARDS—HIGH INTEREST RATES CHARGED BY DEPARTMENT STORES

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, in the past two weeks three chartered banks have heeded Parliament's call to cut interest rates on credit cards.

When are major retailers and department stores going to show that they have some responsible corporate citizenship too? They are still levying a whopping 28.8 per cent interest on unpaid balances whether a balance is $40, $400 or $4,000. One department store pushes its charge cards by saying it will help the consumer with a new home, a new baby, a new decor, a new hobby, a new style, but it does not add "at the same old interest rate". Another says that it is easier and faster to use the charge card than to write a cheque. It is, Mr. Speaker, until you pay 28.8 per cent interest.

Oral Questions

LABOUR RELATIONS

CHANGES TO BRITISH COLUMBIA LABOUR LEGISLATION

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Social Credit Government in British Columbia proposed radical changes to B.C.'s labour legislation. These proposals will bring sweeping changes to union certification, dispute settlement, the protection of workers by unions, and they will increase the Government's powers to intervene in labour-management disputes.

The changes were introduced with absolutely no consultation with the B.C. Federation of Labour which represents a quarter of a million workers in the province. They are ill considered, disruptive proposals that will create mistrust, insecurity, and increased conflict.

We in the New Democratic Party call on the B.C. Government to withdraw these drastic changes to labour law, to study far more carefully and thoroughly any future changes to labour legislation, and to consult fully with the B.C. Federation of Labour before making any changes in the province's labour legislation.

CHILDREN IN KINDERGARTENS AND NURSERY SCHOOLS

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, there has been a lot of recent media comment on the dangers of the so-called informal market in so far as child care is concerned. I would like to point out that some of this unlicensed care includes nursery schools, junior kindergartens, and kindergartens, none of which are considered licensed.

Teachers in these facilities are often better educated than licensed child-care workers. May I ask you, Mr. Speaker, and the Canadian public, are we really to believe that children in these facilities are at risk?

CANADA-UNITED STATES SUMMIT

NUCLEAR ARMS NEGOTIATIONS—UNITED STATES PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS TO PARLIAMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): When preparing for the meeting between the Prime Minister and the President of the United States, will the Deputy Prime Minister recommend that the Prime Minister inform the President we are pleased to hear there are negotiations between the super powers, especially on intermediate nuclear arms, and that we hope Star Wars will not prevent these negotiations from progressing? Will the Prime Minister recommend that the President review the status of these arms negotiations in his speech here in Parliament?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that will certainly be one of the topics to be discussed when the Prime Minister and President Reagan meet. The issue of arms control and east-west relations are certainly issues in the international forum that require attention. As to whether the President will be specifically referring to this in his address to the House of Commons, I am not in a position to indicate to the right hon. gentleman, but assuming the prominence which this issue takes in terms not only of the bilateral discussions that will be going on but indeed the international importance, I would suspect that reference will be made.

EFFECT OF U.S. ACTIONS ON CANADIAN AGRICULTURE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister in his discussions with the President of the United States impress upon the President the grave difficulties caused to Canadian farmers by the U.S. Farm Bill and its export subsidies, and the trade war between the United States and the European Economic Community? Will he also urge the President to include this issue in his address before Parliament because there is grave concern in Canadian rural communities and in the country generally?

• (1120)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, indeed that will be an issue raised as it has been raised on many other occasions. I would like to draw the attention of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition to the initiative taken by the Minister for International Trade in New Zealand where she outlined a five-point program on behalf of the Canadian Government. Clearly, on behalf of the Government she has taken a leadership role in trying to work toward a common approach to address this very deep and disturbing issue as it relates to the future of the grains and oil-seeds industry in Canada. It will be dealt with at the multilateral trade level, and I am sure it will certainly be dealt with at the Venice summit. The Minister is organizing a meeting of several of the exporting nations to be held in Canada to develop that common approach and to treat this issue so that on common ground the exporting nations can speak with one voice.

CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY IN ARCTIC

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, when the Prime Minister meets the President will he urge President Reagan and the American Government to recognize Canada's sovereignty in the Arctic? Would he also urge the President to make an explicit statement before Parliament when he addresses us on Monday indicating that the American Government explicitly recognizes Canada's unconditional sovereignty over our North?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as the right hon. gentleman is aware, there are some obvious differences of opinion on this particular issue. I can assume that what will be sought is an attempt to find common ground to deal with this issue. I think the bottom line from Canada's standpoint is that we will be looking for ways and means to preserve Canada's interests, which will certainly not be bargained away.

We have taken a very strong position with regard to the issue of sovereignty and the entrenchment of our sovereign rights in the North. That was evidenced by the announcement that we will proceed with the building of the Polar 8 ice-breaker, the delineation of the straight baseline, and other major initiatives that have been announced by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF PAST PRESIDENT OF U.S. ASSOCIATION OF FORMER MEMBERS OF CONGRESS

Mr. Speaker: I also wish to draw the attention of Hon. Members to the presence in the gallery of Senator Edward Moss of Salt Lake City, Utah, a past President of the U.S. Association of Former Members of Congress and the guest of honour last night at the meeting of former Members of the House of Commons and the Senate.

ACID RAIN—REQUEST FOR U.S. PROGRAM TO CUT EMISSIONS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. On the eve of the third summit would the Deputy Prime Minister reassure the House and Canadians that the Prime Minister will not be sidetracked by Washington's insistence on research and demonstration but that the Prime Minister will forcefully, openly and publicly ask the President to launch a program of cuts in acid pollution that will be parallel to Canada's program launched by this Government in 1984? Will he ask that the program have a target date, percentages, and the specific purpose of implementing and supporting what we in Canada are doing to come to grips with this very important ecological issue?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member insists on repeating the same question. It has been very adequately answered by the Minister of the Environment and indeed by the Prime Minister. I fail to see what benefit he expects to derive from repetition.

May I simply reiterate that the statement of the Prime Minister in a recent speech in Quebec clearly outlined the position of the Canadian Government. I think the Hon. Member would recognize that considerable progress has been made and the objective of the meeting this weekend will be to further that progress. The bottom line is simply this, and I quote: "Our objective continues to be a bilateral air-quality agreement between Canada and the United States with specified emission control targets. We will not be fully satisfied until we achieve that objective." I do not think it can be any clearer than that.

Mr. Caccia: The reason for the repetition is that the Government is hesitant about giving the assurance that it will make this request openly and publicly of the President.

TRANSBOUNDARY POLLUTION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary concerns the progress to which the Deputy Prime Minister has referred. Does the Government realize that at this rate of progress transboundary acid rain pollution will not be reduced by one ounce well into the 1990s if we are still following the recipe prescribed by Washington, namely, further research and further demonstration?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that is the view of the Hon. Member and he is certainly entitled to it. I think there are many people who would not share that view, including people south of the border. I happened to watch an expert on Canada AM this morning who differed very fundamentally with the Hon. Member.

Mr. Caccia: The coal industry, yes.

Mr. Mazankowski: I think the Prime Minister has made the commitment, and we require a commitment from Congress. As the Prime Minister and the Minister of the Environment have indicated, we have to use our best efforts to implore Congress to move and support the administration, and see that this resolution is sought from and confirmed by Congress. It, too, has a very important role in this exercise.

FLOOD DAMAGE IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Devastating floods in New Brunswick have caused widespread damage to both public and private property. The damage is beyond the power of the communities or even the province to handle adequately. I presume the Government has been in touch with local authorities. Can the Minister tell us what kind of aid the Government will provide to meet the emergency, prevent further damage, and help with rebuilding? When can the people of New Brunswick expect that help?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, clearly the Government shares the concern about these floods. As the Hon. Member is aware, Emergency Planning Canada has a program in place which is triggered by a request from the provincial Government. There is a funding formula in place. Certainly the Government of Canada would be prepared to receive a request and honour it, commensurate it with that formula.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY STATIONING OF TOXIC CHEMICAL FREIGHT CARS ON FLOOD THREATENED BRIDGE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of Transport. Will he launch a full public inquiry into the incredible action of CPR officials in placing 17 rail cars, including 13 filled with toxic chemicals, on the railway bridge at Perth-Andover in order to counterbalance the pressure from ice and flood water? When the bridge collapsed those cars fell into the river and now present a very clear environmental risk. There is a real danger to the fish habitat and a possible danger to drinking water. Will the Minister be launching a full public inquiry to get to the bottom of this issue?

• (1130)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Transport Commission will naturally be making a full inquiry into that situation. As I understand the facts, the cars did not break. They contained ammonium sulphate and potash. The contents could harm fish but it is expected the water will dilute them sufficiently that there will be no harm caused. It will, of course, be the responsibility of CP to retrieve these cars from the river. There will naturally be a full inquiry.

LIABILITY FOR DAMAGE TO FISH HABITAT

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my final supplementary question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Will he assure the Canadian public that CP Rail will be liable for any damage to fish habitat which results from this incredible action on the part of CPR?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I certainly find it astonishing, as I think do most Canadians, that 13 cars of chemicals, diammonium phosphate and ammonium sulphate, were used in the face of a five-metre flood crest to attempt to stabilize the bridge. I have asked my officials and those of the Department of the Environment, on behalf of my colleague who is not in the House this morning, to estimate immediately the possible risk to fish habitat and human health as a result of any of these chemicals dissolving in the river, and to determine immediately what recovery methods might be necessary if any of the cars are found to be leaking. I have asked that this assessment be done immediately and, furthermore, that we determine what authorities were granted for the parking of these rail cars on the bridge in this way.

FLOODS—REQUEST THAT FUNDS BE SPECIALLY PROVIDED TO HELP AFFECTED REGIONS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister and I would like to remind him that Quebec is also trying to cope with some major natural disasters.

About fifty municipalities are experiencing flooding, including the Beauce region, Saint-Raymond-de-Portneuf, Sainte-Anne-de-la-Pérade and La Malbaie, to name only a few.

Earlier the Minister referred to a general agreement between the federal Government and the provinces under which assistance was available for these regions. However, my specific question is: Has the Government set aside funds especially for requests of this kind? And may we expect financial assistance from the Government of Canada to be forthcoming, to help Canadians in the stricken areas?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there are always funds set aside for these types of emergencies. That is consistent with the formula which has been established to provide assistance to communities through the provinces in cases like this. There is a formal procedure and the request comes from the respective provincial Governments. A cost-sharing formula on a per capita basis is applied.

If, after an assessment of this level of damages, they are considered sufficiently high to trigger that particular formula, a request would be forthcoming from the Province of Quebec and the federal Government would examine it and respond in kind.

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT DISPOSED TO CONTRIBUTE FINANCIALLY TO RESTORING EQUIPMENT AT MURDOCHVILLE MINE

disaster that has struck the people of the Gaspé. There was nearly $10 million worth of damage as a result of the fire in the mine at Murdochville, which raises some doubts as to the future of the mining operation. The people in the area are worried about losing their jobs.

I therefore want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether the Government is prepared to help finance repairs to the equipment at the mine at Murdochville, in order to protect the 700 jobs that are at stake, considering that the Murdochville mine is the principal employer in a region that already has an unemployment rate of nearly 25 per cent.

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources outlined to the House a full report on this issue yesterday. The mine is operated under the jurisdiction of the provincial Government of Quebec. The Commission of Health and Safety within the Department of Labour is the functioning body which would investigate all aspects of this. I am not aware of any request for federal aid on this particular issue. However, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has indicated that the federal Government and his Department have co-operated in dealing with this issue. I assume the door has been left open.

Mr. Speaker: I have just been advised that the Deputy Prime Minister must, for pressing and important matters, leave the Chamber in a few minutes. If there are questions to be directed to the Deputy Prime Minister, I hope Hon. Members will make them short and succinct in order that those questions can be asked.

ACID RAIN

MEASURES PRIME MINISTER SHOULD DEMAND OF UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): In view of the absence of the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. He may notice that I return time and time again to the same issue. Throughout Canada, a great many groups of Canadian men and women have emphasized on several occasions the urgent need to settle the acid rain problem and to send the president of the United States a clear and definite message to that effect. Even the Quebec National Assembly has unanimously adopted a resolution to that effect.

My question is this: At his forthcoming summit meeting with Mr. Reagan, what specific, concrete and immediate action will the Prime Minister require of the American Government with a view to reducing the sulfur and nitrous oxide emissions?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member had listened to the answer I gave to a previous question he would know that I responded to that question. The bottom line was outlined in the speech made by the Right Hon. Prime Minister in the Province of Quebec. He will certainly find that. Perhaps he can read Hansard tomorrow and get the answer.

[Translation]

Mr. Toupin: This reply is totally inadequate, and the Deputy Prime Minister must realize that proper action is extremely important, not only to protect our environment, but also the physical health of Canadian men and women, not to mention the financial health of our industries, including the maple syrup industry in Quebec and elsewhere in Canada.

COMMITMENT DEMANDED FROM UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): What sort of commitment for concrete and immediate action will the Prime Minister require and ask of Mr. Reagan?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the Hon. Member found my previous answer improper. For his benefit I will again read the response that I gave. The Prime Minister has maintained all along, and it is the position of the Government that: "Our objective continues to be a bilateral air-quality agreement between Canada and the United States with specified emission control targets. We will not be fully satisfied until we achieve that objective".

That is exactly what the Prime Minister will be impressing upon the President to achieve. There have been some very major bilateral accomplishments over the last couple of years. On February 4 Canada and the United States, along with Ontario and New York, signed a declaration of intent coupled with the Niagara River Management Plan to see a 50 per cent reduction of loadings of persistent toxic chemicals. On May 14, 1986, a waterfowl management plan was signed. A joint declaration of intent regarding a memorandum of understanding—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

FISHERIES

BRITISH COLUMBIA SPORTS FISHERY TAGGING PROGRAM

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Last weekend in Penticton at the meeting of the B.C. Wildlife Federation the Minister announced a new tagging program for sports fish and sports fishermen. Why has the Minister brought in that program at this time? Where will the dollars collected through that program go? I hope they will go back into enhancing the resource.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the chinook or spring salmon stocks of Canada's West Coast are a very precious mainstay of our recreational fishing industry and are harvested as well by our commercial and native fishermen. In the face of growing abundance of other commercial stocks the survivability of these stocks continues to decline. Therefore, we must mount a major effort to keep better records of who is catching fish where. As well, we must fund a major research and enhancement effort to restore these stocks to traditional levels. Therefore we have announced a one-dollar-a-tag initiative to be introduced next year after appropriate consultation with all affected groups.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF PLACE VINCENT MASSEY LEASE RENEWAL

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Public Works deals again with the lease renewal contract for Vincent Massey Place, in Hull. Yesterday, in the House, to justify a $15 million gift to Mr. Tessier, the Minister of Public Works told us that the lease would have expired in three years from now.

Is the Minister prepared to admit that he made a mistake yesterday, because the lease still has another eight and a half years to run? Is he prepared to admit that it was a gift from the Government to one of its friends, out of Canadian taxpayers' money? Moreover, could he explain to us why another contract for $106,000 has been awarded to the same Mr. Tessier to renovate a room on the fifth floor? How could he justify all that?

• (1140)

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the original lease in 1973 was signed by that Government.

Mr. Boudria: Yes, it should have been kept.

Mr. McInnes: We were obliged to pick up the tab for these renovations, to respond to the Fire Inspector. That is a policy we have followed in other buildings in Ottawa, and the same policy was followed here.

An Hon. Member: Kickback.

Mr. McInnes: The Hon. Member has been investigating this particular matter for weeks. All he has produced to the House is innuendo and scurrilous, false accusations. I suggest that if he has knowledge that anybody was involved in improper political interference, he go out of this Chamber and make the accusations and take the consequences.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: I did not mean to get the Minister all excited.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, let me try to get it straight. The House should know that the Minister initially refused to give me the documents concerning the building. Is the Minister telling us that the fact that Mr. Tessier has, for 25 years, been the friend of someone working for the Prime Minister, that Mr. Tessier gave healthy contributions to the Conservative Party, that government officials overturned decisions—

Mr. Mazankowski: Sleaze!

Mr. Boudria: —overturned decisions in favour of Mr. Roy's friend are all just happy coincidences in this cosy leasing arrangement, or is it the lease that they could do for a friend?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, there are an awful lot of suggestions there. Let the Member go out of the House and restate exactly what he said, and take the consequences.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): You are stuck in the corner.

Mr. Crosbie: Senator McCarthy-Turner.

SOVEREIGNTY

ACCESS TO NORTHWEST PASSAGE BY U.S. VESSELS

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister or the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs who, I believe, is the Minister for International Trade. This week in Maclean's letters column, the Secretary of State for External Affairs wrote: "There is no truth to the assertion that Canada will give unlimited access to all U.S. vessels to use the Northwest Passage". Is it the position of the Government to give unlimited access to U.S. vessels to use the Northwest Passage?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have not read the report to which the Hon. Member refers. I will check and get back to her on it.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I quoted the Minister so that the Government would know that the Cabinet position has been stated in his letter. However, it is not clear. Therefore, my supplementary question is based on the same quote by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. If the Government is not giving unlimited access, is it preparing to give limited access to some or all U.S. vessels in Canadian Arctic waters?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier in response to a question posed by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, the issue of Arctic sovereignty and the question of access to the Northwest Passage are a matter that will be discussed on a bilateral basis between the President, the Prime Minister and, clearly, the Secretary of State for External Affairs. While we recognize that there are some different views on this—

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): What is your policy?

Mr. Mazankowski: Our policy has been clearly stated by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in the House on a number of occasions and it is a heck of a lot better than your policy was. You never had a policy on it.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for York Centre.

PLACE VINCENT MASSEY LEASING CONTRACT

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. For the last two days he has listened to the unfolding of the Duroc-Tessier matter, in particular to the defence made of it by the President of the Treasury Board. Do the Acting Prime Minister and the Prime Minister support the behaviour and treatment given to this contract by the President of the Treasury Board?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, what I do not support are the actions of Hon. Members opposite who are violating the terms of conduct that were outlined by their Leader which are, first, before you involve yourself in scandal mongering you should know the facts, and second, you should know when you have made your case.

It is interesting to note that The Globe and Mail this morning states, when the allegations were hurled across the floor of the House about the involvement of Mr. Bernard Roy, that when asked outside the House:

> —Mr. Robinson said he had no hard evidence linking Mr. Roy to the lease negotiations—

And:

> —Don Boudria said only that someone had exerted pressure—

But that:

> He, too, acknowledged he did not have evidence—

Now put up or shut up.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Put up or shut up.

Mr. Speaker: I know that Hon. Members on both sides of the House, those who are helping the Hon. Member for York Centre put his question and those who are trying to help the Minister answer the question, will allow the Hon. Member to put his question and let the Minister deal with it.

MINISTERS' POSITION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Deputy Prime Minister for the lecture, but Ministers have a responsibility to answer questions. The simple question was whether the Deputy Prime Minister or the Prime Minister support this explanation of what the Opposition considers a totally unacceptable transaction. If they do not support it, have they looked into it? Are they taking corrective or disciplinary action? It is a simple question.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Crosbie: Senator McCarthy.

Mr. Mazankowski: —the questions that were put to both Ministers yesterday were answered fully and comprehensively. What I object to and find very disgusting is the gutter politics that the Liberal Party, led by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, is engaged in. I think he should live up to his word.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Crosbie: Out of the gutter. Senator McCarthy lives in the person of John Turner.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): John Crosbie is there also.

An Hon. Member: Get out of the gutter, John.

Mr. Mazankowski: Gutter politics.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Just answer the questions.

Mr. Gauthier: You are an expert in gutter politics.

Mr. Mazankowski: Prove it.

Mr. Speaker: This exchange is exciting and interesting, but I especially want to impress upon Members on one side of the Chamber that while this exchange goes on, interesting as it may be, other Members are not getting their chance to put their questions. The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor.

TRADE

AGRICULTURAL SUBSIDY WAR BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND EUROPEAN COMMUNITY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, first I want to welcome the Minister for International Trade back to the House of Commons. Farmers across Canada are losing their family farms because of the subsidy war which is taking place between the United States and the European Community. Will the Minister tell us of any concrete steps which have resulted from the discussions which took place during her trip to try to alleviate this very serious situation?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am glad to report to the House that this issue was discussed in some detail at the Trade Ministers' meeting in New Zealand. There was a great deal of support generated for the Canadian position which consists of the five principles referred to by the Deputy Prime Minister and which form our guidelines in the short and the long term to start ending this trade war in which we are the victims. I will make sure that the Hon. Member has a copy of those five principles.

The Chairman of the Cairns Group of Fair Agricultural Traders, which is composed of the 14 countries which support agricultural reform, and I, have agreed to hold a meeting of the Cairns Group in Canada toward the end of May at which time this issue will be addressed before the summit meeting. In that way we hope to keep attention on the problem of agricultural reform before the summit.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that there is a great deal of discussion and not nearly enough concrete action which is taking place on this issue. Will the Minister assure the House that in the discussions that will take place with the Reagan cabinet Ministers who are here this weekend she will raise this issue urgently and toughly and try to obtain a commitment from the United States to roll back that support which is so badly hurting so many Canadian farmers?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I disagree totally with the Hon. Member's suggestion that no concrete action has been taken on this matter. Our Prime Minister was the very first person ever to take the issue of agriculture to the summit, which is something he did last year in Tokyo. The Prime Minister took it for the first time to the economic summit and he put it on the world agenda. In New Zealand, as I said, I took a position that was developed by the Canadian Government which would, if adopted by other countries, lead to the cease-fire which we all seek. For that reason I would like to outline briefly in layman's language these five principles. The first is that agriculture policies—

Miss Carney: —must become more price-responsive. The second is that support should—

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Minister who has come back from an important trip, but there are other places and occasions when a Minister can make a statement.

REFUGEES

COST OF HOUSING REFUGEES IN TORONTO

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Immigration. It concerns the $360,000 rental contract that the Department signed with a Toronto apartment owner for the housing of refugees. While other tenants in the same building are paying $340 and $400 respectively for one and two-bedroom units, the Government has agreed to pay the landlord $740 and $790 respectively for these units, which is more than double the current market value. How can the Minister justify the gouging and squandering of taxpayers' dollars in such a reckless manner?

Will he assure the House that he will renegotiate the contract so that the rents can be brought down to a legitimate and realistic level thereby allowing the housing of twice the number of refugees? Will he provide a responsible and accountable expenditure of taxpayers' dollars?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I am having difficulty understanding how little the Hon. Member knows about his own community in which he is supposed to live. A proposal call was made. We required temporary accommodation and certain specific services. The person who was the lowest bidder was offered a contract. That is normal procedure. That is what we have done in this particular case.

APARTMENT RATES

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, it is not normal to pay twice the amount. If the Minister were to call the Toronto office or one of his CMHC friends they would have told him that.

I want to ask the Minister again why the Government paid double the rates when for the same units similar rates were deemed to be illegal by the Ontario Rent Review Board only two months ago. In addition to renegotiating the contract will the Minister institute a full review of these real estate dealings in these apartments so that we may avoid in the future unnecessarily lining the pockets of landlords with millions of dollars while immigrants and refugee settlement programs under this regime are suffering?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, is the Hon. Member against the principle of offering a contract to the lowest bidder? Does he not understand the services we require? We have 24-hour-a-day reception services. Landlords must be willing to loan money to these people who are in their buildings. We have daily cleaning of the premises with a change of towels provided. All of these things that are required are in the contract, and this person was the lowest bidder.

Mr. Marchi: You got suckered.

AIR TRANSPORT

CANCELLATION OF CHARTER AIRLINE LICENCE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Three years ago federal bureaucrats wrongfully cancelled Fred Turner's charter airline licence in the Northwest Territories. Two years ago Cabinet recognized the error and ordered the return of the licence along with an offer of $15,000 in hush-money. Three weeks ago the Hon. Member for Regina West, Fred Turner, and myself met with the Minister to find an acceptable settlement. Since that process had no terms of reference that would have provided a settlement, will the Minister show the compassion for which he is known in this country and appoint an independent body to settle the matter through binding arbitration with fair terms of reference?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, with reference to the hon. gentleman's question, first, I want to correct him. Federal bureaucrats had nothing to do with this matter whatsoever. This matter started with a decision taken by the Canadian Transport Commission on April 4, 1984. That is a quasi-judicial body. It is not a part of the ordinary government structure in the country. I do not think we could describe it as a body made up of federal bureaucrats. A decision was taken in accordance with the powers granted to the Commission by the House. That decision was reviewed later by the Governor in Council and changes made to it.

The position of the Crown is that there is no liability on the part of the Crown. Mr. Turner has taken legal action against the Government. An ex gratia payment was offered to him. I have had the matter reviewed twice by members of my own staff. I wanted to be sure that we were justified in the position that we were taking. I think that is the case. I cannot see any reason to interfere. Because the matter is sub judice it is hard for me to say anything more about it publicly.

CROSBIE SHIPPING LINES QUERY

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is this. If Crosbie Shipping Lines had its licence to operate wrongfully taken away and subsequently Cabinet overruled that decision and gave the licence back, but during that period of time Crosbie Shipping Lines lost $2 million, would the Minister of Transport accept $15,000 in hush-money? Is it not about time that he applied the same rules to Fred Turner as he would apply to himself or any other small businessman in this country?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the relevance is of Crosbie Shipping Lines, or whether there is a Crosbie Shipping Lines, or whatever. I have never had anything to do with any decision that affected the Crosbie Shipping Lines. This is the type of McCarthyism that we see repeatedly in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: What is the relevance of a Crosbie Shipping Lines? It is a scandalous attempt to impute that—

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, with respect—

Mr. Gauthier: Sit down, John. We've been recognized.

Mr. Crosbie: I have not finished answering the question.

Mr. Gauthier: You never even started.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie.

TRANSPORT

AMERICAN RAILWAY COMPANIES' ACCESS TO CANADIAN NETWORK—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and I hope he will respond with fewer buffooneries than he did just now.

On February 12, the Minister of Transport of the Quebec Government sent us a copy of a letter to his federal counterpart. Yesterday a brief was tabled and he stated that, as a result of some of the provisions of Bill C-18, the Canadian Government is on the verge of granting American transport companies using rail lines unconditional access to our railway network. My question is the same as Quebec Transport Minister Marc-Yvan Côté's: As Canada is attempting to negotiate a free trade agreement with a partner who has no intention of handing us anything on a silver platter—restrictions on lumber, pork, potash and what not—how can the Minister offer him, without any concession on his part, unconditional access to our rail lines?

• (1200)

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think that that is the most confused question that I have ever been asked in this House—

An Hon. Member: It is very clear. You are confused.

Ms. Jewett: You had better get on with the answer.

Mr. Crosbie: I do not know what the question is, Mr. Speaker. I do not know what American company has been offered what concession over Canadian rail lines.

The hon. gentleman has divided his question into "malé" parts, and he doesn't know what any one of those parts means.

If he is referring to Bill C-18 and Bill C-19 now before the House of Commons Transport Committee, I suggest that the hon. gentleman attend some hearings, learn something, and then come back and ask another question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILLING TO INTRODUCE AMENDMENTS TO BILL C-18 RECOMMENDED BY QUEBEC MINISTER OF TRANSPORT

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Clearly, Mr. Speaker, the stupid reply of the Minister shows that the Minister of Transport did not give any consideration to the letter of the Minister of Transport of the Quebec Government, because in the quotation I have here those are the questions which were asked by the Quebec Minister of Transport. This shows clearly that the Minister is not interested in Quebec, he who stated during the leadership race that speaking French or Chinese pretty well amounts to the same thing. He has no knowledge of Quebec.

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Malépart: My supplementary question to the Minister is this: Is he—

[English]

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Bouchard: Where is your control, John?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Where is his control?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member might ask his question?

Mr. Malépart: My supplementary question to the Minister is the question asked by the Minister of Transport of Quebec. Is he prepared to amend Bill C-18 as recommended by the Quebec Minister of Transport to make sure that the Quebec Government and the other provincial administrations will be consulted before any changes are made?

The Quebec Minister of Transport sent him a letter on February 12, is he now prepared to respond favourably to the requests of the Quebec Government?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, he is unbelievable. The Hon. Member is behaving like a clown.

[English]

You are a "fou".

Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I met with the Minister of Transport for Quebec and the Ministers of Transportation representing the other provinces. We had an excellent conference here about a week ago. We answered all questions. It was agreed that the legislation would be proceeded with.

I listened to their suggestions in respect of any changes they thought the House of Commons committee might consider. I will be meeting with the House of Commons Transport Committee next week, to review with that committee those amendments that we think should be made.

I have listened to the suggestions of the Minister of Transport of the Province of Quebec, who is supporting our legislation, although he does suggest that some changes might be made.

We have the support of all 10 Ministers across the country, as well as the Ministers of the two Territories. As a matter of fact, eight of the provinces signed a Memorandum of Understanding the other day with respect to safety on the highways, and Ontario and Quebec—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Crosbie: The Leader of the Opposition doesn't like to listen to progress.

Mr. Gauthier: You are making a speech.

Mr. Crosbie: You are always making speeches. Why can't we make one in return?

Mr. Gauthier: You have a big mouth; that's all.

Mr. Speaker: I would advise Hon. Members that the time allotted for the Oral Question Period has expired.

PRIVILEGE

ATTENDANCE OF MINISTERS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to raise a question of privilege arising out of today's Question Period.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, and I think that Canadians generally will agree, that the primary obligation of Ministers is to be in this House to account to the Canadian people through the questions raised in the daily Question Period.

We do not, as is the case with the United States, have what is commonly called there a system of checks and balances, a system whereby the power of the executive can be checked by the action of the legislative branch, except in a series of limited ways, especially where the Government is supported by a very strong majority.

I have said that there are some ways, and chief among them is the challenging and the holding to account of the Government during the daily Question Period. When we have the daily Question Period, Mr. Speaker, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is absent, and the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) is absent, and the larger part of the Cabinet is absent, then the basic concept—

An Hon. Member: Two days in a row.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): —then the basic concept of parliamentary Government of holding the Government to account on behalf of the Canadian people through Question Period cannot be carried out. We have seen this unjustified and unacceptable absence, not just one day—today—but two days in a row. I say, Mr. Speaker, that the Ministers—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member, who is a distinguished Member of this House, and who speaks with a high degree of responsibility for the Official Opposition, is raising a matter which is clearly important. The Chair is in perhaps a little bit of difficulty because there is a tradition of the House that the presence or absence of Members is not remarked upon, and the reason for that, as is understood by all Hon. Members, is that there are many places that Members have to be in order to carry out all of the obligations that go with their office. I would hope that the Hon. Member would keep this in mind in his further remarks, which the Chair is most certainly going to listen to.

There is perhaps a fine line here that the Hon. Member has to walk, and I will most certainly hear him; but, I think we should all remember that there is this tradition. There may very well be good reasons for one's absence, and that is why absences, for the most part, are not commented upon.

The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray).

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I understand the point you have made. Let me say this. I think that you should interpret that concept in a way which enables Members to raise the issue of the absence of the most senior members of the Ministry in a consistent fashion, because if Members of this House could not raise that matter for your attention, then we might find a day when no members of the Ministry are here for Question Period, or only one or two of the most junior Ministers.

I think, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I can assist the Hon. Member.

I would hope that all Hon. Members, and certainly the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray)—because he does speak, as I have said, with dignity and importance on behalf of the Official Opposition— would understand that I am only putting out a caution. I have said in other places and at other times, as have most of the Members of this place—and I say this not only for the interest of Hon. Members but also for the public, which is always watching—that Question Period is perhaps, at its best, the finest accountability session of any free country, and I want to assure the Hon. Member and the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) that the Chair is very conscious of that.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I shall conclude by saying that I hope that the Government, the Ministry, takes into account not only what I have said, but what you have said, Sir, perhaps with greater eloquence than myself, with respect to the the importance of Question Period, and the fact that it cannot work unless the Prime Minister or the Deputy Prime Minister and the most senior members of the Ministry are here, on a consistent basis.

This institution, Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Hypocrisy.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): —is the foundation of our parliamentary system, our system of parliamentary democracy—

Mr. Crosbie: It is not—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: You are grandstanding, Herb.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): The Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) said—and I hope that Hansard records this—that Parliament is not the foundation of our system of parliamentary democracy.

Some Hon. Members: Shame on you!

Mr. Crosbie: I did not.

Some Hon. Members: Resign!

Mr. Crosbie: I did not.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I think, Mr. Speaker, that explains the cavalier attitude—

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker—

An Hon. Member: Sit down, John.

An Hon. Member: Resign!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), on a point of order.

• (1210)

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. That statement, I never made—

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): You certainly did.

Mr. Crosbie: —and I am not going to allow the Opposition House Leader to make it for me, or his Leader, Senator McCarthy Turner.

Some Hon. Members: Oh oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Keep your Opposition House Leader under control.

Some Hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Crosbie: Not likely. He has that little germ cell up every day.

Some Hon. Members: Oh oh!

Mr. Speaker: I ask the Hon. Minister to reconsider very carefully what he said. While I am not going to refer to a list of words which are parliamentary or unparliamentary to decide what is appropriate in the Chamber from time to time, I will use as much common sense as I can muster, no matter who may say something which has by its implications very, very regrettable connotations. I hope the Hon. Minister would, now or at some appropriate time, indicate to the Chamber—

Mr. Crosbie: What did I say to him?

Mr. Speaker: I do not think calling any Hon. Member, whether it is the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) or any Hon. Member, a user of McCarthy tactics is acceptable in this Chamber. We all know what it means. It was a very unpleasant period of the life of a very friendly nation. Nobody doubts what it means. It is an unpleasant and very disagreeable term indeed.

The Hon. Minister may not wish to say anything at this time, but I would invite the Hon. Minister to consider that. When he feels it is appropriate I would certainly hear him.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, as you know, I am certainly quite willing to take your advice, and I withdraw the words you object to in connection with the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Speaker: I want to say to Hon. Members that the Chair deeply appreciates the statement of the Minister. The Chair also appreciates that when we have moments such as on this occasion—and Hon. Members will have noticed it, and I hope the public notices it—Hon. Members did the Chair the courtesy of remaining silent, allowing the Chair to do the best it could on behalf of all of you to pass over, perhaps, what was a rough moment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, if the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) says that what he said was misunderstood and he did not use certain words, I will certainly accept that in the spirit in which you called upon us to act in this place.

However, I want to say finally with regard to my question of privilege that I hope in future members of the Government, especially the Prime Minister, the Deputy Prime Minister, and senior Ministers—no matter what are their duties or their schedules, especially with regard to cabinet committees,—will give priority, and it must be given, to attendance in the House for the Question Period.

This is one of the key ways Canadian people expect us to hold the Government to account. Unless it is there to operate fully, I submit that our House of Commons, and therefore our parliamentary democracy, is on the road to being undermined. That would not be in the interest of the country now or in the future.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think there is no question but that parliamentary democracy is being undermined by the conduct which is allowed by the executive of the Liberal Party to its Members—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

An Hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Speaker is on his feet.

Mr. Speaker: The point which is being raised by the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) is simply that today, or perhaps on some other occasion, it is his view and the view of members of the Official Opposition that not sufficient members of the Cabinet were present in Question Period. That is the position. It has nothing to do with other things.

The Hon. Member for Windsor West is saying that Question Period is essential to our democratic way of life. I have said, and I know all Hon Members will agree with me, that at its best Question Period is the finest accountability session of any free country in the world. It is ours.

The Hon. Member has made his point. Perhaps it is necessary to make another point. It may well be. There may be reasons for the absence of Ministers. I have also suggested, and

I know the Hon. Member for Windsor West had heard me and commented on it, that it is not the tradition here to comment on the absence of members, because we all know that members must be in many places doing the duties which they were sent here to do, and across the country, by their electors.

The narrow point, the point that I am hearing, the point I want to address, and no other point, is simply that the Hon. Member says that some or not enough cabinet Ministers were present. That is the point being addressed, and that is the point to which any Hon. Member who wishes to rise on this particular matter ought to address his or her words.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, with that admonition I will completely restrict my remarks to the point in question and not engage in any partisan commentary inside the House.

There is absolutely no obligation for any Minister to be in his place because questions are asked of the Ministry. Every effort is made by our Government to brief Acting Minister's, at 10.30 and 1.30 every day, on the questions of the day.

Third, Ministers have other obligations as do members of the Opposition; they may be ministerial obligations, they may be constituency obligations, or they may be personal obligations.

Fourth, I invite contrast only in this case of comparison with the United Kingdom where, as Hon. Members know, Ministers appear in the House on rotation—

Mr. Penner: Oh.

Mr. Lewis: That might have been a partisan comment.

Mr. Crosbie: The Mother Parliament.

Mr. Speaker: I think the Chair has asked all Hon. Members to hear each other on this point. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has accepted the admonition of the Chair, for which I thank him. He is putting forward an explanation, which he is absolutely entitled to do on a matter of this importance. I would ask all Hon. Members to allow the Parliamentary Secretary to finish his remarks.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I was making the point that in the United Kingdom the Ministers appear on rotation. I happen to prefer our system because it gives the Opposition a better opportunity to keep a Minister and an issue on the front burner. We accept that. It happened today in the case of a lease question. Those Ministers in question, on an issue which was dealt with yesterday, were here.

In the United Kingdom, the Minister of Transport appears on a Tuesday and then two weeks hence. Actually, I think our system is better and I suggest no change. However, I suggest, given our system and given that Ministers try to be here most of the time to answer questions, that there are occasions when they must be elsewhere. That was accepted by our Party in opposition.

Mr. Prud'homme: Oh, no.

Mr. Fennell: Yes.

Mr. Prud'homme: I will talk about that.

Mr. Lewis: Perhaps, outside.

Mr. Prud'homme: Inside. I do not talk outside.

Mr. Lewis: It cuts both ways. The point has been made. I think we understand what has been said. We will continue to make every effort to have Ministers in the House to be accountable to the country—and we have no difficulty with that—and to be accountable to the Opposition.

I will save the rest of my remarks which might be partisan for another time.

• (1220)

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to the comments of Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) on the absence of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the absence of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski). I think the Hon. Member failed to realize or to acknowledge that the Deputy Prime Minister—I believe this is the first time I have witnessed this—sent a notice to you that he would have to leave the Chamber a few minutes early. The Hon. Member for Windsor West alleges that the Deputy Prime Minister was not in the Chamber. He did not even acknowledge that prior notice had been given that he would be leaving the Chamber. I think the Member for Windsor West does this House a disservice, having been given the courtesy of the notice, by not acknowledging it when he rose on his question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for his intervention. The Chair has listened with interest and with complete attention to all of the interventions. I do want to say one thing to all Hon. Members and it is this. The Chair did receive a notice during Question Period—and for whatever reason a Minister or Member leaves it is not my place to comment on it, but one has to assume that whenever a Minister or any Member leaves this Chamber it is appropriate and legitimate—that the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) had to leave because he is travelling to another part of the country today. The Chair made the announcement, not because the Chair is taking any position that it is appropriate or inappropriate for any particular Minister to be here during Question Period, but because the courtesy was extended to the Chair I felt that same courtesy ought to be extended to the Chamber.

I think the matter has been adequately discussed and I will consider the representations that have been made. I want to assure all Hon. Members in this place, especially the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) who has spoken on behalf of the Official Opposition, and any others who may have strong views about this, that it is the opinion of the Chair, which I think is shared here, that Question Period is indeed a very important part of our Canadian democracy. It is perhaps the most vivid accountability session of any democratic country in the world.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

COMMEMORATION OF SEVENTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF THE BATTLE OF VIMY RIDGE

Hon. George Hees (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, next week we will be marking one of the most important dates in our history. Seventy years ago this Thursday, April 9, Canadians from coast to coast, standing shoulder to shoulder, moved forward against the strongly entrenched positions at Vimy Ridge in France. By the end of the day, the Canadian Corps stood triumphant at the top of the ridge.

This triumph is the acknowledged birth of Canada as a nation. Brigadier General Alex Ross was to describe what happened in this way:

> The barren earth erupted humanity. From dugouts, shell holes and trenches men sprang into action, fell into artillery formations, and advanced to the ridge . . . It was Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific . . . I thought then—that in those few minutes I witnessed the birth of a nation.

Our victory was not without cost. Over 10,000 Canadians were casualties in the one day battle, 3,500 of whom were killed. Four Canadians earned the Victoria Cross, three of them posthumously.

As part of my mandate to perpetuate the memory of Canada's wartime sacrifice, I will be leading a delegation of 10 Vimy veterans to Vimy Ridge next week. We will be paying homage to those who fell at Vimy, and, indeed, to the over 66,000 Canadians who were killed during the Great War.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I wish to make all Hon. Members aware of a very special carving now on display in the lobby outside the Chamber. This carving, a replica of the Canadian Memorial at Vimy, was presented to me by the Royal 22nd Regiment. It was expertly crafted by Master Warrant Officer J.A.P.R. Laplante of the 22nd's 1st Battalion. I am told that Master Warrant Officer Laplante put in well over 1,000 hours of carving time. The result is simply magnificent. I therefore recommend it to Hon. Members' attention very much indeed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull—Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, as the official Opposition critique for Veterans Affairs, I consider it a great honour and take great satisfaction in joining the responsible Minister in commemorating that historic feat, seventy years ago on April 9, at the Battle of Vimy Ridge during the First World War.

Mr. Speaker, on that day, at 5.30 a.m. at sunrise, under a ceaseless barrage of fire, iron and steel, Canadian divisions launched the attack on Vimy Ridge, headed by ten battalions marching abreast which lead the attack, while flurries of wet snow swept the cold and somber battle ground. April 9, 1917 was truly a landmark in our history as a nation.

Canada entered the First World War as a nation that was still young. It had always existed in the shadow and under the trusteeship of the two mother countries, France and Great Britain. However, when the Armistice was signed at the end of this terrible conflict, Canada had succeeded in carving out a niche for itself among the nations of the world and was recognized and invited as an independent country to attend the peace negotiations.

Mr. Speaker, blood and iron forged a new nation on that day, an independent Canada, a Canada that was respected and that earned the privilege of ranking among the great nations of this world.

Mr. Speaker, all Canadians are grateful to the 600,000 men and women who answered the call of their country during the First World War.

Vimy Ridge is a symbol of their sacrifice and their courage. That is why every year, so many Canadians go back to Vimy to attend a service commemorating this great battle, in front of the splendid monument that stretches up to the sky, as though to carry up to heaven our prayers commemorating all who fought at Vimy.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may quote the Right Hon. Mackenzie King, the Prime Minister at the time, who said in the House on March 27, 1923, before the monument was built, and I quote:

> The future will look on the battle grounds of the Great War as the altars of a holocaust, and none will shine more brilliantly in our memory and our history than Vimy.

And that is also why the seventieth anniversary of the Battle of Vimy Ridge is a day of special celebration, a day of gratitude and a day of prayer.

Mr. Speaker, I want to wish the Minister "bon voyage", and I would ask him to express to the handful of men and women who will accompany him, as veterans who fought on April 9, 1917 at Vimy, our profound gratitude and our sincere thanks for the example they have set to the whole world through their acts of heroism and their exceptional courage.

We will be with you in our prayers.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the New Democratic Party, it is an honour to join the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) and the veterans affairs critic of the Official Opposition in saying a few words about Vimy Ridge. If ever a conflict deserved to be called the war to end all wars, it was the 1914 to 1918 war. It was sheer slaughter from beginning to end. Canada alone lost over 60,000 troops in that war. We just have to look at Vimy Ridge itself to appreciate the massive losses. It is estimated that 150,000 French troops were killed attempting to take it. Subsequently the British army also attempted to do so and was decimated. Then along came the Canadian troops to see what they could do against this seemingly entrenched natural fortress. It was quite a challenge for an inexperienced volunteer army. However, it was there at Vimy where all the divisions of the Canadian corps came together for the first time to fight as a single unit. The rest, as we say these days, is history. It is certainly history worth recalling and applauding.

There are over 14,000 veterans of the First World War here in Canada today. Next Thursday let us remember just what this very special group of veterans achieved for Canada. We should never forget their contributions and sacrifices and we should always be grateful.

At this point, Madam Speaker, I would like to offer my own congratulations to the Minister for heading that delegation of war veterans back to Vimy Ridge.

RIGHT TO LIFE OF UNBORN BABIES—PROTECTION OF CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present to the House petitions from some 100 people, the majority of whom are from Surrey, British Columbia. These concerned people call upon Parliament to support Motion M-37 which would allow unborn babies to be protected by the Charter of Rights.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, in conformity with Standing Order 106, I have the honour to present three petitions. The petitioners exercise their ancient and undoubted right to say, whereas the proposed changes to the Patent Act will affect directly all Canadians who are not protected by private and governmental medicare programs, whereas the federal Government's proposal will raise the costs, already high, of provincial health care programs, whereas the monopoly granted to innovative pharmaceutical companies will prevent competition from generic companies and will result in an increase in drug costs and prices and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs, and whereas proposed changes to the Patent Act are another example of the Canadian Government's concession to free trade negotiations with the United States at the expense of every-day Canadians, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) does not seem to be here at the moment. I suppose all questions will stand, for the moment.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Shall all questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Tuesday, March 17, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I wish to inform the House that because of the Ministerial statement, Government Orders will be extended by eight minutes beginning at 1 p.m.

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Madam Speaker, it has been a long time since the Budget and, apart from the fact that the Budget lends itself to being forgotten, many people may have forgotten what was in it. What was not in the Budget was brought home very dramatically to me yesterday when a Budget was brought down in the Newfoundland House. It is very timely for me to be able to make some comments on the federal Budget today because that Budget painted not only an austere picture but even a tragic picture of what is happening in this country.

I would like to read from an article in this morning's Globe and Mail which summarizes for Canadians what is happening in Newfoundland. Bear in mind that the Government in that province is of the same political stripe as the Government here in Ottawa. The article reads as follows:

> Finance Minister John Collins presented a $2.8-billion budget yesterday that freezes construction of new government buildings and predicts dire consequences for Newfoundland's ailing economy unless Ottawa comes through with more money.
> "The 1980s decade has not been kind to Newfoundland and Labrador," he said. "We should not be asked, nor would we agree, that our people should be thankful to receive half the Canadian loaf.
> "After 38 years, we remain the archetypal have-not province."

I suggest that it is relevant that we are continuing the Budget debate today. I say in all sincerity to Hon. Members opposite that there is a responsibility for us here in this Chamber and on the treasury benches to be cognizant that there is a province in Canada that is in very, very serious financial straits. Some people would even say the province was on the verge of bankruptcy. I suggest that the treasury benches take a very close look at what is happening and at their own fiscal and financial policies.

Let me give some indicators of what is happening at the federal level. The Government told us in the budget debate and thereafter that something like 400,000 or 500,000 new jobs have been created. I remind the House that the Newfoundland unemployment rate is more than 20 per cent. With the exception of about 6 per cent, all of those new jobs have been created in central Canada. That is a very distinct reality. Given that one measure of the success of the Government's financial policies is job creation, then it has failed miserably.

The Government has not had a regional development policy. I have seen no evidence in this Chamber of any policy over the last two years. Between 1984 and 1986 the Government reduced regional development expenditures by 25 per cent. Not only that, there has been a consistent and conscious effort to cut government programs and spending. There may be a rationale for that, but I submit, as I have before, that when you have a national policy which cuts across the board without regard for its effect on the regions, then it is a double burden on those less favoured regions which depend more heavily on government services and programs. No one likes dependency but it is a fact of life. When you slash across the board you hurt the weakest. That is the reality. You cannot have a single policy. If you do, you entrench regional disparity. I again use the example of Procruste's bed. He was a Greek innkeeper who had one bed. If the guest was too long for the bed he cut the person to fit. If he was too short, he stretched him to fit. That is the policy of the Government for the whole country. I submit that when that happens you entrench regional disparity. That is exactly what is happening. That is why in my province, which is not economically self-supporting, we now have a three-year freeze on construction, expansion and renovation of public buildings. The worst part of that is that it applies to nursing homes, hospitals and schools.

Two days ago my province celebrated 37 years in Confederation. When Joey Smallwood led the fight for Confederation in Newfoundland he told us we would gain the advantage of receiving services equal to the rest of the nation. Yet yesterday's budget in Newfoundland told us that for three years there is going to be a complete and absolute freeze on most new construction, including nursing homes, hospitals and schools. What is Confederation all about? Are we all equal? Do we have the right to expect services and policies from the Government of Canada which will advance our interests and allow us to develop as a people? That is not happening because the Government has absolutely no policy for regional development.

Let me give a few other examples. We have seen a cut-back in equalization payments. Those payments are a fundamental lever of federal policy for righting regional disparity across this country. Oh, yes, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) told us recently that something like $180 million in equalization overpayments, caused by demographic changes, will be forgiven. However, it is not new money. It is of no help to an ailing economy. There has been a cut in Established Programs Financing for education and health care. Newfoundland, as did the rest of the country, expected an increase of 7 per cent. That was the five-year agreement between the federal Government and the provinces. The federal Government unilaterally abrogated that agreement and instead of a 7 per cent increase we will receive only 5 per cent. That may seem trivial when you look at it superficially, but in Newfoundland it means we will receive $187 million less than we had expected or budgeted for schools and health services.

In delivering his budget yesterday the Newfoundland Minister of Finance said:

> We should not be asked, nor would we agree, that our people should be thankful to receive half the Canadian loaf.

I repeat, the brutal reality is that for three years the expansion of nursing homes, hospitals and schools will be completely frozen. That is the tragic reality.

Newfoundland has the highest rate of taxes in Canada, including a 12 per cent sales tax, yet taxes will increase by $600 to $800 for the average family as a result of the last federal Budget. There has been a one-cent increase in the federal tax on diesel and aviation fuel.

The simple fact is that the Government has one single underlining principle, and that is to let the private sector do the job. Yet that is not working and it is time the Government woke up to that fact. We have a province which is struggling, not to progress but simply to stay alive. I cannot make that point too strongly. That is not rhetoric. I hope the treasury benches will realize that.

What initiatives has the Government taken? It has said that it believes oil will be the salvation of Newfoundland. I hope so, but there is no evidence of that so far. Yes, it is true the Atlantic Accord was signed. Yes, it is true that $66 million has been spent on development as a result of that Accord. What we have not seen is any movement toward development of the oil field itself. We are told there is a deal in the making. We are told there is an offer. We do not know and that is part of the problem. We cannot get information on what the Government is doing and the hard cold facts of what it plans for the province. We are told there is a deal between Mobil and the federal Government. We are told that that deal will involve Mobil spending something like $900 million in a $4.3 billion development program for the Hibernia field. However, Mobil will be able to recover that investment after three years. That has been described as a jammy deal for Mobil. We do not know what that company's response will be. As far as we can tell, the Newfoundland Government has approved the offer. As far as we can tell, Mobil is studying the offer and will respond some time before June. Yet how many Newfoundlanders know the facts of that deal before it is announced, if it ever is? That is very important to us because our future will hang on it. What will the advantage of that deal be to the people of Newfoundland? As far as I can tell that is what the Government is hanging its hat on. We will have to be very vigilant over the next few months and ensure that we ask the proper questions and scrutinize this deal very closely indeed. There has been no consultation on this matter. It has been very difficult indeed to get information on what the Government is doing.

The Government has encouraged and possibly twisted the arm of Petro-Canada to go ahead with some drilling this year. We know that the SEDCO 710 will be drilling off the coast of Newfoundland this year. However, that rig would have to be out there anyway because, as I understand it, it is still under contract to Petro-Canada and it would have to be used somewhere, albeit not necessarily on the Grand Banks. Therefore, that initiative alone is no indication that there is a willingness and dedication by the Government to go ahead.

In the meantime the Government is going ahead with the privatization of the very arm of government which it is using to suggest that it is serious about the development of the oil field off Newfoundland. At the same time as the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) announces the initiative by Petro-Canada to drill further on the Grand Banks, the Government is putting Petro-Canada up for privatization. I believe that is another indication of the ingrained philosophy which is not in the best interest of that province.

I believe the strength of Canada has been that we have always had a mixture of private and public sector initiatives, a mixed economy. Petro-Canada was created to take risks which other private companies would not take, to go where other private companies would not go, to take initiatives on behalf of Canadians. The very vehicle which was created for those purposes is now up for sale.

I suggest that it is time the mentality of the Government change and it realize that the approach of solving regional disparity through the private sector is not working. The Government must come up with a different approach. It must reassess its position and ensure that it has policies which will help a province, not only to advance, but to hold the place it now has.

I have heard the Minister of Transport, who is Newfoundland's representative in the Cabinet, talk about the benefits of free trade. That is another initiative which the Prime Minister has said will be the salvation of the region. Yet there is no hard information as to how that free trade deal with the U.S. will impact on the regions. There are all sorts of indications that it will not be a help to the regions. The fact is that we are getting no clear indication from the Government on exactly what the facts are and what the impact will be.

I appreciate this opportunity to put those things on the record today because, in light of the Budget which came down in the province yesterday, it is urgent that this House and, in particular, the treasury benches, realize that the ball is in their court. The power is in their hands to advance a policy for that province which will not only enable it to make progress but enable it to remain in Confederation.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions, comments. The Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert.

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Madam Speaker, with all due respect to my Opposition colleague the Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey), I would like to make a few comments and ask him a question about his speech.

First, he stated a number of times in his remarks that this Government, our Government, had no regional development policy. I am personally very much surprised to hear him say such a thing, in view of the fact especially that since we came to power we have given concrete examples—and have results to prove it—that we are committed to developing the various regions across Canada.

Let me refer to an example that happened recently. When this Government awarded the CF-18 maintenance contract in the Montreal area, we thereby insured the future of aeronautics research there, at that specific location.

Currently, as vice-chairperson of the Committee on Research, Science and Technology, I am very well informed of this Government's future policies on scientific research and technological development.

And I can state, Madam Speaker, that together with the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté), who is to announce very soon a long-term regional development policy, the Government is currently consulting with various departments in order to put forward to Canadians a policy that will be of benefit, a policy that will not be a duplication, and that also calls for most departments to make suggestions to avoid duplication and to ensure that all regions and all department components come up with a development that will enable us to ensure the future of all Canadians, long-term wise and for years to come, into the 2,000's.

Madam Speaker, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that he stated we have created almost no new jobs. I would like to tell him again that we have created at least 705,000 jobs, 80 percent of which are permanent.

Madam Speaker, he said that currently the economy is ailing. Well, if we have an ailing economy, this is quite a performance because under the Liberals the economy was dying.

Madam Speaker, I would like to ask a question to the Hon. Member for Grands Falls—White Bay—Labrador, as a Liberal Member. Instead of constantly suggesting that everything this Government is doing is wrong, I would be extremely pleased to hear at some point from him positive proposals to the Government for a better regional development policy.

Mr. Gauthier: You have been elected, Madam.

[English]

Mr. Rompkey: Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for her question and I do believe I have some very positive suggestions to make. With regard to new jobs, as I said in my remarks, it is true that new jobs have been created. The Government has said that it has created something like 400,000 new jobs in Canada.

Mr. McInnes: Seven hundred thousand.

Mr. Rompkey: Seven hundred thousand new jobs, that is right, but I ask the Regional Minister how many jobs have been created in the Atlantic area. The fact is that statistics show that only 6 per cent of those new jobs have been created outside central Canada. That is exactly the point I am making. I am making the point that there is not a regional development policy.

If I had to make a specific suggestion it would be to restore the balance to the regional development envelope which was decreased by $3 billion between 1984 and 1986. If the Member does not want to take my word for that she can take the word of the Premier of Newfoundland who is a Member of the same Party as Hon. Members opposite. The policy of the Government is, first, to hope to hell that the private sector will do the job all across the country and, second, if you have to have a regional development policy of any kind, let it be broker politics. It is not possible to operate a country on brokerism. There must be a consistent, co-ordinated and well developed policy that recognizes that there are less favoured people and more favoured people in this country. That is the reality. If regional development simply operates on brokerism and the Government simply operates its regional development policy on the basis of where it will get votes, it will not work. We do not have any votes and cannot offer the Government anything. We only have seven seats in Parliament so what power do we have in broker politics?

Our only hope is the vision that the creators of Canada had in 1867 and the vision of people like Joey Smallwood in 1949. That is our only hope that we will get a fair deal.

I made the point that we are not getting a fair deal because the jobs are not being created in Atlantic Canada. The problem lies in the fact that the regional development envelope of the Government has decreased.

Mr. Heap: Madam Speaker, I was very interested in the remarks of the Hon. Member. I was reminded of the figures I have heard which show that the education tax in Newfoundland and the other Atlantic provinces is considerably higher as a proportion of the gross domestic product than in the other provinces. As well, personal income tax is considerably higher as a proportion of provincial revenue than it is for other provinces. This certainly underlines the point the Hon. Member has been making, that there is a very serious situation facing the Atlantic Provinces even in regard to equalization payments. I agree with his points, particularly in response to the question.

As someone from Toronto, I can say that it is not enough to acknowledge that there are a lot of jobs in Canada and ignore the fact that hardly any of them are in Newfoundland or the Atlantic Provinces.

There is another matter on which I would like him to comment. Vast resources have been taken and are still being taken from Newfoundland and Labrador. These include mineral, forest, hydro, fish and oil resources which at a glance may seem to make the people of that province at least well served, if not rich. I must come to the conclusion that those resources are not under the control, let alone ownership, of the people of Newfoundland and Labrador. Will the Member comment on the budgetary action, or tax action, or other action which might be taken, not merely to put revenue or income into Atlantic Canada's hands but to restore to them control of those resources which they used to control in their own provinces?

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, that is an excellent question and I thank the Hon. Member for it. If I could put it simply, I would say that when one has very little to begin with one has to mortgage very heavily. We have had so little to invest that we have had to mortgage heavily throughout our history. That fact remains. For example, the investment in mineral development has been by large American firms. While there are some royalties and jobs from this, the levers of economic power are in the hands of large American multinationals.

It is a fact of life that we are linked inextricably with the Province of Quebec with respect to hydro power. We share the same continent and we share the Ungava Peninsula. If that power is to flow to a reasonable market, it must go through the Province of Quebec. Therefore, we had to mortgage again and, while one may agree or disagree with it, that mortgage is a fact of life.

What about the fish resource? While I may sound partisan, as a result of initiatives this Party took when we were the Government of Canada, Newfoundland is finally regaining some financial control in the fishery because in the past two weeks Fishery Products International—a company we set up as a majority partner when we were the Government—has been privatized and is very profitable. That is what must happen. The levers of financial power, whether private or public, must go back to the people and that process must be accelerated in all those resources.

The point I have been making to the Government is that a laissez-faire approach will not necessarily work all across the country. There are areas which need the economic power of the Government in order to make progress. I believe that is still true in my area, as it has been not only for decades but for centuries.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The period for questions and comments is terminated. I would seek consent of the House to call it one o'clock.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being 1.08 p.m., I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1.08 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) has the floor.

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): On February 18, 1987, Madam Speaker, our Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) tabled his Budget, his message to the Canadian people. He was contemplating expenditures of some $122 billion. The Minister indicated on that occasion the additional taxes which he would impose on Canadians and, for the first time, we witnessed a budgetary tax increase of less than 1.5 per cent of total spending, that is to say, less than $1.5 billion out of $122 billion in total spending, which proves that our Government is well aware of the need to ease as much as possible our taxpayers' burden. Also, Madam Speaker, I should add that out of this $1.5 billion, we are going to obtain $1.2 billion from major corporations; those paying over $15,000 per month in deductions at source from their employees paychecks, will have to pay these deductions twice a month, so that the Government will collect $1.2 billion more without Canadians having to pay a single cent out of their own pockets.

Finally, the Government will also increase the prices of gas and tobacco, for a total of approximately $1.5 billion out of $122 billion.

Before breaking down further these revenues and commenting on the Budget, it is advisable to consider what we are going to do with this $122 billion budget.

There are three major spending categories, and the most important one, the one to which our Conservative Government will allocate the greatest funds, concerns social programs. As a matter of fact, Madam Speaker, out of a $122 billion budget, $57 billion will go to the needy through all sorts of social assistance and benefits, including old age security pension, unemployment insurance, youth assistance, etc.

We are going also to spend $28 billion to pay the interest on the debt which was accumulated by our predecessors, leaving $37.1 billion to meet the needs of the other Departments.

With its message, our Government has shown Canadians its great concern for gradually reducing the Government's deficit. In 1985-86, our deficit was $34.4 billion; it was $32 billion in 1986-87, and we foresee for 1987-88 a deficit of $29.3 billion.

Madam Speaker, it should be emphasized that we have managed to reduce our deficit and as much as 63 per cent of that reduction resulted from cutting down on Government spending through better quality management. This was formally acknowledged by Mr. Dye, the Auditor General of Canada, when he tabled his first report. Everybody knows that, every time the Auditor General tabled his reports dealing with quality control and Government management, he used to criticize the previous Government and the Liberals for their mismanagement. Now in our case, Madam Speaker, for the first budget which we were entirely responsible for in this House, the Auditor General has indicated that we have considerably increased the quality of our financial management.

Our budget has taken into account, Madam Speaker, a very small increase of program expenditures, that is we have increased the program expenditures by less than 2.8 per cent, or at a lower rate than the inflation rate which is between 3.9 and 4.1 per cent. That again represents a very significant effort.

And what are the tangible effects of that control and reduced deficit?

Firstly, we have contributed, and every Canadian can appreciate it, to a very significant reduction of interest rates. As we know, Canadians will never forget that in 1981, they paid 22 to 24 per cent interest rates on their loans and we have seen last week that the bank rate had decreased to 7 per cent.

So if we compare the interests paid under the Liberal Government and those paid today, there is a very significant difference. All Canadians can appreciate it when they borrow to purchase durable goods such as a car, a house, etc. And this has surely and clearly an effect at the beginning of each month when Canadians make their mortgage payments.

There are also other tangible consequences of our good management. I now refer to the 705,000 new jobs created by Canadians and not by the Government. The Government has offered favourable conditions to Canadian entrepreneurs and businessmen, encouraging them to invest in this country. This has an entirely different effect than that of the infamous Canada Work programs under which the Liberal Government created jobs lasting four months and then the people would be back on become unemployment for eight months. As opposed to that, we got organized, and our message was heard, especially by small businesses because 70 percent of those 705,000 new jobs that were created are due to small and medium size businesses. And that, Madam Speaker, we achieved despite the slump in the international price of oil. That oil price slump created many problems in Western Canada, and despite a very significant level of job losses in the oil industry and oil and gas exploration, we still created 705,000 jobs. And that job creation was also achieved despite the very sharp decline in the prices of farm commodities. That has created many problems for our farmers, but despite all that we succeeded in creating many new jobs. And those 705,000 new jobs were also created despite an increasingly protectionnist mood in the United States against some of our exports.

All of that, Madam Speaker, clearly was favourably reflected in terms of the level of economic recovery in Canada. And we are going to pursue along that road, we will pursue deregulation, and we also will pursue privatization of some corporations. Let us remember how much de Havilland and Canadair have cost Canadians. Billions of dollars were sunk, and the Liberals even passed special legislation to write off Canadair liabilities billions of dollars that were later transferred to the Canadian Government deficit.

We are going to keep on improving legislation, and we are not going to put forward legislation that solely reflects the interests of marginal people in this country. Our legislation, our positions will increasingly be aimed at the total Canadian population, because the total Canadian population pay the bill when we legislate in some areas. So we will take that total population into account.

We will keep on modernizing our financial services. We made possible, actually we brought barriers down, we opened the doors between the various financial institutions like brokerage firms, insurance companies, banks, so that you will now be able to obtain various financial services from a single business place. This is simply in tune with the new, modern ways of doing business, a kind of attuning Liberals did not feel to be pertinent. We have done it. And we did it while protecting for instance services offered by our insurance agents, our local insurance brokers who are still exclusive insurance retailers.

In addition to our goals of good management and deficit control, we will remain committed to two major national matters. I am referring to the matter of trade liberalization with the United States. I will also refer to the matter of tax reform. It is important for our Government to sign an agreement with the United States to ensure that our exporters, who over the past few years have developed a market worth $95 billion a year . . . It is important for us to keep this market and, with the Government's help, we are going to keep it through a definite agreement with our American neighbours, in spite of the negative attitude of both the Socialists and the Liberals.

Moreover, Madam Speaker, we are going to make a sustained effort to come up with a tax reform in an attempt to discourage some of them who seem partial to the American tax system from leaving Canada permanently to pursue their business in the United States which would be detrimental to our country. Therefore, we are going to make sure that our tax legislation will fit within the North America framework to prevent this brain drain. Through our tax proposals, we are going to encourage the ant rather than the cicada. You certainly know the fable, Madam Speaker. The cicada sings all summer long but comes winter and it is totally without resources. It decides to turn to its neighbour, the ant, which is more the thrifty type. So far, our tax system favoured for decades by the Liberals did not encourage the ant but the cicada. It did not encourage Canadians to invest, to use their savings to create new business ventures, because they had to pay too much tax on their savings. We, on the other hand, understand that the ant is more important than the cicada; consequently, we intend to give back to the ant the desire to get involved in business. We are going to amend our tax system accordingly.

Madam Speaker, we are also going to ensure, through our tax proposals, that Canadians pay significantly less income tax.

The Minister of Finance's message is directed also to Quebecers. We can say that Quebecers will enjoy an international banking centre, and those in Montreal East will witness the rebirth of the petrochemical industry. We know that the F-18 will be built in Montreal and that shipyards in Eastern Canada and Quebec will get a new start. There have been formal commitments of over $1 billion to Versatile Vickers shipyards, in Sorel, and my own shipyards in Lévis and Lauzon.

The day before yesterday, Madam Speaker, this Government also announced that the plant in Sainte-Thérèse—and I see that my colleague, the Minister for External Relations (Mrs. Landry) is here—would continue to employ 5,500 Quebecers in Quebec and that the same plant would also guarantee 5,400 jobs in Ontario. Many of these jobs are in the riding of the Leader of the NDP, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), who did not make the slightest gesture to co-operate with our Government on reaching an agreement with the union so that the Government of Quebec and our Government could each contribute $110 million. The Leader of the NDP did nothing at all, nor did he intervene when we made our proposals on the pharmaceutical industry.

And what about the position taken by the members who are supposed to comment on our budget? I am thinking of the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) who had nothing to say about the international banking centre. Madam Speaker, he knows what I am talking about. I am referring to an article that appeared in Le Devoir on January 30, 1987: "The banking centre project is unacceptable". That was the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides. And that from a Quebec Member and a former Minister of Finance in the Quebec Government! The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides did not take a very clear position either on the F-18 issue. And the same applies to his remarks on our trade with the United States. He ignores the position taken by his colleagues in the Quebec Government who are of the same political persuasion. He is at odds with the position taken by the President of the Liberal Party of Canada, Mr. Roberts, and we would have appreciated a more clear-cut position on his part in the matter of the Sainte-Thérèse plant.

Maybe that is why the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides has to force people to come and listen when he is a guest speaker. I would like to quote part of a letter that was sent to people in the riding of Saint-Jean by the Liberal Party of Canada. There was a complaint about the absence of elected officials and mayors. The letter goes on to say: "Considering that situation—the fact that they stayed away for two years—your presence or absence on May 1, 1987 at our supper will be noticed and noticeable". Elected officials are being forced to come and finance the Liberal Party, probably with the proceeds of municipal taxes.

And what about the party leader's comments on our Budget? He has no comments at all except for a few negative remarks. I think that before trying to comment sensibly on our Budget, he should first control his caucus. He should show he takes a clear stand on our negotiations with the Americans, on Canada's defence and on tax reform, which is a way of keeping capital and human resources here in Canada for the benefit of Canadians.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) may laugh at this, but I would like to listen to his response later today. When the Leader of the Liberal Party talks about the Budget he should tell us just how he would pay the $11.3 billion his day care program would cost. And how would he pay for his regional development distribution program? That I would like to know. I would also like to hear what he has to say about former Canadian Government Finance Minister Macdonald teaming up with Mr. Lougheed of Alberta to support the firm position of Canadian businessmen in favour of free trade.

Mr. Gauthier: Resign, incompetent!

Mr. Fontaine: We do not hear the Leader of the Liberal Party talk about that. How much are we going to have to pay for the guaranteed income scheme they proposed in caucus? We do not hear him talk about that.

He should talk about the finances of the Liberal Party of Canada before commenting on anything else. In conclusion, Madam Speaker, if I may I should like to say a few words about the socialists, for I have something for them as well even though few of them are in the House today. They ought to shed some light on their own sources of financing. Let them tell us why they continue to remain silent about the fact that they obtain their funds in a way which is probably questionable, illegal, from Canadian workers' pay deductions. Madam Speaker, I would refer to the July 1986 ruling of Ontario Supreme Court Justice Wise that it was against the law to draw funds from the union dues of Canadian workers who do not belong to a union.

I would like to hear their side of the story. I would also like them to comment on their new awareness, their new understanding of the Province of Quebec. In 1981 they ignored Quebec, they did not know our province is different, but now they are prostituting themselves in a way, Madam Speaker, by telling us that Quebec is not a province like the others.

My last words are about their convention where they had 43 delegates from Quebec, a province with 75 ridings. They did bring a lot of western Canadians east to Montreal, but for their own convention they were unable to attract as many delegates as there are ridings. So before they lecture us, Madam Speaker, I would like to hear their explanations about the fact that they represent Quebec as well.

What is their position on Labrador, Madam Speaker, on aircraft test flights? I see that my time is up. I conclude by sending a message to the Party leader: Let him explain how come a socialist can draw a salary of $101,700, be driven around by a chauffeur, and still remain a socialist? That is food for thought.

Mr. Gagliano: Madam Speaker, I have a question to put to my colleague. At the outset of his comments, he congratulated the Government for having collected $1.2 billion, thanks to its famous conjuring trick of which everyone is aware today since even financial experts are criticizing the Government for having manipulated the financial data in the budget.

Considering that my colleague has praised the Government, I am compelled to put to him the following question: Of course, everyone agrees that the Government is levying $1.2 billion from businesses. I should like also to point out to him that a building contractor in Quebec with 20 employees is also subject to that new measure which does not increase taxes nor reduce expenditures. However, during the financial year, the Government will be collecting $1.2 billion before March 31, 1988 and what will be the effect of such a measure in the next budget between April 1, 1988 and March 31, 1989 after being levied only once? Is it not a red herring? The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) had to collect $1.2 billion to reduce or at least give the impression of reducing his deficit under $30 billion, but what is the purpose of such manipulation which is not approved by accountants themselves?

Mr. Fontaine: Madam Speaker, I do not understand why the expert in small and medium size businesses of the Liberal Party, the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) cannot explain and understand how the Government without increasing taxes will collect $1.2 billion.

As you know, Madam Speaker, business people try more and more to accelerate the turnover of funds and to speed up the collection of accounts receivable. What is true for private enterprise is also true now for the Canadian Government. It is only sound management that Canadians be now asked for a timely and accelerated remittance of source deductions, because payroll deductions do not belong to businesses. From the moment the deductions take place, they belong to the employee, Madam Speaker, and all we proposed was to move to twice-monthly remittances, thus saving us some expenses and increasing our cash, our revenues by $1.2 billion.

Finally, I have this to say to the Hon. Member who just accused our Government of fiddling the accounts. I have already explained that there was no such thing, but I would like to remind him about the playing around of the Liberals when they wanted to conceal losses to the tune of billions of dollars that Canadair and de Havilland had accumulated. They passed a legislation that waived those losses which they included in Canada's consolidated deficit. That's tampering with the accounts. As well, I would like to refer my Liberal colleague to previous Auditor General's reports. Year after year, he pointed out that important and significant expenses were not accounted for, objecting to the fact that the Government would defer until later years the inclusion of theses expenses, and noting that liabilities did not show some well identified debts. Then, Madam Speaker, one could talk about manipulation.

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, I listened with great interest to what my colleague had to say. I am slightly worried that he should get so hot under the collar; this does not do his blood pressure any good, and as I manage to remain quite calm in this House, Madam Speaker, as you have surely noticed, you can understand my concern.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member opposite, on the same subject to which the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) referred when he asked him a question earlier, a very important question, which is normally the case, as you well know, when the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou gets on his feet, I would like to ask him the following question regarding payroll deductions which are then remitted to the Federal Government and which are now to be paid twice a month rather than once. The Hon. Member will recall that the Canadian Association of Municipalities had recently written a letter to the Minister of Finance, and had in fact met with the Minister some time before the Budget was tabled, at which time it had asked him to channel supplementary funding to municipalities to improve municipal infrastructures. What happened in fact, Madam Speaker, as you well know, given your objective and non-partisan stance, and as the Hon. Member opposite knows also, I am sure, what happened was that the Government brought in a Budget which took more money away from already impoverished municipalities which needed extra funding and had informed the Federal Government of their needs only a short time before. Can the Hon. Member explain why his Government has taken money away from municipalities rather than give them the money they had asked for?

Mr. Fontaine: Firstly, Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) would be well advised to get acquainted with the Canadian Constitution and understand it, because it does not provide for development between municipalities and the Governement of Canada. Such a matter is a provincial reponsibility. I know that the Liberal party to which my colleague belongs has limited knowledge of the Constitution. Indeed, it entirely forgot the existence of a Canadian province in 1981. The Liberals should have known better.

In conclusion, I will say that the $1.2 billion that the Government is collecting, Madam Speaker, is money which is being collected more rapidly to which it is entitled and which was kept by the companies that were making to the Government monthly remittances of less than $15,000 in salary deductions. They will now make their remittances twice monthly. Now this is a measure of fine management and I am quite proud of it in spite of the allegations made by my Liberal colleagues.

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, I would like first to remind the Hon. Member opposite, as he should know, that we had previously federal-provincial agreements in Canada, for the purpose indeed of helping municipalities. I know that, what with Conservative confrontation with provincial Governments, it is not very realistic to expect that now. But all the same, I would like to remind the Hon. Member opposite that it did happen.

Second, concerning his little comment at the end of his remarks about the Constitution, I feel it is totally unfair for the Hon. Member to criticize Conservative members who also supported the 1982 Constitutional resolution. I would think that if I were a Conservative Member in this House, I would be quite offended by the comments made by the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine), because a large majority of those Members indeed supported the Constitutional resolution. I would hope that his colleagues next to him would ask for immediate apologies.

Mr. Fontaine: Madam Speaker, when the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) refers to cooperation with cities and municipalities, I will point out that we are aware this is an area of provincial jurisdiction, and on this side we will not resort to measures and scams the way Liberals used to do in order to build all kinds of capital projects in the various cities and municipalities in Quebec through scam agencies with a view to protecting the interests of supporters, Liberal organizers. That happened right across Canada, and do not ask me to refer to that here, because I will also refer to the most partisan use you made of the Laprade Fund. I have no reluctance to answer you on that.

Mr. Gauthier: Have you forgotten Oerlikon, Gravel, Stevens?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. The period for questions and comments has now expired. Debate. The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap).

• (1430)

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to have an opportunity to take part in this Budget debate. The Tory Budget before us is a two-Canada Budget. It divides Canadians into two groups, the rich and the rest of us. As some of my colleagues in the New Democratic Party have already pointed out, this Budget does little or nothing to address the inequities between the different regions in Canada, the subject of a speech made by the Hon. Member from Labrador this morning. It does little or nothing to end the terrible cycle of unemployment and poverty that grips Atlantic Canada, British Columbia, parts of the Prairies, northern Ontario and parts of Quebec. That cycle of poverty and unemployment is not limited to the have-not regions of Canada but it is certainly more prevalent.

Even in Toronto, we see the trend between a two-Canada society, one Canada for the rich and one for the rest of us. It is nowhere more visible than in my riding of Spadina where the golden windows of a bank tower look over the houses and flats of working people and of the rooms of those who have no work.

There was no direct mention of poor people, or poverty in the Budget of the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), nor was there a mention of poor people or poverty in the Speech from the Throne. This Government clearly would like to pretend that poverty does not exist, or does not exist in Canada. I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that poverty does exist in Canada, even in Toronto, even in Spadina within sight of the bank tower with the golden windows. There used to be an old song about how the banks are made of marble. That has gone out of style. Now we have gold windowed bank towers in Toronto, so the song will have to be updated.

However, in our Toronto, the Toronto for the rest of us, not for the banks and the rich, 165 food banks are needed to serve more than 200,000 free meals every month to those who simply do not have enough money to feed themselves. In our Toronto, 21,000 of those who depend on the food banks for nourishment are children. Those food banks did four times as much business last year as the year before. We are heading the wrong way.

There are 70,000 families currently waiting for subsidized housing, waiting in overcrowded and substandard housing. In our Toronto people are living and sleeping in the streets, in alley-ways, in abandoned cars and, in the wintertime, perhaps over a grate that brings up some warm air from some heating duct in one of the buildings. Others sleep in boarded up buildings. Increasingly the people who are forced to do this include young people, children as young as 10 or 12 years.

It is true that the nominal unemployment rate is declining in Toronto. I suggest that the official unemployment rate is a poor indicator of poverty. It is even a poor indicator of unemployment. We cannot really kid ourselves that the unemployment rate officially at 5 per cent or 6 per cent covers the people who have given up looking for jobs because they are not there. We cannot kid ourselves that it covers the people who are working part-time because that is all they can get, when what they want, are willing to do and need is full-time work. The Social Planning Council of Metropolitan Toronto has estimated that the real unemployment rate is probably one-third larger than the nominal unemployment rate in Toronto and elsewhere. In our Toronto, the number of people on general welfare has gone up 48 per cent over the past four years. In January, there were more than 50,000 people in metro on welfare.

Furthermore, our Toronto is a city where most women work. In our Toronto most working women have children. There is a tremendous shortage of affordable day-care, something that was noticed lately by a parliamentary committee, and then quickly forgotten since it was decided that the matter could be dealt with in a very slight and superficial way. The working women of Toronto know that that is not going to work. It will not support life as it can and should be lived by the working people in this country.

One of the ironies to which I have referred about the life in Spadina is that besides many such working people at the bottom of the scale and others at the middle of the scale, Spadina also contains Bay Street. It is my honour and privilege to represent Bay Street, the bank towers, the insurance headquarters, the oil company headquarters and many other such interesting institutions.

Mr. Manly: Did they vote for you?

Mr. Heap: Those are the symbols of the other Canada. My colleague asks if they voted for me. The people who work in those bank towers do not live anywhere close. They live farther away among the elite. They vote for the elite somewhere else. I will add though that during municipal elections when they could vote for me I was elected four times as alderman in the ward and was never defeated.

This is the symbol of the other Canada, the symbol of Canada for the rich, the Canada that is so ably represented by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), by the Minister of Finance and by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner). This Budget serves the interests of the other Canada and ignores the needs of our Toronto. It did not deliver the programs which the working people of Spadina need. This Budget represented the needs of Bay Street. As a result of the Budget, for every $100 earned by a corporation the corporation will be paying $1 less in taxes than it did the year before. On the other hand, the working people in Toronto will each pay $2 more than last year in direct and indirect taxes on every $100 earned.

This Budget continues the regressive and unfair taxation measures that have marked this Government. The Hon. Minister of Finance increased taxes on the people who live in Spadina by an average of 13 per cent in this Budget. Combined with the increases in previous Budgets, the total tax increase borne by ordinary people comes to more than 50 per cent in the last two and a half years. The average family living in the shadow of the Toronto-Dominion Tower is being hit with a tax bill that is $1,300 higher than it was when the Government took office.

What about the companies with head offices in these bank towers on Bay Street? Who speaks for those companies? Of course, the Minister of Finance speaks for them. He used to work there and he speaks for them very ably. In this Budget, as in previous Budgets, he has reduced the share of taxes paid by Bay Street as compared to the share of taxes paid by the people who live in the rest of Spadina or in most of the rest of Canada.

The Government hopes to raise about $35 billion in new tax revenues by 1990. It intends to take almost all of that money out of the pockets of ordinary Canadians. It estimates new corporate tax revenues as making up only 1 per cent of that amount. Only 1 per cent of it will come from the wealthiest corporations in Canada. Is that fair? It is not. Is it good for the economy? We have been told to tighten our belts for another five, 10 or 20 years and that some day we will eat again. We should remember that it was consumer spending, not corporate spending, that brought us out of the last recession. The corporations were salting all their money away or spending it in other parts of the world. It was consumer spending that brought us out of the recession, and cutting back on the power of consumers to spend is not good for the economy.

My colleagues in the New Democratic Party have made recommendation after recommendation for ways the Budget could have been both fairer and more effective. The Budget could have seen that Bay Street carries at least as much of the tax burden as the people living in the shadows of those head offices. My colleagues in the New Democratic Party have advocated the reduction of the scale and importance of corporate tax expenditures. "Corporate tax expenditures" is an interesting term and refers to the money the Government spends on reducing a corporation's tax. In Toronto, we call them loopholes, give-aways, and ripoffs.

I would like to deal with one particular aspect of corporate tax expenditures. Last year, as the House may recall, the Hon. Minister of Finance was forced to revise his deficit forecasts. In the revision, about $1.2 billion of his shortfall was in corporate tax collections. That is to say, in a Budget that planned to reduce the tax burden on corporations, as compared to ordinary Canadians, he over-estimated the taxes corporations would pay. Last year, he over-estimated that figure by $1.2 billion.

How does the Minister of Finance, a smart businessman, make a $1.2 billion mistake? Last year the Hon. Minister said that it was because of unexpectedly low corporate profits. Had the Minister been somewhat more precise he would have said—as he said in the papers attached to the Budget papers which were not read by everyone—that the $1.2 billion error in 1986 was due to the unexpected application of something called a loss carry-forward.

What is a loss carry-forward? When a corporation has a loss or deduction that it cannot use in a given year for the purpose of reducing its tax, it can carry it forward and apply it to reduce its taxes in the following year. Working people are not allowed to do that. We cannot carry forward our losses in order to apply them where they would be more beneficial to us, but corporations, of course, can and they plan on it. The loss carry-forward means that the higher corporate profits are protected from taxes for many years to come.

If the Minister were to correct this problem, he would automatically find himself with a larger corporate revenue base for his taxes. Hence, he would have the ability to make the tax system fairer and to address some of the needs of the people who live in the shadow of Bay Street, whether that be in Spadina, Come-By-Chance or the Northwest Territories. If the Minister does not close up this and similar loopholes, then his promises of fairer taxes will ring as hollow in 1988 as they did in 1984.

It is hard to imagine anything less fair to the majority of Canadians than the present tax system. Already the majority of Canadian corporations pay no taxes. Some of them do not pay taxes because they are taking losses in the current year, and no one takes issue with that. However, many companies that do not pay taxes are profitable and do record positive net incomes on their balances sheets. Our NDP study of the tax system indicated that as many as half of all companies not paying taxes were profitable.

Some of these loopholes and tax expenditures might be justified if they provided efficient ways to create jobs, but they do not. Let me explain why this is so. First, if the House were to vote an appropriation of moneys as a grant for some purpose, there would be an elaborate accounting system that would give us a great deal of information on how effective the program would be. The Minister and the Auditor General would present reports to the House and perhaps the committee of the House studying the matter would look at how effective the grant would be. We might disagree but we would have the facts on which to base a reasonable argument. With these tax expenditures, all we have is estimates in advance. We have no report and we have no real way of knowing if a company that has taken advantage of an investment tax credit has in fact created new jobs or has just shuffled the old ones around and pocketed the difference. We have no way of keeping track.

Second, studies have been done on the link between corporate tax cuts and private-sector job creation. These studies show a very, very weak link between the two, if any at all. In 1985, a study done by the Department of Employment and Immigration showed that if personal incomes taxes were cut by $1 billion, five times as many jobs could be created than would be created if corporate income taxes were cut by the same amount. That study was done by this Government and it was ignored. The same study indicated that if government spending were to be increased by $1 billion, six times as many jobs would be created as would be created by cutting corporate taxes.

Did the Government do that? Of course not. Instead, it has effectively reduced the portion of the tax burden paid by corporations while increasing that which is paid by individuals. This continues the trend followed by the previous Government ever since 1950. In 1950, the amount of income tax contributed by individuals and the amount contributed by corporations was about equal. Now, the immensely wealthy corporations contribute only one-quarter of the amount that is contributed by individuals to income tax. The Government has pushed that process still farther in the wrong direction.

What do I advocate? What should the Government do? It has obviously missed many chances already. It has missed the chance to announce specific employment targets, milestones on the road toward a goal of full employment for all Canadians. It has missed the chance to announce programs aimed at providing quality day care where it is needed. In this Budget, it missed the opportunity to increase the stock of housing for the homeless. It has failed to address the needs of the homeless in Toronto and elsewhere.

The Hon. Minister of Finance has reserved for himself the right to correct some of the inequities in this Budget. We hope he will address the needs of the people who live in the shadow of Bay Street, whether their address is Spadina, Come-By-Chance, or the Northwest Territories. I call on the Minister to right some of the wrongs in the tax system as embodied in this Budget.

I particularly call on him to undertake the following steps. First, he should establish a detailed annual accounting of the cost and benefits of this type of tax expenditure so they can be evaluated on the same basis as other government expenditures.

Second, he should restore a fairer balance in the tax system between what individuals give and what is given by the corporations and then cancelled through tax giveaways. We should never again hear the horror stories of profitable corporations who escape all or most taxes year after year. We have that situation in Spadina. At least two banks in some years paid no tax, although they each made hundreds of millions of dollars in profit. The Government of the day had the gall to give them, by way of a law made for its friends, a tax credit.

Third, the Minister ought to consider a minimum income tax on profitable corporations. He knows that consumer spending has been the driving force in pulling us out of the recent recession. To continue raising taxes on ordinary Canadians threatens our ability to extend that recovery. It threatens to return us to the recession. Tax expenditures on large corporations, which do not have to account for how they spend that money, do not help.

I see you are indicating that my time is nearly finished, Madam Speaker. I want to briefly mention three more points which should be considered. First, with tax reform of the kind I have described we would increase disposable income and the needed consumer spending. Second, we would have more money to deal with the social programs cut back by the Government, as represented by the Save Our Summers demonstration yesterday noon. When we have done that we might find that we had a little money to start reducing the deficit. The important thing in all of this is to build toward one Canada. Instead of polarizing Canada between the rich and the rest, we could build a Canada with equity in opportunity and condition for the people in Spadina, in Come-By-Chance, the Northwest Territories, the Gaspé, indeed, in every part of Canada where there are poor people.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments.

Mr. Stackhouse: Madam Speaker, it has been very worth while to listen to the remarks of my hon. friend, particularly because I had the pleasure of living in his riding for 10 years. It was a Liberal riding through most of that time, but I think it has gotten better recently. One thing characteristic of the Hon. Member is his concern for those who can be described as the poor. It is a concern that I am sure all of us share. Where we will disagree is in the way we attempt to meet the problem he has identified.

I think it is very important to recognize that this Canada of ours is not divisible by two. It is a misrepresentation of the Canadian scene for the NDP to say it is divided between the rich and poor. In between those extremes there are so many people of varying degrees of affluence and accomplishment that it is simply distorting beyond all recognition the Canadian scene to speak as he did. Where we have to get together is on how to cope with the problem suffered by a too large minority of our fellow Canadians. I suggest that, as correct as many of the points that he made were, there are some things which need to be added to the record. In the brief time allowed me I want to do that.

First is the way in which the economic policies of this Government have added to the prosperity and increased the number of Canadians who have raised themselves up out of poverty through gaining employment and being able to provide for their families. Through their spending they contribute to the prosperity of others. That number has increased. That should be recognized for what it is. The most effective way of meeting the problem of poverty is meeting the problem of unemployment.

The second point I want to make concerns the way in which our social scene has been made a much more humane and helping scene because of the various pension reforms and other program improvements that have been part of this Parliament under the leadership of the Government.

The Hon. Member spoke about the inequities of the present tax system. In doing so he surely heralds the advent of the tax reform we will see in this Parliament. I certainly hope he will dedicate his support to that reform which we will hopefully see in this Parliament within this calendar year. I trust that reform will remove many of the inequities he has identified. More importantly, it will provide us with a tax system which will contribute to an increase in Canadian productivity.

One of the worst parts of our present tax system is the way it discourages the advance of productivity. That, unintentionally and indirectly, but nonetheless effectively, contributes to the poverty problem about which he is so concerned. The best way to deal with poverty is by improving the economy in a way in which more Canadians can have an active share. I think the forthcoming tax reform will give us that opportunity and I certainly appreciate the support of the Hon. Member.

Mr. Heap: Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his kind comments. I am aware that he lived in Spadina for some years. I am also aware that he did not choose to run for Parliament in Spadina.

Mr. Stackhouse: Aren't you lucky?

Mr. Heap: I am not worried in case he should decide he wants to do it.

Mr. Stackhouse: I have a better riding.

Mr. Heap: He likes the riding he is in better than Spadina. That is his choice. Perhaps he feels safer there.

In speaking about the poor he shows that he does not want to hear the facts I mentioned about the increase in Spadina, and other parts of Toronto, in the number of people who are forced to go to food banks for the day's food, including 21,000 children in Metropolitan Toronto. He did not refer to the families who are still waiting for subsidized housing. He did not refer to the social planning council's estimate of as much as 10,000 homeless people in Toronto. He talks, as do others on his side, about this jobs created figure. I will tell him that if he runs in Spadina he will have to face up to the fact that, notwithstanding all his statistics, there is a great deal of hunger and poverty in Toronto, including Spadina. People will ask him to answer for that.

He talked about the Government's record. He even had the comical nerve to mention pension reform. The pension reform his Government tried to implement was to reduce old age pensions. It was the NDP, with some help from the Liberals, that led the revolt of the senior citizens which forced the Hon. Member's Government to back down on that issue. He talked about tax reform. We have heard that talk since the election campaign of 1984 from the Hon. Member's Party. We have heard it promised every month since 1984. We have now had four Budgets with no tax reform of any benefit to poor people. According to the practice of the Hon. Member's Party tax reform means soak the poor and subsidize the rich. He claims that by doing that they will increase productivity.

As a factory worker for 18 years and a trade unionist, the productivity of Canadian working people is nothing of which I have any cause to be ashamed. With the equipment given them by the investors the Canadian workers have as good a record of productivity as almost any country in the world. To accuse Canadian workers of being unproductive and to claim that the unemployment and poverty which has been visited on some of them is a punishment for lack of productivity is false. We need not a whip to make the workers more productive, but a more rational division of the product of their labour. If the Hon. Member's Party is going to do that in its tax reform I will, of course, welcome it. However, I will also be very much astonished because it will be a 180 degree reversal of what it has been doing for the past two and a half years.

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the comrade for Spadina (Mr. Heap) refer to his tax philosophy. He speaks of tax fairness, tax justice as far as tax sources are concerned, etc.

I would like to ask him whether he considers it fair and just that the Socialist Party collect funds from compulsory salary deductions from workers who are not union members, and whether it is fair and just that the Socialist Party continue to ignore the judgment rendered in July, 1986 by Mr. Justice Wise of the Ontario Supreme Court. I would also like to add that his colleague from Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) already admitted that funding source. Finally, I would like to ask him whether it is fair that his Leader, the Leader of the Socialist Party refused to take a salary cut? He is still receiving $101,700. For a socialist to have a chauffeur and a limousine, we do not find that fair, Madam Speaker, and we would like to have explanations.

[English]

Mr. Heap: Madam Speaker, I am very glad to answer the Hon. Member's questions within the time available. With regard to Party contributions, as a trade unionist and factory worker, in non-union factories at first, I was not so much concerned about the small amounts which unions gave to the New Democratic Party as I was about the very large amounts given by the banks, oil companies, et cetera. To the best of my knowledge they did not get the permission of their shareholders to do that. They did not ask their shareholders whether they wanted to give $50,000 to the Conservative Party and to the Liberal Party so they would have a hold on whichever Party formed the Government. To the best of my knowledge that was done without any of the control which is exercised by the members of my union, the Canadian Paperworkers Union, and other unions in Canada which can remove officers with a year's notice if the officers are mis-spending money. Therefore, I believe that the trade unionist money which goes into election campaigns is under much better democratic control by the people who earn the money than are the huge donations made by the banks, insurance companies, oil companies and so on.

With regard to the court decision, I am going to wait to hear what the Supreme Court says. I remember a court decision 20 years ago which was against a union. The Royal York fired its employees who were on legal strike and cancelled their pensions. A judge said that according to the Master and Servants Act of 1513 the company had the right to do that. I remember that some powerful businessmen were horrified at that decision. There were some very left-wing trade unionists, further left than I, who rejoiced at that decision because it would have destroyed with one blow the whole system of labour relations built up in this country. Therefore, I will wait to see if the Supreme Court makes a wiser decision than did Judge Wise.

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to have an opportunity to take part in the debate on the Budget. Since the Budget came down in February I have received feedback from my constituents and heard comments from across the country on it. I am very pleased with the positive response on this Budget which was consistent with the direction of the Government and offered the people of Canada some real opportunities.

I do not want to spend all of my time today reviewing the facts and figures of the Budget because I want to discuss particularly its implications for my home Province of British Columbia. However, I will just remind my colleagues of the outline of the Budget. The most important thing about it is that it shows that this Government has control of the financial management of the country as has no government for a long period. That is what voters asked us to do when they sent us to office in 1984, and that is what we are doing. We all know of the situation we inherited. Spending had got out of control. It is like taking a huge ocean liner and trying to turn it around in the middle of the ocean. It takes some time to do it, but we have turned it around and are now going in the right direction.

To cite a few statistics in support of that, when we came into office in 1984, there was a deficit of $38.3 billion. In the past years we have been able to bring that down by 24 per cent. The projected deficit in the 1987 Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is only $29.3 billion. We would like it to go down even more and I know we will accomplish that with the fiscal management which the Government has undertaken. The real costs of Government are declining for the first time since the Korean War. There has been a decline in the program expenditures of the Government. It is in the decline of program expenditures that we have been able to make the most rapid gains, and that accounts for 69 per cent of the decline in the deficit. As a result of the tremendous efforts by my colleagues in the Cabinet it is projected that by 1990-91 there will be a reduction of 15,000 positions in the Public Service.

What have been the results of this sound program of fiscal management? Some people expressed the fear that by taking what some may regard as relatively harsh measures to get spending under control we might see some adverse impacts. However, the exact opposite has occurred. Since September, 1984, over 700,000 new jobs have been created, by far the majority being full-time jobs. That is what Canadians want and need. Of great importance, too, has been the decline in interest rates which affect all of us when we have to borrow money to buy a home, a car, or invest in a business. A mere four or five years ago interest rates were at 22 per cent and people were really frightened. They could not realistically take a risk in buying a home or investing in a business. Now that interest rates are below 10 per cent and long-term mortgage rates are below 10 per cent, there has been a tremendous turnaround and, for the first time, young Canadians can look forward to the opportunity of owning their own home. That is probably the dream of every Canadian and we want to make sure that it comes true.

Low interest rates have meant increased investment in business because people are willing to take risks. New investment has come to Canada. Even with low interest rates, Canada is still very attractive because of the stability of the economy and the good management of the Government. This was recently verified in the Kanao Report by the group of Japanese businessmen who visited Canada late last year. They went throughout British Columbia and the country to meet with government officials and business people. Their report stated that they had found a new Canada which had a new spirit of entrepreneurship and productivity. They found diversification in industry and a stable investment climate. In fact, they recommended to their peers that Canada is a good place to invest. We look forward to the results of that investment in the years to come.

Another indicator of growth is the forestry industry, an industry that is so important in my home province. The estimates for 1987 are that capital investment in Canada's forestry sector will rise by 23.5 per cent. That is a spectacular increase despite the cries of potential doom and gloom we heard from the opposition Parties when we unfortunately had to deal with the 15 per cent export charge recently. Despite that export charge, the forestry business is booming, particularly in pulp and paper. British Columbia alone will benefit from 64 per cent of this projected increase in investment. New investments in the province's forestry sector is expected to reach $144.8 million, which will mean many more jobs.

There are projects planned for British Columbia that will have a tremendous impact on B.C. communities. Those are some of the results of this Government's efforts.

We should recognize how the efforts of the Minister of Finance and his ability to get financial issues and management on track allow other cabinet colleagues to support him with their initiatives.

Tax reform that will come forward later this spring is another initiative in the Budget about which we have heard a great deal. I look forward to that proposal and look forward to discussing its details when it is brought forward. We know that the Minister of Finance has already stated in his Budget Speech that we will be dealing with changes in personal, corporate and federal sales tax and that the emphasis will be on reducing the personal tax rate, reducing tax preferences and broadening the tax base. This will probably mean that lower income Canadians in particular will pay less tax, a policy which is indeed consistent with the other initiatives the Government took in its 1986 Budget, such as the $50 sales tax credit and the $300 child tax credit. We are focusing these efforts particularly on that group of people in our society who are facing greater difficulty because we want to help them. Our Government cares about all Canadians.

What has been the impact of this Budget and the Government's measures on British Columbia in the last two years? How do we ensure that British Columbia develops the potential that I believe it has in its people and resources? First, because we sometimes tend to overlook them and consider the negative, let us consider some of the positive aspects of what has happened in British Columbia in the last couple of years. Since September, 1984, 61,000 jobs have been created in British Columbia which is twice as many jobs in the 29 months since the Government took office than in the four years of the previous Liberal Government. Jobs have been created at a monthly rate of 2,103.

The unemployment rate has fallen from 15.1 per cent at the time of the election in 1984 to 13.3 per cent now. That is still to high and I hope to have an opportunity to expand on our plans to reduce the unemployment rate. Total unemployment, however, has fallen by 21,000 in the past two and a half years and we must ensure that it continues to drop.

There are other economic factors that are important to consider. For example, retail sales have risen by 6.8 per cent in the past year, and 18.7 per cent in the last two and a half years.

Urban housing is an important indicator in the economy and housing starts in 1986 were at their highest level since 1981. Construction commenced on 18,841 units, which means that those families, many of whom would be first-time buyers, can have a home of their own.

In December, 1986, manufacturing shipments were up 8.6 per cent from the same period in 1985, which is a tremendous increase. They are up 13 per cent since September, 1984.

The number of bankruptcies in the first month of 1987 was down 14.4 per cent compared to the same period in 1986. New incorporations are an indicator of small business activity which is a very important sector of our economy. They were up 11 per cent in 1985, which means 1,529 new businesses were started in British Columbia. At the same time, inflation was held at 2.8 per cent in Vancouver.

There are a number of other factors, but one of particular interest is tourism. International tourism sky-rocketed in 1986 and was up 80.6 per cent. We know that much of that is due to the spectacular success of Expo 86. However, it also means that the millions of visitors who came to Vancouver and British Columbia, and were exposed to the tremendous attributes and attractions of that city and province, will want to come back. We welcome them and their friends and family because beautiful British Columbia is the place to visit on a vacation. I am sure you will agree, Madam Speaker.

There are a number of initiatives which the Budget itself did not address specifically but which are being addressed by Ministers as they review their portfolios. Since the Budget in February we have been particularly pleased in British Columbia and my constituency of Capilano by the announcement that the new Polar 8 ice-breaker will be built at Versatile Pacific in North Vancouver at an estimated cost of $320 million. That is a major boom for the shipbuilding industry on the West Coast and shows the Government's commitment to that industry. It will mean jobs for 1,000 people and a certain future for the men and women and their families who work in that industry. They know they will be able to stay in British Columbia where they can enjoy the opportunities to work in their particular field. A long-term four to five-year contract will provide the shipbuilding industry with an opportunity to restructure and pursue other contracts, as there are interesting opportunities developing in the cruise ship business and other areas of shipbuilding which I know British Columbia will seek as well as future government contracts.

There was an even more recent announcement by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) with respect to an estimated $350 million program in the energy field which will also help British Columbia. Up until now the focus has been on Alberta. Let us not forget that there is a significant energy business in British Columbia, in particular in northern British Columbia around Fort St. John. This will mean a significant increase in exploration activity with drill rigs moving back in and with men and women working in that field. It will be necessary for suppliers to support the industry. These communities will have a chance to participate in greater economic activity than has been the case over the last year.

Those are just two announcements which the Government has made which are of significant importance to the West. Let us not forget the major initiative undertaken by the Government in its signing of the Economic Regional Development Agreement about a year and a half ago. This agreement covers an important area and will infuse over $300 million into the forestry sector to assist in reforestation and silviculture. It is an agreement jointly shared by the federal and provincial Governments. It will also have an impact for the province in terms of tourism, agriculture, science and technology and small business. We are already seeing an impact on many of the activities that are associated with the ERDA. I will mention a few of them in a moment.

When we consider the economic structure of British Columbia we recognize that, traditionally, it has been resource-based. Forestry has been the main industry, and for many years mining was rated second in terms of industrial capacity. Agriculture has been important, as has the oil and gas industry to some extent. We are all aware of international trends which have caused a great many difficulties for all of these industries, especially in terms of the pricing of commodities in the mining field, and other problems we face in the forestry industry. In British Columbia we recognize that what we have to do is to build on the strengths that we have in these resource industries and find new ways to add value to those basic resources and to use new technologies in order to become more productive. We must have adaptive technologies which will help us add value to those basic resources. Some of this has been going on over the past couple of years. An interesting example which comes to mind is with respect to the forest industry which has implemented the use of computerized equipment. At a computerized sawmill of MacMillan Bloedel a computer can be given the specifications of a log, and in conjunction with another system which feeds in the order requirements, the equipment can automatically cut the log to meet the specifications of a particular order, whether it be for Japan, Germany or some other country. This has meant a tremendous increase in productivity and being able to meet market demands in a dynamic way. It is this type of technology that is vitally important to British Columbia.

We are also looking to other products. We have an interesting example in Prince George where a recent investment was made in a chopstick factory. Just a couple of years ago who would have thought that we could make chopsticks in British Columbia to export to Japan? However, we have the wood which, up until now, has been mostly waste wood, wood that was not being used. Through imagination and innovation some people got involved in making this investment in Prince George. They have produced a whole new industry with a number of people working in it.

What we need to do in British Columbia is to find markets. British Columbia is particularly reliant on trade. We are far from the markets of eastern Canada and the costs of transportation are high. The geography of the province makes it expensive to transport products even within the province. Thus, traditionally, we have looked to the U.S. for our markets and more recently to the Pacific Rim. This is why the new trade arrangements with the U.S. are vitally important to British Columbia. Opportunities which would open up new markets in the Pacific Rim are equally important. These are the areas in which we need innovation and support from Government.

I believe it is not necessary to throw masses of money at a particular problem but that it is sometimes the identification of the obstacles to growth which are important. In some cases these obstacles have been in the form of protectionist measures or other problems which we have encountered in the United States as a result of countervailing practices. In the Pacific Rim we have been faced with similar sorts of restrictions, some of which are now being opened up, particularly for the forest industry. We are required to look not only at the products but able to match our ability with the markets.

We have to do more than say that we have a product and we want to sell it to a particular country, such as Japan or China. We have to get out and find out what it is that the people of China or Japan want and how we can develop or adapt our existing products to their markets. This is where I know the department of trade has been making great efforts to bring together our manufacturers and innovators with potential markets in this field.

I understand my time is up, Madam Speaker. There are so many other ideas which my colleagues and I have for the development of the economy of British Columbia which I look forward to sharing with Hon. Members as the weeks and months progress.

Mr. Manly: Madam Speaker, in listening to the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins), our Dr. Pangloss, I could hardly recognize that we come from the same province. The Hon. Member talked about job creation. I would like the Hon. Member to comment on the fact that in February the unemployment rate in Vancouver was 14.3 per cent, the highest unemployment rate in any metropolitan centre in Canada. The Hon. Member also talked about tax reform. Could she comment on the fact that between 1984 and 1991 projected Tory tax increases will amount to $20 billion in sales tax, $15 billion in personal tax and $128 million in corporate tax? In other words, corporate tax increases account for less than 1 per cent of the increased tax load that the Tory Government has loaded on individual Canadians. Does the Hon. Member think that is fair?

Will the Hon. Member comment on rumours that there will not be any exemptions on the business transfer tax which could be introduced as part of tax reform? This means that the business transfer tax would be added on to such basic items as food, children's clothing, housing or whatever. Does the Hon. Member believe that that business transfer tax should have exemptions or not? I am interested to hear the Hon. Member's comments.

Mrs. Collins: Madam Speaker, first, with respect to the proposed business transfer tax, I really do not want to speculate on it. I think it is inappropriate at this time to comment on it since we do not know what the form of it will be or on what products or services it will be levied. It is appropriate to wait until the plans come forward. There will obviously be a review process to determine that at that time.

The Hon. Member mentioned the unemployment rate in Vancouver. This is certainly something which disturbs me very much, as I know it disturbs the Hon. Member and other of my colleagues, since I know the rate in Vancouver is higher than it is in the province as a whole, which is perhaps rather an unusual situation. While not underestimating the difficulties this causes, I remind my colleague that some of the figures which are now showing up are as a result of people who worked at Expo last year. I know that in my own riding this has occurred. These people worked for six months at Expo. After that they were eligible for unemployment insurance which they are now collecting. They now show up on the records as unemployed. Not all of these people would have worked before Expo. They worked only during that six month period.

There may be a bit of a glitch there, and we may see that fall off on its own. Nevertheless, the unemployment figures for British Columbia are of concern to all of us, and that is why we think it is important, as the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) has indicated, that we move forward with the program of western diversification. That is why I and my colleagues from the British Columbia caucus have been spending a great deal of time working on this, to identify what we feel are the appropriate measures and the appropriate directions for this Government to take. We have to determine how we can be most helpful. We do not want to waste money. We want to use our resources most effectively to encourage job creation and meaningful activity—and long range jobs, not short-term make-work jobs. I personally do not agree with make-work projects.

I am very pleased with the Canadian Jobs Strategy Program, and particularly as it has been applied in my own Province of British Columbia. As I am sure my colleague is aware, during 1985-86, the Province of British Columbia received just under $1.7 billion under CEIC programs, an amount well over its percentage share of all CEIC programs.

Under the Canadian Jobs Strategy Program, I have found of particular value the Job Entry-Re-entry Program. It is a program that is very important in terms of getting those who are now unemployed back into the job market, and particularly so for young people who have quit school before attaining any marketable skills. Having the benefit of a nine month period in the job entry program in which to develop skills has resulted in an 80 to 90 per cent success rate in job placements in some of the projects in my riding for those young people. Similarly, many women have benefited from the Re-entry Option Program, a program that has allowed them to develop the skills and confidence to re-enter the workforce.

It seems to me that if these programs were expanded and extended, many of these people could develop the skills necessary for even more highly paid jobs, instead of having to start at the bottom.

With those kinds of initiatives, along with other initiatives which I believe this Government will be bringing forward, we will see changes for the better in the unemployment rate over the next two years.

I am sure that my colleague opposite has ideas on how we can reduce unemployment. We would welcome his ideas on what we could be doing to assist in alleviating unemployment on Vancouver Island, an economy which is based on tourism and forestry. There may be other directions in which the economy of Vancouver Island can go, one of which might be to focus on the new information technologies, the new knowledge-based industries. These industries have a tremendous application for British Columbia.

The president of one of the major technology companies in British Columbia was recently asked why he was headquartered in Vancouver; why it was that he was not headquartered where the big markets are in eastern Canada. And his response was: "Because my employees want to live in Vancouver. With this kind of company, given the new communications technologies, it doesn't matter where the business is physically located. We can be where we want to be".

It is that kind of industrial activity, supported by strong post-secondary educational opportunities, that I think will be vital for British Columbia.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the intervention of the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins). I know that she pays very close attention to polls. Indeed, it has been alleged that, in embarking on any course of action in this House, she is governed largely by polls.

I heard her indicate, at the very beginning of her speech, that the latest Budget has been well received in Canada.

Considering what my colleague said earlier about the Panglossian nature of her intervention and her love of polls, we might even regard her as being "pollyannish".

I am driven to ask a question about her response to the facts, which the polls have ascertained, with respect to the reception accorded the Progressive Conservative Budget. I have here the results of a poll reported in, among other places, The Ottawa Citizen of March 26, 1987. The headline is: "Most Canadians found latest budget forgettable". It wasn't well received, by any means. The opening paragraph of the article reads:

> The federal government's latest "breathing space" budget in fact seems to have left more Canadians yawning.

It goes on to say:

> Of those aware of the latest budget, most (58 per cent) said it will not strengthen the economy, while only 18 per cent (said) it will help Canada's economic picture.

My question for the Hon. Member is: Knowing how much she respects polls, does she agree with this poll?

Mrs. Collins: I know there is the opportunity in this House many times to take cheap shots at Members across the floor, but I think that that is a particularly cheap one. You have obviously misinterpreted my position—

An Hon. Member: Shame on you!

Mrs. Collins: —misinterpreted my position and my philosophy, which is not one based on polls but one based on consulting my constituents. I try to ensure that I, as their representative, understand and reflect their views.

While my colleague may view the Budget one way, I can only say that, in my area of the country, having discussed it with a great cross-section of people, it has been well received.

The people asked this Government to get the country's financial affairs in order, to bring down the deficit, and to manage the economy in a conservative and thoughtful manner.

An Hon. Member: Conservative!

Mrs. Collins: That is what this Government is doing, and it is the first time in decades that it has been done. This Government is looking after the pennies, after the dollars. It is looking after the taxpayers' dollars. That is what this Government has done for the last two and a half years, and that is what this Government will continue to do for the next decade, and the next decade, and the next decade after that.

[Translation]

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on the Conservative Budget. Everybody knows the Conservative Government is always bragging about reducing the deficit. In the twenty minutes I am allowed, I will try to show there has been no reduction in the deficit at all.

Madam Speaker, between 1984-85 and 1987-88—three fiscal years—total Government revenue from income taxe increased by $22.3 billion. This means that during the period, the Government took $22.3 billion out of the taxpayers' pockets and now at the end of fiscal 1986-87, everybody agrees we will have a deficit of $32 billion, the same deficit we had during the fiscal year ending March 31, 1984, which was the last full fiscal year under a Liberal Government.

So after collecting $22.3 billion in taxes from Canadians, we still have the same deficit. That is the good management this Conservative Government promised us and promised Canadians in the fall of 1984.

Mr. Boudria: It took them three years to do what the Liberals did in one.

Mr. Gagliano: And now, after three years, the results are there. The figures are there. We can prove that after three years, despite the fact they collected $22.3 billion, the deficit is still at the same level it was three years ago.

Of course, Conservative Members are going to say: That is what the Liberals say. Madam Speaker, it was our initial reaction when the Budget was brought down, but this week, we read comments by the C.D. Howe Institute which is after all an authority on economic affairs, and it had the following to say about the deficit, and I quote:

• (1540)

The year over year reductions are sizeable. They are not, however, as sizeable as they appear at first glance. The $2.42 billion reduction in fiscal year 1986-87 was made possible only by the last minute sale of Teleglobe Canada for $450 million and by the delaying of $700 million in special assistance to grain farmers until after March 31, 1987.

The Government reserved its neatest gimmick for fiscal year 1987-88, however, when it will gain $1.2 billion in additional revenue by accelerating remittance of source deductions of income tax, pension, and unemployment insurance premiums.

In the face of the increasing difficulty of maintaining the appearance of a downward deficit track, the Government has resorted to asset sales and fiscal tricks to fulfil its principle. This is not the way to reduce the underlying imbalance between spending and revenue. It is merely a way to finance it. The ongoing budget deficit appears to be stuck at over $30 billion.

Madam Speaker, this clearly and accurately says the Minister of Finance manipulates the tax data of his Government so that every year, he can come before the House and tell us that the deficit will again be less than $30 billion. Last year he did the same thing. And now the deficit is $32 billion. This year, he did the same, and considering the measures he took to bring the deficit down to less than $30 billion, the experts were already saying one month later that he would not achieve that objective and that the deficit would again be over $30 billion.

Madam Speaker, we all know that $22.3 billion were taken out of taxpayers' pockets through personal income tax and also quite a bit through federal sales tax. I should like to recall the remarks the Minister of Finance made about the federal sales tax in his Budget presentation, and I quote: "The federal sales tax is unfair and inefficient. It is a silent killer of jobs. It levies a higher tax—on average, one-third higher—on domestic manufacturers than on competing imports. This leads to plant closures and lost Canadian jobs. The base is narrow and similar goods can have very different burdens of tax. The sales tax is coming under increasing pressure and reform is increasingly urgent."

Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance keeps repeating that the federal sales tax must be changed, that it is an unfair tax, yet again this year he did not bat an eye when he raised the federal sales tax on gas, and he also extended the federal sales tax to ice cream, candies and other snack foods which are bought and eaten by kids mostly. Then he raised the air transportation tax. Well now, if indeed the Minister is convinced that the federal sales tax is unfair and that a tax reform is urgent, why has he been keeping us waiting for a year and a half—for almost two years now—before delivering the goods, Madam Speaker?

This afternoon we listened to the two Conservative Members who spoke in this Budget debate, and they said over and over again that time has come for tax reform, that when we do get this tax reform they will reduce personal income tax, lower the federal sales tax, and so on. But we have been waiting for two and a half years, so what prevents the Conservative Government from going ahead with the tax reform, and in the meantime we would not be debating this proposed tax reform and Canadians would get some tax relief? Madam Speaker, taxes have been going up at a rate unprecedented since World War II.

I should like also to refer to a poll taken by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business among its members. This pool revealed two things. First, that businessmen for their tax burden is their main problem, the second being, red tape, all many forms they have to fill out every year for the avowed purpose of providing the Government with tax data. In order to get $1.2 billion from businesses, the Government is asking them to send those forms every fortnight instead of every month. By this single action, Madam Speaker, the Government doubles their paperwork businessmen just to meet the request of the Minister of Finance, because they are not required only to issue a cheque every two weeks, but to balance their books, fill out forms and send them to the Government. Since coming to power, the Government has not only imposed a greater tax burden, but increased significantly the amount of red tape, while advocating the opposite.

Madam Speaker, this Government is committed to a tax reform. When are we going to get it? I am wondering, because each time the Minister of Finance makes a speech, he keeps postponing its presentation. Let us say that we will get it eventually. He has promised a White Paper to inform the Canadian people of the Government's intention. We hope to get this document as soon as possible, so that we can comment on it and hear what Canadians from different walks of life have to say about the proposed new tax system.

There have been tax reforms in Canada before. Unfortunately, once the tax reform, was in place, there was twice as much red tape. If, therefore, the Minister of Finance wants to succeed in his endeavour, he must be clear and definite in his intention not to increase taxes. Such a tax reform should not be an excuse for the Government to get additional funds from Canadian taxpayers. They are already overtaxed. The purpose of this reform is to implement in Canada a simple, adequate and equitable tax system for all Canadians, no matter their social status. It is very important, therefore, that the Minister of Finance, when tabling his White Paper on tax reform, should take into account the need for fairness, so that the tax reform may be accepted and successful in Canada. Otherwise, this will be an exercise is futility. There will be new tax increases, nobody will be able to understand the income tax legislation, and the economic development will stall because of our foolish habit of always increasing the tax burden.

Of course, we are not debating the tax reform this afternoon because we do not know yet what are the intentions of the Government nor the directions in which they intend to lead us in that regard. We are only hypothesizing about what the various ministers, and particularly the Finance Minister, indicated in their speeches across the country or during the Budget debate. So, we are anxious to learn what are the intentions of the Government and then, of course, as the Finance Minister requested, we will reply positively and suggest solutions to make our tax system fair and equitable.

Let us go back to the Budget, Madam Speaker. We have a very important tourist industry in Canada. Yet, once more in this Budget, we increase the tax on gas. I would like to quote a few paragraphs of a paper the Canadian Automobile Association issued in March 1987.

• (1550)

The 2.5 million member, not-for- profit Canadian Automobile Association takes this opportunity to present the views of its members on the fiscal policy affecting motorists and the travelling public as amended by the February, 1987 Budget presented by the federal Finance Minister, Michael Wilson.

Motorists are struggling with excessive taxes. Judging from the hundreds of thousands of submissions made last year to the Prime Minister, the Finance Minister and Members of Parliament, our 2.5 million members are extremely concerned and frustrated. They feel they have been overtaxed by more than $10 billion from 1981 to 1985 following the introduction of the National Energy Program and its various forms of taxes and special charges. Motorists are upset further with the current fixed rate of 5.5 cents per litre of excise tax which, compared to 1.5 cents per litre in August, 1985, represents more than a 250 per cent increase.

As we can conclude from that document, Madam Speaker, Canadians are frustrated, exasperated, fed up with tax increases.

Madame Speaker, we all drive cars. Therefore, a 1 per cent increase in the sales tax on gas affects each and every one of us. We have certainly reached the point where enough is enough and we must find a way of reducing the tax burden.

My Conservative colleagues, Madam Speaker, praise the Budget as a good one. I would like to quote only a few newspaper reports that were published immediately following the Budget. On February 19, 1987, La Presse titled: "A $1.2 billion sleight of hand".

New bookkeeping makes govt. look $1.2B better.

That is a headline from The Ottawa Citizen.

[Translation]

"The Conservatives make individuals pay." "Ottawa takes less from businesses and more from individuals.", La Presse of February 19. "Business sectors are disappointed.", the same paper on the same day.

[English]

Quebec may sue over transfer payments—

That is the headline in The Gazette, Montreal.

• (1600)

"Great disappointment", Le Droit, February 1987.

Madam Speaker, these were the headlines of the major papers the day after the Budget, that empty document which used means I would call not exactly Kosher to bring the deficit below $30 billion. That is what the Conservative Government has done, a Government which has kept talking endlessly about fiscal responsibility. That is what the Minister of Finance has done, when he should be giving leadership to this country. When you introduce a budget, or financial statements, you must stick to the facts and not try to manipulate the figures to make people believe that the deficit is lower than it really is. That is the Budget, Madam Speaker, the third Conservative Budget. They want us to believe that they reduced the deficit, but it is still the same.

Madam Speaker, I would like to quote a few figures which show the impact of this Budget on Canadian families. Let us take, for example, a married couple with two children, where both parents work. In 1986, before the Budget, they had to pay $235 more in taxes. Before the February 1987 Budget they had a $400 increase, and now, after the 1987 Budget, they will have to pay $470 more.

Madam Speaker, here is another example, a married couple with two children, where both parents work, with an income of $30,000; in 1986 they paid $500, they had an increase of $590. In 1987, but before the February 1987 Budget, an increase of $875, and after the Budget it was $966 more. Madam Speaker, I say in 1987, before the February 1987 Budget, because we now have, each year, automatic increases, thanks to the May 1985 Conservative Budget which created a 3 per cent tax increase. We could go on and look at all these increases. But it is enough to look at families, Madam Speaker, because that is were the main difference is, that is were we see the gap between rich and poor, a gap widened by the Government. A family with a $100,000 income had an increase, in 1986, of only $680. Their increase before the 1987 Budget was $1,145 and after the Budget, $2,285. It is obvious, Madam Speaker, that over the past three years the Conservative Government has not reduced the deficit. On March 31, 1984, the deficit stood at $33 billion. On March 31 1987, it still stood at $33 billion. Yet, at the same time, the Government collected more than $20 billion in income tax from individuals.

This situation resulted in a widening of the gap between rich and poor. The poorer you are, the more income tax you pay; the richer you are, the less tax you pay.

Therefore, Madam Speaker, this social injustice is inacceptable to Canadians. The polls do prove it. I do hope that the fiscal reform will correct this situation.

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): Madam Speaker, I have listened carefully to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—

Mr. Gagliano: —d'Anjou!

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): —d'Anjou—I stand corrected—and I might like to make a few comments and ask him a question.

Firstly, my colleague mentionned the price of gasoline and the fact that the Canadian people had to pay a one cent increase. I want to remind him that, before the Conservatives come to power in 1984, the Liberals had introduced the National Energy Program. The Member did mention it in his speech a while ago, and I wish to remind him that in the period from 1981 to 1985, his party was in power, and it is his government that introduced a national energy program, which became our responsibility upon being elected. It was abolished. It was abolished because it was 105 per cent of the international price.

When we were elected, Madam Speaker, in 1984, gas was 60 cents a litre. Today, two and half years later, it is 52 cents. So we are still 8 cents lower. When the Liberals got elected in 1979-80, they promised they would fight us on the 18 cents increase. There was an increase of over a dollar a gallon under their government.

Madam Speaker, in all honesty, if the member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou is speaking for Canadian taxpayers, he should recognize that the father of the federal deficit is his own leader sitting there up front, that the true father of the federal deficit, the one who got Canadians into serious economic trouble, is his own leader. Indeed, Madam Speaker, when the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou extols the virtues of his party concerning poverty and concerning the gap between the rich and the poor, I will simply remind him that it was his government that allowed the highest salaried Canadians to get by without paying any taxes because of their tax shelters. Our government, our Minister of Finance, took responsible action in establishing a minimum tax, carving up tax shelters and seeing to it that the richest Canadians would have to pay taxes.

Madam Speaker, I would like to ask him whether it is our present Minister of Finance or the then Minister of Finance who is now his leader, that showed a greater sense of morality when our Minister of Finance set up a fair tax system and took steps to protect the poor against the rich while his own leader, the leader of the Opposition, as Minister of Finance, was doing everything he could to maintain the tax shelters benefiting the rich rather than the poor.

Mr. Gagliano: Madam Speaker, I shall be pleased to reply to the comments made by my Conservative colleague. Let us see first of all the energy issue. As for the price of gas which has gone from 60 cents a litre down to 49 cents, I certainly hope the members opposite will not try to take the credit for the oil price decrease because it is due to the international market.

Mr. Blais: It is due to the energy policy.

Mr. Gagliano: You say it is due to the energy policy. We will get back to the energy policy later on, but allow me to tell you that if the gas price has gone down in last few years, it is not because of the Conservatives, but mostly because the international price for crude oil has gone down. So do not take Canadian people . . . That's it, you look like manipulators; you are always taking credit for everything even though you don't deserve it. If the price of oil has decreased, it is not because of the Conservative policies, but indeed because of the international price for crude oil.

Now let us get back to the energy policy. I would like to ask my colleague if he knows how many Canadians, controlled the industry when the Liberal government introduced the National Energy Program. Almost none. Today, more than 50 per cent of the Canadian energy industry is controlled by Canadians, not by foreigners. Look at the facts. Do not focus only on the negative side of the NEP. Consider the positive side also, and ask Canadians whether, in pre-NEP days, the energy industry in Canada was not indeed totally controlled by Americans. Ask that to Canadians, and see what they will say.

Now, Madam Speaker, he asks me who is the fairer between the Minister of Finance and my leader. I want to remind my colleague that the present Minister of Finance is the one who de-indexed old age pensions. Let us remember Mrs. Denis and her famous Charlie Brown, and I hope he is listening to us and will remember too . . . It is precisely my leader who introduced that protection, who granted to Canadians, especially to the elderly, to the low income people that protection against inflation. Therefore, I obviously choose my leader, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Blais: Madam Speaker, it is always easy to make a point as the Hon. Member just did when he mentioned indexing, but as usual, you too forgot that time when the increase in the cost of living index was 12 per cent and that indexing was frozen at 5 and 6 per cent. Because you too only mention whatever suits you not only because your present leader, who was Minister of Finance at the time, the father of the Canadian deficit, managed to turn a surplus into a deficit, which is quite a feat, and your finance critic as well, who is responsible for deficits at the provincial level. In view of his record at the provincial level, he was brought in at the federal level to see if he could do any better. All your Finance Ministers, be they MacEachen, Turner, Lalonde, Chrétien have all introduced budgets that were called by the name of their authors, and they were all responsible for our deficit.

All the economists of the time have called them disasters one after the other. I hope you will remember that. You were not in politics at that time, but I suppose you read the papers once in a while about it. I was surprised to hear what you said earlier. Here is my question. A moment ago, you spoke about the poor contractors who are overwhelmed by tax burden, red tape and the fact that they now have to complete and return forms twice a month, to pay whatever tax they owe to the Federal Government. Through a housekeeping measure which is commendable, I think, we will be able to recover tax payable to the Government. Those companies are big enough because it applies to amounts of $15 000 at least. I listened to your colleague for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) who keeps repeating that we are against low income Canadians and that we always give to the rich. As far as I can see, we have an advocate of the rich and you are the champion of business. Personally I would be tempted to ask what you have to say about interest rates, for example, because that is another element. You will undoubtedly reply that the federal Government does not have anything to do with that. And then for the first time the national deficit has been going down, for the first time public expenditures have declined, and this is something you were unable to accomplish over 20 years. This is the first time there is a net decrease since 1952, I think, since the Korean war. With current interest rates, people can renew their mortgages at 9 per cent, whereas when you were in office you had budgets, the Lalonde budget among others, where the deficit was expected to be in the $3-to-$4 billion range and finally ended up at the $15 billion level. Not to worry! Who cares! Never mind the expenses! We can spend freely, Canadians will pay. The children or the great grandchildren will pay for that.

We have shown the Canadian people that we were able to get a handle on the rising federal deficit and repair the mistakes you made over the years, so people regained confidence and interest rates went down. And the companies you are talking about, businessmen, what do you have to say about that and the interest rates? Do you not agree that companies are now investing heavily in Canada, that ours ranks first among industrialized countries in terms of projected investments, so what do you have to say about interest rates? Would you not agree that the present Minister of Finance has come up with policies which have driven interest rates down, a better performance than when you were on the Government side? Respond to that, please!

Mr. Gagliano: Madam Speaker, allow me first of all to tell my Hon. friend that I am not fighting for the rich and that, as usual on the other side, they have a great deal of difficulty understanding anything intelligent.

What I was trying to say—

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): Read your speech again. Your replies are stupid.

Mr. Gagliano: Listen. Then you may learn something and be in a position to ask intelligent questions. Instead of asking stupid questions, you may be able, to ask intelligent ones, if you only listen.

Mr. Blais: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Bellechasse (Mr. Blais) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Blais: Madam Speaker, I may have used strong language but I did not say they were stupid. Whatever his opinion I believe the Hon. Member should think about the word stupid. I find this quite insulting. All they can do is to question people's intelligence, and when they are unable to answer our questions about figures, they call us stupid. I suggest he should be called to order for the choice of words he uses in addressing members on this side of the House. I call upon you, Madam Speaker, because this afternoon I do not intend to let anyone call me stupid.

Mr. Marin: On the same point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Gaspé (Mr. Marin) on the same point of order.

Mr. Marin: The Hon. Member never said that my hon. friend was stupid; just that he was asking stupid questions. By inference of course, it is possible to say that a person who asks stupid questions is stupid. I would say this kind of language is unparliamentary and I think, Madam Speaker, you should ask him to withdraw.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne), on the same point of order.

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): That is exactly what the Hon. Member for Gaspé (Mr. Marin) just said. Madam Speaker, I think the question put by the Hon. Member for Bellechasse (Mr. Blais) concerned the Canadian economy in general. He simply asked what the Hon. Member thought about interest rates. I fail to understand why the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) says we are stupid when we have a question that is of fundamental importance to all Canadians, not politics but a simple and straightforward question... With the Hon. Member for Gaspé, I ask the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou, through the Chair, to withdraw those words because they are not unparliamentary.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair thinks it is really too bad that on a Friday afternoon, Hon. Members should be using terms that are certainly far from parliamentary. I can't help thinking of the people who are watching us on television. There are young people out there who are now home from school and since in many parts of Canada the weather is not ideal, they are watching this debate on television. I would ask all Hon. Members to remember when they are debating very important issues that they are doing so on behalf of the voters who elected them to the House of Commons and perhaps they would think twice before they said something they might later regret.

I will give the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou one minute to finish his comments, and I am sure he will put that minute to good use. The Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou.

Mr. Gagliano: Madam Speaker, I want to start by thanking you for your comments with respect to the order in this House.

First of all, I will withdraw. However, I did not say the Hon. Member for Bellechasse (Mr. Blais) asked stupid questions, certainly not. I just said, and I was answering Hon. Members who had not asked questions themselves but who were about to and who were shouting and would not let me answer the Hon. Member for Bellechasse. So I said: Please listen to what I have to say and then you can ask some intelligent questions afterwards. That was what I meant. Now, if the meaning went further than I intended, I hope Hon. Members will understand. And if they are interested in my answer, I shall, if I may, answer the questions put by the Hon. Member for Bellechasse, if they are prepared to listen. But if they start shouting again, Madam Speaker, it can only mean they are not interested in having intelligent answers.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I allowed the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) one minute to conclude with comments on the debate. The Hon. Member has the floor.

Mr. Gagliano: Madam Speaker, there is of course a lot of material in the question put by the Hon. Member for Bellechasse (Mr. Blais) and within that minute I will try to answer.

First, concerning the $1.2 billion. I put the same question earlier this afternoon to the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) after he spoke.

It is not that I am defending the rich on that but that in fact, my point is clear, the Minister of Finance is playing with figures. If for instance that proposal had not been in the Budget, he is neither increasing taxes nor reducing expenditures. Therefore, it is a no-win proposal. Certainly he is only delaying the problem. He is applying that as of January 1, 1988, and he says: You will remit every fifteen days. This means that at the end of March, year end being March 31, 1988, he will be getting 15 days of extra remittals! They evaluated this will amount to $1.2 billion, for the sole purpose of stating that the deficit is $1.2 billion lower. I was not defending the rich.

I also indicated on a number of occasions in this House that that proposal is not hurting large corporations, but small businesses. And if you make a very simple calculation, any building contractor in Quebec with 20 employees, and I hope you will accept those 20 employees, because in today's terms that is not a large business! With 20 employees in the construction industry, he is paying more than $15,000 a month. So he will have to remit every 15 days, and to what benefit? That does not reduce the deficit, it increases paperwork and also entails extra costs, because we know very well that the majority are operating on a credit margin and they will be paying more in interests.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Debate. The Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly).

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to speak on the Budget. As some of my colleagues have pointed out, it is an eminently forgettable Budget. It is what my mother would have called chip and porridge, a Budget with nothing good, it is just there. In this case, however, there is no porridge to go with it.

My fundamental criticism of the Budget is the implicit assumption underlying it that all is well with the Canadian federation and all we need is a bit more belt-tightening to get our deficit down and everything will then continue purring on just as though everything is wonderful. It is in fact a do-nothing Budget. Its myopic point of view ignores what is happening to hundreds of Canadian communities and the people who live in those communities.

I would like to share just a couple of examples to bring this home to members of the government Party. First, I would like to talk about the community of La Scie and the Baie Verte Peninsula in Newfoundland. A delegation from that community appeared before the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Oceans a few weeks ago. They pointed out that in the Baie Verte Peninsula since 1979 some 1,300 jobs have been lost. They depend very much on the fisheries plant there, and the entire inshore fishery has been neglected by the Department in favour of the offshore fishery which is controlled by two large companies, National Sea and Fisheries Products International. It is interesting that the latter company, having been established as a Crown corporation and given a good allocation of fish, has now become a profit-making venture and, being so, will now be privatized. In the meantime, in communities like La Scie who depend upon the inshore fishery, there are not enough fish allocated to the inshore fishery to maintain the fish plant there at anywhere near the level at which it should be. In 1979 the plant processed 29.6 million pounds of fish. Since that time there has been a continuous decline, and last year less than half that amount, only 13.3 million pounds, was processed. These people live in the very place where further allocations of cod are going to be taken from Newfoundland and given to France. That not only hurts them economically, it hurts them in the sense of feeling they belong to a nation that does not care for them as a community or as individuals.

The only other major source of employment in the area is an asbestos mine which itself has had a 74 per cent reduction in its workforce over the last few years. There is nothing being done for those people by the Government, either within the Department of Fisheries and Oceans or in the larger sense of eliminating disparity. For example, the NDP has called for a Northern Fisheries Development Corporation which would focus on the inshore fishery and help it to develop. However, we do not see anything like that kind of an initiative being taken by the federal Government.

The Budget should have addressed those kinds of issues. It should have addressed the issue of regional disparity. Again, the NDP has made suggestions which the Government chooses not to accept. We suggested there should have been a $815 million community initiatives fund and a $200 million single industry community diversification fund. Things like that would help a community like La Scie and hundreds of others across Canada to develop alternative employment.

It is interesting that the official unemployment rate in Newfoundland today is 19.2 per cent. However, Earl McCurdy, the Vice-President of the Fishermen's Union of Newfoundland, has pointed out that if the people of that province had the same rate of participation in the labour force as they have in Ontario, then the actual unemployment rate in Newfoundland would be a staggering 38 per cent. That is the situation in Newfoundland.

The other community I would like to talk about is in my own constituency, and that is Cowichan Valley. It has been hard hit by changes in the forest industry over the last few years. Several large mills have closed, and others have drastically reduced their workforce due to technological change. The same sort of thing is happening in the logging industry. Fewer workers are getting out more wood. We are continuing to export raw logs overseas.

The situation has resulted in many older workers being laid off. Who wants to hire a worker of 45, 50 or 55 years of age whose skills are all in one industry? They have literally nowhere to go. I have had people like that come into my office looking for some kind of assistance to help them continue to lead productive lives. These are people who are used to working, used to paying their own way. Suddenly they find that they have no jobs and no prospect of jobs. I know I am not the only Member of Parliament who has experienced that. I see one of the Hon. Members from Prince George here and I know he has had the same kind of experience. Other older workers have had the experience of being bumped down in seniority and have ended up doing the kinds of jobs which have traditionally been done by much younger workers. They are required to do heavy physical work, which may be suitable to younger workers, but not to people in their age bracket.

There is also the situation of younger workers who cannot get their first job in their home community. They are forced to leave home and look for work elsewhere. We do not want to build a Canada in which people have to leave home in order to find work. We want a Canada where people can build their lives in the communities where their families are. The real unemployment rate in the Cowichan Valley is around 30 per cent. In the last week in British Columbia we have seen the closure of Unemployed Action Centres which have tried to provide some help to the people about whom I have just been talking who have been caught by this terrible downturn in the economy.

The Canada Jobs Strategy has recently designated the Cowichan Valley for the Community Futures Program. We are glad to have that designation, but I want to emphasize that unless there are are other government initiatives which affect the entire economy of the Province of British Columbia this Community Futures Program will not be able to address the crying need for jobs in the Cowichan Valley. That goes for other communities in British Columbia which have been designated as well. We need a global package which will get the entire community going.

I was interested to hear the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) speak about the decline in employment following Expo. Of course many of us had been saying all along that the jobs at Expo were short-term jobs. The Government is using the fact that they were short-term jobs as an excuse for the very high rate of unemployment in British Columbia right now. She expects that these people will soon drop off the unemployment rolls and that that will bring the unemployment statistics down. Of course it will bring the statistics down, but it will not do a damn thing about the fact that these people would really like to have jobs. It is simply the way in which the Government keeps statistics. I apologize for the language, Madam Speaker, but the people in British Columbia feel very strongly about this.

The estimates on the need for a forestry program in British Columbia vary, but most experts agree that the cost of an effective program of reforestation ranges between $200 million and $300 million per year. This figure would cover the cost of replanting not satisfactorily restocked lands and replacing what is cut annually, as well as providing some funding for intensive forestry. Contrast the $200 million to $300 million needed annually with the money available under the economic development agreement signed by the federal Government and the Province of British Columbia. The federal Government is contributing a total of $150 million over five years, or $30 million per year, which will be matched by the province for a total of $60 million which is less than one-quarter of the funds needed to do an effective job of reforestation.

A recent report put out by the University of British Columbia authored by Sten Nilsson on forest economics points out that British Columbia is only 15 years away from economic catastrophe unless we do something about our forest resources. Seventeen thousand direct jobs have already been lost and a further 7,000 jobs are about to be lost unless we take action. We have not yet seen that action. I pointed out a few weeks ago that only 48 per cent of the professional foresters who have graduated from UBC in the last six years have been able to find jobs in their field. Twenty-one per cent are still completely unemployed. We are training people but do not provide the jobs for them even though everyone recognizes that there is a crying need for forestry in British Columbia.

What is the matter with the Government that it cannot bring together the skills and resources to meet the needs? The needs are there and recognized. The resources and skills are there. Yet, only 48 per cent of our professional foresters can find jobs after they have graduated and the others have to go and whistle. There is something wrong, and the fault lies with the Government and its failure to address this kind of situation adequately.

There are in fact, Madam Speaker, two economies developing in Canada, one for central Canada and one for the region. Yesterday in British Columbia there was new labour legislation introduced which will make British Columbia's economy more of a third world economy by weakening the rights of workers to organize and fight for better conditions.

The neglect of our resource economy by the Government is a major indictment of it. It has failed. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was campaigning he promised that there would be a separate department of forestry. He recognized the need for a separate department with its own budget, its own employees, and a full-time Minister. Instead, we have a junior Minister who reports to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and shares forestry with mining. The people in the mining sector are probably very concerned that they do not have more clout in Cabinet as well. However, for our number one industry across Canada to have only a Minister of State reporting to the Minister of Agriculture is criminal. We neglected the primary wealth producers and the regions wherein that primary wealth is being produced.

With regard to the situation of fishermen, there has been a doubling of licence fees on the Pacific Coast and an increase in wharfage fees for both fishing and pleasure boats. That will deal a blow to our tourism industry as well. There has been no permanent funding for the Salmonid Enhancement Program. Representatives from the Department of Fisheries and Oceans appeared before the committee and pointed out that in order to do an adequate job of maintaining small craft harbours they needed $120 a year. They are getting $48 million a year. Unless further money is allocated within five years the Government will have to close down 150 Class C harbours across Canada. That will mean shutting down the basic infrastructure of our Atlantic and Pacific coasts in many communities which depend upon those harbours.

The Government claims that there are are too many people in the fishing industry. Its slogan is, too many fishermen taking too few fish. Yet, the Government is doing nothing to create alternative employment. Canada did not become a nation by relying on market forces. If we wanted to rely on market forces we would have joined the United States a long time ago. Canada became a nation because we had a vision of a nation which would extend from sea to sea and a Government which was prepared to work for that. Right now we have a Government that is prepared to allow the market to determine what happens. As a result, we have seen that in the last year all but 5,000 of the 137,000 jobs that have been created were in the Province of Ontario.

Is it too much for provinces like Newfoundland and British Columbia to have expected that a federal Budget would have recognized their problems and taken action? Is not a Budget supposed to be a process by which the Government looks at all of our resources and our needs and tries to bring the two into balance?

We must question the priorities of the Government. Are native self-government and settlement of land claims too expensive, as the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) has claimed, or does the Government simply have its priorities wrong? Does the Government have no alternative to the Budget which does no more than apologize for regional disparity?

The fact is that spending on economic and regional development in this fiscal year which just began will be about $3 billion less than when the Conservative Government was elected in 1984. Regional disparity has increased and less money is being spent to try to overcome that.

Earlier Conservative Budgets have loaded huge tax increases on the backs of individual Canadians, particularly Canadians in low and middle-income tax brackets. At the same time, they offered upper-income Canadians more tax loopholes like the $500,000 capital gains tax. The Budget continues that trend.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised tax reform during the 1984 election campaign. It is another promise that has been postponed, and now we are supposed to see something in upcoming months. Perhaps the Government could explain to Canadians why an increase in tax could be slapped on at midnight of budget day, but it is a different story when it comes to tax reform that might give them a break.

Of course, Canadians should be concerned about what might be in that tax reform because there are many rumours that while there might be a slight decrease in the income tax rate it will be balanced by a business transfer tax. The rumours are that there are to be no exemptions to that business transfer tax, which will mean an increased cost on food and other basic necessities. It is the kind of tax that is once again most regressive and will hit the poor people of this country the hardest.

I suggest there are some measures the Government can implement that would begin to introduce some fairness into the tax system. First, it should eliminate the $500,000 lifetime capital gains tax exemption. This measure will cost over $1 billion by the end of this year. The exemption benefits only the rich. In 1983, only 10 per cent of taxpayers who had less than $40,000 income could claim an average capital gain of $1,000. However, 61 per cent of taxpayers who had more than $250,000 income claimed an average capital gain of $57,461. Of course, we believe the capital gains exemption should remain for principal dwellings, family farms, fishermen or small businesses that have been built up in a family for a period of years.

We believe the Government should tighten up on the minimum tax. It should use the revenues from a fair taxation of capital gains to restore the basic federal tax exemption. We want it to put a halt to personal and sales tax increases for ordinary Canadians.

By 1990, individual Canadians will have been hit by a $35 billion tax increase by the Conservatives, while at the same time only $128 million will have been slapped onto the corporations. That represents only 1 per cent of the over-all tax increase. Is that fair?

I have a number of other comments but you are indicating that my time is up. I look forward to answering perhaps some questions on these issues.

Mr. Johnson: Madam Speaker, I want to make a couple of comments on the Hon. Member's speech. First, he mentioned two specific communities in Newfoundland, Baie Verte and La Scie. He said there has been a decrease in employment in the Baie Verte asbestos mine. The original owners of that mine closed it down because of a lack of market and the protest from around the world by environmentalists and others about the potential health hazard of asbestos. If it were not for the fact that the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland put some $18 million into the asbestos mine in Baie Verte, there would be much higher unemployment there today. I doubt very much if the mine would even be operating.

The Hon. Member also spoke about inshore fishermen in La Scie. Obviously Mr. McCurdy of the Fishermen's Union could not have filled him in , and I am sure the Hon. Member would not have Members of the House believing that the Government of Canada is doing nothing for the fishermen of La Scie and other places in Newfoundland.

The fact is that the Hon. Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) recently issued a shrimp licence to a company so that it could land the shrimp in La Scie and provide decent employment there. Furthermore, for the Hon. Member's information, for at least three or four years the inshore fishermen of Newfoundland have not been able to catch the inshore fish allocations that presently exist. Whether that is because of water temperatures or ice conditions that prevent them from getting out when the fish could be caught, I cannot say. Apparently it is not even evident to the scientists and biologists who are doing research in that area. I might say that they are doing extra research from St. John's, Newfoundland because the Minister has increased the number of employees in the scientific branch in the Department of Fisheries and Oceans in Newfoundland.

I suggest that the Hon. Member check his source of information to determine whether there is indeed a community Futures Program in existence in Baie Verte. While I do not want to say there is and perhaps mislead the House, I am pretty damn sure, to use the Member's words, that there is such a program. I would not want him to leave the House with any misunderstanding.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. He comes from a part of Newfoundland that is very dependent upon the fishing industry. He knows the difficulties that the people of Newfoundland are facing there.

The dependence of the Baie Verte Peninsula on the asbestos mine should be of concern to all of us because asbestos mining does pose health hazards. The fact that they do not have any alternative except to engage in an industry which has very high risks for people who work in it should be a real cause of concern for all Members of the House.

We become concerned when there is a building that has asbestos insulation that is covered with panelling. We say that that creates a hazard. Yet we expect people will work in those mines, and we have to be concerned about that. I can understand how people who have no other source of employment would see that as being something that is better than having no other means of making a livelihood. Yet it is a terrible price to pay. I am sure the Hon. Member will agree with that.

The Hon. Member pointed out that the Minister has just granted a shrimp allocation to the community of La Scie. That could be, and I think it is good. The basic fact is that there was a delegation from La Scie which appeared before the Fisheries Committee. Members of that delegation made a very moving and eloquent plea for their region. They asked that there be a further allocation of fish which could be treated at the plant at La Scie. I certainly support that. If the Government has other programs which could ameliorate somewhat the situation in La Scie and Baie Verte, the more power to it. But the fact remains that the Government and this Budget have not done enough for the people of Newfoundland, a province where there is an unemployment rate running as high as 38 per cent, especially when we consider the number of people who want to work and cannot. I am sure the Hon. Member would be the last person to get up in this Chamber and say that he thinks the Government is doing an adequate job for the people of Newfoundland. I am sure the Hon. Member has some time left and that he would not want to get up and make that type of an assertion.

Mr. Johnson: Madam Speaker, yes, I would want to say that I will never be satisfied until there is no unemployment in Newfoundland. In fact, I would be very proud if I had to pass out invitations to other Members telling them that there is work available in Newfoundland because there are not enough labourers and because there is full employment. I would be very proud of that.

What I was trying to say is that it is wrong to give the impression that the Government does not care about the people of Newfoundland, or the people of any other part of the country for that matter. All I was trying to point out is that the mine in Baie Verte would have been closed if it were not for the assistance it has received from the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland.

I was also trying to point out the effort of trying to put in place additional work in La Scie through the giving of a shrimp allocation. I could have gone further and said that last year there were supplementary crab licences issued in order to create additional work. But the Hon. Member knows that it would be irresponsible for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) to issue additional fish allocations to anyone from the offshore sector if it is not appropriate under the guidelines of the scientific evidence on which he has to make his decisions.

I can also tell the Hon. Member that there have been efforts made in terms of the revitalization of the sealing industry with the location of a plant in Fleur de Lys which is also on the Baie Verte peninsula. Federal and provincial money has gone into that effort. So the Government is trying, but as the Hon. Member knows, Newfoundland is not a manufacturing area. There is only certain potential for the resources that we have to create as much employment as we possibly can. I would certainly like to see less unemployment. I am sure my colleagues would like to hear suggestions from anyone who might be able to enhance employment in Newfoundland.

Mr. Manly: Madam Speaker, if the Government really cared it would not be allocating fish to France in that area. It would have had some policies that would have seen that out of 137,000 jobs created last year more than 5,000 of them would have gone to some other province than Ontario.

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Madam Speaker, I am delighted this afternoon to rise in the House to share with you and through you with my colleagues and my constituents some of my thoughts about the 1987 Budget which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) presented. It is a Budget which really brought good news for Canadians. The budget experience this year was an unusual one for me. I would like to share it with you, Madam Speaker.

I live in and represent the federal riding of Nepean—Carleton which is in so many ways a microcosm of this great country in which we have the privilege of living. It is a large riding from a population point of view, while being an excellent mixture of urban and rural people. It represents an excellent mixture of entrepreneurship and people involved in small business, people who are involved in the high technology business, people who are involved in dairy production and so on. One of the most striking things about this community is its vibrancy and its growth. When we look at the community today we see that there are about 1,900 small businesses in it. I ask Hon. Members to think of what that translates into in terms of jobs, in terms of the creation of new wealth and in terms of the enjoyment of life. Those 1,900 small businesses, together with some of the other features of the community, translate into about 36,000 or 37,000 jobs. These jobs are filled by people who come to work into the riding every morning who have a positive work experience during the day. This community is really a thriving business community.

What have these businessmen, these farm producers and dairy producers to say to me about the economic world in which they would like to operate? Their consistent message to me is simple. They say: "We would like the Government to get out of our hair, to simplify the regulations and the guidelines under which we must work". The second thing they say to me is: "We want to stay on a steady path. We want to know what the goals of the Government are so that we can work side by side with those regulations without having our goals move from year by year by year. In this way we can have a constant business plan, a constant goal, a constant level of productivity and a constant level of exports for which we can aim".

The unique budget experience for me this year boiled down to how few calls of a negative nature I received from my constituents with respect to the Budget. How few were they? I would like to share with Members of the House the fact that I received more negative calls when Petro-Canada, Esso and Texaco upped the price of gasoline by two cents or three cents a litre when they should have only done it by one cent a litre. In fact, most of the calls I had about the Budget were thank you's or calls of a congratulatory nature. The small businesspersons and members of the farm community who called me said: "Thank you for leaving the half-a-million-dollar capital gains exemption in place on an ongoing basis". They said: "Thank you from the high technology community for removing the import duties on many of the components that we have to bring into the riding in order to add value to them in the process of manufacturing and which we then export". I was thanked by the booksellers and the book retail people in my riding who simply said: "Thank you for removing the tariffs on the importation of books which were such an impediment". This community, under the fiscal regime of which we are now a part, is growing. It is buoyant.

By way of example, this morning I was out at the sod-turning ceremony for a new high school, a high school that the City of Kanata and the Carleton Board of Education are building together, the core of which in fact is going to be used jointly by the community and the Board of Education, for the over-all betterment of the young people and people of all ages in that community.

To take and build on that, over the last two and a half years, economic growth and job creation in Canada has exceeded that of all other major industrial countries. The Government has worked hard to attain this progress. We have made tough decisions, and we have applied firm and disciplined management to all sections of the Canadian economy.

It should be noted that these results have been achieved in the face of a world economy that has become not only more competitive, but also more uncertain and more volatile.

Going back some 30 months, or to mid-1984, when we had the privilege of forming the Government of Canada, we had just gone through 15 consecutive years in which the federal deficit had increased annually. By then, it had increased to some $38 billion. When one translates that into what it means per person or per household in Canada, it translates into $23,000 per household across this great nation of ours. Just think of that! You and I, and everyone across Canada, because of what the Government had been doing on our behalf, had a debt of $23,000.

In November of 1984, against that background, faced with disturbing trends, trends that posed a threat to sustained economic growth, permanent jobs, and greater opportunities for Canadians, the Government's renewal strategy began.

The agenda for economic renewal set out the Government's philosophy of economic management and its blueprint for the renewal of the Canadian economy.

That meant, Madam Speaker, adopting policies that helped small business, policies that fostered entrepreneurship and risk taking, policies that promoted innovation and created a positive climate for the growth and expansion of new enterprises. It meant making the Canadian economy more dynamic, more flexible, and more competitive, so that companies, small and large, high technology companies such as those located in my constituency, can thrive and compete in world markets.

That was the challenge. We started a program of economic renewal, and we are continuing down the road of growth, of job creation, and of economic vitality.

Given our economic successes over the past 30 or 32 months, Canadians have every reason to be encouraged about their future.

The Government has made good progress in delivering on its fiscal commitment. The deficit is down from some $38.3 billion in 1984-85, to $32 billion last year, and projections indicate a further decline to some $29 billion in the fiscal year just beginning.

This is an over-all decline of some 23 to 24 per cent. Through dealing positively with the deficit, the Government is ensuring that the well-being of all Canadians is preserved; that the future of my children and my grandchildren, and yours, will be such that they will have a much more creative environment in which to grow and to develop and to prosper.

We are determined to provide that opportunity for all Canadians, an opportunity that is not burdened by debt. The Government has acted across a full range of its programs and operations to implement the fundamental requirements of economic renewal. As a result, Canadians now have an economic climate that encourages private initiative and rewards success. It is starting to pay tremendous dividends for us.

The real growth of Canada's economy has averaged about 3.5 per cent per year, second only to Japan and much stronger than that of the United States. Consumer confidence has risen sharply and is at an all time high. Spending by consumers has provided a major impetus to growth.

Across this land, 705,000 new jobs have been created. Our employment growth has been stronger than that of any other major industrial country. The employment rate has dropped by some 2.1 per cent; short-term interest rates are at the lowest levels in over a decade, perhaps some 14 years; mortgage rates have fallen by more than 3 per cent, making home ownership a possibility for all young Canadians; inflation is in the area of 4 per cent.

I invite you to translate those figures into the stability and the economic activity that can result.

In the agricultural sector, the farmers of my constituency welcome the fact that we did not change the capital gains tax. They are pleased with the fact that when we increased the excise tax on motor gasoline and diesel fuel by one cent per litre, we at the same time increased the rebate in a matching way.

One thing that has, in large part, gone unnoticed in the Budget is the fact that we announced that mobile veterinary clinics could come into Canada on a duty-free basis—something that was not possible before the Budget. This type of mobile veterinary clinic is not manufactured in Canada. This measure will be of extraordinary value to the agricultural community.

The small business and high technology communities of Canada welcomed the announcement of the removal of tariff measures on a number of import products. Specifically, the Budget restored duty-free entry for computer parts, semiconductors, and books. As far as the high technology community is concerned, a community which, in so many ways, is involved with a value-added type of activity, these measures may result in increased profits by as much as 50 per cent.

Not all countries, Madam Speaker, are as privileged as Canada, and one thing this Budget does is to give strong support to developing countries. Canada's foreign aid expenditures will be some $450 million higher than the 1984-85 level, an increase of some 21.8 per cent.

We are committed to achieving the objective of 0.5 per cent of our Gross National Product being allocated to official development assistance.

We have taken other measures to help developing countries. For example, we are providing all financial assistance now in the form of grants, instead of loans. As well, we now permit duty-free access for a range of goods from Commonwealth Caribbean countries.

Let me turn for a moment, Madam Speaker, to the mining sector. While it may surprise you to hear me speak of the mining sector this afternoon, I have had an enormous amount of input from that sector complimenting this Government and the Finance Minister for maintaining the flow-through share arrangement for our mineral resource industry, an industry that is so vital to Canada. It is an industry that contributes a great deal to our exports and hence to our foreign currency position. There are some 65 mining communities scattered across Canada, from Newfoundland to British Columbia.

Last year, we spent some $550 million on mineral exploration in Canada. Of that amount, some $400 million—$264 million on the part of the junior mining companies and some $136 million by the seniors—was spent through the flow-through share arrangement.

In other words, Madam Speaker, about 73 per cent of the funds raised for mineral exploration in Canada last year were funds that came through the flow-through share arrangements, giving some indication of how important that program is. I want to compliment the Finance Minister for ensuring that that mechanism stays in place.

In closing, Madam Speaker, the Government has acted on initiatives of fundamental importance to the Canadian economy. We inherited a challenge, and we have met that challenge. We will continue moving forward with our program for economic renewal in a carefully managed and consistent way. Staying the course is the key to our future prosperity.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

ELECTIONS, PRIVILEGES AND PROCEDURE—FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour this morning to present, in both official languages, the fourth report of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure.

On June 18, 1985, the Hon. James McGrath presented to the House the third report of the Special Committee on Reform of the House of Commons. Since that time many of the reforms contained in the report have been implemented through the provisional Standing Orders. These Standing Orders are due to expire on the fifteenth of this month.

Your Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure has reviewed the provisional Standing Orders and has recommended changes. These recommendations come as a result of the experience we have had with these new rules and are designed to carry on the spirit of reform.

We recommend with the changes set out in our report that the provisional Standing Orders be made permanent.

ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES—FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the fourth report of the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources, in both official languages.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have four petitions certified by the Clerk of Petitions to present this morning, dated March 27, 1987, for the benefit of my colleague who sometimes inquires about these things.

The petitioners exercise their ancient and undoubted right to present a grievance.

Whereas the proposed changes to the Patent Act will affect directly all Canadians who are not protected by private or governmental medicare programs; whereas the federal Government's proposal would raise the already high costs of provincial health care programs; whereas the monopoly granted to innovative pharmaceutical companies will prevent competition from generic companies, will result in an increase of drug costs and prices, and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs; and whereas the proposed changes to the Patent Act are another example of the Canadian Government's concession in the free trade negotiations with the United States at the expense of everyday Canadians, therefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition signed by people from Kingston, Peterborough, Kitchener, Hawkesbury, Cambridge, New Hamburg, Guelph, Elmira. They are concerned regarding the changes being proposed to the Patent Act which they believe will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. They call upon the Government to reject the continuing process of Bill C-22.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present petitions signed by residents of Winnipeg in connection with Bill C-22. They say that the federal Government's proposal to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs.

Therefore, they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription prices for Canadians.

I have another petition signed by residents in towns in Manitoba including Teulon, Stonewall, Selkirk and Winnipeg who say that the proposed measure within Bill C-22 will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis and that the proposal of the federal Government will result in higher costs to provincial Government drug plans,

Therefore, they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege to present a petition signed by a number of residents in the Thunder Bay, Rosslyn Village, Murillo, Kakabeka Falls area in northwestern Ontario which has been duly certified by the Clerk of Petitions, dealing with proposed changes to the Patent Drug Act regarding prescription drugs. The people of my constituency and that of my neighbour, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) express concerns about the impact on pricing. They are concerned that this is just another part of the free trade cop-out.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have three petitions.

The first petition indicates that the federal Government's proposals to seek financial self sufficiency by 1988 for Canada Post Corporation will result in cut-backs and deterioration in service of the Post Office which will consequently be at the expense of service to Canadian consumers.

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to instruct the Government to make improved service the highest priority of the Canada Post Corporation and to instruct the Government to abandon its policy of closing rural post offices and cancelling rural routes. The petitioners are from across the country.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the second petition deals with the Patent Act.

The petitioners indicate that the changes proposed by the Government will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. The petitioners call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL COMPREHENSIVE CHILD CARE SYSTEM

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my final petition deals with child care.

Whereas the Conservative Government recognized at the time of the annual conference of First Ministers in November, 1986, that child care is a priority measure ensuring support and the strengthening of the Canadian family as well as promoting women's economic equality, and whereas the postponement to March 31, 1987 of the tabling of the Special Parliamentary Committee's Report on Child Care suggests it is possible that the Conservative Government will not set aside funds in its next Budget for the development of adequate child care services, the petitioners call upon Parliament to negotiate and sign by the end of 1987 a federal-provincial agreement that provides a detailed framework for comprehensive child care systems.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have seven petitions I wish to table this morning.

The first is signed by residents from Chilliwack, British Columbia, the home of the Speaker of this House. Whereas the monopoly granted to innovative pharmaceutical companies will prevent competition from generic companies, will result in an increase in drug costs and prices and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs, the petitioners call upon the Government of Canada to withdraw Bill C-22, amendments to the Patent Act.

My second petition is signed by Canadians who reside in Thunder Bay, Ontario. They call upon the Government of Canada to withdraw Bill C-22, amendments to the Patent Act. They believe this Bill will negatively affect senior citizens, the poor and disabled, in the cost of prescription drugs.

My third petition is signed by individuals from the great Province of Saskatchewan, particularly the Lloydminster area, who call upon the Government and particularly the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) to withdraw Bill C-22, amendments to the Patent Act, which they believe will negatively affect Canadians regarding the cost of prescription drugs.

The fourth petition is from the Province of Newfoundland. Whereas the monopoly granted to innovative pharmaceutical companies will prevent competition from generic companies, will result in an increase in drug costs and prices and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs, the petitioners call upon this Parliament and, indeed, the Government to withdraw Bill C-22 which they believe if not withdrawn will result in a substantial increase in the price of prescription drugs.

The fifth petition is signed by individuals from Peterborough, Ontario, Gander, Newfoundland and other parts of the Province of Newfoundland, whereby they call upon the Government of Canada to withdraw Bill C-22, amendments to the Patent Act. They wish this Bill to be taken from the House because they believe if it is passed into law there will be substantial increases in the cost of prescription drugs thereby negatively affecting senior citizens, disabled and the poor.

The sixth petition is signed by a number of individuals in the Province of Ontario, St. Catharines, Willowdale, Dalton and other parts of Ontario. They call upon the Government of Canada to withdraw Bill C-22, amendments to the Patent Act. They believe that if this particular piece of legislation is consummated into law that it will affect very negatively senior citizens, the poor and the disabled in this country as it relates to the escalation in the cost of prescription drugs. They hope that Conservative Members of Parliament will withdraw Bill C-22.

My seventh petition, and in keeping with your wishes, Sir, in summary form, we have individuals who have signed this petition from the great Province of Saskatchewan, particularly the area of Saskatoon. Other individuals have signed from Ottawa and New Brunswick. They call upon the Government of Canada to withdraw Bill C-22, amendments to the Patent Act. They believe that if this Bill is passed into law it will negatively affect senior citizens, the aged and the disabled as it relates to the escalating cost of prescription drugs in Canada. They hope that government Members will see the wishes and the wants of Canadians and withdraw Bill C-22 which they believe will negatively affect the people of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): I have several petitions, pursuant to Standing Order 106.

[English]

These petitions come from a number of parts of Canada, Halifax, Dartmouth, Sackville, Moncton, British Columbia, St. John's, Regina and Montreal.

• (1120)

All of the petitioners are exercising their rights as Canadian citizens to avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right to present a grievance common to them all in the certain assurance that the House will provide a remedy.

The petitioners note that the Government intends to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs and they note that this will increase prices for consumers, restrict the availability of such medication to average Canadians and increase the costs to provincial government drug plans.

They cite this as being another example of the Canadian Government making concessions in the interests of pleasing the United States in the bilateral trade agreement.

[Translation]

And they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Thursday, April 2, consideration of Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee, and Motions No. 3 (Mr. Dingwall, p. 4820), (Mr. Orlikow, p. 4820), and Motions Nos. 5, 11, 13 and 15 (Mr. Dingwall, p. 4820).

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to rise to participate in today's debate.

Bill C-22, the Act to amend the Patent Act, is a very important Bill. There is a series of amendments before the House at this time, Motions Nos. 3, 5, 11, 13 and 15 as well as Motion No. 4 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

Mr. Speaker, it is important to have a debate on the issue of patents here in Canada. It is very important for Canadians. I was here in 1969, seventeen years ago, when the legislation was adopted by the Trudeau Government. At the time, we were discussing the issue of pharmaceutical products here in Canada, and the price of drugs in Canada was much higher than in the United States. If I am not mistaken, we were paying about 15 per cent more for drugs in Canada than in the United States. When the Trudeau Government, with the support of the New Democratic Party, proposed allowing generic drugs, there was a very big difference between the Canadian price and the American price.

According to the report by Prof. Eastman, who made an exhaustive study on the subject, ever since the legislation on generic drugs was adopted there has been a tremendous drop in drug prices here in Canada. We are now paying about 20 per cent less for drugs than in the United States. So seventeen or eighteen years ago, the big difference between Canada and the United States was that we were paying 15 per cent more, and now we are paying 15 or 20 per cent less for the same drug, the same pharmaceutical product, Mr. Speaker. That is a good thing for Canadians, for senior citizens in Canada and for large families. We must not forget that in our country many people live in poverty and it will be very difficult for these people to cope with an increase in the price of drugs.

Mr. Speaker, there will also be a further increase in costs for the provincial governments if Bill C-22 is adopted, because many provinces now have a medical insurance plan for drugs. If prices go up, the cost of these plans will also go up in provinces like Saskatchewan, for instance. Saskatchewan already has a massive deficit, and this would be just one more problem for the Saskatchewan Legislature.

[English]

The motion standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North proposes to amend the Bill in a very positive and progressive way following the advice of Dr. Eastman's very well-meaning and well-researched report published back in the spring of 1985.

Under the present legislation, the Conservative Party, bowing to the wishes of the pharmaceutical lobby and the huge American multinationals, wants to get rid of generic pharmaceuticals that allow Canadians to pay less for drugs here in Canada than Americans pay in the United States. The Conservatives want to give those companies 10 years of patent protection for new drugs and seven or eight years of patent protection for drugs in varying states of regulatory approval. There will now be 10 years of protection for the Conservative Party's friends in the big multinational drug corporations.

The motion of my friend, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North, proposes to reduce the 10-year period to four years so that after four years, there could once again be competition from generic companies to bring down the price of drugs for ordinary and average Canadians from coast to coast. That is a good amendment for ordinary Canadians. It is good for the poor people of Kamsack, the unemployed in Yorkton, the native people on reserves in my riding, and for the Saskatchewan deficit.

I cannot understand why the Conservative Party is going to bat for the huge American drug industry, trying to fatten their wallets. Why? Because the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) wants to make a free trade deal with President Reagan and the U.S. Congress. There is no consensus in Canada going in that direction. All those public opinion polls, the ones that ask fair questions, show that people do not want to go in this direction.

Our present legislation is very popular and Canadians want to keep it. In September, 1984, they did not elect the Government to go in an extreme right-wing conservative direction by giving more and more to foreign multinationals. They got rid of the Liberal Party because they were tired of 20 years of the Liberal Party. They did not vote for a free trade arrangement with the United States which would jeopardize our sovereignty and independence. They did not vote for this kind of legislation which is the first step in that direction.

I want to make another point. I have had many farmers, including Conservatives, Liberals and NDPers, come to me in the last year and a half and say they want to expand the generic legislation to cover farm chemicals as well. Farmers want freedom from paying excessive prices for farm chemicals to big multinationals like Dow and Monsanto. They want the right to produce generic farm chemicals and bring down the price so they can get those chemicals at cost.

This legislation before us today will not only hurt Canadians in the price they pay for drugs, it will set back a campaign by farmers to have the right to produce their own chemicals at cost. That is wrong. The farmers should have that right through their own organizations and co-operatives, or with provincial Governments in joint ventures. If we pass this Bill then farmers, along with other consumers, will lose an important right. I appeal to my friends in the Conservative Party to listen to the people who elected them in 1984 and not proceed with this Bill. If they do, then they should accept this extremely reasonable amendment.

I want to once again read Motion No. 4 so Members will understand what it means. It says:

"for sale for consumption in Canada until the expiration of four years after the date of the notice of compliance."

Instead of giving free rein for 10 long, long years to foreign multinational drug companies so they can gouge the people of Canada by charging whatever they want for their new pharmaceuticals, instead of allowing them to fatten their wallets at the expense of the poor and the elderly, my colleague from Winnipeg North wants to reduce that monopoly to four years. After that time a new company can produce the same drug at a reasonable cost on paying a reasonable royalty.

Who do we represent here? I say we represent the ordinary, average Canadian. That is what the NDP does. The Conservative Party is in third place in the polls because they represent the wealthy, the rich, the privileged, indeed the big businessman in the U.S. There has never been in the history of Canada a political party in Government which has been in third place. That is the most unpopular Government in the history of Canada according to the Gallup poll. Little wonder.

I notice that the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) has come into the House on crutches. Perhaps he met one of his constituents who was angry with his Party because they are trying to charge higher drug prices.

Mr. McDermid: He kicked an NDPer in the head and broke his ankle.

Mr. Nystrom: Dr. Eastman said that getting rid of generic pharmaceuticals in Canada will mean ordinary Canadians will pay more. This is simply because the Conservative Party wants its friends who own the big drug companies to get bigger profits and bigger dividends. It is about time they were turfed out of office just as the public opinion polls suggest. It seems to me every time the Conservative Party forms a Government in this country they so alienate the Canadian people that they are out of office for 20 or 30 years after that. Back in the 1930s R. B. Bennett destroyed the Conservative Party for 20 years. Then it happened again for another 20 years. This time it will happen for a couple of generations.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have an opportunity to speak on Motions Nos. 3, 4, 5, 11, 13 and 15 because they get at one of the most serious flaws in this Bill. They deal with the question of not only putting a patent on the process but on the product itself. This is extremely important. If you look at the information provided to us by the biotechnology companies, Cangene in Mississauga, Ontario, point out that this legislation will remove that protection. Only the process would be patented. Presently, companies like Cangene can produce drugs because only the process is patented, not the actual product. I hope the Government, when it comes to vote on this part of the Bill, will agree with small companies like Cangene and act to keep them in business.

There is a tremendous market out there for the kind of technological breakthroughs which companies like Cangene produce. For example, protein-based pharmaceuticals accounted for something like $2 billion in the world market and about $50 million here in Canada. In the future it will expand to some $250 million in Canada and $10 billion around the world. If we take away their right to produce generic drugs then we are simply turning that market over to the multinationals.

It is obvious that the Patent Act amendments are part of the free trade negotiations. We hear the Government talking about how great free trade will be. However, we will be imposing billions and billions of dollars of additional costs on families for pharmaceuticals. The increase will not be imposed on civil servants or Members of Parliament who have pharmaceutical drug programs attached to their jobs. They will not be imposed upon people who work for large companies and have unionized collective bargaining arrangements. They will be imposed upon the poor and the weak who do not have such protection. Four million of these people will be paying higher drug prices if this legislation is passed.

The Canadian Drug Manufacturers Association estimates that if this Conservative program is put in place profits for the multinationals will rise by $3.5 billion over the next nine years. For every $3 made by the multinationals $1 will go into R and D. The Government promised that 3,000 jobs would be created. Using Statistics Canada figures, the loss of $3.5 billion in extra profits means a loss of 90,000 man-years of employment or about 9,000 jobs. The Government is talking about creating 3,000 jobs if this legislation is passed. However, an article in The Sault Star of December 17, 1986, is headlined: "Cleaners among 'quality jobs' to flow from new drug patent rules". The article reads in part:

> But a document prepared last spring by Andre's department estimates only 1,700 of nearly 3,000 jobs—about 57 per cent—will be created in the professional category and filled mainly by PhD-level applicants.
> Another 650, or about 22 per cent, are classed in the document as "technical," meaning they will go to laboratory technicians and require the services of someone with community college training or an undergraduate degree in science.
> The remaining 620—around 21 per cent—will be filled by "others," which Consumer Affairs spokesman David Watters defined Tuesday as managers, cleaners, animal keepers, statisticians and clerks.

Of the 3,000 jobs we end up with only 1,700 for high-level research people. We will end up with a massive loss through this legislation because most of it is going to profits and there is no commitment in the legislation for jobs at all. As a matter of fact, the large multinational pharmaceutical companies can just take the extra profits and run. There will be no benefits to Canadians.

Even the Minister would not claim that the additional costs of $3.5 billion over the next nine years will benefit Canadians significantly through jobs. This is just part of the free trade negotiations.

President Reagan's top adivsers are from the large multinational corporations. They tell the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) that he must impose an additional $3.5 million on the Canadian people so that the multinational corporations can make many extra millions of dollars from Canadians who have been protected from this since 1969. The benefits are simply not there with regard to jobs. The down-side for Canadians is tremendous in additional costs to low-income and elderly people who are not protected by drug programs.

The Government had a complete format before it. The Eastman Report laid out a middle ground which would provide incentive for scientific research in drugs and pharmaceuticals. It recommended a royalty program for a three or four-year period and special royalties beyond that for people who did scientific research.

That the Government wants to jump on the bandwagon of the American multinational corporations shows the tremendous power which President Reagan and his advisers have over the Prime Minister. I find it unbelievable that when the Government is running at 22 per cent in the polls it is trying to curry favour with the American multinationals and socking it to ordinary Canadians who are not covered by drug programs.

Cangene is a small Canadian high-tech company operating near the riding of the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid). I do not understand why the Member would want to put such a company out of business.

Mr. McDermid: Nonsense. They won't be out of business and you know it. That's utter nonsense. Be honest.

Mr. Foster: The company has made it very clear that it will be put out of business by this legislation. It has lobbied the government and the opposition caucuses. If the Government does not accept this amendment it will be putting companies like Cangene out of business and the Hon. Member knows it.

Mr. McDermid: Nonsense. They're doing much better than you and I.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to enter this debate. I have, of course, spoken on this legislation before but there is now an amendment before us. It is a pleasure to enter this debate, particularly when we hear heckling from Members on the government side who seek to participate in the debate by heckling rather than standing up and speaking.

Mrs. McDougall: Unlike yourself.

Mr. McDermid: We want you to tell the truth, that's all. Be honest with the Canadian public.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I object to the Member across the way implying or stating that I am not telling the truth. If that Member wants to speak on this legislation he should have the courage to stand in his place and do so rather than casting false aspersions at Members on this side of the House.

Mr. McDermid: If the shoe fits.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, the Member says "if the shoe fits". He does not even have the honesty or courage to withdraw a false and unfounded accusation.

Mr. McDermid: If the shoe fits.

Mr. Keeper: The Members over there scoff but we know the reputation of the Government with regard to honesty and frankness.

Mr. McDermid: I just said "be honest". I did not accuse you of being dishonest. I said "be honest".

Mr. Keeper: He plays with words.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Could we get back to the clause, please.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I object to a member of the Government accusing me at the beginning of my speech of being dishonest. I think that is unparliamentary. It is typical of the Government which has no sense of fairness and which, through its own actions, has introduced dishonesty into public affairs in the country.

• (1150)

Mr. McDermid: We struck a nerve over there.

Mr. Keeper: I want to explain this amendment so Canadians will understand why we have moved it.

Since the Government has introduced legislation with regard to generic drugs, it should adopt as part of its policy the compromise drafted by Professor Eastman which has found a broad range of public support and for which there is political consensus in the country, with three major exceptions; they are, the pharmaceutical industry, the American Government and the Conservative Party.

We suggest that if the Government is proceeding with its legislation on patent drugs it should follow the will of the Canadian people rather than forging ahead with its own political agenda and philosophy, right or wrong. We suggest it should follow the democratic approach and the political consensus and adopt a policy that has been accepted by the Canadian public.

The Eastman proposal is a compromise between the legislation that is currently on the books and the legislation that the Government is proposing. The present legislation allows generic drugs to be introduced into the market-place so that people can buy drugs at a reasonable price. There is no period of exclusive protection for the patent drug manufacturers in the pharmaceutical industry but they do have some protection because it takes time for a new drug to be approved and the various processes to be undertaken. There is a period in which patent drug manufacturers have some protection. However, there is no time period in law in which they have an exclusive monopoly.

Prior to this present legislation, which has served Canadians well, drug companies were gouging Canadians. The introduction of generic drugs made drug prices more reasonable although still expensive for the average Canadian.

The Government's proposed legislation will provide ten years of legislated exclusivity and promises a monopoly to the pharmaceutical industry for a full ten years. It can charge what it wants for ten years and, given past history of what patent drug companies have done, they will gouge Canadians for those ten years.

Of course, the patent drug companies should make a fair profit. It is common knowledge that the companies set out an agenda for the introduction of a drug, a plan to recover their costs and make a profit within a five-year time frame. Why should they be given a ten-year monopoly?

Professor Eastman has suggested a compromise which recognizes the good aspects of the present legislation and the need for patent drug companies to have some protection for a limited time with the introduction of new drugs. Professor Eastman proposed that this time period be four years, which seems to be a reasonable proposition since most drug companies plan to make a profit on a drug in five years. Canadians could then look forward to receiving drugs at a more reasonable cost in a shorter period of time.

The Government does not wish to follow the political consensus in the country and adopt a proposal that would serve the interests of the consumer and the generic drug companies while recognizing the legitimate interests of patent drug companies. That should be reflected in this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to say it is high time the Government realized there is a consensus among Canadians. The public feels that Professor Eastman's proposals are good ones and that the compromise is a practical one and recognizes the interests of the pharmaceutical companies, the generic companies and the Canadian public.

I want to ask the Government why it will not act on this Canadian consensus. Why won't it adopt the compromise formulated by Professor Eastman? Why not reconsider your own ideas? And why are you and the pharmaceutical companies and the U.S. Administration the only groups that will not be a party to this Canadian consensus on a new approach, an approach that protects the Canadian consumer?

Mr. Speaker, I think it is time this Government reconsidered its own approach and remembered that it is a democratic Government and that it needs the approval of Canadians for every measure it introduces in the House.

Finally, I simply want to ask this Government why it doesn't follow the Canadian consensus on this matter.

[English]

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-22 is another good example of the Government supporting its big business friends in this country to the detriment of Canadians.

There have been arguments that this legislation is not detrimental, but history has proven that such arguments are wrong. In 1969, when there was protection, drug prices were at their highest in Canada. Long-term protection means there will be a monopoly and some abuse of the system.

In a debate such as this it is very important to examine the various motions separately and discuss the substance of each one. According to the draft ruling, Mr. Speaker, Motions Nos. 3,4,5,11,13 and 15 are grouped for debate. They should not be grouped for debate in this way because they deal with entirely different topics. How can one debate or even vote for motions that are quite different? There is a conflict between these six motions and I think it is totally unfair for the Government to expect people to vote on two separate matters at the same time.

Motions Nos. 3, 13 and 15 deal with the kinds of patents which will now be authorized under the new legislation. On the other hand, Motions Nos. 4, 5 and 11 deal with the period of patent protection accorded to a patentee. Since the two groupings deal with entirely different subject matters, they must be debated as separate groups rather than just being voted on as one total group.

There is another good argument for this as well. Motions Nos. 3, 13 and 15 delete product patents from the legislation. As the law now stands, only processed patents can be granted. Bill C-22 would allow product patents to be granted as well.

Canadian biotechnology firms say this change will effectively put them out of business. I think that is going to be very interesting to the Canadian public at large because when one puts someone out of business one is simply helping to further corner the market. Canadian biotechnology firms are really concerned about this and want to keep the process of genetic engineering patentable. Because these substances naturally occur, they do not believe that the product developed from the use of the process should be patentable.

We can talk about companies like Cangene, as a further example, which extract naturally occurring substances, genes, from healthy individuals and inject them into unhealthy individuals in a manner which really triggers the unhealthy individual to manufacture the substance in his or her own body. These things really should be explained in greater depth and hopefully will be before this debate is over.

Motions Nos. 4, 5 and 11 deal with the recommendations of the Eastman report. These recommendations deal with a four-year period of exclusivity after the granting of a notice of compliance. Here is where I want to talk about the 14 per cent royalty. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the pharmaceutical royalty fund into which all royalties would be paid, would be apportioned according to the amount of research and development performed by each company in Canada. It is rather interesting to note that the Government wants to protect the research and development of big business interests in Canada and the United States, but it is certainly not willing to put its money where its mouth is in research and development in many areas of activity. The Government has proven that by its actions over these months.

Dr. Eastman felt that by increasing royalties, rather than unduly lengthening the period of protection, we would avoid the anti-competitive aspect of exclusivity. Exclusivity in terms of this legislation and the Government's policy, means that the companies which develop the drug should have a 10-year period of exclusivity as opposed to Dr. Eastman's recommendation that there be a four-year period. This will mean that those major companies will have 10 years of exclusivity to protect their product and to set their prices.

We hear that this will be good for Canadians in the long run. I simply go back to the state in which we found ourselves in 1969 when Canada had the highest drug prices in the world and, as a result, some of the protection had to be taken away from the major drug companies.

It does not matter with what good intent the Government wants to talk about the 10-year period, what it is in fact doing is giving its big business friends, whom people are becoming very accustomed to hearing it support, a total monopoly on that product for a period of 10 years? Is it fair to allow a total monopoly on a drug, particularly one which is in great demand for treating cancer, arthritis or any of the major illnesses which affect people in such a painful way? Is it fair to give any major company an exclusivity or monopoly on that drug for a period of 10 years?

We have to seriously ask ourselves at this point what the price of that drug will be? What will be the mark-up, what will be the profit, and is it really going to affect not only the individual who still pays for his or her drugs but provincial health plans and other company plans which include purchase of drugs for their employees?

It is not just the individual who will be hurt. It will hurt the public funds and we know where public funds come from to pay for drug plans. They come from the taxpayers of Canada. The Government has brought in the biggest increase in taxes ever seen in this country in the first three budgets brought down by the Minister of Finance and it has been cutting back on provincial government financing. At the same time it is going to give a 10 year protection for major drug companies, going against those health plans which are sponsored provincially and, particularly, those which are still paid for by individuals.

Why is it not fair to go the route of the royalty policy recommended by Dr. Eastman? There are some benefits in that policy for all drug producers, and he recommended a four-year protection period, which would seem very fair under all the circumstances.

The pharmaceutical royalty fund, joined up with the four-year exclusivity or protection clause for major drug developers, in our view, is a very fair system and a very fair way to go. It is much more fair than giving a 10-year monopoly on a drug, so that these companies can charge what they want, which will affect public health funds paid for by the taxpayers of Canada. It lays itself wide open for abuse because these companies can charge top rates for their drugs.

I call upon the Government on behalf of our senior citizens, the middle-income earners who are being taxed higher than ever before, and the lower-income earners, to have some pity and set aside its relationship with its friends for awhile and think of the average people of Canada.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have another opportunity to say a few words on the proposal by the Government to amend the Patent Act, particularly that section of the proposed Bill which deals with providing pharmaceutical companies with 10-years of patent protection. I think it is worthwhile reminding the House again that what we are talking about here is providing 10 years of patent protection largely to multinational corporations.

There is clear evidence that by giving these corporations this increased patent protection, assuming that the historical pattern continues, we will see more and more of those corporate profits exported to the home base of the multinationals, something which I doubt very much will make much of a contribution to the Canadian economy or, indeed, to research and development in Canada on pharmaceutical products.

In considering this measure, Mr. Speaker, we should review what the Minister, in particular, has advanced as his main argument in favour of 10 years of patent protection.

Initially, the Minister made the argument that 10 years was not a severe or undue period of time for patent protection for these corporations, and in making that assertion he compared what happened in the brand name multinational sector to the experience of the Canadian manufacturers of generic drugs. He argued that because it took generic copiers some 11 years to get a product on to the market from the time they first began entry into the approval process with the Department of National Health and Welfare, giving the brand name manufacturers 10 years' protection would not unduly harm the generic drug manufacturers.

In making that argument, the period that the Minister was talking about, in all probability, was the short period following 1969, when patent protection was finally removed from pharmaceutical products. That is when the generic Canadian manufacturers were newly entering this whole field.

While it is quite true that it did take 10 to 12 years to get a copy on the Canadian market in that period, since that time the Canadian companies have become much more sophisticated, with the result that it now takes only four to six years to get a copy on the market.

So, the Minister's argument no longer stands up, Mr. Speaker. It also indicates that the Minister himself has a real lack of knowledge as to what is going on in this country insofar as pharmaceutical products are concerned. It makes one wonder why the Government rushed in with this legislation, in the face of all the reports that have come down over the years arguing against precisely what this Government is doing.

In the 1960s, prior to 1969, there were no fewer than three major studies conducted into the pharmaceutical industry in Canada—and for very good reason. There was a tremendous amount of pressure on governments from consumers across Canada, who were faced with the highest drug prices of any country in the world. Governments, in response to that pressure, set up various studies into the industry.

The Restrictive Trade Practices Commission brought down a report that concluded that the reason Canadian drug prices were the highest in the world was that the multinational companies enjoyed a monopoly on pricing in Canada. The Commission recommended that one of the ways to get around that was to inject competition into the field by removing patent protection for pharmaceutical products.

The Government did not act at that time, probably due to pressure from the multinational companies.

In the middle 1960s, the Hall Commission conducted a further investigation, arriving at exactly the same conclusions. The Government of the time ignored that. However, the pressure continued.

What the Government then did was to establish an all-Party House of Commons committee, under the chairmanship of the then Member of Parliament, Mr. Harley. That committee—and it was an all-Party committee—recommended to the House of Commons exactly what the previous two studies had recommended, that patent protection be removed and that, in its stead, there be some kind of royalty paid to the multinational companies by the Canadian generic drug manufacturers. In 1969, that is exactly what the Government of the day did.

When the Minister argues that somehow or other Canadian generic copiers, the manufacturers in that sector of the Canadian economy, are like scavengers who are stealing the research and development from multinationals, he does not mention that the Canadian copiers are required to pay the multinationals a 4 per cent royalty fee for the use of the product.

One might ask, why 4 per cent. The reason is that all of the commissions that studied this question concluded that, of the total sales revenues the multinational manufacturers received, 4 per cent was spent on research and development. Given that fact, it was felt that a 4 per cent royalty was fair compensation to the multinational companies for the use of their products.

The studies did not end with the commissions established prior to 1969. Following the amendments to the Patent Act in 1969, because of pressures from the multinationals—which never did accept that policy—other commissions and studies were set up. Between 1969 and 1983, we had four studies that I am aware of; and within the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, an internal study was carried out. That study concluded that Canada's policy, as adopted in 1969, was a fair policy, and a good policy for Canadian consumers.

Not satisfied with that, in 1981 or 1982, Professor Harry Eastman was asked to conduct yet another study into the pharmaceutical industry. Mr. Eastman tabled his report in the House of Commons in 1983.

In his report, Mr. Eastman concluded that the policy put into effect in 1969 was a good policy for Canada and for Canadian consumers. He pointed out that in 1983 alone, this policy had saved Canadian consumers some $211 million in drug costs. He went on to point out that if the multinationals believed they had an argument in favour of some patent protection, the period be set at four years. This was his recommendation after listening to all of the evidence and after looking at the arrangements in place in other countries.

In his report, Mr.Eastman pointed out some of the problems that lay within the Department of National Health and Welfare in terms of the approval process, and included recommendations to expedite the process.

But what did the Government do, Mr. Speaker? It ignored the Eastman report. Under normal circumstances, that report would have been referred to a parliamentary committee for further study and recommendation. But that is not what this Government did. Instead, it ignored the report completely and waltzed in here with the Neanderthal proposals that are contained in Bill C-22, which they are now in the process of trying to ram through the House.

Mr. Speaker, I think the Government is making a grave mistake. The majority of Canadians appreciate the legislation that we now have. It is legislation that protects the Canadian consumer, while being good for Canada itself.

In the generic drug manufacturing sector we have a growing industry that is purely Canadian, Canadian-based. The profits from this Canadian industry are flowing back into Canada, creating Canadian jobs. Given all of that, I, for the life of me, cannot understand why this Government, through this legislation, is trying to drive the generic drug manufacturers out of business.

No matter how one looks at this legislation, Mr. Speaker, it makes absolutely no sense.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, as a Member of Parliament who was in the House in 1969, when the original legislation was passed, I believe what the Government is attempting to do in Bill C-22 is completely wrong. I participated in the committee which studied the issue at that time and, as many Hon. Members have stated, it was clear that drug prices in Canada were among the highest in the world. I believe we were being unfairly treated at that time by large multinational drug companies.

There was much evidence to that effect in 1969 and, for that reason, the Liberal Government of the day brought in legislation to provide for compulsory licensing of patents on pharmaceutical products so there would be more competition in the drug business, so that drugs could be delivered to consumers at a cheaper price as a result of competition, and that competition would take place because we lessened the patent protection given to drug companies when they discovered new drugs.

Following the legislation in 1969, as Hon. Members know, there was a considerable lowering of drug prices to Canadians. The prices of drugs which were essential to old people, children, and people with chronic diseases came down considerably. However, following that period of time there have been complaints by large multinational drug companies. They felt that they were not being treated fairly and that they would only conduct research and production in Canada if amendments were made to the Act which would give them greater patent protection on the new drugs they discovered.

The previous Liberal Government took a serious look at the requests and set up the Eastman Commission. The commission spent a lot of time studying the matter and came to the conclusion that certain changes could be made to meet the legitimate concerns of pharmaceutical companies and at the same time protect consumers by giving them low drug prices.

However, what did the Conservative Government do? It did not accept the principal recommendations in the Eastman report. For example, the Eastman Commission recommended that drug companies be given a four-year exclusive protection on drug patents and then be subject to a licensing system, with royalties being paid by those to whom the compulsory licences were granted and the moneys from those royalties being distributed for further research to the companies developing new products. The Eastman Commission recommends four years of protection, and the Government decides to give 10 years of protection. It is out of line. It is beyond what was recommended by the Eastman Commission as being fair play in respect of pharmaceutical companies.

Recently we have received information indicating that pressure was put on the Conservative Government by American negotiators in the free trade negotiations. They wanted the drug Act amended, and this is the way they wanted it amended. It appears that the Government is more concerned with pleasing the United States than listening to the recommendations in the Eastman report.

Motions Nos. 3, 4, 5, 11, 13, and 15 are before us at report stage. They have been presented by the opposition Parties, in particular the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) who put up a substantial fight against some of the outrageous provisions in Bill C-22.

At this particular time we are dealing with motions to delete product patents from the legislation. Under the present legislation, compulsory licensing is allowed on process patents but not on product patents. However, the Bill tends to include product patents as well. The purpose of these amendments if they are accepted by the House would be to take product patents out of the Act.

By the way, several Canadian biotechnology firms say that if the change as proposed by the Government goes forward and product patents are included in the legislation, it will effectively put them out of business. I ask government Members to take the pleas of certain Canadian biotechnology firms seriously and to consider seriously the amendments.

As well, Motions Nos. 4, 5, and 11 deal with a matter which I raised a few seconds ago. They would amend the Bill to put into effect Dr. Eastman's recommendation that only a four-year period of exclusivity be given to pharmaceutical companies on their patents, not a ten-year exclusivity.

They would also include the suggestion of Dr. Eastman that there be a 14 per cent royalty and a pharmaceutical royalty fund. Once a compulsory licence was given to a company to produce a generic drug under the provisions of the law and in competition with the company which discovered the drug, the royalty moneys would go into a fund and would be apportioned according to the amount of research and development performed by each company in Canada. The royalty moneys collected would be put to good use, and I think we are on good ground in proposing such an amendment. As I said, it was as a result of extensive study by the Eastman Commission.

The Eastman Commission was set up by the former Liberal Government in recognition that some change had to be made. However, in no way is there any justification for the provisions in the Bill now before the House.

I should point out that 15 per cent of Canadians are not covered in any way by insurance plans for pharmaceutical drugs. This means that four million Canadians do not have insurance plans, such as Blue Cross or whatever, to cover the costs of very expensive drugs which they must purchase when they are sick, especially those with chronic illnesses that can last from two years to five years who must buy drugs week after week. Of the 85 per cent covered, they are not totally covered. We all know this. I have a plan which has a deductible clause of a couple of hundred dollars. When I purchase prescription drugs, I cannot start collecting on my insurance until I have reached a certain amount.

In closing, I ask Hon. Members of the House, particularly members of the Government, to pay more serious attention to these amendments. They are not only the products of members of the Opposition, they were put forward in the Eastman report and were contained in the briefs of many companies which appeared before the parliamentary committee.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to discuss Bill C-22 and in particular Motion No. 4. This amendment is a compromise. The Eastman Commission recommended patent protection for four years as opposed to the Government proposal of ten years. Providing the extra six years, as proposed by the Government, is unfair to consumers and to generic companies which have proven to be a boon to the country in terms of providing low-cost, high quality pharmaceuticals to Canadians who require them.

We have found as this debate has developed that the government proposal is a direct cave-in to multinational drug companies, the U.S. Government and President Reagan. We have learned too that certain lobbyists and others in the United States were aware of some of the contents of the Bill and some of the Government direction prior to Members of this House and the Canadian public being aware.

In Motion 4 we are discussing the work done by Professor Harry Eastman and the Commission of Inquiry on the pharmaceutical industry, which report the Government seems to want to stick back under the carpet instead of dealing with, in the best interests of Canadians.

We have heard time and again from the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) and other members on the government side that unless we go forward with Bill C-22 as it is we will not see the kind of scientific and research work being done in Canada that is being done in other areas of the world.

As Professor Eastman discovered through his commission of inquiry, four years lead time is all that is required for pharmaceutical companies to recover the costs of their research. Why is the Government proposing to give two and a half times that length of patent protection to the pharmaceutical industry after a commission of inquiry demonstrated through statistical analysis, evaluations and discussions with the scientific community, the pharmaceutical industry and with the generic drug producers, that four years was the recommended length of time.

Our Motion 4 is really a compromise. It deals with the work that Professor Eastman undertook and it provides the kind of realistic protection which the drug industry requires.

Professor Eastman's report was published only two years ago in the spring of 1985, but his recommendations and material have dogged this Government throughout the entire debate. It tries to pick and choose, take little bits of the Eastman report and put others aside, in particular the question of the ten years versus four years of patent protection, something which all Members of this House should be moving to support. The Government protects the existing industry. What about the consumers who stand to pay, not just millions, not just tens of millions but hundreds of millions of dollars in additional costs for pharmaceuticals?

Professor Eastman, although an academic, achieved what the Government has not, namely, a political consensus. Government Members are not participating in this debate in the kind of open way I think they should in discussing the guts of the motion before us, namely, why the Government feels so strongly that there should be 10 years of patent protection. We are relying on the results of the commission of inquiry which indicated that four years protection is absolutely all that is required.

The Government continues to spin its wheels. It is not addressing the fact that this is nothing short of a cave-in to the multinational drug companies, particularly those in the United States which want an extra six years of exclusivity on new chemicals coming on to the market. Professor Eastman produced a workable compromise which has proved acceptable to almost everyone with three notable exceptions; the brand-name pharmaceutical industry, the U.S. Government and the Conservative Party itself.

Why do Conservative Members not explain the necessity of the additional six years? What is the broader agenda? No wonder the Government does not like the Eastman Report, Mr. Speaker. No wonder the Government wound up hiring Professor Eastman for the Drug Prices Review Board in a bid to establish the Government's own consensus on the Bill and, to a certain extent, muzzle Professor Eastman.

Many of us can remember the Government's actions when the Eastman report was tabled. There was no press conference, no glowing endorsation by the Minister. The report was simply handed out the day before the Budget was brought down in the spring of 1985 and dismissed by the then Minister as a "Liberal document".

We all know in this House the difficulties the Liberal Party has had as a result of one of its former Members having become a professional lobbyist for the pharmaceutical industry.

Liberal Members have been giving a ringing endorsation to the proposal now before the House, which is not to have a 10 year period of patent protection but to stick with the four year period. However, the mud which the Government tried to flick at the Eastman report did not stick. That report is a good one which should have commended itself to the Government. It did not because the Government was already up to its ears dealing with the drug lobbyists, the American pharmaceutical industry and the wave of protectionism coming toward Canada.

I think the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and members of the Cabinet thought that with the 15 per cent countervail on softwood lumber, that if we backed down on fish, potash, shakes and shingles, gave the Americans the green light on the north warning system, allow them to test the Cruise, provide the Strategic Air Command with low-level bomb routes in western and northern Canada, and that if we backed down on drug patenting then we would get some kind of move on this mythical free trade agreement. Even though the President of the United States was here yesterday and gave his endorsation, anyone who follows how legislation moves in the U.S. House of Representatives and the U.S. Senate knows that the protectionist move is in high gear and that the likelihood of Canada coming out on the winning end of any kind of a "free trade agreement" is pretty low.

The secret meetings conducted between the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada, who are representing the multinationals, and the Canadian Drug Manufacturers Association representing the generics is a story that has been told in this House before. The mediator was an old friend of the Prime Minister's, Paul Amos, from the Montreal law firm of Ogilvy, Renault. The meetings failed spectacularly even with the crony system.

Even at that stage, barely six months into the new term of the Mulroney Government, the Conservatives lacked the flexibility to see that Eastman's work was the way out for them, that a consensus would form rapidly around his proposals which would be acceptable to almost everyone including the Liberal Party when it finally dared to take a position on this Bill.

Instead, the Government marched to its own objective of reaching the free trade nirvana by successfully doing in the National Energy Program, the Foreign Investment Review Agency and Section 41.(4) of the Patent Act. The Government had no time to praise Eastman, the Government simply wanted to bury him, which it did by placing him on the review board. When the Government found it could not bury Professor Eastman and his work, many groups across Canada, seniors, the disabled, the Associations of Physicians and Nurses and those involved in chronic long term care, those millions of Canadians who rely on low-cost generics banded together. The elderly, those shut in who are sick and make use of pharmaceuticals for such things as diabetes, a heart condition or anything else, they started to rally around and realize that what the Government was proposing in terms of the prescription in Bill C-22 was not the kind of prescription Canadian consumers want to buy. They do not want to have anything to do with it.

The Government has yet to wake up to the fact that Bill C-22 is not in the interests of the scientific community, which is the rallying cry of the present Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, because in my view just as much would be done in research and development of new pharmaceuticals in Canada with a four-year patent protection as with ten. The additional six years is just a straight giveaway by the Conservative Government to the multinationals. It is straight profiteering, Mr. Speaker. It is not the kind of government leadership that those Canadians who rely by the millions on pharmaceuticals want to see from the Government.

These amendments put a bit of Eastman and his report back into the Bill. It will be interesting to see whether the Government adopts any of them. One of the most difficult for the Government to get around is what we have before us today in Motion No. 4, the 10 years of patent protection instead of four. I will be looking forward to hearing from government Members expounding and explaining to those Canadians listening today why the additional six years are required when that is nothing more than a straight giveaway to the multinationals. After all this money comes straight out of the pockets of Canadian consumers, many of whom can least afford it.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, several years ago Hon. Members on both sides of the House would rightfully complain about their minor role in the legislation process. More often than not we barely had time to read the bills drafted, as we know, by very senior officials who are paid for doing that. These people did not consult with Members to any great extent, but of course they had the ears of their Ministers who made sure the message would get through to the various caucuses just so such or such piece of legislation would appear on the Order Paper and ultimately become the law of the land.

Over the years there were a number of discussions among Members to bring about a parliamentary reform. This is how our colleague, now Senator Tom Lefebvre, came to produce his report and eventually everything turned out all right. Next we had the famous McGrath Commission whose chairman is now the Newfoundland Lieutenant Governor, as we all know. He was a former Minister and—I think this can be said of a Government Member, even by the Opposition—an eminent and very energetic parliamentarian who thought time had come indeed for Members to play a significant role in the House, in parliamentary committees, and in the legislation process. And so we came to the conclusion that most of the McGrath report recommendations ought to be endorsed.

One of our colleagues the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) sat on one of those parliamentary committees and never missed any of the proceedings on Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto.

So in keeping with the McGrath spirit Hon. Members thought they would have a leading role to play on the parliamentary committee to which Government Bill c-22 had been referred.

Members of the Official Opposition and their colleagues worked very hard in an attempt to improve this piece of legislation. They may not be right in every single case, but I would be inclined to believe that it is impossible for my colleagues in Opposition, especially those of the Official Opposition, always to be totally and invariably wrong.

After lengthy discussions, they introduced 47 amendments. If memory serves—and my whip would confirm this—Mr. Speaker decided to condense the 47 amendments into 18 debatable groups. We are now debating the second of these 18 groups of motions. By way of explanation for TV viewers watching the proceedings—and for the benefit of the Minister who is giving us her undivided attention—47 amendments have been proposed and, in his wisdom, Mr. Speaker decided that they would be the subject of 18 debates and as many divisions.

Well, it seems the McGrath spirit has all but vanished because the 47 amendments, drafted by Opposition Members as a result of many representations made throughout Canada by consumer protection interest groups that listened closely, reflected, worked for months and now that we have reached the final stage but one, they turn around and say: Well, boys and girls, you have been wasting your time on those forty-seven amendments, because not one of them is going to be passed.

That is really discouraging. It is discouraging for the people sitting here in the House for the first time and who believe—for instance, I see the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) who is listening attentively and who believes in parliamentary reform. If she works on parliamentary committees, and all of a sudden, she sees an important Bill . . . I'm not saying that all forty-seven amendments should be acceptable to the Government, I am not saying that, but I find it difficult to understand why, in that case, Members should sit on a parliamentary committee and spend weeks and months preparing for that moment when they can at last say what they feel must be said. I am not saying that what they have to say is always the truth and is always acceptable. The Government has responsibilities and the Opposition does as well. However, the fact that all forty-seven amendments are rejected out of hand, with almost no debate, because we have not noticed any debate coming from the Government side, I think that is—

• (1240)

My friend would say that it was a setback for the new parliamentary procedures put forward by our hon. friend, the Lieutenant Governor of Newfoundland, Mr. McGrath. It is sad.

The first amendment was a very simple one calling for a definition for research. We have a very stubborn Minister, and I believe that is acceptable parliamentary language. I could say more. However, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) is very stubborn. He is also responsible for the post office, making two major catastrophes across Canada. The stubborn Minister does not want to define the word "research". That motion was disposed of by the House so the Chair will probably say that the debate on it has finished, and he would be right.

It is great to say that this will bring money and research into Canada and that there will be $1.4 billion-worth of research done here. I am sure my hon. friend from Quebec City who is listening attentively as she does most of the time would agree. It is all very well to tell Canadians to get excited about the $1.4 billion in research, but we do not even have a definition of research. I think that is not fair.

In his famous report, Dr. Eastman said that we have to be fair. I believe fundamentally that we must be fair to the brand-name companies because, after all, they do invest a lot of money. Therefore, they should be entitled to some protection.

That is probably where we differ from the socialist Party. We believe in fairness. If a company puts its money into a drug, it should be protected to a certain extent. Eastman said that there should be four years of full protection. I ask why the Government is still insisting on having 10 years of full protection. Is it not because very strong lobbyists are telling us to give the drug companies protection forever, but they will accept 10 years? Is it not because of pressure from the United States?

I did not happen to agree with some of the things the President of the United States of America said yesterday in the Chamber but I tried to behave well yesterday, contrary to some who really misbehaved. If one does not agree, one should go outside the House and disagree there. I did not agree with the President and the House is aware of my feelings about Nicaragua and the Contras. However, I do not like it when people misbehave.

I do not like to be told by lobbyists from the United States of America how we in Canada should behave and how we should run our own affairs.

I know my time has run out. I say to the Government that there will be other pieces of legislation on which Members have worked extensively in committee and have faithfully put all their energies into putting forward amendments. I hope the Government will some day realize that all members of Government are not right and all members of the Opposition are not wrong. That is impossible. There are 47 amendments because of a lot of work by my colleagues in both opposition Parties, and they have been totally rejected by a stubborn Minister because they do not happen to come from the majority or because they do not meet the requirements of strong lobbyists in Canada or, what is worse, strong lobbyists in the U.S. This is a sad moment for those who truly believe in parliamentary reform.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak on this motion which makes an effort to apply to this Bill some aspects of the Eastman report. That report leaves no doubt that the 1969 amendment to the Patent Act was a resounding success. The compulsory licensing provision saved Canadian consumers millions of dollars, $211 million in 1983 alone. This without having any discernible impact on profitability, growth or employment in the Canadian pharmaceutical industry as a whole. That industry remains very profitable for the patent holding and generic companies alike. By no stretch of the imagination can the Government claim that the multinational drug companies need higher profits in order to encourage them to do research and development in Canada.

The proposed changes to the Patent Act brings Canada closer to what is happening in the U.S. There the drug companies are even more profitable than those in Canada. A recent news report shows that the U.S. parent companies of the firms operating in Canada are embarrassingly cash rich. The Merck company had $1.4 billion in cash. Bristol-Myers had $1.3 billion in cash. Pfizer had $1.4 billion. Eli Lilly had a meagre $850 million in cash on hand. Those companies are looking for places to put that money. I suggest the Government has been duped and the industry is very profitable with billions of dollars in cash on hand, looking for a place to put it. They should be quite willing to put some of it into R and D in Canada without the 10-year restriction imposed by this legislation.

We should recognize that even four years of patent protection really means about seven or eight years before the generic equivalent is on the market. By extending protection for 10 years we are in effect extending it for 14 or 15 years. That is not necessary and it will cost Canadian consumers millions of dollars.

Dr. Eastman also makes it clear that despite what government officials seem to believe, the weakening of compulsory licensing and the granting of rigid patent monopolies to multinationals will not result in Canada becoming a major centre for either basic pharmaceutical research or the manufacturing of the active ingredients of those drugs. The monopoly these companies have had and will have makes it unnecessary to look to Canada as a place for development.

The compulsory licence holder must pay 4 per cent royalty to the patent holder throughout the life of the patent. Eastman suggests in his report that an increase in that royalty to about 10 per cent would be quite adequate and a reasonable alternative to extending the patent life. He suggests compulsory licensing should remain at the centre of Canada's policy towards the pharmaceutical industry.

The Consumers' Association of Canada agrees and suggests that we are only weakening the industry by bringing in further patent protection.

The CAC also suggests that consumers and taxpayers should not have to accept any increases in market exclusivity beyond the four years recommended by Eastman. Extending that exclusivity will cost consumers, provincial treasuries, and ultimately provincial taxpayers, millions of dollars. Eastman proposes that by increasing the royalty and leaving compulsory licensing in place, consumers would continue to save money on drugs. Compulsory licensing is not nearly as expensive as extended exclusivity and that is the direction you should be going in.

What we have in this motion before us is an attempt to retain compulsory licensing and royalties and the retention of exclusivity for a period of four years or perhaps a little longer.

I will complete my remarks after lunch, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 1 p.m., I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

BILL C-18—NEED FOR GOVERNMENT TO KNOW QUEBEC'S REQUIREMENTS BETTER

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Last Friday, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport tried to make us believe that his Quebec counterpart had expressed unconditional support for Bill C-18 as drafted. Well, Mr. Speaker, I must say this is a false statement because I have here a press release from Quebec Transport Minister Marc-Yvan Côté, along with a brief to his federal colleague in which he recommends at least eight amendments to Bill C-18 as we know it.

The Quebec Minister of Transport is wondering why Canada should attempt to negotiate a free trade agreement with a partner who will certainly not offer us anything on a silver platter, what with restrictions on lumber, pork and potash. How can we justify giving him unconditional access to our rail lines without a single concession on his part?

Mr. Speaker, I would urge all Members of the House to bring pressure to bear on the Minister of Transport in the hope that he might better appreciate and understand the requirements of Quebecers.

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

TRIBUTE TO WORK OF HADDASSAH-WIZO

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Canada-Israel Friendship Group it is a privilege for me to rise today to welcome to Ottawa the members of the national executive of the Haddassah-Wizo, one of Canada's outstanding voluntary organizations.

This year marks seven decades of public service by the members of this organization who have dedicated themselves to the assistance of children, youth, and women in Canada and Israel.

The executive of Haddassah-Wizo, 152 outstanding individuals representing more than 17,000 members, are a fine example of the energy, skills, and intelligence being mobilized every day throughout Canada by more than 40,000 Canadian voluntary organizations. Almost 3 million Canadians give their time and their talent to their country through the voluntary sector. It is time our country recognized the magnificent contribution of these dedicated Canadians.

LABOUR NEGOTIATIONS—APPOINTMENT OF CONCILIATOR

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we are all concerned about the negotiations which are taking place between the management and unions at Canada Post because we want mail service to be maintained. The Government has appointed a conciliator, which is a hopeful sign. However, it is disturbing that the appointed conciliator has no dates open on his calendar. He is operating on the basis of cancellations only. If another commitment is cancelled, he is available for the post office negotiations.

This is very disturbing, Mr. Speaker. If the Government is serious about reaching a settlement at Canada Post so that postal service can be maintained, we need the best possible conciliator and one who is on the job full-time. The Government appointed such a conciliator in the last round of negotiations and a settlement was reached. Why not take the Post Office seriously? We need a full-time conciliator in order that postal service may continue.

EXTERNAL TRADE

DESIRE FOR CONCLUSION OF HISTORIC ACCORD ON LIBERALIZING TRADE

Mr. Nic Leblanc (Longueuil): Since 1984, Mr. Speaker, the number of Quebecers opposed to free trade has declined by 13 per cent, which means that only 27 per cent of them do not fully support our position. More than 57 per cent of the people of Quebec do approve our free trade efforts. In the opinion of such experts as Bernard Landry who so stated in Le Devoir this morning, neither the language nor the culture of Quebecers would be threatened by a free trade agreement. "A free trade agreement can only bolster our cultural and political identity." In light of these facts, Mr. Speaker, we must continue our quest for an early historic economic accord on liberalizing trade, the hope expressed yesterday in this House by both the President of the United States of America and our Prime Minister.

HISTORIC EVENTS

BATTLE OF VIMY RIDGE—SEVENTIETH ANNIVERSARY

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, at 5.30 a.m. on April 9, 1917, 70 years ago, Canadian soldiers captured Vimy Ridge.

It has been stated that almost every man who trudged up the slopes of Vimy Ridge on that gloomy Easter Monday in April, 1917, had been a civilian when war broke out in 1914. Four of the five Canadian Generals certainly were. They won this and other historic battles in Europe because they did not use the traditional battle techniques of longer established nations and, hence, had the power of unpredictability.

I believe very strongly that our present-day Canadian national spirit, which is still growing and maturing, was first born on the battle fields of Europe and from there has bloomed into the playing of major diplomatic roles in the world.

At Vimy 70 years ago tens of thousands of young Canadians sacrificed their lives or suffered wounds which kept them incapacitated for life. Why did they do it? They did it so the rest of us can live in and enjoy this great nation—Canada! I ask all Canadians today, do we really appreciate those forerunners of Canadian nationalism? Unfortunately we pay very little attention today to the history that those generations wrote with their blood and lived with their spirit. They sacrificed their future and died for their convictions.

For every Canadian who really cares, every day must be a remembrance day for those who first founded our Canadian spirit and nationhood.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS—RESULTS OF MEETING BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND U.S. PRESIDENT

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward—Hastings): Mr. Speaker, yesterday was a good news day for Canadians. The Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) met the President of the United States of America here in Ottawa. After the private sessions the Prime Minister, in a superb speech in the House, set out the guidelines. The President responded graciously in his own inimitable style and, as a result, all Canadians are better off.

• (1405)

The threat of acid rain, of such major importance to eastern Canadian lakes and forests, is markedly closer to solution. Free trade, the benefits of which will accrue to all Canadians, now has the full support of both administrations.

A side benefit, that of a continuing close and friendly relationship with our nearest neighbour and most important trading partner, is also valuable. Even though a few may wish to flaunt their bad manners, I am sure that most Canadians applaud the good news.

IMMIGRATION

COALITION SEEKING POLICY CHANGES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, 90 sponsoring organizations of the new Coalition for a Just Refugee and Immigration Policy today said that immigrant associations, immigrant service agencies, refugee associations, refugee service agencies, religious organizations, lawyers, human rights organizations, solidarity groups, unions, women's groups, and other concerned groups have joined together to demand justice in the Government's immigration and refugee policy.

They are all united in their belief that refugees who come to our borders seeking protection must be welcomed and that immigrants and Canadian citizens must be allowed to bring their families—siblings, for example—to Canada promptly.

Refugees and immigrants stimulate Canada's economic growth and create new jobs.

The Coalition is committed to working together to insist that the Government keep our doors open to refugees coming to Canada for protection; enact a new refugee determination procedure that provides for a fair and expeditious oral hearing with the right to an appeal for every person coming to Canada seeking protection; expand the definition of family to include all children and siblings, and facilitate prompt family reunification in Canada; and maintain special procedures to protect persons who are fleeing from natural or man-made disasters in their country of origin.

WORLD HEALTH DAY

INTERNATIONAL CAMPAIGN TO IMMUNIZE CHILDREN AGAINST DISEASES

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, today, April 7, is World Health Day. The theme for this year is "Immunization". Six diseases which every minute, around the world, cause eight children to die, and permanently disable a further eight, can largely be prevented by immunization.

Canada is among the world leaders in this campaign. In addition to several smaller commitments through CIDA, our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced at the recent Commonwealth and Francophone summits contributions totalling $71 million for India and other countries.

Canadian institutions such as l'institut Armand Frappier and the Connaught Laboratories, together with voluntary organizations such as Rotary, have been making ongoing contributions.

Today the Canadian Public Health Association is launching a national campaign of awareness and fund raising. It behooves all of us, as Members of Parliament, to support the efforts of CPHA and other groups in achieving immunization of all the world's children and pregnant mothers by 1990.

USE OF BETTER TYPES OF SEATBELTS FOR REAR SEAT CAR PASSENGERS

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I would like to read into the record a letter of support I received from Mrs. Valoree Regner of Dawson Creek, B.C., on the subject of seat belts in cars. This is what she says:

[English]

> I am writing regarding the legislation you are trying to change concerning rear seat restraint seatbelts. I became aware of the problems caused by the present rear seatbelts after watching The Fifth Estate ... I would like to know if there is anything the general public can do to help facilitate the changes you propose. I am a member of a "B.C.-wide women's group" and would like to make my fellow members in Dawson Creek, B.C. aware of the problems. I would appreciate any information you could send or any contacts you could give to obtain information about your proposal as well as problems experienced with the present seatbelts.

I urge the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) to begin a public campaign of information and education similar to the one against drunk driving in order to sensitize all Canadians to the need of wearing a seat belt and, more important, to wearing it correctly.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

BEHAVIOUR OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY MEMBERS DURING ADDRESS BY PRESIDENT OF UNITED STATES

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, the Parliament of Canada was listening to the President of the United States in these precincts. During the President's official speech, parliamentarians had to put up with the incredible lack of courtesy and the insolence of Members of the NDP present in this House who did not stop talking to each other during the President's speech, under the embarrassed but approving eye of their leader.

Mr. Speaker, the attitude of the majority of NDP parliamentarians in this House yesterday was unacceptable and an embarrassment to the reputation of Canada's Parliament, in this country and elsewhere. The shouts of hostility during the President's speech, which we also heard, came from the same source and were the climax of the collective arrogance of these socialist parliamentarians.

Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate to have to bring up in this House the immature and unconscionable behaviour of this party of sheep. Democracy and the Canadian public are entitled to a better class of parliamentarians.

PATENT ACT—CRITICISM OF POLL SUPPORTING AMENDMENTS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in promoting support for the Bill to change the Patent Act in respect to prescription drugs, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) continues to speak highly of a poll conducted for the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada, but should he have confidence that such a poll is correct? It has been contradicted by previous Gallup and Angus Reid polls which gave exactly the opposite results.

It has been criticized by polling professionals for using misleading questions and biased information. It was based on the premise that drug prices will not increase by more than the cost of living under the provisions of Bill C-22.

I ask the Minister to demonstrate how he will ensure that the price of all drugs in Canada will not increase by more than the cost of living. That is only one criterion by which the Drug Prices Review Board will have to judge whether drug prices are excessive. Others include loopholes such as the price of a drug in the previous five years so that drugs which have increased at 20 per cent per year can keep on increasing by that amount.

No wonder the Government of Manitoba has said that not only are cost of living increases acceptable under this Bill but so are increases of 20 per cent, 40 per cent, and 50 per cent.

All of this is in the name of "consumer protection". As George Orwell once said: "When you see a clever Conservative, it is time to start reaching for your wallet".

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

BEHAVIOUR OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY MEMBERS DURING ADDRESS TO PARLIAMENT BY PRESIDENT OF UNITED STATES

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, as a proud Canadian I felt some discomfort and embarrassment when members of the New Democratic Party heckled and yelled at United States President Ronald Reagan as he addressed this Parliament.

Members of the New Democratic Party used the defence of democracy and free speech as they tried to shout down President Reagan. Canadians who truly value democracy know that we can assert our nation's interests in a confident, proud, and civil manner. It is natural we will differ with others but there are many ways of constructive dialogue.

Perhaps it is acceptable in the NDP type of democracy to shout down those who disagree with it and its allies in Socialist International. Obviously, the NDP holds dear the principle of muzzling those with a different viewpoint.

All of us as children learned the timeless values of courtesy and the credo that we do not abuse a house guest. By rudely interrupting a visiting Head of State and by bringing shame on all Canadians, members of the New Democratic Party have shown once and for all that not only do they have no respect for democracy, they do not even have good manners.

EMPLOYMENT

TERMINATION OF TRAINING PROGRAM FOR DISADVANTAGED YOUNG PEOPLE

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in Bridgewater, Nova Scotia, the board of directors of the Bridging-the-Gap Training Program, which has offered training and job placement services to over 200 disadvantaged young people on the South Shore, learned that the program has been terminated by the federal Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) half-way through its third year. No reason for the decision was given.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has recognized the Hon. Member. He is making his statement and I would ask that the proper courtesies be extended.

Mr. Dingwall: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I call upon the Minister to change his decision and make an affirmative response on behalf of the people in that particular program.

The mandate of the Bridging-the-Gap Training Program is to assist severely employment-disadvantaged youth to acquire the knowledge, life skills, and employment skills necessary to seek and hold employment, and to assist those who participate in the program to secure regular employment in the community. The target population comprises youth between the ages of 17 and 24 years who have been unemployed or out of school for 24 of the past 30 weeks, who demonstrate a degree of motivation and commitment consistent with the finding and holding of employment and who are taking steps to control problems they may be experiencing in relation to drugs, alcohol, mental illness or law breaking.

I call upon the Government to change this decision.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

BEHAVIOUR OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY MEMBERS DURING ADDRESS TO PARLIAMENT BY PRESIDENT OF UNITED STATES

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge—Foothills): Mr. Speaker, the vast majority of fair-minded Canadians are disgusted and insulted by the vicious anti-American conduct displayed in the House yesterday.

The outburst of the New Democratic Party during the President's address was unacceptable and showed how those Hon. Members would conduct Canada-U.S. foreign affairs.

• (1415)

Their calculated insult to the elected President of the United States was a direct insult to the American people.

Some two million Canadian jobs depend directly on exports to the U.S.A. The New Democratic Party claims to speak for working Canadians. Yet their vicious anti-American policies would result in tens of thousands of Canadians losing their jobs. Canadian social insurance programs, such as OAS, public assistance and post-secondary education, depend upon tax revenues from those two million working Canadians.

The NDP conduct shows that they are unworthy of filling high public office—

Some Hon. Members: Right on!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thacker: Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, what they would do if they ever got real power? Let Canadians beware.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[English]

I have another contract here, Mr. Speaker, this one being for $10,000, with the purpose being to "advise the Department and the Minister on appropriate strategy for implementing the communications aspects of the Government's policy on metric conversion"; and this one is to Nantel & Associés.

Mr. Nunziata: Good old Roger!

Mr. Boudria: I have another one, Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this one being to provide the Minister of Communications "communications services in relation to major departmental policy initiatives".

Let's see who this one was given to. This one was given to Synchrocom Communications, Mr. Nantel being one of the principals of that company, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: Roger again!

Mr. Boudria: The amount of this contract is $41,000. And I have another one, Mr. Speaker, for Synchrocom Communications, this one being in the amount of $48,000: $40,000 for professional services and $8,000 for travel expenses. And this one is again for Mr. Nantel—

An Hon. Member: Who is that man?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired. Oral Questions. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS—IMPACT OF U.S. FARM BILL

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I was going to ask for a delay of game penalty, but I got skated off by my own team.

Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It arises out of the visit to Canada by the President of the United States.

Not one word was uttered yesterday, either by the President or by the Prime Minister, on the plight, the desperate plight, of the Canadian farmer.

Did the Prime Minister ask the President to use his good offices with the U.S. Congress to change the U.S. Farm Bill so as to raise the price of world wheat?

Did the Prime Minister complain to the President of the American practice of giving away one bushel of grain for every three bushels sold?

Did the Prime Minister raise this subject at all with the President; and if so, what was his reaction?

Western farmers are in a desperate situation, and urgently need some answers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, agriculture and the plight of farmers, and western farmers in particular, took up a large part of our luncheon meeting yesterday with President Reagan and those of his Cabinet who accompanied him.

The President referred to the Canadian initiative of raising agriculture to the Tokyo Summit level last year, a plan that we put forward. He was aware of, and supportive of, the initiatives taken in regard to the Cairns moves. He offered the co-operation of the United States in regard to further initiatives that Canada will take at the Venice Summit, to bring some resolution to the complex problems facing farmers in general, and agriculture, resulting from the unfair subsidies provided by the United States and Europe and the damaging effects these have upon Canadian producers.

I want to tell my right hon. friend that not only was it raised at that level by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and myself, it came up with the Minister of Finance and the Minister for International Trade. I can assure my right hon. friend that the interests of Canadian farmers were fully and thoroughly discussed with the President of the United States and all his colleagues.

ACID RAIN—STATEMENT BY PRESIDENT OF UNITED STATES—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, two years ago here in the House, I proposed a bilateral treaty on air quality with the United States. Sunday, the Prime Minister made exactly the same proposal to the President, but without any preparation. Why did he spring this issue on the President without notice and without preparing the terrain? Didn't he realize that he was again giving the President of the United States an excuse to promise to look into any measures that could eventually solve the problem, instead of dealing immediately and directly with the question of acid rain?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is mistaken when he says that the matter was raised without prior notice and without preparing the terrain. We have spent considerable time on this issue in cooperation with our own and U.S. authorities. The Leader of the Opposition is no doubt aware that we have made further progress in this complex dossier. We have not reached a final settlement, but this is a step towards a settlement, and I think the Leader of the Opposition should support this approach because it will lead to a solution to the problem of acid rain that we inherited, and I know the Leader of the Opposition will want to work with us towards a definitive solution.

CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY IN ARCTIC

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, buttressing my contention that the United States interprets the matter differently, of course, is a statement this morning from Marlin Fitzwater, the spokesman of President Reagan on the environment, which indicates a number of more committees and studies and that the United States, in his opinion, has successfully postponed the issue. He says that a U.S. commitment to consider an accord was the commitment given, not necessarily a commitment to develop an accord. In any event, there was nothing on the U.S. Farm Bill before the House yesterday in the President's speech nor in the Prime Minister's comments. There was last minute smoke and mirror on acid rain and nothing concrete on Arctic sovereignty.

The Prime Minister used a photo opportunity humorously to show the President of the United States a globe and point out to him where the Northwest Passage was. Why did the Prime Minister not receive an unconditional commitment from the President of the United States recognizing in clear terms Canada's sovereignty over our Arctic, our waters, our land, and our air—complete sovereignty, unequivocal and unchallenged?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know why the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition finds photo opportunities so offensive. He sought one very actively with the President of the United States.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is a cheap shot. The President asked to see me.

Mr. Mulroney: Oh, I am sorry, I misunderstood. The President asked to see him.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is right.

Mr. Mulroney: I apologize.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You got it right now.

Mr. Mulroney: I wonder what Mr. Fitzwater would say about that.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Oh, that is a great one too.

Mr. Mulroney: I indicated prior to the presidential visit that we were not looking for anything other than steady, serious progress in all these matters. I think we have made some progress. We have much more progress to make in all these areas. We will continue working at it as best we can. We think Canadians recognize that some progress is better than going backward as had been the case. I hope my right hon. friend will co-operate with us in bringing these matters to fruition.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I must follow up on the question of Arctic sovereignty, because the Prime Minister completely avoided answering the questions of the Leader of the Opposition.

● (1425)

When you take the President's comments of yesterday and you read them together with the Prime Minister's comments on the program Meet the Press on Sunday it seems clear that the Government intends to compromise Arctic sovereignty by giving the United States unimpeded access, justifying this sell-out, trying, if you like, to camouflage or disguise it as some kind of security arrangement with the U.S. Why doesn't the Government assert its sovereignty over the Arctic? It should not sell out Canadian interests in this way, certainly not on a dishonest pretext of a security arrangement.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the allegations of the Hon. Member are wrong. There was an unwillingness on the part of the former Government to assert Canada's sovereignty over the North. The Government of which the Hon. Member was a part would not allow that question to be considered by the International Court of Justice. That Government specifically barred its reference there.

We are trying to work out an arrangement which will, as the President said here yesterday, involve a mutual respect for sovereignty but will also take account of other interests. If that fails, we will be prepared, if challenged, to go to the International Court of Justice. That is an area of defence of Canadian sovereignty that was explicitly denied to Canada by the Liberal Government of which the Member was a part.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Government of which I was a part was so respected that no one dared to challenge it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: No one dared challenge Arctic sovereignty. The Secretary of State for External Affairs knows that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

PRIME MINISTER'S TELEVISED INTERVIEW

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State apparently has not read the Prime Minister's comments on the program Meet the Press. If I may take just a moment to touch on the relevant part, when the Prime Minister was asked by Mr. Kalb about the right to free and unimpeded access over the straits, the Prime Minister replied—I am making it succinct—that we are members of the Alliance and NORAD and:

> —we would look with favour, obviously, on arrangements that would facilitate and expand those agreements between the countries. And therefore you can draw some pretty fundamental conclusions from that.

The fundamental conclusion is that this Government is prepared to sell out Arctic sovereignty under the pretext of it being an expansion of NATO obligations.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): That is false, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is a quote.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): There was an arrangement before that limited Canada's ability to defend our sovereignty. We have removed those limits because we are sure of our sovereignty and we intend to assert it.

Let me say something about the Liberal Government of which the Hon. Member was a part. It was so respected that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition left it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill.

ACID RAIN—POSSIBILITY OF CANADA-UNITED STATES ACCORD

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. It has to do with the President's commitment yesterday to consider the suggestion of the Prime Minister for a bilateral accord between Canada and the United States with respect to acid rain.

Could the Prime Minister tell us whether he received any commitments from the President with respect to what kind of time frame we are looking at? Did he receive any commitment from the President as to when the President would tell the Prime Minister, after having considered it, what his judgment would be concerning that suggestion?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as to timing, it was agreed between the two countries that we would begin immediately to discuss the possibility of a bilateral accord that would address the question of specific acid rain causing emission reductions on both sides of the border. We are going to proceed with dispatch and follow whatever progress is possible between two countries in the spirit of neighbourliness.

● (1430)

TIMEFRAME FOR REACHING AGREEMENT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister of the Environment could tell us if he realistically expects such an agreement to be reached before the end of President Reagan's term in office.

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, when our Government took office in September, 1984, the U.S. administration was still attributing acid rain to natural phenomena, including, as I have said in the House, trees, volcanoes, and even ducks. In two years we have made progress to the point where the President of the United States, on the floor of the House of Commons, said he is considering very seriously the possibility of an accord.

GOVERNMENT STRATEGY

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister of the Environment could give us more of an idea of what he means by dispatch and if it will involve actions on the part of the Government with respect to the United States Congress. I understand that the chances are good that we may be able to come to an agreement about a unanimous resolution on acid rain and that would be a good thing to do, as I think we would all agree. I wonder what else the Government might have in mind with respect to the Congress of the United States. What will be the Government's strategy in the coming weeks and months when proceeding beyond what was accomplished at the summit?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the President said in his remarks that he agrees to consider the Prime Minister's proposal for a bilateral accord on acid rain, "building on the tradition of agreements to control pollution of our shared international waters".

That is a fairly direct reference to the Canada-U.S. Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement which was an executive agreement that had to be given effect by the Congress of the United States. Obviously, in connection with this, if it is an executive agreement it would still require recourse to Congress and that is why our emphasis in our negotiations with the Americans is on working with both the President and the legislative branch in the U.S.

POSITION OF UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. In Washington a few hours ago, President Reagan's spokesman, Marlin Fitzwater, said that Canadians wanted a U.S. commitment to consider an accord, not necessarily to develop one, "and that is what they got". Does the Prime Minister really believe that if President Reagan were really convinced of the necessity of undertaking on the part of the U.S. an acid rain abatement program, something he did not seem to be very convinced of yesterday in this Chamber, he would go to Congress to get it to approve an abatement program?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, on the subject of belief or credibility, the fact is that the Liberal Party of Canada was in office during most of the period of the Reagan presidency to date. I wonder if the Hon. Member for Davenport, who was Minister of the Environment during much of that time, would tell the House how many bilateral agreements his Government achieved with the provinces and how many bilateral agreements he was able to achieve with the United States, agreements which attained specific targeted and scheduled reductions in acid rain-causing emissions.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, we agreed to a federal-provincial agreement in March, 1984, and we are very glad to see the Tory Government continuing on the road we paved for it. Second, we achieved a Memorandum of Intent in August, 1980, under President Carter, but we now find ourselves in a phase that even precedes that Memorandum of Intent achieved by the Liberal Government.

PRESENTATION OF CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is still directed to the Prime Minister who seems to want to avoid questions. I can actually sympathize with him because he must today reflect upon what really happened yesterday. Does the Prime Minister not realize that if there were to be a summit in 1988, he would be dealing with a lame-duck President who could not deliver through Congress, and that the Prime Minister would then have to realize that he should have raised Canada's position squarely, openly and frankly at the first summit in 1985 without uselessly wasting three years waiting to put Canada's position forward to the President of the United States?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, when the Liberal Party was in government it signed a Memorandum of Intent in August, 1980, with the Government of the United States, and it made so little progress achieving anything with that memorandum that it cut off entirely negotiations with the United States on the subject of acid rain in June, 1982.

The Hon. Member moralizing on acid rain is like Lady Chatterley moralizing on sex—lots of experience but no credibility.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

SOVEREIGNTY

CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY IN ARCTIC—REQUEST FOR PARLIAMENTARY DEBATE

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It was reported today that an exchange of letters took place last week between the Prime Minister and the President of the United States. In this exchange, the Prime Minister offered the U.S. a deal that would not recognize our sovereignty in the Arctic in exchange for a U.S. agreement to seek permission for voyages in the Northwest Passage. Apparently that deal was turned down by the U.S. Is it not time for the Prime Minister to facilitate a full parliamentary and public discussion of the Government's offers, deals, and compromises on Canadian sovereignty in the Arctic?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member was present at a meeting of a Standing Committee of this House at which there was discussion by officials at some length about the situation in the Arctic. If she was not there, I could get her a copy of the transcript. I would be quite pleased to bring her up to date with the state of knowledge of her colleagues.

The other day one of the Hon. Member's colleagues asked me if I would enter into discussions with the Heads of Government of Yukon and the Northwest Territories regarding discussions fully consistent with Canadian sovereignty undertaken by Canada. I have had those discussions with the Heads of Government of both Yukon and the Northwest Territories. I would be pleased to meet with members of opposition Parties to bring them up to date on the discussions and I think they would share my satisfaction that here, on the floor of the House of Commons yesterday, the President of the United States expressed his interest in seeking an arrangement that would involve mutual respect for sovereignty. That is a very substantial step forward.

INTERNATIONAL SECURITY INQUIRY

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the fact that the Minister has ignored the letters means that he does not know about the letters exchanged between the President and the Prime Minister last week. Therefore, I would ask the Prime Minister to respond. Apparently we were willing to give up our sovereignty.

Instead of making all these secret deals, will the Minister facilitate public discussion? Will he explain more clearly right now what the Prime Minister meant when he spoke on NBC's Meet the Press television program and talked about expanding our military arrangements with the U.S. into the Canadian Arctic?

Does the Minister not agree that Canada's security, the security of the United States, the security of the Soviet Union and the security of all countries would be better facilitated if we focused on the demilitarization of the Arctic rather than the increasing of weapons there?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there are a number of assumptions in that question. One is the accuracy of the transcript which, in her own interests, I think the Hon. Member would want to verify.

Ms. Jewett: I already have, you dummy.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The second is her assertion which I categorically deny that Canada has been engaged in any actions that would limit our sovereignty. Quite to the contrary. We inherited a regime that placed limitations upon our ability to express and defend our sovereignty.

Ms. Jewett: The public doesn't believe that.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We changed that regime because we have confidence in that sovereignty. We intend not just to talk about it but to act on it.

Finally, if I may speak about the Hon. Member's interest in demilitarization in the Arctic, I hope she will bring her view to the attention of representatives of the Soviet Union who are now constructing submarines with substantial nuclear and sub-ice activity capabilities.

PUBLIC WORKS

PLACE VINCENT MASSEY AFFAIR—RCMP INQUIRY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board and concerns Place Vincent Massey.

On April 2, referring to this matter, the President of the Treasury Board said this:

> A judgment was made on the merits of the case, and a decision was made in the best interests of the Canadian taxpayer.

Well, according to an article in La Presse, The RCMP are making an investigation into the Place Vincent Massey case.

If the best interests of the Canadian taxpayer were served, as the Minister claims, why would the police be inquiring into this matter?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to comment on an investigation by the RCMP. All I can say is that, with respect to the terms and conditions which had been submitted to Treasury Board, the decision was made in the best interests of Canadians, and I am prepared to defend this decision before anybody. Should the Hon. Member have specific charges in mind, he ought to take the honourable course and make his accusations outside the House.

ALLEGED MISSING DOCUMENTS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. Can he tell the House why he initially refused to give me the documents concerning Vincent Massey Place? Can he say why to this date documents are missing from the file that was obtained under Access to Information? Why was the House not told of the RCMP investigation when the Minister himself knew of it last Thursday, according to a member of his staff to whom I spoke before Question Period?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, in response to the suggestion that I did not supply the Hon. Member with documents, I invited him to indicate exactly what he wanted and I have not heard from him to this date.

I want to put this whole situation in perspective. I have done a study of what the Hon. Member would have us do, which is to retain the present lease. I projected that over a 25-year period. The cost to the taxpayer would be approximately $40 million. By pursuing the course we did the cost to the taxpayer will be $39 million, and we will also own the building and all of the land. I ask: which is the better deal for Canadians?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SEARCH AND RESCUE

PROVISION OF SERVICES THROUGHOUT GREAT LAKES AREA

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and concerns the tragic death on Saturday of an Oakville teenager on Lake Ontario. That death highlights the lack of commitment by both levels of government to appropriate search and rescue services along the Great Lakes. What action are the Minister and his Government willing to take to ensure that Coast Guard rescue facilities, including helicopters, are adequately distributed throughout the Great Lakes, particularly Lake Ontario?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Minister in charge of search and rescue is the Minister of National Defence. However, I want to point out that there is no inadequacy in the provision of search and rescue facilities along the Great Lakes, or across Canada generally. I think the services are certainly adequate. However, the lead Minister would have to be asked if he wants a detailed response.

COAST GUARD SERVICES

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I did not realize that the Coast Guard has now been transferred to the other Minister.

The Minister of Transport is responsible for the Canadian Coast Guard. What is his response to the police chiefs of Halton, Niagara, and Hamilton—Wentworth who recently asked him to provide better Coast Guard services for the area, particularly at one end of the lake?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am the Minister responsible for the Coast Guard. The hon. gentleman asked a question about search and rescue. The Minister in charge of search and rescue for the Government of Canada is the Minister of National Defence and the hon. gentleman should know that. The Minister responsible for the Coast Guard is myself.

If the hon. gentleman has a question he wants to ask in connection with the Coast Guard facilities on Lake Ontario or in any other part of Canada, if he would let me have that question I will get him the details. I do not have in hand right now the details in connection with Coast Guard installations everywhere in Canada. I would like at least a little notice.

NATIONAL REVENUE

ADMINISTRATION OF FARM FUEL TAX REBATE PROGRAM

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. As he has known for some two years, the administration of the farm fuel tax rebate for off-highway use discriminates between agents of oil companies and bulk fuel dealers. The bulk dealers must bear the cost of financing this tax between payment and reimbursement, and the agents do not. Has the Minister, in consultation with the Minister of Finance, completed his assessment of possible solutions to this problem, such as the provision of cash advances to bulk fuel dealers?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the interest of my colleague in this matter. I want to assure him that the Minister of Finance and I are discussing it. We understand there are cash flow difficulties but I want to point out that this excellent program, one of many brought forward to assist farmers, has done a great deal of good. I am seeking to improve the administrative efficiency of this program in my Department to see what we can do to make it even more beneficial.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS—HOTEL ROOM INCIDENT

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General and concerns the infringement of the personal sovereignty of a distinguished Canadian citizen. On Sunday an American official unlawfully and without authority entered the hotel room of Mel Hurtig, Chairman of the Council of Canadians, when that council was in the process of demonstrating on Parliament Hill. Will the Minister tell this House what the Government intends to do about this rather unfortunate incident?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity to clear up this matter for the Hon. Member.

In the first instance the American official was a member of the U.S. State Department. They had been checked into the sixth floor. They had been given all of the keys for the rooms on that floor. He went to the sixth floor with all of the keys given to him by the Chateau Laurier and was in the process of placing gifts in the various rooms.

He opened Mr. Hurtig's door. Mr. Hurtig had not as yet checked out. He was taking a late check-out. The U.S. official never crossed the threshold into the room. Mr. Hurtig has never made any complaint to the RCMP or the city police.

I would suggest that the Hon. Member observe the admonition of his Leader and research his material before making allegations of that nature.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR APOLOGY FROM AMERICAN GOVERNMENT

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General knows that the American agent had no business whatsoever being in that hotel room.

Some Hon. Members: Why not?

Mr. Mazankowski: Get hold of your group, John.

Mr. Nunziata: The Tories might heckle Mr. Hurtig, but he is prepared to stand up for Canada when the Tories are not.

Mr. Crosbie: Why didn't he get himself elected? Why is he sneaking around hotel rooms?

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious, in the circumstances, that an apology should be forthcoming—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: —from the American Government. Is the Solicitor General prepared to ask the American Government for an official explanation of what occurred—

Mr. Crosbie: Ask the Chateau Laurier.

Mr. Nunziata: —and ask for an apology on behalf of Mr. Hurtig?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, do I understand correctly that the Hon. Member is asking me to have the United States apologize because Mr. Hurtig was late checking out of his room?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood.

Mr. Beatty: Further supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask Hon. Members to give the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood the opportunity to ask a question.

FILM INDUSTRY

DISTRIBUTION—CANADIAN CONTROL

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister who apparently set President Reagan straight about film distribution in Canada and pointed out that the takings go 97 per cent to Americans and only 3 per cent to Canadians.

Would the Prime Minister tell Canadians what he is going to do about the situation? In particular, is he willing to act on a recommendation from a task force, which recommendation has been sitting around for more than a year, that film distribution, as broadcasting for example, should be under Canadian ownership and control? Will we have some action to assert sovereignty in this area?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, this question certainly brings to the fore the value of the discussions which can take place between the Prime Minister and the President of the United States. In fact, it was a good opportunity for the Prime Minister to explain to President Reagan what is intended by the legislation on film distribution which will be introduced. This legislation will deal with the Canadian domestic distribution problem. I am sure we can invite the Hon. Member's support for that move.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my supplementary question on the same subject to the Prime Minister. The Minister has only undertaken to implement a very small portion of the recommendations. Indeed, the Minister is on record saying that she simply wants to ask for the agreement of the American majors on the subject.

Is asking for agreement from the American distribution companies enough? Is it not time we asserted sovereignty and Canadians took charge of this area of our culture? Should we not be acting and making those decisions rather than asking for help?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, this problem has existed in Canada for 50 years. It is a problem which has not been addressed in the past.

I would be glad to send the Hon. Member a copy of the speech I made outlining the intent of the legislation in this area. I may say that this has received the applause and endorsement of many people in the Canadian film industry who are looking forward to this move.

DEMAND BY PEOPLE OF RIVIÈRE-DES-PRAIRIES FOR HOME DELIVERY SERVICE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Carole Jacques (Montreal—Mercier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post. Last Sunday more than 500 Rivière-des-Prairies ward residents of my electoral riding expressed dissatisfaction about the installation and use of superboxes.

[English]

Those people want door-to-door mail delivery.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I should like to know what the Minister plans to do to correct this situation?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the decision to use group or community mail boxes was taken in 1978 by the then Government as an economy measure given the huge deficits the Post Office was running. We expect that within the coming year the Post Office will be in a break-even position and, if we are able to proceed with the corporate plan, will be in a position to start examining the service questions which we inherited and are trying to address in the most efficient and effective manner possible.

INTERNATIONAL YEAR OF SHELTER FOR THE HOMELESS

SHELTER CENTRES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. The year 1987 has been designated as the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless. A study released yesterday by the Canadian Council on Social Development showed that in Canada, more than 100,000 homeless were received in shelter centres. An instant survey on the night of January 22, 1987 found that 8,000 people had to use shelter centres that night: 1,800 in Toronto, 700 in Montreal, 700 in Winnipeg, 400 in Vancouver and 400 in Edmonton. My question to the Prime Minister is as follows: aside from organizing a conference in September, what does the Government intend to do in the way of concrete measures to respond to the needs of the homeless in Canada?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have also looked at the statistics which the Hon. Member has brought to the attention of the House. Through the social housing programs of CMHC and the federal-provincial programs of the Canada Assistance Plan in 1987-88 there are an additional 45,000 units in social housing, a 10 per cent increase of the total number to 450,000. As well, the federal and provincial Governments are sharing a Canada Assistance Plan program of $8 billion, $4 billion from the federal side. As I am sure the Hon. Member knows, in order for additional moneys to be spent the provinces would have to trigger those programs for the federal Government to cost-share under the terms of the Canada Assistance Plan.

NEED FOR ROOMS—REQUEST FOR MORE FUNDS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): My supplementary is directed to the Prime Minister or to the same Minister.

Is the Government prepared to commit itself—the Minister knows perfectly well that housing units are not the answer to meeting the needs of the homeless and that what is needed is rooming houses—is the Government prepared to commit itself to building 10,000 additional units in the form of rooming houses, with the resources, to meet the needs of the homeless? And is the Government prepared to set aside additional funding to double the number of shelter centres in Montreal and across Canada?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, in the last year we have dedicated the entire budget of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, namely $1.5 billion, to those most in need. In dealing with the plight of the homeless in this International Year of the Homeless, we have also given $1.7 million to various projects to research the problem and make recommendations. We are holding an international congress in Ottawa this fall to review those reports.

CIRCUMVENTION OF DUTY ON U.S. CORN IMPORTS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. The Minister will be aware that some American shippers are circumventing Canada's countervailing duty on U.S. corn. Cheaters on both sides of the border are getting around the countervail by mixing corn with sorghum and soybean meal, then separating the mixture and selling the corn in Canada. Does the Minister have specific plans in place which will immediately stop this illegal bypass of our U.S. corn countervail?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question on this important matter. As he knows, this corn countervail has generated a great deal of interest. Our Department is looking into these allegations. I will check more closely and report to the Hon. Member. However, I can assure him that we are aware of the situation and are moving to take measures.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, other entrepreneurs are circumventing the corn countervail by bringing truckloads of corn into Alberta duty free via British Columbia. What really is the government policy on U.S. corn imports? Are those countervails in place and are they enforceable?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, of course they are in place. As a matter of fact there will be a hearing on May 26, I believe, to look into the public interest aspect of this. In the meantime there are certain administrative difficulties which the Hon. Member has pointed out. However, I can assure him that we are aware of these and are monitoring them.

POSSIBILITY OF ABOLISHING SUPERMAILBOXES—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post.

Sunday afternoon, people from Rivière-des-Prairies were very upset because they were not getting home delivery. The Hon. Member for Montreal—Mercier gave him the assurance that a year from now, the superboxes would be abolished and they would be getting home delivery.

Is this true or is this part of a strategy by Canada Post and the Government to get people to accept the superboxes temporarily and later to introduce delivery by superboxes on an indefinite basis?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I said in answer to a question earlier today, the decision on group or community mailboxes was taken by the Liberal Government in 1978. That policy has been in place. The fact is that to reverse that totally right now would cost several hundreds of millions of dollars per year. If the Hon. Member can suggest a way in which that money can be transferred to the Post Office, we will consider fulfilling his and my desires.

REQUEST FOR HOME DELIVERY SERVICE

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I would like to correct the Minister. In 1978 the green boxes were installed temporarily until the subdivision was organized and sidewalks were built. It was after 1985 when his Government installed the permanent supermailboxes. Will you stop treating Canadians as second-class citizens and deliver the mail to everybody?

• (1500)

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the Hon. Member read the Marchment committee report which studied the post office system. If he wants to lay blame for the problems the Post Office has now he will see a succession of Liberal Postmasters General who were responsible for the mess out of which we are now trying to dig ourselves so that we can provide the very best service to all Canadians.

IMMIGRATION

REFUGEE STATUS—REQUEST MADE BY CHILEANS IN ARGENTINA—INQUIRY WHY MINISTER REFUSED TO MEET NOËL ST-PIERRE, LAWYER

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Why did the Minister refuse to meet Montreal lawyer Noël St-Pierre who is on Parliament Hill today and who went to Buenos Aires to pick up the statements of Chileans requesting refugee status?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have had many opportunities to refer to this matter in the House, and the information we have been given until now does not enable us to identify other cases of Chilean refugees in Argentina. Should Mr. St-Pierre have additional information to warrant a review of these cases, he should convey such information to our embassy in Argentina where officials would weigh new evidence. We would then make the appropriate recommendations.

REQUEST FOR RE-EXAMINATION OF CLAIMS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I put into the Minister's hand an hour ago a two-page summary in both official languages of the statements of ten of these Chileans who were imprisoned, beaten, tortured or raped by the Chilean military before they escaped from Chile. Will the Minister read those two pages and direct that all 70 remaining cases be re-examined in light of Mr. St. Pierre's new information?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, that is exactly the answer I gave a moment ago. We were given four or five different documents concerning the evaluation of Chileans in Argentina. The number dropped from 36 to two. We consulted the people who are officially authorized to evaluate refugee cases outside this country; two were referred to us and I agreed to recognize them. Apparently Quebec has issued immigration certificates to eight or nine other applicants. Again I would suggest that the same procedure be followed and if new cases do come up they will be submitted to Canadian officials for appropriate recommendations to me.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the Member for York West, which will be the last opposition question. There is one government question to come.

REQUEST THAT FILES BE REOPENED

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration and it concerns the same subject. The Canadian lawyer documented evidence that these individuals whom the Minister deemed not to be bona fide refugees were beaten, raped, tortured, jailed, fired upon, and intimidated. Why did the Minister ignore such clear-cut evidence of persecution? Why did he mislead Canadians by suggesting clearly and concluding that they were not refugees? Will he not re-evaluate or reopen the files so that, in the quest to get tough on immigration policy, legitimate refugees will not be ignored or sacrificed?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I repeat the same thing for the third time: on behalf of Canada, people in that country have been specially authorized to make official evaluations of applicants for refugee status in Argentina. People may indeed claim that some of the refugees were tortured and persecuted. Such evidence must be submitted to Canadian officials who will make their evaluation and recommendations. This is the third time I have said so.

POSSIBLE IMMEDIATE REVIEW OF INDIVIDUALS WHO FORESEE LIFE OF TORTURE AND POSSIBLE DEATH—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, considering that the evidence on torture has been completely ignored, that the interview process has been botched, and that the UNHCR was not asked to make their recommendations before the Minister rejected them, I ask: Would he not admit that the entire decision making process was unfair, and then ask for an immediate review of cases of individuals who foresee a life of torture and probable death?

[English]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have just said and have told my friend many times that unfortunately we do have to refer to the people who have the right to assess. He is wrong when he says that we have not considered the recommendations of Miss Herrera. It is not possible for her to make any recommendations, but she told our office in Buenos Aries that in her opinion we could consider 16 people. Our officers considered all those people again and they recommended that the Minister agree with two cases. That is what we did. It must be very clear that we must always deal with the officers who are especially appointed for this responsibility on behalf of Canada. I will not change that policy.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question. The Hon. Member for York East.

PAROLE

BRITISH COLUMBIA EXPERIMENT USING ELECTRONIC MONITORING ANKLE BRACELETS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. He is aware that the Province of British Columbia is experimenting with the use of electronic ankle bracelets to keep track of provincial prisoners who are out on the street on parole. Does the Solicitor General have any intention to introduce the use of electronic bracelets to keep track of federal prisoners who are out on parole, a group which will soon include those who have been convicted of first degree murder?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. We have no plans at this time to install such bracelets on prisoners to monitor them, but we are watching very carefully the results of the British Columbia experiment. We will see whether or not that might be feasible some time in the future.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with regard to the amendments. It is my understanding that when we concluded debate at one o'clock an Hon. Member from the New Democratic Party had the floor. If that is the case, how much time does he have remaining?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member who had the floor had completed his remarks. The floor is open. In the usual course it would go to the Official Opposition.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The next question is on Motion No. 5. Mr. Dingwall moved:

That Bill C-22 be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 19 to 49 at page 11 and lines 1 and 2 at page 12 and substituting the following therefor:

"(2) The prohibition under subsection (1) expires in respect of a medicine four years after the date of the notice of compliance that is first issued in respect of a medicine where that notice of compliance is issued after the coming into force of this section."

The next question is on Motion No. 11. Mr. Dingwall moved:

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 8 to 14 at page 12 and substituting the following therefor:

"(4) Subsection (1) does not apply in respect of a medicine where

(a) on the day of coming into force of this section a notice of compliance has been issued to the patentee and a license has been granted under section 41 in respect of the medicine but no notice of compliance has been issued to the licensee; or

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Motion No. 12 will now be debated and voted on separately.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North) moved:

Motion No. 12.

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 11 to 14 at page 12 and substituting the following therefor:

"licence has been issued in respect of the medicine or a notice of compliance in respect of the medicine has been issued to a person other than the patentee."

He said: Mr. Speaker, despite the repeated claims by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) that the passage of Bill C-22 will not increase the price of prescription drugs, the fact is that with the exception of the Minister and the multinational drug companies there are no individuals or groups who appeared before the committee and made representations to members of the House who did not make it very clear that in their view the cost of prescription drugs will rise very substantially.

This question has been debated for years. In the late 1960s we realized that Canadian people were paying the second highest prices for prescription drugs in the industrialized world. That realization, which was based on a number of studies conducted by Government departments and Parliamentary committees, led to the change in the patent law with respect to prescription drugs which permitted generic companies to produce drugs under licence after paying a royalty to the company which did the original research and development. That led to a situation where we had virtually the lowest prices for prescription drugs in the western world.

That change in the law has saved the Canadian people hundreds of millions of dollars. Dr. Eastman, who conducted the most recent thorough study on this question, estimated in 1983 the people of Canada saved $211 million. The savings would be even greater if we continued with the legislation because the price of new drugs is escalating very rapidly.

Provincial governments made it clear to the Parliamentary committee, and to the Minister, that the cost to their drug plans would rise very substantially. The Province of Nova Scotia made that clear to the Minister. The Province of Manitoba appeared before the Parliamentary committee. The Province of British Columbia in its recent budget increased the amount of money a family has to pay, before its pharmacare program takes over part of the cost, to $250 per year.

Yesterday we learned of how tough things are going to be in Saskatchewan. Representatives of the Government of Saskatchewan who appeared before the Parliamentary committee which studied this Bill seemed to feel that province would not be very adversely affected. However, let me put on the record the text of a news item which was part of the CTV National news last night. The province of Saskatchewan is cutting its spending to reduce its deficit of $1.2 billion. In the latest move, a group of doctors lost their jobs. Some Saskatchewan social agencies have already been warned their funding will be substantially reduced for things such as the shelter for battered women.

Because of the slump in the oil industry and agricultural revenues, the Government is spending $300 million more than it takes in. Vital services such as health care are on the block. The main teaching hospital is forced to let go all of its medical specialists, including the only AIDS specialist in Saskatchewan.

The Government is also delaying construction of another university building. This latest move has brought strong protests from all students. The Province of Saskatchewan plans to announce more funding cuts this week before proceeding with next month's budget.

Can anyone doubt that the Government of Saskatchewan will be placing a substantial fee on the residents of Saskatchewan and that its drug plan will have to pay substantially more for prescription drugs when this legislation passes?

What this legislation does is extend the period of exclusivity during which time the multinational companies can charge whatever they want without fear of any competition. It gives the multinational drug company an extra six years of exclusivity and it does that despite the recommendations of Dr. Eastman that the period of exclusivity should be limited to four years and in return companies wishing to receive a licence to produce the drug would pay a 14 per cent royalty.

Bill C-22 does more than that, Mr. Speaker. It gives the multinational companies an extra protection, inasmuch as it would eliminate the many licence applications by generic drug manufacturers already in the pipeline. I understand that there are 150 such applications which have not yet been processed. Should Bill C-22 pass, those applications would not be proceeded with, thus depriving the people of Canada of lower priced drugs.

Bill C-22 says that the restrictions in Section 44.11(1) do not apply if the compulsory licence or a notice of compliance had been granted by June 27 last, the date upon which the first generic drug Bill was to be introduced. The Bill says that the licence and the notice are required.

The amendment I have proposed, Mr. Speaker, is one suggested by the Consumers' Association of Canada, which said:

> In the case where a company has received either a compulsory licence or a notice of compliance but not both it is unfair to grant retroactive exclusivity of seven (years) to the patented drug.

Mr. Speaker, this was a statement with which Dr. Eastman agreed when he appeared before the legislative committee. In fact, he mentioned it twice in his appearance, and it was one of three recommendations which he made to the committee. He said:

> I think the legislation could be improved by these three things: allowing the R and D ratio of individual firms to be revealed; allowing the board to remove, if need be, the exemption from compulsory licensing from all the patents of firms with excessive prices; and then—

And this is the part of his remarks which refers to this amendment:

> —and then the most telling change would be to reconsider the transitional arrangements and allowing firms that have compulsory licences to exercise them when they receive an NOC.

There is also a good practical reason why this amendment should be accepted; it will save Canadians a good deal of money. One example of this was provided by the Canadian Drug Manufacturers Association, a member company which had a generic equivalent of the ulcer drug Zantac ready for introduction this year. If Bill C-22 is passed, the introduction of the generic equivalent of Zantac will be postponed for seven years, and that generic equivalent was to be priced at one-half of the brand name Zantac.

Thousands of Canadians suffer from ulcers. Here we have an opportunity by a legitimate generic drug manufacturer to bring on to the market a generic equivalent to Zantac at substantial savings to the people of Canada being lost. In the generic equivalent, we had a product that meets the requirements of the present legislation, and we had a manufacturer who was willing to pay the royalty required.

The opportunity for the people of Canada to realize the savings that are made possible through the availability of generic drugs will disappear with the passage of Bill C-22.

Mr. Speaker, for the reasons I have outlined, I move that Bill C-22 be amended in accordance with the motion standing in my name.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, let me say at the outset that the amendment set out in Motion No. 12, put forward by my hon. colleague of the New Democratic Party, makes eminent good sense. For purposes of the record, Mr. Speaker, I wish to read the amendment, following which I shall address the House on it.

The amendment reads as follows:

> That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 11 to 14 at page 12 and substituting the following therefor:
> "licence has been issued in respect of the medicine or a notice of compliance in respect of the medicine has been issued to a person other than the patentee."

This particular amendment, along with previous amendments, and indeed those to follow, in my view, both in substance and its consequential effect, will improve the over-all thrust of what we believe to be a deficient Bill C-22.

We had hoped to bring about improvements to the Bill during committee consideration. As I understand it, the purpose of committee consideration is to find ways by which to improve legislation. We did in fact submit some amendments during committee consideration of Bill C-22, but those amendments were, by and large, rejected by the majority of members on the legislative committee.

To my disappointment, there seems to be a reluctance to try to improve the Bill, and this notwithstanding the fact that we had substantial evidence adduced from different witnesses in favour of amendment.

Bill C-22, without amendment, is flawed. It is my hope that Members opposite will reflect seriously on this amendment and its consequential effect on other aspects of the Bill.

Many of the witnesses who appeared before the legislative committee on Bill C-22 expressed, without qualification, the fear that they had with respect to the cost of prescription drugs, the lack of enforceability with regard to research and development, and the lack of jurisdiction of the Patent Medicines Review Board—something which has been part and parcel of the Act since day one, Mr. Speaker.

It should be kept in mind by Members opposite that there is an opportunity now to participate in improving Bill C-22—something which I hope will be the objective of all Members of Parliament. For some reason—a reason alluded to, perhaps, in testimony before the committee, as well as in the oral presentations in the Chamber—the Government is determined to proceed with this Bill, unbalanced as it is, to the benefit of multinational corporations situated to the south of the Canada-U.S. border and to the detriment of the Canadian generic drug industry, Canadian consumers, and also, in my view, to the detriment of the Canadian pharmaceutical industry as a whole.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, as public policy-makers enacting legislation, presumably for the benefit of Canadians, that we should ensure that the pillars or the underpinnings, if you will, of any piece of legislation are in place. In this particular instance I speak of the interests of consumers; I speak of a public policy which addresses the Canadian pharmaceutical industry: research and development, the jobs, the opportunities, and the further enhancement of that particular sector in its linkages with biotech industries, and what have you. It seems to me that we would want to have public policy which addresses all of those concerns.

As I have said, without this amendment, Bill C-22 is flawed. The Government has not, either through its members or through the witnesses it asked to appear before the legislative committee, been able to adduce substantive evidence to refute the arguments that we in the Opposition have been making. It has, however, had some of the lobbyists from multinational corporations circulate to Members of Parliament convenient polling data that they were able to construe from a certain polling company in this country, data which seemed, at the time, to meet its needs and achieve its particular objectives. It failed, however, to give the other side of the coin in terms of polling data readily available to Members of the House which showed the concerns of Canadians with regard to Bill C-22.

Dr. Eastman was appointed by the Government, of which I was a member back in 1983. He reviewed very carefully the pharmaceutical industry in Canada. He came up with a number of recommendations which collectively, not individually, met the objectives of a sound Canadian pharmaceutical industry. The Government has gone in the opposite direction. Perhaps the rationale for doing that is that we appointed Dr. Eastman back in 1983, and the Government does not want to have anything to do with his recommendations in 1985. I hope that is not the case. We should look with an open mind at the recommendations of this distinguished individual, both their substance and the effects they will have upon Canadians.

As the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) advocated today, one recommendation took into consideration some of the testimony educed at committee stage, even from Dr. Eastman when he appeared before the committee, which gave credence to the substance of the amendment of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North. However, Hon. Members opposite rejected any positive amendments we tried to put forward during committee stage.

I do not wish to comment upon the intentions or motives of Hon. Members opposite, but it is quite appalling, if the legislation is so good, so wonderful, and serves the best interests of all Canadians, that Hon. Members opposite would have availed themselves of the opportunity to stand in their places and refute either the substance of our amendments or, in the alternative, clearly fail to point out to Canadians from where benefits will come as a result of the passage of Bill C-22 unamended.

I cannot predict with any degree of certainty how the House will conduct itself at the end of report stage in terms of voting on the various amendments. However, it seems that it would be beneficial to Hon. Members on this side of the House—and I speak of my colleagues in the New Democratic Party—if we had some indication where Hon. Members on the government side stand on the amendments. In that way we would assist you, Mr. Speaker, in your responsibilities in this great institution by facilitating swift passage of the amendments. We do not want to take up the time of the House unduly in terms of debating the amendments. However, if it is the intent or the motivation of Hon. Members opposite to refuse to accept the amendments, both in terms of their substance and the spirit in which they were put forward, and to vote them down with their huge majority, it presents another set of circumstances with which we must deal.

I see you signalling, Mr. Speaker, that I have a minute remaining. In summary, I support the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North who served with a great deal of distinction on the legislative committee examining Bill C-22. I urge all Hon. Members to give serious consideration to the amendment. I hope they will respond in the affirmative when, at the end of report stage, the Speaker puts the question on the particular motion. It is a good amendment. It will improve Bill C-22. I think Canadians would want to see us as legislators coming to some consensus on this particular aspect of Bill C-22.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to express my appreciation for the intelligent, prescient, and perceptive words of the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) in recognizing the tremendous work of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), along with him, particularly in committee under circumstances which I think all witnesses would identify as difficult. I mean by that witnesses to the proceedings of the committee as well as witnesses who appeared before it in an attempt to have their voices heard in respect of the legislation presently before us. They certainly must have left the committee feeling that there was a serious flaw in the way in which parliamentary committees operate. In many instances, particularly when they consider that the legislation was not in their interest and so expressed themselves, I am sure they found themselves, to say the least, ignored by the majority of the committee which represents a Government totally committed to the enactment of the legislation presently under debate.

I will not review again the history of the legislation in detail. However, I simply call attention to the fact that we have a reversion to a period of time before 1969 when multinational drug companies enjoyed a considerable period of exclusivity in respect of the manufacture of certain drugs under patent.

Subsequent to that date, legislation was introduced which provided for compulsory licensing. We know how well the system worked, and we are deeply disturbed that the Government chose to turn back the clock, in effect, to accord to multinationals the same advantages for exploitation which they had in the past, and to subject ordinary Canadian citizens in need of medication to a situation which existed before 1969. At that time they were completely open to the exploitation of their ailments for the benefit of excessive profits by the multinational drug companies which, in collusion with the Government, produced this legislation for the House.

As the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond identified, the Eastman Commission examined the situation which was extant in Canada between 1969 and 1985. Although he saw some deficiencies in our arrangements, Dr. Eastman recommended, after a thorough examination and study—and perhaps it was the most thorough examination of the drug market and drug legislation in Canada—some fine tuning of the Patent Act in respect of patent drugs. In spite of a very erudite, well researched, well informed, and well written report, the Government laid before us this legislation.

I call particular attention to the discussion contained in the Eastman Report on the question of patents. I do not want to burden the House with a detailed examination of the intricate arguments advanced by Professor Eastman, suffice it to say that he reached the conclusion that there was an appropriateness, a suitability, a measure of justice and some advantages in providing for some period of exclusivity. He posed the question: what would be an appropriate length of time for such exclusivity? In looking at 10 years or longer periods of time he saw certain dangers. He found that the chief danger was a discouragement of significant real research designed to produce genuinely new pharmaceuticals. He asked the question, how much time would be necessary for a pharmaceutical manufacturer, the originator of a patented drug, to recoup what research expenditures and whatever promotion costs were necessary while retaining some sort of balance between the role of the patent in his view—that is to stimulate the availability of novelty—and a drifting off into the almost useless research into a drug, not quite the same as a drug already patented, which could be patented at the disadvantage of patients needing new means of treatment and cure?

The Government rejected the arguments and provided instead for a 10 year period of exclusivity. We have already advanced amendments which the Government has voted down. They would have attempted to reduce the period of exclusivity to the period recommended by Professor Eastman.

My colleague has indicated that no Members on the government side have seen fit to participate in the debate. Surely at this stage when we are considering an amendment that would apply the period of exclusivity in a fair way, the retroactivity of exclusivity in a transition period to drugs that may be licensed or which have a notice of compliance must be a situation to which members of the Government would object. We know that in the past they have taken righteous objection to the retroactive application of new legislation.

I am sure if government Members would participate in the present debate they would prove capable of enlightenment on this simple situation. We have a situation in which drugs which have a licence or a notice of compliance are subjected to periods of seven or eight years of exclusivity. Our amendment would provide that any drug that has either a compulsory licence or a notice of compliance would not fall under the restrictions of Subsection 41.11(1). This makes a great deal of sense. It made a great deal of sense to Professor Eastman when he appeared before the committee. Doubtless members of the committee will not remember this, having paid so little attention to him, but in respect of changes that ought to be made in the legislation, the most telling change "would be to reconsider the transitional arrangements allowing firms that have compulsory licences to exercise them when they receive a notice of compliance".

The issue of retroactivity is not the only issue. It is really a question of fairness but it is also a question of cost. As it turns out, the drug known as Zantac was on the verge of being made available in its generic form as ranitidine. This will not now be available as a result of the way Subsection 41.11 is presently worded, and it will cost the consumer money. In terms of fairness and of opposition to the retroactive application of legislation of this sort and in terms of maintaining at least some measure of concern for ordinary Canadians for whom the cost of ranitidine in the form of Zantac will be much higher than otherwise without this amendment, I would urge the Government to consider very carefully the proposition being advanced in this amendment and support it enthusiastically, and I would hope vocally.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee, and Motion No. 12 (Mr. Orlikow, p. 4936).

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I am very concerned that the Government is not going to heed the request of our Party to approve Motion No. 12, which I think offers a very good and helpful suggestion, one that is in the best interests of Canadians. I really do not understand why the Government is taking such a hard line with respect to Bill C-22. It is obvious that the people of Canada are very concerned with the trend being developed by the absolute determination of the Government to bulldoze this legislation through the House of Commons in the form in which it is presently set and which will ultimately lead to higher drug prices for Canadians.

There is no solace in the minds of Canadians that there will be increased investment in research and development over the next 10 years. They do not believe that we are going to see the $1.4 billion in investment. Canadians, especially older Canadians who will be most affected by higher drug prices, realize that before 1969 very little research and development was done in Canada. At that time Canada had the second highest drug prices in the world, second only to the United States. It was not until 1969, when the then Liberal Government introduced regulations to allow generic drug companies to be a factor in drugs in Canada, that Canadians were able to see their drug prices come down to at least a reasonable level. I would say that at the present time Canadians are enjoying savings in the amount of about $211 million a year as a result of those changes in 1969.

At a time when other countries are looking upon Canada as having a very humane and straightforward approach to drugs, we are becoming regressive and want to roll the clock back prior to 1969. This is not only alarming Canadians but people of all countries. Why are we doing this? We are doing it to please the United States to buy a free trade agreement from the United States with our more or less friendly attitude through Bill C-22. But it is not only the United States that manufactures drugs, many other countries do, particularly Switzerland. This will not be helpful to drug companies in Switzerland.

Mr. McDermid: Why? Explain that.

Mr. MacLellan: I cannot really understand how we are going to benefit Canada with this policy. Even if there were $1.4 billion in additional investment, how will we compensate for the $3 million, $4 million or $5 million of additional drug prices and expenditures that Canadians will have to pay over the next few years? It is very sad indeed that this is being foisted on Canadians.

• (1550)

It is unfortunate that the recommendations of the Eastman report were not accepted. Those recommendations took a step in the direction the Government wishes to take. However, they were not the steps the powerful drug lobbies from the United States wanted the Government to take. It is unfortunate that what we are doing is dictated not so much by the interests of Canadians but by the interests of forces outside Canada. It is so very obvious that this lobbying has been done strongly by the drug companies and lobbyists in the United States. Pretty well every Canadian organization and interest present in Washington has been lobbied, and particularly the Ambassador. It is obvious as well that the drug companies in the United States had advance information with respect to the contents of Bill C-22.

It is alarming that this Bill is harsher than the Bill proposed last June. I do not know why that Bill was not simply renumbered and reintroduced in the new session. It seems that that was not acceptable. I am concerned that the Government feels that it really does not have to listen to the amendments that are being put forward. With its majority, it feels comfortable in pushing the Bill through as it presently reads.

Mr. McDermid: How about committee, now, Russ? Be honest.

Mr. MacLellan: Yes, I know it was in committee and it received a good hearing there. However, some very good amendments have been proposed by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) and even by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). I feel that it would be in the interests of all Parties to examine closely these amendments that are being presented during report stage of Bill C-22.

I hope the Government will allow members of the Opposition to continue this debate because there are a great many issues of concern that really ought to be discussed. I do not know if we will have the opportunity to discuss all of the amendments that are before the House. There are some amendments that we have not debated, but I hope that the Government will listen to this debate. We will continue to discuss this Bill in the hopes that some changes will be made. It does not seem likely that the Government will withdraw this Bill, so I now hope that the Government will at least listen to some of the suggestions that are being put forward.

I do not think that we can honestly expect drug prices to hold indefinitely. I do not think we will see drug prices rise immediately because existing drug prices will not increase, but I do think the prices of new drugs will increase. What confirms that in my mind is that if the federal Government and the provinces did not think that drug prices would increase, why would the provinces be offered $100 million over the next four years at $25 million a year as compensation?

We could go on and on but we do not seem to be changing the mind of the Government. I hope the Government will relent and will make some changes in the Bill. I hope it will listen carefully to the Opposition and will carefully examine the suggested amendments.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak on Motion No. 12 moved by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). I would like to say a word of appreciation to him for the hard and dedicated work he has been doing on behalf of Canadians. He is trying to bring the Government to its senses so that it will realize that what it is doing is not only harmful to the financial situation and health of Canadians but is harmful to the Government itself. The Government will pay a price for foisting this kind of legislation upon Canadians.

Quite frankly, I wish more Conservative Members would speak up on behalf of their constituents. We have been tabling petitions and receiving letters on this issue, and I am sure Members on the government side have as well. I recall, for example, the courage that was shown by my good friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon), who spoke up against the deindexing of seniors' pensions. He knew that there was a substantial number of senior citizens in his constituency so he spoke up on their behalf. Because he and other members of the Conservative caucus did that, they helped to bring the Government to its senses and the Government did not go ahead with deindexing as it very much wanted to do. I do not hear government Members speaking in support of the very sensible and intelligent amendments to this Bill that have been moved by the Opposition, amendments that would at least ameliorate the worst conditions in the Bill.

Motion No. 12 would provide that the restrictions in Clause 41.11(1) would not apply if the compulsory licence or a notice of compliance had been granted by last June 27, the date on which the first generic Bill was to be introduced. This Bill on the other hand provides that both the licence and the notice are required. This is a form of retroactive legislation. When in opposition, Conservatives were very opposed to retroactive legislation. They felt that retroactivity was a great legislative sin. I think they should take the same position now that they are in government rather than retroactively robbing Canadians of the right to purchase generic drugs.

Day after day in Question Period, members of our Party tried to have the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) come clean and admit that this Bill would result in higher costs for Canadians who had to purchase drugs. Day after day, the Minister attempted to stonewall us. Finally, it came down to a semantic dispute between a higher price or a higher cost. The average Canadian has a great deal of difficulty understanding the very fine distinction the Minister has made. Whether the average Canadian has to pay a higher price for drugs or drugs have a higher cost, he or she will have to reach into his or her pocket and take out more money to get the drugs needed to maintain health.

This legislation will not only result in higher costs down the road but it will result in higher costs almost immediately. As an example, when it appeared before the committee, the Canadian Drug Manufacturers' Association said that it had a generic equivalent for the ulcer drug Zantac ready for introduction this year until the retroactive legislation took effect. This generic drug, which was priced at one-half the price of the brand name product, is now going to be lost for seven years. Canadians will be hit with higher drug prices almost immediately. Some 153 applications have been filed by generic companies on brand name drugs. This higher cost will not hit Canadians somewhere down the line, it will hit them right now. It is retroactive legislation and most unfair to the generic drug companies and those people who depend upon drugs to maintain their health.

The Consumers' Association of Canada has asked for an amendment such as this and in doing so it said that in the case where a company has received either a compulsory licence or a notice of compliance but not both it is unfair to grant retroactive exclusivity of seven years to the patented drug. Dr. Eastman agreed when he appeared before the committee. Of course the Government did not accept the Eastman report recommendations. One of those recommendations was that there should be a period of exclusivity for four years, and the Government said it will be 10 years. In that time brand names will become so solidly established that it will be very difficult for a generic drug to have any real effect on prices.

Dr. Eastman also said the legislation could be improved by three things. One, allow the research and development ratio of individual firms to be revealed. Two, allow the board to remove, if need be, the exemption from compulsory licensing of all patents held by firms with excessive prices. Third, and this is the one that matters, the most telling change would be to reconsider the transitional arrangements and allow firms with compulsory licences to exercise them when they receive an NOC.

I have already pointed out that this retroactive provision in the legislation will cost Canadians money. It is bad legislation both because it is retroactive and because it costs Canadians money. It is the kind of legislation this Government should not be trying to foist on Canadians. In the name of fairness, good legislation, and concern for the well-being of the health of Canadians as well as their financial ability to pay for the drugs, I urge the Government to accept this amendment.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in support of the motion proposed by my hon. colleague the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). The purpose of the amendment is very clear. It is a very important amendment which I hope Members of this House will see fit to adopt. The Government is seeking to extend significantly the time during which patents will be protected, this despite the recommendation of the Eastman report. This legislation not only denies Canadian consumers new generic drugs for 10 years, but also denies them for seven years or eight years those drugs which are in the regulatory approval mill, in other words, generics which may have been licensed but not yet approved by the health protection branch. This amendment attempts to deal with that situation and was suggested by representatives of the Consumers' Association of Canada. It would amend Section 41.11 which says, in Subsection (4):

> Subsection (1) does not apply in respect of any licence pertaining to a medicine where on June 27, 1986, a licence has been granted in respect of the medicine and a notice of compliance in respect of the medicine has been issued to the licensee.

This is in effect retroactive legislation. I recall Tories standing up in the House many times to express their strong and vigorous opposition to any notion of retroactivity in legislation. Yet by backdating this proposal to June 27, 1986, the Government is imposing that very thing. The amendment would make it clear that the restrictions in Section 41.11(1) do not apply if the compulsory licence or a notice of compliance had been granted by June 27, 1986, the date on which the first generic drug Bill was introduced. In other words, if the proposed generic drug was in the mill and being analysed by the health protection branch, these new provisions should not apply. Surely that is reasonable.

In suggesting the amendment the CAC said that where a company has received either a compulsory licence or a notice of compliance but not both, it is unfair to grant retroactive exclusivity of seven years to the patented drug. That is exactly what the Government is proposing. I suggest that the amendment is very sensible and will introduce some fairness and equity to this proposal.

Professor Eastman studied this issue exhaustively and with care. He examined some of the difficulties created when a patented drug has too long a period of protection. The Government's proposal is two and a half times the length that Professor Eastman recommended, and therefore it is important to remind the House and Canadians exactly what Professor Eastman said.

While it could be argued that this is a quite a complex and difficult issue, in many respects it is very straightforward. We are talking about the right of Canadians to low cost prescription drugs. We are talking about the right of Canadians to have a Government that will not cave in to pressure from multinational drug companies south of the border as part of a free trade deal. Every Member of this House remembers Clayton Yeutter's complaints about Canadian drug patent laws. We know the Government is caving in to that pressure. A period of 10 years for compulsory licensing is far too long.

My colleague from Winnipeg North has spoken on this point and led the fight, not just on behalf of this caucus but on behalf of all Canadians, against this Draconian legislation. I want to join with my colleague from Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands in saluting the work done by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). He is carrying on in the finest traditions of Members of Parliament from the north end of Winnipeg, including of course Stanley Knowles.

What did Professor Eastman have to say about this suggestion of a 10-year period of exclusivity? He said, and I quote from his report:

• (1610)

> Patent protection may also be too long. This occurs when the period of patent protection is such that the innovator expects to earn profits in excess of the minimum necessary to justify the investment. Inventors' profits from innovation might on the average exceed the rate of return obtainable from other uses of the resources invested in research and development.

He then makes this comment:

> Patent life also has an effect on the choice of research projects.
> If the rewards of investment in research from the temporary monopoly are low, investment in marginal research projects, which are the least promising ones innovators carry on, are foregone even though their benefit for society would exceed the resources used.

He then makes this important point:

> If average patent life is too long, it leads to a reduction in social welfare due to duplication and to overinvestment in marginal projects. The result of excessive patent protection is the attraction of too much investment in research and development and the consequent dissipation of the gains from research.
> Innovating firms may be induced to compete for the high profits on new inventions by increasing their research activities with the result that the discoveries of research which is marginally attractive to the firms bring negligible benefits for society.

In other words, new products do appear but the resources that have been spent to produce them would have benefited society more if they had been spent elsewhere. That argument by Professor Eastman is obviously a very powerful argument in terms of an undue delay in the area of patent protection. Certainly the suggestion of a 10-year period of patent protection is quite unreasonable.

Doctor Eastman also voiced his support for an amendment of the nature of the one which has been proposed by my hon. colleague, the Member for Winnipeg North, when he appeared before the standing committee which studied this issue. He said:

> I think the legislation could be improved by these three things: allowing the R and D ratio of individual firms to be revealed; allowing the board to remove, if need be, the exemption from compulsory licensing from all the patents of firms with excessive prices; and then the most telling change would be to reconsider the transitional arrangements and allowing firms that have compulsory licences to exercise them when they receive an NOC.

That is otherwise known as a notice of compliance. I would like to pick up on one of those points, that with respect to excessive pricing. Ministers of the Government have gone around the country telling Canadians that their proposals with respect to compulsory licensing will not increase the price of drugs in Canada. If that is the case, why is the same Government promising $25 million a year for a four-year period to compensate provinces which have pharmacare plans? It does not make any sense. On the one hand the Government is saying there will not be any additional cost and, in the next breath, is saying that just to be on the safe side it will give the provinces $25 million to compensate in case there are additional costs.

That is Tory logic. My constituents in Burnaby, particularly senior citizens and the disabled who are dependent on drugs and have already been hit by the actions of the provincial Government of British Columbia, do not accept that form of logic. They do not accept that because they know this is simply an excuse of the Tory Government for making a cosy deal with the multinational drug companies as part of an over-all free trade package.

Who will suffer as a result of these proposals? It will not be the friends of the Conservative Party. It will not be the high-paid lobbyists who were busily lobbying the Conservative Government from the law offices of Ogilvy, Renault and elsewhere on this legislation. No, it will be those who can least afford to bear the burden.

I hope that Hon. Members will recognize the importance of this amendment, the fact that it will save Canadians a great deal of money on a wide range of drugs including the ulcer drug, Zantac, which is ready for introduction this year, the generic version of which is one-half the price of the brand name drug. I hope that government Members, including the very distinguished Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn), will be prepared to rise in their places to speak in support of this amendment.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I, too, am very pleased to stand in my place and speak on Bill C-22, particularly with reference to Motion No. 12 proposed by my friend in the New Democratic Party. Bill C-22 is an important piece of legislation for all Canadians. Through Motion No. 12 we are suggesting that in addition to the entire issue of a 10-year patent protection being somewhat unfair, it is unfair with regard to new drugs introduced between first reading of this Bill and the present time. Should the exclusivity clause be triggered, it should not affect those drugs introduced before the Bill was approved by the House of Commons.

Canadians are asking themselves why the large multinational corporations which are discovering drugs are being given a 10-year monopoly. Professor Eastman, a recognized and well-respected expert in this field, has suggested that an exclusivity period of four years is ample time for the multinational corporations to get a return on their investment and register a profit, and that after that time the generic companies in Canada should have the opportunity to duplicate these drugs for the use of Canadians in exchange for a royalty paid to the discoverers of the drug. He suggested that in the end the consumer would also win with a four-year equation.

We must look at the entire equation. We must recognize that the corporations which are investing resources, capital and brainpower to discover new pharmaceutical drugs to cure various diseases and illnesses must have some protection too. The four-year equation recognizes that the generic firms also have to live in this country. I have perhaps the largest of the generic drug manufacturers, Apotex, in my riding. It, too, has invested a great deal of resources and man and womanpower. It has doubled its buildings in the last number of years. It, too, would be affected negatively if Bill C-22 becomes a reality. The resources and jobs in that company are on the line as are the taxes it pays to the City of North York. In addition to the large multinational corporations which propose those arguments, the generic firms which employ Canadians from coast to coast are meritorious of our consideration.

The third player in the equation is the consumer. Under a four-year equation the multinational corporations will make a return on their dollar; the generic firms will be able to compete, expand and pay royalties to the multinational corporations; and the third player, the consumer, will also win. The consumer would be able to obtain drugs at an acceptable and accessible rate. We should not lose sight of the consumer in this equation. We in this Party believe that all Canadians, whether rich or poor, whether young or old, whether living in Toronto, Vancouver or Halifax, who need prescription drugs have the right to have drugs at their disposal which will not cost them an arm and a leg. That was the vision of Professor Eastman in his recommendation of a four-year plan. Canadians want to know why the Conservative administration wishes to increase patent protection from a four-year proposal to ten years. They want to know for whom the Government is introducing such a proposal and who will benefit from this legislation. It will certainly not be Canadians at large, including senior citizens on fixed pensions who require regular drugs. It will certainly not be single mothers with a number of children who require medicine.

Obviously, the large multinational corporations from the United States who are essentially dictating this policy will be the winners from this legislation. They propose that there will be some $1.4 billion in research and development, but there are no guarantees. There are no guarantees that the money will be spent in this country or that the spin-offs will take place here rather than in the United States. There are no guarantees that jobs will be created in this country for Canadians. Even the argument of increased research and development is not certain.

What evidence will Canadians have that this process will result in a progressive step in our over-all medicare program? Many of us have spoken to our American friends who told us they envy our system that we have been able to build in this country. They envy the fact that our medicare plan means that a person who needs an operation or treatment for a serious ailment will not have to mortgage his or her house to receive that attention. As great and powerful as American society is, there are horror stories about individuals who must mortgage their homes in order to obtain operations or stay in hospital.

This legislation would run counter to the traditions we have built upon in this country. The greatness of Canada can be measured in part by the way the Government and society treats the needy, the elderly, the homeless, the hungry, and the sick. If this legislation goes through, historians will not be able to regard it as testimony to the greatness of our compassion toward those in our society who need our assistance. It will not make drugs more accessible and affordable to those who really need them on a daily basis. Canadians are telling the Government that if it is going to tinker with the system and modify it, then it should do so in a progressive way by enhancing it on the basis that those in our society who are sick will have a greater chance to get better through increased accessibility and affordability to pharmaceutical drugs.

I notice that you are indicating that my time is up, Mr. Speaker. I hope the Government will at least support Motion No. 12 in principle but will generally begin to understand what it is doing with this legislation, who it is affecting and who is being served by it.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to support Motion No. 12 standing in the name of my hon. friend, the Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). Motion No. 12 deals with retroactive application of amendments to restrict generics. This amendment to the Bill attempts to bring in some competition to the market-place.

I find it incredibly peculiar, to say the least, that the Government is not prepared to welcome competition in the market-place when it comes to generic drugs. Bill C-22 is very unfair because it denies Canadian consumers new generic drugs for 10 years. The Bill allows a drug firm, probably from the United States, to come to Canada with its new drug and have an exclusive monopoly right for a decade. In other words, no Canadian company can attempt to offer a reasonably competitive drug on the market.

I am dumbfounded by the fact the Government is prepared to give a foreign drug company a monopoly in Canada for 10 years. I believe it goes against every principle of fairness and honesty. However, I suppose many Canadians will ask whether one expects honesty and fairness and above-board treatment in light of the Government's record.

I appeal to my hon. colleagues in the Government to indicate why they support a proposal that would allow a foreign drug company to come to Canada with a new drug and have exclusive rights which would bar Canadian competition for a decade. Are they not in favour of competition? Are they afraid of generic drug companies in Canada?

I have sat patiently for hours waiting for a member of the Government to stand in his or her place and explain why he or she is opposed to competition in the drug industry which, as everyone knows, would keep prices low.

There are two alternatives to maintaining low prices. Prices can be regulated, as they are in the utilities by the appropriate board which decides on a fair price for such things as natural gas and electricity. Second, there is competition in the market-place so that competing firms theoretically hold prices down. It is only in cases of cartels or combines that prices increase.

This legislation gives exclusive rights to a single company to charge whatever it wants. According to this legislation there will be no competition for ten years. Any sensible business person who is motivated by maximizing profits for shareholders will increase prices as much as could be borne in all consciousness.

While Motion No. 12 does not deal with that problem specifically, the fact is that generic companies now have 153 applications before the Government to compete with brand name drugs. Canadian companies, through their own research process, have developed duplicate drugs and wish to initiate competition in the market-place against foreign drug companies. The Government is indicating that it will prevent these 153 applications by Canadian companies from continuing and will not allow them to compete in the market-place for at least seven years. What kind of government is that? What kind of Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs will not allow Canadian companies, that have developed their own generic drugs through their own scientific research and development, to bring their drugs on the market for seven years? The Government wants to give exclusive monopoly rights to a foreign drug company. I must have this incorrectly, Mr. Speaker. I must not understand this point in the Bill.

An Hon. Member: That is right.

Mr. Riis: Hon. Members opposite say that is right. I beg them to stand in their place and explain to me where I am wrong. I challenge every single Conservative in the House of Commons right now to stand up and point out where I am wrong. I challenge them to tell me why the Government is giving exclusive rights in a monopoly situation to foreign drug companies and not allowing competition in the market-place here in Canada.

Members from Alberta ranted and raved—and in many cases, I would say, for good reason—because of retroactive legislation in the petroleum industry. The federal Government moved in retroactively and said it was taking ownership rights on those wells. Those Hon. Members ranted and raved, essentially for good reason. Retroactivity in terms of legislation is not good. Why then are those same Hon. Members sitting on their hands? Why are they sitting passively by? Why are they mute? Why do they not say a single thing in defence of this? I say directly to the Hon. Member from Saskatoon that there are 153 different drugs which have been researched and are now waiting to be put on the market to compete with foreign drugs. But the Government says it will not allow that. It will not permit competition. I ask, why is the Government afraid of competition? What has it got against competition? What is it afraid of in terms of an open, free market-place? Why does it perpetuate monopoly? Why does it perpetuate exclusivity?

What we are appealing for is some free enterprise in the drug system. What we are appealing for is free enterprise in the market-place when it comes to prescription drugs. Here we have the spectacle of Conservatives sitting silently all around us in the House of Commons imposing their will on the small generic drug companies by not allowing them to compete in the future. They will not allow these companies to put 153 drugs on the market. I am perplexed. I do not understand why the Government is doing this. I am going to take my seat, although my time is not quite up yet, in the hopes that my friends opposite will use this opportunity to stand in their place and answer the questions I have raised. Why retroactivity? Why are they giving exclusive rights to foreign drug companies? Why are they not allowing the 153 applications by generic companies on brand-name drugs to be introduced now as opposed to waiting for seven years, thus allowing the foreign drug companies to take hold of the market, making it impossible for competition to occur?

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to stand in my place today and support this motion which was put forward by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). This Parliament has already gone through an exercise once, and I am talking about the fall of 1985, in understanding the impact of government policy on Canada's poorest and least advantaged citizens. I speak primarily of the poor, the elderly, seniors, and in particular, women seniors. It is inconceivable to me that Parliament finds it necessary yet again to deal with yet another measure proposed by the Government because it is bound and chained by some ideological dictate which says this kind of Patent Act is necessary.

A couple of years ago the Government brought forward a policy of deindexing senior citizens' pensions because Conservative philosophy dictates—

An Hon. Member: Socialists.

Mr. Tobin: You see, Mr. Speaker, when one talks about helping seniors, those Hon. Members call it socialism. Those Hon. Members see "socialism" as a foul, dirty word, a shocking thing. It is a warped, twisted and bent thing for Hon. Members on this side of the House to be concerned about the senior citizens of Canada.

Two years ago the Government put forward a proposal to which all Conservative Members who came to their places like trained animals in a zoo, bowed and said: "Aye, aye, Sir" to deindexing senior citizens' pensions. Notwithstanding the power of the majority, the power of the 210 Members in a 282-seat House, notwithstanding the power of the Prime Minister in effect, an elected dictator if he wanted to be that in a parliamentary system—and notwithstanding the power of the 40-member Cabinet, public opinion was heard. Public opinion said that this kind of regressive measure to take money out of the pockets of Canada's least protected citizens was not acceptable in the 1980s, and Government swallowed itself whole. The Prime Minister came to his feet after debate, demonstrations on Parliament Hill and literally tens of thousands of petitions, and swallowed himself whole. He said his Government was sensitive, caring and was listening. He said it made a mistake.

Having swallowed itself whole once, the Government now seeks with Bill C-22 to repeat the act, except this time it sent us as chief spokesman not the Prime Minister, who we know changes his mind whenever the wind shifts direction, but its pet bull-terrier. The Government sent a bull terrier as the chief government spokesman, the Hon. Member from Alberta, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre). He has his teeth locked into Bill C-22. He has his jaws wrapped around the fragile ankles of Canada's most exposed citizens, and he is determined to come away with a piece of meat. He has reached in, grabbed hold, and intends to take a very painful bite out of those people in Canada who are least able to protect themselves. The citizens will need more than generic drugs to recover from the festering wounds which are about to be inflicted on the exposed ankles of Canada's poorest citizens when the Minister sinks his teeth in, past the bone, into the marrow and sucks the life's blood out of Canada's poorer citizens with Bill C-22.

What does the Bill do? What net return does the Bill give to the people of Canada? What net return does it give to the average Canadian no matter where he lives, no matter what his occupation? I will tell you what it does, Mr. Speaker. It makes relations between Canada and the United States just a little bit more harmonious. It enraptures the environment so that the next time the so-called Shamrock Summit is held, they might sing When Irish Eyes are Smiling once more. That is all it does. It is a Bill which gives everything to foreign drug companies which record enormous profits, as well they might. They are tremendously healthy, as well they should be. It gives these drug companies a 10-year guarantee that they can join the Minister in sinking his teeth into people who buy drugs, not as a luxury item, not as something which is put on the shelf as a placebo to make one feel better, and not as something one puts on the shelf to convince oneself that one has a whole assortment of items and therefore at one's disposal lies the means to make oneself better. It is not there for any of those reasons, Mr. Speaker; rather, it allows these companies to have a 10-year free "go" at those who need access to prescription drugs, and it is a "free go" sanctioned by the Government of Canada.

I see Members opposite laughing; I see Members opposite chuckling. With their Conservative doctrinaire philosophy that says, "Let the free market determine what the price should be, and the senior citizens of Canada be damned", they find this kind of speech amusing. They have not spent enough time out of the cocktail circuit; they have not spent enough time away from the Tory 500 Club, a club which, at $500 a shot, permits one access to a Tory front-bencher; and at $1,000 a shot, access to a Tory front-bencher, a Minister. They have not spent enough time in the households of the people of this country. These people do not balk at the notion of paying an extra $10 or $20 a month for drugs—they nearly pass away, Mr. Speaker. They do not know where the extra $10 or $20 a month for drugs is going to come from.

That is the problem in this place, Mr. Speaker. Too many Members in this place have been caught up in the glitter of the chandeliers, in the beautiful colours that float from the stained glass windows. They are caught up in the richness of the ornate wood that appoints every desk, and they are caught up in the luxury—

An Hon. Member: That is crap, Tobin, and you know it!

Mr. Tobin: —and they are caught up in the deep rich carpeting that covers the floor of the Chamber. Somehow, they have made the mistake of believing that the finely appointed Chamber which surrounds Hon. Members, that their finely appointed offices and their large salaries reflect the realities of this country.

Mr. Speaker, what is sad and what is tragic is that nothing could be further from the truth.

Mr. Speaker, my riding, Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe, has a population of some 90,000 people and extends over 500 miles of the Newfoundland coastline. In my riding, 60 per cent of the people live in communities of under 500, and 35 per cent, according to Statistics Canada, are unemployed—though the number is much higher. These people, too, want their voices heard in this debate, and to those people, Bill C-22 is a regressive Bill. It is a Bill that ignores the reality of Canada, and ignores the reality of the lot of the average Canadian.

I petition Members opposite—

An Hon. Member: You say that about every Bill.

Mr. Tobin: I petition Members opposite, as they did in respect of the attempt to deindex senior citizens' pensions, to go back to their ridings, to go across this land, to go into the main streets of the towns and communities and into the houses at the end of the street and on the wrong side of the tracks, and to then come back to this Parliament and tell us that Bill C-22 is necessary or that it can still be supported in good conscience.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the speech we have just heard gives new meaning to the word "demagoguery" in terms of content. I see that the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith) has just entered the Chamber. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) should talk to his colleague, the Hon. Member for Sudbury, who is himself a pharmacist and who said, in The Canadian Pharmaceutical Review, that he is in favour of restoring—

An Hon. Member: Give us Eastman.

Mr. Andre: —that he is in favour of restoring patent protection to the inventors or discoverers of drugs. He accepts the centuries-old principle that the inventor, the creator, has in fact created something of value, something of importance, and as such deserves patent protection.

He might invite his Leader into his plush office—and I presume he was describing his office when he went on about the plushness of offices. He might invite his Leader into his plush office and talk to his Leader about the time when he was in the private sector, as Chairman of Sandoz, a multinational drug company, and the fact that his Leader, while in that position, was frequently heard to say to his colleagues in the business that the Government had gone too far in 1969 and that patent protection should be restored, with some limitations on the compulsory licences.

He might talk to the former Member for Nickel Belt, the Hon. Judy Erola. Perhaps he should talk to the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) who, as Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, brought down a White Paper admitting that in fact it was necessary to make changes to the Patent Act to restore patent protection. This was a White Paper of a Government of which the Hon. Member was a supporter.

Before he launches into these great tirades about understanding and sensitivity, he might perhaps examine the record of his own Party. But then, of course, Sir, I would be asking him to be an exception in his own Party. If they have two positions on trade, two positions on the Cruise, why should they not have two positions on Bill C-22?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: Why not?

Mr. Dingwall: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall).

An Hon. Member: Here we go again! No one interrupted his speech.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I cannot help it if the Hon. Minister is extremely envious of the fact—

An Hon. Member: What is the point of order?

Some Hon. Members: This is not a point of order.

Mr. Dingwall: —is extremely envious, Mr. Speaker, of the fact that we have with us in the Liberal Party perhaps the greatest orator in the House. If he is jealous of that fact, Mr. Speaker, fine; but—

An Hon. Member: That is not a point of order.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

An Hon. Member: What is the point of order?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member will tell us.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is this: I do not think it appropriate for a Minister of the Crown, particularly in respect of a piece of legislation before the House, to mislead the House purposely on the positions of other Members.

An Hon. Member: Well said.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre).

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, before I run out of time, I wish to inform the House as follows: There has been consultation among representatives of the Parties. It has not been possible to reach agreement respecting the provisions of Standing Order 115 or Standing Order 116, dealing with the report stage of Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto. Therefore, at the next sitting of the House, I shall propose a motion, pursuant to Standing Order 117, to allocate one sitting day to the report stage and two sitting days to the third reading of Bill C-22.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, just before members of the Opposition get on with their demagoguery, I wish to make a point respecting the nature of support and understanding. This is a point that has already been made but which seems to have escaped the notice of some of the opposition Members.

It has been suggested that we are on thin ice in so far as this Bill is concerned. Given that the Quebec National Assembly, under two different Governments, has unanimously passed resolutions asking the Government to do this, that would seem not to be the case. It seems to me that the opposition Members from the Province of Quebec, and those who aspire to have significant numbers from Quebec, ought to bear that in mind.

An Hon. Member: Bring us Dr. Eastman.

Mr. Andre: When one has virtually the entire scientific community across the country saying that this is important—

Some Hon. Members: Not so; not true.

Mr. Andre: —when one has Canada's most recent—

Mr. Prud'homme: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Saint-Dennis (Mr. Prud'homme).

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether this is an appel au règlement or a question of privilege.

The Hon. Minister has spoken of a unanimous resolution having been passed by two separate Governments of the Province of Quebec calling for these amendments. Many years ago, we had a provincial Government asking that the federal Government not implement the old age pension program—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order.

An Hon. Member: Not only is it not a point of order, one cannot tell what he is talking about.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I was merely reflecting on the fact—

Mr. Henderson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret that I have to interrupt the Hon. Minister again. The Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) on a point of order.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, the Minister made the point that two provincial legislatures unanimously passed a resolution supporting this Bill. I want to point out to the Minister that the Prince Edward Island Legislature also passed a resolution, and also unanimously, calling on the Government not to—

An Hon. Member: This is debate.

• (1650)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. On debate, the Hon. Minister.

Mr. Andre: I just want to point out, Mr. Speaker, that I did not interrupt opposition Members when they were speaking—

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I thought I just heard the Hon. Minister use words to the effect that he was going to let opposition Members get on with their demagoguery.

I respectfully direct Your Honour to Citation 320 at pages 105 and 106 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition. Subclause (2) reads:

Since 1958, it has been ruled unparliamentary to use the following expressions:

And at page 106 Your Honour will see the word "demagogue", which apparently was ruled unparliamentary on June 16, 1963, as reported at page 10194 of Debates.

Therefore I ask Your Honour to ask the Hon. Minister to withdraw his clearly unparliamentary remark.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. Obviously the Chair will know that the Hon. Minister used the term "demagoguery" and never in any way called any one member of the Opposition a demagogue.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Minister has the floor.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, as the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) pointed out, I did not call anybody a demagogue. I suggested that there was a lot of demagoguery. If that is offensive to the Hon. House Leader of the Liberal Party and if you find it unacceptable, I would substitute therefor "wild exaggeration". I just want to point out—

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, on that point of order, I was the recipient, in my own humble way of reflecting the views of Newfoundlanders, of the Minister's statement in which he said that the Hon. Member was giving a new definition to the term "demagoguery", and the "blues" will show that.

On behalf of my constituents, whose humble voices I was merely reflecting and echoing off these ungodly walls—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Tobin: —I ask the Minister to withdraw that insult to my constituents.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister has already spoken, and I consider the incident closed. Will the Minister continue, please.

Mr. Andre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wonder why the Opposition is so reluctant to let me speak, given that we have sat here, all of us collectively on this side, and allowed each Member on that side who wished to speak to take his or her 10 minutes uninterrupted, which is the usual courtesy extended in the House.

I just wanted to point out, as I have done, the recent poll which in fact asked fair questions. It pointed out that when the facts were put to the people and they are asked: "Are you willing to pay higher prices for more research and development", the answer was "yes", 64 per cent of the time. If we say: "Would you be prepared to see the establishment of patent rights with a control mechanism to keep the price of drugs less than the cost of living", which is in the Bill, as Members who have looked at the Bill know, the support was 82 per cent. It is simply false to make the statement that in fact there is overwhelming opposition.

Given that the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party sent out some 300,000 letters, according to the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young), who I believe made that comment; and given that the CLC, Bob White of the Autoworkers, the Government of Manitoba, and so on have really blanketed the country with all manner of brochures, letters, and so on, trying to scare the dickens out of people, without success, I think a support of 82 per cent is pretty remarkable.

It shows that people are smarter than some members of the Opposition give them credit for. I think that deep in their hearts members of the Opposition know full well that this is a good Bill and that this is a necessary Bill. They know that research and development is absolutely essential to our future, and that we will not have research and development unless we have patent protection for the researchers and the developers. That they know; other people know that.

Mr. Tobin: Who paid for the poll?

Mr. Andre: That is why, if we are acting responsibly as a Parliament, we will get the Bill through.

Mr. Tobin: No answer.

Mr. Andre: The delay has already cost the country several hundreds of millions of dollars in research and development. Every month of delay delays that activity in the country.

The Hon. Member's collar is pinching or something—

Mr. de Corneille: You poor fellow, you want to muzzle us.

Mr. Andre: The fact is that any objective examination of the facts indicates that this is a good Bill.

As to the question of senior citizens, 95 per cent of them in the country are covered by drug plans. They are not personally affected, and 100 per cent of senior citizens who receive the GIS are covered by drug plans. This constant tirade by the Opposition is bad for senior citizens, is simply false, on the facts, and is a scare tactic. Indeed, one might even call it "demagoguery"; I do not know, but it certainly is not the truth. In their hearts they know it, as do senior citizens.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Minister, who never told us who paid for the poll, once again used the term in reference to Members opposite and their views in respect of Bill C-22—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Using the same citation as the one raised by the House Leader of the Opposition in respect of the words "demagoguery" and "demagogue", again the Minister used the term in reference to Members opposite who have made their views known, on behalf of their constituents, in respect of Bill C-22.

I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, using the appropriate citation, to have the Minister withdraw again that lame excuse for a debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair does not believe the Hon. Minister was aiming his remarks at a particular Member, therefore—

Mr. Tobin: Well, Mr. Speaker, who was he aiming them at; at people in the Gallery or the Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No. I think he was aiming them at members of the Opposition in general, which is not contrary to Beauchesne's.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the short time remaining in the debate this afternoon, I should like to return to the point at issue today and discuss the amendment offered by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

It was interesting to have the disruption of the day's proceedings by the Minister who spent no time addressing the particular amendment. It is unfortunate that he did not do so, because I believe he could have made a very useful contribution to the particular amendment dealing with Bill C-22. In effect it is a part of Bill C-22 which is a catch-22 for both consumers of drugs and producers of generic drugs in the country. They have been caught by the Bill in a situation where, even though most of the paperwork has been completed to begin the production of generic drugs at considerably lower prices than the ones which will be in effect after the drug Bill is passed, they will be locked into a position, as a result of some of the requirements of the Bill, dating backward to June 27, 1986.

We think it is very unfair that any group of citizens or producers who have virtually completed applications to produce generic drugs should be treated so badly and in a negligent manner by legislation which in effect will be retroactive to June, 1986. This will stop some 153 applications, so producers will not be able to produce them and consumers will not get the advantage of lower prices as a result.

I notice your time signal, Mr. Speaker. I will continue my remarks next day.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PARITY PRICES FOR FARM PRODUCTS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Nystrom that Bill C-221, an Act respecting parity prices for farm products, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak to the Parity Prices for Farm Products Act because right now the farm community is in crisis. It is important that the Members of Parliament in this House and that Governments right across Canada do something about this crisis as quickly as possible. There are a number of areas on which every Member and every Government in Canada would agree. If we could take those agreements and put them before the Parliaments of Canada we should be able to come up with some kind of a solution which would assist the survival of farmers. Those areas of agreement are very simple and straightforward. We should at least give lip service—I hope more than that—to the survival of the family farm. The family farm is the basic production unit. It is a necessary part of the agricultural industry. We should have a great deal of compassion for the farmers' crisis and we should try to do something about it. If we in this House are unable and unwilling, then we will be responsible because it is we who can make changes. For several years the family farm has been in crisis. This crisis was caused by a number of things, one being the rising cost of necessary inputs, such as fuel, fertilizer and so on. Returns from commodities sold by farmers, be they apples, pork, beef or grain, have dropped to the point where the farmer can no longer recover the cost of production. Everyone recognizes that and I am sure everybody realizes that we must do something about it.

As I pointed out, there are two ways we can deal with this situation. There are several others however. First, we must bring down input costs, which is something we have looked at in the agricultural committee. We have not had any action and we have not taken any action. We have spoken to many producers and to the Farm Credit Corporation. Everybody comes up with a good story as to why there are problems and why farm income is not covering production costs. Many groups have come up with ideas about reducing inputs, but all of them come back to the one basic requirement. If you do not increase the farmer's income and if you do not increase the product returns, how can you expect to balance the books? This Government and other Governments in the past have put some procedures in place, namely direct deficiency payments, but they end up as subsidies. Most farmers will accept them if they are going under, but they do not particularly like to do so. There are stabilization programs which we have developed to a fine level across Canada for various products. However, we never really solve the problem.

Bill C-221 is a suggestion which recognizes two deficiencies in the agricultural industry. For example, if you buy a loaf of bread for one dollar, the farmer who provides the grain for that loaf of bread gets only about 6 cents. That situation happens with other commodities, not only with grain.

If this Bill is accepted by the Government of Canada and is recognized as a solution by the other Governments across the country, then it would alleviate to some extent the problems of the family farm. A very simple approach is suggested in the Bill. For those products that we sell in Canada, we should charge enough to cover the cost of production. This will not solve the problem entirely, but to a certain extent it will. In western Canada about 8 per cent of our grain is used in the domestic market. Should this Bill be put into place, the cost of production would be paid to the farmer. It might be a little higher than is the cost now or it might be a little lower, but this will stabilize at least that portion of the agricultural industry which supplies the domestic market.

What if this idea were expanded across the board? Depending upon the world price for a large proportion of our market, we cannot say that you have to pay $5 a bushel for grain, but it might be an approach which would bring to the minds of the urban people of Canada that they have some kind of responsibility and that giving lip service to the idea of the family farm will cost them something somewhere. We can pay a little more for food.

A number of organizations across the country have accepted this as a basic tenet. In fact, supply management production units use the theory in the Bill that the cost of production should have some bearing on the price of the product. We do this in the dairy industry and in the egg industry. We should be able to do it partially in some other areas. This Bill should be looked at very closely and its theory should be used to try to solve the problems in agriculture which will allow for the survival of the family farm.

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to thank you for this opportunity on speaking to Bill C-221, presented by the NDP Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom). Mr. Speaker, as you know, the purpose of this Bill is to introduce parity pricing for agricultural products on the domestic market. Unfortunately, when the Hon. Member introduced his Bill in the House, there was something missing. Although at first glance, the Bill seems to bring something positive and to be a good thing for agriculture, if we look at the Bill a little more closely, we realize that there are a number of problems and shortcomings.

One of those shortcomings is when he says we could set a parity price for grain.

I think the Hon. Member conveniently forgot that as far as grain is concerned, Canada is a net exporting country. This means it produces more than it consumes. Anyone with any notion of agriculture will realize that Western Canada is famous the world over for the quality of its products and for the productivity of its grain acreage. Introducing the concept of parity pricing would involve, as was said by the previous speaker for the New Democratic Party, or at least that is what he tried to prove, some kind of supply management, marketing boards or joint programs. At this point, there is a very fundamental question we must ask, and I saw no mention of this when I read the Hon. Member's Bill. What are we supposed to do with our overall domestic grain production as proposed in the Hon. Member's Bill? What will we do with the surplus? If we have a joint program, if we have supply management, we will obviously make production subject to the needs of the Canadian consumer.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian market is about 26 million. That is a far cry from 225 million Americans or 320 million in the Common Market. And that is why I would have liked to see the Hon. Member's Bill reflect how he intends to oblige certain farm producers and family farms-a subject dear to the previous speaker- how is he going to oblige these producers to get out of production or cut back on production. What are we going to do with our vast Canadian prairies? How are we going to make these farms profitable?

Mr. Speaker, it is very easy to suggest join plans and supply management, but it requires organization and planning. If we look at what happened in the past, we realize that supply management and quotas were not introduced in a day and especially not as a result of imposing a Bill as proposed by the Hon. Member for the NDP. I say "imposing" because this Government, the Progressive Conservative Government, and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) have always said they would give farm producers the marketing boards they wanted, provided they covered the majority of production and the majority of producers. We have imposed nothing and we are not going to. We are working in co-operation with the provinces and agricultural producers in the area concerned.

Mr. Speaker, when we are very close to agricultural policy and problems, we realize one thing, and it is that parity pricing for grain will create a tremendous problem. It will be tantamount to taking the present problem, an international problem with an international context, namely the war between the Common Market and the U.S., and trying to solve it according to the philosophy of the Opposition which says that Canadian agriculture must have additional funding because the family farm is in danger.

Mr. Speaker, I think that New Democratic Party Members should realize that the Bill introduced by the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville advocates a medium—or long-term decline of the western agricultural community, lower production if you will, because the measure implies that it will eventually be possible to set up joint projects. That being so, Mr. Speaker, I wonder how and under what principle the New Democrats will be able to defend Canadian farmers, particularly in Western Canada.

As you would know, Mr. Speaker, setting up a joint project or establishing marketing boards is a lot more complicated than drafting a simple piece of legislation. The matter has to be debated first. We have to sit down with the agricultural producers. First, they must discuss the matter among themselves because—and the NDP Members may not know this—there exists considerable regional disparity from the Atlantic to the Pacific, including Quebec, Ontario, and the Prairie Provinces. Needs are wide-ranging and differ from one region to the next. Each province has its own priorities, even with respect to the same products. Given such a legislative measure as the one proposed by my colleague from Yorkton—Melville, we must wonder how we can achieve a symbiosis of all provinces and all producers and end up with a combined, joint and effective production effort, a production geared to the needs of the Canadian market first, and second to the needs of the export market. It may be a cinch to envisage this project within the parameters of a legislative measure, but seeing it through in the agricultural field, as it were, is something else again. The wide variety of joint projects and marketing boards set up in recent years will attest to that.

NDP Members who are interested in agriculture are fully aware of this. Let us take milk as an example, Mr. Speaker. How long did dairy producers have to sit down to discuss and negotiate with the federal Government and the provinces to agree on fair sharing—historic sharing, some would say—of the domestic production, to base the once disorderly total production on the needs of the Canadian market? It took quite a few years and was not accomplished through a legislative measure. Far from it. This was done on the basis of negotiations and consultations, and above all on the basis of the needs of the Canadian dairy industry as a whole, arising from the uneven production levels that were the norm in the dairy sector.

Mr. Speaker, the same applies to all production units that have marketing boards today. And this Government, the Progressive Conservative Government, never said it would not set up marketing boards. On the contrary. It has just set up a marketing board for incubated eggs because the producers asked us to and because overall production was in danger . . . We met with the producers, who said: Yes, this is the right time. Yes, we are going to sit down and negotiate. That was done. We may see one for potatoes. But above all, Mr. Speaker, I feel that the basic integrity of Canadian agriculture is to let the farmer set his own goals and determine what kind of marketing boards he wants, if any, so that the ten provinces involved in this production area can reach an agreement on either a marketing board or joint programs.

However, Mr. Speaker, I don't think imposing a solution would be wise, considering the complex situation in our agricultural industry and the fact that if we were to implement legislation of the kind proposed by the Hon. Member . . . nowhere does this Bill consider what is referred to as bottom, side, and top loading. The Bill does not allow for provincial subsidies or for federal subsidies, and in the final instance, Mr. Speaker, the effect would probably be to distort the situation, to the detriment of Canadian agriculture, the consumer and agriculture in general.

Mr. Speaker, that is why I would advise the Hon. Member to revise his Bill, to take a second look at it, to work on it and to discuss the matter with producers and with Members of this House, and maybe after a few years come back with a full-fledged Bill, a Bill that allows for all aspects of the situation in Canadian agriculture, that considers the needs of this industry and respects the integrity of agriculture in general.

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to say a few words this afternoon in the debate on Bill C-221 put forward by my friend from the NDP, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom). That Member, in the Saskatchewan tradition, has the concern of farmers at heart. Those of us who are great Diefenbaker Tories look at the tradition of the Tommy Douglas-CCF people, of whom the Hon. Member is one, and we see a shared interest in Saskatchewan agriculture. For that reason it is a real pleasure to address a few words to this Bill.

The Bill attempts to get at the root of many of the problems encountered by Saskatchewan producers, that being obtaining an acceptable price for their product. While I have some problems with the notion of parity pricing and what the Hon. Member is trying to do in that respect, the underlying intent of his Bill is one that all Members of this House support, particularly those from Saskatchewan. That intent is to ensure that grain producers secure a good price for their product. In constituencies like mine the overwhelming majority of producers are caught in a cost-price squeeze. That, as the name implies, is a situation where the cost of doing business, the cost of putting in a crop, is rising at a rate which outstrips the price you get for the product. This problem, which has existed for some years, has been exacerbated over the last two crop years by the subsidy dispute between the European Economic Community and the United States.

If one compares farm income and the decline in world prices we see that the greatest burden has been borne by the grain and oil-seeds sector of our agricultural economy. Grains and oil-seeds are the lifeblood of Saskatchewan farmers. While the income of farmers in that sector will be at about the same level this year as last, one should not be deceived by those statistics. They indicate a very high level of government support, both federal and provincial. For 1986, the percentage of farm income by way of government support was approximately five times that of five years ago. For example, $1.9 billion of farm income came from government assistance compared to $367 million in 1981. While it is clear that Governments are attempting to respond to the cost-price squeeze, our farmers are not faring particularly well. Wheat prices have dropped about 30 per cent. This is due to the downward pressure caused by the subsidy war I referred to. Producers are looking for a government response that will help relieve the squeeze farmers are in.

For this Government at this point in its mandate there are few issues as fundamentally important as agriculture. For many of the 65 municipalities in my constituency agriculture is the lifeblood. If agriculture is not doing well at a particular time, neither are those communities or the many businesses in those communities which are dependent 100 per cent on agriculture. We understand that when farming is prospering, those communities will prosper as well.

In addressing a few words specifically to what my friend is proposing, namely parity pricing, I want to say that I do not think that this solution will work. It in fact may be detrimental to the Saskatchewan farm economy. Parity pricing ignores the importance of market forces and the inevitability of change in productivity. It ignores the often dynamic and unpredictable nature of agriculture. That fact is reflected across the country in every region. Agriculture is simply not one monolithic stack-type industry to be dealt with through a parity pricing type formula. Our Government believes that the farm industry is better served by programs which increase efficiency and competitiveness in the market-place. It is important to see the agricultural market-place for what it is. There are national supply management agencies in place for dairy and poultry products, but they were established at the direct request of the producers. Even so, those systems do take into account the fluctuating nature of markets. They have built-in flexibility to protect both producers and consumers. This Bill does not have that kind of flexibility.

Farmers in every part of my province will tell you that the market forces of supply and demand are what they ultimately farm for. They acknowledge the crucial need for price support and financial assistance in order to reduce input costs when supply and demand in world markets has been skewed by forces beyond our control. Farmers will be the first to tell you that the market-place is of crucial importance to them. However, it is not a magic wand which will solve all the problems in one broad stroke. We cannot accomplish everything with one piece of legislation, and we in this Government do not pretend otherwise. Our Government has been working with provincial Governments and the farm sector to build a network of programs to help strengthen the productivity, efficiency and competitiveness of the industry.

I want to share with the House a few of the initiatives our Government has taken in support of agriculture. The Special Canadian Grains Program was a timely and much-needed response to the price problems facing farmers across Canada. A commitment of $1 billion to agriculture is no small feat. It is the largest single transfer of funds to the agricultural economy on an emergency basis in the history of agriculture. Farmers across Saskatchewan and the rest of Canada understand the value of that program. However, this Government will be the first to agree that if one is to continue to build agriculture, we may be called upon again to respond to the needs of farmers. Farm organizations and producers' groups have been meeting with my colleagues, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise). Those Ministers have been working overtime to ensure that the concerns of prairie farmers are met.

In recent months our Government offered special drought assistance to those producers who suffered the effect of consecutive years of drought. As well, there was assistance for those who live in flooded areas of Saskatchewan. Amendments to the Western Grain Stabilization Act have allowed interim payments to farmers, culminating in a total payment of $859 million for the last crop. The red meat stabilization program was put in place and is helping to stabilize returns for red meat producers without falsely shielding them from market forces. On the input side are the farm fuel rebates, the $80 million five-year interest rate reduction of the Farm Credit Corporation, and many other programs of the Government which is committed to helping farmers deal with this particularly difficult cost-price squeeze.

• (1730)

In conclusion, I commend my friend from Yorkton—Melville, with whom I spend a considerable amount of time debating agriculture and many other issues, on his desire to ease Saskatchewan and Canadian farmers through a particularly difficult situation. However, I reiterate that the philosophic and practical limits of parity pricing are not the solution for our agricultural problems. I join with all Members of Parliament concerned about Saskatchewan and Canadian agriculture to work with the Government to see that the proper solutions are found.

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on Bill C-221, presented by the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to find some easy answers or some way of dealing with the problems besetting Canadian agriculture, but I do not think that, at this time, Bill C-221 is what we need to solve all those problems. As was said earlier by the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), this Bill is only an idea or an approach. Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that a progressive agricultural sector and a reasonable return on the work and know-how invested by Canadian farmers are essential to the strength of our economy.

However, we must consider the adverse consequences a parity pricing system could have for our farmers and the Canadian economy as a whole. The parity pricing concept might do more harm than good, for a number of reasons. When prices are set on the basis of production costs, we must consider that progress in farm technology has made it possible to combine inputs more effectively and thus lower costs, which has regularly helped to keep the price of products down.

Setting a price on production is a very complex procedure. In fact, we have to make a distinction between costs that are the result of a direct expenditure, and other costs such as the fair return on the farmer's work and his investment, which is difficult to evaluate to any degree of accuracy. An estimate can be made, and that is already being done in certain sectors, but it is a very problematic issue and one on which views may differ considerably.

If production costs were set at a level higher than the market price, we would need a system of quotas or a form of supply management for all production sectors. It is inconceivable to introduce a price setting system without knowing how to control supply or dispose of production that is surplus to the needs of our usual markets.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, Canada is an exporting country and we depend on our export markets. These generate nearly half of Canada's net farm income, and our products must be competitive on foreign markets. In fact, if the price of a certain commodity is set too high, we would have to control imports, which would be likely to increase, and also we could no longer export because our products would probably be too expensive on international markets. Our competitive position would be threatened.

To maintain our presence on these markets, we would have to provide export subsidies, which would undoubtedly elicit strong reaction from our trading partners. Canada would be accused of selling below production prices or of dumping. That is what is happening today to the United States which has been practising dumping in certain European countries. It would of course be instrumental in isolating us from the world trading community and would have disastrous consequences not only for agriculture but for the entire Canadian economy.

Unfortunately, the subsidy war referred to earlier, in which the United States and the Common Market are involved, is threatening the livelihood of Canadian producers. Because of pressures being exercised outside our borders, the price of grain and oilseeds has dropped by at least 20 to 25 per cent compared to last year. And they probably will not recover before market conditions are sound again.

Those are the reasons why, Mr. Speaker, Canada is trying to stop that unnecessary war that will have no winner. With that in mind the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) went to Brussels and Washington to express Canadas' views to both opposing parties.

Also, the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) met with representatives of the five major grain exporting nations. The first meeting was held at Whistler, B.C., in June 1986, at the Minister's request. A second conference has just ended in San Diego, California. At the conclusion of the latter, the Minister of State expressed his confidence that discussions between the five major grain exporting nations will reflect favourably on other multilateral negotiations dealing with agricultural trade.

One thing is sure however—Treasuries in the United States and the European Economic Community are not inexhaustible. It is my hope that those nations soon will realize the uselessness of a high price subsidization policy and massive export subsidies.

Nonetheless, Mr. Speaker, Canada holds on to its position on the global markets, even though grain prices have declined. The essential is to hold firm, because the efficiency of Canadian grain farmers compares favourably with that of any other producer anywhere in the world.

We also have a natural competitive edge thanks to our soil and our climate, to which must be added the quality of our grain and the skill of the grain producer himself.

The best way to attract and keep clients is to offer a superior quality product in the first place to build a reputation for reliability and to have competitive pricing. Let us try to increase our export potential by way of an aggressive marketing. We can increase our competitive position through research, technological progress and transfers, soil conservation and other initiatives that, given time, will allow us to reduce our production costs.

Eventually, Mr. Speaker, we will soon realize that this is more effective than the mere piling up of subsidies. It also requires more imagination, however. It is important that we be present on the markets when the subsidy war ends. We can then continue to offer what has earned us our reputation—superior quality products at competitive prices.

[English]

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour for me to be able to speak this afternoon on Bill C-221 introduced by the Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom). Before speaking on this Bill I would like to indicate that the riding of Timiskaming has sometimes been noted more as an area for mining and lumbering. I should say that the little clay belt plays a very important role in the riding of Timiskaming in a number of areas of agriculture. People from other parts of Canada sometimes do not recognize that northern Ontario has a good agricultural base and does not simply consist of ice, snow, rock, trees and black flies. However, in the little clay belt in the riding of Timiskaming there are some 750 farmers who vary from dairy operations, to hog, beef, poultry and numerous cash crops.

There is no doubt that the agricultural community in Timiskaming has experienced difficult times just as have other parts of the agriculture community in Canada. The fact is that there have been problems with commodity pricing.

Since I came here in 1982 we have been trying to address those concerns facing our agricultural community. We should recognize that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) have been very helpful in addressing our concerns in northern Ontario.

The concept of parity pricing was used in the United States in the 1940s and 1950s. Parity prices, as defined in U.S. legislation, were those prices which gave farm products the same purchasing power with respect to articles farmers bought in an historic base. To calculate the parity price for a commodity, the base price was multiplied by an index of prices paid by farmers.

There was a fundamental problem with the parity pricing concept. The indexing procedure took no account of changes in technology and productivity that had occurred since the base. In other words, improvements and changes in inputs and efficiency gains, which reduce costs, were not reflected in the parity prices. As a result, parity prices tended to yield price levels which were well above the costs of efficient producers. It was for this reason that the parity price system was abandoned in the United States.

Bill C-221, an Act respecting parity prices for farm products, attempts to get around this problem by proposing to set prices on the basis of an annual cost of production formula. More specifically, it proposes to: first, fix, on the basis of an annual cost of production formula, the prices of wheat, oats and barley used for domestic human consumption at between 90 per cent and 110 per cent of the cost of production; second, establish voluntary commissions for beef and pork with all the powers, including import controls and the determination of prices, necessary to market regulated products for participating producers; and third, after a five-year period broaden the authority of the commissions on the basis of a producer plebiscite.

While very simple in principle, the concept of cost of production pricing is very complicated in practice. It is, first, necessary to clearly define what is meant by cost of production. This is not done in Bill C-221. A clear distinction must be made between cash costs and returns to labour and investment. Returns to operator, labour and investment are not out of pocket costs but should be provided for in any price setting exercise.

In attempting to calculate a price based on production costs, two basic questions must be answered: one, how does one measure cash costs; and two, what is a fair return to operator, labour and investment?

Cost of production surveys for farms have shown a very wide farm-to-farm variation in the cash costs of individual farmers and an equally wide variation in the productivity of labour. If high cost and low productivity farmers are included in cost and return calculations, the resulting support prices are likely to be well above the levels needed to achieve satisfactory profits for efficient farmers. This situation usually results in high returns to investment for efficient producers and rapidly rising asset values, especially land or quotas. This, in turn, makes it difficult for new farmers to enter the industry. If only low cost and high productivity farmers are included in the calculations, the support prices may be considered to be too low by many producers and pressure will build to adjust the calculations to give higher price supports.

Another problem with cost of production pricing is the production response which will arise if prices are set higher than market clearing levels. This problem is usually addressed with some form of quota or supply-management system. One cannot introduce a cost of production pricing system without having a clear plan for either limiting supply to available markets or disposing of excess product outside of such markets.

Let us consider the impact on trade. Artificial price supports can have serious trade implications if internal price supports are higher than corresponding import prices.

If a country produces less of a commodity than it consumes, high internal prices can be maintained above import prices by imposing tariffs or by restricting imports. Such import restrictions are permitted under General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade rules as long as effective production controls exist. For example, import restrictions on dairy and poultry products are permitted in Canada because effective supply-management systems exist.

If a country produces more of a commodity than it consumes, high internal price supports are difficult and costly to maintain. The European Economic Community provides an illustration of the problem. High internal price supports have resulted in surplus production which has to be disposed of through export subsidies which are very costly to EEC taxpayers. The use of export subsidies by the EEC was permitted under the original GATT.

If Canadian farm products are to be exported they must be priced competitively in international markets. If, for example, beef and pork commissions, as proposed in Bill C-221, were established and internal prices were established at levels higher than import prices, import controls would be needed to prevent beef and pork from moving into Canada. At the same time, exports would likely cease because of uncompetitive prices. If Canada attempted to continue exporting by using subsidies or operating two-price systems, accusations of dumping would arise from our trading partners and countervail actions under GATT rules would ensue.

In summary, while the concept of parity pricing has surface appeal, it is not consistent with the development of a strong export market. For export oriented sectors it is likely that programs such as the Western Grain Stabilization Program and the Tripartite Stabilization Programs for beef, pork and lamb provide a better alternative to parity pricing. These programs provide protection against periodic weaknesses in markets but ensure that longer run returns reflect market experience.

In closing, let me say that the concerns of the agriculture community are shared by all of us in the House. However, I believe that at this time Bill C-221 does not really address the concerns of all the agricultural community. I believe the manner in which the Hon. Minister of Agriculture has been addressing these concerns has been appreciated.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-221 is an Act to introduce a concept described as parity pricing as well as to set up marketing commissions for beef and hogs. Conservative Members, at least, have been quite clear in saying we need something different from the present system and that we must use some imagination in arriving at a pricing system to solve what they vaguely describe as the farm problem. They have decided that because the words "parity pricing" became attached to this particular set of proposals they cannot work and quote some of the experiences of the United States as being proof of that. However, when one looks at the experience of the United States, there is very little question that parity pricing worked in that it achieved the ends it was designed to achieve, that is, full employment in agriculture and a return on the product which will pay most of the cost of producing the product on the land. It also had the effect of achieving very efficient and viable farm communities and built a very strong rural base in the United States during the period of time it experimented with the parity pricing system.

Had Hon. Members opposite looked a little at the European agricultural situation, they would have seen that something similar to the U.S. experience pertains there as well. The Europeans, who, for various reasons, some of which include having had a large band of the electorate facing starvation during the Second World War, decided, post-World War II, to establish a system of agricultural pricing which would make certain that consumers in Europe would not again be forced to rely on imports from far away across an ocean or from across the Russian frontier. They wanted to become self-sufficient. They set out that goal and achieved it. They achieved it at a relatively low cost compared to the system of subsidies which is now in place in the United States. The Americans have committed themselves to a further four years of subsidization at the rate of some $35 billion to $36 billion per annum. That is a tremendous amount of government funds going into American agriculture, and I submit it is costing American taxpayers far more than the European plan is costing European taxpayers, and that the American plan will probably place the American taxpayers in bankruptcy much faster than the European plan will do to the European taxpayers. I say this because basically the difference between the two is that in Europe the consumers are being asked to pay a little more money for their food and that extra money goes directly back to the farmers. That is essentially what my friend, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom), was attempting to do with his Bill. He was attempting to pay Canadian farmers approximately their full production costs for that portion of their production which is sold within the country.

In spite of all the rhetoric I heard this afternoon from some of the Conservatives who spoke on this motion, this country is doing some of that right now. We have a two-price system for wheat at the moment, based at $7 a bushel for wheat consumed in this country, which comes close to the cost of production. We are doing that, and it is not wrecking the economy particularly, neither is it doing a whole lot of good. However, it applies only to domestically consumed wheat used for human consumption and does not go quite as far as the Bill which was presented by my friend, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville, which would include wheat, oats and barley consumed by livestock and used for other purposes of animal and poultry production.

As anyone who understands agriculture will know, with those products already being produced under supply-management systems, namely, broiler chickens, turkeys, eggs and dairy products, there is no problem coping with this increased feed cost. It simply goes into the price of the product, which would be reflected, granted, in higher prices to consumers. However, it would also mean a much stronger rural community and agricultural base.

I think what makes farmers upset is when they hear speeches such as we heard from some Hon. Members today, who delivered all the old shibboleths about how impossible it is to control surpluses and how one must have a market system which reflects the true market rather than the cost of production. Most farmers begin to ask themselves, why it is that only I have to contend with this kind of market? They remark how few other producers contend with that type of market system. They look around at the things they buy and compare costs in terms of direct trades. I hear my friends and neighbours saying that the last time they bought a new car in 1977, they spent 2,000 bushels of No. 1 wheat to buy that car, which cost about $6,000. It was a full-size Chevrolet with everything on it. Now when they go to price a full-size Chevrolet with everything on it, they find it will cost at least $18,000, and it will take about 8,000 bushels of No. 1 wheat to buy that car.

Some of my friends opposite talked about technological change and how new technology would bring new advantages and permit the lowering of costs. From my simple vantage point of sitting on the farm and in this House, I know that a great deal of technological change has occurred in the automobile industry since 1977 when a new Chevrolet cost about 2,000 bushels of wheat. I know that has not resulted in a lower-priced car. It is now going to cost 8,000 bushels of wheat to buy the same thing, and they have not even changed the models very much. As you know, Mr. Speaker, they almost look the same. Yet the price is more than four times as high in terms of producing a bushel of wheat.

I know we on the farm are a very efficient lot. However, our production techniques have not changed greatly since 1977, either. We have perhaps tooled up to a little larger equipment than was generally in use in 1977, but for most farms in my area, the equipment has not gone through any great technological changes. We were using four-wheel drive tractors and 30 to 50 foot cultivating and seeding machinery then, and we are doing so now. The cost of a number of things we are using in the new technology of grain production have increased quite markedly in that time. Fertilizer prices are more than double since that period of time. In fact, going back to 1977, I would warrant they have almost tripled. Chemicals have increased two, three and four times, depending on the kind of chemical. Fuel costs have doubled and tripled in that period of time as well. Yet farmers are being asked to take relatively shrinking prices for their production while looking around and seeing that everything they buy on the market, which is supposed to reflect all of the technological advantages of industry in North America, costs in our terms four and five times as much as they receive for our product. We realize that those manufacturers are working in a market-place which reflects their cost of production and that is why they have put the price up four and five times what it was back in 1977. They are recovering their full costs of production, plus a profit, and the intention of my Hon. friend the, Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville, is to set in place a few market mechanisms so that farmers will have the same opportunity for their products.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE—CONFIDENCE IN SYSTEM—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I have ever asked you what it is that makes you wake up in the morning. I would like to know what it is. Perhaps it is the sunlight that streams through the window in the morning. Perhaps it is an alarm clock; or perhaps it is a clock-radio.

Personally, Mr. Speaker, I am awakened by a clock-radio, and more often than not, it is not soft music that I awaken to but a loud authoritative news voice giving me some news and some comment, and usually the news, or at least part of it, includes a description of some very grisly crime that has occurred, and that authoritative news voice is telling me that we should be bringing back capital punishment. It berates those who oppose capital punishment or who are wavering a little on capital punishment in any way, shape or form.

Last summer, Mr. Speaker, I, along with people right across Canada, woke up to news reports about a little girl in Toronto by the name of Allison Parrot. We first heard reports about her disappearance, and then we heard reports about her grisly murder.

This authoritative news voice kept telling us that we should be bringing back the death penalty. As a result of that urging, and all of those reports, there was in my constituency office, my office in Ottawa and my home, a deluge of requests to bring back the death penalty. I had an inundation of letters and telephone calls urging me to support the return of the death penalty, all the time pointing out that for many years the polls reflected support for the return of capital punishment.

Mr. Speaker, why is it that that happens so regularly? I do not know about you, Mr. Speaker, but I personally believe that that feeling was reflected in the comments of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) and the Attorney General of the Province of Ontario, and more recently in the comments of the Chairman of the Canadian Sentencing Commission, all of whom have said that Canadians have lost confidence in our criminal justice system.

The recent vigilante killings by store owners in Calgary and Montreal are yet further illustrations of that very point, that feeling of frustration on the part of the Canadian people. The Minister of Justice, as you will recall, Mr. Speaker, also said that vigilante system is unacceptable; that a "Charles Bronson" system of justice is unacceptable.

I agree with those statements, Mr. Speaker, and I know you do, too. But, Mr. Speaker, it is the job of the Minister of Justice, the job of the provincial Attorneys General, to ensure that we have a system of justice in which Canadians can have confidence. Canadians must have confidence in their criminal justice system.

What is being done about it, Mr. Speaker? Of course, we are going to have a free vote on the issue of capital punishment. But, is that the answer? I doubt that you think so, Mr. Speaker, and I do not think so either. I believe that if the former Government, a Government that was in power for 15 years or more, had taken some action to tighten up the bail laws, as well as the sentencing and parole laws, we would not have this problem now, and Canadians would in fact have confidence in the criminal justice system.

Mr. Speaker, you know as well as I do that the present Government—bless it—cannot escape blame, either. Canadians voted for a change in September of 1984, and here we are today, insofar as the criminal justice system is concerned, and very little has been changed. In fact, we seem to be following the same old agenda. Perhaps it is the Liberal agenda, perhaps it is a bureaucratic agenda, but it is not the agenda of Canadians. Canadians know that between the years 1976 and 1985 violent crime increased 25.7 per cent in the country. They want the criminal justice system to be tightened up. I believe that public opinion polls would be very different now on the question of capital punishment if steps had been taken to tighten up the criminal justice system.

Irrespective of whether capital punishment is brought back, Canadians want the system tightened up. The Minister of Justice would not have to worry about a vigilante or a Charles Bronson system of justice or about the confidence of Canadians in the criminal justice system if he would only tighten up the bail laws, sentencing, and parole.

The Minister and the Government have had some 2.5 years to do it. However, there are 2.5 years left in the mandate of the Government. That is enough time for the Minister of Justice to take some decisive action in this area so that he can leave a legacy of which he can be proud, of which I can be proud, and of which Canadians can be proud.

I am looking forward to hearing from the Parliamentary Secretary tonight that the Minister of Justice is about to take some decisive action and to leave a legacy of which all of us could be proud.

Mr. François Gérin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I must congratulate the Hon. Member for raising this issue and for his remarks. I know that he is deeply concerned about this issue, having advocated these principles ever since his election. I must say that fortunately some Hon. Members devote their time and energy promoting major issues. It is true that the system we have inherited must be changed and changed thoroughly, but these changes cannot happen overnight. They can only be carried out following a rather extensive consultation. And we started this extensive consultation the moment we came to power in September 1984, something of which the Hon. Member is well aware for having contributed to it.

And this consultation has started to pay off. For instance, two weeks ago, the Canadian Sentencing Commission tabled its report which indicated what a great many people knew already, namely, that there are differences in sentencing for the same crimes which people just cannot understand. That is why they answer in various polls that they no longer understand the system. Referring for instance to the various examples given by my hon. friend concerning the perception which people have of the criminal justice system and especially the vigilante type of justice, we realize that people do not quite understand the principle of necessary force involved in cases of legitimate defence. As much as 68 per cent of poll respondents were quoted at saying that a vigilante type of justice could be legitimate under certain circumstances. But if they have been asked a different question, such as: Would you agree that the victim should use more force than necessary? Well, I am sure most Canadians would have said no.

So it would seem that Criminal Code provisions as worded may lead to confusion. People should be better informed through publicity, and for the benefit of the general public—with more forthcoming co-operation from our provincial colleagues—we might try to make the Criminal Code more readily understandable.

Of course we must point out that the Law Reform Commission is doing very important research with respect to sentencing delimitation. Later this fall it will present a report on release in an attempt to simplify the system and make it easier for people to understand the whole process, so perhaps in this case the conclusion will be that when somebody is given a three-year sentence, indeed he should not be released after serving six months.

But this can only be done after consultation, including the work done by the Hon. Member as well his questions and comments, and then likely by next fall or sometime next year the Government, under its mandate, will be in a position to make certain recommendations which should considerably improve the system, and more particularly the public perception of the Canadian judiciary system.

THE CONSTITUTION—REQUEST FOR INCLUSION OF PROPERTY RIGHTS

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, in September 1985 and on March 11, 1987 I raised the question of the inclusion of property rights in the Charter concerning the very grave oversight on the part of the Liberal Government when it drew up the Charter revisions.

I do not think there is any Canadian living in Canada who would hold one particular right more dearly to his or her heart than the right to own property. There are many individuals who have chosen Canada as their new home because of the freedoms that we enjoy to work hard and to acquire wealth and property.

Now that we have been in office for two and a half years, I feel it is time to bring this important matter to the front burner. I urge the Minister to address this matter as quickly as possible with his provincial counterparts. We all know that to make this change requires the approval of the majority of the provinces.

In response to my question, the Minister of Justice and the Attorney General of Canada (Mr. Hnatyshyn) said he will be dealing with the matter, but the purpose of my speaking again this evening is to reinforce how important property rights are, not only to me as a Member of Parliament, but to my constituents and constituents right across the land. I urge the Minister to give this matter his urgent attention and include property rights in the Charter in order to make that Charter complete.

Mr. François Gérin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I wish to assure the Hon. Member of our sympathy for the entrenchment of property rights in the Constitution. He is aware of the long record of support of the Conservative Party for property rights. In 1960, the Progressive Conservative Government under the leadership of the late former Prime Minister, the Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker, introduced the Canadian Bill of Rights. The Bill of Rights provides protections for property rights at the federal level. In particular, it protects the right of every individual to the enjoyment of property and the right not to be deprived thereof, except by due process of law. Since the introduction of the Canadian Bill of Rights, we have continued to advocate property rights. In the process leading up to the patriation of the Constitution and after, we pressed the Liberal Government to add property rights to the Constitution.

It was in this context that the previous Attorney General of Canada asked the Attorneys General of the provinces last year to establish a working group of officials to examine the entrenchment of property rights. The Attorneys General agreed, and a working group was established. Women's groups, aboriginal people, environment groups and provincial Governments have expressed concerns about the impact of entrenching property rights and about legal uncertainties relating to property rights. The working group is analysing these questions. I understand that the working group is making good progress and it will be reporting to the Attorneys General in due course.

Last August in their Edmonton declaration the provincial Premiers specifically asked that the question of Quebec and the Constitution be dealt with first before we deal with any other matters of constitutional reform and they specifically included in these the matter of property rights. At the conclusion of their annual conference in Vancouver last November, the First Ministers of the provinces reiterated their view that there should be another stage following the present round of discussions to deal with other matters, including property rights.

An amendment to the Constitution would require the assent of at least seven provinces and the assent of at least 50 per cent of the population of the provinces. The Hon. Member will appreciate that we wish to co-operate with the provinces as their agreement on the matter of property rights is essential. The current round of constitutional discussions is not over yet so we do not have a definite schedule for the next round of discussions. However, the matter of property rights is progressing with the efforts of the working group on property rights.

HUMAN RIGHTS—EAST TIMOR—INVASION BY INDONESIAN TROOPS. (B) REQUEST FOR REPRESENTATIONS TO UNITED NATIONS

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, on February 17, I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) a question on behalf of a pathetic, suffering, tortured population in a little section of a little island called East Timor and a little section of another little island called Irian Jaya, some 500 kilometres North of Australia. These people have been crushed under the boots of an oppressive dictatorship in Indonesia. I asked the Minister politely without innuendo or sarcasm of any kind the following question:

> Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs knows that Canada has allotted $300 million in aid through CIDA to Indonesia over a five-year period. In fact, that represents the fourth largest Canadian aid program in all of Asia. How can the Government continue to ignore the fact that Indonesia has invaded East Timor with 40,000 troops and is conducting "Operation Extinction", which is tantamount to genocide? What kind of representations will the Secretary of State for External Affairs make to the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Indonesia, Dr. Mochtar, who is in Ottawa at the present time?

The Minister's reply included the following remarks:

> It would be a change in the basis of his representations in the House, if they were based on fact.

He went on to say:

> I would invite the Hon. Member, rather than relying upon the editorial opinion of The Globe and Mail, to learn the facts for himself and to avoid making accusations which he cannot support with facts.

Instead of treating this question with sympathy, the Secretary of State for External Affairs had to resort to personal attacks on the questioner. This is a sad regression and a breach of the promise the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made for a new era of civility. In any case, insults will not change the suffering of those people nor will it stop my determination to bring their tragedy to the attention of the House and the Canadian people.

In the House of Commons, I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs to make representations to the Indonesian Foreign Minister, Dr. Mochtar. The Minister replied that these arguments are exaggerated. I asked him to make representations on behalf of the indigenous people at the Human Rights Commission meeting in Geneva and he told me that unless I went to see for myself, I should not make accusations I could not support with facts. This is an incredible reply in view of the record of Indonesia and the reports which are a shocking indictment of human rights violations in East Timor as well as the fact that over 10,000 pathetic refugees from Irian Jaya have poured across the border into United Nations camps in Papua New Guinea.

Although the Red Cross is the only organization allowed into East Timor and is not even allowed into Irian Jaya, it is effectively muzzled because, as a humanitarian organization, it is not allowed to discuss anything except how many prisoners it could visit and the state of their care and rehabilitation. There are no other groups that the Indonesians will allow to enter East Timor or Irian Jaya.

When I was recently at the United Nations Human Rights Commission in Geneva, I was told about the refugees by the United Nations High Commission on Refugees. I was told about the atrocities by Amnesty International, Pax Christi, Pax Romana, the Canada-Asia working group of churches, the Australian Council for Overseas Aid, the International Christian Consultation on East Timor and of reports that were smuggled out to the members of the Pacific Conference of Churches that met at Samoa. I spoke to delegates from France and Portugal who appealed to Indonesia to end its atrocities and who appealed as well to the International Red Cross and others in Geneva whose names I cannot mention because of their links to people within East Timor. However, they are extremely credible.

I also spoke to Indonesian delegates. They confirmed that they will not allow human rights organizations or churches into Irian Jaya or into East Timor because they only "come to make trouble and lie about us". They also refused to explain why over the years they have never replied to accusations made by the United Nations Human Rights Commission.

Whom should we believe? Should we believe the reports of these human rights organizations based on information from refugees and smuggled messages, reports that are reliable, or should we accept the reassurances of the Minister who bases his information on the reports of the Canadian Ambassador to Indonesia who, given the opportunity to see East Timor, said: "Things aren't as bad as they were and have been exaggerated"?

I would hope that this time I will receive a decent, concerned and respectful answer to this question which deals with human suffering. It deserves no less from the Government of Canada, a nation with a great record of concern for human rights when they are brought to our attention.

• (1820)

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to reply to my colleague concerning the question of East Tumor, a question which of course is at the origin of impassioned reactions. I wonder how Opposition Members invariably manage to question the sources of information on certain anomalies or problems which exist in the world.

Mr. Speaker, rumours about many losses of life in Timor are founded. They are indeed true. When people are in that state, Mr. Speaker, when there is a civil war, it is not the only reason, it is not simply indiscriminate killing of the population, but it is, and this was confirmed by the International Red Cross Committee in 1979—which by the way saved 70,000 people—famine, lack of shelter, disease, malnutrition which are causing the largest number of deaths.

Naturally, Mr. Speaker, during a civil war you can count all the casualties and say that they result strictly from that war. You can count that way, but that is not what I call violation of human rights. According to our reports, there are no such violations of human rights at the present time.

Mr. Speaker, the news we get and the information my colleague received, are, according to our own information, exaggerated. Following the visit of the Minister of Foreign Affairs from Indonesia there were reports in the Sunday Star and in The Ottawa Citizen which were far more balanced than the accusations first made.

Clearly, Canada is greatly concerned by the recurrent rumors about violations of human rights. However, we are not going to put an end to our programs simply because of unconfirmed rumors. We now have the assistance of the International Red Cross and some other international groups which keep us up to date, inform us of the most recent developments, and even the questions put by my colleague are not ignored. We try to get information, we are concerned, and Canada, Mr. Speaker, precisely because it has great respect for human rights, will do its utmost to see that these rights are respected the world over.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.23 p.m.

ADDRESS

RONALD WILSON REAGAN

President of the United States of America

to

Both Houses of Parliament

in the

Monday, April 6, 1987

RONALD WILSON REAGAN
President of the United States of America
to Both Houses of Parliament
in the
Monday, April 6, 1987

The President was welcomed by the Right Honourable Brian Mulroney, Prime Minister of Canada, and thanked by the Honourable Guy Charbonneau, Speaker of the Senate and Honourable John A. Fraser, Speaker of the House of Commons.

Hon. John A. Fraser (Speaker of the House of Commons): Order, please.

Mr. President, we welcome you to this Chamber where the Canadian people are represented by Members of Parliament and Senators who comprise the Parliament of Canada.

[Translation]

We are honoured to have you in our midst.

[English]

I now invite the Right Honourable the Prime Minister to introduce our distinguished guest.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. President, in the House of Commons, for me, that is known as 82 per cent of a standing ovation.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: But we are not going to forget it.

Mr. Speaker of the Senate, Mr. Speaker of the House of Commons, Mr. President and Mrs. Reagan, Mesdames et Messieurs:

Mr. President, I welcome you to this House. I should at once thank you for arranging your schedule so that your visit here would result in the cancellation of Question Period.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: If you would like to stay around all week—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Almost 30 years ago, Prime Minister John Diefenbaker, in introducing President Eisenhower here in this Chamber, described him as the "leader of a mighty state" and as "someone who comes to us as a good neighbour and friend". There are Hon. Members of this Parliament here today who were present in this Chamber three decades ago. They would agree, I am sure, that much has changed since then, but they would agree as well that unchanged is the sincerity of our friendship and the profound respect our peoples have for democratic values and for each other.

We are aware this is the bi-centennial year of the American Constitution—a declaration of freedom and independence which has been a light of inspiration and hope to so much of mankind for two centuries.

Our two countries—different in so many ways—share more than a common border in a continent. We share in the advance of liberty and human dignity in a world still darkened by oppression, still bearing the stain of racism and intolerance. We share, as well, respect for our sovereign right to act in the best interests of the people we serve. We would hope for other peoples and other nations something of our own ongoing experience of trust and confidence and mutual respect.

Mr. President, you will know that much is different from your last visit to the House of Commons. The change is reflected in our joint agenda.

[English]

Canadians view with increasing concern the effects of acid rain upon our environment. But this is more than a Canadian problem. It is a transboundary problem which requires a transboundary response.

I urgently invite the United States administration and the American Congress to join with this Parliament, and the Government of Canada in concluding a firm bilateral accord which will provide a North American solution to acid rain.

• (1445)

Mr. Mulroney: In this matter, time is not our ally but our enemy. The longer we delay, the greater the cost. For what would be said of a generation that sought the stars but permitted its lakes and streams to languish and die?

[Translation]

Mr. President, you have described our present bi-lateral negotiations as presenting the opportunity for concluding—in your words—an "historic trade agreement".

[English]

With regard to trade and the trade agreement, Mr. President, if such a trade agreement is fair to both countries, it will be good for both peoples.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Mulroney: We are determined that this opportunity shall not pass in this generation, because the prosperity and competitive advantage of the next generation may well depend on it.

[English]

As we are linked in commerce and trade, so are we linked in the defence of our continent through NORAD, and in the defence of the Atlantic Alliance through NATO. As we are partners in progress, so are we partners in defending our democratic way of life.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Canada is not a neutral nation. We are not, and never have been, mere spectators in the struggle between freedom and tyranny.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Canada's credentials have been richly earned both in the defence of freedom and in the pursuit of peace.

Geographically situated between the two superpowers, Canada lives in the shadow of nuclear armaments.

Our people, deeply concerned about the arms race, are now encouraged by recent prospects for arms reduction. If the United States and the Soviet Union can conclude an agreement on short and medium range missiles, other arms reductions accords can follow.

A new day can begin. As President Eisenhower said in this House: "Beyond the shadow of the nuclear cloud, the horizon is bright with promise." Regrettably, after three decades that promise remains unfulfilled.

[English]

But with strength, solidarity and resolve, that promise may yet be secured.

It is the promise of a world in which a liberalized trading system works for the benefit of the developing, no less than the developed nations.

It is the promise of a world free of international terrorism, which our two Governments remain firmly resolved to combat.

It is the promise of a world free from the evil of apartheid, because the majority in South Africa cannot and must not remain in political and economic bondage.

It is the promise of a world where children learn tolerance and lead lives that exemplify it.

[Translation]

Those are but a few of our mutual obligations to a larger world, a world which looks to our two countries as beacons of liberty, of prosperity and generosity of spirit.

[English]

Mr. President, Sir Winston Churchill described the relationships between our nations as "an example for every country and a pattern for the future of the world". In testimony to that, this unique and enduring relationship has been celebrated recently by a joint resolution of the American Congress and the Parliament of Canada which proclaims July 2 and 3, the two days between our respective national days, as the "Canada-United States days of peace and friendship".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Our respective legislators have served their constituents well.

Six years ago, on your first visit to this Chamber, Prime Minister Trudeau said: "I wish you well in your task and comfort in your burden. May part of that comfort come from the assurance of Canada's abiding friendship for your country and your people".

Mr. President, I make mine the words of Prime Minister Trudeau. As we once again welcome you and Mrs. Reagan in our midst, you will know that that sentiment remains indeed unchallenged and unchanged in this House, in this Parliament, and in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: May I say to you, Mr. President, and to you, Mrs. Reagan, that in Canada you are among friends.

Ladies and gentlemen, the President of the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ronald W. Reagan (President of the United States): Mr. Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker of the Senate, Mr. Speaker of the House of Commons, honourable Senators, Members of the House of Commons, distinguished members of the diplomatic corps, ladies and gentlemen:

It is a great honour to speak to you today. As you know, this is my third official visit to Canada. My last two were the first foreign trips I had taken after each election. But our constitutional prohibitions being what they are, I thought it was not wise to wait for another election before visiting you again.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Reagan: I also wanted to time this trip after March so people would not think that these state visits are just an excuse for Prime Minister Mulroney and me to celebrate St. Patrick's Day together.

On each of these occasions I have been struck by how much our two nations have in common. Despite our many important differences, you see the similarities of our national characters in, among other things, the sports we share; hockey, baseball, football—with some modifications—and that fourth sport which seems to be as popular on both sides of the 49th parallel, giving a hard time to political leaders of Irish descent.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Reagan: It is truly an honour to have a second opportunity to address this august body, this great democratic legislature that has been witness to and shaper of so much of the history of freedom. I remember those days, not so very long after the attack on Pearl Harbour had once again united our two nations in a world conflict, when Winston Churchill stood where I am standing today. Wake Island had fallen just a week before; on Christmas Day, after an heroic defence by Canadian troops, Hong Kong was captured by the Axis; Manila was soon to be swallowed up as well.

But those who might have been expecting a picture of democracy in retreat got something very different from that indomitable spirit. "We have not journeyed all this way across the centuries," he said, "across the oceans, across the mountains, across the prairies, because we are made of sugar candy". Churchill was speaking of the members of the British Commonwealth, most specifically of the people of Canada, but I confess we Americans have always flattered ourselves that, though the thought was unspoken, he had us in mind, too.

As two proud and independent peoples there is much that distinguishes us, one from the other, but there is also much that we share: a vast continent, with its common hardships and uncommon beauties, generations of mutual respect and support, and an abiding friendship that grows ever stronger. We are two nations, each built by immigrants, refugees from tyranny and want, pioneers of a new land of liberty. The first settlers of this new world, alone before the majesty of nature, alone before God, must have been thrown back on first principles, must have realized that it was only in their most basic values that they would find the wisdom to endure and the strength to triumph. And so a dedication was formed, as hard as the granite of the Rockies—a dedication to freedom, a commitment to those unalienable human rights and their only possible guarantee, the institutions of democratic government.

A shared history, yes, but more than that: a shared purpose. It must have seemed to Churchill, besieged and isolated as he was in the one corner of Europe still clinging to freedom, that this American continent, and his two great friends and one-time colonies, had been placed here by a wise and prescient God, protected between two vast oceans, to keep freedom safe. In the crisis of the moment Churchill said it was not then time to "—speak of the hopes of the future, or the broader world which lies beyond our struggles and our victory". We must first, he said, "—win that world for our children".

In a very real sense, that is still our imperative today: to win the world for our children, to win it for freedom.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reagan: Today our task is not merely the survival of liberty, but to keep the peace while we extend liberty to a world desperately in need. Today we still contend against war, against a foreign expansionism, and I will speak to that in a moment. But I wish first to talk about a second struggle, one that must occupy an equal place in our attentions, the struggle against the plagues of poverty and under-development that still ravage so much of mankind.

Our two nations have committed many resources to that struggle, but we have it within our power at this moment to take an historic step toward a growing world economy and an expanding cycle of prosperity that reaches beyond the industrialized powers even to the developing nations. We can lead, first, by our powerful example, specifically by the example of Prime Minister Mulroney's far-sighted proposal to establish a free trade agreement that would eliminate most remaining trade barriers between Canada and the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reagan: After the Allied victory over the Axis powers, America and Canada combined their efforts to help restore Europe to economic health. Those were golden years of international economic co-operation that saw the creation of GATT which knocked down the tariff barriers that had so damaged the world economy; the International Monetary Fund; and 30 years ago last month, the creation of the Common Market. The theme that ran through it all was free and fair trade. Free and fair trade was the lifeblood of a reinvigorated Europe, a revitalized free world that saw a generation of growth unparalleled in history.

We must keep these principles fixed in our minds as we move forward on Prime Minister Mulroney's free trade proposal, a proposal that, I am convinced, will prove no less historic. Already our two nations generate the world's largest volume of trade. The United States trades more with the Province of Ontario alone than with Japan. United States citizens are by far the principal foreign investors in Canada, and Canadians, on a per capita basis, are even greater investors in our country. This two-way traffic in trade and investment has helped to create new jobs by the millions, expand opportunity for both our peoples, and augment the prosperity of both our nations.

Prime Minister Mulroney's proposal would establish the largest free trade area in the world, benefiting not only our two countries but setting an example of co-operation to all nations that now wrestle against the siren temptation of protectionism. To those who would hunker down behind barriers to fight a destructive and self-defeating round of trade battles, Canada and the United States will show the positive way.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reagan: We will overcome the impulse of economic isolationism with a brotherly embrace, an embrace, it is not too much to hope, that may some day extend throughout the Americas and ultimately encompass all free nations.

We can look forward to the day when the free flow of trade from the southern reaches of Tierra del Fuego to the northern outposts of the Arctic Circle, unites the people of the western hemisphere in a bond of mutually beneficial exchange, when all borders become what the U.S.-Canadian border so long has been—a meeting place rather than a dividing line.

• (1500)

Mr. Reagan: We recognize that the issues facing us are many and difficult. And just as this proud Parliament is watching our negotiations, so too is the United States Congress. A comprehensive, balanced agreement that provides open trade and investment on a comprehensive basis, an agreement in which both sides are winners—that is our goal.

Augmenting the spirit of the Uruguay trade negotiations, prelude to our economic summit in Venice this June, our free trade discussions here will be a model of co-operation to the world. Mr. Prime Minister, this will be a pioneering agreement worthy of a pioneering people; a visionary strategy, worthy of the elected head of one of the world's greatest democracies. Mr. Prime Minister, we salute you; and I pledge to you now that, for our part, we shall commit ourselves and the resources of our administration to good faith negotiations that will make this visionary proposal a reality.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reagan: And on this, the Canadian people and the Members of Parliament have my word.

Freedom works. The democratic freedoms that secure the God-given rights of man, and the economic freedoms that open the door to prosperity—they are the hope and, we trust, the destiny of mankind.

If free trade is the lifeblood, free enterprise is the heart of prosperity.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reagan: Jobs, rising incomes, opportunity—they must be created, day to day, through the enterprise of free men and women. We have had to learn and re-learn this lesson in this century. In my own country, we have witnessed an expansion and strengthening of many of our civil liberties, but too often we have seen our economic liberties neglected, even abused. We have protected the freedom of expression of the author, as we should—but what of the freedom of expression of the entrepreneur, whose pen and paper are capital and whose profits and literature are the heroic epic of free enterprise, a tale of creativity and invention that not only delights the mind, but has improved the condition of man, feeding the poor with new grains, bringing hope to the ailing with new cures, vanquishing ignorance with wondrous new information technologies.

In the United States we have found a new consensus, among members of both Parties, in a reformed tax structure that lowers tax rates and frees the spirit of enterprise of our people. Today, that consensus is broadening as your great free market nation seeks the same path back to the first principles of economic growth through rate-reducing tax reform. We see movements in Germany and Japan, as well, to cut tax rates. But this must be only the beginning; for what is simply beneficial to us is a matter of the most dire necessity to the nations and peoples of the developing world. And this is the second great example that, together, we offer to the nations of the world in desperate economic need. For the poorer, the more desperate their condition, the more urgently they need the growth that only economic freedom can bring.

We have seen time and again the healing, invigorating effects of economic freedom: tax rate cuts lifted both Germany and Japan out of post-war stagnation and into the forefront of the world economy; low tax rates catapulted the nations of the Pacific Basin out of the Third World, making them major economic partners today.

A recent study prepared for our Government found a direct relationship between the high tax rates and other statist policies of many underdeveloped countries and a cycle of deepening poverty and despair. On the other hand, the study found that countries with low tax rates and free market policies are among the fastest growing in the world, providing improved living standards and increased opportunity for all their people.

We apply the principles of economic freedom at home; we should not export central planning and statist economics abroad. When the Holy Father came to this country, he spoke of the moral obligation of the wealthier nations to share with those less fortunate—it is time to take up that challenge. Both our countries have been generous donors of foreign aid, and that is important.

But our own experience, the experience of this century, has shown that the only effective way to share prosperity is to share the conditions that generate prosperity. History has proven beyond a shadow of a doubt that statism spreads poverty; it is only freedom that begets wealth. Free markets, low tax rates, free trade—this is the most valuable foreign aid we can give to the developing nations of the Third World.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reagan: These are the weapons of peace we must deploy in the struggle to win a future of liberty for mankind. So many have come to Canada and the United States in hope—let us now give that hope to the world.

Throughout our history our two nations have keenly felt our international responsibilities. Instrumental in founding and maintaining the NATO alliance, through co-operative efforts in NORAD, Canada has taken a leading role in the defence of the free world. Meanwhile, we have co-operated in extending every effort to lessen the dangers of a nuclear-armed world.

Over the past six years, the United States—working closely with Canada and our other allies—has sought to achieve deep reductions in Soviet and American nuclear arms. Thanks to the firmness shown by the Alliance, we are moving toward a breakthrough agreement that would dramatically reduce an entire class of weapons—American and Soviet longer-range, intermediate range, INF missiles in Europe and Asia.

We have travelled far to get here—from past treaties that only codified the nuclear build-up, to the point where we may soon see the dismantling of thousands of these agents of annihilation. We are hopeful—we are expectant—but we face many difficulties still. As our negotiators continue to work toward a sound agreement, we are not going to abandon our basic principles—or our allies' interests—for the sake of a quick fix, an inadequate accord.

We will work for truly verifiable reductions that strengthen the security of our friends and allies in both Europe and Asia and that cannot be circumvented by any imbalance in shorter-range INF systems. In short, America will stand where she always stood: with her allies, in defence of freedom and the cause of peace.

We must continue to keep in mind, as well, that a major impetus in our reduction talks has been the growing reality of our Strategic Defence Initiative. SDI supports and advances the objectives of arms control—

Mr. Robinson: No way.

Mr. Reagan: —offering a more stable and secure environment as we pursue our goal of deep reductions in nuclear weapons. We must move away from a situation of Mutual Assured Destruction—so aptly called MAD, the MAD policy. We need defensive systems that threaten no one, that would save human lives instead of targeting them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reagan: We must remember that the Soviet Union has spent 15 times as much on strategic defences as we have over the last 10 years, while their record of compliance with existing arms treaties continues to be a cause for concern. Most people do not understand that Mutual Assured Destruction has left our populations absolutely defenceless. This is an intolerable situation; the truly moral course is to move forward quickly with a new strategy of peace—based not on the ability to threaten lives, but on our confidence that we can save them. Let us choose a defence that truly defends.

As we have pursued better relations with the Soviet Union, we have laboured to deal realistically with the basic issues that divide that nation from the free world. Our insistence that the Soviet Union adhere to its Helsinki human rights agreement is not just a moral imperative; we know that no nation can truly be at peace with its neighbours if it is not at peace with its own people.

In recent months, we have heard hopeful talk of change in Moscow, of a new openness. Some political prisoners have been released; the BBC is no longer jammed—we welcome these positive signs and hope that they are only the first steps toward a true liberalization of Soviet society.

To the extent the Soviet Union truly opens its society—to that extent its economy and the life of its people will improve; to that extent we may hope its aggression will diminish. Disappointingly, however, there so far has been little movement on the Soviet side toward the peaceful settlement of regional conflicts that today are flaring across the globe.

Despite announcements of ceasefires and talk of national reconciliation, the Soviet's terrible war against Afghanistan remains unabated—and Soviet attacks on neighbouring Pakistan have escalated dangerously. In Cambodia, Ethiopia, and Angola, the Soviet Union continues to support brutal wars of Communist Governments against their own people. In Nicaragua, we see such a campaign on our own shores—

Mr. Parry: Shameful!

Mr. Reagan: Is there an echo in here?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reagan: Thank you. In Nicaragua, we see such a campaign on our own shores, threatening destabilization throughout Central America. This is not just a question of self-protection; the higher principle is that the people of Nicaragua have the right to decide their own future.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reagan: The surest sign that the Soviet Union truly wants better relations, that it truly wants peace, would be to end its global strategy to impose one-party dictatorships—allow the people of this world to determine their own futures, in liberty and peace. We know that when people are given the opportunity to choose, they choose freedom.

Truly, the future belongs to the free. In our own hemisphere, we have seen a freedom tide sweep over South and Central America: Six years ago, only 30 per cent of the people of Latin America lived in democracies—today, over 90 per cent do. Around the world, resistance movements are rising up to throw off the totalitarian yoke. Even in China, they debate the pace of reform but acknowledge its necessity.

On the border between Canada and the United States stands a plaque commemorating over a century and a half of friendship. It calls the border: "a lesson of peace to all nations", and that is what it is: a concrete, living lesson that the path to peace is freedom, that the relations of free peoples, no matter how different, no matter how distinct their national characters, will be marked by admiration, not hostility.

Go stand along the border at the beginning of July. You will see the Maple Leaf and the Stars and Stripes mixed in a swirling cloud of visitors and celebrants. As a Canadian writer once put it: "What's the difference between Dominion Day and July 4? About 48 hours".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reagan: Yes, we have differences, disputes, as any two sovereign nations will. But we are always able to work them out, entre amis.

One area of particular concern to all Canadians, I know, is the problem of acid rain. When the Prime Minister and I met in Quebec two years ago, we appointed two distinguished Envoys, Bill Davis and Drew Lewis, to examine the problem. They issued a joint report, which we have endorsed, and we are actively implementing many of their recommendations.

The first phase of our clean coal technology program is under way. It is the beginning of a $6 billion commitment through 1992, and I have asked Congress for the full share of government spending recommended by the Envoys—$2.5 billion—for the demonstration of innovative pollution control technologies over the next five years.

Literally thousands of firms and millions of jobs will be affected by whatever steps we take on this problem, so there are no quick and easy answers. However, working together, we have made an important start. I am convinced that, as in the past, our disputes will bring us closer as we find a mutual accord, and our differences will become only another occasion for co-operation. Let me assure you that your concerns are my concerns.

I was struck recently by the words of a Canadian—a Hungarian Canadian you might call him—who came to this country, as so many before him, to escape oppression. He said: "I wanted to stretch. I needed a place where I could move mountains or carry larger stones than Sisyphus, and here was the place for it—nobody telling me what I'm supposed to believe as a Canadian—gave me a kind of freedom for my mind and my spirit and my creative energies that I had never experienced before in life. (And) I found that, for me, anyhow, anything could be possible here".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reagan: This is your Canada, and our continent. This is the chosen place in history our two nations occupy: a land where the mind and heart of man are free; a land of peace; a land where, indeed, anything is possible.

May I add a word about our discussions today on two issues of critical interest to our two countries. The Prime Minister and I agreed to consider the Prime Minister's proposal for a bilateral accord on acid rain, building on the tradition of agreements to control pollution of our shared international waters.

The Prime Minister and I also had a full discussion of the Arctic waters issue, and he and I agreed to inject new impetus to the discussions already under way. We are determined to find a solution based on mutual respect for sovereignty and our common security and other interests.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reagan: Thank you all very much, and God bless you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Guy Charbonneau (The Speaker of the Senate): Mr. President, Mr. Speaker of the House, Prime Minister, ladies and gentlemen:

[Translation]

Mr. President, first of all, I would like to thank you for your visit to this country and to the Parliament of Canada, and also for the words of wisdom and encouragement you have just spoken. They confirm that Canada and the United States of America have in common, as has ever been the case, a desire to build a better, safer and more prosperous world, with a profound respect for liberty and justice. They also confirm that the special ties between our two countries are as important to you, our neighbours and American friends, as they are to us Canadians.

[English]

We are particularly pleased that your visit takes place during the Bicentennial of the birth of the American Constitution, that godchild of Montesquieu's enlightenment. It is a happy reminder of the ties between Europe and America, and gives us reason to believe that the most important event in Europe in the 18th century was the Congress of Philadelphia.

The Bicentennial of your Constitution has a profound significance for us. Without it, our own Canadian Constitution might well have been quite different. Your founding fathers were innovators in their day in that they established a federation, a bold departure in a world dominated by unitary or at best confederative systems of government. We shall always be grateful to them for setting an example of a federative system of government.

Your republican Constitution and a consciousness of the relationship between Canada and the United States played a part, too, in the naming of our country in 1867, the year of Confederation. In calling the new country "The Dominion of Canada" rather than "The Kingdom of Canada", the British Government tactfully deferred to the republican feelings of our southern neighbours. It was a gesture which showed considerable statesmanship, in that it could present Canada as a republican monarchy.

In fact, in 1787, your fellow Americans saw clearly that the office of President closely resembled that of a monarch. They proposed that the President be addressed as "His Majesty". This idea was rejected, but for a time, people still spoke of the President's "throne". As you will know, Mr. President, by another paradoxical situation, the impecunious Hamilton promoted the royal symbols, while the wealthy Jefferson pleaded for the republican emblems.

In 1867 we chose to name our Upper House the Senate, and, like yours at the beginning, it is a non-elected body. After all, it was not until 1913 that by an amendment to the Constitution your country decided to elect rather than designate Senators. In that process, the prestige and influence of the House of Representatives was somewhat diminished. I doubt that my Senate colleagues expect soon to be in a similar position vis-à-vis the House of Commons but, as you know, history has a habit of coming up with some surprising developments!

[Translation]

Mr. President, you are aware of the importance to Canadians of the ties between our two countries. Sharing a continent and common values, we are in the habit of considering you as our American cousins. Although our symbols would seem to contradict each other—the star-spangled banner of the Republic and our country's sovereignty within the British Commonwealth—our relations have always reflected a profound mutual respect.

[English]

Our common political origins and our long history of amity and co-operation allow us to affirm that our friendly relations are destined for perpetuity. Your presence and your words to us today are additional proof of this, and we offer you our respectful gratitude.

We are honoured that you accepted our invitation to address us. Thank you, Mr. President.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Mr. President, many distinguished visitors address both Houses of Parliament in this Chamber, but no occasion is more welcome than when the long friendship that exists between our two peoples is manifested by the presence here of the President of the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: On each past occasion, Presidents have spoken of the close friendship between Canada and the United States, and your words today maintain that tradition.

Canadians have reciprocated with the heartfelt welcome our people give to very special friends.

We share a continent and have done so peaceably for many generations. We have fought as allies against tyranny and for the democratic principles which we both share.

[Translation]

We have remained close allies, despite some difficult times. We both know that only mutual cooperation will enable our respective nations to meet their obligations to each other and to the rest of the world.

[English]

We who cherish freedom and parliamentary institutions are aware not only of the advantages and privileges we enjoy as free people, but also of the responsibility we have to set an example of mutual co-operation for others.

The close relationship which exists between Canadian parliamentarians and members of the Senate and House of Representatives is consequently of great significance. That close relationship will be again strengthened later this year when the Canada-United States Parliamentary Association holds its annual meeting in Vancouver, British Columbia.

These meetings exemplify a growing desire of parliamentarians in both our countries to come together to address both the problems and the opportunities which we share as a consequence of our close association as neighbours and friends.

Your visit, Sir, encourages this close relationship, and we are grateful for your personal commitment in this regard.

[Translation]

Mr. President, as Speaker of the House of Commons, it is with great pleasure that I welcome you to this Chamber today, on the occasion of your visit and that of Mrs. Reagan.

It is an honour and a privilege to do so, and we thank you for this opportunity.

[English]

You take with you our renewed expression of respect and warm affection for you and for all our American friends. Thank you, Mr. President.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I now adjourn this meeting.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

QUEBEC

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Regretfully, Mr. Speaker, Quebecers are again being led down the garden path by the Conservative Government. Having been led down the garden path with respect to the Montreal East refinery, the shipyards, and the international banking centre, this time Quebecers are being led down the garden path by the Conservative Government in the case of the space agency.

Mr. Speaker, we can still hear the echo of the solemn Throne Speech promise made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), one hand over his heart and the other on the Bible: a space agency shall be established. Under pressure from various provinces vying for the agency, the Prime Minister, as Le Droit journalist Alain Dexter pointed out, repeated the old slogan of the 1960s: When time comes there will be no commercial, there will be no space agency.

Mr. Speaker, I conclude by saying what Quebecers will reply at the next election: There will no longer be any Conservatives in Quebec.

DISASTERS

FLOODS IN BEAUCE—REQUEST FOR NEW COMPENSATION MEASURES

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, last week the Beauce region was struck by disaster. Several hundred families were affected by flooding caused by the Chaudière River. A number of our industries have also suffered the effects of the flooding, and several villages and towns, especially Sainte-Marie-de-Beauce, have suffered damages estimated at several million dollars.

Our Government has announced that provinces affected by these disasters can apply to the federal Government for assistance after making an accurate estimate of the damages, and that we could then go ahead and spend the money.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to suggest that this Government consider some way of compensating the victims of these disasters. Why not provide for a mechanism by which part of the losses incurred by private individuals would be tax deductible both at the federal and the provincial level?

I visited the people of Beauce after the flooding occurred, and I can say that many of these families will be faced with considerable financial problems.

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that the Mulroney Government, in co-operation with the provinces, will take steps to deal fairly and equitably with those concerned.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

GOVERNMENT'S COMPREHENSIVE LAND CLAIMS POLICY

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, last December the federal Government released its long awaited comprehensive land claims policy. After years and in some cases decades, the Government promised to improve the existing claims process. For native people in British Columbia, this new policy now appears to have a price tag attached to it.

The Tahltan Tribal Council, the Nishga Tribal Council and the Taku River Tlingits have had their claims research funding cut by a total of $705,000. The reason given by DIA officials for this is that there is an absence of a formal tripartite negotiating process. In plain English, that means that B.C. claimants are being penalized because their Premier refuses to recognize the legitimate claims of aboriginal people.

The much touted comprehensive land claims policy specifically commits the federal Government strongly to encourage the provinces to negotiate. The policy claims that a fair and equitable resolution of such claims is a major priority of the Government of Canada. Finally, the new policy acknowledges that land claims negotiations are more than real estate transactions. I must agree with the spirit of such a commitment, but those commitments must be kept.

I call upon the Minister responsible to get the B.C. Government to the negotiating table and to stop penalizing claimant groups for that Government's insensitivity.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

EXCEPTION TAKEN TO MEMBER'S COMMENTS

Mr. W. R. Bud Jardine (Northumberland—Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, exception must be taken to the comments of the Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) concerning the Government's efforts to reverse the harm inflicted on the Canadian Armed Forces and the damage done to Canada's image since the 1960s. Since when are press reports considered substitutes for official party or government policies? When he referred to three newspaper articles, the Hon. Member implied that they contained mention of, to use his words, promises and commitments. These words are nowhere to be found in direct connection to anyone involved with the Government.

The Hon. Member conveniently cites a real growth percentage figure in the defence budget for the period between 1980 and 1984. When real growth in the late 1960s is calculated, it shows that Liberal Governments had an abysmal track record. In the early years of the Trudeau administration, the defence budget was frozen outright for three years. The effective strength of the Armed Forces was cut drastically. Our NATO effort was halved. The percentage of the defence budget dedicated to capital acquisitions was in the low teens.

Now Canada's stock with its NATO allies is at an all-time high. This is a direct result of this Government's efforts. Unfortunately, it is the Hon. Member who suffers from amnesia. It is he who is in a fog, and it is he who should bear the shame for his Party's neglect of our men and women in uniform.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—CRITICISM OF UNITED STATES SUPPORT FOR CONTRA FORCES

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I did not heckle the President of the United States when he was here as our guest on Monday but I want to tell the President today that I totally reject his policy on Nicaragua and Central America.

• (1410)

The revolution in Nicaragua was not, as the President alleged, the result of the East-West struggle, the struggle between the U.S. and the Soviet Union, but rather the result of 50 years of Somozan dictatorship, exploitation, and corruption. That was the basis of the Sandinista revolution. It is unfortunate that the U.S. Government does not understand that. How much better if the U.S. helped this small country with its economic development rather than destroying it through Contra forces.

We welcome foreign leaders in this country to discuss national problems, but when we disagree with them we should say so at the proper time, directly and formally.

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE'S RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to say that this past week the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General tabled its report on the review of the Access to Information Act and the Privacy Act. I think it is important for a number of reasons, is in the spirit of open government and freedom of information, and has long been a platform of the Progressive Conservative Party.

The report makes 108 recommendations dealing with shortcomings in both Acts and in their administration. It stems from a belief that all Members of Parliament, indeed all Canadians, would agree that open government is good government, and that while Canadians expect their right to privacy to be fully protected, they also want their Government to be open.

The report proposes that the waiting period for information be reduced and that application fees be eliminated. It will prohibit the unauthorized use of social insurance numbers, and it will mean that all exemptions for information will be discretionary and subject to a significant injury test. I believe the report is a landmark in opening up government institutions and it should receive careful consideration by all Members of Parliament.

INCOME TAX ACT—PROVISION AFFECTING OFF-FARM INCOME

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, at this time of crisis in agriculture most farm families have at least one person earning off-farm income to help pay for farm losses. This off-farm income is often required simply to stave off immediate bankruptcy.

The Conservative Government was elected in part on a commitment to make some changes to Section 31 of the Income Tax Act to allow more than $5,000 of farm losses to be written off against off-farm income. That is one more Tory election promise unfulfilled. I call upon the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) either to follow the standing committee's recommendation to double the loss limit in Section 31 of the Act, or revoke the section entirely.

PARLIAMENT

BEHAVIOUR OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY MEMBERS DURING ADDRESS BY PRESIDENT OF UNITED STATES—CONSEQUENCES

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Yesterday in the Soviet Union, Mr. Speaker, the Tass news agency reported that Canadian Members of Parliament had heckled the President of the United States throughout his address to the House of Commons of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, all Canadians are offended to be identified with a small group of socialists who, unfortunately, happen to be temporary Members of this House.

The abuse which the socialist comrades heaped upon the American President in the House last Monday constitutes an affront to this Parliament and to our nation. The socialist leader heard it and tacitly approved, and he stealthily left the House without saying a word after the President had concluded his remarks.

However, fearful of retaliatory reaction by the electorate, the socialist leader now admonishes his troops, his House leader among others.

If the socialist leader is serious, if his admonishments are forthright, he must at once replace his comrade the House leader.

It is only by taking immediate action that the leader of the socialist Party will prove that he is an honest man.

CONTRACT AWARDING POLICY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, last Friday the House was in fact the victim of a malicious Government attack against the parliamentary Opposition. The insults proferred by certain Ministers are recorded in Hansard. Here are some of them: McCarthy-Turner. Sleaze. Out of the gutter. Gutter politics, and so on.

Yet at the same time as the Government was taking this holier-than-thou stance, certain Ministers on the other side knew full well that the Liberal Opposition was not alone in expressing doubt about the Government contract awarding policy. As a matter of fact, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes) himself knew that an RCMP investigation was under way at the very moment when the Minister was making accusations against the Opposition in the House of Commons. Earlier today the Minister did admit that the investigation has now been going on for several months already.

Fortunately, Mr. Speaker, truth has prevailed. Once again Canadians have been able to witness the hypocrisy of the Conservative Government.

POLITICAL PARTIES

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, during a visit to the United Kingdom Parliament at Westminster I witnessed a new political force which is ravaging the Labour Party. The new force has no real political loyalty, it only recruits socialists. Those who join are designated "the loony left". They are identifiable by the causes they espouse; for example, funding for gay marriage ceremonies, total and unilateral disarmament, denying the existence of hostile military powers, and government spending in disregard of financial resources.

Unfortunately there is evidence the loony left has invaded Canada and recruited the New Democratic Party. Do you know anyone who yells during speeches of Heads of State and supports weird causes? He is probably a member of Canada's new political force—the loony left. May I be the first to acknowledge the presence in the Parliament of Canada of Canada's loony left?

SOVEREIGNTY

THE ARCTIC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) refused to answer my questions about his exchange of letters last week with the President of the United States with regard to a secret deal on Canada's sovereignty in the Arctic. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), in attempting to answer for the Prime Minister, failed to respond to my questions and the serious issues I raised.

That is not good enough. This House and the people of Canada need to know if the Government is trading away, or willing even to give away, Canada's Arctic. The Prime Minister also raised alarm by his comments on U.S. television Sunday that Canada was willing to "facilitate and expand" defence arrangements with the U.S. He said, "you can draw some pretty fundamental conclusions from that". What conclusions? What new defence arrangements? And what about the Prime Minister's secret letter to the President concerning the Arctic? Mr. Speaker, Canadians must have answers.

THE ECONOMY

RESULTS OF WORK ON BEHALF OF WESTERN CANADIAN ECONOMY

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, many western Canadians have expressed concern about our economy as the industries of agriculture and oil are being hard hit by world market forces. I would like to draw attention today to the commitment and dedication of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and western Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament.

Before the $1 billion farm payment and, most recently, the annual $350 million oil program, the Prime Minister and western Conservatives worked hard to see that appropriate action was taken. In the new oil program, for example, approximately 1,000 Saskatchewan jobs will be saved and about $100 million a year will be directed to oil production in western Saskatchewan. The Small Explorers and Producers Association says this federal program will lead to $1 billion in new oil and gas investment in western Canada.

In a difficult economic time it is understandable to be concerned about our western Canadian economy. However, it is not reasonable to conclude that western Canada is not receiving a great deal of attention and financial assistance from the Government. The West is a top priority of Brian Mulroney.

1988 WINTER OLYMPICS

DEMAND FOR FRENCH RADIO BROADCASTS NATION-WIDE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, today I would like to talk about the awarding of English and French broadcasting rights for the 1988 Winter Olympics.

As we know, the Calgary Olympic Development Association awarded the rights to CTV and TVA. The 1988 Winter Olympics Committee has decided to go along with a proposal that we find unsatisfactory, because neither CTV nor TVA are in a position to broadcast in French nation-wide.

I want to stress the fact today in the House that, since Canadians have invested $200 million, they have a right to receive the 1988 Winter Olympics in French outside Quebec, where TVA has no network, and on radio as well. However, all Canadians, whether they are Anglophone or Francophone, will be deprived of the possibility of listening to live reports on radio.

It seems to me highly irregular that this Government is unable to pressure the CBC, our own Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, to provide broadcasting in French and English on radio, and in French on television, across Canada.

HUMAN RIGHTS

U.S.S.R.—PLIGHT OF DANYLO SHUMUK

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Mr. Speaker, I rise again, as I have many times in this House, to bring to the attention of the House the plight of Danylo Shumuk, a Soviet dissident. Although the officials of the Soviet Union have indicated their wish to democratize and improve relations with western nations, their actions belie their words. It may be that a red leopard has as much difficulty changing its spots as has one of more traditional colour.

Danylo Shumuk, following the expiration of his sentence in January, has once again been placed under administrative surveillance and thus has been denied permission to emigrate to Canada. This surveillance includes a nightly curfew, tri-monthly reporting to the authorities, the requirement to remain at his exile site rather than his home in Russia, and other forms of obscure and obscene harassment. It must be emphasized that Danylo Shumuk is 72 years old, in fragile health, and every month of added exile is jeopardizing his survival and his long held goal to reunite with his relatives in Canada.

I urge the Government of Russia to release this man to his relatives in Canada on humanitarian grounds.

CULTURE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—U.S. SENATOR'S STATEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are becoming frustrated that the Prime Minister repeatedly fails to protect Canadian sovereignty and Canadian culture. On December 9, Senator Matsunaga and three other senior United States Senators had meetings here in Ottawa with the Prime Minister and some of his cabinet colleagues. The very next day, December 10, the Prime Minister told me in the House of Commons that he had made it clear to all four American Senators that Canadian culture was not on the bargaining table in the free trade negotiations. His words were: "Nothing was said that might cast doubts on this position".

Since the Prime Minister personally believed Senator Matsunaga and the other Senators, and since that Senator is now saying that Canadian and American cultures ought to be blended, how did the Prime Minister fail to get his message across to this very important American Senator?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen a direct quotation from Senator Matsunaga. What has been reported to me is the report of a conversation that is alleged to have taken place. I will look at the transcript, if one is immediately available. Based on what was said, I can indicate that Senator Matsunaga, whom I met, is a distinguished Senator from Hawaii and has a point of view in regard to culture that even my right hon. friend would readily agree is not widely shared, if at all, by anyone here or elsewhere.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF SENATOR MATSUNAGA'S ATTITUDE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we could give the Prime Minister a report on the conversation and the interview with the Senator, but if, as he claims, the Prime Minister always stresses that Canada is a bilingual country and that bilingualism is not negotiable in the free trade talks, why did Senator Matsunaga claim in the interview that everybody in Canada speaks English? Did the Prime Minister of Canada inform Senator Matsunaga or did he not? And if he did, how are we to explain this attitude?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am now being held responsible for the level of understanding of every Member and Minister, every U.S. senator and representative. Is Senator Matsunaga unaware of the fact that Canada is a bilingual country, and do I have a responsibility to help him understand that? I think we took full advantage of that important moment when the U.S. President came here to the House only 48 hours ago. The proceedings were broadcast live to the United States, and the Prime Minister of Canada, in his speech and his presentation, made it clear, in English and in French, that this country is bilingual, at all times.

ECONOMIC UNION ADVOCATED BY U.S. SENATOR

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, of course Senator Matsunaga is not just a run-of-the-mill U.S. Senator. He happens to be Chairman of the sub-Committee on Trade and happened to be the swing vote that authorized the President to begin negotiations on the fast track. The Prime Minister said in the House that he had briefed the Senator and his colleagues on the cultural aspects of Canada. Indeed, he had lunch and a subsequent meeting with those four Senators.

Senator Matsunaga also said that he favoured economic union between Canada and the United States.

Why is it all these senior American officials and senior American Senators get these wild ideas after meeting with the Prime Minister? What does he do at these meetings?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I don't know, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That's the problem.

Mr. Mulroney: I don't know. I was going to ask my right hon. friend, because the Leader of the Liberal Party makes a clear-cut statement that he is opposed to free trade, but the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount does not understand. He says he is in favour. Take him to lunch.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CULTURAL PROTECTION—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have the feeling that the Prime Minister is out to lunch.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Finestone: I would like to follow up on the Prime Minister's response because it painfully illustrates that the Prime Minister has failed to understand the American political process and he has failed to understand, and clearly explain, Canada's views on Canadian language and culture and to explain that to American decision-makers.

Does he not realize that what the Senator said, that the concept of Canadian cultural protection is really a misconcept, that the sooner our cultures are blended into one the better it will be for both our countries, is not acceptable? What is the Prime Minister going to do to ensure that this melting-pot policy does not become part of the reality of tomorrow? And how will he refute the Senator's view that: "You are going to get it whether you like it or not"?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a pretty slow day. They are really catching up after the success of yesterday.

With regard to my hon. friend's question, my hon. friend was present in the House of Commons when a very important debate took place with regard to trade where the Government, in its resolution, clearly stipulated that the debate was engaged pursuant to a set of criteria which acknowledged at all times the integrity of the country, our linguistic and cultural provisions. No one—no one—in this House, or elsewhere, with a brain in his head has called that into question. I urge my hon. friend—

Mr. Riis: Tell it to the Senator.

Mr. Mulroney: I can only be charged with responsibility for Members of this House, and having watched a couple of you fellows yesterday, I am not so sure I want to continue.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mrs. Finestone: It is unfortunate that once again, the Prime Minister's message did not come across. If the Prime Minister's message is as clear as it appears to be, if the Americans understand this message, then why was it clear from their message that they did not understand?

IMPORTANCE OF BILINGUALISM AND MULTICULTURALISM

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): My question is as follows: When is the Prime Minister going to make Americans understand that bilingualism and multiculturalism are an essential part of the Canadian fact? When is he going to get this idea across? When?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when Mr. Trudeau was Prime Minister and gave his version of Canada, his view was not necessarily endorsed by all Canadians and certainly not by all Quebecers. That did not mean Mr. Trudeau had failed in his duty to make his position perfectly clear to all Canadians and all Quebecers.

I think it is also true that, notwithstanding the clarity of the position adopted by the Government of Canada and the Parliament of Canada, there may be some Americans, including one or two Senators, who do not entirely share our point of view. That is too bad for them, and they will just have to do their homework. Moreover, the position of the Government of Canada with respect to protecting our culture and our language is unequivocal, and it is so at all times and in all circumstances, and the Hon. Member from Mount Royal knows that perfectly well.

U.S. SENATOR'S VIEWS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the Prime Minister is not taking this issue as seriously as he should.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Langdon: It seems to me that we have here the statements of the Champ Clark of the 1987 free trade debate. With the tremendous amount of effort which the Prime Minister's Government claims to put into its relations with Congress how is it possible that he has not succeeded in reaching, with some semblance of reality, a more realistic view with the senior dominant member, the Chairman of the Trade Subcommittee of the United States Senate?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I indicated to one of my friends that I suppose one would have to ask the distinguished Senator from Hawaii about that. The view that he has expressed is, as everyone knows, completely at variance with the view expressed by all Members of this House, irrespective of political Party. My hon. friend knows that. For example, he knows that when President Reagan was here speaking on behalf of the American people and on behalf of the American administration he clearly referred to those cultural and linguistic differences which are so much a part of our heritage. So I do not know why my hon. friend is so intrigued by this matter. If there is a problem, then perhaps he should speak to the Hon. Senator who is alleged to have made this statement, and not to me. I had nothing to do with it.

REASON FOR SENATOR'S STATEMENT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, it strikes me that the Prime Minister has not yet grasped the difference between persuading the President of the United States and the Congress of the United States on this crucial free trade issue. Why is it that a senior, extremely important American Senator would make statements about the French fact in this country so completely at variance with the facts which are evident to anyone who lives in this country or who knows it?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago, or perhaps a few weeks ago, one of the colleagues of my hon. friend from the NDP raised a question about a transient Democratic Congressman from the United States, Mr. Sikorski, who was up here delivering lectures to Canadians and the Government of Canada in regard to acid rain. I took the liberty of suggesting that perhaps Congressman Sikorski could best spend his time persuading in this area the leadership of the Democratic Party in the Senate and the House, many of whom are opposed to the position adopted by the Parliament of Canada, to come around to that view to ensure the passage of the types of accords and documents that we seek. May I suggest that the same type of action would be appropriate.

If there is a member of the Democratic majority in the Senate, or perhaps in the Republican minority, who expresses a view at variance with views expressed in this House, it remains a free country and he is entitled to his point of view even though that point of view is shared by no one in this House of Commons. It is up to him and his American colleagues to resolve that. But the Hon. Member can be certain that that view in no way reflects the attitudes that have been adopted by those charged with the responsibilities in this area.

COMMUNICATIONS WITH U.S. SENATORS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I come back to the fact that this person is not some fly-by-wind Senator who simply arrived on our shores; he is the Chairman of the Trade Subcommittee of the Senate. He has to accept or reject the conditions which are established for the free trade accord which the Prime Minister wants. Has the Prime Minister, through his ambassadors and his various envoys, simply not been talking to a Senator as important as this one? Or has he been putting views across that lead this Senator to put such ridiculous statements before the Canadian people?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to join in this matter in kicking it to death. Senator Matsunaga is a distinguished Senator from Hawaii who has a view that is clearly at variance not only with that of his own Party in the Senate but at variance with that expressed by President Reagan on behalf of the American people.

Ms. Jewett: It's ignorance.

Mr. Mulroney: The NDP says that it is ignorance.

Ms. Jewett: That is right.

Mr. Mulroney: If that is the case, then that is the view of the NDP. We saw what happens from the NDP when other people try to express their own views in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I am just stating for my hon. friend that while I reject categorically, always have and always will, any such point of view, I cannot impugn the motives of the Senator from Hawaii who chooses to hold such a view.

Mr. Rodriguez: We have two languages, Brian!

Mr. Mulroney: Having held meetings with Senator Bensten and many of his colleagues, I can tell the Hon. Member that that view in no way represents the view of the majority of Americans, either on the Finance Committee or the Trade Subcommittee, and it shall not be at any time a matter of consequence when trade matters are discussed.

PUBLIC WORKS

PLACE VINCENT MASSEY—COST OF RENOVATIONS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. It concerns Place Vincent Massey in Hull. Moments ago Canadians witnessed the futile press conference given by the Minister of Public Works in which he so desperately tried to defend the indefensible in regard to the renewal of the lease at Place Vincent Massey.

Today the Minister and his officials admitted that they had no idea of the cost breakdown associated with the renovations involving this lease. One of his officials said: "We do not go into Mr. Tessier's books". If the Government does not know what it cost to renovate the building, how then can the Minister, who maintains that it cost $4.2 million, say that it was a good deal when he has no idea what the cost was?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry that the Hon. Member was not at the press conference—

Mr. Gauthier: We got it on TV.

Mr. McInnes: —where we gave the press the opportunity to ask us any question on any element of this particular issue, because we have nothing to hide.

We got cost estimates from the owner about the renovations which totalled in excess of $4 million. Those were analysed. They were verified. It was agreed that they were reasonable. The matter was proceeded with.

INQUIRY WHEN RCMP SEIZED DOCUMENTS AND WHEN MINISTER WAS INFORMED

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, we have learned today that the RCMP had seized documents concerning this case. I should like to know from the Minister the date when the RCMP seized these documents, when the Minister himself was so informed and, finally, why he neglected his duty and failed to admit it in the House last week instead of accusing Members of the Opposition?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I have no more knowledge than any other Member of this House about an RCMP investigation. I know that they came and took some documents from our Department some time ago.

Mr. Nunziata: Seized!

Mr. McInnes: I do not know what they took. I do not know what the nature of the investigation is. I am sure the RCMP will let us know in the fullness of time the results of their investigation.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY WHAT PRIME MINISTER PROPOSES TO DO TO EDUCATE AMERICANS ON OFFICIAL BILINGUALISM OF CANADA

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and has to do with the utterly erroneous remarks of Senator Matsunaga. Would the Prime Minister not admit that first such erroneous remarks on the French fact in Canada must be condemned, and then that this misunderstanding must be corrected? What concrete measure does the Prime Minister propose to take to educate Americans, senators especially, on the official bilingualism of Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I have answered this question a couple of times in the House today. There is no longer any need to prove Canada's bilingualism, it is a historic and vital reality of our national life. It has never been questioned by anybody, nor will it ever be. Will all Americans acknowledge, accept and understand this fact at all times? It will be their problem, their dilemma, but this will not affect our situation or our national will.

• (1440)

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER SENT CLEAR MESSAGE TO UNITED STATES

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Will the Prime Minister send a very clear message to the United States that we do not want our languages in the melting pot, nor do we want our culture in the blender with theirs?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for her concern, which I appreciate.

The views of the Government of Canada, and the Parliament of Canada, surely could not have been stated with any greater clarity. There is no question as to what the Government of Canada and the Parliament of Canada have sought to achieve in matters of bilingualism and linguistic rights.

I do not know whether the Hon. Member expects me or the Government of Canada to be able to persuade all members of Congress, at all times, as to certain realities. These realities do exist, and all I can do is to tell the House that we have been vigilant at all times, as Parliament would want; that we have been unrelenting in our pursuit of these realities; and that we shall conduct ourselves at all times in a manner that the Hon. Member would be very proud of.

GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY INTO METHOD OF AWARDING CONTRACTS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and concerns the contracts for Government advertising that were mentioned in a number of reports today.

It is reported that Mr. Jean Péloquin, in his capacity as Co-chairman of the Government's Advertising Management Group, awarded advertising contracts to his own company, Les productions Indigo, for a total of $300,000, in addition to giving reference mostly to a number of businesses and advertising agencies that support the Conservative Party.

What I want to ask the Prime Minister is: Will he make the right decision this time and ask for a public inquiry into the way this Government awards advertising contracts?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that as soon as the allegations were made, as the Minister responsible for Supply and Services I asked my department to investigate.

REQUEST THAT PUBLIC INQUIRY BE CONDUCTED

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's reply is not exactly a surprise. By noon we knew she had asked for an internal investigation.

However, what we want is not a cover-up, not Jean Péloquin investigating Jean Péloquin, but a public inquiry. Not what happened in the Bissonnette case. In fact, 61 per cent of the population thinks the Government should have asked for a public inquiry.

Will the Government do what has to be done, not sweep the dust under the rug but hold a public inquiry?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, the Advertising Management Group is a group that has done excellent work.

We have established a competition system. We are dismantling a patronage system. We have reduced advertising expenditures. We have rationalized this activity sector in the Government, and above all, we cut the propaganda program that was in place during the last 10 years of the previous Government.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

CONTRACT AWARDING PROCESS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. There were reports today that eminent Conservatives, including Mr. Nantel, Mr. Bazin, Mr. Atkins, Mr. Byron, Mr. Meighen, Mr. Roberge and Mr. Péloquin operated a Committee responsible for selecting companies friendly to the Conservatives for government contracts. Two members of that Committee are on the payroll of the Department of Supply and Services, namely Mr. Péloquin and Mr. Byron, and at least two of those people have received contracts from that Department.

How does the Minister explain that patronage fiasco, and what is she going to do about it?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, the awarding process I have just referred to is an honest process. Any Department that has a need for a promotion campaign opens its contest. A selection jury composed of public servants has been put in place, and Mr. Péloquin is not a member.

REQUEST THAT ADVERTISING MANAGEMENT GROUP BE DISBANDED

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. We have Place Vincent Massey under investigation at the moment; we have the Member for Edmonton—Strathcona unhappy with the patronage system in the Progressive Conservative Party.

This Party promised to change from the way the Liberals handed out patronage—

Mr. Riis: They didn't; they are worse!

Mr. Rodriguez: My question for the Minister is this. Is she prepared to disband this advertising management group, which is made up of a bunch of Tory hacks? Is she prepared to disband this and establish a patronage-free public tendering process for government contracts?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I have here a directive from the Treasury Board on Government's activities. This Government's activities are honest activities. The advertising management group has reduced Government expenditures, in the spirit exactly under which we work as a Government, which is to reduce Government expenditures and increase our efficiency.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

ESTABLISHMENT OF SPACE AGENCY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources as well as the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion questioned yesterday the future of the Canadian Space Agency. However, the Minister of State for Science and Technology maintains that he will go forward with the establishment of the Space Agency. My question to the Minister is this: Can he put an end to that confusion? Who says the truth, he or the Ministers who are questioning the future of the Space Agency? Can he tell us today whether or not there will be a Canadian Space Agency?

[English]

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as you know, the Prime Minister gave me instructions, in accordance with the commitment the Government made in the Throne Speech, to assemble the various assets that Canada has in space and to organize them under a new space agency.

As is the case with all commitments in the Throne Speech, such an agency will be established.

An Hon. Member: Another broken promise.

REASON FOR DELAY

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister: When will the Government table the Bill setting up that Agency? Why that lack of leadership? Why is the Government dragging its feet with regard to that matter? Why is it not announcing immediately the location of the Agency, the criteria to be applied for its choice and the setting up of the Agency?

[English]

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the notion of developing and organizing a Canadian space agency has been around for 20 years. If there was any lack of leadership in that regard, it is sitting right over there in the opposition benches.

The answer to the Hon. Member's question is: very soon.

AIR CANADA

POSSIBILITY OF PRIVATIZATION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Privatization. As you and she will know, Mr. Speaker, Air Canada is having a fiftieth birthday celebration this Friday morning at the Congress Centre—50 years of magnificent accomplishment by the people of Canada in their investment and by the employees of Air Canada, one of the top 10 ranking airlines in the world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: Is it the intention of the Government or Air Canada to announce this Friday the privatization of Air Canada?

• (1450)

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, I am also very happy to lend my congratulations to Air Canada for 50 years of service to Canada and I know it will continue in the future, either in the public sector or in the private sector.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: That is like being progressive and conservative.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: I worry they might turn the birthday party into a funeral.

QUERY CONCERNING DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, since some employees have already been told by a personnel officer of Air Canada that the Government will be announcing very quickly the privatization plans for Air Canada, will the Minister say whether they will be announced this Friday, within two weeks, within a month, or when?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, I will say what I have said in this House before. We are seriously reviewing Air Canada with some other corporations with a view to whether or not it should be in the private sector. There are many benefits for it to be in the private Sector.

Mr. Benjamin: For whom?

Mrs. McDougall: We are looking at those. When I have more to tell the House around when that decision is reached, I will be happy to report to the House.

REFUGEES

CHILEANS IN ARGENTINA—REQUEST FOR RE-EVALUATION OF FILES

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Last August in reference to the plight of refugees and immigrants he said to the country: "If we err, we will err on the side of compassion and justice". Since those words, the Government has turned back the clock on our immigration program and forced groups and churches across the country to mobilize against its unjust direction which is epitomized by the Government's irresponsible refusal to re-evaluate the files of the 70 Chilean refugees stranded in Argentina.

Given the new evidence presented on torture by lawyer Noel St. Pierre and the scenes on our TV sets during the papal visit to Chile, will the Prime Minister not order his Minister of Immigration to re-evaluate at least the 70 files and thus show Canadians that his policy on immigration is just, is compassionate, and is humane?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada showed compassion in several ways and in various circumstances in a number of cases which were found deserving. However, we have always maintained that there is legislation in this country dealing with refugees which we intend to enforce. As I told my hon. friend yesterday, all the cases of Chileans now in Argentina have been assessed with special consideration to those referred to us as refugees. As for the others, I say again today, as I said and repeated yesterday, there is absolutely no question of reviewing the decisions.

REFUGEES—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): It is not true, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of State for Immigration indicated to the House that on the basis of new information, the files could be reopened. My question to the Minister, therefore, is this: Why does he refuse to recognize the seriousness of the new evidence of torture? Why will he not even meet lawyer Noël St-Pierre? When will he start protecting the legitimate interests of his Department's clients? Or would the Minister rather stand on his statement that immigration is bothersome?

[English]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, when we do not have good reasons we can say anything. It is exactly what the member said. I have repeated many times that we have considered the recommendations by the U.N. Commissioner for Refugees, and we did. We have considered the recommendations of the people of Quebec. We have considered all the recommendations made. The first interest I have to defend as Minister of Immigration, Sir, is the interest of this country.

WESTERN ECONOMIC DIVERSIFICATION STRATEGY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Hon. Member for Vegreville, the Deputy Prime Minister, who has been told on a number of occasions, be it from Premier Getty as well as the Member from Edmonton—Strathcona, or from Members of the Opposition in the Alberta Legislature, just how serious the situation is in Alberta and the concern, as they see it, at the lack of action on the part of the Government. Since some months ago the Deputy Prime Minister announced the Western Economic Diversification Strategy, will he indicate whether or not the office has now been established and set up in Alberta, and if not when it will be and when we will actually have a copy of the strategy to see what the Government has in mind to diversify the economy of western Canada?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, a number of steps have already been taken. The recent announcement with respect to the development and exploration incentives for the energy industry which was announced by my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, was certainly pointed in that direction. The framework is still being worked on through the consultative process. No offices have been set up. The comprehensive strategy will be announced in due course, I hope within the next month or so.

QUERY CONCERNING POSSIBLE OFFICE IN WINNIPEG

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister will know that the Canadian Petroleum Association just mentioned yesterday that the incentives provided by the Government will not do much good at least this year but perhaps next year.

I have in my hand a list of all of the individuals, their positions, their room numbers and phone numbers for the Western Diversification Office in Winnipeg. Will the Deputy Prime Minister tell me whether there is an office in Winnipeg? Also, when the office is established in Alberta, will he commit himself to ensure that it is not simply a regurgitation of existing moneys, programs, and personnel?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I was always under the impression that the New Democratic Party was the great proponent and supporter of the little guy. I am surprised that the member was quoting from the Canadian Petroleum Association.

Mr. Riis: You might listen to them.

Mr. Mazankowski: I would invite the member to read the supportive letters from IPAC, CPAC and the little guys out there who have been hurt very badly as a result of the fall-out from the National Energy Program which the New Democrats were a part of with the Liberals when the Liberals were in government.

In so far as the names and addresses are concerned, that is old information the member got from his colleague from Yorkton—Melville.

Mr. Riis: You denied it.

Mr. Mazankowski: That is old information. I would suggest the Member for Kamloops—Shuswap go back to his research department and have it updated.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Algoma has the floor.

WHEAT—REQUEST FOR DEFICIENCY PAYMENT COMMITMENT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. This week President Reagan reaffirmed United States policy to lower the world price for grain while at the same time guaranteeing U.S. farmers $6 a bushel for their wheat. Canadian farmers are looking at a 20 per cent reduction, which is around $250 a bushel. When the Government announces its initial price for wheat this month, will it at the same time give a commitment to a deficiency payment so that our farmers will not be put off the land this year?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know that we have provided a record amount of financial support to the Canadian grain industry. In fact, if one includes what has already been paid and will be paid to the grain and oil seed sector alone, the member will see that last year's income level will not only be maintained but increased slightly.

The Hon. Member is aware as well that we have commenced another series of meetings with farm leaders. The last meeting was held March 5. We will be meeting again with the farm leaders either in the latter part of May or the first part of June to work together and design a new program of support to Canadian farmers.

COSTS OF SEEDING

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that farmers are looking at record low prices for grain this year, 20 per cent below is what he told farmers at the CFA meeting. With initial prices for wheat in Canada some $3.50 below that guaranteed in the United States and with no commitment to a deficiency payment, how does the Minister expect farmers to seed a crop? How does he expect them to get the credit and the funding to put in a crop with no commitment for the coming crop year as to a guaranteed price or a deficiency payment to supplement the initial price?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): I think, Mr. Speaker, because of the record of this Government and because of our commitment to work with the farm leadership in the future, that is a fair degree of support. There is a good message and a good understanding; indeed, there is a good degree of confidence that our Government fully recognizes the difficult situation in which Canadian agriculture finds itself.

• (1500)

Again I remind the Hon. Member that coming out of the March 5 meeting were a commitment and statement that were made not unilaterally on the part of the Government but rather jointly with the farm leadership of Canada. That statement indicated that farmers should plan their 1987 cropping patterns based on market signals rather than on the thought that the Government would be forthcoming with the same level of support, and perhaps more importantly, that the Government would be forthcoming with the same distribution formula.

EXTERNAL AID

EARTHQUAKE IN ECUADOR—CANADIAN ASSISTANCE

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for External Relations. Recently Ecuador was hit with a severe earthquake which devastated the national economy. The more than 70,000 Ecuadorians living in Metro-Toronto have been raising funds for these victims. Is Canada monitoring the conditions in Ecuador in order to ascertain if more assistance is needed? Has the Government of Ecuador actually asked Canada for more assistance?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to my hon. friend for his question. As all other Canadians generally, government Members have been deeply affected by this disaster and enormously sympathize with the people from Ecuador. Canada has effectively received from the Red Cross and the Panamerican Health Organization a request for help, and we have immediately responded by contributing $150,000. I can tell my hon. friend that we have been advised by the Red Cross that the emergency needs have been met and that the reconstruction phase is now under way. Also, we have CIDA agents there who are monitoring the situation very closely. Canada is eager to respond to the various requests received from organizations helping this country recover.

TRIPARTITE SUGAR BEET STABILIZATION PLAN—EFFECT ON MANITOBA

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Was the Deputy Prime Minister aware that when the Government decided to proceed unilaterally with tripartite stabilization for sugar beet producers, the decision would prevent the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board from fulfilling his 1985 commitment to the Province of Manitoba that the province would not be asked to support the sugar beet industry beyond the 1985 crop year? Was this done knowingly or by accident?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know, if he has had full contact with his NDP colleagues in Manitoba, that the federal Government cannot unilaterally impose any kind of a tripartite stabilization on any province that will participate, including the Province of Manitoba. He should know that Manitoba did participate in some of the discussions that led up to a proposal being made by the federal Government. That proposal has been accepted by the Province of Alberta. The only people who are holding out are the representatives of the Government of Manitoba and that is a very tragic situation.

When the federal Government was offering support to see the industry survive, the people from the Government of the Province of Alberta and everyone else except the Government of Manitoba accepted. That is a shame to agriculture in Canada.

TELEX MESSAGE SENT TO MANITOBA IN 1985

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister in charge of the Wheat Board chose to answer, I would ask him if he did or if he did not send a Telex or make a commitment in writing to the Province of Manitoba in 1985 telling the province that it would not be required or asked to support the sugar beet industry beyond 1985, the one year when Manitoba supported the industry in the West while no one else planted sugar?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, that Telex was sent, but the Hon. Member will also know that a Bill was passed in the House of Commons in June, 1985, establishing a tripartite policy. That policy has been implemented in the case of the hog industry in Manitoba, so the Province of Manitoba has already entered into tripartite stabilization on behalf of agriculture.

The other thing the Hon. Member should know is that the Province of Manitoba's total agriculture budget is in the neighbourhood of $80 million. He should know as well that the Government of Canada this year will spend approximately seven times that total amount on agriculture in Manitoba. It is time for the Province of Manitoba to support agriculture the way the federal Government is supporting it under the leadership of the Prime Minister.

1988 WINTER OLYMPICS

NATION-WIDE BROADCASTING IN FRENCH AND ENGLISH—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question concerns the broadcasting of the 1988 Winter Olympics.

I raised the matter about a year ago, which was that the Olympic Games Organizing Committee had awarded television and radio transmission rights to CTV, a national English network and TVA, a French network in Quebec. There is no national radio, and there is no provision in the agreements, as far as I know, for television coverage in French outside Quebec.

I want to ask the Government, and I gave notice to the then Minister of Communications about a year ago: Is this Government going to do anything to try, first of all, to provide for national radio coverage in French and English for all Canadians, and second, will French-speaking Canadians get their $200 million worth like all other Canadians who invested this money in the Olympic Games? We are entitled to get the signal across Canada.

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is correct in saying that he has raised this matter before and he has raised it in the same context as he has today. The Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport has been addressing this issue. I do not have details on possible solutions. I will bring it to his attention for an early resolution if it has not already been resolved.

REQUEST FOR UNDERTAKING CBC WILL PROVIDE COVERAGE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister will return to the House with some information, I wonder if he could also give us the undertaking that he will ensure that CBC Radio and Television are involved in the negotiations, along with CTV and TVA Quebec, so that we do have coverage on both radio and television networks of the Olympic Games in which Canadians have invested $200 million.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member would appreciate that I cannot affirm all those details, but I think he would agree with all of us in the House that the Olympics will be a great national and international event and we would obviously want it telecast in Canada in both official languages.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to advise Hon. Members that there will be one question from the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville followed by one question from the Hon. Member for Capilano, and that will end Question Period.

BROADCASTING

TELEVISING OF NATIONAL HOCKEY LEAGUE SEMI-FINALS AND FINALS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister and I ask him this question as a fellow westerner. Is the Deputy Prime Minister aware that all of Saskatchewan and large parts of western Canada, as well as parts of northern Ontario and Quebec, will receive only half the television coverage of the NHL semi-finals and the NHL finals because the coverage has been split between CBC and Global?

In Saskatchewan and much of western Canada we have no access whatsoever to Global, and in Quebec the coverage will be split between Radio-Canada and Quatre-Saisons. I wonder if the Deputy Prime Minister could tell us what he will do through his good offices to ensure that all Canadians, regardless of where they live, will have full and complete access to the NHL finals and semi-finals.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will bring this matter as well to the attention of the Minister of Communications and the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport so that all Hon. Members and all Canadians can watch my beloved Winnipeg Jets take the Stanley Cup this year.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CHILDREN

PROGRAM TO COMBAT SEXUAL ABUSE

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. As the Minister is aware, the problem of the sexual abuse of children continues to be a real concern to Canadians. While I am confident that the Government's legislative initiatives will shortly receive final approval by the House, I am interested in knowing what progress the Minister is making on the $20 million program he announced last fall designed to focus national efforts on combating sexual abuse. For example, has the special adviser on child sexual abuse been appointed, and have any local projects been funded as yet?

Point of Order—Mr. Crosby

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Government approved a five-year plan in the order of $20 million. For the first year the funding level was set at $1.5 million. A number of projects across Canada have been funded. Those projects are available but I will not take the time of the House to mention them. Additionally, we have had many consultations on the special adviser and have now focused on one person. That name is now under consideration by the Government.

POINTS OF ORDER

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—VOTABLE ITEMS—COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order which I will state very quickly. My point is about the procedure followed in relation to a question of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm).

• (1510)

You will recall that on December 4, 1986, you ruled on a question of privilege related to the work of the Standing Committee on Private Members' Business. You indicated that the matter in dispute should be considered by the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure as part of its review of the provisional rules.

Yesterday, April 7, 1987, the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure filed the fourth report which recommended the continuance of the provisional rules, particularly those relating to Private Members' Business. There is no indication that the matter which you dealt with on December 4, 1986, was reviewed by the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure.

I merely want to bring that to your attention in the hope and expectation that some consideration could be given to the view you expressed in December and the work of the Standing Committee on Private Members' Business can be reviewed as you suggested.

ALLEGED IMPROPER USE OF MEMBER'S NAME—UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I just want to draw to your attention the fact that during the period for statements by Members, the Hon. Member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley) referred to the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) by his name. I want to bring to his attention the fact that that was inappropriate.

As well, while I am not certain that you heard it, I want to draw to your attention the fact that the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine), during his statement, referred to a Member of this House of Commons as a hypocrite. I believe that is considered to be unparliamentary and I ask that he retract that.

[Translation]

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I have been advised that our interpretation services may have used the term hypocrite in the English rendition of the French, but it is not the term I used, and I regret that the New Democratic Party's House Leader got this impression of his Leader.

[English]

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, in response to the first part of the Hon. Member's point of order, I humbly acknowledge that in my enthusiasm for the Prime Minister's work in western Canada I mentioned him by name. I know the Opposition often does that in criticism. However, I apologize if I referred to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) by name because of all the good work he has done in western Canada.

Mr. Speaker: I should bring to the attention of Hon. Members that the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) was absolutely correct procedurally.

The Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) has raised a point which I will consider and report back to the House.

TRADE

STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON GOVERNMENT STEEL POLICY

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am rising today to outline the Government's steel policy. This Government has long recognized the importance of the U.S. market to all sectors of the Canadian steel industry and we have invested considerable effort to ensure that no restrictions are introduced at the border. The program I am announcing today will augment our efforts in pursuing that objective.

As you know, there are continuing pressures in the U.S. to reduce the share of the U.S. steel market held by Canadian suppliers. We are one of the few countries which has not been forced to accept a voluntary restraint agreement with the Americans. The Canadian position on this question is very clear. Our steel is fairly traded and trade restrictive measures at the U.S. border are not warranted. We continue to expect the U.S. administration to do its job and resist pressures from the U.S. industry and Congress to restrict fairly traded Canadian steel.

Before outlining the elements of our program I wish to emphasize that it represents a response to the problems facing the Canadian steel industry which extend beyond U.S. pressures to those resulting from conditions affecting world trade in steel in general. Global trade in steel continues to be affected by world-wide over-capacity, declining demand, widespread subsidization in steel-producing countries, and restrictive measures against imports in most consuming countries.

The major characteristic of the two-way trade in steel between Canada and the U.S. is its integrated and mutually beneficial nature. Canada is the largest market for U.S. steel. Our imports of steel from the U.S. annually average about 8 per cent of the Canadian market and over one-third of our total steel imports. There are no restrictions on U.S. trade into Canada. For every dollar of their steel exports to the U.S., Canadian primary steel producers import $1.30 worth of equipment and materials from the U.S.

In addition to sharing in the obvious benefits of such a relationship, our industries also share common concerns and problems with respect to conditions currently prevailing in international trade in steel. The program I am announcing today will supplement recent government actions to facilitate adjustment of the Canadian steel industry to the difficult conditions surrounding international trade in steel.

In August of 1985, country-of-origin marking requirements were introduced for imported steel pipes and tubes. In September of 1986 an import monitoring system for carbon steel was established under the Export and Import Permits Act. In the February, 1987, Budget the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced the withdrawal of the general preferential tariff on steel.

As a major element of a program designed to help maintain our open access to the U.S. steel market, the Government is taking further action to ensure that we have more accurate data on exports and imports and that Canada is not used as a back door to the U.S. market by off shore steel suppliers. This will be achieved by monitoring steel exports and imports under the Export and Import Permits Act. We are seeking the assistance and consent of the opposition Parties to bring forward an amendment to achieve this at an early date.

Monitoring will not only provide a better appreciation of the complexities in our steel trade with the U.S. but will be very useful to both the Government and the industry in resisting pressures in the U.S. for restrictions against imports from Canada.

In addition, we are exploring with the U.S. the desirability of establishing a joint commission to ensure a better understanding of the problems we in North America face as a result of global conditions affecting trade in steel. I consider this to be a very worthwhile initiative, particularly in view of the problems steel industries on both sides of the border are likely to face in the future.

Finally, it will be important for Canadian companies to continue to exercise prudence in their steel exports to the U.S. as well as to seek the active support of allied interests, such as consumer groups and customers, among the public and private sector groups in the U.S. for unrestricted cross-border trade in steel. We will step up our efforts on information exchange with U.S. politicians.

In this respect I would like to thank the parliamentary steel caucus led by the Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling), and all Members of this House who have participated in this initiative. My special appreciation goes to the Canadian steel companies and the steelworkers' union for their co-operation in the development of this policy. These efforts, together with the measures I have just announced, will go a long way towards preserving our access to our most important export market for steel.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have an opportunity to respond to the Hon. Minister's statement concerning government policy regarding steel. Having been active in the steel caucus for a couple of years I am especially interested in this matter, and of course the great riding of Algoma provides much of the workforce for the Algoma Steel Corporation in Sault Ste. Marie.

It goes without saying that during the past four or five years the steel industry has been under incredible pressure both in the U.S. and Canada. We have seen hundreds of thousands of people laid off in the U.S. We have seen the introduction of their VRA program. While other companies in Canada have suffered similarly, Algoma Steel in Sault Ste. Marie has suffered a great deal.

We are glad to see this policy come forward. In August of 1985 the Government put in place a steel monitoring system for imports. It was obvious in the fall of 1984 when the United States implemented its program for 17 countries which were importing steel into the United States that if you back four million or five million tonnes of steel out of the United States market and get it on the ocean they will try to get into the American market some way, one of the obvious ways through the back door by way of Canada.

The program the Government put in place to monitor steel imports into Canada was a first step. The step proposed here by the Minister to amend the Export and Import Permits Act in order that we can monitor steel going into the United States is the next essential step.

We need only look at two events which happened in January of this year. First, our share of the United States steel market had grown to 5 per cent in January. In December it was 4.7 per cent. That is far above our historical level. Senator Heinz then introduced a Bill in the United States Senate. He was proposing some very Draconian methods to limit Canada's imports as well as those of Sweden and Taiwan.

I believe, therefore, that it is important that the Government put in place a program for the monitoring of imports. We find that large volumes of steel are coming from those countries which are subject to a voluntary restraint agreement with the United States. A mechanism can be put in place to add those imports to the United States coming through Canada to the quota that is provided for them.

The Minister has pointed out that Canada is a fair trader in steel. In fact, we buy more steel and supplies than we export to the United States. Algoma Steel buys much of its iron ore from Michigan and buys coal from West Virginia. Therefore, Algoma is in a very good position to argue that we should keep a fair and open border. However, if millions of tons of steel are coming through Canada and finding their way into the United States from countries which are subject to a voluntary restraint agreement, we obviously do not have much of an argument.

That is why, provided the legislation is as we agreed in negotiations with the Government, we will be pleased to support and expedite it. I am glad to have had this chance to indicate the understanding and support of the Official Opposition for this motion.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, after the serious problems which emerged in the context of trying to deal with the trade dispute with the United States on softwood lumber we hope very much that this attempt to initiate new policy on steel will be a success and will make some progress toward creating stability in the steel trade between our two countries. As the House should know, we have an $8 billion industry which employs over 50,000 workers. This industry must be given very serious and continuing support by the Government if it is to deal with the difficult circumstances which exist in the international steel trade at the moment.

In recent years there has very much been managed trade between the United States and Canada. The steel companies on this side of the border have attempted to regulate their exports in such a way as to maintain stability in a North American situation. That policy has had some tensions and some benefits which have been assisted very much by the steel caucus of this House. I would like to pay tribute to that caucus and to the Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) who has been our representative in it.

The program which was announced today talks about monitoring and suggests the use of licensing. We, too, have been talking with the Minister's office about the nature of this proposed legislation and certainly intend to support it and facilitate its passage through the House. However, when we look at the rest of the program announced as a steel policy by the Minister, we must see that it is really a very limp and limited attempt to deal with the serious problems facing a very important industry in the country.

For instance, we would like to have seen some commitment by the Government to long-term efforts on the part of business and labour within this industry to work together, to plan, and to attempt to expand the varieties and specialties of steel which we produce in this country and, in turn, to export those specialties to other countries in addition to the United States in order to diversify our trade beyond the United States with its particular vulnerabilities.

We also believe it is very important in a serious steel policy to address the very great difficulties which face Algoma Steel. A large number of people have lost their jobs at Algoma Steel in recent months and the number of jobs which are threatened in the future should have been part of the Minister's statement today. There should have been a statement with regard to worker adjustment which would have assisted the employees to make the shifts which may be necessary for them given the severe pressure facing that company.

As I evaluate this statement I believe that with regard to its trade implications and monitoring it is a step forward. However, with regard to attempts to deal with the whole set of serious and difficult problems within the steel industry across Canada it is simply a limp response to a very great and serious problem.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I want to raise a point of order. I do not want to sound nit-picky. We appreciate that the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) has chosen the House of Commons as the appropriate place to make a statement on the situation regarding steel. It is a very important statement. I applaud her for it and appreciate it.

• (1530)

My point of order is perhaps directed to the Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis). It is that we received a copy of this important statement about halfway through Question Period. Making the House as productive and positive as possible requires an element of co-operation and I simply remind the Hon. Member that it would certainly help if we had written statements perhaps five minutes before Question Period. Again, I am not suggesting that we do not appreciate what the Minister has done today. We certainly do.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) has been very generous in his comments about the practice that the Minister has been following, which is to present a statement to the House. Of course, that is appropriate.

The Chair has commented upon the usefulness of trying to get statements to opposition critics as early as possible. I am sure Hon. Ministers will be guided by that as much as possible.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Mr. Riis: Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Before Hon. Members indicate that they have a point of order, the Chair, if uninterrupted, would read the opening statements for introduction and first reading of the Bill of the Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain). It may be that Hon. Members will not need to rise on a point of order. However, I will hear Hon. Members. The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I seek clarification because some of the traditional practices and procedures of the House have seemed to many of us to have changed today. My hon. friend and colleague, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader, rose this afternoon under "Petitions". One was always under the assumption that at the time when one was speaking to petitions one would have a petition to present. That was the item that was called in terms of doing business. The Speaker recognized a member for the presentation of a motion, with no recognition of a petition and no petition being presented.

For many years, and perhaps decades, this tradition has never been broken. I am seeking your clarification as to whether this practice will now be accepted by you, so that whenever someone rises under a notice of motion, he or she will be recognized and therefore be able to present a motion. If that is the case, I would like to move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That this House do now adjourn.

Mr. Lewis: He was on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) has risen on a point of order. I must advise the Hon. Member that rising on a point of order to adjourn the House is out of order. Other Members may want to address the point which the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap has made. The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Gauthier: Thank you for recognizing me, Mr. Speaker. I rose a few minutes ago because I had not heard that you had indeed called Introduction of Bills. If you had called for those Bills, then I understand why you would have entertained some dilatory motion from the Government. On the other hand, since you came into the House, you gave us notice that you were going to read the first part of the member's Bill or that you were going to ask the Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain) to proceed with his Bill. He had been given authority to do so by a democratic vote of the House. The majority said that we will recognize him, and that is the only thing that can happen now.

I submit that at the first stage of the Bill we cannot debate but we can vote on whether the Bill will be presented at this time. I hope you will proceed with that matter.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It has always been my understanding of the practice that the item which the Speaker calls under Routine Proceedings is the one with which we must deal. When the Speaker calls for petitions, members rise in their place to present petitions. If an Hon. Member wants to do something other than that, he is obliged to rise on a point of order before the Speaker calls for petitions or wait until petitions are finished.

When you call for petitions how can an Hon. Member be given the floor not to present petitions but to move a motion? I do not understand that. You called for petitions.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) is raising an interesting point. However, I think it is clear that there is a precedent for the recognition of an Hon. Member in those circumstances. In any event, that has been the ruling of the Chair. I, of course, would always be pleased to discuss any ruling at any time with Hon. Members. However, I would like at this point—

• (1700)

Mr. Benjamin: A further point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I think perhaps the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) might let the Chair continue for the moment. Just so the situation is clear to all Hon. Members, what has happened here is that the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary moved that the Hon. Member be heard. I accepted that motion as being in order and there has been a vote, and the House, as the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier has clearly indicated, has approved that motion.

The Chair takes the view, then, that the Hon. Member for Mission Port—Moody (Mr. St. Germain) is now entitled to have his Bill presented for introduction, and it is the intent of the Chair to do just that because that is, of course, the logical sequence of what has happened and takes into account that we are in Routine Proceedings and the rubric here is Introduction of Bills. Therefore, I would prefer to proceed.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with regard to the vote. One of my colleagues told me that he did not hear my name called when I rose to vote against the motion. I would just like to confirm that my vote was recorded.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is very grateful that the Hon. Member has brought that to the attention of the House. I am sure it will be treated accordingly. The Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain) has the floor.

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission—Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the House for allowing me to introduce my Bill in this very unique way.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. St. Germain: I would now like to move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the House proceed to the next item of Routine Proceedings.

Mr. Gauthier: Point of order, point of order!

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will of course hear the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) on a point of order. I might remark that so did everyone else at about 1,000 yards of this place.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to make sure that you heard me this time. The Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain) was recognized, by a vote, to make a short statement on why he intends to present this Bill to the House. That was the only purpose of his being recognized at this time. Once he has spoken to that Bill, we in the House will decide in a very democratic fashion whether or not that Bill will be read the first time and printed. That will be the object of the next dilatory motion for the Government will put to the House, to wit, whether or not the House will agree to read and print the Bill. That is a non-debatable stage of the Bill, and I cannot see anything else before the House at this time but the Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody giving us a very short, concise statement as to why he believes the Bill should be put to us for first reading.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, since we have established that an Hon. Member rising on Petitions, once recognized by the Chair, may move a motion to move to the next item of Routine Proceedings, it seems to me that we can establish the same principle under Introduction of Bills.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to add to the point made by my hon. colleague that if this practice is to continue, the Government, on its whim, will be able to prohibit Hon. Members from rising to deal with the long established tradition of presenting petitions on behalf of their constituents. What we have seen today is something extremely dangerous to the traditions of the House. Every citizen of Canada has the opportunity, through his or her Member of Parliament, to have his or her views made known through the presentation of petitions in the House of Commons.

I believe we are at a very critical point here. Will the Conservative Government use this on a regular basis to prohibit the people of Canada from exercising a right that has been theirs for decades? I ask that this matter be given serious consideration. It appears that there is a serious potential for abuse. For many, many years, this has not been allowed. Hon. Members may present petitions and after they have done so, they have the opportunity to move a motion, but they do not have an opportunity to move a motion without presenting a petition. I think this is a very serious situation and we ought to be very careful when dealing with this issue.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Chair can assist in the debate. I will hear from other Hon. Members. The position of the Chair—though the Chair is not unsympathetic to the concern expressed—is that the Chair must ask if Routine Proceedings have any particular sanctity at all or if they can always be left to whatever motions or procedural usages may interrupt those Routine Proceedings. I put this question to Hon. Members who, I know, wish to address the Chair on it because it seems to me that whenever Routine Proceedings are interrupted, some Hon. Members will at least for a period of time lose what rights they are supposed to have under the Routine Proceedings of that day. I would ask Hon. Members to comment on that.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond specifically to the point on which you asked us to comment. I respectfully direct your attention to page 209 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 666, which reads as follows:

> The right of petitioning the Crown and Parliament for redress of grievances is acknowledged as a fundamental principle of the constitution and has been exercised without interruption since 1867.

If the right to petition the Crown and Parliament for redress of grievances is a fundamental principle of the Constitution, surely it cannot be abridged nor can it be wiped out by procedural game-playing on the part of the Government. I call upon you, Sir, as the guardian and protector of the rights of this institution and therefore of the rights of the Canadian people, to rule—where the purpose of the procedural measure offered by the Government, as is the case here, is really to wipe out Routine Proceedings, which are in our Standing Orders to provide opportunities to Members of Parliament to have their say, but more particularly to wipe out the right of Canadians to petition Government and Parliament—that this is contrary to a fundamental principle of our Constitution. In fact, it is a fundamental principle of the British Constitution dating back 1,000 years and which provides the foundation for this parliamentary system. I ask you to rule that this parliamentary game playing is not acceptable and must be rejected.

I also want to say something about the feeble attempt—

Mr. Lewis: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Benjamin: You cannot have a point of order when there is a point of order before the Chair.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary rises on a point of order. It may very well have to do with something said by the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray). If it is, I can hear it.

Mr. Lewis: I respectfully—

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Beatty: He can raise a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I can help Hon. Members. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has heard something the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) has said. It may well be that the point he wishes to make is a point of order in relation to something that was said. I am not talking about debate. If that is what the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary is rising on, then I will be able to figure that out pretty quickly and I will hear him.

Mr. Gauthier: Point of privilege.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) on a point of privilege.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, clearly the rules of any debating society as well as the rules of Parliament entertain only one point of order at a time. You cannot have a point of order on a point of order. I submit that the Parliamentary Secretary is out of order when he puts to you a point of order which is, first of all, a phoney point of order.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, my points of order have been called a lot of things but usually only after I have said a few words.

I believe the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) was exactly on target with his point of order vis-à-vis the right of a member to make a motion as did the Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain). My point of order, with respect, is that the point of order of the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) and the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) should have been made earlier in the day at the point when petitions were abridged. This point of order concerns whether or not it is in order for the Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody to make the motion he made, not to abridge petitions which, by the way, are taken care of by Standing Order 106.3.

Mr. Gauthier: That is nonsense.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, it has long been established that you cannot raise a point of order about a point of order, especially not as a surreptitious way of smuggling in argument. Even so, the Member's argument is so empty that I suppose I should welcome it because it shows the shallowness and lack of substance of the Hon. Member's position.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I was simply responding to Your Honour's request to provide comment or argument on specific points that interested you. I regret very much that someone with the august position of Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader—he often styles himself Deputy House Leader—shows so little respect for the Chair that he attempts to interrupt with a specious point of order an Hon. Member who is simply trying to respond to an invitation, if not a request or command, from you to offer comment on the point that interests you. I do not know if the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary will later get up and offer words of apology for trying to prevent a Member from obeying an order of the Speaker and doing something which in some circumstances may be looked on as contempt of the Chair. If he does not, perhaps I will do it for him because he may have sinned but he has not known wherewith he has done.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I might point out to the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) that while his knowledge of theology is well respected here, what usually follows those words is: "Here endeth the lesson".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Yes. Well, I want to end the lesson which my hon. friend really needs by saying that his first comment that the matter in question was dealt with earlier is, with the utmost respect, a specious argument. The fact that a motion was accepted when the Hon. Member got to his feet when petitions were called is, with the utmost respect, not a precedent because a point of order was not raised. There was no argument on the acceptability of the procedure. Therefore, if by accident the step taken by my hon. friend did actually take place, I respectfully submit that in the absence of argument and a ruling by yourself it is no precedent.

I therefore want to conclude by saying that the point of order raised by the Official Opposition Whip is a valid one for the reasons he has offered, for the reasons offered by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) and, I hope you will agree, not least for some of the reasons, if not all, which I have offered myself.

Mr. Les Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest to you, Sir, with all respect, that two things have happened today. One deals with the right to present petitions, which goes back to Runnymede. Unless you rule otherwise, any Member can prevent other Members from exercising their right to present petitions.

As to the point raised by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), a vote was taken and agreed to concerning first reading of a Bill put forward by the Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain). The Chair then recognized the Hon. Member and gave him the opportunity to give a brief explanation of his Bill. It was not to move any kind of motion. That is a privilege extended to Hon. Members and the explanation of the Bill is brief and the Hon. Member is held to that. You have allowed the Hon. Member not to say a word about his Bill.

Mr. Murphy: This is a government filibuster.

Mr. Benjamin: I suggest, Sir, with all due respect, in my usual humble manner, that you cogitate, meditate and ruminate on this overnight and rule that once you call petitions no other piece of business can occur until petitions are dealt with. When an Hon. Member is given an opportunity to explain his Bill on first reading, that is all he can do.

Mr. Nystrom: Six o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is of course conscious of the force and effect and sincerity of all of the arguments and will consider them.

However, it being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6 p.m.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORT

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Section 7(2) of the Canadian Wheat Board Act, I have the honour to table in both official languages the annual report of the Canadian Wheat Board for the 1985-86 crop year.

NATIONAL CITIZENSHIP WEEK

STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to advise all Hon. Members that next week is Canada's first National Citizenship Week.

[Translation]

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) today declared the week, so that we can reserve a special time to celebrate our citizenship and the beliefs and values it embodies.

[English]

An eloquent Father of Confederation, Thomas D'Arcy McGee, over 100 years ago urged us to do the following:

> To lift ourselves to the level of our destinies, to rise above all low limitations and narrow circumscriptions, to cultivate that true catholicity of spirit which embraces all creeds, all classes and all races, in order to make of our boundless province—so rich in known and unknown resources—a great new Northern nation.

In the last 100 years, we have become that great northern nation.

[Translation]

And next week, in large cities and small communities; people are gathering for neighbourhood events and special ceremonies organized to celebrate the pride they take in their citizenship.

[English]

Canada has welcomed people from around the world and now they are a part of us. Communities across the country have gained an extra vitality as a consequence and an added richness as a result.

I was reminded this morning of a remark made by Davey Fulton, a distinguished lawyer and a former parliamentarian, who talked about the people who came to Canada. He said:

> This nation will never be able to repay the debt that it owes to those who come from other shores . . . not only in a material sense, for the physical help they gave in building a nation . . . but also a debt in the spiritual and moral sense for their contribution to the enrichment of Canadian culture.

It is this sentiment that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) salutes in his declaration of National Citizenship Week.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister also expresses the belief that at the heart of Canadian citizenship lies the bilingual, multicultural character of Canada. I urge all Members of this House, and indeed all Canadians, to express their pride in citizenship through their participation in next week's events.

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to respond to the Minister's statement—

[English]

This is so particularly for this topic because I take pleasure in saying from time to time that I am a new Canadian. I was not born in this country. I was 13 years old when my people came to these shores. Indeed, although I was too young to vote at the time, many of my people had the pleasure not only of becoming Canadians but of actually voting for Canada, an honour not everyone has had.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rompkey: That achievement was won with great struggle. Only a little over 50 per cent voted for Canada in 1949, two years after this Act was brought into effect by a Liberal Government of the time. Today, the overwhelming majority of Newfoundlanders would vote fervently for this country.

• (1110)

The Minister quoted Davey Fulton, a distinguished lawyer, who said:

> This nation will never be able to repay the debt that it owes to those who come from other shores . . . not only in a material sense, for the physical help they gave in building a nation—

My people have made some contribution in story and song to this country and, Mr. Minister, we will take the cash.

I want to quote the words of another great Canadian, Joey Smallwood, on joining Confederation. After the struggle he led to join this country he said:

> It was the greatest blessing from God, next to life itself, ever conferred upon the people of Newfoundland.

People in Labrador City, Goose Bay, Churchill Falls and many other places have come from all over the world to join us. We are becoming more and more true Canadians in every sense of the word every day. It is a great joy for me to join with my friend in paying tribute to this day and this week in which we celebrate something we all treasure, honour, and give thanks for, that is, our Canadian citizenship.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I also welcome the announcement of National Citizenship Week. I am glad to see the Government has recognized the contribution of those new citizens who have come here over the years. After hearing the previous speaker talk about how his family had a chance to vote to join Canada, I think of those of us whose ancestors voted with their feet to join Canada. I think that is a very significant fact.

There are times, especially when unemployment is high, when people ask why we allow more people into our country. It is ironic, since our population is only 2 per cent of that of China, a country of similar size geographically, that we sometimes worry about over-population. Obviously that is not a concern Canadians should have. We should welcome even more people to our shores. We have to recognize that those people have helped create jobs. They have stated their desire to be part of Canada. We also have to recognize that many of them need the refugee status which is being denied them at the present time. They have enriched our culture, helped increase our awareness of the world, and made a very valuable contribution.

There is only one omission in the statement for which I fault the Government namely, that we did not give adequate attention to the contribution of our original citizens. That is not a deliberate oversight but we have to remember their status here and the fact that the first people to welcome us here were the native people of Canada.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of people from Nova Scotia who express their concern with the federal Government's attempt to increase the cost of drugs. The petitioners express their concern that, given that the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis is necessary for many Canadians, the legislation the Government is trying to force through the House will only hurt those people. They call upon Parliament to reject those proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians. In order to assist the Government to do that and get to the legislation dealing with equalization, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie):

> That the House proceed to Orders of the Day.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Murphy) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

In order to be sure that all Hon. Members understand the procedure, I think it might be appropriate for the Chair to state that the vote that has just taken place was on the motion of the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) that the House do now proceed to Orders of the Day. The motion has been defeated. As a consequence, we will continue with the presentation of petitions. The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure to present some seven petitions in which the petitioners state that the proposed changes to the Patent Act will affect directly all Canadians who are not protected by private or governmental medicare programs; that the federal Government's proposals will raise the costs, already high, of provincial health care programs; that the monopoly granted to innovative pharmaceutical companies will prevent competition from generic companies, which will result in an increase of drug costs and prices and which will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs; that the proposed changes to the Patent Act in Bill C-22 are another example of the Canadian Government's concessions in the free trade negotiations with the United States at the expense of ordinary Canadians, the undersigned—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier could pause for just a moment.

I remind all Hon. Members that when a member is presenting a petition or is speaking in this Chamber there are certain courtesies expected. If Hon. Members have an urgent conversation there are, of course, lobbies on both sides of the Chamber in which to have them. The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier may continue his remarks.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I thank you. I conclude by saying that the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

[Translation]

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition signed by members of the golden age club of the Saints-Martyrs canadiens parish in my riding of Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic.

The petitioners are against the Government decision to make major amendments to the Patent Act through Bill C-22. They have advised me of their opposition because they consider that the Government propositions will increase the already high costs of prescription drugs, and that four million Canadian low-wage earners are not covered under social welfare or the private drug insurance system. Poor, older and sick people will be particularly hard hit by these changes.

The petitioners humbly call upon Parliament to bring pressure to bear on the Government and urge it to reject these propositions which will boost prescription drug prices.

[English]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106 from residents of Kitchener, Ontario, who state that the federal Government's proposals to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices to consumers and severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. Therefore, they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

• (1200)

I have a petition from residents of Winnipeg who say that the proposed measure in Bill C-22 will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis and, therefore, they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I have 20 petitions to table pursuant to Standing Order 106 from residents of the Saskatchewan communities of Macklin, Primate, Cactus Lake, Salvador, as well as signatories from the Alberta communities of Hayter and Provost. These petitioners humbly call upon Parliament with respect to Motion No. 37 and ask that Members of Parliament give due consideration to supporting this motion which calls on all Members of Parliament to request the Government to consider the advisability of amending the Canadian Constitution to afford rights to unborn Canadians. These petitioners humbly pray and call upon all Members of this Parliament to support this motion when it comes for a vote in Private Members' Business.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—POSSIBLE LOSS OF BENEFITS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have petitions from hundreds of residents across this land. From Ontario, the communities of Dresden, Thamesville, Chatham, Tweedsmuir, Kitchener, Guelph, Jarvis, Ottawa, Nepean, Gloucester, Orleans, London, Winchester, North Bay, Toronto, Ajax, Thornhill and Kanata; from the Province of Quebec, Charlesbourg, Ste. Foy, Aylmer, Gatineau; from Nova Scotia, Oakum Secum, Porter's Lake; from New Brunswick, Bathurst and Beresford; from Saskatchewan, Regina; from Manitoba, Winnipeg; and from British Columbia, Vancouver, Port Alberni and Prince Rupert. These hundreds upon hundreds of petitioners point out that the Forget Commission report on unemployment insurance has proposed a system of annualization which would reduce benefits to the unemployed over-all by 31 per cent forcing over 62 per cent of the unemployed to live on less than $140 a week. That is less than welfare pays to a single parent with a child in most provinces.

Furthermore, by its proposal to eliminate regional extended benefits, it would be taking $1 billion in income transfers out of Quebec, $660 million out of the Atlantic, $670 million out of the west, and devastating the regions with the highest unemployment in Canada. Therefore, the petitioners, hundreds upon hundreds of them from the communities that I have enumerated are calling upon Parliament and specifically upon the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) to forget and reject the Forget Commission report.

SUPPORT FOR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS ON REFUGEE STATUS DETERMINATION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition on a different subject. The petitioners are from Saint John, New Brunswick. They point out that in many parts of the world people are fleeing to seek safety from persecution by coming to Canada. They also point out that Canada has established standards of refugee status determination but that in fact our existing procedures have broken down under unexpected strains. They point out that the standing committee of Parliament on the subject has proposed a new procedure for refugee determination which is quicker and fairer than the one now in force. Therefore, these petitioners are calling upon Parliament to ensure that the Government and the Parliament of Canada enact legislation that will embody the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of refugee claimants before a refugee board independent of the Immigration Commission, universal access to such hearings for every claimant in Canada, and an adequate opportunity to arrive in Canada to make this claim.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Brian White (Dauphin—Swan River): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to rise today to present a petition signed by over 800 citizens of the riding of Dauphin—Swan River who call upon Parliament to support Motion No. 37 which will allow unborn babies to be protected by the Charter of Rights.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I have petitions from a variety of communities across Canada, from Moose Jaw and Regina, Province of Saskatchewan, from the City of Toronto, Province of Ontario, from Calgary, Province of Alberta, and from Shediac, Province of New Brunswick. These petitioners all ask Parliament to take action to prevent changes to the Patent Act regarding prescription drugs. The petitioners are deeply concerned that the monopoly granted to U.S. owned and operated pharmaceutical companies will prevent competition from generic firms, will result in an increase of drug costs and prices, will push up provincial health care programs, and in many cases those who are not in those programs will be unable to afford the prescription drugs that they require. They ask the House to consider carefully their concerns and to refrain from making these changes to the Patent Act.

CUT-BACKS IN STAFF AT WEST COAST LIGHT STATIONS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present today, in conformity with Standing Order 106, a petition from almost the entire adult population of the marvellous community of Kincolith, north of Prince Rupert. They wish to bring to the attention of the House and, in particular, to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), their concern about the directive the Minister of Transport has given to the Canadian Coast Guard to proceed with plans to eliminate the staffing of light stations at Lawyer Island, Boat Bluff, Point Island, Chrome Island, Trail Island, and Point aux Pas, and that the same Minister has also directed that there be staff reductions at Lucy Island, Putney Point, Cake Mudge, Point Atkinson and Saturna Island. They are concerned that the savings to the Coast Guard will be insignificant in comparison with the potential loss of local weather services and assistance in search and rescue to the many residents of Kincolith who transit those northern waters up into the Alaskan Panhandle down to Prince Rupert and on down the coast. They call upon this House to revoke the directive and to request a full public inquiry into the need for staffed light stations on the entire West Coast of British Columbia.

OPPOSITION TO CANADA POST CORPORATE PLAN

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Pursuant to Standing Order 106, Mr. Speaker, I draw your attention to these petitions.

Whereas the new Canada Post corporate plan to install permanent super mail boxes in both urban and rural areas creates two classes of citizens; whereas the closure of rural post offices deprives citizens of a unique federal presence; and whereas higher rates, especially for second-class mail, compromise the distribution of many newspapers, weeklies, regional newspapers, magazines and religious publications.

Wherefor we humbly call upon Parliament to reject the Canada Post plan and enjoin the corporation to deliver the mail to all Canadian taxpayers, without any distinction.

[English]

These petitions, Mr. Speaker, come from St. Joseph, New Brunswick and from Shediac, New Brunswick. These petitions are also from Hull, Boucherville, and Chapleau.

• (1210)

I also draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, the concern in Dorchester, New Brunswick in terms of increased postal rates, particularly on second-class mail, which will imperil the distribution of numerous magazines, periodicals, and regional newspapers, as well as religious publications.

The plan of Canada Post to adopt supermailbox service creates two classes of Canadian citizens in the urban and rural regions. It is their feeling that closure of rural post offices will eliminate federal presence in numerous communities and will impede the effectiveness of postal service which is vital in rural areas.

They call upon Parliament to reject the corporate plan proposed by Canada Post and to instruct the corporation to proceed with mail delivery to all Canadian taxpayers without discrimination.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, to-day I would like to table some petitions from Winnipeg, Manitoba. These petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject the proposals in Bill C-22 that will increase the price of drugs for Canadians.

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I have here several petitions from various parts of Canada, mainly from the Montreal area and also from the Province of British Columbia.

Mr. Speaker, in all these petitions, the undersigned respectfully declare that the monopoly granted to innovative pharmaceutical companies will prevent competition from generic companies and will result in an increase of drug costs and prices and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs; that the proposed changes to the Patent Act will affect directly all Canadians who are not protected by private or Government medicare programs; and that the proposed changes to the Patent Act are another example of the Canadian Government's concessions to the free trade negotiations with the United States, at the expense of the average Canadian.

CLOSURE OF DIRECT MAIL UNIT AT THUNDER BAY

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions to table today, all of which have been duly certified under the provisions of Standing Order 106.

The first batch is signed by well over 300 people who live in the Thunder Bay—Nipigon and Thunder Bay—Atikokan ridings. They petition the House with regard to the closure of a direct mail unit of the Canada Employment Centre in Thunder Bay. They indicate in the petition that this decision will result in unemployment insurance clients from northwestern Ontario mailing their report cards directly to Belleville, Ontario rather than to Thunder Bay. Quite frankly this means that a number of them will not be receiving their cheques on time. In fact, if there are any problems, there will be many weeks of delay because of the administrative change. They call upon the Government to reject the decision.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—POSSIBLE LOSS OF BENEFITS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, the second petition, signed by over 100 residents of Thunder Bay, deals with the Forget report on unemployment insurance. They express concern about the transfer of benefits out of the regions. They oppose the annualization of the unemployment insurance program and call upon the Government to reject that suggestion and to enhance services available to them.

SUPPORT FOR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS ON REFUGEE STATUS DETERMINATION

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, the final petition I wish to table is signed by residents of the St. Catharines, Welland, and Niagara Falls areas of southern Ontario. It concerns the report of the standing committee of Parliament dealing with immigration.

It indicates that the committee has proposed a new procedure for refugee determination which is quicker and fairer than the one now in force.

It also points out that the report has the support of all Parties in the House, as well as the Canadian Council of Churches, the Canadian Bar Association, the Canadian Jewish Congress, and other groups and individuals. They ask that that approach be adopted by the Government of Canada.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I have several petitions on a number of subjects to present today. The first one I have the pleasure to present is duly certified correct as to form and content pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 106.

The petitioners are from such places as Toronto, Oakville, Etobicoke, North York, Woodbridge, and Brampton, Ontario. The petitioners state that troubles in many parts of the world are causing people to seek safety in Canada, and that Canada has established good standards of refugee status determination, which procedures have broken down under expected strains. They also indicate that the standing committee of Parliament proposed a new procedure for refugee determination which is quicker and fairer than the one now in force. This proposal has support from all Parties, as well as the Canadian Council of Churches, the Canadian Bar Association, the Canadian Jewish Congress, and other groups.

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to enact legislation which will embody the principles of fair and complete oral hearings of claimants before a refugee board independent of the Immigration Commission, universal access to such hearings for every claimant in Canada, and a fair chance to arrive in Canada to present this claim.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, the next petition has also been certified correct as to form and content pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 106. It is from a number of residents in the City of Toronto.

The petitioners state that the Government's proposals to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs.

They also state that the proposed measures will unfairly hurt Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis. As well they say that the proposals of the federal Government will result in higher costs for provincial government drug plans.

Therefore, the petitioners humbly call upon Parliament to reject proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I wish to present a number of petitions from a variety of Canadians across the country who are in opposition to Bill C-22.

They believe very strongly that with the passage of the Bill the price of prescription drugs, as you well know, Mr. Speaker, will rise dramatically. They believe that it will affect very negatively the senior citizens, the disabled, and the poor of the country.

I have another petition to present. It is from individuals in the Province of Quebec as well as individuals in British Columbia, in particular the Vancouver area. They are opposed to Bill C-22 and pray that the Government would withdraw the Bill because they believe it will affect very negatively the cost of prescription drugs.

I have another petition to present. It is also signed by residents of the Province of Quebec, particularly the Pointe Claire area. They are also opposed to Bill C-22.

They indicate that the monopoly granted to innovative pharmaceutical companies will prevent competition from generic companies and will result in an increase in drug costs and prices. They also indicate that it will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. They call upon the Government to reject the proposals contained in Bill C-22.

I have another petition to present. Once again it is signed by residents of the Province of Quebec, in particular Pointe Claire. I also have another petition which is signed by residents of the City of Toronto, a city which is known to some members of the Chamber.

As well I have another petition which is signed by individuals from the City of Vancouver, North Vancouver, and Chilliwack, British Columbia. These petitioners call upon the Government to withdraw Bill C-22, the amendments to the Patent Act. They believe that it will negatively affect the cost of prescription drugs in the country, thereby affecting senior citizens, the poor, and the disabled.

OPPOSITION TO CANADA POST CORPORATE PLAN

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106 I have another petition to present. It indicates that the plan of Canada Post to adopt supermailbox service creates two classes of Canadian citizens in urban and rural regions. It also indicates that the closure of rural post offices will eliminate federal presence in numerous communities and will impede the effectiveness of postal service which is vital in rural areas.

• (1220)

The petitioners also say that the increase in postal rates, particularly for second-class mail, will imperil the distribution of numerous magazines, periodicals and regional newspapers as well as religious publications. The undersigned petitioners call upon Parliament to reject the corporate plan proposed by Canada Post Corporation, and to instruct the corporation to proceed with mail delivery to all Canadian taxpayers without discrimination.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have several other petitions to present and I will try to summarize them as briefly as I can because I want to accommodate you and other Hon. Members who wish to rise on petitions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All the Hon. Member has to do is summarize the prayer, if it is a petition on Bill C-22 or a petition on the post office.

Mr. Dingwall: I have a petition here signed by residents of Belleville, Ontario, and I am sure Hon. Members know where that is.

Mr. Rodriguez: Where?

Mr. Dingwall: Belleville, Ontario. I also have a petition signed by residents of Savary Island, British Columbia, and they call upon the Government of Canada to withdraw Bill C-22, the amendments to the Patent Act, because they believe it will negatively affect senior citizens who need to buy prescription drugs.

I have a petition signed by residents of Lethbridge, Alberta, one signed by individuals from St. Nicholas, Boxton Falls, New Brunswick, one from residents of Moncton, New Brunswick, one from individuals from Swift Current, Saskatchewan, and another one signed by individuals from the Province of British Columbia and the Province of Quebec. All six of the petitions I mentioned call upon the federal Government to withdraw Bill C-22, the amendments to the Patent Act, because they believe that it will cause an increase in the cost of prescription drugs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I must say to the Hon. Member that the petitions were the same and therefore he should have lumped them all together and told us where they were from so we could carry on with the business of the House.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, thank you for your direction. I am attempting to abide by your wishes in that regard. I do not want to read out all the communities listed in the petitions because I think that would unduly delay the workings of the House, but I thought I would give a brief summary in accordance with—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Just the provinces would be sufficient.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, these petitioners wish to call for the withdrawal of Bill C-22, amendments to the Patent Act, for they believe it will cause an increase in the cost of prescription drugs, negatively affecting Canadians.

OPPOSITION TO CANADA POST CORPORATE PLAN

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition with regard to Canada Post. Again, this petition is signed by individuals from the Province of New Brunswick, primarily the Restigouche area.

I also have another petition on the same subject matter signed by people from Shediac, New Brunswick. They too call upon the Government of Canada to withdraw the corporate plan which they believe at this time will have extremely negative effects on rural post offices in Canada and will create two classes of mail service.

REQUEST TO WITHDRAW TARIFF ON ENGLISH LANGUAGE BOOKS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by Canadians from the Toronto area who point out that the Government of Canada has imposed a retaliatory tariff on imported books in the English language which has limited the access of Canadians to literature and information and that the tariff has little negative effect on the publishing industry of the United States yet penalizes Canada's consumers, book-publishers, booksellers, distributors and Canada's culture. They say that rising book prices have placed a strain on the book acquisition programs and policies of our nation's public and specialized libraries. The petitioners therefore pray and call upon Parliament to rescind this tariff, which threatens irreparable harm to the Canadian book industry and compromises federal policy on cultural industries in respect of fair trade negotiations which are part of this program.

Mr. McDermid: Presenting a petition that late, you should be ashamed of yourself. It was changed two months ago.

OPPOSITION TO CUT-BACKS TO NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL BUDGET

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, one of the precious privileges of a Member of Parliament is the one of fulfilling the function of presenting to the House petitions from citizens of Canada. I would like to note that the petition that was just read, although it arrived late, illustrates one of those rare instances of the Government in fact recognizing what citizens have requested. Because there were those who were willing and able to fight on their behalf, there was a change in an arrangement that offended Canadians.

I have a number of petitions to present. The first is from petitioners who live in this very region, and I would like to assure you, Mr. Speaker, that it conforms to Standing Order 106. The petition is signed by a number of residents of Canada who wish to avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right to present a grievance to the honourable House and they point out, Mr. Speaker, that there has been—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I would hope that the Hon. Member would summarize the prayer and come to the point at the end of the petition.

Mr. McCurdy: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I was about to attempt to do that. I am sure you realize that there is no intent to do anything but ensure that the concerns of the citizens are properly and articulately presented. The petitioners are concerned about the cuts that were imposed upon the National Research Council, cuts which have disrupted scientific activity there, threatening the economic future of Canada as well as the health and safety of Canadian citizens. They say that the cuts will cause the loss of irreplaceable scientific expertise. Therefore, these petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to rescind the funding cut-backs in the budget of the National Research Council including all consequent terminations and cut-backs in research activities and to provide funding for the space program from sources other than the NRC budget—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I would like to bring to the attention of those Hon. Members who have only been here for a short period of time, and particularly to their House Leader and their Whip, the method for presenting petitions. Citation 692 on page 213 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition reads as follows:

> (1) While a Member may, if he desires, present a petition from his place in the House during Routine Proceedings and before the Introduction of Bills, he may also present his petition by filing it with the Clerk of the House.
> (2) When a Member presents a petition, he may not make a speech nor present argument in support of the petition.

I believe there are other members who would like to present petitions. Therefore, I would like Hon. Members to shorten their presentations. Particularly today, a national day of prayer, let us show a little love and affection between Members of Parliament. Let us get on with the business of the day.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I hope that nothing I might have done would obscure the fact that I love both you and the rest of the Hon. Members here. However, I was reading the prayer and I thought I was very strictly following the directions you gave to us previously in these circumstances.

The petition goes on to mention the development of a national policy for research, science and technology based upon a target of 2.5 per cent of the GNP devoted to research and development.

SUPPORT FOR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS ON REFUGEE STATUS DETERMINATION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition which comes from Halifax and concerns the fact that there are many people in many parts of the world who seek safety. The petitioners note that Canada has had standards of refugee status determination that have worked well but have now suffered certain strains. They express concern about new procedures being enforced and support the position of the Canadian Council of Churches, the Canadian Bar Association and the Canadian Jewish Congress that Parliament ensure that the Government and Parliament will enact legislation that will embody the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of refugee claimants before a refugee board independent of the Immigration Commission, and as in duty bound your petitioners ever pray.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—POSSIBLE LOSS OF BENEFITS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): The next petition I have is from British Columbia. The petitioners note that fishermen across Canada fear their right to collect unemployment insurance is threatened. They point out that unemployment insurance must be improved in order to meet the needs of those who avail themselves of it. Therefore, they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) rejects any recommendations which would deprive fishermen of their right to collect unemployment insurance, and enter into consultations with all representatives of fishermen in order that improvements to the program be made, as in duty-bound your petitioners ever pray.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, finally I have a petition signed by citizens from the Toronto area. They take exception to changes in the Patent Act which will increase prices of prescription drugs and unfairly hurt those Canadians who require drugs for their health needs. They note that these changes are a result of pressures imposed from an alien source. Therefore, they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals, as in duty-bound your petitioners will ever pray.

OPPOSITION TO CANADA POST CORPORATE PLAN

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I would like to present a petition signed by 630 constituents in the riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, which, added to the 6,223 constituents who have presented similar grievances previously, adds up to a grand total of 7,353. The undersigned ask that the Canada Post Corporation drop its plans that would lead to shutting down a number of rural post offices. Petitioners also want the Canada Post Corporation to drop its plan to stop providing home delivery in urban areas.

[English]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—POSSIBLE LOSS OF BENEFITS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition on behalf of a number of British Columbia petitioners, pursuant to Standing Order 106. The petitioners are fearful that the federal Government is seriously contemplating taking away their right to collect unemployment insurance. Therefore, they ask Parliament to ensure that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) rejects any recommendation which would deprive fishermen of their right to collect unemployment insurance, and ask that the Minister enter into consultations with the fishermen in order that improvements to the program be made.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have another set of petitions on a different topic altogether. The petitioners are concerned about the Government's plan to proceed with Bill C-22. They feel that these proposed changes to the Patent Act related to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for the average Canadian consumer, and they believe this is another example of the Canadian Government's concessions to the U.S. at the expense of average Canadians during the free trade negotiations. They ask Parliament to urge the Government to reject these proposals which they believe will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

Since I have the floor, and to get on with the business of the House, I would like to move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

> That the House move to the next item of business.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

• (1250)

And the division bells having rung:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. It being one o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 9(2), I declare that the motion has lapsed. Therefore, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

NEED TO SUPPORT MLA PIQUETTE WHO HAS BEEN REFUSED RIGHT TO SPEAK FRENCH IN ALBERTA LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Last Tuesday Alberta MLA Piquette was denied the right to speak French in the Alberta Legislative Assembly. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I back his action and this morning I sent Mr. Piquette a telegram to express my support. I invite all Members of this House, regardless of their political affiliation, to stand behind Mr. Piquette and acknowledge the principle of the two official languages. I also urge the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) to put this topic on the agenda of the next constitutional conference.

FREE CARRIAGE OF MAIL BY NORTHWEST TERRITORIES AIRCRAFT PILOTS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, in any other business the term "courtesy service" would have something to do with prompt, efficient service to the customer. To Canada Post Corporation, however, it means that travellers are expected to transport the mail free of charge as a courtesy to the post office.

Mail to and from the communities of Colville Lake, Jean Marie River, Trout Lake and Nahanni Butte in the Northwest Territories will not arrive unless delivered by some kindly, itinerant pilot who carries the mail bag out of the kindness of his or her heart and without recompense for his or her trouble.

Surely in this so-called "information age" this level of non-service where mail deliveries can be three weeks apart is completely unacceptable.

COURAGE OF NEW DEMOCRATIC ALBERTA MLA, LÉO PIQUETTE—SUPPORT OF CANADA AND QUEBEC NEW DEMOCRATS

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, I must express the pride I feel with respect to NDP Alberta MLA Léo Piquette and the cause he is defending, namely the recognition of French in Alberta. It shows he is a courageous man, and I want to assure him that all New Democrats in Quebec and the rest of Canada are behind him with encouragement and support in the defence and recognition of the French language in Alberta.

That is a concrete and specific example of New Democratic action in favour of the recognition of the French language.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, today in his article on federal research and development contracts in Quebec, Michel Vastel once again searched his prodigious memory and came up with statistics tailor-made to create regional tension, distort the performance of this Government and above all, raise suspicions about our efforts to bring about national reconciliation. Mr. Vastel, with his selective memory, used only DSS statistics for research and development contracts, which represent less than 10 per cent of federal spending on research and development.

Mr. Speaker, this is a gross misrepresentation of the facts. I want to give the House the figures for all extra muros expenditures on research and development. According to Statistics Canada, in 1984-85, the latest year for which complete statistics are avaible, Quebec received 27 per cent, Ontario 32 per cent and British Columbia 12 per cent, which is about in proportion to the population of these provinces. This distribution of federal spending on research and development is fair by any standard.

Mr. Speaker, would you not agree that it is necessary to correct these distortions here in the House and to point out the kind of injustice being perpetrated against this country by the well-intentioned members of the fourth estate?

HOUSING

PRINCIPAL CLIENTELE OF SOCIAL HOUSING—NEED FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, 1987 is the year of shelter for the homeless. We are told that single-parent families headed by women, women who are on their own, are the largest group seeking subsidized housing in Canada. The latest changes introduced by the Government with respect to subsidized housing do not in any way meet the needs of these women. In fact, it has been made even more difficult for women to gain access to low cost housing because the maximum allowable income to be eligible for this kind of housing is still set far too low.

In addition to the financial aspect, housing is a special problem for women in certain groups such as native people, immigrants, the handicapped, single mothers, teenage mothers, victims of abuse, and of course the homeless.

We think it is intolerable that 52 per cent of the population of Canada should be faced with this kind of problem in a country where adequate housing is not a privilege but a right.

I therefore want to ask the Government to correct this deplorable situation as soon as possible.

SEVENTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF BATTLE OF VIMY RIDGE

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, April 9, 1987, is the seventieth anniversary of the Battle of Vimy Ridge. Eloquent testimony to it was given in the House on April 3. However, it should be referred to in the record of our proceedings on the anniversary date itself.

Many through the years since 1917 have seen this battlefield as the birthplace of Canada's national consciousness. For the first time persons could be conscious of being Canadians first, before being British or French or any other ancestry.

• (1405)

Of the 600,000 who served Canada in World War I only 14,000 now survive. But those men and women should know that this House remembers what they did to advance Canada from colony to nation.

REFUGEES

TRANSIT VISA ORDER—EFFECT ON CHILEANS IN ARGENTINA

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the Government has taken a strange course of action against Chileans fleeing the oppression of General Pinochet. On February 20 a transit visa order with no grace period as allowed in all previous cases was aimed specifically against Chileans, by name. That weekend a planeload of Chileans was stopped in Buenos Aires and the consul who approached them told them that they were not refugees but just economic migrants, without examining their case.

Since then the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) and the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) have repeated again and again that they are all economic migrants, even though they were forced to make two exceptions. They have ignored the advice of the United Nations' Miss Herrera. They have ignored the advice of a Montreal lawyer experienced in these matters who went there to examine 34 of the claimants. They were simply told to send this information to the same consul who told them in the first place, without examination, that they were only economic migrants.

We read in The Globe and Mail that the Minister has no control over his visa officer except moral suasion. In other words, the Minister is now covering up for the anti-Chilean refugee bias of his consul in Buenos Aires.

LIBERAL PARTY

LEADER'S POSITION

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, at the end of a two-day caucus on political organization, the Leader of the Liberal Party could see for himself that his Party is experiencing communication problems.

However the positive aspect is that the leader strengthens his position as such, at least when he physically appears with his troops, and their discipline was obvious in this House when the President of the United States referred to the liberalization of our trade: none of the Liberals applauded in the House. When the American President mentioned the priority of private enterprise, no applause from the Liberals. When the President linked foreign aid to trade liberalization, again no applause from the Liberals. When the President twice rose the issue of national defence, no applause from the Liberals.

Mr. Speaker, this is hardly the way to launch a communication program. If the Leader of the Liberal Party is anxious to have more photo sessions with the President of the United States he will have to change his negative approach towards the United States, and perhaps he ought to be more receptive with respect to the positions of the dissident members of his caucus.

Then he might not have to tell the House—and we have our doubts about this—and I quote: "The President asked to see me". See Hansard for April 7, 1987.

ROAD SAFETY

SUGGESTED MANDATORY INSTALLATION OF SHOULDER BELTS IN CAR BACK SEATS

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I have another letter which I wish to put on the record on the subject of making three-point rear seat-belts mandatory in all cars built or sold in Canada. The letter is addressed to Dr. Campbell of Transport Canada and is signed by Mrs. Marilynn Riseborough of Woodlawn, Ontario. It states:

> While watching the TV program The Fifth Estate . . . I was shocked to hear one of your staff members . . . say that one of the reasons for no shoulder seat belts in the back seats of cars in Canada was "because not many people ride in the back seats of cars in Canada"—
> One car manufacturer's representative on the same program stated the cost for these shoulder belts is negligible.
> You people set the standard, why are you not seeing that these belts are mandatory in all vehicles sold in Canada!
> This is not a new problem to me. When my daughter was two years old in 1972 I found out that lap belts can paralyze a child in accidents at 30 mph . . . I ordered a harness from Mothercare in England and had my car dealer anchor it to the frame of my car. This harness went over both shoulders and the lap.

I call upon the Government to force car manufacturers to install three-point rear seat-belts in all passenger cars built and sold in Canada.

SEVENTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF BATTLE OF VIMY RIDGE

Mr. Gerald Comeau (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, 70 years ago today an army of Canadians achieved the impossible. They dislodged the enemy occupying Vimy Ridge.

The French Army had lost 150,000 men trying to do this, and the British Army fared no better. Through sheer bravery and determination our soldiers achieved what most people thought was hopeless.

During the course of the attack the highest point of the Ridge standing 470 feet above the plain could not be taken. The brave troops of Quebec, Ontario, and B.C. were beaten to a standstill by the enemy perched atop this vantage point.

At dusk the men of the Nova Scotia Highlanders were ordered to advance. The Nova Scotians attacked with a frenzy, driving the enemy off the ridge and carried on down the other side, advancing farther than any other regiment in that battle.

• (1410)

Those who took part in this action included men from my riding like Sydney Goodwin of Lower Argyle; Clifford Doucette of Weymouth who, alone and with only a rifle, dispatched the entire crew of an enemy machine-gun; Charles Hersey of Freeport, or Lewis Gates of Middleton who single-handedly operated his machine-gun for 48 hours against the enemy. Some of these men did not survive the battle, but in making these sacrifices Nova Scotians succeeded where so many others had died in their attempts.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SEVENTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF BATTLE OF VIMY RIDGE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, today is the seventieth anniversary of the Canadian victory at Vimy Ridge. I was particularly moved by the passage from Pierre Berton's book quoted in The Globe and Mail today which described how the sound of artillery smothered the skirl of the pipes. As a piper myself, and as a grandson of a piper who was there at Vimy Ridge after having been gassed and temporarily blinded at Ypres and wounded at the Somme, I have always taken a special interest and a special pride in the story of the Canadian Expeditionary Force in World War I, as all Canadians should, Mr. Speaker.

The spirit of togetherness which animated Canadians on that day and which contributed to their victory is something that should be remembered, cherished, lived and enhanced in our day. Whenever we are tempted by regional grievances, however justified they may be, we should not forget that on that morning, for those Canadians who have a place of honour in our history, there was no west, no east, no centre, no periphery, only Canadians, all wearing the same uniform and united in purpose.

Let us pray for a vision of Canada in a peaceful world that could do for us in peacetime what was done for us in war on that morning.

NEED FOR SOIL CONSERVATION

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, work toward overcoming problems of farm finance and work toward overcoming problems of soil degradation must not be taken in isolation one from the other. Only about 5 per cent of Canada's land area has a significant agricultural capability. Most of that land is already under production and threatened by any number of sources of soil degradation. If our soil disappears, so do our farmers, our jobs and the very food we eat.

As the Saskatchewan Association of Rural Municipalities and many others have pointed out, soil conservation is everybody's business. A commitment to soil conservation is required by all if Canada is to feed present and future generations. This commitment must come not just from farmers but also from consumers, farm chemical and farm machinery producers, and Governments.

I welcome the initiative taken by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and his Department to launch a major public awareness campaign related to soil conservation in Canada. I welcome the federal Government's commitment to working on the problem of soil degradation, but I would like to remind the House that soil conservation efforts must be taken in accord with, and not in opposition to, efforts taken by the Government to help farmers overcome problems of capital restructuring, debt financing, low commodity prices and other problems of farm finance. It is a tall order, but it is one that this Government can deliver.

PETRO-CANADA

POTENTIAL TO PROMOTE COMPETITION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, it is imperative that the Conservative Government realizes that Canada's public interest, like that of all other industrialized countries, involves ensuring an adequate supply of energy at reasonable prices.

The Restrictive Trade Practices Commission report "Competition in the Petroleum Industry" released in May, 1986, concluded that Petro-Canada should play a leading role in providing a stable and competitive market-place. The report stated:

> The fact that (Petro-Canada) is government owned—offers a unique opportunity to . . . use Petro-Canada's potential to promote competition in an industry where the extent of concentration in conjunction with vertical integration continually threatens the vigour of market forces . . . Petro-Canada gives the Government the opportunity to reduce the competitive restraints and associated public cost of that market, not only without having to pass special laws, but in ongoing pervasive ways that could not be achieved by laws.

The Government is planning to sell off Petro-Canada. This Tory Government is simply and clearly not capable of defending Canada's public interest when it comes to ensuring an adequate supply of energy at reasonable prices.

ALBERTA—TREATMENT BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, these are bleak days in Alberta. The economy is stalled, the ranks of the unemployed are swelling, and the food banks are packed. From Red Deer to Lethbridge, from Lac La Biche to Coutts, and from Three Hills to my home town of Longview, people are asking themselves whose interests the federal Government is standing up for? Apparently it is not the interests of ordinary Albertans.

What average Albertans want is what Canadians in all parts of Canada want. They want to be treated and respected as first-class citizens. They do not want their problems and their hardships to be an afterthought. After all, the problems facing someone who is unemployed in Edmonton are the same as those faced by someone who is unemployed in Montreal, Chicoutimi, or Windsor. Yet there is a growing feeling in Alberta that its concerns, its problems, and its aspirations are not being treated by the Government with the same degree of attention as the concerns of other provinces. When voices are raised pointing out the situation, they are threatened, muzzled, and silenced. This is no way to deal with those who seek to express the true sentiments of average Albertans.

Alberta can make a dynamic and exciting contribution to Canada. It is time that Alberta and Albertans were not taken for granted by the Government. Perhaps next time Albertans will ask themselves just who really speaks up for average Albertans and their families.

NON-DELIVERY OF MAIL TO SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I want to read to the House a letter which I received:

Gentlemen:

There is a man in the post office so powerful that when he coughs the post office chokes.

Everyday, since 1982, this man has delivered a bag containing hundreds of pieces of mail to this company.

Last Monday he got sick. The bag of mail did not arrive. The next day I called the post office and after finally discovering a phone that somebody would answer, I got the whole story.

It goes like this. The post office is understaffed, so when our man gets sick our company doesn't get any mail unless a temporary replacement can be found. A few hours after my call, someone did drop off a few pieces of mail, but as at Wednesday at 2.30 p.m., the mail we should have received has not arrived.

Now it's not as if our offices are isolated in the middle of some northern tundra. We are located in the middle of downtown Toronto about two blocks from Maple Leaf Gardens (I guess Harold Ballard isn't getting his mail either).

Is there mail after death? I guess we'll find out soon enough because it's postal service like this that kills small business.

SEVENTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF BATTLE OF VIMY RIDGE

Mr. Speaker: Before proceeding with Oral Question Period, and although it is not normal for a Speaker to comment upon statements made in the House, I think it is in the interests of all Hon. Members and those Canadians watching to note the number of members who rose to speak of the great Canadian challenge and victory at Vimy.

I am deeply touched by what I have heard because my father, Clarence Rosswell Fraser, was a stretcher-bearer in the Canadian Corps in that great battle.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Oral Questions. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I am sure all Hon. Members of the House would associate themselves with the remarks you have just made on behalf of the Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

SENATE REFORM

PROVINCIAL PROPOSAL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It concerns a very vital issue to western Canadians, that is, the issue of Senate reform.

As the Prime Minister will know, the Premier of Alberta has already declared in favour of a form of elected equal Senate. I think to the satisfaction of many of us, the Premier of Ontario has indicated that he is now prepared to consider such a proposal.

Could the Prime Minister indicate to the House whether he and his Government are also in favour of such a proposal and whether he intends to include or incorporate that topic as part of the forthcoming federal-provincial talks on the Constitution?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the latter part of the question, which I believe applied to the upcoming talks scheduled for April 30, it was agreed at the meeting of provincial First Ministers in Edmonton last year—and I believe it was chaired by Premier Getty—that the first round of constitutional discussions would relate exclusively, it is my understanding, to the attempted resolution to bring Quebec back into Confederation. After that, if that were to be successfully concluded, it was agreed that the federal Government would move on to other areas of concern to the provinces, including the question of Senate reform.

• (1420)

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL COMMITMENT TO INTRODUCE REFORM PROPOSALS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister was quoted as saying almost two years ago now that the Government which he heads would bring forward proposals on Senate reform before the end of its mandate which is now getting very close.

Is the Prime Minister prepared to commit today specifically that the Government will bring forward proposals dealing with a model or formula for an elected, equal Senate as part of the constitutional reform within the next 18 months?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand that today the Liberal Party of Canada expresses its support for an elected Senate with equal representation from all provinces. I understand that is quite at variance with the position of the Liberal Party of Canada in regard to the Senate adopted formally in 1983. I would like to point out to my hon. friend—

An Hon. Member: No, '87.

Mr. Mulroney: Yes, this is 1987. If this is the position of the Liberal Party in 1987, I know my hon. friend would want to rise and confirm that.

The commitment I gave to the country was for after we proceeded with these constitutional arrangements that I am sure all Parties are endeavouring to reach in regard to bringing Quebec back into the Constitution. Indeed, the First Ministers themselves set it out in a communiqué and, pursuant to that, I would be happy to meet with them hopefully at a mutually convenient time thereafter to consider the question of Senate reform.

It was my understanding that all First Ministers who signed that communiqué in Edmonton last summer believed that a condition precedent to consideration of this kind of constitutional reform was a mutually satisfactory resolution of the question of bringing Quebec back into Confederation.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I can certainly tell the Prime Minister that the report of the western caucus of our Party which was made today endorses that principle, based upon very extensive discussions with westerners about its need.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: All one of them.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Was it with the Senators?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I would only say that it is a little unseemly for a Party that has taken no position and for a Party that wants to abolish the Senate to deride a commitment on the part of western Canadians to get better and equal representation at this national level. We are prepared to put our position on paper and in public.

Does the Government endorse the basic principles of Senate reform and the objective of an equal and elected Senate? Will the Government bring forward proposals within the next 18 months so western Canadians and others in the regions will know that they can get a much better deal from Ottawa than they are getting now from this Government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I caution my hon. friend. If he is going to get into this kind of discussion which is clearly designed to exacerbate any regional difficulties which may exist, I would point out to him that since this Government came into office the unemployment rate, an important indicator of economic activity, has fallen in the following way: the lowest rate of unemployment in Canada is in Manitoba.

Mr. Riis: NDP Government.

Mr. Mulroney: The second is in Ontario, the third is in Saskatchewan, and the fourth is in Alberta. That is progress and equality brought about by fair and equal representation in the elected Cabinet of Canada, something which was lacking so often under Liberals.

Mr. Murphy: Alberta used to be better off.

Mr. Mulroney: Alberta used to be better before they got a whiff of the NDP.

Mr. Riis: Say that in Kilgour's riding.

Mr. Mulroney: When Mr. Broadbent hears that they are talking again, they will be in trouble.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1425)

Mr. Mulroney: I tell you, the telephone lines are going to be humming.

I invite my hon. friend to refer to the Edmonton declaration after the 27th Annual Premiers' Conference of August 10 to August 12, which said: "The Premiers unanimously agreed that their top constitutional priority is to embark immediately upon a federal-provincial process using Quebec's five proposals as a basis for discussion to bring about Quebec's full and active participation in the Canadian federation. There was a consensus among the Premiers that then they will pursue further constitutional discussions on matters raised, which includes Senate reform."

If the matter of Senate reform is reached pursuant to this formula enunciated by the Premiers, the Government of Canada will have a proposal to put forward in regard to Senate reform.

INTEREST RATES AND FEES CHARGED FARMERS BY CHARTERED BANKS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture, but I might point out to the Prime Minister that western agriculture is facing the worst financial crisis since R. B. Bennett was Prime Minister. That tells us something about the Prime Minister.

The Minister of Agriculture knows that many farmers have been overcharged on interest by the banks which switched from a fixed rate to a floating rate before 1982. In one case in Alberta the overcharge amounted to $240,000. We learned just yesterday that banks are demanding a $500 fee to show farmers their loan accounts. Will the Minister demand that the banks stop gouging farmers, repay the overcharges, give them the information they need, and straighten this matter out?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to look into the allegations about whether they are charging this fee or not. I must remind the Hon. Member that I have asked the Inspector General of Banks to inquire into the scope of this program. I hope he will be getting back to me in a few weeks.

REQUEST THAT BANKS BE OBLIGATED TO PROVIDE ACCOUNT INFORMATION TO FARMERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I talked to the Inspector General of Banks yesterday and he said their inquiry is only from the point of view that the banks may become insolvent because they have to repay all this money to the farmers. The Inspector General has no power to require the banks to stop charging this $500 fee to farmers for looking at their accounts.

If the Minister cannot get the co-operation of the banks, is he prepared to bring in legislation which would require the banks to provide this information to farmers? Many farmers are facing the loss of their farms because the banks have overcharged them.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, my answer is the same as it was to the first question. I will look into whether the banks are making such a charge. If they are, we will look at the circumstances. However, I have to remind the Hon. Member that these cases have gone different ways in the courts. The floating rate has been sustained in some instances and a fixed rate in others. The best way to pursue this is of course through the court system, farmer by farmer, individual by individual. They should have the information necessary to pursue that route and I hope the banks will co-operate.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

OBJECTIVE AND SCOPE OF INQUIRY

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services.

Yesterday, the Minister said in the House that she had ordered an inquiry to investigate the activities of the Advertising Management Group in her Department. Could the Minister inform the House what activities and which individuals this inquiry will investigate? And will she table in the House the terms of reference of the inquiries so that Canadians will know what is going on?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, it is true that yesterday I announced the Department would be conducting an inquiry to investigate allegations of a conflict of interest on the part of Mr. Péloquin. I have asked for an inquiry that will evaluate the legal aspects of the allegations of conflict of interest.

[English]

QUERY CONCERNING TERMS OF REFERENCE

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I will now try it in English. The Minister announced the inquiry yesterday. Will she tell this House who is going to be conducting the inquiry and what its terms of reference are? What is she investigating? What is she inquiring into? I want her to let us in on this inquiry so that all Canadians can be aware of what is going on in her Department.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to set the record straight. Mr. Jean Péloquin is not a public servant but a consultant hired under contract on an annual basis. He was a member of an advertising management group which, as I have said several times before, has done fantastic work by cutting costs and restoring the competitive aspect of this sector.

Indigo is a production, not an advertising firm. The Advertising Management Group's mandate was to advise the Government on advertising proposals, not on production.

I just said that an inquiry has been ordered in my Department to evaluate the legal aspects. If necessary, once this inquiry has been completed, I will expand the inquiry's terms of reference and order an internal inquiry, because I think it is important for people in the Department to know how to work with the extremely effective system introduced by this Government.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in this House the Minister said that she was dismantling a patronage system and that it is an honest process. Yet, outside the House she said:

[Translation]

If you had to advertise yourself, wouldn't you give the job to a friend whom you could trust to get your message across? I would.

[English]

In other words, if you want somebody to promote you, you would choose your friends. "I would", the Minister said. It appears that patronage is alive and well. Would the Minister not agree that her contradictory remarks, those made in this House and those made outside, are indications that the patronage system is still alive and well in the Conservative Government?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): The greatest challenge to this Government has been to restore the confidence of Canadians by getting the economy back on track and renewing the desire of Canadians to work together. I am sure that after this inquiry we will be able to work in complete confidence, because I have confidence in my staff and in their desire to work with the private sector, because we in the Government know that we must be able to trust the people with whom we work, and we will always work with people we can trust.

Mr. Boudria: Thanks to her last "joke", Mr. Speaker, we can appreciate the Minister's sense of humour.

PATRONAGE—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister also deals with the Péloquin case. Yesterday, she was reported as saying: "We have established a competition system. We are dismantling a patronage system". Could the Minister indicate to us when she adhered to her new way of thinking, because concerning the Conservatives, she stated last year in the Le Soleil newspaper, and I quote:

> Because they are our friends. Because we share the same ideas, the same views, the same ideal.

—thus favoring Conservatives. Is the contract awarded to Mr. Péloquin an example of good patronage, as she described it last year, or is it an example of the reform she announced yesterday in the House of Commons? Which of the two is it?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, my only concern is to re-establish fairness. The system which has been implemented has reintroduced competition, something which did not exist before.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, the Canadian people have at last found a promise which the Conservatives have fulfilled, that of patronage.

[English]

PÉLOQUIN CONTRACT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, less than an hour ago I was refused a copy of the government contract with Mr. Péloquin by the office of the Minister of Supply and Services. Could the Minister explain why I was refused a copy of this contract? Is it stonewalling similar to that which I got from her colleague, the Minister of Public Works, with regard to the Vincent Massey affair in Hull? What is the Government trying to prove by hiding these contracts?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, reconsidering the very efficient system we have set up is out of the question. If the document to which you are referring is available under the freedom of access legislation, I can assure you that you will be able to receive it.

PUBLIC WORKS

PLACE VINCENT MASSEY—REOPENING OF LEASE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works and is with regard to the multimillion dollar boondoggle at Place Vincent Massey. I have before me a copy of a memo from the former Minister of Public Works to his Deputy Minister in which he states as follows:

> With a base rate of $4.47/sq. ft. and considering that for this type of building the market rate is five times higher, you can understand the financial situation facing Mr. Tessier.

It is now clear that this lease was renegotiated to bail Mr. Tessier out of a lease which he felt was at an unacceptably low rate. Will the Minister explain why his Government placed the private financial interest of Mr. Tessier, who coincidentally happens to be a friend of the Principal Secretary of the Prime Minister, ahead of the taxpayers of Canada? Why did he do that?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, apparently the Hon. Member has been absent from the House and perhaps from the country for the last two days because we have had considerable exchange of views about the merit of this proposition. Yesterday we had a press conference dealing with all inquiries relevant to this issue. There is absolutely not one iota or scintilla of evidence to suggest any inappropriate involvement in this issue. I challenge the member for the fifteenth time to put forward on the floor of this House, or outside, the basis of his suggestion that we have done something inappropriate.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I am quite prepared to say outside what I am saying inside, which is that this memo from the Minister to his Deputy makes it quite clear that the Government was bailing out a friend of the Prime Minister's Principal Secretary.

PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, why is it that the document setting out the supposed alternatives which the Minister tabled yesterday at his press conference, at which he admitted that these figures were way beyond his scope, was in fact a doctored document which did not exist at the time the original proposal was made? Why does he, through his office, refuse to make available the original documents setting out these alternatives? What is he trying to cover up?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I do not know how one could infer that there has been a cover-up when I had a conference with 40 members of the press and exposed myself to any questions they wished to ask. I had officials there to respond to the computations involved in the four alternatives. That was fully explained. I challenge the Hon. Member or any person of conviction to indicate that we have pursued the wrong course.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF SPEAKER OF THE LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL OF THE BRITISH VIRGIN ISLANDS

Mr. Speaker: I wish to draw the attention of members to the presence in the Gallery of the Hon. Keith Flax, Speaker of the Legislative Council of the British Virgin Islands.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF MINISTER OF ECONOMICS FOR THE FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Mr. Speaker: I also wish to draw to Members' attention the presence in the Gallery of the Hon. Martin Bangemann, Minister of Economics for the Federal Republic of Germany.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the self-described Minister responsible for patronage in government advertising.

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I do not know why I am interrupted by the Tories. I am trying to achieve what their Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona says should be done, that is, that the Government clean up its act on patronage.

• (1440)

I want to come back to the limited internal inquiry that has been called for by the Minister which, as she just said, is supposed to look only within her own Department. Unfortunately it will not be able to deal with the whole network and look into the Ritz-Carlton committee, Roger Nantel, Senator Bazin, and Mr. Meighen. Who will inquire into the involvement of all these Tory friends? Will the Minister not make the right decision now and call for a full public inquiry into all the aspects of how the Government awards contracts?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I am looking for a term to characterize the question just put by the Hon. Member. I suggest it is mudslinging by association. I never heard of the committee you are referring to. I referred yesterday to a selection, jury made up of public servants from the client departments, that evaluated the tenders submitted. I never heard anything concerning that committee.

The investigation is limited to my Department.

Oral Questions

PÉLOQUIN AFFAIR—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister does not know of the committee I have just described, she certainly knows Mr. Péloquin. Concerning that individual, she is reported as saying yesterday, and she will confirm if true: We are keeping Mr. Péloquin in office for the time being. And I read in the paper the following quote, between brackets: "We still need him right now". What I would like to ask the Minister is this: How can she keep in office someone who is being investigated, who is suspected of conflict of interest? How can she say that she still needs him? Is the Minister not prepared to do the right thing and state in this House that Mr. Péloquin is now suspended until the investigation is completed?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Péloquin is a consultant. A consultant is hired by contract, a legal effect that warrants the hiring of a consultant. That contract ended on March 31. On his request, we did not renew that contract. Mr. Péloquin is no longer in our employment. Faced with the allegations that have transpired, as Minister in charge, I have therefore ordered an investigation on the legal aspects of the allegations that were being made. Mr. Péloquin no longer works in my Department.

AWARDING OF CONTRACTS—INQUIRY WHY QUEBEC ALLEGEDLY IS LESS FAVOURED THAN OTHER PROVINCES

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State responsible for Science and Technology. This morning Le Devoir reported that Quebec had received less than 10 per cent of the research contracts funded by the federal Government during the first fifty-one weeks of 1986-87, while Ontario and British Columbia received a larger share. In the light of its commitments, how can the Government justify this kind of imbalance?

[English]

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I too read the article in the French press and was rather surprised. My first instinct was to make sure that the article was reprinted in the press in Vancouver.

Upon reflection, I found that the figures used in the article are as irrelevant and false as similar figures presented in the Vancouver press which indicate that, with 12 per cent of the population, only 3 per cent of federal contracts have gone there. The figures are quite erroneous and false.

Oral Questions

TAX REFORM

TREATMENT OF CAPITAL GAINS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. I believe he has received a copy of the New Democratic Party's third interim report on the tax system, this time on the personal tax system, which we published today.

One of the findings in that report is that, contrary to the Government's suggestion that the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption largely helps farmers and small business, in fact 55 per cent of the benefit of the special treatment of capital gains goes to 1 per cent of taxpayers whose income exceeds $50,000. They are mainly investors. Given the degree to which special treatment of capital gains is directed to wealthy Canadians, is the Government committed to making the tax system fair and, if so, is there any way in which a reformed tax system based on fairness can include the maintenance of that $500,000 capital gains tax exemption?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have been informed about the report of which the Hon. Member speaks. I am very pleased that they are catching up with the themes of tax reform that the Government has brought forward. We have laid down fairness and simplicity as two of the major objectives of our tax reform. I see that the Hon. Member's Party agrees with those.

In regard to the question of the $500,000 lifetime capital gains exemption, I am also pleased that this morning the Party agreed with that in terms of farmers and small business. They fought it when it originally came in; now they agree with it.

Mr. Cassidy: The Minister seems to have forgotten that the minimum tax which was proposed in the House was directly because of the initiative of my Leader in the 1984 election.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, the figures we have from the Department of Finance indicate that Canadians earning more than $250,000 a year save more in tax from the special treatment of capital gains each year than the average Canadian earns. Can the Minister name one tax expert in Canada who believes that the $500,000 capital gains lifetime exemption has any place in a fair and progressive tax system?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we will not exchange names of economists and tax accountants. There are many of them who have recommended that. Part of the Government's approach to tax reform is to look at the whole range of personal income tax exemptions and personal income tax rates. It is the same at the corporate level and the federal sales tax level. Major reforms will be included in the Government's examination of tax reform. That subject will be examined along with all others.

AIRPORTS

INITIATIVE TO INVOLVE PROVINCES AND MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It concerns this morning's announcement by the Minister of Transport that Canada's airports are now up for sale or divestiture by way of lease. Given that Canada's nine largest airports lost $157 million, according to Transport Canada's financial statement, in 1985-86, why has the Government of Canada approved this thinly veiled policy to cut costs and cut services to Canadians in Canada's airports in advance of any public hearing process and review by the Standing Committee on Transport, the appropriate Standing Committee of the House?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member has it all wrong. The Minister of Transport has initiated an opportunity for provinces, municipalities, and airport authorities to become involved in the management and operation of airports throughout Canada. They are indeed a very important centre of economic activity in most communities and this initiative has been in response to a number of communities that have stated their desire to have a greater say in the management and operation of airports. This is a responsive Government, and that is what the Minister of Transport is doing.

Mr. Tobin: What the Government of Canada is trying to initiate is an opportunity for municipalities and provinces to buy a pig in a poke.

COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that $157 million was lost by Canada's nine largest airports, according to Transport Canada's own financial statement in 1985-86.

Mr. McDermid: How much of that was Mirabel?

Mr. Tobin: It was $56 million in Mirabel.

The appropriate Committee of the House of Commons has never had this matter referred to it for a public hearing process. Will the Deputy Prime Minister give us a commitment to put this policy decision on hold until Canadians, as they deserve, have a chance to have a say in this government policy initiative which will ultimately result in Canadians having less service than is currently being provided through the Government of Canada?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is talking through his hat in more ways than one. First, this proposal is not a compulsory policy, it is a voluntary policy. Any community or province, or any authority that wants to be formed in terms of management of an airport system, can come forth and make proposals to the federal Government. As far as a committee response to it is concerned, the Hon. Member is a distinguished parliamentarian who has been here for quite some time and is sometimes a member of the Transport Committee, and there is clearly an opportunity for the committee to investigate. I am sure the Minister of Transport would welcome that opportunity.

SPACE DEVELOPMENT

UNITED STATES SPACE STATION—REPORTED MILITARY REQUIREMENT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The United States Secretary of Defence, Mr. Weinberger, has stated that the U.S. space station in which Canada has agreed to participate must allow the United States to "explicitly reserve the right to conduct national security activities on the U.S. elements of the space station without the approval or review of other nations". Given this advocacy of using the space station to develop star wars, how can Canada continue to support the project if we are to honour the Government's commitment to support only peaceful research in space?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I welcome that question. As the Hon. Member correctly indicated, the position he quoted is that of Mr. Weinberger. It is not yet the position of the Government of the United States. I have made it clear on several occasions, and welcome the opportunity in this Parliament today to make it clear again, that Canada entered into that agreement on a particular set of understandings. We anticipate continuing in that agreement if those understandings are honoured.

CANADIAN POLICY

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, studies commissioned by the United States Defence Department and the United States Army say the space station could be used as a fuelling depot for star wars weapons, a staging area for battle management, and a service station for repairing arms. Why has the Government put all its space research effort into a facility which the Americans will obviously use for military purposes at some date in the future? And should the Government not now get out of this project which is inevitably going to be used for military purposes?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, Governments and, indeed, Members of Parliament, should never do anything because of blind prejudice, whether in taking policy decisions or expressing themselves in the presence of the President of the United States when he is a guest here in the House of Commons of Canada. That was far more of an affront to the people of Canada, by the way, than it was to the President of the United States.

The answer to the Hon. Member's question is that we have made it very clear to the Americans that we expect the original purposes of the space station program to be respected. That is our position. I am very pleased to have the opportunity to reiterate that here in the House of Commons today.

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION—USE OF STATION FOR PEACEFUL PURPOSES

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I would like to give the Secretary of State for External Affairs an even further opportunity to reiterate it, if I may. The Defence Secretary, Mr. Weinberger, was actually part of the entourage with the President on Monday. Did the Secretary of State for External Affairs seize that opportunity, having Mr. Shultz and Mr. Weinberger here, to determine whether or not the United States is prepared to accept the condition of Canada's participation, namely, that the space station be used only for peaceful purposes?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I certainly took the occasion to make clear the position of the Government of Canada directly to the relevant Minister of the United States Government, as I have done publicly.

Mr. Johnston: In answering my supplementary question, will the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell us who that relevant Minister was? Was it Mr. Weinberger, Mr. Shultz, or perhaps both?

FUTURE OF SPACE PROGRAM

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Going further, there needs to be some timetable here, I think the Secretary of State for External Affairs would agree, because from a budgetary point of view $800 million has been allocated to this program which has bled a lot of other very important scientific activities being carried out in Canada. All of those constituencies which need that money surely deserve to know whether this program is going to proceed or not, and whether the space station is going to be used for peaceful purposes.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we would like to have an answer as quickly as possible. I have made that position clear on a number of occasions. I do not propose to try to adjudicate internal disputes within the American administration. That is for the American administration to do. What we made clear is the position of Canada.

The Hon. Member will know, because he was a member of the Government which was involved in the original arrangement with the Americans, that it allows some purposes of defence, search and rescue, surveillance, verification, that kind of thing. We want the purposes of the space station to continue to be reserved for those original purposes.

SOVEREIGNTY

REPORTS OF INCREASED SOVIET SUBMARINE ACTIVITY

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs who will be aware of recent reports in our media and the U.S. media of increased Soviet submarine activity in or near Canadian waters, particularly reports that Soviet submarines have regularly moved into the Strait of Juan de Fuca. Does the Minister know if Soviet submarines have entered Canadian waters? If so, has the Minister protested in the strongest possible terms this invasion of Canadian sovereignty by the Soviet Union, to the Soviet Union?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am amazed at the Hon. Member's question—

Ms. Jewett: I care about my sovereignty.

Mr. Beatty: —which is coming from a member and a Party who have done more to weaken the defences of Canada than anyone else in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: The House will appreciate the fact that we cannot comment for security reasons on the state of our knowledge with respect to foreign submarine activity off the coasts of Canada. Suffice it to say that there is continuing foreign Soviet activity off the coasts of North America and that the Canadian Department of Defence continues to do its job in terms of surveillance and protection of Canada's security and of our sovereignty, and we would ask for the support of hon. members of the New Democratic Party in doing so.

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, members of the New Democratic Party care about our sovereignty, which is more than I can say for those people.

Some Hon. Members: Oh oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, Hear!

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, we have to learn from the American press about U.S. invasions of our sovereignty in the Arctic and about Soviet invasions of our sovereignty off the West Coast. Why does the Government not know something about what is going on? Is the Secretary of State for External Affairs going to protest to the Soviet Union this invasion of our sovereignty?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we do know something about what is going on. One thing we know is that Hon. Members opposite have passed a resolution on behalf of their Party calling upon Canada to pull out of NATO and NORAD, which would desperately weaken the defence of Canada.

Mr. Riis: Why don't you stand up for Canada just once?

Mr. Beatty: The position of this Party, the Government of Canada, is to defend the sovereignty of Canada, to defend the security of Canada, in spite of the opposition of the New Democratic Party.

SHIPYARDS

OPPORTUNITY FOR GOVERNMENT TO ASK MARINE ATLANTIC TO AMEND PLAN

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister and concerns the present economic crisis in Quebec's shipyards.

The Prime Minister is aware that 5,000 workers in Quebec are waiting for work to start in the shipyards so they can go back to their jobs. We know that at this point, workers employed by the Lauzon shipyard at Quebec City are no longer entitled to unemployment insurance benefits. They now have to go on welfare.

Is the Prime Minister prepared to urge Marine Atlantic to speed up the changes so that by the month of May, about 1,000 or 1,200 workers will be able to go back to their jobs, instead of having to apply for welfare?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think that the question about planning in Quebec's shipbuilding industry has been answered by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion a number of times.

As for the workers to whom the Hon. Member is referring, there are ways of dealing with the loss of a number of jobs through mechanisms involving the Department of Employment and Immigration, in co-operation with the provinces and the businesses concerned. We are always prepared to consider—as the Hon. Member said, when and if something happens, then the Department will intervene.

INQUIRY IF TRUMP PROGRAM WORK CAN BE ADVANCED AND PLANS FOR CONSTRUCTION OF CARIBOU II FORWARDED IMMEDIATELY

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Minister says that the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion looked after the shipyards.

Last week I went to take pictures of the Lauzon and Sorel shipyards. There is nothing there, no ships, no workers. People want work, not social welfare, not unemployment insurance. Any work done in shipyards comes from the federal Government.

First, can the Prime Minister rise to defend the interests of Quebecers and ask his Minister of Defence to get work started without delay on the TRUMP contract—four ships—which might create more than 6,000 jobs in Quebec, and second, make sure that Marine Atlantic officials immediately forward the Caribou II construction plans? That is what people want.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the process described by the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie is exactly the one followed by his government before we came on the scene and saw the unimaginable mess in the shipyards.

Mr. Malépart: The shipyards were busy then, but now they are idle.

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat that Canadians did pass judgment on the economic policy of the previous administration. This is history now. Given the national debt and the economic situation we found ourselves in, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion suggested that the shipbuilding industry might need to be rationalized. That is what we are doing and the process is well under way. As to employment in Quebec, we have created hundreds of thousands of jobs, and this is the lesson you should bear in mind.

VIA RAIL

ACQUISITION OF ROLLING STOCK

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister with respect to what I hope is not another broken promise by the Government. It is my understanding that the Government has decided not to purchase new rolling stock for VIA Rail but that it will buy third-hand equipment in the United States and that it will spend $200 million refurbishing the existing rolling stock. Will the Prime Minister confirm this or will he say that it is not true? If it is true, can he tell us why the Government has decided to abandon the jobs of over 1,000 men and women in Montreal and Thunder Bay?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport is seized with this particular issue. I can tell the Hon. Member that a statement will be made on this whole issue in the very near future.

PROMISE OF NEW ROLLING STOCK

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Deputy Prime Minister. When members of his Government were running for office they promised new rolling stock for VIA Rail. Is the Deputy Prime Minister saying that the announcement that will be made is that the Government will renege on this promise, therefore putting 1,000 people out of jobs in Montreal and Thunder Bay for a year and a half to three years? Is that what he is saying?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member will know that some 705,000 new jobs have been created during the course of this Government's tenure in office.

I can tell the Hon. Member we did live up to most of the promises that were made with respect to VIA Rail, and we restored a number of services. We have purchased new locomotives. The issue of the rolling stock is still being considered. The Hon. Member is quite well aware that we have tried to work through a consortium to try to arrive at a deal that will be fair to all concerned. It has not been an easy process. It is very expensive. I think the Hon. Member will recognize that we will use whatever funding is available in the best manner possible. That is what the Minister of Transport is doing right now.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys, one question, please.

PRICE CHARGED FOR GASOLINE

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Public Utilities Board of Nova Scotia in its report ordered the oil companies to roll back their prices with respect to gasoline, home heating oil, and diesel oil by the amount of 2.5 cents per litre. This indicates that at least in the Province of Nova Scotia the major oil companies led by Petro-Canada have been over-charging consumers. Will the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources order Petro-Canada to reduce its prices correspondingly in other provinces so that those provinces which are not protected by public utility boards can pass along a savings to their consumers? If not, why not?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the first part of the question, that is the view of the Board involved in that decision; it does not necessarily reflect the actual situation, and the situation is not necessarily the same in all provinces as you mentioned.

Secondly, the Government does not intend to intervene in the market-place.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River, one question, please, which will be followed by a question from the Hon. Member for Portneuf, and that will end Question Period.

MINISTER'S MANDATE

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is also with respect to the judgment of the Public Utilities Board of Nova Scotia. Will the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources assure the House that in accordance with his legal mandate he will instruct Petro-Canada immediately to make sure that it is not part of any price-fixing arrangement in any province?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it is obviously part of the mandate of the Minister and Petro-Canada not to act illegally.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF SOVIET NUCLEAR SUBMARINES' MANOEUVRES

Mr. Marc Ferland (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. According to newspaper reports today, Soviet nuclear submarines armed with intercontinental missiles are carrying on unusual manoeuvres. I should like to ask the minister if Canadian territorial waters have been violated by the Soviet navy. If so, has the Canadian navy been compelled to intervene?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is not the first time that Soviet submarines have been located in Western Atlantic waters, but what is unusual this time is that they are more numerous. The Canadian forces, as members of NATO, are taking part in monitoring that area.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, it is Thursday again. Therefore I am delighted to ask the Government House Leader what business he intends to call not just for today, not just for tomorrow, but for all of next week.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that my colleagues on the other side of the House did not show up for the House Leaders' meeting yesterday at which I probably would have been able to discuss with them the order of business. I will unilaterally make the decision that we will deal with Bill C-44, Bill C-20 and Bill C-37.

Mr. Murphy: We don't believe you!

POINT OF ORDER

MEMBERS' RIGHT TO VOTE ON QUESTIONS BEFORE HOUSE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: At 1 p.m. today, Mr. Speaker, you declared that a motion of the House had lapsed. That is the very point I was trying to make last December when the Deputy Speaker of the House declared that a motion of the House had lapsed. Whoever refers to page 1760 of Hansard will find that I then rose on a question of privilege to ask the Chair to explain to me under what authority it felt it could interrupt a procedure which I deem basic to our country and Constitutional, namely, that whenever an issue is before the House, it must be dealt with through a division, with the majority votes prevailing.

I am sorry to have to say this, Mr. Speaker, but I must ask you again to rule on my question of privilege of December 4. I am therefore providing you with an opportunity to cover two questions at the same time.

Again, today, a motion was moved by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) calling on the House to go to the next item, a motion which has been deemed by the Chair to be in order and put to the vote. At 12.35 p.m., the bell started to ring and the vote was to be taken at 1.05 p.m. At 1 p.m., the Chair declared that the motion had lapsed and the House took recess for the lunch break.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to repeat the arguments which I put forward on December 4, 1986, because it is time consuming and I do not want to abuse the time of the House. But may I remind you of the clear and definite provisions of Clause 49 of the Constitution, which states that questions arising in the House shall be decided by a majority of voices. Mr. Speaker, may I ask you to enlighten me and the other Hon. Members on the reason why you, who are neither a judge nor a person eager to order people around, but who must preside over all proceedings, feel that it is your responsibility to lapse a motion before this House.

Mr. Speaker: It is not the first time that the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier raises this issue. Of course, the matter is very important. For the time being, I will delay my ruling, but sometime next week, the Chair will probably be in a position to rule on this very important point.

PRIVILEGE

TELEVISED BROADCASTS OF COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege of which I gave you notice. This is a matter I raised again some time ago in this House. It concerns the authority of committees to allow television cameras in committee rooms, thereby allowing televised broadcasts of committee's proceedings.

This morning, Mr. Speaker, the Standing Committee on Human Rights voted to allow the televised media to film part of the Committee's proceedings. Although the intentions are good and the reasons quite honourable, I submit that the Committee went beyond its powers, and I wish that my question of privilege be put before the House because I seriously believe this seriously involves the privileges of every Member in this House, as I would like to demonstrate with the following remarks.

It is known, Mr. Speaker, and I already have gone on record on this, that I personally support radio and TV broadcasts of committee meetings. It has always been my view that it might be in the public interest to allow television and radio to record and transmit the work, the proceedings of our committees, because I believe this would add to the committees and to public awareness of what is going on in this House.

Mr. Speaker, raising this question is a matter of some difficulty to me because the witness this morning is a witness for whom I have a lot of respect—a very important witness, someone who has set very high standards of what it means to fight for human rights, but I do so because there must be rules, rules must be put in place soon to provide for televised broadcasts of committee meetings. I believe that, and I expect action on this. I raised this before in this House, but there has been no move yet from the Government, so I invite, I urge, I plead with the Government to find the courage needed to bring in a solution to that problem and to allow committees to broadcast their proceedings along principles similar to those under which the official record of Debates is published, as is being done in this House. No public or commercial TV cameras would be allowed to come here and broadcast our proceedings here. What goes on here, Mr. Speaker, is controlled by you. The image given to private and public broadcasters is controlled by the Chair, following a decision of the House made in January 1977, if I am not mistaken. To maintain order, we need rules and, in committees, if a majority of Members, including me, want the proceedings to be televised, we will have to make arrangements, establish a set of rules and, under the authority of the Chair, proceed with broadcasting.

Mr. Speaker, as I said, the members of the committee were well intentioned, their motives were honourable. However, there are problems. First, committees of the House, even with such honourable motives, do not have the authority to allow broadcasting of their proceedings. It is the duty of Committee Clerks to inform chairmen and members that there is no authority, no rules which, at the present time, allow for broadcasting of the proceedings.

Mr. Speaker, I raised this question in the House on October 28, 1986, after I attended a committee where the chairman tried to authorize . . . I will read the proposal of the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Research, Science and Technology: "I have given permission to the press to record this meeting and for the television cameras to be in the room behind the press table."

I immediately intervened, Mr. Speaker, and said to the chairman: "I think the ruling you have just made is beyond your powers." The committee sided with me and the proceedings were not televised.

This time, the Committee voted and it is my understanding that it allowed the television cameras to record the proceedings and to broadcast picture and sound.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that while I have no problem with that principle, it is its implementation that concerns me and, as Whip of my Party, there are times when I must be, let us say, somewhat stiff on discipline, but we will have to get used to working within and observing the rules, otherwise, we have chaos, Mr. Speaker, which is not appropriate, as we know.

This time, unlike what happened the last time, the committee allowed the cameras and the recording of this morning's proceedings.

• (1510)

[English]

I will not be very long, Mr. Speaker, but I just want to make my points very clear. May I repeat that I have always been in favour of televising the debates in the committees. It is a view that I share with many in this place. I believe it would be informative for Canadians—I have said that before and I repeat it—to see what is going on in the House outside this Chamber. Nevertheless, no such authority exists at this time, and I deplore it.

In January, 1977, the House approved the electronic Hansard, that is, TV in the House. The broadcasting of the House's debates and proceedings were provided by a resolution of the House and under the authority of the Speaker. I believe strongly that this is the right thing to do for committees. I also deplore, regretfully, that the committee this morning exceeded its authority by permitting television cameras to televise its proceedings. In the absence of formal authority the committee members exceeded their authority, and it could be that the broadcasters themselves could be held in contempt of this House because there is no disposition that protects them, as far as parliamentary immunity is concerned or as far as the normal law of defamation is concerned. In other words, a broadcaster who utilized the image and sound recorded in that committee this morning could be held responsible under the normal laws of defamation and could possibly be held in contempt of the House because there is no provision for that recording.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I submit that the privileges of all Members of the House this morning were possibly somewhat misused. I would like you to rule as soon as possible on how we can resolve the situation by inviting the Government, maybe all House Leaders—

Mr. Fennell: And the Whips.

Mr. Gauthier: And the Whips—I appreciate the comment of the Government Whip—to sit down and conclude how we can resolve this problem once and for all.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wish to respond briefly to my hon. colleague's point. First, I would suggest with respect that his point is not a question of privilege because my hon. friend was not personally involved in the committee meeting in question. On a previous occasion my friend made an excellent argument on the basis of a question of privilege because he was at the particular committee meeting at which it was suggested the meeting be televised. On this occasion, my hon. friend was not at the meeting. I think that the matter should be treated as a point of order, which I think is a very good point of order.

I have reviewed Hansard from the previous occasion in which my hon. friend made the point on page 822 that no committee chairman has the authority to allow televising or broadcasting of committee hearings. I agree 100 per cent with my colleague. I would take it one step further. First, however, I want to join with him in commenting on the content of the committee hearings.

There is absolutely no question that every Canadian—we were all here yesterday when Coretta King was introduced to the House—is well aware of the magnificent contribution which her husband made to the history of this continent and the efforts that she is making of her own accord. We are appreciative of her visiting Canada and taking the time to meet with Hon. Members of the House of Commons. However, there are some things that no committee is empowered to do, even upon consent. I suggest, as my hon. friend suggested, that the House Leaders and the Board of Internal Economy be seized of the matter. That is where it belongs.

Considerations are ongoing, and it was unfortunate and inappropriate that the hearings this morning were televised. We all appreciate the spirit of the occasion, but there are some things one cannot do, even with consent, when the spirit moves one.

I suggest that Mr. Speaker should consider this to be a very serious point of order. Under the circumstances, as my friend suggested, until some rulings upon which we can all agree are brought forward in the House, there should be no question at any time that committee hearings be televised.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak to the matter before us for a moment, as I was there this morning and witnessed what happened.

What is apparent to everyone is that there was a lot of confusion and interest because the witness was one with very high profile, there was a huge crowd, and all sorts of things can happen. I think what the House wants to understand—and certain committee chairmen would want to hear it expressed—is that this is not a precedent. What happened this morning was a very unique circumstance. It is important that the Board of Internal Economy deal with it. I think it is something the House wants to see decided clearly and in a direction which we as chairmen can live up to.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great interest to a somewhat dubious question of privilege and perhaps more likely a point of order. As inexperienced as I may be in this place, I recognize the dangers which are potentially present in committee hearings that become the focus of television, radio or photography without the kinds of controls provided by the electronic Hansard.

Perhaps we should take note of the events this morning in terms of what we have been celebrating for the last two days. Coretta Scott King is the widow of Martin Luther King. She is honoured as he was honoured not because they followed the rules but because, by virtue of breaking the rules when it was necessary to do so, they brought focus to a problem in the nature of our democracy.

The House and its committees represent the functioning of democracy in Canada. If there had not been television or radio in the committee this morning, Canadians would not have been able to see or hear the widow of Martin Luther King assert clearly for us all to hear that there is no fight for freedom in alliance with South Africa in Angola by the United States or that United States involvement in Nicaragua is not a struggle for freedom.

The rules were broken, but I think the dramatic nature of her intervention demonstrates clearly to all Canadians that it ought to be possible for Canadians to see what goes on in committee. I support the proposition that the matter be addressed by the Government. If it is, and if it is addressed in the interests of Canadians, once again it will be because the name "King" was associated with an event which changed history. I look forward to the result, which will mean just that.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take just a few moments to speak to the point because of my own personal interest in and concern for the issue. I preface my remarks by emphasizing that I believe most strongly that from time to time the deliberations and proceedings of a committee of the House ought to be televised.

Further I would say, in full and total agreement with the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy), that there was no clearer an example of such an opportunity than that which presented itself to the Standing Committee on Human Rights this morning.

The motivation of the committee was right and proper, that is, that a distinguished and inspirational person like Coretta Scott King, the widow of the great civil rights leader, Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., should have had a much wider audience. Her message really needed to be shared with many, many more people. I commend the motivations of the committee.

It is regrettable in the extreme that the committee clearly breached its authority. There are no Standing Orders which allow it to make the decision unilaterally to have television in the committees. The committees are not maîtres chez nous except insofar as the authority exists in the Standing Orders or by a particular reference from the House.

What we have at the moment—and the Standing Committee on Human Rights has brought it into focus—is an unresolved, unaddressed, and very important issue, that is, when and under what circumstances may television be utilized by the committees of the House. So far that matter has not been settled and, in not settling it, I think we the Members of the House have collectively been negligent.

I want it understood that the committees know the Standing Orders. They know the references in Beauchesne's. I should like to quote from Citation 304 of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition at page 244 as follows:

> A committee can only consider those matters which have been committed to it by the House.

To the very best of my knowledge, committees do not have this discretionary power. Whenever they have attempted to assume that power unto themselves, they have run afoul of the House. We know what are the proper proceedings. That was exemplified by the constitutional committee. When it felt it was important to share the constitutional debate with the whole nation, it came to the House seeking authority, and that authority was granted.

We know what committees can do. Under Standing Order 96(1) the powers of committees are clearly established—to examine, to inquire, to report, and to send for papers and records. If they do not have enough authority, they can come back to the House to seek additional authority for papers which they feel they need. They may sit while the House is sitting or during a period when the House is in adjournment.

The Standing Orders are so clear that they went on in Standing Order 96(2) to say that there are additional powers which the committees have, and those additional powers are spelled out very specifically. In fact, certain committees have a power or powers which other committees may not have because of the particular responsibilities laid upon them by the House. However, when a committee is in doubt about what it can or cannot do, it must come to the House for direction.

I return again to Beauchesne's where it says that sometimes a committee may have to obtain leave from the House when its order of reference is limited in scope. That is the operative phrase—to obtain leave. Thus, if a committee wishes to utilize television, as did the Standing Committee on Human Rights this morning, it must obtain leave at the present time.

I am not condemning the committee. I am not casting judgment on the committee.

• (1530)

I am saying that we are faced with an intolerable situation. It would have been extremely difficult, given the circumstances under which the House has functioned in the last several days, for a committee to anticipate that this would be the situation this morning and to obtain leave. The fact that there was no other recourse and that the Standing Orders did not allow the committee to act under the authority of the House is regrettable.

Returning to Beauchesne's, Citation 304(2) indicates that a committee is bound by and is not at liberty to depart from the orders of reference. That, Sir, is what must be changed.

The Committee on Human Rights has served all committees extremely well today. It has raised a situation that cannot go unresolved any longer. We must act now and we must act decisively. The committee has emphasized that now is the time for the House to make a clear and unequivocal decision regarding the use of television in committees. We must decide when it can be used and under what conditions it can be used. Perhaps Standing Order 96(2) needs to be expanded by adding an additional section dealing with television.

I conclude by saying that there is in Canada a very wrong impression about Parliament. That impression is that everything of significance happens in this place, and, worse than that, that the only significant event in this House is the 45-minute Question Period. You know, Mr. Speaker, as do all Hon. Members, that much of the useful, valuable work and much of the service to Canadian citizens occurs when Members of Parliament attend committee to deal, often in a very non-partisan and objective way, with the important business of this nation. Not every single proceeding and not every single committee hearing should be broadcast, but it is a pity that on occasion Canadians cannot see the good work of Parliament in committees by way of the media of television.

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to rise until I heard one of the comments made by the Hon. Member who last spoke regarding the question of television in the committees. I would point out that too often a wrong makes a right. I cannot accept that a wrong having been done today proves that it is right to have television in committees. I would like to agree with the Hon. Member that there are times when committees should be televised. However, we should not change the rules because something wrong was done. We should change the rules if we feel it is right to have television in committees.

I agree that there are some committee hearings that should be televised and others that should not. We do not wish to leave the public with the dissatisfaction of a dull debate, something which would happen if we televised each and every committee.

I feel that today the committee did have an opportunity to disband officially and at that point to allow the cameras to run. This is one way the committee could have gotten around the rule. However, it did break the rules of the House and I object to that.

If you, Mr. Speaker, were to make a rapid decision based on the wrong that was done today, that too would be wrong. I would like to see, as submitted by my colleague, the Liberal Whip, a committee established to discuss what should be done, and I would like to see a full discussion involving the Whips because it is, to a large extent, our responsibility. We could discuss how and when committees should be televised.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I also rise to speak to this same point. I would first observe that, as you know full well, Mr. Speaker, it is not possible for witnesses to be heard in this House. It is within the context of a committee that witnesses, Canadians and people from abroad, are called to give special information to Parliamentarians. Because of that, I would first like to lend my support to those learned dispositions made by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner), who talked about the need for the House to deal with this matter and to do so in as wise a way as possible. This is an electronic age and we know it is our responsibility to inform Canadians, to give them some knowledge of what we do here and to make ourselves accountable to them. Rather than seeing the media as a threat, it seems to me that the proper use of media is to provide an opportunity for people to be better informed.

I also rise because I was a member of that committee. I do not want to leave it to others to suffer alone whatever criticisms there may be. While the chairman was sitting as the chairman, it was the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) who moved the motion that the television cameras be allowed to be present on this very special occasion and it was I who seconded that motion. The motion was carried unanimously.

On occasion throughout history, we have seen the violation of rules, perhaps wittingly and perhaps unwittingly. Certainly the black woman who sat in the back of a bus in Alabama changed history by challenging the rules. Let us hope that this particular event will also have a positive end. Although the committee had no intention of challenging the rule, by bringing this into focus perhaps a change will come about so that we may better inform Canadians and provide greater accountability of the House of Commons to them. I feel that the chairman should not be held solely responsible in any way for what happened today.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could say a word on this matter because I had something to do with consideration of the matter as a member of the special committee on the reform of the House of Commons.

At least two things need to be said. First, by allowing its proceedings to be televised, the committee did go beyond its powers and I do not think there is any dispute about that. However, it was a manifestation of what can probably be found in more than just that committee, and that is the emerging consensus among Members of Parliament and committees collectively that there ought to be some provision for the televising of committees.

I would not want it to be said that if we were to proceed with the televising of committees it would have come about because of civil disobedience on the part of a committee. On this occasion it came about because the committee simply decided to take the Standing Orders into its own hands, so to speak. I think the televising of committees is something that should be done, not by default and not after it has become common practice, but something that should be in a positive way and in response to the recommendations of the special committee on the reform of the House of Commons. In those recommendations are guidelines with respect to how this can happen. I think it is time that all the people who have the authority to bring this into effect got together to see that this recommendation of the McGrath Committee is brought to fruition.

I believe that televising committees could have a positive impact in terms of broadening Canadians' knowledge of where work goes on in Parliament. People could see through television, on which many people depend for information about the political system, what goes on in committees as well as what goes on in the House.

If this occasion has done nothing else, it should provide an opportunity for the House, through you, Mr. Speaker, to say to the committee that it has acted beyond its powers. This should also be an occasion for Members of Parliament and the House collectively to find renewed initiative to get on with the recommendations of the special committee with regard to the televising of committees.

• (1540)

I hope this will have a positive effect on the future of Parliament. There is no guarantee that it will. It does have its down sides, but I think it is something of which Members of Parliament, the media, and everyone else concerned must try to make the best.

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, as the chairman of the committee which is under discussion I would like to make a few points very briefly.

First, I doubt that any member of the committee was aware that the committee, in making this decision, was countering the rules of the House. There was certainly no intention to be other than respectful of the authority of the House. If we acted beyond our authority and rights as a committee, then so we did. It is possible that we are not the first people in the history of the House who have made a mistake. However, if a mistake we made, we made it without intending any affront to the House or its officers.

The second point which I think needs to be considered is that the committee made this decision unanimously. I think the decision was welcomed by all members of the committee, regardless of Party, as an opportunity on this occasion, and this occasion only without precedent being set, to provide the people of Canada with an opportunity to hear the message of a distinguished human being who was in this country, in this city, and on this Hill, as she may not be again. She had already given an inspirational address to a large number of people who were fortunate enough to be in the hall where she spoke. To the best of my knowledge there was no opportunity for that message and presentation to be shared via television with the larger public of the country. This was an opportunity for the people of Canada to receive something which I still believe, with respect to this debate, would be welcomed by the people.

I think it should be noted that for the purpose of the Human Rights Committee today's decision was not to be regarded as a precedent, that it was being done for this time only and in recognition of the special circumstances of the meeting which had been called to hear an outstanding human rights advocate. I submit that to you with respect, Mr. Speaker. If we have broken the rules, it was done without any intent to show other than respect to you and the House.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I want to add a few points to this very important discussion. We recognize that the privileges of the House extend to the committees by and large. The committee reports and the verbatim transcripts of committee hearings are documents published under the authority of the House and are entitled to the same absolute privilege as are House documents. The point that ought to be made is that when the events of the committee were televised with the potential for rebroadcast there was the possibility that an individual's comments could be considered slanderous or problematic and, therefore, open to some interpretation by a third party.

I submit that by convention the same thing exists in this House. While Members of Parliament are protected under the privileges that exist, we are being broadcast throughout the country and would be subject to the same situation if a person were able to put forward a slander suit or something similar as a result of the broadcast of the House of Commons.

By convention Members of the House of Commons have agreed and assumed that that which is said in the Chamber is subject to immunity under the appropriate rules of the House. If that immunity exists here, I fail to see why the same thing would not exist in committees. As I said, there is an understanding that committee reports and the verbatim transcripts of the committee hearings are documents published under the authority of the House which are entitled to the same privileges. Presumably convention in the House of Commons ought to apply equally to the committees of the House of Commons. For that reason I do not believe that the privileges of Members of the House have been breached.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: First, I want to say this is very important. I thank the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) for his intervention and also for the various points he made on the present position. It is clear. There is no objection to the principle of television in committees, but to a decision that shifts the authority, the power, against the rules. It is not appropriate for a committee to have televised broadcasting of its proceedings.

[English]

No one is pretending for a moment that what was done was other than a breach of the rules. There have been suggestions made that certain circumstances justify breaching rules. I remind all members that that is a position which the Chair is sometimes very much tempted to take, but I try mightily to stay within the rules. If I did not I am sure all Hon. Members would have something to say to the Chair, because I am your servant. The rules are made by this place and, of course, they are made to be obeyed.

Especially for the public which is listening to this debate I want to reassert that we are Members of Parliament; we are law makers, we are the inheritors of a tradition of the rule of law. As a consequence, none of us ought to take lightly the breaking of rules.

It so happens that in this case the very distinguished, remarkable and much loved Coretta Scott King was before the committee. By the way, in my view the committee had other options. It could have sat as an ad hoc group. It could have appended the proceedings to the further proceedings when they regrouped as a full committee. Perhaps that did not occur to the committee, but I point out that there are other ways in which this could have been approached.

It is clear that there has been a disposition among some Members of Parliament to bring television into committees, or at least into some committees. The Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) pointed out very well that Question Period, while at its best is the finest accountability session in any free country, is not all of Parliament. I was pleased to hear him point out the incredible amount of work that goes on in committees. I am glad it has been said and repeated by members, because as Speaker I often have to remind the public that when this place is not packed after Question Period it is because members are at committees, of which there are 30 or 40 sitting at any given time including the legislative committees.

However, remembering that we do live by the rule of law I must remind Hon. Members that our rules here are the precedents of rulings set by Speakers and the Standing Orders that Hon. Members have set for themselves.

• (1550)

I remind Hon. Members that on November 6, 1980, Speaker Sauvé said on exactly this point:

> After listening very carefully to the debate this afternoon, I have not been persuaded to change my opinion or to reverse the opinion of my predecessor, and I must hold the view that the televising of proceedings of standing and special committees of the House may be authorized only by the House itself.

Some time ago, before I became Speaker, the Board of Internal Economy suggested a form of order that could be presented to the House which would cover the televising of committees, or some committees. But that resolution has never been put to the House. As other Hon. Members have pointed out today, if it is the disposition of this place to have television in the committees, or in some committees, or in some circumstances, then clearly the obligation lies on members of all Parties to put the procedural rules in place to enable this to happen. Members from all Parties were at the committee today and all, quite frankly, have stated that they did want television for that proceeding. I can understand the reasons for that.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier, as he said at the beginning, has raised this matter before and it is not because he is against television in committee—which I understand—but because he has, I believe, a very appropriate regard for the fact that we make rules and we must live by them.

There has been some suggestion that perhaps this is a question of privilege. I do not think that it is in the interest of members for me to really inquire very far in that direction. I think that enough has been said. I believe there is no question that what was done was against the rules, what was done could have been done in another way, and if it is to be done again it is up to Hon. Members to make sure that it is done lawfully.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I wish to inform the House that because of the ministerial statement this day's sitting will be extended by eight minutes.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS AND FEDERAL POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION AND HEALTH CONTRIBUTIONS ACT, 1977

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-44, an Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There are four motions on the Notice Paper in amendment to Bill C-44, an Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977.

Since there are identical motions on the Order Paper, I have consulted with the Hon. Members concerned and I am prepared to select the motions in the name of the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau).

Motion No. 2 will be debated and voted on separately.

Motion No. 4 seeks to permit the payment of $175 million to the province in the first year rather than in the two-year period proposed in the Bill. This motion was moved and ruled out of order in the committee on the grounds that it infringes on the financial initiative of the Crown by adding an additional charge on the public treasury.

The Chair agrees with this decision but must, however, consider the fact that this motion is a straight deletion of words. A study of the precedents shows that this type of motion has always been allowed at the report stage. I will refer Hon. Members to Speaker Jerome's decision of June 29, 1976, where the Speaker said that the Standing Order: "Appears to give them a sanctity that does not extend to other motions".

Furthermore, Speaker Lamoureux made the following statement in his ruling of February 13, 1969:

> —an Hon. Member may do certain things at this stage of the proceedings, one of which is to move the deletion of a clause.

Although the Chair has difficulties with this motion, I am prepared to allow the Hon. Member to move his motion on the basis of the two precedents I have quoted.

Therefore, this motion will be debated and voted on separately.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides) moved:

> That Bill C-44 be amended in Clause 2 by striking out line 19 at page 1 and substituting the following therefor:
> "and ending on March 31, 1990, a fiscal".

Mr. Speaker, thank you for allowing me to present Motions Nos. 2 and 4 to be debated and voted on in this House.

Mr. Speaker, I moved Motion No. 2 which seeks to limit the application of the 1987 Bill C-44 to 1990 instead of 1992 on account of the announcement the Finance Minister made in this House in his budget speech and to the general public last July, when his Government expressed its intention to proceed with a thorough tax reform that would affect personal and corporate income tax, the idea being that the tax base would be modified, broadened, that some taxpayers would be taken off the tax rolls and that a heavier burden would be borne by corporations, thus allowing the fiscal burden of individuals as it is after the last three Budgets to be reduced and maybe brought back to the 1984 level.

Mr. Speaker, such fiscal amendments will definitely impact on provincial revenues, and we know that the equalization formula under which the federal Government makes payments to provinces—and this is what Bill C-44 would be doing—is based on the per capita yield of one tax point in each province, such yields being equalized according to a five-province average. Now, Mr. Speaker, the tax reform that has been announced—and unfortunately we are still awaiting the White Paper on that tax reform—is to include not only the amendments I just referred to, but also in-depth changes to the federal sales tax, which could be replaced by a value-added, or transaction tax.

We are told—and this has been repeated on a number of occasions—that such an amendment could even lead provinces to review their own provincial sales tax systems and share, according to a formula that is not known to me, in that proposed value-added, or transfer, or transaction tax. Mr. Speaker, such an overhaul could be very significant indeed, and would certainly change provincial revenues, which in some cases could be higher and other cases lower, and the average itself no doubt could change.

First, in respect of the personal income tax, the taxable income average is not the same in Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Quebec, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, all provinces that receive equalization payments.

This means that if yields differ from one province to the other and there is a lowering in principle of income tax rates for individuals at the lower end of the income scale in Canada, the impacts on revenues in each province will be changed, and this in turn could alter equalization. This is why I propose that the scope of Bill C-44 be limited to three years, from 1987 to 1990, to enable the House and the Government—whoever may be in Government in 1990—to force the House to review equalization payments and the equalization payment formula to take into account such changes and the impact that tax changes could have on provincial revenues, and thereby on equalization. The argument we hear from Government benches is that it is always possible for the House of Commons to review equalization payments and that the Government could bring in legislation that would take into account the impact of tax reform.

Mr. Speaker, I readily admit that such a possibility exists. It is absolutely true that the Government could, over the five year period, come up with a new proposal in the House of Commons. But it could also very well be that the Government that will be in place after tax reform will decide not to make any change. This might, or would force provinces to go through a difficult period fraught with financial difficulties, complexities in providing services of a uniform high quality from coast to coast. Therefore, by suggesting that the scope of Bill C-44 be limited to three years instead of five, this would allow the House and government Members or place them under the obligation to review the legislation in order to take into account changes that might be caused by tax reform. I am sure that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and especially the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) have brought these arguments forward. I would not want to doubt their good intentions but I am reminded of the old saying that might is right. The Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent) will certainly recall how often this sentence was used by the man who once represented the riding of Trois-Rivières in the Quebec Legislative assembly as he sought to ensure equitable treatment for provinces in terms of equalization payments.

It is my hope, Mr. Speaker, that this prudent step which has no effect on government policy at the present time and which is intended to ensure greater equity and to provide greater security to provinces with regard to equalization payments they receive from the federal Government—that the amendment contained in Motion No. 2 which I am tabling to ensure income stability for the provinces shall be well received by all the Hon. Members of this House.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS AND FEDERAL POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION AND HEALTH CONTRIBUTIONS ACT, 1977

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-44, an Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee, and Motion No. 2 (Mr. Garneau, p. 5017).

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I realize that this legislation is important to the provinces, and you may remember, Mr. Speaker, that earlier today when the Government was trying to deal with a time allocation motion I had actually made a motion that we move to Government Orders in order to debate this legislation and give it the adequate time it needs. I am afraid that by having this legislation finally introduced into the House just a little more than an hour before we adjourn, as far as dealing with Government business for the day, we are really not giving this matter the attention it deserves.

Members of the Government tried to indicate that we have been filibustering or slowing down this process. The Government, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) and the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader, have all indicated this is important legislation and that they want it passed, but they did not introduce this legislation into the House of Commons until the middle of March.

The Government came running to the New Democratic Party, and myself as the critic in this area—and I am sure they went to the Liberal Party as well—and said: "We want this legislation passed quickly". We tried to help. We gave this legislation second reading in one short day of debate. We said that all we wanted was a chance to move amendments in committee and to hear a limited number of witnesses.

One would assume with that kind of co-operation from the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party, the Government would move quickly in committee. Instead, it was another week before the Government got its act together and started legislative committee hearings on the equalization legislation. That meant, again because the Government was in a rush, that we were trying to get witnesses to appear in the next day or two.

You are from western Canada, Mr. Speaker, and realize what a large country we live in. You will realize how difficult it is to get speakers from major groups and from the provinces to come to Ottawa to express their concerns on such short notice.

Because we believe this money has to go to what we call the "have not" provinces, the poorer provinces, we again co-operated with the Government and managed to get this legislation through committee in a very short time frame. This legislation could have been brought back to the House on Tuesday. It could have been brought to the House on Wednesday. Instead, the Government refused to act because it wanted to pass some other legislation and introduce time allocation—which is "closure" by a different name—on Bill C-22, the proposed legislation to change the Patent Act as it affects drug prices. We squabbled and spent yesterday in procedural motions, basically Government initiated, and again today when the Government refused to move to this legislation quickly.

I think the opposition has done all it can to give quick passage to this legislation. I am not going to agree at this time to pass report stage with just one hour's debate. The ruling just given by the Chair indicates we have two motions before us and that they will be debated separately. People are concerned about these motions.

We have had a history in the last number of years, ever since 1982, of the federal Government speaking down to the provinces on matters of this nature. It has not sat down and negotiated agreements with the provinces on EPF, the Established Program Financing. It has not sat down and negotiated a process of equalization. Whether it is the previous Liberal Government or it is this Conservative Government, we have a situation where provinces of all political stripes are complaining about the way the federal Government treats them on this issue.

In my speech on second reading I indicated a whole series of problems the provinces were having with this process. They would go to a meeting expecting to receive $175 million in one year, and all of a sudden at the next meeting they would discover that the $175 million would be given over two years.

The Established Program Financing was not supposed to result in a cut from what was promised for the fiscal year 1986-87, according to the budget figures we were given by the Minister of Finance in November of 1985. All of a sudden the provincial Ministers of Finance find that, yes, the formula is changing and it will be one year earlier, which means there will be $400 million less going to the provinces through EPF than would have been the case had the other legislation been allowed to continue to the end of March 1987. So there is a series of problems which must be taken into consideration.

I think that the amendment before us will help in some ways. It is an amendment which I certainly intend to support. First, it helps because if it is accepted by the Government we would not be stuck with this legislation for the next five or six years, but for a much shorter period of time. This is important because the Government has said, as has the Minister of Finance in his last Budget and the Minister of State for Finance in answer to a question this afternoon, that tax reform is a priority of the Government and that they will do something to make the system more fair, more simple, and a number of other things. Indeed, if that is true then the financial picture of the federal Government will change, as will the financial situation of the provinces.

I think it is important that we look at equalization again as a result of those changes in tax legislation. Three years is certainly more than enough time for the federal Government to come down with its proposals for tax reform. It is more than enough time for the people of Canada to react to the changes. It is more than enough time to ensure that we have legislation in place and that we have some expectation provided by the federal Department of Finance along with its provincial counterparts with respect to what we can expect.

I am afraid that if we pass this legislation in its present form we will end up in a situation in which tax reform will come in some way or other and this legislation will be kept in place. It will limit the amount of money that the federal Government has to give to the have-not parts of the country. I find that objectionable. It makes me question the sincerity and good faith of the federal Government with regard to tax reform when it insists on making this legislation stay in play for over five years.

I realize that my time is running out, Mr. Speaker. I would like to remind you, although I am sure I do not have to, of the procedure in the House that we must always speak to the Speaker, even though he is such a wise man who probably knows everything we will say anyway. However, for the benefit of some members on the government benches it is necessary to say these things, and I have to address them to you, Mr. Speaker, so that they can hear me.

I think it is important to remind the House that the Premiers of the Provinces of Newfoundland and Quebec and the Premier and Minister of Finance of Manitoba have all expressed concern that we are not doing enough in terms of equalization.

Last March when we last spoke to this measure I pointed out that even the Canadian Medical Association pointed out that as a result of the way legislation is going in this country we are creating more and more of a two-class system in terms of medicare and hospitalization. The legislation which is before us at the present time takes us further down that road. It makes it more and more difficult for the poorer provinces to provide the same level of services as they are now providing, let alone a level of services that Canadians in other parts of the country receive.

For that reason alone I believe this amendment should pass. It will give us time to ensure that there can be better legislation in the future, legislation which will actually reflect the tax reform which has been promised in this House.

[Translation]

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to express my support for this amending motion which would oblige governments to renegotiate the equalization agreement in 1990 instead of 1992 as proposed in the Bill. This, Mr. Speaker, to allow for the impact the tax reform will have on payments to the provinces.

Mr. Speaker, for two years the Conservative Government has been promising tax reform. We know perfectly well that this reform will have a substantial impact on the revenues of the provinces, and since the equalization system works on the basis of those revenues, the agreement should cover a shorter period, so that when we get tax reform, we can then adjust the equalization agreement and fiscal arrangements with the provinces accordingly.

Mr. Speaker, I fail to see why government Members, why the Conservative Members of this House should have any objection to voting in favour of the amendment moved by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau). In fact, their support should be unanimous, so that once the Bill is passed, we can proceed, we hope in a few weeks, with the White Paper promised by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his February, 1986, Budget.

Mr. Speaker, if the motion is defeated this afternoon, it will be clear the Government does not intend to introduce its proposal for tax reform in May, as announced, or if it does, that it does not intend to implement the reform as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker, that would be only one of many promises this Government has failed to keep. Promises for tax reform, promises for social justice, and instead we got the highest tax increase since World War II.

Mr. Speaker, although the Government's last Budget hardly deserves the name, the Government nevertheless managed to include five tax increases.

If Conservative Members are sincere, if the Government really wants to introduce tax reform proposals that are fair and equitable, it should support this motion and have an equalization Bill to cover the period from 1990 to 1992. Excuse me, Mr. Speaker, I meant from 1987 to 1990, instead of up to 1992 as proposed in the Bill before the House today.

Mr. Speaker, there is another point I would like to make. We must not forget that the Conservative Government has already considerably reduced funding for economic and regional development. As far as regional economic development goes, the Government's record is not very encouraging. We know that the envelope for regional economic development went from $14.9 billion in 1984-85 to $12 billion in 1987-88. That is a drop of $2.9 billion in three years, so that in real terms, this envelope has lost nearly 30 per cent of its value.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, the unemployment rate is still higher today in six provinces than it was in 1982. Why then does the Government keep on increasing taxes and reducing transfers to the provinces? It wants to sign an agreement for a longer period while speaking about a tax reform which we know will affect the provinces.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to read to this House a statement made by Quebec's Minister of Finance, Honourable Gérard D. Lévesque, in a letter that he sent to his federal counterpart on February 4, 1987. I quote:

> Thus, despite Quebec's opposition, you are proposing to change the real estate tax base using the data provided by the real estate company Royal Lepage. On the other hand, you refuse to take into account the interprovincial differentials in value of residential land reflected in those data, which would largely meet the objections we have put forward. You will understand that I was surprised to hear that those changes had been considered under a federal-provincial joint proposal.
> I have serious questions about the usefulness of the consultation process that took place and that led to the present situation.

Mr. Speaker, who has forgotten the commitments made in the fall of 1984?

Consultation. That was the buzzword of all Conservative candidates. They were speaking about a new relationship with the provinces. And here is a Quebec Minister of Finance who seriously questions this consultation process followed by the Conservative Government.

Mr. Speaker, the amendment put forward by my colleague from Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) is clear. Its purpose is to have the agreement terminated in 1990 in order to allow for the promised tax reform. If this amendment is negatived this afternoon, it means that our famous tax reform will not take place and I wonder what small business will think about this action. You will recall that not so long ago, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business published a survey of its members. Their two major concerns were the tax burden and Government red tape. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, those two major problems can be solved through a fair tax reform and we hope that Conservative Members will support this amendment. If they do, we shall continue to believe that tax reform will take place in the near future.

• (1620)

[English]

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to speak on this motion until I was provoked to do so by the nonsense the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) was spouting out. First, the Hon. Member wants to know why the Bill was not brought in earlier. It is obvious that because the census data is not available until the end of January or until the beginning of February, when that data becomes available it has to be processed and all kinds of calculations have to be made before it is possible to make the necessary estimates that are dealt with in this Bill. That is simply why it is not possible to bring in the Bill before the census data is available.

The Bill was brought in on March 11. As far as the Government is concerned, it has been dealt with expeditiously. If it were not for the kind of nonsense we went through yesterday with the Liberals and their colleagues, the New Democrats, deliberately delaying the work of this House, this Bill would already have been dealt with and by now it would have received Royal Assent.

The New Democrats in their presentation should have taken into account that there is no change to the formula proposed in this Bill. It does two things. We are continuing with the same existing equalization formula for another five years. There is no change at all to the formula, just a change to the input data as a result of the last census.

We are also being extremely generous with the provinces in this Bill in forgiving about $175 million that has been paid to them in excess of the amounts the provinces are supposed to have had over the last couple of years. When it comes to generosity on the part of the federal Government toward the provinces that do not have the capability of raising all their own provincial revenues, this amounts, in the case of Newfoundland, to about $1,800 per capita per annum. I challenge any member of the New Democratic Party or any other Party in this House to say that that is not fair and generous treatment when you compare that with the $700 per capita in Ontario.

We are getting led astray by the Opposition on the question of tax reform, Mr. Speaker. If we look at the proposals that have been brought forward in this House by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), what possible effect, other than an almost negligible one, could they have on the ability of provinces to raise moneys through the ways which provinces customarily do? What effect will tax reform have on a province concerning resource royalties, for example? None, Mr. Speaker. What effect will tax reform have on the provincial sales tax? None. We are getting carried away when we think there will be major changes to the equalization formula as a result of any tax reform on the federal level.

Therefore, there is no need for this amendment that we have before us to reduce the time period of renewal from five years to three years. Five years is a reasonable time for the extension of these types of federal-provincial agreements. If they are ever to be changed, a lot of negotiation will be required. We should not have to go through them every year or every second year because they are something like the Bank Act. Traditionally we have come to the determination that a reasonable period of renewal for major changes to the Bank Act is every 10 years. With these types of financial arrangements between the provinces and the federal Government, we have come to the understanding that five years makes sense and is a reasonable period.

What we have to keep in mind when we are discussing this Bill is that the provinces are expecting to get those cheques issued on April 16, only a few days from now. If that is to happen, Mr. Speaker, then we must have Royal Assent around April 14, which is next Tuesday. Be it on the heads of the Liberals and the New Democrats if they so delay this Bill that those provinces which need the money do not get it, as a result of their activities and the nonsense that is going on in this House.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, first with regard to what was said by the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson), it seems to me that the argument he gave about the data from the census having to be processed being the reason that the Bill could only be introduced at the time was somewhat suspect as an argument. It seems to me that what the Bill lays out are certain principles and formulae on how equalization payments are to be made. Those could be arrived at and passed by this House, even if they could not have been agreed upon, long before the time the Government chose to bring the Bill before the House.

What concerns me about the Bill, particularly in speaking to the amendment, is the Government's refusal to consider the idea of having a three-year period as opposed to a five-year period. I acknowledge that traditionally there has been a five-year period, and I also acknowledge the wisdom in principle of what the Hon. Member from Western Arctic said that these are things that should not be in a constant state of negotiation. There should be arrangements which last for a significant period of time and, therefore, give a certain amount of predictability to the fiscal management of the provinces and, for that matter, the federal Government.

Unfortunately what has happened is that since 1977, which was the last time the federal Government and the provinces actually agreed on what federal-provincial fiscal arrangements would be, whether with respect to the Established Programs Financing or whether with respect to equalization, which is what we are speaking about today, we have had a history of successive governments. First we had a Liberal Government, and then the Conservative Government which unilaterally changed the fiscal arrangements existing between the federal and provincial governments.

The Bill proposes to give an increase of $175 million to the provinces over two years, instead of the one year to which the provinces were entitled and which the federal Government should have given if it were interested in reaching an agreement. It is another example of unilateral action.

I say to Hon. Members on the government side that there is some authentic merit in the following two notions which one could use to support the idea of only having a three-year period in this instance. First, tax reform is coming forward. It seems to me that Conservatives have always been known for complaining about the way in which tax reforms make financial planning difficult for businesses. Indeed, myriad tax changes happening every year have made it difficult for business and very difficult for the provinces.

Perhaps the Government is not serious about tax reform. Perhaps its resistance to the amendment comes from the fact that down deep it knows there will not be any serious tax reform, and therefore our fears are quite unfounded. Perhaps that is the case. However, let us take the Government at its word, that there will be significant tax reform. In that case it seems to me that serious consideration should be given to shortening the time period or perhaps including a review mechanism in the legislation.

The Conservatives are very fond of sunset provisions in legislation. We are talking about a sunset provision in this amendment which is shorter than the normal sunset provision of five years on federal-provincial arrangements—and in this case its equalization—because by the Government's own admission something is coming down the pipe which could well change the financial and fiscal context within which provinces must operate.

The refusal of the Government to consider a shorter time period seems to be a confession or an expression of lack of confidence in itself and in its ability to reach an agreement with the provinces, both in respect of tax reform and in respect of Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements which could be arrived at by agreement and consensus. By refusing to consider it or dismissing the idea, basically the Government is saying that it does not expect to get along with the provinces or to reach an agreement with them, so it will put this in place for five years and forget about it. Basically that is the impression one cannot help but get when one sees the Government refusing to consider the amendment and promising significant tax reform.

There is still hope, in our judgment, that the federal Government and the provinces can reach more of an agreement than they have as yet, but the Government does not have confidence in itself that it could reach such an agreement. Instead the House is faced with the prospect of once again having to divide sooner or later on the Federal-Provincial Fiscal arrangements which are being unilaterally imposed upon the provinces.

For the benefit of newer members, I remember when the Liberal Government imposed Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements unilaterally upon the provinces. I remember the cry of indignation, outrage, and self-righteousness in the Chamber at that time about the nasty, arrogant, regionally and federally insensitive, Liberal Government which would even consider imposing anything unilaterally upon the provinces.

However, what have we seen since 1984? We have seen the Conservative Government continuing in that tradition. I remember only too well that it was after the September, 1984 election that I wrote to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and reminded him of when we sat together on the committee which dealt with Bill C-97, if my memory serves me correctly, that unilaterally imposed new fiscal arrangements upon the provinces and implemented the six and five reduction. Oh, what a howl there was from the then Hon. Member for Provencher about the unacceptability of unilateral action.

However, ever since the election of the Conservatives we have seen one unilateral action after another. Today, in their refusal to consider the amendment, they have not only said that unilateral action and unilateral attitude are being preserved but that they are to be preserved for at least the next five years, which could well be three years beyond the mandate of the Government.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in a very brief way in this debate.

It was in the 1930s that a royal commission looked into the problems of Canada, the problems of the provinces, in meeting in a financial way the needs of their people. It was agreed—and indeed it is defined in the Constitution—that the purpose of these programs was to ensure that provincial Governments had sufficient revenues to provide reasonably comparable levels of service at reasonably comparable levels of taxation.

Right after World War II it was accepted by all Parties, indeed by all Canadians, that the federal Government had a responsibility to try to ensure that all provinces and the territories would be in the position to provide basic services—post-secondary education, hospital care, and medical care—so that all Canadians were treated in a reasonable and equal way regardless of where they lived.

Over the years we have developed a great number of programs in areas where the federal Government financially helped the provinces, particularly the have-not provinces—Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec, Manitoba, and Saskatchewan—to meet the costs of providing basic services to the people living in those provinces. We developed a hospital insurance plan where the federal Government said to the provinces that if they developed a universal health insurance plan it would pay half the cost. In the case of the have-not provinces, the Government said it would pay even more than half the cost. The Government also said that when the provinces had developed medical insurance plans, it would pay half the cost of those plans.

Realizing the importance of education, and particularly of post-secondary education, the federal Government agreed to pay 50 per cent of the cost of post-secondary education, particularly in universities. Those plans were developed over many years, but beginning in the 1970s the then Liberal Government realized that revenues were not growing as quickly as the costs of these programs. The Liberal Government began to change the programs. We saw the end of the Government funding 50 per cent or more of the costs of hospital insurance, medical insurance and post-secondary education. As well, the Liberal Government put a ceiling on increases in the Established Program Financing formulae.

Many of the provinces expressed their opposition to these changes made by the Liberal Government. Many of the provinces, and particularly the have-not provinces of Atlantic Canada, Quebec, Manitoba and Saskatchewan, did not have the ability to maintain and improve health care and post-secondary education services on their own. Their ability to raise the necessary funds through income taxes or any other form of taxes or fees for services would not permit them to continue to fund these services.

Besides the changes made in the EPF funding to which I have referred, we also saw over the years changes in the equalization payments. These were payments to provinces made by the federal Government designed to help the have-not provinces fund these programs which we as Canadians believed to be fundamental rights. We realized that only with federal government assistance could these programs be continued at an adequate level.

Again, the then Liberal Government decided to put a cap on transfer payments to the provinces. After the Conservative Government was elected, it accelerated the reduction of assistance given by the federal Government to the have-not provinces. It did so by changing the EPF funding and now it is proposing to cut back on the funding given to the have-not provinces through equalization payments.

The Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) is so quick to defend everything his Conservative Government does. On listening to him, one would think that the opposition to this Bill was being brought forward simply for partisan, political purposes. In fact, every one of the have-not provinces has protested this unilateral decision made by the Government. The Provinces of Nova Scotia and Newfoundland, both of which have Conservative Governments, have made very clear their real opposition to this Bill. These are provinces which are in very great financial difficulty. The Province of Quebec, which now has a Liberal Government, has objected to the unilateral decision of the federal Government. The Province of Manitoba, which has an NDP Government, has objected as well.

It is not only Governments that have objected. I would like to bring to the attention of Members of the House the objections to this Bill of two very important organizations. The Canadian Teachers' Federation has argued that this change will affect very adversely and seriously the ability of the have-not provinces to provide adequate education. The Canadian Medical Association has said that as a result of this decision, which we will make if we pass this Bill, the cut-backs in EPF funding will provide for a two-tier health system. The best services will be available in the have provinces like British Columbia, Alberta and Ontario and the second tier of inadequate health services will be available in the other provinces. It is for these reasons that I join with my colleagues in opposing this Bill.

Let me point out the situation in my own Province of Manitoba. Manitoba alone of the equalization recipient provinces will face a year-over-year decline in grants. In 1986-87, Manitoba was the only province to receive a supplementary payment in the amount of $65 million. This brought its total equalization grant for the year up to approximately $506 million. However, according to the document entitled Fiscal Equalization issued by the Government with its legislation, Manitoba will receive just $469 million in equalization payments for the year 1987-88 despite the fact that it has demonstrated its need. This is the only province where there will be an actual decline in payments, a decline of $37 million.

We believe that this decision made by the Conservative Government is unfair. Despite the arguments of government Members that they are willing to consult, we believe that for them consulting means listening to the people who object and then going in the direction in which they intended to go in the first place, something which we consider to be highly improper.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I rise this afternoon to speak to Bill C-44 and to raise some concerns. I represent a riding in Ontario, a province which is an in-between province. It is certainly not the worst off of the provinces; nor is it the best off. However, as a Canadian, I share the concerns many of us have over the plight of the poorer provinces.

The Bill before us today which deals with equalization follows through on cut-backs made in other legislation. In Bill C-96, which was before the House last spring, we saw cut-backs in the formula, and of course that Bill put at risk post-secondary education and health care funding.

I would also like to point out that education in the have-not provinces is sometimes disadvantaged by other measures. The problems faced are compounded by the direction in which other provisions are going. An example of this is the Secretary of State's funding for education in the second language or in minority languages. This funding helps considerably, though it is not the main source of funding. It augments funding available for education in the have-not provinces. However, because this funding is directed in large measure toward Anglophone institutions in Quebec, institutions which are quite well established and well funded in their own right, there is less money to go around for Francophones in Manitoba, Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia. There is less money for communities which depend very much upon these special programs. We see that there have been cut-backs there and that they are disadvantaged. Therefore, they are disadvantaged with regard to funding in the main programs and also in the more specialized programs to meet particular needs.

Canada's equalization program is designed to ensure that the provincial governments have sufficient revenues to provide reasonably comparable levels of service at reasonably comparable levels of taxation. This is very fundamental to our federal system, although it is not something that President Reagan understands very well. He simply sees it as the state doing too much and advises us against statism. However, what Mr. Reagan calls statism is, for us, caring.

As a country we care that all our communities not suffer, that the wealth be shared, and that a reasonable standard of service be provided to Canadians all across the country. We want Canadians who happen to live in economically disadvantaged areas to be guaranteed a good quality of service, especially in such key areas as post-secondary education and health care services. Equalization payments have been absolutely fundamental in ensuring that there is a standard for all Canadians to which all Canadians are entitled. All Canadians share in it by paying their taxes.

Although equalization is not perfect, it is one way of sharing the burden between economically advantaged and economically disadvantaged provinces. These provisions have varied since the time of Confederation. They go right back to the BNA Act and there has been some support for the provinces with the assumption of provincial debts and per capita subsidies.

Over the years as the burden of services which the provinces have had to provide for citizens has increased and the tax revenues available to the federal Government have increased certain measures of equalization have been taken to ensure that the provinces can provide those services.

However, the present Government is failing to honour commitments made. This is especially shocking since the Conservative Government made much of the failure of the previous Liberal Government to honour commitments. There were cut-backs which began under the previous Liberal Government and the present Government has continued them, but it has had the colossal effrontery to claim the opposite. In the Speech from the Throne there was a statement about national reconciliation. We wonder where national reconciliation is when it comes down to the nitty-gritty of equalization payments and how the regions are to live with each other. The Government talks big about reconciliation but the federal Conservatives are in fact failing to honour commitments made.

One response of the Government is that there ought to be a phasing-in period and that $175 million could be added to the pot to take some of the sting out of the cut-backs which were coming in equalization payments. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) stated:

> I believe that an augmentation of $175 million in a year, close to $5 billion in a five-year period, is a very major increase in that program. We weren't able to get a consensus, so we'll go back to the drawing boards and look at some proposals, but the parameters are still there.

It then turned out that this $175 million would be extended over two years rather than one. Members of the New Democratic Party have raised this supposed misunderstanding. It is not a misunderstanding but a reneging on an obligation to partially modify the cut-backs.

In looking at the actual figures we see that equalization payments as a percentage of GNP have fallen. I think this is the more realistic way to look at them. In absolute terms, of course, they have gone up, but we also have inflation. There is also growing wealth in our country and relating equalization payments to GNP is a very relevant way of looking at what is happening. In 1982-83 it was 1.35 per cent and it decreased over the following years to 1.34 per cent, 1.29 per cent and 1.15 per cent. By 1986-87 it was down to 1.08 per cent and in 1987-88 it was down to 1.06 per cent. That is not a very large percentage of the GNP and we can see that the proportion has been sliding.

In looking at equalization payments compared to the Consumer Price Index, which is a measure of inflation, we see that the increase from January, 1983, to January, 1987, was 9.9 per cent. In that same period of time the Consumer Price Index rose by 18.5 per cent. From 1983 to 1988 equalization payments were at 15.1 per cent and the Consumer Price Index was at 22.8 per cent. In short, by objective criteria the equalization payments are falling behind.

The provinces which have to provide the services and pay in real terms because the costs of services are going up, are having a great deal of difficulty finding the money to meet those needs. The best criticism of the federal Government's actions on equalization is simply that the program does not meet its constitutional requirement to provide comparable levels of service at comparable levels of taxation.

I simply want to reiterate the concerns that teachers have raised about the amounts of money available for education. Education is, of course, a provincial service, but equalization funds are one means through which the federal Government can help out. Expenditures on students very much reflect the availability of equalization payments and school board expenditures have reflected this failure.

The Canadian Teachers Federation has examined the situation seriously because of its concern for quality education and has discovered that the discrepancy between have and have-not provinces in funding of primary and secondary education is actually increasing. The gap between the provinces fell in the early 1970s but has subsequently risen. In other words, the failure of the federal Government to provide adequate levels of support through equalization is having a direct impact on the education of children. This is something which we regard as extremely regrettable.

I would particularly like to mention the case of Manitoba, one of the provinces which has been most hurt by the changes instituted by the Government. I want to repeat the protest which Manitoba has made that the federal Government does have a responsibility under the Constitution to aid in equalization payments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity today to rise and speak on Bill C-44, and particularly on the amendment presented by our colleagues in the Liberal Party. Indeed, in commenting on this amendment I think it not out of place for me to point out that we have not had a speaker from the Liberal Party on this Bill for a little while. I might ask why that is. Surely if they put an amendment forward they must do so from a sincere belief in the principle of the amendment, and there must be more of them willing to support it. For obvious reasons we in the New Democratic Party have adopted this amendment which now appears to be parentless, without its original progenitors. In proposing the amendment in the first place the Liberal Party displayed more gall than grace, as I will demonstrate from an examination of the Liberal Party's record on equalization.

• (1700)

In speaking to the amendment, I believe it is worthwhile to set out some of the basic principles of equalization and what equalization is intended to accomplish.

Equalization is not a form of charity but an investment in Canada, particularly in Canadian unity. It is an investment in a system of financial transfer which is intended and, to some degree, does provide the poor provinces in this country which have lower tax bases, lowering taxing ability and lower tax yield, some opportunity to offer services on a reasonably comparable basis with those of the wealthier provinces.

Equalization is somewhat of a misnomer because equalization payments do not equalize. There would even be those, particularly on the government side, I suspect, who would claim that it is not really the intent of those equalization payments to equalize, but more to provide a balance.

While I will not attempt to calculate the details as to what extent equalization or balancing is accomplished, it is worthwhile to examine why this is attempted in the first place. There are very good ethical reasons for us, as a sovereign country, to attempt some form of equalization. It has been said that civilized societies—as we claim and others judge us to be in this country—are judged not by the standards of our wealthiest sectors but by what sort of services and lifestyle are available to those who, through no fault of their own, are forced to rely upon the support of their fellow citizens and the public purse.

There are even more compelling, pragmatic and practical reasons why equalization should be attempted in Canada. We are a mobile society. Those with whom we rub shoulders in the bus line or at the airport may have been raised and educated in a part of Canada that is 5,000 miles from where we live. They may have been raised and educated in circumstances vastly different from our own, yet because society is essentially an organic method of social interaction, it is obvious that the opportunities for other people should not be unduly stifled or derogated because of the distance from particular facilities, be it industry, health care, education, commerce, or indeed entertainment. Because of our mobility rights as Canadians and the unparalleled extent to which we exercise them, many of us largely depend on each other in this country's great society. Each of us in our daily lives is dependent in a very real sense on the ability of others to function and realize their aspirations.

It is not in the national interest that we as Canadians should arbitrarily deprive any part of our society, be it divided by geography, occupation or whatever taxonomy, or lack of the proper resources required to make the essential investments in the development, not only of required skills and physical needs but the development of social interaction to which we are all entitled and able to exercise.

There must be an element of equality over time in equalization. There was a time when provinces that are now considered to be amongst the wealthier were in fact amongst the poorer provinces. We should be well aware of the way in which the economic opportunities of some parts of this country have been sacrificed—not necessarily deliberately—to the economic opportunities and prosperity of other parts of the country.

I refer to two cases in particular. The first is the Maritimes in the case of free trade arrangements within Canada and the reduced protectionism across the border that arose particularly in the last century and the beginning of this century. While I do not suggest that there are many areas in the Maritimes that are not healthy, dynamic or prosperous today, the over-all regional economy was allowed to run down. Development was transferred gradually to central Canada, particularly to the two largest and most central provinces.

The second example is British Columbia which has been unfairly and unduly penalized by the Government's willingness to concede to the demands of our great trading partner to the south in regard to softwood lumber. Unemployment in British Columbia today is far above the national average, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) admitted today. If we had an equalization formula that included British Columbia on the basis of that high unemployment, it would fulfil the spirit of equalization, which is to tide over parts of the country that have been sacrificed for what the Government considers to be, albeit mistakenly, the broader national economic objectives.

In the time I have remaining, I want to discuss the interaction between equalization and Established Programs Financing. Established Programs Financing, as a percentage of the total cost of education, has fallen for the last seven years. Equalization under the Liberal scheme prior to 1983, and equalization from 1983 to 1987 has consumed a decreasing portion of the nation's resources. We committed an error when we allowed the Liberal Government to do that, and there has been less commitment to equality over time than existed in earlier years.

You are signalling that my time is up, Mr. Speaker. This country needs equalization. It is an investment in our very future.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 5.08 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

IMMIGRATION

EXTRADITION OF LEONARD PELTIER

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena) moved:

That this House deplores the extradition of Mr. Leonard Peltier to the United States from Canada in 1976 on the basis of false information filed with a Canadian court by American authorities, and that this House calls upon the government to seek the return of Mr. Peltier to Canada and the annulment of all extradition proceedings in this regard.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that this motion is before the House today. The Parliament of Canada is the highest court in Canada, being one step beyond the Supreme Court of Canada.

The motion before us is honoured today by the presence of a number of first citizens of North America and others who have travelled across the continent to be here. They are: Lew Gurwitz who has represented Mr. Peltier for more than a decade; Steve Robideau who has also worked for more than a decade; and Archie Fire Lame Deer, a medicine man from South Dakota who has travelled a great distance as well to be here during the last couple of days of the 24-hour-a-day vigil that has been taking place on the grounds of Parliament.

The purpose of Motion 28 is to give a man a fair trial before the courts of Canada. That is something that Leonard Peltier thought he was getting in 1976, but did not receive. Over the intervening years we have seen a growing movement, not just in North America but around the world, of civil libertarians, church groups, lawyers, and other interested groups who have tried through every means possible to bring justice to this man. They have done this through the court system, the political system and have provided in excess of 20 million signatures to the White House.

What I am hoping today is that this House allows this matter to come to a division. We will find that out at 6.08 p.m. What I think is starting is a fresh chapter in the life of Leonard Peltier, who is sitting at this very moment in a cell at Levenworth Penitentiary in the United States serving a double life sentence for an offence he very likely did not commit.

Let me deal with what I am attempting to do here today. What happened is that a bilateral treaty between Canada and the United States, a time honoured treaty, was bruised and broken by the United States. Article 9 of the bilateral treaty requires that prima facie evidence be provided in an honest, accurate and forthright manner by the foreign country with whom we have a bilateral treaty.

In this case, as we have learned in the intervening years, the U.S. administration knew at the time the documents were filed before the Federal Court of this country that the documents were perjured and falsified. That has now been confirmed by the U.S. administration. It is an extremely serious case when a treaty with our closest neighbour and ally on this continent has been breached in this way, particularly where it has taken more than a decade of a man's life sitting behind bars.

I know Hon. Members are aware of the case of another first citizen of this country, Donald Marshall, who sat for almost a decade behind bars falsely accused. It was only later when someone else admitted to the offence that he was released and now lives free in this country.

Many people might ask why the Government of the United States would put false documents and information before the highest court of this country, the Federal Court of Canada, to obtain the extradition of Leonard Peltier. One does not have to go too far to find the answer.

There were originally three co-accused, Mr. Robideau, Mr. Butler and Mr. Peltier. Mr. Robideau and Mr. Butler appeared in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, in early 1976, on the charges of which Mr. Peltier has now been convicted. They were acquitted unanimously by a jury on the evidence that the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the State Troopers and others had managed to put together. They were unanimously acquitted. They were not acquitted by a hung-jury or acquitted by half the jury.

We have learned through the work of Mr. Gurwitz and others in the United States, through access to information and through other legal processes, that the FBI sent a telex to all FBI offices and agents in the area of South Dakota and neighbouring states advising them to drop everything else they were working on following the acquittal of Mr. Robideau and Mr. Butler and to get to work full time putting together an air tight case to obtain the extradition and conviction of Mr. Peltier. We know that occurred.

Let me deal for a moment with the documents which were falsified. Our courts cannot unilaterally, on their own, return Mr. Peltier. It can only be done by the Cabinet represented in this Chamber; it alone can take the necessary steps to have Mr. Peltier returned to Canada to come before the Federal Court to be freed, as I believe he would be now if we had had an opportunity to see the nature of the Poor Bear affidavits.

It is worth noting that there may have been at least one Canadian official, Mr. Halpern, who might well have known at the time those documents were tabled that they were perjured and falsified, because he travelled with others to the United States and the FBI did not take just one affidavit, it took five affidavits from Myrtle Poor Bear. She is a person who had been in a psychiatric institution more than 100 times at the time the falsified documents were taken.

The FBI sorted through the various affidavits and, to be sure the courts of Canada would agree to extradition, accepted the one which said this individual had been an eye witness to a double murder and that Leonard Peltier had been the one. That evidence has now been proven to be false, not just beyond a reasonable doubt. The individual who had given those original affidavits has admitted since that time that she was never at Pine Ridge Reservation during this period of time.

Others might ask what was happening? Why is this an important case to Canada? I think the damage to our treaty is the point I want to make. Motion No. 28 provides the way to get Mr. Peltier back for a fair extradition hearing before the courts of Canada, courts he trusted at that time and which unfortunately had false information put before them.

I would like to give a brief history of those years, and the reign of terror which took place in those States on the Wounded Knee and Pine Ridge Reservation which the FBI, the CIA, State Troopers and vigilantes invaded. Between those two areas, Wounded Knee and the Pineridge Reservation over 400 first citizens of this continent died under mysterious circumstances. They were all murdered, but no charges were ever laid. No one was ever convicted of the deaths of those individuals.

The CIA and the FBI brought in armed personnel carriers, M16s. Thousands of rounds were fired. It was truly a state of siege, related to the traditional use and occupancy of lands which had been turned over to the native people in that area, treaty lands which were being encroached upon by ranchers, mining companies, agricultural operations, highways, power lines and by everything else. These first citizens of North America decided to stand up for themselves and a reign of terror came upon them. A Canadian native woman was also murdered during the Pine Ridge occupation.

We see the FBI bringing the information forward it had collected in the first case, and the first two individuals, Mr. Robideau and Mr. Butler, were acquitted unanimously by a jury. The FBI put together a case; it falsified documents, it put those documents before the Federal Court of Canada and got the extradition of this man. He was taken to trial and given two life sentences for the murder of two FBI agents. This is a matter which, in terms of the information that has come out in relation to ballistics, falsified evidence and all kinds of other suppressed evidence, has now caught the attention of the U.S. Congress.

Don Edwards, a former FBI agent himself, is now the Chairman of the Congressional Committee on Constitutional and Civil Rights. He has taken this case. He, along with 55 Democrat and Republican Members of the U.S. Congress filed an amicus curiae brief, for the first time in the history of the United States on an active case before the courts in the United States, in an attempt to get a new trial for Leonard Peltier. However, it was turned down by the Eighth Circuit Court in the United States on grounds unrelated to the evidence which had been adduced under Access to Information.

In Canada, Members of all Parties in this House, 60 parliamentarians, have signed a document asking for a new trial process for Leonard Peltier. That is why I am pleased this afternoon that the former Solicitor General, who was Solicitor General at the time, the number one policeman, one might say, in Canada, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), will be speaking this afternoon in support of this very proper process for the highest court in Canada to take the kind of judicial and well thought out opportunity we have to make recommendations to have Mr. Peltier returned to Canada for a fair, honest and open trial. That is something every Canadian expects, not just for Canadian citizens coming before our courts, but for anyone, particularly on an extradition proceeding where there are falsified documents.

The Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) will also be speaking. He is deeply knowledgeable about the devastating affects of government regulations, policies and laws upon the first citizens of this continent. The Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) will also be speaking in favour of this motion. I hope that those government Members who speak on this motion will speak to the issue. It is beyond a reasonable doubt that the documents were falsified. The U.S. administration has admitted that.

Let me sum up by pointing out that first citizens, not just in Canada or in North America, but around the world, are looking to see what kind of leadership Canada is going to give on this matter. It is the first country in the western world to recognize and affirm aboriginal rights in our Constitution. They want to see if the highest court in our country will take account of the views of 74 international church groups, the Archbishop of Canterbury, Archbishop Desmond Tutu, 55 Members of Congress, civil rights' groups around the world, Marlon Brando, who has been involved in this case as an American citizen for more than a decade, Jackson Brown, Jessie Jackson, and four Nobel Prize winners. There is an extensive of people around the world who wish to see Leonard Peltier returned to Canada for a fair, honest and open extradition hearing so he can stay free in North America.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles-Eugène Marin (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) for introducing this motion to call upon the Government to seek the return of Mr. Peltier to Canada and the annulment of all extradition proceedings in this case. This motion gives me an opportunity to provide Hon. Members with brief background notes on the Peltier affair and explain why our Government did not protest against the extradition of Mr. Peltier nor ask that he be returned to Canada.

First I must say that the Peltier affair has often drawn the attention of the media both here and abroad. It has been pointed out that eminent religious and political personalities throughout the world as well as native and international organizations support the requests made on behalf of Mr. Peltier with respect to his release and return to Canada. It has been alleged, first that his extradition was based on false evidence, second that the treaties were ill-advisedly used, third that Mr. Peltier was unfairly and inequitably treated, and fourth that items of evidence were suppressed and that he was unjustly declared guilty of a crime he did not commit.

Unfortunately such statements are made by people who probably do not know all the relevant facts and who may not have studied the many decisions and rulings related to the case. True, inaccurate evidence was given to support the extradition request. However it is not true that such evidence was the basis for the final decision to extradite Mr. Peltier and eventually declare him guilty of murder under two charges. None of the many courts or none of the many commissions which heard or examined this case concluded that the other items of evidence did not warrant a full trial or could not be used as the basis for a guilty verdict.

Mr. Speaker, let me recall that during the CBC Fifth Estate interview in January 1987 Mr. Peltier did not deny having been among the group of people who had fired on FBI agents Ronald Williams and Jack Coler when they entered the Harry Jumping Bull hall on the Pine Ridge reserve in South Dakota on January 25, 1975.

To gain a better insight into this case it will be appropriate to discuss the legislation and the extradition principles. After that, Mr. Speaker, a general outline of the extradition issue, the items of evidence in this case, and the decision to extradite will be given. We will also deal with the Federal Court review of the judgment and the decision not to appeal the request made to the then Minister of Justice. The facts in this case are quite clear, Mr. Speaker, and they will show that under the circumstances Canada did nothing other than meet its international legal commitments.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the motion before the House today deplores the extradition of Leonard Peltier to the United States from Canada in 1976 on the basis of false information filed with the Canadian court by American authorities, and also calls on the Government to seek the return of Mr. Peltier to Canada and the annulment of all extradition proceedings in this regard.

I must say that I was extremely disappointed with the response of the Hon. Member for Gaspé (Mr. Marin) who, I presume, spoke on behalf of the Government. In his reply he said that Canada must live up to its international obligations with respect to treaties. There is no doubt in my mind that the United States did not live up to its obligations with respect to the extradition treaty when it presented evidence to the extradition hearing in Vancouver in 1976.

For some 10 years now I have been protesting the manner in which Leonard Peltier was extradited to the United States. While I as an individual cannot be sure whether Leonard Peltier is guilty or not guilty of the crimes charged against him, I am absolutely certain that false evidence was presented before the extradition hearing and that other very important evidence in the hands of the prosecution was withheld. I am absolutely sure of that.

The only conclusion that I can draw from that is that this extradition hearing in Vancouver in 1976 was a travesty of justice. It was a blight on our criminal justice system and should be annulled, as the motion suggests. We should start all over again. We should start all over again and hold an extradition hearing in which only proper evidence is presented, and all the proper evidence is presented, otherwise we will be giving credibility to fraud in our justice system.

I would like to recount some of the incidents in this case although my colleague, the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), has just done that. We know that in 1975 there was a serious incident which took place at the Pine Ridge Reserve in South Dakota in the United States at which two FBI officers entered onto a private ranch on the reserve without any search warrant and attempted to find evidence. As a result of that action by these FBI agents, shooting broke out and the two FBI agents were killed. An Indian was also killed. As a result of this shooting Leonard Peltier was charged with murder, fled to Canada and was later arrested in Hinton, Alberta, in February of 1976. The extradition hearing started in Vancouver in May of 1976 and concluded on December 18, 1976.

It is interesting that when the extradition hearing started I was the Solicitor General in the Government of the day. When the extradition hearing finished, in September of that same year, I was the Minister of Indian Affairs. I can remember receiving in my office, as Minister of Indian Affairs, Marlon Brando and other important personalities from the United States who pleaded with me and gave me evidence that this extradition hearing was badly flawed and should be started over again, that it should not be carried out in the way in which it had started. This was at a time when the evidence was not as strong. It became stronger as time went on. It was later admitted that the FBI had other affidavits which contradicted the affidavit it had presented before the extradition hearing in Vancouver in 1976.

The affidavit it presented was the affidavit of Myrtle Poor Bear, a poor woman who had a record of mental illness, who claimed to be Peltier's girlfriend and who said in that affidavit that she was present when Peltier shot the FBI people. However, there was another affidavit in which she denied that, which affidavit was not presented to the hearing. After the extradition hearing and after the trial it was found that shell casings discovered near the dead FBI agents could not have come from the weapon that was held by Leonard Peltier. However, that evidence, although known to the FBI, was not presented to the trial and was fraudulently withheld.

The Yale Law Review, an eminent law review in the United States, in commenting on this case pointed out that extradition treaties are based on good faith between nations and when one nation seeking the extradition of a person to its own country presents affidavits in evidence, one usually relies on the fact that it is doing so in good faith and in accordance with the treaty. The Yale Law Review concluded that in this case that was not done. If that sort of behaviour continues then our whole system in terms of extradition falls down. It begins to crumble because we never know when to rely on the evidence that is being presented to us in these various extradition hearings.

As I pointed out, the extradition hearing and the trial in the United States was full of irregularities, false evidence and was a real frame-up. It was a frame-up to get Leonard Peltier for whatever reason the American authorities felt that that was necessary.

This case is just another example of the continuing inequities in our justice system, vis-à-vis, the poor and racial minorities. As we look at our system here in Canada, and I am sure my colleague from Cochrane can refer to it in his remarks because he is more familiar with it than I, an extremely high percentage of the people in our prisons in Canada are Indians and other people from racial minorities, much higher than their percentage of the population. That was the case in the United States and Canada when we had executions taking place and it is one of the strong arguments I use against the return of capital punishment in this country. Capital punishment has always borne more heavily on the racial minorities, the immigrants and the poor. Social and economic conditions breed this kind of discontent and situation which give rise to these types of happenings.

The Government has made a great deal about our new rules for parliamentary reform. The Government has stated that the new rules should give back-benchers and opposition Members an opportunity to present motions to this House to be debated in an open and free way and then allow those motions to come to a vote so that we can decide certain issues which are not on the Government's agenda but which are on the agenda of the opposition Parties and the back-benchers. This is just such an example.

I should point out that the request we are making in this motion is supported by a very large group of people internationally. As has been mentioned, 60 Members of Parliament in this House support it, 55 Congressmen in the United States, Amnesty International, four Nobel Prize winners, many religious leaders, bishops, archbishops, and so on in the United States, the National Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers and many others. One would hope that the Government will allow this motion before the House to come to a vote so we can take a decision on it.

If we in this country really believe in a criminal justice system, then we cannot tolerate false evidence being presented to us in an extradition hearing or the withholding of evidence. If we are going to have a proper system we must support this motion today.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I wish to concur with the motion presented today by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) and commend him for giving the House the opportunity to consider this important matter. I concur with the Hon. Member from Skeena that with regard to the case of Leonard Peltier every aspect is deplorable.

The extradition process was deplorable, as has already been indicated to this House. Part of the evidence presented by the U.S. Government was later established to be unreliable. On the basis of information that there was some unreliable evidence, the Federal Court of Appeal reviewed the decision to extradite. The court, nevertheless, felt satisfied that the Government of the United States had produced sufficient evidence to warrant the extradition action—Sir, "sufficient evidence".

The lawyers, acting on behalf of Mr. Peltier have now obtained, as a result of the United States Freedom of Information Act, a mass of some 12,000 documents which show that the U.S. Government withheld testimony. The review process by the Federal Court of Canada and its decision was deplorable, particularly in light of the subsequent admission by the FBI that much evidence was not only withheld but, in fact, also fabricated in order to obtain the extradition order from Canada.

Mr. Peltier was surrendered to the United States after an unsuccessful political appeal to the Minister of Justice of the day, Mr. Ron Basford. I think that is deplorable as well. The Minister at that time refused to consider the material which alleged that there were inconsistencies in the affidavits. He said that was up to the courts. He confined himself solely and entirely to the question of whether the offences were in any way of a political nature. The Minister reached the conclusion that there was no evidence that the offences were of a political character. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that that was deplorable because the alleged offences with which Mr. Peltier was charged occurred in a highly charged environment and an environment of political confrontation.

It has been mentioned that in June, 1975, Mr. Peltier and other members of the American Indian movement were camped at the Pine Ridge Reservation. They were there for a political reason, to protest the tribal chief's plan to sell some resource rich reserve lands to the American Government. Isn't it always the way, Sir, that the indigenous peoples of any country are always relegated to the worst, poorest quality land? Yet, all of a sudden, when something valuable is discovered on that land, a resource—something a Government wants—the Government finds some way to get the land back, and that is exactly what happened in this case.

Prior to the Pine Ridge incident, in February, 1973, the American Indian movement had occupied Wounded Knee and had declared it to be an independent Sioux nation. The Indians vowed to stay there until Indian treaties had been reviewed. They vowed to stay there until the United States Senate investigated the treatment of Indians in general in the United States of America. Federal marshalls arrived on the scene. There were some negotiations and some gun-fire.

In May, 1973, the federal siege came to an end, but it came to an end in exchange for a promise that there would be sincere negotiations regarding the Indian grievances. Two years later, after that promise was made, the situation remained critical and unresolved. So we come to Pine Ridge. Two Federal Bureau of Investigation agents entered a ranch, as mentioned by my hon. colleague, without a warrant. What were they doing? They were searching for a man who had stolen a pair of boots. This was the Federal Bureau of Investigation; it is easy to see that every aspect of this case was political in nature. For the Minister of Justice in 1976 to have closed his eyes to that and not to have recognized it and granted the extradition order was deplorable and short-sighted.

Mr. Peltier was tried and convicted in the United States. It was a deplorable trial because fabricated evidence was used, unreliable evidence was used and that has been revealed. Amnesty International believes that new evidence casts serious doubts on the fairness of Leonard Peltier's trial. Amnesty International believes that the United States Court of Appeal should have given serious consideration to the evidence and it believes that the interests of justice would best be served by granting Mr. Peltier a new trial.

I might just add parenthetically that there were three judges of the Eighth U.S. Circuit Court, the Court of Appeal that conceded that the prosecution withheld evidence. They also conceded that the evidence presented by the Federal Bureau of Investigation agents, at least two of them, was improper.

• (1740)

Extradition proceedings are carried out pursuant to a treaty. In this case it was the 1842 Treaty, the old extradition treaty between Canada and the United States. Extradition proceedings are not a trial. There is no finding of guilt or innocence. Evidence is not subjected to cross-examination. The purpose is solely to determine whether there is sufficient evidence to warrant a person being sent to a foreign country where it is alleged that he or she has committed a crime.

We now know that there was insufficient evidence. I charge that there was a violation of that extradition treaty between Canada and the United States. There were wrongdoings in respect of those proceedings because false evidence was used. Surely, in order to uphold the basis of a treaty, there are obligations to use only valid evidence. There must be the assurance that documents used are trustworthy. It is deplorable that it was otherwise.

I agree with the Hon. Member for Skeena who said that this was a treaty fraud. The Department of Justice would have us believe that there is no mechanism to annul a proceeding. However, if the basis upon which a decision was made is wrong, surely the decision itself is wrong and that decision should be declared null and void.

If we argue in this place that the absence of a mechanism is the reason for not acting, what a hollow argument that is. It is as if justice is some kind of machine, a sort of judicial technology.

I believe that overarching every proceeding, overarching every trial, hearing and review, there is the ideal of natural or fundamental justice. That ideal ridicules the nuts and bolts of justice and simply demands that we do what is right. To say that we cannot act is simply deplorable.

I repeat what the Hon. Member for Skeena and what the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) have said. Let this House in the name of human rights, let this House as the highest court in the land, demand in the name of natural and fundamental justice that there be a new extradition proceeding. Mr. Speaker, let justice prevail.

Mr. Pat Binns (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on the motion of the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton). I paid particular attention to the strong arguments he made, along with those of other Hon. Members, on this important issue. Certainly some strong arguments have been made to which the House has an obligation to give serious consideration.

However, my colleague has already emphasized the necessity to understand the extradition law and the extradition process we in Canada are bound to follow. It is my understanding that the extradition law is straightforward and does not really offer an option at the present time.

Therefore, before beginning to discuss the particulars of the Leonard Peltier extradition case, I should like to outline generally the extradition law and principles as they are applied in Canada.

As between Canada and the United States, the Extradition Act and the extradition treaty between the two countries is the applicable law. It is important to know that a fugitive found in Canada for whom extradition is requested is not put on trial in Canada. The hearing before the extradition judge seeks to establish by the presentation of evidence essentially four things. The first is identity, that the person before the court is the fugitive wanted for serious crime in the requesting state. The second is dual criminality, that the offence for which the fugitive is wanted is an offence in both the requesting and the requested states. The third is a prima facie case, that there is sufficient evidence before the extradition court that, if believed, would require the case to be put to a full trial. The fourth is that the offence is one listed in the scheduled offences in the particular extradition treaty.

The main difference between an extradition hearing and a trial lies in the type of evidence which is admissible at the hearing and the weight to be applied to the evidence. Sworn statements of witnesses who are outside the country may be presented as evidence to the extradition judge. He is not entitled to weigh this evidence, that is, to decide whether or not he will believe it. He must accept the evidence at face value since the credibility of witnesses and the weight to be attached to evidence are properly matters to be determined at trial. The extradition judge in accepting the evidence at face value must determine, however, that there is sufficient evidence to require the fugitive to be tried in the requesting state.

In the case of Mr. Leonard Peltier, extradition was sought by the United States under Articles 10 and 11 of the Treaty of August 9, 1842, between Her Majesty and the United States of America and under the supplementary Convention between Her Majesty and the United States for the extradition of criminals of July 12, 1889.

An extradition hearing is normally based upon sworn affidavits of witnesses and other documentary evidence. The requesting state produces duly authenticated copies of warrants and indictments seeking to establish the identity of the fugitive and a prima facie case respecting all criminal charges, and the foreign law which must establish a serious criminal offence. The fugitive's defences are limited since the purpose of an extradition hearing is not to establish the innocence or guilt of a fugitive but to establish a sufficient case for trial in the requesting state.

The fugitive may attempt to prove that he is not the person who is wanted in the foreign state. However, he will not present evidence to establish his innocence. He may argue that the crime in respect of which his extradition is sought is not an extraditable offence, or that the offence is one of a political character, or that there is not sufficient evidence to require that he be put to trial.

In the reported case of The United States v. Sheppard, Mr. Justice Ritchie of the Supreme Court of Canada described the standards which must be met at a preliminary hearing in Canada in order for a case to be set for trial, the same standard in the opinion of the court applied to an extradition judge in ordering that an extradition should be granted. He noted:

> The justice in accordance with this principle, is, in my opinion, required to commit an accused person for trial in any case in which there is admissible evidence which could, if it were believed, result in a conviction—

He also noted:

> —credibility in my view must always be a question for the jury and if the function of an extradition judge is equivalent to that of a judge in determining whether or not a case should be left to the jury, it follows that credibility is not within his sphere—

As well he noted:

> I cannot accept the proposition that a trial judge is ever entitled to take a case from the jury and direct an acquittal on the ground that, in his opinion, the evidence is "manifestly unreliable". If this were the law it would deprive the members of the jury of their function to act as the sole judges of the truth or falsity of the evidence and would thus, in my opinion, be contrary to the accepted role of the jury in a legal system.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, determining sufficiency of evidence is really the only function of an extradition judge. Determining the falseness of the evidence adduced at the hearing does not seem to fall within the purview of an extradition judge.

It should also be noted that if the United States presents a case which meets these standards, Canada is bound by the treaties to extradite. Unfortunately there is no basis as a matter of law for the Government of Canada to intervene before U.S. courts to make an application for Mr. Peltier's return to Canada, even if there were grounds. There is no procedure in law for seeking the annulment of extradition proceedings.

As I said in my opening remarks, it appears that the matter of extradition law is very straightforward and offers no opportunity for another option. Of course that would be the first matter with which the House would have to deal in trying to take another look at the situation.

[Translation]

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the motion before the House today calls upon the Government to seek the return of Mr. Peltier to Canada and the annulment of extradition proceedings in this regard.

At the beginning of my speech, Mr. Speaker, I would like to start by commending the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) for his dedication and commitment to the case of Mr. Leonard Peltier.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to commend the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), a former Solicitor General and Minister of Indian Affairs at the time, for having the courage to acknowledge before the House the mistakes that were made by his Government. Mr. Speaker, I think that is a real example of courage and of exceptional dedication to the cause of justice in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to thank all the other Members who supported the motion.

• (1750)

[English]

In supporting this motion I would like not to review the facts, something which has already been ably done by previous speakers, but to examine something of the legal, political and psychological environment that leads us to the motion before us today.

It seems to me that the charges Leonard Peltier fled the United States to escape, the charges which were instanced when he was returned to the United States, courtesy of the Canadian judicial system, arose out of a situation of obvious hazard, a situation that indeed verged on civil war. As my colleague, the Hon. Member of Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner), pointed out and so eloquently described, thus it is ever when an essentially alien system seeks to conquer established forms of political organization by dividing. What happened was obviously the result of the division between the legally established authority supported by the United States Government, however lacking in support among its own people, and those people who held to the traditional, time-honoured and always-existing practices and traditions of Governments and social organizations within society.

The moving of a motion to return Mr. Peltier to Canada is not an attack on the judicial system of our great neighbour to the South, the United States of America. All judicial systems of law enforcement are made up of laws and regulations instituted, interpreted and applied by human beings. We are all fallible. As Martin Luther King said, within the best of us there is some evil and within the worst of us there is some good. In moving this motion, we do not propose that in some way the Canadian judicial system is superior to that of the United States. We simply say from a deep level of understanding that indeed both are capable of error, and that in this case there was a grave error made both in the United States and in Canada.

We have a parallel before us in the case of Donald Marshall, a native Canadian who spent 11 years in prison on a charge of second-degree murder for a crime to which another person later confessed. This should be used as an example of the fact that no one has brought this motion forward from any feeling of superiority. Without being flippant, Mr. Speaker, I would say that you had to be there. It is not possible for any one of us in this Chamber to say that we could understand the emotional, psychological and political climate that led to the invasion of Leonard Peltier's community. Nor could we understand the climate of paranoia which led to the laying of charges and the eventual framing of Leonard Peltier before a Canadian extradition hearing.

As the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) said, this was a case of treaty fraud. In a case of treaty fraud, it behooves us as Members of Parliament to raise the fraud with the other party to the treaty, not in the spirit of retribution or in the spirit of recrimination, but in an attempt to right a wrong that has been done, that if not righted will stand between us as something that would divide these two great peoples.

It is my understanding that Article 9 of the extradition treaty would allow Canada to negotiate through diplomatic channels for the return of Mr. Peltier to Canada for the new extradition hearing which is sought. My friend, the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior said that to say that there is no procedure is no excuse.

After all, international organizations in Canada and the United States have supported Mr. Peltier's efforts for a new trial. The U.S. National Association of Criminal Defence Lawyers, Amnesty International, 55 members of the United States Congress from both Parties, Don Edwards who is the Chairman of the Sub-committee on Constitutional Civil Rights in the United States, the Right Reverend Robert Smith who is Moderator of the United Church, the fourth Bertrand

Russell Tribunal which was held last year in Holland and 74 international religious institutions have been joined by some 20 million signatures sent to the White House in an attempt to seek a new trial for Leonard Peltier.

Let us look into the psychology of relationships between our two countries. Should we pass this motion and should Canada seek the return of Leonard Peltier to Canada from the United States Government? If we are to do it, it would be essentially a gesture of friendship to the United States and a gesture of confidence in the people of the United States. Let us look at the psychology. We all know that at times of great trauma, both individuals and organizations go through phases. There is the phase of denial and there is the reliance on pride, particularly in organizations which are afraid to move until all are ready to move.

Eventually in that cycle of denial there comes a point at which the facts are too persuasive, a point at which the motive of conscience is too powerful for pride to resist any further the pressure of reason. At that point, we can be overwhelmed, we can change and we can begin to seek reconciliation. We can begin to admit that errors have been made in the past and we can begin to start to correct those errors. I deeply believe that that is the case in the matter of Leonard Peltier.

The United States Government has admitted that affidavits used to extradite Mr. Peltier were false. To quote an article in the Yale Law Review written by Mr. Privitera:

> If sovereign nations are to trust one another in carrying out their treaty obligations, there must be an obligation of fair dealing, good faith, and—representations in the tribunals of another sovereign.

He goes on to state:

> Implicit in any workable contract between nations in which they agree to submit evidence in support of probable cause to the courts of either state must be an understanding that the parties will not defraud one another.

Let us as Canadians and Members of this House give the Government of the United States that opportunity.

• (1800)

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary whether it is their intention to allow this motion to come to a vote or to talk it out.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): First, that is not a point of order. Second, this is Private Members' Hour and there are a few other Members who would like to speak. I know that the former Solicitor General, who has been here for many, many years, realizes that this is Private Members' Hour. There are still two or three members who would like to add a few remarks to this very important debate.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I would just ask that government Members keep in mind that if this Bill is to go to a division we have about eight minutes in which to do that. I would hope that at perhaps five after this matter could go to a division. I think it is important.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order. It is debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to say that instead of rising in the House to interrupt me, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) should have risen in the House when he was a Member of the same Cabinet as the Hon. Ron Basford, when the latter, as Minister of Justice and his Liberal Cabinet colleague, ordered the extradition of Mr. Peltier. That is when the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East should have risen in the House, not today. Not now.

Second, I believe his representations would have been far more credible if he had not referred us to a publication entitled: Towards the Remedy for International Extradition by Fraud. Mr. Speaker, the author of this publication is Mr. Peltier's former counsel.

However, I would like to emphasize that I fully understand the motives that led the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) to move this motion, though I do not share his views. Earlier, the Hon. Member for Skeena talked about the legislation and principles that apply to extradition in Canada. I would now like to give a summary of the Peltier extradition case and the examination before the Federal Court of Appeal of the decision of the judge who ordered the extradition.

Mr. Peltier was arrested near Hinton, Alberta, on February 6, 1976, on an arrest warrant issued on January 23, 1976, under Section 10 of the Extradition Act. The warrant was issued as a result of a statement under oath made by a police officer who revealed that in the United States, Leonard Peltier was accused of the following five offences:

November 22, 1972, Milwaukee, Wisconsin—attempted murder; June 26, 1975, near Oglala, South Dakota—murder of special FBI agent Ronald A. Williams; June 26, 1975, near Oglala, South Dakota, murder of special FBI agent Jack R. Coler; November 14, 1975, near Ontario, Oregon—attempted murder; and November 15, 1975, near Nyssa, Oregon, break and enter.

After he was arrested, Leonard Peltier was transferred to Vancouver to wait for the extradition hearing. He was held at the Lower Mainland regional correctional centre under the provisions of the extradition warrant. British Columbia Supreme Court Justice Schultz presided at the extradition hearing from May 3 to May 28, 1976. The decision was rendered on June 18, 1976: Mr. Peltier was declared subject to extradition for four of the five crimes allegedly committed in the United States. The Court found that the evidence on the attempted murder in Oregon, as submitted during the hearings, would not warrant an indictment under Canadian law had the crime been committed in Canada.

In this case, three witnesses were summoned on behalf of the United States and 11 witnesses on behalf of Mr. Peltier, although Mr. Peltier himself did not testify. Further, some 35 affidavits were filed from witnesses for the United States Government, including the two affidavits of February 23 and March 31, 1976, by Myrtle Poor Bear, in which she stated:

1. That she had accompanied Leonard Peltier to the Jumping Bull Hall near Oglala—

[English]

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is a tradition and practice in this House that Members may use notes for reference. The member is reading a speech which was probably prepared by some bureaucrat. The practice is that you have notes and refer to them, but you do not read a speech prepared by some bureaucrat.

• (1805)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) has the floor.

[Translation]

Mr. Fontaine: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. So, to start again:

1. That she had accompanied Leonard Peltier to the Jumping Bull Hall in Oglala, South Dakota, during the first week of May, 1975;

2. That about one week after their arrival, Peltier and a number of other individuals started to plot the murder of all officers of the U.S. Bureau of Indian Affairs or the FBI that might come to the area;

3. That Peltier appeared to be leading the plot;

4. That certain responsibilities were allotted and a detailed escape route established;

5. That, the day before the murder of the FBI officers, Peltier told her the FBI officers would be in the area to serve an arrest warrant and she should prepare to escape after the expected shots took place;

6. That she saw Leonard Peltier fire on men she believed to be FBI officers; and

7. That she saw Peltier again in August, that they referred to the murder of officers and that he told her he had lost his head, had opened fire and shot at them.

The affidavits by Myrtle Poor Bear were not the only evidence introduced during the extradition hearings. Other evidence was submitted confirming Mr. Peltier's guilt, which lead the judge to conclude there was sufficient evidence against Mr. Peltier. The evidence included the gun issued to the murdered FBI officer, Jack Coler, that he carried on duty and which Peltier had in his possession. They included the bullets of a Colt A.R.-15 rifle found in his car and in another vehicle on which Peltier's fingerprints were taken. The Colt A.R.-15 rifle was similar to that used in the murder of both FBI agents. Finally according to the testimony of two eyewitnesses, Peltier had fled the scene of the crime with such a weapon.

On the basis of those pieces of evidence, Justice Schultz concluded in a long written decision that the conclusive evidence warranted the extradition of Peltier on two charges of murder. Moreover, he concluded that other pieces of evidence were sufficient to allow him to include in the extradition order another murder charge and one of a burglary. Nobody has ever suggested that the extradition based on those last two charges were irregular.

Mr. Peltier submitted to the Federal Court of Appeal under Clause 28 of the Federal Court Act a request that the decision rendered by Justice Schultz be repealed. The hearing before the Federal Court of Appeal was held in October, 1976. Previously, Mr. Peltier's lawyer had made an application to obtain the permission to introduce another piece of evidence. That piece of evidence was a third affidavit. This was in fact the first affidavit made by Myrtle Poor Bear on February 19, 1976 which had not been introduced during the extradition hearing held before Justice Schultz in Vancouver. In that affidavit, Myrtle Poor Bear said that she had left the area where the Jumping Bull hall was located the day before the two FBI agents had been shot and had never returned there.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1), this Order is being dropped from the Order Paper.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

CORRECTIONAL SERVICE CANADA—CONTRACT TO SUPERVISE PAROLEES IN TORONTO

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, on February 11 in the House I raised a question of deep concern and frustration to my constituents. It related to a Correctional Service contract with Exodus Link Corporation to provide private parole supervision. I asked the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) to terminate funding to Exodus Link Corporation until a more suitable location had been found outside the boundaries of Parkdale—High Park.

In order to comprehend the full extent of the problem and the reasons for strong and persistent community opposition toward the location of this facility in Parkdale—High Park, it is important to provide some background on the manner in which this issue has been handled.

• (1810)

On September 12, Correctional Service Canada signed a contract with Exodus Link Corporation for the provision of private parole supervision for up to 80 conditionally released offenders. The contract did not specify a location for the attendance centre other than it was to be in Toronto. We were told that Exodus Link then began the search for a location. After investigating several sites, it applied for and received a building permit for 2050 Dundas Street West in Toronto. That action was completed prior to any consultation with the community or its elected representatives.

The choice of 2050 Dundas Street West as a location created significant and justifiable concern when the plan came to light. Had consultations taken place with elected representatives prior to the decision, Exodus Link and Correctional Service Canada would have been advised of the over-saturation of social assistance and rehabilitation facilities in Parkdale—High Park. They would have known of community concerns about the crime rate in Parkdale—High Park. They would have been warned of the negative impact of locating between 50 and 80 convicted criminals in this area. However, by their own admission, Exodus Link officials conceded that the secrecy surrounding the plan was by design in order to prevent any controversial input from the community or its elected representatives. It was a blatant cover-up.

Not only was the project conceived in secrecy and the community kept in the dark, Exodus Link misrepresented important facts when advising Correctional Service of its plans. Exodus Link told Correctional Service officials that there were only 10 halfway houses in Parkdale—High Park. They told CSC that there had been consultation with a community advisory council when in fact no such consultation occurred. No mention was made of the number of group homes, alcohol and drug addiction rehabilitation homes or young offenders and crisis care facilities which are located in the area. The facts confirm the argument put forward by the community that Parkdale—High Park is over-saturated with facilities which draw upon the community and its support systems and cannot provide the very community support and input which is imperative for the Exodus Link project to be successful.

In responding to my question, the Solicitor General advised that he would reduce the number of parolees referred to this location by 40 per cent. This would reduce the number of parolees to 50 from the original number of 80. Who is the Minister kidding? The bottom line is that Exodus Link will cause a substantial influx of convicted criminals into the area on a daily basis. The community does not and will not accept this answer. In his reply the Minister stated that site selection was the responsibility of Exodus Link. The question which begs to be asked is should Exodus Link have been given such responsibility in the first place? Why was Exodus Link allowed to develop the criteria for the facility without guidance and supervision from Correctional Service Canada and without input from community resources?

We cannot expect the community to accept the position that the federal Government did not choose the location and, therefore, is not responsible for the consequences of the decision. What kind of response is this to the community's justifiable concern? Where is the accountability? What happened to responsible decision making? The Minister and Mayor Eggleton have been duly warned that locating Exodus Link in Parkdale-High Park is a time bomb which can result in tragedy and with serious and long term consequences for the community.

Parkdale—High Park residents have made a determined effort to provide a safe and secure environment for themselves and their families. They are willing to accept the responsibilities of good citizens and bear their fair share of safe social assistance projects. In return, they ask to be treated fairly and to be consulted in matters which affect them. In all conscience can the Minister deny that request? Failure to comply with the request of the community can only be interpreted as showing the same contempt for the electorate as that shown by Mayor Eggleton. It is an adoption of the same elitist attitude.

My constituents have made their position abundantly clear. Residents have signed petitions by the thousands and have picketed Exodus Link daily in order to demonstrate the depth of their frustration and anger. To date, the Solicitor General has not acted in any meaningful way to address the community's demands. His April 8 decision to renew the contract which expired on March 31 has escalated the level of frustration within the community. I can assure the Minister that the residents have no intention of abandoning the fight. They are concerned about the quality of life in their neighbourhood. They are fighting for a secure and safe environment, which is essential to ensuring a healthy, normal family life within our community. We are fighting for the life of our neighbourhood.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have this opportunity to respond further on the issue raised by the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park (Mr. Witer). The Hon. Member urges the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) to intercede on behalf of the residents of Parkdale—High Park who object to the presence of the Exodus Link Attendance Centre at 2050 Dundas Street West.

As the Solicitor General has already stated on two occasions in the House, the Correctional Service has no say in the location of halfway houses operated by private agencies. The Correctional Service is responsible for funding agencies capable of providing the required supervision and accommodation to offenders on conditional release. As long as the agency is providing the services in a locale where there is a demonstrated need for them, the choice of location of the halfway house or centre and its relationship with the community are for the agency to determine in consultation with municipal officials and in accordance with local by-laws. This is the salient point in this matter. The responsible authoritative body is the City of Toronto, which has granted the licence to Exodus Link Corporation to operate the centre.

Exodus Link Corporation has co-operated fully with the City of Toronto in meeting its by-laws and has obtained the necessary licence to operate the centre. In fact, the city recently re-examined the centre's permit as a result of local opposition and has maintained its decision. In the meantime Exodus Link officials have continued their efforts to liaise with community members and to reassure them about the presence of the attendance centre.

It is true that members of the community opposed to the centre continue to demand that the centre be put in another ward. However, it is noteworthy that the centre's program is not being challenged.

No one expects the Parkdale residents to adjust overnight to the centre. It is only normal that there are concerns about what the centre will mean to the community. Being mindful of local citizens' concerns and anxieties, the Solicitor General has directed that referrals to the attendance centre by the Correctional Service be reduced by 40 per cent. Moreover, Exodus Link will be monitored closely by the Correctional Service to ensure that the facility is functioning effectively. Further, Correctional Service has agreed to a three-year freeze on any further halfway houses in Ward Two and to follow the guidelines set by the City of Toronto for crisis centres as it has in the past.

Many halfway houses have encountered similar opposition and have come to be accepted when the community found that they posed no threat to it. This was acknowledged in a recent editorial in The Toronto Star and The Toronto Sun, but acceptance takes time to grow and agencies such as Exodus Link deserve a chance to prove themselves to the community.

I am confident that, over time, the attendance centre will become as much a part of the fabric of the neighbourhood as some 180 halfway houses have become in communities all across Canada.

SHIPYARDS—(A) INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT IS DELAYING CONTRACT AWARDS TO THREE QUEBEC SHIPYARDS. (B) INQUIRY WHY CERTAIN WORK HAS NOT YET BEGUN

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight to follow-up on a question which I directed earlier to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté) about the tragic situation which now exists in Quebec shipyards. For over a year now—by the way that the bush league Member from Lévis, who was shouting earlier, has chosen to leave the House instead of defending the interests of his constituents—workers, business managers and communities have been calling for action on the part of this Government to save Quebec shipyards. Each time, instead of a reply all we get is some kind of promise, which is consistent with the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) attitude, nothing but lies and promises never fulfilled.

At the Davie shipyards in Lauzon there are hardly 50 to 100 workers there. People there were told four times by the Regional Industrial Expansion Minister and the bush league Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine), whose picture has been hanged in effigy out there, that the Caribou II ferry would be built for sure. Construction was supposed to start two months ago. Lately, however, people have been told that because Marine Atlantic had changed its plans, Caribou II would only be built in September and October 1987. The 3,000 Davie shipyard workers are not even entitled to unemployment insurance any more. They have to rely on social welfare while the Government, the Hon. Member and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) have one thing in mind: travelling, squandering and patronage.

The same situation prevails at the shipyards in Sorel. Once again, the Conservative Member for that constituency has done sheer nothing. To be honest, I must admit that he had first invited some workers of the CSN, under the presidency of Mr. Lamoureux, to come to Parliament Hill. This Conservative Government once again sent out three or four jumping jacks to greet them and make lots of promises, leading them to believe that they would be given some work, that there existed some plans for them. What happened afterwards? As it turns out, there will be 300 lay-offs at the Sorel shipyard. The Government will have achieved nothing.

What about Vickers, another shipyard in Montreal? The Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers), him again, gobbled all the promises made by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Right now, at this very moment, there is not one single marine worker on site at Vickers. Sad to say, Mr. Speaker, those 5,000 workers and fathers, who learned an honest trade as welders or fitters, will not be able to get new training overnight to enter another labour market. They have commitments, families, children in school. Those heads of families are being humiliated today through lack of planning by the Government, and are reduced to apply for welfare. Some will even be forced to abandon their houses because the fact their spouses are working make them ineligible for welfare benefits.

I am anxious to see what the answer of the Parliamentary Secretary will be. Friday, I went to the Lauzon shipyards. I went there to see for myself what was really going on, not only to hear the recriminations and grumblings. Mr. Speaker, I have pictures here which show the exact location of the drydocks, where there normally would be ships and people working on the cranes we can see. The yards are empty, lifeless. Same thing in the three shipyards. And I ask myself whether the Parliamentary Secretary who answers will say that, yes, the construction of the Caribou will start in May at the Lauzon Davie shipyards, and that 1,000 to 1,200 workers will be called back. The National Defence contract, under the TRUMP program, for the Algonquin and the Iroquois . . . I only have two minutes left, Mr. Speaker . . . Work on these two ships is going to start in the months ahead and we want to be sure that the contracts are given to the Davie shipyard in Lauzon—there will be some subcontracting done by the Vickers shipyard in Montreal—so they can give work to the 2,000 to 2,300 people they normally employ and to the 500 to 600 employed by Vickers in Montreal. We also want the tenders to go out as quickly as possible for the other two ships included in the TRUMP program.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know where the Conservative Members from Quebec are. I do not know for whom they speak, but if you look at all the Quebec tenders, very few succeed. We are always had, we get only crumbs, promises and more promises. Take for example—and I will end on that, Mr. Speaker—the shipyards, the Gulf refinery in Montreal East, the International Banking Centre, the space agency. It is always the same, Mr. Speaker, "nays" or promises.

Now, we want action and I can't wait for the Parliamentary Secretary's answer. When are we going to get jobs for the shipyards in Quebec?

• (1825)

[English]

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the present Government has done very well, given the abominable mess left by the previous administration as a result of several years of massive neglect of the shipbuilding industry throughout Canada.

The issue raised by the Hon. Member is of course a very important one to the Government. Let me summarize the action taken by the Government to ensure the long-term viability of the shipbuilding sector in the Province of Quebec.

As a result of problems experienced by the single largest shipyard owner in Quebec, the Government facilitated the acquisition by Marine Industrie Limitée of the eastern marine assets of Versatile Corporation, thereby ensuring that contracts already awarded to the companies in jeopardy could and would be proceeded with. This action also ensured employment for several thousands of shipyard workers in this very important sector of the Canadian economy.

The Hon. Member will recognize, if he so chooses, that the completion of a transaction of this magnitude by MIL of three large companies from Versatile Corporation, namely, Davie, Vickers, and Systems, is a very complex matter. It required input not only from the commercial sector but also from the Quebec Government and union members themselves. I am happy to say that with the co-operation of all concerned the transaction was completed and an agreement was signed in late January. The new owner can now operate its assets and develop them.

In order to be more specific, let me say that I am happy to report to the Hon. Member that work on Caribou II is now progressing in a normal way. Much of the preparatory work which needs to be undertaken to build a vessel had to be stopped because the former owner of Davie did not have sufficient financial resources to proceed with the work at the time, and the Hon. Member knows that.

Contrary to the Hon. Member's belief, the second vessel being built for Marine Atlantic is not an exact duplicate. Modifications have been made and engineering work is required to effect those changes. Now that the ownership of the yard is on a more solid basis, detailed plans are in fact being prepared, materials for the building of the vessel are being ordered, and some fabrication has been already started in the shops.

Let me assure the Hon. Member that we are doing everything possible to ensure that work on the vessel is reflected on the shop floor. I think the Hon. Member's cause is right and just in that respect. The workers are being recalled and, when the company resumes full operation on the basis of the contracts already signed, it is interesting to note that it should be able to employ some 2,000 workers by late 1988 or early 1989.

BILINGUALISM—PUBLIC SERVICE—COMPLIANCE WITH LINGUISTIC REQUIREMENTS BY DEPUTY MINISTERS. (B) POLICY ENUNCIATION—EFFECT ON PUBLIC SERVICE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, on March 31, the Commissioner of Official Languages tabled his report in the House of Commons. And on April 1, I asked the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) a question about some comments made by the Commissioner who was critical of the apathy and lack of direction on the part of the Government on the subject of official languages. More specifically, I asked him whether or not the Commissioner's criticism of arrangements made by his Department in alleviating linguistic requirements for senior management did not suggest a definite set-back. Mr. Speaker, the question was self-evident since the Commissioner blamed the Government for its inaction and on the same morning, The Globe and Mail reported that the Government has recently allowed Deputy Ministers and senior civil servants to ignore more easily the linguistic requirements of their position.

Now, the President of the Treasury Board looked surprised I had the document at hand, the official document No. 800978-79-80 of the department dated February 20, 1986. Appendix B of that document states that "Treasury Board approval is no longer required concerning the exemption from level B linguistic proficiency in the other official language as far as appointments are concerned in two groups of management executives within a bilingual region".

I will quote the guideline word for word from page 6 of that document:

> i) applications from employees appointed to a bilingual position within the management group (EX) in a bilingual region who request that they be exempted from level B proficiency in the other official language as a condition of employment and, ii) applications for exemption from level B linguistic proficiency requirements concerning appointees at the position of Assistant Deputy Minister (ADM) in the National Capital Region.

And Deputy Ministers were invited to deal directly with the Public Service Commission which, in turn, and I quote: "which, in turn, would report to the Office of the Secretary of the Treasury Board".

Mr. Speaker, to me that looks like a step backward. It looks like the Minister and the Department for which he is responsible have issued definite guidelines to personnel officers, allowing them to deviate from, to water down language requirements, and that worries me. I asked the question because, Mr. Speaker, we all know that when a senior manager, a superintendent or a senior person in charge of a department who is responsible for a number of subordinates does not have the requisite language qualifications, that person cannot converse correctly with the employees in the official language of their choice, their language of work. I will get back to that later, because that is another very important issue and may cause problems in communications between employees and management.

The question today is: Why this retrograde measure? Why these weak guidelines that fail to demand that administrators meet the position's requirements and thus be able to converse with their employees?

Mr. Speaker, this week I found further evidence of this reluctance when reading certain comments by the Public Service Commission on the language of work, and I would like to share with the House what I would call a serious anomaly. In 1985, the Chairman of the Public Service Commission appeared before the Standing Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons. In his brief to the committee, the Chairman at the time Mr. Edgar Gallant submitted, and I am reading from the brief, "the three fundamental objectives of Government policy in the area of official languages in the Public Service: bilingual service to the public, equality of status of both official languages as languages of work—I repeat: "equality of status of both official languages as languages of work"—and finally, "equitable participation by both language groups in the Public Service". I certainly have no quarrel with that!

This year, Mr. Speaker, the present Chairman appeared before the committee, and we read practically the same text, word for word. I quote: "three fundamental objectives of Government policy in the area of official languages in the Public Service: bilingual service to the public, equitable participation by both language groups—those two are the same—the last one, Mr. Speaker, has changed: "respect for both official languages in the job environment". We are no longer talking about equality of status of both official languages as languages of work but about respect for both official languages in the job environment. That is a euphemism, it is ambiguous and it may be a smoke screen. Maybe managers are going to respect the language of their employees, but they will say: Your language does not happen to be mine, and you will just have to speak my language. And there is going to be more trouble, because we have just seen that Treasury Board has reduced language requirements for senior managers. And as I pointed out, the Public Service Commission has changed the Government's guidelines and objectives. It is no longer "equality of status as the language of work" but "respect for both official languages in the job environment". As a mandate and as an objective, Mr. Speaker, it is much weaker.

And I would ask the Parliamentary Secretary to explain why this Government, after promising amendments to the Official Languages Act, after making a formal commitment in two Throne Speeches, and after giving me in this House the assurance that there would be no reluctance to implement the Act, why is this Government issuing directives to senior officials reducing language requirements, and why is this Government, through the Public Service Commission, significantly lowering the commitment that a Canadian citizen working in the Public Service is entitled to use his or her own language at work. This is not only a matter of respect, it is a matter of work equality, it is the right for the individual to use, and it is not I who says that, it is the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, it is the individual's working language that is the decisive factor and that language should prevail.

I am concerned Mr. Speaker, I am asking the Government, I am asking the Parliamentary Secretary to answer, to state clearly that I am mistaken, that the Government has no intention of reducing language requirements, that such a directive from Treasury Board is an error, that they are going to withdraw it, and that on the other hand, they will specifically revert to these goals, serving the public in the customer's language, Canadians working in their own language, and fair representation. This means that all Canadians, whether from the east, the west, the centre, the north or the south would have the right to work for the Canadian Government and in a way that is fair.

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as requested by my hon. friend from Ottawa—Vanier, I am going to tell him that he is wrong, that our Government is more concerned than ever with the language of work of Public Service employees. Some progress is being made, Mr. Speaker. I am aware that my hon. friend from Ottawa—Vanier has worked very hard for this. But may I remind him that when I was elected in September, 1984—I am willing to share my personal experiences with him just as he shares his with me—in spite of the previous Government's good intentions and efforts to implement a bilingual policy such as the one we know today, I very quickly realized that, being a Quebecer representing a nearly 100 per cent Francophone area, that the officials he is referring to and about whom he is concerned most of the time had difficulty speaking both languages.

Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is well aware, nobody is against motherhood. He was referring a while ago to equality. It is true that we are all equal, but there are haves and have-nots. Mr. Speaker, we are 27 million Canadians building a country and of course there are more Anglophones than Francophones. We are working at the problem. I know that the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier in particular is very much involved in this language issue, and I agree with him so does my Government, as well as the President of Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), on the need to protect French as an official language and as a language of work. This has never been challenged, quite the contrary. We saw evidence of that in the position taken by the Prime Minister in Manitoba. We saw evidence of that again recently.

Mr. Speaker, I think that my colleague from Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) knows to what extent we want to be involved. Despite whatever little progress may have been accomplished before and since 1984, despite good faith and what has happened since we took office, surely he will admit that we are more than willing to take part in democratic work with the Public Sercice Commission. In all honesty and while respecting and protecting the rights of anglophones and francophones according to their language of work, I think the Public Service Commission can be given a mandate to monitor the situation. But, Mr. Speaker, he also knows very well that this guideline does not apply to deputy ministers. Sure it applies to assistant deputy ministers, but they will have to take level B equivalence courses, and he is fully aware of that. He also knows that with respect to the linguistic issue, the way he will staunchly defend the cause . . . and he knows that Members from Quebec and Members of this House will also speak up on the language issue—will always ensure that fair balance will prevail, that the situation will gradually improve. The ultimate purpose is to show to all Canadians that we live in a bilingual country, that every individual has the right to services in his own language, the right to work in and expect respect for the language of his choice.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

AIR CANADA

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY—TRIBUTE TO MANAGEMENT AND EMPLOYEES

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, to mark the 50th anniversary of Air Canada, on behalf of the Liberal Party of Canada I am pleased to pay tribute to the management and employees of this Crown corporation which, over the years, has gained national and international recognition.

Now that the Conservative Government is on the verge of adopting Bill C-18 which will bring about complete air transport deregulation, it is appropriate to question the wisdom—let alone the need—to privatize Air Canada at this juncture. The Government would be much better advised to convert the Air Canada debt into equity, commit itself to make it easier for the corporation to seek private sector funding to upgrade its aircraft fleet, and abide by the unwritten rule under which Air Canada deserves preferential treatment in the attribution of international and transborder routes, were it only because in many instances Air Canada is the only carrier providing domestic services in the most remote and least profitable regions of Canada.

NATURAL RESOURCES

OTTAWA RIVER—POTENTIAL FOR RECREATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, right here in the National Capital Region and in the area immediately beyond we have a great national asset which has never been given the importance or attention it deserves. I am talking about the majestic Ottawa River which flows for hundreds of miles as a borderline between Ontario and Quebec. It flows from the massive waters of Lake Timiskaming and joins up with the navigable waters of the historic St. Lawrence at Montreal.

• (1105)

The Ottawa River and its many tributaries were the highways for hundreds of fur traders during the formative years of Canadian history.

In today's world this great Ottawa River and its tributaries can become the recreational paradise and the waterway route for small craft navigation for years to come. It can become the answer in part to the economic problems which plague eastern Ontario and western Quebec. We have the imagination and the plans to bring this new development into reality with proper environmental considerations. Now we need the political will to do the job.

The boating industry brings in more than $1 billion a year in taxes alone for provincial and federal Governments. Why can we not reinvest some of this money and create more tax resources for the development of waterways in Canada? Let us be prepared for the leisure world of the 21st century which we created in this century.

AIR CANADA

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF ESTABLISHMENT—TRIBUTE TO WORK OF EMPLOYEES

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission—Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the government side of the House it gives me great pleasure to advise you and the Canadian public that on this date 50 years ago, April 10, 1937, the Trans-Canada Airlines Act was passed in this House. Trans-Canada Airlines later became Air Canada and is today celebrating its 50th anniversary.

This corporation has served our great country and its people with distinction. Over the years it has become one of the world's largest and most respected airlines. I think all Canadians can share with the employees of Air Canada their pride in an airline which is truly recognized around the world for its professionalism and expertise. Mainly, I commend to all Canadians the quality of the service given to us by the crews and the staff of Air Canada.

I ask all Hon. Members to join me in wishing Air Canada a very happy 50th anniversary.

INCOME TAX

BENEFICIARIES OF CAPITAL GAINS TAX EXEMPTION

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the New Democratic tax probe revealed that since the Government virtually eliminated capital gains taxes in 1985 the chief beneficiaries have been the 1 per cent of tax filers earning over $50,000. Fifty-seven per cent were wealthy investors.

Wealthy investors who earn over $250,000 will receive, on average, a tax break of $28,700, $8,700 more than the average Canadian earns in a year. Only 8 per cent of those using the capital gains exemption were farmers. By 1990 $5.6 billion will have been lost to the federal Treasury because of this Tory tax boondoggle.

A fair and progressive tax system, as advocated by the New Democrats, would allow farmers, small businessmen and home owners an exemption on capital gains at little cost to the Treasury. However, farmers, small businessmen and home owners were not the people the Tories had in mind when they introduced their $500,000 capital gains exemption. The Tories, as usual, had their relatives and Bay Street friends in mind.

I call upon the Minister to bring in a more realistic capital gains tax exemption plan when he reforms the tax system this spring.

AIR CANADA

TRIBUTE ON OCCASION OF FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF CORPORATION

Mr. Darryl L. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to recall that on April 10, 1937, Parliament passed the Trans-Canada Airlines Act. Subsequently re-christened Air Canada, our national carrier is celebrating its 50th anniversary today.

The corporation has served the country and Canadians with distinction, becoming over the years one of the largest and most respected airlines in the world.

I think all Canadians will share the pride Air Canada personnel feel in an airline famous the world over for its professionalism and its technical excellence.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask all Members here in the House to join me in wishing Air Canada a happy 50th birthday and a very successful future.

INTERNATIONAL YEAR OF SHELTER FOR THE HOMELESS

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE—CANADIAN ROLE AND EXPERIENCE

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, in order to focus attention on the quarter of the world's population that does not have adequate shelter the United Nations has declared 1987 to be the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless.

Canada is helping to fund an international conference of some 100 countries to be held in Ottawa this September and will be providing financial support to 35 demonstration projects in developing countries to improve housing conditions. At home, CMHC and provincial authorities will fund the construction and rehabilitation of 45,000 housing units for needy Canadians.

VIA RAIL

REPLACEMENT OF ROLLING STOCK

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in the House I questioned the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) about the Government's decision to abandon yet another of its campaign promises, this one to replace the antiquated rolling stock of VIA Rail with new cars which would be built jointly by Can-Car Rail of Thunder Bay and Bombardier of Montreal.

While the Minister refused to confirm reports that the Government will go shopping for second-hand cars in the United States instead of building our own cars, his tone was clear that the Government just does not want to spend the money.

This incredibly short-sighted decision is made in spite of the knowledge that it will cost over a thousand jobs for Canadian men and women in Montreal and Thunder Bay, and that it is not going to save any money in the long run anyway.

There is an alternative. Instead of buying second-hand U.S. cars, why not enter into an agreement with Can-Car and Bombardier that, if those companies build the cars in Canada, the Government will agree to lease them on behalf of VIA for 15 to 20 years? This will avoid the massive lay out of funds that the Government is afraid of, and will also save the hundreds of jobs about which I am concerned for Canadian men and women. It is worth considering.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

CALL FOR ENTRENCHMENT OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, I want to support the Private Members' motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges) that would entrench the rights of the unborn in our Charter of Rights.

About two weeks ago some Members of Parliament and the public viewed a film in Room 200 of the West Block. It was on the subject of abortion. In this documentary film a camera probe was inserted into the mother's womb and took pictures of the unborn baby while it moved. Then we saw the surgeon insert into the woman's body forceps which crushed the baby's head and then pulled the baby apart, limb by limb, and pulled the parts out of the woman's body.

It is shocking to realize that babies are being murdered. Members should realize that this is not only happening in the first trimester, but in the third trimester as well, which means that after seven or eight months a baby in its mother's womb can be aborted. That is certainly murder, and I want to reiterate my support of the Private Member's motion by the Member for Grey Simcoe, that babies' rights be entrenched in the Charter of Rights.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT STATISTICS—CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, the latest unemployment figures are out and, once again, they are not encouraging. Almost 1.4 million Canadians are unable to find jobs.

Ontario again has the lowest unemployment figures, with an unemployment rate of less than 7 per cent, while in Newfoundland it is over 20 per cent.

The Government's job-creation policies are not working. Premier Peterson's Government of Ontario has created hundreds of thousands of jobs over the last two years with good Liberal policy initiatives. I ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to seek an immediate meeting with Premier Peterson to have a briefing on how to get the economy going and how to create jobs by adapting those policies of Mr. Peterson on a national basis.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

POINT LEPREAU II PROJECT—SUGGESTED POSTPONEMENT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic Party inquiry into the future of the nuclear industry was in New Brunswick last week. We visited the Point Lepreau nuclear facility and heard from a number of people in Fredericton.

Premier Hatfield of New Brunswick is saying that he is cutting a deal with Ottawa to finance Point Lepreau II, a 300 megawatt reactor, with federal loan guarantees of up to $2 billion.

The lobby behind this project is by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, which is desperate for new projects, and by a provincial Premier who is desperately trying to get re-elected.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse), whom I questioned in committee yesterday, knows very little about any deal, so Premier Hatfield is really misleading his people in New Brunswick.

There should be no nuclear reactors constructed in this post-Chernobyl period, at least until safety, monitoring, and waste disposal problems are solved, and maybe not even then.

• (1115)

We heard from the wood-lot owners of New Brunswick who told us of the immense biomass potential, the potential for jobs in New Brunswick. The Minister should look at this possible future option. There are 21 plants manufacturing biomass in Maine and making energy from it. I ask the Minister to look at this project before going ahead with any financial guarantees for Lepreau II.

MULTICULTURALISM

CALL FOR STRENGTHENING OF POLICY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the Government seems prepared to proceed with amendments to the Canadian Citizenship Act incorporating our multicultural reality but which would exclude a separate Multiculturalism Act. This initiative is ill conceived and completely out of step with the aspirations of Canada's ethnocultural communities.

The previous Liberal Government introduced legislation creating a distinct Multiculturalism Act which, unfortunately, died on the Order Paper. Subsequently two former Conservative Ministers for Multiculturalism carried on this Liberal initiative and consulted extensively with organizations across the country. The third Conservative Minister for Multiculturalism (Mr. Crombie) is now prepared to turn the clock back. I urge him to recognize that Canada's multicultural policy requires a strengthening of its legislative foundation.

The structures underpinning bilingualism and multiculturalism, which were born from the same B and B Commission, have taken very different paths. It is crucial that strides toward rectifying this be undertaken now.

Minor amendments will not do. There is only one type of citizenship in this country and that is first-class citizenship for one and all.

CANADA WINTER GAMES

TRIBUTE TO CAPE BRETON VOLUNTEER WORKERS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I want to salute thousands of volunteers who lent their time and energy to the 1987 Canada Winter Games in Cape Breton, Nova Scotia. More than 6,000 people volunteered their services in a great variety of ways. They provided first aid to the athletes, assisted the media, provided back-up support to the many performing artists, and their warm hospitality extended not only to athletes but, indeed, to all visitors.

The efforts of these people were a vital part of the success of the Games which most observers agreed were the very best. All Cape Bretoners ought to take pride in the success of the Games. From the time the athletes arrived to the moment the flame was extinguished, all events associated with the Games proceeded flawlessly.

All Canadians and all Members of the House would, I am sure, want to join with me in saluting the efforts of the people of Cape Breton in making the 1987 Canada Winter Games such a significant success. Congratulations, volunteers, for a job well done.

MANITOBA SUGAR COMPANY PLANT CLOSING—EFFECT ON FARMERS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, today the Manitoba Sugar Company announced the closure of its Winnipeg plant and the lay-off of 73 employees by July 10. Sugar beets will not be contracted in Manitoba this year. The industry will lie dormant due to the deception of the federal Government and the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board who promised on May 2, 1985, that: "The federal Government will not require any further financial participation by the Manitoba Government beyond the 1985 crop year". Manitoba provided $2.8 million that year. Alberta planted no beets.

The Minister now says there is no agricultural stabilization plan for beet producers except a tripartite proposal. The Government continues to provide full funding under the Agricultural Stabilization Act for eastern farmers. It is also fully funding the five-year dairy program. But it cannot live up to this commitment to Manitoba farmers. No wonder Canadian farmers are displeased with the Government. It is playing political games with their future.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

CONTRACT WITH MR. PÉLOQUIN—QUERY WHETHER GOVERNMENT PREPARED TO DEMAND PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services and again concerns the role played by Mr. Jean Péloquin in awarding certain advertising contracts. I finally received a copy of Mr. Péloquin's contract, and I want to thank the Minister for sending it to me yesterday and for reversing the decision of those persons who had turned down my initial request. Incidentally, I hope the Minister of Public Works will do the same for the contracts for Place Vincent-Massey.

I would like to ask the Minister, since article 19 of the contract signed by Mr. Péloquin with the Government says clearly that the entrepreneur should have no pecuniary interests that might influence him in making his decisions, whether in the light of these facts, she is now prepared to demand a public inquiry so that all Canadians will know exactly what happened?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, this week I said time and time again in the House that following allegations that were made about Mr. Péloquin's behaviour, I asked for legal advice. I received that advice yesterday from my legal adviser who is recommending, first of all, that we order an internal audit of the activities of the Advertising Management Group and second, I asked the Department's security service to investigate the allegations. My Department's security service will therefore have full authority to do whatever is necessary to shed light on the present situation.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I may remind the Minister that it seems even this group will have no official investigating powers. We have just gone from one level to another level in the same department.

• (1120)

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): What we are talking about here is not an everyday contract. We are talking about a contract to provide advice to the Tory Government in relation to selecting which Tory firm is to be rewarded by Tories.

In view of this type of politically-charged atmosphere in which these incidents are happening, will the Minister not do the right thing and call for a full public inquiry concerning the Péloquin affair?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I intend to act on the advice I received from my legal adviser, and an audit will be made by the security committee within the Department.

Mr. Speaker, I may add that I think it is pretty scandalous I should be asked such questions this morning, especially by a Member who belongs to a party that shared this patronage concept when it awarded all its advertising contracts on the basis of a phone call to their friends.

[English]

EMPLOYMENT OF MR. PÉLOQUIN

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Minister says that she is scandalized. With the way her Government is performing, she should be scandalized.

Yesterday the Minister said in the House: "That contract ended on March 31st . . . Mr. Péloquin no longer works in my" office.

In view of the fact that as late as Wednesday of this week members of her staff in her Department were still answering phone calls claiming that Mr. Péloquin was only out for the day or out momentarily, why are they still answering as if this person were still working there? Is he or is he not working there? If he is not working there, is he a volunteer? What is he doing in that office?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Péloquin ceased to work for my Department on March 31 this year. He is no longer working with our advertising group.

We have put in place an effective system and effective working methods, and I want the House to know that as the Minister reponsible for this system, I will never let anyone tarnish its success, be they Liberals, Conservatives or members of the NDP.

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES CANADA

CONSTRUCTION OF PRISON IN PORT-CARTIER—CANCELLATION OF OTHER CAPITAL PROJECTS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question concerns the Prime Minister's misguided exercise in pork-barrel politics, that is, his $68 million prison in his own riding. We now know how the Prime Minister intends to pay for the prison in Port-Cartier.

According to information I received yesterday from Correctional Services Canada the Government has cancelled 25 much needed capital projects in the correctional services. Ten of these projects were scheduled for western Canada. Is it any wonder that the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona and westerners generally are as mad as hell at the Government? I would now like to put my question to the Government.

How can it explain the cancellation of these 25 capital projects? Will the Government not admit that the Prime Minister's prison in Port-Cartier is being built at the expense of jobs and correctional facilities in western Canada?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I find it quite amazing—

Mr. St. Germain: Sickening!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —my colleague says "sickening"—that members of the Liberal Party are so much against making progress on the North Shore of Quebec—

Mr. Riis: At the expense of western Canada.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —that they would constantly criticize this excellent facility that will be built for the benefit of people in that region in terms of economic development. There is no linkage at all with respect to the program going on in the Solicitor General's Department. The basis on which the Hon. Member puts his question is erroneous, false, mischievous, and quite out of order.

• (1125)

Mr. Speaker: I know Hon. Members would want me to comment first that it is for the Chair to decide what is out of order.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I think Hon. Members would also want me to remind the House that the Hon. Member had a very lengthy preamble. I am conscious of the fact that the Hon. Member for York South—Weston is the second lead questioner for the Official Opposition, but I would expect the Hon. Member to make his preamble and question short.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, as a western Canadian the Justice Minister ought to hang his head in shame for not standing up and fighting for western Canada.

CANCELLATION OF EXPANSION OF EDMONTON INSTITUTION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Government to explain why a $50 million capital project in Edmonton, the expansion of the Edmonton institution, was cancelled. Can the Minister explain why this much needed expansion in western Canada which would have created jobs for western Canadians was cancelled in order for the Prime Minister to build a prison in his riding?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, not only am I proud to represent western Canada in this Cabinet but I would suggest that, if the Hon. Member ever gets a chance to get out to western Canada, he should check his facts. Any suggestion of any linkage between these two projects, without infringing in any way on your consideration of the rules of the House, Mr. Speaker, is not necessarily out of order but is certainly mischievous, wrong, and false.

PROPOSED CANADA OPPORTUNITY DEVELOPMENT BOARD

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Member for Yellowhead, the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He will know full well how serious the economic situation is in western Canada, particularly in Alberta and British Columbia. He is probably aware that this morning we found out that the unemployment figures in Alberta had remained virtually unchanged and the situation in British Columbia has actually worsened. He will know that westerners do not want special treatment, they simply want fair and equitable treatment, the kind of treatment they are seeing other parts of Canada get.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs knows that three years ago he and his Government promised the development of a Canada Opportunity Development Board to assist community-based economic ventures financially particularly in western Canada. Will the Secretary of State explain why absolutely no action has been taken on this promise made three years ago? If there is to be action, when will it take place?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the House Leader for the New Democratic Party, unless his status has been changed by a recent telephone call, will know from his close association with the former Liberal Government that there has been a dramatic change in the degree of attention given to western economic priorities as a result of the election of a Progressive Conservative national Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The National Energy Program is gone, the Foreign Investment Review Agency is gone, the deficit is going down, and issue after issue raised by western Canadians, whether aid to the farmers, aid to the energy industry, or aid to other sectors of the western Canadian economy, were all undertakings given by the Government on the way to office in September of 1984, and delivery has begun in spades in western Canada.

WESTERN ECONOMIC DIVERSIFICATION STRATEGY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State has outlined a whole number of policy areas that might have gone. I want to remind him that the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona is also gone from his caucus. The one Member of Parliament from the Province of Alberta who has spoken out on behalf of Albertans has been kicked out of the caucus. That is not the kind of representation westerners are prepared to accept. My supplementary question is again directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He may think that things have improved in western Canada. I would recommend that he go home to his constituency to take a little tour of Yellowhead and find out what real Albertans are experiencing under this new federal regime.

In the last month the situation in British Columbia has worsened. At a time of year when unemployment would traditionally be going down, it is actually going up.

• (1130)

Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs explain whether or not the Western Economic Diversification Strategy will be applied to that western province? If so, when can we expect an office to be opened? And, if that office is opened, will it have new money, new staff, and new policies, or will it simply be retreaded programs and people?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. for Kamloops—Shuswap should be the last Member to speak to me about Members of Parliament who consider straying from their caucus.

Let me make the point with regard to Yellowhead, if I may, since the question was raised. I was recently in Yellowhead as a result of the Freedom to Move legislation introduced in the House of Commons by the Government. As a result of that legislative initiative there has been a significant plant expansion in Hinton. There will be other developments if that legislation passes through the House of Commons.

However, we notice that that legislation to bring an end to historic prejudice against western Canada is being opposed in Parliament by an unholy alliance of the NDP and the CPR.

Mr. Riis: The responses of the Secretary of State for External Affairs get sillier by the bloody day. The people of Alberta—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: If I were a Member of Parliament from Alberta I would be standing up and doing something for Alberta as opposed to cheap shots during Question Period.

Stand up for your province, stand up for the people of Alberta. Do something instead of kicking one of your colleagues.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps Hon. Members would give courtesy to the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap who, I know, will put his question.

Mr. Andre: He has given speeches so far.

Mr. Riis: You are a little touchy this morning Harvie; I understand why.

COMPREHENSIVE ENERGY PROGRAM

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. We have been hearing about a comprehensive energy program for many months now. We have been seeing dribs and drabs coming in, with a little program announced here and another little program announced there.

Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs be specific to the Province of Alberta, particularly, and explain when his Government plans to announce a comprehensive energy program, so that Albertans will be able to plan their future and get on with developing the economics out there they wish to develop?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member began his question he said that nothing had been done. Now he concedes that the PGRT is gone. The National Energy Program is gone. Recently there has been a $350 million to $400 million program of support to drilling and service industries—

Mr. Riis: Unemployment is 13 per cent in Edmonton today. Do you agree with that? You created it.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): He quotes the unemployment statistics in Alberta now. It is precisely because there have been those serious economic problems in western Canada that the Government has reversed the policies of the Trudeau-NDP alliance, policies which were dragging down the economy of western Canada, and has brought in a series of changes that are bringing and will continue to bring real benefits to that region.

Mr. Riis: Go to Yellowhead and say that.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Papineau.

Mr. Ouellet: The vigour of the Minister makes us all realize that they are in deep trouble in western Canada.

AIRPORTS

TORONTO ISLAND AIRPORT—FIRE SAFETY RULES

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my questions are for the invisible Minister of Transport or whatever Minister wants to do the job which it seems the Minister does not want to do.

After all the promises by the Prime Minister, the Deputy Prime Minister, and the Minister of Transport that the Government would not compromise at all—they told us that there would be no compromise—on safety at airports, how can the Government explain that the Toronto Island Airport does not meet the fire safety rules?

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I rise for the first time in the House as a Parliamentary Secretary.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thacker: I should like to thank my colleague opposite for his question, which I am sure he intended to be a tough one. He also knows—

Mr. Speaker: I notice that the usual courtesies have been extended to the Hon. Member as a new Parliamentary Secretary, and I notice that the announcement was made with some friendly and warm applause.

Of course the obligation on the part of the Parliamentary Secretary now is to give an answer, and we will see whether there is the same reaction.

Mr. Thacker: I thought, Mr. Speaker, that you would be generous on the first question.

I assure my colleague opposite that safety is first and foremost. In fact, under the National Transportation Act, which is in the process of being passed through committee clause by clause, and in which my friend opposite is playing a very constructive role, safety is the number one factor in respect of the Toronto airport. That will always be the case. It is being examined closely. There is a process for upgrading fire protection if, as, and when it is needed.

Mr. Ouellet: Indeed I appreciate and thank the Parliamentary Secretary for his answer. However, I think words are not enough; action is needed.

REQUEST FOR REDESIGN OF AIRPORT

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, because of the fact that this is one of the busiest airports in Canada, will the Government immediately redesign the airport to make it a category five facility, and will the Government assume the cost of the appropriate fire equipment needed there, right now?

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, that whole question is being looked at very closely at the moment. There is a report in the works, and I am sure that its conclusions will be out momentarily.

INDUSTRY

PLANT CLOSURES IN MANITOBA

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Secretary of State for External Affairs who was recently in western Canada.

He just returned from Manitoba and knows that Canada Packers has closed the doors of one part of its operations, laying off 300 people yesterday. He also knows that 300 more people in that operation will lose their jobs next year. He should know that the Manitoba Sugar Company announced today that it would be closing its operations this summer.

What is the Government doing for those affected workers and, just as important, what it is doing for farmers who depend upon those plants in Manitoba?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have just returned from Manitoba and had the opportunity to meet with a range of individuals, including the Canadian Grains Council.

In respect of the specific question, I will have to take it as notice on behalf of the relevant Minister and will ensure that an answer is provided next week.

I can say that among the facts brought to my attention when I was in Manitoba was that over 80 per cent of Manitoba's exports are to the United States. Consequently, the present situation of protectionism in that country, which puts both tariff and non-tariff barriers in the path of Manitoba exports, creates a very real and continuing threat to the economic vitality of the Province of Manitoba.

One of the reasons the Government is prepared to undertake a comprehensive trade negotiation with the United States is to try to bring some kind of benefit and job security to the people of Manitoba and the rest of the country.

Mr. Murphy: That may be the statement the Minister wanted to make, but it has nothing to do with the two industries about which I am talking. The beef packing and sugar industries are internal industries. We are losing our jobs in Manitoba, and I wish there was somebody in that Government who could answer these questions today. Apparently there is no one over there who can do that.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Ask the provincial Government. It has a responsibility.

Mr. Murphy: The Manitoba Government is doing damn good for the people of Manitoba. We want something from the feds.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask Hon. Members, because there have now been two inadvertent slips in the use of language which is perhaps not suitable for this place, to be careful.

I know Ministers are very anxious to answer questions, but perhaps they could wait until they have actually been asked a question.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I take back the word "damn" from my comments but not from my thoughts.

TELEPHONE CALLS SUPPORTING MEMBER FOR EDMONTON—STRATHCONA

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. To whom should we refer the calls we are receiving supporting the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona? To whom should we refer them in the Government?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if there are questions which are genuine questions respecting the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona—and I took a number of them on the Warren radio show in Manitoba the other day—I am prepared to take more. If the Hon. Member wants to direct those to me, he can certainly do that. Let me also say, since we are speaking of telephones, that if he has any difficulty getting in touch with his Leader, we can perhaps help him in that way as well.

PRIVATIZATION

BOEING'S ACQUISITION OF DE HAVILLAND CORPORATION—TERMS OF AGREEMENT

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I would put my question to whomever is answering for the Minister responsible for privatization. It concerns the compensation that the Boeing Company is reportedly asking for de Havilland. Under the agreement with Boeing, the Government agreed to contribute 35 per cent of the cost of modifications to production facilities and equipment to a maximum of $8.75 million. Can the Minister confirm whether the compensation Boeing is now asking is provided for in the agreement between the Government and Boeing, and that such compensation does not exceed the agreement or the maximum amount set out in that agreement?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that is a very detailed and specific question. The Minister responsible for privatization is unavoidably not in the House. I will have to take the question as notice, and either that Minister or another of the Government will try to get back to the Hon. Member as soon as we can.

REPORTED DEMANDS MADE BY BOEING

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I would advise the Minister that the Chairman of Boeing told the House Committee on Regional Development that a team of 12 experts from that company conducted an exhaustive six-month study of all facets of the de Havilland operation. They found a company that has "fine products, impressive managerial design and production skills and experience and adequate facilities". They acknowledged, however, that considerable investments would be required to bring the company up to Boeing standards and indicated that Boeing was prepared to make those investments. In the light of the testimony of the Chairman of Boeing Canada to the parliamentary committee, how can Boeing make these demands today?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the original question had to do with whether or not demands were made and whether or not those are consistent with the original undertaking. I indicated to the Hon. Member that since that was a detailed question of which no notice had been received and the Minister is absent, I will have to take it as notice. His second question was contingent upon the first. I cannot make reference to representations that have not been confirmed.

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE

REFUSAL OF INFORMATION CONCERNING FORMER AMBASSADOR TO EGYPT

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns one of his former employees of that Department, Herbert Norman, who was Ambassador to Cairo and who committed suicide in 1956. The federal Information Commissioner is taking the Canadian Security Intelligence Agency to court because the Government does not want to reveal information in the spirit of freedom of information. Could the Secretary of State reveal what is behind the cover-up? Why is Canada still protecting a former mole of the Soviet KGB? Could the Secretary of State for External Affairs answer that question please?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are talking here about the case of a man who died more than 30 years ago and about allegations that trace back at least five decades. The question is about information that might have been made available.

Speaking for my Department, which is the Department which employed Mr. Norman and which he served, all of the information that is allowed to be permitted under the Privacy and Freedom of Information legislation was made available to various authors who were conducting investigations. There are no skeletons left in that closet. I would suggest that the Hon. Member not pursue skeletons that do not exist. I would also suggest that he repeat his own observation in the prelude to his question that there are legal remedies that can be pursued by the Privacy Commissioner or by the Access to Information Commissioner. If those are being pursued, they will be respected and honoured. Otherwise I think it would be unnecessary and unworthy to raise 30 year-old questions here in this House.

AIRPORTS

MANAGEMENT FRAMEWORK INITIATIVE—ROLE OF LOCAL MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs in his capacity as Acting Prime Minister regarding government policy. The Minister of Transport announced yesterday policy regarding the transferring of Canadian airports to municipalities. The Minister will be aware that the only airports any municipality in its right mind would consider taking over are the ones making a profit.

In British Columbia the profit from Vancouver Airport in effect pays for the losses of all the other airports in B.C. Is it the intent of his Government's policy in getting rid of these profitable airports that the taxpayers will have to pick up the tab for the remainder?

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): There is no such intention at all, Mr. Speaker. The policy is a good policy that, on a voluntary basis, permits local municipalities, regions and commissions to take over the management or indeed possibly the ownership of an airport and apply the local energy and initiative from a region to make an airport profitable. Compare that to the NDP philosophy which would be to keep control in Ottawa, guaranteeing a drain on the taxpayer.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, someone called that a national airport system.

If the Government is not going to pass on the 10 per cent airport transportation tax to any airports that municipalities take over, how does the Government expect those airports to make money? By taking up a silver collection perhaps?

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): No, quite the opposite, Mr. Speaker. For example, at the airport with which I am familiar in Lethbridge, an enormous number of hangars are sitting there. They could be used. With local initiative and enterprise that airport could be turned around and could be making income tax money for us here in Parliament to redistribute to the people in the country who really need it.

CRIMINAL CODE

MANDATORY IMPRISONMENT FOR SECOND DRUNK DRIVING CONVICTIONS—EFFECT OF SUPREME COURT DECISION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. It has to do with the Supreme Court of Canada's decision not to hear an appeal which, in effect, has invalidated mandatory incarceration for a second drunk driving conviction. I would remind the Minister that when Parliament introduced that provision it had very great public support. Is the Minister of Justice prepared to introduce an amendment to the Criminal Code to correct the technicality which resulted in the invalidation of mandatory incarceration for a second conviction?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question. As he knows, the matter is going to receive a review. I will have an opportunity to discuss this and other matters with my provincial colleagues involved in the administration of justice at a meeting which will take place at the end of May. At that time I hope we can work together in terms of having an appropriate balance in this important question.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): That is disappointing, Mr. Speaker. Does the Minister of Justice still have the conviction—and is it still the firm policy of the Government, a policy with which the whole of this Parliament agreed—that there should be mandatory incarceration on a second conviction for drunk driving?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, this Government has brought in legislation which has done more in terms of the Criminal Code provisions concerning drinking and driving. Our commitment is beyond question. The whole point of this endeavour is to make sure in a co-operative effort that we can move forward. I have involved myself in consultation with my provincial counterparts so as to get the benefit of their points of view. I intend to carry on consultation. We will act decisively once that consultation has been completed.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

HARBOURFRONT—CONSTRUCTION OF HIGH-RISE BUILDINGS ON TORONTO WATERFRONT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. I have a question for him about eastern Canada. As the Minister knows, Harbourfront, which is a Crown corporation managing Toronto's waterfront, made a dozen secret deals allowing developers, such as Huang and Danczkay, to build high-rise towers that violate City of Toronto by-laws for Harbourfront. Does the Government of Canada intend to order a public inquiry into such mismanagement of a Crown corporation?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, at last reading of my geography book, the Hon. Member is referring to central Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: As we say in Saskatoon, the Hon. Member represents a central Canadian riding. Having said that, I do not accept the premise of the Member's question. Given the allegations made by the Hon. Member, I think the matter is the responsibility of the provincial Attorney General. However, I will give consideration to his representations.

• (1150)

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I accept the Hon. Minister's preference for his own geographical language which differs from a former Premier of Alberta who proposed to let those eastern so-and-sos, including Ontario, freeze.

My supplementary concerns the same project in Toronto. One of the buildings being constructed by Huang and Danczkay will bring no revenue to Harbourfront for 10 years. Yet all the non-profit projects were required to pay right from the beginning. Does the Minister not consider that such gross favouritism and discrimination by a federal Crown corporation deserves a very thorough public inquiry?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I reiterate if the Hon. Member has any proof of any wrongdoing then he should report it to the appropriate authorities rather than standing up in this House and grandstanding with allegations he is not prepared to turn over to the authorities. Our system of justice does not involve making allegations under the protection of the House of Commons and getting publicity for a position which may not be justified in fact. I suggest the Hon. Member respect the traditions of Canadian justice.

YOUTH

DISADVANTAGED YOUTH—TERMINATION OF BRIDGING THE GAP PROGRAM

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Youth. He will know that a program called Bridging the Gap is designed to assist severely disadvantaged youth in Lunenburg and Queens County, Nova Scotia. Can the Minister inform the House why funding for this project has been terminated when the Ministry knew the program did not duplicate any other program from any level of government? Educators, parents of these young people, the private sector, and all three levels of government, including the regional office of CEIC, were in favour of continued funding for this most important project.

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for South Shore also made representations concerning this program.

The information I have this morning is that the program was not continued because there was apparently some element of duplication. As the Hon. Member knows, if we had enough resources we would continue a lot more of these programs. The fact is that half of all funding in CEIC for employment programs goes to young people. If we can avoid some duplication and get more for our money we try to do it.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERVENE

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the Minister will know that his Department requested that this organization select a consultant to examine the operations of the program and make recommendations to the federal Government. That consultant recommended the continued funding of the project. He said in part: "In discussions with more than 100 persons only three negative comments were elicited and these were directed not at the Bridging the Gap program, nor its philosophy or staff, but a member of the board of directors."

I ask the Minister respectfully, on behalf of those severely disadvantaged youth in Lunenberg and Queens County, to commission a report or discussion with that group so that the funding can be continued and the objectives of the program can be achieved. Can I have that undertaking?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I will take the Hon. Member's comments as being representations. I think he will find on this side of the House we recognize the fact there are a lot of programs, in fact a great deal of them, that we would like to pursue. Half of our resources always go, at least with this Government, to youth employment programs. We intend to pursue that policy, so I will take his comments as representations.

CANADA LUTHERAN MAGAZINE—DENIAL OF SECOND-CLASS MAILING PRIVILEGES

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister in charge of the Post Office. As he might be aware, earlier this year I raised the concerns of various trade and religious magazines, such as Beef in B.C. and Canada Lutheran which were being denied second-class mailing privileges. The Post Office then suggested to Canada Lutheran that it reapply for second-class mailing privileges. They were also led to understand that some decision would be forthcoming about the beginning or middle of March.

Can the Minister inform us whether his Department is prepared to give second-class mailing privileges to Canada Lutheran?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not current with that particular application but I will become current. Just by way of correction, it is not my Department. It is an independent Crown corporation. However, I will inquire as to the status of that application.

CONTENT OF RELIGIOUS MAGAZINES

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, the reason why Canada Lutheran was denied second-class mailing privileges was that the Post Office considered it was not religious enough, that it did not have enough religious material.

Obviously there is some question about the way Canada Post decides which religious publication should get second-class mailing privileges and which should not. For example, The United Church Observer and the Presbyterian magazine get second-class mailing privileges but Canada Lutheran has been denied that privilege. I think the Minister would agree that it is not the job of the Post Office to determine what magazine is more religious or which has more religious content than other magazines.

In reviewing the policy will the Minister not straighten out Canada Post so it does not become involved in looking at the content of religious magazines?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Certainly, Mr. Speaker. I should point out in fairness, however, that that really is not the determining factor. It has to do with the extent to which a publication on behalf of any group uses advertising. In other words, where does its funding come from? If it is clearly for charitable purposes, without reliance on advertising revenue, and is of a religious nature, that is one thing and it receives second-class status. I think it was on that point rather than concerning the religious nature of the magazine. However, I hear the Hon. Member's representations and I will certainly transmit them to the Post Office.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MINISTER'S FORTHCOMING VISIT TO WARSAW PACT COUNTRIES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can he confirm that he will shortly be visiting several Warsaw Pact countries, and tell us about his itinerary and the purpose of these visits?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that in early May I will be visiting Hungary, Poland, and East Germany. As the House will know, I had the opportunity two years ago to be the first Canadian Foreign Minister in nearly 12 years to visit the Soviet Union. I have not yet had an opportunity in this capacity to visit eastern Europe. I am interested in doing that, both to advance East-West relations and to pursue some of the important and growing opportunities for commercial relations between Canada and the countries I will be visiting.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

OVERCHARGE ON PURCHASE OF TORPEDOES

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. She may recall that last October I asked a question concerning the possibility that Canada may have been overcharged by as much as $18 million on the purchase of torpedoes manufactured by Honeywell in the U.S. Her answer at that time was that there was "no reason to believe that Canada was overcharged". She went on to say she would not know whether we were overcharged until 1988. It has since been confirmed that Canada has been overcharged.

Why did the Minister deny last October any possibility of having been hoodwinked before she knew all the facts? What is she prepared to do now to assure Canadians that their defence dollars are carefully monitored at all times to prevent this kind of skullduggery, particularly when it involves an overcharge to Canadians of $18 million by the Pentagon?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): A few weeks ago, Mr. Speaker, I was given a progress report on this contract. The Hon. Member is quite right, there is a difference in the two prices. Of course Canada will be credited in the coming months or whenever we make other purchases or sign other contracts. Unfortunately I am still waiting for the final report, but I should think that indeed Canada will be credited for the additional amounts.

PURCHASES MADE BY NATO COUNTRIES THROUGH PENTAGON

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's own officials have informed me that Canada is not entitled to copies of contracts made between the Pentagon and private companies in the United States and, therefore, cannot possibly monitor the process to ensure honesty and fairness on behalf of Canada and other NATO countries.

Does the Minister realize the implications this case has for the hundreds of purchases made by Canada and other NATO countries through the Pentagon? Will she inform this House how she plans, now that the facts are clear, to prevent this from occurring again instead of treating the issue as if the wastage of taxpayers' money is of little importance? There must be a clearly defined pattern through which Canadians in fact know what is going on in the Pentagon if the Pentagon is going to be the agent for purchase from industries in the United States.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I take note of the concern expressed by my colleague and I will ask for a complete report which I will gladly send to the Hon. Member.

PRIVATIZATION

BOEING'S PURCHASE OF DE HAVILLAND CORPORATION—REPORTED REQUEST FOR COMPENSATION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct questions on the de Havilland matter to the Minister of External Affairs who is the Acting Prime Minister today. A headline in the newspaper today reads: "Boeing wants money back on de Havilland". As the Minister knows, the Government of Canada entered into a sweetheart deal in which the taxpayers lost $70 million through the sale of de Havilland to Boeing.

Will the Minister show some western Canadian backbone? Will he stand tall in the saddle and tell this American company that it will not get a penny more of the taxpayers' money and will not be able to renegotiate this deal?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as you know, it has never been my style to engage in gunslinger politics. One of the facts about the de Havilland arrangement is that since it was made some 1,100 new jobs have been created in the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): It may be that members of the New Democratic Party are not interested in job creation. One can certainly conclude that from certain of the questions they have asked and positions they have taken, particularly with regard to the trade initiatives. We are interested in job creation. We are also interested in respecting the letter of contracts which were entered into.

A question which falls within the responsibility of a Minister who is unavoidably absent from the House with respect to the detail of a contract was asked of me earlier today. We will take a look at the detail of the contract and will ensure that what Canada entered into Canada will observe.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, the Minister is right. He is not into the gunslinger pose. As a matter of fact, Mr. Trudeau told me that.

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON CONTRACTS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, is this a pattern? We have seen it across the river in the reopening of the Place Vincent Massey contract. Is the Government prepared, through pressure either from its friends or from foreign companies, to get into the pattern of reopening contracts which it has already signed?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is no.

Allow me to deal with the practice of conversations between members of the New Democratic Party and Mr. Trudeau. That, of course, is not a revelation to us. We know very well about that practice which led to the description of the organic union. It is interesting that those conversations which used to be among Parties are now becoming increasingly difficult, even within the respective Parties. The Leader of the Opposition cannot appear to get agreement from any of his members. The Leader of the New Democratic Party can only speak to his by long distance telephone.

Mr. Speaker: I should advise Hon. Members that there will be a question from the Hon. Member for York West, followed by the last question from the Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

INTERNMENT OF JAPANESE CANADIANS DURING WORLD WAR II—REQUEST FOR COMPREHENSIVE TALKS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. It has been almost three years since the Prime Minister promised that an honourable settlement to the issue of Japanese Canadian redress would be an urgent and important priority of the Government. Yet after three Ministers of Multiculturalism not only is the substance of any agreement nowhere in sight, but a formal process of talks has not even been established.

This lack of commitment to a very clear promise is an affront to the Japanese Canadian community. Therefore, when will the Government initiate a full and formal process of talks—not individual meetings here and there but full comprehensive talks—so that a fair and meaningful settlement will have a chance to come to fruition during the life of this Parliament?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the affront to the Japanese Canadian community was the position taken by the former Prime Minister, the then Leader of his Party, who refused to deal with this question at all. The Hon. Member knows that that matter is being pursued actively by the Secretary of State who will make the appropriate announcements.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, we are talking about a clear promise of the Prime Minister who has had neither the decency nor the respect after three years as Prime Minister to meet even once with the leadership of the National Association of Japanese Canadians.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, since the Government is hesitant about dealing with Japanese Canadian redress, would it not agree to mandate the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism, which has representation from all sides of this House and which, for this issue, could include one or two Members from a Japanese Canadian community, to work on and recommend a settlement which would be honourable to the Japanese Canadian community and do honour to this country?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to get into comparisons of the attitudes which have been taken by Leaders of respective Parties. That is clear and on the record. The Liberal Party refused to recognize that an injustice had been done to which there needed to be a response. This Party and this Government changed that practice. The Secretary of State is pursuing the question and will make appropriate announcements.

WESTERN ECONOMIC DIVERSIFICATION STRATEGY—SCOPE OF APPLICATION

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission—Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs in his capacity as Acting Prime Minister and is really a supplementary question to that posed by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap through which, I believe, he sort of left the misconception, with regard to the western diversification initiative, that not all parts of western Canada would be brought into the process. I would like clarification from the Right Hon. Minister as to whether all of western Canada will be encompassed in this initiative. Can he tell the House at this time when this very important initiative will be brought forward?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, of course the Western Economic Diversification Program will apply to the whole of western Canada including British Columbia. The Deputy Prime Minister is co-ordinating activities on that initiative and will be making an announcement shortly.

One of the fundamental changes which has been brought to the country by the present Government is that it treats the country as a whole, the regions and the provinces, as equals. That is a change from the Liberal-NDP period. That certainly brings benefit to British Columbia and the rest of western Canada.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties as to the business for today. I think you would find unanimous consent for the proposal that immediately after the item of petitions in Routine Proceedings the House would move to Orders of the Day. The Government undertakes to call Bill C-44 and to recall it after the lunch recess. Bill C-44 would be the only item of business called by the Government between the hours of 2 and 4 p.m. At 4 p.m. or earlier, if there is unanimous consent, the House will proceed to Private Members' Hour. That proposition is made with the understanding from my colleagues, the House Leader of the Official Opposition and the House Leader of the New Democratic Party, that we should be able to complete report stage and third reading of Bill C-44 today in order that the other place can deal with this important matter on Monday.

• (1210)

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that there have been consultations between myself and the Deputy House Leader for the Government and what he has said reflects the results of these consultations. We will give consent on the part of the Official Opposition to the proposal he has made.

However, I want to make two points by way of clarification. First, I think it flows from what the Deputy Government House Leader has said that there will be no attempt by the Government to call Bill C-22 or anything connected with it today.

Second, I may be anticipating debate, but I hope the House will consent to allowing the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) to move certain amendments at report stage which are in the name of the Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) who is unable to be here this afternoon.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, we certainly can confirm that there have been discussions between myself and the Parliamentary Secretary, and we are certainly willing to entertain the introduction of amendments by the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) as part of the understanding.

This discussion is a little bit out of the usual this afternoon, but the reason for it is that we oppose the principle and content of Bill C-22 in its present form and plan to do whatever is necessary to stop the imposition of this legislation on the people of Canada. However, when the Government House Leader and, in this case, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) indicated the need to proceed with Bill C-44 on the whole matter of equalization, I pointed out that it was always our intention to co-operate as much as possible to facilitate the expeditious passage of that Bill. We were planning to do that earlier in the week.

Once we have this commitment by the Parliament Secretary that the Government will not try to use some devious route to introduce a form of closure on debate on Bill C-22, we are more than willing and, as a matter of fact, anxious to get on with Bill C-44 and complete all deliberations today.

Mr. Speaker: I take it that the proposition put forward by the Parliamentary Secretary is accepted. I see the Parliamentary Secretary rising. Does he have something further to add?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be appropriate to put on the record that the Government will not deal with Bill C-22 in any way today and that we would be quite prepared to have the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) move any amendments at report stage which are presently on the Order Paper in the name of the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau).

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I am not trying to delay things at all. I am quite happy with the proposal that is put forward. I thought that perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader made a mistake when he said that "we should" be able to complete report stage and third reading". It is our understanding that we will indeed do that in an effort to pass the equalization legislation. I would like to see his government proposal strengthened.

Mr. Lewis: My discussions with the House Leaders of the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party were on the basis of "should". If it becomes "would", I am very content.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the undertaking. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I might point out, especially to Canadians who are watching, that it is, of course, no secret that there have been a number of interesting, brisk, and fascinating events taking place in the House with respect to Bill C-22. That has been going on since November.

However, I think it is also appropriate to point out that on other matters and on other Bills there has been a very considerable degree of co-operation between the Government and the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party. Of course, that is as it should be, because without it this place cannot function. I compliment all Members in that regard.

EFFECT OF FREE TRADE ON AUTO PACT—RETENTION OF SAFEGUARDS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a set of four petitions dealing with the question of the Auto Pact. These four petitions add to the previous petitions on this issue which have come from my constituency.

At this particular stage we have a total of 2,258 additional names of people indicating their severe concern about the thousands of jobs that could be lost to our area and many parts of Canada if the safeguards in the Auto Pact are eliminated. The petitioners pray that the Government will defend these safeguards in any free trade talks and see to it that the Auto Pact is maintained intact.

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of other petitions to present. The first comes from Pickering and Kingston and deals with the question of refugee determination.

The petition stresses the unhappiness of the petitioners with recent government moves which run in the face of the position of our churches across Canada, that refugee determination should be carried out as expeditiously as possible within this country.

The petition concludes that the Government and Parliament should enact legislation to embody a principle of fair and quick oral hearings of refugee claimants before a refugee board, independent of the Immigration Commission. It also calls for universal access to such hearings for every claimant in Canada.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition which comes from the area of Edmonton, Alberta, and expresses the very strong unhappiness of many westerners in that city about Bill C-22, which is attempting to make changes to the patent legislation in this country which, in the opinion of the petitioners, will dramatically increase the level of drug prices in this country both for individuals and provincial Governments.

• (1220)

The petitioners also see this proposed change as an example of Government concessions to the United States in the context of free trade negotiations.

My final petition deals with the same subject but comes in this case from British Columbia. The petition presents as strong a case for this Parliament to listen to the thousands, indeed, close to a million voices which have now been heard on this serious issue.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have eight petitions signed by hundreds of constituents who humbly declare that the monopoly granted to innovative pharmaceutical companies will prevent competition from less expensive generic drugs which, as we know, will result in an increase in drug prices for Canadian consumers and severely restrict the ability of many people to buy necessary prescription drugs. It follows that the proposed amendments to the Patent Act will directly affect all Canadians who are not covered by private or governmental medicare programs, that the Government's proposal will raise the already high costs of provincial health care programs, and that the proposed Bill C-22 amendments to the Patent Act are another good example of the Canadian Government's concession to the United States in the current free trade negotiations, at the expense of ordinary consumers. Wherefor the petitioners humbly call upon Parliament to reject the Bill C-22 proposals which will surely increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty today to present several petitions. The first petition is from residents of my constituency of Spadina. It concerns the subject of unemployment insurance.

The petitioners point out that the report of the Forget commission would end regional benefits and thus take $1 billion in income transfers out of Quebec, $660 million from the Atlantic and $670 million out of the West; it would also cut out Government contributions to unemployment insurance benefits and, all in all, it would reduce the income of unemployed persons to less than $140 a week in many cases.

Therefore the petitioners request Parliament to reject any legislation designed to eliminate federal contributions to the unemployment insurance program or to reduce unemployment insurance benefits to unemployed Canadians.

LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS AT ARMED FORCES BASE AT GOOSE BAY

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): I have another petition from a number of residents of Toronto and municipalities adjoining Toronto. The petition concerns the Canadian Forces Base at Goose Bay, Labrador, and the low level flight training there of pilots of NATO countries. It points out that these training flights not only hurt the local ecology and disrupt the life of the people but are also a provocative and aggressive war fighting action which tends to endanger world peace.

Therefore these petitioners call upon Parliament to ensure that the Prime Minister will end all low level flight training at the Goose Bay Canadian Forces Base and cease negotiations with NATO for the establishment of a larger base there.

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition from more than 100 Canadians from Toronto and adjoining areas in Ontario on the subject of refugees. The petitioners point out that in the past Canada had fairly good standards of refugee status determination but recent strains have broken it down and that the relevant committee of Parliament has proposed a new system which would be quicker and fairer but that the Government has not yet taken action although this has support from the churches, the Canadian Bar Association, the Canadian Jewish Congress and other groups.

Therefore the petitioners call upon the Government and Parliament to enact legislation which will embody the principles of fair and complete oral hearings of claimants before a refugee board, independent of the Immigration Commission, for universal access to such hearings for every claimant in Canada and for a fair chance to arrive in Canada to present this claim.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions to present. The first petition is in regard to the regulations governing the entry of refugees and calls upon Parliament to enact legislation which would allow fair and quick oral hearings for refugee claimants who are trying to enter Canada.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): My second petition is in regard to the change in the Patent Act and calls upon Parliament to reject proposals which would increase the price of prescription drugs for Canadians, particularly senior citizens and those who require those drugs on a continuing basis.

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have four petitions to present today. The first petition is signed on behalf of a number of residents from Rogersville, Ste. Anne, Black River Bridge and so on, in the Province of New Brunswick. The petitioners oppose the proposed changes to the Patent Act and maintain that this will directly increase the cost of prescription drugs in Canada.

I also have another petition on the same subject. It is signed by residents of Sydney, Cape Breton and Glace Bay, Nova Scotia, and Saskatoon, Saskatchewan. The petitioners oppose the proposed changes to the Patent Act and humbly pray and call upon the Parliament of Canada to reject these proposals which will increase the price of prescription drugs for Canadians.

I have another petition from residents of Sydney, Glace Bay, Nova Scotia and the surrounding area. These petitioners also oppose the changes to the Patent Act which are being proposed by the Government in Bill C-22.

My fourth and last petition is signed by residents of Shediac Bridge and the surrounding area, and from Robichaud, New Brunswick. These petitioners also ask the Government not to go ahead with Bill C-22. They call upon Parliament to reject the proposals in Bill C-22 which will increase the price of prescription drugs for Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure and honour to present to the House three petitions signed by a number of Canadians of the Province of Ontario.

[English]

The individuals come from Parry Sound, Burlington, Downsview, St. Catharines, and the surrounding area. These Canadians who signed these petitions are requesting that the Government abandon its course on Bill C-22.

Canadians are questioning the advisability of moving to reform the Patent Act which will have the ultimate effect of increasing prescription drugs for Canadians in need. The petitioners request that the Government recognize the harm that this will create, and that if it is to reform the Patent Act, it do so in a way that the needy and sick will have accessible and affordable drugs in Canada.

REQUEST FOR PROTEST TO EL SALVADOR—MIGUEL RIVAS HERNANDEZ

Mr. Peter Peterson (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition which I have the honour to present on behalf of constituents in Hamilton West and other residents of Hamilton—Wentworth, who humbly pray and call upon Parliament to protest to the Government of El Salvador the disappearance of Mr. Miguel Rivas Hernandez. They demand that our Government stop bilateral aid to El Salvador until arbitrary arrests, disappearances and torture are practised no more by the security forces of that country.

• (1230)

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have a pile of petitions to present today, although none of them are from Edmonton, which in a sense is not surprising. They are from Melfort, Saskatchewan; Lorette, Manitoba; Saskatoon, Saskatchewan; Regina, Saskatchewan; Winnipeg, Manitoba; Pembina; Gimli, Manitoba; New Westminster, Aldergrove, British Columbia; Calgary, Alberta; Langley, Clearbrook, Vetter Crossing, Chilliwack, Mount Lehman, Vancouver, Kelowna, Maple Ridge, Pitt Meadows, and Port Coquitlam, British Columbia; as well as from McBride which is near my own constituency; and from Prince George and Quesnel, British Columbia.

The petitioners from all these communities indicate their displeasure with the Government's proposal to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs which they believe will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy those necessary prescription drugs. They therefore call upon the Government to stop proceeding in this way.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have another short petition to present. It contains a list of individuals from Baie de Verde, Newfoundland. These people are all fishermen. They indicate that fishermen in Newfoundland really do require unemployment insurance benefits to get along for a certain portion of the year. They are concerned about what they perceive to be the Government's plan to implement changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act which would restrict fishermen access to these benefits. Obviously, they are saying that the Government should reject any recommendation from the Forget Commission that would deprive fishermen of their rights.

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege and pleasure to present today two petitions to this honourable House.

The first is signed by the residents of communities such as Toronto, Brampton, Nepean, Willowdale, Thunder Bay, Gloucester, Ottawa, Sudbury, and also residents of Edmonton and Calgary in the Province of Alberta, as well as residents of such picturesque communities as Blezard Valley and Val Caron, who humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that the Government and Parliament enact legislation that will embody the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of refugee claimants before a board independent of the Immigration Commission.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the second petition I have to present is also duly certified and is on a somewhat different topic. It is one that has attracted great attention from all parts of Canada and on which this Party has had great support.

This petition is signed by residents of Calgary, Alberta, who protest the Government's plans to make instant concessions before free trade negotiations are even really under way by allowing the passage of Bill C-22 which will inevitably increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I too have a petition. I noted that the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) had a petition on behalf of fishermen from Newfoundland. My petition is from the other side of the country. It is from Alert Bay, British Columbia, that great little fishing area. Fishermen there petition the Government to ensure that the Minister of Employment (Mr. Bouchard) will reject any recommendation that would deprive fishermen of their right to collect unemployment insurance and to enter into consultations with all representatives of fishermen in order that improvements to the program offered to fishermen are made.

It is a great privilege to present this petition, Mr. Speaker. I know that Your Honour is from Alberta. However, I know that you know about fishing and fishermen. Thus I present my petition on behalf of the fishermen of Alert Bay.

Motions

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions to present, although not as many as yesterday. I have petitions signed by residents of the Province of Newfoundland who are opposed to the proposed amendments to the Patent Act. They believe this is another example of the Canadian Government's concessions to the free trade negotiations with the United States at the expense of everyday Canadians. They call upon Members of Parliament to reject Bill C-22.

I have another petition signed by Canadians from Kemptville, Ontario, who likewise are opposed to the provisions of Bill C-22 which they believe will unfairly raise the price of prescription drugs in this country affecting the poor, the elderly and the disabled.

I have another petition from residents of Victoria, British Columbia, and elsewhere in western Canada, who are also opposed to Bill C-22 because they believe that it will negatively affect Canadians, in particular the elderly, senior citizens and the poor.

I have another petition to present signed by residents of Ottawa who are opposed to Bill C-22. They too wish to call upon the Government to withdraw the Bill because of the negative effects it will have on Canadians, in particular senior citizens, the disabled and the elderly.

My second-to-last petition to be presented this morning is signed by residents of British Columbia who wish to call upon the Government to withdraw Bill C-22. They believe it affects negatively senior citizens and the disabled.

Finally, I have a petition to present signed by residents of the constituency of Cape Breton—East Richmond and such communities as Howie Centre, Coxheath, Henry Street, Whitney Pier, Marion Bridge, Heathview Drive, South Bentic Street in Sydney, Nova Scotia, and a number of other communities in my riding who state that the monopoly granted to innovative pharmaceutical companies will prevent competition from generic companies and will result in an increase of drug costs and prices and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs; and that the proposed changes to the Patent Act are another example of the Canadian Government's concession in the free trade negotiations with the United States at the expense of everyday Canadians.

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I believe I have the honour to present the last petition today. It is from a number of residents of New Brunswick from the communities of Edmundston, St. Basile, Moncton and Francoeur. In this petition the petitioners express their concern with the Government's attempt to pass legislation, in particular Bill C-22, which will increase the cost of prescription drugs. They also state—

[Translation]

That people whose health condition requires the continuous use of prescription drugs will be particularly hard hit by the proposed changes.

[English]

Pardon my French, Mr. Speaker. The petition is signed by a number of people from New Brunswick. I hope that the Government will listen to them.

STRIKING

CONCURRENCE IN NINETEENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, earlier this day I had the honour to present the nineteenth report of the Striking Committee. At that time I failed to ask for unanimous consent for concurrence in this report. I have now made arrangements with the House Leaders of the Opposition and have ascertained that there is unanimous consent. It is a simple change with respect to one person on the committee. Therefore I should like to move concurrence at this time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): As per agreement made earlier this day, the House will now proceed to Orders of the Day.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-44, an Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee, and Motion No. 2 (Mr. Garneau, p. 5017).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When debate ended yesterday the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) had the floor. He still has the floor for one minute if he wishes to carry on.

Mr. Murphy: No, he does not.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) on debate.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak briefly to the motion standing in the name of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau).

This motion would limit the application of Bill C-44 to the year 1990 as opposed to the year 1992. The reason for this is the Government's proposed changes to the taxation system.

• (1240)

For the last two years, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has been promising changes in the taxation system and indeed we understand that a White Paper will be forthcoming shortly. We understand that this will involve very comprehensive tax reform which would affect personal and corporate income tax, that the tax base would be modified and broadened and that some taxpayers would be taken off the tax rolls and a heavier tax burden would be carried by corporations. If and when these changes come into effect, there will be obvious implications for the provinces.

We have also been given to understand that there will be changes to the federal sales tax which could be replaced by a value added or a transaction tax. If that is the case, then the provinces would want to review their own provincial sales tax systems and we would face a very significant change in the taxation arrangements of both the provincial and the federal governments. If that is the case, it would obviously be undesirable to be locked into a five-year commitment on equalization payments.

Therefore, the amendment moved by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides, would strike out line 19 at page 1 of Clause 2 and substitute the words "and ending on March 31, 1990" in place of March 31, 1992. I believe that this is a reasonable amendment. It seems to be a prudent step. I hope the House will consider adopting it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 2 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity) (for Mr. Garneau) moved:

That Bill C-44, be amended in Clause 3 by striking out lines 1 to 21 at page 2.

She said: Mr. Speaker, the object of this amendment is to introduce in the first year the technical changes to the equalization formula rather than to phase them in over two years as proposed by the Bill. In our view, the Government should have introduced changes in the formula to calculate revenue from the first year of the renewal of the arrangements, something which is generally understood to have been promised by the Minister. Instead, the Government is phasing in the introduction of these changes over two years. This means that the provinces will lose $87 million in 1987-88.

Bill C-44 introduces a number of technical changes to the calculations of revenue for purposes of equalization. As I said, however, the changes will not be introduced from the first year but instead phased in over two years. There is a disagreement here. Most people understood that the Minister promised that the change would be introduced in the first year. Therefore, the provinces are unhappy about being deprived of approximately $87 million which they considered was promised to them. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has claimed that he never made such a promise. Obviously, one must accept his word. However, there is a perception that the promise was made.

The perception that the promise was made is based at least in part on some public statements. For instance, in an interview with the Minister which was quoted in The Globe and Mail of November 1, 1986, the Minister was quoted as having said: "We offered $175 million a year in enhancement or almost $1 billion over the next five years".

Furthermore, in a television interview given by the Minister of Finance carried on national television in December of 1986, the Minister said: "I believe that an augmentation of $175 million a year, close to $1 billion over a five-year period, is a very major increase in that program". Those figures were used and the provinces understood that those figures were firm, but now, by changing the formula so that the changes will be introduced over two years, something which was not negotiated with the provinces but simply appeared in the legislation, the provinces will lose about $87 million.

The amendment standing in the name of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), would have the effect of having the technical changes to the equalization formula introduced in the first year, and that is what the provinces understood would happen. I trust Hon. Members will be able to support this motion.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I will speak for only a few minutes on this motion. In seconding the motion, I wished to express the support of the New Democratic Party for this motion. It was an idea that we had also put forward in committee and it is something that we stated at second reading stage.

We believe the Government made a promise to the provinces through the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). The Minister was recorded on the CBC and in the national news as having said that that money would go to the provinces in a one-year period. I believe it is very unfortunate that that offer was withdrawn and that the money will go to the provinces over a two-year period.

I would hope that government Members, in redeeming their word to the provinces, would accept this amendment. I do not expect them to do so, but I hope that that will be the case.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 4 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like the House to know that if we do call in the Members, we will not be able to go on to third reading.

• (1250)

May I call upon the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell) to indicate the exact disposition of the House.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately the Liberals, with the exception of the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), who knew the game plan, came into the Chamber and stood up. Originally they had intended to vote on each of the amendments. However, I think we have unanimous agreement, in order to get the Bill through, to move now to third reading and forgo the votes which were indicated earlier.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I will put the question on both amendments again and hope that I receive the consent of the House.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt Motion No. 2?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the Nays have it.

Motion No. 2 (Mr. Garneau) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it agreed that Motion No. 4 is also defeated on division?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is that so agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 4 (Mr. Garneau) negatived.

Miss MacDonald (for the Minister of Finance) moved that the Bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Miss MacDonald (for the Minister of Finance) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, all Members recognize the importance of the equalization program and the need to renew the program as soon as possible. By renewing the equalization legislation, Parliament will authorize the transfer of an estimated $5.6 billion to the four Atlantic provinces, Quebec, Manitoba, and Saskatchewan this year.

As the House is aware, annual increases in equalization of about $300 million, or over 5 per cent over the next two years, are expected under the Bill. This includes the positive impact of improvements to several of the revenue measures used in the program.

In addition, the Bill contains a net forgiveness provision in respect of the amounts owed by provinces because of census related overpayments over the last two years. This is also of significant benefit to the less wealthy provinces which are anxious to receive the support it provides.

The Bill will also maintain the broad framework of the federal Government's fiscal relations with the provinces by renewing and updating other programs and provisions authorized by the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act.

I want to thank Hon. Members for the constructive and co-operative approach shown in the course of the debate. I should also like to extend my appreciation to colleagues on both sides of the House and those who served on the legislative committee on Bill C-44. I am particularly grateful to the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) for so ably chairing the committee.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-44, an Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977, has four aims.

Its first purpose is to renew for a five-year period the current fiscal arrangements for the equalization program. The amendment which we moved and that has just been defeated would have renewed it for only a three-year period in view of the Government's proposed taxation reforms.

The second purpose of the Bill is to forgive a total of approximately $270 million in federal overpayments over the past two years to the four Atlantic provinces, to Quebec, and to Saskatchewan. The overpayment appeared when the preliminary 1986 census data were released. Since the equalization payment formula is in fact based on population data, adjustments had to be made when the final census results came in.

The third purpose of the Bill is to change the revenues included in the equalization calculation. These changes will be phased in over the next two years. The most significant technical change concerns property taxes. As my colleagues from Quebec have pointed out in the House, there is dissatisfaction with the proposal.

The fourth goal is to end the three-year revenue guarantee which the previous Liberal Government introduced following the 1982 changes to equalization. This revenue guarantee set a floor for payment to the provinces during the first three years following equalization reform, that is, from 1982-83 to 1984-85. However, the Conservative Government has not seen fit to renew this guarantee.

The history of equalization indicates that it has been very important to successive Liberal Governments. It has also been very much a part of our view of nationhood and what holds the country together. In the middle of the 1950s, following a recommendation made by the Rowell-Sirois Royal Commission of Inquiry, the Liberal Government of the day introduced a series of measures in an attempt to improve the balance between Canada's various regions, the principle of equalization. Equalization means enabling each province to offer the people of that province the same number and quality of services. The aim was to give Canadian citizens the same opportunities whether they live in Newfoundland, British Columbia, Manitoba, Alberta, or Quebec. It is a very important part of the Liberal philosophy that Canadians all across the country should have the same equality of opportunity and access to comparable services, whether they live in a rich province or a poorer province.

I might add that after equalization had been in place for a number of years, a study done by the Economic Council of Canada confirmed that equalization payments should not be regarded as a disguised form of welfare, but that the economic value of equalization payments was important for all regions of the country—for the Canadian economy in general, not only for the less prosperous regions.

The legislation which became effective in April 1957, and has been maintained all these years, established a formula. It took the per capita income received by the provinces from various fiscal sources and set a national average, the national average being based upon the income of the richest province or group of provinces.

Some changes have been made to the formula over the years because of developments in the economy and because of variations in the prices of certain raw materials, so there are always some changes involved—either additional payments or a reduction of certain payments. However, the basic principle of the legislation reflects a perception of the country and a commitment to equality of opportunity for all citizens wherever they live. It also reflects a view of the role of the central Government in order to maintain a political unit, regional balance, and a commitment to use national policies to build nationhood.

May I continue after two o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): You may. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When the House rose at 1 p.m., the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) had the floor.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, when the House rose I was speaking about the importance that my Party attaches to equalization payments as a method of building this nation, as a method of providing equality of opportunity for Canadians no matter where they live.

A particularly important part of these equalization payments is their contribution to post-secondary education, or what is called the Established Programs Financing. If we are to have true equality of opportunity, obviously bright young people must have access to higher education whether or not their parents are rich. There are few things about which we in this Party feel more strongly than the principle of equal access to higher education for Canadians whether they have rich parents or poor parents or whether they live in a poor province or a more prosperous one.

This Government has been making changes in the Established Programs Financing arrangements. We do have to be concerned, because the result of the measures taken in successive budgets and also in this Bill before us is that the provinces will be losing $8 billion by 1990; nearly $2 billion in Ontario and about $2 billion in Quebec. This short-fall in transfer payments will oblige the provinces to increase their deficits, increase their taxes or reduce services. We have to be very concerned about that.

While we in the Opposition are making it very easy for the Government to pass this Bill, we are not at all in agreement with the policies. We do realize that there are reasons that this Bill, with its flaws, must pass, not the least of which is that legally speaking since April 1, 1987, the Government has had no authority to make equalization payments to the provinces and is, therefore, breaching the constitutional agreement. The existing equalization program expired on March 31, 1987. It has been difficult for us to understand why the Government did not move more promptly. It certainly had every assistance from us on this side of the House, but the Government did delay in introducing the Bill. We are prepared to pass this Bill in a few minutes so that the equalization payments can continue, but we are not at all in agreement with the cuts that have been made thus far.

Although the Government quotes over-all increases in employment figures, which one would expect at this point when we are recovering from a recession, the fact remains that all the increases in jobs are pretty well in Ontario, central Canada, while in several other provinces the unemployment picture is as bad as or worse than it was in the depths of the recession in 1982. This is a case for more sensitive use of the equalization payments rather than a case for cutting.

If you take the additional equalization transfers that the provinces are to receive as a result of this Bill and balance them against the cuts they will suffer in health care and post-secondary education financing, you see that the provinces will lose $374 million in 1987-88. We must also remember that the Government has already considerably reduced the amount spent on regional economic development.

Again I would repeat what I said earlier in speaking to the amendment, the Government is locking the provinces into an agreement here, an agreement which is not based on known facts because we are expecting tax reform which may totally change the provinces taxing situation. It is obviously unwise to lock us into five year agreements in the face of this big information gap when we do not know what changes the tax reforms will bring. Even the technical changes made to the formula for calculating revenue were not unanimously agreed upon.

The transitional equalization guarantee was not met for Quebec, which represents a $97 million short-fall in entitlements. The Government has also refused to include the export tax on softwood lumber in the equalization formula so provinces will be losing millions of dollars as a result of that.

This Bill also ends the special three year transitional payments which the previous Liberal Government had agreed on. The Constitution guarantees equality of access to basic public services to all Canadians. Subsection 36(2) reads:

> Parliament and the Government of Canada are committed to the principle of making equalization payments to ensure that provincial Governments have sufficient revenues to provide reasonably comparable levels of public services at reasonably comparable levels of taxation.

The measures before us endanger this principle. While there is some enrichment in some places and there is some guarantee of continuity, there are cuts that we know about, and there is a locking in to a formula without knowledge of the changes that will be coming very shortly in taxation which may totally change the base.

Quebec for one province has made it very clear that the current equalization program does not allow it to provide levels of public service that are comparable to those of other provinces without increasing the tax burden on taxpayers or going further into debt.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier, I will not be making a very long speech at third reading because I had the opportunity at second reading and at report stage of speaking against this legislation, but obviously not against the principle of equalization. That is in our Constitution and it is something that we support. We do not like the process between the federal Government and the provinces in passing this legislation. It was obviously unilateral action. Premiers from all three political Parties were critical of the federal Finance Minister because of this action. We have a situation in which there is a sense of betrayal in many parts of this country because of the legislation.

In my second reading speech I quoted Premier Peckford. He thought that this would create a situation in his province which could equal the economic depression of the 1930s. This results from the fact that this legislation does not deal with the serious problems of people in our poorer provinces. That is my main concern.

We have agreed that this legislation will pass today, allowing the Senate to look at the legislation for the usual length of time, and then the cheques can go out. The provinces need the money. However, we need a new system of dealing with Established Programs Financing, the money used for post-secondary education and medicare, so that a boy or girl growing up in Atlantic Canada has roughly the same opportunity for education as someone growing up in Toronto.

We need this so that people in other parts of the country have a sense that the federal Government does care and wants to see people prosper in all parts of this country. Whether it be transition houses for women, child care, or a whole host of federal-provincial cost shared programs, we need some indication of where the federal Government is going. We must have some commitment by the federal Government to sit down in honest negotiations with the provinces to ensure that we have the legislation that will actually meet the needs of the provinces receiving equalization payments.

I realize there is at least one other Member of the House who seems to have an urgent desire to speak on this issue, and I will let that person speak in a few minutes, especially since he is my House Leader. In the meantime, let me say that what I would really like is this House, through one of its standing committees, to do what we did in 1981; to look at the whole issue of federal-provincial fiscal arrangements to see how it could be better done, and how to bring the provinces into the process. That would be better than having the kind of meetings we have at present, where the federal Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) looks at his Budget, his deficit, and tries to negotiate downward the federal Government's commitment in these very important areas. That was the promise we had from the former Minister of State for Finance, the present Minister of State for Privatization (Mrs. McDougall). She said we would have that process before now, but it did not happen.

I say that before we bring forward new legislation on EPF and equalization payments, those matters must be dealt with. We must get away from this process where the Premier of Newfoundland is screaming at the Minister of Finance, along with the Premiers of other provinces. That is not the way to develop a constructive system of federalism. This just has to stop, and we have to work toward a process which will improve co-operative federalism.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words regarding Bill C-44. The concern that has been registered by my colleagues about education and health care is shared by all Members of this House. We recognize that, for whatever reason, the federal Government recently cut back on the usual increase in Established Programs Financing for health care and post-secondary education.

Just to make it very clear, while the Government increased EPF to assist post-secondary education and the health care funding, there was not the usual increase. Consequently, had the federal Government not intervened, more dollars would have gone to the provinces for health care and post-secondary education.

I know you will recall that the Canadian Medical Association intervened at the time and very strongly suggested that what this will mean is that there will be two levels of health care; a lower level in the poorer parts of Canada and a higher level in the richer parts. Those provinces such as Ontario which have a strong buoyant economies as a result of so many government initiatives, both provincially and federally, will likely have more revenues to fund a better level of health care and post-secondary education than you will find in the Atlantic or western provinces.

What we are dealing with today is an effort by the federal Government, which has been undertaken now for many, many years, to equalize opportunities in Canada. If you are a young man or woman in Atlantic Canada or western Canada, you should have the same opportunity to go to school or receive various types of support and assistance from the federal Government. We all agree that is a good move. That is what Canada is all about. Where revenue is generated in the have provinces, where for a variety of reasons things often go better, they would share those revenues with those less fortunate areas of Canada where things are not going as well.

Equalization provides grants to provinces for education if they so desire. This is not post-secondary education but general public school education, primary school, junior secondary and secondary schools. I am sure everyone in the House applauds that. We would like to see more money made available to ensure that youngsters in the have-not provinces have opportunity equal to those in the have provinces.

I have been looking at some of the material provided to us regarding primary and secondary education expenditures per province. When you look at school board expenditures as a percentage of the Gross Domestic Product, an interesting anomaly appears. For example, in Newfoundland that percentage is 7.2 per cent, one of the highest; in Prince Edward Island it is 6.2 per cent; in Nova Scotia it is 6.1 per cent; in New Brunswick it is 6.3 per cent; in Quebec it is 5.3 per cent; in Ontario it is 4.3 per cent; in Manitoba it is 4.8 per cent; and in Saskatchewan it is 4.6 per cent.

When you look at the list the one province that stands out as having the lowest percentage of GDP for education is the Province of British Columbia. By national standards B.C. is a have province. Quite frankly it should be in a position to put significant amounts of money into education for its young boys and girls.

When you look across Canada to see which province has virtually the worst record when it comes to providing funding for education at all levels, the one province that stands out above all the others with a most miserable performance is, I am ashamed to say, the province from which I come, the Province of British Columbia. I hope that one day we take the necessary steps in that province to put the Government in a position to provide the necessary education to ensure that young people from British Columbia receive opportunities equal to those of the rest of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

AUTHORIZATION FOR STANDING COMMITTEE TO TRAVEL

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties and I think you will find unanimous consent to do two things. First, with respect to the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare, I move:

That, the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare be authorized to travel to Halifax, Nova Scotia, from April 12 to 15, 1987, inclusive to observe a course on orientation to chemical dependency pursuant to the committee's ongoing study of alcohol and drug abuse, and that the necessary staff accompany the committee.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I want to indicate that there have been consultations for a number of days. While we will certainly give unanimous consent to support the committee travelling to Halifax on this matter, I would like to add the note that we ought to be very cautious with regard to standing or special committees which want their representatives to travel to other parts of Canada to take courses. When we are funding people to attend courses to better inform themselves, that means they are not in the House of Commons or here participating in committees. We approve this today, but we will want to look very carefully, on an individual basis, at every request so that this will not become simply a matter of course.

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I would like to confirm that the Official Opposition was consulted as well and agrees with this request for the committee to travel to Halifax to observe this course. We are in total agreement.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Members have heard the terms of the motion. Is it so agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, we agreed earlier that there would be no further government business on this day. There were discussions with the other Parties well in advance of this time and I think you will find unanimous agreement to proceed to Private Members' Hour at this time and that 60 minutes after Private Members' Hour commences, or whenever the particular item of business is dealt with, the House will adjourn for the day.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall I call it four o'clock?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to commend my colleague, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary. Discussions took place earlier today with regard to identifying ways and means to facilitate the business of the House in terms of ensuring that the important legislation that must pass does in fact pass expeditiously. I simply want to go on record as saying that as an opposition Member I appreciate that approach to the business of the House of Commons.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being four o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

CIVILIAN WAR PENSIONS AND ALLOWANCES ACT

PROPOSAL TO AMEND

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act by eliminating the condition for entitlement of serving at sea for at least six months in order that one trip through dangerous waters would be the only qualification necessary for the Civilian War Allowance on the part of Canadian merchant seamen.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is a very fortunate day for me, having this motion drawn for debate. Yesterday was the seventieth anniversary of the great battle of Vimy Ridge. I noted today the remarks about the speech of the Hon. Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) who, according to the press, gave one of the most eloquent speeches of his long and distinguished career. The Hon. Minister said: "Our children, grandchildren and great grandchildren have understood and understand the ageless legacy of Vimy". He said that in the presence of 11 veterans in their 80s and 90s from different parts of Canada. The Minister recalled that day just over 70 years ago as "a day a nation was forged".

I and many of my colleagues in this House were not in the War. We are of the post-Second World War generation and were too young to serve in the Korean War. We are the beneficiaries of that for which the veterans fought. They fought, were injured, and died, or survived with scarred memories and difficult times. That is why I am very pleased to bring this motion forward for debate and consideration by the House today.

The motion reads:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act by eliminating the condition for entitlement of serving at sea for at least six months in order that one trip through dangerous waters would be the only qualification necessary for the Civilian War Allowance on the part of Canadian merchant seamen.

Canadian merchant seamen also served in the war, Mr. Speaker. One of my constituents, Mr. John M. Bray, of 5876 Tyne Street in Vancouver, British Columbia, has been tireless in his pursuit of what he considers to be an injustice which is being done to merchant seamen. He has asked that it be corrected. He has lobbied me, as his Member of Parliament, to put this motion forward, as I have done. By good fortune it was drawn to be debated. Mr. Bray has also lobbied the Canadian Legion which has passed a motion that I will read shortly.

The best way to explain what we are trying to do through this motion is to read a letter which I wrote on March 9 of this year to the Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) who is the chairman of the Standing Committee on Private Members' Business. The Hon. Member for Burlington is himself a distinguished war veteran who served in the Burma campaign. The letter reads:

> Dear Mr. Kempling:
> Re: Notice of Motion
> I would like the Committee to rule in favour of having my Motion concerning amendments to the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act be made a votable motion.
> The issue is a nonpartisan one. Essentially, if an amendment such as I propose were made to the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act, Canadian Merchant Seamen who made at least one, and maybe several, trips through dangerous waters during wartime, would be eligible for the Civilian War Pension and Allowance. At present, a Merchant Seaman must have served at sea for at least six months in order to qualify. The law as it stands at present is inequitable, as many Merchant Seamen did serve in close assistance with the military during the war, and travelled through dangerous waters many times during a period less than six months. On the other hand, there are other seamen who did serve at sea for the period longer than six months, but who only travelled once through dangerous waters, and who, by this fact, do qualify under the Act.

In other words, those merchant seamen who travelled through dangerous waters once or many times do not qualify for the pension if they did not serve for a total of six months whereas other merchant seamen who may have only travelled through dangerous waters once but served for more than six months, do qualify. We, Mr. Bray, and the Legion, think this is inequitable.

The letter continues:

> My amendment to the Act would serve to remedy the existing inequities in the law.
> The Pacific Command of the Royal Canadian Legion is very concerned about this matter, and has written me with respect to this issue.
> I look forward to a positive ruling by the Committee on this matter.

I would like to read a letter written to me by Mr. Bray on March 1 of this year. It is actually a copy of a letter he wrote to the Hon. George Hees, P.C., M.P., Minister of Veterans Affairs. It reads:

> Dear Mr. Hees:
> BRAY JOHN M. A4924/V6523 &C.W.A. 822074I Ex. Canadian Merchant Navy.

• (1430)

Those are the identification numbers. It goes on:

> Dear Sir:
>
> In the case of Merchant Seaman I feel that they should not come under the Civilian War Allowances Act for the following reasons.
> (1) It was obligatory to take Gunnery courses etc. and had to man the Guns in event of enemy attack. As most Merchant ships were crewed with only 8 Naval Personnel (D.E.M.S.) and that these ships were equipped with 2-12 Pounders or 4-inch heavy guns, 8-20 MMOrlikons and 1 set of Rockets plus Browning & Lewis Machine Guns. It is very evident that the Merchant crews had to man them.

In other words, there were guns on the merchant ships and they had to know how to man them.

It continues:

> (2) At cessation of War in a Zone did not negate the dangers as there was always the possibility of Mines and danger of accidents with the Ammunition on board, until they were stripped after arriving back in their home port.
> (3) In the case of the armed forces, their time was considered from Enlistment to Discharge. I think that the Merchant Seamen should be afforded the same consideration as the rest of the armed forces that handled Guns and Ammunition also Fuel & Oil.
> (4) Seamen especially Canadian Seamen should be at least covered until their arrival back to their home port or until the ship was denuded of all Ammunition & Armament.
> So hopefully you can see your way clear to alter the existing Act to include the Merchant Navy as actual Armed Forces personnel and give them their just due. Thanking you.

It is signed: "J.M. Bray".

I think what Mr. Bray meant in his first paragraph is that there is an inequitable situation in which one group of seamen is covered and another group is not.

Let me quote the Royal Canadian Legion Dominion Convention Resolution of 1986. It states:

> 12. Merchant Navy Eligibility
> WHEREAS Subsections 75(1) and 75(2) of the War Pensions and Allowances Act, stipulate that a Canadian Merchant Seaman, to be eligible for the Civilian War Pensions and Allowance must have served at sea for a period of six months, and during that period at sea, made at least one trip through dangerous waters; and
> WHEREAS during a lesser period than six months, a Merchant Seaman may have made numerous trips through dangerous waters:
> THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED that Subsections 75(1) and 75(2) be amended so that one trip through dangerous waters would be the only qualification necessary for Civilian War Allowance on the part of Canadian Merchant Seaman.

There was a response from the Department which deals with the fact that the qualifying period was established to correspond with the service time that was required by merchant seamen for the receipt of war medals, such as the 1939-45 Star of the Atlantic and Pacific Star. Thus, to qualify for the allowance, this length of service was considered to be the minimum time requirement for civilians who served in close support of the Armed Forces during wartime.

In my view, that is a bureaucratic response. While medals are important, pensions for veterans are needed. I see at the table Stanley Knowles, the former Member from Winnipeg, who fought many years in the House for pensions and managed to get the Government and bureaucrats to change their minds on numerous occasions. I say to Mr. Knowles and the Government that the purpose of this motion is to try to get the Veterans Department, under the very able and excellent Minister, the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees), to look at this again and change the inequity for those merchant seamen who were in battle zones in the war and may have gone through dangerous waters numerous times but did not serve for a period of six months. The determination of that six-month period is very strict.

I evoke the spirit of the Hon. Minister who spoke at Vimy yesterday and said that a nation was forged. That means everyone should be included and if we are to err, let us err on the side of charity to help those who served in the wars and who, because of inequity, are not getting their just pension.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs to address the motion now before the House.

While it is not customary for Ministers to participate in these debates, I know that the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) would very much have wished to be here this afternoon. As the Hon. Member knows, the Minister is representing Canada at the commemorative ceremonies marking the seventieth anniversary of the Battle of Vimy Ridge. I should add that he is joined by ten Vimy veterans, every one of whom deserves our pride, respect and thanks.

The motion before us is obviously one that the Government would not reject out of hand. Indeed, it was a Progressive Conservative Government which provided civilian war allowance eligibility for merchant seamen in the first place. We have, therefore, always had the interests of merchant seamen very much at heart.

In responding to the motion, we must look at two things: first, why the 180-day requirement was put into the legislation and, second, whether this reasoning has relevance today.

It becomes readily apparent to anyone who reads committee minutes on Veterans Affairs that merchant seamen made countless representations to successive post-war Governments requesting eligibility for War Veterans Allowance benefits. So did the Corp of Civilian Canadian Firefighters in respect of their service in the United Kingdom. The Voluntary Aid Detachment of the St. John's Ambulance, and the Overseas Welfare Workers, who served under the auspices of the Canadian Red Cross Society and the St. John's Ambulance, also made representations. So did the Civilian Air Crew of the Royal Air Force Transport Command. So did the Newfoundland Overseas Forestry Unit make representation for War Veterans Allowance benefits.

The answer was always no until the election of the Diefenbaker Government and the appointment of the late Gordon Churchill as Minister. In Mr. Churchill's words: "One of the first matters I drew to the attention of the officials in the Department of Veterans Affairs was the status of the Merchant Marine, which I mentioned in particular, and other groups such as the firefighters and foresters".

In response, the Minister received all the time worn reasons why nothing could be done to help these groups. To paraphrase Mr. Churchill, he said that the time had come to help, and that the Department's job was to find a way that would be satisfactory to everyone concerned.

Following consultations with the groups concerned and the veterans' organizations, including the Royal Canadian Legion, the result was the compromise of providing eligibility under the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act for what amounted to War Veterans Allowance benefits. Parliament passed the legislation by a unanimous vote on February 14, 1962.

The compromise was not an easy one to find because feelings ran very strongly on both sides of the question. Again going back to the post-war period, the argument constantly used to deny income support benefits to merchant seamen was that war veterans allowance was for war veterans only, and not for merchant seaman. Those supporting this view said that bestowing veteran status on merchant seamen would lead to similar status for any civilian who contributed to the war effort in any way.

Merchant seamen justifiably pointed to their heroic, distinguished and very perilous service in supplying food, raw materials, ammunition and so on to our troops, and argued that they had every right to veterans' benefits. The debate was not a pleasant one, and it invariably led to ugly disputes about who did more for Canada during war time.

The six-month requirement enabled both sides to meet each other halfway. After all, any person who served, and voluntarily at that, for six months in the Merchant Marine, and who made at least one trip through dangerous waters, was someone who was well and truly committed to the war effort. No one then or today could dispute that fact.

However, the six month requirement was not just an arbitrary time period drawn out of a hat. Six months' service corresponded with the service time required to qualify for the Atlantic Star, the Pacific Star and the 1939-45 Star. If six months was the period required for enlisted personnel to be awarded such recognition it seemed only reasonable that six months should be the bench-mark for civilians who served in close support of the Armed Forces during war-time.

The motion before us is arguing in effect that one day's service should be enough service eligibility to qualify a merchant seaman for Civilian War Allowance benefits. I say this because a trip three miles out to sea would suffice to be one trip through dangerous waters. This may well be what the Hon. Member has in mind, although I expect all of us are thinking of those who were on the high seas for weeks on end. If so, Mr. Speaker, we are really saying that one day is not enough service time for merchant seamen to qualify, but six months is too long.

As I said earlier, the Government and our Party have never had any hesitation in acknowledging the war-time service of merchant seamen. Our record clearly shows that. For this reason, and given the tremendous improvements made to veterans legislation over the past two and a half years, I am very glad that this motion is being debated today. The debate will unquestionably serve to raise public consciousness of the crucial role played by the Merchant Marine and the House can be assured that the Minister will be very much interested in the views expressed today.

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to speak on the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). I must say I am glad the Hon. Member did bring this motion forward because I can see some great merit in it.

I understand a little about what happened during the Second World War. I certainly was not very old in 1945, but I was old enough at 10 years of age to remember. Coming from Atlantic Canada, I remember quite clearly and vividly the sights which could be seen in Halifax Harbour when the merchant fleet would line up in Bedford Basin and the convoys would leave Halifax Harbour for England, mainly, to deliver supplies to the Armed Forces. Probably not too many members in the House realize, although some of the older Members and those who are actual veterans of the Second World War would understand well, that one did not have to go too far outside of Halifax Harbour, for instance, to McNabs Island, before one was into some pretty dangerous waters during the Second World War.

The German U'-boats were lying off Halifax Harbour and there was great difficulty experienced by our Armed Forces and, indeed, by those in the merchant fleet serving Canada and supporting the Armed Forces in its very important role. Many merchant ships left Halifax Harbour never to return.

The same thing can be said for St. John's, Newfoundland. St. John's had an excellent harbour and for those Members of Parliament who have visited St. John's for a time will surely know what its harbour is like. It has a very small entrance and one can look down from Cabot Tower right across to the other side. It does not seem to be much of a distance. However, during the war there was a ship sunk right at the dock in St. John's Harbour by a torpedo which came right in through the entrance to the harbour. It was a direct hit. A lot of areas in Atlantic Canada were very close to the Second World War, both in terms of the number of people who served in the Armed Forces in Europe and at home as enlisted members of the Armed Forces as well as those in the marine service.

It is well documented that during the Second World War there were quite a number of German submarines which frequented the waters of the Gulf of St. Lawrence and created a very dangerous situation for our merchant fleet and Armed Forces vessels.

The Parliamentary Secretary spoke of how the six months was arrived at in Parliament back in 1962. However, I think in 1987 it is time we took another look at it. I understand the complication which can arise because one trip could mean one day. However, that is sort of bureaucratic thinking. I am sure it could be straightened out to the satisfaction of those who served. They are entitled, in my opinion, and in the opinion of many other Hon. Members in this Chamber, to receive some compensation for their efforts. It only takes one hit. Many of those who served in the Merchant Marine can testify to that.

I believe the number of merchant seamen who qualify under the provisions of the Act as it now stands is something around 4,000. I do not see too many more being qualified if this Act was changed to what the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway is suggesting, that one trip through dangerous waters would be the only qualification necessary.

We have to look as well at those who were in the merchant fleet in 1945. The very youngest would probably be around 49 or 59 years of age. Some of them went to sea when they were pretty young, at 16 or 17 years of age. This is 1987 so they would be now around 58 years to 60 years. Most of them are, of course, 65 years and over. I do not see that it would be a tremendous drain on the Treasury at this time to recognize these people in a more meaningful way.

I went to sea a bit myself, certainly not in war-time, but in the late 1960s, sailing from Yarmouth to Bar Harbour, Maine. Everytime I sailed that route I thought about the number of vessels and the problems which occurred to those vessels in the waters off the Bay of Fundy, up through Louisbourg, around Cape Breton and on to Newfoundland. Those were very treacherous areas during the war.

I just want to say that I would like to support, on behalf of my Party, this motion before us today. I hope all Members of Parliament will look upon this in the right spirit and that we can present this motion to the Minister.

• (1450)

I must compliment the Minister. He has been a very good Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees). I had the opportunity, along with the Parliamentary Secretary, to visit Holland with him on the fortieth anniversary of the liberation of The Netherlands and Italy. I was proud of our Minister of Veterans Affairs on that visit. We visited the graves of those who lost their lives in the Second World War. I am equally proud of the representations he made recently on behalf of Canada and our veterans on the seventieth anniversary of Vimy Ridge.

I will end on this note. It is incumbent upon each and every one of us as Parliamentarians to do whatever we can to help our veterans, both those enlisted and those who served Canada well in a supportive role, either in the merchant navy or by other means. It is through their efforts and the efforts of many of our allies that we are able to participate in debate in this Parliament here today in a free and democratic society. It is something that we must never forget. Parliament should be directing its efforts in whatever ways possible now and in the future, not only to support those who have served but to work toward peace from now until eternity.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I too consider it to be a privilege to have an opportunity this afternoon to say a few words in support of the motion of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). I think it appropriate to take a moment to read the text of the motion as follows:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act by eliminating the condition for entitlement of serving at sea for at least six months in order that one trip through dangerous waters would be the only qualification necessary for the Civilian War Allowance—

This is a rather special occasion for many of us in this House, myself included, who were too young at the time of the last war to serve our country. I recognize that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. McKenzie) served our country. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), trained and was ready to serve as the war came to an end but never had the opportunity to go overseas. I noticed earlier in the Chamber our colleague, the Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling), and I am well aware of his record, and the records of many others.

As my hon. friend from the Liberal Party has indicated, it is because they were prepared to serve and give the ultimate sacrifice, their lives, knowing the suffering, torment and worry that resulted to their families as a result of their service, that we are able today to consider a motion to recognize the service of those people who served in the Merchant Marine but do not fall within the appropriate regulations to be entitled to financial recognition, though they were willing to lay their lives on the line for Canada.

My hon. friend from Vancouver—Kingsway reminded us of the very eloquent words of the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) at Vimy Ridge when he indicated that it was at Vimy Ridge that the nation of Canada was forged. I know that all of us in the House have been supportive and appreciative of the work done by the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

When we consider those who served in our Merchant Marine and who were quite prepared to sail through dangerous waters, and know that those individuals are likely now about the age of 60, and when we consider the contributions they made and the willingness with which they approached their careers to serve Canada during hostile times, it seems to me that the least we can do is recognize that contribution and provide them access to the benefits provided by the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act.

This would not involve much money when we consider the relatively small number of Canadians who would be involved. As the Parliamentary Secretary has pointed out, not all would take advantage of this opportunity. However, those who need financial support and those with families who could use that financial support would be entitled to this allowance.

There is no question that we owe it to these individuals to at least refer this motion to the appropriate committee for further consideration. Perhaps there are other ways more appropriate—even better ways—to recognize their service to Canada and to provide appropriate compensation.

We must consider the sacrifices they made for us. As I have said, many of us were not old enough to serve our country. We only see the embattlements, for instance in my Province of British Columbia on the West Coast and around the City of Vancouver. We can see the remnants of the big gun placements which were used to protect our coast from invasion. That is as close as we get. Yet we all know individuals who served, not only in the Canadian services but also in the Merchant Marine. We know the lives that they led during those difficult times.

I now wish to read for Members of the House a motion put forward at the 1986 Convention of the Royal Canadian Legion. As a member of the Royal Canadian Legion Branch 213 I wish to say that the motion presented at the convention in terms of the merchant navy was a thoughtful one. It is a motion that received a great deal of consideration before it actually went to the convention floor. It states:

> WHEREAS Subsections 75(1) and 75(2) of the War Pensions and Allowances Act, stipulate that a Canadian Merchant Seaman, to be eligible for the Civilian War Pensions and Allowance must have served at sea for a period of six months, and during that period at sea, made at least one trip through dangerous waters; and
> WHEREAS during a lesser period than six months, a Merchant Seaman may have made numerous trips through dangers waters:
> THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED that Subsections 75(1) and 75(2) be amended so that one trip through dangerous waters would be the only qualification necessary for Civilian War Allowance on the part of Canadian Merchant Seamen.

In a sense that is what the motion of my hon. friend encompasses. When we consider the work done by the Royal Canadian Legion for so many years, and the extremely important work it continues to do on behalf of Canadian servicemen and women, and the concern it has indicated in terms of the merchant navy, individuals who would now be eligible for some compensation if this motion is passed, I encourage Members of the House to give the motion the opportunity to be referred to the appropriate committee for further consideration.

The six-months qualifying service for civilians was established to correspond with the service time that was required by merchant seamen for the receipt of war medals such as the 1939-45 Star, the Atlantic Star and the Pacific Star. Thus to qualify for the allowance this length of service was considered to be the minimum time requirement for civilians who served in close support of the Armed Forces during wartime.

I think that today in April of 1987 it is time that we recognize those who served in our Merchant Marine. It is time for us to recognize those who were prepared to sail through extremely dangerous and hostile waters to serve their country. This is but a small way of saying as a Parliament: "We recognize your contribution. We appreciate your contribution. We want to acknowledge it by making you eligible under the appropriate compensation program."

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec East): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to thank you for giving me this opportunity to speak to the motion before the House today.

As the House is aware, the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) would have liked to give us his comments on the motion, but as you know, Mr. Speaker, the Minister is over in France this week where with his usual dignity he is representing Canada at the ceremony to commemorate the seventieth anniversary of the Battle of Vimy Ridge.

Mr. Speaker, this afternoon we are considering a motion asking the Government to amend the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act by eliminating the condition for entitlement of serving at sea for at least six months in order that one trip through dangerous waters would be the only qualification necessary for the Civilian War Allowance on the part of Canadian Merchant seamen.

Mr. Speaker, as you know it was a Progressive Conservative Government that introduced this legislation in 1962, thus demonstrating a very real interest in the fate of those civilians who served in a theater of war to support the Armed Forces.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer at this point to an excellent brochure published by Veterans Affairs and entitled: War Veterans Allowance and Civilian War Allowances, published in April 1985, and with your permission, I will give a short description of the various groups of civilians who served in a theater of war, as I said earlier, and are entitled to a civilian war allowance. They have to meet certain criteria, and I shall, if I may, quote this brief passage.

Eligible are the following groups of civilians, provided they meet certain criteria as to duration and area of service:

(1) Canadians who served in the Merchant Marine in either war or in the Korean War;

(2) Non-Canadians who served in Canadian merchant ships in either war or in the Korean War;

(3) The Canadian Voluntary Aid Detachment of the First World War;

(4) Canadian Fire Fighters of the Second World War;

(5) Canadians overseas welfare workers who also served during the Second World War;

(6) Canadian Trans-Atlantic Air Crew of the Second World War; and

(7) Members of the Newfoundland and Overseas Forestry Unit of the Second World War.

In responding to this motion, we must consider two major points, Mr. Speaker. First of all, the reason why a minimum of 180 days of service is required to be eligible, and second, the relevance of this criterion in 1987.

Mr. Speaker, anyone interested in the proceedings of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs would know that merchant seamen made repeated representations to the various post-war governments concerning their eligibility for veterans allowances.

And so did the following groups:

-The St. John Ambulance volunteer help detachment during the 1914-18 war;

-Volunteer firemen during the 1939-45 war;

-The social assistance service members who served under the auspices of the Canadian Red Cross Society and the St. John Ambulance during the 1939-45 war;

-The Royal Air Force Transport Command transatlantic flight crew in 1939-45; and

-The Newfoundland Foresters, again during the World War II of 1939-45.

Mr. Speaker, the response was always negative until the election of the Diefenbaker Conservative Government in 1962. The then Minister of Veterans Affairs—we all remember the Hon. Gordon Churchill—had drawn the attention of his senior officials to the position of merchant seamen and the other groups I have just mentioned.

Consultations with the groups involved and such veterans organizations as the Royal Canadian Legion led to a compromise: civilians who served during the war became eligible under the Civilian War Pension and Allowances Act which, as you recall, was unanimously adopted by the House on February 14, 1962.

As we all know, the benefits provided under this legislation are similar to those provided under the War Veterans Allowance Act.

Mr. Speaker, it was not easy to reach a compromise, considering the vastly divergent views on this matter. The argument most frequently heard against awarding these benefits to civilians was, in essence, that civilians should not be given a veteran's allowance.

Supporters of this position were against the principle that civilians who had in any way contributed to the war effort should have the same privileges as veterans.

Civilians described, and rightly so, the heroic, distinguished and extremely perilous services rendered in carrying food, raw materials and munitions to our troops overseas and claimed they were eligible for veterans benefits.

The criterion of 180 days of service enabled the parties to reach a compromise. After all, Mr. Speaker, any person who had served voluntarily for six months in the Merchant Marine and who made at least one trip in dangerous waters was truly engaged in the war effort. No one could deny that.

The 180-day criterion is no accident. It corresponds to the days of service required to qualify for the Atlantic Star, the Pacific Star, the 1914-1918 Merchant Marine War Medal and the 1939-1945 Medal.

If the six-month criterion is acceptable for the military to qualify for these medals, I think it is entirely proper and reasonable that the same criterion should apply to civilians who seconded the Armed Forces in wartime.

According to the motion under consideration, only one day's service would be enough for civilian war allowances eligibility. For instance, one three-mile sea cruise would be deemed to be a voyage in dangerous waters. This may be the position of the Hon. Member, but I think these allowances were intended for people who have spent several months on the high seas.

Be that as it may, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that only one day's service is insufficient, while 180 days as a criterion may very well be too long. As I said, the Government and our Party in particular have never hesitated to rate merchant seamen wartime service as being acceptable.

For this reason and in view of the significant improvements made to the veterans legislation in the past thirty months, I am glad this motion was debated in the House today.

The debate will undoubtedly make the general public more aware of the important role of merchant seamen, and Hon. Members may rest assured that the Minister of Veterans Affairs will give due consideration to the views expressed today. This concludes my remarks, Mr. Speaker, and I thank you for letting me use the precious time of the House to say what I think of this motion.

• (1500)

Mr. Gordon Towers (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I too take great pleasure in speaking to the motion of the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). I know the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) would have liked to have been here because he has said on many occasions that not enough tribute has been paid to the role of the merchant navy in the Second World War.

The Merchant Marine was the lifeline stretching across the Atlantic. Weather, aircraft and U-boats threatened to snap that lifeline but, happily for all of us, it never broke. The Minister himself was a soldier who fought in the battle of the Scheldt. The purpose of that battle was to clear out the enemy so that the Port of Antwerp in Belgium would be opened to allied shipping. This was accomplished and the merchant fleets landed enough supplies to arm, fuel and feed the invasion forces. General Eisenhower said that Naziism was finished when the first ship sailed into Antwerp. Incidentally, it was a Canadian built vessel.

I thank the Hon. Member for allowing us to recall just how much the Armed Forces were dependent upon the merchant navy. The seamen manning those convoys were heroes, fully deserving of the House's time and attention today.

There is another group which also deserves our attention, the wives and girl-friends of those who went off to war. For many of them, the war meant loneliness and worry. A telegram could put an end to life's sweet young dreams. Many had to bring up families alone, and a fine job they did of raising a generation of young people.

I am glad this Government has been able to do something for these spouses. For instance, one of the first pieces of legislation introduced by the Minister included a measure to help recently bereaved widows or widowers of disability pensioners. Before the Minister acted, the money coming into the family was drastically reduced within 30 days of the death of the pensioner. One month there was a cheque reflecting the married rate; the next month it was the single rate.

We must think of the consequences, Mr. Speaker. The couple could well have had a large apartment on a long lease. There were likely other ongoing expenses linked to the pensioner's physical condition. Yet, on top of great personal loss, the widow had to sustain the double whammy of financial pressure.

I congratulate the Minister of Veterans Affairs, with the support of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), for showing immediate concern. Widows now receive a married rate pension for one year following the death of a spouse. It is another example of how the Minister and the Government have applied scarce resources very wisely indeed.

I hope all planning with regard to veterans' programs reserve a large place for widows and widowers. It is a fact that women live longer than men. It is inevitable that sometime in the future the number of widows of veterans will exceed the actual number of veterans. By looking after these widows, we will be keeping faith with our veterans and recognizing another type of wartime sacrifice which has largely gone unheralded.

I again thank the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway for giving us this opportunity to discuss the needs of some very deserving Canadians. He has put his case very well indeed. I am sure his words will be given every attention by the Minister of Veterans Affairs and the Government. As I have shown in the case of those widows, the Minister's record, as well as the Government's record, is one of understanding and compassion.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Earlier I made reference in my speech to Mr. Knowles being at the table. He is now an officer of the House. It occurred to me that I am not supposed to make reference to the table, to bring them into disrepute. Some of them are disreputable enough occasionally, so I apologize if I—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes).

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, obviously it is Friday afternoon. After one has a little experience in this place, one knows that there are ways of telling that.

It is a pleasure to rise on this particular Friday afternoon, which happens to follow by one day the commemoration which characterized our news screens last evening as we watched the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) at the ceremonial before the Memorial at Vimy Ridge. It identified for all of us and for generations to come the reality that Vimy Ridge was a landmark in Canadian history which took place in a foreign land.

It was the first time that the fledgling nation of Canada had elements of its forces come together in a great battle in defence of a free world. It was part of a European tradition in one form or another which perhaps went back hundreds of years. Certainly it was something new and different for the land across the sea, the land we so affectionately call Canada, the nation about which we feel so deeply.

Therefore, I think it is appropriate to have a Private Member's Bill dealing with the subject of war allowances before us today. Both the people who fought for us back in the First World War, in that fight for freedom, and those who fought for us in the Second World War, in a repeat of that fight for freedom, are owed a great deal by those of us of later generations who have had the opportunity to benefit from the kind of world for which they fought and which they protected.

The group in the First World War which Canada commemorated at the seventieth anniversary of Vimy Ridge had not only a role to play in protecting our freedoms and making the world a better place for us, but they had a role to play in nation building, because it was an inspiration to what was then a very fledgling nation.

With some consciousness of some of the difficulties in Canada today, perhaps one becomes a little homesick for something inspirational which might happen to all of us—if that could be, what a lift it would be and what a difference it would make.

Perhaps I would be remiss as a member on the government side of the House if I did not take this opportunity to draw attention to some of the achievements of the Government and past Progressive Conservative Governments in their treatment of Canadian veterans. I do that partly because the achievements of the Government over the last 2.5 years have been so many and have happened so rapidly that there is not really a comprehension throughout the land of the difference we have wrought. The situation today is not the same as it was in September, 1984.

Those of us who have memories going back to September, 1984, say: "Thank God, thank heavens it is not the same situation as in September, 1984". It is a better situation. There are more people working in every province of the country. There are fewer people unemployed than there were in September, 1984.

I should like to refer to the activity level of the current Minister of Veterans Affairs. Certainly in the eight years that I have been here—and there are Members who have been here longer—we have not had a Minister of Veterans Affairs who has helped make all of us more conscious of the reality of our veterans—what they fought for, what they stood for, and what they accomplished on our behalf—than the current Minister. He has visited many points in the world. On each and every occasion, whether commemorating one event or another, he has been accompanied by veterans.

On our television screens last evening which showed the commemoration of Vimy Ridge, the veterans who were with him were about 90 years of age. Their war, their triumph, was a long time ago. I think the children of today and some of us who are not quite children any more need to be reminded of such things. Certainly the Minister of Veterans Affairs is both a symbol and an activist in helping us look at and remember that reality.

Let us look back at the Throne Speech of the Government and its promise of or commitment to a veterans' independence program. The phasing in timetable was laid down years and years ago. I remind Hon. Members that most progress in veterans' pensions has been made by Conservative Governments. I do not think it is a public image which we enjoy throughout the land, although veterans and military people know about it. Some parts of that program were eliminated in terms of First World War veterans and, overnight, a piece of existing public policy became available to 6,000 Canadians who, the day before, were not eligible for it. That is an achievement. It is not one you see on the front page of newspapers, but it is one that you do see in the minds and the hearts of the 6,000 veterans who, all of a sudden, were eligible to participate in a program. I think that for their spouses and their relatives it was also an important event.

• (1520)

That change in public policy announced in the Throne Speech by our Government means that 75 per cent of all First World War veterans with overseas service are now able to apply. The remaining 25 per cent are either self-sufficient or are not in need of financial assistance. I think we can stand in this Chamber and say that 100 per cent of our veterans from the First World War are getting in Canada today, either through their own efforts or through the assistance of Government through our programs, the kind of help and assistance that they need. I think it is consistent with our reputation around the world. We are a nation that cares about our veterans. I see you are looking at me, Mr. Speaker. Does this indicate that the day has come to a close?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes.

Mr. Hawkes: I thank you for your generosity. I think you did give me a few extra seconds, Sir. There is much more that can be said, but if we can all leave this Chamber and remind our children and grandchildren over the weekend about our veterans and the contribution they have made, they will never forget.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to Petition Nos. 332-1229, 332-1241, 332-1242, 332-1264, 332-1265, 332-1271, 332-1273, 332-1279, 332-1303 to 332-1333 incl., 332-1455, 332-1573 to 332-1611 incl., 332-1625 to 332-1627 incl., 332-1675 and 332-1681.

In addition, I move, seconded by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski):

That the House now proceed to Motions.

Mr. Speaker: I advise Hon. Members that under all the circumstances the Chair is prepared to hear argument on this motion because I anticipate there will be Members wishing to speak to it.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I certainly am interested in speaking to the issue whether the House should proceed to Motions, which is only one of the many items before the House. When the House is dealing with Routine Proceedings, it has an opportunity to receive reports from members and from Ministers. It may proceed with various items such as tabling of documents, Ministers' statements, reports of inter-parliamentary delegations, tabling of committee reports and petitions. Mr. Speaker, we believe that the Government, by moving this motion, is trying to prevent us from presenting our petitions. The Government's motion concerns a proposal to proceed with that stage of the proceedings during which the Conservatives will be able to present a motion for time allocation for the debate on Bill C-22.

Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that this Government is so incapable of putting its house in order that it must resort to arguments that are so transparent and so unacceptable to the minority. Indeed, as the minority, we cannot vote in sufficient numbers to threaten or defeat a Government we believe is incompetent. The Government is short-circuiting Routine Proceedings by moving to proceed with a motion advising the House that the debating time for Bill C-22 will be shortened and that closure will be imposed on the proceedings after a day or two of debate at the report stage and third reading.

Mr. Speaker, the House should realize that if the Chair accepts the motion and it is put to a vote, it means the Chair will have prevented Ministers from making their statements, inter-parliamentary delegations from making their reports, committees from tabling their reports and members from presenting their petitions to the House. We will have prevented Bills from being introduced and we will also have prevented the introduction of public Bills originating in the Senate.

The Acting Prime Minister says it is a fiction. Not at all, Mr. Speaker. It is not a fiction but an extremely unpleasant disposition by the Government which wants to short-circuit debate and, between now and the Easter recess, wants to impose the will of its massive majority. A Government that would have us believe that for the sake of its friends, those people who have been putting pressure on the Government to accelerate the adoption of Bill C-22 . . . Everybody knows the Government's purpose is in essence to proceed with consideration of Bill C-22. Everybody knows that is why it wants to impose closure on the remaining stages of debate, namely the report stage and third reading. And that is why I find it hard to accept that the Government should short-circuit all routine proceedings just to move this motion.

Now exactly what is the meaning of what the Hon. Member just did? We are concerned here with a very important procedural matter, namely whether what we have before the House now is a measure that, with the various measures I mentioned before, including, tabling of documents, Bills, committee reports and petitions, comes under Routine Proceedings. Each stage of Routine Proceedings is there for a purpose, and it is up to the Government to meet certain commitments on which agreement has been reached with the House. Routine Proceedings may provide an opportunity to table petitions, for instance. And what the Government is doing here, Mr. Speaker, is short-circuiting the whole business and saying, more or less, that "Motions" is what they want to consider today, and forget the rest. In fact I find the Government's attitude rather disagreeable, considering its number of members: they know there will be a division, we will be back here in half an hour to vote and they will win. They have the numbers, 211 members against our 40, and the NDP has only 30. What will happen is that we will certainly go on to motions.

What I should like to know, Mr. Speaker, because I think the question is whether this is a dilatory tactic—no doubt about that—to which the Government resorts to achieve its ends, is whether this dilatory tactic is in order, can a member move a motion when the only reason he has the floor is to deal with a daily routine item? This is the point on which I should like to comment.

Under "Daily Routine" we have the item "Tabling of documents", and this is when the Parliamentary Secretary rose to say: I am tabling responses pursuant to Standing Order 106, responses to petitions presented to the House. He took this opportunity to move a motion to go on to the eighth item and have the House proceed with "Motions". Mr. Speaker, I say and I maintain that he does not have the right to do that in the House. He does not have the right in the House to use a daily routine item, "Tabling of documents", to introduce a dilatory motion to go directly to item No. 8, which is "Motions" under "Daily Routine". As I see it, he does not have the right to do that because this particular item can only relate to tabling of documents, statements by Ministers, reports from parliamentary delegations, committee reports, petitions, and introduction of Bills. In my opinion, a member cannot skip over all these items and go directly to "Motions" when he has the floor for a specific purpose. Not anymore than recently when the Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain) rose in the House, he had the floor to speak about his Bill, to explain to the House why his Bill was intended to restore capital punishment one way or another. Although it was not a particularly attractive piece of legislation, it had to be introduced and we voted to give him leave to do that. He rose in the House and as we so graphically put it in English—

• (1110)

He tried to bootleg in a dilatory motion to go to the next item of business which was against all the rules as far as I am concerned. You sustained that. Indeed, you said that he could not do that. The Chair told the Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain) that he could not utilize an item under routine business to bootleg in something else. This morning we have the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Lewis) again come in, under Tabling of Documents, and try to bootleg another motion, that we now proceed to motions. That is a similar circumstance and just as unacceptable in terms of parliamentary procedure, as far as I am concerned. I submit that if he could not do it last week under Introduction of Bills, then he cannot do it today under Tabling of Documents.

Mr. Speaker: Before the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) completes his remarks, I might ask him to address carefully the matter of which he just spoke. It seems to be the memory of the Chair that with respect to the Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain), the Chair's ruling was that when it came to Introduction of Bills the Member for Mission—Port Moody did not have the floor until the Bill had been read and introduced and voted upon. It was only after that that the Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody had the floor and did make the motion to move to the next item of business, which the Chair sustained.

Of course, the Hon. Member is perfectly right that the Chair insisted that the rubric be followed, but when the Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody did have the floor the Chair ruled that he was entitled to make a motion which moved from one rubric to the other within Routine Proceedings. Perhaps the Hon. Member would like to comment on that.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for reminding me of that procedure. However, if I recall, that vote was never taken. The motion put by the Member for Mission—Port Moody lapsed at one o'clock, again a circumstance with which I disagree. Our Constitution says that every question put to the House must be resolved by democratic vote. That is Clause 49. I do not want to repeat the arguments I have already given but, unless you rule as to why the Chair has that right to lapse motions, I have some difficulties with that issue. I do not think we resolved the question last week when the Member for Mission—Port Moody moved his motion. The House divided on it but the vote was never taken because the Chair lapsed the motion.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member. The point is that that question was not ultimately resolved but the effect of the Chair's ruling at that time was that the Member for Mission—Port Moody did not have the floor to do anything until the Bill had been introduced.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I find this attempt by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader to be offensive to the whole House. There is a procedure in the House whereby we go through Routine Proceedings. That procedure is explained in Standing Order 19(3) where it states:

> At 11 o'clock a.m. on Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays, at 3 o'clock p.m. on Wednesdays, and at 12 o'clock noon on Fridays, the House shall proceed to the ordinary daily routine of business which shall be as follows:

It lists Tabling of Documents, Statements by Ministers, Presenting Reports from Interparliamentary Delegations, Presenting Reports from Committees, Presenting Petitions, Introduction of Bills, First Reading of Senate Public Bills, and then Government Notices of Motions. It is the clear understanding of the House that we go through those items one at a time.

I have not had an opportunity to research one of your previous rulings, but there have been attempts by the Government in the past to skip various of those proceedings. If my memory serves me right, you have ruled on those occasions that we go through the items as they appear on the Order Paper. It is very essential that we be able to do that, otherwise the majority in the House can skip each of the daily items of routine procedure that we are expected to follow in the House.

I understand the Governments' desire to move to Bill C-22. I understand its desire to impose a motion limiting the debate on Bill C-22. However, more important than the desire of the Government is the ability of this House to go through the various items.

There are procedures which have been used by the Government as recently as last Wednesday in an attempt to get to Government Notices of Motions. There were motions which basically stated that we should move to the next item of business. That is the procedure and the only procedure the Government can use in order to move items along a little faster. That allows the House the opportunity to look at each of the items in order to determine whether it wants to deal with those items, and allows members who have reports to make on behalf of standing committees, petitions to present and who wish to introduce Bills, the opportunity to do what the Standing Orders allows them to do under Routine Proceedings.

There is one exception. It is clearly stated that we can move to Orders of the Day. That is the only exception the rules make. The rules do not say we can move to Government Notices of Motions at any time. They do not say we automatically have the right at any time to move to Petitions. It is only in respect of that one clear case that the rules speak, and they speak only because they recognize the necessity on occasion to deal with Government business and the actual debate. There is no precedence whatsoever given to Government Notices of Motion. If it was deemed by those who made the rules, and those who are responsible for Beauchesne's, to have Government Notices of Motions treated in the same manner as Orders of the Day, then the rules would clearly state that. However, they do not. Because they are silent on that point, I would presume that we should be following the ordinary rules of procedure, and going from one item to the next as they are listed, and if the Government wishes to proceed more quickly it can move the motion, as I indicated earlier, to move to the next item of business.

The Government does have options from time to time but has not always used them. If I can go back to my earlier point, I will quote Standing Order 27:

> A motion for reading the Orders of the Day shall have preference to any motion before the House.

That is understood to mean that in that particular case the Government can, at the time the Parliamentary Secretary, did or perhaps under Petitions or Introduction of Bills, skip a number of items under routine proceedings. Standing Order 27 is very clear on that.

However, it does not give the Government that same right, nor the Opposition, with respect to any other item of business. I think it is important that in ruling on this matter, the Chair look at the fact that Standing Order 27 does not give that right in regard to Government Notices of Motions or any other routine proceeding.

I would argue that the Chair should in its ruling indicate that this motion is completely out of order. Certainly the Government wants to get on with what it considers its priorities but there is nothing indicated in the rules of the House of Commons that that would support acceptance of this motion by the Chair.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, as I listen to the debate on this particular question I felt very moved to become involved, because I recognize that there is a very important principle involved. Let us just look at the background.

The Government has served notice that it wants to limit debate on Bill C-22. It can introduce that motion when it comes to Government Notices of Motions under Routine Proceedings. The principle here is that we have a majority Government with over 200 members. We have an opposition consisting of about 70 members. We have a Juggernaut of a Government with a puny Opposition. What the Government wants to do is use its might to crush what is illegal and what is recognized opposition in this House. It is not prepared to be patient.

The particular rubric the Chair asked us to deal with was whether in fact a Government Member could stand up under Tabling of Documents and, having tabled a document, then move a motion to skip several items of Routine Proceedings to go to what the Government wants, what it is lusting after. It cannot work that way. In a parliamentary process the House of Commons should be the first to practice democracy. Might is not always right.

Mr. Lewis: Let's vote.

Mr. Rodriguez: I want to tell the Parliamentary Secretary that might is not always right. I have petitions to enter. I recently read a press statement from the Parliamentary Secretary which criticized Members of the Opposition, and particularly my caucus, for delaying the presenting of petitions when in fact this is exactly the process the Government used to deny the rights of ordinary Canadian citizens to be heard through their petitions. This was just so the Government could serve its own selfish and undemocratic principles.

We know the Government wants to get Bill C-22 out of the way. We all recognize why it wants to get that Bill out of the way. In fact, there is trouble in the camp. There is division within the Tory ranks about Bill C-22. It is starting to seep to the surface and the Government does not want this mess to be aired. So the Government wants to crush out any legitimate opposition in the House of Commons to Bill C-22. I think it is an abuse of the rules and we have to stop it in its tracks right now. We have to say to the Parliamentary Secretary that he cannot use these subterfuges. He cannot stand upon the pretext of Tabling a Document, in this case tabling responses to Petitions, and then smuggle surreptitiously into the House a motion to skip several items and go directly to Motions.

I would humbly suggest that the Chair rule the Parliamentary Secretary's motion out of order and let Hon. Members in a democratic way proceed with introducing their petitions and deal with all the other routine business which should never be sacrificed for the unholy gains of the Government with respect to what it wants in Bill C-22.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have a few comments on this particular issue. The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) argued that the Government cannot short circuit the process. What we have had over the last few days is the Opposition doing just that. The Opposition has, over the course of the last few days, frustrated the ability of the Government to introduce a motion. It is a motion which it has every legitimate reason to introduce, but by virtue of the various dilatory motions, voting tactics and whatnot, has been prevented from occurring.

• (1130)

For several days now the consideration of Routine Proceedings has been subverted by these type of tactics. Therefore the normal and orderly conduct of the disposition of Routine Proceedings has been interfered with. Of course, it seems well and good for members of the Opposition to do that, but when it is done by the Government they cry wolf. They cannot have it both ways.

We know that members of the Opposition are determined at all costs to prevent the Government from introducing a legitimate motion.

Mr. Murphy: Closure by any other name.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Hon. Member calls it closure.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): You used it when you sat over here.

Mr. Mazankowski: There have been numerous discussions with the opposition Parties in an attempt to work our way out of this exercise, to try to provide sufficient time and debate on the issue. But I think the House should be reminded that something over 23 hours have been wasted on dilatory motions and procedural tactics. About 12 hours of debate have been held on second reading of this issue. The standing committee considered the matter for 82 hours at a total of 24 meetings. We have had four days of debate at report stage, as well as two days of waste in the consideration of dilatory motions and various votes. What we have to ask ourselves is the following. Does the Government have a right to introduce a motion?

Mr. Gauthier: Sure it does, in proper form.

Mr. Mazankowski: Absolutely. Why does the Opposition prevent us from doing that? We hear a great argument from members about the fact that they are being denied their right to present petitions. Standing Order 106(3) states that a petition can be presented orally or it can be tabled with the Clerk. There is no compelling reason which denies them the opportunity of presenting a petition. There is a method by which they can do it. It will be considered in the same way.

I think the fundamental point that has to be taken into consideration is this. If the consideration of Routine Proceedings is to be considered a sacred process, item by item, then we will have to go back and re-examine the dilatory motions and the procedural tactics, as well as the procedural acceptability of some of these dilatory motions.

When the House goes through the process of Routine Proceedings and does not go through it item by item, then the same thing should be held true when one moves to Orders of the Day. When one moves to Orders of the Day every item under Routine Proceedings is missed. That has been done in the past. Thus the sanctity of proceeding through Routine Proceedings item by item has been usurped and has not been applied. I think that is a fundamental principle. If that can be done in the one case, then surely there should be ample opportunity to go to a specific item of business.

I refer Your Honour to page 151 of Beauchesne's, Citation No. 417(2)(b)(ii) which states:

> Dilatory motions are designed to dispose of the original question either for the time being or permanently. They are usually of the following type:
> "That consideration of the question be postponed to ... ... (date)".
> "That the Orders of the Day be read."

The third one is the most important one. It is that the House proceed to another order of business. I think that is pretty fundamental because, in my view, it balances the opportunity to deal with a specific item, to skip items, or to skip all the items.

All we are asking for here is some fairness in the application of the rules. If on the one hand one can move to Orders of the Day and skip every item under Routine Proceedings, then surely there has to be some balance. If that were to apply then that could be done every day and, ad infinitum, the Government would be prevented from bringing forth a motion under the way the rules are set up. Surely that was never the intent of the rules.

The Government surely has a right to bring in a motion. Members have the right to bring in motions. But what is happening here, and what we have been experiencing over the last few days, is the denial of the Government to legitimately bring forth a motion. That cannot be, irrespective of the make-up of the House.

I am interested in the pleadings of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) who suggests that the Opposition is being crushed. I think it is the tyranny of the minority that is usurping and subverting the orderly process of debate in the House. I would probably say that even if I were sitting on the opposite side of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: What we are really saying here, and this is the purpose of the motion, is that it is time to look at this issue in its true perspective. If this does not offer a way out of the log-jam that we are in, then I think we are ignoring some of the fundamental principles regarding the way the institution of Parliament should work, namely, the right of the Government to introduce a Bill and to introduce a motion. The Government is now being denied that opportunity. The motion put by the Parliamentary Secretary provides us a way out of that situation.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the issue before us is relatively simple. It is this. Can the Government move a motion which, if passed, will enable the Government to leap over individual headings of Routine Proceedings in order to reach a heading of Routine Proceedings that it wants to get to?

Before dealing with that point at some reasonable length, I have to take issue with what my hon. friend said about petitions. He seems to have said that because the Standing Orders give an option to a member presenting a petition, to either file it with the Clerk or read it out in the House, the two methods are necessarily of equal weight. He seems to state that that would be acceptable to the Hon. Member who wishes to present a petition or to a person signing it if the opportunity to present it orally in the House was not there. I do not think that is acceptable to Members of the House generally, or to individual Canadians who wish to use their right to petition Government and Parliament. There is surely something special about being able to present a petition in the House. I do not think that it should be swept aside so cavalierly.

With respect to what I have defined as the basic issue, that is, can the Government by the type of motion moved on its behalf today leap over the various portions of the Routine Proceedings to arrive at that particular portion of Routine Proceedings it wishes to make use of, the Government House Leader made a great deal of Standing Order 27 which states:

> A motion for reading the Orders of the Day shall have preference to any motion before the House.

First, I want to say that, rather than strengthening his argument, I think his use of this Standing Order as a point in making his case really weakens the argument he wants to make, because the Standing Order is silent on all the other motions that might have been listed there. It mentions only a motion to go to Orders of the Day.

• (1140)

There is a long-standing legal Latin maxim, which I will not attempt to quote here because I have a feeling I am going to get it wrong, the general thrust of which is that if a court judgment or a precedent is silent on a point, then that has some meaning. The meaning is, simply put, that it was intended for example in this case, in the Standing Order that only a motion for reading Orders of the Day shall have preference over any motion before the House.

I think it would be open to you to rule that the wording of this Standing Order does not support the point being made by the Government House Leader, but rather supports the point being made by the distinguished opposition Whip, that if the Government wants to move from one item under Routine Proceedings to another, it must make individual motions dealing with each item of Routine Proceedings. It is not authorized under the rules or the precedents of this House to move a motion leaping over all the items or portions of Routine Proceedings until it reaches the one it wants to get to.

The Government House Leader was good enough to refer you to page 151 of the Fifth Edition of Beauchesne's, paragraph 417. This seems to be a quotation from a ruling by a Speaker recorded in the Journals of the House on June 29, 1971, at page 759. It says motions may be divided into several categories. Subparagraph (1) deals with substantive motions, and I am not going to read that. Subparagraph (2) deals with privileged motions, and I am not going to read that. There is subparagraph (2)(a) which deals with amendments and says they are discussed in detail later. Then subparagraph (2)(b) deals with superseding motions. I want to read that because I think it is very relevant to what you are being asked to consider. It says:

> Superseding motions, though independent in form, are moved in the course of debate on questions which they seek to set aside. They may only be moved when a question is under debate, and cannot be moved by a Member rising on a point of order . . . Superseding motions cannot be applied to one another;

It then gives an example, and continues:

> Superseding motions are divided into two classes; namely, the previous question and dilatory motions.

Subparagraph (2)(b)(ii) says:

> Dilatory motions are designed to dispose of the original question either for the time being or permanently. They are usually of the following type:

One of the examples given is the one listed by the Government House Leader:

> That the House proceed to (name another Order).

I am reading all this because I want to make the point that a distinguished predecessor of yours ruled that a superseding motion, and this includes the dilatory motion of the kind my hon. friend says is acceptable, applies, first, only during debate and, second, when the House is being asked to move from one order of business to another.

I submit that when we are dealing with Routine Proceedings, at least at the stage the Deputy Government House Leader moved his motion, we are not in a stage of debate. In fact, a motion of the kind that my hon. friend has moved is not debatable in and of itself. He did not make the motion during a part of the proceedings of the House when something was being debated. He got the floor simply to table the Government's responses to petitions. there was nothing under debate at the time he moved his motion.

Second, the various items listed in the rules under Routine Proceedings, I submit, are not of themselves either Orders of the Day or orders in the sense that they are portions of the whole range of things that are done during the day, so that you can move a motion, for example, and apply it in these circumstances to proceed to Orders of the Day. I repeat, the various portions or items listed under Routine Proceedings are not orders or stages of debate.

If that is the case, then the motion proposed by the Deputy Government House Leader is not in order. Or, putting it another way, you cannot move a superseding motion when there is no item before the House to be superseded. I repeat, a stage of Routine Proceedings is not an item of debate. One could not, for instance, move a motion to extend the sitting under Standing Order 9(4) to consider Routine Proceedings because that Standing Order refers to an item being debated, and I am saying that Routine Proceedings are not items being debated. So if an item is not debatable there cannot be a superseding motion because there is no debate to be superseded.

With respect to Routine Proceedings, that daily routine is very important to this House. I think, Sir, you ruled last fall that it was in order to move from one item of Routine Proceedings to the next by means of a motion which, if necessary, can be voted on by this House. However, if that is the case I think it follows that, as I have said, you cannot skip a whole lot of items by a motion supported by the majority of government Members in this House to go to another one further down the line which the Government wants to reach.

So I say with the utmost respect to the ingenious arguments offered by the Government House Leader that they still do not have a persuasive effect, such that you should rule that the motion of the Deputy Government House Leader is in order; but rather that you should, on the basis of the points I and others who have objected to the acceptability of the motion have made, rule that it is not in order. Instead, each item of Routine Proceedings must be reached, and if the Government does not want to have them dealt with it must move a motion as each item of Routine Proceedings is reached to go on to the next one. I think this reflects both what our Standing Orders say, what the precedents say, and also reflects the importance of Routine Proceedings in the operations of this House of Commons and, therefore, their importance in the operation of our parliamentary system.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to make a couple of remarks with respect to the motion now before the House.

As Your Honour will appreciate, the motion was moved by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader immediately upon the calling of the item "Tabling of Documents". The item "Tabling of Documents" is there for a very specific purpose. It is an item which permits the tabling of documents. It is not an item which permits any form of debate on the tabling of those documents. That is an important point.

• (1150)

Had the Parliamentary Secretary risen and tabled a document, he would not have been in a position to move a motion or to debate anything. He would merely have been in a position of taking a document and presenting it to someone, and that would be the end of it. Surely the first point is that under the guise of "Tabling of Documents", the Parliamentary Secretary has moved a motion which is clearly not in order.

The second point is that the House is governed by precedent. In the absence of very clear direction from the Standing Orders, the House is governed by precedent. What the Parliamentary Secretary is attempting to do today has already been attempted on another occasion, and Your Honour has already made a ruling in respect of the matter.

I draw to Your Honour's attention the proceedings of the House on November 24, 1986. On that occasion, immediately following the presentation of petitions, the Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council (Mr. Mazankowski) rose in his place to move the following motion, as reported at page 1435 of Hansard:

> That the House proceed to Government Notices of Motions.

That is precisely what the Parliamentary Secretary is attempting to do once again today. Immediately members on this side rose to intervene in respect of the propriety of the matter, but Your Honour, without hearing any representations at that time, said the following:

> The motion is that the House proceed to Government Notices of Motions, which means that, if the Chair should rule that it is in order, a number of items that are in the usual order under Routine Proceedings would not be heard. It is the view of the Chair that that would be inappropriate and that we should proceed from item to item. Consequently, I regret to advise the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister that in the view of the Chair the motion is out of order.

The motion was out of order on November 24, 1986, and it remains just as out of order today. There has been no subsequent ruling by Your Honour in any way varying this previous ruling. There has been no change in the Standing Orders which would supersede this very learned ruling of the Chair. In view of the fact that this very important ruling has not been in any way overruled, either by Your Honour or by the House by way of changes to the Standing Orders, surely the long-standing practices and traditions of the House must govern. That would require that this precedent be observed in this case as well.

In response to the comments made by the President of the Privy Council, I want to note what he said. He was looking for a way out of a legislative log-jam. He says that he wants to get on to the debate of Bill C-22, the legislation which would have such a devastating impact upon the elderly, the poor, and the disabled in Canada. He accuses the Opposition of delaying. He accuses the Opposition of trying to avoid debate on Bill C-22. However, the item of business before the House today under Government Orders is listed as No. 22, which is:

> Resuming consideration of report stage of Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act—

The President of the Privy Council is sucking and blowing at the same time. If he really wants to get to the business of dealing with the Patent Act, let him proceed.

The President of the Privy Council is also saying that his hands are tied, that this tyranny of the minority is blocking the Government from proceeding. I suggest that the President of the Privy Council and his Parliamentary Secretary should have another look at the Standing Orders. Quite clearly there is provision, if the Government wants to accept the political responsibility, for it to ram through the legislation and introduce closure; calling it what it really is instead of trying to bring it in through the back door. They could proceed, if they dared to do so. Despite the overwhelming majority of the people of Canada, they could proceed under Standing Order 57. That is an option with which they have chosen—and I might say quite understandably—not to proceed.

Finally, if Your Honour should overrule the precedent which has been established in that very important ruling of November 24 of last year, what would be the impact upon the rights of Members of the House? Effectively it would mean that the Government could rise at the beginning of Routine Proceedings each day under the first item of Tabling of Documents and move that we effectively proceed to Government Notices of Motions. What that would mean is that the presentation of petitions would be denied.

An Hon. Member: They can table them.

Mr. Robinson: What more fundamental right is there of Members of Parliament than the presentation of petitions? The Government would deny that right and in the process would overrule the ruling of Your Honour of November 24.

Someone from the other side of the House said that we can always table petitions, that Canadians would not be denied the right to petition the House because they can still table them; they do not have to be presented in the House.

However, there is another important element of Routine Proceedings, that is, the Introduction of Bills. At this time I have three very important Bills on the Order Paper. If the Government's attempt to bulldoze its way through to Government Notices of Motions is accepted today, it effectively means that Your Honour would be accepting a proposal to deny Private Members any opportunity to introduce Bills.

Mr. Althouse: And the draw is coming.

Mr. Robinson: As the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) has noted, the draw is coming this week for precedence in the Order Paper. Not only are Private Members thus denied the basic right to present Bills on matters of importance to their constituents and, indeed, to the country, they are denied the right to have the Bills included in the draw for precedence. Surely it is fundamentally unacceptable that this basic right of the presentation of Bills should be subverted in this way by the motion of the Parliamentary Secretary. One cannot introduce a Bill the way one can table a petition in the House with the Clerk or with the Speaker. The only possible way of presenting a Bill is by presenting it in the House. Should Your Honour rule that the Government can simply skip all this, effectively that basic right of each individual Member of the House on both the government side and the opposition side is being denied.

For example, if the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) should find that his two-month deadline to the Government has expired and the Government has not moved forward with conflict of interest legislation, and if that Hon. Member wished to present a Bill on conflict of interest, calling upon the Government to move forward in that area, the Government could say to him: "Not only are we going to kick you out as a Parliamentary Secretary and throw you out of the caucus, we won't even let you introduce a Bill in the House". That is the effect of this Government's attempt to railroad Parliament.

I would call upon Your Honour to recognize the long-standing precedent that has been established in this regard, to recognize the attempt by the Government to override the rights of private Members of this House. I would hope that in doing so Your Honour would recognize that this motion is entirely out of order.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with considerable interest to the comments of my colleague from the New Democratic Party who was talking about getting thrown out of caucus, reprimands and what have you. I will leave it at that.

On the motion put forward by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Lewis), I could not help but take note of some of the language used by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) in trying to defend the indefensible. He talked about opposition Members usurping and subverting. Such language is pretty harsh even for the alleged mild-mannered Deputy Prime Minister.

From a procedural and a substantive point of view it is my contention that the motion put forward by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister is flawed. Some of the reasons have already been echoed and I will not go into them in great detail. It must be remembered by members on both sides that when the Parliamentary Secretary took the floor he was under the auspices, if you will, of Tabling of Documents. The member was on his feet for no other purpose but to table documents. As has been said by other members there is no debate at that point in time.

Second, superseding motions are referred to in Beauchesne's at page 151. The precondition for a superseding motion is that there be debate on the floor. There is no debate on the floor, Mr. Speaker. Again, you have the motion of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister pursuing a flawed procedural motion in my view.

Third, let me come to the procedural aspect and your ruling made on November 24, 1986. The individual who so willingly today refers to usurping and subverting was told he was out of order by yourself for trying to do something that he is attempting to weasel in today.

Finally, on the substance of the motion, the Deputy Prime Minister took great pains to tell Members of the House that we have had four days of debate at report stage. But the Deputy Prime Minister very conveniently, for his own purposes, for his own political agenda, to suit the multinational corporations which have written the provisions of Bill C-22, has forgotten to tell Members of this House that there are 47 amendments. The Deputy Prime Minister just brushes that aside. He also fails, on the substance of the motion we are obviously going to get to at some point in time, to indicate that the committee which studied this Bill was prohibited from calling certain witnesses. The committee was limited in the amount of time it had to deal with the witnesses and the committee was limited in its duration by the Government. Now the Deputy Prime Minister has the unmitigated gall to say on the floor of the House that the opposition Members are usurping—

Mr. Mazankowski: Subverting is the word.

Mr. Dingwall: —are subverting. Shame on the Deputy Prime Minister, with 47 amendments which Members of this Party and Members of the New Democratic Party have put forward and with four days of debate. Yet somehow on a major piece of legislation we are to accept the buffoonery of the Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Mazankowski: We have had 82 hours.

Mr. Dingwall: Let me come to petitions. The Deputy Prime Minister says that you can table them with the Clerk. I want to inform the Deputy Prime Minister through you, Mr. Speaker, that there are a great number of Canadians who want to have their Member of Parliament and other members address the issue of Bill C-22.

I say through you to the Deputy Prime Minister that the motion of his Parliamentary Secretary is flawed in three procedural areas. On the substance of the motion, it does not make any sense whatsoever. In view of the precedent which you laid down in the House on November 24, 1986, Mr. Speaker, I suggest respectfully that you have no other alternative but to rule out of order a motion put forward by the Parliamentary Secretary, the intent of which is to choke off meaningful debate on a very important piece of legislation affecting Canadians.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my intervention will be very brief and simple. I am not a lawyer. I do not want to talk about the procedures in that sense. I consider that your duty in this, Mr. Speaker, is to give all members equal treatment. My wishes are just as important in this House as the wishes of any member of the Government. The Government cannot, therefore, take any route which will force through this House of Parliament any of its wishes against those of any other Member in this House, particularly if they go against traditions and precedent and if they are against routines which, for hundreds of years, have been built up as being necessary for the good and the fair operation of this House. I think that is possibly the basis of my intervention.

What is good and fair as far as the operation of this House is concerned? This motion, if allowed to go through, eliminates part of the democratic process of which we are so proud. It is a denigration of the process of the House. Is that really what we want? Is that what you want, Sir? Is that what Members of this House want? Do we want a process that throws away hundreds of years of procedures just because the Government has a Bill which we in the Opposition and which many Canadians think is offensive and which we think requires much more debate than it has had in this House? What I wish, and what many people wish, is to go on debating the amendments that have been proposed to Bill C-22. We do not want to go into a closure procedure which will not allow us to be fully heard.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I find myself surprised and shocked that the Parliamentary Secretary would show such little regard or respect for Parliament as has been demonstrated today. I want to begin by saying quite clearly that what has been done today cannot be directly connected to Bill C-22. If you argue that somehow a particular Bill justifies what the Parliamentary Secretary has done, I would have to say that that in no way relates to the Routine Proceedings of the day, regardless of how the Government feels about the way in which the Opposition has dealt with a particular—

• (1210)

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) has raised a point which is of interest. He is saying that the procedural point that is being debated ought to have nothing to do with the fact that there is behind it Bill C-22. I happen to agree with the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior, and I want it made very clear that, so far as the Chair is concerned, the Chair is not the least bit interested in what Bill is behind it. The Chair is interested in the point that is being argued, and that is whether or not it is appropriate for the Government, under these circumstances, to skip matters of Routine Proceedings.

I want that to be understood very clearly by all Hon. Members and the public. It is not the place of the Chair to move government business through the House, nor is it the place of the Chair to take into account the relative merits of any proposal of the Government.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I thank you very much for that intervention. That was the point I wished to make and I will say no more about it. Very simply, my argument is that Bill C-

22, or any other Bill, is not relevant to the matter before us today. Your Honour has underlined that and I thank you for it.

The question before us is, is it possible for any Member of the House to short-circuit the routine business of the day? It is very clear in the Projected Order of Business that the daily routine of business is composed of matters which must be dealt with consequentially; one must follow the other. It is the routine way in which this House handles its affairs.

You can appreciate, Mr. Speaker, that a Minister may be present to make a very pressing statement and an Hon. Member may be present to present a report from the committee. There may be a report from an interparliamentary delegation to be presented. Certainly there are bound to be petitions of some import that Hon. Members want to present. For any Hon. Member to rise in his place to move from Tabling of Documents directly to Motions without the unanimous consent of the House is, I argue, quite clearly an abuse not only of the traditions of the House but of the way in which we conduct our business from day to day.

The Chair will know that it is impossible for the Parliament of Canada to conduct its affairs day by day in a haphazard way. There must be an anticipation of the next item. If that cannot be anticipated, then Hon. Members cannot be prepared to make their contributions to the House, regardless of whether it is a report, a petition or the introduction of a Bill.

I want to say to the Parliamentary Secretary, through you, Mr. Speaker, that what he has done today comes as a surprise and a shock. This is particularly so because members of the Party opposite said they would reform the Parliament of Canada and that they had respect for this institution. For the Parliamentary Secretary to attempt to short-circuit the routine business of the day by moving from one item to another way down the list flies in the face of the rhetoric and the views that have been expressed opposite about the need to reform Parliament. I can in no way see that such a motion can be justified or acceptable.

I call upon you, Sir, on the basis of what has been said by Hon. Members on this side of the House, to call this motion out of order and to have us go back to the next item following Tabling of Documents, the routine and regular way in which we do business in the House.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I shall not be too long because the argument on our side was covered very ably by the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski).

As to the question of what the House can and cannot do, I hold the view that the rules of Parliament are designed to facilitate the business of the House. When the House makes a decision, it is the decision of the House based upon a motion made. I do not believe that the Canadian people sent us to Parliament to remain mired in routine proceedings and for that—

Mr. Axworthy: What? What?

Mr. Penner: Never heard such a thing.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I notice some amazement on the part of Hon. Members opposite. Why do they not try it out the next time they go home, try it out on the people who sent them here, the taxpayers. Ask them if they want Hon. Members to spend day after day mired in routine proceedings rather than dealing with the business of Government. Why do they not ask their constituents?

In any event, I wish to deal quickly with the matter of superseding motions. On page 151 of Beauchesne's in Citation 417, several motions are referred to as being superseding motions. All of these motions are designed to enable the House to move from one item of business to another. I suggest that that list is not exclusive.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), referred to precedents. If one argues that the House is governed by precedent, one must also take into account how precedents occur. Precedents occur when things happen. If we follow the argument that the House deals only with precedents, we must ask when the first precedent was created. Obviously the first precedent was created when the House made a decision on a motion. We suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the House has the ability to decide on the motion before it and that the Chair should rule that motion in order.

In addition to the motions referred to on page 151 of Beauchesne's, I would like to add for the Chair's consideration a citation found in Beauchesne's Fourth Edition on page 383. It is referred to as "Forms and Formulae No. 45". The form there is "That the House do now revert to Routine Proceedings", or "to Government Orders", or "to Public Bills and Orders", or "to Private Bills" or "to Notices of Motions". Those are all items which are referred to as headings under Routine Proceedings. Obviously at some time in the past, that type of motion was in vogue. I suggest that we bring it into vogue now.

The question of how one submits petitions to Parliament has been referred to in the debate on this point of order. There is no question that under Standing Order 106(3), Hon. Members have the ability to submit petitions to the Table. Every day as Parliamentary Secretary to the government House Leader I rise to supply responses to those petitions which have been presented to the House. That is definitely in order. However, I would like to deal with something that came up in the course of debate.

There has been a suggestion by the Hon. Member for Burnaby that the Government is preventing the introduction of three very important Bills. For those who are perhaps not aware of this, I would point out that Hon. Members introduce Bills under the heading of Introduction of Bills. The three very important Bills the Hon. Member for Burnaby wishes to introduce on an urgent basis so that they make the next draw are all listed on the Order Paper under the date of February 2, 1987. For two and a half months these very urgent and important Bills have been sitting on the Order Paper. Today we are preventing them from being introduced.

I am sure that if the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) were here, he would tell us that he has several very important Bills on the Order Paper, but at least the Bills of the Hon. Member for Burnaby are from 1987. The Bills of the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap are from 1986. All of these Bills are so important and urgent? The definition of urgency according to members of the NDP is not the same as it is in the rest of the country.

• (1220)

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the argument this morning has been very effective and useful. I am sure Hon. Members would want to give the Parliamentary Secretary the courtesy of allowing him to complete his argument.

Mr. Lewis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In the interests of making this House work, I advise the House that when I am recognized to reply to questions on the Order Paper I will move the following motion:

> That the House do now revert to presenting petitions and continue with the balance of routine proceedings until they are completed, or 1 p.m., whichever comes first.

That would allow my hon. colleagues who have important petitions to present to present them. I will also give a Government undertaking that no government Bills will be introduced under Introduction of Bills, which will allow my colleague with urgent Bills to introduce them; and further, that no government notices of motions will be proceeded with; and that government members will move no concurrence motions.

If I were to move that motion under Questions on the Order Paper, upon which motion we certainly would not need a recorded division, my hon. colleagues would be able to present the petitions which they have all claimed they are ready to present. Therefore, I give notice that I am prepared to do that under Questions on the Order Paper.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be of great assistance if the Parliamentary Secretary put his proposed offer in writing so that we could look very carefully at exactly what the Government is suggesting before we proceed.

In response to the comments of the Parliamentary Secretary, it is astounding that a person whom the Government has designated as responsible for handling its parliamentary affairs would express such total disdain for the rights of Parliament. It is incredible to hear a Parliamentary Secretary to the House Leader say that Parliament "gets mired down in routine proceedings". You know, Mr. Speaker, as do Members of this House, that those Routine Proceedings are built upon hundreds of years of tradition and precedent designed to protect the rights, not only of Members of Parliament, but of the constituents whom they represent. For a Parliamentary Secretary to say that we are "mired down" is probably the most extreme expression of an authoritarian attitude that I have heard in this House in all the years I have been here.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: That says to me that the Government, which has a large majority, has not been able to manage its affairs, is getting frustrated at its own incompetence, and is now lashing out, not only at the press, the Opposition and everyone else, but at Parliament itself. It wants to use the thunderbolt of its own majority to ram things through this House. This is incredible. We have witnessed today a further stage of deterioration in the capacity of the Government to represent any form of civility, any sense of proper behaviour in this House, and any sense of obligation or responsibility as far as Parliament is concerned.

A concession has now been offered. It is interesting that in the last three or four days as the Government has tried to push this Bill through with a large number of parliamentary devices it has only succeeded in seizing up Parliament. We have not been able to conduct the business of Parliament because of the Government's failure in parliamentary intrigue and device. If the Government had allowed matters to pursue their normal course, for debate to continue, amendments to be presented, and routine proceedings to carry forward, we would have made an awful lot more progress than we have until now. It would be unseemly to give any credence to this kind of behaviour and attitude.

It is important that we establish clearly, as Beauchesne's has clearly said, that "the proceedings of the House must be taken up in accordance with the order of business given in the Order Paper". Why does the Government, simply because it has a big majority, think it can overturn those well established rules and precedents? The Government seems to indicate that there is a growing frustration among the Canadian public to get this patent Bill passed. In fact, the representations we have received by way of petitions is so overwhelmingly against the Bill that the Government wants to deny the right of people to have that point of view expressed.

Mr. Speaker: In order to be sure that there is no misunderstanding, the Chair is not concerned with whether this is a drug Bill or any other Bill. It may be that there are differences of opinion among the Parties as to what motivates one side or the other. That is not the issue before the Chair. Before the Chair is the issue of whether or not the Government can, by one device or another, reach Motions in Routine Proceedings. Most Hon. Members have directed most of their comment in that direction. I know the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), who knows this place well, would want to assist the Chair in that regard.

Mr. Axworthy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly want to assist. I was only responding to the only argument put forward by the Parliamentary Secretary. The only justification he was able to offer for the motion which was introduced in the House this morning was this demand for some efficiency, from their point of view, in the way in which the system works. I was simply pointing out that in Parliament efficiency is not necessarily the primary objective; democracy and the right of people to be heard is the primary value. That is what we believe is being frustrated by these kinds of motions.

My colleague, the Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall), our House Leader, our Whip, and others on this side have all said that we want to deal with this legislation, but that we want to deal with it as it should be dealt with, through the proper rules of Parliament, and that it should not be twisted and turned by the kind of devices which were presented this morning. It is important that we look at the text of what the Parliamentary Secretary said. That is the thrust of my argument.

We have heard the rules of Beauchesne's and others. However, the arguments put forward by the Government have shown clearly that the Government is frustrated and wants to use its majority to end its frustration. That is hardly a good reason for overturning the well-established wisdom of the ages which is incorporated in our orders of proceeding and the precedents of this House.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank all Hon. Members; the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), the Parliamentary Secretary and all the others who have entered into this debate because it is a matter of some interest and some concern. I say to all Hon. Members and to the public which is watching that the Chair does not view this procedural debate lightly. The tradition of Parliament has been that procedural matters are always a legitimate means through which an Opposition can express its concern with any piece of legislation or a motion. There is, of course, the absolute tradition of the use of procedural matters as part of the cut and thrust of parliamentary affairs. I want Hon. Members to know that, because I respect that, I have listened with great attention to the comments which have been made.

I took down the comments of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry. He said, "—efficiency is not necessarily the primary objective, democracy is—". I have certainly seldom heard it put better. It will fall to my obligation and duty to decide just how the particular matter before me is determined. Certainly in principle, I think the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) has put a long, vibrant and useful history of Parliament in very succinct terms. I thank him for it because that is very helpful.

I propose to defer my decision on this until eleven o'clock tomorrow morning. It would be my disposition, unless there is consent in the Chamber to do something else, to move directly to Questions on the Order Paper. However, I think that the Parliamentary Secretary was saying that if any members seem to be aggrieved at not having been able to go through the other items in the Routine Proceedings this morning, he would be prepared to move that we revert to Routine Proceedings. I think that was the intention of the Parliamentary Secretary.

I do want to say that the practice has been that a reversion back is done with consent. I am not saying, because that is the practice, that it may always necessarily be the law, but I am pointing out that that has been the practice in this place. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has made that suggestion and, of course, I am in the hands of the House. If the House decides to consent to that, then that would be perfectly appropriate.

I do not want to have to make a ruling at this time on whether or not that can be done with a vote and without consent. However, if there is consent the Chair would be happy to do that. If there is not consent, then the Chair will move to Questions on the Order Paper. Perhaps I could have some indication as to whether the other side would consent.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, of course, we would like to go back and complete Routine Proceedings but we cannot agree that the motion be put to the House, because you will understand that that would destroy the argument we have been making to you this morning, that there cannot be a motion that supersedes . . . This would be a superseding motion and I do not think that would be acceptable in terms of procedure. The House can do those things with unanimous consent, but I do not want it to be done by way of a motion because I believe it would destroy the arguments we have been putting this morning. However, by consent, I agree.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I will also give unanimous consent on the part of the New Democratic Party to begin with Petitions at this time. However, I suggest that it only be done with the caveat of all the preconditions listed by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary could help the Chair. There seems to be consent to go back to Petitions, if that is what the Parliamentary Secretary was suggesting.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet, I want to advise the House that we will be answering Questions Nos. 78 and 79 today. I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Gauthier: You have not got consent.

Mr. Lewis: I have not asked for it yet.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Chair can help. The Parliamentary Secretary has suggested that that is what he would be doing. I think it is understood that we are not at that point yet. I am anxious to know what is the will of the House and perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary could help in that respect.

Mr. Lewis: Now that I have tabled the questions, I would be prepared to move, seconded by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski):

> That the House do now revert to Presenting Petitions and continue with the balance of Routine Proceedings until they are completed or 1 p.m., whichever comes first.

I suggest that the Government will undertake that no government Bills will be introduced under Introduction of Bills, that no government Notices of Motions will be introduced under Government Notices of Motions, and no government Member of Parliament will proceed with a concurrence motion.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion. There are certainly caveats there by which the Chair would obviously be bound. Is that acceptable?

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, the caveat that myself and the Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) put on unanimous consent is that there be no motion, but that we would automatically be on Petitions by unanimous consent. We do not want this motion adopted by the House because we believe that it sets a precedent for the very thing we have been arguing against for the last hour and a half.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Chair can settle that. I am not prepared to get into a procedural argument over the motion.

Let us put it this way, if it is acceptable to the government side, a suggestion has been made to revert. That is all it is. If there is the consent the House can do anything. It does not bind anyone procedurally, and it certainly does not bind me.

If it is the will of the House to revert to presenting petitions, I will simply clean up the business of Questions on the Order Paper and we will revert.

I can assure you that under no circumstances will this be taken as a precedent which would create any of the difficulties suggested by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) and the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I think the concern on this side is that the Parliamentary Secretary is seeking to move halfway back up the daily routine order of business from where he actually wanted to be. He is seeking to do that by way of motion. We are saying that if he is seeking unanimous consent of the House to do that, then such unanimous consent will be granted. The point is that we do not want the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to proceed in this way by motion, because by moving halfway up the Order Paper by a motion he is doing exactly what he was trying to do by moving to the very bottom. That is what we object to.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has put the point and that is why the Chair is suggesting that if the House wishes to revert back, as a consequence of arrangements between both sides, the Chair is quite prepared to do that. If it is a question of having to argue whether or not a motion under these circumstances is appropriate at this time, the Chair is not prepared to enter into that because I already have a serious matter to decide.

Perhaps both sides can settle this, because we are running out of time anyway.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, since there does not seem to be unanimous consent to what we thought was an honourable suggestion, I suggest that we proceed with Orders of the Day, which is the next item on the Order Paper.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair nearly worked out a solution. Perhaps that cannot always be done.

The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, Questions on the Order Paper. He has tabled the questions.

Mr. Gauthier: He could not have done that. We are not there yet.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I believe I have delivered them to the Table already.

Mr. Speaker: It is true that they have been delivered to the Table but the Chair wanted to make the position clear. Strictly speaking, the Parliamentary Secretary was not at that stage. In order to make it easy for the Chair, perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary could just rise and go through it again.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I, along with many of my colleagues, am just trying to follow exactly what is happening here. There was a motion which was debated for about an hour and a half. You have given us the undertaking that you will read the submissions and come tomorrow with a ruling. In my opinion, that motion was not put to the House. Therefore, I take it that it lapses at this time because nothing has happened to it. I submit that we cannot leave a motion to lapse like that, unless the Government wants to drop the motion that we proceed to Motions.

• (1240)

Mr. Speaker: I think I can clarify this. I am reserving on the motion of the Parliamentary Secretary this morning. We have heard argument and that argument is now over with. There has been some suggestion, which has not reached a point of consent, with respect to reverting back to Petitions. In the process there was perhaps some misunderstanding and no doubt it was the fault of the Chair. The Parliamentary Secretary did rise on the matter of Questions on the Order Paper, to which the Chair had indicated it would proceed after announcing it was reserving on the motion.

The position of the Chair is that we are at the point of Questions on the Order Paper. I want to ensure that matter is properly dealt with, and I invite the Parliamentary Secretary to rise on Questions on the Order Paper, and we will deal with that.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the House that the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 78 and 79. I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

CANADA STUDENT LOANS PROGRAM

Question No. 78—Ms. McDonald:

1. In the last year, has the Canada Student Loans Program directorate received any complaints concerning Schedule 2 of the loans form and, if so, how many?

2. Are full-time post-secondary students being charged interest on their student loans because of errors in completing Schedule 2 and, if so, in how many instances?

3. Since September 4, 1984, has the Secretary of State used his ministerial discretion to forgive interest accumulating on a Canada student loan as a result of Schedule 2 not being completed when the debtor remains a full-time or part-time student and, if so, how many times?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): 1. The Canada Student Loans Program receives a great volume of telephone inquiries and correspondence on a daily basis, including complaints concerning Schedule 2. However, because records are not kept by subject matter, the number of complaints concerning Schedule 2 are not available.

2. No.

3. No.

VIA RAIL NON-SMOKING FACILITIES

Question No. 79—Ms. McDonald:

1. On VIA rail facilities are provisions for non-smoking passengers made for (a) completely smoke free air (b) designated but not separately ventilated non-smoking areas and, if so, what are they and (i) on which passenger train routes (ii) in which train stations do they apply?

2. Does VIA rail cancel its scheduled non-smoking train services and, if so, how frequently?

3. To the knowledge of the Government, have health and safety chairmen been appointed to promote smoking and to work against the establishment of a smoke free work environment and the protection of VIA rail passengers from side-stream smoke?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): 1. (a) Completely smoke free cars operate on all VIA trains serving the following routes: Montreal-Quebec City (South Shore), Montreal-Ottawa, Ottawa-Toronto (except the overnight train), Montreal-Toronto (except the overnight train), Toronto-Windsor, Toronto-Sarnia, Toronto-London and Toronto-Havelock.

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Parliamentary Secretary would be kind enough to indicate when I may expect a reply to Question No. 63?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I shall take that under notice and get back to my colleague as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair should advise Hon. Members that we are, therefore, now on the item of Orders of the Day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Friday, April 3, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I should advise Hon. Members before we proceed with debate that because this is a Budget item there will be no Private Members' Hour or Adjournment Debate this evening.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, the Budget which was presented to the House by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on February 18, I would submit, is in many ways a most curious document. It is reported to have been said by some that it is an economic report card. If that is the case, it is certainly a report card which I would not want to take home to my parents, if I were a student.

The Minister said this Budget represents a breathing space prior to tax reform. Perhaps it gives the Minister of Finance and the Government a breathing space, and it certainly gives a breathing space to corporations which continue to enjoy tax benefits prior to tax reform, but it gives no breathing space to those who are required to pay more as a result of this Budget and the Minister's preceding Budgets. If one belongs to that class of persons called "the working poor", if one has no job at all, or if one lives in a region of Canada where economic disparity is its most apt description, there is no breathing space, because the tax burden is a little heavier and there is no relief in sight.

The Budget seems to say in places that the Government understands our problems, it is sympathetic, but there is nothing it can do to help. In fact, the Budget seems to say that the problems of the Government are bigger and more serious than those of the working poor, those without a job or those who live in one of the regions of economic disparity. The Government is saying it is sympathetic, it cares and understands, but it cannot help because its problems are bigger than our problems.

Members of Parliament might be able to get away with that in talking to each other in Parliament, but to those living in regions of economic disparity, those who are part of the group known as the working poor or those who are unemployed, it is not very convincing at all to say "My friend, you think you have problems. Do you not know that the problems of the Government are bigger than your problems? Do you not know that the Government is sympathetic and cares but there is nothing it can do to help?"

The Budget seems to say in places that the Government knows that what it is doing is not right, but it is going to do it anyway. I will give an example of that. One part of the Budget says that the federal sales tax is unfair and inefficient, that it is a silent killer of jobs. Few parliamentarians would argue with that. But having given this accurate analysis of an inappropriate tax, the Government goes on to impose further sales and excise taxes, digging a little deeper, to the tune of some $700 million, into the pockets of consumers.

It is true there are some consumers who can bear that burden, but I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that those who belong to that group called the working poor, those who are without jobs and depend either on unemployment insurance or provincial and local welfare, or persons who live in one of the disadvantaged regions, cannot bear this additional burden.

In his agenda for economic renewal the Minister states that Canada's prosperity depends upon drawing on the strength of all regions of this country. When the Minister wrote this, or when it was written for him, what was in mind was the nature of Canada, that all of the regions have their part to play in the total national well-being . We cannot depend on just a few regions which are bursting their seams with prosperity. The Minister says that Canada's prosperity depends upon the strengths of all regions, and he is right. What we are saying is that we want what he preaches put into practice.

The same Minister who used that marvellous text, that the strength of Canada depends on all of its regions, goes on to say that the renewed health of the national economy masks a number of regional problems, particularly in regions dependent upon primary resources. So the Minister recognizes that there is a problem.

I know from first-hand experience whereof the Minister speaks, because the region of northern Ontario which I represent, along with other regions, looks to its natural resources for its economic health. It looks, for example, to the forest industry and to the mining industry. It looks to agriculture and to tourism. Those are all sectors which depend upon natural resources for the health of those industries.

I want to report to the House and to you, Sir, that those four areas in the region I represent are not doing well at all. We have problems. Those problems are serious.

• (1250)

Again, the Minister of Finance is fair enough to recognize that. But, though he recognizes that there are problems, he offers no remedies. In fact, instead of offering some hope, even some token help, he compounds the problem. He makes it worse with his various budgetary measures and proposals. He writes in the document which I call his "agenda", "The development of resource industries demands our close attention, as does the challenge of enhancing regional development".

What is the nature of the challenge about which the Minister of Finance speaks? According to him, it is to help cushion the impacts of depressed prices and help producers adjust to market realities. That is very appealing to the people of northern Ontario, the people I represent who depend on the natural resource sector. It is a very appealing argument. All of the texts in this magnificent sermon are on target. They are all right. But then we have the practice which is so different from the texts.

In his Budget Speech the Minister notes, at least in passing, that the benefits of our current economic performance have not been equally shared across the country. Then we have this honest and forthright admission from the Minister, "Some regions are hurting". Yes, I can say to the Minister that some regions in the country are hurting, and they are hurting rather badly. I have already told Members of the House that northern Ontario is in this category, as is, most particularly, northeastern Ontario where unemployment is approaching the level of 15 per cent at the present time. Youth unemployment across northern Ontario is around 22 per cent.

In order for the forest products industry to remain competitive in a very tough world, and in order for it to stay in business, it has been forced to modernize, to introduce new technology. But that has meant a reduction in the workforce. Human labour has been replaced in many pulp and paper mills by machines. The need to introduce efficiency measures in order to remain competitive has also meant some additional lay-offs. Pollution control orders, as necessary and as important as they are, mean further expenditures and therefore cuts somewhere else in the industry. The cost of getting wood to where it can be transformed into a marketable product is in this region of Canada very, very high. In circumstances such as those the return on investment and the profit margins are not at all exorbitant. They are not high. In fact, in many cases they are minimal.

These are facts. They do not represent news to Members of this House, not at all. I think we understand that this particular sector is in some difficulty. We recognize that the steps it has taken, even though they have increased unemployment, are necessary so that towns do not close down completely.

I now want to ask the House what the Government has done to cushion the impacts. To use a phrase directly from the Minister's sermon, what has the Government done to cushion the impacts on this industry in a region which is hurting? As unbelievable as it may sound, it has imposed a 15 per cent federal export tax on the shipment of softwood lumber to the United States. For many operations this 15 per cent represents the margin of profit, and then some.

How did this come about? How is it that the industry suddenly finds itself with a 15 per cent export tax on softwood lumber which it ships to the United States? It happened as a very direct result of the bungling interference of the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney). She bungled into a situation which was well in hand by the industry itself. It was dealing with the threat of a U.S. countervailing tariff. Its legal counsel were well briefed. The funds were in hand in order to deal with this situation through the judicial process in the United States of America. But the Minister for International Trade bungled into a realm in which she was totally at a loss.

The result is that we are now faced with a 15 per cent export tax on softwood lumber. As a result of this, millions of dollars are being extracted from regions such as northern Ontario. Some sawmills have been forced to close. Plans to open others have been shelved. Many small, independent sawmills are operating so close to their tolerable limit of costs that they too may be compelled to fold.

I ask Hon. Members, is that not a strange and unusual way to cushion the impacts in a region which is hurting? This is what the Minister said: "The Government recognizes that certain regions are hurting". The Minister has said that the Government recognizes that certain regions are hurting and that we must move to cushion the impacts. Yet what do we get? We get a 15 per cent export tax on softwood lumber.

If that is not enough, the Canadian National Railway is also there. Never a friend of developing regions, this Crown corporation, especially in northern Ontario where it has the reputation of being one of its worst corporate citizens, decided as of January 1, 1987, to add a further burden on softwood lumber by imposing an additional 3 per cent freight rate on all shipments.

I wish to report to you, Mr. Speaker, and to other Members of the House, that in northern Ontario we are hurting. Nothing has been done to cushion the impacts. I want to ask, where is the Minister of Finance now that we need him?

In 1984-85, which was the year the Conservative Party took office, the annual expenditures for economic and regional development amounted to nearly $15 billion. The very next year, one year after the Party opposite had been in power, in 1985-86, that sum was reduced to under $12 billion. Then, in 1986-87, it was at the same amount of about $12 billion. It is anticipated that in the current fiscal year it will fall to about $9 billion. Altogether that means that somewhere in the neighbourhood of $12 billion that would have been spent on economic and regional development has not been there. It is no wonder the regions are hurting. This is a sizeable amount of money that would have been invested in the regions. This is the money that would have cushioned the severity of the economic situation, but it is not there.

The Minister boasts in his Budget about the number of new jobs which have been created. But he did not tell us the nature of those jobs.

I would like to continue my remarks when you recognize me again, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 1 p.m., I do now leave the Chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 21

CRITICISM OF THE MEDIA

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, over the week-end the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) said the Government's poor performance is due to its failure to get its message out. I disagree. The Government's problem is the fact that Canadians do not like the message going out. The Government cannot even sell the message to its own caucus members.

There is growing dissent in Tory ranks. The Hon. Member for Calgary East (Mr. Kindy) is even quoted as saying, "The Prime Minister hears but doesn't listen". In the past the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has blamed the Ottawa-based media for his problems. Last year he said he was going to bypass them altogether and go directly to the regional press. Like his other plans, that one also backfired.

Members of the press deemed unfriendly are either gagged by head office or shipped to points unknown. No doubt a new program is in the making, aptly called "Critics in Exile".

Maybe I can end with this short verse:

The Prime Minister is filled with joy to see the last of Claire Hoy. For other scribes, especially those at the Sun, keep in mind what is happening to Hodgson.

THE MEDIA

COALITION FOR FAMILY VALUES—CHILD CARE RELEASE IGNORED

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I think media people would describe themselves as objective and fair in reporting news. Yet a news release put out by the Coalition for Family Values was greeted by the media with silence.

This release supports the Report of the Special Committee on Child Care. Since it has not received any media attention I would like to put their comments on record. They complimented the committee for bringing "a refreshing perspective and common sense to the child care debate". They went on to say that "no one apart from federal Health and Welfare Minister Jake Epp, and a few others, has bothered to ask what is in the best interest of the children themselves or who is best equipped to meet their needs".

What the Coalition for Family Values likes about the report is that, "unlike the universalists, the special committee recognizes the diversity of Canadian families and that the primary responsibility for raising children is with the parents". I congratulate the Coalition for Family Values for their insight. I know the news media would not want this one to slip by.

HOUSING

NEEDS OF FAMILIES HEADED BY SINGLE WOMEN PARENTS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, a report released last week by the Canadian Advisory Council for the Status of Women points out how poorly Canadian housing policy is serving single women, especially mothers.

Although households led by women are the largest group living in public housing, project plans rarely take into adequate account needs for child care, public transport, shopping centres, or even a safe environment.

Owning a home means security, but if you are a woman heading a family you are far more likely to be a renter. That means insecurity, fluctuating rental markets, low vacancy rates, the changing winds of government policy, and the loss of inexpensive housing to gentrification. Some 62 per cent of female-headed households are tenants, compared with only 30 per cent of households headed by men.

The report also looks at the special problems of native, immigrant, and disabled women as well as teenaged mothers and battered women, and finds government policy wanting. I urge the Government to listen to the concerns raised in this report and take concrete action to correct them.

NATIONAL SOIL CONSERVATION WEEK

NEED TO USE CHEMICAL PRODUCTS PRUDENTLY

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity today to say a few words about National Soil Conservation Week, being held from April 13 to April 17.

Mr. Speaker, soil erosion is a problem that ought to be a concern not just of our farmers but of all Canadians who want to ensure that their children and grandchildren will be able to depend on our land for food.

Mr. Speaker, although most Canadians will find this hard to believe, because of soil deterioration, Canada's ability to feed its population will decline unless we start making more prudent use of chemicals and other products that are largely responsible for the deterioration of about 20 per cent of the arable land in this country.

I would urge all Canadians to participate in this week's activities and, above all, to consider conservation when they start getting their garden plots ready this year. Soil conservation must become a priority with us all, and in concluding, I wish to commend Agriculture Canada for this initiative, and I hope that with the provinces, the Department will find a way to maintain the quality of our soil, that great national resource.

CANADIAN JOBS STRATEGY

EMPLOYMENT TRAINING BY PROFIT-MAKING ENTERPRISES

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, organizations such as the Toronto-based Community Coalition on the Canadian Jobs Strategy are directly involved in delivering federal job training programs and are knowledgeable about how the programs are working. A major concern is that the Canadian Jobs Strategy is increasingly geared to training by profit-making enterprises, although the not-for-profit sector has an established track record in providing effective training for those identified as employment disadvantaged.

• (1405)

A second concern is that eligibility requirements are rigidly applied and more restrictive than in the past, with the result that people in need of job training—immigrant women and sole-support mothers in particular—are shut out of the programs which could help them.

We all want to see more Canadians participating fully in the job market, with more of the skills Canada needs for a strong economy.

The Government should accept that improvement is always possible and consider implementing some of the recommendations it has received from those directly involved in delivering programs under the Canadian Jobs Strategy.

TOURISM

CAPE BRETON ATTRACTIONS PROGRAM

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, economic renewal in Cape Breton and eastern Nova Scotia remains my top priority. I have worked with members of the Cabinet and my constituents to put in place an economic strategy which requires the enhancement of our indigenous resources and the attraction of investment in the manufacturing sector.

Cape Breton is world famous as one of Canada's most beautiful areas. It is also the home of Canada's richest cultural milieu, boasting a wealthy Acadian, Scottish, and native heritage. Such cultural and physical beauty represent an opportunity for tourism development.

Last week a $14 million amendment to the Canada-Nova Scotia Tourism Agreement was signed. This agreement was signed at Cheticamp, a picturesque Acadian community in my riding. The amendment introduces the Cape Breton Attractions Program, a program to identify and develop major top quality tourism attractions on the island.

This program underscores the commitment of two Governments to developing a strong Cape Breton economy, and recognizes the significant role tourism must play in the process.

I congratulate the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Valcourt) and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté) for their continuing commitment to enhancing the economic opportunities of the people of Cape Breton and eastern Nova Scotia.

FARM DEBT—DANGER TO YOUNG FARMERS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, debt servicing is the number one input cost for agricultural producers in Canada today. This debt crisis, tied to the desperately low commodity prices farmers are receiving for their crops, will result in the bankruptcy of thousands of our younger, more progressive farm families. These farmers are being driven off their land, not because they do not know how to farm, but because they expanded their operations or entered farming at what now turns out to be the wrong time.

S. O. 21

Recent government farm income assistance programs have been welcomed by farmers and have helped somewhat. Unfortunately, however, the Government has not been doing much to address the very basic problem of farm debt.

New Democrats call upon the federal Government to take up its responsibilities to find a solution to the problems of farm debt and inter-generational farm transfers. Swift action is necessary to save as many of these farmers as possible.

MEN

DISCRIMINATION IN GRANTING LEAVE FOR BIRTH OF CHILDREN

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, some time ago, an employee with the Customs and Excise Branch of the Department of National Revenue was denied a request for paid leave upon the birth of his child. He had asked for 17 weeks' leave with pay in July, 1986, but his request was denied, and he was allowed only the usual one day's leave with pay granted fathers at the birth of a child. The employee filed a complaint with the Public Service Staff Relations Board and the Human Rights Commission.

Mr. Speaker, by denying a father parental leave, this Government seems to be suggesting that only the mother should take care of children at birth. Mr. Douglas and his wife are both parents, but according to the Government, the mother bears full responsibility for her children. This policy discriminates against both men and women, because it suggests only the woman should leave her job to take care of the child at the time of birth. Since this Government has repeated many times that it believes in equality between men and women, I think this is an opportunity for the Government to act accordingly.

I would therefore ask the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) to evaluate the general policy of parental leave and I would also ask the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) to review this case and to let the father take the parental leave to which he is entitled.

CITIZENSHIP

CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP ACT—FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF ENACTMENT

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, 1987 marks the fortieth anniversary of Canadian citizenship, and the week of April 12 to April 18 has been declared the first ever National Citizenship Week by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

S. O. 21

Prior to the enactment of the Canadian Citizenship Act in 1947 there was no such thing as Canadian citizenship; there were no such persons as Canadian citizens. As you may recall, Mr. Speaker, we were all British subjects in those days. With the passage of that Act of Parliament we took a great leap forward in affirming our uniqueness and independence among world nations.

• (1410)

I remember very well when the value of that citizenship was shown to me. I was much younger and backpacking my way through France. One day, as I sat by the side of the road in Calais, I was approached by a middle-aged Frenchman. He asked me if I had a place to stay, if I was hungry, and if everything was all right. I asked him why he showed so much interest in a traveller. He then pointed to the red maple leaf on my packsack, Mr. Speaker, and said: "During the war, I had a Canadian friend".

Our soldiers fought for Canadian citizenship and all that it represents. We have much to be thankful for. This week, during National Citizenship Week, we have much to celebrate.

FINANCE

HOUSING TAX DEDUCTION APPLICABLE TO ISOLATED POSTS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, the February, 1986, Budget extended to all permanent residents of isolated posts an additional tax deduction in respect of housing costs. According to a December, 1986, release the Finance Department considers Treasury Board guidelines, which have been used for many years for providing northern benefits to federal employees, to be the appropriate criteria for ascertaining which locations qualify for the new benefits.

The December list of isolated posts included several prairie towns in populated areas within a few miles of the U.S. border. Area farmers and residents of other nearby towns are asking why they would not also qualify, while residents in the designated posts remain uncertain as to whether they really are eligible. Everyone wonders why federal government employees should have a special deduction not enjoyed by other residents.

Clearly, the intent of the February, 1986, proposals is good but the criteria for designating what is an isolated post need a thorough overhaul. I call on the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to issue clarification at an early date.

FINANCE

DOME PETROLEUM TAKEOVER—REQUEST FOR ADVANCE TAX RULING

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, in July, 1984, the former Liberal Government approved a special $1 billion tax remission for Dome Petroleum which was confirmed by the Conservative Government in February, 1985.

The Auditor General said that he was disturbed by this remission because the House of Commons was neither informed nor given the opportunity to debate the matter. He said: "There is something very wrong with a system that allows a $1 billion policy decision to be made by way of a tax expenditure with Parliament having so little information on the transaction".

We have now learned that Dome Petroleum has received a takeover bid from TransCanada PipeLines which will be worth between $4 billion and $5 billion and which is likely to involve new and major concessions from the Canadian taxpayer.

I call on the Government to turn its back on past practices, to heed the advice of the Auditor General, and to ensure that all the details of any proposed multimillion dollar corporate tax ruling be laid before Parliament and the people of Canada. We must not give billions of dollars for this particular takeover without Parliament being informed and having a chance to give its consent.

HARBOURFRONT

MORATORIUM ON TORONTO WATERFRONT CONSTRUCTION PROJECTS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, Toronto Harbourfront Park property is an exciting public resource, treasured by all of the people of the Metropolitan Toronto area. Although Harbourfront is federally owned, the City of Toronto through its official plan, its zoning and building by-laws, controls construction, density, heights, and building permits on the property.

For many months now residents have been extremely concerned about the city's planning and development process. Forty-storey buildings are proposed where 10-storey buildings were planned, densities are shifted from one site to another, minor variance approvals increase building sizes by as much as 15 per cent, and construction has been proceeding on some sites without building permits. Because of this, residents welcome the Government's announced construction moratorium pending a federal review. Hopefully this means a total freeze and a review, with full public input and participation.

DISASTERS

NEW BRUNSWICK FLOODS—ASSISTANCE PROVIDED BY UNITED STATES SERVICEMEN AND WOMEN

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, shortly before dawn on Saturday, April 11, 1987, 200 volunteer American servicemen and servicewomen boarded trucks and jeeps at Loring Air Force base in northern Maine and made an historic 20-kilometre journey to help flood victims in Perth-Andover, New Brunswick.

Volunteering their off-duty time, the servicemen and servicewomen put in an unmeasurable effort in assisting residents of this small New Brunswick community ravaged by the floodwaters of the Saint John River some 11 days ago.

• (1415)

On behalf of the 1,900 residents of Perth—Andover and all the people of the Province of New Brunswick, I would like to extend my deepest appreciation as well as my sincere thanks to all of the American servicemen and sevicewomen who not only offered a most needed helping hand but also valuable moral support and a shining ray of hope to a community victimized by this destructive natural tragedy.

It is this kind of international co-operation that touches deeply the hearts of all Canadians while leaving a fond memory that will never be erased in the hearts of the people of Perth—Andover.

RISE IN EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, on March 1, 1986, in attacking the Budget, the Liberal finance critic stated that he certainly would not be surprised to see the dollar at 68 cents. That prediction, along with all predictions made by the Liberal Party on financial matters, is wrong. On Friday the dollar closed at 76.7 cents U.S. and at one point it was trading at 76.92 cents U.S.

Bryan Griffiths, Vice-President of Trading and Treasury Services with the Royal Bank stated on April 11, 1987, that the firmness of the dollar indicates that capital is leaving other jurisdictions and flowing into Canada and that it is a question of confidence building confidence.

The building of confidence is exactly what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has accomplished. His policies have given Canadians the lowest interest rate in the past 10 years. The deficit has been reduced for the third year in a row. The inflation rate has been at 4 per cent over the past two and a half years. Over 700,000 jobs have been created.

The Minister of Finance deserves our congratulations for giving Canada sound economic management which has resulted in international confidence in the Canadian economy.

THE ECONOMY

WESTERN ECONOMIC STRATEGY—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on July 5, 1984, in Prince Albert, the Prime Minister promised a western economic strategy. On February 18, 1987, in the House of Commons in Ottawa, the Deputy Prime Minister promised a western economic strategy. Three years after the Prime Minister's promise there is a growing political crisis in western Canada.

I would ask the Deputy Prime Minister why there have been no public hearings leading to a western economic strategy. Where is the action the Prime Minister promised three years ago?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to respond to that question. Prior to the federal election of September, 1984, the Prince Albert declaration was unveiled containing some 52 specific commitments to western Canada, ranging from agriculture to energy, to mining, to forestry, to transportation. Forty-two of those specific commitments have been fulfilled already.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Action on the others is currently being undertaken.

The Hon. Member knows very well that there has been a dramatic decline in oil prices, agricultural commodity prices and prices in the resource sector. Those declines were actions taken outside the influence and bounds of the Government.

The Government is responding in the best possible manner. For example, we undertook to dismantle the NEP and FIRA and to bring in a $500,000 exemption on capital gains. Those are just a few examples. We have acknowledged that more needs to be done, and the second chapter is due to be unveiled very soon.

WESTERN PROPOSAL TO REFORM SENATE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we would be glad to take a look at those commitments and responses. If there had been more than a patchwork response in the provinces of western Canada, the Deputy Prime Minister would not have felt it necessary to announce again a month or so ago, three years after the fact, that there would be a western economic strategy.

In that announcement, the Deputy Prime Minister said, and I will use his words, that it will contain a framework for federal decisions affecting western Canada.

• (1420)

Last weekend the Minister of Transport was in western Canada, with the knowledge of the Deputy Prime Minister I am sure. He rejected out of hand the proposal for an elected Senate. Will proposals for an elected Senate be included in the Deputy Prime Minister's plan for a western economic strategy, or was the Minister of Transport speaking on behalf of the Government when he rejected that proposal?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member and other Hon. Members that we have done more for western Canada than was proposed by the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry when he announced a $4 billion package for western Canada which disappeared rather quickly. The Hon. Leader of the Opposition was not very involved in the Liberal Party at that particular time. He was speaking very harshly against the policies of the Liberal Government. I suspect he has not changed now.

With regard to the Liberals' suggestion for improving the western economy, the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry unveiled a policy the other day which suggested that, to bring the west back into Confederation and restore the economy, they were going to hold a federal-provincial conference. That is really earth-shattering. I would have thought that after the disaster and fallout from the WEOC conference they would not engage in that sort of titillating stuff.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister is a little agitated this afternoon. I can understand that. He was in western Canada this weekend. It is too bad he could not have kept his eye on the Minister of Transport who was also out there. The Minister of Agriculture has been or is going out there. The Minister of the Environment has been out there, as has the Minister of International Trade. Everyone is a little disturbed about what is happening to the Government in western Canada.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: At least we get bigger crowds than you do, John.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Oh yeah? I'll help you make a crowd any time, Ray.

INITIAL PRICES FOR GRAIN

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. While westerners are cooling their heels and farmers are going bankrupt waiting for the Prime Minister to fulfil that three-year promise, will the Government give a commitment today that the 1987-1988 initial prices for grain will be announced immediately? Will the Government guarantee that those prices will at least equal the prices of last year?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that question has been answered in the House before. As is the custom, the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board will announce those prices on the appropriate occasion at a time which will be appropriate for the producers.

In response to the Hon. Leader of the Opposition's condemnation of what we have done, I would like to remind you of what he said about some of the things which were put in place by the former Government which we have undone.

He had the following to say about the National Energy Program:

> This policy has curtailed production, savaged investment, killed mega-projects, ruined investor confidence, profoundly damaged relationships with the United States and spawned even further federal-provincial tension.

We have reversed that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Table that.

Mr. Mazankowski: I would be very glad to table that, Mr. Speaker, with your permission and the permission of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ANNOUNCED CLOSURE OF MANITOBA SUGAR COMPANY PLANT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister as well. With regard to public consultation, the only initiative we have seen from the Government has been that taken by the Member for Edmonton—Strathcona. It is too bad the Government has not listened more carefully to some of its back-bench members with regard to western Canada.

I will ask a specific question of the Deputy Prime Minister. The NDP Government in Manitoba and the Conservative Government in Ottawa have been at total loggerheads with regard to developing a support program for the sugar farmers in the Province of Manitoba. As a result, the Manitoba Sugar Company has announced the closing of its plant, which will put a $90 million industry out of business and will wipe out 300 or 400 farmers and 400 or 500 jobs.

In light of these very serious circumstances, can the Deputy Prime Minister instruct the Minister of Agriculture or the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board to undertake immediate negotiations with the Province of Manitoba to resolve the stalemate within the week in order that those farmers can seed their crops and we can preserve that industry in Manitoba?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I believe I am correct in saying that the Hon. Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board responded to that question. I think he indicated at the time that Manitoba was offered an opportunity to participate in a program to be shared by the federal and provincial Governments. The Province of Alberta undertook to become a party to it and I believe the Province of Quebec did as well. I think the problem lies not with the federal Government but with the Government of Manitoba in this respect.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT SEEK AGREEMENT WITH MANITOBA

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, in 1985 the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board indicated to the Province of Manitoba that as a condition of agreement there would be a sugar policy announced and that the federal Government would cover debts going beyond 1987. Neither of those commitments have been met or been offered.

Unless an agreement is made within this week, the sugar-beet industry of Manitoba will be wiped out. Would it not be appropriate for the Government to take the initiative with the Government of Manitoba to see if some agreement could be found before those dire consequences are met and a $90 million industry is wiped out in a very important western province?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member would share the view that the Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, who has taken a leadership role in this area, is always interested in resolving an issue of this serious magnitude.

I repeat that on the basis of my information there has been an attempt to negotiate a deal with the Manitoba Government. Given the Hon. Member's representation, I will speak to the Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board again. I want to assure him as well that an offer was placed on the table and, for some reason, the Manitoba Government refused to become party to an arrangement that was agreed to by other provinces.

FINANCE

DOME PETROLEUM TAKEOVER—REQUEST FOR ADVANCE TAX RULING

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Dome Petroleum has charged that a takeover by TransCanada PipeLines would lead to a loss of hundreds of millions of dollars of tax revenue. This is likely true of any takeover since Dome had a loss of some $2 billion last year, a loss that can be carried forward for seven years. According to one study, it also has tax credits of some $2.4 billion.

Press reports indicate that TransCanada PipeLines has asked for an advance tax ruling. Will the Minister confirm that Dome's losses are transferable and will cost Canadian taxpayers a billion dollars or more?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, at this point I am not in a position to comment on that question. The specific offer by TransCanada is just in the course of being made. We do not have the details of all the elements of the proposal. Once they are made available we will be able to determine what the position of the federal Government should be in connection with that particular aspect of the proposal.

TAX REMISSION ORDER—REQUEST FOR REPORT TO PARLIAMENT

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister's Government carried through the Liberal Government's decision to give Dome Petroleum a $1 billion tax remission in February, 1985, the Auditor General commented: "There is something very wrong with a system that allows a $1 billion policy decision to be made by way of a tax expenditure with Parliament having so little information on the transaction". Given the staggering scale of Dome's unused tax losses and deductions, and given the Auditor General's comments regarding the Dome tax remission order, will the Government bring all the details of the tax implications of any takeover before Parliament?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in my previous answer, when the information is available to us I will be in a better position to respond to the question. These matters are of some urgency when there is a takeover offer on the table, so I am not sure I would be able to fulfil the requirement the Hon. Member has put to me. However, we will review the position that TransCanada puts before us if a tax ruling is involved, and will make the decisions known according to the rules set out in the Income Tax Act.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, we understand that in certain situations there might be some urgency. I give the Minister our assurance that we will help facilitate in any way possible the Government's introduction of any proposed package so that at least Parliament can have an opportunity to pursue a matter that will potentially cost taxpayers billions of dollars.

POSSIBILITY OF FOREIGN TAKEOVER

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): My final supplementary question again concerns Dome. There is no question that Dome remains one of the major energy players in this country. Apparently, foreign offers are being considered by Dome and a green light to a foreign takeover has been given by the Government. In view of the strategic importance of the Dome reserves and in view of the massive taxpayer subsidies paid to Dome in the past, will the Government give its assurance that the company will remain in Canadian hands?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what we have to do is allow this process to run its course. We have said all along there should be a private sector solution and we are looking to see whether there are other bids which might in fact materialize. If that is the case, we will review them under the terms of Investment Canada, and if there are other elements of the offers which do require a Government response, we will be in a position to do that. However, these questions at this point are hypothetical. We have to allow the process to work.

AMENDMENT OF PATENT ACT—ROLES PLAYED BY MR. PRATT AND MR. HADDAD

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The lobbying activities of a Mr. Pratt, President Reagan's chairman of the Trade Advisory Committee and chairman of the Pfizer Inc., one of the largest multinational drug manufacturing companies in the world, coupled with an affidavit submitted by Mr. Bill Haddad describing a conflict of interest and, in particular, the pressure the Canadian Government has come under from the United States, have now resulted in the United States Congress initiating an investigation of Mr. Pratt and his activities, particularly his discussions with our Canadian Ambassador in Washington.

Can the Minister explain why he said Mr. Haddad's affidavit was patently false? And if he so believes in his statement of some weeks ago, would he not do the honourable thing, drop the parliamentary immunity he now has, step outside the Chamber and repeat those allegations?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not know why the Opposition is so preoccupied with what happens in the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, Oh!

Mr. Andre: I have just come from Montreal where I participated in announcements by Burroughs Wellcome, a United Kingdom multinational, and Rhône-Poulenc, a French multinational, of $39 million worth of research and development in this important area in Montreal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: However, that is conditional upon the passage of Bill C-22, because, like anyone with common sense, they recognize that one does not make investments in research if the law provides that someone can come along and copy the results as soon as they are discovered.

I would put to the Hon. Member that instead of being preoccupied with what Mr. Haddad or Mr. Pratt has to say, why does he not think about Canadians, particularly those Canadian researchers who want to get to work in Montreal and other parts of this country?

Mr. Dingwall: I say to the Minister that the reason we are preoccupied with what happens in the United States is because the multinational corporations in the United States have drafted Bill C-22. That is why we are concerned.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET MR. HADDAD

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister not have the intestinal fortitude to step outside into the foyer to begin some sort of discussions with Mr. Haddad, who is in the Chamber today? Does he not have the intestinal fortitude?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, apparently, after some weeks and months of examining Bill C-22, the Hon. Member is not aware that 25 of the 63 companies of PMAC are in fact European. In fact he is apparently not aware that every single one of our industrial partners has been after Canada since 1969 to get in step with the rest of the world and provide the same kind of patent protection provided by the rest of the world.

The Hon. Member may think there is some merit in participation in a debate with an American generic manufacturer. I do not. I think we should get along and do what is right for Canada, in Canada's interest. I wish the Opposition would take the same point of view.

MANITOBA SUGAR BEET INDUSTRY

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I would like to pursue the question of the future of the sugar-beet industry in Manitoba with the Deputy Prime Minister. In an earlier answer the Deputy Prime Minister went on at great length about the commitment of the Government to western Canada. However, many western Canadians know, Winnipegers in particular, that many promises to western Canada have been broken. Why was the promise of the Government to Manitoba and, in particular, to the Government of Manitoba, that no more provincial moneys would be required for the support of the sugar-beet industry, why was that promise to Manitoba, among others, broken?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member would like to outline some of the so-called broken promises because I think this Government has a very distinguished record. I alluded a little earlier to the fact that, out of 52 specific commitments, 43 have been fulfilled and the others are being acted upon.

I remind the Hon. Member that we inherited a legacy of high interest, high debt, and high unemployment. We are acting on all three fronts and making progress, I might say, on all three fronts, which is very important to western Canadians—without, I might add, the support of the New Democratic Party.

I can only add, further to my response to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry, I tried to respond as best I could and I think I gave an undertaking that, as soon as the Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board returns, I will take it up with him and see what can be done. However, I repeat that there was a proposal, as I understand it, put before the Manitoba Government. The Manitoba Government was not prepared to be a party to an agreement, and the Province of Alberta and the Province of Quebec were.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I do not have the time under the Standing Orders of the House to go into all the promises made to Winnipeg and to Western Canada which have been broken.

An Hon. Member: Name one.

Mr. Blaikie: The VIA Rail shop in Winnipeg, the Manufacturing Technology Centre. I could go on for some time, Mr. Speaker, but you would not let me.

Mr. de Jong: Where is the CF-18?

Mr. Blaikie: We won't even get into the CF-18.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put his question.

PROPOSAL MADE IN 1985

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Yes, Mr. Speaker. A proposal was made to the Government of Manitoba, a proposal which involved breaking the promise of the Government that no more provincial moneys would be required. That was a promise made in 1985. When will the Government live up to its promise made in 1985? Never mind what the Government of Alberta does. It lets itself be pushed around by the Government, but not the Government of Manitoba. The Government of Manitoba wants the Government to live up to its promises.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I certainly would not want the Hon. Member to get the New Democratic Party promises mixed with Progressive Conservative promises because there is no question we have no intention of fulfilling some of the foolish promises put forward by the New Democratic Party before this House or during the election campaign, either.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SETTLEMENT OF NATIVE CLAIMS IN YUKON—MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I would like to direct his attention to Yukon. He will know that in November of 1985, three parties, namely, the Council for Yukon Indians, the Government of Canada and the Government of the Yukon reached something which is known as the "Memorandum of Understanding". This Memorandum of Understanding sets out the guidelines for negotiating and settling native claims in the Yukon.

Why is it that the Council for the Yukon Indians has signed, the Government of the Yukon has signed, but so far the place for the signature of the Government of Canada remains blank? I ask that question because in June of 1986 the all-party Committee on Aboriginal Affairs recommended that this Memorandum of Understanding be signed.

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, it was not carte blanche from the Standing Committee that that be signed. There were some provisions which were made by the Standing Committee so that the memorandum could be signed. Those provisions, as the Hon. Member well knows, have not been met.

Mr. Penner: Well, the Minister knows that the main provision, as outlined in the Minister's response, was that the Coolican Task Force report be responded to by the Government, and that has been done.

INSTRUCTIONS TO FEDERAL NEGOTIATOR

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Why does the Minister leave the federal negotiator standing waiting in the Yukon without his instructions? When will the Minister get busy and issue the marching orders to that negotiator, incorporate this Memorandum of Understanding in the mandate, and allow him to get down to work in this important matter in the Yukon Territory?

• (1440)

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I also recognize, as the Hon. Member does, that the settlement of land claims in Yukon not just for Indian people but for all Yukoners is a very important matter. The mandate is proceeding through Cabinet with respect to the Dene-Métis claim. The CYI claim will proceed. I have already had discussions and will be having further discussions with the Council of Yukon Indians. In due course the mandate will be put forward.

I remind the Hon. Member that there was a mandate in place for over a dozen years. I ask the Hon. Member to allow the Government, which has had from December, to come forward with a mandate sometime this spring, a mandate which we hope will provide settlement of the Yukon claims.

Oral Questions

CODE OF CONDUCT—MORTGAGE ON OTTAWA PROPERTIES—MINISTER'S ALLEGED ROLE

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister regarding the Code of Conduct and conflict of interest guidelines for Ministers of the Crown. Is the Deputy Prime Minister aware that on February 18 of this year the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport gave a $354,000 subordinated mortgage loan on two investment properties in downtown Ottawa at 494 and 504 Albert Street which are currently the subject of a controversial redevelopment application now before City Hall, and that on the same day he filed a statement with the official responsible for the Code of Conduct which makes no reference to this $354,000 mortgage and gives no indication that it was handled through a blind trust?

In view of the risky nature of this investment can the Deputy Prime Minister tell the House whether speculative commercial mortgage lending is a permitted activity under the Government's Code of Conduct for Ministers of the Crown?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have had an opportunity to look into this issue briefly. I am advised, and I would like to inform the House, that the Minister had a 50 per cent interest in this building. It was sold. An interim mortgage has been arranged until August. However, the transaction for the sale has been completed. When the full payment is made in August the Minister will have no further interest in the building in question.

I do not think that this is a matter of hiding anything. Everything has been revealed to the ADRG. My understanding is that this particular transaction is fully consistent with the rules that have been outlined and that the Minister has complied with the spirit of the letter of the rules.

COMMERCIAL ACTIVITY QUERY

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the Deputy Prime Minister of the section of the code that specifically tells cabinet Ministers that outside of their official duties they must not actively manage or operate a business or commercial activity. While I appreciate the Minister's answer he must also be aware—and perhaps he is not—that the properties in question appear to be grossly overmortgaged, except in light of a speculative effort by the new owners to redevelop them.

When a cabinet Minister makes a $354,000 second or third mortgage loan, is that not a commercial activity which is in fact prohibited by the code? What action does the Government intend to take to enforce the code with respect to the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister declared his interest. He has turned around and sold the property. The corresponding notification has been put in place. As I said, I have looked into this matter in a preliminary way. I am advised that he is complying. But I will check further again and get back to the Hon. Member. I think that the Minister himself may wish to comment on the matter and raise it in the House himself when he returns.

MINISTER'S COMPLIANCE WITH CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the two loans about which we are speaking. One thing that is important to know in order to ascertain whether the Minister complied with the conflict of interest guidelines or not is whether these two loans were entered into by a blind trust on behalf of the Minister, or whether the Minister himself lent the money directly with respect to these two buildings on Albert Street.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think I have indicated that I would attempt to ascertain all the facts. I also indicated that I am sure the Hon. Minister would be in the House to make any comment that he may wish to clarify the issue.

I only hope that the Hon. Member who has posed the question will abide by the guidelines and the code of conduct that have been suggested by his Leader, that is, before one starts suggesting wrongdoing and allegations—

Mr. Gauthier: Just asking questions. If you can't answer them, sit down.

Mr. Mazankowski: —Members should try to determine the facts.

Mr. McDermid: Nothing but innuendo!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): You really should not have to go on the defensive.

Mr. Mazankowski: Is it not funny, Mr. Speaker, these people ask questions but are not prepared to listen to the facts? They are not even patient enough to find out the facts. I have undertaken to find out the facts—

Mr. Rossi: You are not giving any facts.

POWER OF ATTORNEY ALLEGEDLY GRANTED TO MINISTER'S WIFE

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, in view of the good intentions of the Deputy Prime Minister to obtain more information and to come back to the House with details, I would ask him while he is at it to check whether it is right that on February 18, 1987, the Hon. Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport granted a power of attorney to his wife, a certain Leata Jelinek, to act on his behalf in some of these matters, and whether she used this power of attorney to enter into an agreement-postponing mortgage whereby the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce mortgage would have precedence over the Minister's mortgage? Could he check that, too, while he is at it?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what the Hon. Member is implying. It is obvious that Members opposite are leading up to another series of accusations based on suspicion, innuendo, and unfounded rumour. I might say that they are obviously doing this with the full blessing of their Leader.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Willowdale.

Mr. Crosbie: Sleazebag Incorporated!

Mr. Oostrom: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is why we had to put the Mounties on the last one, John.

Mr. Crosbie: He's apparently at it again.

Mr. Blaikie: It's your own guy who is going to ask a question.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to point out that on Friday, in an attempt to give every opportunity to members to ask questions, Question Period was extended for some minutes. We cannot do that every day. I know that Hon. Members will respect the fact that there are other Hon. Members who will want to be heard today. The Hon. Member for Willowdale.

WAR CRIMINALS

UNITED NATIONS FILES—ACCESS BY STATE OF ISRAEL

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Members of the Congregation B'nai Torah and myself are very concerned that the United Nations is currently holding some 38,000 closed files on World War II war criminals. Has the State of Israel approached Canada for its support in being able to examine these files? If so, will Canada give its permission?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I understand the situation, this was the subject of questions in the House two or three weeks ago. The State of Israel and other Governments and, indeed, judicial and quasi-judicial bodies of other Governments, have the right of access to those files. The right of access by individuals is denied. I think the House will understand that that makes sense, given the fact that those files contain many allegations that are not in a position to be verified. Thus we have not been approached by the State of Israel. But I do believe that there would not be any need for an approach to occur since Israel, under a decision by the Secretary General, has as a state that right of access.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport concerning VIA Rail. On Thursday when I questioned the Deputy Prime Minister he was unable to give me a specific answer with respect to whether or not the Government has decided not to purchase new Canadian-built rolling stock for VIA Rail. Will the Minister please advise the House and the people of Canada whether the Government is planning to go ahead with this project or not?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I cannot advise the Minister because we have not made any final decision yet. But a final decision will be made certainly in a few days or in the next several weeks as to whether or not the Government can provide the additional funds that are needed in order to acquire this equipment, or just what other steps will be taken. I hope to get back to the Hon. Member shortly on that.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for the promotion.

PROPOSAL TO BUILD AND LEASE CARS TO VIA RAIL

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is the following. Is the Government prepared, if it decides it does not have the capital money to do this project, to consider seriously and accept the proposal of Transconsortium, Bombardier and UTDC, that it will finance and produce the cars and lease them to VIA Rail for 20 years?

• (1450)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly prepared to consider any proposal that the consortium makes. If the proposal does not involve any expenditure of money by the Government or VIA Rail, it will of course be even that more much attractive. As you know, the cars still have to be paid for and leasing is just another method of financing. However, I would look at any proposal they wish to make.

Oral Questions

HARBOURFRONT

MORATORIUM ON CONSTRUCTION PROJECTS AT TORONTO WATERFRONT

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Public Works and concerns the Government's conflicting statements about how it intends to deal with Toronto's Harbourfront. On Friday the Secretary of State announced a total freeze on all new development. On the same day the Minister of Public Works announced some projects would be allowed to proceed. Would the Minister please clarify which Harbourfront developments are affected by the moratorium and why?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I have taken note of the question and I will ensure that my colleague, the Minister of Public Works, is able to follow up the matter.

[English]

TYPES OF PROJECTS INVOLVED

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, at the same time she gets that information would the Minister please confirm specifically, since there are different types of projects involved, whether the luxury condominiums are being allowed to go ahead and whether the co-op and senior citizens units are being allowed to go ahead?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that whatever the information turns out to be, it will be comprehensive.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAYS

ORDER FOR STEEL TIE PLATES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Much of the rail rehabilitation work being done by CP is the result of federal Government initiatives. Given that, does the Government not believe that the orders for steel tie plates should be done by Canadian firms? In other words, why was an order which has traditionally gone to Stelco now gone to Japan? Why are Canadian jobs being lost?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member might provide me with more detail on this particular issue and perhaps I can get a complete response to it.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Certainly, Mr. Speaker, I will give the Deputy Prime Minister the information. I would hope someone on the government benches, perhaps a Conservative MP from the Hamilton area, has given this information to the Government already.

The problem is that the order has traditionally gone to Stelco. CP is getting money from the federal Government. What is the federal Government going to do to make sure those orders are placed in Canada so that Canadians have jobs?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, Canadian Pacific is privately owned. I believe even the Opposition would certainly be able to testify to that fact. I will have to check, just as the Deputy Prime Minister would have to check, to see whether they called tenders or just what the circumstances were or what the reason was. Canadian Pacific is a shareholder-owned private company and we are not responsible for it. We are prepared to answer for CN or other government Crown corporations.

CORRECTIONAL SERVICE CANADA

CONSTRUCTION OF PRISON IN PORT-CARTIER—CANCELLATION OF PROJECTS IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General and concerns the Prime Minister's pet prison in his riding which is costing Canadians $68 million. The Solicitor General knows that the Auditor General states unequivocally that there was no need for that prison in Port-Cartier. To add insult to injury, 25 other Correctional Service projects throughout the country have been cancelled.

Will the Minister stand up and explain to Atlantic Canadians why the $28 million prison in Newfoundland, the $18 million capital project in Westmorland, New Brunswick, and the $6 million capital project in Springhill, Nova Scotia, were cancelled? Can he explain to Atlantic Canadians where the fairness is when the Prime Minister gets a $68 million prison and those projects are cancelled?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the Hon. Member that there is absolutely no connection whatsoever between the construction of the prison in Port-Cartier and the construction or non-construction of other projects in Canada, whether it be western Canada or eastern Canada. Correctional Service Canada is attending to the needs of all Canadians in all parts of the country.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S COMMENT

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, with the greatest of respect, the Solicitor General is not answering the question. The question is why is the Prime Minister permitted to have a $68 million prison built in his riding when the Auditor General says it is not needed, while at the same time 25 other capital projects in Correctional Service have been cancelled? Answer the question. How can you justify the Prime Minister's prison while at the same time cancelling the other projects?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as usual the Hon. Member does not have his facts straight. What the Auditor General was saying was that he was concerned about the location. He never at any point said there was not a need for a new prison in Quebec. As a matter of fact, it was that Hon. Member's Government which decided there should be a new prison in Quebec, at Drummondville. What we did was to build it in Port-Cartier to alleviate a socio-economic problem in that area which required attending to.

GOVERNMENT PAYMENTS TO GRAIN FARMERS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. He knows about the cash flow problems most farmers are having. Canadian grain farmers are expecting to receive the final deficiency payment, and western grain farmers expect to receive the western grain stabilization interim payment this spring. Can the Deputy Prime Minister tell us if the Government will be making these payments before seeding begins so that farmers can pay for their essential supplies?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I can only tell the Hon. Member and the House that these payments will be made soon.

LOW PRICES—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, if those payments are not too late they will help with the seeding. However, future cash flow depends on the return from grain generally. Will the Government give western farmers some commitment that there will be some special assistance to counter the low prices for grains being suggested for the next crop year?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture said in this House on many occasions that he is meeting with the leaders of the farm organizations, has been meeting with them, and the method by which the payment under the $1 billion Special Grains Program is being distributed was arrived at during the course of those discussions and consultations. I think there is a recognition that there will be a serious shortfall and to that end the Minister and leaders of the farm communities are going to be looking at various ways and means to determine how that might be offset.

I am pleased that the Hon. Member and his Party have finally come around to supporting the $1 billion special grain initiative. When it was announced they certainly did not seem to be very much onside and it is nice to know that we have their support now.

PROPOSED BUSINESS TRANSFER TAX—TAX REFORM WHITE PAPER

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, in the February, 1986, Budget the Minister of Finance promised to table at an early date what he called a concrete proposal on the business transfer tax. That promise was not fulfilled in 1986. In the February, 1987, Budget he repeated this promise and said that it would be included in the comprehensive tax reform proposals.

Will the Minister of State for Finance advise the House of a date he will table his long-promised White Paper on tax reform, and will it include his proposal for a business transfer tax?

• (1500)

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I cannot announce that on behalf of the Minister of Finance. He will announce it in due course, but he has indicated that he hopes to do that before the House rises in June.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF BUSINESS TRANSFER TAX

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, many people are concerned about the Government's lack of policy in this respect. Furthermore, the delay is creating all kinds of problems. Could the Minister inform the House whether the new business transfer tax will include goods such as food and essential commodities? In other words, will the business transfer tax announced by the Minister apply, as some people have said it will, to bread, milk and doctors' fees?

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is rehearsing his arguments against this tax before it has even been introduced. Those arguments can be put when the tax is suggested, if it ever will be.

Mr. Gauthier: "If it ever will be", oh!

HOUSING TAX DEDUCTION APPLICABLE TO ISOLATED POSTS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of State for Finance. It concerns the criteria for designation of isolated posts which qualify for the new tax deduction in respect of housing.

The Minister will know that there are some problems with the present list which includes some prairie towns but excludes other towns some six miles down the highway.

Since it is clear that the existing, old Treasury Board guidelines are inappropriate, will the Minister re-examine the criteria for determining exactly what is an isolated post, and make an announcement of clarification at an early date?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to tell the Hon. Member that the criteria are being re-examined. I thank him for his interest, because there are problems with the criteria and the way in which they are being applied. I am very glad that he has brought the matter before the House.

Mr. Speaker: I must advise Hon. Members that the time for Question Period has expired.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose at one o'clock, the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) had the floor.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, at one o'clock I was reminding the House that in his budget address the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) stressed that all regions in the country were important to national prosperity, and I agree. He said that those regions which depended upon the resource sector were in some difficulty. The words he used were that "some regions are hurting". Then the Minister of Finance added that action must be taken to cushion the blow.

I was telling the House at one o'clock that we in northern Ontario, particularly northeastern Ontario where the unemployment rate is approaching 15 per cent—and across northern Ontario the youth unemployment rate is 22 per cent—were still awaiting some cushion against the economic blows we have been receiving. So far there have been no cushions at all. In fact, the Government has been introducing some additional blows. I was reminding the House about the 15 per cent export tax on softwood lumber and about CNRs 3 per cent hike on the shipment of lumber into the American market. All these things were blows, not to mention additional sales and excise taxes. We are still awaiting the cushion, as promised by the Minister of Finance, for the economic blows we have been receiving.

There are regions which are hurting, and those regions are still awaiting some good news from the Minister. In his Budget address the Minister bragged about the number of new jobs which have been created. It is true that new jobs are always being created, but the Minister failed to tell us about the number of jobs which have been lost, which no longer exist.

For example, in a vigorous endeavour to remain competitive we in northern Ontario in the forest products industry have had to introduce major and very expensive new technology. However, we have lost jobs in the process.

Also, the Minister did not tell the House what kind of jobs were being created. He did not tell the House that a very large percentage of jobs, especially those for women, are now simply part-time jobs at the lowest possible wages and without all the usual benefits.

We in northern Ontario have long depended upon government assistance for job creation. We had the program under the previous administration called Canada Works. Under this Government it has been renamed the Canadian Jobs Strategy Program.

Mr. Blenkarn: That is a good program.

Mr. Penner: Yes, Canada Works and the Canadian Jobs Strategy are good. They help the region. However, we are noticing that the number of dollars which the Government is allocating for the program is regularly declining and decreasing, so that fewer and fewer dollars are available while unemployment remains unacceptably high and well above the national average.

I should like to remind the House once again about a program for native people, an area of the economy where unemployment is particularly high. In 1984 the Native Economic Development Program was announced. It was to spend $345 million over four years in order to assist native people to cease being the recipients of social assistance and be able to have economic development programs which would make them self-sufficient.

Since that time only a fraction of the amount of money approved by Parliament has been consistently spent year by year. For example, in 1984-85, the first year of the present administration, Parliament approved $110 million for that program. Out of that $110 million, $102 million was allowed to lapse and only $8 million was spent. Obviously the Government is not even carrying out the will of the House in respect of where unemployment is highest, where people are suffering the most, where people are relying upon social assistance, hand-outs, and welfare, and where there is an opportunity for economic development. The Government allows a substantial amount of money to lapse, and the people continue to be in the same state as they were before.

The point I want to emphasize in conclusion is that we agree with what the Minister of Finance said, that all regions of the country are important to our prosperity, that some regions are hurting, and that this blow needs to be cushioned. However, so far we in northern Ontario have been waiting patiently for a cushioning of those blows. We have been promised a northern Ontario recovery package, and nowhere do we get the details. There has been no action at all to date on what constitutes the northern Ontario recovery package.

Coming out of a meeting in Sudbury, the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall) once said to the news media, or is reported to have said, "This statement had better be something more than philosophical in nature; it better have substance". I have urged the Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council (Mr. Mazankowski) who announced the program to give us the details. Week after week I have asked, and so far I have received nothing, only silence. I want to know when we will get what the Minister of Finance promised—a cushioning of the economic blows in regions like northern Ontario, which is hurting very badly.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) for his excellent speech. To us he is always the person with heart, the man who puts his region or constituency in first place and knows best how to present problems in a very concise and understandable way. I have a question for the Hon. Member on regional development, to which he alluded.

• (1510)

The regional development envelope has decreased by $3 billion since the Government took over in 1984. That is alarming, Mr. Speaker. The concept of Canada from the east to the west and the development of our regions requires very careful and considerate attention. It also has a north-south dimension which is very important. And I know the member agrees with me, that when we talk about Canada we also talk about a mix of the private and public sectors. The Liberal fiscal approach, of encouraging a mix of the private and Government sectors, in certain regions is the only solution.

I know the member alluded at the end of his speech to the importance of Government participation in regional programs. The privatization program favours high employment centres, mostly in the golden horseshoe and the other highly industrialized sections of our country. When I refer to industrialized sections, we have areas which are not as industrialized as they would wish, areas which are possibly underdeveloped as far as industrial capacity is concerned. Does the Member for Cochrane—Superior not feel that this reduction of the envelope by $3 billion in less than three years has had a very direct serious impact on his area of northern Ontario?

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I detected that there were actually two questions posed by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). Before one o'clock I had talked about the decline in actual dollars in the regional development envelope. The decline is very serious. If you look at the Estimates you will find about a $3 billion decline which has been consistent since 1984-85.

As well, there is a cumulative effect. We have noticed in northern Ontario that for initiatives of various kinds, and we used to look to the regional development program for assistance, those dollars are no longer available. Some economists looking at our region have said that we really have to forget about having so much emphasis on big industry, on our forest sector, which is in some difficulty, to which I alluded, and on mining, which is in some difficulty because of depressed base metal prices throughout the world. The only exception is gold. I am grateful that we do have the Hemlo gold fields in the constituency of Cochrane—Superior, which is the one bright aspect, economically speaking. Economists have said that we are not looking at the existing possibilities for tourism in our magnificent region. We should be promoting tourism.

I am glad my whip asked me the question because I am going to extend an invitation to him in the next several weeks to join me on a fishing trip. If the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) behaves himself, I may even let him come along as well. I am inviting the Whip on a fishing trip and I will show him how great is the potential for tourism.

Here was a chance for the Minister of Finance in his Budget to have done something to encourage tourism in a region like northern Ontario. He could have said, "Yes, we want to encourage it". But what did he do? The Finance Minister added another 1 cent a litre to the price of gasoline; in addition to the previous 3 cents a litre we had in the last Budget. We have had a total of an extra 4 cents a litre or an extra 18 cents a gallon put on the price of gas when we already had the highest gasoline prices of any of the provinces of Canada. It is true that prices are higher in the far north. So, how is that an incentive for people who want to have a Canadian holiday somewhere in the great Canadian Shield? It is a disincentive.

If you want to fly on one of the charters at one of the main airports to a remote area for fishing—on a scheduled flight—you are stuck with another $4 on top of the ticket price. That is the contribution of the Minister of Finance to the encouragement of tourism in northern Ontario.

I repeat my theme once again. It is a simple one. We agree entirely with the Minister that some regions of this country are hurting, that the blow ought to be cushioned, but he gave us nothing at all to cushion the blow except a lot of sympathy, a lot of understanding, a lot of goodwill and many promises. But so far, Mr. Speaker, nothing in the way of action.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I am more than happy to have heard the invitation to go fishing in northern Ontario. I accept publicly. I will do my best when I come back to tell Canadians across this country how great the area is. I hope that my colleague and my friend, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), can accompany us and get to know Canada better, as well as what Canadians are all about.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I just want to conclude by saying that the Minister of Finance did brag in his speech that we should all take satisfaction from the fact that the rate of inflation at least is down to 4 per cent, and isn't that something we can all be happy with because now we have more money to spend? But what he did not tell us is that the rate of inflation was the highest of any of the G-7 countries. He did not tell us that of that 4 per cent increase in the inflation rate, two to three points are directly due to the tax burden he has imposed on the citizens of Canada.

He argues in his speech that Canadians now have more disposable income. He does not say that Canadians, since he became the Minister of Finance, have been faced with a 52 per cent increase in their taxes. I am talking about the average Canadian family. The argument about the inflation rate being to the benefit of Canadians is also hollow.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn).

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I enjoy hearing from the Opposition with respect to this rather good Budget of February 18. Indeed, comments right across the country have been about the quality of the Budget and the competent administration of our Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret). I can only say that while the Opposition may not see any good news in the Budget, it was a Budget of a responsible Government.

The Budget indicated that our deficit in relation to the Gross National Product is down 39 per cent, our borrowing requirements in relation to the Gross National Product are down 42 per cent. The Fiscal Monitor issued March, 1987, followed up on the Budget, and I will read from three paragraphs:

> For the first nine months of fiscal year 1986-87, (April to December), the budgetary deficit stood at $20.6 billion, down $3.5 billion from the level registered in the first three-quarters of fiscal year 1985-86. The year-over-year improvement in deficit continues to reflect the growth in the economy, restraint on spending and the impact and timing of past budget measures—financial requirements, excluding foreign exchange transactions, were down $8.8 billion compared to the same period a year ago—total financial requirements, including foreign exchange requirements, stood at $18.2 billion, down $6.4 billion from that registered in the first three-quarters of 1985-86.

That is remarkable management, and it ought to be acknowledged by the other side as remarkable. The harping we have heard is not proper or fair.

We have not had an easy time in Canada during the last year or year and a half. We have seen oil prices decline from $32 a barrel down as low as $10 a barrel, at one point, and I am talking of American dollars. That resulted in a loss of some $1.5 billion in tax revenue from oil companies. It also resulted in a great retraction in the drilling activities of the oil industry.

• (1520)

It has not been easy in the oil fields, and it has not been easy in the mines. Copper prices are lower than they have been since the Great Depression. Lead, nickel and zinc prices are down to almost unbelievably low levels. The grain trade, not only in wheat but in other grains, is faced with massive competition throughout the world. The effect has been that we have had to sell grains at a world price far below that which should reasonably be expected for the products. As a result, things have not been easy.

I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that Canadians have always been described as hewers of wood and drawers of water. Our wood and our water—our raw resources, our soil, timber lands and mines—have not been producing the returns they should have produced, the returns we could normally have expected. Despite that terrible performance in the resource sector and the commodity sector, the GNP has managed to increase over 3 per cent. Indeed, the growth rate was in excess of that of any other country in the OECD, and that is a remarkable performance. That remarkable performance ought to be congratulated by Hon. Members on the other side.

Our remarkable performance has been recognized by the exchange rate. The value of the Canadian dollar has increased significantly since the first of the year. Our remarkable performance can be demonstrated by the interest rates which are down to 1972 and 1973 levels. Over 200,000 homes will be built this year alone. That is remarkable. Yet we hear Hon. Members from the other side grouse, put Canada down and say how terrible things are.

It has been tough in parts of the country. It has been hard in parts of the country that rely on resources and there is a significant unemployment rate in some of those areas. That is a problem we will have to address, but we recognize the problem and we are getting at it. That is why the Government just recently committed $350 million to Alberta's oil industry. That is why the Government spent $1 billion of its funds trying to reinvigorate and help farmers in the production of grains. We are not doing nothing about the situation; we are in fact acting to try to ameliorate the problem in the commodity market and in those parts of the country where growth has not been up to snuff.

Hopefully international markets will improve. It is not the fault of the Government, however, that international markets are soft. The Government is doing what it can to ameliorate the problems of soft markets, but that is all it can do. We will try to do what we can to improve conditions, but conditions cannot be improved by government action alone. We need new international agreements on resources so that countries do not continue to compete with each other by giving away their heritages.

I would like to speak for a moment about the reforms of the House of Commons because I think those reforms are important to Parliament and I think the Budget debate should emphasize those important reforms. I am particularly impressed with the way the committee system has operated. It has given Parliamentarians a better handle on how Ministries are operated.

It is important that we as Members of Parliament exercise our review function and exercise it more diligently. It is important that we examine and cross-examine Ministers and their officials on how they are performing their jobs. Surely when a Government is the size that it is, and represents the invasion into the lives of individuals that it does, it is imperative that we as representatives of the people cross-examine those officials to ensure that the programs they are supposed to be delivering are giving us full value for the money expended. Where those programs are not giving full value, we must as sensible Members of Parliament suggest the removal of, or change in those programs so that Canadians get full value for their tax dollars.

In that respect, may I commend the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) for the way she has conducted the Public Accounts Committee, and members of other committees that have tried to find out how programs are carried out and administered.

I think it is also important that the Government continue to do the things it has been doing in terms of asking directly and indirectly that committees exercise their powers under Standing Order 96(2) to make inquiries into programs and anticipated programs of Government so Members of Parliament will have input before those programs are put into legislation. It is that first look at an idea that gives us as Members of Parliament an advantage. We can have our say in how the country should be governed and how the new activities and thrusts of Government should be put forward.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has made an effort to ensure that we as Members of Parliament have the freedom to express ourselves, through the committee system in particular. However, we ought to take a look at the other rules of the House. For the last week the House has been stalemated by one procedural motion after another. In Great Britain, a debate on a complicated piece of legislation can be finished in one day's sitting. There is no reason for delaying and delaying pieces of legislation that are brought before the House, particularly when there is provision for a committee system to allow in-depth analysis of the problems envisaged in Bills and procedures.

The House must reform its rules on debate. We cannot allow important pieces of legislation to be held up while a war takes place across the aisle over whether or not a piece of legislation demanded by the Government is essential. Surely to goodness the voters will eventually decide that; surely to goodness the whole country should not be held for ransom because of procedural delays.

From the point of view of the Finance Committee, it is essential that the Government get ahead with Bill C-42. That Bill deals with combining the Inspector General's office and the office of the Superintendent of Insurance. That recommendation was made by the Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs a year and a half ago, and it is essential that it be implemented.

Included in that Bill are powers to be given to the new office of the Superintendent of Insurance so that he may discipline and keep in line the trust companies, banks and insurance companies under the aegis of his powers. With some of the things that are happening in the real estate market, particularly in the greater Toronto area, I think it is essential that the Superintendent of Insurance have those powers contained in that Bill. Yet while the House debates Bill C-22 and holds it back, we cannot get at that important piece of legislation.

It is important that before the end of June the House come to the realization that we require rules of procedure that will enable matters to come to a vote, and come to a vote quickly. We cannot be held up any longer by delays and delays. It is bad for Parliament and it is bad for the democratic process, and in a country that is supposed to be progressive and able to come to grips with problems quickly, the causing of one procedural delay after another makes a mockery of democracy.

I would like to deal with the very important matter of tax reform. Our Income Tax Act is unbelievably complex. It is so complex that even leading chartered accountants have indicated that they themselves cannot understand the provisions and ramifications of it. Mr. Don Hugget appeared before the Finance Committee and, addressing me as chairman said, "I cannot understand the Act myself". He indicated that he had to have someone else help him with his own income tax return.

Tax returns are complicated so badly that despite every effort by Revenue Canada to produce a simplified and easily read form, Dian Cohen indicated the other day on Canada AM that before people even attempt to fill in their income tax returns they ought to buy one of several books which she recommended on how to fill out tax forms.

The Income Tax Act, which contains at least 100 separate allowances, deductions and provisions of benefit in one form or another, creates such complexity that the fairness in allowing these various deductions and allowances is lost. When average people read on their tax forms, "deductions, other", they wonder whether they are getting the benefit to which they are entitled in the tax system. When people believe a tax system is unfair, it is unfair. Because it is unfair it must be simplified to the point where reasonable people with reasonable intelligence can file their tax returns.

To that extent you may recall that last June the Finance Committee filed a substantial report on tax simplification. It is our hope and indeed our requirement that the tax reform package contain provisions of simplification to make the filing of a tax return far easier than it is today. It should be simple enough that ordinary people can complete their tax return without any professional assistance. That is not the case today and it must be one of the prime requirements of tax reform.

Not only does the present system seem unfair to individuals, but indeed it may well be unfair in itself. The New Democratic Members of Parliament have suggested that certain companies do not pay tax. To some extent they are right. Companies do not pay tax if they are not taxable. When the insurance industry was before the Finance Committee we asked why it did not pay tax. When the trust companies were before the committee we asked why they did not pay tax. When the banks were before us we asked why they did not pay tax. We asked the big real estate developers why they did not pay tax.

They do not pay tax because the present rules are such that they are not taxable. If they are not taxable, they ought to be taxable. The tax reform package ought to make them taxable. I expect that the reform package as presented by the Government will in fact make them taxable so that the unfairness complained of by the other side will no longer exist and Canadians will no longer believe that they are not being treated with the elementary justice to which they are entitled.

Through tax reform, provision should be made for married couples to file joint returns. I believe that all of the attribution rules presently in the system which allow for the transfer of deductions and income from one to another ought to be disposed of. Those are an exceptionally complicated series of provisions. A provision for joint returns would greatly simplify this.

The most important element of tax reform is to ensure that those people who live in poverty, who earn less than the minimum required to put bread and salt on the table, do not pay income tax. That, surely, must be one of the principal thrusts of tax reform. The tax system must reduce tax rates for the poor and lower income people while reducing the over-all personal rate. The over-all personal rate in itself discourages legitimate investment activity. In the current income tax system we have high rates and a whole series of fool deductions. If you take advantage of the deductions you can wind up with a very low rate. Surely we can get rid of the deductions and have a median rate ensuring that everyone pays a fair share. We can have two or three gradations to simplify matters rather than having 14 or 16 different levels. Such a method of taxation would ensure that people are not forever trying to find loopholes or hideaways in the Income Tax Act in order to pay less tax.

I think it is essential that we have a new sales tax system. We cannot continue with the present system which deliberately bonuses importers and deliberately penalizes exporters. If a business transfer tax can be organized to do that, I believe that would be the best form of taxation to have. I hope that when the Government presents its tax reform it will deal with a business transfer tax on goods in order to get rid of the horrendously complicated and unfair sales tax system we presently have to ensure that we come to grips with the problem of imports and exports.

Finally, I think it is important that we deal with capital gains tax. I think all capital gains ought to be tax free, but very few things ought to be considered as capital gains. A capital gain is a long-term gain made by a farmer on his farm over a lifetime, made by a homeowner over a long period of time, or made by someone who started a business, ran it for most of his life, and then sold it. It is not a short-term trade in commodity futures.

That is the kind of thing which is considered a capital gain today and that ought to be fully taxable. A capital gain is not the profit on a strip bond. That is income and ought to be taxed at full rates. We should have capital gains relief for true capital gains and taxation for true income. Activities in the nature of trade are true income, not capital gains, and ought to be taxed at full rates.

I note that my time is up. I would like to speak longer. However, I would like to say that this is a good Budget, and the tax reform promises to be a good tax reform.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I came back from my office to listen to the speech of the Hon. Member. As you know, he chaired the very interesting Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs where he and I have discussed many of the issues concerning tax reform.

• (1540)

I want to make sure that I understood what the Hon. Member just said about capital gains. It seemed rather new, coming from the Hon. Member who fought for total exemption of capital gains. I am very interested in what he said from a technical point of view. How is it possible to distinguish the true capital gain from the one he just mentioned? The Hon. Member gave, as an example of true capital gain, the farmer who inherited a farm from his father 25 or 30 years ago and sells it to his son or another individual. What happens if that same person kept the farm for five years? Is capital gains determined by time or another mechanism? I would be interested to hear more of what the Hon. Member had in mind.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Income Tax Act could have a series of rules built in that would indicate what is a capital gain and what is income. It seems to me that the prejudice ought to be in favour of income as opposed to gain. It would seem, then, that a gain made in less than five years ought to be presumed an income gain, unless the taxpayer can prove to the contrary. It would seem to me that a gain made in over five years ought to be a capital transaction, unless the Government can prove to the contrary.

It would seem, though, that with certain transactions involving the market, such as the strip bond where the built-in gain already exists, that clearly is a situation where money was put up to buy a defined fixed return. That is a designed return on a particular asset over a particular period of time. Transactions such as that which now pass as capital gain ought to be treated as income.

However, the general theory is that there ought to be a reverse burden of proof on a period of time. Determining what period is fair or unfair is another matter, but surely that ought to be the theory behind what I am talking about.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, it may be possible to design a mechanism in that respect. After listening to the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), I feel that he is increasingly becoming a red Tory. We are not used to that.

I am very interested in his proposal to eliminate from the tax roll all those who are under the poverty line, although he has not defined what the poverty line is. Would he accept the definition of the poverty line given by Statistics Canada, or does he have another definition of the poverty line?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) is absolutely right. It is difficult to determine what is the poverty line. A number of people have indicated the poverty line as being $8,000 on a single basis and $12,000 for those who are married without children. It is difficult in a country like Canada to define poverty. What is a poverty situation in some parts of Ontario, for example, is affluence in other parts. For example, the poverty line in Mississauga would be very much higher than those figures, whereas the poverty line near my cottage might be substantially less, simply because it is a trading economy with such things as farm products and so on where cash income is perhaps not as important as income from land and trading.

It is always difficult to determine a poverty line in a country like Canada. I believe we ought to be considering it as something like $8,000 on a single basis, $12,000 for married people without children, and an additional amount for families with children. That is always subject to change and what is fiscally possible.

Mr. Ravis: Mr. Speaker, I want to comment on the suggestion that my colleague, the Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), is a red Tory. I am beginning to wonder if the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) is a blue Liberal.

I want to compliment the Hon. Member for Mississauga South because I believe he told the story as it is. He gave credit where credit is due in the Budget while admitting that there are some inequities which must be addressed, hopefully in the upcoming tax reform.

That leads me to my question. In his capacity as Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, will he comment on what time frame is required for a Government which came to office in 1984 to deal with all that is happening, especially with respect to something as complex as the tax system? The Liberal Party seems to be very impatient for our tax reform package. The New Democratic Party is also impatient, and I notice that the Leader of the New Democratic Party has been sending requests for financial assistance to his Party so that it can try to bring on this tax reform sooner than it can be done by the Government.

Mr. Keeper: Make a donation.

Mr. Ravis: I will not make a donation, but I will ask the Chairman of the Finance Committee to give us a realistic time frame. One would think that it is not a matter one would jump into without knowing all the answers or fully understanding the questions.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the tax reform problems are much more difficult in Canada than perhaps in most other countries. We have an income tax system federally and provincially in which the federal Government collects income taxes on a personal basis from nine of the provinces and on a corporate basis from seven of the provinces. Our tax system is generally integrated with the provinces in terms of transfer and so on, which means that it requires a great deal of consultation and effort to work out an equitable system that will return to junior levels of government their appropriate share of revenue while not causing any undue displacement of investment in one part of the country compared to another.

The Government has been working very diligently on this problem. I am sure it would like to have been able to present the full tax reform package in the February Budget. I suppose the work is far more complicated than one would realize at the outset, but I am reasonably convinced that the Government will be able to come forward with an equitable package before the end of the spring. That package will have to be examined by Canadians, and it is essential that Canadians from across the country have their input in that package. To the extent that what the Government suggests will not wash with Canadians, I would think that the Committee on Finance ought to listen to Canadians and be able to come up with recommendations for perhaps even further change.

Tax reform clearly must be a matter of consensus. It must be a matter where no one part of society is unfairly injured. I say "unfairly injured" because some people are perhaps not paying the taxes they should. Some organizations perhaps are not carrying the tax burden they should. However, we must ensure that in asking them to carry a larger tax burden, we do not so upset their activities in the country as to injure the country over-all. It is not an easy matter but it is a matter the Government is dedicated to complete. I am sure the Government will be calling upon all Hon. Members of the House for their co-operation, efforts and energies.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to enter into this debate. I must say I have just about forgotten what this Budget is all about. It has been a while since the Budget came before the House and the time of the House has been taken up with other matters. I welcome the fact that we are back on the Budget debate. It needs to be completed. The Budget needs to have the debate that it deserves.

I am also glad that the legislation with regard to generic drugs is not before the House today, because that is an unjust project the Government has undertaken and to which it has committed itself and the Government should have time to reflect. I hope the Government uses the opportunity today to take another look at its attempt to give a sweetheart deal to the pharmaceutical drug companies, thereby taking money out of the pockets of ordinary Canadian consumers, particularly elderly people who have a hard enough time to make their dollars meet their expenses. I hope the Government will use this time to reflect and will find its heart when it has an opportunity to take a look at what it is doing.

As I said, it has been a while since this Budget was presented in this House, and I had to go back and reflect on just what it is all about. After having looked at some of its provisions, I have come to the conclusion that this Budget is a do-nothing Budget. It has no major initiatives. It takes very little action. Therefore, it is very understandable why I had forgotten the contents of the Budget. It is a Budget that shows the Government cares very little about the average Canadian family, about the hardest hit regions and the poor, whether those poor are here in Canada or in the Third World.

I want to elaborate on my conclusions. I want to comment about what I see as the impact of the Budget. What could the Government have done instead of doing nothing? Can we afford to act? Do we have the money to do some of the things that I would like to suggest we should have done? To begin with, I say the Budget is a do-nothing Budget because it does very little or nothing for the average Canadian family. I think we should take note of the fact that over the last couple of years under a Conservative Government, taxes on the ordinary Canadian family have been growing. In fact, over the last couple of years, taxes have risen by some $1,350, so that the average family is now paying $1,350 more a year in taxes than it did two years ago before this Government was elected. Obviously, the majority of Canadians who elected this Government, hoped for much better. They hoped their condition would improve. They hoped to be able to face their financial responsibilities a little better today than a couple of years ago. Canadians are not unrealistic. They do not expect miracles overnight. However, they did expect some improvement in their condition. What in fact they received was a whopping increase in taxes. We might say this was fair if we were able to conclude that everyone had to pay more taxes because we were trying to dig ourselves out of a massive debt hole created by the previous Liberal Government. Obviously, there is a massive debt created by that Government. The argument could be made that it is fair for everyone to pay more taxes because we have to get rid of this debt. But is it fair?

At the same time that the average Canadian family is paying $1,350 a year more in taxes, wealthy Canadians have been given a tax break through changes in the lifetime capital gains exemption. If one owns property, and if that property rises in value to the extent of $.5 million, one would not have to pay taxes on that. Therefore, if one is wealthy, there is a tax break. At the same time, average Canadian families had their taxes increased. So I contend that it is unfair. I suggest that the average Canadian would consider that an unfair approach to raising revenue. Canadians recognize that in order to have services, they must pay, but they want these services to be paid for in a fair manner, but when they have to pay vastly increased taxes at the same time that wealthy Canadians get a tax write-off, they must conclude that it is unfair.

Another aspect of fairness with regard to taxation in this Budget has to do with those Canadians who live in poverty, which is fully a fifth of the Canadian population. Obviously, we could have some debate about just exactly how many people are poor or how many are not poor, but I think there is a general consensus that at least a fifth of the population could be considered poor, to put the estimates in modest terms. What we note about taxes is that Canada's poorest individuals and families have to pay taxes on incomes of less than half the poverty line. So not only can one be poor living below the poverty line, having less income than it takes to provide for one's own basic human needs, but at the same time one can be asked to pay taxes. Individuals who are really in difficult circumstances are still being asked to pay taxes. It strikes me as unfair to ask people, who are earning less than half of what an income would be if they were at the poverty line, to pay taxes, at the same time that wealthy Canadians who have large capital gains are being told their taxes are forgiven. That is unfair. When a Budget does nothing about that kind of situation, it can justly be called a do-nothing Budget.

Canadians are not only concerned about the poor in Canada. We are concerned about all the poor because we have a sense of justice and compassion. In fact, the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when he was campaigning referred to Canadians' compassion and really sought to gain support from Canadians by indicating that he shared that value. But what have the Conservatives done in the Budget? They have reduced the amount of official development assistance by $150 million this year. They have reduced the amount of aid which goes to the poorer countries in this world. That is unfair. We can all remember the terrible famine that took place in Ethiopia. We can remember the graphic pictures of starving children that we saw on television. Canadians responded to the need. They gave from their own pockets. To give the Government credit, it also responded in those moments. But it is to these types of situations that we have to respond on an ongoing basis. This means that we need to place a higher priority on the assistance we give to the Third World rather than a lower priority. I say "priority" because I think it is possible for Canada to raise the revenue to do the things it needs to do and at the same time to have enough revenue to help globally, to help bring about greater justice in the world.

In fact, what the Government has done through this Budget is to reduce the amount of money that we spend on development assistance. I call that doing nothing since there are changes in policy with regard to development aid that the Government could have undertaken. It could have accepted some of the long-standing recommendations from the development community which calls for aid to be on time. In other words, when we undertake an aid program in a given country, the resources should respond to the priorities of the country rather than to our own priorities in terms of our economic development or in terms of the types of goods our companies sell. It has been well documented that giving aid to another country while tying it to that country's purchasing goods from Canada can distort the aid. Thus we end up not helping the country. While on paper we are claiming to help, in reality we are not helping at all. In fact, we are wasting our own money. If we want to spend money on development aid then we want it to be spent effectively. We want it to result in development. While the Government could have done something in this area in fact it has done nothing.

The Budget has postponed the whole question of tax reform. There is a growing consensus in the country that the tax system is unjust, that it is too complicated, that there are too many loopholes in it and that we have to find a more fair way to raise the revenue we need in order to deliver the services which the Government has the responsibility to deliver. However, the Government has postponed any efforts at tax reform. Rather than bringing forward something with respect to tax reform in this Budget, which was an opportunity for the Government to take action, it chose to do nothing. It chose to put off the day when we will see tax reform. One can speculate as to why it did that. Perhaps it hopes that it can have a tax reform package prepared for the next election and announce it just before it in an attempt to curry public favour, in an attempt to seek to improve its own political fortunes. If I wanted to be cynical about the whole matter I would say that it would announce such proposals at a time approaching the next election but too late to give Canadians an opportunity to experience the impact of such a measure. In this way the average Canadian would have no real way of evaluating the impacts of such measures and whether they really lived up to the promises made. Instead of acting on tax reform, the Budget has further increased taxes on the average Canadian family by $65 to $100 per year.

So taxes have been increased in the Budget, inclusive of taxes on gasoline, airline tickets, cigarettes and snack food. We have all heard of heartless Governments before. However, a Government that increases taxes on children's candy, on granola bars and chocolate bars, is truly heartless. I must say that I try to discourage my children from eating chocolate bars because I know that they are not good for their teeth. I know that sugar can decay teeth. However, I am not always successful in this end and, of course, a child can buy a granola bar rather than a chocolate bar.

Why has the Government chosen to pick on little children while giving tax breaks to wealthy Canadians? It has chosen to impose taxes on snack foods, thus taking candy out of the mouths of babes. That is heartless. While it imposes taxes on children's candy it does nothing in terms of child care. The Government postponed action on child care. This is a key area in which there is a growing consensus with respect to the need for action. It is one of the most important areas of public policy in which Governments will be constantly pressured for action until we arrive at a point at which there is adequate child care. Because of demographic changes and because of changes in work habits we need day care in a way that we have yet to face up to. The Government has chosen to tax children's candy and do nothing about child care—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Keeper: I hear laughter from members of the Government. I understand that they do not like having the shortcomings of this Budget pointed out. I am sure their laughter is a result of their embarrassment. Perhaps they have failed to read the Budget which was presented to the House.

The Budget is not only unfair to the poor and the children but it is also unfair to the regions of Canada, to the Atlantic region, to British Columbia, parts of the Prairies, and parts of Quebec and Ontario which have unemployment rates of 15 per cent to 20 per cent.

An Hon. Member: Not on the Prairies!

Mr. Keeper: My Conservative colleague says: "Not on the Prairies". I know that in Manitoba we have a very low unemployment rate. In part that is due to the initiatives of the New Democratic Government which is in office in that province. However, it is also important to know that it is time the Government woke up to the fact that Manitoba needs respect as a region, that Manitoba needs industrial economic development. It is not enough for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to quote our low unemployment rate since it does not reflect the whole of the province. It does not reflect the fact of the need for development in Manitoba. We are still not at an equal level with Toronto, which is the impression the Government seeks to put forward.

What I really wish to say about the Budget is that it is a lost opportunity. It is a do-nothing Budget. It is a Budget that did nothing for the poor, nothing for the hardest hit regions of the country, and nothing for average Canadian families.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this is an unfair Budget. It is a Budget that does nothing for the average Canadian, for the regions or for the poor. Mr. Speaker, it is time this Government took action and did something for Canadians. It is not enough to increase taxes. Canadians need services such as daycare and regional development programs.

This Budget, however, does nothing for anyone.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I think my friend made a remarkable speech. I was really impressed. I was also wondering if he had even bothered to read the Budget, let alone the Estimates.

At the outset he talked about foreign aid, but forgot the fact that we have increased aid to underdeveloped countries by $450 million. He does not even give us credit for that. He talked as if it were cut back. Then he went on to the question of chocolate bars. Chocolate bars have been taxed all along. Did he not know that? Did he not know that we felt that if we are going to tax chocolate bars, then peanuts and potato chips ought to be taxed as well? After all, they are snack foods. Why, in the interest of fairness, would he not want chocolate bars to be taxed when peanuts and granola bars are taxed? Why would he not want the tax to be spread equally?

In his remarks he went further and talked about child care. He ought to know, if he has been around this House at all, that a very important committee report was tabled concerning this issue. He ought to know that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) is negotiating with his provincial counterparts to create a Canadian child care program. Yet according to him this should be included in the Budget even before there is any federal-provincial conference on the issue. Most unbelievable of all, he talks about tax reform as if it were never going to happen. He knows the Minister has undertaken to produce the report as soon as he can this spring.

I just want to know from the Hon. Member if he bothered to read the Budget or the Estimates.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I want to assure my friend that I read the Budget. I remember sitting here in this House listening to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) deliver the Budget. I appreciate the rhetorical flourish of the Hon. Member. He has a nice turn of phrase and, being a man of experience, knows how to do it.

The point I was making with regard to foreign aid is the same point I made about the Budget. It is a do-nothing Budget.

Mr. Blenkarn: A $450 million increase is to do nothing?

Mr. Keeper: To illustrate that I made the point that official development assistance will be adjusted to save $150 million this year. The Government reduced planned spending by $150 million this year for official development assistance. I was not saying that the absolute level of development assistance had dropped, but the money to be spent had been taken out of the Estimates. That means a reduced commitment to development assistance. This comes at a time when we could be increasing our commitment and making our policies more effective. At present development assistance is tied to other things, and if we untied it then we could make it more effective and responsive.

The Hon. Member mentioned chocolate bars. He says we taxed snack foods because we already taxed chocolate bars. That is an interesting notion of fairness. It is kind of like saying if I kick you once, maybe I should kick you twice. I can understand that this might be the Tory definition of fairness. However, I was simply pointing out that to tax children's candy at the same time that the Government fails to take any concrete action to provide the services children need is what I consider to be a do-nothing and unfair approach. The Hon. Member says we have to wait for the committee report on child care. We have to wait for the federal-provincial conference. Why bring in a Budget if it contains no plan of action? Why not take some action in the Budget? You do not have to develop the program fully in one Budget, but you could take a few steps forward, or maybe even one step forward. Why not put in this Budget some start-up funds for daycare? Why not take that first symbolic step to show good faith on child care?

The Hon. Member says I talked about tax reform as if it would never happen. Maybe it never will. We have heard about tax reform time and time again and so far there has been no action. How do we know there will be action? The Government has continued to raise taxes in an unfair way on ordinary Canadian families. Over the last couple of years it has raised taxes by more than $1,350 per family, and this Budget does it again. How can we accept the Government's promises of tax reform as being credible when it is raising taxes on ordinary Canadians while reducing taxes for the wealthy and promising reform in the future?

Mr. Winegard: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my colleague two specific questions.

Mr. Oberle: Keep them simple.

Mr. Winegard: By what percentage did official Canadian development assistance increase in the Budget? As well, does he not agree that, all other things being equal, we should use Canadian goods and services in our official development assistance?

Mr. Keeper: I will deal with those questions in reverse order. Yes, all other things being equal, we should use Canadian goods and services. Why not? The problem is that the Government has failed to deal with the problem, indeed it is being exacerbated, because it has introduced into development assistance a commercial motive. It has even advertised this in the annual reports and booklets it sends to the business community. It tells them that this is their chance to get a contract involving development aid. The Government is emphasizing the economic benefit to Canadian firms of development assistance. The problem with that approach is that we have allocated that money to help the poor areas of the world. That is why Canadians support the expenditure. When you tie that aid to the requirement that it be spent in Canada, you distort the development process and priorities in the Third World country you are trying to assist. The aid has to be untied in order to be effective. Of course, if we preserve the priorities of development in the Third World countries so that our help is effective and the money well spent and at the same time we use Canadian products, great, we will celebrate that.

However, we need to have a change in policy so the emphasis is more on how the aid can be effective rather than on the commercial advantage to Canadian firms.

What I find disturbing about the Budget and the Government's action on development aid is that it continues to put off reaching the target of .5 per cent of GNP for development aid. In other words, the Government continues to put off an internationally agreed upon goal for development assistance at the same time that it reduced the amount of planned spending on official development assistance by $150 million. I think that shows a lack of priority for official development assistance.

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to join in the debate on the Budget. Of course, this is the third complete Budget presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and really the fourth major economic statement if we count the one in the fall of 1984.

It is quite clear that the Minister of Finance has undertaken a major restructuring of the economy, a major restructuring of social systems, including pension systems, and has now embarked upon a major restructuring of the tax system, the details of which are just hinted at in the Budget.

I should like to start by reviewing the success which the Minister of Finance has had over his term, because I believe he will go down in history as one of the great, or possibly the greatest, Finance Minister our country has had. Given the situation which he took over, and given the disaster and chaos in the Canadian economy in 1982, 1983, and 1984, the turnaround has been truly remarkable.

Since the Minister of Finance was appointed in September, 1984, employment growth in Canada has averaged 2.5 per cent. It is a little difficult for people to recognize just what that represents. It represents being first in the world in terms of employment growth among all major OECD countries. Some 700,000 jobs have been created in Canada since the Government took power.

To give an idea of the magnitude of that figure, in 1986 alone more jobs were created in Canada than in all western Europe combined, which of course has many times our population base. However, I will admit that those jobs have not been created uniformly across the country. My particular riding is one which has benefited, but I remember well in 1982, constituents coming to me who had lost their jobs or were losing their houses because of high interest rates. There was a tremendous sense of despair and depression as people were laid off or forced to meet rapidly increasing interest rates.

Now York-Scarborough is booming. We believe that we have the lowest unemployment rate in the country. We have the fastest rates of job expansion, housing expansion, and population growth. It is obvious that these policies are now working in the rest of the country as the employment picture continues to improve. For example, in the first two months of this calendar year, some 30,000 jobs were created in Quebec, principally in Montreal. Montreal is beginning to see the benefits of the policies brought in by the Minister of Finance.

I mentioned mortgage interest rates. Interest rates in general have fallen faster in Canada than in any other part of the world since September, 1984. It is important to recognize that the prime rate of interest is close to a 10-year low. It is now possible to obtain mortgages with single digit interest rates.

I remember when I bought my own house in 1970. I was paying 10.25 per cent on a five-year mortgage at that time. Interest rates are below that now. They are down into single digits. In fact, for those who want short-term mortgages, they can now obtain them for 8 per cent and change.

Let us compare that with the chaos caused under the policies of the previous Government where mortgage interest rates hit 22 per cent. I remember being invited by an entire condominium association to visit their houses, to advise them on what to do with their mortgages, and to develop personal financial plans because they were afraid of losing them.

However, things have changed dramatically in five years. Obviously 90-day commercial deposit rates are down at 10-year lows. Credit card interest rates have started to fall. If the Minister of Finance had not created an environment in which the cost of money was falling, credit card interest rates would not be falling as well. Certainly in the last two weeks to three weeks we have seen every major bank fall in line and reduce credit card interest rates by almost 3 per cent. It is an enormous drop and is credit to what is happening in the economy.

We could look at all kinds of economic indices, but let us look at the dollar. It started declining shortly after 1976 when it was well above par. It declined in a ratchet manner to a low of 71.5 cents just before the last election. There is no doubt that we have had a considerable problem turning around the dollar, but it is now sitting on the verge of 77 cents. This means an enormous increase in the purchasing power of Canadians when they buy food from the United States or take U.S. vacations. It certainly represents a very important step for people such as my mother who, because of her health condition, finds it very difficult to live through our cold winters. These are important economic developments for Canadians.

The growth in Canadian output in 1986 at 3.3 per cent topped that of all major countries. If we measure the growth in real output since September, 1984, we see that Canada is second only to Japan. Most of us would agree that Japan is the economic miracle of the world and has been through the 1980s. However, how many of us stop to think that since the election we are running neck and neck with Japan, and last year we actually passed Japan and were first among all countries in the world?

The employment growth we have seen has led to a steady fall in unemployment as the last 2.5 years have gone by. Unemployment rates are now down by almost 2 per cent. The effects are being felt across the country with the majority of jobs being created being full-time ones.

The last Government had a cost of living plan. Somehow it hoped to get down to as low as 6 per cent and 5 per cent. I guess they were nice objectives for the day, but through the actions of the Minister of Finance we have seen the cost of living in Canada settle down in the 3 per cent to 4 per cent range, almost half what the previous Government thought was achievable.

The deficit, another important measure of international economic activity, has shown a dramatic fall. It is important to recognize this not only in national terms but in international terms as well. In national terms there was a steady and dramatic increase in the deficit between 1980 and fiscal 1984-85. The deficit rose from around $10 billion to $11 billion up into the high thirties, through just plain economic mismanagement. We have seen a steady decrease in each of the first three years covered by the first three Budgets of the Minister of Finance. This year it will be down to the same level as that in the United States in terms of the deficit as a proportion of the Gross National Product.

Let us put that in perspective in international terms. When we took office in September, 1984, our deficit was almost twice as large, as a percentage of the Gross National Product, as that of the United States. It is quite clear that next year or the year after that we will be below the U.S. deficit as the economic plan comes into full fruition. This has been done primarily through program expenditure reductions. This fiscal year represents the first year in which there are actual reductions in program expenditures since the Korean War. No other Government has had the courage to do what the Minister of Finance has done in his three Budgets.

As I said, we have had a major turn-around. For example, the reduction in interest rates has prompted a boom in housing construction across the country. I remember when the predecessor member for my riding was the Minister responsible for housing and talked about maybe constructing up to 120,000 housing units per year. We will have 200,000 new houses constructed in Canada this year. That is primarily a tribute to the improving economic environment and to the very low rates of interests available for people to finance their houses.

To listen to the Opposition, you would think that all this was an accident, that we were exceptionally lucky or that somehow we were catching up with the rest of the world. I know one thing, Mr. Speaker, it is possible now and then to fluke in to a lucky gain in one area. Look at the areas that I have enumerated. We are number one in the world in so many different areas that it cannot conceivably be argued and dismissed, as the Opposition seems to, as being some sort of accident or some sort of blind luck. I am reminded of the Canadian humorist Stephen Leacock who once said: "The harder I work, the luckier I get". That really is the true explanation for sustained luck. Sustained luck may appear as luck to those who do not work hard. It may appear as luck to those who do not have a plan, who do not understand how to produce good fortune, but sustained good luck is the result of planning and hard work.

I mentioned in my introductory remarks that in his Budget the Minister of Finance has had a record of continuously improving the environment for pensions and annuities, particularly in the private sector. That trend has continued in this Budget. Important restrictions were removed in this Budget that were introduced in the 1981 MacEachen Budget. In 1981 Mr. MacEachen introduced severe tax penalties for those people who were trying to save for their retirement through the use of single premium deferred annuities. He said, in effect, that if you retire before age 60, you would pay the full tax immediately upon seeking retirement or you would pay the full tax at the end of six years and you could not build up money for retirement. The Minister of Finance in this Budget has changed the rules to provide a fair system of taxation for the single premium deferred annuities so that people can elect to retire before age 60. This is a follow-through on the changes that the Minister brought in with Bill C-90. He provided in his May 1985 Budget that pension plans must provide for early retirement within 10 years before normal retirement. The Minister has eliminated the nonsense introduced by Finance Minister MacEachen that you cannot retire before age 60, and if you do you will have tax penalties. That is not in line with current thinking. The measure in this Budget is an important one for tens of thousands of Canadian savers.

Also the Minister of Finance has introduced rules for splitting CPP pensions. As you know, Mr. Speaker, in the Canada Pension Plan Bill passed last June there were provisions so that a husband and wife could decide to rearrange their Canada Pension Plan payments. If the husband's payment happened to be higher or if the husband happened to have the only CPP pension, the couple could split the pension between the husband and the wife. Under the old income tax attribution rules, while people could physically transfer payments, one could not transfer the tax effect of the payments. Our Finance Minister has brought in progressive measures in this Budget so that now families can rearrange their CPP payments between the two spouses so that they can not only split the payments but also share the tax advantages of re-arranging the payments. Similarly, in the Minister's pension reform legislation, he has been very conscious of the fact that women, spouses, have been hard done by in the past. In the legislation following from this Budget we will see special provisions for the next seven years to allow the roll-over of pensions into spousal RRSPs of up to $6,000 a year, so that those spouses who were not adequately provided for through retirement pension plans and through having participated in the workforce can have money built up in their own names. It is important that these tax measures will primarily benefit single women—single not in the sense that they are single now but in the sense that as women outlive men they are widowed—and the major poverty problem in Canada over the last 10 years has been the plight of the widow. By setting up these income tax incentives, the Minister is taking direct steps to attack poverty.

We also have a number of measures in the Budget with respect to tax avoidance and tax reform. Revenue Canada now has a new service orientation, which includes opening up offices in new areas of the country, such as in my riding. In addition to providing better service, we are tending to provide a fairer service. Fairer service means not only ensuring that people get good advice but that we can track down people attempting to avoid tax. This Budget provides for an increase in the Revenue Canada staff allocations as well.

In the Budget general rules for tax reform are set out. It is important to recognize that tax reform will be presented this year, before the summer recess. It will be studied by the House of Commons Finance Committee and brought back to the House in the form of concrete legislation toward the end of the year or in next year's Budget. It will result in a dramatic change in the fairness and the progressivity of the tax system in Canada, for example, personal income tax. It is obvious that we have all read the stories of the many high-income Canadians who have avoided paying tax. At the same time many financial commentators have mentioned that you virtually cannot prepare a tax form now without reading three or four books to prepare yourself for it. Things are getting more and more complicated. We need a simpler tax system which has lower rates of taxation so that people do not have the same incentives for tax avoidance. We need one which ensures that the personal tax base is as broad as possible so that people cannot avoid tax. Last year we introduced temporary measures with the special minimum tax provisions. It is obvious these were temporary measures and that the real solution is to recast the whole income tax system. The alternative minimum tax will not be needed because the tax system itself will ensure that the proper rates of tax are collected from those high-income Canadians.

Another thing dealt with through tax reform is the tendency over the last 30 years for the proportion of government revenues provided by personal income tax to increase. In 1960, during the days of the Diefenbaker Conservative Government, only one-third of total tax collections came from personal taxes. That level has risen just about each and every year on a fairly steady basis. By 1986, personal income taxes accounted for something like 50 per cent of total tax collections, which is too high. We want to see the reliance on the personal tax base reduced. It has to be reduced because middle and low-income Canadians deserve a better tax system.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCrossan: At the same time as we are bringing these new taxes to bear on the high-income Canadians who have been avoiding them, we want to ensure that low-income Canadians, particularly those below the poverty line, are largely removed from the tax rolls.

Mr. Keeper: You must be a red Tory.

Mr. McCrossan: I am a Progressive Conservative.

Mr. Rodriguez: There is no such thing.

Mr. McCrossan: We also have to look at the other main sources of tax revenue. The manufacturer's sales tax used to provide, if we go back to 1960, one-third of our total tax revenue. The base has been narrowing substantially, both as a result of the exemptions given and as a result of the fact that the growth in the economy has been in the non-manufacturing sector. That means the revenues from sales taxes have dropped from one-third of revenue to one-fifth of revenue. We need to look at a broader based tax. Not only are we not collecting tax from the economy as a whole in proportion to its ability to bear the tax, but the current sales tax as it has been allowed to deteriorate over the years provides an incentive for imports, a disincentive for home production, and a disincentive for exports. It is obvious that if we have a tax system that significantly deters the incentives for exports in an international trading world, we are crazy. We have to change that.

• (1640)

I would like to deal finally with corporate tax reform. We have all heard the stories of the very profitable corporations which have made profits through the late 1970s and the 1980s but have not paid corporate taxes. As the Minister has clearly stated, any meaningful tax reform must result in these profitable corporations paying taxes so the Canadian taxpayer can once again have confidence that the tax system is fair and the right people are paying their taxes.

In conclusion, it is obvious that in his four Budgets, the Minister of Finance did a superb job in restoring the Canadian economy and introducing in the tax system a fairness that we all felt existed 30 years ago but had disappeared in the intervening years. It is for these reasons that the Minister of Finance will be regarded as the most important Finance Minister in Canada's history.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Hon. Member who just spoke. When he began, he went on at some length about what a fantastic job the Government had done by bringing down interest rates. He attributed the drop in inflation to the great job the Government had done.

When the Government was first elected in 1984 and interest rates and inflation were still high, answers to questions put by the Opposition were repeatedly answered by Government Members using the same line the Liberals had used when they were in office. They said that there was nothing the Government could do about lowering interest rates or about bringing inflation down because our economy was so closely tied to the American economy. They were not prepared to take the responsibility for bringing those rates down.

American interest rates and American inflation rates have come down and we followed them downward. Why is the Hon.

Member so hypocritical as to rise in the House to take credit for the drops when he was not prepared to take the responsibility for the high rates? One cannot suck and blow at the same time, or is that synonymous with Conservatives? They talk through both sides of their mouths at the same time.

Mr. McCrossan: Mr. Speaker, I would not have phrased the question that way but if I had planted it, I could not have done a better job. The question gives me a chance to talk about something that was happening during the early 1980s but has changed now.

As we built up very large deficits through the 1970s and the 1980s, the dollar was under tremendous downward pressure. The only choice the Government had in the face of these runs that occurred on the dollar was to maintain wider interest rate spreads than those that had been traditional between Canada and the United States. Traditionally, those spreads had been at the .5 per cent to 1 per cent level. Gradually those spreads grew to several percentage points. The important change that occurred and the reason the Minister of Finance can take credit for this is that he took the pressure off the dollar.

By reducing the deficit, indicating to the world that we are determined to have a stable currency and a solidly expanding economy and taking the pressure off the dollar, Canada has become the preferred place in which to invest and create jobs. The deficit is falling. The last run on the dollar was a year and a half ago. We are now facing a steady increase in the dollar and as a result of the economic policies we brought in, the Minister of Finance and the Governor of the Bank of Canada have been able to allow interest rates to fall very abruptly. These interest rates have fallen as a direct result of the Government's approach. I see nothing wrong whatsoever with taking credit for it because we got ourselves out of a problem the Liberal Government had built up for us over the last 15 years.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the speech of the Hon. Member for York—Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan). I could not help but wonder why, if the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Government is doing such a fantastic job, no one in Canada knows about it. As we travel around Canada, we certainly do not hear that message from the taxpayers.

At the beginning of his speech, the Hon. Member for York—Scarborough did say that interest rates have changed drastically in five years. I would remind the Hon. Member that five years ago, the mandate of the Liberal Government had more than two years to go. I think the Hon. Member should have thanked the previous Government rather than criticizing it in the way he did because it was obviously the Liberal Government that laid the foundation for this Government to move on the good things that are happening today in the area of interest rates.

I recognize the fact that Conservative Members do not wish to believe the truth when they hear it, but the Hon. Member did say that interest rates have changed in five years. I cannot help but agree with him. The severe depression of the early 1980s was handled superbly by the Liberal Government compared to the way the Conservative Government handled the worst depression ever before that, the depression of the 1930s. We know what happened to many people then. Government Members had better keep remembering that.

I think every Canadian across the nation realizes what the Liberal Government did in the early 1980s. It supported people on old age pensions without any cuts, it supported low and middle-income people, it supported unemployment insurance programs because it was a tough time for the unemployed, it supported people on family allowances, and it supported hospitalization. All these programs were brought into Parliament by Liberal Governments over the years.

There have been some fantastic Ministers of Finance in Parliament in past years. I would like to tell the Hon. Member for York—Scarborough that I certainly would not want to compare the present Minister of Finance with the Ilsleys and Abbotts of this world. They were truly Ministers of Finance at a time when Parliament faced tremendous challenges, not only nationally but internationally through the war years.

When the Government is praising itself for what a tremendous job it has done and at the same time it is condemning the Government of past days, I think the statement that was made earlier about not sucking and blowing at the same time is appropriate. By the way, that is an old Ottawa Valley saying. It originated in the Ottawa Valley, as did many other famous sayings. If the Government is going to take credit for the positives, it had better take the blame for the negatives.

The Hon. Member for York—Scarborough said that Scarborough is booming. That is great. There is nothing wrong with that at all. However, it is too bad that some of that has not spread across to other parts of the country. Rural Canada is not booming these days. This is the Government that said it would have all the problems of rural Canada solved in no time at all.

The Budget the Government brought in a few weeks ago is a perfect example, and indeed a perfect reflection, of the policies of a Government that has no original ideas and no perception of how it should attack the difficult problems of our time. It is quite obvious that the back-benchers in the Conservative Party had no say in this Budget, or did they? The man from Bay Street—the Finance Minister—had everything his own way. He knew of only one way to go and that was to increase taxes on the lower-income and middle-income people in the country while ensuring that he protected his wealthy friends and the large corporations. One need only look at the figures in the Budget to prove that.

I want to say a word this afternoon about defence measures. In a National Defence Committee meeting on March 17 the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Dick) replied, in answer to a question I put to him about where the 6 per cent increase in defence that they had promised throughout the election campaign was, "We have no record of having made that promise. If you can find anything, I wish you would let me know".

Well, I found it, Mr. Speaker, and put it on record in this House by way of a statement under Standing Order 21 on March 27. I told my research person at the time that I would wait a few days until the Government had one of its members reply to that because it could not allow that to stand unanswered. Sure enough, last Wednesday the Hon. Member for Northumberland—Miramichi (Mr. Jardine) got up in the House. I was surprised that that member got up and made the statement that he did, because I know him as a man of integrity. He is a retired member of the Canadian Armed Forces. In reference to me, the Hon. Member for Northumberland—Miramichi said:

> When he referred to three newspaper articles, the Hon. Member implied that they contained mention of, to use his words, promises and commitments. These words are nowhere to be found in direct connection to anyone involved with the Government.

I will begin by referring to The Toronto Star of July 31, 1984, which was about five weeks before election day. There is an excellent picture here of the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre). The article reads:

> Under a Tory government, defence spending growth "should be 6 per cent for the next few years," Andre said.

Further on the article says:

> The national defence budget is estimated at $8.78 billion for 1984-85—

The article goes on to list the other budgets. I will now refer to the London Free Press of August 6 in which an article reads:

> Last July, Conservative defence critic Harvie Andre suggested that not even four per cent would suffice. Annual increases after inflation of up to 6 per cent would be required, in his judgment, to bring existing level of armed forces up to a reasonable degree of combat readiness.

Surely these reporters in Toronto and London are not making all this up. The article continues:

> In last February's federal budget, defence expenditures were projected to total $11.15 billion in 1987-88, up 27 per cent over last year.

That did not happen, Mr. Speaker.

In the Chronicle-Herald from Halifax the following statement is to be found:

> Dartmouth Tory MP Michael Forrestall said that if a federal Liberal government needs cash, one of the first places it will look to get that cash is its defence budget, adding a Progressive Conservative government would look lastly at its defence budget for funding of other programs.

The article continues:

> Mr. Forrestall said in an interview Friday that defence spending is an important priority of the Tories, and the PCs would look at a defence budget increase of 6 per cent.

There is nothing wrong with that. He was only repeating what the defence critic of the day said.

After reading these quotes from the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre who was the defence critic during the last election, from the Member for Dartmouth—Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), and from the Associate Minister of National Defence, how can the Hon. Member for Northumberland Miramichi get up in this House and say that "these words are nowhere to be found in direct connection to anyone involved with the Government"? Is the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre not involved with the Government? I thought he was in the Cabinet. I believe I have made my point on that issue very clearly. Why are Hon. Members spending their time denying election promises which they did in fact make? It is on the record.

The Hon. Member for Northumberland—Miramichi must have been embarrassed to be asked to stand up in the House and defend his Party's pathetic record on defence policy. I know it must be difficult for such an honest man to tell Canadians that the great rhetoric of the Tory Party in the 1984 election campaign with regard to national defence and many other items has remained that, just plain rhetoric. After listening to the Hon. Member for York Scarborough I know it is still going on.

Let us look at the actual record of the defence budget because I want to make it very clear in the record. In 1980-81, the real growth in the defence budget was 3.2 per cent after inflation. In 1981-82, the real growth was 3.1 per cent. In 1982-83, the real growth was 5.3 per cent. In 1983-84, it was 6.4 per cent. That is what the Tories promised, but that was done under the Liberal Government which was castigated by the Tories for it.

In 1984-85, the real growth was over 8 per cent. In 1985-86, the first fiscal year for which the Tory Government was responsible, the real increase in national defence fell to minus .2 per cent. In their first year in office they had a decrease of .2 per cent after having run all over the country the year before promising members of the Armed Forces, veterans, Canadian business people, and Canadians at large that there would be a 6 per cent real increase after inflation.

In 1986-87, there was about a 2.75 per cent increase. In the present year, the increase will be no more than zero per cent and may even end up being a negative increase. There is a great possibility that there will be negative growth in the defence budget for two out of three years the Government has been in power and only a 2.7 per cent increase in the other year. Yet, throughout the summer of 1984 the Government duped Canadians by telling them that it would provide a real increase of 6 per cent. Every Canadian, and certainly those in the Armed Forces, will remember that promise.

• (1700)

In case people do not want to believe newspapers, let me read some history that has been written about the Government. It is from an excellent book entitled "Canada and Collective Security: Odd Man Out". It is written by Joseph T. Jockel and Joel J. Sokolsky. Mr. Sokolsky was one of the researchers and advisers a year ago when the then Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence was preparing its study on NORAD. He is an excellent student. This work was published with the Centre for Strategic and International Studies at Georgetown University, and is extremely credible.

On page 11 of the book, Mr. Jockel and Mr. Sokolsky say regarding the campaign of 1984:

> —the Conservative spokesperson on defence issues, Harvie Andre, a Member of Parliament from Calgary, called for the party to commit itself to real increases in the defence budget on the order of 6 per cent a year for five years—

Not one, but five years:

> —thus doubling the rate of increase of the past several years.

One can only imagine what the increase will be in the next two years when we consider that in the first three years there has been a real increase of less than 2.75 per cent in total. The Government will have quite a challenge in meeting that budget, and the reality is that it cannot do so. I simply want to put to rest all the rhetoric about what the Government is doing for national defence in this country.

The House will note that the Liberal Party that was defeated in 1984 not only met the NATO commitment of 3 per cent every year until it left office as well as in the fiscal Budget for which it was responsible after it left office, but in two of those years it more than met the Conservative promise, and almost met that promise in the third year because the increase was 5.3 per cent.

Let us consider what the Government has done for our Canadian Armed Forces and people in the private sector in terms of pension income and severance pay. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) recently made a statement in the House simply because of the tremendous pressure that has been brought to bear on him by the Liberal Opposition, as well as Armed Forces organizations, pension organizations, the RCMP, public servants, Crown corporation retirees and others.

In 1985, the Government began a procedure whereby it announced that pension income and severance pay would be considered as income for the purpose of paying unemployment insurance. It did not matter whether members of the RCMP or the Armed Forces had paid from its inception in 1970 until they retired in 1985. They suddenly discovered that they were unable to collect unemployment insurance. In some cases some got as much as $5 a week and others had their premium payments cut simply because the Government had brought in a policy which considered their pension income and severance pay as income. When we questioned the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), who is now in another portfolio, she rose in the House to defend it with great fervour, saying that it was a tremendous policy. The former Minister of Employment and Immigration was shifted to what is supposed to be a quieter Department but one that I suspect will become more controversial soon.

The new Minister was appointed and realized something had to change. The other day he rose in the House to withdraw some of these measures. We must recognize the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grace—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) who rose in the House on March 18 to say, as reported at page 4306 of Hansard:

> After a year and a half of questions in this House, demonstrations outside the House, Opposition Days, Statements Pursuant to Standing Order 21, and visits to the Minister's office, in short, an onslaught of attack on the Government, it has finally seen the light. The Minister has been dragged kicking and screaming to recognize that the policy which his predecessor introduced a year and a half ago is wrong with regard to those who applied for unemployment insurance after being preretired before January 5, 1986.

He went on to give credit to all those groups who fought that battle. The Government has been insensitive to those pensioners, the retirees of the Canadian Armed Forces, RCMP retirees and others, for the duties they have performed. The Government is nickel and diming them when they retire and when they need the money the most in order to prepare for a new way of life.

I only wish that I had enough time today to tell the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) exactly what I think of his policies and the Government's policy on transferring first-class technology.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired. I am sure the House would not mind giving the Hon. Member an extra minute to conclude his speech.

Mr. Hopkins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I simply want to say that it is a sad day for Canada when the Government closes down a $50 million telescope and observatory situated in the quiet land of eastern Ontario. The Government does not know how to mothball it because no country has ever had the audacity to mothball a telescope. People will have to remain there to look after it or it will be destroyed in many ways.

The worst insult to the science community of Canada was the Government's announcement that it will buy a 25 per cent share in a foreign telescope situated on a mountain peak in Hawaii, where Canadian scientists will have to travel to do the same things they would have done here on our own doorstep if the Government had spent a few million dollars to upgrade the telescope and observatory. Indeed, such upgrading was planned through Treasury Board but was cancelled. Now our scientists are being sent offshore while these excellent facilities in our own country, which could have attracted many international scientists, are being destroyed. I thank the House for its consideration in extending my time.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I heard the Hon. Member indicate that it was a sad day for Canada when we could not spend $50 million on a telescope. How sad does the member find it that the taxpayers of this country are paying some $27 billion—that is twenty-seven thousand million dollars in interest—on a public debt which he helped create by supporting previous Ministers of Finance, including the current Leader of his Party? How sad does he find it? Can he do the mathematics and tell us how many telescopes we could buy if we did not have to pay that interest on the public debt? Can he do the mathematics on that and still feel sad about the enormous amount of $27 billion to pay interest? That is why we do not have $50 million for a telescope.

• (1710)

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, we have heard those statements in the House before. I could come back to the Hon. Member and simply say that we all know that the national debt has increased considerably under this Government. What is it, $100 billion more or $75 billion more? What will it be by the time we get that Party out of power? Who is going to pay the interest rate for its blunders? People in this country realize the Government has made blunders. Who is going to pay the interest on the millions of dollars which was spent on the prison in the Prime Minister's own riding? That must be borrowed money if the Government is still in debt and is still deficit budgeting. The Government is not balancing the Budget in this country, and it should not try to tell Canadians that it is.

The Hon. Member says we cannot find $50 million for a telescope. It just goes to show that he does not know what he is talking about. We were not looking for $50 million for any telescope. What we were looking for was $12 million to upgrade the observatory and the total complex we already have. We were not going to go offshore and spend another $10 million or $12 million buying into a foreign-owned telescope which is not even on Canadian soil. What is wrong with the Government? Is it not happy with science and technology and the way Canadians have developed it in this country? I think the Hon. Member should be ashamed of himself for creating this kind of debt and scandal by going offshore to participate with someone else. We do not even have the observatory in this country now to invite our scientists back.

I want to repeat before I sit down again, because I do not think the Hon. Member was listening, that during the early years of the 1980s in this country and in the western world we saw the worst depression in 50 years.

Mr. Lanthier: Provoked by you.

Mr. Hopkins: Listen to the Hon. Member. He has opinions of grandeur if he thinks we created unemployment and recession in the United States, in Great Britain, West Germany and Japan. How silly can the Hon. Member be to think that. He will then stand up and say that Canada has no influence. He stands up in this House—I am sorry he does not, he speaks from the seat of his pants. He is saying Canadians are causing all this destruction. Come on.

Mr. Lanthier: You created the situation.

Mr. Hopkins: It was an international problem. If the Hon. Member wanted to be honest, he would admit it was an international problem. If the Hon. Member for York—Scarborough wanted to be honest, he would say it was an international problem with which we had to contend. The Liberal Government did contend with it, but it did not do so by riding on the backs of the poor and middle-income earners and the unemployed of this country. We looked after those people and that is why we are paying part of that interest today.

An Hon. Member: $200 million worth.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Let us have some order.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We have 10 minutes for questions and comments and there is a deliberate filibuster by the original speaker to stop us from asking very pertinent and relevant questions. The Hon. Member brings up the prison in the Prime Minister's riding. That prison is being built for two-thirds the cost per cell of the last prison built by the Hon. Member's Government in the Province of New Brunswick. He does not want that fact laid on the Table. He does not want to give us an opportunity to stand up and say that the Auditor General spoke about his sense of panic that the previous Government had created a situation where spending was out of control. Those are the things the Hon. Member is trying to filibuster about, and I think, on a point of order, he should be cut off and not be allowed to do that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We are going to pursue the question and comment period with the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney).

Mr. Daubney: Mr. Speaker, there are many matters on which I could comment in the Hon. Member's address. However, I would just like the record to be clear on the last point he made during the extended minute given to him with respect to the telescope.

He certainly left the House with the impression that it was a decision of this Government to participate in the Hawaiian telescope. That is not the case at all. I can tell him as a member of the Standing Committee on Science and Technology that that was a decision taken by the Government of which he was a supporter for many years, that of the Right Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau.

I think it was in 1978 or 1979 that the then Government decided that Canada would participate in this very state of the art telescope high on a mountain top in the Hawaiian Islands. It is an excellent location from which to observe the stars, and I am not questioning the decision made by the Government of the day. However, I just want to point out to the Hon. Member that this was not an initiative of our Government. It was an initiative of the Government which he supported, and if he had concerns about it, he should have raised them at that time.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member accused me of going on for too long, but I would point out to him that the indecency of his own colleagues speaking from their seats, shouting and putting comments on the record, was not going to go unnoticed. Perhaps if he had some rapport on his side of the House my speech would not have taken so long.

I say to the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney) that plans were in fact under way to upgrade the Algonquin Radio Observatory, and he knows that. He knows that this proposal was before Treasury Board. But the Government was not going to cancel one and do the other. Was the Government going to cancel its own Canadian technology and go offshore besides? The Hon. Member knows very well that we can buy into another telescope or take an interest in another telescope, but that does not mean we have to destroy our own technology at home in order to do so.

If the Hon. Member wanted to be square on what he said, he would have said that the Government made a choice. It made a choice to cancel the Algonquin Radio Observatory to go offshore. That is what the Minister told us. If the Hon. Member refutes that, he is refuting his own Minister. Here we are destroying our own technology at home, but we are quite willing to put our bucks into a foreign country, have a share in something on foreign land, yet at the same time the Government talks about mothballing an observatory here at home which is in an area which needs the employment and does business with many businesses throughout the area and is known world-wide for its excellence. But the Hon. Members' Government not only refused to upgrade the observatory but decided it was going to close it down and go offshore and say no to Canadian-born technology.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I listen very carefully to the speech of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins). Even though I am finance critic, I have not had the opportunity to look into all aspects of the Budget, so I would like the Hon. Member to comment on the percentage of increase in defence spending. I understand that the Tories promised during the election campaign to have a real increase of 6 per cent, and the Hon. Member gave us a figure of an increase of only 2.75 per cent in the second Budget, .2 per cent in 1985-86, and zero in 1987-88. Can the Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke tell us how it would affect our defence? Could he give us a concrete example of how such a decision by the Tory Government, in contradiction of its promises, will affect people in the Hon. Member's riding or in any other place in Canada?

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. Perhaps it will be more realistic if we did not only talk in percentages. I said that in the first year the Government was in power, it had negative growth in real defence spending in its Budget. In the second year, it went up by 2.75 per cent, but this year it may well again have negative growth in the defence budget. So that will be deducted from the 2.75 per cent in the second year. It is a pretty dismal showing.

• (1720)

With respect to the long-term and, indeed, the short-term effects that this will have on the defence community of Canada, the Armed Forces, if we will be increasing the reserves, as the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) says we will be doing, then why did he say it would be done over a period of 15 years? It is because there will not be enough money to do it beforehand. Why is the Government putting off the purchase of submarines for such a long time? Because it does not have the money to purchase them. Why are military bases in the country going without maintenance funds for buildings and the simple things they need? It is because there is no money to do the job. This means that we will have continued deterioration where there is no money to upgrade military bases across Canada and those outside Canada. It will cost more in the long run to fix up these buildings and carry out the maintenance work that needs to be done.

In terms of the Budget I spoke only about personnel. The Government promised that it would greatly increase the personnel of the Armed Forces. The present numbers differ little from the number of three years ago when the Conservatives came to power. That is another promise that has not been kept.

In answer to the Hon. Member's question, it simply means that everything will be put off for down the road. I hope that we do not have any wars or rumours of wars taking place before then, because if there are it will involve an awfully fast step-up job to get anything done.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I want to add my two cents' worth to the debate on the Budget of February 18.

One thing I can recall vividly is the feeling in the country after Pierre Elliott Trudeau ascended to the Prime Ministership of Canada in 1968. One of the hallmarks of his first four years in office was to do with how divided the country was and the fact that the regions of the country were split. He destroyed the fabric which held Canada together. In looking at the election results of the 1974 election we see that the representation in the House of Commons reflected that division. It reflected the disunity in the country. For example, by and large, western Canadians supported the Conservative Party. Every Member of Parliament Alberta sent back was a Conservative Member of Parliament. Ontario was split. Quebec sent back a preponderance of Liberals. The Atlantic region was split. There was an accepted belief that the Liberals had split Canada. They did not have a consensus. They did not reflect equal representation. Indeed, between 1980 and 1984 the Liberals were shut out of western Canada, not only federally but oftentimes provincially. At that time one could not give a Liberal away. They had split the country.

Then, in 1984, the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) returned here with 211 seats. Everyone said: "Look at that. This is a broadly representative Government. We now have representation from coast to coast. Look at the unity that we have created". During the first few months in office the polls reflected the Government's popularity. The honeymoon was on. In terms of popularity the polls showed the Conservatives at 55 per cent and then 50 per cent. In just two and a half short years where has it gone? Where is the unity in the country? The Conservative Government is wracked by dissension. The Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) pointed out that the Government is not paying attention to the problems of the west. As one travels across the country one senses the feeling that the country is as divided now as it was in the time of Pierre Elliott Trudeau.

I wish to point out that in the rhetoric contained in the Budget when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) brought it down he said that some regions are hurting. He then went on to say: "We intend to ensure that our program of economic renewal works for all Canadians". He promised and offered to work with the provincial Governments and industry to find ways to develop a sound base for improved sustained growth in all regions of the country. Let us take a look at that.

He did not say where the growth was taking place. In fact, I would like to offer one statistic to the House which gives a little insight into where the growth has taken place. Between January of 1986 and January of 1987 the total number of jobs in the country rose by 137,000. However, only 5,000 of those jobs were created outside of Ontario.

Mr. Blaikie: Shame!

Mr. Rodriguez: The Hon. Member says: "Shame". I want to point out that very few of those 137,000 jobs were created in the northern part of the province. The vast majority of those jobs were created in the Golden Horseshoe, specifically in Toronto. I recall in the mid-1970s when young people who were experiencing high rates of unemployment approached the then Prime Minister when he was speaking at a university. They asked Prime Minister Trudeau what he intended to do about job creation and jobs for young people. Do you know what he said to them, Mr. Speaker? He said: "You have to be prepared to leave Canada and go to find a job somewhere else". He was roundly and correctly criticized for having said that. What is the Government now saying to young people? What it is saying is that people have to go to Toronto to find jobs. That is what it is saying.

In spite of that the Government persists. The Minister talks about more growth, more jobs and more opportunities in his Budget. How can he say that when, in fact, that growth is very narrow and limited to Toronto and a small geographic area of southern Ontario? There is a saying that one can go to the east or to the west and immediately form a connection with other people by hating Toronto. Is this the unity the Government has created? Is this the unity that the Minister of Finance and the Government talks about? This is the Government of Toronto.

The Minister of Finance appeared before the Finance Committee soon after his Budget was tabled. He pointed out that 675,000 jobs had been created across the country. He admitted that 356,000 of them were created in Ontario. That is over 50 per cent. It seems to me that the common belief is that the Government is low in the polls because of scandals. I suggest that we have to look again. I do not think that being low in the polls is attributable totally to scandals. I think it has to do with the fact the Government has abandoned the regions of Canada.

Mr. Keeper: That is a scandal.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is scandalous. The Government talked about jobs, jobs, jobs. As I pointed out, when we look to the regions we see 5,000 jobs created outside of Toronto from January to January. What about the other Canada? What about the regions forgotten by the Government? Between 1981 and 1986, unemployment in Atlantic Canada increased from 11.5 per cent to 15.3 per cent. The difference in the unemployment rate between Ontario and Atlantic Canada increased from 6.3 per cent in 1981 to 8.2 per cent in 1986. Today we have 125,000 unemployed in four Atlantic provinces alone. The unemployment rate ranges between a low of 13.5 per cent in New Brunswick to 20.1 per cent in Newfoundland. That does not even count the thousands who have given up looking for non-existent jobs. Average family income in Ontario is 40 per cent higher than in Atlantic Canada. Some 25 per cent to 30 per cent of the region's income is dependent on social payments. That is the other Canada. That is the Canada forgotten in the Budget of the Minister of Finance. It would have been better had the Minister not brought that Budget down. Someone in my riding called it the "budgie Budget" because one of the tax increases applied to pet food.

What is the Conservative Government's record on the question of job creation and regional development? As I pointed out, 90 per cent of all the new jobs were created in southern Ontario. Spending on regional economic development has fallen almost $3 billion since the Tories took power in 1984. Some 70 per cent of DRIE funds are spent in Ontario and Quebec. The private sector in the Atlantic region has said it will reduce investment. Tory tax credits and tax reforms are a total failure. For example, we have the Cape Breton tax credit. It is being used by investors to invest in fly-by-night operations in the same way as the SRTC scam. What have the Tories done about the Moncton shops and the Trenton car works? Jobs have disappeared. The Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and the Atlantic Enterprise Program are caught up in red tape. Do the Budgets do anything about the fishery in Atlantic Canada? We all know about the fishery deal that France and Canada signed. We know the way that deal was fixed. What is the Government doing about the offshore? What about development programs? Are there any increases in transfer payments? On the contrary, there are cut-backs. Are there any increases in equalization payments? On the contrary, there are cut-backs.

Keeping in mind that three out of four of the Atlantic Governments are Conservative, how have they reacted to the third Budget of the Tory Government? Premier Buchanan of Nova Scotia said:

> I was quite frankly very, very disappointed that the Budget didn't address what I thought was going to be one of the major items, and that was the Atlantic provinces agency . . . There is very little in the Budget for the Atlantic region at a time when we needed (something) very badly . . . Ontario is doing very well, thank you, but the Atlantic Provinces are not doing that well, and it's most unfortunate that the Budget didn't address that.

He went on to say:

> Unfortunately—restraint is having a rather devastating effect on the Atlantic Provinces . . . The remedy they're using to cure a problem in Ontario is causing pneumonia down here.

Mr. Keeper: We need a new doctor.

Mr. Rodriguez: We need to fire the doctor. No one can accuse The Telegraph-Journal of being a socialist paper, yet it had this to say in its February 20 editorial:

> "There's nothing there for Atlantic Canada," said Normand Corno, president of the New Brunswick Chamber of Commerce.
> "Something of a non-event" said Donald Hackett, president of the Saint John Board of Trade.
> Tim McCarthy, president of the New Brunswick Federation of Labour, said: "I think the minister ignored regional disparities."
> Even Yvon Poitras, chairman of the New Brunswick government's Board of Management—and a politician of the same PC stripe as Mr. Wilson—was openly critical. He agreed with business and labour that the Wilson budget "does nothing" for New Brunswick.

The Halifax Chronicle-Herald said, in its editorial of February 20, 1987, that:

> —Mr. Wilson did not even reaffirm the government's commitment to the agency in the budget speech.
> So far, the AEP has been bogged down by bureaucratic red tape and unworkable guidelines, according to both the business community and independent economists.
> The AEP has generated publicity, but only because Millie's Chips became frustrated with its dealings with the AEP bureaucracy, and decided to locate a new plant in Ontario instead of Port Hawkesbury.

What does the editorial of the St. John's evening Telegram say? It says:

> Two areas of concern for this province, the fishery and the offshore, were not addressed. There were no announcements on prospects of reducing regional disparity nor was there anything to indicate the province's horrendous jobless rate would be reduced.
> Mr. Wilson describes his budget as a breathing space budget prior to proposals for major tax reform later this year.

It sounds to me not like breathing space but like strangulation. It is strangling the Atlantic region. The headline on the St. John's evening Telegram editorial was: "Atlantic area must wait". The editorial goes on to point out:

> Help is on the way, he said, but he considers Atlantic Canadians to be unreasonable for having expectations that it would come in time for the budget.
> It is central Canada which is booming and the finance minister insists Atlantic Canada will benefit from that boom.
> In other words, what's good for central Canada is good for all Canadians.

It is called the trickle down theory. Remember, this Government was supposed to bring unity. The Government has representation in the House. It has 211 seats from coast to coast.

• (1740)

Mr. Nunziata: And what has it brought?

Mr. Rodriguez: It has brought nothing but division and disunity to the country in 2.5 short years. The Conservatives wonder why they are low in the polls. I want to reiterate that it is not the scandals. It is their ignoring of regional disparities and their willingness to focus only on where there is already economic development, which is basically in southern Ontario.

Northern Ontario remains a source of raw materials, as do Atlantic Canada and the West. The trickle down theory of stimulating southern Ontario and hopefully some crumbs will fall to the east, the west, and the north is not acceptable.

At some point the revolution is coming. We in Atlantic Canada, we in northern Ontario, and we in the west will say that we are not satisfied with the crumbs. We want to share in the meal. We will take our chairs and draw ourselves closer to the table so that we can participate in the meal, not accept the crumbs.

I am not here to convert the Tories. I am here to preach the word that unless the Government repents, the day of judgment is at hand. They should pay close attention to what Canadians are telling them.

I have quoted the reactions in Atlantic Canada. They are not from New Democrat oriented editorials and leadership in Atlantic Canada. They are from people of their own stripe.

I say to the Government that the time has come. It must put aside its concept which sees southern Ontario, particularly Toronto, as the hallelujah for all Canada. I say right now that the Government must pay attention to regional disparities which exist in Canada and do something about them now before it is too late.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions or comments?

Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Accordingly, the question is the following one.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre), seconded by Mr. Mazankowski, moved:

> That this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Wilson, Etobicoke Centre), which was agreed to on the following division:

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PROCEDURE—MOTIONS DURING ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS—MR. SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: I indicated to the House yesterday that I would be prepared to rule at eleven o'clock this morning on the matter which was raised yesterday by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) who moved under Tabling of Documents that the House should now proceed to Motions. It was evident that the effect of this motion, if carried, would be to supersede all intervening routine proceedings. I invited argument on the admissibility of the motion and reserved my decision.

[Translation]

The contributions made by all Hon. Members who participated in the discussion were very forthright. A number of valid points were raised and the Chair appreciated the force of the arguments which were made.

[English]

The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) referred to my ruling of November 24, 1986, in which I stated that a motion having the effect of superseding a number of items under Routine Proceedings would be inappropriate and that we should proceed from item to item. In reserving my decision yesterday, I was very conscious that I had made that ruling and that the motion moved yesterday by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council was without precedent. The two motions are indeed similar but the circumstances are considerably different. However, the concerns of the Chair remain the same.

The Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) suggested that the only motion which could be moved during Routine Proceedings was one to proceed to the Orders of the Day. However much I may be inclined to agree with him, the fact remains that we have a number of precedents to the contrary. The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) stated:

> If the consideration of Routine Proceedings is to be considered a sacred process, item by item, then we will have to go back and re-examine the dilatory motions and the procedural tactics, as well as the procedural acceptability of some of these dilatory motions.

The Chair fully agrees with this statement. The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister also stated that there surely has to be some balance, and with this comment the Chair also agrees.

[Translation]

The Hon. Member for Windsor West claimed that a superseding motion can only be accepted when there is something before the House to be superseded. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) reinforced this point when he said that the precondition for a superseding motion is that there be debate on the floor of the House. It would be difficult to quarrel with the logic of these arguments and I believe they strengthen the case for a total review of the admissibility of dilatory motions during Routine Proceedings.

• (1110)

[English]

A number of Hon. Members dealt with the importance of protecting the fundamental rights members have under Routine Proceedings. However, the fundamental rights of members can be violated by the tactics of obstruction as well as by the unreasonable restriction of debate. The Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) went to the heart of the matter when he stated that the procedural tactics which the House has witnessed have little to do with the content of Bill C-22. As I made clear yesterday, the Chair is not the least bit interested in the content of the Bill. The Chair is, however, gravely concerned with the effect of these tactics by either side on the well-being of the House of Commons.

The House has had before it for almost six months a highly controversial piece of legislation, namely, Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act. This is not the first time the House has had to deal with controversial legislation, neither will it be the last. It is essential to our democratic system that controversial issues should be debated at reasonable length so that every reasonable opportunity shall be available to hear the arguments pro and con and that reasonable delaying tactics should be permissible to enable opponents of a measure to enlist public support for their point of view. Sooner or later every issue must be decided and the decision will be taken by a majority. Rules of procedure protect both the minority and the majority. They are designed to allow the full expression of views on both sides of an issue. They provide the Opposition with a means to delay a decision. They also provide the majority with a means of limiting debate in order to arrive at a decision. This is the kind of balance essential to the procedure of a democratic assembly. Our rules were certainly never designed to permit the total frustration of one side or the other, the total stagnation of debate, or the total paralysis of the system.

[Translation]

Bill C-22 was first introduced on November 6, 1986 and given first reading on November 7, following a division in both cases. The strong opposition to the Bill led to the use of procedural tactics for purposes of delay to which the Government responded with procedural tactics of their own. Seven divisions took place prior to the introduction of the Bill, most of them resulting from the moving of dilatory motions during Routine Proceedings. Fourteen more divisions, most of them again resulting from the moving of dilatory motions during Routine Proceedings, took place before the Bill obtained a second reading on December 8, 1986.

The Bill was referred to a Legislative Committee which reported it back to the House with amendments on March 16, 1987, after 24 meetings and 82 hours of debate as the Deputy Prime Minister pointed out. Numerous amendments were proposed at the report stage to which four days have so far been devoted.

On April 7, the Hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. André) gave notice of an allocation of time motion in terms of S. O. 117. This Standing Order was adopted by the House in 1968 and has been regularly used ever since. It is a legitimate procedure provided it is not abused and it has been employed by governments both Liberal and Progressive Conservative without any procedural challenge to their right to do so.

[English]

As the House knows, dilatory tactics prevented the House from reaching motions on two successive days last week. On the third day, Friday, the Government undertook not to proceed with its allocation of time motion respecting Bill C-22 and by mutual agreement Routine Proceedings did not take place. The tactical battle has unfortunately become a substitute for debate. Opponents of the Bill have used various devices to delay the passage of this Bill at its successive stages. The Government has countered by using superseding motions having the opposite effect. To the viewing public, these tactics must be totally meaningless. Our procedures are being used for purposes for which they were never originally intended, and the public could be pardoned for believing that our rules have no logical basis at all.

In the kind of situation which faces us, I have no doubt that negotiation provides the only route to a satisfactory solution. However, when negotiations fail there comes a time when the Chair is obliged to consider what its own responsibilities are. One of the functions of the Speaker is to ensure that the House is able to transact its business. This does not mean that the Chair plays any part in assisting the Government in the management of its business agenda. I want to repeat that; this does not mean that the Chair plays any part in assisting the Government in the management of its business agenda.

Considerable debate has already taken place on this Bill. It cannot be argued that the opportunities for airing objections to it have been unreasonably restricted. There has been considerable disruption of Routine Proceedings which, as I have said, has given me very grave concern.

I might point out that I invited Hon. Members last Wednesday, if they chose at that time, to give any advice they might have for the Speaker.

Routine Proceedings are an essential part of House business and if they are not protected the interests of the House and the public it serves are likely to suffer severely.

The moving of dilatory motions during Routine Proceedings is a very recent practice which originated in the early 1980s. I share the doubts expressed by some Hon. Members yesterday as to its procedural validity. It is a practice which can supersede the presentation of petitions, delay indefinitely the introduction of Bills—those of Private Members as well as those of the Government—and completely block debate on motions for concurrence in committee reports as well as on allocation of time motions. These arguments were made very effectively by Hon. Members in the course of their contributions yesterday. The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) argued very strongly that during Routine Proceedings a member should be recognized only for the purpose contemplated by the particular rubric under which he or she rises. Since Routine Proceedings have been moved to the morning on three days of the week, these problems have been aggravated. However, this is a broader issue which will need to be addressed at another time.

The immediate question which faces the Chair is whether the motion moved yesterday by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council is acceptable or not. I recognize that if we are to adhere rigidly to recent precedents, including my own ruling of November 24, 1986, the motion would have to be ruled unacceptable. The House is nevertheless facing an impasse which it has been unable to resolve for itself. There comes a time when the Chair has to face its responsibilities. When circumstances change and the Rules of Procedure provide no solution, the Chair must fall back on its discretion in the interests of the House and all its members. This may require the Chair to modify or vary an earlier decision.

In using my discretion, I believe I am supported by the centuries old tradition which attaches to the Office of Speaker. It was Speaker Lenthall who, in the reign of Charles I, declared in the presence of the King that the Speaker's first duty lay to the House of Commons. It was Speaker Brand who in 1881 ended the paralysis of the British House by imposing closure of his own initiative.

• (1120)

An eminent parliamentary authority, Josef Redlich, has written that it is the duty of the Speaker to serve the majority and the minority:

> —by maintaining the rules and the usage of centuries, and by taking care that both majority and minority are not impeded in the use of the forces and the weapons which the order of business provides for strong and weak. Protection of a majority against obstruction and protection of a minority against oppression are both alike functions of the Chair.

When interpreting the rules of procedure, the Speaker must take account not only of their letter but of their spirit and be guided by the most basic rule of all, that of common sense.

The practice of using dilatory motions as a means of obstruction is undoubtedly sanctioned by our parliamentary practice. However, many parliamentary jurisdictions in the Commonwealth place restrictions on the extent to which they can be used. For example, in the British House of Commons the Speaker has the power to refuse a dilatory motion if he believes it to be an abuse of the rules of the House. By the same token, he is empowered to allow them if he believes them to be justified.

I repeat my conviction that the entire question of the use of dilatory motions during Routine Proceedings needs to be examined and that no procedures should be sanctioned which permit the House to be brought to a total standstill for an indefinite period. Division bells are no substitute for debate.

[Translation]

This Parliament has been a Parliament of reform. We have seen important changes implemented designed to facilitate the flow of business, increase the powers of committees, improve the opportunities of Private Members, and increase the effectiveness of our procedures.

The decision of the House to change the manner of electing its Speaker is indicative of the fact that the House of Commons has matured. Has it matured enough to confer upon its Presiding Officer the discretionary powers necessary to control abuse and resolve deadlocks that the British House of Commons gave its own Speaker over a century ago? I believe it has.

[English]

Having given serious consideration to all of the arguments that have been made, I have decided that I can best serve the interests of the House by allowing the motion moved yesterday by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council. In doing so, I make it clear that this will not be regarded as a precedent for all time, and that in other circumstances the Chair might well disallow such a motion.

I hope all Hon. Members realize that the spirit of my decision has nothing to do with the content of Bill C-22. I am concerned only with the procedures of this House and the implications for the future of what we may do today. There are circumstances in which obstructive tactics can be an abuse of the rules of the House. Equally, notice of time allocation motions after only a few hours of debate at any stage of a Bill can also be an abuse. However, when such notice is given in the face of a lengthy report stage, after detailed consideration of a Bill has taken place during a long period of time in committee, I submit that this is a legitimate use of Standing Order 117. Both time allocation motions and dilatory motions are open to abuse. When such tactics are entered upon by either Government or Opposition the balance of democratic parliamentary government can be easily upset. The maintenance of that balance is a fundamental responsibility of the Speaker.

I wish to make it clear to all Hon. Members that if this ruling is resorted to as a precedent, the Chair will interpret it in the light of the prevailing circumstances with a view to maintaining that essential balance to which I have just referred.

I wish to make some additional comments. I have not enjoyed making this ruling. Nonetheless, that is the responsibility that, in the circumstances, Hon. Members have imposed upon me. I have accepted that responsibility with due regard to the traditions of this place which I have tried to adequately express in my ruling. The ruling which I have just made was made after intense consideration of not only our rules and our precedents but also with regard to as much common sense as I could bring to the present situation.

However, I want something to be clearly understood by all Hon. Members wherever they sit in this Chamber. I expect every Hon. Member to take my ruling in the spirit in which it is intended. It is simply this. In the absence of any clear direction according to the standing rules I have had to make a decision.

I want to address a particular concern that was made by some Hon. Members during argument on this important matter. Simply stated it is this. The result of my ruling might be that the right of Private Members to present their concerns under Routine Proceedings could be prevented and, if so, their rights as parliamentarians would be unfairly and wrongfully restricted or, indeed, extinguished. Let me answer that concern. If anyone on either side of the House tries to take what could be considered unfair advantage of my ruling, I serve clear notice that as long as I am Speaker I will not tolerate such a proposition. I have had to make a decision. It is a decision circumscribed by events. No one should presume for a moment that it ought to be used as justification for abuse of whatever form against or violence to the principles of fair play.

My ruling, admittedly, has left some discretion to the Speaker. Until there are some rule changes that help resolve the need for the Speaker to exercise, in the interests of the Chamber, this discretion as Speaker, I shall strive mightily to find an acceptable resolution of the disputes. I believe that the resolution of these inevitable and legitimate disputes should be on the basis of our traditions, our rules, our precedents, and something else as well. By this I mean what is essential to this House of Commons, that is, that well accepted but not always definable thing upon which our whole constitutional history is based. It is fair play and, perhaps I can add as I have already mentioned, common sense. I should immediately remark that common sense, like beauty, is in the eye of the beholder. Nevertheless, there is a basic common sense that those of us who have to get elected understand only too well. It is, when all is said and done, the profound sense of what is appropriate under certain circumstances and which is acceptable to reasonable people.

I have tried to give Hon. Members an intellectually reasoned ruling. I have also tried to support it with a rationale that stands the test of common sense. I want to assure all Hon. Members that their Speaker will not be receptive to any abuse of either the intellectual or common sense basis of this ruling. I would hope that the difficulties of the Speaker in this situation will encourage Hon. Members to reconsider the present rules with a view to making changes which would secure the sanctity of Routine Proceedings and the legitimate interests of all Members of the House of Commons.

I want to thank all Hon. Members for their diligence and the sincerity with which they put their arguments. I hope that this ruling, while not satisfactory to all, will be accepted in the interests of this place.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is just for a matter of clarification. Am I to assume, then, that the motion that was put yesterday by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary will be considered at the appropriate time?

• (1130)

Mr. Speaker: The Chair and the Table have given some consideration to the point which the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) raises. The ruling is a ruling for future events. Yesterday was yesterday. The consequence of that is that the ruling is now made and it is not for the Chair to say on what occasion either side may wish to avail themselves of it. I have tried to clarify the position in the event that such a motion is made again.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I want to return to the point which I made to you yesterday and the day before with regard to the lapsing of motions. Your comments in response to the request of the Government House Leader indicate to me that you have lapsed the motion which was before the House.

I maintain that lapsing of the motion is out of order and unconstitutional. A question put to the House must be settled by vote. Although I disagree with the intent of the motion and do not think I would at any time like to sustain such a procedure, if indeed you have ruled that that motion has lapsed, I ask you what rule of this House, what Standing Order, you are using to lapse the motion.

Mr. Speaker: I have taken the position in this particular case that that motion was proposed but was never before the House. The motion was proposed and at that point I invited argument as to whether or not it could even go before the House. That is the short answer to the very legitimate question which the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has raised. I hope that before the end of the day tomorrow I will be able to say more on this important matter which I accept as such.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, we, of course, accept and respect the decision which you have just made. We have always maintained, as we did during the bell-ringing incident a number of years ago, that the rights of Parliament to act must be maintained, otherwise there can be no parliamentary democracy. However, we are also concerned that your ruling is, in effect, a precedent if necessary but not necessarily a precedent. We will see an evolution of the role of the Speaker in this House as a result of this ruling.

The Speaker will now have to judge all the debate which takes place in the House and in committee and the actions of the Opposition and the Government every time he or she makes a ruling. I believe that means that the Speaker will be dragged into every controversial question which comes before the House of Commons. That may be a necessity, but I think it may drastically affect the role and the sense of the Speaker being independent.

I have the greatest respect for you, Mr. Speaker, but I am worried that in the future, when a majority government is able to install a Speaker of its choice after the campaigning which takes place for the role of Speaker, we may find that the Speaker no longer represents all Parties in the House and could become the effective tool and weapon of the Government. I believe that is a legitimate concern which all of us in this House should have.

As I said earlier, we do accept and respect your decision. However, I suggest that the House Leaders and the Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedures study this ruling and ensure that there are clear guidelines for how we in the House use, and sometimes abuse, the rules, as well as clear guidelines to set out when the Speaker can use this new discretion.

I also think that in the face of this ruling we must have some way of ensuring that the legitimate concerns of the Government to move forward on its political agenda be balanced by the ability of the opposition Parties, especially when they have a small majority, as they do at this time, to ensure that instead of only having a number of meetings of committees we have real action, real presentation and real questioning at those meetings.

In your ruling, Mr. Speaker, you pointed out that there were a number of meetings of the committee which studied Bill C-22. However, we in the Opposition are concerned that those committees stacked witness after witness in the same hearing. Witnesses were allowed 45 minutes to make their presentation within which time any questions of Members of Parliament had to be asked and answered. That is impossible. Forty-five minutes is not enough time for a national group to present its evidence on a major piece of legislation and for us to ask intelligent questions and receive intelligent answers.

With regard to the ruling just made, it is important that if the Speaker is going to judge the quantity of debate as well as the quality of debate the rights of minorities, citizens and groups which have come before parliamentary committees be protected. Statistics alone do not show the full picture. It is unfortunate, but it will be necessary for the Speaker to delve into the quality of what is happening in committee sessions. He will have to consider what actually takes place when each and every witness comes before a parliamentary committee on a controversial matter. Mr. Speaker, I wish you well.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order. First of all, we on this side of the House wish to thank you for taking the time to give this matter thorough consideration and for giving us your ruling, which we accept as is, according to the Standing Orders. However, I would like to give you and all Members of this House our interpretation of the ruling you have just handed down.

We believe that although the Chair, in its lengthy summation, referred to the long hours spent debating Bill C-22, according to our interpretation, the Chair did not make its ruling on that basis, because when a procedural issue is raised in the House, the point is not how much time has been spent on debate but how to make a ruling that is balanced, that is satisfactory to all Members of this House and that protects them as well.

When certain debates become long and drawn out, it is a matter of discussion among members whether the debate is or is not too long, and the public may have its views on the subject as well, but I am sure that the Chair does not judge whether or not a debate has lasted too long.

The same applies to the time allocation measure the Government intends to use with respect to Bill C-22. Here again, I am sure the Chair does not judge whether, in this specific case, the use of time allocation is justified or whether or not the use of this measure has been untoward, since here again, it is a matter for the public to judge.

It may be a matter for debate between the Members of this House, but in any case, the rules for time allocation are clearly set forth in our Standing Orders and may be applied at any time. If they are used too often, it is up to the public to judge the Government's actions.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me and to the Members on our side of the House at least, that today's decision, on the basis of age-old precedents used by Speakers in the United Kingdom, has expanded the powers the Chair already had. All we expect the Chair to do is ensure that these powers will be used to give equal protection to all Members of this House. As members of an Opposition that is very much in the minority, we expect and hope that these powers will be used to protect the rights of the minority in a Parliament where the majority is very much so.

• (1140)

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to make a few comments because I participated yesterday at your invitation to say a few words on the particular question.

I gather from your ruling, Mr. Speaker, that you have ruled that the situation could take place, that the motion moved by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) could stand, but that you did not want it to be a precedent. In fact, Mr. Speaker, you have made a judgment here about this particular issue. I think you have to be aware, for example, that when Bill C-22 went to the legislative committee, at the very first meeting a motion was put forward by government Members on the committee that the committee would sit five days a week, that it would meet three times a day, and that it would limit each witness to 45 minutes. They set a deadline by which time the consideration of Bill C-22 would be complete within the committee. I think you are aware of those things, Mr. Speaker. You have to be aware in making the decision.

This is why I think it is a dangerous situation where the Speaker involves himself in judging a particular Bill. While you said your ruling is not concerned with the merits of a Bill, in fact you have to be concerned with the merits of the Bill. You have to be concerned with what goes into why the Opposition is opposed to the Bill and the extent of that opposition within the House. It seems to me on the one hand that you do not want to get involved, but that on the other hand you have become involved.

I would humbly submit that in fact you have, by your ruling, picked a side. You have said that the Parliamentary Secretary's motion could stand. It is a move which has a lot of grave dangers down the road. It is unfortunate that we have moved this way, Mr. Speaker.

It seems to me that there was a previous ruling by Mr. Speaker Lamoureux that in fact that sort of motion could not stand. I think in this particular situation we have opened up a new can of worms, and it is most unfortunate that the ruling would lead to that.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, as the official critic for Consumer and Corporate Affairs who dealt with Bill C-22, and also as one who accepted your invitation yesterday to speak to the issue at hand, I want to say very briefly that from your decision it is my understanding—and with great respect, if I am incorrect, you will correct me—that this decision in no way is a precedent for future deliberations of the House.

You have certain powers as the Speaker of the House and at the present time you are exercising those powers. Far be it from me to question whether the exercising of that power is wrong or right. You have made your decision, and we must live with that particular decision.

However, if I may, I was not aware of some of the events commented on by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) that took place at committee. My recollection is somewhat different, and I think the record should show that. There is no question but that the Government of the day wished to limit the time of witnesses to 45 minutes and wished to have these meetings over at a particular point in time. However, I suggest respectfully that the impasse on Bill C-22 may have been averted if members opposite, in particular the Minister responsible for Bill C-22, had the courage of their convictions and convened some deliberations with members opposite. However, that was not in the cards, not at all. It forced members of the Opposition, members of my Party—and I am not speaking for the New Democratic Party—to do things we would not necessarily want to do to impede good debate in committee and in the House of Commons.

You made a number of comments, Mr. Speaker. However, I say that there was one omission, and I just bring it to your attention. You talked about the committee, you talked about divisions, as did the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), but you did not talk about the 47 amendments on the floor of the House of Commons which are germane to the substance of the Bill itself. That has to be given some consideration. Perhaps you have given that consideration, but perhaps you did not articulate it in the way in which I wanted it to be articulated.

I raise that point in terms of future deliberations with regard to Bill C-22 and where it will go in coming weeks and months. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, with great sincerity that the substance of the Bill is wrong—wrong. We in the Opposition are deathly against Bill C-22 as it now stands. Because of the insensitivities and the activities of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), you have been faced with a very difficult decision which we on this side of the House will respect and honour.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask Hon. Members to abide by my request to close off comments on the ruling. I would invite Hon. Members on both sides of the House to read it carefully, and my door is always open.

However, I must say that I listened with very great care to Hon. Members in these comments after the ruling. I know those comments were made because they feel, and appropriately so, that they have a duty to comment in this Chamber on the ruling. I have not taken that as a challenge to the ruling, and I do not think in any way anybody should even indicate that that was in the minds of any of the Hon. Members who are well and favourably known to me. I do not think that was it at all.

I have said that I did not enjoy making this ruling. If you examine it carefully, you will see that it is a very carefully circumscribed ruling.

Now let me meet the observation of the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) who said that this is putting an undue amount of discretion on the Chair and that that is something new around here.

• (1150)

First, remember that all our precedents are as a consequence of some Speaker somewhere making a ruling. I do not seek more discretion. What I seek, and what I hope Hon. Members will do, is to clarify these rules in such a way that no Speaker, whether it is myself or somebody else, is put into the position which I feel I have been put into in this circumstance where I have to make a decision which can give grave concern. I may think that I will not abuse the discretionary position that I have taken at a future time, but what Hon. Members have to concern themselves with is that I might not, but somebody else might.

I want to say to the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall), the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) and others that I am deeply aware of all of that danger. There it is. This, as all Hon. Members know, is not always an easy place to be sitting. I want to say again how much I appreciate the spirit of goodwill and devotion to this place that Hon. Members have exhibited in receiving a ruling which I recognize is not one which some members would have wished me to make at this time.

The Hon. Minister for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek) is rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Jelinek: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

PRIVILEGE

CODE OF CONDUCT—ALLEGED BREACH BY MINISTER

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, as you know, I have given you appropriate notice, and it is with sadness and some anger that I must rise today on a question of privilege arising out of the totally irresponsible conduct of a fellow Member of this House during Question Period yesterday. The Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) used distorted information, half-truths and unsubstantiated innuendo to smear my reputation as a Member of Parliament.

If this were an isolated incident by the Opposition using unchecked and wrong information, it would be hard to justify taking the time of the House to respond. As I will detail in a few moments, all—I repeat, all the facts relevant to this case have been on the public record at the office of the Assistant Deputy Registrar General if the Member had bothered to ask. He did not.

Sadly, Mr. Speaker, this is not an isolated incident. This House of Commons over which you preside has become too often little more than a forum of mud-slinging and smear tactics by Hon. Members. However, there is no honour in character assassination. There is no honour in unresearched personal attacks on members and their families. There is no honour in unsubstantiated smear tactics.

Let me summarize this matter briefly. In 1980, I purchased a 50 per cent share of a six-unit apartment house at 504 Albert Street in Ottawa. On May 20, 1982, I signed over the ownership of the building to Mr. Ken Gibson, an Ottawa lawyer and owner of the remaining 50 per cent share, retaining my portion in trust. That was in 1982.

Upon becoming a cabinet Minister in the fall of 1984, I disclosed in writing my interest to the Assistant Deputy Registrar General. This is and has been a matter of public record. By January of this year I agreed, and immediately notified the Assistant Deputy Registrar General, of my intention to sell.

As part of the transaction, Mr. Gibson asked for a six month delay of payment from closing to August 14, 1987, which I also accepted. Upon the advice of my attorneys, I secured the balance of the purchase price due on August 14, 1987, by taking a second and third mortgage on the two properties in question, on a non-interest bearing basis. At no time did I make an interest-bearing loan or any other type of loan to Mr. Gibson or to anyone else.

On the date of closing, I was away on government business. In fact, I had the pleasure of representing the Government of Canada in Cape Breton for the Canada Winter Games and, therefore, gave my wife a power of attorney, as I have often done in the past. I regret also that Hon. Members had to drag my wife into this matter.

I want to emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that as always I kept the Assistant Deputy Registrar General informed of my activities prior, during and after the transaction. In fact, part of the purchase agreement which I intend to table—it is a purchase agreement which, if the Hon. Member had asked, would have been made available to him—reads, in part, that "on closing Jelinek shall deliver to Gibson, among other things":

> A letter from the office of the appropriate official of the Government of Canada confirming that Jelinek has made full disclosure of his interest in this transaction and that the within transaction is in no way viewed as a conflict of interest or an inappropriate involvement.

That letter was dated and received by me on February 12, 1987, from Mr. Robert Boyle, the Assistant Deputy Registrar General, five full days prior to closing.

With consent, Mr. Speaker, I would like at this time to table both of these documents to which I have just referred.

Mr. Speaker: I think I can indicate to the Hon. Minister that the documents can be sent to the Table.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, this information and all other pertinent information has always been publicly available and any responsible individual, Member of Parliament or otherwise, should have availed himself of this information prior to making unnecessary and unfounded accusations that damaged not only my reputation but, more important to me, that damaged the reputation of my family.

What happened yesterday during Question Period by the Opposition therefore is once again a totally irresponsible example and a clear abuse of parliamentary procedures which must be corrected. This has gone on far too long.

These are the facts, Mr. Speaker, facts which the Members could have obtained for themselves, facts which, had they bothered to check, surely would have kept them from smearing myself, my family and putting in bad light all members, yes, all Members of this House of Commons.

Everyone in public life expects to be criticized from time to time based on our policies, opinions or statements. I am no exception. I have been here long enough and I accept criticism, especially constructive criticism. But what this House of Commons must no longer permit is the use of this Chamber for unfair and vicious personal attacks with no foundation or justification. Parliamentary immunity, a time honoured and necessary requirement for the parliamentary system, is being cynically abused.

Notwithstanding, I am, and will be, watching carefully all statements made by Members outside the House with a view to taking whatever legal action is necessary. Believe me, I will be watching so carefully that if there is any justification for taking legal action I will be doing just that, because I have had it up to here with you guys on the other side.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jelinek: Neither I, nor any Member of this House, should be subjected to this outrage any longer, Mr. Speaker. I am proud of my name and proud of my family. I deeply resent being wrongly slandered and having my parliamentary privileges so blatantly abused. I am angered by how deeply the reputation of all members, and this House itself, is being tarnished by the irresponsible conduct of a few. Every time a smear is made—this is a big problem—no matter how groundless, unfortunately, some of the mud sticks. The stigma remains, and that has happened in this case.

• (1200)

It is for that reason, and because my personal privileges as a Member of Parliament have indeed been abused, I believe I have a prima facie case of privilege. If you, Sir, find that I do indeed have a prima facie case of privilege, I would move, seconded by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Mazankowski):

> That of the allegations made by the Member for Ottawa Centre as found at page 5094 Hansard dated April 13, 1987 be referred to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedures with the usual power to call for papers, persons and records and to report by May 31, 1987.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on the statement made by the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek), and also on the questions raised in the House yesterday. I must say that I regret some of the comments he made here because, when I raised the question, I thought the question was legitimate in relation to the conflict of interest and Code of Conduct guidelines issued by the Government for cabinet Ministers and other senior officials in September, 1985, by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

I will not read all the questions, but in view of the comments made by the Minister who is suggesting that he has been slandered, and he has used a number of other fairly substantial words, accusing me also of irresponsible conduct, I will read the question I put yesterday to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski). My first question was the following:

> In view of the risky nature of this investment can the Deputy Prime Minister tell the House whether speculative commercial mortgage lending is a permitted activity under the Government's Code of Conduct for Ministers of the Crown?

My second question recalled that section of the code, Section 29, that said Ministers shall not, outside their official duties, actively manage or operate a business or commercial activity. I pointed out that it appeared that the properties in question were grossly over-mortgaged, except in light of a speculative effort by the new owner, Mr. Gibson or Mr. Gibson and his partners, to redevelop them.

Then I asked the following question:

> When a cabinet Minister makes a $354,000 second or third mortgage loan, is that not a commercial activity which is in fact prohibited by the code? What action does the Government intend to take to enforce the code with respect to the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport?

The Minister has indicated that he did consult with the Assistant Deputy Registrar General. In fact, I have not seen a copy of the purchase agreement. I want to tell the House that I did inform the Minister's office that I would be raising this matter yesterday and, albeit with short notice, I also gave the necessary documents to the Deputy Prime Minister prior to asking the question.

I would point out that the documents which I communicated to the Deputy Prime Minister included the filings the Minister had made with the Assistant Deputy Registrar General in 1984 and 1985, and more recently in February of 1987. As the Minister states, he did disclose, as he is permitted to do, the holding of the 50 per cent interest in the property on Albert Street in his submissions in 1984 to 1986. In 1987, that disclosure was not there because he had by that time sold the property in question.

I accept the statement of the Minister that he consulted with the Assistant Deputy Registrar General and was assured that in the opinion of the Assistant Deputy Registrar General there was compliance with the Code of Conduct. However, the Assistant Deputy Registrar General has been known to give advice at other times with which people in my Party have disagreed. In fact, some of the rulings of the ADRG have been subjected to lengthy judicial review, with what result we do not yet know. But nonetheless it is not necessarily the case that just because the official in question made a ruling, therefore members of every Party will agree with that particular ruling.

Mr. Mazankowski: Are we going to listen to you?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I would say to the Deputy Prime Minister that I am trying to treat this issue with the seriousness which I think it deserves.

Perhaps I can share with you, Mr. Speaker, the reasons for my concerns which initially were brought to me by constituents who were concerned about speculation for redevelopment purposes in properties in downtown Ottawa which the local advisory committee on architectural conservation had sought to designate as heritage properties. Downtown Ottawa is within my constituency. In fact, the matter happens to be before a City Council committee today.

Is the loan which was granted by the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport a speculative loan? There is an agreement that he will receive $354,000 in August. In the first place, it is a loan whether or not interest is charged. I think that is quite clear. It is a promise to pay at some future date. In the second place—

Mr. Speaker: I have been listening carefully to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) but I am getting a little concerned that what started off to be a series of questions, which the Hon. Member of course has a right to put, is getting dangerously close to being an assertion. I do not know if the Hon. Member intends that. I would ask the Hon. Member to consider it.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I cite this because the Hon. Minister has accused me of irresponsible conduct, of distortion, of using unsubstantiated information and of slander. From what I can see in the Hansard record, this is because I referred to the transaction in which he was involved as a speculative transaction and as a commercial activity. This is why I am speaking on this particular matter. I will, however, try to be brief.

The facts as registered in the Registry Office—

Mr. Speaker: I will hear from the Hon. Member. I am not closing him off at all. However, I would ask that the Hon. Member, and any other Hon. Member who speaks, address the direct question of whether or not the questions that were asked yesterday amount to, directly or indirectly, whatever way it may be, a breach of the privilege of the Hon. Minister.

What other things may be going on with regard to property in the neighbourhood are interesting, of course, and may have a lot to do with why the Hon. Member asked the question, but I would ask the Hon. Member to concentrate solely on that particular point. The Hon. Minister has said that those questions had the effect of carrying what we lawyers call an innuendo, an innuendo of wrongful conduct, and that is basically what the Hon. Minister is pleading before the Chair. Therefore, I would ask the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre to address that point. I know I can count on his co-operation.

Mr. Cassidy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will address that point directly then.

In the first place, since the question has been asked, at no time did I make a suggestion in any way that the activities in which the Minister was involved would have been illegal had they been conducted as a private business transaction. I may deplore land speculation and speculation for redevelopment but, nonetheless, that is not an illegal activity in our society. That is not the question.

The question is whether a Minister of the Crown who is governed by the conflict of interest Code of Conduct for Ministers should in fact be making a loan which appears to be in the nature of a speculative investment, or whether in fact he should not have carried that out through a blind trust if, for reasons of his own, he felt that it was time to dispose of his interest in property. Again, that was an interest in property he had acquired in a legitimate way when he was a private Member of the House and which he had disclosed appropriately to the Assistant Deputy Registrar General. That, I believe, is the question on which I can focus.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre may not want to respond, but I think it is in the interest of the Chair, in view of the fact that this is a Question of Privilege, that the Chair be absolutely clear what position the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre is taking.

• (1210)

Is the Hon. Member taking the position that yesterday in this Chamber he was entitled to ask questions, or, is he asserting that, while whatever transaction we have been hearing about may well be legal, nonetheless, it amounts to a breach of the conflict of interest guidelines?

As I understand the position of the Hon. Minister, he is saying that the effect of the questions was to accuse him of having breached the guidelines, not that the matter is illegal in the ordinary sense of commerce. I can share with the Hon. Member the fact that there have been times when even I have had some strong views about certain kinds of developments in some places. However, I think the point the Hon. Minister is making, a result of which his privileges have been breached, is that the effect of the innuendo carried by the questions was to slander him. The innuendo was an accusation or an assertion that the Hon. Minister was in breach of the guidelines. That seems to me to be the point we have before us.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I regret your use of the word "innuendo" because I am not aware of any innuendo which took place.

Mr. Malone: Oh!

Mr. Speaker: I am not saying there was any innuendo. I am saying that the Hon. Minister has said that those questions carried an innuendo. Under the law of defamation, as Hon. Members will know, you do not have to say everything about someone, but if you say something which, in the minds of reasonable people, carries an accusation, even it is not spelled out, that is innuendo. As I understand the Hon. Minister, that is what he is saying; the effect of the questions yesterday was to carry an innuendo which reasonable people would take as being that the Minister was in breach of the guidelines. That seems to be the point the Hon. Minister has raised. While these other points are of interest, and no doubt led the Hon. Member to feel that he had an obligation to his constituents or others to raise the issue, that is the narrow point I have to decide.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, on examination of the facts in question I drew the conclusion that there was a substantial case that the Minister was in breach of the guidelines, the Code of Conduct for Ministers—

Mr. Jelinek: Without checking the facts.

Mr. Cassidy: —and public officials. I believe it is a legitimate activity in the House of Commons to raise questions about complaints—

Mr. Jelinek: Check the facts first.

Mr. Cassidy: —which are not a legal matter, but which are under the discretion of the Prime Minister and delegated through him to the Deputy Prime Minister.

When you review the record, my first question was to ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether the activity in question was permitted activity under the Code of Conduct for Ministers of the Crown. On the question of privilege, I maintain that it is certainly legitimate for Members of this House to ask questions about the application. In addition, the fact that an official may have given a ruling to a cabinet Minister on this subject or any other subject does not therefore bind all Members of this House to agree with the ruling.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cassidy: Particularly since the official in question has made judgments in the past which have been open to question and, in fact, to judicial review.

The question here then is, I suppose, that the Minister might claim he disagrees with my judgment of what took place when I spoke of it as commercial and speculative mortgage activity. I am prepared to explain my use of those terms. However, I think you have indicated you would prefer I not go into detail on those. I would merely point out, however, that if this development were to succeed, the value of an investment of $70,000 by the Minister seven years ago would rise to something over $350,000, far in excess of the growth in property prices generally, which is one reason I referred to it as being a speculative kind of investment.

My final reason for raising this is that of a matter of public policy. I was asking specifically the Deputy Prime Minister whether or not this was a commercial activity prohibited by the code. If it is permitted by the code, if cabinet Ministers can buy and sell real estate and advance money on a promise of payment or on a mortgage, then it would appear to me that means they can carry on what amounts to the business of commercial real estate activity while holding office under the Crown. I believe, and I was seeking to make the point with the Deputy Prime Minister yesterday, that that kind of activity should be prohibited. If the current interpretation is that it is permitted under the code, then I suggest it is time this House of Commons and the Government reviewed and altered the code to make it very clear that an activity which may have been acceptable to the ADRG under the current code would not be acceptable in the future. Those are my points.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member takes the position that whatever he may have said he did not mean it to carry an innuendo of wrongdoing against the Minister. It seems to me the Hon. Member is now saying, and perhaps quite properly, that perhaps the guidelines should be re-examined. That is a legitimate issue of debate in this place. However, given that the Hon. Minister has said everything he did was at least fully reported to the Assistant Deputy Register General, the gentleman who is supposed to look after these things, perhaps the Hon. Member would like to make it clear to the House—the Hon. Member may want to say this or he may not, but it seemed to me it would be appropriate if the Hon. Member wanted to say that his questions were directed at a question of public concern, which is the guidelines, but they were not directed at any suggestion that the Hon. Minister, especially after what he has said today, was knowingly in breach of those guidelines. If the Hon. Member wishes to make that clear to the Chamber it might help a lot.

Mr. Cassidy: As I have said before, there is no suggestion of illegality in the actions of the Minister. I believe the Minister is and was in breach of the code in this particular transaction. However, I accept that the Minister consulted with the ADRG and complied with the advice he had. In giving that advice I believe the ADRG was in error in his interpretation of the code. If that interpretation stands, then I suggest it allows all kinds of commercial real estate activity by Ministers and it is wrong and therefore should be changed. Either the Minister and the official erred in their interpretation of the code or the code itself is in error and should be changed.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I want to add two or three points to this discussion. The first is simply to refer to Citation 55 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition which says:

> The privilege of freedom of speech is . . . the most fundamental right of the Member of Parliament on the floor of the House—

I think it is important to keep that in mind when we examine the question of whether or not there has been a breach of privilege. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) was exercising that right during Question Period. He was directing his questions to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), the cabinet Minister responsible for the conflict of interest guidelines. In other words, it was directed to the appropriate Minister, because the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre indicated there was some question of whether or not the guidelines had been breached.

When you look at the questions asked it seems to me that the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek) is perhaps protesting somewhat unduly, because the question asked, and I think it is worth repeating, is simply that:

> In view of the risky nature of this investment can the Deputy Prime Minister—

And it is the Deputy Prime Minister who is responsible for answering for the ADRG—

Mr. Jelinek: The Prime Minister.

Mr. Riis: In his absence the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) assumes that responsibility.

• (1220)

He asked:

> —can the Deputy Prime Minister tell the House whether speculative commercial mortgage lending is a permitted activity under the Government's Code of Conduct for Ministers of the Crown?

That is a simple question and, I might add, a legitimate question. It was raised during Question Period which presumably is the appropriate time to raise questions when seeking information.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre went on to ask:

> When a Cabinet Minister makes a $354,000 second or third mortgage loan, is that not a commercial activity which is in fact prohibited by the code? What action does the Government intend to take to enforce the code with respect to the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport?

Those are straightforward questions. There is certainly no innuendo there, simply a question whether the code was breached and were these types of mortgages recognized as speculative commercial loans.

Mr. Mazankowski: Withdraw, then.

Mr. Riis: We asked the question during Question Period. We directed the question to the appropriate Minister. There were no innuendoes in either the introductory comments or in the questions themselves. In my view, there is no question of privilege.

If a Member of the House of Commons does not have the right to ask these kinds of questions during Question Period, seeking legitimate information, what kind of questions are we permitted to ask?

Mr. Mazankowski: While smearing other members? Smear some more.

Mr. Rodriguez: You are so sensitive. Poor baby.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member.

Mr. Riis: I appreciate that there seems to be a great deal of sensitivity on the other side. Quite frankly, I recall a number of occasions when totally different situations were being evaluated and questions were being asked in the House of Commons. Again, the appropriate questions apparently had been put to the Assistant Deputy Registrar General who ruled that, in fact, all the guidelines were being followed. Subsequently there were public inquiries and so on.

I suggest that when facts such as this are brought to our attention, Question Period is the forum provided for by the Standing Orders to give the opportunity to ask legitimate questions seeking information.

In conclusion, if Members of Parliament cannot exercise their very basic privilege to rise in the House to seek information from the appropriate Minister, then what is the point of having Question Period, and what kind of questions can be pursued?

Mr. Jelinek: You should not smear members in the process.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wish to respond to the Hon. House Leader of the New Democratic Party. Clearly, questions are allowable and that is the purpose of Question Period. Innuendo and the imputation of motives clearly are not allowable.

I believe if the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), who is a very reasonable and thoughtful Member of Parliament, were to reread the questions and the underlying imputations, he would find that there are certainly some very clear accusations. I want to outline two or three of them.

Inherent in the question is an accusation that the Minister did not make reference to a $354,000 mortgage or arrangement for the transaction. That information was clearly available. It was public information and public knowledge. The member could have had it if he wanted it.

Mr. Cassidy: I did. It is in the Registry Office.

Mr. Mazankowski: The details of it are clearly there.

Mr. Cassidy: The file is not open to Members of Parliament.

Mr. Mazankowski: It is clearly there.

Mr. Cassidy: The file is not open to Members of Parliament.

Mr. Mazankowski: The ADRG indicated that at no time did the—he selectively extract information to use for his own political purpose.

Mr. Cassidy: Question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: There is some dispute between the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) and the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski). Of course, I will hear the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre if he wishes to respond to anything that the Hon. Minister has said. In the meantime, perhaps we could get on with the remarks. If there are Members on both sides who feel a great need to get involved in this debate I will, of course, recognize them and they can address their remarks through the Chair.

Mr. Mazankowski: The point I am making is that the Hon. Member sought not to ascertain all the facts. He selectively pulled out information to use for his own benefit. I repeat, the details of the transaction are clearly available.

He also accuses the Minister of breaching the guidelines.

Mr. Cassidy: That is imputing motives.

Mr. Mazankowski: That is clearly unfounded because the Hon. Minister has clearly put on the record today the fact that he has complied with all the guidelines. Perhaps when the Hon. Member has a chance to read it he might change his mind.

He also accuses him of commercial speculation. There is no commercial speculation in this particular transaction. The Hon. Member lived in the apartment in question. He owned it since 1980, I believe. It was something that he had, long before he became a Minister of the Crown. Therefore, there was no loan or no action on the part of the Minister which would involve any speculation or any commercial activity.

He also accuses the Minister, in the course of his question, of managing or operating a business or commercial activity which is a violation of Section 29 of the code. That is totally false.

What is really more important is that the Hon. Member went outside the House and stated, "The Minister, who according to the Code of Conduct is not meant to be carrying on any commercial activity, is engaged in a speculative mortgage loan with respect to a property in downtown Ottawa". He has gone outside the House and repeated it. It is very clear that the Minister is in compliance and it is not a breach.

When these kinds of accusations are made, there is a longstanding tradition in the House that the Member can surely feel free to make such an allegation, but in the course of that he usually puts up his seat as a challenge, to show that he is serious about what he is suggesting. Failing that, I suggest that the Hon. Member has no choice but to either withdraw the innuendo and the allegations that have been made, directly or indirectly, and apologize, or we have the opportunity to have the matter aired fully before the respective Standing Committee. That is the purport of the motion.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise two matters at this time. First, I am sure in reviewing the question and answer on page 5094 of yesterday's Hansard that you will find indeed that the Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) did not in any way impinge on the privilege of the Hon. Minister. His questions were direct. They may not be questions that the Minister likes, but they were questions that Members of Parliament should legitimately ask in the House of Commons.

The issue itself was in the public domain before Question Period. The Member for Ottawa Centre, in his statement to the House a few minutes ago, explained that he did go out of his way to research this area. He notified the Minister's office of his intent, and when he found out that the Minister was not here he notified the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) of his intent to raise the issue. While those actions are not necessary, they are a courtesy that the Member for Ottawa Centre extended to ensure that the Minister or, in his absence, the Deputy Prime Minister had an opportunity to be aware that the issue was to be raised and to be in a position to answer those allegations.

I previously sat in the Standing Committee on Privileges, Elections and Procedure when there was a hearing on the privileges of a Member of Parliament in the Bryce Mackasey-Montreal Gazette affair. It is not easy for Members of Parliament to sit and judge such an issue. It is not a very easy process to experience and I think we must be very careful before referring matters of this nature to a committee.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: You should be careful before you say it, then.

Mr. Mazankowski: Why don't you put up or shut up?

Mr. Jelinek: What are you afraid of?

Mr. Crosby: You supported the Mackasey reference. What are you afraid of?

• (1230)

Mr. Murphy: I am not saying that this is something we would be afraid to send to committee.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I can help the Hon. Member. I do not think we are at the stage right now where we are talking about whether or not it goes to committee. What the Chair is interested in is, what is the issue. The Minister has made his position very clear. The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) has resorted it and made very clear his own position. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) has given us his version and his views. The Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) is, of course, addressing the matter with his usual skill and understanding of this place.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I always find that the people who do not get up on their feet tend to talk the most from their seats. I think there is a reason for that. They probably have nothing to offer to this House.

As someone who sat through the hearings of our committee on the Bryce Mackasey—Montreal Gazette case, which dragged out over many months, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, it is important when there is a matter going before that committee that we have direct instructions with which we can deal. I am not saying this matter is going before the committee, but I am warning the House and the Speaker that in the Bryce Mackasey affair, when it came down to the final question, we were not allowed to make a judgment as to what exactly Bryce Mackasey was involved in and what he was not involved in. We were restricted.

The ruling that went against The Gazette, and the reporter involved, related to the nature of the two questions which were sent to that committee. No one said that the reporter was unfair or that he had not done his work. No one said that The Gazette was not doing a decent job of investigative journalism. For that matter, in the committee testimony, which took place over many months, it was evident that there was an attempt to get more facts from the principals in this case. However, because of the nature of the motion which was accepted by the Speaker, we were restricted to two very specific elements. Because of that, The Gazette and the reporter were deemed to have been in contempt of Parliament and to have breached the privileges of the former Member for Lincoln, Mr. Mackasey.

I have already said I believe the questions asked by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre, were certainly within the bounds of what one would expect a Member of Parliament to ask. He certainly had done his research and had certainly notified the Government of his intent prior to Question Period. He did all that. However, I am saying that if on this matter, or on any further matter, something of this nature is going to be referred to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure, we must be careful to ensure that the motion which is entertained and accepted by the Chair allows that committee to do a full, complete and thorough job of looking at the Members' privileges and the privileges of reporters and others.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in this matter simply because of the reference made by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) to the Bryce Mackasey case. As the Hon. Member knows, I shared, along with himself, the concerns of Members of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure which examined that case at the time, and the process in this House of Commons which led to the reference to that committee. I think there is a clear similarity between the two cases, as the Hon. Member pointed out. However, I want to focus your attention, Mr. Speaker, on an element that is present in this House today which must be considered now by the Chair.

Mr. Mackasey was faced with an allegation of wrongful conduct on his part in a national newspaper, The Montreal Gazette. He brought that complaint to the House of Commons. He said "I have been wronged because a statement has been made about me which is not true and affects my privileges as a Member of this House of Commons. I want that matter referred to the Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure". It was so referred.

The Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek) has come to the same House of Commons and said, "A statement has been made about me which is not true, for which there is no real substance and the proof lies in the very materials on which the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre relies to make the statement". There is no denial on the part of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), no retraction. He sticks to what he said. The issue is there. The Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport says he has been wronged, his privileges are affected. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre continues his allegation of wrongness. It is obvious that someone has to review the situation and a decision must be made. The appropriate forum in this House of Commons is the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure.

I do not know what further discussion there can be other than a retraction here and now from the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre in respect of the complaint of the Minister. That is to say, that he did not mean to state that there was any wrongdoing, that he did not mean to imply any wrongdoing, he merely wished to raise the question on the floor of the House of Commons, which I would agree he is entitled to do. He is allowed to raise the issue. However, in raising the issue he made an allegation which he now has to stand by or retract.

As far as I understood his intervention, he said very clearly that he stands by his allegation. He thinks the rule was violated, and if it was not violated in the opinion of the director, the director is wrong, and if the director is right, the rules should be changed. I understood him very clearly. He stands by his allegation. Let him go before the committee and prove it.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. In the course of discussion of this very important and, in my view, very essential Question of Privilege raised by my colleague, the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek), a lot of statements have been made about freedom of speech and privileges of members to speak their minds in this Chamber. No one would dispute that. It is absolutely essential to the operation of this Chamber. Further, it is essential in our system—sometimes less essential in others—that during Question Period all Hon. Members of the House have an opportunity to question the Government about its activities.

That fundamental freedom of parliamentarians to speak freely in this Chamber and to question Government during Question Period, is circumscribed by a whole range of rules which were established in the long tradition of this institution and its predecessor institutions in the United Kingdom. We have, for example, severe limits on the words which can be used. One cannot use accusatory or inflammatory words in keeping with the traditions of this House. Beauchesne is full of examples of what should be a proper question and what a question should seek. Citation 359 of Beauchesne makes it very clear; the question ought to seek information and so on.

There is an equally important provision in the long traditions of this House that members may not accuse another member of a wrongdoing. One cannot use the immunities of this institution to make an accusation. The tradition is that if one makes an accusation of wrongdoing, one does so with such conviction that one willingly puts one's own seat under consideration. That is a vitally important tradition. If members are free at any time to accuse other members of wrongdoing without the sanction of having to defend their convictions by putting at risk their seats, then we open the door to a free flow of those accusations. We open the door to anyone to stand up and say, you are a thief, you are a crook, you have done this and that. Those who came before us were very wise in the establishment of our traditions. The decisions made by your predecessors, Mr. Speaker, which are found in Beauchesne, are very wise and should be followed.

It has been suggested by a number of speakers on this side of the House as to the course of action open to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). He ought to take that course of action if he has any respect for this institution.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have several comments I would like to make in response to the points which I know have been made sincerely by Members of the Government, although perhaps they do protest a bit too much. In fact, I think everyone in the House will acknowledge that the Code of Conduct itself is imprecise and that if it can provoke an hour-long debate in the House then perhaps we should spend an equal amount of energy ensuring that we have a Code of Conduct that is effective, enforceable and which can be easily understood.

• (1240)

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member may well be correct, that is not for the Chair to say. But let us return again to what the complaint is. The complaint is that the consequence of what was said in the House yesterday was a slander on the character or the conduct of the Minister. That is the issue. That is the issue I have to face.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I was also accused of not having done any research and of providing selective information. First, I would point out to the Deputy Prime Minister that in the material which I circulated to him and the press I included the summary statement by the Minister for 1984 and 1985. I skipped 1986 because it was a duplicate and I provided the statement for February, 1987. These are the documents which are available to the public.

Mr. Mazankowski: There is more than that available.

Mr. Cassidy: To my knowledge—

Mr. Mazankowski: To your knowledge, that is the shortcoming.

Mr. Cassidy: To my knowledge, since I have asked previously for other information from the Assistant Deputy Registrar-General. He takes it as his view that if he has a statement of compliance then that is it. I also made available to my colleagues in the other Party information available from the registry office. As the Deputy Prime Minister stated in his response yesterday, an interim mortgage was arranged on this property until August. For me to suggest that a mortgage was offered on the property I certainly do not think is any slander or innuendo, since the Deputy Prime Minister has repeated the words.

Mr. Speaker: I will let the Hon. Member finish. However, perhaps he could make it easier for the Chair. Of course, the Hon. Member can say if he chooses that he did not intend any slander of the Minister's character or conduct. If that is the position of the Hon. Member, then I think, in a case such as this, the Chair should certainly hear it.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, to conclude, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) has just suggested that any allegation of a breach of the Code of Conduct must automatically be reviewed by the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure. He seems to be saying that any allegation of wrongdoing on the part of a Cabinet Minister has to go before that committee. That would certainly involve an awful lot of work for the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure. It seems to me that to suggest that, is in fact to kill effective, fair comment here in the House of Commons about the performance or the actions of Cabinet Ministers. Members of the Opposition should not be inhibited or unable to raise matters of public importance on the grounds that the Government will then take up the time of a committee of the House in exhaustively going over every such statement which is made in the House.

Mr. Jelinek: Over your allegations.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, if members opposite want me to talk about the allegations, then I will. However, Your Honour has tried to discourage that a couple of times. I would point out to the Chair that members opposite seem to be interested in why I referred to this as a speculative and commercial activity. I simply say, and I will be very brief, that a commercial activity is the type of mortgage lending that one would see made as a private business venture. For a person to have made a deal such as the Minister made as a private business person would be legitimate in our society. As I stated before, there is nothing illegal with it. However, a commercial deal is something that appears to be prohibited by the Code of Conduct.

In addition, the question is whether this matter is speculative. That word has also been objected to. Yesterday and today I suggested that when a building is sold for $325,000 a year ago and is then mortgaged for double that amount the holder of the subordinated mortgage, in this case the Minister, must surely be depending on a speculative increase—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before the Hon. Member closes his remarks, which he is certainly entitled to make, the Chair wants to know this. Does the Hon. Member want to make any statement at all as to whether or not it was the intent, as a consequence of his questions yesterday, to accuse the Minister of some wrong conduct or breach of the code? Surely, in a matter such as this the Chair can at least have that position made clear by the Hon. Member. The allegation that is made now against the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre is that his questions yesterday carried an innuendo of wrongdoing against the Minister. If that was not the intent of the Hon. Member, then surely the Hon. Member should say so. It would help the Chair a great deal.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have to confess that I am a bit confused by your question. I asked the Deputy Prime Minister if actions that appeared to be speculative commercial mortgage lending in this particular case were permitted activities under the code. That was the nature of my question. I do not know how I could have raised the question without—

Mr. Speaker: I will not close the Hon. Member off before he is finished. However, the question the Chair has to decide is with respect to the fact that the Minister has come into the House and has said: "Those questions yesterday carried an innuendo of wrongdoing against me". That is what he is saying. What the Chair wants to know is, because this matter is raised as a question of privilege, did the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre mean to do that? The Chair would be the last to suggest that Members cannot ask questions about the guidelines, or even about transactions. But the question that I have to look at is, did the Hon. Member mean to accuse the Minister of some sort of wrongdoing? I am not talking about illegality in the market-place; I am talking about wrongdoing in relation to the guidelines. I invite the Hon. Member to help me a little bit in responding to that specific question since that is what I have to decide.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I think the simple answer I can give to you is that I was seeking to get information about a matter which I think is an important matter. If, in fact, it was the response of the Government House Leader that this was not a violation of the code, then of course my attention would turn to the code which would permit activity that a common sense judgment might deem unacceptable for Cabinet Ministers. But I was seeking that information because this is an important issue concerning public policy.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank Hon. Members for their interventions. The Hon. Member for Churchill was very helpful. Obviously, the Chair will reserve on this matter and examine Hansard very carefully.

I think that the Chair ought to observe, as I have observed in the past, that once upon a time in the mists of history one could say anything in the House of Commons but not outside it. One could say anything because it was in the public interest that the ordinary laws of defamation did not apply to members when they were in their place speaking on public matters. I remind all Hon. Members that that was history. That was yester-year, yester-century, if there is such a word. Today, anything said in here is immediately said outside.

I will, of course, consider carefully all of the arguments. But I do ask Hon. Members to take this into consideration. Arguing about it for hours later does not get away from the fact that I think one ought to be more careful in this Chamber than once was the case. I am not setting that down as a rule. I am just setting it out as a suggestion. What is said in here is said immediately outside because of television, and everyone knows that. Thus we have to be, and I have to be on behalf of all Hon. Members, very careful to guard the right of Hon. Members to speak freely in this place and to speak with vigour and to search with tenacity for the truth. At the same time, if it requires Hon. Members to sometimes take a little more time before they make a suggestion in here, keeping in mind that what they suggest does go immediately outside, then I would ask that Hon. Members do that.

I will consider the matter very carefully and return to the House at the appropriate time. I thank Hon. Members.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to stand at this time but I am very concerned about the last statement you made. I want to clarify it for my own sake and for that of members of my caucus. We agree with you that the televising of our debates in the House is indeed instant broadcasting, if I may, of the proceedings of the House. We also realize that with the modern means of communication that broadcast is transmitted to the entire country very quickly.

I hope I misunderstood you, Mr. Speaker, but I do not want the House to be left with what may be a misunderstanding which I got from your remarks. The electronic Hansard of this House is under your authority and is only broadcast under your authority and control. I do not think that I should, at any time, feel threatened or——threatened, that is the word, threatened as regards my right to express myself freely in the House and to voice my opinions, whether or not they are shared by the Opposition or the Government. That is not the point. The debate in the House is fair, and I think you probably meant to say that we respect a member's right to speak but that there are of course limitations existing in our libel laws that require us to respect the opinions of the other person and not infringe on the rights of those who are on the other side of the question. However, Mr. Speaker, I would like to be sure that the message that comes across is always seen to be what it is: an honest, clear and accurate message from the Members of this House, and that there will be no attempt to tinker with, change or alter the televised message.

[English]

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take any more time on this issue, other than to say that we have had a very useful interchange this morning. The points raised on both sides were appropriate and needed to be made this morning. However, in the same spirit as the comments made by my hon. colleague in the Liberal Party, I would like to say that one of the facets of our parliamentary system which we hold up with a great deal of pride is that which has been the focus of a great deal of discussion this morning, Question Period, and the very valuable role which Question Period plays in our country and in our parliamentary system.

I would like to add a very deep concern I have, which I do not believe has been stated here today at all. During that three-quarters of an hour Members of Parliament, in a respectful and honourable way, pose questions to the appropriate Ministers of the Crown. That privilege must not be abused and must be respected at all times. I believe that the discussions we have had here today will facilitate that in the future. I just want to emphasize how important that three-quarters of an hour is in this country which prides itself on maintaining the principles of free and open speech.

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister in just a moment. Hon. Members will remember that the Chair allowed the questions yesterday. When I say that what is said in here is said outside immediately, it is only a suggestion that we be as careful as we can.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, as usual my learned friend, the Member for Ottawa—Vanier, made some very salient points on this issue, which points were supported by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap. You touched on the fact, Mr. Speaker, that in the course of Question Period and debate we as Hon. Members have to conduct ourselves in a responsible fashion. We must be very, very careful when we attempt to imply motives which may not be desirable or when we attempt to cast aspersions or make innuendoes. I think there has been some slippage in that regard.

Mr. Murphy: By Ministers as well.

Mr. Mazankowski: I listened to the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) this morning and I will listen to him again if he wants to speak.

Mr. Murphy: No, you heckled.

Mr. Mazankowski: This morning has been a clear example of a Minister of the Crown being profoundly affected by questions and suggestions, either directly or indirectly. He feels very strongly about it. He is an Hon. Member, he is an Hon. Minister of the Crown. He went to some pain and some length to try to outline in full detail the transaction referred to in the course of Question Period yesterday. He feels very seriously grieved by the exchange which took place and by what was reported in the media. That is important and you have touched upon it, Mr. Speaker. It is fair to say, as he alluded in his statement, that his reputation is tarnished and his family is affected.

Mr. Nystrom: Remember Erik Nielsen.

Mr. Mazankowski: All Members of Parliament are affected. Let us not hide that fact. I think the Leader of the Liberal Party made that suggestion when he laid down his four points of conduct in disciplining his Party in matters such as this.

This morning we have heard a debate on a very serious issue which was raised yesterday and was sprinkled with some very serious allegations and innuendo. Those allegations have not been supported. The allegations are implied, either directly or indirectly. They are not founded and have not been substantiated by the member.

I am of the firm opinion that the Hon. Member who made these allegations, either directly or indirectly, either inside the House or outside the House, has a clear opportunity now, in the spirit of improving the climate in this institution, to withdraw and apologize, or to welcome and support the initiative contained in the motion which the Hon. Minister is prepared to move, or to take the other honourable course, if he feels very strongly that his allegations are well founded and substantiated, of putting up his seat and taking the necessary course of action.

I think we all want to resolve this issue in the best, fairest and most practical way possible. I think this is a good time to call upon all Hon. Members to consider the importance of this institution itself. This is a good time to exercise a little tolerance and understanding.

I have sat on the opposition side as well as the government side. I was a member of an opposition Party which had 70 members when the Government had a huge majority. Notwithstanding that, we were fairly effective in making our points of view known. We always had the kind of torrid debate which clearly exemplifies the traditions of this House. However, there has always been a clear understanding that innuendo, unfounded allegations, and the hurling of suspicions is something which we try to avoid as much as possible. I think that that sort of activity in the House has been on the increase. Anything we can do with your leadership, Mr. Speaker, to attempt to ameliorate that will be in the best interests of this institution and all Hon. Members.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister. It being one o'clock p.m., I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock p.m.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 21

GOVERNMENT PERFORMANCE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): For a week now, Mr. speaker, the Conservative Ministers have been trying to make people forget the regrettable two and a half years that have gone by since this Government came into office on September 4.

We saw the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) attempt to convince western Canadians to set up a committee to come up with a new energy policy. Mr. Speaker, after the calamity, after this incompetent Government drove the western provinces into bankruptcy, all of a sudden this Minister wakes up two and a half years later and strikes a committee to repair the damage.

Yesterday we also saw the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté) step up to the podium; having failed miserably with his regional development policies, he discovers his own shortcomings and incompetence, so he too decides to convene the provinces in the hope that they will help him draft new policies.

Mr. Speaker, like the people of Quebec and the rest of Canada, especially western Canadians, I am telling these Ministers and this Government: It is too late. People want an election, they want to get rid of this incompetent Government.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

FEARS OF ABITIBI-PRICE COMPANY

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, a few months ago I rose in this House to echo the concern of Abitibi-Price Company officials about the possibility of a new paper mill being opened in Matane thanks to Government grants.

Mr. Speaker, without any grants the management of Abitibi-Price have taken the initiative of investing $150 million in their Kénogami plant to produce a fine supercalendered paper quite similar to the product which would be marketed by Matane.

Mr. Speaker, if the Quebec Government is so intent on having one more competitor in the pulp and paper industry, it seems to me the Minister responsible, Mr. Caccia, should at least meet with Abitibi-Price senior officials, union spokesmen, and the very concerned 1,200 workers.

With supporting figures and strong guarantees, he should assure them that the Abitibi-Price operations will not be threatened in any way and that our workers will not be laid off.

For the time being, Mr. Speaker, I am still very worried about the impact of this project, and I urge my Government to be very careful in this case.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

SEWAGE TREATMENT—NEED FOR MODERNIZATION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, much attention has been paid lately in the House, and rightly so, to the whole question of acid rain. However, there is another and equally serious environmental problem which often does not receive attention in the House, that is, the whole matter of sewage treatment—the need for upgrading and modernization and, in some places, just putting in the basic infrastructure for sewage treatment in Canada.

We are reminded of that need in the story yesterday about thousands of gallons of sewage polluted storm water being pumped into the Great Lakes at Fort Erie, Ontario.

However, one of the most disturbing things is the total abdication of any responsibility in the area by the federal Government. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has said that this is up to the provinces and to the municipalities. What is really required is some leadership by the federal Government.

• (1405)

This is a massive job that needs to be undertaken throughout Canada, but some areas in particular ought to be kept specially in mind. For instance, in the Province of Quebec something like 40 per cent of the sewage still goes into the Canadian environment totally untreated. In 1987 that is nothing short of a crime, and it continues to be a political crime that the federal Government abdicates its responsibility.

HORTICULTURE

EFFECT OF UNITED STATES SUBSIDIES ON CANADIAN HONEY PRODUCERS

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of some 20,000 Canadian honey producers, I would like to draw the attention of the House to the financial difficulty which they are encountering. Unfortunately, American agricultural subsidies are having the same impact on our honey producers as U.S. grain subsidies are having on our grain farmers.

According to the Manitoba Honey Producers Association, the world market price of honey has dropped some 13 cents a pound and further declines are feared. As about 80 per cent of western Canadian honey is sold at that world price, that drop in world price has already forced many producers out of business. In addition, prairie honey producers are having difficulty finding markets, even at these reduced prices.

As you may know, Sir, the western Canadian honey beekeepers depend very heavily on American markets and, unfortunately, those markets are now being interfered with by tariffs.

In addition, the markets which we have enjoyed in Europe are buying heavily subsidized American honey. As a result, many of Canada's honey producers will need financial assistance if they are to continue in business for another year.

INDUSTRY

SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION—DELAY IN MODERNIZATION PROJECT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in July, 1984, the now Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in the company of many of his colleagues, both provincially and federally, made a commitment with regard to the modernization of Sydney Steel. That commitment was reaffirmed after the election in September, 1984.

People in eastern Nova Scotia had to wait 24 months before those sentiments were expressed in a subsidiary agreement signed by the Government of Canada and the Government of Nova Scotia. Another 12 months elapsed before finding out from the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté) that the Government had not received the business plan from Sydney Steel and the Province of Nova Scotia. We have been informed that the business plan has now been received by the Government of Canada.

We now learn from the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion that there are two other hoops which the Province of Nova Scotia must go through before the federal Government will participate. This is an unconscionable delay. This is wanton disrespect for the people of eastern Nova Scotia who have been waiting for the Prime Minister, his colleagues in the Province of Nova Scotia and, in particular, the Members of Parliament who represent us in the federal Cabinet. It is absolutely unconscionable, Mr. Speaker.

I call upon the Government of the day to live up to its responsibilities and make this money available so that modernization will go on.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

HIGH INTEREST RATES CHARGED TO BORROWERS

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, the previous Government started a practice of borrowing money outside Canada for the purpose of lending Canadians money through Crown corporations, such as the Farm Credit Corporation and the Federal Development Bank.

In order to accomplish this borrowing, these Crown corporations must offer high returns to the lender and then must charge Canadian borrowers a high rate of interest for a long period of time. When these factors are considered and any minor adversity the Canadian borrower may encounter happens, then the borrower is doomed to failure. The interest, or the unreasonable penalty paid in lieu of the interest, is paid to investors outside of Canada.

High interest rates doom our Canadian borrowers to failure. This borrowing practice of Crown corporations should stop and Crown corporations should become better money managers with Canadian money.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT RATES IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, while the Conservative Government makes promises and repeatedly tells Canadians how wonderful it is, the economic situation in western Canada worsens. In the last month the jobless numbers in British Columbia increased from 210,000 to 213,000. Nearly a quarter of a million British Columbians now are jobless and many more are underemployed.

In the northern interior the unemployment rate is 17 per cent; in the Okanagan Valley the unemployment rate is 17 per cent, in the Kootenays area the unemployment rate is 16 per cent, in the central interior the unemployment rate is 20 per cent, and in the City of Vancouver it is 14 per cent.

• (1410)

This devastating jobless situation has led to thousands of British Columbian children going hungry and suffering from malnutrition. Yet the Premier of the province says that feeding school children is certainly not a government responsibility. He says that hot-lunch programs in schools are too costly and are usually abused. I encourage the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to meet as soon as possible with his British Columbia counterpart to end the situation in that province.

A Victoria school trustee, Mr. John Young, estimates that his school district alone has at least 1,000 malnourished or hungry children.

In the Terrace school area, a soup program has been operating for years, giving free soup to children who come to school without any lunch money.

In Fort Nelson, one school has had a sharing shelf, similar to those in east end Vancouver schools, where children leave parts of their lunches for those who have no lunch at all. In another school district the parents' group organized a program of parents sending extra lunches for those young children going without. I could go on and on. The situation is very serious.

Thousands of children in British Columbia are finding themselves hungry and/or malnourished, and the Premier of that province says "tough luck".

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

SUPPORT FOR AMENDING PATENT ACT

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, last night I met with a group of seniors at the R. J. Smith Seniors' residence in my riding. I went expecting some of these seniors to be upset about the Government's proposal to amend the Patent Act. Instead, I found that they were overwhelmingly concerned that they, their children and their grandchildren have access to the latest and most advanced drugs available on the market.

I know it will disappoint opposition Parties to find out that the seniors in Etobicoke North have not bought the Opposition's collection of half-truths and scare tactics about the Government's intention in amending the Patent Act. Seniors respect the concept of intellectual property and they also understand the connection between increased patent protection and the thousands of new jobs that will be created, not to mention the fact that these advanced new drugs will now be produced in Canada.

I do not think I could say it better than one senior who asked why members of the Opposition are trying to prevent us from getting the best quality medicine available. She said to tell them to stop the guff and let us get on with it.

CHILD CARE

RIGHT TO CULTURALLY ADAPTED INFRASTRUCTURES FOR CLIENTELE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, in Canada there are two million children aged 13 or under who require daycare, but only 172,000 places are available. Although the problem exists throughout the country, it is particularly significant in the National Capital region. According to the chairman of the Ottawa-Carleton Regional Municipality's Health and Social Services Committee, the lack of daycare centres in the region is 10 times worse for Francophone families.

In fact, there are only three Francophone daycare centres in the Ottawa-Carleton region. According to some people, Francophone families have been slow to make use of daycare centres because they prefer to organize their own daycare.

However, if schools and daycare centres are an extension of the home, it is important to use the language spoken at home at the daycare centre as well as at school, so that the child will grow up in a familiar environment. And that is where the authorities have failed. It is now imperative to take the situation in hand and provide for daycare centres across the country where the official language spoken by the child in the home will be spoken and understood.

NAVY LEAGUE OF CANADA

TRIBUTE TO WORK OF VOLUNTEERS

Mr. Patrick Crofton (Esquimalt—Saanich): Mr. Speaker, this past Saturday I had the privilege of addressing the annual general meeting of the Navy League of Canada. This national organization is dedicated to teaching seamanship and citizenship to some 11,000 young people in 230 Canadian communities.

Canada borders on three major oceans and possesses a longer coastline than any other nation. We are very much a maritime nation, a fact occasionally forgotten by some Hon. Members of this House. Maritime trade and maritime traffic are of vital importance to us, both from an economic and from a security point of view. Thus a knowledge of the sea, and its importance to Canada, are important lessons for young people.

The men and women of the Navy League, and the dedication of the many volunteers, do a great service to Canada through the training they offer our nation's youth. The Navy League very much deserves our recognition and appreciation for an important job well done.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—MINISTER'S APPROACH

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, again the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) is attacking those who oppose her free trade schemes. She has refused to debate with her critics across the country, yet she will attack them when she is safe from any reply.

• (1415)

What is even worse in this case is that she is clearly trying to use the power of government assistance to make one of her critics, Mel Hurtig, retreat from the fight. How much more respect there would be for the Minister if she debated Mr. Hurtig in Edmonton instead of ominously raising the issue of how much aid his company gets from the Government.

The economic, political and cultural case against comprehensive free trade with the U.S. is very strong. That is the argument the Minister should try to address instead of attacking her opponents. Her approach simply shows the weakness of her case.

UNIONS

UTILIZATION OF DUES PAID BY MEMBERS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, according to the Gallup poll results published in Le Soleil on April 11, 1987, four out of five Canadians feel that people who pay union dues should have some say in the use of funds for non-union purposes.

It is a fact that one of the Parties in this House, the New Democratic Party, is getting a substantial amount of funds from workers' payroll deductions. Incidentally, we would be interested to know which organization paid for the leader's trip to Rome to meet members of the Socialist International on April 6, 1987.

Mr. Speaker, eight out of 10 union members are against having their dues used for non-union purposes. The New Democratic Party is clearly thumbing its nose at unionized workers and at the judgment handed down on July 4, 1986, by Justice White of the Ontario Supreme Court, in which the use of these funds is challenged. So far, the Party has never clarified where it gets its funding. Will he continue to use the money of workers against their will and flout the principles of justice? These socialists who claim they will form the next Government should first clarify their sources of financing before the House.

INDUSTRY

SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION—DELAY IN MODERNIZATION PROJECT

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, a crisis is developing in Sydney, Nova Scotia. Last February the federal Government signed a subsidiary agreement with the province regarding Sydney Steel Corporation. Yet it did not provide funding until the end of June, 1986. It did not appoint project managers until September. Then the question of market studies was thrown in the path of progress of the modernization. Those studies were done.

Then there was the problem of CN trying to renege on purchases from Sydney Steel. That was resolved just before the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) arrived to open the Winter Games in Sydney.

Now the Government, through the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté), says Nova Scotia has to purchase a universal mill before the federal Government will honour its commitment to provide 70 per cent of the funding for the second phase of the modernization of Sydney Steel. This is treachery against the people of Nova Scotia and industrial Cape Breton. It is another commitment broken by the Government. It is not honouring its promises, and I ask it to follow through on the commitments it has made.

NATIONAL CITIZENSHIP WEEK

NATIONAL PRIDE

Mr. Gérald Comeau (South West Nova): This being National Citizenship Week, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say how proud I am to be a Canadian citizen.

Canada ranks among the world's most advanced countries in terms of the rights and freedoms enjoyed by its citizens. I am proud to live in a country which encourages all its cultural communities to protect and promote the language and traditions of their ancestors, a country which has always been regarded as a welcoming land. Its democratic traditions, its respect for individual freedoms, the industrious temperament as well as the pacific and tolerant character of its people are the envy of many nations. The most telling evidence of this is the fact that more than three million immigrants chose Canada as their adoptive country since the Citizenship Act first came into force in 1947.

Finally, I would dare assume that what Canadians lack most indeed is not the feeling of national pride but only the opportunities to express it loudly and clearly. I therefore urge all my fellow Canadians to make the most of this National Citizenship Week to celebrate the fortieth anniversary of Canadian citizenship.

FOOTWEAR INDUSTRY

IMPORTANCE OF QUOTAS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, once again I want to draw the attention of Hon. Members to the disastrous situation with which the Canadian footwear industry must come to grips.

Since quotas were abolished on November 30, 1985, men's footwear imports have gone up by almost 50 per cent. Specifically, Southeast Asia imports rose from 63,000 to 213,500 pairs, an increase of 238 per cent.

In my riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell one firm in particular had to let go two-thirds of its employees, with the result that 150 people found themselves without jobs. Although the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) did meet with Canadian footwear industry officials, no decision has yet been made.

What we need from this Government, Mr. Speaker, is a five-year policy to guarantee jobs in the footwear industry. Quotas must be reinstated for at least five years. Only such a measure would make Canadians sure that they will keep their jobs.

FINANCE

PROPOSED DOME PETROLEUM TAKEOVER—REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO PARLIAMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance made a number of completely inconsistent statements yesterday in the House about the Dome Petroleum situation. He said, as reported in Hansard, that the situation is urgent. Then he said let the process run its course. Then he said that there should be a private sector solution. Then hinted that there may be major tax rulings.

Is the issue an urgent one or not? Does it involve major tax rulings affecting billions of dollars of taxpayers' money, and more fundamentally, does he intend to bring the whole issue before Parliament before the transaction is completed so that we can avoid the costly mistakes of the Gulf and Western deal and the costly bank bail-outs?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition refers to costly mistakes. It was the costly mistake of the National Energy Program that got Dome Petroleum into the situation it is in today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I know the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition agrees with that. He said it on many occasions prior to taking that seat over there.

He asked about the position of Dome. Yes, Dome's position will require some urgency as things progress because, as the Hon. Member knows, it is a takeover situation which requires immediate response to what is happening in the market-place.

When the Hon. Member asks about tax rulings amounting to billions of dollars, I think he should distinguish between a tax ruling and tax concession. He is smiling, and I think he understands exactly what I am saying. A tax ruling is available to anyone and is a clarification of the law. It is something that is provided by my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue. Something that may require billions of dollars would be by way of a tax concession. Obviously that gives me a good deal more difficulty.

OFFERS MADE FOR DOME PETROLEUM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Finance also stated he would look into offers by foreign companies that might be reviewed by Investment Canada. This is diametrically opposed to the Government's initial policy to increase Canadian ownership in our gas and petroleum industry. My question is directed to the Prime Minister and it is: Will the Canadian Government consider offers from foreign companies to purchase Dome Petroleum, yes or no?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's question was not quite clear in the translation. I will try to answer what I thought he was asking. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister responsible for Investment Canada have made it clear that there would be some understanding of the particular financial circumstances of companies that were the subject of an acquisition by a non-resident company. If a Canadian oil and gas company were in financial difficulty, as is the case with Dome Petroleum, then some adjustment would be made in the views the Government has towards that type of acquisition.

• (1425)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister of Finance seems to be contemplating the possibility of an offer by a foreign company, which contradicts any statements any Minister of this Government has made affecting the oil and gas industry prior to this afternoon.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I want to refer to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Minister this morning on television had this to say: "It is for Dome to decide what is good for its shareholders, not the federal Government".

Would the Prime Minister tell us if the position of the Government is that it is for Dome to decide, when there are thousands of jobs at stake, when the health of the western Canadian economy is at stake, when our position, in terms of self-sufficiency for Canadians in petroleum, hydrocarbons, is at stake, and when there may be billions of taxpayers' dollars at stake? Is that the position of the Government of Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think the Leader of the Official Opposition knows perfectly well that in a free enterprise country like Canada, it is first up to corporate management to decide whether an offer is favourable for their shareholders and for the people within the corporation, including the employees.

Bearing that in mind, it is first of all up to Dome to accept or turn down any offers that may be made. Subsequently, when an offer has been made, it will have to be considered by the Government, in accordance with the policies in place at this time.

CANADIANIZATION POLICY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Two of the pillars of the energy policy of the Progressive Conservatives going into the last election were security of supply and Canadianization. Canadianization, in particular, is a program which the Government has held up to the country as being something it has been working towards.

Dome Petroleum is a company on which the country has depended so much for its security of supply, and now the Minister of Finance is saying that his Government is prepared to make an exception and give away the resources of Dome Petroleum to foreign corporations. Would the Minister clarify this and state the Government's position clearly?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in the case of Canada's energy policy, Canadianization is only one aspect of this policy. In fact I can inform the Hon. Member that since this Government came to power, the percentage has increased.

[English]

REPORTED REQUEST FOR TAX RULING BY TRANSCANADA PIPELINES

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Finance, when asked about the proposed sale of Dome Petroleum, said: "We would review the position that TransCanada puts before us if a tax ruling is involved". Why would the Minister of Finance have us believe he knew nothing about a tax ruling as proposed by TransCanada PipeLines, when negotiations between the federal Government and TransCanada regarding a tax ruling have been going on since early March?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that is news to me. I am the Minister of Finance. The Hon. Member might have put that question to the Minister of National Revenue. I have not been involved in any discussions on a tax ruling and certainly I was not aware that those discussions or "negotiations", as the Hon. Member put it, were going on and had been going on for that long. I am not sure of that.

REQUEST FOR GUARANTEE OF CANADIAN OWNERSHIP

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Dome Petroleum is now the largest owner of energy reserves in western Canada. If it falls into the control of a foreign corporation, it will automatically increase foreign ownership of this sector in Canada from 40 per cent to 50 per cent. Will the Minister guarantee to the House that Dome Petroleum will remain in Canadian hands?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I repeat, for the benefit of the Leader of the New Democratic Party, that we live in a free enterprise system in this country and that it is therefore up to Dome to consider, first of all, its responsibility to its employees and its shareholders.

• (1430)

ELECTION CAMPAIGN PROMISE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the Minister that, for the New Democratic Party, Canada, as a nation, is not for sale no matter what the Tories might think.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I see that the Prime Minister is smiling. Since it was the Prime Minister who promised in the election campaign to make decisions in the Canadian interest in the energy sector will he live up to his promise and guarantee that Dome Petroleum will remain in Canadian hands? That is the issue.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am well aware that the Leader of the New Democratic Party has aided and abetted the Liberal Party in its attempts to socialize Canada's energy industry, and we have seen the problems this has caused, especially for Dome. In this respect, I can give the Hon. Member the assurance that so far, Canada's present energy policy has been instrumental in increasing the proportion of Canadianization in the industry.

Mr. Broadbent: And now the Minister wants to sell the biggest corporation in the industry in Canada, in the west. That is something we in the New Democratic Party cannot accept.

REQUEST THAT DECISION BE TAKEN BY CABINET AND JUSTIFIED IN HOUSE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my last question to the Minister is as follows: This decision may cost the taxpayer $2.4 billion. Can the Minister guarantee the decision will be one that is made by Cabinet, and that Cabinet will justify that decision before the House?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has nothing to sell as far as Dome is concerned because he does not own Dome Petroleum. So I think we should get this quite clear: the Government is not putting Dome up for sale.

Second, the Hon. Member is well aware of Dome's financial difficulties. If he is at all interested in Canada's energy policy and in the people employed by Dome, he should emulate the Government by securing our gas and energy reserves and protecting the jobs of the people working for Dome.

AIR TRANSPORT

TAKEOVER OF CANADIAN PACIFIC AIRLINES

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It concerns the takeover of Canadian Pacific Airlines by Pacific Western Airlines. This particular takeover was endorsed and approved by the Prime Minister's Government. We now know that 3,000 jobs may be lost as a result of it. Most of these jobs are in western Canada.

Why did the Prime Minister's Government approve this takeover when he knew, or ought to have known, that it was not in the public interest, and when he knew, or ought to have known, that 3,000 jobs may be lost?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman as usual is quite inaccurate in what he says. This takeover of Canadian Pacific by Pacific Western had to go to the Canadian Transport Commission which dealt with the question of whether or not it was in the public interest. It found it to be in the public interest. I would take the view and the opinion of a quasi-judicial tribunal that does not deal in rhetoric but in fact, in logic and rational application of the law to the facts, over the hon. gentleman's opinion any day in the week.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MEMORANDUM PROJECTING JOB LOSSES

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, we are not dealing with opinion; we are dealing with fact.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: That's your problem.

Mr. Nunziata: I have a confidential memo here—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: Conservative Members may laugh but 3,000 jobs will be lost.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nunziata: I have a memo from Martha Hynna who is the Executive Director of Employment Services at the Department of Employment and Immigration. It is to Mr. John Edwards, the Associate Deputy Minister and Vice-Chairman. This particular memo dated March 25 confirms that up to 3,000 jobs will be lost as a result of the takeover and that the effective date of the lay-offs will be approximately July 1, 1987. I go back to the Prime Minister and hope he will have the guts to stand up and answer.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: I would like to ask the Prime Minister why he approved this particular takeover when he knew, or ought to have known, that it was not in the public interest, when he knew that 3,000 jobs would be lost, that 3,000 families would be devastated, and that most of these jobs are in western Canada. If he is truly concerned about western Canadians, why did he approve this particular takeover?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it does not take much in the way of guts to stand up to a blowfly.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I gather from the way that the hon. gentleman puts his question that the policy of the Liberal Party would be to interfere in every commercial transaction in the country that might possibly involve the loss of a job. If that is the policy of the members of the Liberal Party then I hope they will explain it to the business sector from which the Leader of the Opposition came, since it is the first time it has ever heard it suggested that that might be the policy of the Liberal Party led by the Hon. Member from Vancouver-wherever-it-is, who recently left there to go somewhere else.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FINANCE

DOME PETROLEUM TAX CREDITS—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT DECISION ON POSSIBLE TAKEOVER

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I too wish to address a question to the Minister of Finance. Considering that Dome's $2.4 billion in tax credits is most probably the largest single tax break in Canadian history—and there is no doubt that it will have major revenue implications for us all—will the Minister not assure us that the final decision will be made by Cabinet and justified in the House of Commons, rather than a decision being made by a few officials in Revenue Canada? Can he give us that assurance?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member should check the "blues". I believe he said $22.4 billion, I think he meant $2.4 billion.

Mr. Broadbent: He said $2.4 billion.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I would like to understand where the Hon. Member is coming from. He and his Leader seem to be at odds on this issue. The Leader of the New Democratic Party seems to be concerned about a non-resident taking over Dome Petroleum. The Hon. Member for Regina East seems to be concerned about tax dollars being given to a Canadian company to take it over. I am not sure where the New Democratic Party is on this issue.

Mr. Broadbent: You should be able to master it, Michael.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Perhaps the Hon. Member would like to explain.

REQUEST THAT DECISION BE MADE BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. We have two concerns. The first is that a Canadian company take over Dome and that those resources remain in Canadian hands. Our second concern is with respect to a matter of public accountability.

It is true that Dome is a private company. However, there is a great deal of public interest at stake in this decision. There is a major public revenue implication in it. We would like an assurance that this decision will be made by Cabinet and not by officials in Revenue Canada, and that the decision made by Cabinet be justified to Parliament so that there is public accountability for the loss of billions of dollars of taxpayers' money.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member is talking about a tax ruling, tax rulings are made on a regular basis. They are clarifications of tax laws. They are a responsibility of the Minister of National Revenue. The Minister of Finance is not involved in them.

Again, I come back to the question here, which way is the New Democratic Party going? Does it want to have a Canadian company buy Dome? Does it want to have no support go to that Canadian company? Or does it want to nationalize Dome Petroleum? Which is it? Come clean. Let us know. We would like to know where the NDP stands on this issue.

• (1440)

REQUEST THAT DECISION NOT BE MADE BY BUREAUCRATS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, let me make it clear to the Minister that we want the resources to be developed by a Canadian company and that we want accountability. I know of no way in which I could make our policy more clear to the Minister.

Will the Minister not give us the assurance that a decision of such magnitude on public revenue will be made by elected officials in Cabinet rather than by bureaucrats in the Department of Revenue? Surely he appreciates the significance of this, and the difference between regular decisions made by Revenue Canada and one which has such magnitude of importance to the public interest. Surely he recognizes the difference.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is asking hypothetical questions. As I indicated in my previous response, the Department of Finance does not make tax rulings. Those are made by officials in the Department of National Revenue because they are clarifications of the Income Tax Act as it stands. The ruling is to clarify the tax law, and that happens on a regular basis.

If the Hon. Member stops to think about what he is saying he will realize that his suggestion would result in this Parliament being totally swamped with tax rulings, day in and day out.

Mr. Broadbent: What's $2.5 billion?

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CANADA-MANITOBA NORTHERN FLOOD AGREEMENT

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and is with regard to the failure of the Government so far to implement the Canada-Manitoba Northern Flood Agreement. There are five northern Manitoba Indian bands which are awaiting fresh, clean drinking water, and the appropriate and necessary sewage disposal systems.

When will the foot-dragging come to an end? When will the Government of Canada honour its obligations under the Canada-Manitoba Northern Flood Agreement?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member is aware that discussions are taking place between counsel for the bands flooded in northern Manitoba and officials in the Department of Northern Affairs and Indian Development. Those discussions will continue.

As the Hon. Member is aware, there has been a commitment made that potable drinking water will be provided to the reserves in this fiscal year under the fiscal framework within which we have to work. We are having discussions on how it can be put in place. In addition, as the Hon. Member is fully aware, there are some areas involved in northern Manitoba where the provision of infrastructures such as sewage lines is well nigh impossible because of the places where the villages are built.

MINISTER'S LETTER TO NORTHERN FLOOD COMMITTEE PRESIDENT

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, on December 22, 1986, the Minister wrote to Chief Rodney Spence, President of the Northern Flood Committee. In that letter he promised "to accelerate the implementation of the water and sewer systems within the five communities".

Will the Minister explain to the House why his foot is on the brake rather than on the accelerator?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I find it strange that the member who has a concern in these matters, which I and all Members of the House recognize and share, does not recognize that he was part of a Government which implemented agreements without any plan, without identification of dollars, and without—

Mr. Penner: It's $57 million.

Mr. McKnight: The Hon. Member is saying it is only $7 million.

Mr. Penner: It is $57 million.

Mr. McKnight: Okay, $57 million.

Mr. Penner: Where is it?

Mr. McKnight: Now he is saying, "Where is it?" We have had discussions. An agreement was drafted and signed by the Government which he represented which did not provide for implementation. These discussions are provided for in the agreement. That is what the negotiations are about, Mr. Speaker.

AIR TRANSPORT

CANADIAN PACIFIC AIRLINES TAKEOVER—POSSIBLE LAY-OFFS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. His Department knows about planned lay-offs of thousands of employees due to the CP Air-PWA takeover. Since it is obvious that the employers have failed to notify their employees or their unions, will the Minister of Employment and Immigration notify these employees and their unions about what is in store for them? What plans does he have to take care of them?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman refers to some lay-offs which are going to occur as a result of the proposed amalgamation of CP and Pacific Western. There has been no notice given that any number approaching thousands will be affected. If they are, all the resources of the Government which are open to people who are laid off will certainly be made available to them, and the provisions of their collective agreements will certainly be put into effect.

We would urge the new company composed of Pacific Western and Canadian Pacific to treat generously and humanely those employees who may have to be laid off. However, there has been no indication that any number of the size to which the Hon. Member is referring are to be laid off.

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATIVE AMENDMENT DEALING WITH SUCCESSOR RIGHTS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister of Transport speaks for employment, fisheries, and a few other things, I will direct a question to him. Freedom to Move, deregulation started by the Liberals and being carried out by the Tories, promised not only more competition but more jobs.

Therefore, would he now agree, as a matter of government policy, either to move an amendment himself or accept an amendment to Bill C-18, such as was turned down this morning in committee, which would ensure that in cases of mergers, takeovers, and operating agreements, successor rights are dealt with and settled by the parties involved before a new licence to operate or a new certificate is issued?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I answered that question for the hon. gentleman yesterday in committee and am prepared to answer the question for the hon. gentleman again today in the House, although he is occupying the House with questions which have already been asked in committee.

The answer is that we have legislation under the jurisdiction of Labour Canada which applies to companies which operate under federal jurisdiction. That law will continue to apply to federal companies and there is, therefore, no need for any special provisions in the Freedom to Move legislation for that purpose. It is working.

HARBOURFRONT

MORATORIUM ON TORONTO WATERFRONT CONSTRUCTION PROJECTS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works and relates to the Harbourfront property in Metro Toronto. Due to the great concerns of residents of the area and the people of Metropolitan Toronto in general relating to the development and planning process of the City of Toronto, the residents welcomed the Minister's announcement of a freeze and a review of the site. However, they would like to know from the Minister exactly what has been frozen.

Has all of the development been frozen or only part of it? How does the Minister intend to enforce that freeze since at the moment construction is going on without the benefit of building permits? Will the Minister allow public input of residents into the review process?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, a review of the objectives of the Harbourfront corporation is now under way. In the interim, a moratorium has been imposed on all development. Clarification on which particular projects have been affected will be given within the next 30 days.

One of the ingredients of the review is to ensure that there is adequate public representation, the opportunity for citizens and appropriate groups to give their views. The mechanics have not yet been crystallized but we will issue a statement in that regard.

ANNOUNCED CLOSURE OF MANITOBA SUGAR COMPANY—EFFECT ON SUGAR-BEET PRODUCERS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board. As the Minister knows, on Friday the Manitoba Sugar Company announced the closing of its plant which, if carried through, will mean the end of the sugar-beet industry in the Province of Manitoba and will affect 500 or 600 jobs in that province alone.

• (1450)

The Manitoba Minister of Agriculture said in the Legislature yesterday that there had been no new discussions between the federal and provincial Governments since the announcement, and yesterday I asked the Deputy Prime Minister whether he would undertake to talk with that Minister to see if negotiations could be resumed before the decision was carried out.

Has the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board been in touch with his provincial counterpart? Is there an intention to start negotiations before the date-line of Thursday so that there can be some resolution of the problem before the sugar-beet industry of Manitoba is put to an end?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises a matter of concern to all of us, especially those of us in the House who represent Manitobans.

We believe we have put a reasonable offer on the table. Mr. Uruski, the provincial Minister in Manitoba, is in receipt of a letter from myself to which he has not yet replied. We believe the offer is reasonable.

Evidence of that fact is that everybody has accepted it—both growers' associations in Manitoba and Alberta, and the Province of Alberta. We would very much like to see Manitoba take a very serious look at it and, if it has some problems with it, come forward with a proposition with which we could deal in line with what the Hon. Member suggested, that is, to see that that important industry survives in Manitoba.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, in response to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board, there is no doubt that both sides, the federal and provincial Governments, have taken a position. However, if they talked to the people of Manitoba, they would say: "Get the problem resolved before Thursday, before we lose this industry".

REQUEST THAT FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL MINISTERS MEET

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, as a special appeal on behalf of the people of Manitoba, will the Minister take the initiative, call the Minister of Agriculture in Manitoba, and arrange to have a special meeting to see whether before Thursday there can be some way of resolving the differences and coming to an agreement which will meet the objectives of both sides, before we lose a very important industry and hundreds or close to thousands of jobs in that province? I think the Minister could show some generosity and take that initiative.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, this is a serious matter, and the federal Government takes it very seriously. It is a difficult time in agriculture. We need to do everything we can to diversify, to see that there are as many crops grown as there possibly can be grown.

We are awaiting a reply to the letter which I sent to Mr. Uruski. I will certainly take the Hon. Member's suggestion seriously to see whether there are some things we can do in order to break the log-jam.

We find it very unfortunate, from the position of the provincial Government in Manitoba, that it simply uses this issue as a means to point the finger at the federal Government. We are willing to negotiate. We believe we have a reasonable offer on the table. We would very much like to proceed with those negotiations on a reasonable basis to see that the situation is resolved.

THE ADMINISTRATION

PROPERTY MORTGAGE ISSUED BY MINISTER

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday the Deputy Prime Minister promised to review the issue of whether the $354,000 mortgage loan that was granted by the Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sport on investment property in downtown Ottawa—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: You will never learn.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is in some difficulty, and I would just ask that Hon. Members be patient.

Mr. Cassidy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker—whether that constituted—

Some Hon. Members: Hold on.

Mr. Speaker: I very much regret to advise the Hon. Member that, in view of the fact that the questions asked yesterday to which the Hon. Member has just referred were the subject of protracted debate on a question of privilege this morning, I am reluctantly going to rule those questions out of order for today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Spadina.

Mr. Heap: Thank you, Mr. Speaker—

An Hon. Member: And Ed Broadbent is behind him.

Mr. Masse: The Leader is behind him.

Mr. de Corneille: Let's have some decency.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Spadina.

IMMIGRATION

MINISTER'S TELEX TO IMMIGRATION OFFICERS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. By the lawyer's letter which I sent him today as notice of this question, the Minister knows that he violated Section 23(4) of the Immigration Act by his February 20 telex which ordered immigration officers to return most refugee claimants to the United States to wait weeks or months for an inquiry into whether they can enter Canada.

Therefore, will the Minister immediately rescind the illegal telex of February 20 and now issue new instructions that comply with the law which was adopted by Parliament in 1978 and is still in force today?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, the member is wrong. We do not turn everyone away at the border. Our officials use discretion. Of the 1,126 claimants who have come to the borders of Ontario and Quebec since February 23, 776 were asked to await a hearing before an adjudicator in the United States, but 350 were allowed to enter. That is over 30 per cent.

PROVISIONS OF STATUTE

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, what I said was that most refugee claimants are turned back, and the Minister has confirmed that by saying that a majority were turned back.

I am referring to the violation of the statute which says that officers may exercise their discretion, as compared to the telex which says that these people are to be sent back.

Therefore I ask the Minister: Will he respect the legislation of Parliament and now recall all those refugee claimants who were illegally turned away since February 20?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, the member refers to a letter by an immigration lawyer that asks for information which requires legal interpretation. I have asked my officials to look into it. I assure the member that I will get back to him as soon as we have the information.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—EFFECT ON FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The President of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce said yesterday that he fears Canada's financial services are being bargained away during the current free trade talks with the United States. He said:

> We must not bargain away our strengths in an industry generating large amounts of foreign exchange for our country. Granting unbridled access to our domestic market in financial services could well reverse the flow.

What is the current status in the free trade negotiations of financial institutions, particularly the Government's position in respect of free access of U.S. financial institutions to the Canadian market?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would agree with the position which the Chairman of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce has set out. We have a very important industry, an industry which gives us access to all parts of the world and assists in foreign trade as well as in the flows of capital.

We have no intention whatsoever of bargaining away the positions which the Hon. Member has suggested. We are going to be taking a tough position on how we deal with this, and I think the Hon. Member will find that out as time progresses.

FREE TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—STOCKBROKERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, since we have no idea what is going to happen to our financial institutions in the free trade negotiations with the United States, would the Minister of Finance not agree that the time is badly chosen to allow American companies to buy up to 50 per cent interest in stockbrokerage firms, considering that no decision has been made and that American companies are allowed to buy Canadian firms, up to 50 per cent before June 30, and up to 100 per cent after June 30, 1988? Why not wait for the outcome of these negotiations before allowing Americans to take over our stockbrokerage firms?

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, that policy was laid down on December 18. It was made absolutely clear that the Government of Canada and the Government of Ontario were moving together with regard to the wishes expressed by the financial industry, the banks, and the investment community.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill.

Mr. Garneau: So you let them go to the United States.

Mr. Blaikie: If the Liberals would just be quiet for a minute, Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. de Corneille: Shame.

Mr. Gauthier: Sanctimonious.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Get out of the pulpit.

Mr. Speaker: I might suggest to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill that I might get further extending his request than he will.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

LEPREAU II REACTOR PROJECT IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy. Given that the Minister yesterday initiated what could be quite a useful debate about Canada's energy options, depending on the process and who the Minister intends to involve, can he make a commitment to the House today that in the meantime, until this debate about future energy options for Canada is completed, the Government will not be considering any grant, loan or policy decision that would permit the construction of a Lepreau II nuclear reactor in New Brunswick?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that during this period when Canadians generally will be able to discuss the energy issues which are basic for the existence and future of this country, the Government has no intention whatsoever to defer decisions concerning major projects. This representation was made by all provinces last January, and again today by interested groups that are advocating projects to ensure Canada's energy security.

[English]

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Is the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources telling the House—it sounds like he is—that the Government is considering negotiating with New Brunswick with respect to federal moneys for the construction of the Lepreau II? Is it the case that a Government which, in 1979 and in 1984 promised a full inquiry into the nuclear industry, is now prepared to go ahead with the construction of a new nuclear reactor before having any kind of debate about energy, nuclear or otherwise in this country?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Unlike the New Democratic Party, Mr. Speaker, this Government is not bent on overly centralizing Canada, and we acknowledge the existence of the provinces and their responsibility in the field of energy. It is up to the Government of New Brunswick to decide whether or not its territory and its citizens are seeking an increase in the electricity sector. It is up to them to decide how these needs are going to be met, be it with coal, nuclear energy, or imports of Quebec hydro-electric power. The New Brunswick Government has not yet made this choice.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I should advise Hon. Members that we are a little over time. There will be one more question from the Opposition, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie, and one government question, and that will conclude Question Period. The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie).

ENERGY

SOLIGAZ PROJECT IN MONTREAL EAST—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It deals with the delay in the National Energy Board making decisions on the application by Interprovincial Pipe Line to convert the Sarnia-Montreal pipeline to the transport of national gas liquids. My question to the Minister is this: Can the Minister give the reasons for the delays that have postponed for a year the start-up on the Soligaz project in eastern Montreal, which will create many jobs, and can he reassure people concerning the application by Esso Imperial to reverse the pipeline's flow from Montreal to Sarnia, in order to save the 17,000 jobs in Quebec?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the whole question of the oil transport infrastructure in Canada is currently under review, as requested by the Quebec Minister of Energy at the federal-provincial meeting. That analysis is therefore being discussed between the Ministers of Energy of the two levels of Government, until the report is made public. I also want to point out to the Hon. Member that no change in the basic operation of a pipeline in Canada can be made without a hearing and a decision by the NEB. For the time being, no such application has been filed.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF PETROMONT'S FUTURE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. The Minister did not answer the question. What people would like to know is the reasons why the National Energy Board is delaying its decision to save Petromont, to ensure that the Soligaz project in Eastern Montreal is installed, that a number of jobs are created. People would like to have the assurance from the Minister rather than the National Energy Board, they would like to know whether he will turn down the application by Esso Imperial to reverse the flow of oil to the Ontario refineries, which would eliminate Petromont and the 17,000 Quebec jobs.

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, since the representation is directed to the National Energy Board, I will be pleased to pass it on to the Board and to inform you of their answer.

HEALTH

REPORTED INCREASE IN ATMOSPHERIC NUCLEAR RADIATION

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Reports this morning from West German nuclear emission monitoring stations indicate an unusual increase in atmospheric radiation which could be caused by a nuclear leak in the U.S.S.R.

In light of the tragedy at Chernobyl and fears that another Soviet nuclear disaster could be in the making, will the Minister tell the House what information he has received on these reports and what steps he will take to ensure that Canadians are fully informed of developments as they occur?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the Hon. Member's question, I cannot confirm anything at this moment. We are obviously aware of the press stories coming out of western Europe from West German sources and Swedish sources, just to name two. We are checking very intensely at this point to see whether any of these press lines can be confirmed and, if so, what their background is. I want to assure the Hon. Member, the House, and Canadians generally that if any information comes to my attention, I will release it immediately, as the Government of Canada did in the Chernobyl incident.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I think you would find unanimous consent to revert to Motions for the express purpose of moving a motion having to do with the extension of the provisional rules. There have been the usual discussions. With your permission, I would move:

> That, notwithstanding any previous orders of the House, all current Permanent and Provisional Standing Orders, as extended by the House on December 18, 1986, be further extended to May 29, 1987; and that all other sessional and special orders relating thereto also be extended to May 29, 1987.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Let us proceed with some order. The Government House Leader asked for unanimous consent to revert to Motions for a specific purpose. That, as far as I know, has not yet been given, however the Government House Leader has read the motion. This is very important to many of us. Let us have orderly procedures.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) have unanimous consent to introduce his motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: For that purpose only.

Motions

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

EXTENSION OF PROVISIONAL STANDING ORDERS

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I move:

> That, notwithstanding any previous orders of the House all the current permanent and provisional standing orders, as extended by the House on December 18, 1986, be further extended to May 29, 1987; that all other sessional and special orders related thereto also be extended to May 29, 1987.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I think we should debate for a few minutes. I will not abuse the time of the House. The Government House Leader knows that I want to put a question to the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure, the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper), which deals with a ruling made by the Chair this morning. This is important to many of us and has great impact on the proceedings of the House.

There is not one Member in the House who is unaware that this morning the Speaker made a ruling that the use of dilatory motions during Routine Proceedings needs to be examined by the House because there are gray areas in the use of those motions. We require some definite and clear undertakings as to what is meant. I had intended to ask the Hon. Member for Peace River, the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure, if he would give the House his undertaking that as chairman of the committee he would deal with Mr. Speaker's ruling concerning dilatory motions with a view to looking at the impact, effect and consequences of that ruling on our procedures so that we will all have a clear and distinct knowledge of how the House operates. That is basically my argument, that since we cannot appeal your rulings, Mr. Speaker, we must depend on a set of rules that is clear to all of us.

This is not Britain, this is Canada. We have a Constitution and we have Standing Orders. They are known to all of us and they are used by all of us. However, if the Speaker has discretion to do certain things of which I am not aware, I am put in a difficult position. That is the point I would like to make to the chairman of the Standing Committee. I think it is imperative that he convene the committee, study the ruling made by the Speaker this morning concerning dilatory motions during Routine Proceedings and report to the House what Hon. Members feel should be done about the ruling. I would invite the Hon. Member for Peace River to give me that assurance. At that time, I would have no hesitation in giving my approval to the proposal of the government House Leader that we extend the Provisional Standing Orders for a few more weeks. I would hope that the House Leader would come to us with some meaningful changes in the next seven or eight weeks dealing with certain things in the committee's last report which we have all found urgent and pressing.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I think it should be made clear that when an all-Party agreement to extend the provisional orders was sought, it was sought not on the basis of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure dealing with the subject matter just raised by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). It may or may not be a good idea for the committee to look at that particular subject; it probably is a good idea. It is a good idea for the Standing Committee to look at anything that is a matter of controversy in the House. However, the origin of the extension of the provisional rules lies in the fact that there was not enough time between the time the committee charged with reviewing those Provisional Standing Orders reported and the time for the expiry of those provisional orders on April 16 for the House Leaders to get together and respond.

Because I am a member of that committee, I want to make my understanding clear as I participate in the unanimous consent that will be required to pass the motion. We are giving the House Leaders time to study the report of the committee so that they can then decide what they will do about the Provisional Standing Orders when the new expiry date of May 29 arrives. All other matters are matters which will be referred in the course of ordinary parliamentary time, either by the Speaker, by the House or by the committee itself, to the committee. I think it should be perfectly clear that, without questioning the merit of what has been raised by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier, it is a matter separate from the reasons for agreeing to an extension of the provisional rules.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) addressed this point because that is exactly the point I intended to make.

Notwithstanding the good intentions of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), I think we are simply extending the time period so that the House Leaders can have more time to deal not only with the report of the Standing Committee but indeed with the work that has been done by the House Leaders themselves.

I think today's ruling is an indication that there are some flaws we must address. The fact is that a lot of work has been done. This has not been treated idly. I know that on both a formal and an informal basis, the House Leaders and their support staff have been working on it. We now have the report of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure which will be incorporated into that work. We are simply asking for a period of time that we can utilize effectively to address some of the obvious imperfections we have detected over the course of the last few months. Hopefully we will be able to incorporate them into more permanent Standing Orders which will govern the conduct of the House for the duration of this Parliament. I do not wish to prolong the debate on this issue. I think the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill has put the whole issue into focus.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased with the comments which the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) has just made.

On this side of the House, we have no objection to extending the provisional Standing Orders up to May 29. However, we would like to be assured that during that period, the fourth report of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure will be considered in the House.

The report was unanimously agreed to by members of all Parties. That report includes a host of improvements to our Standing Orders. And since the Deputy Prime Minister has just stated, to use his own words—

[English]

—hopefully we will be able to incorporate the report. I would like him to be a bit more precise and to tell us that the Government will bring about, between now and May 29, a debate in concurrence on the report of the committee.

The bottom of page 8 of the report of the committee indicates that the committee has dealt with the Provisional Standing Orders and the committee recommends that the Provisional Standing Orders adopted on February 13, 1986, with the modifications set out in Appendix "A" of the report, be made permanent. In other words, the committee would like this report to be concurred in.

I would like to have the assurance of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) that his Party will support a unanimous report of the Standing Committee. The majority of the members of that committee are from his Party including the chairman who is very honest, straightforward and non-partisan. Nevertheless, the participants on the committee from the NDP and the Liberal Party including myself agreed with the suggestions in this report, including the suggestion for a better and more viable way to operate legislative committees. It was recommended that a system of six legislative committees be adopted. I would like the Deputy Prime Minister to react on behalf of the Government and to tell us if the Government can live with the recommendations of this report.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, we have just received the report. At first glance, some of the proposals make obvious good sense. There are some areas with which we have concern, but this is a matter that will be discussed at some length with the other House Leaders.

This is a matter that does not simply involve the Government, but it involves as well the support and co-operation of the House Leader of the New Democratic Party and the House Leader of the Liberal Party. This is so, notwithstanding the fact that this is a recommendation of a committee which was composed of members of all Parties. The House Leaders may very well have different points of view on fine tuning and changes. We will certainly look at it and try to incorporate in a co-operative and collective manner its proposals, as best we can. That would be as far as I could go at this particular time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Mazankowski) agreed to.

CANAGREX DISSOLUTION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, March 31, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wise that Bill C-2, an Act to dissolve Canagrex and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, when we last debated this Bill on March 31, I was attempting to make a number of points about what has happened to Canagrex. I want to follow up on those thoughts.

• (1520)

I think it was a real mistake for the Government to take this step of eliminating Canagrex. It was put in place to deal with exactly the kind of situation we have found ourselves in over the last two to three years. Canagrex was born out of the neglect of the Department of External Affairs to put in place a structure which would allow the sale and export of certain agricultural products.

Over the eight months it was in place Canagrex did a commendable job. It surveyed producers to determine the products available for export. It started negotiations with producers here in Canada and purchasers abroad. It set up a structure which would have seen a considerable expansion of agricultural exports. It started a buyer credit guarantee program which, had it the time, would have worked out very well. Canagrex agreed to share a certain amount of the risk involved in providing credit to a purchaser buying agricultural commodities from Canada. The guarantee was provided when it was deemed absolutely necessary for the sale to go ahead. I suppose the most important fact about Canagrex is that it was well planned. It had a very good corporate image around the world and had developed a reputation for being aggressive but fair.

When the Government decided to eliminate Canagrex it was supposed to put in place a structure which would work as well as or better than Canagrex. However, Canagrex was eliminated before that was done. The situation now is that no one seems to have the responsibility for doing the same things that Canagrex was attempting to do. Consequently, instead of developing our agricultural exports over the last two to three years, we have had a continual downgrading or slippage in the amount of those exports.

Of course, we have done well in the sale of those agricultural products we have traditionally sold. The Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) will stand up and tell you we have sold more grain over this last year than we have for many years. He is quite correct. However, he will not tell you that we sold it at a much lower price than we have ever sold it before.

The Department of External Affairs can show you a list of 22 officers in our embassies abroad who have some responsibility for agricultural products. Seven of those people have been seconded from the Department of Agriculture. The Department tells us that there are positions accounting for 73 person-years with some responsibility for the sale of agricultural products. I would point out that Canagrex had that core of people available on a full-time basis.

However, these people in the Department of External Affairs, located in places like Nigeria, Algeria, Brazil, Australia, England, France and Germany, are commercial officers with responsibilities other than simply agricultural sales. I have here a list of 22 officers in the Department of External Affairs who are identified as international agri-food trade development officers. However, some of them are First Secretaries or Second Secretaries. Some of them are Counsellors. In other words, they have other duties. They do not have a great deal of responsibility for the sale of agricultural products. Consequently, the net effect of the elimination of Canagrex has been to reduce the amount of sales that we could have had to those countries.

Canagrex also went into countries we had not dealt with before in order to make sales. With the elimination of Canagrex we do not have anyone dealing with those countries. I would also point out that none of the positions which External Affairs is now designating as having some responsibility for agricultural sales were created because of the demise of Canagrex. The situation now is that the job of assisting the small producer has been splintered among the Department of External Affairs, the Department of Agriculture, DRIE, and the EDC. These groups cannot provide the assistance and information that Canagrex did.

All in all, the real efforts Canagrex made to provide service to agricultural exporters have been lost. No money was allocated and no personnel were appointed to help those exporters when Canagrex was eliminated.

• (1530)

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment and a question. My riding in east central Saskatchewan is very rural and has many farmers. There is a lot of concern about the farm economy in the part of the province from which I come, particularly in view of the Farm Bill in the United States and the tremendous subsidies on the export of grain, as well as the European Common Market subsidy program for their farmers and the export of grain from the European Common Market.

I realize that grain sales come under the auspices of the Canadian Wheat Board and Canagrex had no role in grain sales, however, since grain sales are now down in price, although not in volume, many farmers in my area are considering a switch to other crops. Lentils, peas and other crops are now being produced in the Yorkton—Melville area. Since we have not produced many of these crops before, we are trying to break into markets in different parts of the world where Canada has not had markets before. Therefore, there is great concern about the abolition of Canagrex because it was an agency that provided an opportunity to hustle in world markets.

The Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) sits on the Standing Committee on Agriculture. Since Canagrex has been abolished, can he tell us what alternative there is for the farmer in Norquay where, according to an article in the Norquay North Star, farmers are sowing several hundred acres of peas? Those farmers are very concerned that there be a market for those peas. What is the alternative for the farmer in Norquay in terms of a guarantee that when he takes land away from the wheat because of the U.S. Farm Bill he will have a market for the peas that he sows?

What is the Government doing to replace the potential vacuum created by the abolition of Canagrex since it may have been able to find a lot of markets for peas around the world? What is it doing to make sure that the farmer in Norquay, for example, can sell those peas?

I see that my friend, the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), is smiling. I think I could even see him nodding his head that he probably agrees with me. He comes from a part of Manitoba where I believe there is the production of sugar-beets and many other commodities.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Almost everything.

Mr. Nystrom: His area has more versatility in production than much of the Prairies. I know that many people in his area are concerned about whether there is a way to promote these exports around the world. This is a very important question when one considers the protectionism in the United States, western Europe, Japan and other parts of the world.

Mr. Hovdebo: Canagrex had a staff of approximately 70. When it was closed I asked the exact questions posed by the Hon. Member. What will replace Canagrex? In a survey of all the External Affairs posts, Agriculture Canada determined that the number of people who would be devoted to agriculture and commercial promotion was the equivalent of 73 person years. I point out that those 73 person years already existed in addition to those people at Canagrex who were working in this field. For example, anyone looking for a market in Algiers would contact the second secretary in Algiers and work with him. Canagrex had personnel in the field, but no one replaced them when Canagrex was eliminated.

I also asked what kind of assistance there is for the vetting of contracts to provide assistance to small exporters. The answer was that one could not go to an agency that would do the work or provide the assistance, but had to go to External Affairs or Agriculture Canada or an agency such as the Export Development Corporation, or even to the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. In other words, one would have to visit several Departments because there was no particular agency to help with such work.

I also asked if the underwriting of transportation costs was available since the dissolution of Canagrex. The Department of External Affairs said that it does not provide the transportation service, underwriting transportation costs or arranging transportation services, which I had suggested in my question. It only facilitates transportation services by advising the potential shippers which carriers may meet their needs. One must find the market and the method of shipping the product by oneself because nothing has been put in place to replace the service.

I received the same answer to all those questions which I put in the committee. Although the response is that there is something in place, the fact is that those things already existed. The idea of Canagrex as an agency which could assist in selling these products more easily was not enhanced at all.

We sell many leaf cutter bees, mostly to Russia. Each producer who wants to sell leaf cutter bees must find their own carrier and must deal with each agency involved. Previously, all this was done by Canagrex.

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased this afternoon to rise and deal with this Act to dissolve Canagrex. I wish the House were debating a more pleasant subject, like the creation of Canagrex, but we cannot expect anything perfect from a Conservative Government, because perfect and conservative are terms which just don't go together. The Hon. Member for Brome—Missisquoi (Mrs. Bertrand) is certainly well aware that it is impossible to reconcile them; knowing that she is a newcomer to that political party she probably has much difficulty accepting conservative points of view, which is understandable, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to indicate this afternoon some of the reasons why this Conservative Government is wrong to dissolve Canagrex. First of all, as you will certainly remember, Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Party have made several promises during the last election campaign. As a matter of fact, I remember quite well having brought this matter to your attention on a couple of occasions in the past. I have here a document entitled Trois cent trente-huit promesses which lists the 338 promises which the Conservative Party have made, and I invite all our listeners who wants a copy to write to me. No postage is necessary. But there was no mention, in these 338 promises that the Progressive Conservative Party would axe Canagrex. Nothing was said about it during the election campaign.

I am asking the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark): Why do the Conservatives seek to abolish Canagrex when they did not even talk about it during the last electoral campaign. Why do away with Canagrex? That is what I am asking all Conservative Members in this House. If I am not given an answer, Mr. Speaker, it is because there is none, it is totally unreasonable. The truth is, Conservatives have this rightist bias and they do not want to see a Crown corporation whose role would be to market agricultural commodities. It is a kind of interference with their very, very, very conservative principles.

• (1540)

[English]

Do not think for one minute, Mr. Speaker, that I am the only one who does not want to abolish the Canagrex Corporation, or that I would be so partisan as to merely disagree with the Conservatives opposite on no other principle than the fact that I want to disagree with them. But I know you do not think that, Mr. Speaker, because you are far too reasonable.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I do.

Mr. Boudria: I have in my hand a brief presented by the Ontario Federation of Agriculture. I invite the Minister to listen to what it says, and I will read it slowly so he will understand it all. The brief is dated October, 1986, and is entitled Ontario Federation of Agriculture Brief to Cabinet. I am sure the Minister must have read this brief, should have read it, or at least he should have had someone read it to him. The brief recommends under "Marketing" that the Government, commodity groups and farm organizations intensify their efforts to improve commodity marketing.

The Ontario Federation of Agriculture wants us to increase our efforts in marketing, but what is the Tory Government doing? It is abolishing the very organization that was created to improve marketing on an international level. The Government has almost a fetish about abolishing this Crown corporation. I ask why? We know that Canagrex was created by Bill C-85, which was presented some years ago. I say to the Conservatives opposite that the Hon. Member for Elgin (Mr. Wise), as Tory opposition critic in those days—as he will be again—said right in this House that he favoured Bill C-85, a Bill to establish the Canagrex Corporation to market on behalf of the people of Canada, and on behalf of the Government, agricultural commodities on an international basis.

What has happened to change the minds of all these Tories? What has happened to change the mind of the Minister of Agriculture and, more particularly, what has happened to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) who introduced this measure not as an agricultural initiative—obviously he could not because it had no agricultural merit—but as a budgetary initiative, cutting off agriculture as a deficit-cutting measure? Can you imagine that being done, Mr. Speaker, by a Party which made all kinds of promises to the farmers of Canada?

I have a series of newspaper clippings and I would like to read some of them because they are very important. The first article is entitled "Canagrex axing criticized by Epp".

Mr. Nystrom: By whom?

Mr. Boudria: It says "by Epp". I quote:

> The Chairman of the Ontario Soy-Bean Growers Marketing Board has criticized the federal Government for its disbanding of Canagrex, the Crown corporation created by the previous Liberal Government—
> Peter Epp, speaking at an information meeting for Area B in eastern Ontario recently—

Mr. Nystrom: Oh, Peter Epp.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Epp said this and it is important.

> —said Canagrex had started to make inroads in the marketing of soy beans abroad, particularly in Egypt.

Mr. Epp very clearly said that he was against the dissolution of Canagrex. I ask Conservative Members opposite, particularly the Minister for National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), how they could possibly not realize and take notice of what Mr. Epp was saying to them? I have some difficulty in understanding that, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to read another article written by Barry Wilson, a well know and respected western reporter. He said on February 28:

> A quiet tug of war has developed within the federal Government over which department will fill the food export gap created by the dismantling of Canagrex.
> Agriculture Minister John Wise says the Crown corporation will be replaced by expanding the market development directorate of Agriculture Canada.
> The department has asked for expanded budget and hiring authority for the unit.
> Meanwhile, officials in the trade section of the external affairs department are arguing that the promotion of food trade should fall within their jurisdiction.

That is typically Tory, is it not, Mr. Speaker? I hear the Hon. Member opposite saying, of course it is typically Tory, no one seems to know what they are doing. We have two arms of the Government both claiming that they would be responsible for the export marketing of agricultural commodities. Of course, we know that what we do not need are those two other organizations pretending to do the job of Canagrex. What we need is Canagrex back in order to do the job it set out to do.

I say to Hon. Members opposite that the United States Government passed in December of 1985 the United States Food Security Act. It is affectionately known to us as the U.S. Farm Bill. Because of that piece of legislation, the most offensive piece of legislation ever passed against Canadian farmers, if there ever was a time we needed Canagrex, it is now. Even if we had not needed Canagrex the day the Minister of Finance made that erroneous statement on Black Thursday, November 8, 1984, in the House of Commons—and we did need it then—we do now because of the U.S. Farm Bill. Deep down inside I am sure the Conservative Members of Parliament know better. They know we need Canagrex.

Very clearly, some well respected people in the agricultural community made their grievances known. I have a brief presented by A.E. Storey, who was the President and Chief Executive Officer of Canagrex, who appeared before the Standing Committee on Agriculture on March 11, 1985. He said in that brief that Canagrex was never given a chance. Canagrex had barely started and it was cut off by this Tory Government.

Mr. Lapierre: Shame.

Mr. Boudria: Yes, it is a shame. I agree with the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) who put it so eloquently to the House. It is indeed terrible that the Government could not see further than that and that Tory Members opposite, the back-bench Members of the Conservative caucus, did not go to see the Minister of Finance and tell him: "We will have none of this. If you do not reinstate Canagrex we will cross the floor". If those Hon. Members had the proper intestinal fortitude, that is what they would have said to the Minister of Finance. He would have been told in no uncertain terms that that worthwhile corporation, Canagrex, should be re-established. Canagrex was given less than a year.

Mr. Lapierre: Eight months.

Mr. Boudria: Yes, eight months. Again, my distinguished colleague, the Hon. Member for Shefford, is right. In those eight months it prepared a source list of Canadian commodities, what has been widely recognized as the most comprehensive available source of commodities available anywhere. It used this list to start selling around the world. It was doing a good job. Like any business, it had to be given a chance. It had to have a chance to start. One cannot just end a business a number of months after it is started and claim that it is not successful.

• (1550)

The other matter to consider is that Canagrex had a list of constraints that interfered with its original implementation. We have to remember that during the first few months of its existence Canagrex had some difficulty with existing government departments which did not always like to see its structure in place. There was also a lack of international recognition of the existence of the agency. Again, it had barely begun. Exporters sometimes saw Canagrex as part of the Government and did not initially trust the organization. But, again, those were all matters which were gradually coming around.

The fact that Canagrex was not provided with the same tools as some of the export agencies of other jurisdictions was also a problem. But it was no reason to kill Canagrex. It was a reason to enhance the program, to make it more viable and to make it more complete, ensuring that it would have better success on a world-wide basis.

Sitting across from me is the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Agriculture, usually a very reasonable Member of Parliament. He was there when the officials of Canagrex came before the committee. I am sure that deep inside he is convinced, as I am, that the agency should have continued to operate. It would be thriving today, and the Hon. Member knows that, just as well as I do.

The Ontario Chicken Producers' Marketing Board sent a letter to the then Minister of Agriculture on January 18, 1983. The Ontario Chicken Producers' Marketing Board is important in the province I represent. I have a number of chicken producers in my riding, not as many as dairy producers, but there is still a significant number. I want to read to Hon. Members what the board had to say. The letter is addressed to the Hon. Eugene Whelan, the former Minister of Agriculture, and a great Minister he was. The letter states:

> Please be advised that this local board endorses the passing of the Canagrex Bill.
> While the Canadian Chicken Industry is not, at this time, involved in exporting chicken, there might be a market for Canadian chicken which would benefit the entire Canadian Chicken Industry.
> Since Canada has the expertise and natural resources to supply off-shore markets with chicken products, a Federal Organization designed for this purpose will be of great help in bringing it about.

We can see that the Secretary-Manager of the Ontario Chicken Producers' Marketing Board, John Janzen, was indeed very much in favour of the establishment of this organization.

I could go on and present to Hon. Members a number of briefs and a number of letters endorsing the principles of Canagrex. I could even read to Hon. Members speeches given by Conservative Members of Parliament when they spoke on Bill C-85 some years ago who spoke in favour of the establishment of Canagrex. Yet today at this very crucial time when we are debating the third reading of the dismantling, the dismemberment of Canagrex, not one Conservative Member is willing to stand up for agriculture. Not one of them is willing to stand up and say: "I will fight for Canagrex because it is in the best interests of my constituents". We do not hear that anywhere in this Chamber. I say to the numerous Conservative Members listening to this speech in the House at the present time, that, indeed, they should be a little bit more serious about this topic and stand up for the people of the constituencies that they represent. They should say to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) that they want Canagrex to live again. They should tell him that they want it brought back from the ashes. The Government has tried to destroy it, and it is now left only in name. It is better late than never, I say to Conservative Members of Parliament.

That being said I invite members opposite to support me in defeating the measure that the Government wants to pass today. With the McGrath report now in place it is indeed appropriate for Conservative Members of Parliament to defeat a government measure such as this one. It will not bring down the Government. It will make the Minister of Finance red-faced, but he deserves that for not having been a little bit more responsible to the people. I do not blame the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin). He was not around while this measure was being undertaken. It is not his fault. Had he been the Minister of Finance, hopefully, he would have been more reasonable. However, he was not, and there is nothing we can do about that. He probably never will be because his Government will be turfed out of office before he gets a chance. That is unfortunate for him because he will never have a chance of really wielding the power in the Department of Finance. But I say to the Minister of State for Finance, the junior Minister of Finance, that I know that he who represents a riding in south-western Ontario would want such an organization—he should want it—to survive because, indeed, it could be very important for the constituents of his area.

[Translation]

To sum up, Mr. Speaker, I invite members from both sides of the House to act in a non-partisan way, to act on behalf of the Canadian agriculture and to tell Canadian farmers that we are here to support them, while telling the Minister of Finance to stay put. We are the ones in charge, because we have been elected by the Canadian people. We have been elected precisely to ensure that the Canadian agriculture gets some help. The Conservative Party committed itself to helping the Canadian agriculture and to protecting the programs geared to farmers, and in particular such a good program as Canagrex, established by the Hon. Eugene Whelan, who will remain one of the best Ministers of Agriculture Canada ever had. Mr. Speaker, I ask all members to support what I have been saying and to defeat Bill C-2.

CANAGREX DISSOLUTION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wise that Bill C-2, an Act to dissolve Canagrex and to amend certain acts in consequence thereof, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If there are no questions and comments on the speech of the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), the Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words about Canagrex and the Bill that is before the House today. This is a very important piece of legislation to me. I suppose I am one of those people in the House who mourns the passing of Canagrex. I thought it was very important to have such an agency in Canada to promote the sale of the farm commodities of people in my constituency and other constituencies. I think Members of the House should be aware that Canagrex was born out of a need to promote the export of farm commodities to every corner of the world. I was one of those Members in the House a few years ago who supported the proposition made by the former Minister of Agriculture, the man with the green stetson, Mr. Eugene Whelan. At that time I asked Mr. Whelan why it took so long for the Liberal Government to introduce a piece of legislation to give us Canagrex which would promote the export of agricultural products from this country to places around the world. Many other countries have similar agencies which aggressively promote the export of food products. We were behind in that respect.

• (1600)

I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that agriculture is the most important industry in this country. There is nothing more important to the world than the production of food. People around the world are dying of starvation by the hundreds of thousands every year. As we speak here in the House of Commons people are dying of starvation. There are young people and babies who do not get enough to eat.

I maintain that the problem is not a shortage of food. There is no such thing as a shortage of food. The problem is the distribution of food to the people who need it. We must come up with a mechanism for the distribution of food to the poor, hungry and starving. If we put half the imagination into that problem that we put into the production of nuclear arms and other things which are not necessary for life, we could wipe starvation from the face of the earth.

I realize that Canagrex would not have done all that, but it would have been one small tool for the exportation of our products to parts of the world where they could be used. In addition to an agency like Canagrex we need a foreign aid program which would help the poor countries of the world become self-sufficient by exporting Canadian technology and know-how to other parts of the world.

In my own riding there are many farmers who have produced food for 20, 30 or 40 years. They are now in their sixties and want to retire. They have a good farming unit on which they owe no money. They can turn it over to a son, a daughter, or someone else and make a contribution in other parts of the world by helping people help themselves, by helping countries become self-sufficient in the production of food. That is the kind of role this country could be playing.

There are many farmers who have tremendous expertise as soil scientists and mechanics. There are farmers who know what kinds of crops to plant on certain land, how to plan crops, and proper harvesting procedures. They could give all kinds of advice to people in different parts of the world on how to become more productive. It is a tremendous waste of human potential and human resources not to have some of these people working with people in other parts of the world to increase their food production. If we had more imagination we could solve the problem of distribution of food.

As a wealthy country in the developed world all too often we import from Third World countries luxury crops grown on very productive lands which could be used to produce food. I think in particular of the good quality land which produces tobacco and cotton in various parts of the world. There are people starving in countries which produce those commodities for the wealthier countries of the world. They are using their best lands to produce those crops for export. Nine times out of 10 that land is owned by wealthy landlords. The ordinary peasants make a few pennies a day for working on the land and their neighbours are starving. It does not make any sense that there is starvation in a world of plenty.

There are many issues we should be dealing with in this House in attempting to ensure that all people in the world, regardless of the colour of their skin, their religious history, or what ideology happens to be in power in their country, are provided with food, management skills, scientific know-how, and so on to ensure that they do not starve. As I said, we seem to have no problem spending billions of dollars every year on the production of nuclear arms in a mad and insane race to kill each other. We could spend half that money feeding the world and making it a much more peaceful place. That is one of the missions this country could be proceeding with.

This is a Bill to kill Canagrex. It was, in its short eight-month life, helping the farmers of Canada find markets around the world. It is very important that we have Canagrex in this age of protectionism. There is tremendous protectionism now in Europe, Japan and the United States. If we are really to sell our commodities we need an agency which will hustle and show some real life.

Mr. Hockin: We need free trade.

Mr. Nystrom: The Minister talks about freer trade. I certainly agree that we need freer multilateral trade around the world. Anyone who objects to that is not thinking of the best interests of this country. I certainly agree that we need freer trade and fairer trade around the world. My objection to a free trade arrangement with the United States is that it is a case of a mouse and an elephant. It will not be free trade for Canadians. We will be stamped on.

I come from a part of the country which is being screwed by the proposition for free trade. If we had free trade, the Canadian Wheat Board would have to be abolished because it inhibits free trade as a marketing agency. You either have free trade or you do not. I do not think there should be free trade between the United States and Canada because the small country will be shafted.

I believe we can have trade arrangements with the United States, and the Auto Pact is a very good example of that. However, the Auto Pact is not free trade, it is regulated trade. The Conservative Party does not know of what it speaks when it talks of free trade.

The question before the House is on Canagrex, and the important thing is that we have an agency which sells the goods and commodities produced by the farmers of this country. That is very important in this age of protectionism with the hustling of American, Japanese and European exporters to sell their goods. Yet our Government is abolishing the very agency which could sell more of the farmers' products. If the Government is indeed interested in promoting trade and export, Canagrex should have been kept.

The reason, other than protectionism, that I believe Canagrex should stay is that the farmers are suffering in a crisis worse than any crisis since the 1930s. Farm prices have dropped to the levels at which they were in 1932 and 1933. On the other hand, farm input costs have been skyrocketing in the last 20 or 30 years. If we do not do something to help our farmers, many of our farms will disappear as will the rural way of life which we have known. I say that as a member from a very large farm riding in east central Saskatchewan.

The farmers are suffering because of the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) good friend, Ronald Reagan, and the U.S. Farm Bill. They are also suffering because of the foreign policy of the European Common Market. These two giants are having a trade war. They are massively subsidizing their own farmers and the export of their grain to different parts of the world. The people who are caught in the cross-fire are the farmers of Argentina, Australia and Canada. We are caught in the cross-fire, as there is a trade war between the two giants in agricultural production and agricultural export.

• (1610)

What is the solution of the Canadian Government? It is taking away with this Bill one of the tools which farmers had to try to increase their exports. At a time when we have tremendous competition and tremendous protectionism in both Europe and the United States, I cannot understand why the Government across the way would be eliminating one of the few tools we have.

Is it Canagrex today and the Canadian Wheat Board tomorrow? The Canadian Wheat Board is the exporter of farmers' grain. It is the sole selling agency for Canadian grain. Will the Government bargain it away in free trade negotiations with the United States?

There is no wheat board in the United States. There is no grain board in the United States. Americans sell their grain on the so-called private market where the big five or six grain companies do all the bartering and bargaining. American farmers are in the hands of those big grain companies and of course receive massive subsidies from the United States Treasury. If my memory serves me correctly, the present situation is that American farmers receive more in subsidy for a bushel of grain than do Canadian farmers for their entire price per bushel of grain. That is extremely unfair.

Because of the U.S. Farm Bill and European subsidies, we need Canagrex more than ever. Canagrex is supported by the overwhelming majority of farmers in my constituency, be they NDP, Liberal, or PC.

It is another example of the Government of Canada going against the wishes of Canadian farmers and against the wishes of the people of the country. It is one of the reasons the Government of Canada is the first Government in our history to be not first, nor second, but third in the public opinion polls. I suspect that if the Rhinoceros Party were well organized, the Government would be fourth in the public opinion polls. The Tories do not listen to people. They do not understand the Canadian tradition or the Canadian way of life. In fact, they do not even understand their own traditions. A tradition of the Conservative Party of Canada was one which believed in a mixed economy. It was their Party which started the Canadian Wheat Board, CBC, Air Canada, and CNR. Their Party, under Sir John A. Macdonald, John Diefenbaker, the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), and others, was progressive. Their Party is now becoming more and more like Ronald Reagan's Republicans in terms of privatization, deregulation, and free trade.

It is a betrayal of the roots of the Conservative Party of Canada and it is a betrayal of the heritage of the Conservative Party of Canada for it to try to emulate and imitate Ronald Reagan and the Republicans in the United States. That is what is happening with the Conservative Party of Canada, and that is why people are leaving the Conservative Party of Canada in droves.

I am talking about the vision of this country by Sir John A. Macdonald, John Diefenbaker, and even the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead when he was Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party. It was a more progressive vision. It was more of a red Tory vision of Canada. However, the current Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is trying to change that. The current Prime Minister is a clone of Ronald Reagan. He is a clone of the Republican Party of the United States. He is a clone of Margaret Thatcher. That is not the Canadian tradition. That is not the tradition of the Conservative Party.

It is little wonder that Canagrex is being abolished by this Prime Minister, this philosophy, and this ideology. It is the kind of thing John Diefenbaker would never do if he were Prime Minister of Canada. It is the kind of thing that would not happen if the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead were Prime Minister of Canada. It is the kind of thing that would not happen under the Conservative Party of Sir John A. Macdonald of many years ago, which Party had a national vision of the country.

It is no wonder that the majority of Conservative Members who are here today will be finishing not second, but third in the next election campaign in their ridings. They have forgotten to listen to the people of Canada.

I appeal to some of those back-benchers, like the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) who had the courage to speak out, to speak out and say publicly what they say privately to us. They should say publicly what they say privately when they criticize the Prime Minister and the direction in which he is going. At least the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona had the courage of his convictions to say publicly what his constituents were telling him.

Mr. Brisco: Look at what happened to the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann); he spoke out and got kicked in the foot.

Mr. Nystrom: I hear the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco). He said that the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) spoke out and got kicked in the foot. No doubt it was by one of his angry constituents who was an ex-supporter of the PCs. That shows how angry the people of Canada are at the PC Government.

It is no wonder the PCs are running a bad third in Manitoba. I understand that they are sitting at about 15 per cent or 16 per cent in the polls out there. Of course, one reason is Canagrex. Another reason is that they have not listened to the farmers of the country.

I know that some big city members of the Conservative Party will laugh, that some of the Toronto, Montreal, and Vancouver members of the Conservative Party will laugh, but I should like to quote a statement which appeared in the Norquay North Star. I know they will ask: "Where is Norquay?" The Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) knows where Norquay is, but some of the big city Tories do not and do not care, I suppose. Norquay is a small community in my riding. The people of Norquay are concerned about the future of agriculture.

I should like to refer to a front page story which appeared in the March 26 edition of the Norquay North Star which was headlined "Farmers will not seed a third of their land". Hon. Members should be aware of what that article said. In part it reads:

Canagrex

Wally Vanin, district ag rep at Kamsack, expects that area farmers will leave about a third of their land in summer-fallow this year.

Because of low prices and increases in input costs, farmers are certainly intending to leave more land fallow, Vanin said, adding that a five-year average shows that 15 per cent of area farmland is left for summer-fallow as compared to this year when between 25 and 35 per cent of the total acres will be left unseeded.

Mr. Holtmann: What should they do about it?

Mr. Nystrom: I hear the Hon. Member's question. First, just so that some of our big city Tory friends understand, about 15 per cent of the farmland is left for summer fallow on average in the Norquay area. This year, about a third of the farmland will be left for summer fallow. The article continues:

With increased amounts of summer-fallow, there is much more need for soil conservation practices, he said, urging farmers to obtain more information on the topic during Soil Conservation Week (April 13 to 17).

The number of acres farmers plan to sow with peas is "growing every day", he said,—

That partly answers the Hon. Member's question. It continues:

—explaining that the market for the peas expanded after most European countries stopped buying corn gluten pellets for feed from the U.S.A.

Although peas still represent less than 10 per cent of area crops, between 6,000 and 8,000 acres of peas will be seeded.

Everyone seems to be planning to sow some barley, especially two-row varieties, he said. Canola acreage is stable and wheat will be down.

We can see what is happening in Norquay. First, farmers are leaving about a third of their acreage to summer fallow. Second, they are sowing alternative crops like peas and others. Because of the decision to sow other crops in that part of Saskatchewan, they need Canagrex now more than ever to get out there and sell, tc hustle, and to find markets in various parts of the world.

Mr. Holtmann: What does Canagrex do?

Mr. Nystrom: No wonder the Hon. Member was kicked in the shin by one of his constituents. He wants to abolish Canagrex. He wants to get rid of an agency which may find a market for the commodity of a poor farmer in Norquay, Saskatchewan, so that he can feed his wife and children.

No wonder people in my constituency are saying, as they did in the 1930s, that Tory times are tough times. The old-timers in Norquay tell me that in the 1930s, when R. B. Bennett was Prime Minister of the country, people had to take the engines out of their cars and convert them into buggies which they called Bennett wagons.

Prices for farmers are as low now as they were in the 1930s. Once again history is repeating itself. People know that Tory times are tough times. People know that the Conservative Party is more interested in its wealthy millionaire friends in central Canada than in ordinary farmers in Norquay or Kamsack. They know that because they have seen farm prices drop, drop, drop. They have seen farm input costs going up, up, up. They also see a Government which is to abolish Canagrex, an agency which tries to sell farm products to ensure that the ordinary guy in Norquay is better off. I will not stand for that. The people of Canada will not stand for that. What we want in this country is an election, and we want that election now so Canadians can have a Government that represents average Canadians, ordinary Canadians, and stands for fairness, not just for some wealthy banker in the City of Toronto, but for the farmer in Norquay, the farmer in Selkirk and the ordinary person from one end of this country to the other. I appeal to my friends on the back benches of the Conservative Party to have the courage and convictions of the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona and to stand up and put the Prime Minister of Canada in his place. He would not know the front end of a cow from the back end of one even if he ran into one. That is one of our problems and why there is almost a rebellion in the back benches of the Conservative Party.

I call upon Members of the Conservative Party to rise and show us that they have the courage and the convictions of the Member from Edmonton—Strathcona who is one of the highest respected Members of the Conservative Party in western Canada, who had the courage to say no to the Prime Minister of Canada, who had the courage to say that the west is being shafted, who had the courage to say that there are too many scandals and too much patronage in the Government of Canada, and who had the courage to stand up and say, "We need a fair deal". Why don't the other trained seals do the same thing? If they do, we will save Canagrex and we will have a Bill that will help the ordinary farmer in Norquay, the farmer in Kamsack, the farmer in Assiniboia, and we will be a much better and stronger country for it.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) for his speech in the dying stages of Canagrex. In one part of his speech he said that we need now more than ever an entity such as Canagrex. I agree with the Hon. Member's statement. Canada is and could be the food basket of the world. We have no problem producing agricultural goods, especially wheat, potatoes, grains of all sorts, beef, pork, whatever. We have an excellent country and we have some of the best and the most efficient farmers in the world. But one of our big problems is that we cannot sell our farm products. I look at my own province, which is noted for potatoes. I have mentioned it before in the House that the potato prices this year are not that bad. They are at a break even point, and even to the point where a small profit is shown. But I want to wave the flag at the Government and through you, Mr. Speaker, at other Members of Parliament. Only one year out of every two or three do we find ourselves in a break even or profitable situation mainly because of increased production or a larger crop per acre in other countries. If there is a crop failure in Holland, in some other European country or in the United States, then those who produce potatoes in Canada certainly can derive a good income from a failure somewhere else.

Someone else's loss is generally our gain, but that is not the way it should be.

The Hon. Member mentioned the plight of wheat farmers in Saskatchewan in the last year or so who have experienced low prices. They have to face the United States subsidizing its wheat while we are unable to do so. I agree with the Hon. Member when he says that we need Canagrex more than ever before. We could look upon the whole world and develop new markets and ideas for our consumer for agricultural products through Canagrex. We could increase our production and keep not only those who are trying to hang on to farms but we could bring more farmers back to the land. What we need are the markets.

Many countries need our produce. My own Province of Prince Edward Island can always sell potatoes to countries like Argentina, but there is a problem getting Canadian or American money from Argentina because it does not have the funds to pay for the commodities it needs. Canagrex could have been a vehicle in this connection.

Can the Hon. Member comment on why and how Canagrex could have been a vehicle that would have enabled government to government transactions in situations like this, not only to increase our market potential in other areas but to feed what we see is a starving population all over the world? We could have been using Canagrex to open up markets. When you feed a hungry world and you get the Third World developing, you can open up other avenues for trade in other manufactured goods and services, and Canada would be looked upon favourably as a potential customer.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I agree fully that Canagrex would have been a very important instrument in government negotiations for negotiating long-term trade deals with various countries around the world. China is a very good example. I was in China in 1979. China is extremely important to Saskatchewan not only for grain and potash but for other crops as well. We could have had some pretty good agreements with an agency like Canagrex. The Government has not replaced Canagrex with any more people. I have a survey of the foreign embassies and high commissions for January, 1986. The survey shows that we have personnel equalling 73 person years working to sell food and agricultural products around the world. That is not very much for the most important industry. In the United States we have personnel equalling 12.5 person years; in western Europe we have personnel equalling 23 person years; in eastern Europe we have personnel equalling 5.5 person years; in Africa we have personnel equalling 3.5 person years; in the Middle East we have personnel equalling 4 person years; in Asia, which excludes Japan and China, we have personnel equalling 4.5 person years; in China, it being very important, we have personnel equalling 2.5 person years; in Japan we have personnel equalling 6 person years; and in Latin America and the Caribbean we have personnel equalling 10.5 person years.

We do not have many people promoting this kind of activity for Canadians. That is why Canagrex is so important, because with it we would have had more long-term commitments and contracts and in the process we could have helped feed part of the world as well as supporting the farmers of Canada.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) referring to city members of the Progressive Conservative Party. As a city member I was astounded to hear him say that city members of the Progressive Conservative Party do not understand, are not concerned with and have no feeling for the farmers of Canada. I was particularly astounded because as a city member of the Progressive Conservative Party, and there are many, I and all of the other city members supported whole-heartedly the position of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the position of the Government in bringing down interest rates for the Farm Credit Corporation. This was of big assistance to farmers. I and all of the city members of the Progressive Conservative Party supported the purchase of the grape crops in the past by the Government. I and all the city members of the Progressive Conservative Party supported without fail the dairy farm programs introduced just a short time ago. I and all of the city members of the Progressive Conservative Party supported the $1 billion assistance to wheat farmers across Canada, a measure that was introduced by the Prime Minister and the Government a few months ago. I and all of the city members of the Progressive Conservative Party supported as well the Government's trade negotiations with the United States and GATT aimed at defining once and for all the subsidy problems so that we could assist farmers in knowing what subsidies were a problem and what subsidies were not a problem and so we could put in place a trade dispute settlement mechanism that would solve farmers' exporting problems once and for all.

In addition to all of that, I and all of the city members of the Progressive Conservative Party supported the capital gains tax exemption program which has been a big help to western farmers. I was astounded to hear the Hon. Member say that the city members of the Progressive Conservative Party did not understand or support these things.

I would like to know why the city members of the NDP did not support the capital gains tax exemption for western farmers. I would like to know why they are not supporting the trade negotiations that will work out a mechanism to settle trade disputes so that we can help farmers with their exports to other countries. Will the Hon. Member tell us why the city members of his Party are not supporting the farmers of this country?

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I know the Hon. Member would not wish to mislead the House, but I am an urban member of the New Democratic Party and we have spoken out strongly in support of the capital gains tax exemption for the family farm. I know the Hon. Member would not want to mislead the House by suggesting otherwise.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I hope the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) will put on the record exactly when he made that statement in the House so we can all take a close look at it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not want this to get into debate.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I know we are not supposed to divulge caucus secrets, but often the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) says in caucus that we must have this exemption for the family farms. I remember hearing that often.

Mr. Redway: When?

Mr. Nystrom: I would have to look at our caucus records, but you are not in our caucus.

I said that some city members of the Conservative Party were not very supportive. Where are those Tory members from the big cities when it comes to saving Canagrex? Where are those Tory members from Toronto when it comes to a decent deficiency payment for farmers? Where are those big-city Tory members when it comes to doing something about the high cost of farm chemicals by supporting generic farm chemicals, for example? Where are those big-city Tory members when it comes to raising questions in the House about farmers being ripped off by fertilizer costs? Where are those big-city Tory members when it comes to raising questions about the damage the CDC decision will do on the Prairies by allowing the CNR to charge variable rates? Where are those big-city Tory members when it comes to these important issues for western Canada?

There is a thunderous silence in the House. Those Members do not raise these questions. They do not make these arguments. That is one reason why the farmer of western Canada is now in the worst position he has been in since the 1930s. We have in Government a Party that is insensitive to the needs of the farmers not just in the west but indeed in all of Canada. There is no better way to exhibit that insensitivity than to abolish Canagrex, the very agency that is supposed to sell products for farmers and improve their incomes. I ask my Toronto Tory friend where he is when we need him. Am I indeed accurate in saying that Tory times are tough times? They certainly are on the Prairies.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre).

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on third reading of Bill C-2. At this point, the Government has heard all the issues. Members of the agricultural industry have been urging the Government to drop the Bill in order to save the Canagrex Corporation which was set up, as you will recall, at the request of the principal parties in the agricultural sector.

Mr. Speaker, on October 3, 1986, the Bill was tabled in the House and given first reading. Since that time, all parties in the agricultural industry who are concerned about the future of this sector have made representations, asking the Government to change its mind, to recognize the validity of Canagrex and especially, to have some kind of perspective on the future.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian agricultural community is very concerned today about the financial difficulties it is facing and the gradual shrinking of its markets. At a time when every day we are seeing surpluses in various commodities and protectionist measures being imposed throughout the world, Canadian producers are wondering where they will be able to sell their products.

Mr. Speaker, some people will say the Canadian market is sufficient. However, these people forget the efficiency and the potential of Canada's agricultural sector. We all know that new technology and the effectiveness of our farmers would enable us to make significant inroads on foreign markets and that by the same token, we could create thousands of jobs in the agricultural sector and the entire agri-food industry.

I find it very hard to understand how a Government can, on such short notice, decide to get rid of a corporation whose purpose was to open these markets and thus create new jobs. For a Government that is so proud of its Bill to create new jobs and that claims it wants to encourage exports, it is being terribly inconsistent in what it says and what it does.

I was just thinking of our farmers, and I know a number of Members in this House are very much aware of the recriminations of these farmers, and they are going to see that the most frustrating thing for Canadian farmers is to have to control and limit their production.

It is often said that being an excellent farmer is a virtue. The trouble is, however, that when these farmers become very competitive, they are told right away: Listen, there is no room for your products on the market. Please, cut down production.

Now then, Mr. Speaker, Canagrex was established precisely so that our Canadian farmers would be free to produce at will, and after that the corporation would help them sell their products not only on the domestic market but also by making significant inroads into foreign markets.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, do not ask me to follow the logic of the Government because I have the impression it has none. Believe it or not, at the very moment when the Government is bragging about the free trade scenario and claiming that we must penetrate foreign markets, particularly the American market, it wants to discard a very useful instrument which happens to be designed to make it easier for us to set foot in foreign markets.

That is very difficult to swallow, Mr. Speaker, and they have the nerve to tell us that public servants from External Affairs will take over and replace Canagrex. Mr. Speaker, I know that the Hon. Member for Beauharnois—Salaberry (Mr. Hudon) is fully cognizant of the attitude of External Affairs public servants, but I am convinced that seldom within the confines of the Lester B. Pearson Building has he heard anything about wheat or potato producers. And I am convinced that during External Affairs' big cocktail parties, potatoes from Prince Edward Island seldom are a priority. So I think, Mr. Speaker, that anyone who has had any contacts with people from External Affairs know it is not really their mandate to look after the promotion of farm commodities.

People also say: Do not worry, the EDC looks after that. Anyone in business who had to deal with the EDC to get funding for farm products knows very well that the EDC's time-lag and lack of flexibility and understanding do not allow it to have ongoing relations nor allow exporters to make fast decisions, because as you know, Mr. Speaker, what is involved often is perishable goods. And unfortunately, the EDC's procedures are much too slow.

Therefore, what we are doing when dismantling Canagrex is letting Canadian farmers down once more. We are saying: Look, the Government has three or four agencies to look after you. But as you know, Mr. Speaker, three or four agencies to look after them means that in the end, no one looks after them, because they are all passing the buck.

So this is why the then government, Mr. Speaker, established a corporation like Canagrex, which only had eight months to prove itself. I think the assessment made by this Government is near-sighted, because in its eight months of activity, Canagrex already was implied in farm commodities export projects to the tune of more than $160 million, and those $160 million would have landed directly into the pockets of Canadian farmers who are in dire need of cash, Mr. Speaker.

I cannot undertand how Conservative back-benchers who have farmers in their constituencies can accept that such an important help to Canadian agriculture be stopped.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that another basic objective of a Canadian trade policy certainly is export diversification. And I believe that systematic efforts were made in the area of grains. There is also of course the Canadian Dairy Commission which is making efforts under its foreign program. But there are many other commodities, Mr. Speaker, which could certainly be taken into account and would allow us to diversify the Canadian agricultural base and our export base.

Therefore, I suggest whoever is concerned about the future of rural Canada cannot but hope that this important economic sector will not only meet our domestic needs but will also turn to other countries to secure important contracts bringing in the currency so greatly needed by our economy.

Mr. Speaker, I sincerely do not understand why the Government plans to abolish Canagrex which was only beginning to shape up, having merely hired a few employees and undertaken reviews on available products. But automatically, the wind is taken out of its sails, it is not allowed to show its usefulness and the economic impact it could have.

Mr. Speaker, I know that the Hon. Member for Brome—Missisquoi (Mrs. Bertrand) is concerned about the future of Canagrex because apple producers in her area surely would have benefitted from Canagrex. We know that dozens upon dozens of producers would be ready to sell abroad but have no contacts and no financing, and I suggest that a corporation such as Canagrex could have played a very important role. Since they would not have had to deal with the various layers of government bureaucracy, the task of government officials which was then strictly directed to farming issues would have been made easier.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that for apple growers, hog producers and farmers involved in the production of many other foodstuffs today is a dark day indeed, because their hopes for marketing opportunities abroad have been shattered.

Mr. Speaker, farmers are often advised to take advantage of traditional programs. It has been my experience over the past nine years that each time farm organizations or individual farmers as such . . . I remember a farmer from my area who wanted to sell live cattle in Mexico; he had checked all federal Government programs, knocked on every door, but not a single Government agency wanted to take a chance or insure the risk for this farmer who had developed quite a lucrative market for cattle in Mexico.

Mr. Speaker, Canagrex, within its terms of reference, would have taken care of that, would have ensured that people who wanted to sell cattle abroad would be able to do so, while at the same time providing them with a certain security, because when someone sends between 200 and 300 cows to Mexico, chances are the customer might disappear, and that is why the guarantee was important.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that when we consider what is happening in this country, we realize that the farming community is slowly disappearing. We have heard some NDP colleagues describe the dramatic situation in their own ridings. I suggest that the Government may brag about the supposed assistance it has given to the farming community, but the truth is that no subsidies or appropriate assistance programs will ever replace foreign markets. Mr. Speaker, farmers do not want a series of support programs from the Government. They are hard working, they are willing to produce, and to produce much more than at the present time, but they simply want the Government of Canada to help them gain access to certain foreign markets. Mr. Speaker, they are not imploring, they are not begging, they are simply asking that the same respect be shown for the farming class as for the manufacturers who go on missions around the world with daily financial assistance from the Export Development Corporation. We want the same treatment for the agricultural industry, which is highly specialized.

Therefore I do not see why the Government is insisting on abolishing this agency. I feel that this is a case of negative discrimination. Probably it is because the farm lobby was not sufficiently organized around the senior ministers. Imagine! It was the Minister of Finance who announced the bad news, someone who, I am sure, Mr. Speaker, has never milked a cow in his life, who has no idea of what is going on, of what is happening in the agricultural sector. He had the gall to come up and tell farmers: Listen, we want nothing to do with Canagrex, we want nothing to do with you; take care of your own problems. That is exactly how the Government of Canada responded, and later on they said: We will transfer a few public servants here and there to take care of you. But the fact is that the old system was not working, which is why we created the Canagrex Corporation with a specific mandate for agricultural products.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that this decision can be explained by the obsession of the Government with anything called a Crown corporation. Maybe our mistake was to call it a Crown corporation. Maybe if it had been a branch or whatever within a Department, they probably would have ignored this group of 70 public servants who were strictly dedicated to the promotion of Canadian products. We also have to remember that what we wanted to sell on foreign markets were competitively priced products. Canadian farmers are among the most productive in the world, and therefore there is no reason to be afraid of sending Canagrex sellers all over the world because they have a quality product, a product which is certainly made with state-of-the-art technology, and can be sold at a very competitive price. I am convinced that my colleague the Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers) does not understand why the Minister of Finance announced the abolition of Canagrex, because common sense tells us that first Canagrex recovered its costs and secondly, that it could have played a major role in Canadian trade policy. I think you have to be very shortsighted and to be obsessed by rhetoric to overlook the necessity and the validity of an agency like this one.

Mr. Speaker, I say that in a few months or in a few years, but that may be too far for the Government to look ahead because they will not be there any more, but I think that the next Liberal Government will have to correct once again the mistake made by this Government. I think that the next Government will absolutely have to re-establish an agency with a mandate similar to that of Canagrex. Consequently, the Conservative Government wastes four valuable years in a protectionist world where Canagrex agents could have gradually opened several markets, where they could have become legitimate in the Canadian agricultural sector, where they could have said for instance that there is an opening in this or that country for the hog sector, where they could have tried to open the Chinese market. Mr. Speaker, you know how long it takes, how difficult it is to penetrate a market like the Chinese market.

I am convinced that, had the Government not killed Canagrex in its infancy, the Agency would have done very well over the years. Slowly but surely it would have built contacts around the world, it would have shown Canadian products in international affairs and exhibitions to promote the Made in Canada label. They would have us believe that the officials in External Affairs are going to do the job. Now, Mr. Speaker, they have never done it since Confederation. Why do you think the Canadian Grain Commission was created? Why was the Canadian Dairy Commission forced to get involved with exports? Because External Affairs were not doing their job. I am pretty sure that the ones who want the abolition of Canagrex . . . I would like our Conservative colleagues to tell us whether they would trust diplomats from External Affairs when it comes to selling commodities for the Canadian Grain Commission. Do they have total confidence in that agency? I have great respect for External Affairs, but it is not their bag.

I hope that before the final vote, Mr. Speaker, and I know it is high time . . . The truth is, our colleagues should realize that it is essential for the expansion of the Canadian agriculture, for the development of new agricultural tehnologies and for the creation of jobs in the agri-business field. We have to develop our foreign markets, and we will not be able to do so by merely saying to two or three agencies: "Look after that in your spare time." I am very disappointed to see people like the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Côté) or others in similar areas, not reacting, when their interests are the same as those of Liberal Members. Farmers from all regions and all political stripes have a vested interest in the survival of Canagrex and the expansion of its activities.

Therefore, before concluding, because I know that the time allotted to me is running out, I really regret very much that our colleagues opposite do not rise to underline again the necessity of Canagrex and that they in fact remain passive in spite of the designs of the Minister of Finance who has no idea whatsoever of what is going on in the agricultural world, who does not realize the impact of a corporation such as Canagrex in the agricultural sector nor does he have any concern about the importance of exportation markets for the development of several farming communities.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I must unfortunately . . . And you know that unfortunately they are 211. I must now come to the conclusion that if the members opposite are spineless, we will have during the next hours to mourn the passing of Canagrex. Mr. Speaker, it is surely a sad day for the Canadian agriculture and once again in a few years we will have to correct that fundamental mistake of the Government. When they meet the sad fate awaiting them in opinion polls, I hope Tory Members will remember the day they voted for the abolition of Canagrex. They have lost two or three more points, Mr. Speaker, and this is not the end.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, a question to my friend the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre). I agree with what he said about the abolition of Canagrex. It is important to keep such an agency as Canagrex for the exportation of Canadian agricultural products.

However, I should like to put to him the following question. Why did the former Liberal Government with Mr. Whelan as Minister of Agriculture create Canagrex four or five years ago, in 1982-83? Why did it not set up Canagrex in the seventies?

I know that the Liberal Party is sometimes quite slow. It did not react quickly as a government, but there was serious exportation problems for our farming products in the sixties and seventies. Why did it wait until the end of the Trudeau Government to set up such an important corporation for the Canadian people? Why during your 20-year mandate in this country did you wait till the end to set up such a corporation? You now agree that Canagrex was a fine idea and you would like to see it restored. However, why did you wait till the end of your mandate to set up Canagrex?

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, I believe I must thank my colleague for his question. I can assure him that the decision to create Canagrex was not taken on the spur of the moment. Over the years, there were a lot of discussions about the creation of Canagrex and it was very difficult—and my colleague will remember since he has been here for some years—to convince the farming community that that agency was needed. It took a lot of persuasion, time and efforts on the part of the federal Minister of Agriculture to convince not only the farming community representatives, but also the numerous interest groups that emerged in an attempt to influence the Government.

And I think it explains why those groups from the Export Development Corporation, External Affairs and the Public Service as a whole succeeded in influencing the present Government. What happened is that the very arguments used against us over the years and that we finally overturned by creating Canagrex, those same arguments were presented to the Minister of Finance who bought them.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I believe that you can understand that our task was a difficult one but it is always difficult to bring about programs that are beneficial to the farming community because many groups from the urban community do not necessarily understand the fact that this agency is needed by our farming community as a whole. Farmers, as you know, represent but a small portion of the Canadian people, therefore they have to fight twice as hard. That is exactly what the Liberal Government and the then Minister of Agriculture did. We succeeded in establishing Canagrex but now, I think that the same somewhat reactionary pressure groups, that we faced, got the ear of the Finance Minister which explains why Canagrex is dismantled.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

SUGGESTED REVIEW OF MILITARY EQUIPMENT EXPORT RESTRICTIONS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Committee on External Affairs and International Trade should undertake a public review of the existing Canadian policy as it applies to the restrictions placed upon Canadian exports of military equipment.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to present this motion to the House for consideration.

This motion follows a number of efforts to communicate with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) requesting the same point as raised in this motion, and that is that the whole matter of Canadian exports of military equipment policy be referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade for evaluation in terms of its content, its applicability and suitability.

The reason for this motion is that there is widespread concern among many groups of Canadians that the existing Canadian policy, as it applies to the export of military equipment, is inadequate both in substance and in its application. This was certainly highlighted last fall when it was learned that Canadian firms had been exporting helicopter parts to Iran. Those helicopter parts reportedly could be used by the Iranian military in its war with Iraq. That indicated that Canadian firms exporting military equipment were doing so in such a way that it brought the whole policy of military exports into some question.

I think it is important to recognize that Canada is in fact a significant player in the arms trade. In fact, we are in the top 10 when it comes to the total value of our exports, although we are certainly surpassed by the largest arms exporters such as the United States, the Soviet Union, France, West Germany and others. The United States is our largest customer. It received about 80 per cent of our military equipment exports over the last number of years.

A growing share of our exports, however, are going to Third World countries. In the 1970s, our exports to Third World countries averaged about $100 million per year. Today it is closer to $300 million per year. Our military exports are regulated by guidelines put out by the Department of External Affairs. However, I want to say that there is no public scrutiny in the application of these guidelines. In fact, it is almost impossible to get any detailed information on Canada's export of military goods.

Canada's export guidelines have undergone some review in recent years. Before March, 1985, there were four basic restrictions placed upon our exports of arms. They were, first, that no arms could be shipped to countries that were a threat to Canada, in other words, countries like the Soviet Union; second, that no weapons could be shipped to countries on which a United Nations sanction existed, such as South Africa; third, that no weapons could be shipped to countries engaged in hostilities such as Iran and Iraq; and fourth, that no weapons could be shipped to "regimes considered to be wholly repugnant to Canadian values and especially where such equipment could be used against civilians".

In March, 1985, these guidelines were amended without any consultation with Canadians, and the human rights restrictions were dropped. In June, 1985, I brought evidence to the House of Commons in the form of copies of export permits which showed that Canada had been allowing the export of military equipment to regimes such as Chile, South Korea and the Philippines, all of which had been cited by Amnesty International as countries which engaged in the detention and torture of their citizens.

I have in my hand at the moment, in fact, copies of some of these export permits. I have one for exporting spare parts for tanks to Chile for the total amount of $73,000 U.S. I have another one for Chile with respect to military aircraft parts for $200,000, and another one for Chile for suits and helmets to be used by the Chilean National Police. From a request I made on December 1, 1986, I found that, yes, permits had been given for the export of military equipment to Chile, Syria, Pakistan and Indonesia in the amount of millions and millions of dollars. So we are talking about something where ample proof exists in terms of just what Canadians are doing with arms exports.

It is also interesting to note that after these revelations, I was no longer able to secure this information on arms exports from the Department of External Affairs under Access to Information, as I had previously.

In September, 1986, the guidelines were marginally revised. The first three restrictions I mentioned earlier remained. However, under the new policy, there is to be a secret list kept of countries which have a persistent record of serious violations of the human rights of their citizens. The fact that this is all done in secret is one of the most objectionable aspects of this new policy. The policy goes on to state that if the exporter can satisfy the Government that the goods will not likely be used against civilians, then an export permit can be granted. This means that if an arms exporter from Canada receives a little note from General Pinochet promising that these arms will not be used against civilians, whether they are tanks, gun parts or shields for Chilean police, that would then satisfy the requirements and the exports would take place.

There are really three basic problems with the existing policy. First, the Government's compliance with its own guidelines is kept secret in that there is no public scrutiny of just what types of military equipment we are sending abroad and to whom. Do Canadians know that certain types of military goods are being authorized for shipment to Chile? The answer is that under the current policy, they do not, because the information is kept secret. I believe the public's right to know deserves priority over the arms sellers' preference for privacy.

Another item of concern is the fact that the current regulations do not adequately make allowance for what is known as "manufacturing". What this means is that Canadian aircraft engine parts could be sent to France and placed in a war plane which is then shipped to Iraq or to Syria. Under these circumstances, of course, Canada could not block this type of sale. Therefore, we could be sending parts to the United States, to France, or to West Germany where they can be re-manufactured or assembled in such a way that they end up as military hardware, which is then exported to countries of questionable repute.

Another problem with the present regulations is that current regulations remove restrictions on strategic goods such as computers, communications equipment and so on. Thus surveillance equipment can be shipped to Chile to be used by the secret police in its operations against civilians. Therefore, I believe it is time that a public review of these regulations took place.

I want to make it clear that while we have received hundreds of letters on this issue from Canadians living in Sooke, British Columbia to St. John's, Newfoundland, the motion presently before the House does not pass judgment on the existing guidelines. I want to make that perfectly clear. It simply calls for the opportunity for Members of the House of Commons to scrutinize these guidelines in public, with input from concerned Canadian citizens. It is time that the veil of secrecy was lifted from this very important public policy.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the intervention and thrust of the motion of my friend, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), of the New Democratic Party. I think that he is perhaps being a trifle generous in his motion. In other words, I do not think that his motion goes quite far enough. I certainly support it. I have no objection to it. In fact, I would welcome a review of existing policy. I think we know from experience, and the evidence is before us, that the existing policy does not go far enough and that any such inquiry should address those measures which should be taken to strengthen the guidelines.

[Translation]

But as I just said we will certainly endorse the thrust of the motion introduced by my friend and colleague, but I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that we must go much further.

• (1710)

[English]

The Member who proposes this motion, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), has pointed out that access to information is also a major consideration. We agree with that. I would like to refer the House and my colleagues to an emergency resolution—

[Translation]

—what is called a resolution of exception which I introduced during our Liberal convention, our political convention in November. Because we identified the problem with controls and considering last year's experience with respect to the export of helicopter engines to some locations in the Middle East, Iran in this case, we moved the following resolution:

> WHEREAS recent developments have shown that the present Government policy does not prevent the sale of military equipment, designed for either military or civilian use, to belligerent nations such as Iran and Iraq;
> WHEREAS the Liberal Party of Canada strongly supports a pacific settlement of the Iran-Iraq conflict; and
> WHEREAS Amnesty International reports persistent and serious violations of human rights in both Iran and Irak;
> BE IT RESOLVED that the Liberal Party of Canada adopt an export control policy covering military equipment, or equipment which can be used for both civilian and military purposes, and respecting the following principles:
> (a) stricter requirements concerning final destination and use;
> (b) public access to information concerning this kind of transactions.

[English]

In other words, in the resolution which was presented on behalf of the Liberal caucus to a policy convention which, incidentally, was adopted, we resolved that we should adopt an export control policy for military equipment and for products that have both a civilian and a military application. It would include those two principles which I just cited a moment ago in French, namely, that end-use certificate requirements be strengthened and that information on this category of transaction be accessible.

This resolution was proposed in the aftermath of the export from Canada last year of engines for helicopters. It was pointed out by the helicopter manufacturer, and in this regard I would like to cite an article from The Globe and Mail of November 18, that:

> —an employee of Bell Helicopters Textron Inc., the firm that makes the Bell 212, said that the PT-6T twinpack engines can also be used in Bell's UH-1N helicopters, which are military helicopter gunships.

That revelation underlined the importance of strengthening these export controls so that we can bring into the basket of prohibited exports that type of equipment which, indeed, serves both military and civilian purposes. It is not enough to concentrate only on the military aspect of these transactions—for the very obvious reason, as we have seen here, that many of these items can also be used for civilian purposes. They can be disguised as civilian shipments and subsequently be used for military purposes.

I would also add that the resolution which we proposed picked up on the other point, the notion of the end-use certificate. This is a point which was referred to by my colleague. It refers to the export of, say, helicopter engines, which I suppose is a perfect example, to a country which is not engaged in warfare, which is not involved in human rights violations and, hence, for which an export certificate is no problem. In turn, that country can incorporate the Canadian-manufactured product into another product such as equipment mounted on a helicopter or some other type of aircraft which will find military application in a third country.

I recognize that these are difficult questions. However, it behooves us in this House, and it behooves the Government, to address this issue in order to correct the very obvious defects which we now see in these export control regulations. Apropos that, I note that in committee last January 21 my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), picked up on these very same points. He asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) whether the Government was contemplating changes to its export arms policy and the regulations which guide their use. My colleague pointed out in his question that, indeed, we find military and non-military uses for the same equipment. We see that a third country can incorporate products made in Canada and then subsequently export them into an area which is a combat area such as Iran, Iraq, and so on.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry also raised the issue of an international arms registry. The Secretary of State for External Affairs did not enlighten us with respect to what steps the Government has in mind, although I am confident that he, too, must be concerned about the export of Canadian products which find military application in theatres of combat. He indicated that he was not satisfied that an international arms registry would serve any useful purpose. He said something to the effect that it is one of those very good ideas which simply do not work. It seems to me that it is up to us here as parliamentarians to find out why, for example, an international registry could not be made to work. There are obviously some problems that immediately come to mind in terms of compliance with a registry. Nevertheless, that is the type of issue which should be raised by a committee in the type of public inquiry to which this motion makes reference.

In conclusion, I would like to say that, indeed, I support the thrust of the motion from the New Democratic Party with respect to this issue. At the same time I would point out that we have already within our own Party taken a much stronger position, recognizing the weaknesses in the present policy and proposing some very specific solutions. I would like any such inquiry to be broadened to consider the effectiveness of such solutions in providing this country with an efficient, useful and effective arms control export policy which could serve as a guide for other nations as well.

[Translation]

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, the Government welcomes the opportunity afforded by the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) to discuss the Government's policy on exports of military equipment. This debate is a timely one, considering the number of headlines we have seen on the subject in recent months. We would like to make it clear that this is indeed a very important issue, and not just because of the media attention it is receiving. The Government wants to be sure all members understand the legal and regulatory framework within which Canada exercises export controls, and it wants to clarify the guidelines that apply to strategic and military exports.

• (1720)

[English]

The control which Canada exercises on the exports of military equipment are but part of a wider set of export controls. The present regulation, the Export and Import Permits Act, was passed by the House in 1954 and has since been amended on various occasions. It controls both the import and export of designated goods. The Export Control List is the regulation which defines controlled export under the Act.

[Translation]

The export control list is established by the Governor in Council and identifies or includes all goods requiring an export licence. Certain goods may be put on the list, in order to prevent military equipment or components or other strategic goods from being made available to potential adversaries, to ensure that we have military or other equipment in sufficient quantity to defend Canada, and to implement intergovernmental agreements and commitments.

The export control list consists of ten groups, only one of which covers military equipment, while six others concern strategic goods. Since there is some disagreement as to the kind of goods that should be classified as military, the Government feels that all Hon. Members should be aware exactly what these controlled goods are. It has defined military equipment in terms of the multilaterally accepted international munitions list (Group 7 on our export control list). In addition to arms and munitions, the list includes equipment designed specifically for military purposes such as military vehicles, military telemetry equipment and certain types of electronic equipment manufactured to military specifications.

Strategic goods, which make up a large part of the rest of the export control list, are civilian high technology goods recognized multilaterally as being a potential danger to our security if they were to fall in the hands of potential adversaries. Because strategic goods can strengthen the industrial structure of those potential opponents, and therefore their military potential, we have agreed with our allies that they should be controlled. Strategic goods include products such as high performance computers, telecommunication switching equipment, advanced machine tools, certain laboratory and geophysics equipment and the technology used in their manufacturing. Those goods are not controlled as strictly as military goods, because they are normally required for civil, industrial or business use by a large number of our trade partners. Our concern with those goods is linked to potential diversion of those goods to unauthorized destinations and their improper use.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to stress the political goals pursued by the Canadian Government when applying a system of controls on military equipment exports. Each of those goals is of very great importance. They are part of the ongoing concerns of numerous Canadian governments over 25 years.

The long-standing goals our Canadian policy are: Not to supply military goods to potential opponents; to avoid getting involved in local conflicts; to avoid hindering Canadian participation in peacekeeping operations; to promote our public interest by maintaining order and stability on the international scale, including the respect of human rights.

The review made by the Government last year, the results of which were announced on September 10, 1986, led to the policy's revitalization and adaptation and to a clarification of the rules. This dealt in particular with the export of military goods, without neglecting the role of strategic goods nor this government's commitment to encourage trade on peaceful goods with all nations.

Mr. Speaker, that policy also specifies our national security and defence goals. It recognizes that Canada needs an industry capable of meeting our defence needs, by encouraging joint undertakings with our NATO allies. The ability to manufacture and export to a large number of countries, but mainly to our allies and other friendly nations, is essential to preserve the economic health and entrepreneurship of our business corporations.

In the policy announcement made on September 10, 1986, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) stated that Canada was closely monitoring the export of military goods and technologies to the following countries: First, countries that are a threat to Canada and its allies; second, nations involved in or under imminent threat of hostilities; third, countries against which sanction have been taken by the Security Council of the United Nations; fourth, countries with persistent records of serious violations of the human rights of their citizens, unless it can be showed there is no reasonable risk of the goods being used against the civil population.

Mr. Speaker, those guidelines are restrictive, as it was in the past. But they are now clearer, they express our respect for our international commitments and international law, and they have the general support of Canadians across the land. Especially, I would like to call your attention to the statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs concerning the sale of military equipment to countries with persistent records of serious violations of the human rights of their citizens. This amended, clarified and reinforced guidelines developed during the policy review reflects the Government's strong commitment to the promotion of human rights throughout the world.

For reasons of national and collective defence, Canada is co-operating with its allies to prevent the exports of military and strategic goods and technologies to nations which represent a threat for the security of our country and that of our allies. This policy stems from Canada's participation in an organization of 16 countries known as the Co-ordinating Committee for Strategic Trade Countrols, also known as the COCOM. This informal organization is made up of NATO countries, except Iceland and Japan. It meets regularly in Paris to review all planned sales of military and strategic goods and technologies which have a military significance and which might go to nations which are considered as a threat to the Western Countries' Alliance. The countries excluded by COCOM include the USSR, the other members of the Warsaw Pact, and the People's Republic of China. The COCOM supervises goods and technologies classified in 120 groups and has established three international lists of embargo-imposed goods: The list of industrial goods, that of ammunitions and that of atomic energy products. These three lists are the subject of negotiations between member countries. Once adopted, they reflect the COCOM's consensus on what military goods and technologies, atomic energy goods and strategic goods are. They are the basis for controls applied by each member country, in line with its own legislation.

In conclusion, the Government has laws and regulations in place to further its policy objectives. These policy objectives attempt to balance Canada's national security concerns, its economic development objectives, and the legitimate views of Canadians that Canada should not become involved in foreign conflicts and should not contribute to human rights offences in other countries.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak in the debate. I should like to say a word of appreciation to the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), not only for putting his motion on the Order Paper and raising it for debate today, but also for having raised the issue numerous times in the past.

The issue of arms exports from Canada must be seen in the total world context. We are spending close to $1 trillion per year on arms. At the same time, millions of people, our brothers and sisters in other parts of the world, are going hungry, naked, and homeless. There is a tremendous imbalance in the way in which the world is spending its money.

Ruth Léger-Savard, in her book entitled World Military and Social Expenditures for 1985 illustrated some gross inconsistencies. She pointed out that in 1983 we spent on a world basis some $25,600 on military expenditures for every soldier throughout the world. For every school child in the world, we spent $450. We spent $45 per capita for military research. We spent $11 per capita for health research. We spent $152 per capita for military forces, and 6 cents per capita for international peacekeeping.

Today we are talking about a global problem which threatens the very survival of our world. As we look at the escalating arms race, it concerns us vitally as Canadians. In addition, it has a vital impact upon the lives of people, particularly those in the Third World who have been targeted by Canadian arms manufacturers as being perhaps the most lucrative market to develop and exploit.

The motion asks that the Government refer this very important matter to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade. I am sure that is something all Hon. Members would want. Let us have a committee of the House examine this very important issue.

I am very pleased that our regular member on that committee, the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett), has repeatedly tried to get the committee to examine the whole question of arms exports.

The Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) said that he wanted to go further than did the motion. Of course we want to go further, but the motion is a starting place. I regret that when that member was a member of the previous Government he did not take action which would have resulted in some amelioration of the problem. In fact, during the time that that member's Party was in government, there were numerous instances when issues such as this one were brought to its attention and nothing was done about them.

In 1983, it was brought to the attention of the Government that helicopter parts were being exported to the United States and that the end use of those helicopter parts was in El Salvador to strafe the civilian population. The Government did nothing about it. It took no action to tighten up its procedures at that time. Now that the Liberals are in opposition they say they want to go further than this motion that asks for a standing committee to look at the matter and make recommendations. We also had Liberal Government complicity in the 1970s with sending arms shipments to Vietnam through the United States.

Ernie Regher in his book entitled Arms Canada pointed out that because of defence sharing agreements with the United States and highly developed arms production in Europe, Canada had specifically targeted the Third World as the major market for our arms sales. In fact, arms sales from Canada to the Third World have tripled in the last decade.

Mr. Regher also pointed out that there was a basic foreign policy conflict which we are not really examining. On the one hand we say we are for peace and development. On the other hand we blindly sell weapons to whomever will buy them. Mr. Regher said that arms sales represent an economic activity, not an instrument of foreign policy. Foreign policy is sometimes dragged in by the heels in a very weak process of review, but arms sales are not seen as integral to our policy.

We have backward priorities in the whole area. Instead of having the bias in terms of looking at Canada's interests in world peace, security, and development, our primary objective is to sell arms products and then look at what the implications might be in what has been described as a very weak review process.

That review process allows us to sell arms to countries like Chile. I was privileged, along with members of other Parties, to visit Chile last fall. One person with whom we met who most impressed my colleagues and I was Dr. Juan Luis Gonzales, a medical doctor who is President of the Civic Assembly in Chile. He is a very mild-mannered human being who acts out of concern for his fellow Chileans. He was arrested and he served time in jail. He spoke of the climate of fear which pervades Chile. He said that everyone lived in fear and that the poor were absolutely terrorized. We also heard evidence from him that he knew personally of up to 30-35 people who had been tortured.

Are we to expect that sending computers to Chile is a purely neutral act? Of course it is not. They are used in the whole apparatus of repression. We need much tighter controls.

When I was in Ethiopia a year ago, I heard testimony from its Minister of Labour and Social Affairs who said:

> The money we have spent on defence in the last 10 years would have enabled us to feed ourselves in spite of the drought.

Ethiopia is not a recipient of Canadian arms sales, but it illustrates the eschewed priorities of our world.

In conclusion, I simply urge the House to accept the motion. When the committee looks at the matter, I hope it will recommend some annual public review policy of Canadian arms sales and will examine the human rights records of countries receiving Canadian arms. I also hope that it will develop more stringent criteria for application in terms of human rights, that it will adopt a public registry of arms export permits so that people can find out where arms are being shipped, and that there will be stricter monitoring of end use. It is not enough for us to export to the United States under the Defence Production Sharing Agreement. We must know what is the end use.

I urge support for the motion. I urge that we question the entire Canadian arms export policy. We should stop being part of this madness which spends $1 trillion per year on instruments of death and destruction.

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to enter this debate. Canada's export controls policy has occasionally been criticized over definitions of what is considered to be a military good. As well, a number of individuals would wish the Government to extend the application of its law and policy with respect to military or other exports outside our national borders. Canada is not alone in this regard, as many of our NATO allies with similar export control regimes face similar pressures.

As my colleague has pointed out, the Government's policy on the export of military goods and technology derives from objectives which have been in effect over the past quarter century. In the interests of clarity, I wish to inform the members how the Government decides why it is that some goods should be controlled and others should not.

By way of background let me say that the controls which Canada applies to exports of military and strategic goods to the Warsaw Pact countries, the People's Republic of China, Albania, Viet Nam, Mongolia and North Korea are based on national security considerations, which are co-ordinated or harmonized with the export control programs of a number of allied countries. Canada, along with Japan and its NATO partners, except Iceland, 16 states in all, participates in an international arrangement known as the Co-ordinating Committee on Multilateral Strategic Export Controls or COCOM.

Within COCOM, three international embargo lists have been established by consensus through a negotiating process. These lists define goods and technologies which would make a significant contribution to the military capability of potential adversaries. Goods and technology so identified are thus embargoed or denied to these countries known as COCOM proscribed destinations. The COCOM munitions list, for example, includes equipment that is specially designed for use by the military, while the industrial list is made up of civilian high-technology goods that are considered to have strategic value.

The COCOM lists are used as the basis for the domestic national security controls maintained by each member country. Groups 3 through 8 of Canada's export control list are based principally on the international lists established in COCOM. Thus the Canadian export control listing includes, for example, high precision metal working equipment, high performance computer and telecommunication equipment, encryption equipment, strategic metals and compounds, for example, elemental boron, fluoro-carbon compounds, mono-crystalline gallium compounds, also lasers, super thin films, aviation location finding equipment as well as munitions and military supplies and atomic energy materials.

Because controls on strategic and military exports to the Warsaw Pact countries and China are co-ordinated multilaterally within COCOM, Canada's policy in this area is in general accord with the policies of most other western countries. The impact of our controls is, moreover, enhanced by their integration into a multilateral arrangement. This approach has well served Canada's national security, commercial and broad foreign policy interests.

Experience over recent years led the Government to conclude, in the context of the policy review on military exports, that its restrictive policy with respect to military goods exports should not apply equally to the export of strategic goods. Civilian industrial goods are on the export control list as a result of Canada's participation in COCOM. As mentioned earlier, the COCOM controls apply only to exports to certain proscribed destinations which are considered to be potential adversaries. Although there can be no question that exports of all strategic and military goods must be broadly controlled to prevent their diversion to these proscribed destinations, the Government has decided that Canada's policy should more closely conform to the practice of our major trading partners, and particularly those of COCOM members.

For this reason, the policy announcement of September 10, 1986, focused on the export of military goods, particularly to countries involved in or under imminent threat of hostilities, or to countries with persistent records of serious violations of the human rights of their citizens. On the other hand, strategic goods are not seen by the international community as part of the arms trade. It is generally recognized that Governments or private enterprises continue to have legitimate civilian requirements for goods such as telecommunications equipment and advanced computers.

Two special circumstances affect policy toward the export of strategic goods. The first area of concern is national security, and reflects the threat of diversion of strategic goods to the proscribed destinations. The second area of concern is foreign policy, and reflects the Government's abhorrence of the apartheid system in the Republic of South Africa. In this latter instance, exports of military goods and technology are denied to all consignees in that country in recognition of the obligations which Canada assumed in light of the United Nations Security Council Resolution (1977) 418.

The Government has gone one step further with respect to commitments made in the Commonwealth Accord of Nassau of October, 1985, in prohibiting the export of strategic goods to Departments and agencies of the Government of the Republic of South Africa. The cost has been a real one to many Canadians. The Government has refused a number of permits for high technology civilian strategic goods in relation to multimillion dollar contracts where Canadian expertise has been recognized not only in South Africa but also world-wide, not only in South Africa but also world-wide. These permit denials reflect our ongoing commitment to seeking peaceful political change in South Africa.

Just last evening, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced a plan to have the seven major industrialized countries form an eminent persons group to conduct constructive discussions with the leaders of South Africa with the objective of dismantling apartheid in a peaceful, non-violent manner.

Some Canadians believe that Government does not restrict the export of a wide enough range of goods. Other Canadians equally firmly believe that the Government controls the export of far too many goods. This argument finds vocal expression, for example, in the case of exports of goods used by military and paramilitary organizations in countries with a persistent record of serious violations of the human rights of their citizens. While this is a difficult issue to resolve, the conclusion reached reflects the Government's belief in the right of nations to defend themselves against external aggression. What is objectionable in the case of exports of military goods to such countries is that this equipment is turned and used against civilians within the country. Therefore, in his policy statement, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) announced that the Government was prepared to consider export permits for military goods to such countries only where there is no reasonable risk that the goods would be used against the civilian population.

Approvals of permit applications which fall within this guideline will not be easily reached. Members may be assured that any permit application will be most carefully scrutinized by the Secretary of State for External Affairs himself only after compelling arguments will have been put forward by this prospective exporter that there is no reasonable risk that the goods would be used against the civilian population. Most applications will, therefore, be denied. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to participate in this debate.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon members have had an opportunity to learn about the various aspects of the export control policy of the Government as it applies particularly to the military exports. Indeed, it will come as no surprise to members to learn that in addition to a complex system which processes and reviews applications from Canadian manufacturers and exporters of military goods or of highly sensitive strategic goods, there is an equally complex system to track the movement of control goods both before and subsequent to their export from Canada. This particular issue was raised recently by one member who was expressing some concern about the possibility of Canadian origin military equipment being used in a regional conflict in spite of, or contrary to, Canadian policy in this regard.

In order to reassure the House on this question I would remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the Export and Import Permits Act is Canada's legislation for controlling the export of strategic and military goods. All items which are subject to controls are found on the Export Control List. The definition of what goods are military or strategic was covered in the Minister's policy statement of September 10, 1986, and various members have referred to those definitions this afternoon. Today, various Hon. Members have referred to those definitions. For their part, the definitions used by Canada find their origin in the multilaterally agreed international munitions list which is reflected in Group 7 of our Export Control List and, for strategic goods, are defined by reference to items described in Groups 3 to 8 and 10 of the Export Control List reflecting COCOMs International Embargo Lists.

Before such goods can be exported from Canada, there is a legal requirement under the Act for an export permit. The decision to issue a permit and the conditions under which such a permit would be issued are bound by regulations issued under the Act, policy guidelines issued by the Government, and rules and practices which form part of Canada's multilateral obligations as a member of the Co-ordinating Committee for Multilateral Strategic Export Controls. COCOMs purpose, as Hon. Members may recall, is to co-ordinate and harmonize control over exports of military and strategic goods to certain proscribed destinations which are essentially the Soviet Union and other members of the Warsaw Pact as well as the People's Republic of China, Viet Nam, North Korea and Albania.

In order to ensure that the most sensitive class of exports, including both military goods and technology and the highest level of strategic goods and technology, are not diverted, there is an internationally recognized document issued at present by the Governments of 27 countries. By means of this document, the export control authorities of the importing country acknowledge that they are aware that an importer in their country is importing multilaterally controlled goods from the exporting country. This document, called an International Import Certificate, or IC for short, must correspond in all details with the export permit application or it is not accepted and an export permit application risks immediate refusal.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—PROPOSED SAGUENAY SHOOTING RANGE—REQUEST FOR PUBLIC HEARINGS

M. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I must draw the attention of the House to an important matter, the shooting range for the F-18 bomber that the Conservative Government proposes to establish in the Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean area. As you probably know, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) is about to occupy or expropriate a large territory in the province of Quebec, to use it as a shooting range. I do not have to remind you that many people from the Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean area have protested vigorously against this military project and the way the Government is juggling with the issue. Mr. Speaker, when I spoke on that subject last June, over 85 local and regional organizations were unconditionally opposed to the shooting range. Today, the Coalition against the shooting range is supported by more than 150 groups including 14 municipalities, seven regional school boards and the Quebec provincial NDP.

In spite of that massive opposition, the Conservative Government is persisting in trying to sell this insane project. They persist in acting unilaterally, without holding the public hearings requested by local people and NDP supporters.

It is obvious that instead of studying the viability of a shooting range, this Conservative Government finds it more essential to launch a vast disinformation campaign that borders on blackmail.

The Minister of National Defence, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and Conservative Members representing the area have all pushed that project very hard. Instead of protecting the interest of their constituents, these people have been vigorously trying to impose their militaristic views. Once again, the Conservatives are failing to keep their promises about consultation. They stoop to threatening people by implying that if they voice opposition to the firing range they will endanger the Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean economy and the Bagotville base. Mr. Speaker, I should have said the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) instead of the Secretary of State.

• (1805)

This attitude on the part of the Government is totally unacceptable. It is an insult to the residents of Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean as well as a violation of such basic democratic principles as consultation and respect for citizens, men and women alike. Indeed, the Coalition, the Jeannois and the people of Saguenay easily convinced me that the whole firing range has become a moot issue and that funds earmarked for this purpose must be channelled towards more useful endeavours. By this I mean education, health care, day care, environmental protection and, of course, the creation of permanent jobs.

Investments must be made in the local community to promote regional socio-economic development instead of exporting our financial resources to acquire costly and noisy bombers which can only play havoc with our environment, scare away our tourists, destroy local fishing and hunting industries, and seriously threaten our safety.

In this respect, Mr. Speaker, allow me to point out that the Conservative firing range fits beautifully within a comprehensive Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean militarization strategy which flies in the face of our pacifist ideals and puts military interests ahead of those of the population. Should the Conservatives fail to retreat, as far as I know this will be the first time in Canadian history that a major firing range would be established in this country in peacetime. For a growing number of people this firing range has become an obsessive fear, and you can take my word for that. In fact, everyone knows that the Conservatives want to make us swallow another can of tainted tuna. Eat it, you'll like it, is what they are saying.

Mr. Speaker, it all means that today we have yet to see a thorough impact study that can give us some reassurance about this firing range. The Government has discreetly released bits of information to support its cause. However, the information thus released has raised a number of questions. For instance, Mr. Speaker, when we know that the firing range and its air approaches will have an impact covering up to one fifth of the province of Quebec, why didn't the Government assess potential economic, social and environmental disruption? What would be the intensity of the sound impact of these low-altitude exercises? What about the risk of ricocheting projectiles? And why does the Government insist on setting up a firing range so close to populated areas?

Mr. Speaker, considering all these questions and many others that have remained unanswered, and considering the adverse impact the firing range will most certainly have in any case, I find it necessary to challenge the establishing of a fire range and to insist forthwith on the holding of joint public hearings in the Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean area. As a member of the NDP, I feel this is a reasonable proposal, very much in line with our democratic principles. And I deplore the fact that the present Conservative Government has found a far less constructive way to deal with public discontent. It has decided to play deaf and to tell people, as did the Hon. Member for Roberval not long ago, to stop trying to sex mosquitoes.

If the Government is that interested in mosquitoes, I think it ought to know that the people in the area are not particularly keen on them and are even less keen on seeing a squadron of F-18s invading their skies.

I would have thought the Government would be in a blue funk about the next election, when voters in the Saguenay and Lac-Saint-Jean area will have their say.

Mr. Speaker, we in the NDP agree with the people in the area that the only acceptable response to the firing range is no, not here and not anywhere else.

• (1810)

[English]

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I suppose it is honourable to want to withdraw from our NATO and NORAD obligations, but that does not happen to be the position of the Government of the day. I think the Hon. Member should pay at least some tribute to the fact that there is legitimacy with respect to the concerns for the safety of our nation and the preservation of its sovereignty.

I note with some interest the continuing interest of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) in the establishment of an air weapons range in the Lac St. Jean area. However, this subject appears to have become somewhat of an obsession, I would suggest, to the Hon. Member and perhaps to some of his colleagues.

The very issue the Hon. Member raised appears to have been dealt with more than adequately on three previous occasions during Question Period, during an adjournment debate, during a meeting of the Standing Committee on National Defence and finally through a written petition on the Order Paper. Notwithstanding the Hon. Member's efforts and those of his colleagues to convey the impression that the local population opposes the establishment of this essential firing range, it is a fact that 60 mayors in the area, in writing, have expressed their strong support. It is our understanding that the vast majority of the people in this region do not agree with the position stated this afternoon and in the past by the Hon. Member.

I refer the Hon. Member to the adjournment debate of June 16 where I fully addressed the environmental issue directly by stating that "environmental concerns have been paramount in our search for a suitable location for this range". Indeed, I may add that all relevant aspects which could have any impact on the population, the fauna, the flora, the creatures and birds have been very closely looked at. The fact is that this is a clean range area. It is an effective area in which pilots of the F-18 can demonstrate this state of the art equipment.

TRADE—CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—PARLIAMENTARY DEBATE ON POSSIBLE TREATY

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I know you are a very busy person. I know you are busy looking after the affairs of the House and presiding in the Chamber. You are busy solving the problems of your constituents. You are busy answering the mail and the telephone, I suspect that you may even find time for the odd game of golf. However, because you are such a busy person, Sir, I would not be surprised if you missed the opportunity to read the newspapers lately and probably you have missed an article this weekend about a company in Cornwall, Ontario, which was prosecuted by the Ontario Government for polluting the St. Lawrence River. This particular company was convicted and fined some $15,000 for polluting the St. Lawrence River.

That article brought back to my mind experiences I have had. In fact, it brought to mind a series of trials I had when I practised law for a living. My client in a particular case was a smelter. He melted down scrap metal, separated and recycled it and turned it into a useful purpose. Every once in a while that smelter let off a little puff of smoke. The Ontario Government alleged that that puff of smoke was air pollution, so it laid charges against my client and prosecuted him.

This went on for some period of time. Every time there was a puff of smoke, there would be another charge laid. Every time there were two puffs of smoke, there would be two charges laid. As I thought about all of that, it brought to mind as well the position of Ontario Hydro.

Here is a large Ontario Crown corporation which, because it produces power to a large extent through coal burning thermal generating stations, is one of the greatest causes of air pollution, of acid rain emissions, in the entire Province of Ontario.

It struck me as strange, and I expect it will strike you as strange, Mr. Speaker, that here is Ontario Hydro causing all this air pollution and these acid rain producing emissions, yet it is not being told to shut down. It is not being told to stop. It is not being prosecuted by the Government of Ontario, led by Premier David Peterson. All that seems awfully strange to me.

It seems to me awfully strange that Ontario would be treating private industry that it has alleged is causing air pollution one way but treating its own closely-held Crown corporation, Ontario Hydro, in an entirely different way. That seems very strange to me. I am not suggesting for a moment that we should not be prosecuting private polluters. I am not suggesting that we should lay off them; we should be prosecuting them. We should be getting them to stop polluting. But why, then, are we not getting one of the biggest air polluters and one of the biggest causes of acid rain in Ontario to stop as well?

Mr. Speaker, you know, I know, and Ontario Premier David Peterson knows that our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and our federal Government are doing a great deal about the question of acid rain. As we know, the Prime Minister has placed this issue at the top of his own personal agenda in discussions with the President of the United States. In fact, it is the first time ever that that has been done by a Prime Minister of Canada. We also know that he has been trying to get the United States to stop acid rain producing emissions and air pollution. He has been successful in getting many of the provinces to agree to cut back on their acid rain producing emissions. The Government has brought down new auto emission standards that will come into play in September to help cut down on acid rain.

In addition to that, the Government has committed some $300 million to the fighting of acid rain. As well, it commissioned a study which reported last summer that if Ontario Hydro would only start using low-sulphur western coal instead of high-sulphur American coal that it could cut its own acid rain producing emissions by some 50 per cent. So the federal Government has been doing a great deal about acid rain. Why then is Ontario Premier David Peterson and his Government not taking any action with Ontario Hydro when it is a Crown corporation? It is a Crown corporation of the Province of Ontario. Why is it not putting its own house in order?

We know that Premier Peterson has said that Ontario Hydro is locked into its contractual arrangements with the United States for at least five years. Is that any excuse? Would the Premier take that excuse from private industry? I know that you are a lawyer, Mr. Speaker. It has been said that any contract can be broken, that any contract is made to be broken. I know that Your Honour is a pretty good lawyer. Have you been asked to take a look at this contract to see if there is a way out of it? Premier Peterson is a lawyer. I wonder if he has taken a look at this contract to see if there is a way out of it. I know darn well that if this were a private industry that, for sure, Premier Peterson would be telling it to get out of that contract and start using low-sulphur coal.

In addition, the Premier says that it costs too much money to transport coal from western Canada. He says that it costs 47 per cent more to bring it from western Canada than to get it from the United States. Would the Premier accept that excuse from private industry? Not on your life, Mr. Speaker. You know as well as I do that he would be telling private industry, no matter what it costs, to clean up its act. I do not know why the Premier and the Government of Ontario would ever treat Ontario Hydro in a different way from the way they treat private industry in their own province as far as air pollution and acid rain producing emissions are concerned. I do not know. I can see by the look in your eyes, Mr. Speaker, that you do not know. But the Parliamentary Secretary is sitting across from me. Perhaps she knows.

• (1820)

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, it is always a pleasure to participate in the adjournment debate and in particular to reply to a very active Member of the House of Commons, the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Attewell), my colleague in Metro Toronto. He has spoken about the acid rain agreement with the United States and the position of Ontario Hydro. This issue is most interesting and we must compliment the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) for his active participation in meeting with the Premier of Ontario and establishing a committee to get western coal to Ontario, where it is most needed.

However, the question scheduled for the adjournment debate today deals with trade with the United States. The Hon. Member asked a question in the House concerning negotiations between Canada and the United States about possible treaties. We are negotiating with the United States on acid rain, but we also have a very important agreement with the United States with regard to free trade. The member spoke to this issue on March 16 and asked whether we would have an opportunity to discuss this in the House of Commons. That will indeed be the case, as was stated very clearly by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on the issues of acid rain and trade.

Once a draft agreement with the United States has been reached on trade, the question of provincial involvement will still be open, given that the scope and content of an agreement has not yet been settled. The ratification of international agreements is clearly an exclusive federal responsibility. It is recognized, however, that there may be areas of a Canada-U.S. trade agreement which will involve matters under provincial jurisdiction. In this case, provincial legislation to implement the agreement in those areas may be required.

For this reason the provinces have been extensively and continuously consulted, both at First Ministers and senior official levels as the negotiations progress. The progress and issues of the negotiations were addressed at the recent meeting of First Ministers on March 11. Further meetings are scheduled for June and September of this year. As the Prime Minister has already stated in the House, Members of the House of Commons will be apprised of and given an opportunity to speak to any trade agreement with the United States.

APARTHEID—SOUTH AFRICA—PRIME MINISTER'S SCHEDULED MEETING WITH PRESIDENT OF AFRICAN NATIONAL CONGRESS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, on March 25, 1987, I rose in this House to ask a question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) with regard to the immediate future of Canada's relations with South Africa and our policy against the repugnant system of apartheid. More specifically, I was concerned about the state of communications between our two Governments.

The Secretary of State assured me that Canada will keep the lines of communication open. I would like to commend the Minister for expressing this constructive attitude as well as add some of my own thoughts with regard to the unfortunate but complex situation of apartheid.

Many residents of my riding of Don Valley East have expressed their concern and interest in this subject. It seems to me that this is particularly important now given the set of regressive measures announced this past weekend by the South African Government. It may be said that Canadians, as well as most civilized people in the world, agree that apartheid, the institutionalized system of racial discrimination, is a principle alien and repugnant to supporters of liberty and democracy. Although in a formal sense the term emerged only in 1948, systematic racial discrimination has existed in what is now South Africa for centuries.

According to the World Guide on Human Rights based upon a number of universal criteria for freedom, South Africa's index out of 100 is only 32 per cent, whereas Canada's, by comparison, is 94 per cent.

Given the overwhelming consensus on the existence of a problem, unfortunately no unanimity has surfaced, either among the outside observers or even among the very South Africans affected by apartheid, on how to resolve it. Considering its long history and the lack of substantive progress on the part of the South African Government in this area, an obvious feeling of frustration has emerged. Unfortunately, this condition often tends to breed reactions characterized by a simplistic evaluation as well as by emotional and extreme measures which at best express strong condemnation and at worst incite violence. Fortunately Canada, both in the past and at present, has taken a balanced approach which warrants a brief explanation.

Because the Canadian Government still believes that peaceful change is possible, our approach incorporates two basic premises. First, the Canadian Government and people oppose and abhor apartheid. Second, we leave the way open for contacts and dialogue which in themselves increase Canada's capacity to influence progressive changes in South Africa.

The Canadian Government rejects the concept that total isolation of South Africa would somehow promote fundamental reform in that country. Racist mentalities feed on isolation. We, therefore, must maintain diplomatic relations with that country. Canada also supports the right of South Africa to participate in the activities of the United Nations.

Given this expression of a strong but balanced commitment, we can see that our deeds have matched our words. By examining the record, the consistency of our concern dates to the days of Prime Minister John Diefenbaker who, in 1961 during a Commonwealth Conference, initiated a proposal for a joint communiqué saying that apartheid ran against the ideals of the alliance. At that time South Africa had just become a republic and was applying to become a member. However, it withdrew the request since it did not want to comply. Subsequently Canada has continued to put pressure on the regime through the auspices of the United Nations.

Recently Canada's role of leadership within the Commonwealth regarding this issue was reasserted. During the Summit in London last August, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) again made clear our country's repugnance toward apartheid and explained the purpose of our limited sanctions. During his most recent trip through the front line states, the Prime Minister further reiterated our commitment not just toward fighting apartheid but also toward helping the citizens most adversely affected by it. Canada has tried to give support, for instance, in the form of education and training to those who advocate peaceful change.

There is no doubt sanctions can and do serve an important symbolic purpose by making a statement both to the South African Government and to other nations that we take the problem seriously. By the same token, this does not mean that such a course should be taken to its extreme, aside from the fact that we may be harming economically the very people we are trying to help.

In addition to calls for the rupture of commercial relations, there have been outcries to do likewise on the diplomatic front. In response, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has said:

> If we eventually decided to cut all our trade and diplomatic relations, we would have to recognize that whatever leverage we had in the situation would also end.

This is precisely the point. Channels of communication and mechanisms for encouraging positive action and reform are absolutely crucial.

One must also consider innovative means. The Prime Minister has taken a unique step by agreeing to talk to the representatives of the African National Congress, an anti-apartheid group which has been associated with violence and terrorism, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicated the following:

> We have to face some decisions as to whether or not we would associate with groups such as the ANC that are still involved in violence. We have had to take the decision, and it is a new one that had not been taken by Canadian governments before, that we would in fact deal with the ANC because they are going to be part of the solution in South Africa whenever it comes and however it comes. We believe there is a greater chance of contributing to a more peaceful solution more quickly working with them than not.

● (1830)

By the same token, negotiations and discussion with the ruling regime, for instance, in the form of official visits are also being considered. As the Secretary of State for External Affairs pointed out at the human rights committee meeting regarding the value of visits:

> I think it is not a very helpful attitude for someone to assume that he is going to be shown a false picture and consequently not go. If we all made that assumption, none of us would ever go anywhere, and none of us would ever learn anything.

At the same time, any new knowledge or understanding of the problem could be helpful toward the remedy. Unfortunately, considering how deeply apartheid has been entrenched, it is obvious that an immediate solution is not possible. Rupturing all links with the regime, however strongly we disagree with its policies, would only amount to a fatalist statement of disapproval. That is not enough. What is worse, the resulting instability may provoke violence as well as communist intervention. The Soviet Union tends to be quite opportunistic under precisely such circumstances. Given that Canada can and does have influence in the region, in concert with other nations, we must not allow that to happen.

At the same time, by maintaining our balanced and open-minded approach, we must actively and constructively seek ways to pressure the South African Government to dismantle the monster of apartheid. Last evening, the Prime Minister announced a plan in a television appearance whereby the seven major industrialized countries would form a new eminent persons group to press for an end to apartheid in South Africa. The Prime Minister intends to present this plan during a meeting in Venice in June of this year. I applaud this new initiative toward constructive dialogue with the leaders of the seven largest industrialized countries and the leaders of South Africa.

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, while maintaining pressure on South Africa to make fundamental changes in its racist system, Canadian policy emphasizes the importance of dialogue between the Government and Opposition. To that end, we are keeping open lines of communication to all groups in South Africa. There is a channel for contact with the South African Government through the Canadian Embassy in South Africa and the South African Embassy here in Canada.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) has indicated that he would be prepared to visit South Africa if it would serve a constructive purpose towards bringing an end to apartheid. There has not been any evidence to date, however, that the South African Government has changed its position since it rejected the negotiating concept put forward by the Commonwealth Eminent Persons Group 10 months ago and gave no satisfaction to Sir Geoffrey Howe, the British Foreign Secretary when he went there last summer. The Botha Government is not prepared to enter into constructive dialogue with authentic black leaders leading to the dismantling of apartheid and the establishment of a non-racial and representative government.

In the Government's view, the African National Congress will be part of the solution in South Africa, however and whenever that comes about. Both the Prime Minister (Mr.

Mulroney) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs have agreed in principle to meet with Mr. Oliver Tambo, the President of the ANC when he visits Canada. No dates have been set for these meetings.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 6.34 p.m., this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

The House adjourned at 6.34 p.m.

YOUTH

NECESSITY FOR GOVERNMENT TO ENCOURAGE YOUNG PEOPLE IN THEIR SEARCH FOR INDEPENDENCE

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): This Sunday, April 19, Mr. Speaker, thousands of Canadian men and women will celebrate Easter. For many of us Easter is a sign of resurrection and rejuvenation. But for many others, although it signals the onset of nice weather, Easter Sunday will not be cause for celebration. I have in mind those people who are without shelter, particularly youths. In Montreal alone there are close to 10,000 homeless youths between the ages of 15 and 30. For them there will be no special festivities to mark Easter. Without a permanent address, without gainful employment, without a decent income, and without any hope of improving their living conditions, they while their time away in bus shelters, in public parks, or in already overcrowded accommodation centres, the testimony to Government assistance.

Youths want to improve their situation. They seek encouragement in their search for independence. In this respect the Government should make a serious commitment to them by setting up employment and education programs. Youths are the future of this country. Are we not prepared to lend them a hand? If so, we must act now because tomorrow will be too late!

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

USE OF FRENCH IN AIR TRANSPORT

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, last Saturday I attended the twelfth convention of the Gens de l'air, the famous group of people who made a name for themselves by fighting for the use of French in air transport. I was told that although there has been some progress in this field, there is still a long way to go. Francophone pilots cannot land in French in Ottawa, and if they insist on doing so they must be prepared to face lengthy delays.

I take this opportunity to congratulate Captain Wilfrid Allard who retired from Quebecair in 1982 and who was given the Roger Demers award for his outstanding career—33,000 hours of flight time, often under very difficult conditions.

I also commend Nordair Metro Vice-President of Operations Captain Michel Goyette for his brilliant career, to whom I had the pleasure of presenting the Bilcom award.

LABOUR RELATIONS

DIFFERENTIAL BETWEEN EXECUTIVES' SALARIES AND EMPLOYEES' WAGES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact that the employees of CN and CP, as well as many other workers, have been asked to accept wage rollbacks as part of their contract negotiations, it is interesting to note that Canada's top executives enjoyed caviar and champagne type pay increases last year.

While organized workers negotiated wages averaging a 3.4 per cent increase—the lowest increase in 19 years—the Financial Times (of Canada), through sources in the United States, indicates that, when bonuses are included, the top executives in Canada received an average 1986 salary increase of 19.7 per cent.

The chairman of the auto parts giant, Magna International, earned $2.2 million, or an average wage rate of $1,074.22 per hour during 1986.

• (1405)

The chairman of Rio Algom earned $1.3 million, which is a 25 per cent increase over the previous year.

The president of Alcan earned $1.2 million, up 64 per cent over last year.

This certainly demonstrates that the motto of the top executives is: "Do as I say, not as I do". While asking their employees to accept modest increases, hold the line, or take wage rollbacks, the top executives bask in pay increases averaging 19.7 per cent. To them I say shame!

We expect more from Canada's top business executives. When they request sacrifices from their employees during these difficult economic times, yet accept excessive salary increases themselves, they fail to provide leadership by example, something which is so dearly needed today.

LAW DAY

IMPORTANCE OF COUNTRY'S LAWS

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, today is Law Day, once again sponsored by the Canadian Bar Association. This year the theme "Legal Awareness for All" is the focus of activities being held across Canada by the association and by lawyers, lawmakers, and a variety of organizations involved with the law.

Our laws are more than paper and words; they are the embodiment, the essence of our values. They have been distilled from the process of public debate, the conflict of ideas, and the synthesis of different beliefs. Our laws reflect the variety and the complexity of our culture and our history. To understand what it means to be a Canadian, we have to understand how our laws affect us.

On the fifth anniversary of the establishment of our Charter of Rights and Freedoms, a Charter which continues and extends the legal rights of all Canadians, let us work together to ensure that all Canadians know what rights and what obligations we have under our law and our Constitution.

ENERGY

INCREASES IN PRICE OF GASOLINE—IMPACT ON TOURISM

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, with the summer holiday season approaching, the tourism industry will be watching to see how many Canadians can still afford to take to the road after the latest gas tax increases.

Since coming to power the Conservative Government has raised gas taxes by a whopping 4 cents a litre, or 18 cents a gallon. That means higher costs, not only for transportation but also for home heating, food, and a range of goods and services—in other words, a disincentive for the travelling public and a bigger bite out of the incomes of Canadians already trying to cope with the galaxy of tax hikes imposed by a Government that finds it all too easy to raise revenues by raising taxes.

But people who are so heavily taxed have no spare cash to spend. It is inevitable that this shortsighted policy of "tax now, tax some more later", will put a damper on economic growth. The proof is in the Government's own dismal forecast of 2.8 per cent economic growth this year, the lowest rate in four years, in what is supposed to be a time of economic recovery.

HISTORIC EVENTS

ANNIVERSARY OF ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, since Parliament will not be sitting next week I want to recognize the 72nd anniversary of the Armenian genocide which began on April 24, 1915.

The masterminds of this despicable crime were the Minister of the Interior Talaat, and his associates.

The genocide was carried out in three stages. First, intellectuals, clergymen and other Armenian community leaders were arrested.

Phase two of the plan was to disarm Armenian soldiers serving in the Ottoman Empire armies and arrange for their wholesale murder.

Phase three was to collect and drive leaderless Armenians, village by village, and from town to town, to be forced to march to the Syrian Desert and ultimately to their death.

Now, 72 years have passed since the tragic beginning of this genocide. More and more people, institutions and Governments, are being made aware of the horrendous scope of this crime. We must do everything possible to ease the memory of those who survived while at the same time teach the young generation that a crime ignored is a crime encouraged.

In closing I would like to quote the words of a famous American-Armenian writer, William Saroyan, who said:

> I should like to see any power of the world destroy this race, this small tribe of unimportant people, whose wars have all been fought and lost, whose structures have crumbled, whose literature is unread, music is unheard, and prayers are no more answered. See if you can do it. Send them into the desert without bread or water. Burn their homes and churches. Then see if they will not laugh, sing and pray again. For when two of them meet anywhere in the world, see if they will not create a new Armenia.

NARCOTICS

FINDINGS OF STUDY ON MANDATORY DRUG TESTING

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, last fall the Parliamentary Library did an excellent study for me on mandatory drug testing. The study reviewed this issue under the Charter of Rights, human rights legislation, and labour standards. The study concludes: "In the final analysis, most employees in Canada are left with private remedies in contract or in respect of defamation as a sole means of recourse against drug testing by employers".

Mandatory drug testing in Canada is on the rise. Air Canada, CNR, American Motors and other companies are all known to demand urine samples for drug analysis.

Last week the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) said that there will be mandatory testing for train crews. I call upon the Government to tell the House just what safeguards for individuals it is considering.

Many responsible organizations such as the Canadian Civil Liberties Group and many trade unions oppose mandatory drug testing for employees. There are many reasons to oppose drug testing, and among them are the reliability of the test and whether or not a person's private lifestyle is a concern of an employer unless it impairs the person's ability to carry out the job.

MINES AND MINING

VALUE OF CANADIAN MINERAL PRODUCTION

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, Canada is the third largest mineral producing country in the world. Each year it produces some $15 billion of mineral products. That production comes from some 280 mines in 65 communities across the country. The industry creates some 400,000 jobs, and 80 per cent of our mineral production in Canada is exported.

Furthermore, last year the industry raised about 70 per cent of its funding for exploration through the flow-through share arrangement, a program that the Government has enhanced.

The Canadian mining industry and all Canadians are asking if the Liberal Party and New Democratic Party are abandoning the mining industry in Canada. They voted in the House against free trade with the United States, and many New Democrats are not supportive of our flow-through share program for financing the mining industry. Are these Parties abandoning such communities as Bathurst, Murdochville, Val d'Or, Sudbury, Timmins, Kirkland Lake, Esterhazy, and Mayo in Yukon Territory? My Party and the Government are not. We want to build the mining industry into a world-class industry and keep it there. That is the objective of our Party.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

VISIBLE MINORITIES

ANNIVERSARY OF BREAKING OF RACIAL BARRIER IN MAJOR LEAGUE BASEBALL

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, it was 40 years ago today that the legendary Jackie Robinson became the first black player to play major league baseball, thus breaking a racial barrier dating back to the birth of baseball in the mid-1800s. This event influenced the beginning of a movement against racial segregation and the oppression of civil rights which eventually culminated in the great success story of Doctor Martin Luther King.

Canada's multicultural society remembers and cherishes the efforts of a pioneer like Jackie Robinson, and today on the fortieth anniversary of his symbolic first game it would be fitting for all members and all Canadians to recognize and pay tribute to this human rights champion.

He proved that courage and perseverance will bring down all barriers to change. It is my hope that we, as a Parliament, apply the same conviction to the parliamentary reports "Equality Now" and "Equality For All", so that all Canadians, from all regions of the country, can be full and equal partners and enjoy the rewards and opportunities that Canada has to offer to one and all.

DISASTERS

FIRST ANNIVERSARY OF CHERNOBYL NUCLEAR ACCIDENT

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, Sunday, April 26, 1987, will mark the first anniversary of one of the most tragic and frightening events in modern history, that of the Chernobyl nuclear accident in the Soviet Ukraine.

Literally tens of thousands of Ukrainian citizens will suffer from the after effects of the tragedy, with an estimated 6,500 cancer deaths over the next 50 years in 11 regions of the Soviet Union affected by the fallout.

Studies by the International Atomic Energy Agency have stated that between 5,000 and 150,000 extra cases of cancer will occur around the world during the next half century as a result of the Chernobyl accident.

Women who were pregnant and lived near the nuclear plant will have a 50 per cent greater chance of giving birth to mentally disabled children.

Nuclear energy and nuclear reactors are part of our lives, but they must be made safe for the future. For the sake of our children and for our future generations, it is imperative that we remember and learn from this senseless and careless tragedy.

DISASTERS

FATAL ACCIDENT AT LEVACK MINE

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, today we are saddened by the deaths of four Inco miners who were killed yesterday in a tragic accident at Levack mine in the Nickel Belt.

These workers are Rene Bedard, 41, married with three children; Wilbrod Gauvin, 43, married with three children;

Donald Knight, 48, married with one child; and Germain St. Amour, 37, married with two children. They were inspecting the skip shaft at the 3,750-foot level when broken ore fell 900 feet on to the workers' platform, killing them.

There is no other occupation which is fraught with more danger than the miner's job. Yet, in spite of increased awareness for tougher occupational health and safety rules and practices for the mining industry throughout Canada, we experience tragic accidents like the one in Levack yesterday and Murdochville some weeks ago.

In fact, yesterday's fatalities bring to five the number of deaths at Inco for the month of April.

From time to time the House correctly recognizes the deaths of Canadians who have contributed to the building of our country. Well, Mr. Speaker, Rene Bedard, Wilbrod Gauvin, Donald Knight, and Germain St. Amour are representative of the millions of men and women who, without great fanfare, go about their daily work in building a better Canada yet face grave dangers to life and limb.

In fact these four men are a part of all of us, so we do not ask for whom the bell tolls. It tolls for us.

On behalf of all Hon. Members of the House I should like to extend our deepest sympathy to the families of these four brave men who died in the line of duty, and I would hope that we do the appropriate thing here and now.

Mr. Speaker: I ask Hon. Members to stand for one minute's silence as a gesture of faith, hope, and solidarity with the families of the victims of this terrible tragedy.

[Editor's Note: Whereupon the House stood in silence.]

Mr. Speaker: Oral Questions. The Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, of course we join in the eloquent tribute of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) in mourning the four dead miners and wishing their families our warmest sympathy.

FINANCE

PROPOSED DOME PETROLEUM TAKEOVER—ADVANCE TAX RULING

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to return, if I might, to the Minister of Finance about Dome Petroleum, following upon the answers which he gave in the House yesterday.

Is he claiming that he knows nothing about what could be the largest tax ruling in Canadian history? Is he telling the House that he is not involved in a tax decision which profoundly affects the economy of western Canada? Is he telling the House that he is not involved in a tax decision which could affect thousands of jobs in western Canada, Canadian ownership of our oil and gas industry, and could involve billions of taxpayers' dollars?

If he is, I am saying to him that it will not wash because it is not credible. What is he really trying to hide and who is he trying to kid in this House?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not trying to kid anybody. What I am saying is that tax rulings are the responsibility of the Minister of National Revenue. That is what I said yesterday.

A proposal has been put forward by TransCanada PipeLines to Dome Petroleum. It has not been accepted by Dome Petroleum. Until the time that a specific proposal is accepted by Dome Petroleum, I think we should wait to see what happens.

• (1420)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Technically, Mr. Speaker, the ruling has to issue from the Minister of National Revenue. The Minister knows full well that a tax decision of this magnitude must cross the desk of the Minister of Finance, he must be involved in it and he must know about it.

EXTENT OF MINISTER'S KNOWLEDGE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Does the Minister of Finance mean to say he is not aware of discussions regarding a tax ruling that may be the most important one in Canada's history, or of the fact that these discussions have been taking place since the beginning of March? Does he not know that his Assistant Deputy Minister, Mr. Ian Bennett, is one of the two senior officials who know all about this question? Doesn't the Minister know what is going on in his Department or doesn't he want Parliament to know?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am aware of what happens in my Department. I have not made any statement that would suggest that that is not the case. What I said in my previous answer and what I say again is that the responsibility for tax rulings is the responsibility of the Minister of National Revenue. I would have thought that the Right Hon. Member would know that, as a Minister of Finance himself at some time in the past.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister is correct, Mr. Speaker. I would have known about a decision of this magnitude had I been sitting on his side of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT ISSUE BE DEBATED IN PARLIAMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a final question to the Deputy Prime Minister, if he can speak on behalf of the Prime Minister. The Deputy Prime Minister knows that this type of ruling is a purely discretionary decision. It does not flow from the Income Tax Act. He also knows that the Prime Minister claims to have made the final decision in the Gulf matter.

Will the Prime Minister have the final say on whether or not a tax ruling will be issued in favour of Dome Petroleum or a purchaser of Dome Petroleum? Will he undertake—I do not want to interrupt the hurried consultations on the front bench—

Mr. Mazankowski: That is a silly question.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): "A silly question", the Deputy Prime Minister says. It is a silly question involving thousands of jobs and Canadian ownership of our oil and gas industry! Oh, a silly question?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gauthier: That was a silly comment.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I think the Deputy Prime Minister needs the next 10 days to reflect on that particular interjection. Will he give an undertaking that before that discretionary decision is made by the Prime Minister and his Government he will bring the issue before Parliament, because the Canadian taxpayer has a right to know what has happened?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, if the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition would permit me, I would say to him that he knows that this kind of a ruling is made according to well established processes. A taxpayer who wishes a ruling communicates with our Department, to the Deputy Minister or to the proper official. They seek to bring themselves within the income tax law. They set out the kind of proposition they have. We have the resources of the Department of Justice who assist in this very—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): And the Department of Finance.

Mr. MacKay: We have the resources within the section in our Department as the Opposition Leader knows, having been Minister of Finance, to make a proper decision based on the law and in an arm's length fashion. He knows the way this thing works.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is why I am asking.

GOVERNMENT POLICY QUERY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday the Minister of Energy said that when an offer is made to Dome Petroleum it will be considered by the Government in accordance with policies in place at the time. Policies, Mr. Speaker. What policies? The next policy of this Government on Dome Petroleum will be its first.

Why is the Government refusing to consider the problems and the choices affecting Dome Petroleum? They could have a devastating effect on 4,000 jobs in this country directly and probably another 20,000 jobs indirectly.

• (1425)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Hon. Member if he spoke out in the same way some five years ago in October, 1980.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): That is when the decision was made by the previous Government to put Dome in the position it is in today.

Mr. Rossi: You're skating around. You're trying to fool the Canadian people.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member does not like the truth. He is very sensitive about this because he knows full well that the position Dome Petroleum is in today started right there on October 29, 1980.

Mr. Rossi: He's skating around and he knows it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I know Hon. Members are aware that when we get into an unsolicited exchange it is taking away time from Hon. Members who are here to ask questions.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Minister of Finance that a Liberal Government would not back away from this problem and would not try to wash its hands of this very serious situation.

Why is the Government trying to have us believe that Canadians do not have a right to know about these choices and the proposals that are being made to the Government? Why is he refusing to keep Canadians informed of what is going on?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we are not backing away from these problems and certainly we are not causing problems the same way the Hon. Member's Government did some six years ago.

Let me leave one thought with the Hon. Member so he can mull it over in his mind in the next week and a half. There are certain transactions which are under way right now that, and possibly the Hon. Member might agree with me, are still confidential at this stage. Until that degree of confidentiality has been removed, I am not in a position to say anything more in the House than the Hon. Member.

REQUEST THAT CABINET MAKE DECISION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance and I preface it by saying that he is quite correct in pointing out the hypocrisy of the Liberal Party which gave away $1 billion to Dome Petroleum without bringing it before Parliament at all.

Mr. Penner: Save your sermons for Sunday, Ed.

Mr. Broadbent: They are a little sensitive, Mr. Speaker.

On October 17 the Minister of Finance said in the House with reference to the Gulf Canada deal that this was discussed in Cabinet, "and discussed at some length because of the importance of that deal". If he said that with reference to the Gulf decision, will he assure us that this decision will be one that is made by the Cabinet as a whole because up to $2.4 billion of taxpayers' money is involved and that after Cabinet reaches a decision, he will, unlike the Liberal Government, bring it before Parliament?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is jumping ahead of things. Two private sector companies are talking today. We have been told, and it is in the newspaper this morning, that two other companies might be possible contenders for this company. However, decisions have not been made by those companies.

We do not have a specific proposal with requests from either company or the other before us on which we can make decisions. Until that time, there is really nothing to talk about. A lot of hypothetical questions are floating around in the House, but until we receive specific requests we are not able to make any decisions.

REQUEST FOR GUARANTEE OF CANADIAN OWNERSHIP

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, we are looking for a specific commitment from the Government that it will bring the matter before the House.

There is a recent report in the Financial Times of London and, according to this news story, there has already been a deal negotiated to sell Dome to a foreign concern. Whether or not that report is true is beside the point I want to make in my question.

• (1430)

Will the Minister assure this House that the ownership of this important petroleum resource will remain in Canadian hands? In addition, because of the millions of dollars of taxpayers' money involved, will he see that the decision is brought before the Parliament of Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member says there is a report out there that says a deal has been made. I can assure him that as of 12.30 this afternoon a deal has not been made. In that sense all of the questions are hypothetical.

The Hon. Member says we should bring the deal before the House or before Cabinet. We do not know yet whether we have a deal. We do not know what the relationship of the Government of Canada might be to that deal.

The Hon. Member then goes on to say we must have a Canadian buyer and we have to make sure that no decisions be made relating to taxpayers' funds which confer a benefit here. The Hon. Member has to understand which way he is going on this. For that reason I think he should wait and be a bit more patient and understand what the circumstances are before he starts making all these requests.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, we know which way we are going but we are afraid the Government has put Canada up for sale. That is what we disagree with.

REQUEST THAT DECISION BE REFERRED TO PARLIAMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, it is a perfectly straightforward question. Will the Minister assure this House that Dome will not be allowed to fall into foreign hands? Because about 20,000 jobs and $2.4 billion of taxpayers' money are involved, will he also guarantee the elected representatives of the people of Canada, namely, this Parliament, that when the decision is made it will be brought before Parliament?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give him that assurance because I do not know what the deal might be.

Some Hon. Members: So what?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Hon. Members say "so what?".

Mr. Broadbent: When you make the deal come and tell us about it.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Possibly the Hon. Member should reflect on the fact that all we are talking about now is speculation. We do not know whether there will be a non-resident company negotiating a deal with Dome Petroleum. We do not know whether a tax concession will be requested. Until we know these things there is no point in making specific responses to hypothetical questions.

DISARMAMENT

U.S.S.R. OFFER ON REMOVAL OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Mr. Gorbachev appears to have made one of the most significant disarmament proposals in post-war history because it deals not only with intermediate-range nuclear weapons but also short-range, and we understand tactical battlefield weapons. The U.S. has said it is going to consult with its allies.

Will the Minister tell us whether the Prime Minister has contacted the President of the United States and encouraged him to respond favourably to this Soviet initiative?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it does indeed appear, on the basis of news reports available to us, that there has been another significant step taken. The Americans have agreed to consultations and have indeed put in place arrangements for consultations. I will be flying tonight to Brussels and meeting tomorrow morning at nine o'clock Brussels time with Secretary Shultz and other Foreign Ministers of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

[Translation]

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I hope the Secretary of State will take this opportunity to persuade our American friends to give a positive answer.

REQUEST GOVERNMENT ENCOURAGE PRESIDENT REAGAN TO ACCEPT DEFINITION PROPOSED BY MR. GORBACHEV

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, it seems that Mr. Gorbachev has made a new proposal about the extent of laboratory research on star wars.

Could the Secretary of State inform the House whether the Government will encourage the President to accept the definition proposed by Mr. Gorbachev?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, before either encouraging or discouraging, we would like to know the details of any proposal made by Mr. Gorbachev.

I hope that tomorrow, when I meet Mr. Schultz in Brussels, I will be able to get more details on the Soviet position and the position of the Alliance.

PROPOSED DOME PETROLEUM TAKEOVER—REQUEST FOR REFERRAL OF DECISION TO PARLIAMENT

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Finance some further questions regarding Dome Petroleum. I believe he implied in his answers that there has been no request by TransCanada PipeLines for either a tax ruling or tax concessions. He is telling us there is no deal and until there is such a deal the Government will not know about it. However, I wonder how TransCanada PipeLines can make an offer or arrange a deal without knowing what the tax implications are. Surely TCPL is anxious to know what the tax concessions and rulings will be.

Can the Minister tell us whether TCPL is asking for tax concessions or a tax ruling? In any event, would the Minister assure the House that a decision of that magnitude, affecting public revenues of up to $2.4 billion, will be discussed and scrutinized by the House of Commons? It is a question of parliamentary control over tax expenditures.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think I answered that question previously. We do not have a specific proposal in front of us endorsed by TransCanada and Dome. There have been some statements in the newspapers today. However, until we have action from both sides there is no position that we can take. We are going to follow this closely as we have been doing. As soon as there is a specific proposal to respond to we will do so.

INQUIRY WHETHER ADVANCE TAX RULING SOUGHT FROM REVENUE CANADA

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Has his Department been asked by TCPL for an advance ruling? If so, would the Minister also keep in mind the opinion of his chief advisers and management who, in a report produced in August, 1982, stated: "It is the opinion of senior management that the focus of tax avoidance has switched from implementing schemes to obtaining departmental approval through the advance ruling process and that legislation branch is now the frontline of tax avoidance"?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, certainly I will keep in mind that thought he has so ably expressed. I will also tell him, and he knows this, that it is a tradition, for good and sound reasons, and I believe the policy is well-founded, that the Department does not make any disclosure of any aspect of tax rulings, whether or not they are asked for, or any of the details surrounding them, particularly when, as the Minister of Finance pointed out, it is at such a preliminary and speculative stage.

ACQUISITION OF STOCKBROKERAGE FIRMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the answers we got yesterday and even today in the House are certainly not reassuring. Yesterday, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said from his seat that the Government had no intention of making any objections if Dome Petroleum were purchased by foreign interests. And yesterday, the Minister of State for Finance said that he was not worried at all about Canadian brokerage firms being taken over by American firms, for up to 50 per cent between now and June 30, 1988 and 100 per cent after June 30, 1988. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance, who is responsible for our financial institutions and who is the senior minister in this area: Is the Government going to wait until three quarters of our brokerage firms, the Wood Gundys, the McNeil Manthas, and the Richardson Greenshields are acquired by German, U.S., or Japanese firms, before it decides to intervene? What does it take for the Government to act before it is too late?

• (1440)

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Government is not giving foreign firms unrestricted access to Canadian financial markets. On December 18 I brought forward our policy on this matter which included three principles. The first is to maintain a strong and healthy Canadian presence in the sector. The second is to foster competition within Canada, which includes some foreign entry which has occurred in various financial institutions over the years. The third is that, to protect the ability of our world-class financial institutions abroad, we must give them some sort of access domestically.

Those are the three principles on which we are working. Our world-class institutions want access internationally because they can do very well internationally. Those are the principles which will guide our decision.

PURCHASE OF STOCKBROKERAGE FIRMS BY BANKS—JUNE 30 DEADLINE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, in his statement in December he said himself that as of June 30, foreign firms would be able to come and purchase our brokerage firms. What he just told the House is not only unsatisfactory, but there is also the fact that the big Canadian banks cannot purchase a controlling interest in a Canadian brokerage firm because they cannot get reciprocity in other countries.

So my question to the Minister of State for Finance is this. It will soon be June 30. If no action is taken, not only will our big banks not be able buy brokerage firms in Canada, because they cannot conduct transactions abroad, but we are also leaving the door open to a wholesale take-over of our brokerage firms by American, German, or Japanese interests.

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have to ask the Hon. Member to listen carefully to my answer.

Mr. Garneau: I did.

Mr. Hockin: Access of non-resident firms to the financial sector in Canada must reflect the kind of access that our firms are given abroad. That is the principle.

Mr. Garneau: You didn't answer the question.

Mr. Benjamin: Tell that to Crosbie on his deregulation.

Mr. Blaikie: Quiet, Les.

Mr. Andre: That's the smartest thing you've said all year.

FUTURE OF MANITOBA SUGAR-BEET PRODUCERS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board. Time is running out for the game of political chicken which the Minister is playing with the Government of Manitoba over the future of the sugar-beet industry.

Two years ago he assured the Government of Manitoba that it would not have to make any further contributions to the stabilization of the sugar-beet industry. Why is he now insisting that that Government share in any future deficits as a result of the tripartite agreement which the Minister wants that Government to enter into? Why is he insisting on that and thereby breaking the promise he made to the Manitoba Government in 1985?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, no one is playing political chicken. Growers find themselves in the very unfortunate position of being caught in a dispute between two levels of government. We think that the offer which we have on the Table is very reasonable.

The Hon. Member will know that in June, 1985, this House passed a Bill calling for tripartite stabilization in agricultural programs. He will also know that his NDP cohorts in Manitoba have already negotiated, with our very distinguished Minister of Agriculture, a tripartite scheme in hogs. If the Minister of Agriculture for Manitoba wants to talk about tripartite agreements with regard to hogs, I do not understand why he does not want to talk to the federal Government about tripartite agreements on sugar-beets.

We think the offer is reasonable. Everyone is accepting it except the Province of Manitoba. I urge the Hon. Member to do something with his cohorts in Manitoba in order that we can get away from this unfortunate position.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, the Minister did not answer the question. He knows that the Manitoba Government has made some concessions. It has offered to continue contributing what it began to contribute in 1985.

DEFICIT SHARING—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I want the Minister to address the question of deficit sharing which is clearly the most unreasonable demand the Minister is making of the Manitoba Government. Why is he insisting on that and, in so doing, putting at risk the sugar-beet industry in Manitoba?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, no one except the NDP Government in Manitoba thinks it is an unreasonable offer. The Province of Alberta would have signed this agreement over a year ago and will sign it tomorrow. As I said, no one except the NDP in Manitoba thinks it is unreasonable. It is very, very unfortunate that the NDP in Manitoba chooses this issue simply to attack the federal Government.

I concur with the comment in the Winnipeg Free Press that it is unfortunate that the NDP in Manitoba is using this as "an excellent opportunity to do some Ottawa bashing while saving a relatively small amount of money" at the expense of a very important industry to Manitoba producers. That is a very serious situation and we are trying to do what we can to break the log jam, as I said yesterday.

Mr. Murphy: You make a promise and you don't keep it. Your word is not worth a damn thing in Manitoba. Not worth a thing.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Ed, make a phone call. Make him shape up.

Mr. Garneau: There is no discipline there.

An Hon. Member: Show respect.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DEATH OF CANADIAN REPORTER IN LIBYA

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and is with regard to the tragic death of Southam reporter Christoph Lehmann-Halens in Libya yesterday under most peculiar circumstances. JANA, the official news agency for Libya, made the outrageous statement that Mr. Lehmann-Halens "committed suicide under the effects of what he saw of the damage caused by the American aggression".

We know the Government sent an envoy to Tripoli yesterday. Can the Minister tell the House what really happened? Can he inform us what has been determined by his Department as to the real cause of death of Mr. Lehmann-Halens?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that all Members of the House share my regret and that of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier at the death of Mr. Lehmann-Halens in Tripoli. The member is correct that I have dispatched a consular official from Rome who is now in Tripoli and is carrying out investigations and conversations with authorities of that country and with other diplomatic authorities. I do not yet have a report from that consular official but, knowing the Hon. Member's interest, I will make that information available to him as soon as I have it.

REQUEST THAT SECOND INDEPENDENT AUTOPSY BE CONDUCTED

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, we share the Minister's sympathy for the family. Will he advise the family that they can indeed assist the inquiry by requesting that a second autopsy be done by a third party independent of Libya to establish the real cause of death?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly consider doing that. I will report to the Hon. Member any responses which may result.

TIMING OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF INITIAL GRAIN PRICES

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board. He is aware that there is a considerable amount of confusion among western grain producers because no announcement has been made with regard to initial grain prices. We understand that the Minister has made a recommendation to the Cabinet. Can he tell us whether he or the Government intends to announce the initial prices today or this week?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. We are well along in the decision-making process and will probably be in a position to announce initial payments next week.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT—INTERIM PAYMENT INQUIRY

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the Minister was a Member of the House when it passed legislation which allowed interim payments under the Western Grain Stabilization Plan. Could he tell us when the farmers may expect an interim payment under this plan and how soon such payments will be made?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, we are also well along in the decision-making process with regard to what level the initial payments under the Western Grain Stabilization Act will be made. We hope to be in a position at about the same time to announce the size of the interim payment. We also hope that the cheques will be in the mail and the producers will have them prior to May 1.

INDUSTRY

SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION—MODERNIZATION PROJECT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion I will direct my question to the political Minister responsible for Nova Scotia who is intimately aware of the Sysco modernization.

• (1450)

The people of eastern Nova Scotia have been waiting since July of 1984 for the Government to honour its commitment with regard to the modernization program.

On Monday, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion added two new conditions with which the Government of Nova Scotia must comply before the feds would participate; a new universal mill and the cost to cover the cost of restructuring the debt. In response to this, the Premier of Nova Scotia said: "The universal mill and debt were not part of the modernization agreement—never made a commitment to Ottawa on either item".

The Minister is responsible and ought to be intimately aware of all the deals and items on modernization. Would he tell us who is telling the truth, the Minister or the Premier of Nova Scotia?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows, I am sure, that the federal Government is still committed to assisting Sysco in terms of improving its production and efficiency as well as to reduce its annual operating costs. Those discussions are taking place with the Government of Nova Scotia. The manner in which this assistance will be provided, and the most appropriate form, are part of the debate which is going on. However, the commitment is clearly there and I am sure that it will be resolved satisfactorily.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET PREMIER OF NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in response to that answer my supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. I wish to quote the Premier of the Province of Nova Scotia in regard to the statement of his own Minister: "Getting tired of Ottawa and some of their foolish statements".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dingwall: Members opposite may laugh but the people of eastern Nova Scotia are not laughing. They want to see—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dingwall: I ask the Deputy Prime Minister on behalf of labour, the business community and all those citizens of eastern Nova Scotia, will he dispatch the political Minister from Nova Scotia to Nova Scotia to meet with the Premier and resolve this issue this weekend?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Revenue has taken an active interest in this issue and has been intimately involved. I simply want to advise the Hon. Member that the business plan which is comprised of several points is being considered. I can assure the Hon. Member that the assistance which is committed will be provided in the best form possible so that this particular steel mill can be efficient, productive, and provide long-term jobs.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The standing committee studying the Forget Commission report tabled a report in this House on March 18. The report made 90 recommendations, 89 of them unanimously. The Minister promised that the report of the Standing Committee will be given adequate consideration when he replies to the Forget Commission Report on May 15.

I have been reliably informed that the Minister appeared before the Cabinet Committee on Social Development and proposed a slashing of $600 million to $1 billion from the unemployment insurance program as well as recommending only four of the 89 recommendations of the standing committee. How does the Minister justify recommending to Cabinet the slashing of $600 million to $1 billion from the unemployment insurance program at a time when this country is experiencing 1.5 million people unemployed?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt has lots of imagination and that he is misinformed.

[English]

AMOUNT OF BENEFITS—REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL COMMITMENT

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister thinks it is my imagination, perhaps he can give us all an assurance. In light of the fact that the present unemployment insurance program in the present fiscal year is scheduled to generate a surplus of $1.7 billion, will the Minister stand in this House now and make a commitment that in fact, whatever he announces on May 15, will not be a cut-back in payments to unemployment insurance recipients?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly not make any commitments, especially not on the basis of calculations by the New Democrats. I don't think that is the way to have a healthy economy in this country, especially where the Unemployment Insurance Fund is concerned.

STATISTICS CANADA

1986 CENSUS—POSSIBILITY OF MISTAKE CONCERNING QUEBEC—EQUALIZATION PAYMENTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Statistics Canada.

The Minister is aware of the fact that the Government of Quebec, through the Minister of Finance, has said that the 1986 Census is wrong and that its estimate of the population of Quebec is short by 86,000 people, which means that Quebec is being deprived of $30 million in equalization payments.

I would like to ask the Minister responsible for Statistics Canada—if her colleague would stop shouting so she can understand my question—what specific measures she intends to take to ensure that the 1986 Census data are accurate and that none of the provinces will be penalized as a result of the StatsCan data?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, the quality of the work done by Statistics Canada, which is a federal agency, is well known both nationally and internationally.

We have here a technical and statistical matter and I certainly do not want to turn this into an occasion for political rhetoric.

[English]

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, it is not Statistics Canada which is on trial, it is the way this Government has been running it.

DATA COMPILATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, given the fact that when the census people were appointed last year some people failed the tests with results of only 8 per cent or 9 per cent but were appointed anyway because they were relatives of Tory riding association presidents—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: —and given the fact that the Government had initially cancelled the census and reinstated it only at the last minute, can the Minister tell us what the Government is going to do to repair the damage caused by the previous Minister, who is now the Minister of Public Works, when he allowed that kind of political patronage to damage Statistics Canada the way he did?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, it is an insult to the students of Canada to assume the census was not properly taken because most of the work was done by students.

Yesterday, on the occasion of—

Mr. Boudria: That was not what I said.

Mrs. Vézina: —I assume the Hon. Member wants an answer . . . Yesterday I heard an evaluation of our census. It was very well done, and I have every confidence in the quality of the data collected by StatsCan.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—PROPOSED SALE OF PREFABRICATED HOUSES

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. What is the Government's reaction to the proposed sale of 20,000 prefabricated houses at a cost of $200 million to South Africa for the use of the South African Government, this sale being entered into by Canadian businessmen?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that sale is permissible under the existing law of Canada.

REQUEST THAT FULL ECONOMIC SANCTIONS BE IMPOSED ON SOUTH AFRICA

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, given the promise of the Prime Minister a little over a year ago that, if there was no progress in the dismantling of apartheid, the Government would impose complete economic sanctions on the South African Government, does the Secretary of State for External Affairs not think it is about time to take that list of sanctions out of his pocket and impose complete economic sanctions right now, instead of allowing Canadian businessmen to profit by building houses so that people will be moved out of their homes at the behest of the South African Government?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this particular question has been previously discussed between the Hon. Member and myself and others in the House, both in committee and in the House. The Hon. Member knows my view that it would be better for us to wait until the election, South African style, is concluded in South Africa. I think there are a variety of reasons for countries like ours not acting before that election.

I share what I am sure is the profound regret of the Hon. Member and the House that the Government of South Africa continues to take steps which become more ridiculous every day, leading to a situation now where it is illegal to carry a flower and illegal to sign a petition.

STATISTICS CANADA

CENSUS DATA CONCERNING QUEBEC—POSSIBILITY OF ACCELERATING REVIEW PROCESS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Supply and Services, and it has to do with the Quebec census which allegedly underestimated the number of people. I am surprised that the Minister should be so categorical concerning the quality of the census, bearing in mind that the Chief Statistician himself states that he cannot now express an opinion on the quality of the census and would rather wait for the fall data review, and considering that his assistant, Mr. Petrie, says the number of Quebecers may indeed have been underestimated.

My question to the Minister is this: Would it not be possible to accelerate the review process with a view to ascertaining the real Quebec population figures at an earlier date so that this province, hers and mine, would not be penalized under the Established Programs Financing? Could the review not be made earlier?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, a moment ago I could have alluded to the low percentage of mistakes that can be made in gathering such important data as those of the census. But I thought it was self-evident, that the Opposition would understand, that there is always room for slight differences in a census. That is the question. Data quality is good. The evaluations made by Quebec are different, while ours are final figures based on the official and national census which was carried out.

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT DOES NOT COMMIT ITSELF TO ACCELERATED REVIEW OF DATA CONCERNING QUEBEC

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, you would think the Minister herself took the census. Her Chief Statistician says he is not sure about the quality of the data. Deputy Chief Statistician Petrie says the number of Quebecers may have been underestimated. I fail to see why the Minister cannot commit herself now to accelerate the data review process so that Quebec, her own province, will be treated fairly with respect to transfers under the Established Programs Financing. We are talking about a $30 million revenue loss, not peanuts by any means!

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, he understands very well and he knows that the differences in earlier census were practically the same or, I am told, even much more significant in the last census taken in the 80s.

FISHERIES

FISHERMEN'S USE OF WHARF AT HORSESHOE BAY, B.C.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Will the Minister tell the House what he is prepared to do in conjunction with his colleague, the Minister of Transport, to ensure that there will be continued access by fishermen and other users of the Department of Transport wharf at Horseshoe Bay which has been used by fishermen for over 40 years? As of today fishermen are being told that they have to vacate it by Dan Sewell whom the Minister has just appointed to his regional advisory committee. What will the Minister do to ensure continued access to this public facility?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, this problem results from a complex deal involving a water lot owned in the name of the Municipality of West Vancouver which Mr. Sewell has leased from a previous marine operator. I can assure the Hon. Member that Transport Canada and the new owner, Mr. Sewell, are making every effort to ensure that these fishermen continue to have adequate moorage in that location.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

INDUSTRIAL MORTGAGES IN ALBERTA—ALLEGED DIRECTIVE FROM INSURANCE COMPANIES

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. Is the Minister aware that certain large Canadian insurance companies which have mortgage departments have informed their branches recently that so far as industrial mortgages are concerned no new money is to be lent in Alberta due to the province's economic difficulties? If the Minister knows about the situation, is there any action that he can take to ensure that industrial growth in Alberta is not curtailed as a result of this directive?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad that the Hon. Member has asked that question. It gives me an opportunity to tell her that I have been able to make some preliminary inquiries. I have not yet found any instances of any blanket lending freezes in Alberta, or anywhere else, although I have found some instances in which institutions will be reviewing their lending practices in light of certain regional economic problems.

I wish to take this occasion to tell the Hon. Member that the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and the Federal Business Development Bank are studying this matter. The Federal Business Development Bank hopes to be very active in this regard. Both the bank and the Minister are looking at this situation very carefully.

BANKS AND BANKING

CHARTERED BANKS' USE OF VARIABLE INTEREST RATES

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. What is the Government advising individuals and companies to do who feel that Canadian chartered banks have overcharged them interest and, in some cases, most substantially? As the Minister is aware there has been at least one court case in which the court has agreed with the bank customer.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, last week I answered questions similar to the one asked by the Hon. Member. To repeat the answer, the courts have proven to be the best place to deal with these situations. In come cases variable rates have been upheld and in others fixed rates have been upheld. The question of a constituent having to put down a deposit with the bank in order to have an inquiry made is something that concerns me. The issue is whether these charges are reasonable and reflect the actual costs of doing this type of research.

I want to say to the Hon. Member that if he has a constituent who feels that he has been wrongfully dealt with in this way, will he please get in touch with me. Perhaps after that it might be useful for me to get in touch with the institution concerned.

PRIVILEGE

THE RIGHT OF MEMBERS TO HAVE QUESTIONS BEFORE THE HOUSE PUT TO A VOTE—MR. SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: On December 4, 1986, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) raised a point of order concerning the right of members to ask for a recorded division, notwithstanding Standing Order 9(1). The Hon. Member also asked for clarification of the Chair's decision to declare a motion lapsed at the usual time of adjournment. On April 9 last Thursday, the Hon. Member raised another point of order when the Chair declared another motion lapsed at the time of interruption for lunch.

In the course of his comments, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier quoted Section 49 of the British North America Act which to him means that when a question is before the House, it shall be decided by a recorded division. The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier also referred to Beauchesne's, Citation 217, which describes the practice of having the Party whips march up the aisle and bow to the Speaker to indicate their members are ready to vote.

[English]

The Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell) argued in support of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier stating that he felt on December 4 the Deputy Speaker's decision was premature and that the division ought to have taken place.

I should first like to deal with the question of the time. I have reviewed the record and have come to the conclusion that the Chair intervened at the proper time. Second, the lapsing of motions is not new to this House and, in fact, pre-dates the 1982 bell ringing incident referred to by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier.

On July 23, 1969, Speaker Lamoureux refused to put a motion to the House after having put an amendment to it because by the lapse of time the main motion had become a nullity. Speaker Lamoureux felt that to put and divide on a motion that would in fact be inoperable was a waste of the time of the House. I refer Hon. Members to page 11513 of the debates of that day.

• (1510)

More recently, to quote only one of many precedents, Madam Speaker Sauvé, on May 17, 1983, as reported at page 25530 of Hansard, ruled as follows on a motion to adjourn the House when the ordinary time of adjournment had been reached:

> As the House had not seen fit to vote on this motion by 6 p.m., I have decided that Standing Order 8(1) must come into force.

Standing Order 8(1) was the Standing Order then dealing with the ordinary time of adjournment.

[Translation]

On December 3 last year, the motion before the House was: That the House do now proceed to Introduction of Bills. At 6 p.m., the usual time of adjournment, it would have been impossible for the House to proceed to Introduction of Bills, even if it had agreed to do so.

[English]

On April 9, 1987, the motion before the House at one o'clock was similar in that, if adopted, the House would have proceeded to Introduction of Bills. However, on Thursday it is not possible to proceed to Introduction of Bills after one o'clock because of Standing Order 19(4).

Previous Speakers have ruled consistently that motions such as to adjourn the House, to adjourn the debate, to proceed to the Orders of the Day, that an Hon. Member be now heard, are all inoperable beyond the ordinary hour of adjournment which is set by Standing Order 9(1). Such demanded divisions when the bells are ringing at six o'clock are therefore quite unnecessary and the application of Standing Order 9(1) supersedes their taking place.

The motion moved on April 9, 1987, was equally inoperable at the hour of interruption for lunch.

[Translation]

The Chair does not believe this practice infringes on our constitutional rights. The relevant sections of the Standing Orders prevail and render such motions null and void. A recorded division is, therefore, entirely useless.

[English]

Prior to the new rules, my predecessors have taken, from time to time, the initiative to suspend the sitting of the House when the bells were ringing beyond the ordinary time of adjournment on a substantive motion. This was done only after consultation with the Whips.

This approach was subsequently confirmed in a Standing Order which now allows either the Opposition or Government Whip to ask the Chair for a deferral. This can only be done on motions of substance.

[Translation]

I want to thank the Hon. Members for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) and Ontario (Mr. Fennell) for raising the matter and for giving me this opportunity to comment on the subject. I therefore declare that the rulings made at 6 p.m. on December 3, 1986, and at 1 p.m. on April 9, 1987, conform to the letter and the intent of the Standing Orders and also to rulings made by my predecessors. I also want to thank the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier for his comments.

[English]

The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier wishes to rise on a question of privilege. I think I should advise Hon. Members that the Hon. Member came to the Chair during Question Period and advised that he wished to raise this.

His difficulty, of course, was that the proceedings about which he wishes to raise the question of privilege did not conclude until approximately one-thirty this afternoon, if my facts are right. The Hon. Member will indicate if I am wrong.

However, the rule is that notice in writing must be received and I do not want to be in the position of having the Hon. Member's question of privilege interrupted on that account. Therefore, I would ask that the Hon. Member perhaps give me written notice and this will be raised immediately upon the House resuming.

I understand, having had discussion with the Hon. Member, that this is not something of vital import that would have to be settled before that day. In other words, the committee and the proceedings will not be functioning during the break.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, since we will not be sitting on Thursday this week, has the Government House Leader informed the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) what we will be doing when we return on Monday, April 27, 1987? Will he give us the menu and state exactly what it is that we will be asked to proceed with?

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I can give a Wednesday answer to the Thursday question. When the House returns on Monday, April 27, through Friday, May 1, we will call Bills C-22, C-37, C-42 and the motion respecting capital punishment. The exact order of these items will be announced at a later date.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to.

Time Allocation

Mr. Speaker: Motions. The Hon. Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Point of order!

PATENT ACT

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER REPORT AND THIRD READING STAGES OF BILL C-22

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I move:

That in relation to Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto—

Some Hon. Members: Point of order!

Mr. Gauthier: Point of order!

Mr. Andre:

—one further sitting day be allotted to the consideration of the report stage and two sitting days to the consideration of the third reading stage of the Bill; and

That fifteen minutes—

Mr. Gauthier: Point of order!

Mr. Andre:

—before the expiry of the time provided for government business on the day allotted to report stage consideration and on the second and final day of third reading stage consideration of the said Bill, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question necessary in order to dispose—

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Andre:

—of the stage of the Bill then under consideration shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Gauthier: Point of order!

Mr. Speaker: I find that the Hon. Minister had the floor.

Mr. Gauthier: I don't see you standing, Mr. Speaker!

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Andre, seconded by Mr. Mazankowski, moves that in relation to Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters—

Mr. Gauthier: Point of order!

Mr. Speaker: —in relation thereto, one further sitting day be allotted to the consideration of the report stage and two sitting days to the consideration of the third reading stage of the Bill;—

Mr. Gauthier: Is that fair play in the House of Commons?

Mr. Speaker: —and that 15 minutes—

Mr. Gauthier: Is that common sense and fair play, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: —before the expiry of the time provided for Government business—

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): There is a point of order here.

Mr. Gauthier: Point of order!

Mr. Speaker: —on the day allotted to report stage consideration and on the second and final day of third reading stage consideration of the said Bill, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question necessary in order to dispose of the stage of the Bill then under consideration shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Gauthier: Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre).

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Penner: Order!

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to finally have this opportunity—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I have never seen such behaviour on the part of a Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gauthier: Either your sight is wrong or your hearing is not there. I was trying to rise on a legitimate point of order after the vote. I immediately rose in my place and asked to be recognized. You did not see me. You preferred to see that Minister over there, which I think affects my privileges as a Member of this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gauthier: Why did you see that Minister over there and not see me? Under what rule did you see him rather than me?

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Some Hon. Members: Out!

Mr. Gauthier: I am asking questions because my privileges have been infringed upon—

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Gauthier: It is not shame. I want to know from that Speaker why he recognized that Minister when I was up on a point of order. Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly) came in after the question was put by you, sat in his place and voted. That is not regular. Citation 223 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition makes the point very clearly and I want to read it to you:

> A Member must be within the House and hear the question put in its entirety, in one of the official languages, or his vote cannot be recorded. It is not sufficient for him to hear it while he is in a gallery or behind the curtains.

• (1600)

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the Member for Comox—Powell River was not in his seat, did not hear the question and that, therefore, his vote should be scratched. That should have been dealt with before you recognized the Minister over there who, I do not know why, got the floor. It was a fix as far as I am concerned.

Mr. Rossi: It's a fix.

Mr. Speaker: I will hear the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), of course. He may want to rise again. He makes a very fine contribution to this place and is more knowledgeable about rules than many other members. However, I should indicate that there is a plethora of precedent for recognizing the Hon. Minister. I refer specifically to May 16, 1984, when Mr. Speaker Francis was in the Chair. He said:

> In accordance with established practices, when the Chair is to make a choice between a representative of the administration and the Government and another Member of the House, it is clear from Bourinot and parliamentary practice that the precedence goes to the representative of the administration who seeks to be recognized. That is the practice of Parliament and I am a servant of Parliament.

Some Hon. Members: But not on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister was recognized on Motions. I am indicating to all Members of the House that that is certainly not without precedent. There may be additional points of order raised and I am quite prepared to hear them. I will listen to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary for a few minutes.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, with specific reference to my colleague, the Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly), I believe the Hon. Member was within the bar of the House when the vote was called. He was not in his seat, but as far as I am concerned—and I think I speak for my Party—the Hon. Member was certainly within the confines of the House when the vote was called and I think his vote should be counted.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I realize that we are taking up valuable time on the closure motion which has been dragooned into the House of Commons, I think inappropriately.

I want to ask a question and seek clarification from the Speaker. When the result of the vote was announced I rose in my place on a very important question of privilege. It has always been my understanding that a question of privilege takes precedence. Will the Speaker indicate whether that is the case and under what conditions he chose to ignore my question of privilege?

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I want to make a brief intervention as well.

Your Honour quite properly recognized the Minister under Motions. I do not think any Member of the House would disagree that that was in order. The difficulty is with respect to what followed. As I understand it, as the Minister rose and began to speak under Motions Members rose in the House with questions of privilege and points of order. Your Honour chose to allow the Minister to conclude reading the motion. That is one thing. However, I would submit that what happened at that point is totally unprecedented and really quite remarkable.

Instead of turning at that point to those members who had been seeking the floor on questions of privilege or points of order, your Honour chose to return to the Minister for debate. I respectfully suggest that when Members of this House are standing and attempting to seek the floor on questions of privilege and points of order, for your Honour to turn a blind eye to those members and instead recognize the Minister for debate at two minutes to four is not only unprecedented but completely out of order.

I have one further point to make, Mr. Speaker. The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) gave notice of a motion. He indicated that he wished to proceed to Motions. My understanding is that the motion which was read by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) was in fact a Government Notice of Motion. It was not a Private Member's Motion but a Government Notice of Motion.

Your Honour will note that under Routine Proceedings there is provision for Government Notices of Motions and following that there is provision for Motions. The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council did not move that the House proceed to Government Notices of Motions. The Parliamentary Secretary moved: "That this House proceed to motions". In doing so he clearly bypassed all of the intervening proceedings including Government Notices of Motions.

Mr. Tobin: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) has the floor and I am listening carefully to what he has to say and taking notes. While he is speaking I am consulting with the Table Officers. I heard somebody call for a point of order. I hope it will not be necessary to interrupt the Hon. Member for Burnaby. The Hon. Member for Burnaby has the floor and I am listening.

Mr. Robinson: Just to conclude, Mr. Speaker, there are two fundamental points which I would ask the Chair to address. The first, with respect, is the totally unprecedented decision of the Speaker to ignore both points of order and questions of privilege which were pending before the House and to recognize the Minister for debate, knowing full well that other members were seeking the floor on questions of privilege and points of order. As I say, in my view that is both unprecedented and really quite unacceptable.

Mr. Speaker: It is my understanding that the period of debate for time allocation commences when the motion is presented.

Mr. Benjamin: We know that.

Mr. Speaker: This is the advice the Speaker has available. The period of debate commences when the motion is put, not when I recognize the Hon. Minister for debate. As a consequence, it is difficult for me to understand what difference it would have made even if I could have distinguished one shout from among the others. I think all Hon. Members are witness to the fact that there were a great number of members rising and expressing their points of view. In any event, it seems to me that it makes no difference because I am now entertaining any point which any member wants to make. As I said, I will courteously hear them.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, just to conclude, the point is surely not whether or not the two hours for debate on closure began to run at a particular time. The point is that there were members on their feet attempting to be recognized throughout the time that the Minister was reading the motion. Your Honour chose to ignore those members at that point.

Even more seriously, your Honour chose to continue ignoring those members and then to return to the Minister for debate. That is the point, not when the two hours start to run. With respect, I think the Speaker should explain to the House why those members who were on their feet with questions of privilege and points of order were completely ignored, and preference given to the Minister commencing his debate.

The second point—

Mr. Speaker: Allow me to answer that.

Mr. Benjamin: Let him finish.

Mr. McDermid: He's repeating himself. He said it all before.

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that immediately after recognizing the Minister for debate I interrupted him to hear these points of order.

• (1610)

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, without belabouring the point, the question is why the Speaker recognized the Minister in debate at all while those other points were pending.

My second point is the one I want to conclude with, that is the point I made with respect to the propriety of accepting this motion at all. As I said, there can be no doubt that the motion of which the Minister gave notice is in fact a Government Notice of Motion. It is not a Private Member's Motion. It is a Government Notice of Motion. Under Routine Proceedings we have obviously skipped over Government Notices of Motions.

Yesterday the President of the Privy Council and Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) moved that we proceed to Government Notices of Motions. Had that been done today, and had the vote been positive, obviously, we would have done so. However, I would submit we have passed not only Petitions and Introduction of Bills but we have also passed Government Notices of Motions. Therefore, the motion which was introduced by the Hon. Minister was improperly accepted, with respect, by the Chair. We should have proceeded to Motions not to Government Notices of Motions as per the motion of the Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I have been in this House for some eighteen and a half years. I have now seen six different Speakers. I want to suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, with respect, that what we saw this afternoon was something which was without precedent. In the 18 years I have been here, after every vote was taken, because of practice, convention, or precedent, Hon. Members were allowed to rise on points of order or questions of privilege to point out possible irregularities in the voting. There was that possibility today with two Liberal Members who walked around during the vote and the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly) who came in during the voting procedure.

In my 18 years in this House, there has been a practice, precedent and perhaps a convention that that be done. Today two Members of this House rose on a point of order or question of privilege to make those very points and the Chair did not recognize them. As far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, and I say this with great deference and respect, I think your action was unprecedented and unacceptable for the House of Commons.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by saying that I also have been sitting in this House for close to 19 years. I have never once seen a person rise either on a point of order or a question of privilege, not having precedence over any Member of this House who seeks permission to speak on debate or on Motions. I have never seen that happen with an Hon. Member, let alone a Minister.

I do not know how this came about. However, I would like to refer to yesterdays Hansard at page 5120. At the bottom of the page Your Honour is describing the function of the Speaker as follows:

> One of the functions of the Speaker is to ensure that the House is able to transact its business. This does not mean that the Chair plays any part in assisting the Government in the management of its business agenda.

I do not know if I have the attention of the Chair but I will continue. The Speaker then said:

> I want to repeat that; this does not mean that the Chair plays any part in assisting the Government in the management of its business agenda.

An Hon. Member: He just did.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): A Member has said that the Speaker just did. One thing which makes this suspicious is that Your Honour had a ready made ruling by a previous Speaker sort of handy, which comes as a surprise because this has never happened. Now, after we have had a pledge from the Speaker, the pledge I just read—and I do not know if I have Your Honour's attention but I would like to read it again— you said, Mr. Speaker, that the role of the Speaker is to ensure that the House is able to transact its business, and I quote:

> This does not mean that the Chair plays any part in assisting the Government in the management of its business agenda.

I am not sure whether this is what you were trying to do, Mr. Speaker, but all I am saying is that you are treading on thin ice. As a Speaker whom we respected from the time you took that office this is probably the first occasion that the Official Opposition may have to disagree with one move you have made.

I would like the Chair to reflect on this. Meanwhile, my colleagues and I will not be attending the reception Your Honour is giving at the end of this day in protest.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, what we have heard from Hon. Members opposite is indeed quite unfortunate. I have heard, if not direct, at least indirect challenges to the Speaker's ruling. The Hon. Member who just spoke said that in his 19 years he can never recall such an action. Those Members have short memories, Mr. Speaker, because I recall very clearly when we were debating the Western Grain Transportation Act, more familiarly known as the Crow debate, we were engaged in this same kind of exercise. I got into a bit of a dispute with the Speaker at that time because I tried to be recognized on a point of order.

Mr. Nystrom: Have fun, Don.

Mr. Young: You can have the whole thing, Don. Debate it yourself.

Mr. Mazankowski: The then Minister, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy)—

Mr. Keeper: Call an election.

Mr. Mazankowski: —was seen by the Speaker, moved the motion and spoke.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: I take exception, particularly, Mr. Speaker, to the comments from members opposite to the effect that the fix was in. If there was clearly any fix in, it was the deliberate actions of members opposite who were moving around during the course of the vote being taken deliberately attempting to interfere with the orderly process of the vote so that they could stand after and raise a question of privilege. In fact, two Liberal Members moved around quite freely and it was quite obvious it was deliberate because they are well-seasoned members, having been around here for a long period of time.

The Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly) came in later, very deliberately. That was going to create an occasion where a point of order could be raised, to engage in more frivolous, dilatory tactics, which is really interfering with the orderly process of this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: It is quite clear, Mr. Speaker, that members opposite cannot have it both ways. What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. What we have seen today is a clear and deliberate attempt on the part of the Opposition to frustrate the orderly progress of this House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It might make it easier for the Chair, under not particularly easy circumstances, if all Hon. Members kept their remarks to themselves unless they want to stand and be recognized and put a motion through the Chair.

First, I have listened to admonishments from certain Members in the Chamber in the last few minutes directed toward the Chair. Those members are respected members of this place and members for whom I have a very high regard. I would, of course, consider those admonishments and hope that in due course, perhaps, the fervour of them might be somewhat muted. However, it is not unusual, at times when there are matters of considerable division in this place, that feelings run very high. As a consequence, it is always a possibility that the Chair can be in the centre of that cross-fire. I do not feel that I am that much different from any other Speaker, knowing that it can happen to me as it can happen to others. I hope that most of the time it will not happen.

It seems to me that what has irritated some Hon. Members and made them feel that the ordinary practices were not followed in this place is specifically the question of whether or not the Chair should have recognized the Minister. The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) indicated that it was not appropriate for the Minister to introduce this motion on "Motions", that it should have been introduced on "Government Notices of Motions". Time allocation motions have been moved under "Motions" since as long ago as 1971, as I am informed, so this is not something new.

Second, I would like to try to give some indication, especially to the public, that what we saw this afternoon has happened before in this Chamber. When I say "has happened before in this Chamber" I mean that a number of members have felt that they had points of order or questions of privilege to raise at a certain stage in the proceedings. I want to remind Hon. Members that on October 26, 1983, as reported at page 28349 of Hansard, the following is indicated:

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

The following is what is shown in Hansard, and those who work for Hansard may well have missed some of it:

MADAM SPEAKER: Motions.

AN HON. MEMBER: A point of order—

MR. MAZANKOWSKI: A point of order.

MADAM SPEAKER: The Minister of Transport.

MR. AXWORTHY: Madam Speaker, I move—

MR. MAZANKOWSKI: A point of order.

MR. NIELSEN: A point of order.

MR. EPP: A point of order.

MR. MCKNIGHT: A point of order.

MADAM SPEAKER: The Hon. Member for Vegreville.

HON. DON MAZANKOWSKI (VEGREVILLE): I move:

That the Hon. Member for Yukon be now heard, Madam Speaker.

MR. PINARD: —

Mr. Pinard was the House Leader of the Liberal Government at that time.

MR. PINARD: A point of order.

AN HON. MEMBER: There is a motion on the floor.

MR. PINARD: A point of order.

An Hon. Member: Where is this leading us?

Mr. Speaker: I am just trying to give some indication that while some members may not have been happy with the fact that the Chair recognized the Minister, it is not the first time that it has been done. Mr. Pinard said:

Madam Speaker, with due respect, you are aware that I may raise a point of order before the Chair puts the motion, which it has not yet done. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) had already started to speak when the Member opposite was recognized on a point of order, and consequently, he is out of order and does not have the right to move his motion at this time.

MR. NIELSEN: The motion must be put, Madam Speaker.

Then, on the next day, on October 27, 1983, the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) rose and raised this entire matter. Madam Speaker dealt with it, and I will not go into all of what was said. I want to indicate to Hon. Members, and I will continue to hear debate on the point of order, that it just may be that what happened here in the House this afternoon is not as unprecedented as some Hon. Members have thought.

The Chair recognizes the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Lewis), and will then recognize the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme).

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that my associate Parliamentary Secretary and I have worked long and hard with the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) and we are seeing definite signs of improvement.

I wish to touch on one or two matters, Mr. Speaker. First, with respect to the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly), he was, as I indicated earlier, definitely within the confines of the House. He was in the House when the vote was called by the Chair. I very clearly felt that he should have the right to cast his vote, whether or not he was technically in his seat, since he was making an effort to get to it, albeit a belaboured one.

With respect to recognition by the Chair, I think the precedent which Your Honour has cited is very exact in regard to what does happen in fact in this Chamber; that is to say, we all rise to make an effort to be recognized. I do not think there is any Member in the House now or any member who has served in the House prior who was recognized first every time he or she thought he or she should be recognized first. Those are the breaks of the game and it happens.

I respectfully suggest that the operative words, the words which in fact started the clock ticking on this motion, and which were placed as I understand it from the Table at 3.56 p.m., were the words: "I move". The Minister for Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) used those words as quickly as he could.

Finally, I would like to deal with the comments of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), who takes issue with the exact position on the Order Paper and Notices where this motion was moved.

Mr. Speaker, in your ruling yesterday you specified that you could best serve the interests of the House by allowing the motion moved yesterday by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council. That motion was to move to Motions. I point Your Honour to Standing Order 117 which states:

A Minister of the Crown who from his or her place in the House, at a previous sitting, has stated that an agreement could not be reached under the provisions of Standing Order 115 or 116 in respect of proceedings at the stage at which a public bill was then under consideration either in the House or in any committee, and has given notice of his or her intention so to do, may propose a motion—

It does not state "may propose a motion under Government Notices of Motions". It seems to me that the results of Your Honour's ruling are very definite. Once we got to Motions, and abiding by the tradition that a Minister of the Crown is normally recognized first, then it was entirely in order that my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, be recognized first and, second, used the words "I move", and therefore set the clock ticking on this two hour debate.

In closing, I suggest that this two hours would be better spent by members of the Opposition arguing the merits of whether or not time allocation should apply. The real merits of a time allocation motion are, first, is the amount of time appropriate, that is, the amount of time left to complete the Bill; and, second, is it appropriate that the Government place the motion at this point. I submit, Mr. Speaker, I could read into the record the figures with respect to the amount of time but, in fact, most of that is referred to in your ruling. I do not believe in repeating things that are already in Hansard. In Your Honour's ruling you referred to the amount of time that has been spent on this Bill to date. If I were a member of the Opposition disputing the question of whether or not there should be time allocation, then during this two hours in which I had a chance to debate I would be debating whether or not there should be time allocation rather than trying to split hairs.

I leave the floor with those remarks.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) said that he will leave the floor. I find it extremely arrogant that the Hon. Member should tell members of the Official Opposition and members of the other Party—

Mr. Lewis: I suggest!

Mr. Prud'homme: —how we can use our time. We do not need to be told by the Deputy House Leader—

Mr. Lewis: Just trying to save you from yourself.

Mr. Prud'homme: —how we should use our time. It is as arrogant as the Minister saying: "It will be my way or else". We have had such an experience before. I am sorry to say to you, Mr. Speaker, that the events of today will poison for quite some time the relationship that we have with the Chair and with the Government.

I would now like to say to you, Mr. Speaker, that we have to get back to the series of events which took place. We all know that it was at 3.56 p.m. We all know that the motion means two hours of debate. However, we also know that as soon as a vote has taken place there has been a long practice in the House, which I have never seen broken, where a member could get up and say: "I did not vote for the following reason . . . ', "I was late, therefore strike my name", or "I have seen a member who had no right to vote therefore he should not have voted". That has always taken precedence as a point of order. More particularly, when a Member of the House such as the House Leader of the New Democratic Party rises on a question of privilege, I submit that surely that takes precedence over anything else, even my point of order.

We saw, in an extreme arrogant and bouffon way—and the television will prove what I am saying—the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) bent over and talking into the microphone. You will see that this is not the best day in the House of Commons. I suggest that members watch the television later and see how the Minister introduced his Bill in the most bouffon way I have seen in the House of Commons. Before members quarrel with me, I suggest they watch the television and ask if that is how they want to conduct the affairs of the House of Commons. We do not have lessons to learn—

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): You would be so puritan!

Mr. Prud'homme: The Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Côté) says that—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) has the floor and, as a senior member of this place who has a great deal of experience, is certainly entitled to be heard. The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I want to put on the record that we have rules in the House and we just want and expect them to be followed.

It is not every day that we see the Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) rise in such an outrage. I have never seen him like that. Some may say that it is a show, but there are shows and there are shows in political life. He was on his feet and the Minister insisted on keeping the floor in order to put the motion which should have been put at least after hearing the question or privilege of the House Leader of the New Democratic Party about the right of a Member to vote or not to vote.

We know that it was 3.56 p.m. and that the Government decided to get rid of this today before six o'clock no matter how it does so. I want to say that the Government may get rid of it, but people at home should know, because I checked with the Chair, that while I am debating I am taking up the two hours. These questions of privilege are taking away from the two hours for the time allocation debate. That is probably why the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader is asking why the time is not used better, but there is a more important matter than a two-hour debate. It is the rules of the House and how we conduct ourselves.

Without a shadow of a doubt, the Speaker must always remain out of the debate. It is for Members of the House to decide on how they want to dispose of matters.

Many abuses by the Official Opposition took place in the past when we were in government. Surely no one can say that we have done so since September 4, 1984.

I can say to the House Leader, my respected friend, that if the affairs of the House are to be run this way he, or whoever takes his place, will have a hell of a time from now on. That is not in the best interest of the Government in conducting its own affairs and it is not in the best interests of the Minister who imagines that he will ram this Bill through the House. That fight is far from over.

I submit that today's events should never have occurred. There are ways in which to conduct the affairs of the House and we know when there is abuse. We wanted to make our point and there was no abuse. I ask my respected friend, the House Leader, what difference it would have made to have given another 15 minutes and completed the two hours of debate on the Bill on April 27 or later. Is it not possible to wait a few more days in light of the great passion in this debate?

Of course, the Government was elected and has the right to govern its own affairs. However, it must also understand the frustration of Members on this side of the House who have worked in the committee for months.

The spirit of the McGrath report was to give more power to the members and, at long last, give them an input into legislation. The Opposition put 43 amendments, and 43 amendments were rejected by the Government. I respectfully submit that if that is the spirit of the McGrath report, we might as well bury it today.

Our representative, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall), devoted all his time in committee in the belief that he could make the Bill better. I accept that many of the amendments are not acceptable to the Government, but surely a few of them could have been acceptable. Since they are not acceptable we are using the last resort.

If the Government wants to pass its Bill as is, if it does not want members to work in committee and propose amendments, and then rams it through when it returns here so there will be no chance to expose the amendments that were rejected in committee, I say to the House Leader that he will be in trouble because the Bill is far from finished. The spirit of today will be reflected in the months to come. I dare say to the Minister that if he thinks he will have his Bill sooner as a result of his actions today, he is wrong because it is far from finished. I very much regret the events that took place today.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I am rising on the same question that my colleague, the Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), raised earlier before you did what you did.

I guess that it is with a great deal of sadness that you refused to acknowledge my colleague and, indeed, the Member from the New Democratic Party on a question of privilege and proceeded as you did. I have had great respect and admiration for the Chair, but particularly for the individual who occupies the chair.

I suppose what is particularly difficult about your recent behaviour on this aspect is the fact that, just by coincidence, you were well prepared to cite precedents, as you say—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Order.

Mr. Mazankowski: Order.

Mr. Dingwall: Perhaps the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski)—

Mr. Speaker: I think I asked Hon. Members that, unless they stand and put questions to the Chair, they keep remarks to themselves. The Hon. Member is making a point. It might be more helpful if the Hon. Member confined his comments to exactly what it is that may or may not have been done correctly. The Speaker is not omnipotent and may well make a mistake. However, I know that the Hon. Member, no more than he would want to impugn the motives of any Hon. Member, would not want to impugn the motives of the Speaker. It should not be surprising that a Speaker who is trying to pay attention to the complexities of this place will often have authorities available. I would ask the Hon. Member to continue.

• (1640)

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I thought I was being heckled by the Deputy Prime Minister who does it quite regularly, despite his assertion.

Mr. Mazankowski: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I did, if you want to call it heckling. I do not think any Hon. Member has the right to impute motives to any other member, particularly the Speaker, and he should recognize that.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I should like to respond—

Mr. Speaker: I will hear the Hon. Member, but the point which is being argued here is basically whether or not the Speaker was right or wrong in giving the floor, under the circumstances, to the Minister. That is the point.

I have suggested that that has been done in the past. I am listening to Hon. Members. Those of us who have been in this place a long time will recognize when people feel very strongly about something. The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) referred to this particular Bill evoking strong emotions. The Chair knows that and understands that.

However, surely at this stage we could call upon our collective experience and allow Hon. Members to make their statements. The only thing the Chair is asking is that comments be directed to the specific point. No Chair will make the right decision all the time; the Chair could well be in error, but I am listening to the points which are being made.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, in my view the Deputy Prime Minister continuously likes to take cheap shots. The only one in this Chamber today who has impugned the motives of other members is the Deputy Prime Minister who sits over there. It is not Members on this side of the House; it is the Deputy Prime Minister. What can you expect, Mr. Speaker, from a used car salesman?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dingwall: What can you expect, Mr. Speaker? The civility about which he likes to talk in the scrums is just not there.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Dingwall: With regard to what happened, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier stood and repeatedly called to the order of the Chair—

Mr. Nowlan: If you are going to get that personal, you will have to take it too.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps Hon. Members would leave it to the Chair to decide what is—

Mr. Gauthier: Two years to go, Pat, the longest two years you guys will ever see.

Mr. Rossi: Go back to sleep.

An Hon. Member: Don't lose your hair over it.

Mr. Speaker: I ask all Hon. Members, unless they have the floor, to constrain themselves, please. The Hon. Member has the floor and the Chair is listening to the Hon. Member. I ask Hon. Members to co-operate in letting me listen.

Mr. Dingwall: As I was saying, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier rose and shouted to the Chair to be recognized. In addition, the House Leader of the New Democratic Party did likewise. For whatever reasons, the Chair chose not to look. Either the Table Officers did not inform him, intentionally or unintentionally, but Members rose on questions of privilege and points of order which they believed, and still believe, were important. For whatever reasons, the Chair chose to recognize the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre).

You well know, Mr. Speaker, as a result of your ruling yesterday in this Chamber, that the Bill on which the closure motion has been put to the House evoked a great deal of emotion on all sides, so much so that numerous amendments have come forward, some at the legislative committee and most, if not all, at report stage of Bill C-22.

I find it to be particularly odd in view of all the circumstances—the rising of the Minister, your having quick access to information to support your decision, the refusal to recognize Hon. Members who stood in their places and begged for the attention of the Chair, and nothing happening from the Table to inform the Speaker as to who was trying to seek the floor. All these events are quite annoying, in view of what was said yesterday in the ruling in terms of the common sense, fairness, and civility you wished to have in the Chamber.

I am ashamed to have to rise and speak the way I am. This is an important piece of legislation. For Hon. Members opposite to construe as they have this particular course of action, I find to be despicable.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief, but I do not know how sweet. I am not very happy about what I have been exposed to this afternoon.

I did not intend to participate in this question of privilege. I understand the opinions on the Bill. Quite frankly, Hon. Members opposite may be very surprised at even how I may finally vote on the Bill.

I am absolutely bothered, as we head toward the Easter recess, to hear the sham and hypocrisy we have heard in the House this afternoon on what occurred about an hour ago.

The reason I am standing is not a result of the remarks of the last speaker who got most personal. I uttered from my seat some personal remarks too, which do not make me happy. However, when one starts to reflect upon the backgrounds of Members of Parliament in an attempt to support one's argument and starts to reflect upon the heritage of Members of the House, it shows how weak the argument is.

I would say, never having been a used car salesman but having been from the last of the priesthoods, the law, that used car salesmen in the country most likely are held in higher repute than lawyers, in view of all the shysters in the world.

I am completely and absolutely horrified that a colleague from Nova Scotia would stoop to such low tactics when he has the ability to conduct himself in a logical way. However, that was not the reason I rose, although I was listening. I rose because—and I am glad he is here—the crown prince of self-righteousness, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom), tried to pull the shrouds of experience by standing in his place and piously saying: "Mr. Speaker, I never saw this happen before. I never saw a Minister recognized when Members of the Opposition were standing on points of order, questions of privilege". They were points of garbage.

I will update the Yorkton—Melville prince of righteousness, the Prince Dauphin of the New Democratic Party of Saskatchewan that he would like to be. With three more years in the House than he has, with 21 years in the House, I understand the frustration of Hon. Members opposite. Frankly I do not know if I have made the transition. I am not in the Government. I am not in the Opposition. I am just a government back-bencher.

I understand the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) whom I respect thoroughly. However, his argument falls flat on its face. He referred to the "passions of this debate". Why not let the debate get on? That is what the Minister wants, and we use procedural tactics perhaps to bring it into focus.

As I said, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville said that this had not happened before. I sat where my hon. friend sat for many years, and often I would rise on a question of privilege, sometimes real, sometimes sort of suspect. Sometimes it was a political question of privilege. Sometimes it was a real point of order. Sometimes it was sort of a partisan point of order. And do you know, Mr. Speaker, what happened? The Speaker sometimes recognized me, whether he or she—usually she didn't because I never got along with that Speaker—

• (1650)

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: I certainly had problems with other Speakers, Speaker Jerome, for instance. Speaker Lamoureux was my first Speaker. He was my trainer, in effect. Sometimes he recognized me and sometimes he did not. But if he did not recognize me, Mr. Speaker, I did not stand up on another spurious point of order, cast aspersions and reflect on the character of the Government House Leader who was trying to carry on the government debate. Many times I did not get recognized, but I took my lumps and vowed to come back another day.

That is what members opposite with integrity do, and most of them have integrity. Unfortunately, perhaps the passions of the debate have carried everybody too far, but let us not get down into the lower swampland and cast personal aspersions on people who are are trying to do the nation's business. No wonder this institution is in such a state of ill repute when this type of thing goes on, together with the sham and the hypocrisy. What about all those members opposite who have been here 18 years? The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) cannot say on a stack of Bibles that it has not happened X number of times that a Speaker quite properly, when there were a lot of members talking and standing, recognized the Minister of the day.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, like my colleagues I was able to witness an incident which is regrettable indeed and which will certainly be noted in the records of this Parliament. Any impartial observer, a Member on either side of the House—perhaps we had a purpose, but I am convinced that people in the press gallery or visitors in the galleries did realize that something happened in this House when the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) was recognized, that it was certainly not as fair and as obvious as some Government Members would have us believe.

Mr. Speaker, it is a fact that it did look as though the Chair—if it did not act in connivance—was so much aware of the intentions of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs that it gave him a practically privileged opportunity. I think that Members of the Opposition who are witnessing the tyranny of the majority are saying to themselves: If Mr. Speaker has a problem with his left ear he cannot hear points of order or questions of privilege, and he is already prepared to justify his action. Mr. Speaker, I think the whole institution stands to suffer from it.

And when a clown like the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs who made us . . . I can hardly wait for the public to pass judgment on him, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. Duplessis: Look at yourself before calling others clowns.

Mr. Lapierre: I am anxious to see how the public will judge the attitude of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. As far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, I feel this is not to the benefit of this institution and certainly not to the benefit of this Government, because there is a principle that all Members in this House are equal. And normally, whether a Member is a Minister of the Crown or not, he has no privileged access to the Chair.

And my personal impression, Mr. Speaker, which I hope in your final remarks you can correct, my impression is that you were aware of the intentions of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and that if you did not favour him, at the very least you meant him no harm. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that any member who witnessed that unfortunate exercise, and more still the attitude of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs himself, will ensure that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, in view of his attitude, certainly will have tremendous problems having his legislation passed. Because if he thinks he will use majority tyranny along with, whatever the term may be, some kind of perceived complicity, I believe that the minister, who should know all the rules of fair play, should remember that it is not with that kind of little tricks that he will push his legislation forward.

There are other means which the Opposition may use to bring the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to his senses and to make sure that he does not benefit from his petty attitude. When I hear my hon. friend opposite mention democracy, I feel that democracy itself should make it possible for us to be heard just as much as a Minister of the Crown. Yet, Mr. Speaker, the impression we had, perhaps wrongly, is that there were hearing problems on the left side and that the Minister of the Crown was quite prepared to make his little show, move his motion and that he was more lucky than the rest of us.

For the relevancy of the institution and especially for the recognition of the justice and fairness principles generally, Mr. Speaker, I suggest this is a dark day indeed. Personally, as a member of this House . . . I am sure that from now on several of my colleagues will seriously question the objectivity of the Chair's rulings. This situation is deplorable, because ever since your appointment to this noble position, Mr. Speaker, you had shown a high level of objectivity and fairness, and everybody had praised your efforts so far. I find this deplorable, especially in the context of a Government with a 211 member majority. If the Opposition starts feeling persecuted and unfairly treated, the atmosphere in the House will automatically deteriorate. I feel the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs should be the person most directly concerned about this, because in my opinion he has abused your kindness, Mr. Speaker. I dare hope that following the debate on this point of order, you will show your fairness about the Minister of Consumer and Corporte Affairs' attitude toward the quite legitimate point raised by my colleague the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier who could not be heard at the proper time. And I think, Mr. Speaker, that if we want to have some order in this House, that kind of puny tricks cannot be allowed and surely the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) will deeply regret his attitude today, because I am convinced that he is involved in that scheme. The whole House surely feels frustrated and finds disrespectful the petty scheming of the Deputy Prime Minister. You may be assured, Mr. Speaker, that this will have a serious effect on our attitude towards the Government and the Chair, because we will make sure in the future that we will not give up an inch because as it is often said: once bitten twice shy. However, Mr. Speaker, the Members of this House will have the opportunity to reflect on the matter during the Easter holiday and even if Easter is supposed to induce generosity, I can tell you that we will not forget it and things will not be easier on our return. The one who will surely most suffer about it is the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs because his contrivance is not consistent with the principles of equity, fair play and give-and-take which should be enforced in the parliamentary process. Mr. Speaker, if we ignore these principles, there is always a price to be paid. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has already paid the price in full view of the people of Canada, and we are certainly not going to make things easy for him, because if that is how he operates, Mr. Speaker, we can play that game too, and if he wants to break the rules, Mr. Speaker, two can play at that game.

I would therefore ask the Chair to reflect on these matters and help us restore a semblance of equity to this House, because I must admit that the effect of today's proceedings has certainly not been to make us feel that the principles of consideration and fairness are alive and well in this House.

[English]

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I do not plan to add much to this debate today, only to preface some of my remarks by saying that the rules of any institution, or any set of rules, are only as good as the players. If people choose not to follow the rules but to use other reasons for their conduct, then we will not be able to proceed as we ought to in any situation.

• (1700)

I would like to refer to Citation 81 in Beauchesne's Fifth Edition under the heading Raising a Question of Privilege. Just before four o'clock today, on behalf of a very serious matter we discussed in caucus earlier, I rose on a question of privilege. Citation 81 reads as follows:

> By its nature, a question of privilege is of such importance that it may be raised at any time, and S.O. 17 makes provision for the precedence of a question of privilege over all other business of the House.

I am fortunate enough to sit in the front benches and I have a loud voice. When I rose today, I felt that I was completely ignored. It is clear to me what a question of privilege is and when it should be recognized. I find it very difficult to understand why the decisions made today were in fact made. I respect them, but it seems to me that raising a question of privilege, according to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, is clearly something that ought to be recognized at all times.

Mr. Speaker: Just by way of comment, I have listened very carefully to the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), who I think is very well respected in this Chamber. Without making a ruling now, I would just comment that the general rule in most cases is that unless a question of privilege arises out of the proceedings that are taking place right at the moment, there is, in the usual course of events, notice. However, I will try to deal with all of these things when I respond to the points that are being made.

I wonder if Hon. Members would let me note that there were some points that have not yet been made with respect to some Hon. Members and their votes or lack of votes during the division. Perhaps someone could alert those Hon. Members to the fact that I would be pleased to hear from them on those points. In the meantime, we will carry on with the point of order and I will hear Hon. Members.

Mr. Della Noce: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I do not want to get into debate, but I would like to make a point about the remark made by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall), who said: "What do you expect from a used car dealer?" I have been a used car dealer for the last 20 years, Mr. Speaker, and it is one of the most honest things I could do to serve my community. I can tell my hon. friend that I was so honest that I still have all my hair, and I never had a complaint and I brought my family up. I am proud to see that there are some car dealers present in the House, and I think it is an honest job. Everyone has a car. There are more than 22,000 used car dealers in Canada who will be offended by that remark. In my riding, there are many car dealers who will be offended. I personally am offended and I am sure my hon. colleague, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), is as well.

Mr. Speaker, my health does not permit me to argue with the Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) who I must say has given a most despicable performance in the House today by giving a—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members have been rising on a point of order after an incident in which very strong feelings were expressed. I notice that at the wish of the Chair, Hon. Members have been addressing themselves more and more explicitly to the actual point that I must consider. I would ask the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) to leave his remarks where they are. He has expressed, with I think some sincerity and certainly some knowledge, his feeling that people who deal in the motor vehicle trade are respectable Canadians. I think perhaps that is where we can leave it.

I just might say that for centuries there have been opinions about lawyers and none of them have been very complimentary. Lawyers are quite used to being assailed by writers, comics, sometimes politicians, clients and the public. Shakespeare was very aware of this when he said in one of his plays: "The first thing we do, let's hang all the lawyers".

Perhaps I cannot rise in defence of lawyers but I can rise in defence of people in the retail motor vehicle trade. I notice that courtesies are being extended here, and I would ask that all Hon. Members address each other with the courtesies of which we are all capable. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) may want to say something that I hope would be helpful.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I say to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) that I wish to withdraw from the record the reference I made earlier. This has not been a very easy day for Members of Parliament on this side of the House in view of what has transpired, but I withdraw that remark.

Mr. Speaker: I would hope that Hon. Members would give the appropriate appreciation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that my honourable colleague for Cape Breton has seen fit to make a clarification with apologies, and I hope the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) can do the same when he refers to gentlemen without hair, because I have no hair and boast of no less honesty than the Hon. Member for Duvernay opposite.

All this to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that even though I do not have the experience of the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan), who has been here for 21 years, I have been here for eight years. Rather than repeating everything that has been said concerning the rules and so forth, I would simply like to say one thing, and this is that I am very much disappointed with what transpired today, because since you have been in office, Mr. Speaker, I have seen with what competence, skill and impartiality you have led the proceedings here. For that you deserve commendation, Mr. Speaker.

When I say I was disappointed, Mr. Speaker, it is because I have witnessed today something that is most improper, for which reason I allowed myself to shout at my good friend, and I do say my good friend the Deputy Minister, and I say very good friend, because I never saw the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) act in that way, and I myself got carried away.

All this to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the farce has been carried so far, and correct me if I am wrong, that the Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) went so far as to stand up for the opposition Member, claiming he came into the House on time and he was on time. I have been here for eight years, Mr. Speaker, and never did I see a government Member see an Opposition Member come into the House and suggest everything was alright, he was entitled to vote. As far as I can remember, I have never seen that.

So there was something to defend. This seemed to be pure and simple scheming, and never did I see, since I have been here, anything so fine-tuned, anything so well prepared—in some aspects of the Criminal Code, there is reference to complicity before and after the fact.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I hope that this kind of incident will never happen again. About the question of privilege, I feel personally that the New Democratic Party House Leader was on its feet long before the Minister, and so was the Whip of my Party. Mr. Speaker, I want to tell you quite frankly that until today, you had managed to fascinate me by the way you had conducted the proceedings, your command of the French language and everything you have done. Today, however, I must quite honestly, objectively and sincerely admit that I am disappointed with the way the House Leader and Deputy Prime Minister has behaved—without accusing you of anything, Mr. Speaker, and you can believe me when I say that I admire enormously the way you operate—I am disappointed with what happened in the House.

I hope that in the future the Government will not use again these underhanded tricks, because that's what they are. They are the underhanded tricks of the Deputy Prime Minister, of the Minister and of most everybody; if the House had listened to the NDP House Leader and the Whip, I dont think that this incident would have happened and I am sorry it did, Mr. Speaker. I sincerely hope that it will never happen again.

• (1710)

[English]

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I want to add a few comments on this point of order. In the day-to-day deliberations in this place there is no question, as the Speaker is well aware, that the various Parties have their own agendas. The Government has an agenda, which is to move legislation through this place as expeditiously and responsibly as possible. We hope that included in that agenda is the belief that legislation ought to be given a fair and proper hearing both in committee and in this House. The Opposition has an agenda, which is to ensure that its views, and that of the people it represents, with respect to legislation are heard and, if possible, amendments made where necessary. That applies to both opposition Parties. Whatever the agenda of the Government and whatever the agenda of the Opposition at any given time, and notwithstanding our respective priorities, there is a much larger principle which concerns the proper operation of Parliament. Notwithstanding different points of view or different agendas, different aims and different objectives, Parliament can work and enjoy the goodwill of its members, and by extension the goodwill of the people of Canada, only when it operates according to a set of predictable and dependable rules. Those rules should, notwithstanding the nature of a given question or crisis which may confront Parliament, stand the test of time. No matter how important my agenda is, no matter how important the agenda of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) is, both of us must be subservient to the rules of this place. There was a feeling today in this House, and not only on one side, that the rules to which all of us must be subservient were expeditiously put aside in some manner.

I want to tell you that I do not vent my frustration at the Chair. It needs to be said, at a time of anger, emotion and crisis, that Members on this side of the House, in fact I am sure on all sides, have come to have a great deal of respect for the Chair. I regret that the Government, because of its short-term agenda for getting this Bill through the House, has used and abused the rules of this Chamber. I regret that the Government has put the Speaker of the House of Commons in this position today. It is no easy task to come to a position in an adversarial forum where members of all Parties, whatever their views, have a high degree of respect for the Chair. The greatest asset to the proper working of any Parliament is a high degree of respect for the Chair.

You have had that respect and I hope you continue to have that respect. However, I believe what the Government has done today, the way in which this matter has been resolved today, has seriously strained, soiled, poisoned, and dissipated much of the fundamental goodwill and confidence in the rules which govern this place and which we have seen exercised under your wise guidance.

I regret that the Government—I can almost hear the sound of jackboots in the background this afternoon—has abused the rules of Parliament. I regret that the Government has put the Speaker in an untenable position. I regret that the Government prevailed upon the goodwill that members opposite have had for the Speaker, and in some measure—and I hope I am wrong—called into question the properly earned and richly deserved confidence that Members on this side of the House have had in the Speaker of this Chamber.

I say to the Government that this kind of trickery, this kind of expedience in handling this Bill may have met its short-term objective, but in the long term it has taken a serious and substantial step towards poisoning the atmosphere of this place. The Government has put the Speaker, who has exemplified the very best over the last number of months, in a position he does not deserve to be in.

Having said that, I leave this Chamber because I can no longer participate in this debate.

Some Hon. Members: Have a nice weekend.

Mr. Speaker: In view of the fact that some Hon. Members may have wanted to make statements as to how they voted or why they did not vote, I am wondering if anyone wishes to rise on that matter because, as I said, I will hear these points. With respect to at least one of the members I think I can identify, I will deal with the matter at the next sitting of the House.

Are there no further members rising on the point of order? The Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson).

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak on the time allocation motion and Bill C-22.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has listened with care and perhaps some anguish to what has been said here this afternoon, but that is my responsibility. I want all members to know that I, too, have been in this place a long time. I understand that at times feelings can run very high. I have said things at times when, while I wanted to make the point, I wish perhaps I had said it in another way. I know Hon. Members have been doing everything they could in the last little while to be more courteous, with each other and therefore more respectful, I suppose, of the dignity of this place.

• (1720)

I will consider very carefully the points that have been made. I will come back to the Chamber and deal with them as they have been made. I have never suggested nor, do I think, would anyone else, that it is not possible to make a mistake here. I may have or I may not have. I will consider it very carefully, and if I have been in error, I will indicate that to the Chamber. After having listened to what Hon. Members have said, I think it might be helpful that the Chair return at an appropriate time to deal with some of the points which were made and to lay out as clearly as possible the proper procedural rules to apply in such a situation.

I will only say at this time that there is ample precedent for recognizing the Minister under the circumstances in which the Minister was recognized. That has been done by Speakers in the past, and I moved upon that basis. There are some Hon. Members who are not happy with the way in which I did that. I will consider that very carefully because when all is said and done I have to remain the servant of all members. The Hon. Minister has the floor for debate.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I thought I was recognized first because you were going in alphabetical order.

This motion ought not to be necessary. I completely concur with those sentiments. Unfortunately, there was no alternative left to the Government. Not once, not twice, but on three different occasions at this stage alone the Government House Leader and Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) approached opposition spokesmen and asked how many days would be required to dispose of this stage, whether they would require 5 days, 10 days, 15 days, or how many days.

On three different occasions the Opposition House Leaders would not discuss the matter. They did not make a counter offer. There were no negotiations. They refused to discuss the possibility of terminating debate at some time. Therefore, the Government had no choice. We cannot continue in perpetuity. Much was said this afternoon about this place working through negotiations and discussions. It ought to, but if the Opposition refuses to discuss the possibility of terminating a debate, the Government has no choice.

Let me deal with the question of how much time has been spent debating this legislation. As everyone knows, the draft legislation for Bill C-22 was made public at the end of June of last year, nine months ago. In the fall the Government attempted to bring the Bill forward. A precedent was set at that time and we will rue that day. It has been a longstanding, ancient tradition of this institution and our predecessor institutions that no matter how opposed an individual may be to a motion or a Bill everyone has the right to introduce such motion or Bill.

So much is that a part of the tradition that even though the Speaker utters the words: "Shall the member have leave to introduce the Bill", since time immemorial there has been an automatic "yes" from Members of the House of Commons. When those words were spoken with respect to Bill C-22, the Opposition said "no" and demanded a standing vote. It is a time-honoured tradition that no matter how you feel about a Bill you recognize that everyone, including the Government, has the right to introduce it. It is fundamentally anti-democratic to vote against introduction and first reading, yet the Opposition did that as a dilatory tactic.

The Opposition did it again at first reading. The next thing the Speaker asks is whether the House will permit first reading of the Bill. That is never voted on in keeping with the principle that first reading and printing of a Bill is a time-honoured right of every Member of the House. The Opposition voted against that.

After those dilatory tactics we had 28 hours of debate at second reading, hardly a miniscule amount of time. We then discussed with the Opposition how many hours would be necessary to complete second reading and whether they would be content with four days, five days, or six days. They refused to negotiate. It was necessary for the Government to introduce time allocation because there was no willingness to discuss the orderly conduct of the House. We have no choice but to introduce time allocation when the Opposition refuses to negotiate.

There were 82 hours of study in the committee, hardly a quick passing glimpse. Sixty-five hours were spent hearing witnesses. The idea of the new rules with respect to legislative committees was that since the House had decided on the question of principle we need not discuss the principle any longer but, rather, should go to a legislative committee to discuss the details. The Opposition did not want that. They wanted to hear whether witnesses were opposed or in favour of the general principle of the Bill. Government Members on the committee agreed to that.

[Translation]

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a Point of Order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) rises on a Point of Order.

Mr. Rossi: Let us see if we have a quorum, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hudon: Will you count, please?

Mr. Rossi: Mind your own business!

Mr. Hudon: I behave the way you do.

Mr. Rossi: There is no opposition.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I have heard the Hon. Member and I have observed the House. I declare there is a quorum in the House.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, 46 different groups were witnesses before the committee, a total of 98 different individuals. The purpose of a legislative committee is to discuss in detail the legislation and study and discuss amendments to clauses. The Opposition proposed 11 amendments in committee, three of which were proposed by the New Democratic Party. One of the three was adopted by the Government. The other two amendments were technical and the Hon. Member representing the New Democratic Party was satisfied that the Act took care of those concerns.

At report stage, 47 amendments were moved. If Hon. Members of the Opposition were keeping with the traditions of respect for this institution about which they talk, those 47 amendments would have been moved at committee. That is the purpose of legislative committees and the new rules, which we ought now to re-examine in view of the behaviour of the Opposition.

The Bill then came back before the House at report stage and there were more dilatory tactics. Five days were wasted on the dilatory tactics of the Opposition. There were petitions brought forward last week and the week before which were signed in August. Members presenting them sanctimoniously stated that they were following the time-honoured tradition of representing their constituents by bringing forward their concerns. How can anyone make a statement like that with a straight face?

Since the 1984 election there has never been a piece of legislation which has had more discussion in Parliament, outside of Parliament, and in various domains across the country than this piece of legislation. If there is anyone in this House who can suggest that they have not had an opportunity to examine this legislation, that they have not heard about it from the people concerned and received their reactions, they must have been living in some sort of cocoon. According to the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) and the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) 300,000 letters were sent out in opposition to Bill C-22. The CLCs, the auto workers and the generic manufacturers sent out brochures. Tens of thousands of brochures were sent out. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) toured the country appearing on talk shows trying to get people agitated and upset. The Opposition spared no effort to criticize and condemn this legislation in hopes of upsetting the people of Canada so that they would be willing to demand that the Government stop this legislation.

How successful was the Opposition? A recent opinion poll by Decima asked the question: "I would support the Bill if the Government put in place a way of making sure that the drug price increases would not be higher than the rate of inflation".

Eighty-two per cent agreed, and that is exactly what the Bill does. So for all of the efforts of the Opposition, the public of Canada understands that this legislation is to their benefit.

While I regret that we have had to bring in this motion of time allocation—and I sincerely regret that—we really had no choice. The Opposition refused to negotiate any reasonable allocation of time. Regrettably, I had to put the motion. I look forward to the vote, and I look forward to our getting away for a few days' holiday to recuperate from some of the emotional activity which has taken place here. Hopefully, we will come back in a better mood and ready to proceed with other business for which the people of Canada have elected us.

Mr. Lesick: Mr. Speaker, I would also like to speak on the time allocation motion with respect to Bill C-22. My constituents in Edmonton East who are watching us must be wondering what is happening in this good House. Over 200 members of the Government were elected. They were asked to put in legislation which they believed was in the interests of the citizens of Canada. We were asked to do that because our constituents believed that we as a Progressive Conservative Party, we as the Government, would be a good governing Party. They believed that we could do good things for this country and in the past two and a half years we have.

We have brought forward Bill C-22 which is to the benefit of all Canadians. We have spent much time in Parliament and in committee discussing the legislation, yet we still have this difficulty with the Opposition. Bill C-22 is for the benefit of Canadians. We need a better health system. With this Bill we can do a better job for the citizens of Canada by providing better medications. As the Minister has just mentioned, we have devoted 82 hours in committee to this legislation. Day after day, for three hours, four hours, with all its expense, we have discussed this Bill which is for the benefit of Canadians. We have devoted the time to hearing 46 groups and 98 individuals, we have spent all this time on debate, and it seems most awkward that we should not be able to come to this House and make a decision.

The majority of Canadians have asked this Government to do a job, which it is doing. We have respected the Opposition. We have bent over backwards in order to do everything possible to respect the minority Opposition. It is time the Opposition began to respect the governing body. There are over 210 Members of Parliament who represent every segment and every region of this country. We obviously have the ear of the public. We have the understanding and confidence of Canadians to pass a Bill of such importance and of such great value for Canadians. For the Opposition to put up these delaying tactics over and over again is almost despicable.

In the latest poll more than 82 per cent of the people said they want the Government to pass this Bill. They want to reap the benefits of health that this Bill will provide for us in the future. We have assured the public, our senior citizens, those who are handicapped and those who are in need, that this Bill will not raise the price of drugs. We have given this assurance to the provinces, and they agree that this is an excellent Bill. Universities are waiting for this Bill to be passed so they can reap the benefits, so that graduate students can start working to improve the health of this nation through their investigative work. Why should this not be done in Canada? Why should we have to depend on other countries for the medications which we import? They do the work, we do the manufacturing and present the drugs to the public. When are we going to have the pride within ourselves to do this type of work, and in so doing provide jobs for our university graduates and our researchers?

It is long past the time when we should pass this Bill. I commend not only our Government but the Minister for standing up in his place and deciding it is time we had time allocation. We offered the Opposition virtually all the time in the world to discuss this Bill thoroughly. The amount of $800 million is waiting in the wings for research. But what are we doing? We are arguing in this House whether we should pass the Bill today, tomorrow, or next month. If I read the Opposition rightly, it wants this Bill passed next year. Our Government is the best Government Canada has had in a decade. Why should the people of Canada not reap the benefits of good Government? Why should they not reap the benefits of Bill C-22? Why should they not reap the benefits of what the Government believes is the best we have to offer for greater and better health care for Canadians?

My constituents have asked me what this Bill is all about. I said that it was for better health care, and the sooner it is dealt with the better. They said to me: "What is the problem?" I was in my riding last week, and I said that the matter is still being discussed. They said: "But you have a majority. Why can you not do anything? We are disappointed in you". I had to tell them that the disappointment has to be not with the Government but with members of the Opposition. There is time for opposition. We have listened to members of the Opposition. We have respected them and it is now time for us to act.

I suggest that when this Bill is passed it will be not only for the benefit of all Canadians but members of the Opposition will see that the Bill they have been arguing against is a good Bill. But it will take them some time because the Opposition is that way. Members of the Opposition take time to learn. Hopefully, they will see the light when they see the advantages of this Bill in two years or in five years' time.

We know that members of the Opposition were up to their old tricks when they placed before the House at report stage some 47 amendments. The country realizes that they are up to their old stunts. In 1984 the people of Canada said: "We want a new government". They want a good government. They wanted the Progressive Conservatives to govern. We are here to govern to the best of our abilities. I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that even members of the Opposition, as hard as they will try, must bend and realize that we are right. We have not always been perfect, but we have always listened to what they had to say. We have acted because we have consulted with our constituents. We believe that Bill C-22 will be the best law for Canada.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, I believe that you will find there is unanimous consent to ring the bells now and take the vote in 15 minutes. I have that agreement from members of the other Parties.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ontario has indicated to the Chair that there is an agreement in the House to commence the ringing of the bells. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on the motion of Mr. Andre. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Andre), which was agreed to on the following division:

PETITIONS

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition, pursuant to Standing Order 106, concerning the Government's intention to move to complete the debate on amendments to the Patent Act concerning prescription drugs.

The petitioners from Port Alberni, Gibsons Landing, Sechelt, Prince Rupert, Pritchard, Kamloops and Barrière, British Columbia, are concerned that the changes to the Patent Act will result in a significant increase in drug prices for the Canadian consumer who requires prescription drugs.

Therefore they are asking the Government at this late moment to reconsider what it is doing and to cease proceeding with this legislation. They register the fact that they believe that this is part of a whole set of Canadian government concessions to the United States at the expense of average Canadians in the free trade negotiations. They are deeply concerned regarding this critical matter.

RIGHT TO LIFE OF UNBORN BABIES—PROTECTION OF CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I too have a petition to present signed by 373 residents of the national capital region from the cities of Ottawa, Nepean, Kanata and Gloucester. This petition is on behalf of the Coalition for Life which is located in Ottawa.

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to support Private Members' Motion M-37 which is now before the House which would allow unborn babies protection under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Petitions

REQUEST FOR FREEZE ON HARBOURFRONT CONSTRUCTION PENDING REVIEW

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, at long last I have the honour to present to the House a petition that has been signed by approximately 150 residents of the Harbourfront residential community in Toronto which acknowledges that there is presently a review of the Harbourfront plans for development.

The petitioners indicate their concern with the height, the density, the recreation space and the parking requirements. They also indicate that, notwithstanding the review that is ongoing, buildings are still being constructed without building permits. They call upon Parliament to freeze all of the construction in the Harbourfront area including, in particular, the buildings at 633 Lakeshore Boulevard West, 650 Queen's Quay West and 11 Stadium Road pending the outcome of the review. They also ask that they be allowed input into the review process.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty and honour to present petitions on three different subjects. The first is from Canadians living in a number of locations in British Columbia.

They humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) reject any recommendations that would deprive fishermen of the right to collect unemployment insurance benefits and to enter into consultations with all representatives of fishermen in order that improvements to the program offered to the fishermen are made.

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition from citizens in a number of locations in Saskatchewan, Ontario and British Columbia in which they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that Government and Parliament enact legislation that would embody the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of refugee claimants before a refugee board independent of the Immigration Commission, universal access to such hearings for every claimant in Canada, and adequate opportunity to arrive in Canada to make this claim.

TRANSPORTATION—ECONOMIC REGULATORY REFORM

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions, six to be exact, from many locations in Canada in which citizens petition Parliament and the House of Commons to have the Government withdraw Bill C-18 and to retain public convenience and necessity as a fundamental factor in the development of public transportation policy and to retain licensing in order to restrict market-place activity to a present level functioning in the best interest of the public as a whole.

• (1110)

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I have petitions from many parts of this country, including Prince Edward Island; British Columbia; Mississauga, Toronto and Willowdale in the Province of Ontario; and from Calgary, Alberta.

I present a large number of petitions with a large number of signatories thereto. I also have one from the Province of Quebec in relation to the amendments to the Patent Act.

[Translation]

—that the changes in the Patent Act will directly affect all Canadians who are not protected by private or government medicare programs and that the Government's proposals will raise the already high cost of provincial health care programs.

[English]

The proposed changes to the Patent Act relating to drugs is a matter of grave concern to these petitioners.

It is my pleasure, on behalf of hundreds upon hundreds of Canadians across this country, to submit these petitions to the House of Commons.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of a number of constituents from the constituency of Prince Albert, I have the honour and the duty to present a petition to the House calling upon the Government to be cognizant of the proposed changes to the Patent Act in relation to drugs, and to in fact reject these proposals, or any proposals which would increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have four petitions to present, the first one being from a number of fishermen from Carbonear, Newfoundland, as well as from British Columbia. It is the concern of these fishermen that the unemployment insurance program might no longer apply to their situation.

These petitioners call upon the Parliament of Canada to ensure that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) reject any recommendation that would deprive fishermen of their right to collect unemployment insurance, and to enter into consultations with all representatives of fishermen in Canada in order that improvements to the program can be brought about.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): I next table a petition in respect of the proposed amendments to the Patent Act. In this instance the petitioners are from Burnaby and Vancouver, as well as other parts of British Columbia.

The petition calls upon the federal Government to reject the proposals contained in Bill C-22, proposals which would unfairly hurt Canadians, and particularly senior citizens, inasmuch as they would result in an increase in the cost of prescription drugs.

These petitioners call upon the Parliament of Canada to reject the proposals contained in Bill C-22.

HAZARDOUS COMMODITIES—RELOCATION OF TRANSFER POINT

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Next I have a petition in respect of the handling of hazardous commodities. This is a petition from the constituency of Vancouver East.

The citizens of Vancouver East request that the Canadian Transport Commission immediately relocate the transfer of all hazardous commodities to a location outside the inner harbour of Vancouver, and that a permanent solution to the movement of hazardous goods be finalized, a solution which is acceptable to the citizens of greater Vancouver and other parts of the Lower Mainland.

CONTINUATION OF WOMEN'S PROGRAM FUNDING

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): The fourth petition has to do with the Secretary of State funding of women's programs. In this instance, the petitioners are from the City of Whitehorse, Yukon Territory. These petitioners request that the Secretary of State women's program be continued and that there be strong support for it, and that REAL women not be considered eligible for the program, a program whose aim is the equality of women.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions to table today, the signatories to which are from the provinces of Saskatchewan, Ontario, Nova Scotia and British Columbia. These petitioners are opposed to the proposed amendments to the Patent Act.

Because the monopoly granted to innovative pharmaceutical companies will prevent competition from generic companies and thus result in an increase in the cost of drugs, severely restricting the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs, the petitioners call upon the Government of Canada to withdraw the proposed amendments to the Patent Act—amendments which the petitioners believe will negatively affect Canadians, particularly the poor and the elderly.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I, too, have a petition in relation to the proposed amendments to the Patent Act.

There is one particular clause in the petition which I should like to draw to the attention of the House, that being the clause that speaks of the proposed changes as yet "another example of Canadian Government concessions to the United States in the free trade negotiations, at the expense of average Canadians".

So, whether we are speaking of lumber, oil, patent drugs, or whatever, these petitioners are concerned about this Government selling out Canada to the United States.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table a number of petitions from Canadians from Richmond and North Vancouver in the Province of British Columbia, as well as a number of petitions from residents of the Province of Quebec, and particularly the Laval area.

These individuals take advantage of their right to petition the Government of Canada to reject the proposed changes to the Patent Act, changes which these petitioners believe will result in increased prescription drug prices for the people of Canada.

CITIZENSHIP ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-254, an Act to amend the Citizenship Act.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pennock: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure this morning to introduce my Private Member's Bill, a Bill to amend the Citizenship Act so that non-Canadian spouses of Canadian Armed Forces personnel and non-Canadian spouses of Public Service personnel of Canada or of a province of Canada be allowed to use the time of the posting abroad toward the residency requirement under the Citizenship Act.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

2. (1) Term 17 of the Terms of Union of Newfoundland with Canada set out in the Schedule to the said Act is renumbered as Term 17(1).

(2) Term 17 of the Terms of Union of Newfoundland with Canada set out in the Schedule to the said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following:

"(2) For the purpose of paragraph one of this Term, the Pentecostal Assemblies of Newfoundland have in Newfoundland all the same rights and privileges with respect to denominational schools and denominational colleges as any other class or classes of persons had by law in Newfoundland at the date of Union, and the words "all such schools" in paragraph (a) of paragraph one of this Term and the words "all such colleges" in paragraph (b) of the paragraph one of this Term include, respectively, the schools and the colleges of the Pentecostal Assemblies of Newfoundland."

3. This Amendment may be cited as the Constitution Amendment, year of proclamation (Newfoundland Act).

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 24(2), this Government Notice of Motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under Government Orders later this day or at the next sitting of the House.

COMMUNICATIONS AND CULTURE

EXTENSION OF REPORTING DEADLINE OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties and I think you would find unanimous consent to pass the following two motions, which I will place individually. The first motion is as follows:

That the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture be authorized to extend from April 15, 1987, to May 6, 1987, its deadline for submitting the report to the House on all matters relevant to the development of broadcasting legislation pursuant to the House Order of Reference dated January 29, 1987.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have the unanimous consent of the House to move his motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

RESEARCH, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

AUTHORIZATION TO STANDING COMMITTEE TO TRAVEL

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the second motion is as follows:

That the Standing Committee on Research, Science and Technology be authorized to adjourn from place to place within Canada for a total of six days as follows:

Toronto on the evening of Monday, May 11, 1987, after the usual adjournment hour of the House, for public hearings on Tuesday, May 12, 1987, and Wednesday, May 13, 1987;

Saskatoon on the evening of Tuesday, May 26, 1987, after the usual adjournment hour of the House, for public hearings on Wednesday, May 27, 1987, and Thursday, May 28, 1987;

Quebec City on the evening of Tuesday, June 9, 1987, after the usual adjournment hour of the House, for public hearings on Wednesday, June 10, 1987, and Thursday, June 11, 1987;

In relation to its mandate under Standing Order 96(2) to Study Canada's space program, and that the necessary staff do accompany the committee.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have the unanimous consent of the House to move his motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would it be the appropriate time under Motions for a Member to rise to request a special debate?

Mr. Speaker: I should advise the House that I have received from the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) an application under the appropriate Standing Order for an emergency debate.

I will hear that application as soon as we have disposed of the questions on the Order Paper.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 86, 92, 93, and 100.

TREATY 8 RENOVATION DISCUSSION PAPER

Question No. 86—Mr. Penner:

1. Was a discussion paper on Treaty 8 Renovation, prepared by the Hon. Frank Oberle, presented to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in January 1986 and, if so, what follow-up action was taken by the Department?

2. Has the discussion paper been referred to the Department of Justice and, if so (a) on what date (b) for what reasons?

3. Is the Department of Justice preparing a report for the Government on this discussion paper and, if so (a) has a report been completed and which cabinet Ministers have received copies (b) if the report has not been completed (i) when will it be completed (ii) which cabinet Ministers will receive copies?

4. Has the discussion paper been considered by the Cabinet and (a) if so, what was the outcome (b) if not, will it be considered by the Cabinet?

5. What are the Government's intentions with respect to the Treaty 8 Renovation discussion paper?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Yes, the discussion paper was submitted to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development on January 31, 1986. It was considered by departmental officials concerned. Since the document dealt with a number of constitutional issues, a copy was provided to officials of the Department of Justice for their consideration. Departmental officials subsequently discussed certain non-constitutional matters related to the discussion paper with Treaty 8 representatives.

2. As noted above, the discussion paper was referred to the Department of Justice (in February, 1986) for consideration.

3. No, (a) N/A, (b) N/A.

4. The Government intends to use the discussion paper as a working document in considering various approaches to dealing with both treaty-specific and national treaty issues.

ENVIRONMENTAL ISSUES

Question No. 92—Mr. Caccia:

For each of the fiscal years 1984-85, 1985-86, 1986-87 and projected 1987-88, did the Canadian Embassy in Washington, D.C. have staff assigned to work on environmental issues and, if so, for each year (a) how many (b) what were or are the tiles/job descriptions for each position?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes. For each of the fiscal years mentioned above, the Canadian Embassy in Washington, D.C. assigned or will assign: (a) four persons, (b) one Counsellor (Environment), one First Secretary (Environment), one Environmental Affairs Officer, one Secretary.

In addition, the Ambassador and the Minister (Political) devote considerable time to environment issues. Equally, the Minister (Public Affairs), Counsellor (Congressional Affairs) and Counsellor (Public Affairs) devote some of their time to coverage of environment issues.

OUTREACH PROGRAMS

Question No. 93—Mr. Parry:

1. In (a) 1983 (b) 1984 (c) 1985 (d) 1986 (e) 1987 to date, were Employment and Immigration Outreach projects approved and, if so, how many?

2. (a) What are the (i) benefits (ii) salary levels for Outreach co-ordinators (b) do all co-ordinators receive the same (i) benefits (ii) amount in terms of salary and, if not, for what reason?

3. Do employees of the Department of Employment and Immigration and Outreach co-ordinators do comparable or identical work and, if so, are there major disparities in salary levels between them and, if so, for what reason?

4. Do all Outreach projects receive an adequate support service budget to hire necessary full-time staff and, if not, for what reason?

5. Are local board members of unincorporated Outreach projects personally liable for the due performance of Outreach contracts and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. Yes. Statistics and other information on Outreach are compiled on a fiscal year basis. New Outreach projects were approved as follows:

	Fiscal Year	Number of Projects
(a)	1982-83	63
(b)	1983-84	13
(c)	1984-85	5
(d)	1985-86	21

2. (a)(i) There is no national policy regarding the provision of benefits for Outreach workers as Employment and Immigration Canada (EIC), while funding the projects, is not the employer. Outreach projects operate under contracts for service and therefore it is up to the sponsors of the project to establish their own benefit package within the approved negotiated funding level.

2. (a)(ii) There is no national policy on salary levels for Outreach workers for the same reason cited in 2.(a)(i). However, regions have generally established maximum reimbursable salary costs that may be paid to Outreach workers. Co-ordinators of projects would earn higher salaries than Outreach counsellors (who in turn would earn more than support staff) depending upon numbers of points of service, staff supervised and responsibilities.

2. (b)(i) No. Benefits can vary from project to project since the project sponsor is the employer.

2. (b)(ii) No. Salaries are generally paid in accordance with those paid for similar positions in comparable community agencies and as a result can vary.

3. No. While there are some similarities, there are significant differences as well. For example, Canada Employment Centre (CEC) counsellors have responsibilities over and above those of Outreach workers, such as approval of the expenditure of EIC program funds, which is a major responsibility when one considers the dollar amounts involved. The average annual rate of pay for an Employment Counsellor in a CEC currently is in the range of $29,569 to $33,310.

4. Yes. While it is not always necessary to employ a full-time support staff member, particularly in the case of a small project, CEIC tries to accommodate the needs of the projects based on their forecasts and within the approved allocated level of funding.

5. Local board members of unincorporated Outreach projects who are not part of the sponsoring board are not personally liable for the due performance of Outreach contracts. Only those persons whose signatures appear on the signature page of the contract are considered to be liable to Her Majesty for the due performance of all matters stated in the contract.

The reason that these persons are personally liable is based on the premise that an unincorporated organization is not a legal entity and as such the Crown does not have any legal recourse against a non-incorporated organization for the due performance of any obligation set out in the contract. The persons signing the contract, therefore, are held personally liable for the due performance of Outreach services to be rendered.

TARIFF ON ENGLISH LANGUAGE BOOKS

Question No. 100—Ms. McDonald:

In June of 1986, did the Government impose a 10 per cent customs tariff on English language books and, if so, what were the total revenues collected as a result of its imposition?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Effective June 6, 1986, the Customs Duty on Books Remission Order (1982), which allowed duty free entry of certain books, was revoked. Consequently, novels, works of fiction, some periodicals, publications to encourage enrolment in educational institutions outside of Canada and books of printed music reverted to being subject to the legislated duty at the rate of 10 per cent ad valorem under the most favoured nation tariff and the U.K. and Ireland tariff.

Other books, including textbooks or works of reference included in the curriculum of any university, college or school in Canada; books for bona fide libraries; books and periodicals in any other than in the English language; books which have been actually printed and manufactured more than 12 years; books for the promotion of medicine, the fine arts, law, science, technical training and the study of languages, were not affected by the change and remained duty free.

The amount of duty collected from June 6, 1986 to December 31, 1986 (date of the latest available statistics) was $12,711,000 (Source, International Trade Division, Statistics Canada 990-9647).

On March 12, 1987, the Customs Duty on Books Remission Order (P.C. 1987-442) was introduced to remit the 10 per cent duty as of February 19, 1987.

STARRED QUESTION

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call Starred Question No. 91.

VISITS OF U.S. NAVAL SHIPS TO B.C.

Question No. *91—Mr. Manly:

In 1986, did vessels attached to the United States Navy visit British Columbia and, if so, by month, which ones visited (a) Esquimalt Harbour (b) CFMETR at Nanoose (c) Vancouver Harbour?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, this answer is really in two sections. There is a preamble paragraph which I will read and then ask for the indulgence of the House to have the balance of the answer printed in Hansard.

During 1986 a large number of United States naval vessels and Coast Guard vessels visited the ports of Esquimalt, Nanoose and Vancouver, many of them in connection with Expo 86. A number of vessels visited the same port more than once in the year or more than once in a month. In addition, many of the visits took place at the end of a month and therefore are listed in both months in which they were in port. Most visits included one or two ships while some involved up to six vessels at the same time. The breakdown of the visits by harbour and by month (including carry-overs (CO) from previous months) are as follows.

At this point I would ask for the permission of the House to have the second section of the answer printed in Hansard as read.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lewis: It is as follows:

	Esquimalt	CFMETR Nanoose	Vancouver

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 29(1)

PROPOSED DOME PETROLEUM TAKEOVER BY AMOCO CORPORATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 29, a matter about which I wrote to you during the Easter break, to ask that the House adjourn to discuss a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, specifically the announcement by Dome Petroleum that it intends to accept a corporate takeover by the Amoco Corporation.

Briefly stated, there are four reasons which I believe should lead to the acceptance of the motion.

First, this will be the largest takeover bid for any sector in Canadian history.

Second, this takeover by an American multinational company would radically increase foreign dominance in the energy sector from 50 per cent to 60 per cent.

Third, during the past decade, the taxpayers of Canada have contributed literally hundreds of millions of dollars in direct and indirect benefits to the Dome Petroleum Corporation.

Finally, there has been a generally established consensus in Canada that more, not less, Canadian ownership in the crucial energy sector is desirable. The principal reason for this has been that multinational corporations, virtually by definition, have profit maximization on a global basis as their operating principle. This in turn means that at times such a global policy can be in direct conflict with Canada's energy requirements.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has had time to consider the matter of this application, and it would seem that the application is in order. The Chair is prepared to put the question to the House.

Does the Hon. Member have leave to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 29 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The debate will commence at eight o'clock p.m. this day.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

ESTABLISHMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON REINSTATEMENT

Hon. George Hees (for the Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council) moved:

That this House supports, in principle, the reinstatement of capital punishment and directs that a special committee on reinstatement, composed of 15 members, be established, hold hearings and make its final report to the House no later than three (3) months following the adoption of this motion, such report to provide recommendations on:

(a) which offence or offences should carry the death penalty, and in what circumstances;

(b) which method or methods should be used to carry out the penalty of death, and in what circumstances;

That, pursuant to Standing Order 107(1), this special committee be hereby appointed as the committee to prepare and bring in a bill no later than three months following the adoption of this motion, founded on the committee's recommendations on (a) and (b) above; such a bill shall be the object of a separate and distinct report of the special committee, and such a report shall be its final report;

That such bill, when reported from such special committee to the House, be deemed pursuant to Standing Order 107(1) to have been introduced and stand on the Order Paper, in the name of the special committee chairman, for first reading at the next sitting of the House; and that subsequent House stages of the bill be considered under "Government Orders", with the bill standing under the heading "Government Business"; and that, when the said bill has been read a second time, it shall stand referred to a Legislative Committee;

That the Striking Committee be empowered to name the Members of the special committee, provided that once the Striking Committee report is laid upon the Table, it shall be deemed concurred in;

That the special committee have the power to sit while the House is sitting and during periods when the House stands adjourned;

That the special committee be empowered to report from time to time and send for persons and papers, and to print such papers and evidence from time to time as may be ordered by the committee and to retain the services of expert, technical, professional and clerical staff;

That the special committee be empowered to adjourn from place to place inside Canada and that, when deemed necessary, the appropriate staff accompany the committee;

That a quorum of the special committee be eight (8) members for any vote, resolution or other decision; and that the chairman be authorized to hold meetings to receive evidence and authorize the printing thereof whenever six (6) members are present;

That any substitution of membership on the special committee be made pursuant to Standing Order 94(4); and

That, notwithstanding the usual practices of this House, if the House is not sitting when the special committee is ready to issue its final report and the said bill, the special committee shall present its report and the bill to the House by filing them with the Clerk of the House provided that the report shall then be deemed to have been laid upon the Table, and the bill shall then be deemed, pursuant to Standing Order 107(1), to have been introduced at the first sitting of the House thereafter and to stand on the Order Paper in the name of the special committee chairman, for first reading at the next sitting of the House; and that subsequent House stages of the bill be considered under "Government Orders", with the bill standing under the heading "Government Business".

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister to lead off the debate on this issue of national importance. I would point out that this is not a government initiative per se; the Government neither supports nor opposes the reinstatement of capital punishment. A vote will not be considered a matter of confidence and each Member of the Progressive Conservative Party will be free to vote as he or she chooses on the motion.

In opening the debate it is important that I take some time to explain the background of the debate, the timing of it, the motion, and the process, as well as to present briefly my own point of view as a Member of Parliament. Those members from all sides who follow me will spend far more time than I on the pros and cons of the issue.

The death penalty was abolished in 1976 after a long and, by all accounts, bitter debate in Parliament. Capital punishment was replaced with a mandatory life sentence with no parole for 25 years in the case of first degree murder. However, debate has continued in the country as to whether or not capital punishment should be reinstated. The proponents are concerned that deterrence and protection are not being adequately served under the present law. The opponents continue to argue that capital punishment is not a deterrent. There is a considerable body of public opinion on both sides of the issue.

During the 1984 election campaign, our Government made the commitment to a debate in the House of Commons. Further, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made the commitment that there would be no Party line on this issue, that it would be a free vote. The commitment made by our Government was to bring the issue forward for debate during our mandate as a Government.

The House will know that when we took office in September, 1984, Canada was faced with a multitude of social and economic problems, with a complete breakdown of federal-provincial relations and with a deterioration in relations with our neighbour and largest trading partner, the United States. It would have been irresponsible to have proceeded with this debate prior to a resolution or at least a commencement to the solutions of these important problems. We have, fortunately, made considerable progress.

On the economic side we have created jobs in record numbers. Our emphasis as a Government on training and retraining has given hundreds of thousands of Canadians more job opportunities. Government spending has been reduced. Our attack on the deficit is continuing. Naturally, Mr. Speaker, we do not claim complete victory; there are still regional disparities and there is much to be done but we have made a start.

On the social front, we have passed tougher laws for impaired driving and prostitution. We have made divorce easier when marriages have broken down. Equality legislation, plus an aggressive appointment criteria have profoundly increased the opportunities and the influence of Canadian women. Parliamentary reform has increased the influence of the individual Member of Parliament. We have worked hard to improve federal-provincial relations. While differences of opinion are inherent to our system and continue, the nature of the difference of opinion is, for the most part, philosophical rather than the result of a complete failure to communicate.

Relations have improved with the United States. Prospects are good for a free trade agreement which will ensure access to the markets of our biggest customer. Environment issues are now receiving the attention they deserve. On all of these issues we do not claim victory, but we do claim progress.

Therefore, it is appropriate to commence this debate on the question of reinstatement of capital punishment at this time in our mandate. There are those in the Opposition who say that we are doing it now to curry public favour. That is nonsense for the reasons which I have stated, Mr. Speaker. We are bringing this debate forward now because we said we would bring it forward during our mandate. We are bringing this debate forward now because of the considerable progress we have made on several fronts.

However, although it is appropriate to commence the debate now, it is also appropriate to make certain other points. The Government has other important legislation which should proceed. Among those legislative initiatives are the revisions to the Patent Act, changes to the Criminal Code affecting pornography and sexual abuse of children, transportation legislation which will free up competition and deregulate transportation in Canada, as well as income tax legislation flowing from the recent Budget. There are other policy initiatives, such as income tax reform, child care initiatives and defence policy which may or may not initiate parliamentary debate prior to the end of June.

While we are committed as a Government to the debate on capital punishment, we are not committed to managing the debate with a heavy hand or forcing a vote by a certain date. That would be contradictory on a matter of conscience. One of my colleagues is reported to have said that we will look very weak if the vote does not take place before June 30 this year. With respect, Mr. Speaker, I do not agree. Our Government will, in the final analysis, be measured on our record on all issues, not one issue, and especially not a non-confidence measure which has been designated as a free vote.

Therefore, while there is a disposition and a will to proceed with the debate, the Government is also committed to the continued orderly process of the Government's business. In an effort to have a full debate involving every member who wishes to speak, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) wrote to the opposition House Leaders suggesting that the House sit from seven until 10 each Monday, Tuesday and Thursday and that speeches in debate on the said motion and amendments be limited to 15 minutes with questions and comments in reply limited to five minutes. That suggestion would have allowed for a full and orderly debate, but unfortunately the opposition House Leaders flatly rejected that proposal and had no alternatives.

I have a personal suggestion with respect to this debate which I would put forward. I would suggest that we call the debate every Friday. That way, those who wish to debate the matter, either for or against, would be on notice that they must be here on Fridays. Twenty-five of the obstructionists in the opposition Parties who fear debate would be forced to remain so that the hours of debate would not be extended. Should the debate be extended, everyone present who wished to speak could speak and the vote could be deferred to the following Monday.

Although there has been considerable public debate, parliamentary debate and media discussion concerning the issue of the reinstatement of capital punishment, there has been very little consideration or consensus on the appropriate measure and mechanics for the parliamentary debate. I would like to pay tribute to the Deputy Prime Minister for the time and effort he put into the drafting of this motion. It is the result of considerable thought, review and revision as well as full consultation with members of the Government caucus which, I would point out, includes both proponents and opponents of the motion.

The motion provides an orderly process for the debate of the issue and the decision-making process if the motion is passed by the House. The motion first seeks the opinion of the House on the reinstatement of capital punishment. If the motion is defeated, the matter will end there. If the motion is supported, the motion establishes a parliamentary committee to prepare and introduce appropriate legislation within a certain time frame. As the Deputy Prime Minister stated in the House, the vote will not be considered a matter of confidence by the Government. If the motion is defeated, the Government will not consider it a motion of non-confidence.

I think it is fair to ask why we did not pursue other legislative methods such as a private Members' Bill. A private Members' Bill to reinstate capital punishment would not have allowed for orderly debate on the principle followed by an orderly process of drafting a Bill. Furthermore, the present rules for Private Members' Bills allow for only five hours of debate. That would not be sufficient time for all Members of the House who wished to participate in this debate to do so.

One might also ask why the Government did not bring in a government Bill. We feel that that would not have been appropriate because the Government's commitment was to a full and open debate followed by a free vote. If the motion passes, the members of the committee of the House and not the Government will decide upon the crimes for which the punishment applies and the method of enacting the punishment. We feel this motion is the best possible and most reasonable approach for all Members of the House regardless of their position on the issue.

The motion has been in the public domain since February 12, 1987. This has allowed for constituents to contact their Members of Parliament, as many have. It has allowed for public debate, both organized and unorganized. It has allowed for media consideration and it has allowed for Members of Parliament to seek out public opinion and formulate their position on either the issue or the process.

When the Deputy Prime Minister introduced the motion, he stated very clearly the following:

> It is our intention to permit the motion to stand on the Order Paper for a period of time to allow those interested parties in the public to make representations to their MPs.

That time has now elapsed. Thus, when we commence the debate now, two and a half months later, we are neither rushing the debate before due public consideration nor delaying the debate unnecessarily.

I touched on this next matter once before and it was the subject of some comment, but I intend to return to it because I think it is important. I would like to address the tone of the debate. Every Member of the House, no matter what his or her position on this issue, owes it to society to debate it on as high a level as possible. This debate will be the ultimate test of every Member of the House. There will be some Hon. Members who are in a fortunate position. Their personal views and the views of a majority of their constituents will coincide. There will be others in a position of conflict. Their views will be at odds with those of their constituents. That is a difficult position for a Member of Parliament. We as elected representatives all know that. We owe it to each other, I believe, to be both passionate and dispassionate in this debate, passionate as we present our personal points of view and dispassionate as we consider the viewpoints of others.

I will be voting for the motion, Mr. Speaker, because I believe in the reinstatement of capital punishment for premeditated murder and the murder of policemen and prison guards. Discussions with my constituents over the past eight years lead me to believe that the majority of my constituents also hold that point of view. People who commit premeditated murder make a conscious decision to take a life. That is the most serious of all crimes for which there can be no excuse. Policemen and prison guards are our nominees. They agree to protect our lives and property from those in society who choose not to obey the law. We owe it to them to provide a deterrent. Murderers decide to opt out of society. I am of the opinion that capital punishment is both an appropriate punishment for those who commit murder and a deterrent.

Public opinion polls conducted from time to time suggest that the weight of public opinion would be in favour of the reinstatement of capital punishment. That puts me in the fortunate position of holding a point of view which coincides with that of my constituents. However, there will be other Members from all Parties who are not as fortunate and I wish to address their position today.

Members of Parliament are elected to exercise their judgment on behalf of their constituents during their term of office. The true measure of an elected representative can be made when his or her opinions conflict sharply with the widely held opinions of his or her constituents. That is one of our most difficult tests as Members of Parliament. We then fly not only in the face of public opinion but in the face of the wishes of our constituents. However, it is necessary to preserve the principle of the independence of an elected representative. To my colleagues from all sides of the House, and to the House, I commend the comments of the famous British parliamentarian, Edmund Burke, made during his acceptance speech in 1774. I think these comments are important in this debate and I wish to read them into the record:

> It ought to be the happiness and glory of a representative to live in the strictest union, the closest correspondence, and the most unreserved communication with his constituents. Their wishes ought to have great weight with him, their opinion high respect, their business unremitted attention. It is his duty to sacrifice his repose, his pleasures, his satisfactions to theirs; and, above all, ever, and in all cases, to prefer their interest to his own. But his unbiased opinion, his mature judgment, his enlightened conscience, he ought not to sacrifice to you, to any man, or to any set of men living. These he does not derive from your pleasure, no, nor from the law and the constitution.
> They are a trust from providence, for the abuse of which he is deeply answerable. Your representative owes you, not his industry only, but his judgment; and he betrays, instead of serving you, if he sacrifices it to your opinion.

• (1150)

Burke's comments upon the duties of a member, his trust to his constituents, and his right to put forward his own judgment are still valid today over 200 years later.

This debate will be a great test. It will touch every Canadian; the innocent and the guilty, the judge and the jury, the Crown and the defence. Yet, Mr. Speaker, we will be judged as much by the way we reach the decision as on the decision itself. Therefore, let us all push ourselves to the limit to be worthy of the right to make that decision and to do it in as calm and thoughtful a manner as possible.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not support capital punishment and, therefore, I oppose this resolution.

[Translation]

I shall explain to the House why I do not believe in capital punishment, but first of all, I would like to express my Party's dismay at the way this Government has tabled the matter in the House and the way it intends to conduct the debate.

[English]

I do not believe in capital punishment. I will use the opportunity afforded me this morning to explain to the House, to my constituents and to Canadians why I take this position. However, I would first like to express my Party's dismay at the way in which this resolution has been brought forward, the method which the Government is using to treat and essay Canadian public opinion, and the way in which I believe it will bitterly divide Canadians.

During the election the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made a promise to the country that he would bring forward a free vote on capital punishment. We anticipated that that meant he would bring it forward in a clear, unequivocal manner, that he would allow the House to divide, and that the consequences would flow from whatever vote we took.

Instead we have an attempt by the Prime Minister and the Government to disguise their real intentions. Instead of a straightforward motion on the death penalty they are trying to pass responsibility off to a committee of this House. The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) told the House of Commons on February 13, when he brought in this motion, that the motion does not indicate that the Government supports or opposes the reinstatement of capital punishment. That position was echoed by the Parliamentary Secretary this morning. Yet the motion which he introduced, and on which we are asked to vote, begins with the words that you have recited, your Honour, "That this House supports, in principle, the reinstatement of capital punishment".

Who does the Government expect to fool—no position is being taken? Ministers are divided on the issue and are not taking responsibility for this motion—yet, the motion is quite clear that this House supports, in principle, the reinstatement of capital punishment.

The issue is to be turned over to a committee of the House of Commons. That committee will have the authority under the resolution to decide what crimes will be subject to capital punishment and what the style of that punishment will be. The committee will have the responsibility of preparing the actual Bill. All three of those items are vital; what crimes should be covered, in what way the ultimate punishment should be meted out, and the drafting of the Bill. That surely should have been the responsibility of the Government, or the Prime Minister, or the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn).

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, no government can resolve the issue of the death penalty by fence sitting, any more than we can execute someone partially. Either the death penalty exists in this country or it does not. The Government must put its cards on the table. The Government must clearly explain its position and take the consequences. But it doesn't want to do this. It wants to keep both sides happy.

[English]

To supporters of capital punishment they will say, "We have kept our word, we have brought it before the House". To those opposed to capital punishment they will say, "What could we do? The committee decided. It decided what crimes would be included, the style of the punishment, and it drafted the Bill."

This motion is sheer hypocrisy. It is a crass political move.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

The motion is silent on the royal prerogative of pardon, by which Cabinet can commute the death penalty to life imprisonment. Will the present Government or future Governments who are opposed to the death penalty be able to commute such a sentence, and if so, is not the present debate absolutely meaningless? Is it not ambiguous? Aren't we giving the impression to Canadians who support the death penalty that the House is speaking out on this issue because an execution as understood in this motion or in future legislation may well never take place, because of the powers and prerogatives of Cabinet, even if the death penalty is restored as a result of this motion and subsequent legislation?

[English]

By voting for this motion the House of Commons will agree in principle to the return of capital punishment. It will then send a committee criss-crossing Canada debating the merits of garrotte against the firing squad, electrocution against hanging, legal injection against even decapitation. What a ghoulish commission to send our colleagues on across the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The committee will also be obliged to decide what crimes will qualify—will it be only premeditated murder or first degree murder or treason or terrorism or espionage? The effect of this roving committee will be to divide Canadians even more bitterly on the subject and will not add one whit to what we already know about the subject. I anticipate many emotion-filled meetings across the country and very, very little dispassionate discussion.

• (1200)

[Translation]

We will not know until the Committee has finished its macabre task and comes back to the House to say what kind of criminals will receive the death sentence and how they will be executed. We must not forget that the Committee will not have to decide whether people will be executed, only how this will be done and for what crimes they are to suffer this punishment. By taking this approach, the Government is showing a shocking lack of responsibility, and Canadians will realize this, whatever their views on the fundamental issue of capital punishment may be.

[English]

When the committee returns to the House after 90 days or before, we start the debate all over again. We prolong the issue; we continue to exacerbate the division of the country, and the country remains divided.

What happens to the rest of the country's agenda and the Government's agenda before the House of Commons? It is behaving like some latter day Lady MacBeth, attempting to wash its hands of the issue. However, I say to the Government and the Prime Minister that it cannot absolve itself of this issue, nor can the Prime Minister. That is not leadership; that is playing games with an issue that goes to the heart of the conscience of every Member of Parliament and every Canadian.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We are told that a majority of Canadians favour the return of capital punishment. We are told that that is justification in itself for bringing back the death penalty. I understand that some Members are polling their constituents to find out how they want them to vote.

I am glad that the Parliamentary Secretary recited those words of Edmund Burke, perhaps too oft-cited but never more clearly put. He is saying that to poll one's constituents and to rely merely on public opinion polls or on commentators is an abandonment of our responsibility as parliamentarians. It is a derogation of what we were elected to do, by exercising our own judgment here and on behalf of the people of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): If there is one line that I would recite from the words of Edmund Burke put before the House in his famous address to his electors of Bristol: "Your representative owes you, not his industry only, but his judgment; and he betrays instead of serving you if he sacrifices it to your opinion".

The duty to make that judgment is ours. It is our judgment, and ours alone. It cannot be decided on the basis of public opinion polls or in searching out the collective opinion of our constituents. It is a matter for us to listen to reason carefully together, to weigh the arguments pro and con and then, in a matter of conscience and the fundamental values of the country, to tell the country and Parliament in the House of Commons where we stand. That is what we will do.

Let us be perfectly clear. This morning we are not talking about a percentage shift in interest rates. We are not talking in terms of whether the Gross National Product has increased or decreased, or about our trade figures. We are not talking in terms of greys; we are talking about an issue that is clearly black and white. There is no grey area possible when it comes to arguing whether the state should kill or not kill those the state finds guilty of the ultimate crime. The decision, once taken, first by us, then by the courts, judge and jury in the individual cases that will undoubtedly be brought before the country, then carried out by prison officials, is a final and irrevocable decision.

[Translation]

Every group of people has the duty to protect the innocent against violence. That is undeniable. Since murder is the height of violence, the state has the duty and responsibility to prevent this most condemnable crime.

Nobody here in the House would question this point. But we certainly do have diverging views on the method we should use to prevent this crime. Death penalty advocates believe that execution by the state constitutes the only real deterrent.

That is not my opinion. I do not think that the evidence we have confirms this.

[English]

I repeat that one of the earliest duties of a country was to protect citizens against attacks on their person, their lives, their freedom of movement and their liberty. When these attacks take the form of violence, then it is the duty of the state by way of the criminal sanction to punish. If the sanction against a criminal act is not sufficient or is seen by ordinary people not to be sufficient, then the effectiveness of the criminal law suffers loss of credibility. If a crime is not punished, people lose confidence in our law. If the punishment does not fit the crime, then in the minds of reasonable people the law is sapped of its credibility. Crimes of violence are not to be treated lightly. Sentences must be meaningful, and for murder, we believe that there ought to be a mandatory life sentence and limitation on the parole.

[Translation]

Some people claim that executing the murderer protects society because never again will this individual commit murder. True indeed. But since Confederation the number of people who were guilty of murder and went on to commit a second similar offence is infinitely small, and only two of the 473 murderers convicted since 1976 did commit a second murder.

[English]

What if a mistake is made? What if the wrong person is convicted? Do we think it never happens? It happened in the case of Donald Marshall who spent 11 years unjustly committed to a Nova Scotia prison for a murder he did not commit. What if we had executed Donald Marshall?

Mr. Shields: Not first degree murder.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What if you execute the wrong person? It has happened before and it can happen again. Who then is guilty of taking that innocent life? Is it the judge, the jury, the prison official, or does the whole responsibility begin with us here in the House of Commons? I ask every Member to weigh that particular decision.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): In this debate we are assessing an individual responsibility for applying to our law and imposing within the criminal sanction an irrevocable, final, irredeemable penalty. When we talk about equality before the law, we are generally proud as Canadians of having moved a great deal toward applying justice equally between rich and poor, between all members of our society.

But there is always the human condition. There is always the human variable, and the accused does not have the choice of those variables. What is the attitude of the particular judge before whom the accused is summoned? What is the particular attitude of that judge toward capital punishment? That attitude unconsciously determines in subtle ways the way that judge presides the trial.

What about the Crown prosecutor? What is his or her attitude toward the prosecution of a criminal offence? Does the Crown prosecutor believe that it is his or her duty to bring the whole facts before the judge and jury or does he or she believe that it is a primary duty to achieve a conviction? Does that sense of justice become diluted somewhat by the personal ambition and career plans of the prosecutor?

What about counsel for the defence? There is a wide variety and talent, persuasion and persistence among counsel. Yet, in most cases, particularly those involving legal aid, the accused does not have the right to choose the particular counsel defending him or her. That range of talents inevitably enters into the facts that are presented before a jury and the jury's assessment of those facts.

The accused has very little control over those human factors. Many accused of the ultimate crime are friendless, alone and without resources. Although we speak of equalizing the opportunity and equality of justice in Canada, there is still little doubt that a person with resources has a better chance.

[Translation]

Some capital punishment supporters, including the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm), state that it is worth the risk. They say that even if the state mistakenly kills certain people, it will be worth it since we will thus be getting rid of the guilty. This is a carefree and irresponsible approach which I cannot accept.

[English]

Of course we are given the ancient argument's recital of an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth—and, a life for a life. Murder is a barbaric act, so should we respond in a barbaric way? What would happen if we carried that to its logical conclusion: burgle the house of a burglar, cheat the embezzler, make obscene phone calls to someone who makes them, kidnap the child of the kidnapper? Of course that is an absurd argument but that is what we are really saying if we are to reply in the same way to an act of barbarism.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Civilized societies over the centuries have developed codes of law and systems of justice to provide for the punishment of the guilty. It is not a system based on vengeance, retribution or revenge. Surely Canada has risen as a state beyond state-enforced vengeance or state-enforced retribution. Surely we have a system based on a calm, dispassionate review of the allegations so that beyond any shred of doubt within the burden of proof of the criminal law they are converted into facts. If guilt is assessed after due process then a punishment is imposed which will deter the commission of similar crimes. That is our system.

[Translation]

The aim of this system is to protect society and rehabilitate criminals. And in a civilized society the penal system must focus on protection, prevention and rehabilitation. We must come to grips with the causes of violent crimes, not only with their consequences.

[English]

What we are discussing here this morning is not whether the state has the right to execute but whether it is right for the state to execute.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) is quoted in The Toronto Star as having said:

> A country that puts murderers to death is telling the world that life is not cheap in that country.

I would ask the Hon. Member to reflect on that statement. If we look around the world and see where capital punishment is used we see that it is mostly in countries such as Iran, Saudi Arabia, the Soviet Union, China and South Africa. We must then ask ourselves, are these our models? Are these the societies that we want to emulate? The answer is clearly no. The answer is that the societies with which we feel comfortable are those of western Europe, New Zealand, Australia, and those states in the union of the United States where capital punishment has been abolished.

I do not arrive at my own views on capital punishment from any philosophical belief that there is no inherent right in the state to take a life. Under our moral history, under our law and under our traditions there has always been a right individually to self-defence, even at the cost of taking another's life in legitimate self-defence.

The state has always had collectively the right to defend itself, even by going to war and taking life, even when it involves the killing of others. Execution in the course of individual self-defence or in the course of collective self-defence has always been morally and legally justifiable within our moral and legal principles.

The question then is this. Is state execution justifiable as a response to murder? Is the state exercising a legitimate role of self-defence in that response to murder? It can only justify that as an act of self-defence if it can establish beyond a doubt that it is the only effective deterrent to the recommission of that crime, and in influencing other people as they behave in our society.

Is capital punishment the only such deterrent? That is the issue. It is not only a moral issue; it is a factual and pragmatic issue. There are facts before us.

I think that one of the great speeches made in the House of Commons on this issue was made by the late Arthur Maloney. I commend his speech to Hon. Members. He made it on February 18, 1960 and he pointed out:

> —there are many things which we are morally entitled to do but which we are not morally obliged to do.

As our former Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau, told the House on June 15, 1976, only:

> A preponderance of available evidence showing that executions are likely to deter other murders would serve as an adequate justification for the act, an adequate guarantee that a human life was not being taken capriciously.

It is instructive to note that even the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police so long in favour of capital punishment no longer argues that capital punishment is the only effective deterrent.

Your Honour the evidence is not there. Statistics have been advanced on both sides of the argument. Numbers will obviously be called into play before the House. But I have never found them to be conclusive, and I do not find them to be conclusive now. They do not remove my doubt. Indeed, in the civilized world there is nowhere any evidence to show that capital punishment has had any significant impact at all on the murder rate.

[Translation]

At 2.1 per 100,000 people, last year's homicide rate in Canada was the lowest in 15 years. When capital punishment was abolished in 1976 the rate was 2.9 per 100,000 people. And if we look at the United States, statistics show that those states which still impose the death penalty report a higher number of homicides than do the other states where it has been abolished. That, Mr. Speaker, shows the lack of evidence in support of capital punishment.

If capital punishment does not have a deterrent effect, what other use does it have? Death penalty supporters say that the punishment should be equal to the crime. But if a punishment goes beyond deterrence, it becomes an act of vengeance, retaliation, or personal satisfaction.

As a civilized society, have we not gone beyond the stage of vengeance sanctioned by the state? Has there been no lessening of thirst for revenge which at one time prompted mankind to take the law in its own hands and demand an eye for an eye?

• (1220)

[English]

Surely we have moved from retaliation, to a code of impartial justice, with a system of fair hearing and judgment by our peers. Surely by accepting to live under a system of communal justice, we have abandoned the right to individual vengeance; we have abandoned our own right to take personal vengeance. If that be so, how does it advance our cause by handing it over to the state?

I believe that we have entered this debate on fallacious grounds. I believe that there is, in the minds of too many people in Canada, the idea that in the past 10 years, or in the past 20 years, we have somehow changed fundamentally as a society; that we have become more violent, more brutal than was the case when we had the death penalty, 10 or more years ago.

I have tried to assess where that feeling comes from, and I am sure that the prime source for it is what we receive by way of a daily diet of news and television programming. Every night on prime time television we see murder, kidnapping, robbery, assault, and rape. We forget that it is an exaggeration. We forget that these are actors and that the actors do not really die, that the actors are not really the crazed killers they are portrayed to be.

[Translation]

But we have a tendency to forget that in recent years there have been more murders in Miami, Florida, than in Canada as a whole, yet capital punishment is still on the statute books in Florida. Not for a moment would I deny the existence of violent and brutal crimes in Canada. I do not deny that people are being assassinated. I do not deny that people commit violent crimes, but I vehemently deny that our society has become more violent and more brutal, and that one of the solutions would be to increase violence by reinstating capital punishment.

[English]

What is the message we are trying to send out from this place, Mr. Speaker? What is the message we are going to send out from this place if we once again allow the state to put a fellow member of our society to death?

To me, the message would be clear. We have failed, we have given up. It is a sign that we are willing to indulge our own personal vengeance, our own personal anger again to make violence, violence once again endorsed, and endorsable, by our state. It would be a sign that we have lost faith in ourselves as a society to deal creatively and effectively with those who break society's rules.

I believe that the state must aspire to a higher ideal than simply killing people who cannot be fitted into our scope of conduct. Our society is a dynamic and living thing. It changes, our rules change. One hundred years ago, the number of crimes for which the death penalty could be imposed numbered 200. What was a major crime warranting the death penalty a century ago hardly enjoys a footnote in the Criminal Code today. That is the case in respect of several of those offences.

As is pointed out in the recent report of the Canadian Sentencing Commission, capital punishment was at the center of the penalty structure in England at the end of the 18th century. Since we incorporated the British system, the same attitude applied then in our country. But, the report also points out that even then European penal reformers had already stated the cardinal principle of deterrence, that principle being that it is not the severity but rather the certainty of the punishment which deters potential offenders. A penalty structure which relied on punishment so severe that it could not be applied systematically was in clear conflict with this principle.

I have the profound conviction, Mr. Speaker, that the evolution in our thinking did not come about by accident. It came about because we continued to push forward our frontiers in terms of understanding and knowledge. As a people, we have made considerable progress. We have taken considerable strides as a civilization. We are more compassionate, more understanding, and more humane. I believe that bringing back the death penalty would once again close the door on that road of progress.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It would also be an indication that we have given up hope of finding a humane yet effective response to the ultimate crime.

It is for these reasons, Mr. Speaker, that I intend to vote against this motion. It is for these reasons that I intend to urge my colleagues from all quarters of the House to vote against the motion, to vote against the restoration of the death penalty. It is for these reasons that I commend to each and every one of us a thorough review of our conscience and of our dignity as elected representatives of a great people.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), on a point of order.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, in the light of the importance of this debate, and in the light of the custom and tradition of this House, I rise to seek the unanimous consent of the House to allow the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) to speak for a period of time equal to that of the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner); and, if necessary, that the hour of one o'clock not be seen by the Speaker, to enable his speech to be completed.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis).

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, as the House will be aware, we have been trying to work out arrangements for an orderly debate on this subject, arrangements which would ensure that everyone will be heard fully. We have considered this matter, and in the spirit of co-operation—which we hope will endure throughout this debate—we are prepared to give our consent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray).

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Official Opposition, we are happy to agree to the request of the House Leader of the New Democratic Party.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is so agreed.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, there is not a subject matter more important for Members of Parliament to debate and deliberate upon than the one that is now before us. As all members on both sides of this issue know, what is at stake here is whether this country will reintroduce into law the right of the state, calmly and deliberately, to take a human life.

It is the importance of this issue that leads me immediately to say to Members of all Parties that I intend to address my comments on this profoundly important matter, not to those who agree with me that capital punishment is wrong, but to those who are either undecided or, up to this moment, believe that it is appropriate for capital punishment to be reintroduced into our laws.

I have concerns about the origin of the resolution, the way it has been brought forward, and I have some concerns about the details of it. But I put those concerns aside to deal with the fundamental question that is at the root of the motion. As the right to experience life, Mr. Speaker, is the most basic of values, so too is the destruction of life, its denial to another, the most horrible of crimes. Whether that destruction is of a child or an elderly person, an invalid or an athlete, a scholar or a cab driver, a man or woman in the home, or whomever, whether that destruction is one of a random mass murder or an act that is premeditated and specific, the result, Mr. Speaker, is the same. The victim's life is snuffed out; it is finished, there is no more. The ultimate impingement on another human being has been carried out.

I am sure everyone in the House agrees that murder is horrible, that we must do all we can to prevent it, and that those who murder must in some sense be punished. However, these are not the central matters before us.

What is central is the obligation of those who want capital punishment to justify that course of action. What is central is their obligation, those who believe that killing our neighbour is morally wrong, to show that the same act of terminal violence when carried out by the state in the name of law is morally right.

Those who want us to approve of the motion, which in its essence, if established, would bring about the restoration of the death penalty, have the obligation to prove their case. If they want to take life, they must provide us with arguments which lead us to conclude that when sanctioned by the state the taking of a life is right.

[Translation]

People who are in favour of capital punishment have a moral duty to prove that killing by the State is justified and to argue their case. That is in fact the major moral concern of this debate, since a debate on the death penalty is about the right of the State to kill.

People who are in favour of capital punishment will have to provide moral arguments to justify the right of the State to kill a human being. In my opinion, killing is justifiable only in two situations. One is self-defence. If a man, woman or child is attacked by another person, he or she has a right to kill the attacker, if necessary, to protect his or her life. The second is when a country or a state declares war or invades another country to forcibly impose its laws on it, thereby making use of violence and death. I think it is right and morally acceptable for the people of that country to defend themselves against the attacker.

The principle involved in these two examples is identical, Mr. Speaker. An individual has the right to protect his life when it is seriously threatened. A State or a community also has that right.

[English]

When the only defence against a violent attack on life is the use of violence, then that violence is morally justifiable. Individuals or states have the moral right to survive and to defend that survival when it is being assailed.

However, the question before us is of a different order entirely. It is whether the state is justified in killing a human being, not in active defence, but cruelly, deliberately, in a premeditated way, long after some crime has been committed. Those Members of Parliament who favour this premeditated destruction of human life by the state must make the case for it. It is their responsibility and theirs alone. They cannot shift the moral burden of justifying this kind of violence to those who elected them. They cannot claim they are merely following the wishes of the population.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: In this context I say to the government spokesperson who initiated the debate that surely much more is required than simply stating a commitment to one side or the other. Surely the Conservative Member who spoke today had an obligation not simply to restate his position but to give to the people of Canada and to the Members of the House of Commons his moral reason for reaching the conclusion he did. He did not, and to that extent he let down the seriousness of this occasion.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, some Members of the House are saying that most Canadian men and women, or rather that most of their constituents want capital punishment to be reinstated. You have heard that argument. Several Hon. Members have adopted a position based on the results of public polls which indicate that most Canadians or most of their constituents are in favour of capital punishment. For such an argument to be valid, one would have to recognize that a democratic government should be satisfied simply with counting votes. It is a bad conception of democracy generally and especially representative democracy.

Mr. Speaker, history's major democrats, from Pericles in ancient Greece to John Stuart Mill, the first democrat of the modern era, have always claimed that discussion based on reason and facts is an essential element of democracy. Within a small community, it is possible for all men and women who are affected by a specific situation to legislate. It was possible at the time of the ancient Greek cities, except for women and slaves, who did not have the right to participate.

Within small communities, people could take part in public debates and listen to conflicting opinions. However, it is impossible to hold such a rational discussion in view of the huge population of modern states. The state is not simply a city or a small community. A modern state is a country. That is why we have representative democracy, not direct democracy. In the case of representative democracy, elected representatives must take into account certain basic principles, listen to the opinions of men and women taking part in the debate and look for evidence at home and abroad.

The great majority of our constituents simply do not have time to weigh the pros and cons and analyze the arguments made. They are busy earning their daily bread. That is their preoccupation.

Unlike us in the House of Commons, they do not have an opportunity to analyze the arguments and listen to each of us give his opinion before making a final decision.

As elected Members of Parliament we must accept the consequences of our decisions, not only with respect to capital punishment but also with respect to any other issue.

The principle I uphold does not apply only to the death penalty debate but, as I said before, to all our activities as members.

It is such a basic principle in our system that I was very surprised to hear members say that all we need to do is consult our constituents and add up the numbers, or to conduct a public opinion poll throughout the country.

Democracy is not a poll-taking process. Otherwise we could install a computer in every household and there would be no need for Members of Parliament.

In my opinion such an approach is both erroneous and antidemocratic. Mr. Speaker, such a process amounts to denying that decisions must be made after rational discussions, after hours of persuasion and in-depth examination of the question.

This is why I come to the conclusion that every member, whether for or against capital punishment, has one essential democratic duty, and that is to make his or her own decision. And for the reasons I have indicated, it is the responsibility of those members who want to give the state the right to kill to explain their logic, that is their responsibility.

• (1240)

[English]

I submit that none of the reasons given to support capital punishment is sustainable. I want now to deal with those arguments.

First, there is the contention that punishment must suit the crime, and, say some, this means that only by killing a murderer can the punishment fit the offence. The Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) has already dealt with this argument and I can agree totally with what he has said. The logic of the position of those who take this stand can be persuasive only after the most superficial consideration. If someone destroys my car or deliberately breaks my leg, no one would argue that the state should then destroy his car or break his leg. We immediately see, Mr. Speaker, that such a response would not constitute justice. In fact, most advocates of capital punishment would agree with us in these matters in discussing those subjects. They do not advocate breaking the leg of a man who has deliberately done that to another. Many of them would correctly see such punishment for what it would be, namely, vengeance, not justice. It is too bad that these same people do not see that capital punishment is a response to murder of exactly the same logical order.

I want now to turn to the deterrence argument, which most people who have discussed this matter, who have thought about it, consider to be the most serious argument to be dealt with before reaching a decision.

Perhaps at this point I might parenthetically observe and recommend to my colleagues one of the greatest essays, I think, in modern literature, by Albert Camus, a great freedom fighter in the French underground during the World War II, a Nobel prize winner for literature, a man of utter and complete integrity who wrote beautifully and intelligently. I commend his superb essay "Reflections on the Guillotine" to all those who have either not made up their minds or who are, at this point, on the side of capital punishment. He dealt with not only the deterrence question that I now come to, but with many other profoundly related matters to the whole issue of capital punishment in modern society.

The principal argument that could persuade those of us who are on the other side to come over to support capital punishment has to be that of deterrence. If we could be persuaded that lives could be saved by having capital punishment, if it could be seen that individual or mass murders could be avoided by taking the life of an individual with the instruments of state power acting as a deterrent, then many of us could be persuaded to support this motion. But, Mr. Speaker, I appeal to those who have not made up their mind on this issue, or who have made up their mind and are on the other side, to look at the evidence on this question because the evidence is clear in the following sense. If you are going to make any social analysis, any explanation in terms of social change in society and you want to relate that to the notion of deterrence about capital punishment, then the onus of proof is for you to show us that capital punishment acts as a deterrent. It is very clear that no such persuasive argument can be made. I have a few very specific points on this.

In the distant past, as has already been noted in the debate, capital punishment was used for a whole variety of crimes and it was gradually abolished. In some countries, including our own, we abolished it for everything. During the evolution of history in the last 100 years with the abolition of capital punishment for many crimes, we have actually seen the incidence of many of those crimes going down radically and not up. In country after country where there is a variety of experiences with capital punishment and non-capital punishment, again there can be no linear connection between the establishment of capital punishment on the one hand and a decline in the rate of murder on the other.

Just on the weekend we heard the horrible news of a mass murder in the state of Florida. It was a terrible incident. Florida is one of the states that recently brought back capital punishment. Is anyone going to seriously argue that capital punishment would have acted as a deterrent for the kind of man or woman who would indulge in that kind of mass murder? Of course not.

In Canada we last voted on this issue in 1976. According to the most recent figures from Statistics Canada, the homicide rate is now at the lowest level in 13 years. Clearly, renewing capital punishment is not going to improve that situation. The abolition of capital punishment did not lead to an increase in the murder rate.

Another point not widely discussed but which has been understood by classic Greek writers—it was understood by Dostoyevsky, it was certainly understood by Sigmund Freud and modern psychologists—is that for a certain kind of mentality the existence of capital punishment is in fact a lure to crime. There is a kind of sickness in some people, a fascination with the extremes of punishment. So the very existence of capital punishment, I say to those who are supporting it, can be conducive to an increase in a certain kind of criminal violent activity.

Even the more thoughtful of those who defend capital punishment have recently conceded that the evidence cannot be mounted to show that capital punishment is a deterrent. Mr. Don Cassidy, Executive Director of the Canadian Association of Police Chiefs is quoted as saying recently "It cannot be proven statistically". If it is the case that the fundamental argument for the reintroduction of capital punishment, the reintroduction of state violence because that is what it is, cannot be proven statistically, then I would ask what we are doing here. Surely, out of all respect for human life and out of what ought to be our commitment to justice, we ought to reach the appropriate conclusion and say that capital punishment ought not to be restored in Canada.

• (1250)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Many opponents of capital punishment at home and abroad have pointed out that, in the final analysis, those defending capital punishment ultimately fall back and rest their case on vengeance. I was disturbed to hear not long ago a Member of the House of Commons lending support to the idea of vengeance. Vengeance is simply a basic impulse, and I believe that all of us have this impulse from time to time.

However, we must not confuse an aggressive impulse, emotively produced, with justice. Such primordial aggressive, emotional, violent aspects of human nature exist, and I believe will always exist, but as human beings living in society we must guard against these, not indulge them. Surely as lawmakers, we in particular must bear this in mind.

Consider the responses of some people most immediately affected by murder recently. If anyone can be thought to be entitled to act on the impulse of vengeance, it would surely be a member of the family of, or one who is close to a victim of murder. I personally found most moving and touching some of the responses of those victims in our own country to horrible acts of murder inflicted on dear ones and family members.

The daughter of Gerald Ruygrok of Ottawa was brutally murdered at a halfway house, a daughter fondly and deeply regarded by her father. Did he respond with an act of vengeance? Did he say that we must have an eye for an eye? No. He said: "We should use reason rather than instinct". He opposes the reintroduction of capital punishment.

Esther Aucoin is the widow of New Brunswick patrolman Manny Aucoin who was shot on duty not long ago. Did she respond with vengeance? Not at all. She requested that a letter be read at her husband's funeral making it clear that she opposed the reintroduction of capital punishment.

A third example of this is Leslie Parrott of Toronto. Her daughter Alison was murdered in Toronto last year and the killer, the one who committed a brutal, terminal, horrible act, is still at large. Leslie Parrott has written to all Members of Parliament, I believe. I received a letter as did other Hon. Members not long ago. She does not respond with vengeance, seeking an eye for an eye. She knows that she will not be compensated for the loss of her daughter by the loss of the life of the person who killed her daughter and who has not yet even been apprehended. I would like to read a short paragraph from her letter:

> Alison's murder has given me a very personal and agonizing experience of the horror of violence and killing. It has more than ever convinced me that we as a society cannot ever and must not ever condone killing, whether by state or individual, in any shape or form.

She too is opposed to capital punishment.

One can make other arguments about this horrible instrument that is open to the state to use. Not only in Canada but in virtually every other country there is the possibility that an innocent person may be executed. It is also very important that, as we know from studies done at home and abroad, it is the person of a minority or the poor in society that is most likely to be convicted when charged with murder. The rich, the affluent and the powerful are frequently able to hire better lawyers. They are least likely to be convicted. In this act of justice which involves a human life above all others, surely we ought not risk the destruction of another human being, particularly if this destruction is much more likely to occur in the poorest elements of society. I say, a number of other arguments could be elaborated upon, and no doubt they will be. I attempted to deal with the central argument and the question of deterrents. I have argued that the evidence is not there and therefore one should not support capital punishment for that reason.

Before concluding, I would like to make two points. First, all of us in the House on both sides of the issue see murder for the horrible act that it is, and we should all be redoubling our efforts to try to understand those causes that can be removed, as some of them can be, and to accept the probable reality that because human beings are the violent creatures we are from time to time, there will likely and definitely be murders to deal with in the history of society. However, we should do what we can to ensure that those who commit murder are appropriately punished. As I said, that is not the central issue of this debate. The issue is whether or not there is a moral argument that would justify bringing back capital punishment.

I would like to conclude by saying that capital punishment simply adds to the degree of brutalization that is going on in society. In coldly taking the life of a murderer, the state would simply compound the moral unacceptability of the original violent act. We need less, not more violence in Canada. We need justice, not vengeance. We should encourage life, not death. We should oppose the restoration of capital punishment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 1 p.m., I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. this day.

IMMIGRATION

ENTRY OF BRAZILIANS UNDER FALSE PRETENCES

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, Canadians have now learned that false refugee claimants from Brazil have entered our country thanks to unscrupulous immigration consultants in Canada and abroad, and especially thanks to the Conservative Government's foot-dragging in effectively stopping these illegal and intolerable activities.

In January, 1987, five months after initially receiving bogus refugee applicants from Turkey, the Government realized it was being duped. Since the Portuguese visa problems last summer Canadian immigration officials were allegedly linked to an extensive immigration scam for peddling visas for $4,000 this March. Following that, shady travel consultants sold visas abroad for $6,500 to Lebanese individuals wanting to come to Canada.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) has turned a blind eye to these activities and has not corrected a worsening situation. I warned the Minister in this House last March 25, after bringing this matter to his attention one year ago, that Brazil specifically was one of the countries targeted by phoney immigration consultants.

The Minister has failed to address this growing industry and his inaction has allowed this plague of immigration problems, which is seriously undermining our immigration process, to persist and establish roots in a host of countries.

Complementing this, legitimate and honest immigrants and refugees are finding a closed door under this Tory regime. The Government needs to prosecute these offenders urgently and send a strong signal that these activities will no longer be tolerated in this country.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

FEDERAL MICRO-ELECTRONICS STRATEGY

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, on Friday a four-year $90 million Federal Micro-electronics Strategy to assist industry in developing new technologies was launched by the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté).

This strategy is a major part of InnovAction, the Canadian strategy for science and technology, and is designed to increase the capacity of industry to develop and apply advanced micro-electronics technologies to products and processes; to enhance co-operation between Governments, universities and industries; and to encourage complementary investments by provinces.

Systems based on the applications of micro-electronics technology are the major tools for creating new wealth and employment in the industrialized world. Canada must prepare now to take advantage of these opportunities and respond to the challenge. We cannot afford to treat technological innovation as marginal to industrial renewal. At stake is the fundamental issue of how Canada will "earn a living" in the 1990s and beyond.

I congratulate the Government on this important initiative which will help build the technological foundation we need for competitive success in the coming years.

TAX REFORM

EFFECT OF UNFAIRNESS IN SYSTEM

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the New Democrats' recently released tax paper on the personal tax system in Canada called on the Government to bring fairness to a system now riddled with loopholes and generous deductions primarily benefiting upper-income Canadians.

Millions of middle and low-income Canadians are reminded this week of how much this unfairness will cost them as they fill out their 1986 tax forms due at the end of this week. While the Conservative Government has promised us tax reform, it is its actions which speak louder than words.

Federal taxes on $2,000 taxable income have increased by a whopping 110 per cent, or $101, in 1986 for those least able to afford to pay. Yet taxes on $40,000 taxable income increased by only 2 per cent, or $172. Is this fair? Canadians have the Government and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to thank for this.

RIGHT TO LIFE

CALL FOR PARLIAMENTARY DEBATE AND FREE VOTE ON ABORTION ISSUE

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I rise in this House to raise once again an issue which refuses to go away, that is the rights of the unborn. The recent decision of an Ontario judge to make a foetus a ward of the courts gave dramatic legal sanction to a position already held by many thoughtful Canadians, namely, that the foetus is not simply a potential life but rather a life with potential.

As elected decision-makers, it is highly irresponsible for us to continue to ignore the growing medical, legal and sociological evidence which leads to this irrefutable conclusion.

Today Parliament begins a debate which will culminate in a free vote on the question of capital punishment. Given that abortion is likewise a crucial test of conscience, I would urge that Canadians at large, and this House in particular, be afforded the opportunity to debate and vote, in a similar free vote of conscience, upon the fundamental question of the status of Canada's unborn.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

OUR COMMON FUTURE—UNITED NATIONS COMMISSION'S REPORT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the World Commission on Environment and Development, created by the United Nations and headed by Norway's Prime Minister, is composed of 22 economic, political and environmental experts from 21 countries, including two Canadians, Maurice Strong and James MacNeill. You will be glad to know, Mr. Speaker, that today the commission presented its report in London.

The report entitled Our Common Future calls on national Governments to co-operate in managing the global environment, in ensuring that natural resources sustain development at home and abroad, and in taking all the necessary steps to integrate economic with environmental decisions since the economy depends on the environment.

• (1405)

The report says that we can have a new era of economic growth, particularly in poor countries, and sustainable forms of development around the world. These forms must include life-styles "within the planet's ecological means". Therefore, some painful choices will be required.

One important conclusion in the report is that "security must be secured through change". We call on the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) to provide leadership within the federal Government and at the United Nations, and to set into motion the institutional changes which will ensure security for present and future generations, our common future.

LAW REFORM COMMISSION

WORK ON UPDATING CRIMINAL CODE

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the things that are working well seldom receive much attention in the House of Commons.

This is certainly the case with the Law Reform Commission of Canada, established with all-Party consent in 1971, and currently presided over by Mr. Justice Allen Linden.

The goal of the commission is to promote laws which are modern, principled, rational, comprehensive, egalitarian and readily intelligible. Through various reports to Parliament and working papers, the commission provides invaluable advice to both federal and provincial legislators.

One of the commission's principal aims is, through its Substantive Criminal Law Project, to give Canada a new up-to-date Criminal Code.

We understand that, after 15 years of study, the first draft has now been completed and we look forward to the final results of this work.

TAX REFORM

NEED FOR FAIRNESS IN SYSTEM

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my office and those of my colleagues in the New Democratic Party have recently been receiving letters and calls from constituents living on very modest incomes, who are finding to their shock that their taxes have increased dramatically. One such retired couple living in Halifax saw their taxes double from $300 to $600 in one year.

These Canadians are very angry. They have heard a lot of talk about tax reform on radio, television, and in newspapers. Yet, now these people are finding out that they have to pay hundreds of dollars more in taxes, and it is hundreds of dollars that they just do not have.

It is time the Government stopped talking about tax fairness and began doing something about bringing fairness to the tax system for these and other Canadians.

EDUCATION WEEK

IMPORTANCE OF EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, this is Education Week in Canada. Its purpose is to focus public attention on the excitement, energy and creativity in our school systems. The theme of the week is "Come Learn With Me".

I had the privilege in the past few days to be present at the sod-turning of a new public school in Nepean-Carleton, at the opening of a new separate school, and this morning to meet with the education leaders in my community. These experiences reminded me of the quality and the importance of our educational system.

Our schools are more than buildings. They are places where young people develop intellectually and spiritually, where a foundation is laid for them to take a place in the economic and social fabric of this nation.

Our educational system is one of the best in the world. I ask each of us in the House this afternoon to take a moment this week to visit a school, or think about our educational system and to think of ways in which we can make it better. Our young people, many of them in our Gallery today, are our greatest national asset.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

NEED TO REPAIR SERVICE INFRASTRUCTURES

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, from coast to coast Canadian cities are facing a crisis as road, sewer and water systems continue to deteriorate. The Federation of Canadian Municipalities estimates that about $14 billion will have to be spent over the next five years just to protect the $30 billion already invested.

We should be acting now to ensure the health and safety of Canadians, and to avoid higher repair costs in the future.

Money spent now on renewing municipal infrastructures would be money well spent to maintain the quality of existing services and to boost our economy. These public works projects would employ tens of thousands and use Canadian materials and equipment.

• (1410)

The Conservative Government agrees that there is a problem but refuses to help even though over one million Canadians are still out of work and even though previous federal Governments have participated in projects of this type. Therefore I urge the Government to modify its position and to take a more constructive and co-operative approach in working with other levels of government on this important issue.

PEACE

SUPPORT FOR SUPERPOWERS' EFFORTS TO REACH AGREEMENT ON DISARMAMENT

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am certain you will agree that the pursuit of peace is the responsibility of us all, not only of elected persons in the House of Commons but of all Canadians.

During the recent Easter recess I met with many of my constituents, especially young people in Cubs and Scouts, Brownies and Girl Guides, with various church groups, with neighbours, family, Veterans Against Nuclear Arms, and many others. There seems to be a real feeling that the two superpowers, the U.S.A. and the Soviet Union, are going through a period of sincere efforts in Geneva to deal with verification agreements, troop withdrawals, and reduction and elimination of nuclear weapons. Whether for economic, political or peaceful reasons, President Reagan and Soviet Leader Gorbachev seem intent on resolving these remarkably important issues.

I call upon the Government of Canada to continue to offer the hand of Canadian diplomacy and understanding to these two world leaders.

Someone asked me the other day why I was concerned about the pursuit of peace. My answer was that I shudder to think of the alternative.

TAX REFORM

TAXPAYER'S INELIGIBILITY FOR CHILD TAX CREDIT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, as most Canadians have now filled out their 1986 tax returns and have sent them in we are reminded once again of the incredible injustice in our tax system. For example, in some years a teller in the Royal Bank of Canada or a teller in the Bank of Montreal paid more tax than the entire bank. Sometimes a gas jockey pumping gas for Shell Oil has actually paid more income tax than the entire oil company.

I received a letter the other day from a constituent in British Columbia who states:

> Just another discrepancy in our tax laws that discriminate against poor people. I am not eligible for any portion of the child tax credit, despite the fact I had my 13-year-old daughter for eight months last year. My ex-husband got the whole year's tax credit from 1986 as he had her in his care on December 31, 1986. The irony of this was that I had never received a penny from him for child custody in the five or six years I supported my daughter in poverty—
> I was on welfare all of last year and am still paying bills that were a direct result of supporting a teenager on too little income.

Is this fair in terms of our present tax system?

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

GOVERNMENT PERFORMANCE

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, the new Canadian science and technology policy is the outcome of a true federal-provincial consensus.

Canada's new national policy, as announced recently by the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle), is the outcome of a process initiated in 1985 to emphasize increasingly scientific and technological matters among Government concerns.

The final document signed by the Federal Minister and 12 provincial and territorial ministers, members of a committee that was mandated to negotiate the goals and contents of that agreement, symbolizes the Canadian Government's commitment to coordinate scientific and technological development efforts. That desire to coordinate Canadian and provincial scientific policies was a major motivation in the development of a truly all-Canadian policy.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, this coming Friday, the Minister will be inaugurating the Biotechnology Research Institute in Montreal. This is a major event that once more points to this Government's commitment to the development of science and technology in Canada, including Quebec.

TRANSPORT

NEED FOR TAKING MEASURES TO AVOID FATAL ACCIDENTS ON JACQUES CARTIER BRIDGE IN MONTREAL

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, again this weekend there have been 24 accidents on Jacques-Cartier Bridge, including a serious accident that caused one casualty and a number of injuries.

The most disappointing aspect is that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) of this Tory Government has had on his desk since January a report by the Traffic Corporation that made clear, definite and specific recommendations to avoid fatal accidents on Jacques-Cartier Bridge: First, to install an improved road signs system; second, to add more patrol cars; and third, to have anti-skid materials.

Mr. Speaker, tomorrow, representatives of the Jacques-Cartier and Champlain Bridges police officers will be here, and it is my hope that the Minister of Transport will have the fortitude to meet with those people in order to repair those injustices and announce by Friday concrete steps to avoid fatal accidents on Jacques-Cartier Bridge.

NATURAL RESOURCES

LACK OF MINERALS DEVELOPMENT AGREEMENT BETWEEN ALBERTA AND FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, although one usually thinks in terms of hydrocarbons when discussing Alberta resources, the princess province holds an untold potential in development of metallic and other mineral compounds, notably in its northeast corner, which, geologically, is part of the Canadian Shield.

Unfortunately, Alberta is the only province in Confederation without a minerals development agreement with the federal Government. Other jurisdictions have agreements, ranging in funding size from $100 million in Quebec to $300,000 for gravel pits in Prince Edward Island.

Unlike its predecessor, this national administration is not in the habit of grabbing provincial resources. The MDA process, as practised by our Government, provides for provincial targeting and delivery. However, the initiative for entering into such an agreement must come from the province.

I urge Alberta to move positively, and soon.

DISASTERS

ACCIDENTAL DEATHS OF THREE FISHERMEN IN ACADIA

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, the crab fishing season in the Gulf of St. Lawrence started last Saturday, but on a very sad note. Three fishermen from the Acadian Peninsula lost their lives when their boat capsized 30 kilometers east of Miscou Island.

Captain Léo Noël and his aids, Cyria Duguay et Dion Mallet, were the unfortunate victims of this shipwreck.

The exact causes of the accident are not yet known. It seems that within two minutes, the boat went under stern first before capsizing.

Every year, Mr. Speaker, fishermen drown, reminding us that even if the sea is sometimes beautiful, danger is always present. Fishermen are at the mercy of the elements.

Mr. Speaker, while extending my condolences to the afflicted families, I wish them much courage to face this troubled time in their lives.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ENERGY

PROPOSED SALE OF DOME PETROLEUM TO AMOCO CANADA

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I believe, and I believe most Canadians share the view, that there should be a "Canadian" solution to the sale of Dome Petroleum. To date the Prime Minister and his Government have done and said nothing to encourage that solution. It is obvious that the Government hasn't lifted a finger to achieve a "Canadian" result.

What we have before us is, potentially, the largest business takeover in Canadian history.

My question is for the Prime Minister, and it is: Will he confirm that, to date, his Government has done nothing, hasn't raised a finger, to facilitate a "Canadian" solution? And isn't it true that his Government will continue to do absolutely nothing to affect the result of this transaction?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think that one of the best "Canadian" solutions to the Dome question is to ensure that the corporation will still be alive.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Masse: Mr. Speaker, in two and a half years of Government efforts, of defining principles and holding meetings, we have ensured that offers will be forthcoming from the private sector to ensure Dome's survival. For that we have to thank Government efforts in the past two and a half years.

CANADIANIZATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources knows perfectly well that Canadian offers were in the running but were not encouraged, either by the Minister or by his colleague, the Minister of Finance. Once again, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Why did he let his present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources reverse the Canadian Government's Canadianization policy and why did he not facilitate a Canadian solution?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the acquisition policy announced by my predecessor is exactly the same policy I have been following. It provides for the possibility of foreign investment in sectors in obvious financial difficulty, as in the case of Dome, and it will be up to the Government, through Investment Canada and other Government agencies, to ensure that when the deal is submitted to the Government, after acceptance by Dome, there will be benefits for Canada.

• (1420)

[English]

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We are not giving up on a Canadian solution, even though the passage of time in the course of the transaction which the Ministers of the Government allowed to happen is making that more difficult.

REQUEST THAT INVESTMENT CANADA IMPOSE CONDITIONS ON AMOCO CANADA

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. If, as the Minister of Energy implies, he will allow the Amoco transaction to be consummated, will he insist that Investment Canada impose, at a minimum, certain conditions upon Amoco Canada, including becoming Canadian controlled by January 1, 1990, and insisting in the meantime upon a guarantee for Canadian jobs and a guarantee that Canadian exploration will continue?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I may remind the Leader of the Opposition that the problems facing Dome Petroleum today were largely caused by the policies of the previous Government of which you were a member.

We have inherited a difficult situation. Four thousand people have jobs with Dome Petroleum, whose reserves are of major importance to Canada's security of energy supply. I believe, and we have said so before, that the solution to Dome Petroleum's problems lies in the private sector, and the Leader of the Opposition may be sure that when the required information is submitted to Investment Canada, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will be making some very positive recommendations. However, I do not believe it would be in anyone's interest to negotiate the matter publicly at this time.

EFFECT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. He is saying that he is not changing the Government's position on energy; that is not the case. In fact, the Government has broken its promise to increase Canadianization of the energy sector.

Why is the Minister doing that, only to make it easier for foreign interests to purchase our oil and gas reserves? Will the Minister explain why last November he changed the Government's policy on the purchase of oil and gas companies in Canada, only to make it easier for foreign interests to purchase Dome Petroleum?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, first I want to repeat that the policy has not changed. It has been publicly expressed in the same spirit and in the same terms as the policy advocated by my predecessor. To begin with, when a gas or petroleum sector is facing economic difficulties it is in our interest to make sure that these companies survive. And the Government has all the necessary mechanisms to see to it that Canadian interests are protected.

Second, with respect to Canadianization, without spending billions of taxpayers' dollars as the previous Government did we managed to raise the percentage of Canadianization of the energy sector.

[English]

Mr. MacLellan: Canadians want Canadian oil and gas reserves to be controlled by Canadians. Even the Minister for International Trade, the former Minister of Energy, knew that.

MINISTER'S POSITION—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF GOVERNMENT DOCUMENTS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Energy table all documents which show what the Government has done to force and to try to develop a Canadian solution to the Dome problem, or does he not care at all that our oil and gas reserves will be controlled by foreigners?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Quite logically, Mr. Speaker, the best way to secure Canadian supply is to make sure that those companies whose responsibility is to develop our resources are in a sound financial situation and are busy developing them.

[English]

INSTRUCTIONS ALLEGEDLY GIVEN TO DOME PETROLEUM CHAIRMAN

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the same Minister. Mr. Macdonald, the Chairman of Dome Petroleum, told me before the weekend—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: That is very funny to Conservative Members.

The Chairman of Dome Petroleum told me before the weekend that the Government of Canada instructed him not to make contact with Petro-Canada.

Will the Minister confirm that that was the case? Could he tell us why a position which could inevitably put more pressure on to losing this important asset to a foreign-owned corporation should be one encouraged by the Government of Canada, of all people?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): First, Mr. Speaker, I welcome the question of the New Democratic Party leader and I will be glad to answer him. But I should also like him to give consideration to Lafontaine's fable La mouche et le coche.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the Dome question we stated clearly to Mr. Macdonald, and in public because there has never been anything confidential in this field, that the Government was seeking a solution through the private sector. This position was expressed to Mr. Macdonald at the appropriate time a few months ago already, and it was publicly expressed by the Minister of Finance and by the Minister of Energy.

We have been seeking a solution through the private sector and, after two and a half years of work, three offers have now been made to Dome Petroleum. As I see it, in that sense the Government has helped Dome Petroleum pull through the difficult situation in which it had been put by the Liberal Party.

• (1425)

ROLE OF PETRO-CANADA

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): That is an extraordinary situation, Mr. Speaker. Considering that the Government as well as himself, I believe, and certainly his predecessor, have said that they wanted Petro-Canada to operate at an arm's length relationship, not to be interfered with on a day-to-day or on a regular basis by the Government of Canada, why was it that the Government not only told Dome it could not talk to Petro-Canada but stopped Petro-Canada from making a decision that might have been in its commercial interest and in the interests of Canada by getting directly involved in the Dome purchase?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, there again the situation is quite clear and quite public. The Government has asked Petro-Canada to act on a commercial basis. It is obvious that in a situation such as this Petro-Canada, a Crown corporation, would not have acted within the scope of the private sector had we been forced, through the Department of Finance——we assure a bail-out of the Dome situation. That is what we do not want to have.

[English]

PROPOSED PURCHASE BY MULTINATIONAL CORPORATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, it is by no means at all obvious that Petro-Canada would not have acted in its interests and in the interests of Canada if the Conservative Government had not stopped it. That is the issue.

Does the Minister think that it is an appropriate position for the Government of Canada to take to stop our publicly-owned Canadian corporation from getting involved if it means almost certainly that the oil company in question is going to end up being owned by a United States multinational? Why is the Government on the side of a multinational and going against the interests of Canada? That is what I want to know.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, when the Leader of the Opposition makes propositions like these he ought to have the intellectual integrity to present both aspects of the proposition. It is easy for him to say that Petro-Canada should intervene. As far as commercial operations go, we agree, that is the mandate it was given and I never interfered with its commercial operations. But in a situation like this where Petro-Canada would have needed billions of dollars, the Leader of the Opposition must first tell us where these billions of dollars would be coming from.

THE CONSTITUTION

DISTINCT CHARACTER OF QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Since we are going to have a debate tonight on the Dome Petroleum issue, Mr. Speaker, we will have an opportunity to develop this further. I should like now to direct a question to the Prime Minister of Canada concerning the constitutional discussions which are scheduled to be held this week at Meech Lake.

During the Easter holiday, the April 22nd issue of the newspaper Le Devoir published an article which stated in part, and I quote:

> In a letter dated April 10 addressed to his provincial counterparts, letter of which Le Devoir has obtained a copy, the Prime Minister stated strongly that "there is now agreement in principle on the need to recognize in the Constitution the distinct character of the Quebec society".

Over the weekend, Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who was certainly speaking for the Government, dealt with this issue. This morning, he was reported in the newspapers as saying:

[English]

> We would prefer an approach to Quebec's concerns that did not specifically single out the province for special mention.

May I ask the Prime Minister which of the two positions is the Government's?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is no contradiction between the statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the actual communications between the Premiers and myself. I believe the Quebec Premier indicated as soon as he received the letters themselves that he felt they represented real progress and would result in ending the Constitutional impasse. If one considers the documents themselves and not their interpretation by the press, one finds that some progress has been made in this area.

REQUEST THAT CORRESPONDENCE WITH PREMIERS BE TABLED

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's letter dated April 10 contradicts what was said by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, that much is obvious to anyone who can read. Now to avoid all these interpretations, could the Prime Minister—

Some Hon. Members: Oh! Oh!

Mr. Garneau: Quiet back there!

I would like to ask the Prime Minister—

Some Hon. Members: Oh! Oh!

Mr. Garneau: They certainly are keyed up this morning. They weren't in the House to talk about the death penalty, but now they are raring to go.

Mr. Speaker, could the Prime Minister—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I am sure all Hon. Members would like to hear the question asked by the Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, could the Prime Minister table in the House his correspondence with the provincial premiers so that we will not have to depend on what we are told by the media—I don't know whether the admissions are voluntary or involuntary—who are giving us the contents of these letters piecemeal?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is pretty sharp today. His new glasses must have changed his perception!

I would like to say, and the Hon. Member knows this as well as I do, that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is very sympathetic towards Quebec and the francophone dimension of this country. This has been amply proven in the past. On the weekend, I was in touch with all the premiers who were in Canada, in an attempt to make some progress on this matter. I can say that the premiers' reaction is positive. We are aware of the problems and the challenges that remain, and we are not taking anything for granted. Nevertheless, I think that the attitude of the premiers who have had a chance to look at the documentation provided by Senator Murray and myself is, as Premier Bourassa said on the weekend, modestly encouraging. We will have a major challenge to meet this Thursday evening. We are going to work hard and work together in a spirit of national unity, in an attempt to find—

Mr. Garneau: Are you going to table those documents?

Mr. Mulroney: The Hon. Member asks whether we are going to table them. At the appropriate time, certainly. We will inform our colleagues of all documents that were submitted and all measures that were approved or rejected by the parties concerned. My hon. friend is of course aware that these are delicate negotiations. I hope I can count on his support and encouragement.

Mr. Garneau: I wouldn't know what to support since you don't have a position.

ENERGY

PROPOSED SALE OF DOME PETROLEUM—ACCEPTABILITY OF AMOCO

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to let the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources off the hook. I am sorry I cannot quote him fables from La Fontaine but I remind him that Yogi Berra once said: "It ain't over 'til it's over".

Is the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources aware of Amoco's past record? Its president is American and it does not have a Canadian on the board of directors. There are no

Canadian shareholders. It paid $686 million in dividends to its American parent last year but reinvested just $38.1 million in exploration in Canada. We have a typical big, fat American multinational oil company here. Is this the kind of past performance that is acceptable to the Canadian Government?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, first I must say that the Hon. Member used my quote, and second, that the answer is no.

POSSIBLE IMPOSITION OF GOVERNMENT CONDITIONS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, the answer being no, would the Minister then tell the House what his plans are? Given that the Canadian people have invested so much money in Dome Petroleum and given that this is one of the largest takeovers in Canadian history—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would remind Hon. Members that the time taken up while a member is trying to put a question is often taken into account by the Speaker toward the end of Question Period. I know that Hon. Members at times do not wish to stay here any longer than they absolutely have to, but if time is taken away from legitimate questions, that is something the Speaker does have in mind.

Mr. Waddell: What kind of terms does the Government intend to impose on Amoco? Will the conditions be a few token Canadians on the board, or a few shareholders, or will the Government propose some substantial terms for reinvestment in Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the House that what I said last week still holds, that the Government has not received any proposal from a corporation within the framework of Investment Canada.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF MICHIGAN STATE SENATOR JOHN F. KELLY

Mr. Speaker: I wish to draw to the attention of Hon. Members the presence in the Gallery of Michigan State Senator John F. Kelly, Co-chairman of the Michigan Select Committee on Ontario-Michigan Relations.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AGRICULTURE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF INITIAL GRAIN PRICES—REQUEST FOR DEFICIENCY PAYMENT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Last week the Government cut grain prices for the new crop year by 18 per cent. Today the Government started foreclosures on thousands of Farm Credit Corporation loans. So far farmers do not know if there will be a deficiency payment. Our trading adversaries in the United States and the EEC do not know if a deficiency payment will be provided to our farmers.

In view of these two Draconian measures that have taken place in the last two weeks, is the Minister prepared to give a commitment today that there will be a deficiency payment made to provide for at least the same returns farmers received in the past crop year?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should realize that because of the financial impact of the supportive measures the Government has taken and the measures we have already announced, Canadian grain farmers will recognize that the amount of income they receive as of today will not only be equal to that which they received last year but rather will be slightly increased.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT COMMITMENT TO DEFICIENCY PAYMENT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am talking about the new crop year. Grain prices have been cut by 18 per cent and foreclosures on thousands of farmers are starting today. There is no commitment to a deficiency payment in the new crop year. Will the Government make a commitment now to make a deficiency payment in the new crop year beginning August 1?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I again remind the Hon. Member that the $700 million final payment under the Special Canadian Grains Program will be mailed to Canadian grain farmers by the end of May. As well, the Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board announced a week ago a record interim payment of $705 million. That is $1.4 billion that will be in the hands of Canadian grain farmers by the end of May or the beginning of June.

The Hon. Member should also realize that in keeping our commitment we made at the farm leaders' meeting of March 5, it is inappropriate and will remain inappropriate for the Government to make any announcements about future actions that will be taken by the Government. The Hon. Member should also realize that we will be meeting again with farm leaders the first week in June and will continue our consultations with them to map out some type of program for the future.

DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board. I will try to ask him a question on the same matter rather than the Minister of Agriculture.

The Minister of Agriculture is obviously saying that the $1 billion which was promised last October and the Western Grain Stabilization payment that is in the mail are payments for this year. All the farmers know that those payments were for last year. Can the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board tell us a bit more clearly what the Government intends to do about the 1987 and 1988 deficiency payments?

• (1440)

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member talks about last year rather than this year. What western farmers know specifically is that by the end of May they will receive approximately $1.3 billion in cash directly from the federal Government. That is a substantial amount of money. That, above all else, underlines the firm commitment of this Government to the support of agriculture in a very difficult time.

PROVISION OF GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is still talking about deficiency payments last year. A tremendous amount of stress is put on farmers when they do not know what is going to happen this year. Can the Minister tell us what will happen at the end of this year when the farmers bring in their crops? Are they going to get a deficiency payment for crops presently being put in the ground?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the record of this Government in supporting agriculture in a very difficult time is very, very impressive. All of us on this side can be proud of it. I repeat, western farmers will receive approximately $1.3 billion in the next five weeks. That is a substantial amount of money and it will assist them at a very critical time of the year, seeding time, which is well under way right now.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—PURCHASE OF DOME PETROLEUM BY AMOCO CORPORATION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In a recently published memorandum from the office of the chief U.S. trade negotiator, Mr. Murphy, to Members of Congress, he stated that the American price for an agreement will be full and secure access to Canadian energy resources and total removal of the barriers to foreign investment. The implication is that the price of free trade to Canada is that it will give up its policy control over its energy sector.

Is the Government's decision to allow the Amoco buy-out of Dome really the first step in a continental energy policy? Can the Government assure us that the price of free trade will not be the sell-out of our energy sector?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Yes, I can give that assurance.

LETTER ALLEGEDLY SENT TO MEMBERS OF CONGRESS BY UNITED STATES NEGOTIATOR

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, while the Parliamentary Secretary is rethinking what his answer really might be in light of what Mr. Murphy said, I will ask him another question.

Mr. Murphy also said to Members of Congress that Canada agreed it will no longer bail out specific industrial sectors, as well as agreeing to define cultural industries as narrowly as possible. As well, the Americans are demanding further changes to the Patent Act and in cable transmission policies. I ask the Parliamentary Secretary if we have given these kinds of agreements? Has Mr. Reisman, our negotiator, already agreed to these conditions even though it directly contradicts the assurances given in this House by members of the Government?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): As usual, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is basing his observations on an alleged document, unsigned, but attributed to the chief negotiator for the U.S. We are not commenting on those stories.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

ENDING OF MORATORIUM ON FARM FORECLOSURES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. The Government's impressive record of supporting farmers, which the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board just boasted about, includes the dropping of the moratorium on Farm Credit Corporation loans. As a result, the Government will, right in the midst of seeding, be seizing the land of farmers who have been operating under the moratorium.

Since current land values are generally much below the amount owing against the land, and since the FCC will inevitably have to take a loss on the loans through resale of the land, why has the Minister chosen to pass on this lower cost land to another borrower rather than leave it with the current tenants?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member is assuming something we are not even considering doing. He will realize that a moratorium could not last forever. We have consulted with the Farm Debt Review people in all provinces, as well as farm leaders, and a good number of other people in the industry. If the Hon. Member will take the time to read the press release we issued with respect to lifting the moratorium he will recognize it is a very controlled phase-out.

The FCC will be in constant contact with the farm debt review boards. They will be instructed to sit down and negotiate on a one-to-one basis with all their clients. If an agreement cannot be reached then it will go through the process.

It should be recognized that the FCC can only process between 40 and 50 cases on a national basis. If the farm debt review people in each province determine it will cause an overload in their own jurisdiction, they will signal to the FCC in that province to hold the moratorium.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ESTABLISH LAND BANK RENTAL SYSTEM

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, since the FCC already owns thousands of acres of farmland and lifting the moratorium will substantially add to that, has the Government decided to implement the FCC proposal to set up a Saskatchewan land bank type of rental system with long-term leases being offered to current tenants?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is again letting his imagination run away with him.

Mr. Althouse: That is an FCC proposal.

Mr. Wise: No, we have not taken action to establish a land banking scheme, nor probably will we. We have requested the FCC to put a greater priority on the development of equity financing. We have also asked it to enter into longer term leases with as many potential clients as possible.

FORESTRY

EFFECT OF EXPORT CHARGE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. As my hon. friend knows, the Canadian forest products industry is suffering hardship and a considerable amount of confusion because of the foolish and incompetent deal made with the U.S. by the Minister for International Trade. That deal led to the imposition of a 15 per cent export tax not only on softwood lumber but on many manufactured wood products as well.

The Minister for International Trade recognizes now that she struck a bad deal for Canada. Therefore, what definite and specific plans does the Government have now to get Canada out of this trade mess we have got ourselves into?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I find the Hon. Member's observations rather strange. The fact of the matter is that all premiers, with the exception of the Premier of the Province of Ontario, accept the arrangement made and they want us to get on with it.

Mr. Penner: That does not make it a good deal.

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF FOREST STABILIZATION PROGRAM

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, is the Deputy Prime Minister aware that yet another sawmill, this one in Kapuskasing, Ontario, announced it will close down with the loss of 219 jobs? When is this carnage in the industry going to come to an end? When is the Minister going to announce some sort of fair deal for the forest products industry, such as a forest stabilization program? I would not even mention it except the Deputy Prime Minister promised one in his northern Ontario recovery program.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Hon. Member remembers the fact that the ownership of these resources lies with the province. That has to be considered. Whether he thinks it is a good or bad deal, the provinces have some say in this matter.

• (1450)

I should also point out to the Hon. Member that it is my understanding that the forest industry across Canada intends to increase its investment by some 24 per cent. I think that is a pretty good record and it speaks well. I regret that some adjustments and closures are taking place, but the fact that there is a strong indication of a 24 per cent increase in investment activity by the forestry sector indicates that the climate is pretty positive.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENTS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and is with regard to a serious weakness in the Canada Elections Act. The Canada Elections Act amendments of 1973 on election financing were clearly to encourage Canadians to participate in the democratic political process and not to indulge the extravagant tastes of the Prime Minister and his wife.

Is the Prime Minister prepared to bring forward badly needed changes to the Canada Elections Act to ensure that political party funds such as the PC Party fund are not used as personal slush funds for the Prime Minister and his wife indirectly subsidized by the taxpayers of Canada? When will the Prime Minister change this Act to provide some public accountability?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the derogatory comments of the Hon. Member are quite becoming of himself.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: If he wants to put forth some recommendations for changes to the Canada Elections Act, there is certainly a procedure for that. We have a Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure. If he wants to visit that committee and make some recommendations, I am sure they might be considered.

Mr. Nystrom: Joe wouldn't do that.

Mr. Rodriguez: Joe didn't do it in nine months.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER INTRODUCE AMENDMENTS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question as well is directed to the Prime Minister who surely must recognize that he must provide leadership in this area.

Why should Canadian taxpayers be indirectly subsidizing the extravagant tastes of the Prime Minister for closets for Gucci shoes and an assortment of other extravagant tastes?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Robinson: Why will the Prime Minister not provide leadership and recognize that a law which allows this kind of thing to happen should not be on the books? When will he bring forward changes?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, only the NDP would be astonished at the fact that the Prime Minister has undertaken to pay for those things which are personal in nature.

Only the NDP would be astonished at the fact that the Prime Minister is one of the first Prime Ministers to pay for his own groceries.

Only the NDP would be astonished by the fact that he took a voluntary pay cut, as did cabinet Ministers.

Only the NDP would be astonished that the Prime Minister established the Official Residences Council to administer all official residences in the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POSSIBLE ACQUISITION OF NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs in the absence of the Minister of National Defence. Will the Minister confirm to the House that the Priorities and Planning Committee of Cabinet has given the green light to the Navy to purchase nuclear powered submarines? Why are we bothering to have a White Paper on national defence policy if all of the major decisions have been made?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

FRIGATE CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, will the Secretary of State for External Affairs assure the House that in the event that the Government of Canada decides to acquire nuclear powered submarines that decision will not affect the frigate program which was announced by the previous Liberal administration?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the defence policy of the Government of Canada is now being guided by a review which is some 16 years out of date. It is called "Defence Policy in the 1970s". I know that the Liberal Party is moving nostalgically back toward that period, but the rest of the country is moving forward toward the next century.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We intend to put in place a defence policy which will serve the requirements of Canada during the remainder of this century and into the next century.

There will be public debate. There has been public debate on foreign policy and defence questions under this Government to a degree unprecedented under former Governments. Under the Government of which he was a part there were no White Papers on defence policy. There was no public discussion of foreign policy. There is now a clear priority for foreign policy.

DISASTERS

ANNIVERSARY OF CHERNOBYL NUCLEAR ACCIDENT—IMPACT ON CANADA

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, yesterday was the first anniversary of the nuclear accident at Chernobyl in Ukraine. I would like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether he is now prepared, one year after the accident at Chernobyl, to provide the Canadian public and the Canadian Parliament with the kind of information which I have been trying to get out of him for a whole year, that is information with respect to what radio-nuclides were found in Canada, where they were found, at what levels they were found, and what sources they were determined to be from.

That is the kind of information which, if we want to have an intelligent debate on nuclear power, we should have at our fingertips. I have written to the Minister of National Health and Welfare a number of times and I have questioned him in the House. When I last heard from him on March 13 he said that there was a report coming.

When is that report coming? When will the Canadian people finally find out what happened to Canada as a result of Chernobyl?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as I have said to the Hon. Member, I have made all the information available. If more information comes to my attention I will make that available as well. I am not withholding any information which has come to me or that I know is within the Department.

REQUEST FOR INFORMATION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has not made all the information available by his own admission to me in a letter of March 13 in which he says that the information I am seeking will be forthcoming in a report yet to be released. The report by Mr. Prince, commissioned by the Minister himself, says that there was a great deal of confusion with respect to information about fallout in Canada.

How does the Minister have the nerve to get up once more and give the Canadian people and this Parliament bland assurances that all the information is available? If all that is available is what was contained in the Mickey Mouse paper which he tabled in December, we are in real trouble.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The Hon. Member is not going to impress anyone simply by raising his voice. If he is getting his lessons at Disneyland he can go back.

Mr. Nystrom: Now you're goofey.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I commissioned the Prince report because we wanted to learn whether or not we had handled it well. There are some recommendations in the Prince report on which we are now following up. However, if there is more information, I will make it available.

It is generally believed that the amount of radiation to which Canada was exposed from the Chernobyl accident increased our radioactivity by approximately 15 per cent. He knows that, I know that, and—

Mr. Blaikie: Tell us what was found and where it was found!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Just relax or your health bill will go up.

Mr. Blaikie: Tell us what was found and where it was found, and how much.

Mr. de Jong: One year later and they still don't know.

THE CONSTITUTION

FORTHCOMING FIRST MINISTERS' MEETING

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. All Canadians wish the Prime Minister and the premiers well as they convene later this week in a constitutional conference. I am sure all Members of the House would agree that it is imperative that the Province of Quebec, with its unique heritage and contribution to Canada, be a full participating member in all constitutional matters with all provinces and the federal Government.

Does the Prime Minister believe that he and the other premiers together can reach an agreement that will satisfy the natural expectations of the people of Quebec and, at the same time, respect the legitimate concerns of all other regions and Premiers of Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think all premiers recognize the importance of this vital exercise on Thursday. I had the opportunity of speaking with nine of the First Ministers over the weekend to explore various possibilities with them. There is no doubt in my mind with regard to their resolve to attempt to bring a solution to this matter.

We are all aware of the obstacles which exist. It will not be easy, but I am somewhat encouraged by the clear-stated resolve of all premiers of all political stripes across the country to attempt to finally reach a solution to a very intractable constitutional situation.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—POSITION OF HEAD OF UNITED STATES ENVIRONMENT PROTECTION AGENCY

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Two weeks after the Ottawa summit, at which President Reagan made a commitment to consider an accord on acid rain, his cabinet Minister in Washington, Mr. Lee Thomas, who is responsible for the environment, told a Senate committee that he sees no need for Congress to pass legislation to reduce acid rain. Has he taken diplomatic initiatives to counteract such a statement which tells us that President Reagan's statement in Ottawa three weeks ago is not taken seriously even in Washington?

• (1500)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I heard what Mr. Thomas was reported to have said. I heard directly what President Reagan said. I know, and the Hon. Member knows, that this is not a file on which it is easy to make progress. He backed away from the challenge when he was the Minister. We have taken up the challenge again. We are making some progress, and we shall continue to make progress.

The House may well be interested to know that a group of some 39 Republican legislators, headed by Congressman Boehlert of New York, has written to the President in a gesture of solidarity with Canada to urge quick action on his commitment to consider an accord.

POLICY ANNOUNCED BY PRESIDENT REAGAN

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, if the policy of the American Government is really that announced by Mr. Lee Thomas, does the Government of Canada realize that the policy announced by President Reagan in this House three weeks ago is not even worth the paper on which it is written?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I know that some Hon. Members feel that it is acceptable to attack the President of the United States, some by their acts when he was in this House, others perhaps with less courage in his absence. However, for us it was a commitment made by the President of the United States to the Parliament of Canada. It is a progress. We did not achieve the same success under the Liberal Government. We still have much to do. We are optimistic and we think that it will be possible.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. There has been no significant progress in the Canada-France talks after two days and it is obvious that France is clearly unwilling to bend on its claims to Canadian resources. In fact, it has told Canadian negotiators literally to go jump in 3PS.

Will the Minister tell the House and the thousands of Newfoundlanders whose livelihood depends on the resolution of this dispute where the negotiations are headed now? Have we made any modifications to our position? What contingency plans does the Minister have if the negotiations fail?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, once again the Hon. Member reveals his tendency to react only to what he reads in the newspapers. There are a series of negotiations under way on the drafting of terms of reference under which the boundary question would be referred to international third party arbitration.

The meeting of last week, which he categorizes as one that did not make progress, was yet another meeting in that series of discussions which will take place between now and the end of the year. I think the Hon. Member is jumping a little too soon.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Minister's answer does not engender any confidence either in the House or the people of Newfoundland, let me remind him that on January 28 the Minister told the House that: "We will not sell out the interests of Atlantic fishermen for an agreement at any cost". Given the importance of the Grand Banks to the fisheries of the Province of Newfoundland and the fact that almost 25 per cent of Newfoundlanders are unemployed, will the Minister tell the House that, when the chips are down, he will not sell out the fish resources of Canada to the lowest bidder in France?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, when one reads between the lines of the Hon. Member's question I think it is pretty obvious that he is thinking more in terms of an upcoming by-election in Newfoundland than in searching for the truth. When there is something to report, information will be brought before the House.

Mr. Speaker: I want to advise the House that there will be one question by the Hon. Member for York West, followed by one question by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton.

IMMIGRATION

ENTRY OF BRAZILIANS UNDER FALSE PRETENCES

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Immigration. Canadians have learned that so-called phoney immigration consultants are now producing fraudulent refugee claims from Brazil, which follow similar activities in Portugal, Lebanon and Turkey. Throughout, the Government has refused to step in and take concrete action to stop this illegal and intolerable activity.

This activity is a plague that is setting roots throughout a host of countries in the world and is undermining our immigration process. Does the Minister not think it is time for the Government to take serious action against these sleazy operators, to prosecute the culprits and send a strong signal to the world and these operators that Canada is closed to these types of activities but open for honest and legitimate refugees?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this is the first time the Hon. Member for York West had admitted that the measures taken by the Government on February 20 are effective. Indeed, with respect to the communities from which we had high rates of immigration three months ago, the matter has now been settled.

As to the Brazilians, my colleague will admit that we are monitoring the situation, and there again I appreciate his acknowledgement that the measures we took are effective. If necessary, we will continue to apply them in the coming days.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ALASKA ARCTIC WILDLIFE REFUGE—PROPOSAL TO ISSUE OIL AND GAS LEASES

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The United States Fish and Wildlife Service, and the Department of the Interior have recommended allowing oil and gas leasing in the Alaska Arctic Wildlife Refuge, the international home of the porcupine caribou herd of Yukon and the Northwest Territories. If adopted, that would violate an international understanding between our countries to protect this fragile habitat and very important herd. What recourse does the Government have if the United States Department of the Interior proceeds with these leases?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, last week the United States Secretary of Energy made a statement with regard to the so-called 1002 lands. Canada made a recommendation which had some slight influence, to the extent that the Interior Secretary's recommendation made reference for the first time to the importance of the caribou herds.

We are disappointed in the general tenor of the response. I was in touch by telephone last week with the head of the Government of Yukon and the Minister of Renewable Resources of Northwest Territories. We are considering the next steps with them and the Canadian native people involved.

The Hon. Member would be interested to know that, on a related question, we are finalizing plans for the signing of a Canada-U.S. agreement on the conservation of the porcupine caribou herd.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED ERRONEOUS INFORMATION IN REPLY TO QUESTION ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I have given the Chair a copy of the grievance that I bring to the attention of the House. I have also contacted the office of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes) to indicate to him that I wanted to rise today on a question of privilege.

Needless to say, if you determine that I have a prima facie case of privilege I am willing to move the necessary motion to bring this matter to the appropriate parliamentary committee.

It is a long custom in the House that Members of Parliament are to provide other members factual information and only the truth. As a matter of fact, I am sure you will remind Hon. Members that to assume that any Member of the House ever states anything but the truth would be, in itself, a breach of the Standing Orders of the House. Of course, all Members of Parliament are deemed to be honourable members and therefore one expects to hear the truth in the House and nothing else.

I want to bring to your attention the fact that I placed Question No. 2 on the Order Paper in June last year. Question No. 2 was replied to on October 1 by the Minister of Public Works. I will read the question and answer and make them available to the House. The question I posed to the Government was:

> 1. Did the Government employ the services of Colvin Designs Ltd. and/or Giovanni Mowinkle, interior designer during the period September 4, 1984 to June 30, 1986, to supply furnishings, improvements, interior decorating or advice on same for the Prime Minister's residence at 24 Sussex Drive in Ottawa or the Harrington Lake residence and, if so, by residence, what was the cost of each contract?

• (1510)

The second question was also on the Order Paper. It was the following:

> Was all of the work paid for from Government funds and, if not, who paid such costs and what was the amount involved in each case?

The reply was: "No" to the first part of the question and: "Not applicable" to the second part.

It has come to my attention, as reported by a Toronto newspaper, The Globe and Mail, that in fact the Government of Canada through the National Capital Commission paid an invoice or invoices amounting to $38,414.60 for furnishings and services to 24 Sussex Drive and that these funds had been paid to either Giovanni Mowinkle, Colvin Designs or both. This appears to be in contradiction to the first part of the question that I asked. With respect to the second part of my question the Minister indicated that it was not applicable.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that even if all the funds had been paid by someone else the fact remains that Mr. Mowinkle appears to have performed work and to have been compensated for that work.

I submit that because we are talking about a property that belongs to the Crown, government property, the response of the Minister should have at least described the fact that, indeed, Mr. Mowinkle and/or his firm did in fact perform work at 24 Sussex Drive as well as at the Harrington Lake residence.

For Your Honour's consideration I wish to offer a decision made by the Speaker in 1978. At that time the Hon. Member for Northumberland—Durham raised a question of privilege in the House of Commons concerning the fact that the then Solicitor General had written to him and provided to him information which later proved to be erroneous. On December 6, 1978, the Speaker indicated, as reported at page 1857 of Hansard: "I, therefore, find a prima facie case of contempt against the House of Commons".

The point I am making is that if it was a contempt against the House of Commons to provide a Member of Parliament with erroneous information, then surely to provide the House itself with erroneous information through a written reply to a question on the Order Paper would, as far as I am concerned, also be a prima facie case of privilege.

I must say that if this is a legitimate mistake, and if the Minister is willing to indicate that it is, then I am prepared to discontinue pursuit of the matter. However, in the absence of such a reply from the Minister I will let my request stand before you, Mr. Speaker, to have it considered a prima facie case of privilege and to be referred to the appropriate parliamentary committee.

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to my hon. friend for giving me appropriate notice and for allowing me to postpone my response to this time rather than having to respond this morning.

I want to affirm that Colvin Designs was hired to perform services at 24 Sussex Drive. An invoice was subsequently submitted for services rendered. The National Capital Commission reviewed the work and determined that it was appropriate for the NCC in its role as custodian of official residences to pay for the expenditures invoiced. Accordingly, payment in the amount of $38,414.60 was made on July 10, 1986, a date outside of the September, 1984 to June 30, 1986 timeframe specified in the Hon. Member's question.

In preparing the original reply only accounts paid as of June 30, 1986, the date specified by the Hon. Member, were examined. There was no attempt whatsoever to mislead the House. I am pleased to have this first opportunity to clarify this matter for the House and to set the record straight.

Mr. Speaker: That may or may not be a partial clarification. However, I will hear the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) further.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take up unduly the time of the House. Suffice to say that the Minister's answer is clearly inadequate, and the Minister should know that. Even though an invoice was paid after a certain date it is clear that the work performed should have been referred to in the reply given to me, not only for the reason that the Minister has stated but for the other which I have raised as well. That is to say, the fact that that invoice was paid after the date in no way makes the answer any more credible. I can argue that all the Government had to do in order to evade answering my question was to hang on to an invoice for a few days and then pay it. Presumably that would have placed the Government in a position whereby it could have answered in the negative rather than in the affirmative. That is inappropriate.

I invite you, Mr. Speaker, to review the grievance that I have brought before the House today and to determine whether or not there is a prima facie case of privilege, as I believe there is, and as your predecessors have indicated there were in similar circumstances in the past. At that time I will, of course, move the appropriate motion.

Mr. McInnes: Mr. Speaker, I quite agree with my learned friend that the reply that we gave was inadvertently misleading. That is only because the books that were examined were done up to the date of June 30. Indeed, we should have reviewed all the accounts to the present date, or to the date mentioned in the Hon. Member's inquiry, to ensure that this particular invoice was not on our records. That was inadvertently not done. I agree that our response in the first instance was inappropriate. I have apologized for that.

Mr. Boudria: No, you have not.

Mr. McInnes: This is the first opportunity I have had to put the record straight and to indicate to the House that there was no intention to mislead.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make one brief comment in support of the question of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria). I want to draw to your attention, sir, the wording of the Hon. Member's question. It is:

> Did the Government employ the services of Colvin Designs Ltd. and/or Giovanni Mowinkle, interior designer during the period September 4, 1984 to June 30, 1986, to supply furnishings, improvements, interior decorating or advice on same for the Prime Minister's residence at 24 Sussex Drive in Ottawa or the Harrington Lake residence and, if so, by residence, what was the cost of each contract?

The question was not, when was the invoice paid? The question was not, when was the invoice submitted? The question was, when was the work done and was it done within the period September 4, 1984 to June 30, 1986?

I think Your Honour should take into account that, in spite of the very clear wording of the question of the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, those responsible for the answer to the question, those individuals signing the answer to the question, chose to deal with it on the basis that it said something it did not; that is when was the invoice submitted?

With all due respect, I suggest that Your Honour has not had a clear, convincing explanation. Therefore, I think that very serious positive consideration has to be given to the question of privilege of the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott-Russell.

• (1520)

Mr. McInnes: Mr. Speaker, the answer I gave was one based upon information supplied to me by a Crown corporation. Having had the opportunity to delve into the inquiry to quite a degree, I now realize that the response first given was inappropriate. It did not respond properly to the inquiry. I have indicated this to be so. While it is unfortunate, there was no intention to mislead. I obviously had to base my answer on the information supplied to me. On a review of the records, that proved to be not as efficient as it should have been.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, we have now, through repeated tries, managed to get from the Minister an admission that, yes, what was given to us was inappropriate. As well, we now have from the Minister an apology to the House. With that admission and the Minister's apology, I am prepared to accept matters as they now stand. It is unfortunate that the Minister did not deal with the matter in this way from the outset. Had he done so, the debate would have been somewhat shorter.

I am prepared to accept his admission that it was a mistake, that it was inappropriate, and I accept his apology for giving the House erroneous information. With those matters now on the record, I shall not pursue the matter further.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the Hon. Minister for being frank. As well, the House is indebted to the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) for accepting the explanation, and accepting it in good grace.

I am sure the Hon. Minister will carry the message back to those who are charged with the responsibility to answer written questions, with the request that, as the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) has indicated, they read the questions carefully before providing an answer.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

ESTABLISHMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON REINSTATEMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski:

That this House supports, in principle, the reinstatement of capital punishment and directs that a special committee on reinstatement, composed of 15 members, be established, hold hearings and make its final report to the House no later than three (3) months following the adoption of this motion, such report to provide recommendations on:

(a) which offence or offences should carry the death penalty, and in what circumstances;

(b) which method or methods should be used to carry out the penalty of death, and in what circumstances;

That, pursuant to Standing Order 107(1), this special committee be hereby appointed as the committee to prepare and bring in a bill no later than three months following the adoption of this motion, founded on the committee's recommendations on (a) and (b) above; such a bill shall be the object of a separate and distinct report of the special committee, and such a report shall be its final report;

That such bill, when reported from such special committee to the House, be deemed pursuant to Standing Order 107(1) to have been introduced and stand on the Order Paper, in the name of the special committee chairman, for first reading at the next sitting of the House; and that subsequent House stages of the bill be considered under "Government Business"; and that, when the said bill has been read a second time, it shall stand referred to a Legislative Committee;

That the Striking Committee be empowered to name the Members of the special committee, provided that once the Striking Committee report is laid upon the Table, it shall be deemed concurred in;

That the special committee have the power to sit while the House is sitting and during periods when the House stands adjourned;

That the special committee be empowered to adjourn from place to place inside Canada and that, when deemed necessary, the appropriate staff accompany the committee;

That a quorum of the special committee be eight (8) members for any vote, resolution or other decision; and that the chairman be authorized to hold meetings to recieve evidence and authorize the printing thereof whenever six (6) members are present;

That any substitution of membership on the special committee be made pursuant to Standing Order 94(4); and

That, notwithstading the usual practices of this House, if the House is not sitting when the special committee is ready to issue its final report and the said bill, the special committee shall present its report and the bill to the House be filing them with the Clerk of the House provided that the report shall then be deemed to have been laid upon the Table, and the bill shall then be deemed, pursuant to Standing Order 107(1), to have been introduced at the first sitting of the House thereafter and to stand on the Order Paper in the name of the special committee chairman, for first reading at the next sitting of the House; and that subsequent House stages of the bill be considered under "Government Orders", with the bill standing under the heading "Government Business".

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, it is with considerable emotion that I rise in the House today to speak to this important motion which deals with a proposal to reinstate capital punishment in Canada. Mr. Speaker, depending on the position the House will take following this debate, men and women will live or die. All members present must realize that when the time comes to vote on the motion, if they nod their heads in favour, they will be killing themselves, as it were.

I have made no mystery about my position on this issue. I am firmly opposed to reinstating capital punishment, and I want to explain to Hon. Members and to the people of Canada my reasons for taking this stand. Mr. Speaker, in Canada as in so many other countries, capital punishment has been the subject of countless debates in the past years.

In fact, at the beginning of April in Great Britain British parliamentarians, notwithstanding the polls, had the courage to vote for the eighteenth time against reinstatement of capital punishment. Since the Canadian judiciary system is quite similar to the English system I would suggest that at the very least this result should cause everyone of us to give serious consideration to the position to take here.

Mr. Speaker, the debate has a particular character because it contains legal, philosophical, religious, moral and scientific aspects. Personally, as a practicing Catholic, the question I am asking myself is much more directly related to the sense I give to human life than to the sentence which should be imposed for a foul crime.

Morally speaking, I feel that taking a life is harmful to both the state and the citizen. The state must give the example by acknowledging the sacred character of human life in every instance.

A 1977 International Conference on the Abolition of Capital Punishment ended with the adoption of the Stockholm Declaration which stated that the duty of the state is to protect the life of every citizen. It strongly urged all countries to abolish the death penalty. More recently a number of groups were established to speak out against the reinstatement of capital punishment. In a recent message, the Conference of Churches, the Conference of Catholic Bishops wrote this, and I quote:

> The death penalty is acceptable only in a society which is not sufficiently well organized to defend itself by other means. This is not the case of Canada, a country which has made enough progress to find other ways than the death penalty to protect itself.

I have also received many letters from constituents and people from across Canada, who oppose the reinstatement of the ultimate penalty. Criminology experts also made their opposition known and I would like to quote among others from André Normandeau who wrote in La Presse on Thursday, March 12: I personally oppose the death penalty for both personal and professional reasons. On the personal level, it is my view that if the democratic State proposes its citizens two great values, liberty and due regard for life, it should set an example by refusing to kill legally a human being, even where the latter's murder is despicable. Under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, all citizens are equal and there can be no exception to due regard for life.

In an interview with Maclean's magazine, the famous criminologist Edward Greenspan also flatly opposed it. So did the Canadian Association of Social Workers, the Canada Jewish Congress and many others. The widow of Rev. Martin Luther King, Mrs. Coretta Scott King, during a recent visit to Ottawa, went on record against the reinstatement of the death penalty in Canada. She felt that Canada would take a step backward by reinstating capital punishment.

According to recent surveys on that important matter, it would seem that a majority of the Canadian people favour the reinstatement of that ultimate penalty.

As far as I am concerned, I circulated a questionnaire in my constituency and the majority of respondents favoured the death penalty. But the result was different on the question of deterrence.

Mr. Speaker, should we base on chancy surveys our decision on such a basic question? My sincere answer is: No.

Mr. Robinson: Hear, hear.

Mrs. Duplessis: Indeed, if we asked Canadians whether they favoured a significant tax reduction, I am convinced that more than 90 per cent of the people would favour such a move. As elected representatives, should we then ignore sound management principles to meet the desires of the electorate? Once again, my answer is no. And on such a vital question, I feel that each and everyone of us must make an enlightened choice on the basis of the information available to him or her, and above all, must follow the call of his or her conscience.

This penalty is absolutely, fundamentally degrading on the human level, because it proclaims the uselessness of the guilty person's life. It also precludes the achievement of one of the three main goals of punishment, rehabilitation. Those who favour non-capital solutions defend the respect of all human life and urge society to rehabilitate and reform the offender. I am one of those.

Philosophers like Plato, Hobbes, Rousseau held that virtue can be taught and punishment must aim at correcting the offender's wrong inclinations. The goal must be to reform criminals and to deter them from relapsing to crime and also to maintain order.

In many cases, people who resort to violence have had an unhappy childhood which did not allow them to become responsible citizens.

• (1530)

Yet, it is the responsibility of any civilized society to impose on delinquents punishments which can contribute to their rehabilitation.

Eleven years ago, the abolitionists, as they are sometimes called, managed to eliminate capital punishment from our national statutes and mores. As Pierre Tremblay wrote in an editorial in the April 2 issue of the newspaper Le Devoir, "In 1976, a small majority of six votes in the Commons extirpated this relict of barbarism from our penal code, just as one has a bad tooth removed, with pain and apprehension."

Some uncertainty remained then. Were we not opening the door to second offenses? We are now forced to admit that we did not. Over the past ten years, the number of crimes which theoretically should carry the death penalty has not increased. We were right in 1976 when we felt that the supreme penalty had no real value as a deterrent. I am convinced that its reinstatement in 1987 would not prove different.

As a matter of fact, the deterring effect which is the major argument of all those who are in favour of capital punishment must be examined most carefully. If all punishment has a deterring effect, capital punishment has value only if it has this effect, no matter how limited. The question then is whether capital punishment has a more deterring effect than life imprisonment.

The theory of deterrence is based on the notion that the commission of a crime depends on the chances the guilty party feels he has of getting away with it. As legislators, we must consider deterrence as a means of preventing crime and also provide for more severe punishment in order to increase the fear of punishment in the potential criminal and reduce the frequency of crimes.

We must therefore determine whether the state of our knowledge warrants this approach and, therefore, the reinstatement of capital punishment.

Criminology studies have clearly shown that there is no significant correlation between the death penalty and the murder rate. In Canada, since capital punishment was abolished in 1976, the rate has remained stable at 2.5 murders per 100,000 inhabitants. While capital punishment was enforced between 1970 and 1974, the average was 2.3 murders for 100,000 inhabitants.

Mr. Speaker, we have no choice but to admit that there has been no wave of violence since 1976. The classic example of the United States is also interesting. Let us compare two American states somewhat similar socially and economically, on the one hand Michigan, which includes the City of Detroit, which abolished capital punishment in 1847, and on the other hand Illinois, which includes the City of Chicago, which has maintained capital punishment. We find that over a period of nearly 140 years, the difference is no more than 5 per cent between the two states for the murder rates in general and those of police officers and prison guards in particular. Incidentally, the difference sometimes works out to the advantage of Michigan and sometimes to that of Illinois, so the statistics certainly do not argue in favour of a return to the death penalty.

At the University of California, David Phillips got the debate going again in 1980 with a study in which he qualified the death penalty as an immediate and temporary deterrent. He writes: "We get the impression that a potential murderer delays his crime for a few weeks after an execution is publicized in the media." According to Phillips, we must not expect this to have a comprehensive and permanent effect. He cites the example of drivers on a highway who slow down to look at the victims of a serious accident and are slow to pick up speed again, although ultimately, they often exceed the speed at which they were driving before they stopped.

According to Phillips, the same applies to homicide. During the two weeks following a publicized execution, the homicide rate goes down. However, within five or six weeks after the execution, this drop is cancelled by an increase in the number of homicides. After six weeks, the rate goes back to normal. At the end of the year, the total number of victims is the same as if no execution had taken place.

Mr. Speaker, would the answer be to execute someone every two weeks?

Phillips does not dare make such a recommendation and notes with regret that his field of reference, 22 executions which took place in London between 1858 and 1921, does not include any instance where executions took place in quick succession. I therefore conclude that we have very little evidence of the deterrent effect and that in view of the very serious nature of the act involved, a civilized State should look for other deterrents.

The most valid reason to oppose capital punishment may be the possibility that an innocent might be killed. Last Friday in Montreal, an inmate called Pépin was released from prison. He had been accused of armed robbery, and had been in jail for eight months when the real culprit came forward. This man had been saying from the beginning that he was innocent. However, he was wrongly accused of robbery. No system whatsoever can guarantee infallability in passing judgment.

There have been cases in the past where people were put to death by mistake, and in spite of all the safeguards of our present-day system, there is still a possibility that this might happen. The Leader of the Opposition mentioned this morning that in 1982, Donald Marshall, who had been accused of murder and sentenced to death, was released after spending 11 years in a New Brunswick penitentiary. As for Wilbert Coffin, a prospector who was hanged in 1956, there are still questions after so many years as to whether he was really guilty.

On December 8, 1983, the British Minister of Justice released from prison Mervin John Russel, aged 39, who had been declared guilty of murdering a 20-year old female student. In 1977, when the case was reviewed, it was shown that the tuft of hair found in the hand of the victim did not come from his scalp. On August 23, 1977, the Governor of the State of Massachusetts, Michael Dikakis, declared innocent and rehabilitated Bartolomeo Vanzetti and Nicholas Sacco who had been executed exactly 50 years earlier, on August 23, 1927, after being declared guilty of murder.

Mr. Speaker, can we afford to take such risks? Would it mean that people would be better protected? Quite frankly, I do not believe they would, and I even think it would be the opposite. It has been shown over the years that executions appealed to the minds of morbid individuals, and could cause imbalanced people to take criminal action. The punishment itself may therefore cause more violent crimes, and provide some people with an inspiration to act violently.

Examples abound. Police departments for instance frequently refuse to publicize suicides or attempted suicides as it has been shown that such revelations lead to an appalling concatenation of other suicides. The news of a suicide prompt suicidal attitudes in other people. If that is true in such instances, there is a clear and easily applicable law: violence will lead to more violence.

In a society like ours, we must coordinate our efforts to put in place more effective policies of crime prevention in the legal, medical, social and educational fields. Our role as a just society is to emphasize prevention and to take all the means to that end. As long as this is not done it is useless to propose something as cruel as the death penalty. This is opposing violence to violence without really dealing with the source of the problem. Crime is a social problem and we have to go to the heart of it, rather than choose a superfical solution that does not solve anything.

Mr. Speaker, we do not have the right to decide arbitrarily on the fate of our brothers, sisters, children and grandchildren. Our society has always attached much value to and shown a great respect for life and it must eradicate the causes or factors of crime. It must also, for humanitarian reasons, try to improve the correctional system so that the sentence imposed to criminals contributes to their rehabilitation and their social integration.

For all these reasons, and others I did not have time to develop, I will vote against restoration of capital punishment in Canada.

The reinstatement of capital punishment in Canada not only could make us lose any credibility in the area of rights and freedoms, but it could also be a signal for reinstating capital punishment in other countries. How could Canada in the future boast of defending rights and freedoms in international organizations, and more specifically the United Nations Human Rights Commission, if we gave such a clear indication that we do not honour our commitments and signature. Our credibility could easily be questioned.

Can we as a society take such a responsibility? I will conclude, Mr. Speaker, by stating that, personally, if the death penalty were to be reinstated in Canada, I would find unacceptable such a violation of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which prohibits any cruel and unusual treatment and punishment. Reverting to the ultimate sentence would negate what we have supposedly become, a more civilized, vanguard nation, a land of freedom, a model around the world.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Duplessis) for her most eloquent, passionate and moral speech which reflects the opinion of a great many Canadian men and women. I would like to ask her how the feelings of Quebec men and women may differ from those of their fellow Canadians, and since most Quebecers continue to maintain contacts with the Catholic Church, what are the views expressed in that province by Catholic bishops and priests and what influence they can have, if any, on this debate. Does she believe, as I do, that here, in the Parliament of Canada, it is our duty to listen to the advice of religious men and women, the pastors of the various Churches, the philosophers and all those who are concerned with moral issues? I fully appreciate the moral position she has just expressed. I share it myself. However, perhaps in order to help some of our colleagues here in the House, I would like to know whether she believes that in a Canadian society which adheres to Judeo-Christian values, even though it increasingly includes the teachings of the other major religions in the world as it becomes more multicultural, we, in Parliament, should listen to the advice of our religious leaders and what advice is being given by Catholic priests in Quebec on this issue.

Mrs. Duplessis: Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend opposite for having appreciated the speech I made during the present debate. I shall be pleased to answer his question.

To begin with, I should like to say to my hon. friend that the views of Quebecers on capital punishment are no other than those of other Canadians. If he has carefully considered opinion polls published for some time in various newspapers, he has probably noticed that Quebecers were exactly of the same opinion as Canadians throughout the country. However I am glad to note a difference among Members of Parliament from Quebec. Most of them are against the reinstatement of capital punishment. They have publicly said so.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Duplessis: It is true that the Council of Churches, our clergy and parish priests have told us that if we are really practising Christians and believers, we have to be against capital punishment. However, before such statements were made, I had already taken my decision. It only confirmed what I believed in that respect.

Morally speaking, there is something that we should not forget and that is also valid for our colleagues and other individuals throughout the country as well as all other religious denominations in Canada. The reinstatement of capital punishment means that one does not believe in the rehabilitation of the human being who could come to regret his wrongdoings, try to grow better and finally serve the Canadian people. It amounts to losing faith in mankind.

Personally, I do not think that a human being can become rotten. A rotten apple cannot improve. It will only get worse and become uneatable. However, the human being is different. When a human being receives good advice, is being taken good care of and loved, feels it has his or her rightful place in life, there is always a hope that he or she will turn over a new leaf and become better.

So I brought here a small clipping where various solutions are indicated by the Council of Churches. There is also something I would like to bring to your attention, and if I am not mistaken, this morning, during the debate, I think your leader referred to this about the Council of Churches, when he asked how many people know that more than a third of all murders are committed within the family, in the home, after some quarrel? This applies to the majority of crimes in Canada.

This means that there may be something wrong in society. I referred to that earlier. We know that misery and poverty can lead to crime. We are told that maybe we should look more closely at that, this is where we should be providing support. As Members of Parliament we should work twice, a hundred times as hard at improving well-being in society, whether helping children or looking for better regional distribution across Canada. Members from every part of the country and every Party in this House will have to learn how to live with a decision we have taken in order to help and raise the standard of living in one part of the country, in order to stamp out misery in areas of this country. Members from everywhere will have to learn to respect that.

We cannot claim to be Christians, and indeed Mrs. Luther King said she cannot imagine Christians who support killing others. This is my answer concerning the ethical side, the recommendations made by the bishops.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to commend the Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Duplessis) for her excellent speech on capital punishment.

• (1540)

[English]

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): I would like to ask a question of the Hon. Member with regard to the process upon which we are embarking today. The Government has decided to initiate a debate here in the House that no doubt will take several months to conclude. This particular discussion centres around a resolution, not legislation, but a resolution to endorse capital punishment in principle. We know that this particular portion of the so-called debate on capital punishment may take several months, if not longer. Following a determination of this resolution in the House, a committee will be struck which will travel across the country for three months and then report back to the House. The Government has been criticized for the process of prolonging the discussion of this very moral and important issue.

Has the Hon. Member taken the opportunity to voice her concerns to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and to her colleagues in Cabinet to indicate to them that it is wrong for the Government to stretch out this debate over such a long period of time? The Hon. Member knows I agree wholeheartedly with her position on the issue, but I think it is wrong for the Government to embark on the process it has.

I would ask the Hon. Member if she would undertake to try to use her resources, her good offices and her powers of persuasion to convince members of her own caucus to accept and adopt the position she has taken. The Hon. Member will recognize that the overwhelming majority of her own caucus supports the resolution in principle.

[Translation]

Mrs. Duplessis: In reply to my friend the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata), who was talking about the process, Mr. Speaker, may I say that there might be no process if ever a majority of members decided to vote against the reinstatement of capital punishment. When my Government decided to proceed this way, it was first of all, as you know full well, to fulfill a promise made during the last election campaign. One should fulfill one's promises. As a matter of fact, you are constantly reminding us that we have made promises in other areas.

On the other hand, you should not overlook the way it was done. It was done to respect democracy. It is a process which is quite democratic, which meets the requirements of my colleagues who are in favour of reinstating capital punishment. We made a commitment, and we are living up to it.

Contrary to my hon. friend, I feel that my Government is doing the right thing in holding this debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry, but the period for questions and comments is over. Debate. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) has the floor.

[English]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon we are called upon to debate a very important issue in the House of Commons. It is one that goes beyond partisanship of any kind and one that is very difficult for all Members of the House.

I would like to take a moment to discuss the manner in which this topic was brought to the attention of the House of Commons. A government Minister tabled in the House a motion and then immediately dissociated himself from the motion he had presented. The motion, of course, calls upon the House of Commons to give its favour in principle to a resolution calling for the reinstatement of capital punishment.

The Government claims that it can dissociate itself from the motion it has itself put because this will be a free vote. I would argue that that is incorrect. There is no historic precedent for proceeding that way in a Parliament. If some Hon. Members wish to indicate that there is a parallel because of a free vote that had taken place in the past, I would argue that there was a substantial difference between the two. In the last free vote, the Government introduced a motion and unanimously supported it within Cabinet yet the Government tolerated dissension within its own caucus. That is far different from having a cabinet Minister present a motion to the House and then immediately saying that he was not necessarily for it or against it or that the Government was not necessarily for it or against it. I would submit that this unprecedented move on the part of the Government is indeed what I would consider to be morally inappropriate when dealing with such a topic.

Mr. Tobin: Cowardly.

Mr. Boudria: Some would even say, as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) has just said, that it is cowardly.

The debate started today with the Parliamentary Secretary to the government House Leader as the lead-off speaker. Instead of speaking to the issue of capital punishment which his own Government had introduced, he spent most of his time congratulating himself and the Government for perceived past accomplishments and he warned the House not to take too much time because the Government wanted to deal with the pornography Bill, patent legislation and other issues in the future. Therefore, he said, Members could take the time they wished but of course he reminded us of all those other important things which Parliament must do in the future. I wonder, if those issues were so important, why they were not dealt with before bringing this motion to the attention of the House of Commons.

The Government hangs its hat on saying that this was a campaign promise and it had to deliver. Where is the precedent for such action? Relatively no other campaign promises have been delivered to date so what is the special initiative that is necessary in this particular case?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this debate is unfortunate. It is unfortunate because it shows just how desperate a political Party can be: this Conservative Government will introduce just about any legislation to improve its political credibility. I can tell you that when a political Party stoops so low to improve its image, we have a major moral problem. Mr. Speaker, I urge you and all our colleagues in the House to consider the way the Government went about presenting this motion to the House, and specially its timing.

[English]

Nevertheless, today we are dealing with an important debate. It is important because it deals with life itself. I have deeply held views on the topic and so do others. Some have views which differ considerably from mine but they believe in them with as much conviction as I believe in my own.

It is unfortunate that in some cases the debate has been trivialized by individuals either stating that those who did not want to reinstate capital punishment were in favour of criminals or that those who are in favour of the reinstatement of capital punishment are of equally devious minds. I do not believe that either is the case. Nevertheless, it is unfortunate that such statements are being made as one which was attributed to a Member of the House by Maclean's magazine, which indicated that an Hon. Member referred to capital punishment by saying: "Hang 'em high and hang 'em often". Remarks like those are very unfortunate and remarks made in the opposite direction would be equally wrong in my view.

Mr. Speaker, since 1867, 710 people were executed in Canada. The last two were put to death in 1962. They were Arthur Lucas, aged 54 and Robert Turpin, aged 29. Since then, Canada has effectively abolished the death penalty. At first, at the turn of the century, capital punishment was imposed for murder, treason, rape and gradually, as our society became more and more civilized, we first eliminated public hanging, then capital punishment for other offences and finally, as I said earlier, in 1962, Mr. Diefenbaker abolished the death penalty de facto since he and his successors chose not to reinstate it.

Finally, in 1973, the Government put temporarily an end to the death penalty through legislation and in 1976, it was abolished for good.

There are reasons which some people give for the reinstatement of capital punishment. Let me outline some of them and say why I do not think they are appropriate. First we have the argument of, shall we call it retribution? In other words, someone who has killed does not deserve to live. While at first blush that argument may have a certain attraction to some people, I must say that it certainly has no place, in my view, in a civilized society which claims, as we do, to have a good and sound system of justice. We do not rob the robbers. We do not beat the beaters. We do not burn down the arsonist's house. We do not rape the rapist. It of course is equally true that we do not murder the murderers.

The theory of deterrence has also been used by some as a reason for capital punishment. That is no more effective or reasonable an idea than that of retribution. I say that for this reason. In 1975 there were 701 homicides in Canada according to statistics I have obtained. In 1985 it was 686. In 1986 it was 561. Considering that this country's population is increasing it holds true, in my opinion, that the absence of capital punishment certainly has not resulted in an increase in murders. The murder rate per 100,000 people in Canada was 2.7 in 1976 and is now about 2.5. We know that in the U.S. the murder rate is 8.49 per hundred thousand. That is over three times what it is in Canada. However, even if we look at it in a regional sense, because capital punishment is a state responsibility in the U.S. and not federal as it is here, the state of Minnesota, an abolitionist state, has a murder rate of 1.7. Gun-toting Texas has a murder rate of 14.2. That leads me to believe that violence breeds more violence and we should not for that reason reinstate capital punishment.

Of those countries in the western world Belgium has the lowest murder rate. Before someone says that Belgium still has capital punishment, I want to remind the House that it has not been used since 1945. Belgium's murder rate is 1.03. That should lead us to some conclusions when we compare it to the 8.49 rate in the U.S. Of course, the U.S. has executed some 38 people since 1977.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about potential errors. As the House will know, Mr. Wilbert Coffin was executed in 1956 for a murder of which he was convicted at the time; Mr. Raymond Cook, in 1960, was also put to death in Alberta.

To date, Mr. Speaker, a large number of Canadians, including some parliamentarians, have grave doubts about the execution of those two people, wondering whether they were really guilty.

I would also like to mention three other miscarriages of justice involving murder cases, although they did not lead to a death sentence being carried out. We had Kenneth Roberts in 1977, Derek Cole in 1978, and finally, Donald Marshall who was released in 1982 after his case was reviewed, 11 years after he was sent to prison. He was innocent. And though some people point out that Mr. Marshall was not convicted of premeditated murder and would therefore not have received the death penalty, I want to take this opportunity to inform the House that the same principle applies, namely that if a mistake was made in the case of Donald Marshall, how can we guarantee that mistakes were not made in other cases?

Senator Howard Metzinbaum of the United States tabled in the U.S. Congress a list of 48 people who were found guilty of murder and subsequently declared innocent, while Michael Radelet, an American researcher, puts this figure at over 100 since the turn of the century. If for no other reason, and I have just given a number of examples, I think the reason I have just touched upon here should be sufficient for a civilized country like Canada to want to terminate this debate on the death penalty immediately and not pursue the matter further.

Mr. Speaker, I may add that the United States is the only Western country that still practices capital punishment. Belgium still has it on the books, and Ireland as well, but practically speaking, since 1945 and 1954, respectively, it is no longer applied in those countries. Mr. Speaker, Canada must not be allowed to regress. The Conference of Catholic Bishops issued a communiqué which was distributed to members on February 24, and it reads as follows:

> Today, ten years after the abolition of capital punishment, we still hold the same conviction: A society that respects the sacred and spiritual character of human life and which has human rights as its first priority, is slowly and perhaps not always spectacularly, but at any rate surely, on the road to social progress for itself while contributing to the development of mankind. This conviction, confirmed by the message of John Paul II when he visited this country, is based on the message of the Gospel in which mankind is redeemed of its sins by Jesus Christ and thus reconciled with God.
> Innocent, but convicted as a criminal and sentenced to death, Jesus himself showed us the way of total forgiveness: "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

[English]

I now want to go back to the topic I raised a few moments ago concerning retribution and its so-called merits. I received a letter in my office on March 5, 1987, and it reads as follows: "I would like you to consider my views on capital punishment in light of the motion currently being debated. Our 11-year old daughter, Alison, was abducted and murdered last July. Prior to Alison's death I had always been opposed to capital punishment, this conviction being based upon the very deep Christian belief that it is wrong to kill another human being no matter what the circumstances. Alison's murderer has given me a very strong personal and agonizing experience of the horror of violence and killing. It has more than ever convinced me that we as a society cannot ever and must not ever condone killing, whether by state or individual, in any shape or form. Throughout this debate much attention has been focused on the victim's rights. While I agree that often the safety, security and suffering of present and future victims is not always given due consideration, I do not believe that anyone suffering can in any way be alleviated by the deliberate killing of other human beings. I do not want to be part of a society that brings up future generations with the belief that killing can be legitimized under certain circumstances. Let the message be clear and unconditional; human life is sacred, killing is always wrong. Please consider my deep-felt views and vote no to the return of the death penalty".

• (1610)

That letter is signed by Mrs. Lesley C. Parrott, the mother of Alison Parrott who, unfortunately, as we all know, was an 11-year old child who was murdered.

In conclusion, it is my opinion that the time of the House should be spent on many other issues. We should be spending a lot of time on the issue of illiteracy as well as a lot of time trying to find employment for our constituents who are out of work.

We are talking about the murder rate, which is 2.5 per 100,000, but are not even mentioning the fact that the suicide rate is 13.8 per 100,000 and that a large percentage of that relates to young people. We are not taking time to discuss the many other problems which our society is facing right now.

Although I know that 70 per cent of Canadians in general, and probably a similar number of my constituents, are in favour of reinstating capital punishment, it is important to note that only 5 per cent consider the issue to be important. I indicated my opinion to the voters in the last election. They knew where I stood before they elected me to the House of Commons. I indicated clearly to them that I had no intention of participating in a process which would reinstate capital punishment.

In conclusion I want to remind you of the words of Edmund Burke spoken 213 years ago. He said:

> Your representative owes you, not his industry only, but his judgment; and he betrays, instead of serving you, if he sacrifices it to your opinion.

Those are my views, Mr. Speaker, and I hope that the House will defeat the motion.

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, I notice that the Hon. Member who has just spoken referred, as did his Leader, to the statements of Edmund Burke. I have also noticed that a lot of editorial writers, with surprising selectivity, constantly urged Members of Parliament to ignore or defy the clear opinion of the public by citing this portion of Burke's speech to the electors of Bristol in 1774. He said at that time:

> Your representative owes you, not his industry only, but his judgment; and he betrays, instead of serving you, if he sacrifices it to your opinion.

Those who do not confine their reading exclusively to editorials will be aware of the fact that after the dissolution of Parliament in 1780 Mr. Burke found that the electors of Bristol were so violently opposed to his attitude that he wisely decided not to stand for renomination.

Was the Member of Parliament who just spoke aware that Burke decided not to seek renomination because of the effect it had on his constituents when he refused even to take into consideration the vast majority of constituents whom he represented?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that the Hon. Member chose to rise in his place and raise this very important point. I did not know Edmund Burke personally. Perhaps the member across knew him better than I and is aware of the reasons he chose not to run for public office in the subsequent election. I remind him that Mr. Burke was not defeated but decided not to run again. I am sure the member knows the reason for that very well, that he has probably discussed it with Mr. Burke personally.

[Translation]

Mrs. Bourgault: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the intervention of my colleague from Glengarry—Prescott—Russell on capital punishment. Of course the question is very sensitive, I admit, except that the Hon. Member is always ready to rise and criticize the initiatives of our Government. They are never good enough for him. In short, he questions everything.

Mr. Speaker, I have a question for him. Has the Hon. Member any alternatives? What are we going to do about the 75 per cent of Canadians who are tired, who have had it up to here to see that the victims are never . . . What do we do to family victims? What do we do with them? Does the Hon. Member have an alternative? Did he think about that, or does he get up only to criticize the Government which has the courage, I repeat, the courage to bring this issue before the House of Commons, because it does take political courage to do so? So my question to him is this: Does he have solutions? Does he have anything to say to elderly people who are afraid to walk on the streets—and I know some of my constituents who feel that way because they are afraid of being attacked. There are a lot of trigger-happy individuals around these days. Think about the many corner grocery store owners who have been shot dead by thieves, by second offenders who do not hesitate because they know they will be paroled after seven years even after having been sentenced to life imprisonment. Mr. Speaker, what solutions does the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) have to offer Canadians who want capital punishment applied in this country, something which the previous Liberal Government has never done?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, let me tell you in plain language that it takes nerve, it takes a lot of nerve for an Hon. Member on the Government side to stand on his feet in this House and ask the Opposition if it has an alternative for better government. That takes a lot of nerve coming from the Government side, Mr. Speaker, I must say. All the more so when a government Member rises to ask us for an alternative to the death penalty. Is there an alternative between life and death? Can one be so ridiculous as to put such a question to the House? I must recall that if there is a problem with parole, then an appropriate solution must be found. In any other area as well, if there is a problem, then a solution must be found. You do not execute prisoners because no alternative has been found, even if one's Government has come to office with the largest majority in Canadian history. What a sorry excuse to give this House, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member as well as her Government should be ashamed to raise such issues.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I would like to know if my colleague is aware of studies which indicate that juries do not impose the death penalty, that they are reluctant to do so? Is he aware that such studies exist? Is he willing to make any comment?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague from Winnipeg for a very relevant question. He is quite right in raising this matter, because a poll has indeed been taken among people who had served as jurors previously. Very clear results were obtained from that survey in which former jurors were asked: Madam or Sir, had you had to reach a decision knowing the penalty would be death, would you have found the accused guilty in the very case you decided in the past? To a large extent, Mr. Speaker, those Canadians who sat on juries said no, because there was still some doubt in their minds that kept them from sentencing—not sentencing because it is the judge not them who sentences—but they would not have made any move which might have resulted in sentencing somebody to death. So that is very interesting, and we could conclude that indeed the restoration of the death penalty could have a totally reverse effect in the sense that a greater number of those guilty of murder could be released because the jury would be somewhat reluctant to find them guilty. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) has drawn our attention to a very interesting fact.

[English]

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) and others in favour of capital punishment argue that they must respond to the wishes of their constituents. They believe that due to the fact that 70 to 75 per cent of Canadians favour the return of capital punishment they must, as a result of some duty, respond by voting for capital punishment notwithstanding what their own personal beliefs may be. I want to say to the Hon. Member for Peterborough and others—

• (1620)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I hope the Hon. Member will comment on the member's speech and not on anything that has taken place prior to the speech of the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Nunziata: Does the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) agree with my suggestion to the Member for Peterborough that there comes a time when one must vote according to one's own belief and conscience because if one becomes a puppet of his or her constituents, there is really no reason to be here to act as a parliamentarian and represent the interests of not only his or her constituents but the country?

My question concerns the argument put forward by those who support capital punishment. The status quo is that capital punishment is not a penalty in Canada under the Criminal Code. It still exists in the National Defence Act. Therefore, it seems to me that the onus is on those who support capital punishment to prove to the House that there is a reason for a return of the death penalty.

When we cut away all the peripheral arguments, the bottom line is that those who support capital punishment are arguing that vengeance should be the basis of our criminal justice system because, in their heart of hearts, those who argue for capital punishment know that there is no other legitimate argument upon which to base a return to the death penalty.

Will the Hon. Member agree that it is wrong for a moral, civilized nation to have retribution or revenge as the basis for its criminal justice system? Would he agree that it is basically the law of the jungle that dictates that type of basis for a justice system?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell on a very short answer, please.

Mr. Boudria: Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, perhaps Gandhi put it best when he said something to the effect that if justice was still administered on the basis of an eye for an eye, we would have a society that would be totally blinded by now.

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I will begin my remarks today by commenting on what has been discussed by the member who just spoke and others in his Party. I want to respond to the comment that more murderers would be loose on the streets because juries would be more reluctant to convict them. My source in arguing that point is a letter that I received from Norman S. Douglas, Q.C., Crown Attorney, District of Algoma. He said:

> In the two dozen murder cases that I have prosecuted, I have not encountered any sympathetic juries for first degree murderers.
> However, even if it is conceded that juries would be more cautious in convicting if the result was capital punishment, second degree murder is always an included offence.
> In short, if a jury felt too squeamish about convicting on first degree they would convict of second degree instead. Thus, the killer would receive a sentence of life imprisonment. It is simply misleading to say that if a person is not convicted of first degree murder then he walks out of the courtroom.

That is the kind of misleading information that turns what could be a sensible, logical debate into the resurrection of arguments that cannot be substantiated and are only the whims and fancies of abolitionists who care little at all about a true justice system that provides the kinds of penalties that convicted murderers deserve for that act of planned, deliberate, premeditated murder.

Let me add that we are not looking to murder everyone who commits, or execute everyone—

Mr. Cassidy: You said murder. You are going to murder them.

Mr. Domm: I will deal with murder in a minute.

Mr. Cassidy: The state will murder. That is what you said.

Mr. Domm: We are not looking to execute the some 700 innocent people who are murdered by people who are guilty of planned, deliberate, premeditated murder.

Mr. Cassidy: Murder. That is what he said.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) has the floor.

Mr. Domm: Let me take some of my 20 minutes to give what I believe is the best explanation of why we are at this point today in the House of Commons concerning the subject of capital punishment.

For the second time in the last few years, the United Kingdom turned down a motion for a return to capital punishment. I am not prepared to say that I could have supported that motion either because those who have done more research than what is printed in the abolitionist newspapers will know that that motion would not have been supported in this House of Commons either because it called for a return to capital punishment for planned, deliberate, premeditated murders, providing the jurors found the murders to be evil. We are not talking about evil murders, but planned and deliberate murders that do not have to be considered evil. I will not get into a debate on whether acts of treason and terrorism are evil or whether we are talking about someone who is against the Government because it is doing something that it should not be doing.

We are talking about four, five or possibly six types of planned, deliberate murder for which there is a clear consensus in the country that there should be capital punishment. It remains to be seen whether the Opposition will vote according to their conscience. I suspect that the New Democratic Party has no conscience and does not have the luxury of voting according to their conscience.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member in mid-rant, but I want to call to Your Honour's attention that it is quite improper to ascribe motives to any Member of the House with respect to their participation, particularly in a debate as serious as this.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I consider such a reference to a Party to be acceptable, but I would reprimand the Hon. Member if it were to an individual. I feel that he is not out of order. The Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) has the floor.

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, it is accepted that the New Democratic Party cannot vote according to conscience because they have taken a party position based on policy that has been adopted by a convention of the New Democratic Party.

The Liberals also have a problem with the issue of conscience. There are Liberal Members of Parliament who are former Cabinet Ministers who supported capital punishment at the time of abolition. In a debate with myself on Canada-AM, a frontbencher in the Liberal Official Opposition stated that he supports capital punishment. He said on Canada-AM that he voted against capital punishment in 1976. When asked what he would do with respect to the Conservative motion in support in principle of capital punishment, he said that he would vote against it. I question the ability of some members of the Liberal Party to vote according to their conscience.

Let me deal with four or five points that have been made by other members. I do not believe any religion in Canada has an exclusivity on who is Christian and who is not Christian. I can list for the record ministers, clergy, of church denominations of all types who have written me as the heads of their churches in complete support of a return to capital punishment. They include the Oxford Baptist Church, Woodstock, Ontario; the Fundamental Baptist Mission; a letter from a former padre in the United Church; a letter from Pastor Jake Giesbrecht of the Ferndale Bible Church in Peterborough, Ontario; a letter from Reverend Hutson, T. Hilsden of the Social Concerns and Public Relations, Pentecostal Assemblies of Canada; a letter from the Reverend Earl N.O. Kulbeck of Scarborough, Ontario, Minister of the Pentecostal Assemblies of Canada; and a letter from Reverend G. W. Porter, retired United Church of Canada padre of the Lakefield Legion of which I am an honorary member. I have a letter from Reverend Evangelist Theodore Ruud of Calgary, Alberta. I have pages of letters from clergy who support a return to capital punishment—

Mr. Cassidy: How many bishops have you got, and name them? Name the bishops who support your view.

Mr. Domm: —on religious grounds. I sit in the House of Commons and I stand here today and I will debate with any member opposite who says to me that someone says that someone else is not a Christian because they support capital punishment. Who are they judging—whoever "they" might be? I do not propose to judge any member of the Opposition as being Christian or anti-Christian. I think members opposite are on pretty thin ice when religious leaders of the country judge other religious groups, organizations, churches and theologians as anti-Christian because they support capital punishment because of the teachings in the Old Testament and because of the teachings in the New Testament. Members opposite say that nowhere in the New Testament does Jesus Christ endorse capital punishment. I challenge Hon. Members opposite that nowhere in the New Testament does Jesus Christ say that the state does not have the right to take another person's life.

Mr. Cassidy: Let he who is without sin throw the first stone.

Mr. Domm: Having said that, if Hon. Members opposite support capital punishment because of teachings in the Old Testament, then I challenge them to show me why the person who supports capital punishment because of teachings in the Old Testament is any less Christian than someone who supports or is against capital punishment because of teachings in the New Testament.

Let us deal with the idea that was brought forward here today in debate by the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition when he talked about capital punishment being barbaric or being uncivilized. This is the "capital punishment is murder" argument all over again.

> What the abolitionists assert here is: "Uncivilized barbarians kill; all killing is uncivilized and barbaric; therefore judicially ordered executions are uncivilized and barbaric."

That quote is from Les Bewley, a retired Vancouver criminal court judge and columnist for the magazine Canadian Lawyer. He also stated:

> This contraption may sell, but only to those who have forgotten, or never knew, that civilization depends upon the rule of law—that code which prohibits anti-social, harmful and murderous acts under pain of punishment by a court of justice and denies to the individual the right to enforce his own justice, vengeance or revenge. To assert that execution is merely barbarism or revenge is to deny the very meaning and process of civilization and to murder reason itself.

The other argument is that capital punishment is murder. I have heard that not only on this side of the House but from members opposite as well.

Mr. Cassidy: That's what you said a minute ago.

Mr. Domm: Let me tell the Hon. Member what Mr. Bewley said on the topic. He said:

> "Murder is killing; execution is killing; therefore execution is murder." That's like: "Confining a person is unlawful; judges confine people, therefore judges are breaking the law"—The murderer is prosecutor, judge and jury, all without lawful authority. Only such killing can be called murder.
> In absolute contrast, society provides an accused murderer with all the rights and safeguards he has denied to his victim. If then, after proof of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, society sentences him to death, that is not murder; it is as far from unlawful killing as it is possible to get. To call this murder is to speak a lot of nonsense.

Let me tell Hon. Members that that quote is also from Les Bewley and is contained in Canadian Lawyer. The article appeared in The Globe and Mail on March 19, 1987.

I also want to read Hon. Members one little article which I think can say it best. I worked over the weekend trying to figure out where we got where we are, why we are not satisfied—

Mr. Cassidy: Because of people like you is why.

Mr. Domm: —that the vote in 1976—when I say "we" I mean the Canadian people. You might not represent the Canadian people.

Mr. Cassidy: I certainly do.

Mr. Stewart: No, you don't, look at the percentages.

Mr. Domm: I am telling you that the Canadian people—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I know that this will be a very charged-up debate. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) will have an opportunity for questions or comments after the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) finishes speaking, as will the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper). Please allow the Hon. Member to carry on with his remarks.

Mr. Keeper: Then restrain him, too.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Peterborough.

Mr. Keeper: Then ask him to stop questioning our integrity if you want quiet in this place.

Mr. Domm: The article continues:

> Because Canadian criminal courts have become increasingly unable to deal quickly and effectively with crime and with criminals—

That is part of the main reason why we are here today. The article goes on:

> We are, in Canada, rapidly and surely approaching the hamstrung, obstructed and hapless state of the administration of justice in the United States.
>
> Our systems of justice and corrections now display almost every symptom of the illnesses the U.S. systems suffer from—
> We are arriving, as Americans have arrived, at this disgraceful and unendurable state because, over the past 20 years, a spurious, dangerous, one-sided debate about the nature and direction of law, order, crime and punishment has been allowed to go on—
> Imprisoned crooks, pushers and murderers are also frequently interviewed and quoted at length on their "expert" views that it is society, not they, which should be tried and convicted—
> The appalled witnesses and victims who manage to survive are usually too angry, frightened, dismayed, disgusted or ashamed to qualify, or be accepted by the media or the governments, as "experts"—
> Plea-bargaining—the venereal disease of any system of criminal justice and the distinctive sore now on the U.S. system—once almost unheard of in Canadian courts, is now common to them. The joyful, semi-secret grapplings and couplings of defence counsel and Crown attorneys are performed daily, to their audible moans of delight and loud cries for "more"—
> Parole, and temporary absence programs from prisons, sanctified by parliament—

Mr. Keeper: Stick to the issue!

Mr. Domm:

> —and vigorously employed by regiments of corrections bureaucrats—

Mr. Keeper: What about the rule of relevance?

Mr. Winegard: Shut up!

Mr. Domm:

> —demonstrate a thinly veiled but effective contempt for the judicial function and have now almost devalued and debased the judicial coinage—
> In that event, why not be a nice, warm, progressive, exciting (even trendy) judge and toss out absolute and conditional discharges—like confetti at a wedding?
> Citizens of Canada triple-lock their doors, return to and cower behind medieval walled or guarded residences, abandon their streets and parks to thugs, hooligans and criminals, arm themselves with cans of mace and lead pipes and attend night classes in the martial arts.

Add to that the rise of vigilanteism here in Canada, which I do not support, and I have a difficult job trying to explain why people in Canada will give from their pockets their hard-earned cash to store-owners who try to defend property and life against criminals. What causes that?

The article continues:

> How pathetic, how absurd, how shameful, how infuriating—how unnecessary—when one recalls that the first duty of the state is to protect its law-abiding citizens.
> The thin blue line of peace officers, baffled and frustrated, represses its anger and says, all too often and all too dangerously, "what's the use?" So do more and more judges.

This particular judge has had it. Long before his time of retirement in the City of Vancouver he sent in his letter which said: "I quit." He quit because of the policies of the judicial system in Canada. We as parliamentarians are responsible for the mess that the country is in because we have sat back for decades and have allowed convicted, planned, deliberate murderers parole, not in 25 years but in 15 years. Do Hon. Members realize that today nine people who were on death row prior to 1976 are now coming up for parole? It is for parole after 15 years. They were sentenced to death and were on death row in 1976 and are now eligible to go before a judicial review to recommend parole before a parole board.

• (1640)

Let me tell you, these criminal lawyers—and there are some in this House of Commons—are working toward judicial review. And why do you think criminal lawyers want a judicial review? Why do they not want the Canadian Parole Board to make the decision on behalf of the people? The Canadian Parole Board is appointed by the Government and as such is accountable to the people.

An Hon. Member: So is the judge.

Mr. Domm: The judiciary are there until retirement.

An Hon. Member: They are put there by the Government.

Mr. Domm: They are there until retirement, unless they choose to quit, as was the case with the judge that I have quoted extensively, an individual who was also a writer of law journals. After 21 years as a magistrate and a judge of the British Columbia Provincial Court (Criminal Division) and six years before his statutory retirement, this individual wrote the provincial secretary, as the law requires, to advise him that, as of April 30, 1981, he was quitting.

The abolitionists say that there is no problem with homicides in Canada; none whatsoever. Let me tell you that when you break down the homicide rate—

Mr. Robinson: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) on a point of order.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) would like to advise the House that the judge in question also said that women have no brains before the age of 30. It is the same judge—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order. The Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) has the floor.

Mr. Domm: I predict two things today—and these are not matters that I came to lightly. I predict, first, that Parliament will be required to amend the Criminal Code, bringing in stiffer penalties, including capital punishment in certain circumstances, as a result of this debate; and secondly, I predict that, if the Senate refuses to pass the Criminal Code amendments as passed by the elected representatives of the people, supported by the majority of the Canadian people, the Government will embark on a program of major Senate reform, urged by the Canadian people to do just that.

In our parliamentary system of Government, the Government has the responsibility to represent constituents. When it comes to an issue of conscience, I realize the difficulties involved. I was raised as an abolitionist, the son of a United Church minister. I know the positions taken by abolitionists, and I respect those positions. What bothers me is that the abolitionists tend, very often, to personalize the debate, going so far as to call those who do not agree with them anti-Christian.

I have yet to hear a retentionist in Canada call another church leader anti-Christian because of that leader's support for abolition. Why do the abolitionists persist in this low-level debate, personalizing positions rather than discussing conscience?

A question raised earlier today was: Is there any deterrence effect in having capital punishment on the books?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Domm: I can give you the names of 14 people who would be alive today, innocent people who would be alive today, had that first-time murderer been executed.

Those are 14 crimes that would have been prevented. For those who bring up the half-way house case in Ottawa, the Sweeney case—I am not dealing with Sweeney because it is now under appeal—I remind those individuals that the father of the victim in that case is a determined and devout abolitionist, and I respect that position. But the mother of that girl who was raped and murdered in the half-way house now supports capital punishment. That is something that should be mentioned. The mother of that girl went on national television to voice her support for capital punishment.

Just this past month, we have learned of a series of chain-saw murders in Montreal. We had 17 pieces found of one victim of a chain-saw murder.

I am sick to death of reading in our newspapers and hearing on radio and television about the suffering of someone who was executed. What about the 11 children in British Columbia who were raped and murdered and then buried along the highway? What about the Montreal victim whose body was cut up into 17 pieces? What about the young girl who was raped and murdered in the half-way house? What about Eli Guay? What about the six convicted murderers who, having been paroled, murdered again? What about the judges? What about the jurors? What about these judicial reviews?

If an individual, having gone through all of the steps in our criminal justice system, is found guilty of first-degree murder, that individual should be executed. We do not have one known case of wrongful execution in Canada since Confederation. No such case has ever been produced to me. Yet, I can produce dozens of names of innocent people who have been murdered as a result of the judicial review process. The same judiciary who say we should not execute because we may execute the wrong person have caused, indirectly, the murder of dozens of innocent people because of their judgment as to who should and who should not be paroled.

Is it more ethical to be bigoted when it comes to judicial review than when it comes to murder? I support capital punishment for planned, deliberate, premeditated murder; murder arising from a hijacking or hostage-taking incident; contract killers, hired guns; and for serial killers. As well, I support capital punishment for the killing of police officers and law enforcement agents, and prison guards.

Until this debate ends, whenever it ends, I will be fighting for the return of capital punishment for those six offences. I am prepared to produce, name for name, those in support versus those opposed. I think the people need to be heard, and the Government needs to respond. This Government, the Progressive Conservative Government, has shown some responsibility in this respect. This will be the first true free vote on this matter since Confederation. All of the other "free votes" had solid blocks of cabinet Ministers voting for abolition. We have one individual sitting in this House who was a member of the Cabinet at the time of the last "free vote" on capital punishment, and he at that time, notwithstanding that he was a retentionist, voted for abolition as part of the cabinet block of votes; and I can give you the names of two others who were in a similar circumstance in 1976. Had those three individuals voted for retention in 1976, we would still have capital punishment on the books today. All we needed were three more votes, and we had three supporters of capital punishment who voted for abolition. These three individuals polled their constituents and came out and said they supported capital punishment, and in fact spoke in support of it. Yet, as part of the cabinet block of votes, they voted against it.

The Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) has now offered the Canadian people the opportunity to have their elected representatives cast a free vote on this question. The elected representatives of this country are responsible to their conscience, their constituents, and their Party. I am proud of the Progressive Conservative Party for allowing this question to be debated; I am proud of the Party for allowing members of Cabinet to vote as they see fit. I respect the abolitionists, and I expect the same in return. This is a debate which should not be personalized.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan).

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) has stated, categorically, that he has knowledge of 14 lives that could have been saved had capital punishment been imposed in the first instance. The Hon. Member has said that he could provide us with those names. If delicacy prevents him from providing us with the names themselves, perhaps he might just outline for us the circumstances, such that we will at least have an insight into what it is he is driving at.

Mr. Domm: What we now have available to us, from the Department of the Solicitor General, Statistics Canada and the Department of Justice, are the statistics from 1960 to 1979, and those statistics indicate that those persons murdered in our penal institutions at the rate of one every 50 days. We also have available to us the names of convicted murderers who, having been sentenced to a penal institution for murder, murdered again while incarcerated.

In addition, I have with me information on six convicted murderers who, having been released on parole or mandatory supervision, murdered again. As well, there is one that I cannot use, as it is under appeal.

The statistics will bear out the figures that I have given, and I would be pleased to supply those figures. If it is the wish of the House that I table them, I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) a question with respect to the timing for this debate.

In introducing the motion in the House this morning, the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) took direct issue with the suggestion that was made by the Hon. Member for Peterborough with respect to the June 30 deadline imposed by him on this very important and very fundamental debate, a debate which has to do with the kind of society we in Canada want.

• (1650)

The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary suggested to the Hon. Member for Peterborough that he was quite wrong in attacking the Government by saying that if this resolution were not adopted in the House by June 30, his Government and his Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) would look weak and vacillating in the eyes of the Canadian public.

Has the Hon. Member for Peterborough now had a chance, after hearing the words of the Parliamentary Secretary, to reflect upon what he said earlier? Is it still his view that if the House should not adopt the resolution by June 30, it would be a sign that his Prime Minister and his Government are in fact weak and vacillating on the issue? Is that still his position?

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, let me make it abundantly clear that it was the statement of the Deputy Prime Minister's office, as quoted in the paper at the time we delayed the debate from March until April, that it was still the intent of the Government to deal with this issue before the end of June and bring back within 90 days a report to Parliament on the proposed amendments—when capital punishment would be applied and which type of execution method would be used.

I stand firm on what I said. I feel we have set our own timetable. It must be obvious to anyone watching the debate, or anyone who has followed it with any amount of interest over the past number of months, that the New Democratic Party has only one objective, that is, to filibuster, delay, and not make it possible to put the vote. We have offered every opportunity to both the NDP and the Official Opposition to cause the debate to end as quickly as possible. We have offered to stay late at night, sit weekends, or limit speeches to 15 minutes, and they turned down every opportunity to limit the debate and get on with the vote.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Hon. Member. I wish the Hon. Member would accord as much right to differ with him on this issue to members who oppose capital punishment as those of us who oppose capital punishment accord to him, the right to his belief in capital punishment.

With the exception of the United States, every democratic country of which I know has refused capital punishment, such as Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Germany, France, Belgium, Holland, Spain, Australia, and New Zealand. I will also mention Great Britain and Israel, two countries which are constantly facing the real threat of actual assassinations of people in their countries. All those countries have refused to have capital punishment as part of their judicial system.

Why is it that the Hon. Member, instead of thinking that we should follow their example, wants us to follow the example of communist countries and countries with military dictatorships, all of which have capital punishment?

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, I think we should point out first that the United Kingdom still has capital punishment for acts of treason in its Criminal Code. I think we should also point out that Canada still has capital punishment in our military law. The Hon. Member should know this. He should not even have asked the question because one of his members has a Private Members' Bill to abolish it from our code in military law.

I think he should also know about the situation in the United States where they have returned to capital punishment. If we add up all the states which have capital punishment and take the average per year over the last five years, we see that those states have had decreases in their homicide rates at a much faster clip than the other states. The good news is that in the United States, where they returned to executions in 1977, they have had an annual decrease in not only the number of homicides from 23,000 per year down to 17,800 last year, for which complete figures are available, but they have decreased 23 per cent in their homicide rates. We do not enjoy that luxury, except in the occasional year when we have a drop, and then it goes back up.

We had the largest number of homicides in Canada in 1985. There were 700 and some homicides in Canada. That is nothing to be proud of. In the United States it is going down at the rate of 23 per cent.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) has listed a series of crimes which he believes warrant capital punishment. Does he not think that instead of having this debate on the opportunity of reinstating capital punishment, it would be better to examine the possibility of implementing a full employment policy so that we might reduce the number of starving people, and of youths resorting to prostitution, or getting into drugs and then having to shoplift and go on to hold-ups? Does he really think capital punishment is a deterrent for criminals, and does he not remember that in Chicago, at the time of Al Capone and his gang, it was not the death penalty that put an end to the massacres, but the Income Tax Act that sent those people to jail? And as a last question to the Hon. Member, since he is in favour of reinstating capital punishment, would he be ready to act as the hangman to execute those he wants put to death?

[English]

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, I think I should take the time to point out that during the time the Liberals were in office violence in Canada or violent crimes rose in 1962 from 41,000, according to a Statistics Canada report, to 179,000 when they lost office in 1984.

What is he telling me about the reason for the violent crime increase being as astronomical as that? What about attempted murders during their time in office? They rose from 83 in 1962, as reported by Statistics Canada, to 922 in one year, in 1984. What did they do about reform in our justice system? What did they do about our parole system and mandatory supervision?

I suggest that the Hon. Member should start looking in the mirror. The reason we are in a mess today is because of their inadequacy in dealing with criminals and major capital offences, and now first degree murder. The first degree murder rate in Canada has gone up from 202 in 1980 to 300 and some in 1985.

Mr. Robinson: What about 1986?

Mr. Domm: It dropped in 1986, but those were only temporary figures. What about the 329 people, homicides, all of whom went down in the Air India air crash? Not one of them was reported by Statistics Canada.

If we add that 329 figure to the homicide rate, we would have the highest homicide rate in Canadian history. The Indian investigation has already determined that the crash was caused from an explosion in the luggage compartment, which makes Canada fully responsible. It is our homicide rate. There were deaths, and they do not even appear in the Statistics Canada homicide figures for 1985 or 1986. However, they will appear and we will catch up.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will recognize the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) and the Hon. Member for Argenteuil—Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault), if we can get it in before five o'clock.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I have been in the House since 1968. I have seen for most of the important debates public hearings on what the public thinks about the pros and cons of certain issues, be it the Crow debate or whatever.

Since the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) talked about public opinion being so important, why would he not support a resolution which would allow a parliamentary committee to hear the pros and cons on capital punishment from the people of Canada? If this resolution passes, all this particular committee will do is hear opinions on offences and methods of executing people.

Why would he, as a long-time parliamentarian who respects the views of the country, of the church leaders, and so on, not want to have a committee to hear the pros and cons in principle on whether or not we should talk about bringing back capital punishment and then at a further stage talk about what offences or the way we should kill people?

Mr. Domm: You obviously have not been around for the last few months because it was my motion which went before the Standing Committee on Justice and is still on the books—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member should address his remarks through the Chair, please.

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to point out that the Hon. Member, who asked the question about why I would not support an all-party committee to hear the reasons we should or should not have capital punishment, is out of touch with reality.

It was my motion which went before the committee. The committee is still dealing with it. However, we have a motion in the House which takes precedence over standing committees. The motion before the House would allow exactly that when we set up this 15-man committee to go across Canada during the summer—

Mr. Nystrom: Fifteen-man?

Mr. Domm: —15-person committee to go across the country this summer to hear evidence on what offences we should have capital punishment for.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to inform the Hon. Member for Argenteuil—Papineau that questions and comments are now terminated.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

EDUCATION

ACCESS BY INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS TO POST-SECONDARY INSTITUTIONS

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, in order to foster the development of other countries and to promote international understanding and in order to allow Canadian society to benefit to a greater extent academically, culturally, politically and financially, the government should consider the advisability of developing policies and implementing programs which provide greater access by international students to Canadian post-secondary institutions.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me to speak to this motion. It is the first time I have been able to do so for a motion or a Bill of mine in the 15 years I have been in Parliament, so it is a bit of a thrill for me.

There has been a 43 per cent drop in the number of foreign students studying in Canada over the past five or six years. It has been a gradual decline and it is important that Canada do something to correct it for various reasons. First, all Canadian students to whom I have spoken from one end of Canada to the other support the presence in our universities of foreign students. They tell me that a dimension of their education would be lost if they did not have the company, the consultation and the comradeship of foreign students. They tell me it adds something special to their education and without it they have a diminished kind of education and will not be as well rounded in the kind of people they become. There is complete support from Canadian students for this particular motion and initiative. Canadian students tell me that they get good contacts for the future because they make friends from all over the world.

As well Canada makes friends all around the world. I have been to a number of countries, as we all have, and in many countries I have found leaders in business, industry, government and education who are graduates of Canadian universities. There is no better public relations exercise to give us the kind of influence and presence that we need today in various countries than former graduates of Canadian universities. There is support as well for greater access by foreign students, not from the universities themselves. I remember the President of the University of Windsor speaking very eloquently on the need to increase the number of foreign students in Canada.

Indeed, Professor Reuben Green of the University of Windsor issued a paper showing not only that there are important intangible benefits to foreign students, but there are important tangible benefits because foreign students make future contributions to Canada economically and socially and also give an immediate infusion into the Canadian economy. Professor Green's study has shown that between $600 million and $700 million a year is injected into the Canadian economy directly by foreign students studying here. They all buy supplies and they all shop. They are all housed and they spend money here. There is a net pay-off to Canada in the long term and in the short-term. Improved international relations result as well. For all of these reasons it seems to me that in 1987 we should stop the decline of foreign students in Canadian universities for the reasons I have outlined, and we should start on the road in the opposite direction.

I would like to quote, if I may, from the Canadian Bureau for International Education which is interested in this topic. In some of the literature when speaking about their particular organization we find:

The National Consortium believes the Federal Government should work with provincial counterparts in the formulation of policies and programs which will increase Canada's capacity to market its educational services in the world and which will create greater access by foreign nationals to Canadian post-secondary institutions. The Federal Government should also take unilateral action now to provide to the provinces additional funding tied to elimination of differential fees—

That is an impediment. There are differential fees in a number of provinces. In other words, foreign students have to pay more than Canadian students. The elimination of differential fees will be important. This article continues that the National Consortium suggests that the federal Government should:

—expand the number of scholarships for developing countries, and remove bureaucratic disincentives to study in Canada (e.g. restrictions on part-time employment, cumbersome student authorization application and renewal procedures, inequitable taxation and mandatory contributions to CPP and UIC from which foreign students can derive no benefit).

The Canadian Bureau of International Education has put forward these suggestions which I think are eminently sensible and important. There are impediments to foreign students in Canada and the Government of Canada, and this Parliament, can have a direct role here. Education we know is a provincial responsibility but the impediments to foreign students studying in Canada are to a degree, and to too large a degree, federal. I remember in Windsor we talked to one professor who wanted to bring in a student from the West Indies to study in Canada. She was prepared to be the sponsor of that student yet six or eight months later there was still no movement even though the student was being sponsored by a professor.

The student was asked to give an understanding that she had $8,000 in the bank wherever she lived and had all other sorts of red tape to go through before she could study in Canada. This is where the Government of Canada could help. It should help for the reasons I have given. It has a public relations value to Canada and as well because there is an immediate financial pay-off. Last, but by no means least, Canadian students and Canadian university professors, teachers and presidents all say there is a dimension of education here that will be lost unless we facilitate the entry of foreign students into our country.

I call upon the Government today through this motion, which I hope will be supported on both sides of the House, to devise a policy which would facilitate the entry of foreign students into Canada so that we can welcome them as citizens of the world. In helping them I believe in the long run we will help ourselves.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is common knowledge that, for many years, the presence of students from other countries in Canadian post-secondary institutions has benefited Canadians in many ways. Other statements made in the course of this debate have pointed to the diversity of the programs set up over the years to attract students to Canada or to encourage those who cannot take part in our programs.

The number of foreign students in Canada at the end of the seventies and beginning of the eighties increased considerably, culminating at all levels during the academic year 1983-84. Since then, Mr. Speaker, there has been a regular drop in numbers at most, but not all levels.

Similarly, the number of students enrolled at the post-secondary level has dropped in most, but not all regions. There is no simple explanation for this decline, but tuition fees and the cost of room and board are obviously a decisive factor.

Canada does not have a monopoly on this situation. In fact, the drop in the movement of students between Commonwealth nations has been so obvious that a special task force was set up to study student mobility. That unique multilateral organization is concerned in particular with the potential impact of such a decline on itself.

Canada tried to meet those concerns, which probably will be expressed again at the meeting of Commonwealth Education Ministers scheduled for next July in Nairobi. One of the solutions was to increase from 300 to 500 the number of scholarships offered under the Canadian Commonwealth scholarship and development bursaries program. It should be noted that a very large majority of those scholarships are destined to Commonwealth developing nations and can therefore serve directly the goal referred to by the opposition Member, which is to foster development in other countries.

Canada also is very closely monitoring the work of Lord Brigg's Committee, which is looking at possibilities for education from a distance as a means of fostering development and improving understanding internationally or within the Commonwealth. Briefly stated, we want to examine not only traditional methods, such as scholarships, to reach the goals indicated in the motion but also—and with similar goals—all new methods involving technologies in which Canada is a leader.

The Commonwealth, Mr. Speaker, is not the only multilateral forum in which Canada has an interest, nor the only one to be interested in matters such as student mobility. This is why the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), at the Paris Summit, announced a new program of scholarships for French-speaking nations. Under that program, Canada will provide 350 scholarships to developing Francophonie nations, at a cost of $6 million. Also, we are looking at the possibility of setting up a remote education system to support development needs in those countries and to strenghten the links between French-speaking nations on the basis of better mutual understanding.

In view of the importance of foreign students not only to multilateral institutions such as the Commonwealth but also the Canadian education institutions and all the Governments concerned, both provincial and federal, that decline is a cause for concern. Steps that could stop or reverse that decline are the subject of various proposals that were submitted for instance to Parliamentary committees. Concern has been expressed over various aspects of the time spent by students in our universities and colleges. Various matters were raised concerning the overall environment in which they live and study, and also the rules and procedures that apply to them.

For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, in November, the Government stated, in answer to the Special Joint Committee, it would launch an in-depth study of foreign student policies and programs. This detailed review, which is currently being carried out, takes into account all aspects of our national interests affected by the presence of foreign students in our teaching institutions. It deals also with the most immediate and practical issues concerned with the way to look after the students, from their very first contact with the Canadian authorities until the end of their stay in Canada and their returning home.

I should remind Hon. Members that education and teaching institution policies are provincial responsibilities. The provincial Government and the teaching institutions have expressed the same concerns as we have about the reduction in the number of students. The Council of Ministers of Education, Canada, presented, in November of last year, a very useful report in two volumes about foreign student related issues. This document provides not only a general review of the issues, but also quite extensive data on foreign students, as well as federal and provincial policies and programs.

The Council of Ministers of Education, Canada is also carrying out a review of issues under provincial jurisdiction concerning foreign students. Federal and provincial authorities are keeping in touch while these reviews are progressing.

I can assure Hon. Members that the Government, once this review is completed, will clearly define the goals and objectives which it deems appropriate concerning this major element of our external relations.

It will also make comments about the various means to ensure a greater access to our post-secondary institutions through policies and programs implemented at the federal level, as well as define the possible means to encourage such an access.

[English]

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) for introducing this motion today. I can certainly assure him of my full support and the support of my caucus for the motion which deals with an extremely important matter and which reads as follows:

> That, in the opinion of this House, in order to foster the development of other countries and to promote international understanding and in order to allow Canadian society to benefit to a greater extent academically, culturally, politically and financially, the government should consider the advisability of developing policies and implementing programs which provide greater access by international students to Canadian post-secondary institutions.

Unfortunately, we know that access by international students to Canadian universities and colleges has declined in recent years. There are a number of economic and regulatory reasons for this.

I had the benefit of being an international student at the University of London. I can certainly attest personally to the great benefit it was for me to have received my graduate education in England. I attended an international college which meant that I met students from all over the world. That was an excellent experience for me and is something on which I can fall back for information and contacts. As a university teacher in Canadian universities and indeed a teacher in Europe on a brief sabbatical, I know of the immense contribution international students make. Canadian students going to Canadian universities learn something of the world by having a chance to mix with international students. It is something that we very much want to promote.

The means for promoting this are not adequate. Canada has a budget for overseas development assistance and we have made commitments, although I am sorry to say that we have fallen back on the commitment to increase overseas development assistance up to .7 per cent of GNP. We are not there yet and we are not moving very quickly toward that but nevertheless, we do have commitments to overseas development. We do spend money on education in developing countries. However, the amount of money we spend educating international students in Canada is extremely small. Considering the excellence of our Canadian universities and the contribution they could be making to development, I think it is very much too small indeed.

Scholarship support by Canada for developing countries in 1985-86 represented only .3 per cent of Canada's total overseas development appropriation and amounted to only $7.9 million. This is a very small sum of money when we consider what we could be doing. Canada provides roughly 1,500 scholarships to developing countries every year whereas a number of other countries are much more generous in the support they give. The United Kingdom, the United States and Japan each provide nearly 20,000 scholarships per year. We are very far behind even though we are certainly able to contribute, and of course we would benefit from the participation of international students at our universities.

Apart from our desire to aid development, there are of course benefits for Canada itself. Mention has already been made of the economic benefits of students coming to Canada and of course the very long-term benefits to Canadians who make contacts. These contacts can be useful later to students who become Parliamentarians, business people, professionals and researchers. We live on a planet, we do not simply live in our own country. These contacts are beneficial to Canada. There should be a network of people who actually know each other personally who are active in Governments and the economic, political and cultural lives of their countries. These people will know Canada and will come here when they want to purchase goods and services, when they want to award contracts of various sorts and when they want to work with us collectively on some political project or other. They will see us and know us as friends. These kinds of contacts will bear fruit for many years.

Apart from the fact we do not give a large number of scholarships to foreign students, we have to realize that of those international students who do come to Canada, a disproportionate number are from the richer countries. They may be Third World countries, but obviously there is an enormous difference in wealth between countries in the Third World. Our programs have not benefited the poorest countries. For overseas development assistance to be realistic, education is crucial, and we could be doing a great deal more than we have. We also have to be sensitive to the needs of the countries in the poorer parts of the Third World and the enormous pressures on them. They have had to take over and fund education systems. They are in crisis now with debts to pay. Some countries have natural disasters to deal with and in many instances have had to cut back on their own education systems. This would be an absolutely ideal opportunity for us to show some sensitivity and see that our aid actually gets to those who need it the most. That is simply not the case right now.

According to a study by the Canadian Bureau for International Education, there has been a 23 per cent decline in the number of international students at the post-secondary level in Canada in the past two academic years. Furthermore, only 5 per cent of our international students come from the least-developed countries. In 1985 Canada provided scholarships to nationals from such rich countries as France, the Federal Republic of Germany, and Japan, but not to nationals from Chad, Madagascar, Burma or Equatorial Guinea, which are among the world's poorest countries. Here we really do see the need to adapt our policies to face the reality of the world at the present time.

The last time I raised in this House the need for development assistance for students in post-secondary education, I received a letter from a constituent of mine raising a concern that I am sure many people have. The student asked why we were so concerned about the problems of international students when students here in Canada have enough problem going to university. She pointed out that by the time she graduated with a Bachelor of Arts degree she would be facing a debt of $6,000. We know that some students have debts higher than that. She pointed to the sacrifices she had to make to go to university and is concerned that this is perhaps an either/or situation; we can only help Canadians or international students but not both.

I simply want to say to people like her that it is not an either/or situation at all. We have a separate budget for overseas development. We have made a public moral commitment and it is a question of how we use the money. The question of how we deal with our own students has been raised in this House many times. We have talked about the inadequacy of student loans and bursaries and so forth, and the need for reform. The provinces need to be doing their share as well in making post-secondary education accessible to people of all income levels in Canada. It is not an either/or situation. Canada will benefit from having these international students here and we must address both the question of Canadian students and international students.

To conclude, I very much welcome the resolution introduced by the Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador. I assure him of the support of my caucus for measures which would increase participation by international students in Canadian institutions.

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) brought this motion before the House. I think it is a very good motion and its intent is very important. The policy recommendations that would flow from it if it were adopted would have a very desirable effect. I commend the Hon. Member for the motion.

I believe that the presence of international students in our universities, colleges and training institutions right across Canada is very desirable for many reasons. It is good for Canadian education as well as for those who come from overseas to further their studies here in Canada. This kind of interchange is an essential part of Canada's role in the world. It is one way we take part in the flow of ideas between societies. It is one of the dimensions of Canada's life as an active and open and responsible member of the global community. As a teacher at Conestoga College in Kitchener, my own personal experience was that we were all enriched by the presence in our classes of overseas students. We benefited from their experience and the way in which they sometimes saw things from a different perspective.

In the brief time I have I would like to deal not with students from the U.S., Europe or other industrialized countries, but with those who come from the Third World, particularly under the auspices of Canada's aid program. I am particularly interested in this topic as a member of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade. We have been studying overseas development aid since last May. We have heard representations from people right across Canada. We have heard representations about the subject of this very motion. That is, that Canada has slowly been decreasing its commitment to bringing more and more students here. The numbers are falling, yet the ability to do more is there. I am distressed by this fact and that is why I support this motion. However, our past record, despite the fact that the number of students coming to Canada has been declining, has largely been positive.

There are literally thousands of people in key positions in Third World countries who have benefited greatly by their training here in Canada, mainly under scholarship and training programs financed through the Canadian International Development Agency or the External Aid Office before CIDA was created. These people include cabinet Ministers and senior decision-makers in the public and private sector in country after country, in Asia, Africa and the Americas. I do not think there is any doubt that the funding Canada provided to enable such people to prepare themselves for positions of responsibility represents a very wise investment. It has enabled those students to return home and contribute to their development.

It is also a matter of enlightened Canadian self-interest. These students constitute an important network of people in the developing world who know something about Canada. They are familiar with our goods and our way of doing business. Perhaps most importantly, through their contacts here they have learned from other students who have become leaders in their own country. They have developed a very important network and vast reservoir of friends and acquaintances in this country. When they go home they are well disposed to work with us in various business ventures, in the international forum of the UN, or in development projects in their own or neighbouring countries.

In 1985 some 3,300 students and trainees from Third World countries were here in Canada under the auspices of CIDA. To a large extent and in a very real way they are the friends and acquaintances Canada will need in the Third World in years to come, whether that is 10, 20, or 30 years down the road. Our children will be dealing with a very changed world and different economic and political patterns in which today's developing countries may well find themselves playing a much more central role. I hope the experience that they, this year's complement of Third World trainees and students, and next year's have as our guests will equip them to play valuable roles in the development of their homelands and that they will be well received by their fellow students here and the communities they live in during their studies so that they will learn about Canada and take good memories home with them when they leave.

However, we must remember that the students we welcome to Canada are only a fraction of those whom we are helping to prepare as our contribution to world development. There are others whom we never see who are being trained in their own countries or in facilities available in their own part of the world under conditions much closer to those they will actually work in.

The fact is that the approach to training has changed quite drastically over recent years to take account of lessons learned from experience and to get the best possible impact out of the limited number of dollars available for aid programs. Some of these lessons have been negative. We have learned, for example, that taking students out of a poor country with many social, economic, and political problems and putting them for a number of years into a very rich country such as ours with all of our facilities and opportunities is not always the best way to overcome the brain drain which occurs from Third World countries to others.

It is a simple fact of life that when they study here for four or five years or more they would want to stay. That is a factor which we must take into account. It is a problem for both them and us. Our purpose is to assist them so that they can return home and be of assistance to their own people.

We have also learned that, while we have excellent universities and colleges here in Canada, their expertise is not always relevant to what the developing countries need. To put the lesson in more positive terms, we have seen a number of developing countries advance very strongly in the field of education to the point where they can take care of a large part of their own needs in the area of general university education so that it is no longer essential for large numbers of their students to go abroad for undergraduate training. We have gained the wisdom to realize that in a great many situations the best training and the right training is training carried out at home within institutions of their own country or region and in the context of the society that they know and hope to develop.

The fact is that the whole question of education and training within the framework of development co-operation is much more complex than it once seemed. Most of the answers involve providing opportunities in the countries where the skills are needed. We have to develop a whole range of training, not only university education, but many kinds of technical training, the acquisition of skills needed in the context of various development projects, and the development of institutions which are essential to national development in the countries with which we are co-operating.

When the Committee on External Affairs and International Trade visited Africa late last November and early last December members were struck by the fact that the skills required by these people are basic maintenance and management skills rather than PhDs.

Most of our effort is, as it should be, beyond our borders and involves finding new ways of providing our help such as links between Canadian and Chinese universities and institutions through which Canada is playing a substantial role in the process of human resource development in China. Another example is the arrangement by which Ontario Hydro will help to train several hundred officials and technicians of the Egyptian Electricity Authority.

In conclusion, I think the thrust of this motion is very good. The Committee on External Affairs and International Trade has been reviewing this since last June, as I indicated earlier. It will be reporting to the House this June. A part of that report, I hope, will contain a large measure of recommendations for human resource development along the lines of that which the member has introduced here today. I am confident that it will.

[Translation]

Mr. Richard Grisé (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, I rejoice at the interest expressed by the Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) in seeing Canada play a greater role in the development of international cultural relations. Indeed we can all support the objectives mentioned in his motion "to foster the development of other countries and to promote international understanding". Similarly the benefits which Canada stands to gain from academic, cultural, political and financial viewpoints—benefits which, according to him, can be obtained through our pursuit of such objectives—are considerable and justify serious measures on the part of the Government.

Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to inform the House that indeed this kind of program already exists in the riding of Chambly which I have the honour to represent. Once again, Mr. Speaker, we are leading the way in these cultural and intellectual exchanges, particularly at the school of aerotechnics, the only junior college in Canada where students are trained in the sector of aerotechnics, and soon in aeronautics as well. I also want to stress the importance which Pratt & Whitney management attach to these exchanges. Representatives of their clients in practically every country of the world come to their training centre and the Chambly School of Aerotechnics, in Saint-Hubert more specifically, to enable those people to learn new techniques, and inversely for them to become familiar with the difficulties these people may face.

In response to this motion, I should like to refer to a program which, in my opinion, proved to be one of the particularly strong impetus in achieving these objectives, namely the Department of External Affairs international relations program in education. As opposition Members are aware, the Government has approved an increase in funding for international cultural relations. An initial increase became effective during the last financial year, and the increase will be sustained during the next three financial years. The program budget for this sector is expected to double.

The decision has already caused an increase in the number of bursaries under the Canadian Government's bursary program for academics at the master's, doctorate and post-doctorate level, from the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, The Netherlands, Japan, Mexico and Brazil. The program also provides bursaries for students from 15 other countries. In addition, it seems the Department of External Affairs has started discussions with several other countries in Asia and Latin America with a view to expanding the scope of the program.

The program is based strictly on reciprocity. In other words, for every bursary offered by Canada to another country, we expect that country to reciprocate with a bursary for one of our own promising students. Furthermore, the program is structured in a way to ensure that the beneficiary has a specific reason for studying in Canada rather than the United States or another country. The reason could be that the student's study program focuses on Canada, its history, literature, and so forth, or on an area in which Canada has special expertise or has an international reputation, such as telecommunications technology or computer science. Recently, we have seen what a company like Cascades Paper has been able to accomplish at the international level.

These rules help to ensure that the foreign student is able to receive in Canada the best of what we have to offer. And of course, Mr. Speaker, anyone going through the riding of Chambly will get the best of what we have to offer here in Canada. In every case, especially in the case of countries like Mexico, Brazil or Egypt, students can acquire the kind of expertise and knowledge they can put to good use in pursuing the development of their own country. During his or her stay in one of our universities, the student cannot help but acquire a better appreciation and understanding of Canada. Similarly, Canadian students who get reciprocal bursaries come back home with a more mature understanding of the world, and certainly a better judgment and also a better knowledge of the country where they studied. Their expertise can only be to the advantage of Canada. In short, this program which is being expanded to include more bursaries and more countries, contributes very directly to two stated objectives: encourage development and promote international understanding.

Another important program in External Affairs contributes directly to the stated objectives and provides enormous advantages for Canada. This program helps Canadian studies abroad, that is to say that it encourages foreign institutions and professors to increase education, research and publications about Canada. Hon. Members might recall that in the field of research and education, the Ministerial Task Force on Program Review had indicated that, in order to demonstrate the increased interest of Canada for other nations and to reinforce our relations with them, it would seem appropriate to broaden the scope of these programs. In fact, the Government's decision to increase the education budget of international relations programs will permit this. I understand, for example, that programs designed to help Canadian studies will be initiated this year in other countries in Asia and Latin America. These efforts will complement those already undertaken in Japan, the United States and Western Europe. In fact, there are now 13 foreign associations of Canadian studies, representing 20 countries. While, barely 10 years ago, some 20,000 students throughout the world were taking courses on Canada, Mr. Speaker, it is felt today that, in the United States alone, over 20,000 students are taking courses every year on what is taking place in Canada.

The fact that foreign universities are offering programs on Canadian studies and other subjects concerning relations and common interests between Canada and their own country contributes very directly to the promotion of improved international understanding.

Some could question the so-called economic advantages of such programs for Canada. It is significant that according to an analysis of Canadian study expenses in the United States, for every dollar which the Canadian Government grants to the American community for Canadian studies, the latter spends $3 in Canada. This means a ratio of $1 for $3 invested in Canada to reinforce Canadian studies at home. The nature of these expenses is particularly noteworthy, considering that a large percentage of these are made for magazines, specialized publications and Canadian literary or university books. In other words, thanks to these ventures, we are creating a market for our own cultural and university production, thereby reinforcing the position of our cultural industries.

In view of that, it would seem that the goals set forth by the opposition Member and the potential benefits for Canada can be achieved by measures such as the promotion of Canadian studies abroad, rather than an increase in the number of foreign students in Canada. In other words, bringing Canada to the student may be just as efficient if not more efficient than bringing the student over to study in Canada.

At any rate, it is my conviction, Mr. Speaker, that those comments prove the Government not only realized the value of university exchanges but implemented realistic, sensible and extremely efficient programs to support those exchanges.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like once more to emphasize the importance of those exchanges to give our graduates new horizons, new opportunities in order that they become better ambassadors for this country, and at the same time that Canada may better know what is going on elsewhere, in other countries, in order to improve our already excellent external relations with the majority of countries.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) reads:

> That, in the opinion of this House, in order to foster the development of other countries and to promote international understanding and in order to allow Canadian society to benefit to a greater extent academically, culturally, politically and financially, the government should consider the advisability of developing policies and implementing programs which provide greater access by international students to Canadian post-secondary institutions.

• (1740)

That motion is extremely reasonable in light of the studies which have been conducted by the Standing Committee on External Affairs. It certainly fits into the experiences we have had as we researched this matter across the country.

Having served as the Liberal critic for the Secretary of State for two years and as Chairman of the National Liberal Task Force with my colleague, the Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey), I have devoted considerable time and study to our post-secondary educational system in Canada.

In the course of this examination we received submissions from 160 individuals and organizations. We listened to people from all across Canada, including students, professors, university and college administrators, parents and alumni. People from one end of the country to the other have a concern about the condition of the post-secondary educational system but, interestingly enough, despite their preoccupation with that area they also showed great concern to bring to our attention the subject of international students.

Whether we listen to presidents of universities like Dr. Bill Saywell of Simon Fraser at one end of the country, or Dr. Andrew MacKay from Dalhousie at the other end of the country, or Dr. Ron Ianni, President of Windsor University, and to presidents all across the country, they have all expressed a deep concern about the problems facing international students in our country.

Of course, this involves the fact that there are certain fees which must be paid by foreign students which are greater than those fees paid by Canadians. It may be an initial thought that this is only fair, since they are coming from a foreign country and taking advantage of our universities. However, when we consider the question in more detail we find that those university students abroad enrich our country, not only by their presence or culture, but economically.

Various studies have been made on this matter, but I think that a summary which was made by the Vancouver Board of Trade, in a study into this entire matter, is extremely revealing. It brings to our attention the fact that international students bring us riches financially and economically as well as in many other ways.

The Board of Trade says that it is estimated that there were 53,500 foreign students in Canada during 1985-86. According to these statistics, it is projected that their presence will contribute over $500 million to the Canadian economy, with roughly $400 million of this amount originating outside Canada. Therefore, it is clear that the education in Canada of students from other countries is a significant, "invisible export", contributing in the order of $400 million to Canada's balance of payments. In other words, international students in our country are a kind of industry, an industry that brings to us economic reward and gain. It is not as if we are being kind and generous by bringing them here. In fact, it is more than a two-way street. We are in fact the winners. For this reason one has to wonder about some of the comments which have been made by some of those who spoke in the debate before me and who boasted about the tremendous job that is being done when we consider the following from the Canadian Bureau for International Education which notes:

> —that while a great number of Canadians have come to recognize the importance of international education, nobody seems willing or able to contribute financially. Although all levels of government have now joined education, business, and cultural groups with verbal support of international education, little is being done in concrete terms. The number of international students in Canada has decreased by 43 per cent in four years. Opportunities for Canadians to participate in study and exchanges abroad are diminishing.

We may hear glowing reports with respect to some of the steps we are taking, and I am pleased to say that whatever is being done is certainly good and a contribution. However, the strange thing is that the policies which we are pursuing are not enlightened ones. They are not even self-serving. They are destructive. We are literally watching an industry diminish. That is to say we are watching this educational industry diminish. From a purely pragmatic point of view I suggest that the Government urgently needs to re-examine this matter with great energy.

The Canadian Bureau for International Education states that a national strategy is lacking. I hope members of the Government will take note of its assessment which states:

> A national strategy is lacking. A host of impediments continue to deter prospective students from coming to Canada. There is no systematic approach for providing foreign nationals with information on study in Canada or for providing Canadians with information on study and exchanges abroad.

I am quoting from a brief presented by the Canadian Bureau for International Education to the Standing Committee on Secretary of State. This is the business of the Bureau and it has made recommendations to the Government. I am pleased to observe that the Standing Committee on Secretary of State has taken note of these concerns and is addressing itself vigorously to a concern about the way in which we can assist in developing nations the whole question of human resources and the development of those resources in those countries. Surely one of the most important ways in which Canada can contribute is to help with the educational concerns of these people in these countries. That may mean bringing students to Canada. It may mean bringing them not merely to universities but also to technical schools and community colleges, any institution of education in Canada, be it private or public. It also means that Canadians must be entrepreneurs in a way and go forward into those countries in order to bring educational facilities and opportunities to them so that they may develop themselves more fully. Whichever way it is there is an urgent need for us to address ourselves to this subject.

I commend the Hon. Member who brought forward this motion. I commend those from the government benches who agree with it. I only regret that the motion will probably not come to a vote unless the debate comes to a close before six o'clock.

I wish to add that the gain is not only economic in terms of strengthening the foreign student presence in Canada, but that it is cultural, academic and political as well. Many of us realize that the United Kingdom had an enlightened policy in this respect in terms of welcoming to its shores people from many Commonwealth countries. When they went to Britain they were able to contribute to it their culture. They returned to their countries of origin with an understanding of the British parliamentary system. When those nations ceased to be colonies, they established from these experiences in Britain a great deal of wealth which they had brought with them. I think that in the future Canada would be well represented with political friends if we were able to see those people go from Canada and henceforth to other countries.

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak to the motion put forward by my hon. friend whose interest in education is well known in Canada and certainly well known in this House. He and I have talked many times about my own university's very large program with respect to an exchange of students and faculty between the University of Guelph and the University of Ghana. Today, I would like to focus my remarks on the domestic implications of having foreign students study here in Canada.

There are three reasons why we should extend even further than we already have the promotion of foreign students. They are international understanding, which is obvious; research, which is perhaps not as obvious; and direct economic benefits, which have been mentioned earlier today. The foreign students who come to Canada give us a window on the world, something which all good and great nations need. If one considers what they have done for us one will see that they have helped us break down the "them and us" mentality which grows so easily in any country, and certainly in a country such as Canada which is relatively new. They help us to appreciate how much we have in common with other countries of the world, not simply what the differences are.

In terms of research it is not commonly understood that much of the research in our universities is now done by foreign students. Foreign countries send their very best to us. This is certainly true with respect to the Third World. We make effective use of these students by having them perform research which, on the whole, is of benefit to Canada. They perform research at a level of intellectual achievement which is a stimulus and an inspiration to Canadian students. I have watched this in operation many times over the years.

I was pleased to hear the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) talk about international education since the Canadian Bureau for International Education has been following this debate for many years. It has certainly been following it for well over 15 years. I was President of the organization some 15 years ago at which time we were debating this subject. At that time we were pushing the same concepts as are being pushed today. There has been some progress over that period of time. I believe it is the Canadian Bureau for International Education which reckons that the net benefit to Canada in terms of students returning to their country of origin and ordering our goods and so on is worth well over $300 million per year. I think the Hon. Member mentioned the figure of $400 million, which I believe is an estimate of the Vancouver Board of Trade. However, the Canadian Bureau for International Education mentioned $300 million as a basic figure. I have no doubt at all that that is an accurate figure.

I think we need to have this infusion of talent in our country, not only at the university level or the college level, but at all levels of our educational system, whether it be the formal educational system or the rather informal educational system which occurs in industry throughout all parts of the country. I hope that as has been expressed—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but the hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1) this order is dropped from the Order Paper.

It being six o'clock I do now leave the Chair until eight o'clock, at which time the House will proceed to the question of corporate takeover of Dome Petroleum by Amoco Corporation.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 29

[English]

PETROLEUM INDUSTRY

PROPOSED TAKEOVER OF DOME PETROLEUM CORPORATION BY AMOCO CANADA

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Leave has been granted to the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) to move the adjournment of the House pursuant to Standing Order 29 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the proposed corporate takeover of Dome Petroleum Corporation by Amoco Canada.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa) moved:

That this House do now adjourn.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I want to say, at the outset, that the New Democratic Party believes that action is required by the Government of Canada, and required soon, to deal with the serious situation that Dome Petroleum Corporation is now in.

S. O. 29

Problems of investment in the important energy sector are at stake; about 4,000 jobs are at stake; the energy future of our country, given the size of this corporation, it is not too great to say, is also at stake. But also, in the view of the New Democratic Party, Mr. Speaker, these are Canadian problems that require a Canadian solution.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, in this important debate, I want, at the outset, to say, on behalf of my colleagues here in the House of Commons, and I am sure on behalf of a very large number of Canadians from coast to coast, why we think that action is needed, and needed promptly, by the Government.

Dome Petroleum Corporation, as everyone knows, has been in terrible condition. It is more than $6 billion in debt. At stake are some 4,000 jobs directly, and many more indirectly. Many important projects in western Canada have been put on hold because of the precarious situation that Dome Petroleum Corporation is in. In short, whether we are talking about jobs or investment for our energy needs in the future, something has to be done, and done quickly, about the current circumstances of Dome Petroleum Corporation.

But that is not to say that the Government should simply stand back and take the first buyer or welcome action from any part of the globe, wherever it may come. I want, therefore, to immediately turn away from the question as to why some action is needed, and needed in the near future, to our proposed direction of action, namely, the necessity of keeping this very large energy company in Canadian hands.

Something in the order of 48 per cent of the shares of Dome Petroleum Corporation are already held by Canadians. It may be that if one counts the shares individually, something more than a majority is held outside of Canada. But, as everyone knows, what is crucial in this debate is where the controlling shares lie, where that crucial body of shares that really determine decisions lies, and it lies firmly in Canadian hands.

As everyone knows, this company has its headquarters in Calgary. Its management is Canadian, and virtually all of its assets, of course, are Canadian. It is, in short, a large important Canadian corporation that is currently in serious difficulty.

It is worth informing Canadians outside of western Canada as to the actual scope of Dome Petroleum Corporation. It is the third largest oil and gas producer in our country, and is the second largest in terms of gas reserves. It has what are probably the richest and most extensive exploration prospects of any energy company in western Canada right now in terms of its 52 million acres in western Canada. It has unequalled expertise in terms of Arctic exploration, expertise that has not been matched by any other company from any other part of the world—something that is very important, I think, in terms of the energy sector in this country.

Dome Petroleum Corporation, like other energy companies, has gone through a difficult period in terms of world market prices. We are now moving, as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) knows very well, and have been for many months now, to an upward trend in terms of energy prices, something which is a positive prospect for companies in the energy sector and for the men and women who work for those companies, as well as for the regions of Canada dependent upon the revenues derived from our energy resources. There is some upswing under way in that sector. It is certainly anticipated, in terms of our needs as a nation, that we will become a net importer of oil in the early 1990s. That kind of consideration, when we are having a debate in 1987, ought to be a very serious one for a government which would like to be looking beyond the next election, and ought to be looking into the next decade and beyond in terms of our energy requirements as a nation.

I repeat that it is anticipated by most people who have expertise in this field that within five years or so we will become a net importer of oil.

Given all the circumstances about the changing environment, if I can put it that way, for oil and gas production in global terms, as well as in domestic terms and in terms of our needs as a nation in the next decade, it is for us the height of folly for a Government of Canada to allow the Dome Corporation at this point in history to fall into foreign hands.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The simple truth is that multinational firms cannot be assumed to operate in our national interest. This is not because multinational corporations are inherently evil. It is, in terms of their modus operandi, simply not on their agenda to make decisions which are in the national interests of particular countries in which they operate. general when multinational corporations, in terms of the point I want to make—and I will have something to say about Amoco in particular in a few minutes—make decisions about energy investment in Canada, they think of their investments in the Middle East, and in a number of other parts of the world which I could mention. Their priorities are well understood. Their priorities are not to the people of Canada, not to the people of Alberta, not to the people of Saskatchewan. Their priorities are to their shareholders. When their priorities in terms of their global interest happen to coincide with the interests of Canada, that is fine. Given the history of the country since the Second World War, it is more than naive—in fact it is the height of stupidity—for a Government of Canada to define its energy interests as a nation to coincide with the energy interests of a multinational oil corporation.

On the question of nationality in this sector, national ownership can make a difference. The Minister should consider, for example, the figures for 1986. When we turn to the most recently available figures, certainly to those of us on this side of the House, in terms of the performance of multinational firms in this sector compared with Canadian firms, what do we find? We find the following.

Canadian companies with 48 per cent of the upstream revenue made more than 58 per cent of the capital expenditures in this sector. Put differently, foreign controlled companies with 52 per cent of the revenues made only 42 per cent of the investment. It is very clear that, quite apart from Petro-Canada or a public sector firm, even if we are comparing Canadian firms in this sector with multinational firms in this sector, Canadian firms have a better record in terms of Canadian interest. The Government of Canada should be recognizing that and taking steps to ensure that this company remains in Canadian hands.

Another reason for ensuring that this very large corporation remains Canadian is that Canadian taxpayers have already invested billions of dollars in Dome Petroleum. With the experience of the last Government, the Liberal Government, and the program of PIP grants, of which this Party did not approve, Dome Petroleum got more than $1 billion from the taxpayers of Canada. Since then, and as a result of a ruling by the present Government, it has been forgiven another $1 billion in a special tax ruling. As well, through a variety of other direct and indirect tax benefits, there have been literally millions of dollars in additional cash benefits provided to Dome Petroleum by the taxpayers of Canada.

Let us consider the net result of this darling about which most Canadian taxpayers did not know anything for the past decade. If we consider the net financial effect, we should really be saying that those assets which are technically now Dome's should be shown to be the assets of Canadian taxpayers; that is the reality. Its reserves should be seen not to be the private reserves of Dome shareholders but the reserves of the people of Canada. That is the way we should properly see this. In our view these reserves should not be turned over to some foreign multinational firm.

Now I want to shift to the present circumstance as I understand it in terms of proposals which have been made to take over Dome, to say something about those proposals, and to say something about the Government's response to the situation. The whole public knows that the Amoco Corporation and TransCanada PipeLines were involved in competing bids. Almost the whole country knows that Imperial Oil was the third company involved right up to the last minute. Although I understand that Imperial might still be interested—and I am not sure of that—we certainly know that the two companies which remain actively interested in acquiring the assets of Dome Petroleum are the Amoco Corporation, a U.S. based multinational, and TransCanada PipeLines in Canada.

Amoco and Dome between them claim that the Amoco bid is better. In applying a number of criteria it may turn out on a purely cash basis, short-run basis, to be the better bid. I am not in a position to know that for sure, nor I suspect are most Members of Cabinet including, I regret to say, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), who incredibly seem to have taken a hands-off attitude, to say that this is a private sector decision to be made about a private sector problem.

The most important executive officers of Dome have recommended the Amoco takeover because they believe it is in the interests of their shareholders. I understand very well that that is their immediate and primary responsibility. However, I ask again, ought we in Parliament, the elected body which made so many millions of dollars available to Dome Petroleum, to assume that because Dome's chief executive officers believe the Amoco deal is the best one for their shareholders it is also the best deal for the people of Canada? We in this Party do not believe that the two are synonymous. It may be that what is in the best interests of the stockholders is not in the best interests of the people of Canada.

If a broader interest in terms of our energy needs should lead the Government of Canada, which was considering everyone including shareholders' claims, to conclude that the TransCanada bid was a better one, surely we ought to know that. Surely a Government concerned about energy needs in western Canada, jobs in western Canada, and our long-range needs in the country ought to be looking at both deals with a great deal of care.

There is one particular variant on this. I have, as have the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner), the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse), obviously, and I think too, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), had discussions with the officers of the Dome Corporation and with TransCanada. I have had information as a lay person in this field which has certainly caused me to ask some further questions.

TransCanada claims, for example, that if you look at the net effects of its proposal on the taxpayer of Canada and compare it with the net effects of the Amoco proposal you will see that there is no difference in tax to the Canadian taxpayer. Because one will be operating in part through American tax law, while the other would not, and because of certain other different complexities of which I do not know the precise nature, according to TransCanada spokespersons the final conclusion—this from those who do know the technical nature of the matter—is that TransCanada's offer in terms of its effect on the taxpayer of Canada, I repeat, is equal to the Amoco proposal.

Again I ask the question and I will provide the answer. If we in Parliament are to be given the information that the private Canadian company is making a package of proposals that, when comparing its turn-out in term of its effects on the Canadian taxpayer, is just as good, or just as bad, however we want to phrase it, as the proposal coming from Amoco, and a decision is to be made on that criteria alone, then surely the Government of Canada should not stand back but should say it prefers the Canadian company. That ought to be the answer. If it is not the answer, then the Minister of Energy has an obligation to tell us what his answer to that particular question would be.

Some of us have also been in touch with our fellow Canadians in Alberta, principally—not just in Alberta but elsewhere, in the north too—who are concerned about jobs. Again, I am going on the public record, and in part on private conversation. A key spokesperson for the Amoco Corporation said that Amoco will not guarantee the existing jobs in Dome Petroleum in its take-over. If TransCanada PipeLines—whatever else one might say about the impact of its takeover—won the bid, a lot of things would have to be considered, and when it comes to jobs, TransCanada has not only said to me privately but publicly that it would guarantee the existing jobs in Dome Petroleum. If that is the criteria, and this Party is interested in those men and women in Alberta whose jobs are dependent on this corporation and who have been in a precarious existence for many many months now, and we have to judge on the basis of these public commitments, then it seems to us that TransCanada's offer is better than Amoco's. If the Government has evidence to the contrary, then the Government has an obligation to provide that evidence to the House of Commons.

It is our view that the Government is simply irresponsible in standing back and watching this whole drama unfold, a drama that has a profound effect on the nation as a whole, and on a particular part of our nation. The Government in our view should be involved in the discussion. It should be actively involved with a number of departments in a number of ministries in the Government involved in the discussions with Amoco officials and with TransCanada officials and, I add importantly here, Petro-Canada.

This Parliament in the last decade created Petro-Canada, like most other petroleum companies around the world, on the perfectly straightforward national interest policy basis that it makes sense to have a large—not simply national but large—public role in the energy sector. I simply cannot understand why in 1987, when we have a large company like Petro-Canada in the public sector, the Government of Canada has not given a mandate to Petro-Canada saying, get in there, have a look at the situation at Dome, report back to us and tell us, should there be a joint venture solution, should there be a public solution—give us your expertise. It is the height of irresponsibility for the Minister of Energy to tell the President of Petro-Canada or his leading officers to stay away from this situation. This is exactly the kind of situation that Petro-Canada was created to be involved in. We believe that the Government should now involve itself as quickly as possible through the active participation of Petro-Canada.

I want now to say something very specifically about Amoco, and why we have some concerns. The first point about that particular bid is, of course, that Amoco is owned 100 per cent outside our country. There is no Canadian president, no Canadian board, and no Canadian shareholders, unlike a number of the other multinational corporations that have made an effort to Canadianize a good part of their operations with beneficial results, at least in part, and I will come to that in just a minute.

The next point is that Amoco has shown no particular interest in Canada as a nation. Its performance record when you compare it with other multinational corporations in this sector is simply lamentable. I have had a look at the performance of Amoco in comparison with Imperial, Shell, Gulf and Texaco for the past two years. I want to share some of this information with the House tonight.

If you look at the year 1985, in dividends paid out by these companies, what do you find? You find that Imperial paid out some $268 million in dividends, Shell paid out $83 million, Gulf paid out $122 million, Texaco paid out $151 million and Amoco paid out $200 million.

Some Hon. Members: Good.

Mr. Broadbent: They are saying good.

Mr. Speaker: I very much regret interrupting the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) but we are bound by the rules here. The Hon. Member is reaching the end of his speech; in fact, he may be overtime. Under the circumstances it is often the disposition of the House to give the Hon. Member a few more minutes. I can ask Hon. Members if they would agree to do that.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I express my gratitude to Members of the House for that decision.

Those are figures for 1985. I want to move to what the same corporations have done in dividend payments for 1986. Imperial Oil paid out $262 million, Shell paid out $82 million, Gulf paid out $159 million, Texaco paid out $145 million and Amoco $686 million. I want also to put on the record for each of these two years what the five companies have done in capital investment for the development of our energy resources in the future. Then I want to compare those figures, one with the other—the capital investment record with the dividend pay-out record. I think some rather disturbing information will emerge from a comparison of the Amoco Corporation with the other four major multinational companies working in our country.

In 1985 Imperial Oil spent $885 million in capital and exploration expenditures, Shell spent $367 million, Gulf spent $378 million, Texaco spent $267 million and Amoco, which is down at the bottom of the list, spent $190 million.

• (2030)

For the past year, 1986, what was the record of investment in Canada in the development of our future energy resources? Imperial invested $457 million, Shell invested $361 million, Gulf invested $262 million, Texaco invested $258 million, and Amoco is once again at the bottom of the list with an investment of only $107 million.

On the basis of those two sets of figures for 1985 and 1986 I would like to compare the dividends paid out to shareholders as a percentage of the capital and exploration expenditures of these five large companies. In 1985, for Imperial it was 30 per cent, for Shell it was 23 per cent, for Gulf it was 32 per cent, for Texaco it was 56 per cent and for Amoco it was 105 per cent.

In more straightforward terms, that means for every dollar Amoco invested in 1985, it took $1.05 out of Canada. There was a net outflow in 1985, and the situation was much worse in 1986. In 1986, the percentages for Imperial were 57 per cent, for Shell 23 per cent, for Gulf 61 per cent, for Texaco 56 per cent and for Amoco 641 per cent. Again, to put it in straightforward terms, that means that for every dollar it invested in Canada in 1986, it took $6.41 out.

It is that kind of situation that has caused my colleagues and I, along with many other Canadians, to be concerned, not simply about the continuing problem of foreign ownership in this sector but about the performance of this particular corporation.

I would like now to ask some questions. The Minister has slipped out of the House, momentarily, I am sure, as he has been here for the debate. When he returns, I hope he will deal with these questions.

Given this extraordinary situation, the potentially powerful situation in which Dome Petroleum will be if it remains in Canadian hands and the key role that it can play, the troublesome performance of foreign-owned firms in this sector in general and the more than troublesome performance of Amoco, how do we explain what can only be described as the lamentable behaviour of the federal Government in these circumstances? I believe that there are two answers to this. One is the market bias of this Government, the view, bluntly stated, that what is good for the shareholders in any decision must necessarily be good for Canada. We believe that in the private sector, one must take into account the shareholders' needs. However, it is a major mistake for any political Party to equate the good of the nation with the good of the shareholder, and it is time the Conservative Government understood that.

Second, and I think this is nearer to the mark, and I hope the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources deals with this, I think that beyond the market ideology that characterizes so many of the Government's decisions, the Government has now involved Canada in this terrible mess or has failed to get us out of it because of the free trade talks. The whole country knew during the last election campaign that the Reagan administration wanted to get rid of FIRA. The Americans thought that we had too much national control over investment patterns in Canada and they objected to FIRA. The Conservatives promised to change that, and they did. They put in its place Investment Canada.

Investment Canada has approved virtually every significant takeover bid, but again, as all of us who have been following the free trade talks know, the Americans have objected to Investment Canada and have made it very clear that there will be no agreement with the United States in the free trade talks that are so high on the agenda of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) unless there is virtually a total free flow of investment patterns across the 49th parallel.

In more direct terms, that means that they want complete access to any kind of takeover in any part of the Canadian economy in which they wish to invest. If the Government accepts this continental market mentality it may please its own back-benchers, but it will regret the day when the people of Canada understand that that will finally mean the sellout of Canada, and we will not stand back and watch the Government get away with it.

To illustrate the point that this is not simply a general contention, in tonight's news, Mr. Bruce Smart, the United States Under-Secretary for Trade, was quoted as saying that Investment Canada, in the view of the United States, had better not turn down the Amoco takeover bid. He is saying that Investment Canada, an agent created by the Parliament of Canada, had better not act in the Canadian interest. We say that neither the Government of the United States nor any of its trade officials have any right to tell us what sectors we want to control in the Canadian interest. The democratically elected group of men and women is the only group that can make that decision and that is the Parliament of Canada, not the United States Congress or any of its representatives.

I regret to say that I believe the Government has not involved Petro-Canada—

Mr. Kindy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think the allotted time for a speaker is usually 20 minutes and the Hon. Member has now been speaking for about 30 minutes.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Calgary East (Mr. Kindy) has raised an objection to the amount of time the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) is taking. The Hon. Member is of course procedurally correct. However, Hon. Members will know that the Chair intervened a few minutes ago and indicated to the Hon. Member for Oshawa that on the narrow lines of debate he was over his time but that there was a convention in this place that under these circumstances there is a certain amount of flexibility. The Chair suggested that that would be appropriate under the circumstances and the House indicated that that was so.

I am sure the Hon. Member would want to go along with the usual courtesies and allow the Leader of the New Democratic Party to finish his remarks, keeping in mind, of course, that under the reformed rules, in the spirit of debates of this kind, there is a certain amount of latitude. If it was the disposition of the House, the Chair would prefer to proceed that way at the present moment, and I am sure the Hon. Member for Oshawa would not abuse the extension that might be granted by the Hon. Member for Calgary East.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, as is virtually invariably the case, you have made the appropriate comments and I will wind up my comments very speedily.

The Government of Canada has an obligation to act, but it has not done so because of its deep entrenchment in the free trade talks. This entrenchment is leading to real dangers, illustrated not only by the particulars of this decision, but by the fact that it will lead to even more, or equally horrendous problems for Canada in all other sectors, if the Government continues in this direction.

I would like to conclude by saying that TransCanada PipeLines has expressed a continuing interest in having its bid reconsidered by Dome. The president of PetroCan has made it clear that if the Government authorized him he would be very interested in pursuing the Dome matter, to look at it with care to see if it would be in the interest of PetroCan to get involved. He is waiting for that word. I say to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who is here tonight, think about what is going on, think about the energy needs of Canada, think about the job needs of western Canada, get PetroCan involved, look at the TransCanada offer and get a Canadian solution for a Canadian problem.

• (2040)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to let the applause meter run out on that performance.

This debate is not so much about the bid by Amoco to take over Dome Petroleum as it is about the failure of the Canadian Government to find a Canadian solution to the future of Dome Petroleum.

[Translation]

I want to say to the Minister who is honouring us with his presence this evening—he is pretty much alone, but at least he is here—that the subject before the House this evening is not just the takeover of Dome Petroleum. It is his failure and that of his colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and of the Canadian Government, to ensure that we as Canadians can look forward to a Canadian solution to the problem.

[English]

The Government of Canada has known about this situation for months. Despite efforts by the Minister of Finance to plead innocence and say that a tax ruling was a question for his colleague, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay), despite the elegant dancing——or perhaps a more apt French word, "patinage", by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse).

[Translation]

[English]

—it is clear that the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources were kept abreast of the situation on a daily basis by all the potential bidders. They were kept abreast of the situation by Amoco, Imperial Oil, TransCanada PipeLines, and others who, at one stage or another, were involved in finding a process for taking over Dome. The Government cannot pretend it did not know.

We are faced with one of the largest, if not the largest, takeovers in Canadian history. It is obvious to those of us who sit in this House that our Government has done absolutely nothing about it. We want to say at the outset that had we had the responsibility of power we would not have ceased trying to obtain a Canadian solution to this problem.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I recall that shortly after the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) assumed the mantle of office he went down to New York to meet the American investment banking community at the Economic Club. He put on the black tie and said—

Some Hon. Members: Gucci shoes!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I will not be as detailed as some of my colleagues would like me to be. He said: "Hi, guys, my name is Brian Mulroney. I'm Prime Minister of Canada. I'm glad to be in New York this evening because I want to tell you that Canada is open for business again." When he came back to this Parliament I said "Terrific". We are open for business again? I always thought we were open for business. I want to say to the Prime Minister that we may be open for business again but we are not up for sale!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Once again we see under this lackadaisical and passive Government that Canada is open to the highest bidder, and here again a very crucial industry—our oil and gas industry. I ask the Minister how many more auctions of Canadian industry must we endure before the Government of Canada comes to its senses and reacts in a positive and concrete manner? How much longer are we going to be forced to watch what happens in Chicago, New York or Washington and see our Government do nothing?

It appears that under current American tax law Amoco can claim virtually a complete write-off of this entire investment. During the free trade negotiations, and the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) has made mention of this and I am going to have something to say about it as well, the Americans have said they love a level playing field. When they talk about that, and I brought this up on the issue of our sell-off of the Canadian lumber industry to the Americans through the export tax, they are talking about a field with their lines, their rules, their referee, their ball and their goal posts, and when we start to do well on that field they change the rules and move the posts. Amoco has more than a level playing field. They can compete better than any Canadian company because under current American tax law this takeover will be a complete write-off for Amoco against its taxes. The offer is not a level playing field transaction.

I have to ask the Minister, and I can hardly wait until he gets on his feet, why he has been so mute, so silent? Why has the Minister of Finance been so evasive? Why has he tried to rely on a narrow and purely technical interpretation which says it is the responsibility of his colleague, the Minister of National Revenue? Is there yet another quiet little deal? Is the real purpose of the Government's passivity to ensure that this deal does not interfere with the continuing negotiations on free trade with the U.S.?

Just a minute ago my friend the Hon. Member for Oshawa referred to what an Under-Secretary of State for the U.S. said this afternoon in Toronto. I will quote initially from the Canadian Press wire report, which is all we have before us. It says: "The Amoco Corporation purchase offer for Dome Petroleum Ltd. is an example of free trade investment which should be allowed to proceed, says Bruce Smart, a top official in the U.S. Commerce Department." He said: "I am encouraged by the fact that the Canadian Government does not appear to be objecting to it at the moment." He also had this to say in response to questions: "I would say if it is allowed to go through it would be an encouraging sign of an understanding that open investment is a necessary companion to free trade. We are convinced that unless capital flows and investments are free between the two countries you can't have a true free trade agreement. A free trade agreement that doesn't include investment will not be acceptable to the United States". There we have it. A threat without even the subtlety of being veiled.

I do not believe the Government of this country can afford to allow itself to continually be subjected to this kind of menacing remark. What we have been suggesting in the strongest terms to the House of Commons and the country is true. The Government is afraid to stand up to the American Government because it does not want anything to interfere with the free trade negotiations. FIRA was not enough and the Government threw it away. The National Energy Program was not enough and it was thrown away.

Mr. Shields: You are right on that one!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The book publishing industry, the drug industry and the lumber industry were not enough and now we see Canadian ownership of the oil and gas industry sacrificed once again so the negotiations are not derailed. I do not think we could have a better or more current demonstration of that than what we heard in Toronto this afternoon from Mr. Smart.

The Government gave us a lot of rhetoric about Canadianization, particularly of the oil and gas industry. I want to recite the election commitments of the Progressive Conservative Party. If ever a document was not worth the paper it is written on, it is the 338 promises of the Conservative Party of Canada.

• (2050)

Here is a dandy. The Conservative Party said: "We believe that the energy sector is an engine of growth for the entire Canadian economy rather than a source of revenue for the federal Government. A stable national energy policy will help achieve energy self-sufficiency". The Conservative Party favoured increased Canadianization of the energy industry, keeping prices low and so on. I will give that to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in due course.

We have seen a change of heart. That commitment was reaffirmed by the former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources before this House on March 29, 1985, but there was then a change of the rules, a relaxation of that commitment. The current Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said, "We are, however, prepared to consider the acquisition by foreign concerns of a Canadian controlled firm which is in clear financial difficulty. In this way we seek a balance between welcoming new investment and protecting our Canadianization gains". That is a significant change in attitude which he has not yet sufficiently explained to Parliament and the people of Canada.

When it comes down to the crunch, the Government has not done a single thing. Knowing how this transaction has proceeded and despite the fact that the Minister has been kept involved on a daily basis by all the participants, including his colleague the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and surely the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), the Government has not done a single thing to help fashion or facilitate a Canadian solution.

We recognize, as has the Member for Oshawa, that the health of Dome Petroleum is vital to our Canadian economy. We begin with the 3,800 jobs in Calgary and the thousands of other related jobs which depend upon the health of Dome Petroleum. Thousands of farm-out deals within the independent oil and gas producers throughout the western sedimentary basin depend on the health of Dome, because if Dome were to go under they would be called upon in each one of these farm-out arrangements to make up the difference.

We understand what this means in terms of the western economy. We have not only a commodity crises in western Canada involving oil and gas, grain, potash, and half the mines in western Canada, we have a crisis of monumental proportion and it does us no good to hear the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister remind us that the statistics are good. They do not reflect the reality of what is happening in western Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The issue is our nation's self-sufficiency in hydrocarbons and the health of our oil and gas industry. Because of the immense debt hanging over Dome Petroleum like an avalanche the integrity of the Canadian banking system is in question. Our exchange rate is at risk. As I said in Calgary last Wednesday, although there is a special urgency for Alberta, we recognize fully that this is not only an Alberta problem but a Canadian problem, and we intend to deal with it here in Parliament as a Canadian problem.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, in Western Canada we have a crisis of monumental proportions, a crisis that has been neglected by the present Government. Friday, and again today, we talked about the crisis situation with respect to grain. We talked about the crisis in the potash industry. We talked about the crisis in our oil and gas sectors. We talked about the crisis in the mining industry. All these areas are being neglected by the Canadian Government, which wants to ensure Canada's prosperity by concentrating on southwestern Ontario and part of the City of Montreal, while neglecting the entire east end of Montreal, despite eloquent representations by the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart). So what we have here is a very serious and a very acute Canadian problem.

[English]

I had the opportunity to meet with Howard Macdonald and senior officials of Dome Petroleum in Calgary last week. It is obvious that time is running out. It is obvious that that debt hanging over the company like an avalanche is ready to be secured. The waivers that the company was granted by its major creditors expire at the end of June. There is not much time left. If a solution is not found, those creditors will be entitled to proceed against their individual securities. The Canadian Government has known these facts, has watched this happen, and has not been astute or careful enough on behalf of Canadians to facilitate a Canadian solution to the problem.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We would like to ask a question of the Minister and we hope he will respond with the frankness which we expect of someone in his position. In his opinion, and in that of the Government of Canada, is the Amoco bid binding? Is there still room for other bids? What would the effect of other bids be on Dome Petroleum and on the perspective of the oil and gas industry? I can tell him that other bidders are still available. I ask him whether other bids are still welcome.

This afternoon at the annual meeting of TransCanada, Gerry Maier said that as far as he is concerned TransCanada is still an available bidder. I would hope that there are other Canadian-owned or Canadian-controlled enterprises, in consortium or alone, which would be available to proceed. The Government is refusing to indicate whether other bids are still welcome. Will the Government facilitate a reopening of the situation to assure a Canadian solution? I can tell him that in this quarter of the House we want and will insist upon a Canadian solution, with all the tools available to the Canadian Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): This is not only an academic question. The Government of Canada is the custodian for Canadian taxpayers of billions of dollars already invested in Dome, whether by way of the PIP grants, tax incentives, current tax losses or write-offs. Through its passive attitude the Government is neglecting the fundamental rights and interests of Canadian taxpayers to be represented. That interest is being thrown away.

Before this Government assumed power, Parliament's primary role, that of examining the expenditures of Government and approving the taxation measures of Government, was considered paramount. Because the taxpayer is involved we are demanding that this deal come before Parliament, not after it is consummated, but before the deal is concluded. Bring it before the Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources tomorrow. Our members are ready and the government Members are ready. We are demanding that any deal be brought before Parliament. We want the deal scrutinized before the appropriate committee of the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister has been very relaxed about this. His colleague, the Minister of Finance, has been very passive about it. The Minister looks very relaxed and I admire his very benign personality. From time to time I have been soothed by his engaging smile. However, it is never too late, and the people of Canada will insist that Parliament have something to say about the final conclusion of this deal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): After all, the Amoco-Dome Petroleum deal must still be approved by the creditors. It is subject to review by the courts and to approval by the shareholders and must be reviewed and approved by Investment Canada. The Minister still has the levers and the authority. I believe that he and his colleagues should consider a Canadian solution to be a priority.

• (2100)

What we are talking about is the largest potential takeover in Canadian history. We are talking about the future ownership of the oil and gas industry in Canada, and about Canadian sovereignty. We are talking about the health of the oil and gas industry in western Canada, and the economy in the western provinces.

No matter who takes over, we want to know about it. We want to know about the guarantees for Canadian jobs. We want to know what the management will be like and what will happen to Arctic drilling. We want to know what will happen to the continuation of Canadian exploration and what will happen to the Sarnia petrochemical plant.

What will happen to Encor Limited? We want to know the Minister's plans for Canadianization of Dome and what the future holds for it. We want to know how it impinges upon the Canada-U.S. trade talks and what pressure may have been placed on the Minister by the United States Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stewart: Who built Dome?

Mr. Forrestall: We want to know who built Dome.

Mr. Stewart: Who built Dome by taxation?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, this is the first reaction we have had from the Conservative benches all day.

Mr. Forrestall: Typical Liberal cynicism.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I can hear the flapping of the fins as those trained seals get up into action.

Mr. Stewart: Who built Dome by taxation? Talk about Dome Canada.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I might say that they are a lot more alive at nine o'clock in the evening than they were at eleven o'clock this morning. As happened this morning when we began the capital punishment debate, the New Democratic Party and Liberal Party outnumbered, two to one, Members on the Conservative benches. That is the way they treat Parliament and the importance of this particular issue.

We are not only looking at a passive Minister, at a Minister of benign neglect, we are looking at a lonely Minister. We are looking to keep him company until he gives us a proper answer this evening.

[Translation]

I hope that in the final instance, the Minister will address the emergency and the requirements of this debate in a courteous fashion, that he will be a lot franker and far more, not honest, but far more free in his opinions—

An Hon. Member: Open-minded.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —far more open-minded, that he will take us into his confidence, and not just the Members of this House but the Canadian people. It is not too late, even after displaying an attitude that was a little too cool, or cavalier, that is the word. I hope that in the final instance, the Minister will realize, and with him the Prime Minister and especially the Minister of Finance, that Canadians will no longer tolerate that kind of neglect. None of us want industry after industry, economic sector after economic sector, to be abandoned and sold without further ado to the United States.

[English]

That may be on the political agenda of the Government, but it is not on Parliament's agenda. I urge the Minister to come clean this evening.

On behalf of the Canadians whom we represent, we do not intend to remain silent. We will continue until we get some satisfactory answers and a satisfactory conclusion to this entire issue.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to take part in this debate on the proposed acquisition of Dome Petroleum. This transaction is the object of considerable interest among Canadians in every region of the country, and understandably so. Any transaction involving a company which in terms of gas and oil output ranks second in Canada's petroleum sector, which is the source of employment for more than 4,000 people, and whose survival is threatened by a debt exceeding $6 billion should be the object of enlightened debate and deep reflection.

Mr. Speaker, I could quote various editorials and articles which were written in recent days. Since this is an important debate and many people have expressed their views on the question, I should like to quote to the House passages from a column by Alain Dubuc published in last Saturday's La Presse. The article is entitled, and rightly so:

> The White Elephant of Black Gold. The Dome Petroleum venture has been an appalling fiasco. This spectacular failure has led the company to the brink of bankruptcy and been a telling illustration of the extent to which federal bureaucrats and politicians were misled by their energy policy.

And I add: this Government is not putting Dome up for sale: it was done, a few years ago by the former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, Marc Lalonde. I continue the quotation, Mr. Speaker:

> Thank God, the last chapter of this miserable saga is being written. And it gives rise to a lively debate because the rescue of the company will undoubtedly come after—

I say maybe, one never knows—

> —it has been taken over by a foreign company, Amoco. However we have a tendency to forget something. The main stake in this case is not the glorious recovery of the company; it is more like a rescue. This is the stake: Dome is a petroleum company which does not sell gasoline. It is a major producer of petroleum and especially gas.

And in the specific case of Dome I think that the article properly sums up the problem, which is why I am using it:

> In the specific case of Dome it is a false debate. For starters, Dome is not really a Canadian company. Fifty-two per cent of its shareholders are foreigners and, more to the point, its fate rests in the hands of its creditors.
> Half its $6.3 billion debt is owing to foreign institutions. On the other hand Dome, which posted a $2.1 billion deficit for 1986, is caught in a vicious circle: it is so hard pressed to repay its debt that it has no money left for operations which would get it out of the hole. If a rich company gains control, it will be in a position to give Dome the dynamism it is now lacking, make capital investments, speed up exploration and production works, and create jobs. Dollars rather than principles are used to drill for oil. The fact remains that most Canadians, given a choice, would much rather that it be a Canadian company—

And I said so publicly. But for the time being it seems the best offer came from Amoco.

> Besides, there is something disturbing about using public funds to help one of the richest companies in Canada.

And I am surprised to see the NDP implore the House today to help Bell Canada, the top-ranking Canadian company. To me it is a source of enlightenment to realize that, for a few hours perhaps, the NDP has turned capitalist, advocating the use of public funds to bail out Bell Canada. That is surprising.

> Especially when we know that part of the money would be pocketed by shareholders.
> The Dome shareholder

this is not a group of small investors.

> We have here a lot of speculators who are taking a gamble on the benefits of a takeover bid. They are consenting adults who are taking a calculated risk, and they should not be bailed out with public funds.
> There is of course

says the NDP

> another choice, that of giving Petro-Canada a mandate to purchase Dome. That would be even worse.

—says our reporter.

> Canadian consumers have paid billions of dollars to subsidize this Crown corporation. It has used this money mainly to purchase foreign companies at exorbitant prices.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on to quote many more articles. However, I think this one by Mr. Dubuc in Saturday's La Presse accurately summarizes the problem. Dome Petroleum's bankruptcy is a consequence of the interventionist policies of the previous Government. Dome Petroleum was put on the block by Mr. Marc Lalonde. The solution favoured by the NDP is to take public funds to help Bell Canada, our largest Canadian corporation. The NDP solution is to help Petro-Canada purchase another foreign corporation with billions of dollars of taxpayers' money.

Mr. Speaker, those are the two solutions favoured by the Opposition parties. We must reject these solutions because they do not lead anywhere unless we want to go back to where we were a few years ago, which led to the kind of results we see today, the bankruptcy of Dome Petroleum.

Mr. Speaker, that is why this debate is important. It should be the subject of public discussion, and that is why I am delighted that this House—where, I am convinced, the interests of this country will outweigh the interests of the Parties—has chosen to take this opportunity to discuss the issue.

Like all Members of this House, Mr. Speaker, the Government is fully aware of the importance of this transaction. Our desire to let the private sector be mainly responsible for finding a solution to the financial problems which for a number of years have been plaguing one of our major corporations in the oil industry, does not mean, as the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) would have others believe, we are indifferent. We have made it abundantly clear, ever since the first corporation, TransCanada Pipelines, publicized the purchase offer it had made in the course of discussions that had been going on for several months, that the transaction would in any case have to be in the interests of Canada. In fact, I publicly reaffirmed this commitment last Thursday at a press conference in Ottawa where I clearly defined the course we had to take.

Mr. Speaker, a 17th century Spanish essayist, Baltasar Gracian, said the following in his book The Honest Man—and I am sure the Leader of the Opposition has spent many a night reading it:

> Yes and no are short words to say;

—says the essayist—

> —but much thought is needed before the saying.

Mr. Malépart: Nothing to write home about.

Mr. Masse: Mr. Speaker, under a memorandum of agreement signed on April 19 of this year, the board of directors of Dome Petroleum agreed to suggest to shareholders and creditors of the corporation that they agree to a purchase offer submitted by the Canadian branch of Amoco, a U.S. corporation, for the amount of about $5.1 billion.

The agreement is the result of a number of attempts made in recent years by the management of Dome to find a private sector solution to the corporation's financial troubles. During that period, the corporation managed to sign an interim agreement with its creditors in Canada and abroad that will remain in effect until June 30 of this year. An analyst qualified this agreement as the biggest debt renegotiation for a company in the history of mankind. Several times during these delicate negotiations, the possibility of the corporation's bankruptcy was mentioned.

Despite its heavy debt, during that period Dome Petroleum managed to attract the interest of a certain number of companies, including Amoco Canada. TransCanada Pipelines and Imperial/Exxon also submitted propositions to acquire control of Dome Petroleum.

We followed the evolution of this case carefully and with great attention. Still the fact remains that this company, however important it may be in our oil and gas sector, is first and foremost a commercial concern. The state does not own Dome Petroleum. For this reason we took the position that the Canadian Government did not have to intervene at this stage of the process aimed at setting Dome Petroleum back on an even financial keel. Any decision made by the management of this oil company is dictated by commercial considerations, as it should be.

The financial woes experienced by Dome Petroleum have a considerable impact on the whole economy of Western Canada. All observers in business circles know full well, as stated by the president of Dome Petroleum, that the bankruptcy of this company has been and remains a real possibility. The consequences of such an eventuality would be very harmful not only to the Canadian petroleum sector but also to our entire economy both in Western Canada and in the other regions of the country.

It has also been suggested that Petro-Canada should play an active role with respect to the acquisition of Dome Petroleum. Under the terms of its mandate Petro-Canada must now operate on the same basis as any other commercial undertaking. However, Petro-Canada remains a Crown corporation, and considering the nature of Dome Petroleum's problem, it would have been impossible for it to make a purchase offer without bypassing the principle of seeking a solution to the problem through the private sector and without committing the Government, which might have had to pay a substantial amount disguised as a subsidy for the purpose of buying Dome Petroleum.

It is therefore clear that responsibility for decisions concerning the acquisition of Dome Petroleum rests, for the moment, in the hands of management, stockholders and creditors of the corporation. There is no reason for the Government to intervene on behalf of one buyer rather than another.

The future of Dome, its thousands of employees and hundreds of other companies which depend on its activities, rests on its ability to prosper within the domestic and international energy markets and not on massive injections of public funds. Key players in the private sector have said it can be done.

The size and importance of Dome Petroleum, whose revenues from its upstream activities account for 7.3 per cent of all revenues for the Canadian oil industry, certainly raises questions about Canadian control and about competition in the domestic market. The Government is fully aware of the potential impact of the proposed transaction on these two issues and its responsibilities with respect to them.

Our Government has clearly stated in its legislation and policies its position on foreign investment in general and foreign investment specifically in the upstream oil industry, and its principles on competition in the domestic market. Any transaction involving acquisition by a foreign company is subject to examination under the Investment Canada Act with a view to establishing whether the proposed foreign investment represents significant benefits for Canada.

The criteria for evaluating these investment projects are well known by Members of this House, particularly with respect to Canadian participation, its economic impact and our competitive position in foreign markets. Moreover, my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), and the Minister responsible for Investment Canada, assured us that all provinces in which Dome is active will be consulted during the examination by Investment Canada.

Our Government also stated in December, 1985, its policy on foreign investment in the upstream oil industry. Because it was designed to promote concurrently 50 per cent Canadian participation as well as foreign investment, which our industry greatly needs if it is to prosper, the policy, among other things, prohibits the acquisition by foreign interests of financially sound gas or oil undertakings whose net worth is over $5 million. However, it does allow the purchase of Canadian corporations that are experiencing serious problems.

There is clearly no doubt in the House that Dome, which is considered to be a Canadian controlled undertaking by Investment Canada even though it is 52 per cent owned by non-Canadian interests, is in extremely poor shape.

Any proposed purchase of Dome must also be subject to the provisions of the new competition legislation. If the Director of Investigation and Research deems it appropriate he could, where applicable pursuant to the Act, refer it to the competition tribunal. Once again, the evaluation criteria are clear and well known to Members of the House.

These provisions will be complied with. I have committed myself to that. My colleagues and I will submit any proposed transaction to a rigorous examination and will ensure that if the acquisition of Dome Petroleum is approved by its creditors and shareholders it will serve the Canadian interest.

[Translation]

At this point, however, we are not about to prejudge any eventual decision by speculating on the potential advantages or drawbacks of a transaction that has yet to be agreed upon by the parties concerned.

The Leader of the Opposition asked me earlier to table the information or to set up a committee to examine the transaction. He should know that, first of all, the transaction has yet to be concluded by Dome management, and second, that the Canadian Government has not been advised, through Investment Canada, of any proposal whatsoever in this respect. We will be so advised at the appropriate time, when the Government will make a decision, Mr. Speaker. However, I cannot pass judgment on a proposal that does not exist.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You wash your hands!

Mr. Gauthier: Pontius Pilate—

Mr. Masse: In view of the precarious financial situation at Dome Petroleum, it would be totally irresponsible in our view to try and establish policies on the basis of mere assumptions.

We know very well, Mr. Speaker, that Amoco Canada, which reached a memorandum of agreement with Dome's management, is 100 per cent under foreign control, just as the officers of that American Corporation are aware of Canadian laws and policies. When taking over Dome Petroleum, Amoco Corporation would become the most important Canadian oil company. In that capacity, it should be in our view a model Canadian corporate citizen, respecting the host country's context. I can assure this House that the Government will require satisfactory commitments to that end, as a prerequisite for approving any takeover of Dome Corporation.

It is mainly through its research and development activities, purchasing policies, participation to Canadian life, reinvestment methods, dividend policies, and also through the presence of Canadian men and women at every level of its management and decision-making that a firm proves itself to be a good corporate citizen.

From this point of view, Mr. Speaker, our initiative is coherent and transparent. The Canadian energy industry is a vital element of our development and future. It is much too important for the Government to improvise policies. We know the interest of Canadiens. It is expressed through an increase of Canadian participation since 1984. We find it also in the renewed activity witnessed in the Canadian oil industry, in Western Canada as well as offshore and in the Arctic area. It is expressed in the confidence of large international corporations in the future development of our resources. The new climate of cooperation which we have established with our provincial partners in the area of energy also supports this interest. To end the uncertainty which has affected for years a major oil corporation and prevented it from fully supporting our economic development is also in the interest of Canadien man and woman from every region of this country.

[English]

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in this debate as energy critic for the New Democratic Party and to support my Leader on his motion.

I want to thank you, Mr. Speaker, for permitting this debate tonight. It means a lot to the average, ordinary Canadian. I know that we throw around figures in the billions of dollars with respect to corporate takeovers and so on. This is a crucial debate on a crucial issue for ordinary Canadians because they are the people who have paid out of their pockets for much of the building up of corporate capital in Dome Petroleum. They are the people who pay taxes, and they paid dearly for some of the build-up of Dome Petroleum.

I believe the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) mentioned the American taxpayers and that there would be a tax break for Amoco in the United States. I thought of the ordinary Americans who are also being asked to swallow again a big subsidy to a very rich corporation. So this is a subject that does concern ordinary Canadians.

When we look around and consider in the past year the takeover of the Bank of British Columbia by Hong Kong interests, as well as the pending takeover of West Kootenay Power in the southern interior of my home province of British Columbia by a Missouri utility, and the takeover of Husky in Alberta with money from Hong Kong—

Mr. Stewart: Buy some yourself.

Mr. Waddell: —as well as the takeover of Mitel by British interests, and the pending takeover of Cadillac-Fairview in Ontario—

Mr. Stewart: What's keeping you from buying something?

Mr. Waddell: Perhaps the Hon. Member will realize that he has two ears and only one mouth, which means maybe he should listen twice as much as he speaks.

Mr. Stewart: Turn sideways and I will look through your ears.

Mr. Waddell: Perhaps the Hon. Member will listen.

An Hon. Member: As Archie Bunker would say: "Stifle it"!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I believe the debate will carry on long enough without interjections by Hon. Members. I hope Hon. Members will allow the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) the chance to speak. The Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I also refer to the takeover of de Havilland by Boeing, and now the deal concerning Amoco of Chicago taking over Dome Petroleum. There is a pattern evolving here. The pattern is, in fact, the sell-out of Canada. That is why the average Canadian should be really concerned. We are seeing the opening up of Canada not only to foreign investment but to foreign control. This goes against all the measures we have been trying to take in the country over the past decade.

There was a consensus with respect to a policy of Canadianization. There was a feeling in the country among all three Parties that energy being such an important resource, and the fact that energy security is so important, we should try to Canadianize the industry so far as that was possible. It is a long struggle to do that.

While the Minister was speaking I was looking back in the House of Commons Debates for November 13, 1979. The then Minister of Energy in the Clark Government, the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn), was speaking, and I quote his remarks from page 1255 of Hansard:

> We will take steps to ensure that Canadians have a greater and greater degree of control over particularly the energy resources of this country. I make no apology for that. I am proud of this country.

That was the consensus. It was repeated by the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), the present Minister responsible for the Post Office, when he was energy critic. It was said by the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Hon. Member for Etobicoke, when he was energy critic for the Tories. I remember them saying that in the House.

There was a reason for Canadianization, and there is still a reason for it. It is not just a woolly-headed ideological policy. There is a reason for it. We know, as the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) said, that multinational oil companies have different interests to serve. They have different masters.

• (2130)

Canadian companies, whether they be public or private, or a combination of both in respect of some particular energy development, tend to serve Canada better.

We had two energy crises in the 1970s, one in 1973 and one in 1979, and there will be another energy crisis in the 1990s. All informed commentators tell us that. We know that during one of the crises in the 1970s a tanker owned by a large multinational oil company en route to Canada was diverted to another market. That kind of thing could happen again, and Canadians know that. Canadians are not stupid. They know that energy is a strategic commodity.

Canadians also believe that the oil and gas resources of Canada belong to Canadians and are not to be given away or sold out to foreign interests.

I wish to clarify some of the matters raised by the Minister in his speech, Mr. Speaker, and then I shall reply to some of the points raised. Before going through his speech in detail, let me put this question: Would the Americans allow a large Canadian company to make a similar acquisition in the U.S.? What would happen if the shoe were on the other foot, with a large Canadian company, a company with no American directors, no American shareholders, acquiring a large U.S. company?

In the case of Amoco Corporation, we have a company that patriated $680 million in dividends, while spending $107 million on exploration in Canada, constituting one of the worst records of any foreign company operating in Canada.

An Hon. Member: The worst.

Mr. Waddell: My hon. friend says the worst record of any foreign company operating in Canada—and it is true. Would the Americans permit such a Canadian company to make a similar acquisition in the U.S.?

Some Hon. Members: No way.

Mr. Waddell: There is no way that they would permit it. They would stand up for their rights.

Why are we in Canada so soft? Why do we permit this type of thing? Why do we throw up our hands and say that there is nothing we can do?

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) has misinterpreted the position of the New Democratic Party. We are not asking the Government to bail out Bell Canada or to subsidize Bell Canada. We think Bell Canada can look after itself. We are simply saying that the Government, given that a senior Canadian company is prepared to make a bid for Dome Petroleum, should allow that bid to be considered fairly and equitably, and over sufficient time. That is all we are saying.

The Minister suggests that we want to subsidize Petro-Canada. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the Government, and the Minister in particular, completely misunderstand what Petro-Canada is about. Petro-Canada was created to ensure competition in the downstream side of the industry. That is not happening now because this Government is treating Petro-Canada as a private sector company. Its purpose was to provide a window on the industry. It was to be used in a crisis situation, and is precisely what this current situation calls for. It was a company to be used to develop our resources, when they had to be developed.

And look at the situation we are going to have now, Mr. Speaker, if we let Amoco Corporation take over Dome. The Hon. Member for Oshawa made mention of the fact that Dome has particular expertise in the Arctic, and in particular in the Beaufort Sea.

This was part of the great vision of Jack Gallagher—a vision which was clouded in many ways. I once said in this House, Mr. Speaker, that Dome often drilled more in Ottawa than it drilled in the Beaufort Sea—and there is some truth to that. But the fact is we acquired expertise in drilling in the Beaufort Sea, and the fact is that when we are confronted with the next energy crisis in the 1990s, it is the Beaufort Sea and the Hibernia projects that will provide the solution. And who owns Hibernia?—Mobil Oil, of New York. And who will own the Beaufort Sea reserves?—Amoco Corporation of Chicago.

Some Hon. Members: Shame; shame!

Mr. Waddell: That is a crazy energy policy, and it is no way to ensure Canada's future energy security.

Some Hon. Members: Shame! Some Minister!

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister for Energy, Mines and Resources forgets the commitment of the Progressive Conservative Party to Canadianization of our oil and gas sector. Indeed, he himself, in a little known speech delivered on November 6, 1986, paved the way for foreign takeovers in this sector.

I raised this matter at the time in the House of Commons. It was a speech delivered at Toronto, Ontario, on November 6, 1986, a speech delivered to the American Stock Exchange Seventh Annual Canadian Oil and Gas Symposium.

Mr. Masse: I remember the speech.

Mr. Waddell: The Minister knows the speech of which I speak. Hidden in at page 4 of the speech was the following:

> Our policy calls for us not to approve the direct acquisition of a healthy Canadian-controlled firm valued in excess of $5 million. We are, however, prepared to consider the acquisition by foreign concerns of a Canadian-controlled firm which is in clear financial difficulty. In this way we seek a balance between welcoming new investment and protecting our Canadianization gains.

By that speech alone, and particularly by those words, the Hon. Minister opened up the oil patch for takeovers by American multinationals. There were a number of companies in financial difficulty at the time. He knows the list as well as I do: Sulpetro, Dome, and others, all of which were ready to be gobbled up by the Americans. The Minister's speech was an open invitation to the Americans to do just that.

I should like to refer to some of the remarks, Mr. Speaker, made by the Hon. Member for Oshawa, and I want to add a few points. Having had the privilege of being the energy critic of the New Democratic Party for a number of years, I have seen how some of these things have developed.

The Hon. Member for Oshawa made the point that Dome was a large Canadian corporation, and second largest in terms of gas reserves. He could have gone on to say that a lot of the reserves held are on freehold lands, with the result that they are not subject to royalty payments. So, it is not just a question of getting royalties from American-controlled Amoco Corporation; it is a matter of actually giving away a lot of those resources to a foreign interest.

I have already mentioned the tremendous Arctic expertise of Dome Petroleum Corporation. We are a northern country. Canadians have a special feeling for the north. That is what we in Canada are about. Having put so much money and effort into developing our energy resources in the north, we should not now turn around and give those resources to the Americans. John Diefenbaker would turn in his grave if he knew of this.

What kind of northern vision is it to give our northern resources away to the Americans? Such a move denies the whole basis of the Progressive Conservative Party; it denies the vision of the likes of Sir John A. Macdonald and John Diefenbaker. As well, it denies the visions of well known Quebec nationalists such as Henri Bourassa and George-Étienne Cartier. It denies what they believed in, that being to preserve a "nation" in Quebec and a "nation" in Canada as part of the larger Canadian nation. One does not achieve that by giving our resources away to the Americans. We would not have a Province of Quebec had the Hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources been around 50 years ago, and we will not have any Canada if he stays for a few more years.

The question is whether there can be a difference with Canadian ownership. We think there can be a difference, and there has been ample debate in Canada as to why it is necessary to have Canadian ownership in the energy sector companies.

The three speakers who have preceded me in this debate raised the matter of jobs. We think that jobs will be put in jeopardy as a result of this takeover. Amoco will rationalize the jobs, with the result that there will be jobs lost. As well, Mr. Speaker, when one considers that Amoco and Dome are both large natural gas producers, we could possibly have a situation of Amoco sitting on the gas reserves of the Beaufort Sea rather than moving them to market in competition with their U.S. gas reserves. Has the Government thought of that?

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that this is a very ill-considered takeover.

I have gone over a number of concerns, Mr. Speaker, and I wish to raise one more. It is one with which you yourself will be particularly familiar.

We have the notion that somehow western Canadians are in favour of this takeover, and that we in the Opposition, being against this proposed takeover, are against western Canada.

I am a western Canadian, and I want to point out to those who make that allegation, many of whom are from eastern Canada, that western Canadians are not just a bunch of ex-Dallas oilmen. They are workers; they are farmers; they are consumers. They are every bit as Canadian as anyone else in this country.

The fact is that when the National Energy Program was initially brought out, there was support for it in the West. There were areas where we disagreed with the NEP. We thought, for example, that the PIP grants given to Dome Petroleum, and others, were too rich; we thought that there should be more exploration in the Western Sedimentary Basin rather than in the Beaufort Sea and in the other frontier areas. As well, we lamented the big power struggles between Pierre Trudeau and Peter Lougheed for the sake of having power struggles per se. But the fact is—

Mr. Shields: You also wanted to nationalize Imperial Oil.

Mr. Waddell: The fact is the thrust of the NEP was popular with the Canadian public. Public opinion polls at the time showed that 72 per cent of Canadians favoured Canadianization; and in fact 75 per cent called upon the Government to go further along that road. There was support for Petro-Canada; there was support for—

Mr. Shields: You wanted us to nationalize Imperial Oil.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, there is no sense in the member yelling about nationalizing Imperial Oil, or whatever.

Mr. Shields: That is what he said.

Mr. Waddell: What we are saying is that this hands-off attitude, this leave-it-to-the-market attitude, is not only naive, it is naive in the extreme. Any energy analyst in the world can confirm that we do not have a free market in oil and gas. What we have are large cartels such as OPEC and the Seven Sisters, the multinational oil companies. It is naive in the extreme to suggest that.

• (2140)

Any energy analyst in the world will tell us as well that there will be another energy crisis in the 1990s. We will need that land. We will need that control. We will need a Canadian company, either private or public. Canadians will wake up to the fact, when we have that energy crisis, that the Government and the Minister have sold it out. They are selling Canada.

We have offered an alternative. We do not pretend to have all the answers. The Hon. Member for Oshawa plainly admitted that. He said: "I am not an expert". However, he has tried. He has talked with the other companies and with other people. He has tried to come up with a Canadian solution.

What is the matter with a Canadian solution? We have come up with Canadian solutions in the past when the country was in crisis. Why does the Government not look at the possibility of a Canadian private company like TCPL, or a Canadian public company like Petro-Canada, or a combination of both? It is up to them to come up with a creative solution instead of throwing up their hands, giving up on Canada's energy future, and giving up on Canada itself.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate this evening. I should like to comment briefly on the suggestions made by the previous speaker.

The bottom line was that we should support a Bell Canada—TransCanada PipeLine, takeover of Dome Petroleum, that the Government should get onside and support the group. However, he failed to mention that by doing this we would be giving TransCanada PipeLines a monopoly from the gas field, through the transmission, right to people's homes in central and eastern Canada. How does he square giving a large corporate entity a monopoly?

The Hon. Member also said that an alternative would be getting Petro-Canada involved. He failed to mention from where Petro-Canada would get the funds. Of course it would have to get them from Canadians through the tax system. Of course that would mean another Canadian ownership charge at the pumps. We are familiar with that. We have been through that before.

Dome Petroleum employs nearly 4,000 people, almost all of them in western Canada. It has been hamstrung in developing its attractive land holdings and using its other assets to the best advantage of the economy of the west and of Canada by an extended financial crisis occupying much of management's valuable time. It is a corporation which faces the real threat of bankruptcy. That is the bottom line.

I congratulate members of the Opposition on recognizing that the future of a company so important to western Canada and to our economy in general is indeed an emergency. It is a rare example of the sensitivity on their part to the problems of western Canada.

The urgency of the Dome situation, however, is virtually the only aspect of the situation which opposition Members seem capable of understanding. They have portrayed our policy in respect of Dome as a failure. It has in fact been a resounding success. They have argued that we do not have a Canadianization policy. Our policies and our record show the opposite. It is clearly on record. They also claim that an acquisition of Dome will compromise Canadian energy security when in fact it will be enhanced. Finally, they urge us to use the ability of government to intervene in the process and select a predetermined winner.

This shows an abysmal misunderstanding of the principles which we as a Government have laid down to guide our conduct. They want to return to the good old days when the Government determined which companies would be successful and which companies would not, the good old days which gave us the national energy policy and helped create the very problems with which Dome is living today.

Let me discuss our policy on Dome. When we came to office in September, 1984, Dome's difficulties were already well known. We established clear principles to guide us on this troublesome legacy of the National Energy Program. Let me outline them briefly.

First, we said that Dome's problems should be settled in the private sector, not through a costly bail-out backed by the Canadian taxpayer.

Second, we said that, given the nature of Dome's problems, acquisition by any buyer should be considered because after all it was on the verge of bankruptcy.

Third, we said that any outcome must be consistent with the national interest as applied through legislation and in government policies, that is, that Dome's problems would not guarantee government approval of a proposed acquisition. Each proposal is to be judged on its merits according to the law.

The application of these principles has been a resounding success. Dome has been teetering on the brink of bankruptcy for a number of years. Today the corporation has selected Amoco as the successful bidder from among three suitors. Although the final outcome will not be known with certainty for some time, Dome's prospects appear considerably brighter today than they have for many, many years, to say the very least.

Let me now turn to Canadianization. The Opposition has argued that our willingness to consider Amoco means that we have no Canadianization policy. On the contrary, our Canadianization policy for upstream oil and gas acquisition is a clear one.

First, it allows the acquisition of already foreign controlled firms subject to commitments on Canadianization and investment.

Second, it disallows acquisition by foreign controlled firms of Canadian controlled firms in good financial health.

Third, it allows consideration of acquisition of Canadian controlled firms in clear financial difficulty.

This policy has been successful. When the present Government came to office in 1984, Canadian ownership in the upstream oil and gas industry stood at 42.5 per cent. In 1986 it was 48 per cent. All these gains were achieved through consultation and negotiation, not through costly incentives and heavy-handed regulations which characterized the previous Government and, I might add, which characterized the policy of the previous Government supported by the New Democratic Party.

While we would prefer to see an increase in those numbers, we recognize that over time there will be plus and minus entries on the ledger, especially during periods of restructuring and downturns such as the industry has recently been experiencing. What is important is the over-all and longer term trend.

We all recognize that should an application by Amoco be approved, Canadian ownership in the upstream will be reduced. Our policy, however, is designed to be flexible enough to allow such changes in Canadian ownership where the acquisition can be demonstrated to be of net benefit to Canada.

The Government remains committed to maintaining a strong Canadian presence in the oil and gas sector. However, this presence should be a healthy and vigorous one. To pursue Canadianization at any cost, as the Opposition would have us do, by providing excessive and biased incentives like those offered by the previous Government and supported by the New Democratic Party is one of the root causes of Dome's problems today. All Members of the House know that.

The Opposition has also claimed that the acquisition of Dome by a foreign company would compromise Canadian energy security. It is my belief, Mr. Speaker, that there is only one way to enhance security in the oil and gas industry and that is the economic development of Canada's oil and gas potential. The most important element in this is a financially sound industry. A transaction which removes the uncertainty hanging over the largest landholder in western Canada can only promote economic activity and enhance security of energy supply.

If a foreign firm proposes to acquire Dome, the Investment Canada Act as well as other regulatory powers provide ample means to ensure that our resources are developed in ways that contribute to Canadian energy security. Every Member in this House of Commons knows that to be true.

Finally, the Opposition has urged us to intervene to determine the outcome of the bidding process for Dome. The Opposition suggests that we use the authority of the Government to ensure that a Canadian firm is selected. First, this suggestion displays an ignorance of the law. The Investment Canada Act requires the responsible Minister to review each foreign investment on its own merits. The Opposition knows that. This does not allow consideration of the existence of other bidders, Canadian or foreign.

This whole debate tonight is strictly politics, politics and politics, so opposition Members can get on the late night show.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: Imagine politics.

Mr. Shields: It is the sleazy kind of politics; it is not responsible politics, Mr. Speaker.

It is our view that government must establish a clear and predictable framework for firms wishing to do business in Canada. Let me repeat that. It is more important and it is our view that government must establish a clear and predictable framework for firms wishing to do business in Canada. This means all proposals, like Amoco's, must be reviewed on the basis of laws and policies of general application. To do otherwise would create an atmosphere of arbitrariness and uncertainty which would affect perceptions of Canada as a good place to do business. This would have a serious negative impact on investment and job creation in Canada. We all saw the impact of the National Energy Program on investment in Canada, and we all saw the disaster it caused.

Dome's problems are for the private sector to resolve. Ultimately Dome's shareholders and creditors, many of whom are Canadian, will decide what is in their best interests. They will consider any and all offers available to them.

Mr. Riis: What about Canada's best interests?

Mr. Shields: Only after a successful agreement is negotiated will the federal Government get involved through Investment Canada and/or the Competition Act. Of course, the Government is prepared to discuss any issues regarding its policies or procedures with any private party.

In summary, the success of our economic policies has made Canada's energy sector an attractive place to invest once again for foreign and Canadian firms. While no application for approval has yet been received, and the bidding process does not appear to be over, if a foreign bidder should be successful I am confident that we have in place the laws and policies necessary to ensure that any application by a foreign acquisitor which may be approved will benefit Canada.

If we accepted the advice of opposition Parties and began to intervene in an arbitrary and unpredictable way, perhaps we would not face the necessity of reviewing proposals from foreign acquisitors. Perhaps, too, Dome would continue to limp along, or go bankrupt with serious impacts on our economy, in particular western Canada. I know which problems I prefer to deal with, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, I welcome them and have confidence that they can and will be dealt with in a way which will result in economic benefit to Canada.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the Government would have us believe that it is of no importance to this country who takes over the very valuable reserves of Dome Petroleum, the second largest reserves of natural gas and the third largest producer of oil. These are, as has been said this evening, reserves that have been largely financed by the people of Canada through energy programs or tax concessions. Indeed, they are reserves which the people of Canada will be depending upon very strongly in the years to come.

The Government has done a complete about-face on energy policy, if you could call it energy policy. The process of Canadianization and security of supply, the two major pillars of the energy program, have been completely abandoned by the Government. The Government is saying that now it is all right to sell the assets of Dome and that Canada will be looked after by this foreign multinational.

How did this change come about, Mr. Speaker? As the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) said, during the last election in 1984 that was not the case. That was not the dogma of the Conservatives. The Conservatives were saying that an increase in Canadianization was an important part of the Progressive Conservative Party's platform. Conservatives were saying that security of supply would be vital to this country.

When did this change come about? I think the most marked difference was last November 6 in a speech by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) in Toronto. He said that Canadian companies in financial difficulty were available for sale to foreign interests. This could only have been uttered with Dome Petroleum in mind. It opened the doors of multinational corporations and opened the ears of their executives. It was then, as we have read today in the paper, that the President of Amoco Corporation in Chicago first felt that Amoco had a chance to buy Dome Petroleum. He proceeded to give the scenario of how it was recommended to him by his senior officers that Dome Petroleum could become a part of Amoco Canada.

That was not only an inadvertent policy on behalf of that Government, it was careless and irresponsible. If it were only that then perhaps we could excuse it to some degree. But it was more than that, Mr. Speaker. It is a bail-out of everything the Government should stand for. It is a bail-out of what the Canadian people expected from the Government when the people elected it in 1984. It is a bail-out of what this Government promised to Canadians and how it would protect the interests of Canadians. The Conservatives have completely turned around what they said they were going to do.

What is the Government now telling us? It does not matter who owns Dome Petroleum! The Government said it does not matter about TransCanada PipeLines. That is a Canadian company. It cannot protect you any more than Amoco in Chicago. Amoco Corporation owns Amoco Canada 100 per cent. There is not one measly share in Canadian hands at the present time. The president is an American. There is not a Canadian on the board of directors of Amoco Corporation. As the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) has said, Amoco Corporation last year sent dividends to its head office in Chicago in the amount of $686 million.

Mr. Shields: Because of the National Energy Program.

Mr. MacLellan: Because of the NEP. Because of the fact that Amoco was allowed by the Government to get away with it. Amoco was encouraged by the Government to do so the way Chevron was encouraged to send $500 million back to its head office in San Francisco.

In 1986 alone, $2 billion was sent by foreign owned oil and gas companies back to head offices outside Canada. This is an increase of the average between 1982 and 1985 of between $600 million and $900 million, more than double in one year because the Government was looking the other way when the interests of Canada were first and foremost in the minds of Canadians but not in the mind of that Government.

The Government was doing a song and dance for the last two years about how the multinational oil companies would reinvest in Canada. The Government told us that at the time of the Western Accord. It told us that last September when it did away with the petroleum and gas revenue tax once and for all. The Government said it was doing this on the understanding that the multinational oil companies would reinvest that money in Canada. Where has this assurance gotten us? Where have these words gotten us? They have been hollow words because that has just not happened.

As Hon. Members have said tonight, this is not a condemnation of multinational oil companies, this is an attempt to stick up for the rights of Canadians, to protect the future of Canadians. This is an attempt to protect the security of supply in which we as Canadians have invested so greatly in the last few years. This is something with which we must come to grips. We have to say that this emergency debate is being held for a very good reason. We are faced with a very critical situation, a situation that could mean the sale of very important reserves of oil and gas to an American corporation, not one share of which is in the hands of Canadians.

We do not know anything about what the Government will do. The Government does not know anything itself. It said the matter would be referred to Investment Canada. The people of British Columbia heard that. They just experienced the decision of Investment Canada with respect to the West Kootenay Power and Light Corporation. A decision was made on Christmas eve to agree to the sale of that public utility to American interests without asking for pertinent files or information. If that happened, how can we possibly believe that Investment Canada will review this question with the attention it deserves?

Mr. Tobin: Divestment Canada.

Mr. MacLellan: Divestment Canada is absolutely correct. We do not know when the matter will go before Investment Canada. All we know is that Investment Canada has 45 days to consider the question. It can get an extension of another 30 days, and if it wants another extension of 30 days it has to go back to Cabinet for approval. We do not know when the decision will be made. We do not know if that decision will be made prior to the decision of the shareholders of Dome Petroleum. We do not know if it will be made prior to the decision of the creditors. We do not know what information will be placed before Investment Canada. We do not know anything about what the Government will do. We do not know anything about how the Government will weigh this very important question because the Government refuses to give anyone any information.

We are not talking about the sale of a corner store. We are talking about the sale of a very important corporation, a cornerstone of our economy in the oil and gas industry. We need more information than we have been getting. The people of Canada demand more information than they have been getting. This is not a question of convenient information, it is a question of necessary information upon which Canadians can make their own decisions. This will not be another occurrence of something the Government does so well, and that is making a decision and then building its case after the decision is made. We want the information before the decision is made. The people of Canada have an absolute right to know the full details of this.

This is not an issue that will go away. The Government would like us to believe that in the next while, this will all fade away.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has said that clearly it is a matter of national importance that such a company should be a model corporate citizen, sensitive and open to the environment of its host country. How can those words convince Canadians that the Government will do something to protect the rights of Canadians to energy security and the very important principle of Canadianization which the Government has given its word it would uphold?

This is not what we want. This is not what we expect from the Government. Certainly Amoco has offered $5.1 billion for Dome Petroleum but that is not a gift. We do not make this out to be some kind of largess. The company has 15 million acres of oil and gas properties, nearly three million of which are producing acreage at the present time. Dome Petroleum is a company that is very badly strapped for financing, but even though it is terminally ill, it sits on nearly $2.5 billion in tax losses and $2 billion worth of tax credits and it lists $4.9 billion worth of assets.

This is an abominable situation that the Government is throwing at Canadians. In 1985 at a Public Accounts Committee meeting, it was stated that the Dome Petroleum situation was coming to fruition.

In February, 1985, a remission order pursuant to Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act was granted to the Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company Limited, a subsidiary of Dome Petroleum Limited. Over a 10-year period, Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas was authorized to deduct for income tax purposes the financing costs that Dome incurred in acquiring it. The value of the remission order was considerable and to that date amounted to $400 million. It is now estimated that that remission order could amount to $1 billion.

It was also stated that the remission order did not limit the benefit to the present owner of Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas, and it was stated at that time that this omission might result in an unintended benefit to another taxpayer should Dome decide to sell. There is the possibility that a Canadian subsidiary of an American parent corporation, 100 per cent owned by that American parent corporation, will now pick up the benefits of that remission order in the amount of hundreds of millions of dollars. That is a scam and literally a give-away by the taxpayers of Canada to a foreign corporation.

How many of these situations exist? How much is going on about which we do not know? Why can the Government not come clean with the information that we need to know? Why can the Government, in the interests of the people, the Canadianization of the oil and gas industry and the protection of the security of supply, not come clean with what it wants to do and give us a reason for it? Why wait until the last minute and then say that the Amoco purchase is approved, as if to say it is too late now, we have to go with it? That is not good enough.

We in the Liberal Party are not convinced that there is not a Canadian solution to this very important question. We are not convinced that there cannot be Canadian ownership of Dome Petroleum. It is vital that the Government push for a Canadian solution. It should not wash its hands of this matter, it should say that it is something that Canadians want and it will work toward finding such a solution.

Obviously the Government knew back in November that it was preparing the way for a foreign takeover of Dome Petroleum. In all that time it could have worked on a Canadian solution but it chose not to do so. The fact that it does not now have a Canadian solution to propose to the House and the Canadian people is a disgrace but it is not an excuse.

The Government has let down the Canadian people. It is giving away the reserves of oil and gas that belong to the Canadian people, for which the Canadian people have paid and ownership of which the Canadian people are entitled to retain. That is not acceptable. It is not going to be accepted tonight or tomorrow. It will never be accepted by the Canadian people.

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I find it a bit strange to be taking part in this debate tonight. Members of the Opposition wanted to adjourn the House so we could debate this issue. I see the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) is here.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Nice to see you, too, Bill.

Mr. McKnight: I hear him talking about "Amoco". That could be a milkshake where I come from. With his delivery I thought he would say Amoco. I am sure the people who service the Amoco rigs are from "Schlumburger" or Schlumberger.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is a great contribution.

Mr. McKnight: I find it strange because it is the Liberal Party that is responsible for the problems that Dome

Petroleum has today, along with their friends in the NDP. They put forward the National Energy Program which created Dome. It was an artificially founded company, regardless of the good intentions.

Mr. Waddell: Dome was around for a long time before that.

Mr. Shields: It was foreign owned.

Mr. McKnight: I heard the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) be a touch critical about the amount of drilling done by Dome in Ottawa in the past rather than in the field. What the Opposition is asking the Government to reply to is something the Government has no control over.

We have heard the figures. We know. Dome owes $6.3 billion. Where is Dome Petroleum controlled from today? Is it Canadian controlled?

Mr. Riis: Yes, it is.

Mr. McKnight: The NDP say yes, it is. No, it is not. Let us just read what the founder of Dome, Smiling Jack, had to say. He says that because less than 30 per cent of Dome's shares are held by Canadians we are not talking about a Canadian controlled company. When the best possible interpretation of the numbers is used it is 52 per cent foreign owned and only 48 per cent Canadian owned. What is all this about a Canadian owned company? Less than 30 per cent of the shares are held by Canadians. I do not understand.

Mr. Tobin: He is being heckled by his own Party.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I still have around 14 or 15 speakers to go. If each member is going to take 20 minutes, I hope they will be allowed to finish and I will not have to interject and take time away from the speeches, please.

Mr. Tobin: Heckling is not to be tolerated.

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, let us look at what the founder and former president of Dome has said. He says that any major company in the U.S. which has billions of dollars invested in pipelines, refineries and marketing must develop reserves on this continent to keep those facilities going. We heard mention of the reserves in the Beaufort.

Millions of acres have been leased on Canada Lands by Dome. They will not be explored because Dome does not have the money. Dome is presently strapped, flat broke. If you really want to know who controls Dome, it is the banks, both Canadian and foreign. Banks do not make good managers of oil companies. They are not interested in exploration. They are not interested in looking after the workers on the rigs or those providing services. Dome is so badly strapped for cash that it put forward a policy not to pay its payables for 90 days. What about the stickwelder? What about the guy who drives the water truck or the mud truck? They have to wait 90 days to get paid by Dome because Dome does not have the cash flow to pay in 30 days. Is that what the NDP and the Liberals want to see continue?

Mr. Tobin: No.

Mr. McKnight: The Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) says no. I agree with him. I heard both Leaders of the opposition Parties ask if there was a way another offer could be made. It is not up to the Government or the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse), it is up to the shareholders and creditors of Dome. It is not a government company to sell.

Mr. Tobin: That is not what you said about the banks.

Mr. McKnight: I did not hear one alternative from them. Well, I guess I heard one from the NDP and that was expected. PetroCan should step in and purchase the company. That would cost another $5 billion or $6 billion. Do the NDP plan on adding another four or five cents a litre gas tax to pay for that $6 billion purchase?

Mr. Shields: Of course.

Mr. McKnight: How long will it be on? Will it be on as long as the Liberal tax was on to help pay for Petro-Canada?

Mr. Tobin: It is still on.

Mr. McKnight: It has been reduced. The Hon. Member from Newfoundland laughs. What about Hibernia? The Hon. Member from Newfoundland is very supportive—

Mr. Tobin: Another broken promise.

Mr. McKnight: —of the Atlantic Accord and the benefits this Government brought to his province—

Mr. Tobin: Name them.

Mr. McKnight: —by signing the Atlantic Accord. Yet his Leader stands up and says Dome is going to be sold—

Mr. Tobin: Name the benefits.

Mr. McKnight: —and it is a Canadian company and a Canadian company should buy it. He did not have one in mind. He did not make any suggestion—

Mr. Tobin: Bill, name the benefits.

Mr. McKnight: I see the Hon. Member from Newfoundland saying that he wishes we had not entered into the Atlantic Accord.

Mr. Tobin: Name the benefits.

Mr. McKnight: I find that strange because the Government he was part of could not sign an agreement with his province. This Government has signed an agreement, and the Hon. Member is a dog in the manger. He is saying he does not think that is a good agreement. I would like him to go home to his province and say we should not have signed that accord; it will not benefit the province. The Hon. Member is now saying that he does not want any oil and gas exploration in Hibernia. Is that what he is saying?

Mr. Tobin: Name the benefits.

Mr. McKnight: I cannot believe the Hon. Member would say he does not want oil and gas exploration in Hibernia. Would you believe that? The Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway is shaking his head. He cannot believe it.

Mr. Waddell: I cannot believe it.

Mr. McKnight: The one thing we have to understand is that Dome has to be in strong hands. I hear suggestions that we should have a Canadian purchaser. So far I have not heard in the media that there is a Canadian purchaser acceptable to the owners of Dome. I can understand that the NDP would wish to intervene in the private sector but I find it very strange that the Liberal Party wants to do that. I should not find it that strange after the NEP which caused the problem we have with Dome—PIP grants, where $2 were paid out for $1 invested.

Mr. Tobin: Three.

Mr. McKnight: The Hon. Member for Newfoundland says I am wrong, it was three. Anyway, you can understand the philosophy behind it.

To my knowledge there is not a Canadian purchaser acceptable to the owners of Dome. I said before that Dome is not Canadian controlled. It is not majority-held by Canadians so I do not understand what the debate is about. I really do not. If a deal had been put forward and was being reviewed by Investment Canada, I could understand it, but to my knowledge there has not been a deal put forward. I ask members opposite where this Canadian company is that is going to come forward and buy Dome.

• (2220)

Are the members opposite saying Canadian taxpayers should put more money into Dome to have it purchased? How much more; $2 billion, $3 billion, $4 billion? I heard the spokesman for the Liberal Party talk about the billions of dollars of investment that have already been made.

The majority of Dome's land is leased, not owned. There are royalties payable. There is a regulatory regime. I know of no industry in Canada other than the nuclear industry which is as regulated by both provincial and federal Governments as is the oil industry. Why is everyone so concerned that a company which may be one-third owned by Canadian shareholders could be sold at the wish of the owners and strengthened through investments to allow exploration?

Mr. Tobin: To whom?

Mr. McKnight: The Member from Newfoundland is asking to whom. I suggest to whomever the owners and shareholders wish to enter into a deal with. I can understand the Liberals wanting to interfere in the oil industry because they did it so well. I find it very strange that since the present Government came into office Canadian ownership has increased from what it was when the Liberal Government was in power. I understand why the New Democrats want to interfere in the industry. They do not believe in the free enterprise sector. They do not believe in Canadians being able to invest their money in a company such as Dome and then dispose of it as the owners of Dome will.

To my knowledge there has not been a deal cut. To my knowledge there has not been another offer. I read in the paper that TransCanada Pipelines said it had made an offer. Are members opposite sure that was all Canadian money, that TransCanada PipeLines was putting forward only Canadian dollars, that there were no foreign partners, foreign banks? I am not sure of that, but that is not my responsibility. I neither own the shares nor am I a creditor.

Mr. Tobin: There is a difference between a foreign creditor and a foreign master.

Mr. McKnight: I find it strange that the Liberal Party talks about foreign masters. When the Progressive Conservative Government came into power it increased Canadian ownership in the oil industry.

I heard a speaker from the Opposition talk about a remission order. I do not know much about remission orders, but I do know that if a company owes more than it is worth a remission order does not have much value.

Mr. Tobin: Like the banks.

Mr. McKnight: I know the member opposite does not understand, but I will give him a little hint. I do not remember a bank that was saved. I remember assisting credit unions, pension funds, and municipalities. I remember assisting those depositors. I do not remember this Government ever saving a bank.

Mr. Riis: Wells Fargo, City Bank, Bank of America, Hong Kong Bank, just to name a few of them.

Mr. McKnight: Now his colleague from the New Democratic Party is coming forward. I heard his colleague talk about coming from western Canada and about having an interest in western Canada and what takes place in exploration. I agree with that. However, how can a company which owes $6.3 billion and has assets on the books of about $4 billion continue with exploration? There are about 100 properties which are jointly operated by Dome and Amoco now. How can Amoco go ahead and develop on those properties when it has a partner which is terminally ill? It cannot be done.

I am not here to defend Amoco. It does not need to be defended because the shareholders and creditors of Dome Petroleum will make a decision as to what deal they feel is appropriate. I find it very, very strange that we are now talking about Amoco. Amoco Canada was here when Leduc came in 40 years ago. I know that a lot of people will have to consider whatever decision is made by the creditors and the shareholders. The stick welders, the roughnecks, the drill workers, the mud slingers and the water truck drivers will make a decision.

Mr. Tobin: They have already decided. You guys are in a deficit situation just like Dome. You can't operate any more.

Mr. McKnight: I understand the nervousness of the NDP and the Liberals because they are now trying to decide who is best qualified to interfere in the oil and gas industry. Is it the Member from Newfoundland, the Member from Kamloops, or the Member from Montreal? Are they best qualified? They are having trouble making a decision amongst themselves as to who has the best method of interfering in the sector, who has the new national energy program to put forward. Is it the socialists on the left or the socialists on the right? Who has the best plan to interfere in the new national energy program?

The Government does not know, any more than the members of the Opposition, the decision that will be taken by the creditors and the shareholders of Dome. However, it will be decided when exploration goes ahead. The majority of those millions of acres are leased from the provincial or federal Governments. There are royalties due on them and they are controlled by regulations. Exploration will take place and jobs will be created. Consider those service workers who now must wait 90 days because Dome is broke. They cannot pay the bills in 30 days like others, but now must wait 90 days and perhaps 120 days.

• (2230)

Decisions will be made as to what will take place in the future and whether the shareholders and creditors of Dome had the right to dispose of their shares. When that happens, the Government, through Investment Canada, will make a decision. However, we cannot make a decision on a hypothetical case put forward by the Opposition.

I listened to the Minister, and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). They have not said that an offer has been made. The Hon. Member from the New Democratic Party signals that I am right. If nothing is consummated, there is not much to be gained by debating it.

Mr. Riis: The Speaker did not feel that way.

Mr. McKnight: Not much more can be said until the shareholders and the creditors, the owners of Dome, make a decision. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has said that it is not up to the Canadian taxpayers or the Finance Department to bail out Dome, it is a problem that should be solved by the private sector and that is the bottom line.

I am sure that the private sector can make a decision that will ensure exploration, ensure a supply of oil and gas, ensure jobs for thousands of Canadians, ensure security and will result in an industry that does not have to carry a sick corporate client. Instead, it will be a strong and healthy company that will contribute—

Mr. Tobin: American company.

Mr. McKnight: I am not sure the Hon. Member from Newfoundland would be concerned about where he was healthy. I am sure he is as happy to have the development in Hibernia, off his shore—

Mr. Tobin: What development?

Mr. McKnight: —as we will be in western Canada when a strong, financially sound Dome Petroleum continues to explore and bring on supply and jobs which will create sound investment opportunities for Canadians in the future.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I must shake my head at hearing an important Minister in Cabinet asking why there is this fuss. He wonders why the Speaker decided earlier today that there was in fact an emergency in the oil patch and that the time is now for a special debate as requested by the Opposition.

One of the critical major players in the Canadian energy field is bankrupt and people want to buy it. The Minister asks why there is a fuss and says that it is rather irrelevant. He wants to know why there is a fuss about the fact that this is the largest takeover in Canadian history. This will have a significant impact on the amount of foreign control over this important, integral, cultural resource in this country. The Minister wants to know what is the problem.

Mr. McKnight: Cultural resource?

Mr. Riis: You can bet that the petroleum industry is a cultural resource. Our entire culture in the western world is based primarily on energy and the oil and natural gas sector of that energy sector. Anyone who thinks differently obviously does not understand the world around them. That is why it is a critical cultural resource.

The Minister asks who cares if we lose a major share of this critical cultural resource to foreigners. We care, and many Canadians care. As a matter of fact, the majority of Canadians care.

For a number of years Canadians have heard the bafflegab and rhetoric of the Conservatives about Canadianization. However, when push comes to shove and the Conservatives must make a decision, they say they will sell out to the foreigners any day, particularly if they are Americans.

I do not know why we are surprised at the Government tonight. It will go down in history as having approved, through Investment Canada, more foreign takeovers than any Government in the history of this country. In fact, since the Progressive Conservative Government came to office it has approved more foreign takeovers than any country in the world. Although we are not a major country in terms of business and industry, not one country has experienced more foreign takeovers than Canada. I am not surprised that that Cabinet Minister would ask what is the big deal and why worry now that there are 1,201 takeovers.

As my hon. friend, the Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) said earlier, imagine what would happen in the Congress of the United States today if a major Canadian oil company was about to move in and become one of the significant players in the U.S. energy field. If the board of directors was entirely composed of Canadians, with a Canadian president and a head office in Canada, the Congress would be in an uproar. They would not accept that for one moment. Yet the Government of Canada not only accepts this absolutely ludicrous situation, but applauds it, saying that it is wonderful for Canada.

Mr. Tobin: They will not even let us sell lumber.

Mr. Riis: As the Hon. Member says, the one area in which Canada has been progressive and successful in becoming one of the major players is in wood sales in the United States. Yet the Americans are not prepared to accept us in their wood industry there and have taken significant steps to remove us.

The Government of Canada supports selling out to the Americans and having decisions about the future of the Canadian oil business made in Chicago. Canadians do not like that. They will have an opportunity in some 20 months to go to the polls and consider whether they want to return to office a government that is prepared to sell Canada out, as it has done with this oil deal, with West Kootenay Power and Light, as it has done 1,200 times in two and one-half years.

When Canadians are asked if they want this process to continue, a majority of them in every province and territory will say they have had enough and will not allow the Progressive Conservative Government to continue to sell their destiny to foreigners. Tonight's debate is absolutely crucial. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) indicated that it is important that this new player in the oil field from Chicago is a good corporate citizen and that it operates in the best interest of Canada. When we consider its track record, I do not think there could be a more erroneous sale approved by the Government, assuming that it will do so.

For example, in 1986, for every dollar invested in Canada by Shell, it sent 23 cents back to the United States. Texaco took 56 cents out of every dollar it invested in Canada. Imperial Oil was more aggressive and for every dollar it invested, it removed 57 cents. Gulf removed 61 cents out of every dollar it invested in Canada. However, the company we are concerned with tonight removed $6.41 for every dollar it invested in Canada last year.

That is the kind of corporate behaviour we will now find in the entire oil patch in Western Canada and in the frontier areas and it is something which does not bode well for our country. As the previous speaker indicated, this corporate citizen has been operating in Canada since the Leduc fields opened in Alberta. The way this company is operating in Canada, with an American president and an American board of directors, and for every $1 invested in Canada taking out $6.41, is shameful corporate behaviour. Yet we are told it it will give assurances that jobs will be created.

Let us face it, one of the obvious things that will occur, as my friend, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Kingsway and other members in the House have pointed out, is that this company will rationalize its operations in Canada. It is a major gas player in the United States. It is taking over a company which is the second major gas player in Canada. Obviously, it will rationalize its operations. This U.S. company will now control one of the largest blocks of exploratory lands in Canada. When we look at those exploratory lands it is interesting to note that a good portion of them are way into the future. In other words, these lands do not expire in terms of their ownership, therefore, what this foreign company has purchased is control over the resource value lands in Canada for decades into the future. So as it develops its operations in the United States, it knows it can sit on these lands in Canada for two years, 10 years, or 20 years, and some time in the future perhaps it will get around to developing them, using the lands as a sort of secure back-up for its operations.

Mr. Tobin: International feudalism.

Mr. Riis: As my hon. friend says, it is international feudalism. That is what we are talking about. On the other hand, when we have two of these large giants coming together with thousands of employees, we know those firms are going to be rationalized. That is what happens when the takeover process is under way. We have seen it happen time after time. In fact, we have seen it happen 1,200 times in terms of foreign takeovers only, not including domestic takeovers.

When those companies rationalize their operations, they know they do not need two accounting sections, only one. They do not need two marketing sections, only one. So they start eliminating jobs. I say that particularly for those people in western Canada who are concerned about their jobs. If they believe all those jobs will be kept in place, let alone expanded, as a result of the takeover by this large foreign multinational, they should know it is just not going to happen. We are going to see significant job loss.

Right now, as we debate this matter, in the American part of the Beaufort Sea there is a drilling company called Canmar, a subsidiary of Dome Petroleum, which employs Canadian crews. Canadian crews are working right now on that drilling rig. But you can bet your bottom dollar, Mr. Speaker, that when that American multinational becomes the owner and controls that operation, it will hire Americans. It will not retain those Canadian crews.

I believe it is very, very critical that a lot of Members on the Government side have mislead people today by saying there will be job security and new jobs as this company expands into its frontier exploration zones. Such will not be the case. Anyone who has studied one iota of the takeover process will recognize that the net result is inevitably jobs lost as opposed to any jobs being created.

Our Party is very concerned about what this means. What we are seeing here is simply part of two critical processes which are starting to raise more concerns with Canadians than ever these days. The first process is the continuous sell-out, the willingness of the Government to accept the notion that what is a good deal for the shareholders of Dome is a good deal for Canada. I think a case can be made, as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway did so well today when he indicated that the major shareholders of Dome Petroleum are actually Canadian citizens, Canadian taxpayers. Think of the hundreds of millions of dollars Canadians have invested in that critical natural gas and oil company through their taxes.

I think, as responsible parliamentarians, if we are concerned about the investment which has been made by the shareholders who have invested in Dome, as well as the taxpayers who have also invested heavily in that company, we must realize there is a vested interest and responsibility to ensure that the deal which is made with this particular company is in the best interests of Canada as a whole. We are all well aware that Canada, unfortunately, will be a net oil importer by the early 1990s. We have to become aggressive in the development of that resource.

As long as there are critical decisions being made about oil and natural gas, not in Calgary but in Chicago, Dallas or Houston, those decisions will not necessarily be made in the best interest of Canadians. That is what we are saying. It seems to me when we call for an emergency debate, we do so to get some information. There are all kinds of questions which need to be asked. My Leader went through a long litany of questions which people have asked, yet there has been no response from the Government. Our energy critic, the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway, asked another set of questions; what are we getting for this? What steps is the Government taking to ensure that this is a good deal for Canada? All we hear are rather flowery speeches and rhetoric from Members of the Government, including the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. That is not the way to conduct business. That is not the way this House of Commons is supposed to operate. In fact, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Shields) had the audacity to suggest that it seemed like we were being political. Of course we are being political. This is a critical political question. Who owns Canada? Who controls Canada? Who controls this important resource? That is what this is all about.

It is critical that we move away from a Government which believes that what is good for the shareholders of Dome is automatically and unquestionably good for Canada and its future. We also have to ask why we are moving so quickly. Why is it that the directive went out to the Chairman of Petro Canada: "Do not talk to Dome"? Why did the word go out to the chairman of Dome: "Do not talk to Petro Canada"? It seems to our Party that this is part of the process of the Government giving in to the United States because of its rush to negotiate a free trade deal. It is in effect admitting it gave in to the States on the softwood issue and on a whole range of other issues, including acid rain. This American giant wants to gobble up one of the major players in our energy sector and the Government is laying down its cloak and saying: "Welcome to Canada once again. This is another takeover and we like takeovers in Canada". That is the voice of the present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the federal Government.

Our Party believes this is not in the best interest of Canada. We have articulated a whole host of reasons why we believe a better deal can be struck. A joint venture can be put together which would be in the best interests of Canada and would retain this critical Canadian company in Canadian control.

I want to simply issue a challenge to members of the Government who are here tonight. Can any of them tell me of an oil country in the world which would allow a majority resource to be controlled by foreigners? If there is such a country, I am unaware of it. I am unaware of any country which would allow foreigners to dominate its critical industry let alone own and control it. If there is such a country, I would challenge Members of the Government to identify it. Is there any other country which is prepared to sell out its petroleum industry as the Government of Canada has been doing over the years and will certainly do if it gives its approval to this particular takeover?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, My remarks will be addressed through you to members of the Opposition and to the people of Canada. This happens to be a subject which one could call by several headings. It could be called "The Canadian solution". First, in reply to the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), I challenge him to read the oil and gas regulations which deal with the Canada Lands. If he did read them, or if he ever does read them, he will find out that the law is very clear. That land belongs to Canada and is given out to companies either in the form of a permit or later on in the form of a lease. With one breach of the lease the whole acreage is lost.

• (2250)

I ask the Hon. Member to take a look at that and then come back to the more serious question. Any person who has read the British North America Act, and in particular the Alberta Natural Resources Act and the Saskatchewan Natural Resources Act, will know that it is made very clear as part of the Constitution that the sole owner of those resources, including water, is in the hands of the province. So when Hon. Members use the word "control" they do so without realizing the amount of control that we have set on all our industries. I do not think they should get too excited about this great perceived danger.

There is an Hon. Member sitting behind me who was in the Alberta Legislature in 1940. He belonged to the Social Credit Party. He knows that the Province of Alberta controls all the land in that province.

Mr. Taylor: Right on.

Mr. Hamilton: He knows that the Province of Quebec controls all its resources, too. It received the right in 1867. Alberta and Saskatchewan did not receive the right until 1931.

When I hear these people who pose as great experts talk on subjects about which they know so little it makes me a shade annoyed. I planned to say saddened. But when members have been here for a certain length of time I think they owe it to their country to do some research and reading and not leave it to their staff. Staff have never heard of the British North America Act. Staff have never heard of the Saskatchewan Natural Resources Act or the Alberta Natural Resources Act. It is the Members themselves who have to do the digging. When Members get these facts clear they can then look at the situation as it is today.

I happen to be a long-time friend of Jack Gallagher. He drilled the first well on the Arctic islands when I was Minister of Northern Affairs when no one else had the nerve to do it. The tragedy was that if he had moved that well just a few yards farther north he would have discovered the first oil field in the Arctic. With respect to that, why did I put such emphasis as the first Resource Minister of Canada on going into the North? It was because I knew from the experience of the 1920s and the 1930s in Alberta and Saskatchewan that these were not the main resource pools of oil and gas. Therefore, when I drove into the North it was with the offer of Canadian oil and gas regulations that made it clear that there be no heavy front-end loading charges put on those who went up into the north. When they found oil, or gas, they would be given enough return on their money to get their money back and make about a 25 per cent profit, which would be enormous, and the people of Canada would get at least 50 per cent.

I want to go back and mention another story. I sat in the Saskatchewan Legislature in 1950, not as a member but with the courtesy of the Premier. All Hon. Members here know that Premier's name. He was the Hon. Tommy Douglas. He first came into politics in this House in 1935. He made honest and sincere statements of his purpose and intentions. He stated that he would go for the new Jerusalem. By planting the flag of socialism on Parliament Hill the people would own and control everything. That was his pledge in 1935.

Mr. Cassidy: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hamilton: The Hon. Member is right in saying: "Hear, hear". Tommy Douglas was an honest man and a great Canadian. However, by 1950 he was 15 years older. He had been the Premier of Saskatchewan for six years. What did he say in the Legislature when I was there in 1950? He said that he had to face the resource situation. The Americans were coming into Alberta but not into his province. He got up and said to the House that there were two choices. The first was to take the public money and go in to look for the resources. The other choice was to let private enterprise come in to look for them. He decided on a third choice. It was that in a risky enterprise no democratic government could afford to go into risk enterprises.

He said that in one year $100 million could be lost, thereby destroying a province. So he chose a system whereby no charges, or few charges, would be placed on the oil companies coming in to explore. However, when they found something, a certain share of that would be taken back and a very good royalty would be added on to it. He used the figures that I have just used, that is, 50 per cent to be returned to the people. But the control would always be in the hands of the Government of Saskatchewan, with respect to both freehold and royalty lands. I put this point before Hon. Members because Tommy Douglas was a man who loved this country like no one else could love it, even in the face of the disappointment he had in not being able to go into service overseas in 1939 with the South Saskatchewans. Yet he stood up and was man enough and Canadian enough to face the realities as they were, and Saskatchewan became a fair oil and gas province.

The second point I want to make along this same line, and I am speaking to members of the NDP with some feeling, is that this matter came up in the House in the early 1950s with the setting up of a great pipeline to pick up the gas from western Canada to bring it to the east. Then it was the Conservatives and the NDP, and they called themselves CCF in those days, who fought like tigers and even challenged the Speaker because the Government was insisting that Canadians could not build this land. It was being said that they did not have the competence or the money with which to do it. The Conservatives and the NDP were both nationalist Parties.

Having started that, what actually happened? The government will prevailed. It did give a few shares to Canadians but the bulk was owned by southerners in the United States, the big oil companies, the shares in this TransCanada PipeLines which would be a public utility. As the years rolled on Canadians bought back almost every share of TransCanada PipeLines as individuals or as companies. We paved our way into ownership as well as control.

Time goes on. Ownership passes around. Now, a big corporation, Bell Canada, holds the biggest share. But Canadians are still willing to invest. I suggest to members of the Opposition if they do not have any ideas of their own, except maybe one with respect to a joint enterprise comprised of a broke government and a broke company, that they should consider this one. Let the Canadian people give us a Canadian solution. Just say to Amoco that one of the terms and conditions we will consider is this. "We would like to put your Amoco into a Canadian company registered in Canada and make every one of the shares of that company available to Canadians. We will buy your Amoco". That is the positive way to go. I think that is one way that we could certainly garner the support of the people of Alberta. They did that with the building of their pipeline system through their province.

• (2300)

In the building of the pipeline system through Alberta, 200,000 shares went to those who produced the gas and 200,000 to those who bought it. The balance of the shares went to the people of Alberta. As I recall the figure, 80 per cent of the people of Alberta invested in that pipeline system, a system that is now operated by NOVA Corporation. While the people of Alberta may sound like separatists, when push comes to shove, they are Canadians to the nth degree.

We ought to copy some of the successful moves of the past. Sure Dome got itself into financial trouble. It got carried away by the tremendous potential wealth that was at stake. While I cannot divulge all that I do know, I can tell you that the future of this whole continent in terms of self-sufficiency in energy is based on the Canadian Arctic. The Americans know that, and so do we.

The Americans are not coming in here as big powerful elephants; rather, they are crawling in on their hands and knees trying to get access to some of these resources. One merely has to look at the Paley report of 1952, which advised the Americans to start acquiring resources around the world. The Americans are quickly using up their own oil and gas reserves, and they know it. They are not going to cut back on their efforts in the North. They need to add to their reserves.

The New Democratic Party, in recent years, has made three big mistakes politically. The first mistake was in 1966, when the NDP joined with the Liberals to oppose the building of a loop from Manitoba through to Sarnia by TransCanada PipeLines Limited. An application to construct that loop had been granted by the National Energy Board. Had that loop not been built, big interests from east Texas and Louisiana would have had the whole southwestern part of Ontario as part of their market.

Looking back to that debate, it was the speech of a then opposition Member that turned things around. It may be self-serving to say so, but I was the individual who delivered that speech. I used the same tone as I am using now in suggesting to the Liberals that they not be pushed around by the NDP. I made the point that the NDP were promoting a northern line for the sole purpose of creating a few jobs in the north in order to win two by-elections. I went on to say that the Liberal Party, as the Government of Canada, had to stand up and do what was right for Canada.

The point was made that the construction of that loop would lead to additional gas sales, ultimately leading to the necessity to construct a line through the north, and that has in fact happened.

Those opposing the construction of that loop by TransCanada PipeLines stood to capture the Sarnia market with higher priced gas as compared to the TransCanada proposal to provide lower priced gas because of the high load factor of its loop. Every large labour union in the United States opposed the construction of that loop, as did every large American corporation. The large unions had the right to defend their own interests, and the large American corporations were in opposition because they knew that we could get western gas into Ontario at a lesser cost than Louisiana and East Texas gas could move into that market.

When those facts were put before the House, the then Leader of the New Democratic Party and his supporters and all of the Liberals reversed their stand. The Government reversed itself and went 180° the other way, and permitted the construction of that loop.

When the facts are known, the members of all Parties are great Canadians. So, the first mistake of the New Democratic Party was going along with this childish approach that we had to build a line in the north only. Their rationale was that the construction of the northern line would have resulted in more jobs over a longer period of time.

An Hon. Member: That was Blakeney's fault.

Mr. Hamilton: The second mistake of the New Democratic Party was when, for the sake of nationalism, it supported the National Energy Program brought in by the Liberal Government. There has been enough said about that. I do not have to tell Hon. Members what happened. That program constituted front-end loading by the federal Government on top of the oil and gas industry, backed up by all of these huge grants, and it was a program that interfered directly with the Constitution. No federal Government has the right to do indirectly what it cannot do directly under the law.

The Liberal Party, with the help of the New Democratic Party, passed the National Energy Program, a program which ultimately damaged all of the large companies in the oil patch. The NEP encouraged these companies to engage in wild expenditures and into large borrowings, regardless of the interest rates. The result is that all companies in the oil and gas sector were hurt. Dome Petroleum Corporation, in acquiring the deep gas reserves along the Foothills and involving itself in its Beaufort Sea exploration program got behind, and like any common farmer or businessman, once one gets behind in times of high interest rates, one is a dead duck. The interest rate policy in Canada led to that particular situation, and as such we all have to take responsibility for it.

The third mistake of the New Democratic Party relates to its position on the proposed takeover of Dome Petroleum Corporation by Amoco Canada. Amoco is no bigger than an elephant, and it is easy enough to upset an elephant if one gets him off balance. Amoco has to have the reserves, or it is a dead duck; but in order to acquire those reserves, it has to adhere to the regulations of the Provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan and, to some extent, British Columbia, and certainly in the Canada Lands, where the majority of the holdings of Dome Petroleum Corporation are.

If one is truly thinking of the interests of Canada, one should not think in terms of building a wall around us. We cannot take the position that we are going to grow only enough to feed our own people or to produce only enough to keep our own people working. We are part of one world economically. We are part of a situation where both parties get wealthier if they trade with each other. As traditional proponents of freer trade, Hon. Members opposite should not take the position that free trade constitutes a sell-out. Canada and Brazil, and to a lesser extent Russia and China, are the countries of the future.

The nation that has the resources wins wars, and the nation that has the resources wins when it comes to trade. But we have to learn how to use our strengths. In dealing with an elephant, we should not try to use our strength. Instead of getting out the battleships and waving the flag around, we had better figure out some way by which to get the elephant off balance.

I had such an experience myself in the 1957-1959 period, when the Americans imposed a 100 per cent embargo on the shipping of lead, zinc and oil into the United States. My advice to the Government of the day was to refrain from making any complaint. Given the traditional practice of the Americans to cut their own throat, I knew that they would eventually run out of lead and zinc, and oil. With that in mind, I suggested that we construct a railway line to Pine Point, the source of our lead and zinc deposits. We passed the necessary legislation, with much laughter in the House. Here we had a railway going from no place to no place.

When one looks at the figures today, one realizes that the only railway in Canada that paid for itself in a period of six years is the Pine Point Railway. The company itself, which was a subsidiary of Cominco, which was in turn a subsidiary of CPR, paid for the mine in a period of 15 months. There is no other mine in British Columbia that can make that claim. The reason, of course, that it was able to do so was that prices tripled when the Americans did run out. It goes without saying that a few shareholders benefited too.

The three mistakes that I have enumerated stem from a negative nationalism point of view. Nationalism is great, until one thinks it through. One has to ask oneself what a "me first" attitude means. Does it mean jingoism? Not entirely. But in the end, it does amount to jingoism. Negative nationalism espouses the philosophy of "me first; nothing for the other fellow. Bang him down." We know what happened when we started that in the late 1920s with the Smoot-Holley tariff in 1928, with the Bennett Government blasting at world markets in 1930, and with the tariffs since 1932 under the Democrats. Then there was the rise of parties in Germany and Italy based on emotional leadership. We had to have living room. They were into a trade war with us and American and Canadian soldiers died to pay the price for huffing and puffing by nations which followed negative jingoistic nationalism within the trade side or military threats. They have all gone to the dust now.

However, here we are again beginning to repeat the same experience. All these decisions on Amoco are pretty elementary. There are other things as well such as free trade and the whole business of relations with the Third World. I hope we realize that we are one world economically and the only good deal is where both sides benefit, not us alone.

I do not give a hoot whether one is American or Canadian, we both must accept the fact that we are sinners more often than we are good men. I would like to see Parliament think a bit before it starts making extravagant claims about a poor broken down company which tried its level best and was caught up with the same problems many of us had, namely, high interest rates and the inflationary mentality that developed a few years ago.

I would think that the correct term should be positive nationalism. One makes decisions with one's heart and one's mind, but one makes them on the basis of what is best for one's country, not according to some theory or one's religion.

I hope that we in the House will look at the matter frankly. I hope we will look at it with emotion but also with sanity because if we get involved in this banging of our neighbour just to say that we are protecting our Canadian interest, we will not help the working man, the farmer, or the businessman. All we would do is make this a quarrelling place on emotional issues which do not hold water when the situation is examined.

I do not know whether the taking over by Amoco is right. All I do is trust the Government which must make up its mind on what it will do when the time comes. I would think that the people of Canada will respect a positive approach to our problems rather than a negative one.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity this evening to speak on the emergency debate concerning the takeover of Dome Petroleum by Amoco, an American corporation.

I was very interested in the comments of the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton). He brings a great deal of historical perspective to any debate. Certainly he had broad experience in northern development. We all enjoyed his comments this evening.

I should like to refer to his comments toward the end of his speech when he said that what we want to do is the best thing for our country. Clearly that is what the debate is all about. We are all concerned that this takeover of a major player in the Canadian petroleum industry is in the best interest of the country.

Tonight we clearly saw a further elaboration of the government policy espoused first last fall that foreign ownership was not really such a bad thing, that Canadian ownership was not really necessary if it was not convenient. Of course that is a dramatic change from when the Government campaigned in the 1984 election. At that time it was for greater Canadian ownership.

When Gulf Canada, which is owned by Gulf in the United States, was taken over by two Canadian companies, that is, by Petro-Canada and by the Reichmann brothers in Toronto, the then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources trumpeted it before the House of Commons. It was a major move to increase Canadian ownership as she had promised in the general election of 1984.

When we look at the takeovers, we see that the Petro-Canada one cost the Government some $1 billion to acquire some 1,800 oil and gas stations in eastern Canada. How that really increased our reserves no one is quite sure.

Many Tories in western Canada, especially in Saskatchewan and other parts of the west, fought and opposed Petro-Canada. They wrote to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) asking why Petro-Canada was expanding and taking over thousands of gasoline stations which did not increase Canadian reserves. The Prime Minister wrote back and said: "We really do not have anything to do with Petro-Canada. It operates purely as a private corporation".

We saw the takeover of Gulf by the Reichmann brothers. Through an ingenious tax advantage, the Little Egypt Bump, the cost of that operation amounted to some $1 billion as well to Canadian taxpayers.

The idea of government involvement in massive investment to increase Canadian ownership seemed to be the policy of the Government. However, there was a dramatic change last July when the new Minister was appointed. He espoused a new policy which was carried through this evening. In his statement tonight the Minister essentially said that a transaction in the oil and gas industry was the same as any other commercial transaction and that they would judge it through Investment Canada if it were over $5 million. He indicated that essentially it was a private transaction and that they did not worry very much whether it was a Canadian or an American transaction.

Let us refer to what has changed. A year ago last fall the Government launched its free trade negotiations which are into a very critical period now. Clearly the Government would not want to do anything to offend the United States. We heard a statement this afternoon by the United States Under-Secretary of Trade in Toronto in which he gave his blessing to this Amoco takeover of Dome, which I believe is our second largest reserve of natural gas and our third largest reserve of oil. They want it to go through, with no questions being asked. Of course the Prime Minister, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse), and the others on the Tory side of the House will not do anything to impede that takeover.

A couple of years ago Petro-Canada was taking over a major American producer of oil and gas, and Gulf had no input or say in it. When Petro-Canada was set up it was to be a window on the industry. It is a major Canadian producer of natural gas and oil. Perhaps it is involved in as many plays in the oil and gas industry as any other Canadian company. Surely it might have been able to give the Minister of Energy another perspective. It could have been that window on the industry. Perhaps it could have played some role. After all, Dome has billions of dollars of tax write-offs. Yet Petro-Canada was forbidden to have any part in this even though the Minister was getting daily reports since last October or November as to the state of play between the various suitors for the takeover of Dome.

It was interesting tonight to hear the Parliamentary Secretary who represents the constituency in which Syncrude operates. He was very generous last December when he took the full responsibility for the Tory caucus when the Minister of Energy refused to give any assistance to Syncrude. The Syncrude people came before Members of the House of Commons with an excellent presentation with which I believe every back-bencher agreed, but the Minister turned that down. We have a situation where the Government has a laissez-faire approach to this matter, a very relaxed view with no effort at all to see these major Canadian reserves of oil and gas go to a Canadian company.

We would like to see a Canadian solution. We would like to see greater Canadian control. We have, according to the estimates about which I have heard, something like 55 per cent of the oil and gas industry now in Canadian control. Ownership is something less than that. If Dome is taken over by an American company like Amoco then that Canadian ownership and control will be dramatically reduced. This is only the latest in a long litany of government actions on energy.

If you remember, Mr. Speaker, we talked about energy in 1984. The Government talked about energy being the engine of the economy, and that it would create hundreds of thousands of jobs. The estimates were from 100,000 to 300,000 jobs as soon as the Western Accord was put in place. If the Western Accord could not do that, then the Atlantic Accord would. The Government talked about Petro-Canada being scaled down. If you listened to the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), who is now the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who fought Petro-Canada tooth and nail all the way through committee meetings and through the election campaign, Petro-Canada was going to be made to tow the line. Conservatives did not actually say that they would sell Petro-Canada. They said that before the 1979 election, but before the 1984 election they left it rather open and indefinite. Shortly after the 1984 election it took over 1,800 gasoline stations, and we all wondered about the Government spending either directly or indirectly some $1 billion to have that many Petro-Canada stations across Canada.

Do you remember the pride of the then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in the Gulf takeover when both Petro-Canada and the Reichmann Brothers increased Canadian ownership of the oil and gas industry quite dramatically, mostly at the expense of the Canadian Government which in the election campaign it had opposed vehemently? The only one who did not seem quite as happy was the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) when he saw how much it was going to cost Canadians.

Then just a year and a few months ago, in January and February, 1986, in spite of this great Western Accord, the whole thing collapsed. The price of oil dropped from $30 a barrel to $10 a barrel and coincidentally with that the PIP grants were discontinued at the end of March last year both for the Beaufort Sea and for the East Coast offshore. The whole industry collapsed. When people got looking at the Western Accord, there was one little paragraph at the bottom which said that if oil and gas prices should drop precipitously, there would be negotiations. There have been no negotiations and the industry has been in a tailspin ever since with tens of thousands of jobs being lost in the Beaufort and the western sedimentary basin and in the East Coast offshore.

That spread out through the entire Canadian petroleum industry. It was not just in Alberta. It was in communities like Sault Ste. Marie which had just built a $375 million tube mill. It laid off 1,500 workers. That mill has still not recovered from the industry which was going to create hundreds of thousands of jobs. Capital investment dropped from $11 billion to around $6 billion. That represents over 100,000 jobs in the industry. The Government at that time was going to discontinue PIP grants and also discontinue the PGRT. It continued to collect the PGRT even though accusations went back and forth between Edmonton and Ottawa until the late fall when finally the Government discontinued the PGRT.

We have seen a continual litany of difficulties and pratfalls. In the summer of 1986 the whole energy policy of the Government started to change. Suddenly the new Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was saying that self-sufficiency was not really achievable with lower energy prices. Here is a Government that came to power talking about hundreds of thousands of jobs and about self-sufficiency, greater Canadian ownership and greater participation of Canadians in the oil industry. All of the objectives, incidentally, of the National Energy Program. Suddenly all these things were being abandoned. First, oil self-sufficiency. Soon the Minister was saying "Well, the energy sector is not really a sector for the creation of jobs either". Later in the fall he said that if oil companies were in financial difficulty or under $5 billion in assets and value, no questions would be asked if they were taken over by a foreign owned company. Now we have come full circle. It seems not only do we have our small oil companies being taken over by multinationals but no questions will be asked even with big ones. The whole oil policy is coming unstuck.

I mentioned the question of Syncrude where the Government refused to provide a guaranteed agreement for some couple of hundreds of millions of dollars. In the end the Government went ahead with only the guarantees of the Province of Alberta for a major project which will increase the production of Syncrude by some 20,000 of barrels of oil a day from 130,000 to around 150,000, setting the project up for the doubling of production on toward the end of this decade. The federal Government would not even provide that guarantee basis, so the Alberta Government went ahead on its own.

Then the industry pleaded for an oil-depletion allowance similar to that which the mining industry has. We heard representations on that for at least five or six months. Finally the Premier of Alberta said that if the Government did not come forward with an oil-depletion allowance program, he would split the Alberta PC Party from the federal PC Party. Within a week or two of that threat, the Government moved to provide that allowance.

PIP grants were foreign, objectionable and unacceptable to the Tory caucus but they look surprisingly like the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program grants of 33 per cent. Of course these grants are being well received now that they have been put in place. There should be a gross expenditure of some $350 million and a net expenditure of maybe $60 million or $70 million and the creation of some 15,000 to 20,000 jobs.

We have seen a mixed bag of disasters for Alberta and the energy-producing areas of western Canada in the last 12 or 15 months. Tonight we are asking if the Government is abandoning the policy on Canadian ownership on which it was elected, a policy which the former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources trumpeted. It is abandoning an attempt to find a Canadian solution to the Dome problem. Clearly that is achievable, whether on the basis suggested by Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain of requiring Canadian ownership or, better still, on the basis of having a Canadian company take over Dome or work with Petro-Canada to do so. In any event, we in this caucus believe that there is a Canadian solution to this problem. We believe that a Canadian solution is in the best interests of Canadians. We can have jobs and reserves in Canada and maintain not only Canadian ownership but Canadian control of the life-blood of our economy, the oil and gas industry. It is vital that there be Canadian ownership and control over this very important producer of this vital commodity.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We are running out of time in this very important debate and there are a few Hon. Members who would like to speak but have not spoken. They are not very many in number and I would ask for the unanimous consent of the House that we not see the clock in order to allow the Hon. Members who are present in the House right now an opportunity to speak.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there such unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Then I will recognize the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), the Hon. Member for Calgary East (Mr. Kindy) and the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). Perhaps Hon. Members could use discretion so we could get this debate over with as soon as possible.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, as I listened to the leader of the socialist Party and the Leader of the Liberal Party (Mr. Turner) tonight and as I listened to some of the other members of the Opposition, I was reminded of the saying: "History repeats itself". About 40 years ago, I heard similar debates in the Legislature of Alberta. At that time, the province was the poor cousin in Canada. It had a debt of $69 million and its people were unemployed. Agriculture was going downhill. The price of wheat had gone as low as 19 cents a bushel. Nobody had a job and 52 cents out of every dollar collected in taxes went to pay the interest charges alone.

There had been oil in Alberta to a small degree for a number of years. As a matter of fact, gas was first discovered in Medicine Hat in about 1890 and there had been some discoveries of oil in the Turner Valley area. In 1947, Imperial Oil brought in the Leduc oil well, sending the message around the world that there was a vast ocean of oil under the ground in the Province of Alberta. Then the Government endeavoured to get people to develop it. The then Minister of Mines, the late Hon. Nathan Tanner, went to eastern Canada to beg it to invest in our oil. There was nothing doing, no one would come. He went to Britain and France but no one would take up the bid. All they would say was that it was too risky. He then went to the United States and invited the Americans to invest. He promised them a fair deal if they came to Alberta to find oil. As a result, in 1947 when Leduc came in and from then on, millions of dollars were spent drilling holes that were dry. Eventually, we found a large number of oil and gas wells.

In the debate which occurred while the Minister was inviting the Americans to invest their money, I heard almost the same arguments I heard tonight in the House about Amoco. What were these arguments? It was said that we would lose jobs in Canada. That made me wonder at the time because we hardly had any jobs in Alberta. It was said by the Liberals and the CCF, the Opposition, that the Americans would hire other Americans and not Canadians. They said that the President of Imperial Oil was not Canadian and Imperial Oil had no Canadian shareholders. It was said that we were selling out Alberta. How could we sell out Alberta? The Americans could not move that oil south of the 49th if they wanted to. It was under the ground in Alberta. We were not selling out anything.

The Opposition said as it is saying tonight, that we were destroying social services. As one of the NDP Members mentioned tonight, it was said then as well that we were destroying our culture and losing our sovereignty by letting the Americans come in. It was said that the company would send all our Canadian money down into the United States and we heard the same thing tonight. Some opposition Members even said that if the Americans come in, they will sit on the oil and develop oil in the United States without developing ours.

The Alberta Government listened but it did not heed the arguments. It asked the Americans to come into Alberta to operate under our laws and under our control, as suggested just now by the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton). We now have an oil industry in the Province of Alberta that never would have existed if we had listened to the Liberals and the CCF who were so bound to keep the American money out of Alberta.

It was said that we would lose jobs. I came from an area with 90 per cent unemployment. There were no jobs. Our homes were impoverished. We had to share the food on the table. I saw my own mother go without food so the kids could have something to eat. Many mothers and fathers did the same thing. The Opposition said that we were losing jobs to the Americans. When the Americans came, they did not bring other Americans, they hired Canadians. Those Canadians got a pay cheque instead of welfare. Who cared if the president and shareholders of Imperial Oil were American? They were spending American money in Canada, creating jobs, developing an industry that was later a tremendous asset to the whole of Canada.

It was argued that our social services would be destroyed. After the oil money started coming in, we had better social services than any other province in Canada. We even had what was called a maternity grant. At the time, 75 per cent of mothers were having their babies in their own homes. The Government felt that this was not very good because doctors were saying that we were losing too many babies. Because of the oil industry, the Government was able to provide a grant so that mothers could have their babies in hospital. About 95 per cent of the mothers gave birth to their babies in hospital and that was a wonderful thing for every pregnant woman in Alberta at the time.

We were not destroying social services, we were building them up. Were we destroying our culture? Why, culture never had such a boost as it did after the Americans came in with their money. We lost no sovereignty. They did their work under our laws and under our control. They did not sit on the oil. They invested and reinvested and reinvested until they found tremendous volumes of oil in several other places, a great ocean of oil under the province. There is still lots of oil there.

The Americans came to Alberta and they were treated fairly. We said that they will operate under our laws but if they find oil we will divide up the area. They would get half of it and the rest will belong to the people of Alberta. The sale of that half of the oil that was found by American companies brought tremendous amounts of money to the coffers of the Alberta Government. Our provincial debt was paid off because we permitted the Americans to come in and develop our oil industry, bringing buoyancy to the economy, and providing jobs for our people. Yes, all these things happened because the Americans came in.

What would the alternative have been? As the Hon. Member mentioned a few moments ago, the oil companies lost millions of dollars before they found oil. We were told to borrow the money and invest it. If we had done that we would still be head over heels in debt. We were told we could increase taxes. Increase taxes? We were already being taxed to the hilt. When I listened to the then Leader of the Liberal Party and the then Leader of the Socialist Party, I had to decide whether I would vote with the Government or with the Opposition. I decided our condition was so bad I would vote with the Government, and I am glad I did because that brought a new era, a new day, a new hope, a new horizon to the people of Alberta and the people of Canada. None of those bad things they thought would happen actually happened. Just the reverse.

I hear people talking about losing our sovereignty. We are not losing our sovereignty. I support Amoco coming in, whether the Government does or not, because I can see millions, maybe billions in American capital coming into this country to develop our resources and provide jobs, some 3,800 jobs in Alberta alone. I do not know how many hundreds of jobs across the country. People will have jobs if the company takes over. What is the alternative? Borrow a few billion dollars or increase taxes. I do not think Canadians want either one.

I heard an Hon. Member saying we want a Canadian solution. Almost everyone wants a Canadian solution but they did not tell us what it was. Is it to borrow a few more billion dollars and increase our national debt? Canadians do not want that. Is it to increase the price at the pump as the Liberals did when they let PetroCan buy Petrofina at a price twice what it was worth? The people do not want that either. We have a Canadian solution. I feel it is a Canadian solution to let Amoco come in with its money and expertise and provide jobs for Canadians while developing our resources.

People have talked about selling out our country, areas like the Beaufort Sea and other places. How can we sell them out? They can be developed only under our laws and under our rules and under our control. They cannot be moved south of the border. That is impossible. They will work under our laws and regulations.

Someone was complaining about money being brought in from Hong Kong to save the Bank of British Columbia. Would they rather have had the bank go down the drain? The Chinese money will be used under the laws of the Province of British Columbia. It will keep the bank going and keep the people working. What is wrong with that? I see nothing wrong with bringing money in from other countries, whether it be the U.S., Germany, Japan or China, or any other country, as long as the companies work under our laws and under our control and provide jobs for Canadians while developing our resources. That is what we want. That is what will make a great Canada. That is the kind of Canada I want. The taxpayers paid money to buy Petrofina's gas pumps. That is all they got. You can say they own Petro-Canada. Well, if I own it, I want to sell my share. I do not want to own part of Petro-Canada. I want it to develop its properties, pay taxes and hire Canadians just like any other company would.

I see a great future for this company if the shareholders permit Amoco to come in with its money and expertise, working under our laws, to develop our industry and bring buoyancy to our economy and provide jobs for thousands of people who are unemployed today.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I always enjoy listening to the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), particularly when it affords me the opportunity to get a bit of a history lesson. I have to speak from a different historical perspective. When oil was discovered in Leduc it was four years before I was born. So I always value the opportunity to listen to Members like the Hon. Member for Bow River and, for that matter, the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton).

The Hon. Member for Bow River said something about not learning from history. I remember an Old Testament professor of mine who said we do learn one thing from history. The one thing we learn from history is that we do not learn from history. Perhaps that is another way of saying that the debate we have before us tonight is, quite rightly, as the Hon. Member for Bow River said, an old debate. We do not pretend to be saying anything novel. We are consciously repeating the other side of an argument which we know has gone on for 40 or 50 years, or for however long Canadians have been disagreeing with each other about the best way to develop our resources.

After listening to the Hon. Member, one of the things I most regret about Canadian history is that Canadian investors, when Alberta, went to Ontario on its knees looking for money to develop its resources, were not willing to do that. If they had invested in Alberta we would not have the kind of emotional affection for American money that we find in the consciousness of Albertans. The Member for Bow River is a good example of that. I do not say that negatively. It is just a fact that that has affected the historical consciousness of Albertans. When they wanted Canadians to invest in their economic future, Canadians would not do that while Americans did. That has not been forgotten and it affected the political judgment, if you will, of Albertans for decades after the 1940s.

The Member for Bow River says that none of the things which were predicted at that time came true. I disagree with that. Some of the forecasts, like a lot of forecasts, proved to be not totally accurate, but some of the concerns which were raised at that time became genuine concerns. They had to do with a fundamental disagreement about power.

The Hon. Member for Bow River and the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain said many times tonight that as long as these corporations are operating within our laws and subject to our regulations there is nothing wrong with them. The difference between that analysis and the analysis of the NDP is that we believe that when multinational corporations, about which we are particularly concerned, are in possession of enough resources and economic power the law becomes a secondary instrument of control. It is not enough only to have control of the law if corporations, by virtue of how much of any particular sector they own, are in a position to dictate quietly what the law will be because of the enormous power that they can wield in the market-place and the enormous pressure which they can put on the Government.

The Hon. Member for Bow River has been around long enough to know that that happens. Corporations which own a great deal of any particular sector, whether it be oil, grain, or forests, have a power over governments commensurate with the amount of the sector over which they have economic control even though governments retain, at least in theory, and many times in practice, the control they have through laws and regulations.

I would ask the Hon. Member for Bow River to acknowledge at least that there is a legitimate concern for those who worry about the concentration of ownership in the hands of people whose fundamental or immediate agenda is not the well-being of Canada but the well-being of their profit margins or whatever the case may be. I have heard the Hon. Member for Bow River say such things about other economic institutions, particularly the banks. Oil companies are not exempt from some of the criticisms which the Hon. Member has made about the banks. I say that with respect to that which the Hon. Member has said.

The Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain gave us a bit of a history lesson on the pipeline debate of the 1950s when, he said, the Conservatives and NDP stood together as two nationalist political Parties. I agree, but I say with all sincerity that I think that main stream within the Conservative Party is an endangered species. That kind of nationalism and red Toryism which we associate with certain members of the Conservative Party and certain traditions within the Conservative Party is almost extinct. One sees very little evidence of it in the Conservative Party today. Although I respected the arguments offered, I was a bit shocked that it was the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain, who was a cabinet Minister in the Diefenbaker Government, who made some of the arguments which he made in favour of the Amoco takeover.

The Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain said that we cannot build a wall around Canada, that we cannot be satisfied to produce enough to feed ourselves. That was the example he used. I agree, but when we speak of producing enough to feed ourselves we are talking about agriculture and grain. We are talking about a renewable resource, something which, if managed properly, can last for a thousand years. When we speak of oil and gas we are not speaking of a renewable resource. That is quite a different commodity. That is something which, if not managed and controlled properly, may be used up more quickly than it should be or sold off more cheaply than it should be depending upon the economic contexts which arise.

If I have learned one thing in my few short years in Parliament it is that the context is forever changing and it is, therefore, difficult to make forecasts. However, I certainly reject the example given by the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain of producing more than we need to feed ourselves and therefore being open to international market trends as being something that we should imitate in the oil and gas sector. I think an entirely different kind of attitude is required.

Every once in a while in the House of Commons one gets a sense of why New Democrats are New Democrats and why Conservatives are Conservatives. It is always a little harder to figure out the Liberals. This is one of those occasions when there is a stark difference of attitude, emotion, and political judgment between the New Democratic Party and the Conservative Party of Canada. It is personified in the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) who has an incredibly passive attitude toward his role as Minister.

As far as the Minister is concerned this is basically a decision which must be made in the market-place and the Government will concern itself with the matter when it absolutely must. The Minister has previously indicated that the Government will not stand in the way of an American takeover of a Canadian corporation in trouble, which obviously fits this situation. That is a very passive, stand-back attitude; whatever happens happens.

The Minister had the same attitude when I asked him a question about the federal nuclear policy. The week before the Easter break I asked him what the federal Government's policy is with regard to the building of Lepreau II in New Brunswick. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said he did not know, that it was not his problem, it is up to New Brunswick.

On both occasions he pretends that the federal Government has nothing to do with it, that it is just an idle spectator and it is totally up to New Brunswick whether another nuclear reactor is built in Canada and totally up to the shareholders of Dome whether one of the largest Canadian-owned oil and gas corporations falls into the hands of an American multinational. The Government is in the political peanut gallery wondering what will happen, waiting to read the newspapers to learn what happens.

That is very, very different from the attitude which New Democrats take in both these situations in which we see a definite federal responsibility to ask the difficult questions and construct the appropriate policies to give federal leadership on these issues in order that decisions on very difficult questions about energy choices and the structure of our energy economy are made in Parliament rather than according to the whims of the market-place or whatever provincial election agendas may be in the making, as is the case with respect to Lepreau II in New Brunswick.

There are times when it becomes clear why members belong to certain Parties in the House of Commons. I recall another emergency debate on energy, concerning the Prebuild of the southern portion of the Alaska gas pipeline. I recall that evening in July, 1980, I believe, when the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) was the energy critic for the NDP as he is today and we stood to oppose what the Liberal Party, the Government of that day, was going to do to Canada by arranging for the export of Canadian gas on the basis of a commitment from the Americans that the northern half would be built soon. The Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) recalls that debate, but I wonder if Liberal Members in the House remember the debate.

During that emergency debate the Liberals asked us to accept the same kinds of commitments from the American administration that they now ridicule when those kinds of assurances are given by a Progressive Conservative Government with respect to other transboundary energy and environmental issues.

When we have an opportunity to reflect on that debate and the debate tonight about whether Dome Petroleum would become part of Amoco International, a multinational oil corporation, people will want to know what stand members took on the night that Parliament had an opportunity to oppose what I believe will become the turning point in the history of the Canadian energy policy and a turning point in Canadian history itself.

I believe that this is one in a series of non-decisions the Government has made that is increasingly turning Canada into a banana republic of the north. If the Conservatives are elected for another term, God forbid, it will not be long before this will be a shell of a country with all of the political symbols and democratic paraphernalia but no real ability to make decisions over our economic destiny and control of our country. That which should be under our control will be in the hands of others. That is the issue in the debate tonight. I did not want to miss the opportunity to put on the record my position on this particular issue.

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, it was interesting to listen to the Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie). There is no doubt that he espouses a socialist philosophy. He believes that state control is the best way to manage a country.

While they are sincere in their belief, we must look at the world today and ask where there is the highest standard of living and where human rights are respected. Does that exist in countries with socialist or communist regimes or in countries that have free enterprise and believe in individual freedom?

We can also consider how people live in those countries where there is state control. When an oil company is controlled by the state, the flow of money is not necessarily distributed to the people but could be lost in the system.

Today we are debating the issue of a Canadian company that has invested, has borrowed and has overspent. This happened because there was a belief that oil prices would rise indefinitely.

I recall Mr. Lalonde, the then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, telling us that oil prices would rise to $60 and $80 a barrel. At that time, the Liberals, with the help of the New Democratic Party, established the National Energy Program.

In 1981, the shares of Dome Petroleum were trading at $25 a share. Only two or three weeks ago those shares were trading at $1.13 each. The shares have lost 94 per cent of their value.

Those who worked at Dome and bought shares at $25 a share invested and believed in the future of that company. They were induced into that investment in error by the grandstanding of some Ministers who envisaged a sky-rocketing price.

Today we are faced with a bankrupt company for which there are two offers. One is from an American company that is solid and has made an offer that is $800 million greater than that of TransCanada PipeLines Ltd. Its offer is exactly $5.1 billion. TransCanada PipeLines has offered $4.3 billion.

The American company has a good reputation. It is solid and can develop the resources that it will acquire. The total debt of Dome Petroleum is $6.3 billion. Its oil reserves fell from 516 million barrels in 1981 to 228 million barrels today, and the value of its reserves were cut in half.

We need new exploration and I believe it can be accomplished by a company that has a solid record. As the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) pointed out, American companies developed the Alberta oil and gas industry. They have a good track record. I believe it is not important who buys the company but who will develop the resources. I suggest that the American company will do a good job.

The Bell system located in Montreal owns 47 per cent of TransCanada PipeLines. It already controls communications and the transport of gas. If it purchases Dome, it will control the development of oil and gas and would become somewhat of a monopoly. Therefore, I have no hesitation in supporting the acquisition of Dome Petroleum by Amoco Canada.

• (0010)

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, as you know, we have heard from two Cabinet Ministers in this debate. If their speeches reflect the Government's appreciation of the implications flowing from the Dome Petroleum deal, I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that Canada and Canadians are in real trouble. The speeches by the two Ministers have quite clearly revealed, at least to me, that they are blissfully unaware of the long-term implications of this deal. That is the reason the Leader of our Party earlier tonight put forward the Liberal position.

Our Leader made three points; first, that Investment Canada and the Government should insist on substantial Canadian ownership or refuse the deal because we consider Canadian ownership a vital component in the transaction. Second, Canadians are in effect owners of Dome by way of billions of dollars of incentives for exploration, tax benefits, grants and other tax favours. Third, this deal is just another item in the over-all free trade negotiations with the United States and our oil and gas industry is being held hostage in the same way as our lumber industry with the export tax. Those are the three pillars of the Liberal position in this debate as indicated earlier by our Leader.

It is important to focus for a moment on the two main arguments put forward by the two Cabinet Ministers in this debate. First, they repeatedly blamed the intervention policy of the former Liberal Government. The suggestion was that Dome Petroleum finds itself in its present condition because of frequent subsidies and assistance given by the previous Liberal Government under the National Energy Program, for instance, which made it possible for Dome to acquire land and to become the very important corporation it is. For the people at home who may be wondering what we are talking about, I will explain that in terms of oil and gas liquids, this company is the seventh largest in Canada, and in terms of natural gas, it is the second largest in the country.

It is true that the former Liberal Government was an interventionist Government, and we have nothing to apologize for. However, this Tory Government is an interventionist Government as well. It is the short memory of its members which makes this debate so fascinating and, in a way, amusing.

Members of the Tory Party have forgotten that two years ago the Government of Canada gave an interest free loan to Domtar. Would you not call that an interventionist policy, Mr. Speaker? How about the help the Government offered to Cominco and to Cyprus-Anvil to resuscitate an almost dead mining company? How about the assistance it gave to Sysco? What about the interventionist policy of the Conservative Government in the last two years with respect to Algoma Steel, the Northland Bank and the Canadian Commercial Bank, and in more recent months, the understandable assistance which was offered to General Motors? These are all interventionist decisions by the Cabinet and the Government of Canada under the auspices of the Progressive Conservative Party. So much for the interventionist policy of the former Liberal Government as being the main culprit of the present situation.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) proclaimed that this must be a free market transaction. That is really something which has puzzled me. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, how can one call the transaction a free market transaction when Dome Petroleum has some $2.5 billion worth of tax losses being carried forward? This company has benefited, as indicated by the Leader of our Party earlier tonight, from a number of tax concessions, incentives, PIPs, you name it. This company is in good part owned by the Canadian people through the income tax system. This is not a free market transaction, for Heaven's sake.

Let us for a moment look quickly at the profile of Dome. In addition to being the seventh largest oil and gas company in Canada and the second largest as far as natural gas is concerned, I learned that, yes, as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources indicated, it is true that roughly 60 per cent of Dome shares are held outside of Canada. However, the shares are held widely by a large number of owners abroad. This has enabled Dome to operate as a Canadian run company with a Canadian head office, with Canadian management and mainly Canadian directors making decisions in Canada. Therefore, Dome was not subject to foreign controlling shareholders. In addition, Dome Petroleum is Canada's second highest gas producer. The company also has Canada's largest natural gas reserves. That is why it is so attractive.

Let me give a quick profile of Amoco by contrast. It has never been anything but a branch plant. It is subject to direction from top management of a U.S. parent. Last year, in one year, Amoco Canada paid out some $686 million in dividends to its U.S. parent. It, however, invested just $38 million in exploration for new oil and gas supplies in Canada. It had revenues of $1.3 billion in one year and after taxes its profits amounted to $135 million. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to remember one figure. In one year, this company was able to send to its shareholders abroad $686 million. That is the company which is the prospective buyer of Dome Petroleum.

What will the merger do? As I understand it, the key decisions on Dome reserves and on frontier technology will be made by the parent company, not here in Canada but abroad. As the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) put it so passionately, a number of questions must be asked and answered. What will happen to the jobs of Canadians who are working for Dome Petroleum? Last week I learned from a newspaper that cannot be accused of having a left-wing, socialist leaning, namely, the Financial Times, that:

> Dome employees last week were reported to be rooting for TCPL, fearing layoffs of up to 30 per cent if Amoco or Exxon took control.

That is what the Financial Times reports. Thus questions regarding jobs have to be asked. Questions about the future of Anchor, which is owned by Dome Petroleum, have to be asked. Questions about the petrochemical plant in Sarnia have to be asked. What will happen to these people involved in these operations? As others have already said tonight, whenever there are mergers there are a loss of jobs and a transfer of jobs to the parent company. This would be at the expense, of course, of Canadians who are presently employed.

I suspect that what Dome Petroleum means to many of us in this Chamber is a foretaste, an indicator, of what we can expect in the long term under a Canada-U.S. free trade agreement. Having removed the National Energy Program, having weakened the Foreign Investment Review Agency and having heard today Mr. Smart, the American under-secretary, say in Toronto at the Canadian Club that a free trade agreement which excludes investments will not be acceptable to the United States, we have to conclude that something here is happening that has implications in the long term. Because of the long-term intentions that the Americans have in relation to the possibility of gaining control of Canada's natural resources the Amoco experience right now is an example of what may lay in store for us.

With world prices that according to most observers are likely to increase in three or four years this is the worst possible timing for this type of sale. To claim that it should take place without any particular intervention or any particular pre-occupation, as was more than just hinted at by two Cabinet Ministers here tonight, simply defeats my ability to understand.

Mr. Speaker, you come from Edmonton. I was astounded to see that The Edmonton Journal, which cannot be accused of being a newspaper of radical leanings, would publish an article entitled: "Sell Dome to highest bidders—taxpayers!". Another article by the same author in the same newspaper a day later was entitled: "Add up the numbers: the Dome deal stinks". These are articles printed in a newspaper from your home town, Mr. Speaker, the capital of Alberta, the province where these oil and gas reserves are mostly stored. These are comments printed in a newspaper that certainly cannot be accused of having Liberal leanings. Yet in both articles of Rod Ziegler you will find, Mr. Speaker, if you care to read them, the main line of questioning and pre-occupation that have been raised on this side of the House here tonight.

I will conclude by asking what the Government should do. The Government should at least insist on a Canadian buyer. It should push to ensure that a Canadian buyer be found. The Government should protect Canadian taxpayers and the investment made by them in Dome through deferred taxes, PIP grants, super depletion, technological assistance and standard incentives provided by the tax system over the years. As I mentioned, there is $2.5 billion worth of tax loss carry forward inside the corporate framework of Dome.

About 1987 we would not want to see historians write that Dome Petroleum became foreign-owned because of a Progressive Conservative Government which decided not to intervene. We would not like to see that happen. We would not like to see Dome Petroleum join other former Canadian companies which are now owned by foreigners such as AES, Hiram Walker, de Havilland, the Bank of British Columbia, the Continental Bank and Husky Oil.

These are the basic questions that are in the minds of many of us here tonight. It is no wonder that at the present time the Government should find itself in third place in the polls. These questions are troubling average Canadians. These questions are being voiced in the House of Commons not by accident and not because we enjoy being up until 12.30 on a Monday evening but because we somehow have to express them because they have been registered with us. The Canadian public is pre-occupied. This is an example of a major sense of pre-occupation, namely, that we are on a trend, a slippery road of relinquishing, abandoning or showing a sense of indifference to a trend of losing control of our own economy. It is no wonder that there are Tory back-benchers who are unhappy or who are in a withdrawal mood. It is no wonder that Canadians on the street are telling us that they intend at the next election to give the boot to the Conservative Government at the first and earliest opportunity.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) will be the last speaker. He will have about five minutes.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, thank you for allowing me the opportunity of winding up the debate this evening. I will not go into many of the points that have been raised by the various speakers this evening. Indeed, there are many different points that have been raised by the Conservative spokespersons, the New Democratic Party spokespersons and the Liberal spokespersons. The area I wish to touch upon in the few minutes that I have is with respect to the question of foreign ownership.

I think it is an important question for us as Canadians because already so much of our economy is owned by people living outside our borders. Major economic decisions that directly affect the lives of hundreds of thousands of Canadian men and women are made on a daily basis. I refer to decisions to shut down mines, to shut down particular plants or to move a research facility somewhere else. These are all decisions that are made in corporate boardrooms, whether they are in New York, Chicago, Dallas or Los Angeles. These are decisions which are made without any regard to what is in the interest of the Canadian public or the public good in Canada but decisions that are made on the basis of what is good for that particular corporation. That is why when the recession hit us we had one of the highest rates of unemployment of any other industrialized western country. The reason, Mr. Speaker, is that we did not have the economic ability to be masters in our own house. We did not have the ability to make economic decisions that were good for us.

• (0030)

An example that one can cite is the diversion, during the 1970s energy crisis, of a tanker of Mexican oil destined for a refinery in Canada to a refinery in New Jersey. Again, we had a decision that was made, not in the interests of Canada, but in the interests of Exxon Corporation.

As western Canadians, surely we have seen enough of the boom and bust cycle. Our history is one of boom and bust. We have just gone through a tremendous boom, and now we are into a terrible bust. Land prices are plummeting. Farmers who only a few years ago felt themselves secure are now seeing the equity in their land melting away, as snow in the August sun.

In your city, Mr. Speaker, as is the case in many other cities throughout Alberta and, to a lesser extent, in Saskatchewan, we see house prices falling to a fraction of their acquisition value. Once again, we have the consequences of a boom and bust cycle.

When are we going to wake up and realize that we will be on the boom and bust treadmill until we gain control over our own economic destiny? We need to be able to take the moneys that flow in during the boom periods to develop secondary industry, to develop an economic groundwork such that we will no longer be subject to the boom and bust cycle.

As a western Canadian, it is my view that the selling off of our resources to the Americans will continue to keep us captive of the forces that will keep us on the boom and bust treadmill forever and ever. Until we as western Canadians get control over our own destiny, we will never be free of the boom and bust cycle. As a western Canadian, I am opposed to Dome Petroleum being handed over to Amoco Corporation of Chicago.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your indulgence in giving me this opportunity to make a contribution to this debate. I wish you a good night, and I wish the Canadian people a good night.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being past twelve o'clock midnight, pursuant to Standing Order 29(13), I declare the motion carried. The House stands adjourned until later this day, at eleven o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 12.35 a.m.
